The kind of mental defect here mentioned is universal in imbecility, but it exists in different degrees in different individuals, some being hardly distinguishable, at first sight, from ordinary men of feeble endowments, while others encroach upon the line which separates them from idiocy.

The various grades of imbecility, however interesting in a philosophical point of view, are not very closely considered by courts. They are governed in criminal cases solely by their tests of responsibility, and in civil cases by the amount of capacity, in connection with the act in question, or the abstract question of soundness or unsoundness.

In reaching the question of responsibility, the law makes no distinction between imbecility and insanity.

In civil cases, the effect of imbecility is differently estimated. In cases involving the validity of the contracts of imbecile persons, courts have declined to gauge the measure of their intellects, the only question with them being one of soundness or unsoundness, and

"no distinction being made between important and common affairs, large or small property."

Courts of equity, also, have declined to invalidate the contracts of imbeciles, except on the ground of fraud.<sup>1</sup> Of late years, however, courts have been governed by other considerations. If the contract were for necessities, or showed no mark of fraud or unfair advantage, or if the other party, acting in good faith and ignorant of the other's mental infirmity, cannot be put into status quo, the contract is valid.<sup>2</sup>

The same principles have governed the courts in cases involving the validity of the marriage contract. If suitable to the condition and circumstances of the party, and manifestly tending to his benefit, it has been confirmed, notwithstanding a considerable degree of incompetency. If, on the other hand, it has been procured by improper influences, manifestly for the advantage of the other party, it has been invalidated.<sup>3</sup> The law has always showed more favor to the wills of imbeciles than to their contracts. "If a man be of a mean understanding, neither of the wise sort nor of the foolish, but indifferent, as it were, betwixt a wise man and a fool—yes, though he rather incline to the foolish sort, so that for his dull capacity he might worthily be called grossum caput (a dull pate), or a dunce—such a one is not prohibited to make a testament."<sup>4</sup> Whether the testament be established or not, depends upon the circumstances of the case; and the English ecclesiastical courts have always assumed a great deal of liberty in their construction of these circumstances. The general principle is that if the will exhibits a wise and prudent disposition of property, and is unquestionably the will of the testator, and is not another's, it should be established in the face of no inconsiderable deficiency.<sup>5</sup> Very different views prevailed in a celebrated case in New York.<sup>6</sup> The mental capacity must be equal to the act; and if that fact be established, and no unfair advantage has been taken of the mental deficiency, the will, the marriage, the contract, or whatever it may be, is held to be valid.

The term moral imbecility is applied to a class of persons who, without any considerable, or even appreciable, deficiency of intellect, seem to have never been endowed with the higher moral sentiments. They are unable to appreciate fully the distinctions of right and wrong, and, according to their several opportunities and tastes, they indulge in mischief as if by an instinct of their nature. To vice and crime they have an irresistible proclivity, though able to discourse on the beauties of virtue and the claims of moral obligation. While young, many of them manifest a cruel and quarrelsome disposition, which leads them to torture brutes and bully their companions. They set all law and admonition at defiance, and become a pest and a terror to the neighborhood. It is worthy of notice, because the fact throws much light on the nature of this condition, that a very large proportion of this class of persons labor under some organic defect. They are scrofulous, rickety, or epileptic, or, if not obviously suffering from these diseases themselves, they are born of parents who did. Their progenitors may have been insane, or eccentric, or highly nervous, and this morbid peculiarity has become, unquestionably, by hereditary transmission, the efficient cause of the moral defect under consideration. Thus lamentably constituted, wanting in one of the essential elements of moral responsibility, they are certainly not fit objects of punishment; for though they may recognize the distinctions of right and wrong in the abstract, yet they have been denied by nature those faculties which prompt men more happily endowed to pursue the one and avoid the other. In practice, however, they have been regarded with no favor by the courts.<sup>1</sup> See INBANDITY, below.

IMPOTENCE is the incapacity for copulation or for propagating the species. It differs from sterility, though these terms have been used synonymously. Impotence may be considered as accidental or temporary, curable or incurable. Absolute or incurable impotence is that for which there is no known relief, principally originating in some malformation or defect of the genital organs. Where this defect existed at the time of marriage and was incurable, by the ecclesiastical law and the law of many of the States, the marriage may be declared void from the beginning.<sup>1</sup> But the party naturally impotent cannot allege that fact for the purpose of obtaining a divorce.<sup>2</sup>

INFANTICIDE is the murder of a new-born infant. It is distinguished from abortion and foeticide, which is the destruction of life while in the mother's womb. The criminal modes most commonly resorted to to destroy the life of an infant are: 1, suffocation; 2, drowning; 3, cold and exposure; 4, starvation; 5, wounds, fractures, and injuries of various kinds; a mode not unfrequently resorted to is the introduction of sharp-pointed instruments in different parts of the body; also, luxation and fracture of the neck, accomplished by forcibly twisting the head of the child, or pulling it backwards; 6, strangulation; 7, poisoning; 8, intentional neglect to tie the umbilical cord; and, 9, causing the child to inhale air deprived of its oxygen, or gases positively deleterious. All these modes of destroying life, together with the natural or accidental ones, will be found fully discussed by the writers on medical jurisprudence.<sup>3</sup>

Birth. The crime of infanticide can be committed only after the child is wholly born.<sup>4</sup> This question involves an inquiry: 1. Into the signs of maturity, the date for which are, the length and weight of the fetus, the relative position of the centre of its body, the proportional development of its several parts as compared with each other, especially of the head as compared with the rest of the body, the degree of growth of the hair and nails, the condition of the skin, the presence or absence of the membrana papillaris, and, in the male, the descent or non-descent of the testicles.<sup>5</sup>

Life, &c. 2. Was it born alive? This second point presents an inquiry of great interest both to the legal and medical professions and to the community at large. In the absence of all direct proof, what organic facts proclaim the existence of life subsequent to birth? These facts are derived principally from the circulatory and respiratory systems. From the former the proofs are gathered—from the character of the blood, that which is purely fetal being wholly dark, like venous blood, destitute of fibrous matter, and forming coagula much less firm and solid than that which has been subjected to the process of respiration; so, also, the coloring-matter is darker, and contains no phosphoric acid, and its proportion of serum and red globules is comparatively small. From the condition of the heart and blood vessels. The circulation anterior and subsequent to birth must necessarily be entirely different. That anterior, by means of the foetal openings—the foramen ovale, the ductus arteriosus, and the ductus venosus—is enabled to perform its circuit without sending the entire mass of the blood to the lungs for the purpose of oxygenation. When the extra-uterine life commences, and the double circulation is established, these openings gradually close; so that their closure is considered clear evidence of life subsequent to birth.<sup>6</sup> From the difference in the distribution of the blood in the different organs of the body. The two organs in which this difference is most perceptible are the liver and the lungs—especially the latter. The circulation of the whole mass of the blood through the lungs distends and fills them with blood, so that their relative weight will be nearly doubled, and any incision into them will be followed by a free effusion.

From the respiratory system proofs of life subsequent to birth are derived. From the thorax. Its size, capacity, and arch are increased by respiration. From the lungs. They are increased in size and volume, are projected forward, become rounded and obtuse, of a pinkish-red hue, and their density is inversely as their volume.<sup>7</sup> The fact of the specific gravity of the lungs being diminished in proportion to their diminution in density gives rise to a celebrated test—the hydrostatic—the relative weight of the lungs with water.<sup>8</sup> The rule is, that lungs which have not respired are specifically heavier than water, and if placed within it

Is it born alive? This second inquiry of great interest both to the medical professions and to the public.

In the absence of all diagnostic facts proclaiming the existence of life subsequent to birth? These facts principally from the circulation of the blood. From the former—from the character of the blood—is purely fetal being venous blood, destitute of forming coagula much less than that which has been subjected to respiration; so, also, is darker, and contains no red corpuscles and its proportion of serum comparatively small. From the heart and blood vessels. The heart and subsequent to birth are entirely different. That of the fetal openings—the ductus arteriosus, and the foramen ovale, are enabled to perform its circulating the entire mass of the blood for the purpose of oxygenating the extra-uterine life commences, respiration is established, these close; so that their closure evidence of life subsequent to birth.

The difference in the distribution of the blood in the different organs of the body in which this difference is the liver and the lungs. The circulation of the blood through the lungs diminishes with blood, so that their density will be nearly doubled, and any increase will be followed by a free respiratory system proofs of life which are derived. From the capacity, and arch of the ribs. From the lungs. They are rounded and obtuse, of a density and their density is inversely as the volume. The fact of the specific gravity diminished in proportion to the density gives rise to a hydrostatic—the relative weight with water.<sup>3</sup> The rule is, are not respired are specific-gravity, and if placed within it will sink to the bottom of the vessel. If they have respired, their increase in volume and decrease in density render them specifically lighter than water, and when placed within it they will float. There are several objections to the sufficiency of this test; but it is fairly entitled to its due weight in the settlement of this question.<sup>4</sup> From the state of the diaphragm. Prior to respiration it is found high up in the thorax. The act of expanding the lungs enlarges and arches the thorax, and, by necessary consequence, the diaphragm descends.

The fact of life at birth being established, the next inquiry is, how long did the child survive? The proofs here are derived from three sources. The fatal openings, their partial or complete closure. The more perfect the closure, the longer the time. The series of changes in the umbilical cord. These are: 1. The withering of the cord. 2. Its detacation or drying. 3. Its separation or dropping off—occurring usually four or five days after birth. 4. Clearification of the umbilicus—occurring usually from ten to twelve days after birth. The changes in the skin, consisting in the process of exfoliation of the epidermis, which commences on the abdomen, and extends thence successively to the chest, groin, axilla, interscapular space, limbs, and, finally, to the hands and feet.

INSANITY is unsoundness of the mind; derangement of the intellect; it is any degree of mental derangement, from a slight degree of wandering to distraction. This term is rarely used to express slight temporary delirium. Of late years this word has been used to designate all mental impairments and deficiencies formerly embraced in the terms lunacy, idioty, and unsoundness of mind. Even to the middle of the last century the law recognised only two classes of persons requiring its protection on the score of mental disorder, viz.: lunatics and idiots. The former were supposed to embrace all who had lost the reason which they once possessed, and their disorder was called dementia accidentalis; the latter, those who had never possessed any reason, and this deficiency was called dementia naturalis. Lunatics were supposed to be much influenced by the moon; and another prevalent notion respecting them was that in a very large proportion there occurred lucid intervals, when reason shone out, for a while, from behind the cloud that obscured it, with its natural brightness. It may be remarked, in passing, that lucid intervals are far less common than they were once supposed to be, and that the restoration is not so complete as the descriptions of the older writers would lead us to infer. In modern practice, the term lucid interval signifies merely a remission of the disease, an abatement of the violence of the morbid action, a period of comparative calm; and the proof of its occurrence is generally drawn from the character of the acts in question. It is hardly necessary to say that this is an unjustifiable use of the term, which should be confined to the genuine lucid interval that does occasionally occur. It began to be found at last that a large class of persons required the protection of the law, who were not idiots, because they had reason once, nor lunatics in the ordinary signification of the term, because they were not violent, exhibited no very notable derangement of reason, were independent of lunar influences, and had no lucid intervals. Their mental impairment consisted in a loss of intellectual power, of interest in their usual pursuits, of the ability to comprehend their relations to persons and things. A new term—unsoundness of mind—was, therefore, introduced to meet this exigency; but it has never been very clearly defined.

The law has never held that all lunatics and idiots are absolved from all responsibility for their civil or criminal acts. This consequence was attributed only to the severest grades of these affections,—to lunatics who have no more understanding than a brute, and to idiots who cannot number twenty pence nor tell how old they are. Theoretically the law has changed but little, even to the present day; but practically it exhibits considerable improvement; that is, while the general doctrine remains unchanged, it is qualified, in one way or another, by the courts, so as to produce less practical injustice.

Insanity implies the presence of disease or congenital defect in the brain, and though it may be accompanied by disease in other organs, yet the cerebral affection is always supposed to be primary and predominant. It is to be borne in mind, however, that bodily diseases may be accompanied, in some stages of their progress, by mental disorder which may affect the legal relations of the patient.

For all practical purposes, however, a definition is unnecessary, because the real question at issue always is, not what constitutes insanity in general, but wherein consists the insanity of this or that individual. Neither sanity nor insanity can be regarded as an entity to be handled and described, but rather as a condition to be considered in reference to other conditions. Men vary in the character of their mental manifestations, inasmuch that conduct and conversation perfectly proper and natural in one might in another, differently constituted, be indicative of insanity. In determining, therefore, the mental condition of a person, he must not be judged by any arbitrary standard of sanity or insanity, nor compared with other persons unquestionably sane or insane. He can properly be compared only with himself. When a person, without any adequate cause, adopts notions he once regarded as absurd, or indulges in conduct opposed to all his former habits and principles, or changes completely his ordinary temper, manners, and dispositions—the man of plain practical sense indulging in speculative theories and projects, the miser becoming a spendthrift and the spendthrift a miser; the staid, quiet, unobtrusive citizen becoming noisy, restless, and boisterous; the gay and joyous becoming dull and disconsolate even to the verge of despair; the careful, cautious man of business plunging into hazardous schemes of speculation; the discreet and pious becoming shamefully reckless and profligate—no stronger proof of insanity can be had. And yet not one of these traits, in and by itself alone, disconnected from the natural traits of character, could be regarded as conclusive proof of insanity. In accordance with this fact, the principle has been laid down, with the sanction of the highest legal and medical authority, that it is the prolonged departure, without any adequate cause, from the states of feeling and modes of thinking usual to the individual when in health, which is the essential feature of insanity.<sup>7</sup>

Insanity in some of its forms annuls all criminal responsibility, for there can be no crime nor offence if the accused were in a state of madness at the time of the act,<sup>8</sup> and in other forms disqualifies its subject from the performance of certain civil rights. A kind and degree of insanity which will not excuse a person for a criminal act may render him legally incompetent to the management of himself or his affairs.<sup>9</sup>

LUCID INTERVALS are those intervals bright with the natural radiance of intellect, not darkened or confused by delirium or madness; those intervals marked by the natural and regular operations of reason. It must not be a superficial tranquillity, a shadow of repose, but, on the contrary, a profound tranquillity, a real repose. "It must not be a mere ray of reason, which makes its absence more apparent when it is gone—not a flash of lightning, which pierces through the darkness only to render it more gloomy and dismal—not a glimmering which joins the night to the day,—but a perfect light, a lively and continued lustre, a full and entire day interposed between the two separate nights of the fury which precedes and follows it; and, to use another image, it is not a deceitful and faithless stillness which follows or forebodes a storm, but a sure and steadfast tranquillity for a time, a real calm, a perfect serenity. In fine, without looking for so many metaphors to represent our idea, it must not be a mere diminution, a remission of the complaint, but a kind of temporary cure, an intermission so clearly marked as in every respect to resemble the restoration of health."<sup>10</sup> So Lord Thurlow says, by a perfect interval, "I do not mean a cooler moment, an abatement of pain or violence, or of a higher state of torture,—a mind relieved from excessive pressure; but an interval in which the mind, having thrown off the disease, had recovered its general habit."<sup>11</sup> That there sometimes occurs an intermission in which the person appears to be perfectly rational, restored, in fact, to his super self, is an unquestionable fact. It is equally true that they are of rare occurrence, that they continue but for a very brief period, and that with the apparent clearness there is a real loss of mental force and acuteness. In most cases of insanity there may be observed, from time to time, a remission of the symptoms, in which excitement and violence are replaced by quiet and calm, and, within a certain range, the patient converses correctly and properly. A superficial observer might be able to detect no trace of disease; but a little further examination would show a confusion of ideas and singularity of behavior, indicative of serious, though latent, disease. In this condition the patient may hold some correct notions, even on a matter of business, and yet be quite incompetent to embrace all the relations connected with a contract or a will, even though no delusion were present to warp his judgment. The revelations of patients after recovery furnish indubitable proof that during this remission of the symptoms the mind is in a state of confusion utterly unreliable for any business purpose.<sup>12</sup>

Of late years—whatever may have been the earlier practice—courts have not required that proof of a lucid interval which consists of complete restoration of reason, as described above. They have been satisfied with such proof as was furnished by the transaction in question. They cared less to consider the general state of mind than its special manifestations on a particular occasion. "The strongest and best proof that can arise as to a lucid interval is that which arises from the act itself;" if that "is a rational act, rationally done, the whole case is proved;"<sup>13</sup> "if she could converse rationally, that is a lucid interval."<sup>14</sup> This is a mere begging of the question, which is whether the act so rational and so rationally done—and not for that reason necessarily incompatible with insanity—was or was not done in a lucid interval. Persons very insane, violent, and full of delusions frequently do and say things evincing no mark of disease, while no one supposes that there is any lucid interval in the case. "It is clear that persons essentially insane may be calm, may do acts; hold conversations, and even pass in general society, as perfectly sane. It often requires close examination by persons skilled in the disorder, to discover and ascertain whether or not the mental derangement is removed and the mind become again perfectly sound. Where there is calmness, where there is rationality on ordinary subjects, those who see the party usually conclude that his recovery is perfect. . . . When there is not actual recovery, and a return to the management of himself and his concerns by the unfortunate individual, the proof of a lucid interval is extremely difficult."<sup>15</sup>

In criminal cases, the proof of a lucid interval must be still more difficult, in the very nature of the case. For although the mental manifestations may be perfectly right, it cannot be supposed that the brain has resumed its normal condition. In its outward expression, insanity, like many other nervous diseases, is characterized by a certain periodicity, whereby the prominent symptoms disappear for a time, only to return again within a very limited period. An epileptic, in the intervals between his fits, may evince to the closest observer not a single trace of mental or bodily disease; and yet, for all that, nobody supposes that he has recovered from his malady. No more does a lucid interval in a case of insanity imply that the disease has disappeared because its outward manifestations have ceased. There unquestionably remains an abnormal condition of the brain, by whatever name it may be called, whereby the power of the mind to sustain provocations, to resist temptations, or withstand any other causes of excitement, is greatly weakened.

Lucid intervals, properly so called, should not be confounded with those periods of apparent recovery which occur between two successive attacks of mental disease, nor with those transitions from one phase of insanity to another, in which the individual seems to be in his natural condition. They may not be essentially different, but the suddenness and brevity of the former would be likely to impart to an act a moral complexion very different from that which it would bear if performed in the larger and more indefinite intermissions of the latter. Still, great forbearance should be exercised towards persons committing criminal acts while in any of these equivocal conditions. Those who have suffered repeated attacks of mental disease habitually labor under a degree of nervous irritability, which renders them peculiarly susceptible to many of those accidental and influences which lead to crime. The law may make no distinction, but executive and judicial tribunals are generally intrusted with discretionary powers, whereby they are enabled to apportion the punishment according to the moral guilt of the party.<sup>2</sup>

It is the duty of the party who contends for a lucid interval, to prove it; for a person once insane is presumed so, until it is shown that he had a lucid interval, or has recovered,<sup>3</sup> and yet "were they to run into nicety, proof might be demanded of one's insanity at the precise moment when the act was committed." See INSANITY, above.

MALPRACTICE is had or unskilful practice; practice in a physician, or other professional person, whereby the health or members of the patient is injured; practice contrary to established rules. Ignorant malpractice is the administration of medicines calculated to do injury, which do harm, and which a well-educated and scientific man would know were not proper in the case.<sup>4</sup> This offence is a misdemeanor (whether it be occasioned by curiosity and experiment, or neglect), because it breaks the trust which the patient has put in a physician, and tends directly to his destruction.<sup>5</sup> Negligent malpractice comprehends those cases where there is no criminal or dishonest object, but gross negligence of that attention which the situation of the patient requires, as if a physician should administer medicines while in a state of intoxication from which injury would arise to his patient. Wilful malpractice takes place when the physician purposely administers or performs an operation which he knows and expects will result in the death to the individual under his care, as in the case of a criminal abortion.<sup>6</sup> To the performance of all surgical operations the surgeon is bound to bring at least ordinary skill and knowledge. He must apply without mistake what is settled in his profession. He must possess and practically exercise that degree and amount of knowledge and science which the leading authorities have pronounced as the result of their researches and experience up to the time, or within a reasonable time before the issue or question to be determined is made.<sup>7</sup>

Besides the criminal remedy for malpractice, the injured party may in many cases bring a civil action.<sup>8</sup> Civil cases of malpractice are of very frequent occurrence on those occasions where surgical operations are rendered necessary, or supposed to be so, by disease or injury, and are so performed as either to shorten a limb or render it stiff, or otherwise prevent the free, natural use of it, by which the party ever after suffers damages. This may embrace almost every kind of surgical operation; but nine-tenths of all such cases arise from amputations, fractures, or dislocation.<sup>9</sup>

MONOMANIA is the derangement of a single faculty, or with regard to a particular subject, the other faculties being in their natural and regular exercise. PATHOLOGY is that branch of the medical science which explains the nature of diseases, their causes, and symptoms; or, the doctrine of the causes and nature of diseases, comprehending etiology (causes of disease), nosology (names and definitions of diseases, their classes, grades, &c., and species), symptomatology (symptoms of diseases), and therapeutics (the use of diet and of medicines). Some degree of the knowledge of pathology is of great consequence to the legal practitioner.

PHYSICIAN is a person skilled in the art of medicine; one whose profession is to prescribe remedies for diseases; one lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine. Every person who offers his services to the public generally implicitly contracts with the employer that he is in possession of the ordinary skill and experience which are possessed by those who practice or profess to understand the art or science, and which are generally regarded by those most conversant with the profession as necessary to qualify one to engage in the business successfully. This ordinary skill may differ according to locality and means of information.<sup>2</sup> A physician's responsibility is the same when he is negligent as when he lacks ordinary skill, although the measure of indemnity and punishment may be different.<sup>3</sup> Although a physician is civilly and criminally responsible for his conduct while discharging the duties of his profession, he is in no sense a warrantor or insurer of a favorable result, without an express contract to that effect.<sup>4</sup>

Poison is any agent capable of producing a morbid, noxious, or dangerous effect upon any object endowed with life; of producing death. A substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life.<sup>5</sup>

Gaseous substances are classed as poisons. Irritant poisons, when taken in ordinary doses, occasion speedily violent vomiting and purging, preceded, accompanied, or followed by intense pain in the abdomen, commencing in the region of the stomach. The corrosive poisons, as distinguished from those in a more limited sense termed irritant, generally produce their result more speedily, and give chemical indications; but every corrosive poison acts as an irritant in the sense here adopted.

Irritant poisons are:
 1. MINERAL.—Metals: Acids; alkalis and their salts; metalloids. Non-metals: arsenic.
 2. VEGETABLE.—Sariva.
 3. ANIMAL.—Cantharides.

Narcotic poisons act chiefly on the brain or spinal marrow. Either immediately or some time after the poison has been swallowed, the patient suffers from drowsiness, giddiness, paralysis, stupor, delirium, insensibility, and, in some instances, convulsions.

Narcotic poisons are:
 1. CEREBRAL.—Morphia.
 2. SPINAL.—strychnia.
 3. CEREBRO-SPINAL.—Cocaine; acouitina.
 The effects of one class are, however, sometimes produced by the other; more commonly as secondary, but sometimes even as primary, symptoms.

The evidence of poisoning, as derived from symptoms, is to be looked for chiefly in the rarity of their occurrence; this is perhaps the most reliable of all evidence derived from symptoms in cases of criminal poisoning;<sup>6</sup> though none of this class of evidence can be considered as furnishing anything better than a high degree of probability; the regularity of their increase; this feature is not universal, and exists in many diseases; uniformity in their nature, this is true in the case of comparatively few poisons; the symptoms begin soon after a meal; but sleep, the manner of administration, or certain diseases, may affect this rule in the case of some poisons; when several persons at the same time of the same poisoned food, all suffer from similar symptoms, or the symptoms first appearing while the body is in a state of perfect health.<sup>7</sup>

Appearances which present themselves on post-mortem examinations are of importance in regard to some classes of irritant poisons; but many poisons leave no traces which can be so discovered.

Chemical analysis often results in important evidence, by discovering the presence of poisons, which must then be accounted for; but a failure to detect it by no means proves that it has not been given.<sup>8</sup>

The evidence derived from circumstances differs in nothing in principle from that in case of commission of other crimes.

Homicide by poisoning is generally accidental (and therefore not murder), or deliberate.<sup>9</sup>

PREGNANCY is the state of a female who has within her ovary or womb a fecundated germ, which gradually becomes developed in the latter receptacle; the state of a female who has conceived, or is with child.

The signs of pregnancy acquire a great importance from their connection with the subject of concealed, and also of pretended, pregnancy. The first may occur in order to avoid disgrace, and to accomplish in a secret manner the destruction of offspring. The second may be attempted to gratify the wishes of a husband or relations, to deprive the legal successor of his just claims, to gratify avarice by esturting money, and to avoid or delay execution.

These signs and indications have a twofold division. First, those developed through the general system, and hence termed constitutional; second, those developed through the uterine system, termed local or sensible.

The first, or constitutional, indications regard—1. The mental phenomena, or change wrought in the temperament of the mother, evidenced by depression, despondency, rendering her peevish, irritable, capricious, and wayward; sometimes drowsiness and occasionally strange appetites and antipathies are present.

2. The countenance exhibits languor, and what the French writers term decomposition of features,—the nose becoming sharper and more elongated, the mouth larger, the eyes sunk and surrounded with a brownish or livid areola, and having a languid expression.

3. The vital action is increased; a feverish heat prevails, especially in those of full habit and sanguine temperament. The body, except the breasts and abdomen, sometimes exhibits emaciation. There are frequently pains in the teeth and face, heartburn, increased discharge of saliva, and costiveness.

4. The mammary sympathies give enlargement and firmness to the breasts; but this may be caused by other disturbances of the uterine system. A more certain indication is found in the areola, which is the dark-colored circular disk surrounding the nipple. This, by its gradual enlargement, its constantly deepening color, its increasing organic action evidenced by its raised appearance, turgescence, and glandular follicles, is justly regarded as furnishing a very high degree of evidence.

5. Irritability of stomach, evidenced by sickness at the stomach, usually in the early part of the day.

6. Suppression of the menses, or monthly discharge arising from a secretion from the internal surface of the uterus. This suppression, however, may occur from diseases or from a vitiated action of the uterine system.

The second, termed local or sensible signs and indications, arise mainly from the development of the uterine system consequent upon impregnation. This has for its—

1. To the change in the uterus itself. The new principle introduced causes a determination of blood to that organ, which develops at first at its fundus, second in its body, and lastly in its cervix or neck. The latter constantly diminishes until it has become almost wholly absorbed in the body of the uterus. The os uteri in its unimpregnated state feels firm, with well-defined lines or ridges. After impregnation the latter becomes tumid, softer, and more elastic, the orifice feeling smooth instead of transverse.

2. To the state of the umbilicus, which is first depressed, then pushed out to a level with the surrounding integuments, and at length towards the close of the period, protruded considerably above the surface.

3. To the enlargement of the abdomen. This commences usually by the end of the third month, and goes on increasing during the period of pregnancy. This, however, may result from morbid conditions not affecting the uterus, such as disease of the liver, spleen, ovarian tumor, or ascites.

4. To quickening, as rendered evident by the fetal motions. By the former we understand the feeling by the mother of the self-induced motion of the fetus in utero, which occurs about the middle of the period of pregnancy. But as the testimony of the mother cannot be always relied upon, her interest being sometimes to conceal it, it is important to inquire what other means there may be of ascertaining it. These movements of the fetus may sometimes be excited by a sudden application of the hand, having been previously rendered cold by immersion in water, or to the front of the abdomen. Another method is to apply one hand against the side of the uterine tumor, and at the same time to impress the opposite side quickly with the fingers of the other hand.

But the most reliable means consists in the application of auscultation, or the use of the stethoscope. This is resorted to for the purpose of discovering—

First, The souffle, or placental sound.

Second, The pulsations of the fetal heart. The first is a low, murmuring, or croaking sound, accompanied by a slight rustling noise, but without any sensation of impulse. It is synchronous with the pulse of the mother, and varies not in its situation during the course of the same pregnancy. Its seat in the abdomen does vary in proportion to the progressive advance of the pregnancy, and it is liable to intermissions.

The second is quite different in its characteristics. It is marked by double pulsations, and hence very rapid, numbering from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and sixty in a minute. These pulsations are not heard until the end of the fifth month, and become more distinct as the pregnancy advances. Their source being the fetal heart, their seat will vary with the varying position of the fetus. Auscultation, if successful, not only reveals the fact of pregnancy, but also the line of the fetus.

There is still another indication of pregnancy; and that is a bluish tint of the vagina, extending from the os externum to the os uteri. It is a violet color, like lees of wine, and is caused by the increased vascularity of the genital system consequent upon conception. But any similar cause other than conception may produce the same appearance.

Independent of what may be found on this subject in works on medical jurisprudence and midwifery, that of Dr. Montgomery on the "Signs and Indications of Pregnancy" is the fullest and most reliable.

The laws relating to pregnancy concern the circumstances under and the manner in which the fact is ascertained. There are two cases where the fact whether a woman is or has been pregnant is important to ascertain. The one is when it is supposed she pretends pregnancy, and the other when she is charged with concealing it.

Pretended pregnancy may arise from two causes: the one when a widow feigns herself with child in order to produce a supposititious heir to the estate. The presumptive heir may in such case have a writ de ventre inspiciendo (of examining the abdomen), by which the sheriff is commanded to have such made, and the fact determined whether pregnancy exists or not, by twelve matrons, in the presence of twelve knights. If the result determine the fact of pregnancy, then she is to be kept under proper guard until she is delivered. If the pregnancy be negatived, the presumptive heir is admitted to the inheritance.<sup>1</sup> A practice quite similar prevailed in the civil law.

The second cause of pretended pregnancy occurs when a woman is under sentence of death for the commission of a crime. At common law, in case this plea be made before execution, the court must direct a jury of twelve matrons, or discreet women, to ascertain the fact, and if they bring in their verdict quick with child (for barely with child, unless it be alive in the womb, is not sufficient), execution shall be stayed, generally till the next session of the court, and so from session to session, till either she is delivered or proves by the course of nature not to have been with child at all.<sup>2</sup>

In Scotland, all that is necessary to be proved, to have execution delayed, is the fact of pregnancy, no difference being made whether she be quick with child or not. This is also the provision of the French penal code upon this subject. In this country, there is little doubt that clear proof that the woman was pregnant, though not quick with child, would at common law be sufficient to obtain a respite of execution until after delivery. The difficulty lies in making the proof sufficiently clear, the signs and indications being all somewhat uncertain, some of them wanting, all liable to variation, and conviction of the fact only fastening upon the mind when a number of them, inexplicable upon any other hypothesis, concur in that one result. In New York there is a statute regulation,<sup>3</sup> by which the sheriff is authorized to summon a jury of six physicians when a pregnant female convict is under sentence of death, and, if the inquisition by them executed find that such convict is quick with child, execution shall be suspended, and the inquisition transmitted to the governor; and whenever he shall become satisfied that she is no longer quick with child, he shall issue his warrant for her execution.

Pregnancy is seldom concealed except for the criminal purpose of destroying the life of the foetus in utero, or of the child immediately upon its birth. Infant life is easily extinguished; while proof of the unnatural crime is hard to be furnished. This has led to the passage of laws, calculated to facilitate the proof and also to punish the very act of concealment of pregnancy and death of the child, when, if born alive, it would have been illegitimate.

PULSATION is the beating or throbbing of the heart, or of an artery in process of carrying on the circulation of the blood; beating without pain, as distinguished from verberation, or beating with pain.<sup>4</sup>

QUICKENING is becoming alive; the sensation a mother has of the motion of the child she has conceived. The period when quickening is first experienced varies from the tenth to the twenty-fifth, but is usually about the sixteenth week from conception.<sup>5</sup> It was formerly supposed that either the child was not alive until the time of quickening, or that it had acquired some new kind of existence that it did not possess before; hence the presumption of law that dates the life of the child from that time. The child is, in fact, alive from the first moment of conception, and, according to its age and state of development, has different modes of manifesting its life, and, during a portion of the period of gestation, by its motion. By the growth of the embryo the womb is enlarged until it becomes of too great a size to be contained in the pelvis; it then rises into the abdomen, when the motion of the foetus is for the first time felt. Quickening, as indicating a distinct point in the existence of the foetus, has no foundation in physiology; for it arises merely from the relation which the organs of gestation bear to the parts that surround them; it may take place early or late, according to the condition of these different parts, but not from any inherent vitality for the first time manifested by the foetus.

As life, by law, is said to commence when a woman first becomes quick with child, so pro-

This has led to the invention of the calculated to facilitate the commission of the very act of concealment and death of the child, when it would have been legitimate.

eriving an abortion after that period is a misdemeanor. Before this time, formerly the law did not interfere to prevent a pregnant woman convicted of a capital offence from being executed. If, however, the humanity of the law of the present day would not allow a woman to be executed who is præsentem encainte, i. e., pregnant, although not quick, it would be but carrying out the same desire to interfere with long-established rules, to hold that the penalty for procuring abortion should also extend to the whole period of pregnancy.

SOMNAMBULISM is the act or practice of walking in sleep; sleep-walking. The mental condition of this affection is not very unlike that of dreaming. Many of their phenomena are the same; and the former differs from the latter chiefly in the larger number of the functions involved in the abnormal process. In addition to the mental activity common to both, the somnambulist enjoys the use of his senses in some degree, and the power of locomotion. He is thereby enabled to perform manual operations as well, frequently, as in his waking state. The farmer goes to his barn and threshes his grain; the house-servant lights a fire and prepares the breakfast for the family; and the scholar goes to his desk and writes or reads. Usually, however, the action of the senses is more or less imperfect, many of the impressions being incorrectly or not at all perceived. The person walks against a wall, or stumbles over an object in his path; he mistakes some projection for a horse, strides across it, and imagines himself to be riding; he hears the faintest sound connected with what he is doing, while the voices of persons near him, even the blast of a trumpet, are entirely unnoticed. Occasionally the power of the senses is increased to a degree unknown in the waking state. For the most part the operations of the somnambulist consist in getting up while asleep, groping about in the dark, endeavoring to make his way out of the house through doors or windows, making some inarticulate sounds, perhaps, and all the while unconscious of persons or things around him. The power of the perceptive faculties, as well as that of the senses, is sometimes increased in a wonderful degree.

The somnambulist always awakes suddenly, and has but a faint conception, if any, of what he has been thinking and doing. If conscious of anything, it is of an unpleasant dream imperfectly remembered. This fact, not being generally known, will often enable us to detect simulated somnambulism. If the person on waking continues the same train of thought and pursues the same plans and purposes which he did while asleep, there can be no doubt that he is feigning the affection. When a real somnambulist, for some criminal purpose, undertakes to simulate a paroxysm, he is not at all likely to imitate one of his own previous paroxysms, for the simple reason that he knows less than others how he appeared while in them. If, therefore, somnambulism is alleged in any given case, with no other proof than the occurrence of former paroxysms unquestionably genuine, it must be viewed with suspicion if the character of the alleged paroxysm differs materially from that of the genuine ones. In one way or another, a case of simulation would generally be detected by means of a close and intelligent scrutiny, so difficult is it to imitate that mixture of consciousness and unconsciousness, of dull and sharp perceptions, which somnambulism presents. The history of the individual may throw some light on the matter. If he has had an opportunity of witnessing the movements of a somnambulist in the course of his life, this fact alone would rouse suspicion, which would be greatly increased if the alleged paroxysm presented many traits like those of the paroxysms previously witnessed.

The legal consequences of somnambulism should be precisely those of insanity, which it so nearly resembles. The party should be exempt from punishment for his criminal acts, and be held amenable in damages for torts and trespasses. The only possible exception to this principle is to be found in those cases where the somnambulist, by meditating long on a criminal act while awake, is thereby led to commit it in his next paroxysm. Such being generally the fact, too much indulgence ought not to be shown to the criminal acts of the somnambulist. But this is rather refined and hazardous speculation, and seems like punishing men solely for bad intentions, because the acts, though ostensibly the ground of punishment, are actually those of a person deprived of his reason. The truth is, however, that criminal acts have been committed in a state of somnambulism by persons of irreproachable character.

STERILITY is barrenness; unfruitfulness; inability to produce young; inability to impregnate or conceive. When incurable at the time of marriage, and arising from impotency, it is a good cause for dissolving a marriage. See IMPOTENCY, above.

SUICIDE is self-destruction; self-murder; the act of designedly destroying one's own life. To constitute suicide, the person must be of years of discretion, and of sound mind. This was once regarded by the common law as exclusively a felonious act; of late, however, it has been often treated as the result of insanity, to be followed by all the legal consequences of that disease, so far as it is practicable. That suicide may be committed by a person in the full enjoyment of his reason there can be no doubt; nor can there be any doubt that it is often the result of unquestionable insanity. Between the two kinds of suicide here indicated, the medical jurist is obliged to discriminate, and in performing this duty the facts on the subject should be carefully considered.

The instinct of self-preservation is not so strong as to prevent men entirely from being tired of life and seeking their own destruction. They may have exhausted all their sources of enjoyment, their plans of business or of honor may have been frustrated, poverty or dishonor may be staring them in the face, the difficulties before them may seem utterly insurmountable, and, for some reason like these, they calmly and deliberately resolve to avoid the evil by ending their life. The act may be unwise and presumptuous, but there is in it no element of disease. On the other hand, it is well known that suicidal desires are a very common trait of insanity—that a large proportion of the insane attempt or meditate self-destruction. It may be prompted by a particular delusion, or by a sense of irresistible necessity. It may be manifested in the shape of a well-considered, persistent intention to seize upon the first opportunity to terminate life, or of a blind, automatic impulse acting without much regard to means or circumstances. As the disease gives way and reason is restored, this propensity disappears, and the love of life returns.

Besides these two forms of the suicidal propensity, there are other forms which cannot be referred with any degree of certainty to either of them. Persons, for instance, in the enjoyment of everything calculated to make life happy, and exhibiting no sign of mental disease, deliberately end their days. Another class, on approaching a precipice or a body of water, are seized with a desire, which may be irresistible, to take the fatal plunge. Many are the cases of children who, after some mild reproof, or slight contradiction, or trivial disappointment, have gone at once to some retired place and taken their lives. Every case must be judged by the circumstances accompanying it, always allowing the benefit of the doubt to be given to the side of humanity and justice.

By the common law suicide was treated as a crime, and the person forfeited all chattels, real or personal, and various other property.<sup>1</sup> This result can be avoided by establishing the insanity of the party; and in England, of late years, courts have favored this course whenever the legal effect of suicide would operate as a punishment. On the other hand, where the rights and interests of other parties are involved, the question of insanity is more closely scrutinized; and ample proof is required of the party on whom the burden of proof lies.

In regard to wills made just before committing suicide, the prevalent doctrine on this point, both in the United States and in England, is that the act of self-destruction may not necessarily imply insanity, and that if the will is a rational act, rationally done, the sanity of the testator is established.<sup>2</sup>

In life-insurance, in every case of intentional suicide, whatever may have been the mental condition, the policy becomes void.<sup>3</sup>

In cases of persons found derid, the cause may not be always perfectly obvious, and it becomes necessary to determine whether death was an act of suicide, or murder. This is often one of the most difficult questions in the whole range of medical jurisprudence, requiring for its solution the most profound knowledge of surgery and physiology, and great practical sagacity. In case of death caused by wounds, the kind and situation of the weapon, the extent, direction, and situation of the wounds, their connection with marks of blows, the temper and disposition of the person, all these and many other circumstances must be carefully and intelligently investigated. The frequency with which cases of suicide strongly resemble, in their external characters, those of murder, renders necessary the highest degree of skill and careful discrimination. If one counsels another to commit suicide, and is present at the consummation of the act, it is murder in the principal.<sup>4</sup>

SUPERFETATION is the conception of a child by a woman already pregnant with another, during the time of such pregnancy. It is a doctrine that seems to be established by numerous cases.<sup>5</sup>

VERBERATION. See PULSATION, above. WOUNDS are any lesions of the body whereby blood is drawn, including contusions, gunshot wounds, incisions, lacerations, punctures, etc. To constitute a wound the continuity of the skin must be broken,<sup>6</sup> and not merely the cuticle, but the true skin must be divided.<sup>7</sup> If the skin be broken the means by which it was done are not material. A kick may give a wound.<sup>8</sup> See DEATH, above.

MERCANTILE LAW. See titles AGENCY; BAILEMENTS; BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS; CONTRACTS; INSURANCE; INTEREST, ETC., ante.

MILITARY LAW is a system of regulations for the government of an army.<sup>9</sup> It is to be distinguished from martial law, which extends to all persons. Martial law supercedes and suspends all civil law; but military law is superadded and subordinate to the civil law.<sup>10</sup>

MUNICIPAL LAW is that governing a single nation, state, district, city, town, community, etc. It is distinguished from international law.

PLACE—LAW OF.

The law of the place, lex loci, and is, in general, only used for law of the place where the contract was made, or where the act was performed or to be performed.

in every case of intentional homicide, the mental element becomes void.

Reasons found dead, the cause of death is perfectly obvious, and it becomes unnecessary to determine whether death was caused by wounds, blows, or murder. This is often a difficult question in the whole of jurisprudence, requiring the most profound knowledge of anatomy, and great practical skill in the use of the weapon, the extent of the wounds, the marks of blows, the tenor of the person, all these circumstances must be carefully investigated. The frequency of suicide strongly resembles the characters, those of murder, the highest degree of skill in the art. If one counsels suicide, and is present at the act, it is murder in the conception of a child pregnant with another, such pregnancy. It is a crime to be established by numer-

LAW is a system of regulation of an army. It is to be distinguished from martial law, which is a law of the place where the military law is subordinate to the civil law.

LAW is that governing a district, city, town, county, distinguished from international law.

LAW OF PLACE, lex loci, and is, in general, the law of the place where the act was performed.

See titles AGENCY; DEEDS, NOTES, AND BILLS; INSURANCE; INTEREST, ETC.

In Contracts. It is a general principle applying to contracts made, rights acquired, or acts done, relative to personal property, that the law of the place of making the contract or doing the act is to govern it, and determine its validity or invalidity, as well as the rights of parties under it in all matters touching the modes of execution and authentication of the form or instrument of contract; and also in relation to the use and meaning of the language in which it is expressed, the construction and interpretation of it, the legal duties and obligations imposed by it, and the legal rights and immunities acquired under it. This principle, though general, does not, however, apply where the parties at the time of entering into the contract had the law of another kingdom in view, or where the law of place is in itself unjust, against good morals, or contrary to the public law of the State, as regarding the interests of religion or morality, or the general well-being of society. And where the place of performance is different from the place where the contract is made, it is presumed the parties had the law of the former in mind.

The law of the place is presumed to be the same as that of the forum unless shown to be otherwise.

The Interpretation, Formalities, etc.; Construction and Obligation of Contracts, etc. The interpretation of contracts is to be governed by the law of the country where the contract was made. The law of the place governs as to the formalities and authentication requisite to the valid execution of contracts. But in proving the existence of, or seeking remedies for the breach, as well as all questions relating to the competency of witnesses, course of procedure, etc., the law of the forum must govern. The law of place governs as to the construction of contracts, unless from their tenor it must be presumed they were entered into with a view to the laws of some other State. This presumption arises where the place of performance is different from the place of making. An obligation may be incurred under the law of place which there is no means of enforcing in that country, and which may be enforced in another country.

A lien or privilege created by the law of place will generally be enforced wherever the property may be found, but not necessarily in preference to claims arising under the law of the forum.

A discharge from the performance of a contract under the law of place is a discharge everywhere. A distinction is to be taken between discharging a contract and taking away the remedy for a breach.

Contracts Made Partly in one State and Partly in Another. Where a contract is made partly in one country and partly in another, it is a contract of the place where the assent of the parties first concurs and becomes complete. As between the place of making and the place of performance, where the place of performance is specified, the law of the place of performance governs as to obligation, interpretation, etc. Where the contract is to be performed generally, the law of the place of making governs. If the contract is to be performed partly in one state and partly in another, it will be affected by the law of both states. In cases of indorsement of negotiable paper, every indorsement is a new contract, and the place of each indorsement is its place of contract. The place of payment is the place of contract, however, as between indorsee and drawer. The place of acceptance of a draft is regarded as the place of contract.

The legality or illegality of a contract will be determined by the lex loci, unless it affects injuriously the public morals or rights, contravenes the policy, or violates a public law of the country where it is to be enforced. A contract illegal by the law of the place of its making and performance will generally be held so everywhere.* A contract legal by the lex loci will be so everywhere,* unless:

1. It is injurious to public rights or morality.<sup>7</sup>
2. It contravenes the policy,<sup>8</sup> and it is generally held that the claims of citizens are to be preferred to those of foreigners in case of a conflict of rights. Assignments under the insolvent laws of a foreign state are usually held inoperative as against claims in the state in regard to personal property in the jurisdiction of the lex fori.<sup>9</sup>

3. Or violates a positive law of the lex fori. The application of the lex loci is a matter of comity, and that law must, in all cases, yield to the positive law of the place of seeking the remedy.<sup>5</sup>

Statutes of limitation apply to the remedy, but do not discharge the debt.<sup>6</sup>

The validity or invalidity of a contract as affected by the lex loci may depend upon the capacity of the parties, or the legality of the act to be done. The capacity of the parties as affected by questions of minority or majority, guardianship and other personal qualities or disabilities, is to be decided by the law of the place of making the contract.<sup>4</sup> Personal disqualifications not arising from the law of nature, but from positive law, and especially such as are penal, are strictly territorial, and are not to be enforced in any other country than where they originate.<sup>9</sup> Natural disabilities, such as insanity, imbecility, etc., are everywhere recognized, so that the question whether they are controlled by the lex loci or lex domicilii seems to be theoretic rather than practical.

IN TORTS. Damages for the commission of a tortuous act are to be measured by the law of the place where the act was done.<sup>7</sup>

PLACE OF SITUATION OF THE THING.

Lex rei sitae is law of the place or situation of the thing.

It is the universal rule of the common law that any title or interest in land, or in other real estate, can only be acquired or lost agreeably to the law of the place where the same is situate,<sup>8</sup> and the law is the same in this respect in regard to all methods whatever of transfer, and every restraint upon alienation.<sup>9</sup>

PROSPECTIVE LAW is that which is

REPORT LAW.

REPORTS are printed or written collections of accounts or relations of cases judicially argued and determined. Prior to the year 1800 there were but one or two American reports, while in England there were very many. In the jurisprudence of nearly every civilized country, the force of adjudicated precedents is to a greater or less degree acknowledged. But in no countries are they so deferentially listened to, and, indeed, so implicitly obeyed as in England and in those countries which, like our own, derive their systems of judicial government from her. The European systems are composed, much more than either ours or the English, of codes; and their courts rely far more than ours upon the opinions of eminent text writers. With us, we pay no implicit respect to anything but a "case in print," and, supposing the case to be by an authoritative court, when that is cited it is generally taken as conclusive on the question in issue. Hence both the English and American jurisprudence is filled with books of reports; that is to say, with accounts of cases which have arisen, and the mode in which they have been presented, considered, argued, and decided. It is of late years usual, in the United States at least, for the courts to write out their opinions and deliver them to the reporter, so that usually the opinion of the court is correctly given. Nothing can be so various, as respects their grade of merit, as the English reports prior to about the year 1776, and the lawyer should never rely upon any one of them without knowing the character of the volume which he cites. Great judicial mistakes have arisen, even with the most able courts, from want of attention to the different characters of the old reporters.<sup>1</sup>

RETROSPECTIVE LAW is that having reference to matters or things existing before its passage. Laws which operate upon some subject, contract, or crime which existed before their passage, are generally unjust, and are to a certain extent forbidden by that article of the Constitution of the United States which prohibits the passage of ex post facto laws, or laws

Hence the English and American jurisprudence books of reports; that is to say, of cases which have arisen, and which they have been presented, used, and decided. It is of late the United States at least, for writers on their opinions and decisions, from want of attention to the characters of the old reporters.)

REPEALING LAW is that law-matters or things existing before laws which operate upon some act, or crime which existed before are generally unjust, and are to be forbidden by that article of the United States which provide of ex post facto laws, or laws impairing contracts. The right to pass retrospective laws, with the above exception, exists in the several States, according to their own constitutions; and they become obligatory if not prohibited by such constitutions.<sup>2</sup>

STATUTE LAW.

A STATUTE is a law established by the act of the legislative power. An act of the legislature. The written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the State. This word is used to designate the written law in contradistinction to the unwritten law. See ante, COMMON LAW. An affirmative statute is one which is enacted in affirmative terms. Such a statute does not necessarily take away the common law.<sup>3</sup> If, for example, a statute without negative words declares that when certain requisites shall have been complied with, deeds shall have a certain effect as evidence, this does not prevent their being used in evidence, though the requisites have not been complied with, in the same manner as they might have been before the statute was passed.<sup>4</sup> Nor does such an affirmative statute repeal a precedent statute if the two can both be given effect.<sup>5</sup> A negative statute is one expressed in negative terms, and so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute.<sup>6</sup> A declaratory statute is one which is passed in order to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been. A remedial statute is one which is made to supply such defects and abridge such superfluities in the common law as may have been discovered. The term "remedial statute" is also applied to those acts which give the party injured a remedy; and in some respects such statutes are penal.<sup>7</sup> A penal statute is one which commands or prohibits a thing, under a certain penalty.<sup>8</sup> A statute affixing a penalty to an act, though it does not in words prohibit it, thereby makes it illegal.<sup>9</sup> A perpetual statute is one for the continuance of which there is no limited time, although it be not expressly declared to be so. If a statute which did not itself contain any limitation is to be governed by another which is temporary only, the former will also be temporary and dependent upon the existence of the latter.<sup>10</sup> A temporary statute is one which is limited in its duration at the time of its enactment. It continues in force until the time of its limitation has expired, unless sooner repealed. A statute which by reason of its nature has only a single and temporary operation—e. g., an appropriation bill—is also called a temporary statute. Private or special statutes or acts are those of which will not take notice without pleading; such as concern only a particular species or person. Private statutes may be rendered public by being so declared by the legislature.<sup>11</sup> Private statutes will not bind strangers, though they should not contain any saving of their right. A general saving clause used to be inserted in all private bills; but it is settled that, even if such saving clause be omitted, the act will bind none but the parties. Public or general statutes are those of which the courts will take judicial notice without pleading or proof. They are either general or local—that is, have operation throughout the State at large, or within a particular locality. It is not easy to say what limitation will render an act local. Thus, it has been held that a public act relating to one county only is not local within the meaning of the constitutional provision which forbids enactments of local bills embracing more than one subject.<sup>12</sup>

It is a general rule that when the provisions of a statute is general, everything which is necessary to make such provision effectual is supplied by the common law,<sup>13</sup> and when a power is given by statute, everything necessary for making it effectual is given by implication.<sup>14</sup>

A statute which contravenes a provision of the constitution of a State by whose legislature it was enacted, or of the Constitution of the United States, is in so far void. The presumption, however, is that every State statute, the object and provision of which are among the acknowledged powers of the legislation, is valid and constitutional; and such presumption is not to be overcome unless the contrary is clearly demonstrated.<sup>15</sup> Where a part only of a statute is unconstitutional, the rest is not void if it can stand by itself.<sup>16</sup>

A statute is not to be deemed repealed, merely by the enactment of another statute on the same subject. There must be a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law and the old to work a repeal by implication; and even then the old law is repealed only to the extent of such repugnancy.<sup>17</sup> This rule is supported by a vast variety of cases. There is, however, a qualification to be observed in the case of a revised law. Where the new statute is in effect a revision of the old, it may be treated as superseding the former, though not expressly so declared.<sup>18</sup> A mere change of phraseology in the provision does not, however, necessarily imply a change in the law.<sup>7</sup> Where a new statute expressly repeals the former statute, and the new and the repeal of the old are to take effect at the same time, a provision in the old statute which is embodied in the new is deemed to have continued in force without suspension.<sup>8</sup> But it has been held, that where the new law does not go into effect until a time subsequent to that at which the repeal takes effect, such a provision is to be deemed repealed meantime.<sup>9</sup>

It is not to be presumed in the courts of any State, that statutes which have been enacted in that State have also been enacted in other States. The courts assume that the common law still prevails, unless it is shown to have been modified.<sup>10</sup>

CONSTRUCTION. Penal statutes are to be strictly construed. Remedial statutes are to be liberally construed.<sup>11</sup>

The apparent object of the legislature is to be sought for as disclosed by the act itself, the preamble in some cases, similar statutes relating to the same subject, the consideration of the mischief of the old law, and perhaps some other circumstances. All statutes are to be construed with reference to the provisions of the common law, and provisions in derogation of the common law are held strictly. In construing statutes of the various States or foreign countries, the Supreme Court of the United States adopts the construction put upon them by the courts of the State or country by whose legislature the statute was enacted; but this does not necessarily include subsequent variations of construction by such courts.<sup>12</sup>

PUNCTUATION is not to be regarded in construing a statute.<sup>13</sup>

A LIEN is a hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge. In every case in which property, either real or personal, is charged with the payment of a debt or duty, every such charge may be denominated a lien on the property.<sup>14</sup> It differs from an estate in or title to the property, as it may be discharged at any time by payment of the sum for which the lien attaches. It differs from a mortgage in the fact that the mortgage is made, and the property delivered, or otherwise, for the express purpose of security; while the lien attaches as incidental to the main purpose of the bailment; or, as in case of a judgment, by mere act of the law without any act of the party. In its more limited as well as common sense, the word lien indicates a mere right to hold the property of another as security; or it is the right which one person possesses, in certain cases, of detaining property placed in his possession belonging to another, until some demand which the former has upon it, is satisfied.<sup>15</sup> A qualified right which, in certain cases, may be exercised over the property of another.<sup>16</sup> A lien is a right to hold.<sup>17</sup> A lien in regard to personal property is a right to detain the property till some claim or charge is satisfied.<sup>18</sup> The right of retaining or continuing possession till the price is paid.<sup>19</sup> Common law lien, as distinguished from other classes, consists in a mere right to retain possession until the debt or charge is paid. A general lien is the right to retain the property of another on account of a general balance due from the owner.<sup>20</sup> Of course where a general lien exists a particular lien is included. A particular lien is the right to retain the property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property.<sup>21</sup> Particular liens constitute the oldest class of liens, and the one most favored by the common law.<sup>22</sup> But the courts ceased to originate liens at an early period,<sup>23</sup> while general liens have been looked upon with jealousy, being considered encroachments upon the common law, and founded solely in the usage of and for the benefit of trade. In cases of a factor an apparent exception exists, as he is allowed a lien on the proceeds of the goods sold, as well as on the goods themselves. But this seems to result from the relation of the parties and the purpose of the bailment; to effectuate which, and at the same time to give a security to the factor, the law considers the possession, or right to possession, of the proceeds the same thing as the possession of the goods themselves. Liens either exist by law, arise from usage, or are created by express agreement.

COMMON LAW LIENS.

Liens which exist by the common law generally arise in cases of bailment. Thus, a particular lien exists whenever goods are delivered to a tradesman for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon them.<sup>24</sup> And so, where a person is, from the nature of his occupation,

It differs from a mortgage inasmuch as the mortgage is made, and the debt, or otherwise, for the security; while the lien attaches to the main purpose of the property. In case of a judgment, by law without any act of the creditor limited as well as common law lien indicates a mere property of another as security, which one person possesses, of detaining property belonging to another, in which the former has upon it, a qualified right which, in certain cases, is a right to hold. A lien on real property is a right to detain (till some claim or charge is satisfied) or to retain, or continue, the price is paid. Common law liens distinguished from other classes, are the right to retain possession of goods until a charge is paid. A general lien retains the property of another of a general balance due from another course where a general lien is included. A particular lien retains the property of another of labor employed or on that specific property. Common law liens constitute the oldest class of liens most favored by the common law, as they ceased to originate liens, while general liens have arisen with jealousy, being confined upon the common law, and in the use of and for the

But this seems to be a lien of the parties and the agent, to effectuate which, the agent gives a security to the creditor, the possession, or the proceeds the same. Liens on the goods themselves, by law, arise from usage, or from express agreement.

LIENS.

Liens arise from the common law of bailment. Thus, a particular lien arises whenever goods are delivered to the execution of the purpose upon them. And so, where the nature of his occupation, under a legal obligation to receive and be at trouble or expense about the personal property of another, in every such case he is entitled to a particular lien upon it. And sometimes a lien arises where there is strictly no bailment; thus, where a ship or goods at sea come into possession by finding, and he has been at some trouble or expense about them, he is entitled to retain the same until reimbursed his expenses. This applies only to the salvors of a ship and cargo preserved from peril at sea, and in case of property on shore, where a specific reward is offered for the restoration, and does not apply, generally, to things found upon land, unless so made by custom or statute.

Liens which arise by usage are usually general liens, and the usage is either the general usage of trade, or the particular usage of parties. The usage must be so general that the party delivering the goods may be presumed to have known it, and to have made the right of lien a part of the contract. And the lien must be for a general balance arising from transactions of a similar character between the parties, and that the debt must have accrued in the business of the party claiming the lien, and it seems that more decisive proof of general usage is required in those occupations in which the workmen are required to receive their employment when offered them, such as carriers. But where a general lien has been once established, the courts will not allow it to be disturbed.

In regard to a general lien arising from particular usage between the parties, proof of their having before dealt upon the basis of such a lien will be presumptive evidence that they continue to deal upon the same terms. If a debtor, who has already pledged property to secure a loan, borrow a further sum, it will be understood that the creditor's lien is for the whole debt.

Liens which arise from Express Agreement. A general or particular lien may be acquired in any case by the express agreement of the parties. This generally happens when goods are placed in the hands of a person for the execution of some particular purpose upon them, with an express contract that they shall be considered as a pledge for the labor or expense which the execution of that purpose may occasion; or it exists where the property is merely pawned or delivered for bare custody to another, for the sole purpose of being a security for a loan made to the owner on the credit of it. And if a number of tradesmen, not obliged by law to receive the goods of any one who offers for the purposes of their trade, agree not to receive goods unless they may be held subject to a general lien for the balance due them, and the bailor knows this, and leaves the goods, the lien attaches. And the same is true, of course, of an individual under similar circumstances. But where the tradesman is obliged to receive employment from any one who offers, a mere notice will not be enough to give this lien with implied assent, but express assent must be shown.

Liens which Exist in the Absence of any Special Agreement. Among the different classes who have liens by the common law, in the absence of any special agreement, are: Agisters of cattle have no lien. Attorneys and solicitors have a lien upon the papers of their clients, and also upon judgments obtained by them. But this lien is subject to some restrictions. Bailiffs for hire generally for work done by them. Bankers have a lien on all securities left with them by their employers. Clerks of courts have a lien on papers for their fees. Common carriers for transportation of goods, but not if the goods are taken tortiously from the owner's possession, where the carrier is innocent, and on a passenger for his passage-money. Part of the goods may be detained for the whole freight of goods belonging to the same person. Factors and brokers have a lien on goods and papers on part of the goods for the whole claim, but only for such goods as come to them as factors. Innkeepers may detain a horse for his keeping, if he belong to a guest, but not sell him unless authorized by statute, and then in the express mode provided; but cannot retake the horse after giving him up. They may detain the goods of a traveler, but not of a boarder. Their lien is a particular lien. Pawners from the very nature of their contract, but only where the pawnee (or pledgor) has authority to make such pledge. A pledge, even where the pawnee is innocent, does not bind the owner, unless the pawnee has authority to make the pledge. The pawnee does not have a general lien. Tailors have a particular lien. docs of goods have a lien for the price so long as they retain possession.<sup>7</sup> Warehousemen have a particular lien.<sup>8</sup> So a Warfanger.<sup>9</sup>

General Requisites of a Valid Lien. In all these cases, to give rise to the lien there must have been a delivery of the property; it must have come into the possession of the party claiming the lien, or his agent.<sup>7</sup> A question may arise by whom the delivery is to be made. Where a person, in pursuance of the authority and directions of the owner of property, delivers it to a tradesman for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon it, the tradesman will not have a general lien against the owner for a balance due from the person delivering it, if he knew that the one delivering was not the real owner.<sup>2</sup> Thus, a carrier, who, by the usage of trade, is to be paid by the consignor, has no lien for a general balance against the consignee.<sup>2</sup> Nor can a claim against the consignee destroy the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu.<sup>3</sup> But a particular lien may undoubtedly be derived through the acts of agents acting within the scope of their employment.<sup>2</sup> And the same would be true of a general lien against the owner for a balance due from him.<sup>4</sup>

No lien exists where the party claiming it acquires possession by wrong<sup>6</sup> or by misrepresentation,<sup>7</sup> or by his unauthorized and voluntary act.<sup>8</sup> No lien exists where the act of the servant or agent delivering the property is totally unauthorized, and the pledge of it is tortious against the owner, whether delivered as a pledge or for the execution of the purposes of a trade thereupon.<sup>3</sup> A pledge, even when the pawnee is innocent, does not bind the owner unless the pawner had authority.<sup>1</sup>

A delivery by a debtor for the purpose of preferring a creditor will not be allowed to operate as a delivery sufficient for a lien to attach.<sup>1</sup>

Waiver of Lien. Possession is a necessary element of common law liens; and if the creditor once knowingly parts with that possession after the lien attaches, the lien is gone.<sup>2</sup> But there may be a special agreement extending the lien, though not to affect third persons.<sup>1</sup> The delivery may be constructive<sup>3</sup> and so may possession.<sup>2</sup> A lien cannot be transferred,<sup>2</sup> but property subject to a lien may be delivered to a third person, as to the creditor's servant with notice of the lien, so as to preserve the lien of the original creditor.<sup>2</sup> But it must not be delivered to the owner or his agent.<sup>3</sup> But if the property be of a perishable natura, possessio may be given to the owner under proper agreements.<sup>7</sup> Neglect to insist upon a lien in giving reasons for a refusal to deliver property on demand, has been held a waiver.<sup>2</sup>

Where there is a special agreement made, or act done, inconsistent with the existence of the lien, such as an agreement to give credit, or where a distinct security is taken, or the possession of the property is acquired for another distinct purpose, and for that only, or where the property is attached by the creditor, no lien arises.<sup>2</sup> But such agreement must be clearly inconsistent with the lien.<sup>2</sup>

Rights, Uses, and Remedies under a Lien. The only remedy or use of the lien at common law is to allow the creditor to retain possession of the goods,<sup>2</sup> etc. And this he may do as against assignees of the debtor.<sup>2</sup>

MARITIME LIENS do not include or require possession. The word lien is used in maritime law, not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive; but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession.<sup>2</sup> A distinction is made in the United States between qualified maritime liens, which depend upon possession, and absolute maritime liens, which do not require nor depend upon possession.<sup>2</sup>

Builders' liens may be placed on the common-law ground that a workman employing skill and labor on an article has a lien upon it;<sup>2</sup> and a lien for the purpose of finishing the ship where payments are made by instalments.<sup>2</sup> See MATERIAL MEN, below.

Collision. In case of collision the injured vessel has a lien upon the one in fault for the damage done;<sup>2</sup> and the lien lasts a reasonable time.<sup>2</sup>

Deposit of a bill of lading gives a lien for the amount advanced on the strength of the security.<sup>2</sup> See PART-OWNER, below.

Dead Freight. No lien exists for dead freight.<sup>2</sup> The lien attaches only for freight earned.<sup>1</sup> The lien is lost by a delivery of the goods,<sup>2</sup> but not if the delivery be involuntary, or procured by fraud. So it is by stipulations inconsistent with its exercise, as by an agreement to receive the freight at a day subsequent to the entire delivery of the goods—a distinction being, however, taken between the unloading or arrival of the ship, and the delivery of the goods.

A third person cannot take advantage of the existence of such lien. A vendor, before exercising right of stoppage in transitu, must discharge this lien by payment of freight.

Master's Lien. In England, the master has no lien, at common law, on the ship for wages, nor disbursements.

But, by the one hundred and ninety-first section of the English Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, it is provided that "Every master of a ship shall, so far as the case permits, have the same rights, liens, and remedies for the amount of his wages, which, by this act, or any law or custom, any seaman, not being a master, has for the money of his wages." This lien of the master on an English vessel may be reinforced in the admiralty courts of the United States.

In the United States, he has no lien for his wages. This does not apply to one not master in fact. As to lien for disbursements. He may be substituted if he discharge a lien. But he has a lien on the freight for disbursements; for wages in a peculiar case; and on the cargo, where it belongs to the ship-owners. He may, therefore, detain goods against the shipper or consignee, even after payment to owner, if the master give reasonable notice. The master may retain goods till a contribution bond is signed.

Material men have a lien by admiralty law. They are those whose trade it is to build, repair, or equip ships, or to furnish them with tackle and provisions necessary in any kind. In regard to foreign ships, it has been lately held that material men have a lien on the ship only when the supplies were necessary, and could be obtained only on the credit of the ship. The lien for repairs continues only as long as they retain possession, on domestic ships, and is gone if possession is left.

The several States of the United States are foreign to each other in this respect.

As to the order of precedence of these liens. Admiralty formerly took jurisdiction of such liens, though not strictly maritime liens; but this jurisdiction is now questioned, if not denied.

Giving credit will not be a waiver of a lien on a foreign ship, unless so given as to be inconsistent with the exercise of the lien. See BUILDERS, ETC., above.

Owner of a ship has a lien on the cargo carried for freight earned, whether reserved by a bill of lading or not.

This lien is, at most, only a qualified maritime lien. The lien exists in case of a chartered ship to the extent of the freight due under the bill of lading. But if the charterer takes possession and management of the ship, he has the lien. No lien for freight attaches before the ship has broken ground. But see, as to the damages for removing goods from the ship before she sails.

A part-owner, merely as such, has no lien whatever, but acquires such a lien when any of the elements of partnership or agency, with bailment upon which his lien may rest, enter into his relation with the other part-owners.

A part-owner who has advanced more than his share towards building a vessel has no lien on her for such surplus, and none, it is said, for advances on account of a voyage.

That the relation of partners must exist to give the lien.

And part-owners of a ship may become partners for a particular venture.

The liens of part-owners and by deposit of a bill of lading are not maritime liens, however, and could not be enforced in admiralty.

Seaman's Lien for wages attaches to the ship and freight, and the proceeds of both, and follows them into whosoever hands they come; and lies against a part, or the whole, of the fund; but not the cargo. It applies to proceeds of a vessel sold under attachment of a State court.<sup>7</sup>

This lien of a seaman is of the nature of the privilegium of the civil law, does not depend upon possession, and takes precedence of a bottomry bond or hypothecation.<sup>8</sup> Taking the master's order does not destroy the lien.<sup>9</sup> Fishermen on shares have it, by statute. Generally, all persons serving in a way directly and materially useful to the navigation of the vessel.<sup>10</sup> A woman has it if she performs seaman's service.<sup>11</sup> It lies against ships owned by private persons, but not against government ships employed in the public service.<sup>12</sup>

A ship-broker, who obtains a crew, has been held to have a lien for his services, and advances for their wages.<sup>13</sup>

Shipper of goods has a lien upon the ship, for the value of the goods sent, which can be enforced in admiralty,<sup>14</sup> and, generally, every act of the master binds the vessel, if it be done within the scope of his authority,<sup>15</sup> where the possession of the master is not tortious, but under a color of right.<sup>16</sup> This does not apply to contracts of material men with the master of a domestic ship,<sup>17</sup> and the act must have been within the scope of the master's employment.<sup>18</sup> This lien follows the ship even in the hands of a purchaser, without notice before the creditor has had a reasonable opportunity to enforce his lien.<sup>19</sup> If the master borrow money for the ship's necessity, the lender has a lien on the ship for the amount.<sup>20</sup>

The ship's husband, if a partner, has a partner's lien; if not, he may have a lien in the proceeds of the voyage;<sup>21</sup> or of the ship herself, if sold, or on her documents, if any of these have come into his actual possession. And the lien applies to all disbursements and liabilities for the ship. But it is doubtful if his mere office gives him a lien.<sup>22</sup>

Stewards have no lien.<sup>23</sup>

STATUTORY LIENS. The principal liens of this class are judgment liens, and the liens of builders and material men.

At common law a judgment is a lien upon real property from the time of its rendition.<sup>24</sup> A judgment is sometimes, though very rarely, a lien upon personal property.

Mechanics and material men in most of the States have a lien upon the property on which they bestow their labor, or contribute materials for repairs, or in the erection of buildings, etc.

LOST PAPERS.

WHEN AGREEMENTS, CONVEYANCES, DEEDS, WILLS, and the like have been lost, and it is desired to prove their contents, the party must prove that he has made diligent search, and in good faith exhausted all sources of information accessible to him. For this purpose his own affidavit is sufficient.<sup>25</sup> On being satisfied of this, the court will allow secondary evidence to be given of its contents. Even a will proved to be lost may be admitted to probate upon secondary evidence.<sup>26</sup> But the fact of the loss must be proved by the clearest evidence, because it may have been destroyed by the testator with an intention to revoke.<sup>27</sup>

WHEN A BOND OR OTHER DEED was lost, formerly the obligee or plaintiff was compelled to go into equity to seek relief,<sup>28</sup> but now the loss of any paper other than a negotiable note will not prevent the plaintiff recovering at law as well as in equity.<sup>29</sup>

WHEN A NEGOTIABLE NOTE HAS BEEN LOST, the claimant must tender an indemnity to the debtor, and file his petition or complaint to compel payment.<sup>30</sup>

LOST PROPERTY.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF A FINDER. The finder is entitled to certain rights, and liable to duties which he is obliged to perform. This is a species of deposit, which, as it does not arise ex contractu, may be called a quasi deposit, and it is governed by the same general rules as common deposits. The finder is required to take the same reasonable care of the property found as any voluntary depository ex contractu.<sup>31</sup>

The finder is not bound to take the goods he finds, yet when he does undertake the custody, he is required to exercise reasonable diligence in preserving the property, and he will be responsible for gross negligence. On the other hand, the finder of an article is entitled to recover all expenses which have necessarily occurred in preserving the thing found; as, if a man were to find an animal, he would be entitled to be reimbursed for its keeping, &c.

advertising in a reasonable manner that he had found it, and to any reward which may have been offered by the owner for the recovery of such lost thing.<sup>3</sup> And when the owner does not reclaim the goods lost, they belong to the finder.<sup>4</sup>

CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY OF A FINDER. As to the criminal responsibility of a finder, the result of the authorities is that if a man finds goods that have been actually lost, or are reasonably supposed by him to have been lost, and appropriates them, with intent to take entire dominion over them, really believing when he takes them that the owner cannot be found, it is not larceny; but if he takes them with the like intent, though lost, or reasonably supposed to be lost, but reasonably believing that the owner can be found, it is larceny.<sup>4</sup>

MARRIAGE is a contract, made in due form of law, by which a man and woman reciprocally engage to live with each other during their joint lives, and to discharge towards each other the duties imposed by law on the relation of husband and wife.

CONTRACT OF MARRIAGE.

The marriage contract is in law a civil contract, to which the consent of the parties is essential. The marriage relation can only be entered into, maintained, and abrogated as provided by law. It is dissolved by death or divorce. A marriage which is valid by the laws of the country in which it is contracted is valid in this State. To make a valid marriage the parties must be willing to contract, able to contract, and have actually contracted.

All persons are able to contract marriage unless they are under the legal age, or unless there be other disability; the age of consent at common law is fourteen in males and twelve in females.<sup>5</sup> When a person under this age marries, such person can, when he or she arrives at the age above specified, avoid the marriage, or such person or both may, if the other is of legal age, confirm it, if either of the parties is under seven, the marriage is void.<sup>6</sup>

If either party is non compos mentis or insane,<sup>7</sup> or has a husband or wife living,<sup>8</sup> the marriage is void. Consanguinity and affinity within the rules prescribed by law render the marriage void.

The parties must each be willing to marry the other. If either party acts under compulsion, or is under duress, the marriage is voidable.<sup>9</sup> Where one of the parties is mistaken in the person of the other, this mistake is wanting; but a mistake as to the qualities or character of the other party will not avoid the marriage.<sup>10</sup> If the apparent willingness is produced by fraud, the marriage will be valid until set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by a decree of divorce.<sup>11</sup> Fraud is sometimes said to render a marriage void, but this is incorrect, as it is competent for the party injured to waive the tort, and affirm the marriage. Impotency in one of the parties is sometimes laid down as rendering the marriage void, as being a species of fraud on the other party; but it is only a ground for annulling the contract by a court or for a divorce.

The parties must actually make a contract of marriage; the form and requisites are hereinafter stated.

At common law no particular form of words or ceremony is necessary; mutual assent to the relation of husband and wife is sufficient. Any words importing a previous assent to being married to each other are sufficient evidence of the contract, if legally consummated.

Marriage is proved, in the absence of a license and certificate of the person authorized to perform the ceremony or proved copies thereof, from the subsequent acknowledgment of the parties, or from proof of cohabitation, or of general reputation resulting from the conduct of the parties.<sup>12</sup> In civil cases a marriage can generally be proved by showing that the parties have held themselves out as husband and wife, and by general reputation founded on their conduct. There is an exception, however, in the case of such civil suits as are founded on the marriage relation, such as actions for the seduction of the wife, where general reputation and cohabitation will not be sufficient.<sup>13</sup>

The civil effects of marriage are the following:

1. It confirms all matrimonial agreements between the parties;
2. It creates the civil affinity which each contracts towards the relations of the other;

5. The wife on her marriage loses her domicile and acquires that of her husband;

6. The children acquire the domicile of their father;

8. It makes all the issue legitimate.

Incestuous marriages are those prohibited by the law of nature. They are generally prohibited by statute.

The marriage ceremony may be regarded either as a civil ceremony or a religious sacrament.

HUSBAND'S OBLIGATIONS. He is bound to receive his wife at home, and should furnish her with all the necessaries and conveniences which his fortune enables him to do, and which her situation requires; but this does not include such luxuries as, according to her fancy, she deems necessaries. He is bound to love his wife and to bear with her faults, and, if possible, by mild means, to correct them; and he is required to fulfil towards her his marital promise of fidelity, and can, therefore, have no carnal connection with any other woman, without a violation of his obligations. As he is bound to govern his house properly, he is liable for its misgovernment, and he may be punished for keeping a disorderly house, even where his wife had the principal agency, and he is liable for her torts, unless otherwise provided by statute.

—RIGHTS. Being the head of the family, the husband has a right to establish himself wherever he may please, and in this he cannot be controlled by his wife; he may manage his affairs in his own way, buy and sell all kinds of personal property, without her control, and he may buy any real estate he may deem proper; but as the wife acquires a right in the latter, he cannot sell it discharged of her interest, except by her consent, expressed in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State where such lands lie.

WIFE'S OBLIGATIONS. A wife is under obligation to love, honor, and obey her husband, and is bound to follow him wherever in the country he may choose to go and establish himself, provided it is not, for other causes, unreasonable. She is under obligation to be faithful in chastity to her marriage vow.

—RIGHTS. A wife has a right to the love and protecting care of her husband; she has a right to share his bed and board; she can call upon her husband to provide her with necessary food and clothing according to her position in life, and if he neglects or refuses to do so, she can procure them on his account. As to her rights, on decease of her husband, in real estate, etc., see GENERAL STATUTES.

Any woman who shall have been married out of this Commonwealth, if her husband afterward become a resident thereof, enjoys all the rights as to property, which she may have acquired by the laws of any other State, Territory, or country, or which she may have acquired by virtue of any marriage contract or settlement made out of this State.

DIVORCE is the dissolution or partial suspension by law of the marriage relation. It is regulated by the statutes of the different States, and the various statutes are by no means uniform. Divorces are allowed for adultery, cruelty, desertion for a specified period, drunkenness if habitual, and other causes. In some States divorces are not allowed, are allowed for adultery only, and in others for any of the above or other causes. For specific information recourse must be had to the general statutes of the particular State.

ALIMONY. Of those consequences which result from the direction or order of the court, the most important are—Alimony, or the allowance which a husband, by order of court, pays to his wife, living separate from him, for her maintenance. The allowance may be for her use either during the pendency of a suit,—in which case it is called alimony pendente lite,—or after its termination, called permanent alimony.<sup>1</sup> Alimony is an allowance, not a sum of money nor a specific proportion of the husband's estate, given absolutely to the wife; it is a continuous allotment of sums payable at regular intervals for her support from year to year.<sup>2</sup> Alimony pendente lite is granted very much as a matter of course, unless the wife has sufficient separate property, upon the institution of a suit,<sup>3</sup> either for the purpose of obtaining a divorce from the bonds of matrimony,<sup>4</sup> a sentence of nullity, or a separation from bed and board,<sup>5</sup> and whether the wife be plaintiff or defendant; for it is improper for the parties to live in matrimonial cohabitation during the pendency of such a suit, whatever may be its result,<sup>6</sup> and therefore, the husband who has all the money, and the wife none, is bound to furnish her, whether plaintiff or defendant, with means to defray her expenses in the suit; otherwise she might be denied justice.<sup>7</sup> Alimony, especially permanent alimony, pertains rather to a separation from bed and board than to a divorce from the bond of matrimony. Indeed, it is generally allowed in the latter case only in pursuance of statutory provisions.<sup>8</sup> It is provided by statute in several States that, in case of divorce, the court may order the husband to restore to the wife, when she is the innocent party, and sometimes even when she is not, a part or the whole of the property which he received by the marriage.<sup>9</sup> cases of divorce, the court may not a party, and sometimes even to a part, or the whole of the property received by the marriage.

In some cases, also, the court is authorized to divide the property between the parties, this being a substitute for the allowance of alimony.
For further particulars, recourse must be had to the statutes in question.

To entitle a wife to permanent alimony, the following conditions are requisite: 1. Proof of a legal and valid marriage. 2. A subsistence of the relation of husband and wife; but this requisite is not generally indispensable. 3.
The wife must be separated from the bed and board of her husband by judicial decree, as voluntary separation, for whatever cause, is insufficient. Permanent alimony must, as a general rule, be awarded by the same decree that grants the separation, or at least in the same suit, for it is not, in general, competent to maintain an independent or subsequent suit for that purpose. 4. The wife must not be the guilty party.

The amount to be awarded for alimony depends upon a great variety of considerations, and is governed by no fixed rules. The ability of the husband is a circumstance of more importance than the necessity of the wife, especially in respect to permanent alimony;
and in estimating his ability, his entire income, whether derived from his property or personal exertions, will be taken into consideration. If the wife has separate property, or derives income from her personal exertions, this will also be considered. The method of computation is to add the wife's annual income to her husband's; consider what, under the circumstances, should be allowed her out of the aggregate, then, from the sum so determined, deduct her separate income, and the remainder will be the annual allowance to be made her.

There are various other circumstances besides the ability of the husband; as, whether the bulk of the property came from the wife, or belonged originally to the husband, or was accumulated by the joint exertions of both subsequent to the marriage. Whether there are children to be educated and supported, and upon whom their support and education devolves. The condition in life, employment, health, and place of residence of the husband, as demanding a larger or smaller sum for his own support; the circumstance, condition in life, health, necessary expenditures, and place of residence of the wife; the conduct and demeanor of the wife towards the husband who desires cohabitation, and his as well; the extent and nature of the husband's or wife's offence; the aggravation or encouragement of the cause of separation by either, and whatever other circumstances or considerations address themselves to the discretion of the court.

The proportion of the joint income to be awarded for permanent alimony ranges from one-third to one-half. In alimony pendente lite, it is not usual to allow more than about one-fifth. Generally, a less proportion will be allowed out of a large estate than a small one, where the question is on alimony during the suit, for then the wife should live in seclusion, and wants only a comfortable subsistence. The amount of alimony is liable at any time to be diminished or increased at the discretion of the court.

Alimony must secure to the wife as wife, a maintenance separate from her husband; an absolute title in specific property, or a sale of a part of the husband's estate for her use, cannot be decreed or confirmed to her as alimony. Nor is alimony regarded, in any general sense, as the separate property of the wife; hence she can neither alienate nor charge it; if she suffers it to remain in arrears for more than one year, she cannot generally recover such arrears; if she saves up anything from her annual allowance, upon her death it will go to her husband; if there are any arrears at the time of her death, they cannot be recovered by her executors. Her right to alimony ceases upon the death of her husband, he being bound to support her only during his life; it ceases also upon reconciliation and cohabitation.

The extent, incidents, and nature of alimony is largely regulated by statute, and all observations concerning them should be very carefully received in conjunction with the statutes of the particular State where the subject is to be considered.

CHILDREN—CUSTODY OF. The tribunal hearing a divorce cause is generally authorized by statute to direct, during its pendency and afterwards, with which of the parties, or with what other person, the children shall remain, and to make provision out of the husband's estate for their maintenance. There are few positive rules upon the subject, the matter being left to the discretion of the court, to be exercised according to the circumstances of each case. The general principle is to consult the welfare of the child, rather than any supposed rights of the parents, and as between the parents to prefer the innocent to the guilty. In the absence of a controlling necessity or very strong propriety arising from the circumstances of the case, the father's claim is to be preferred.

THE CONSEQUENCES of divorce are such as flow from the sentences by operation of law, or flow from either the sentence or the proceeding by reason of their being directly ordered by the court and set down of record. In regard to the former, they are chiefly such as result immediately and necessarily from the definition and nature of a divorce. Being a dissolution of the marriage relation, the parties have no longer any of the rights, nor are subject to any of the duties, pertaining to that relation. They are henceforth single persons to all intents and purposes. It is true that the statutes of some of the States contain provisions disabling the guilty party from marrying again; but these are in the nature of penal regulations, collateral to the divorce, and which leave the latter in full force.

DEFENCES. Some of the principal defences in suits for divorce are: Connivance, or the corrupt consent of a party to the conduct in the other party whereof he afterwards complains. This bars the right of divorce, because no injury was received; for what a man has consented to he cannot say was an injury. Collusion. This is an agreement between husband and wife for one of them to commit, or appear to commit, a breach of matrimonial duty, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain the legal remedy of divorce, as for a real injury. Where the act has not been done, collusion is a real or attempted fraud upon the court; where it has, it is also a species of connivance; in either case it is a bar to any claim for divorce. Condonation applies chiefly, though not exclusively, to the offence of adultery; it is the conditional forgiveness or remission by the husband or wife of a matrimonial offence which the other has committed. While the condition remains unbroken, condonation, on whatever motive it proceeded, is an absolute bar to the remedy for the particular injury condoned. Recrimination. This is a defence arising from the complainant's being in like guilt with the one of whom he complains. It is incompetent for one of the parties to a marriage to come into court and complain of the other's violation of matrimonial duties, if the party complaining is guilty likewise. When the defendant sets up such violation in answer to the plaintiff's suit; this is called, in the matrimonial law, recrimination.

The foregoing defences, though available in all divorce causes, are more frequently applicable where a divorce is sought on the ground of adultery.

PROPERTY. In regard to rights of property as between husband and wife, a sentence of divorce leaves them as it finds them. Consequently, all transfers of property which were actually executed, either in law or fact, continue undisturbed; for example, the personal estate of the wife, reduced to possession by the husband, remains his after the divorce the same as before. But it puts an end to all rights depending upon the marriage and not actually vested; as, dower in the wife, all rights of the husband in the real estate of the wife, and his right to reduce to possession her choses in action. In respect to dower, however, it should be observed that a contrary doctrine has been settled in New York, it being there held that immediately upon the marriage being solemnized the wife's right to dower becomes perfect, provided only she survives her husband.

VALIDITY OF DIVORCE. Numerous and difficult questions are constantly arising in regard to the validity in one State of divorces granted by the courts or legislature of another State. The following propositions require the highest consideration: 1. The tribunals of a country have no jurisdiction over a cause of divorce, wherever the offence may have occurred, if neither of the parties has an actual bona fide domicile within its territory. 2. To entitle the court to take jurisdiction, it is sufficient for one of the parties to be domiciled in the country; both need not be, neither need the citation, when the domiciled party is plaintiff, be served personally on the defendant, if such personal service cannot be made. 3. The place where the offence was committed, whether in the country in which the suit is brought or a foreign country, is immaterial. 4. The domicile of the parties at the time of the offence committed is of no consequence, the jurisdiction depending on their domicile when the proceeding is instituted and the judgment rendered. 5. It is immaterial to this question of jurisdiction in what country or under what system of divorce laws the marriage was celebrated. It should be observed, however, that the last proposition but one is not sustained by authority in Pennsylvania and New Hampshire, it being held in those States that the tribunals of the country alone where the parties were domiciled when the delictum (fault or offence) occurred have jurisdiction to grant a divorce. And in regard to the second proposition, it is to be observed that, without personal citation within the State, the divorce is not of binding effect in any other State.

NECESSARIES. The term "necessaries" is not confined merely to what is requisite barely to support life, but includes many of the conveniences of refined society. It is a relative term, which must be applied to the circumstances and conditions of the parties.<sup>a</sup> Ornaments and superfluities of dress, such as are usually worn by the party's rank and situation in life,<sup>b</sup> some degree of education,<sup>c</sup> lodging and house-rent,<sup>d</sup> horses, saddles, bridles, liquors, pistols, powder, whips, and fiddles have been held not to be necessaries.<sup>e</sup>

The rule for determining what are necessaries is that whether articles of a certain kind or certain subjects of expenditure are, or are not such necessaries as an infant may contract for, is a matter of law, and for instruction by the court; but the question whether any particular things come under these classes, and the question also as to the quantity, are generally matters for the jury to determine.<sup>f</sup>

Infants may contract for necessaries,<sup>g</sup> but are not liable for borrowed money, though expended for necessaries.<sup>h</sup> Necessaries for the infant's wife and children are necessaries for himself.<sup>i</sup> A wife is allowed to make contracts for necessaries, and her husband is generally responsible upon them, because his assent is presumed; and even if notice be given not to trust her, still he would be liable for all such necessaries as she stood in need of, but in this

NOVATION is the substitution of a new obligation for an old one, which is thereby extinguished. A transaction, whereby a debtor is discharged from his liability to his original creditor, by contracting a new obligation in favor of a new creditor, by the order of his original creditor. The term novation is rarely employed. The usual common law equivalent is assignment and sometimes merger. Still, this form of contract found its way into common law treaties as early as Fleta's day, by whom it was called innovatio.<sup>a</sup>

If A. owes B. fifty dollars; B. owes C. the same sum, and, at the request of C., orders A. to pay that sum, when it shall fall due, to C.; to this A. consents, and B. discharges A. from all obligation to him.<sup>b</sup> And if A. owes B., and B. owes C., and it is agreed by these three parties that A. shall pay this debt to C., and A. is by this agreement discharged from his debt to B., and B. is also discharged from his debt to C., then there is an obligation created from A. to C., and C. may bring an action in his own name.<sup>c</sup> The mutual assent of all three parties is necessary to make an effectual novation, or substitution.<sup>d</sup> This new promise is not within the provisions of the statute of frauds, relating to a promise to pay the debt of another; for here the debtor contracts an entirely new debt of his own, the consideration of which is the absolute discharge of the old debt. But there must always be a debt once existing and now cancelled, to serve as a consideration for the new liability. The action in all cases is brought on the new agreement. But in order to give a right of action there must be an extinguishment of the original debt.

Null and Void. See CONTRACTS, ETC.

NUISANCE. See DAMAGES; CRIMINAL LAW.

A NUISANCE is that which Incommodes or annoys; something that produces inconvenience or damage. Nuisances are either private or public. Private when it affects individuals, as when one man erects a house so near his neighbor as to throw the water off the roof upon his neighbor's land or house, or to intercept the light that his neighbor before enjoyed. Public, when it annoys citizens in general, as obstructions of the highway.

It is difficult to say what degree of annoyance constitutes a nuisance. If a thing is calculated to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of a man's house, it is a nuisance. In relation to offensive trades, it seems that when such a trade renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable it is a nuisance, for the neighborhood have a right to pure and fresh air.

A thing may be a nuisance in one place which is not so in another; therefore the situation or locality of the nuisance must be considered. A tallow-chandler setting up his business among other tallow-chandlers, and increasing the noxious smells of the neighborhood, is not guilty of setting up a nuisance unless the annoyance is much increased by the new manufactory. Such an establishment might be a nuisance in a thickly-populated town of merchants and mechanics where no such business was carried on. Carrying on an offensive trade for twenty years in a place remote from buildings and public roads does not entitle the owner to continue it in the same place after houses have been built and roads laid out in the neighborhood, to the occupants of and travellers upon which it is a nuisance. The trade may be offensive for noise, or smell, or for other reasons.

Private nuisances may be corporeal inheritances. 3 Bingham (N. C.) 283; 3 Barb. 509; 3 T. R. 174. 4 B. & C. 103; 1 M. & W. 141; 14 Ill. 34; 1 La. An. 281; 15 N. H. 129; 20 B. Comm. 166, 715; 1 Hawk. tances; as, for example, if a man should build his house so as to throw the rain-water which fell on it on my land; or erect his building, without right, so as to obstruct my ancient lights; keep hogs or other animals so as to Incommodate his neighbor and render the air unwholesome; or to incorporate hereditaments; as, for example, obstructing a right of way by ploughing it up, or laying logs across it, and the like; or obstructing a spring; interfering with a franchise, as a ferry or railroad, by a similar erection unlawfully made.

To constitute a public nuisance, there must be such a number of persons annoyed that the offence can no longer be considered a private nuisance; this is a fact, generally, to be judged of by the jury. Public nuisances arise in consequence of following particular trades, by which the air is rendered offensive and noxious; from acts of public indecency, as bathing in a public river in sight of the neighboring houses; or for acts tending to a breach of the public peace, as for drawing a number of persons into a field for the purpose of pigeon-shooting, to the disturbance of the neighborhood; or keeping a disorderly house; or a gaming house; or a bawdy house; or a dangerous animal, known to be such, and suffering him to go at large, as a large bulldog accustomed to bite people; or exposing a person having a contagious disease, as the small-pox, in public; and the like. The bringing a horse infected with the glanders into a public place, to the danger of infecting the citizens, is a misdemeanor at common law. The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant was bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable nuisance, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial.

The remedies are by an action for the damage done, by the owner, in the case of a private nuisance; or by any party suffering special damage, in the case of a public nuisance; by abatement by the owner, when the nuisance is private; and in some cases when it is public, if no riot is committed by injunction or by indictment for a public nuisance.

AN OWNER is he who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases—even to sell or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he is prevented by some agreement or covenant, which restrains his right. Although there can be but one absolute owner of a thing, there may be a qualified ownership of the same thing by many. Thus, a bailor has the general ownership in the thing bailed, the bailee the special ownership. The right of the absolute owner is more extended than that of him who has only a qualified ownership; as, for example, the use of the thing. Thus, the absolute owner of the estate, though an owner in fee, may cut the wood, demolish the buildings, build new ones, and dig wherever he may deem proper for minerals, stone, plaster, and similar things, which would be considered actionable and would not be allowed in a qualified owner of the estate, as a lessee or a tenant for life. The word owner, when used alone, imports an absolute owner.

When there are several joint owners of a thing—as, for example, of a ship—the majority of them have a right to make contracts in respect to such thing in the usual course of business or repair, and the like, and the minority will be bound by such contracts.

GENERAL PARTNERSHIP.

PARTNERSHIP is a voluntary contract between two or more persons for joining together their money, goods, labor, and skill, or any or all of them, in some lawful commerce or business, under an understanding, express, or implied from the nature of the enterprise, that there shall be a communion of profit and loss between them.<sup>1</sup> The law of partnership, as administered in England and the United States, rests on a foundation composed of three materials—the common law, the law of merchants, and the Roman law.<sup>2</sup>

A partnership exists when two or more persons combine their property, skill, and labor, or one or more of them, in the transaction of business, for their common profit.<sup>3</sup> When a partnership is formed by written articles, it is considered as beginning at the date of the articles, unless they contain a stipulation to the contrary.<sup>4</sup>

As a general rule, a partnership may exist in any business or transaction which is not a mere personal office, and for the performance of which payment may be enforced.<sup>5</sup> It may be created for a special purpose, or confined by the parties to a particular line of business, or even a single transaction.<sup>6</sup> One partner may contribute all the money or all the stock, or all the labor or skill necessary for the purposes of the firm; but in order to make people liable as partners to each other, it is necessary that there should be a community of profits,<sup>7</sup> although one of them may stipulate to be indemnified against loss.<sup>8</sup> This, however, respects their mutual claims, for however they may stipulate with each other, all who take a share in the profits,<sup>9</sup> and all who allow themselves to be described and held out as partners, are liable as such to those to whom they have so held themselves out.<sup>10</sup> Supposing the parties to have become partners, the result is that each individual partner constitutes the others his agents for the purpose of entering into all contracts for him in the scope of the partnership concern, and consequently, that he is liable to the performance of all such contracts in the same manner as if entered into personally by himself.<sup>11</sup> It is not essential to the existence of a partnership that there should be any joint capital or stock.<sup>12</sup> Sometimes a partnership exists between parties merely as the managers and disposers of the goods of others.<sup>13</sup> A partnership is presumed to be general when there is no stipulation, or no evidence, from the course of business, to the contrary.<sup>14</sup> There may be a partnership to trade in land.<sup>15</sup> A ship as well as any other chattel, may be held in strict partnership.<sup>16</sup> But ships are generally owned by parties as tenants in common; and they are not, in consequence of such ownership, to be considered as partners.<sup>17</sup> The same is true of any other species of property in which the parties have only a community of interest.<sup>18</sup>

CONTRACT. The formation of a contract of partnership does not require any particular formality. It is, in general, sufficient that it is formed by the voluntary consent of the parties, whether that be express or implied; whether it be by written articles, tacit approbation

tion, or by parol contract, or even by mere acts.<sup>1</sup> Although ordinary partnerships may be formed without any written contract, and the acts and words of the parties are ordinarily sufficient for that purpose, yet, if the object of the company be to speculate in the purchase and sale of land, the positive rules of law and the statute of frauds require the partnership agreement to be in writing.<sup>2</sup> But this applies only to the contract between the parties, for as to third persons the partnership may be proved like any other.<sup>3</sup> A partnership, in general, is constituted between individuals, by an agreement to enter together, into a general or a particular business, and share the profits and losses thereof.<sup>4</sup> The criterion of a partnership is, whether the parties are to participate in profit. If the actual contract give a claim upon the profits, or the application of them, that is a partnership.<sup>5</sup> A participation in the uncertain profits of trade renders one a copartner in respect to the liabilities of the concern to third persons.<sup>6</sup> But the mere sharing of profits, without any connection whatever in the business, is not enough to constitute a partnership.<sup>7</sup> Thus, if one firm agrees with another, that each shall continue and carry on its business independently, but that the profits and losses of each firm shall be divided between the two, the two firms do not enter into partnership, nor do the members of one firm become partners with the members of the other.<sup>8</sup> There need not, however, be a community of interests in the property, if there be in the profits and some connection in the business.<sup>9</sup> But a setting apart a portion of the profits to pay the debt of a third person, does not make him a partner.<sup>10</sup> So, too, a joint purchase, but for the purpose of distinct and separate sales by each party on his own account, does not constitute the purchasers partners.<sup>11</sup> There are but few cases where a writing is necessary. Under the statute of frauds, where there is an agreement that a partnership shall commence at some time more than a year from the making of the agreement, a writing is necessary.<sup>12</sup> With respect to that part of the statute of frauds relating to lands, it has been held that a partnership may be constituted without writing,<sup>13</sup> and that if a partnership is proved to exist it may be shown that its property consists of land, although there is no signed agreement between the parties.<sup>14</sup> So it has been held, that an agreement to form a partnership for the purpose of buying and selling land may be proved by parol.<sup>15</sup> But this latter proposition is not generally conceded. The contrary doctrine has the weight of learned opinion.<sup>16</sup>

Persons may be copartners as to third parties and brought within all the liabilities of partnership as to them, who are not partners between themselves.<sup>17</sup> For whether they are partners is determined chiefly by their own intention; but whether they are partners in respect to third parties, is determined by a consideration of this intention, and also of that actual participation of profits which is held to require them to participate in the losses, because it diminishes the fund from which the losses are to be paid; and also of the way and degree in which the person sought to be charged as partner has been held out to the world as such, so that the person seeking to charge him had good reason to believe the debt of the partnership carried with it his responsibility.<sup>18</sup> Though a man really have no interest in the firm, yet if he suffer himself to be held out to the world as a member of it, he thereby authorizes those to whom he has been held out to treat him as a contracting party.<sup>19</sup> To make a man liable as nominal partner, he must have been held out as such to the plaintiff.<sup>20</sup> A contract to pay one employed in certain business a salary equal in amount to a certain proportion of the profits, will not make such a person a partner. The question of profits is of importance only in determining the amount of the salary. Neither will a certain salary, together with a certain per cent. upon the profits, make the receiver a partner.<sup>21</sup> An agreement by which a person is to receive a certain portion of the profits for his salary, does not constitute a partnership, such person having no special interest in the profits themselves, as profits.<sup>22</sup> Nor do factors and brokers for a commission on the profits, nor a master of vessel engaging for the share of the profits,<sup>23</sup> become partners, and are not, therefore, liable for the debts, as a partner is. It is sometimes difficult to distinguish between partnership and tenancy in common. In general, if the property owned jointly is so owned for the purpose of a joint business, and is so used, and the profits resulting from a common fund, it is partnership property; otherwise not.<sup>24</sup>

Though partnerships are usually formed by participation in profits and losses, partners may agree as to any way of dividing the losses; that a partner shall have his share of the profits and not be liable for losses. And this agreement is valid as between themselves. And this agreement will be equally efficacious, whether stated in articles, or proved by circumstances, or otherwise. For partners among themselves may make whatever bargain they choose. But no such agreement will prevent such partner from being liable for the debts of the partnership, unless the creditor knew of this bargain between the partners, and with this knowledge gave the credit to the other partners only.<sup>7</sup>

The liability of a partner springs either from his holding himself out to the world as a partner, or from his participation in the business and its profit or loss. If these two cases meet, as is usually the case, they strengthen each other; but either of them alone is, in general, sufficient to create this liability.<sup>8</sup>

There is no liability as a partner, where there is neither a participation in the profits, nor any such use of the defendant's name permitted by him as justifies the plaintiff in selling to others on his credit, although there may be in some way or measure a community of interest.<sup>9</sup>

Proof of existence. Whether a partnership exists or not in a particular case is not a mere question of fact, but one of mixed law and fact. It is, nevertheless, generally to be decided by a jury.<sup>10</sup> The existence of a partnership may be proved by showing—1. A distinct agreement for a partnership; or, 2. An agreement to share profit and loss; either of these will be conclusive; or, 3. An agreement to share profits—which will be strong evidence of a partnership; or, 4. Circumstances sufficient to establish a quasi-partnership which, being proved, is held to be prima facie evidence of a real partnership.

Where there is no written agreement, the evidence generally relied upon to prove a partnership is the conduct of the parties, the mode in which they have dealt with each other, and the mode in which each has, with the knowledge of the others, dealt with other persons. This can be shown by the books of account, by the testimony of clerks, agents, and other persons, by letters and admissions, and, in short, by any of the modes in which facts can be established.<sup>11</sup>

DISSOLUTION. A partnership may be dissolved in either of the following modes:

By the act of the parties, as by their mutual consent.<sup>12</sup> And where no specified period is limited for the continuance of the partnership, either party may dissolve it at his pleasure.<sup>13</sup> If the partnership be for a time certain, one partner may maintain an action against the other for a breach of the articles in dissolving before the period therein limited. And the action may be brought before the expiration of the time for which the partnership was limited. The damages would be the profits which would have accrued to the plaintiff from the continuation of the business.<sup>14</sup> When a partnership is not to endure for a time certain by the articles of copartnership, or where that time has expired, it may undoubtedly be dissolved at the pleasure of either partner.<sup>15</sup> But notice should be given to the other partner.<sup>16</sup> This should be a reasonable notice where the articles are totally silent upon the subject, and where, without such notice, injury would be inflicted, or fraud indicated.<sup>17</sup> The duration may be gathered from the terms of the articles, although not expressly provided for.<sup>18</sup> As against third persons a partner may withdraw from the partnership at will.<sup>19</sup>

By the act of God, as by the death of one of the partners; and this operates from the time of the death.<sup>20</sup> In such case the dissolution takes place from the time of the death, however numerous the association, and this not only to the deceased partner, but also as to all the survivors.<sup>21</sup> And the same rule applies to a silent partner,<sup>22</sup> unless there be an express stipulation to the contrary.<sup>23</sup> Although death of a partner operates a dissolution of the partnership, the articles of copartnership may provide for its continuance, by an agreement that the executors, administrators, heirs, or other designated persons, shall take the place of the deceased partner.<sup>24</sup> And such express agreement for the continuance of the partnership after the death of one partner is necessary, although the partnership is for a term of years.<sup>25</sup> Absolute insanity, or any equivalent disability, operates at once, and ipso facto, a dissolution.<sup>26</sup>

By the act of the law, as by the bankruptcy of one of the partners.<sup>27</sup> Bankruptcy of the firm, or of one partner, operates an immediate dissolution.<sup>28</sup> An act of bankruptcy does not dissolve the partnership instantly. The adjudication that he is a bankrupt is what severs

the partnership.<sup>1</sup> Insolvency under the statute would have the same effect.<sup>2</sup> And bankruptcy destroys the right of a partner to bind the firm by an acknowledgment of debt.<sup>3</sup> But either of the solvent and competent partners may collect, adjust, and receipt for partnership accounts.<sup>4</sup>

By a valid assignment of all the partnership effects for the benefit of creditors, either under insolvent acts<sup>5</sup> or otherwise,<sup>6</sup> and by a sale of partnership effects under a separate execution against one partner.<sup>7</sup> But the mere insolvency of one or all the members of a partnership does not itself operate a dissolution.<sup>8</sup>

By the assignment of the whole of one partner's interest either to his copartner or to a stranger.<sup>9</sup> Where it does not appear that the assignee acts in the concern after the assignment.<sup>10</sup> Where it was held that this would not ipso facto work a dissolution. Any assignment of a copartner's interest in the partnership's funds operates, ipso facto, a dissolution. So, the assignment of the whole of a copartner's interest.<sup>11</sup> And an assignment by one partner of his share of the future profits to another partner is a dissolution of the partnership, because the essence of that is a participation of the profits.<sup>12</sup>

By the award of arbitrators appointed under a clause in the partnership articles to that effect.<sup>13</sup>

By the civil death of one of the partners;<sup>14</sup> but the absconding of a party from the State does not of itself operate a dissolution.<sup>15</sup>

By the extinction of the subject-matter of the joint business or undertaking,<sup>16</sup> and by the completion of the business or adventure for which the partnership was formed.<sup>17</sup>

By the termination of the period for which a partnership for a certain time was formed.<sup>18</sup> If the partnership be continued, by express or tacit consent, after that period, it will be presumed to continue on the old terms,<sup>19</sup> but as a partnership at will.<sup>20</sup>

By the breaking out of a war between two States in which the partners are domiciled and carrying on trade.<sup>21</sup>

A partnership for a term may be dissolved before the expiration of the term, by the decree of a court of equity founded on the wilful fraud or other gross misconduct of one of the partners;<sup>22</sup> so on his gross carelessness and waste in the administration of the partnership, and his exclusion of the other partners from their just share of the management;<sup>23</sup> so on the existence of a violent and lasting dissension between the partners,<sup>24</sup> where these are of such a character as to prevent the business from being conducted upon the stipulated terms,<sup>25</sup> and to destroy the mutual confidence of the partners in each other.<sup>26</sup> But a partner cannot, by misconducting himself and rendering it impossible for his copartners to act in harmony with him, obtain a dissolution on the ground of impossibility so created by himself.<sup>27</sup> A partnership may be dissolved by decree when its business is in a hopeless state, its continuance impracticable, and its property liable to be wasted and lost.<sup>28</sup>

The confirmed lunacy of an active partner is sufficient to induce a court of equity to decree a dissolution, not only for the purpose of protecting the lunatic, but also to relieve his copartners from the difficult position in which the lunacy places them.<sup>29</sup> The same may be said of every other inveterate infirmity, such as palsy, or the like, which has seized upon one of the partners, and rendered him incompetent to act where his personal labor and skill were contracted for.<sup>30</sup>

But lunacy does not itself dissolve the firm, nor do other infirmities.<sup>31</sup> The court does not decree a dissolution on the ground of lunacy, except upon clear evidence that the malady exists, and is incurable.<sup>32</sup> A temporary illness is not sufficient.<sup>33</sup> A dissolution by the court, on the ground of insanity, dates from the decree, and not from a prior day.<sup>34</sup>

Dissolution with respect to Third Persons. The partnership as to third persons, that is, the liability of partners with respect to third persons, cannot be dissolved without notice to them that the partnership no longer exists. Actual notice must be brought home to persons who have been in the habit of dealing with the firm; but as to all persons who have had no previous dealings with the firm, notice fairly given in the public newspapers is deemed sufficient.<sup>35</sup> This notice is necessary to terminate the agency of each partner, and, consequently, his power to bind the firm.<sup>1</sup>

It is not necessary to give notice of the retirement of a dormant partner from the firm, if the fact of his being a partner be unknown to all the creditors of the firm; if it be known to some, notice to those must be given, but that will be sufficient.<sup>2</sup>

Notice of the dissolution is not necessary in case of the death of one of the partners, to free the estate of the deceased partner from further liability;<sup>3</sup> nor is notice, in fact, necessary in any case where the dissolution takes place by operation of law.<sup>4</sup>

EFFECT OF DISSOLUTION. The effect of dissolution as between partners is to terminate all transactions between them as partners, except for the purpose of taking a general account, and winding up the concern.<sup>5</sup> As to third persons, the effect of a dissolution is to absolve the partners from all liability for future transactions, but not for past transactions of the firm.<sup>7</sup> Dissolution, however it takes place, terminates altogether the power of a partner to carry on the business concerns of the partnership, in a way to bind former partners by any contract whatever. The former partners are partners no longer, but tenants in common;
and where there is no agreement to the contrary, each partner, after dissolution, possesses the same authority to adjust the affairs of the firm, by collecting its debts, and disposing of its property, as before dissolution; but they can no longer bind each other, even by varying the form of existing obligations.<sup>8</sup> No partner can indorse a note of the firm, even to pay a prior debt of the firm.<sup>9</sup> When a partner dies, the partnership property goes to the survivors for the purpose of settlement, and they all have the power necessary for that purpose, and no more.<sup>10</sup> And the survivors can charge nothing for their trouble or labor in settling the concern.<sup>11</sup> No partner is entitled to compensation for extra services in the absence of an express contract, and there is no principle of the law which authorizes an inquiry into the inequality of the services of partners, unless there be an express stipulation to that effect.<sup>12</sup>

They are tenants in common with the representatives of the deceased, as to the choses in possession; and they have a lien on them to settle the affairs of the concern, and pay its debts.<sup>13</sup> Proper notice should be given of a dissolution, for a firm may be bound by a contract made after the dissolution, or retirement of one or more, by a former partner, in the usual course of business, with a person who had no notice or knowledge of the dissolution.<sup>14</sup>

The power of the partners subsists for many purposes after dissolution; among these are:<sup>15</sup>

1. The completion of all the unfinished engagements of the partnership.

2. The conversion of all the property, means, and assets of the partnership existing at the time of the dissolution, for the benefit of those who were partners, according to their respective shares.

3. The application of partnership funds to the payment of the partnership debts.

But although, for the purposes of winding up the concern, and fulfilling engagements that could not be fulfilled during its existence, the power of partners subsists even after dissolution, yet, legally, and strictly speaking, it subsists for those purposes only.<sup>16</sup>

RIGHTS OF CREDITORS CONCERNING PART-NERSHIP FUNDS. The property of a partnership is bound to the payment of the partnership debts, and the right of a private creditor of one copartner to that partner's interest in the property of the firm, is postponed to the right of the partnership creditor.<sup>17</sup> Where an attachment by mesne process exists, such attachment is allowed; but it is generally made subject to the paramount rights of the partnership creditors.<sup>18</sup> It is well settled that if partnership effects can be taken by attachment or on execution to secure or satisfy the debts of one of the partners, this can be done only to the extent of that partner's interest, and subject to the settlement of all partnership accounts.<sup>19</sup> The general rule of law is, that in levying an execution against one partner for his separate debt, the officer may take possession of all the joint partnership goods<sup>1</sup> even in the case of a particular adventure.<sup>2</sup> This principle does not extend to the case of a joint-purchase or sub-purchase.<sup>3</sup> The right of a partner to dispose of the property of the firm extends to assignments of it as security for antecedent debts, as well as for debts thereafter to be contracted on account of the firm.<sup>4</sup> The assignment may be for the benefit of one creditor or of several, or of all the joint creditors who are admitted to an equal participation. It has been held that one partner may, with the consent or knowledge of his copartner, mortgage all the goods of the firm to a particular creditor of the firm.<sup>5</sup> The consent of one partner to dispose of the partnership property is, however, confined strictly to personal effects, and does not extend to real estate held by the partnership.<sup>6</sup>

A partner may draw, accept, and indorse bills, notes, and checks in the name and for the use of the firm,<sup>7</sup> and a note or bill executed by one partner in the name of the firm is prima facie evidence that it was executed for partnership purposes.<sup>8</sup> But if a partnership be carried on under a single name, it has been held that the legal presumption in regard to a note signed by that name, is, that it was a personal and not a partnership note.<sup>9</sup> One partner may effect insurance,<sup>10</sup> and receive money for the firm,<sup>11</sup> may compromise with its debtors or creditors,<sup>12</sup> and release debts due to it,<sup>13</sup> and such acts and dealings, if they fall within the ordinary business of the firm,<sup>14</sup> will bind all the other partners. A warranty of a horse upon sale thereof by one of several horse-dealers' partners would bind the others.<sup>15</sup> Upon the principle that the act and assurance of one partner, made with reference to business transacted by the firm, will bind all the partners; the acknowledgment, promise, or undertaking of one partner with reference to the contracts of the partnership, is held to be the acknowledgment, promise, or undertaking of all.<sup>16</sup>

Partner to Interfere with, or Dissent from Future Contracts, &c. One partner may interfere, and, by his dissent from future contracts by his copartner, or from closing of contracts with him which have not become binding upon the firm, he may, upon express notice thereof, avoid any liability subsequently arising upon such contracts if entered into, unless the dissenting partner afterwards assents to and ratifies the transaction.<sup>17</sup> But it seems that the dissenting partner would not be liable merely on the ground that the goods purchased, or the fruits of the contract, came to the use of the firm,<sup>18</sup> unless they were of some benefit to the firm.<sup>19</sup> It has, however, been questioned whether the dissent of one partner where the partnership consists of more than two, will affect the validity of partnership contracts made by the majority of the firm in the usual course of business, and within the scope of the concern.<sup>20</sup> In the absence of an express stipulation, a majority must decide as to the disposal of the partnership property,<sup>21</sup> but the power of the majority must be confined to the ordinary business of the partnership.<sup>22</sup> It does not extend to the right to change any of the articles thereof,<sup>23</sup> nor to engage the partnership in transactions for which it was never intended.<sup>24</sup> Where a majority is authorized to act, it must be fairly constituted, and must proceed with the most entire good faith.<sup>25</sup>

Power to Bind the Firm in Submission, Arbitration, Confession of Judgment, &c. One partner cannot bind the firm by submitting any of the affairs of the firm to arbitration, whether by deed or parol.<sup>26</sup> The principle is that there is no implied authority, excepting so far as it is necessary to carry on the business of the firm.<sup>27</sup> It might also affect the rights of the other partners to resort to the ordinary course of justice.<sup>28</sup> Still, in some States, one partner may submit partnership matters to arbitration.<sup>29</sup>

One partner cannot, by confessing a voluntary judgment, bind his copartners, unless actually brought into court by regular service of process against him and his partner; a judgment so confessed will bind the partners who did it only.<sup>30</sup> Nor can one partner, by entering an appearance for another, bind him personally and individually, where the latter is not within the jurisdiction, and has not been served with process.<sup>31</sup>

One partner will be bound by the fraud of become binding upon the express notice thereof, avoid entirely arising upon such consent, unless the dissenting assents to and ratifies the same. It seems that the dissenting partner is liable merely on the goods purchased, or the fruits derived from the use of the firm, and of some benefit to the firm. It is then questioned whether the partner where the partnership is in two, will affect the validity of contracts made by the majority in the usual course of business, and of the concern. In the absence of stipulation, a majority has the power of the disposal of the partnership property, and the power of the majority in the ordinary business of the partnership does not extend to the right of the articles thereof, nor to the rights in transactions for which the articles are made. Where a majority is authorized to be fairly constituted, and the most entire good faith is observed in the submission, arbitration, or judgment, etc. One partner may submit to arbitration, whether the principle is that there is no right, excepting so far as it is in the business of the firm, or the rights of the other partner, in the ordinary course of justice. One partner may submit to arbitration, not by confessing a voluntary judgment, but by regular service of process, and his partner, a judgment will bind the partners who can one partner, by entering for another, bind him personally, where the latter is not on, and has not been served.

his copartner in contracts relating to the affairs of the copartnership made with innocent third persons.<sup>1</sup> This doctrine proceeds upon the ground that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third person, he shall suffer who has been the cause or occasion of the confidence and credit reposed in such third person.<sup>2</sup> The liability, therefore, does not arise when there is collusion between the fraudulent partners and the party with whom he deals,<sup>3</sup> or the latter have reason to suppose that the partner is acting on his own account.<sup>4</sup> A partner may be made liable for other wrongs committed in reference to the partnership business by his copartners; as, where a partner injures a third person by negligence in driving a coach, the property of the firm and employed on their business.<sup>5</sup> A joint conversion may be raised in point of law, by the assent of the partner to the acts of his copartner.<sup>6</sup> Demand of, and refusal by one partner to deliver up property is evidence of a conversion by both.<sup>7</sup> But the wilful tort of one partner seems not in general to be imputable to the firm.<sup>8</sup>

Private Arrangements between Partners, etc.
 No arrangements between the partners themselves can limit or prevent their ordinary responsibilities to third persons, unless the latter assent to such arrangements.<sup>9</sup> But where the creditor has express notice of a private arrangement between the partners, by which either the power of one to bind the firm, or his liability on partnership contracts is qualified or defeated, such creditor will be bound by the arrangement.<sup>10</sup> The act or contract of one partner, even in a transaction purely of a partnership nature, does not bind the firm, if the creditor has express notice from the other partners that they will not consider themselves responsible,<sup>11</sup> for the authority of one partner to bind the firm is only implied; and no one can become the creditor of another against his express and declared will.<sup>12</sup>

The partnership property consists of the original stock and the additions made to it in the course of trade. All real estate purchased for the partnership, paid for out of the funds thereof, and devoted to partnership uses and trusts, whether the legal title is in one or all of the partners, is treated in equity in the same manner as other partnership property until the partnership account is settled, and the partnership debts are paid.<sup>13</sup> Leases of real estate taken by one partner for partnership purposes, mines, and trade-marks, are held to be partnership property.<sup>14</sup>

A peculiar species of interest, called good-will of the trade or business, is often treated as in some sort a part of the partnership property. It is considered to enhance the value of the effects on it, is attendant, and will, therefore, be included in a decree for the sale of those effects.<sup>15</sup> The good-will of a professional partnership belongs, in the absence of express stipulation, exclusively to the survivors.<sup>16</sup>

Partners as Joint Tenants, and Differing from Tenants in Common, etc. Partners are said to be joint tenants of the partnership property, without benefit of survivorship inter se.<sup>17</sup> But in addition to the ordinary right of joint tenants, each partner has also a power, singly, to dispose of the entire right of all the partners in the partnership effects, for the purposes of partnership, and in the name of the firm.<sup>18</sup>

Partnership also differs from a tenancy in common in reference to the power of disposal, and because, inter se, each partner has a claim, not to any specific share or interest in the property in specie, as a tenant in common has, but to the proportion of the residue which shall be found to be due to him upon the final balance of their accounts, after the conversion of the assets, and the liquidation thereof of all the claims upon the partnership; and, therefore, each partner has a right to have the same applied to the discharge and payment of all such claims before any one of the partners, or his personal representatives, or his individual creditors, can claim any right or title thereto.<sup>19</sup>

If a Partner has taken the whole or any part of his share out of the partnership stock, the stock so taken, if identified, is applicable to the payment of what, upon an account taken, shall be found to be due from him to the partnership, before it can be applied to the payment of his separate creditors.<sup>20</sup> The same rule will apply to any other property into which the partnership property may have been converted, so far and so long as its original character and identity can be distinctly traced,<sup>21</sup> and hence no separate creditor of any partner can merely as such creditor, take any portion of the partnership effects, by process or otherwise, except for so much as belongs to that partner, and his share or balance after all prior claims thereon are deducted and satisfied.<sup>8</sup>

Each Partner has also a specific lien on the present and future property of the partnership, the stock brought in, and everything coming in lien, during the continuance and after the determination of the partnership, not only for the payment of debts due to third persons, but also for the amount of his own share of the partnership stock, and for all moneys advanced by him beyond that amount for the use of the partnership, as also for moneys abstracted by his copartners beyond the amount of his share.<sup>9</sup> This lien attaches on real estate held by the partnership for partnership purposes, as well as upon the personal estate,<sup>10</sup> and is co-extensive with the transactions on joint account.<sup>11</sup>

Each Partner is Liable to pay the whole Partnership Debts. In what proportion the partners shall contribute is a matter merely among themselves.<sup>12</sup> Universally whatever agreement may exist among the partners themselves, stipulating for a restricted responsibility, and however limited may be the extent of his own separate beneficial interest in, and however numerous the members of the partnership, each individual member is liable for the joint debt to the whole extent of his property.<sup>13</sup>

The act or admission of one partner in legal proceedings, as also notice to or by one partner, as a general rule, is held to be binding on the firm.<sup>14</sup> In an action against partners, one may enter an appearance for the rest,<sup>15</sup> but not to bind them personally and individually when not within the jurisdiction, and not served with process.<sup>16</sup> Where one partner released an action after the firm had instructed their attorney to proceed to trial, the court refused to interfere.<sup>17</sup> And it seems that one partner has also the power of suspending proceedings in an action.<sup>18</sup> One partner may give notice of abandonment under a policy of insurance for all.<sup>19</sup> Notice of dishonor by one of several partners, joint indorsers of a bill or note, is notice to all.<sup>20</sup> One partner may act for the others in proceedings under the bankrupt laws,<sup>21</sup> except in the case of a petition for a fiat.<sup>22</sup>

Power to Bind the Firm outside of Partnership Transactions, &c. A partner derives no authority from the mere relation of partnership to bind the firm as the guarantor of the debt of another,<sup>23</sup> or as a party to a bill or note for the accommodation of, or as a mere and avowed surety for another.<sup>24</sup> In neither of these cases can the act of one partner bind the firm, unless there be a special authority for the purpose, or one to be implied from the common course of business, or the previous course and habit of dealing, with the knowledge and consent of the firm, or unless the transaction is subsequently adopted by the firm.<sup>25</sup> Whether it appears upon the instrument or in some other way, that the contract is one of guaranty, suretyship, or accommodation, the burden of proof is upon the party holding it, if he took it, knowing such to be the character of the contract, to show the facts necessary to render it available against the firm.<sup>26</sup> Direct or positive proof is not necessary; the authority or ratification may be inferred from circumstances.<sup>27</sup>

The Act of a Partner wholly unconnected with the business of the Partnership does not bind the firm.<sup>28</sup> Still a partner may bind the firm in matters out of the usual course of the business of the firm, if those matters arise out of, and are connected with, the regular transactions of the firm.<sup>29</sup> If one partner is a trustee, and he improperly employs the trust funds in the partnership business, his knowledge that he is doing so is not imputable to the firm.<sup>30</sup>

If a partner applies partnership funds to the payment of his own debts this act is void, although the creditor did not know that the funds belonged to the partnership.<sup>31</sup> And where any creditor of one member of the firm takes from him either his personal or security for his debt the paper of the firm, he takes it in fraud of the firm, and the firm will not (unless their interest, or assent and authority be shown) be held.<sup>32</sup>

Contracts to Convey Real Estate. Contracts by Deed, &c. One partner without authority, express or implied, from circumstances, can not bind the firm by a contract to convey real estate of the partnership unless there be a subsequent ratification or adoption of the contract.<sup>33</sup> One partner has no implied authority to bind his copartners by deed,<sup>1</sup> but a deed made by one partner in the name and for the use of the members of the firm will bind the other partners, if they assent to it or subsequently adopt it; and this consent or adoption may be by parole.<sup>2</sup> So one partner may bind the firm to a conveyance by deed of the effects of the firm which he might have conveyed without deed. The mere circumstance of annexing a seal to the instrument in such a case does not annul a transfer so consummated.<sup>3</sup> A deed of assignment of the partnership property, executed by one partner as his deed only, passes his interest in the property.<sup>4</sup> The rule that one partner cannot bind his copartners by deed does not extend to releases;<sup>5</sup> as a release by one partner is a release by all, so a release to one partner is a release to all.<sup>6</sup>

The power of a partner to dispose of the property of the firm does not extend to real estate held by the partnership; one partner cannot convey away real estate of the firm without special authority.<sup>7</sup>

Upon the decease of one of several partners his personal representatives become tenants in common with the surviving partners.<sup>8</sup> Still, as the surviving partner stands chargeable with the whole of the partnership debt, he takes the partnership property by survivorship, for all purposes of holding and administering the estate, until the effects are reduced to money, and the debts paid.<sup>9</sup> The debts of the partnership must be collected in the name of the surviving partner.<sup>10</sup>

Profits, Distribution of. As between the partners, they may by agreement stipulate for equal or unequal shares in the profit and loss of the partnership,<sup>11</sup> but in the absence of any express agreement or stipulation between them, and of all controlling evidence and circumstances, the presumption is held to be that they are interested in equal shares.<sup>12</sup> And the circumstance that each partner has brought an unequal amount of capital into the common stock, or that one or more have brought in the whole capital, and the others have only brought industry, skill, and experience, would not seem to furnish any substantial ground of difference as to the distribution.<sup>13</sup> Whether a partnership includes the capital stock, or is limited to the profit and loss, must be determined from the agreement and intention of the parties.<sup>14</sup>

A bona fide sale, for a valuable consideration, by one partner to another, of all the partnership effects, is valid, and the property so conveyed becomes the separate estate of the purchaser, although the firm and both partners are at the time insolvent.<sup>15</sup>

Mutual Rights—Obligations. Good faith, reasonable diligence, and skill, and the exercise of a sound judgment and discretion, lie at the very foundation of the relation of partnership. The same rules and tests are to be applied to the conduct of partners as are ordinarily applied to that of trustees. Indeed, the functions, rights, and duties of partners in a great measure comprehend both those of trustees and agents.<sup>16</sup> If the partnership suffers loss from the gross negligence, unskillfulness, fraud, or other wanton misconduct of a partner in the partnership business, or from a known deviation from the partnership articles, he is ordinarily responsible over to the other partners for all losses and damages sustained thereby.<sup>17</sup> A party withdrawing the funds of the concern, thereby diminishing the stock, and applying it to his own use, shall account to the others for the injury.<sup>18</sup> But if one partner, acting fairly, and for the best in his judgment, causes a loss, he is not answerable to the others.<sup>19</sup> Not only gross frauds, but intrigues for private benefit, are clearly offences against the partnership at large, and, as such, are relievable.<sup>20</sup>

As it is the duty of the partners to devote themselves to the interests of the concern, to exercise due diligence and skill for the promotion of the common benefit of the partnership, it follows that they must do it without any reward or compensation, although the services performed by the partners are very unequal in amount and value, unless there is an express stipulation for remuneration.<sup>21</sup> So no partner has a right to engage in any business or speculation which must necessarily deprive the partnership of a portion of his skill, industry, or capital, nor to place himself in a position which

as synonymous with partnership, "house," "concern," are also used in the same sense in point of law conventionally only to the persons who, on occasion when the name is of the firm. A firm is legal proceedings as carrying on business in name, style, and firm of, names of all the members appear in the name or style of the firm, and only a part of the name of "and company" or words indicating a partnership in the business, only one of the partners, is the name of the firm. It is that the name of neither is in the style of the firm. The firm is frequently partnership articles; and use, it becomes the duty of the firm, to name agreed upon. This not only to bind the firm prevent the partner signing personal liability both to third copartners. So, the name assume, recognize, and less so than if it had been implied authority to bind or than the firm-name thus, where a firm consisted the partnership name being H. accepted a bill in the name of the firm, it was held that J. on in the name of B. & D., a signature of a note by the names and surnames of the respective parties is a sufficient signature to charge the partnership.<sup>1</sup> Where a written contract is made in the name of one, and another is a secret partner with him, both may be sued upon it.<sup>2</sup>

INDIVIDUAL'S NAME USED, ETC. Where partners agree that their business shall be conducted in the name of one person, whether himself interested in the partnership business or not, that is the partnership name, and the partners are bound by it.<sup>3</sup> Where that name is the name of one of the partners, and he does business also on his own private account, a contract signed by that name will not bind the firm, unless it appears to have been entered into for the firm; but, if there be no proof that the contract was made for the firm, the presumption will be that it was made by the partner on his own separate account, and the firm will not be responsible.<sup>4</sup>

IDENTITY OF NAME. The name of the firm should be distinct from the names of all other firms. When there is confusion in this respect, the partners composing one firm may, in some cases, be made responsible for the debts of another.<sup>5</sup> Merchants and lawyers have different notions respecting the nature of a firm. Merchants are in the habit of looking upon a firm as a body distinct from the members composing it.<sup>6</sup> The law looks to the partners themselves; any change among them does not change the identity of the firm; what is called the property of the firm is their property, and what are called the debts and liabilities of the firm are their debts and their liabilities. In point of law, a partner may be the debtor or creditor of his copartners; but he cannot be either debtor or creditor of the firm of which he is himself a member.<sup>7</sup>

Suits in Firm Name. A firm can neither sue nor be sued otherwise than in the name of the partners composing it. Consequently, no action can be brought by the firm against one of its partners, nor by one of its partners against it; for in any such action one person at least would appear both as plaintiff and defendant, and it is considered absurd for any person to sue himself even in form.<sup>8</sup> For the same reason, one firm cannot bring an action against another if there be one or more partners in both firms.<sup>9</sup> Whenever a firm is spoken of by its name or style, the courts admit evidence to show what persons did in fact constitute the firm at the time in question.<sup>10</sup>

Change in Name, etc. If persons trade or carry on a business under a name, style or firm, whatever may be done by them under that name is binding as much as if real names had been used.<sup>11</sup> Any change of the persons composing a firm is productive of a new signification of the name. If, therefore, a legacy is left to a firm, that is a legacy to those who compose it at the time the legacy vests; and if a legacy is left to the representatives of an old firm, it will be payable to the executors or the survivors of the partners constituting the firm alluded to, and not to its successors in business.<sup>12</sup> Again, an authority given to a firm of two partners cannot, it would seem, be exercised by them and a third person afterwards taken into partnership with them.<sup>13</sup> A name may be a trade-mark; and, if it is, the use of it by others will be illegal, if they pass themselves or their own goods for the firm or the goods of the firm whose name is made use of.<sup>14</sup> Moreover, if this is done intentionally, the illegality will not be affected by the circumstance that the imitators of the trade-mark are themselves of the same name as those whose mark they imitate.<sup>15</sup>

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.

The purpose of limited partnership is to enable a party to put into the stock of a firm a definite sum of money, and abide a responsibility and share a profit which shall be in proportion to the money thus contributed, and no more.<sup>16</sup> Partnerships of this kind are wholly unknown to the common law, and are authorized and regulated only by statute. See GENERAL STATUTES.

The commissioner of patents and the chief clerk, before entering upon their duties, shall severally give bond, with sureties, to the treasurer of the United States, the former in the sum of ten thousand dollars, and the latter in the sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their respective duties, and that they shall render to the proper officers of the treasury a true account of all money received by virtue of their offices.<sup>3</sup>
Restrictions upon Officers and Employees.
 Sec. 480. All officers and employees of the patent office shall be incapable, during the period for which they hold their appointments, to acquire or take, directly or indirectly, except by inheritance or bequest, any right or interest in any patent issued by the office.<sup>4</sup>
Duties of Commissioner.
 Sec. 481. The commissioner of patents, under the direction of the secretary of the interior, shall superintend or perform all duties respecting the granting and issuing of patents directed by law; and he shall have charge of all books, records, papers, models, machines, and other things belonging to the patent office.<sup>5</sup>
Duties of Examiners-in-Chief.
 Sec. 482. The examiners-in-chief shall be persons of competent legal knowledge and scientific ability, whose duty it shall be, on the written petition of the appellant, to revise and determine upon the validity of the adverse decisions of examiners upon applications for patents, and for reissues of patents, and in interference cases; and, when required by the commissioner, they shall hear and report upon claims for extensions, and perform such other like duties as he may assign them.<sup>6</sup>
Establishment of Regulations.
 Sec. 483. The commissioner of patents,

Act Aug. 15, 1876. 1-8 July 1870, c. 230, § 1, v. 16, p. 174. 2-11 July 1870, c. 230, § 4, p. 175. 3-11 July 1870, c. 230, § 5, p. 175. 4-11 July 1870, c. 230, § 6, p. 175. 5-11 July 1870, c. 230, § 7, p. 175. 6-11 July 1870, c. 230, § 8, p. 175.

subject to the approval of the secretary of the interior, may from time to time establish regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the conduct of proceedings in the patent office.<sup>1</sup>

Arrangement and Exhibition of Models, etc.

SEC. 484. The commissioner of patents shall cause to be classified and arranged in suitable cases, in the rooms and galleries provided for that purpose, models, specimens of composition, fabrics, manufactures, works of art, and designs, which have been or shall be deposited in the patent office; and the rooms and galleries shall be kept open during suitable hours for public inspection.<sup>2</sup>

Disposal of Models on Rejected Applications.

SEC. 485. The commissioner of patents may restore to the respective applicants such of the models belonging to rejected applications as he shall not think necessary to be preserved, or he may sell or otherwise dispose of them after the application has been finally rejected for one year, paying the proceeds into the treasury, as other patent moneys are directed to be paid.<sup>3</sup>

Library.

SEC. 486. There shall be purchased for the use of the patent office a library of such scientific works and periodicals, both foreign and American, as may aid the officers in the discharge of their duties, not exceeding the amount annually appropriated for that purpose.<sup>4</sup> See act of August 15, 1876.

Patent-Agents may be refused Recognition.

SEC. 487. For gross misconduct the commissioner of patents may refuse to recognize any person as a patent-agent, either generally or in any particular case; but the reasons for such refusal shall be duly recorded, and be subject to the approval of the secretary of the interior.<sup>5</sup>

Printing of Papers Filed.

SEC. 488. The commissioner of patents may require all papers filed in the patent office, if not correctly, legibly, and clearly written, to be printed at the cost of the party filing them.<sup>6</sup>

Printing Copies of Claims, Laws, Decisions, etc.

SEC. 489. The commissioner of patents may print, or cause to be printed, copies of the claims of current issues, and copies of such laws, decisions, regulations, and circulars as may be necessary for the information of the public.<sup>7</sup>

Printing Specifications and Drawings.

SEC. 490. The commissioner of patents is authorized to have printed, from time to time, for gratuitous distribution, not to exceed one hundred and fifty copies of the complete specifications and drawings of each patent hereafter issued, together with suitable indexes, one copy to be placed for free public inspection in each capital of every State and Territory, one for the like purpose in the clerk's office of the district court of each judicial district of the United States, except when such offices are located in

State or territorial capitals, and one in the library of congress, which copies shall be certified under the hand of the commissioner and seal of the patent office, and shall not be taken from the depositories for any other purpose than to be used as evidence.<sup>8</sup>

Additional Specifications and Drawings.

SEC. 491. The commissioner of patents is authorized to have printed such additional numbers of copies of specifications and drawings, certified as provided in the preceding section, at a price not to exceed the contract price for such drawings, for sale, as may be warranted by the actual demand for the same; and he is also authorized to furnish a complete set of such specifications and drawings to any public library which will pay for binding the same into volumes to correspond with those in the patent office, and for the transportation of the same, and which shall also provide for proper custody for the same, with convenient access for the public thereto, under such regulations as the commissioner shall deem reasonable.<sup>9</sup>

Lithographing and Engraving.

SEC. 492. The lithographing and engraving required by the two preceding sections shall be awarded to the lowest and best bidder for the interests of the government, due regard being paid to the execution of the work, the work to be done under the supervision of the commissioner of patents, who shall receive competitive bids therefor.<sup>10</sup> Act of August 15, 1876.

Price of Copies of Specifications and Drawings.

SEC. 493. The price to be paid for uncertified printed copies of specifications and drawings of patents shall be determined by the commissioner of patents, within the limits of ten cents as the minimum and fifty cents as the maximum price.<sup>11</sup>

Annual Report of the Commissioner.

SEC. 494. The commissioner of patents shall lay before Congress, in the month of January, annually, a report, giving a detailed statement of all moneys received for patents, for copies of records or drawings, or from any other source whatever; a detailed statement of all expenditures for contingent and miscellaneous expenses; a list of all patents which were granted during the preceding year, designating under proper heads the subjects of such patents; an alphabetical list of all the patentees, with their places of residence; a list of all patents which have been extended during the year; and such other information of the condition of the patent office as may be useful to Congress or the public.<sup>12</sup> See §§ 195, 196.

Custody of Collections of Exploring Expedition.

SEC. 495. The collections of the exploring expedition, now in the patent office, shall be under the care and management of the commissioner of patents.<sup>13</sup>

Disbursements for Patent Office.

SEC. 496. All disbursements for the patent office shall be made by the disbursing clerk of the interior department.

Copies of Records, etc.

TITLE XIII., Rev. Stat., p. 168.

SEC. 598. Written or printed copies of any records, books, papers, or drawings belonging to the patent office, and of letters patent authenticated by the seal and certified by the commissioner or acting commissioner thereof, shall be evidence in all cases wherein the originals could be evidence; and any person making application therefor, and paying the fee required by law, shall have certified copies thereof.

Copies of Foreign Letters Patent.

SEC. 599. Copies of the specifications and drawings of foreign letters patent, certified as provided in the preceding section, shall be prima facie evidence of the fact of the granting of such letters patent, and of the date and contents thereof.

Printed Copies of Specifications and Drawings.

SEC. 594. The printed copies of specifications and drawings of patents, which the commissioner of patents is authorized to print for gratuitous distribution, and to deposit in the capitols of the States and Territories, and in the clerk's offices of the district courts, shall, when certified by him and authenticated by the seal of his office, be received in all courts as evidence of all matters therein contained.

Patented Articles connected with Marine Engines.

TITLE XV., Rev. Stat., p. 261. SEC. 1537. No patented article connected with marine engines shall hereafter be purchased or used in connection with any steam vessels of war until the same shall have been submitted to a competent board of naval engineers, and recommended by such board, in writing, for purchase and use.

No Royalty to be paid by the United States to the Inventor for Patent mentioned in preceding Section. (Springfield branch-loading system).

TITLE XVII., Rev. Stat., p. 292. SEC. 1673. No royalty shall be paid by the United States to any one of its officers or employees for the use of any patent for the system, or any part thereof, mentioned in the preceding section, nor for any such patent in which said officers or employees may be directly or indirectly interested.

SEC. 1674. No royalty shall be paid by the United States to any one of its officers or employees for the use of any patent for the system, or any part thereof, mentioned in the preceding section, nor for any such patent in which said officers or employees may be directly or indirectly interested.

PATENTS.

Patents, how issued, Attested, and Recorded.

TITLE LX., Rev. Stat., Chap. 1, p. 951.

SEC. 4883. All patents shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the patent office, and shall be signed by the secretary of the interior and countersigned by the commissioner of patents, and they shall be recorded, together with the specifications, in the patent office, in books to be kept for that purpose.

Contents and Duration.

SEC. 4884. Every patent shall contain a short title or description of the invention or discovery, correctly indicating its nature and design, and a grant to the patentee, his heirs or assigns, for the term of seventeen years, of the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention or discovery throughout the United States, and the Territories thereof, referring to the specification for the particulars thereof. A copy of the specification and drawings shall be annexed to the patent and be a part thereof.

Date of Patent.

SEC. 4885. Every patent shall bear date as of a day not later than six months from the time at which it was passed and allowed and notice thereof was sent to the applicant or his agent; and if the final fee is not paid within that period the patent shall be withheld.

What Inventions are Patentable.

SEC. 4886. Any person who has invented or discovered any new and useful art, machine, manufacture or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, not known nor used by others in this country, and not patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country, before his invention or discovery thereof, and not in public use or on sale for more than two years prior to his application, unless the same is proved to have been abandoned, may, upon payment of the fees required by law, and after due proceedings had, obtain a patent therefor.

Patents for Inventions previously patented abroad.

SEC. 4887. No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent be declared invalid, by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented in a foreign country, unless the same has been introduced into public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application. every patent granted for an invention which has been previously patented in a foreign country shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or, if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the shortest term, and in no case shall it be in force more than seventeen years.<sup>2</sup>

Requisites of Application, Description, Specification, and Claim.

SEC. 4888. Before any inventor or discoverer shall receive a patent for his invention or discovery, he shall make application therefor, in writing, to the commissioner of patents, and shall file in the patent office a written description of the same, and of the manner and process of making, constructing, compounding, and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it appertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make, construct, compound, and use the same; and in case of a machine, he shall explain the principle thereof, and the best mode in which he has contemplated applying that principle, so as to distinguish it from other inventions; and he shall particularly point out and distinctly claim the part, improvement, or combination which he claims as his invention or discovery. The specification and claim shall be signed by the inventor and attested by two witnesses.<sup>3</sup>

Drawings, when Requisites.
SEC. 4889. When the nature of the case admits of drawings, the applicant shall furnish one copy signed by the inventor or his attorney in fact, and attested by two witnesses, which shall be filed in the patent office; and a copy of the drawing, to be furnished by the patent office, shall be attached to the patent as a part of the specification.<sup>4</sup>

Specimens of Ingredients, etc.
SEC. 4890. When the invention or discovery is of a composition of matter, the applicant, if required by the commissioner, shall furnish specimens of ingredients and of the composition, sufficient in quantity for the purpose of experiment.<sup>5</sup>

Model, when Requisites.
SEC. 4891. In all cases which admit of representation by model, the applicant, if required by the commissioner, shall furnish a model of convenient size to exhibit advantageously the several parts of his invention or discovery.<sup>6</sup>

Oath required from Applicant.
SEC. 4892. The applicant shall make oath that he does verily believe himself to be the original and first inventor or discoverer of the art, machine, manufacture, composition, or improvement for which he solicits a patent; that he does not know and does not believe that the same was ever before known or used; and shall state of what country he is a citizen. Such oath may be made before any person within the United States authorized by law to administer oaths, or when the applicant resides in a foreign country, before any minister, chargé d'affaires, consul, or commercial agent, holding commission under the government of the United States, or before any notary public of the foreign country in which the applicant may be.<sup>7</sup>

Examination and Issuing Patent.
SEC. 4893. On the filing of any such application and the payment of the fees required by law, the commissioner of patents shall cause an examination to be made of the alleged new invention or discovery; and if on such examination it shall appear that the claimant is justly entitled to a patent under the law, and that the same is sufficiently useful and important, the commissioner shall issue a patent therefor.<sup>8</sup>

Limitation upon Time of Completing Applications.

SEC. 4894. All applications for patents shall be completed and prepared for examination within two years after the filing of the application, and in default thereof, or upon the failure of the applicant to prosecute the same within two years after any action therein, of which notice shall have been given to the applicant, they shall be regarded as abandoned by the parties thereto, unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner of patents that such delay was unavoidable.<sup>9</sup>

Patents Granted to Assignees.
SEC. 4895. Patents may be granted and issued or renewed to the assignee of the inventor or discoverer; but the assignment must first be entered of record in the patent office. And in all cases of an application by an assignee for the issue of a patent, the application shall be made and the specification sworn to by the inventor or discoverer; and in all cases of an application for a renewal of any patent, the application must be made and the corrected specification signed by the inventor or discoverer, if he is living, unless the patent was issued and the assignment made before the eighth day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy.<sup>10</sup>

When and on what Oath Executor or Administrator may Obtain Patent.

SEC. 4896. When any person, having made any new invention or discovery for which a patent might have been granted, dies before a patent is granted, the right of applying for and obtaining the patent shall devolve on his executor or administrator, in trust for the heirs at

Renewal of Application in Cases of Failure to Pay Fees in Season.

SEC. 4497. Any person who has an interest in an invention or discovery, whether as inventor, discoverer, or assignee, for which a patent was ordered to issue upon the payment of the final fee, but who fails to make payment thereof within six months from the time at which it was passed and allowed, and notice thereof was sent to the applicant or his agent, shall have a right to make an application for a patent for such invention or discovery the same as in the case of an original application. But such second application must be made within two years after the allowance of the original application. But no person shall be held responsible in damages for the manufacture or use of any article or thing for which a patent was ordered to issue under such renewed application prior to the issue of the patent. And upon the hearing of renewed applications preferred under this section, abandonment shall be considered as a question of fact.

Assignments of Patents.

SEC. 4498. Every patent or any interest therein shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing; and the patentee or his assigns or legal representatives may, in like manner, grant and convey an exclusive right under his patent to the whole or any specified part of the United States. An assignment, grant, or conveyance shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice, unless it is recorded in the patent office within three months from the date thereof.

Persons Purchasing of Inventor, etc., may Use or Sell the Thing Purchased.

SEC. 4499. Every person who purchases of the inventor, or discoverer, or with his knowledge and consent constructs any newly invented or discovered machine, or other patentable article, prior to the application by the inventor or discoverer for a patent, or who sells or uses one so constructed, shall have the right to use, and vend to others to be used, the specific thing so made or purchased, without liability therefore.

Patented Articles Must Be Marked as Such.

SEC. 4500. It shall be the duty of all patentees, and their assigns and legal representatives, and of all persons making or vending any patented article for or under them, to give sufficient notice to the public that the same is patented, either by fixing thereon the word "patented," together with the day and year the patent was granted; or when, from the character of the article, this cannot be done, by fixing to it, or to the package wherein one or more of them is enclosed, a label containing the like notice; and in any suit for infringement, by the party failing so to mark, no damages shall be recovered by the plaintiff, except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of the infringement, and continued, after such notice, to make, use, or vend the article so patented.

Penalty for Falsely Marking or Labeling Articles as Patented.

SEC. 4501. Every person who, in any manner, marks upon anything made, used, or sold by him for which he has not obtained a patent, the name or any imitation of the name of any person who has obtained a patent therefor, without the consent of such patentee, or his assigns or legal representatives; or

Who, in any manner, marks upon or affixes to any such patented article the word "patent" or "patentes," or the words "letters patent," or any word of like import, with intent to imitate or counterfeit the mark or device of the patentee, without having the license or consent of such patentee or his assigns or legal representatives; or

Who, in any manner, marks upon or affixes to any unpatented article the word "patent" or any word importing that the same is patented, for the purpose of deceiving the public,

Shall be liable, for every such offence, to a penalty of not less than one hundred dollars, with costs; one-half of said penalty to the person who shall sue for the same, and the other to the use of the United States, to be recovered by suit in any district court of the United States within whose jurisdiction such offence may have been committed.

Filing and Effect of Caveats.

SEC. 4502. Any citizen of the United States who makes any new invention or discovery, and desires further time to mature the same, may, on payment of the fees required by law, file in the patent office a caveat setting forth the design thereof, and of its distinguishing characteristics, and praying protection of his right until he shall have matured his invention. Such caveat shall be filed in the confidential archives of the office and preserved in secrecy, and shall be operative for the term of one year from the filing thereof; and if application is made within the year by any other person for a patent with which such caveat would in any manner interfere, the commissioner shall deposit the description, specification, drawings, and model of such application in like manner in the confidential archives of the office, and give notice thereof, by mail, to the person by whom the caveat was filed. If such person desires to avail himself of his caveat, he shall file his description, specifications, drawings, and model within three months from the time of placing the notice in the post-office in Washington, with the usual time required for transmitting it to the caveator added thereto; which time shall be indorsed on the notice. An alien shall have the privilege herein granted, if he has resided in the United States one year next preceding the filing of his caveat, and has made oath of his intention to become a citizen.

Notice of Rejection of Claims for Patents to be Given to Applicant.

SEC. 4903. Whenever, on examination, any claim for a patent is rejected, the commissioner shall notify the applicant thereof, giving him briefly the reasons for such rejection, together with such information and references as may be useful in judging of the propriety of renewing his application or of altering his specification; and if, after receiving such notice, the applicant persists in his claim for a patent, with or without altering his specifications, the commissioner shall order a re-examination of the case.

Interferences.

SEC. 4904. Whenever an application is made for a patent which, in the opinion of the commissioner, would interfere with any pending application, or with any unexpired patent, he shall give notice thereof to the applicants, or applicant and patentee, as the case may be, and shall direct the primary examiner to proceed to determine the question of priority of invention. And the commissioner may issue a patent to the party who is adjudged the prior inventor, unless the adverse party appeals from the decision of the primary examiner, or of the board of examiners-in-chief, as the case may be, within such time, not less than twenty days, as the commissioner shall prescribe.

Affidavits and Depositions.

SEC. 4905. The commissioner of patents may establish rules for taking affidavits and depositions required in cases pending in the patent office, and such affidavits and depositions may be taken before any officer authorized by law to take depositions to be used in the courts of the United States, or of the State where the officer resides.

Subpoenas to Witnesses.

SEC. 4906. The clerk of any court of the United States, for any district or Territory wherein testimony is to be taken for use in any contested case pending in the patent office, shall, upon the application of any party thereto, or of his agent or attorney, issue a subpoena for any witness residing or being within such district or Territory, commanding him to appear and testify before any officer in such district or Territory authorized to take depositions and affidavits, at any time and place in the subpoena stated. But no witness shall be required to attend at any place more than forty miles from the place where the subpoena is served upon him.

Witness Fees.

SEC. 4907. Every witness duly subpoenaed and in attendance shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed to witnesses attending the courts of the United States.

Penalty for Failing to Attend or Refusing to Testify.

SEC. 4908. Whenever any witness, after being duly served with such subpoena, neglects or refuses to appear, or after appearing refuses to testify, the judge of the court whose clerk issued the subpoena may, on proof of such neglect or refusal, enforce obedience to the process, or punish the disobedience, as in other like cases. But no witness shall be guilty of contempt for disobeying such subpoena, unless his fees and traveling expenses in going to, returning from, and one day's attendance at the place of examination, are paid or tendered him at the time of the service of the subpoena; nor for refusing to disclose any secret invention or discovery made or owned by himself.

Appeals from Primary Examiners to Examiners-in-Chief.

SEC. 4909. Every applicant for a patent or for the reissue for a patent, any of the claims of which have been twice rejected, and every party to an interference, may appeal from the decision of the primary examiner, or of the examiner in charge of interferences in such case, to the board of examiners-in-chief; having once paid the fee for such appeal.

From Examiners-in-Chief to Commissioner.

SEC. 4910. If such party is dissatisfied with the decision of the examiners-in-chief, he may, on the payment of the fee prescribed, appeal to the commissioner in person.

From the Commissioner to the Supreme Court, District of Columbia.

SEC. 4911. If such party, except a party to an interference, is dissatisfied with the decision of the commissioner, he may appeal to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting in banc.

Notice of such Appeal.

SEC. 4912. When an appeal is taken to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the appellant shall give notice thereof to the commissioner, and file in the patent office, within such time as the commissioner shall appoint, his reasons of appeal, specifically set forth in writing.

Proceedings on Appeal to Supreme Court.

SEC. 4913. The court shall, before hearing such appeal, give notice to the commissioner of the time and place of the hearing, and on receiving such notice the commissioner shall not the original and first inventor of any material and substance thing patented; or, been in public use or on sale more than two years before a patent, or had been abandoned.

As to proof of previous invention, or use of the thing patented, all state the names of patentees of their patents, and the names and residences alleged to have invented, or prior knowledge of the thing and by whom it had been used, one or more of the special affidavits shall be rendered for him with like defences may be pleaded in defence for relief against an alleged infringement of the same may be made in the answer of the defendant to the like effect.

Power to Grant Injunctions and Estimate Damages.

In several courts vested with power to grant injunctions and principles of courts prevent the violation of any right, on such terms as the court shall see fit; and upon a decree being made in such case for an infringement, the party shall be entitled to recover, in addition to the profits to be accounted for by the damages the complainant may be entitled to recover; and the court shall have power to increase such damages, as is given to increase the damages in actions in the nature of an injunction. And the court shall have power to increase such damages, as is given to increase the damages in actions in the nature of an injunction.

Infringement Where Defendant is Not Invented.

Whenever, through inadvertence, mistake, and without any willful intent to defraud or mislead the public, in his specification, claimed and first inventor or discoverer, or substantial part of the invention of which he was not the original inventor or discoverer, every such inventor, administrator, and agent of the whole or any fractional part, may maintain a suit at law, for the infringement of any patent which was bona fide his own, if it is a material and substantial part of the thing patented, and definitely distinguishable from the parts claimed without right, notwithstanding the specifications may embrace more than that of which the patentee was the first inventor or discoverer. But in every such case in which a judgment or decree shall be rendered for the plaintiff, no costs shall be recovered unless the proper disclaimer has been entered at the patent office before the commencement of the suit. But no patentee shall be entitled to the benefits of this section if he has unreasonably neglected or delayed to enter a disclaimer.

Patent not Void on Account of Previous Use in Foreign Country.

SEC. 4923. Whenever it appears that a patentee, at the time of making his application for the patent, believed himself to be the original and first inventor or discoverer of the thing patented, the same shall not be held to be void on account of the invention or discovery, or any part thereof, having been known or used in a foreign country, before his invention or discovery thereof, if it had not been patented or described in a printed publication.

Extension of Patents Granted Prior to March 3, 1881.

SEC. 4924. Where the patentee of any invention or discovery, the patent for which was granted prior to the second day of March, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, shall desire an extension of this patent beyond the original term of its limitation, he shall make application therefor in writing to the commissioner of patents, setting forth the reasons why such extension should be granted; and he shall also furnish a written statement under oath of the ascertained value of the invention or discovery, and of his receipts and expenditures on account thereof, sufficiently in detail to exhibit a true and faithful account of the loss and profit in any manner accruing to him by reason of the invention or discovery. Such application shall be filed not more than six months nor less than ninety days before the expiration of the original term of the patent; and no extension shall be granted after the expiration of the original term.

What Notice of Application for Extension Must be Given.

SEC. 4925. Upon the receipt of such application and the payment of the fees required by law, the commissioner shall cause to be published in one newspaper in the city of Washington, and in such other papers published in the section of the country most interested adversely to the extension of the patent as he may deem proper, for at least sixty days prior to the day set for hearing the case, a notice of such application, and of the time and place when and where the same will be considered, that any person may appear and show cause why the extension should not be granted.

Applications for Extension, to Whom to be Referred.

SEC. 4926. Upon the publication of the notice of an application for an extension, the commissioner shall refer the case to the principal examiner having charge of the class of inventions to which it belongs, who shall make the commissioner a full report of the case, stating particularly whether the invention or discovery was new and patentable when the original patent was granted.

Commissioner to Hear and Decide the Question of Extension.

SEC. 4927. The commissioner shall, at the time and place designated in the published notice, hear and decide upon the evidence produced both for and against the extension; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the patentee, without neglect or fault on his part, has failed to obtain from the use and sale of his invention or discovery a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it, and the introduction of it into use, and that it is just and proper, having due regard to the public interest, that the term of the patent should be extended, the commissioner shall make a certificate thereon, renewing and extending the patent for the term of seven years from the expiration of the first term. Such certificate shall be recorded in the patent office; and thereupon such patent shall have the same effect in law as though it had been originally granted for twenty-one years.

Operation of Extensions.

SEC. 4928. The benefit of the extension of a patent shall extend to the assignees and grantees of the right to use the thing patented, to the extent of their interest therein.

DESIGNS.

Patents for Designs Authorized.

SEC. 4929. Any person who, by his own industry, genius, efforts, and expense, has invented and produced any new and original design for a manufacture, bust, statue, alto-relievo, or bas-relief; any new and original design for the printing of woollen, silk, cotton, or other fabrics; any new and original impression, ornament, patent [pattern], print, or picture to be printed, painted, cast, or otherwise placed on or worked into any article of manufacture; or any new, useful, and original shape or configuration of any article of manufacture, the same not having been known or used by others before his invention or production thereof, or patented or described in any printed publication, may, upon payment of the fee prescribed, and other due proceedings had the same as in patents, or to the treasurer or assistant treasurers of the United States, or the designated depositaries, or receivers of public money, or the secretary of the treasury for such officer shall give the receipt or certificate of deposit of money received at the patent office, or from any source paid into the treasury as a deduction whatever.

The treasurer of the United States shall not be liable to pay back any sum or to any person who has through some error into the treasury, or to the depositary, to the credit of the fees accruing at the patent office thereof being made to the commissioner of patents.

TRADE-MARKS.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That owners of trade-marks...

with foreign nations or with persons residing in any foreign country, provided such owners shall be citizens of the United States or located in any foreign country or tribes, which, by law, or law, affords similar protection of the United States, may obtain such trade-marks by complying with the following requirements:

1. That the application to be recorded in the Patent Office shall specify the name of the party, the nature and citizenship of the party, the nature of the merchandise, and the nature of the goods comprised in such particular trade-mark has been described in the trade-mark application, and a statement which the same is applied and the length of time during which the same has been used.

2. That the sum of twenty-five dollars, or such other sum as may be provided by law, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the receipt therefor shall be filed in the Patent Office.

3. That the application prescribed in the Patent Office, in order to create any right in favor of the party filing it, shall be a written declaration verified by the signature of the party, or by an attorney-in-fact, or by an agent applying to the effect of the law at the time a right to the trade-mark sought to be registered, or by the person, firm or corporation to which such use, either in the identical or in such near resemblance thereto calculated to deceive; that such use in commerce with foreign nations or Indian tribes, as above indicated; and that the description and fac-similes presented for registry truly represent the trade-mark sought to be registered.

SEC. 3. That the time of the receipt of any such application shall be noted and recorded. But no alleged trade-mark shall be registered unless the same appear to be lawfully used as such by the applicant in foreign commerce or commerce with Indian tribes, as above mentioned, or is within the provision of a treaty, convention, or declaration with a foreign power; nor which is merely the name of the applicant; nor which is identical with a registered or known trade-mark owned by another, and appropriate to the same class of merchandise, or which so nearly resembles some other person's lawful trade-mark as to be likely to cause confusion or mistake in the mind of the public, or to deceive purchasers. In an application for registration the Commissioner of Patents shall decide the presumptive lawfulness of claims to the alleged trade-mark; and in any dispute between an applicant and a previous registrant, or between applicants, he shall follow, so far as the same may be applicable, the practice of courts of equity of the United States in analogous cases.

SEC. 4. That certificates of registry of trade-marks shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Department of the Interior, and shall be signed by the Commissioner of Patents, and a record thereof, together with printed copies of the specifications, shall be kept in books for that purpose. Copies of trade-marks and of statements and declarations filed therewith, and certificates of registry so signed and sealed, shall be evidence in any suit in which such trade-marks shall be brought in controversy.

SEC. 5. That a certificate of registry shall remain in force for thirty years from this date, except in cases where the trade-mark is claimed for and applied to articles not manufactured in this country, and in which it receives protection under the laws of a foreign country for a shorter period, in which case it shall cease to have any force in this country by virtue of this act at the time that such trade-mark ceases to be exclusive property elsewhere. At any time during the six months prior to the expiration of the term of thirty years such registration may be renewed on the same terms and for a like period.

SEC. 6. That applicants for registration under this act shall be credited for any fee or part of a fee heretofore paid into the Treasury of the United States with intent to procure protection for the same trade-mark.

SEC. 7. That registration of a trade-mark shall be prima facie evidence of ownership. Any person who shall reproduce, counterfeit, copy, or colorably imitate any trade-mark registered under this act, and affix the same to merchandise of substantially the same descriptive properties as those described in the registration, shall be liable to an action on the case for damages for the wrongful use of said trade-mark at the suit of the owner thereof; and the party aggrieved shall also have his remedy according to the course of equity to enjoin the wrongful use of such trade-mark used in foreign commerce or commerce with Indian tribes, as aforesaid, and to recover compensation therefor in any court having jurisdiction over the person guilty of such wrongful act; and courts of the United States shall have original and appellate jurisdiction in such cases without regard to the amount in controversy.

SEC. 8. That no action or suit shall be maintained under the provisions of this act in any case when the trade-mark is used in any unlawful business or upon any article injurious in itself, or which mark has been used with the design of deceiving the public in the purchase of merchandise, or under any certificate of registry fraudulently obtained.

SEC. 9. That any person who shall procure the registry of a trade-mark, or of himself as the owner of a trade-mark, or an entry respecting a trade-mark, in the office of the Commissioner of Patents, by a false or fraudulent representation or declaration, orally or in writing, or by any fraudulent means, shall be liable to pay any damages sustained in consequence thereof to the injured party, to be recovered in an action on the case.

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act shall prevent, lessen, impeach, or avoid any remedy at law or in equity which any party aggrieved by any wrongful use of any trade-mark might have had if the provisions of this act had not been passed.

SEC. 11. That nothing in this act shall be construed as unfavorably affecting a claim to a trade-mark after the term of registration shall have expired; nor to give cognizance to any court of the United States in an action or suit between citizens of the same State, unless the trade-mark in controversy is used on goods intended to be transported to a foreign country, or in lawful commercial intercourse with an Indian tribe.

SEC. 12. That the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to make rules and regulations and prescribe forms for the transfer of the right to use trade-marks and for recording such transfers in his office.

SEC. 13. That citizens and residents of this country wishing the protection of trade-marks in any foreign country the laws of which require registration here as a condition precedent to getting such protection there may register their trade-marks for that purpose as is above allowed to foreigners, and have certificate thereof from the Patent Office.

An Act Approved August 8, 1880.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That nothing contained in the law entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks and protect the same," approved March 3, 1881, shall prevent the registry of any lawful trade-mark rightfully used by the applicant in foreign commerce or commerce with Indian tribes at the time of the passage of said act.

1880, c. 317, § 1, p. 2. 1881, c. 317, § 1, p. 2. 1882, c. 317, § 1, p. 2.

Infringement of Copyrights.

No person shall maintain an action for the infringement of his copyright unless he shall give notice thereof by inserting in the several copies of every edition published, on the title page or the page immediately following, if it be a book; or if a map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, photograph, painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, or model or design intended to be perfected and completed as a work of the fine arts, by inscribing upon some visible portion thereof, or of the substance on which the same shall be mounted, the following words, viz.: "Entered according to act of Congress, in the year —, by A. B., in the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington;" or, at his option, the word "Copyright," together with the year the copyright was entered, and the name of the party by whom it was taken out; thus—"Copyright, 18—, by A. B."

Copyright Fees.

Sec. 2. That for recording and certifying any instrument of writing for the assignment of a copyright, the librarian of Congress shall receive from the persons to whom the service is rendered, one dollar; and for every copy of an assignment, one dollar; said fee to cover, in either case, a certificate of the record, under seal of the librarian of Congress; and all fees so received shall be paid into the treasury of the United States.

"Engraving," "Cut," and "Print."—Other Prints and Labels. Compensation—Supervision of Fees.

Sec. 3. That in the construction of this act, the words "engraving," "cut," and "print," shall be applied only to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts, and no prints or labels designed to be used for any other articles of manufacture shall be entered under the copyright law, but may be registered in the patent office, and the commissioner of patents is hereby charged with the supervision and control of the entry or registry of such prints or labels, in conformity with the regulations provided by law as to copyright of prints, except that there shall be paid for recording the title of any print or label, not a trade-mark, six dollars, which shall cover the expense of furnishing a copy of the record under the seal of the commissioner of patents, to the party entering the same.

Sec. 4. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the foregoing provisions be and the same are hereby repealed.

Sec. 5. That this act shall take effect on and after the first day of August, eighteen hundred and seventy-four.

Approved, June 18, 1874.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.
What Revised Statutes Embraced.
TITLE LXXIV.—REV. STAT., p. 1001.

Sec. 559. The foregoing seventy-three titles embrace the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, in force on the 1st day of December, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, as revised and consolidated by commissioners appointed under an act of Congress, and the same shall be designated and cited, as the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Repeal of Acts Embraced in Revision.

Sec. 559. All acts of Congress passed prior to said first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, any portion of which is embraced in any section of said revision, are hereby repealed, and the section applicable thereto shall be in force in lieu thereof; all parts of such acts, not contained in such revision, having been repealed or superseded by subsequent acts, or not being general and permanent in their nature: Provided, That the incorporation into said revision of any general and permanent provision, taken from an act making appropriations, or from an act containing other provisions of a private, local, or temporary character, shall not repeal, or in any way affect any appropriation, or any provision of a private, local, or temporary character, contained in any of said acts, but the same shall remain in force; and all acts of Congress passed prior to said last-named day, no part of which are embraced in said revision, shall not be affected or changed by its enactment.

Acts of Limitation Reserved.

Sec. 559. The repeal of the several acts embraced in said revision shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced, in any civil cause before the said repeal, but all rights and liabilities under said acts shall continue, and may be enforced in the same manner, as if said repeal had not been made; nor shall said repeal in any manner affect the right to any office, or change the term or tenure thereof.

Penalties and Forfeitures.
Sec. 559. All offences committed, and all penalties or forfeitures incurred under any statute embraced in said revision prior to said repeal, may be prosecuted and punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if said repeal had not been made.

Acts of Limitation.

Sec. 559. All acts of limitation, whether applicable to civil causes and proceedings, or to the prosecution of offences, or for the recovery of penalties or forfeitures, embraced in said revision and covered by said repeal, shall not be affected thereby, but all suits, proceedings or prosecutions, whether civil or criminal, for causes arising or acts done or committed prior to said repeal, may be commenced and prosecuted within the same time as if said repeal had not been made.

Arrangement and Classification of Sections.

Sec. 559. The arrangement and classification of the several sections of the revision have been made for the purpose of a more convenient and orderly arrangement of the same, and therefore no inference or presumption of a legislative construction is to be drawn by reason of the title under which any particular section is placed.

Acts Passed Since December 1, 1873, not Affecting.

SEC. 5601. The enactment of the said revision is not to affect or repeal any act of Congress passed since the 1st day of December, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and all acts passed since that date are to have full effect as if passed after the enactment of this revision, and so far as such acts vary from, or conflict with, any provision contained in said revision, they are to have effect as subsequent statutes, and as repealing any portion of the revision inconsistent therewith.

Approved June 22, 1874.

Penalty for Selling or Offering for Sale Goods Bearing a Fraudulent Trade-Mark.

Every person who shall with intent to defraud, deal in or sell, or keep or offer for sale, or cause or procure the sale of, any goods of substantially the same descriptive properties as those referred to in the registration of any trade-mark, pursuant to the statutes of the United States, to which, or to the package in which the same are put up, is fraudulently affixed said trade-mark, or any colorable imitation thereof, calculated to deceive the public, knowing the same to be counterfeit or not the genuine goods referred to in said registration, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not more than two years, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Penalty for Affixing Fraudulent Trade-Mark.

SEC. 2. That every person who fraudulently affixes, or causes or procures to be fraudulently affixed, any trade-mark registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, or any colorable imitation thereof, calculated to deceive the public, to any goods, of substantially the same descriptive properties as those referred to in said registration, or to the package in which they are put up, knowing the same to be counterfeit, or not the genuine goods, referred to in said registration, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished as prescribed in the first section of this act.

Penalty for Putting up Packages with Fraudulent Trade-Mark.

SEC. 3. That every person who fraudulently fills, or causes or procures to be fraudulently filled, any package to which is affixed any trade-mark, registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, or any colorable imitation thereof, calculated to deceive the public, with any goods of substantially the same descriptive properties as those referred to in said registration, knowing the same to be counterfeit, or not the genuine goods referred to in said registration, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished as prescribed in the first section of this act.

Manufacturing Fraudulent Trade-Mark.

SEC. 4. That any person or persons who shall, with intent to defraud any person or persons, knowingly and willfully cast, engrave, or manufacture, or have in his, her, or their possession, or buy, sell, offer for sale, or deal in, any die or dies, plate or plates, brand or brands, engraving or engravings, on wood, stone, metal, or other substance, moulds, or any false representation, likeness, copy, or colorable imitation of any die, plate, brand, engraving, or mould of any private label, brand, stamp, wrapper, engraving on paper or other substance, or trade-mark, registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished as prescribed in the first section of this act.

Dealing in Fraudulent Trade-Mark.

SEC. 5. That any person or persons who shall, with intent to defraud any person or persons, knowingly and willfully make, forge, or counterfeit, or have in his, her, or their possession, or buy, sell, offer for sale, or deal in, any representation, likeness, similitude, copy, or colorable imitation of any private label, brand, stamp, wrapper, engraving, mould, or trade-mark, registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished as prescribed in the first section of this act.

Possession of Empty Box or Package Having Registered Trade-Mark.

SEC. 6. That any person who shall, with intent to injure or defraud the owner of any trade-mark, or any other person lawfully entitled to use or protect the same, buy, sell, offer for sale, deal in or have in his possession any used or empty box, envelope, wrapper, case, bottle, or other package, to which is affixed, so that the same may be obliterated without substantial injury to such box or other thing aforesaid, any trade-mark, registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, not so defaced, erased, obliterated, and destroyed as to prevent its fraudulent use, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished as prescribed in the first section of this act.

Proceedings to Detect Fraudulent Trade-Mark—Jurisdiction of United States Courts.

SEC. 7. That if the owner of any trade-mark, registered pursuant to the statutes of the United States, or his agent, make oath, in writing, that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that any counterfeit dies, plates, brands, engravings on wood, stone, metal, or other substance, or moulds of his said registered trade-mark, are in the possession of any person, with intent to use the same for the purpose of deception and fraud, or makes such oaths that any counterfeits or colorable imitations of his said trade-mark, label, brand, stamp, wrapper, engraving on paper or other substance, or empty box, envelope, wrapper, case, bottle, or other package, to which is affixed said registered trade-mark not so defaced, erased, obliterated, and destroyed as to prevent its fraudulent use, are in the possession of any person, with intent to use the same for the purpose of deception and fraud, then the several judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States and the commissioners of the circuit courts may, within their respective jurisdictions, proceed under the law relating to search-warrants, and may issue a search-warrant authorizing and directing the marshal of the United States for the proper district to search for and seize all said counterfeit dies, plates, brands, engravings on wood, stone, metal, or other substance, moulds, and said counterfeit trade-marks, colorable imitations thereof, labels, brands, stamps, wrappers, engravings on paper, or other substance, and said empty boxes, envelopes, wrappers, cases, bottles, or other packages that can be found; and upon satisfactory proof being made that said counterfeit dies, plates, brands, engravings on wood, stone, metal, or other substance, moulds, counterfeit trade-marks, colorable imitations thereof, labels, brands, stamps, wrappers, engravings on paper or other substance, empty boxes, envelopes, wrappers, cases, bottles, or other packages, are to be used by the holder or owner for the purposes of deception and fraud, that any of said judges shall have full power to order all said counterfeit dies, plates, brands, engravings on wood, stone, metal, or other substance, moulds, counterfeit trade-marks, colorable imitations thereof, labels, brands, stamps, wrappers, engravings on paper or other substance, empty boxes, envelopes, wrappers, cases, bottles, or other packages, to be publicly destroyed.

Penalty for Abetting Violation of Preceding Sections.

SEC. 8. That any person who shall, with intent to defraud any person or persons, knowingly and willfully aid or abet in the violation of any of the provisions of this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisonment not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Approved August 14, 1876.

inventor; but the assignment must first have been entered of record, and at a day not later than the date of the payment of the final fee; and the application must be duly made, and the specification sworn to by the inventor.

Of Joint Inventions.

3. Joint inventors are entitled to a joint patent; neither can claim one separately; but the independent inventors of separate and independent improvements in the same machine cannot obtain a joint patent for their separate inventions; nor does the fact that one man furnishes the capital and the other makes the invention entitle them to take out a joint patent.

What will Bear a Patent.

4. A patent will not be granted to an applicant if what he claims as new has been, before his invention, patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country, or been invented or discovered in this country, nor if he has once abandoned his invention, nor if it has been in public use or on sale more than two years previous to his application.

When Knowledge of Invention Abroad is no Bar.

5. If it appears that the inventor, at the time of making his application, believes himself to be the first inventor or discoverer, a patent will not be refused on account of the invention or discovery, or any part thereof, having been known or used in any foreign country before his invention or discovery thereof, if not appearing that the same, or any substantial part thereof, had before been patented or described in any printed publication.

Of Prior Knowledge or Use.

6. Merely conceiving the idea of an improvement or machine is not an "invention" or "discovery." The invention must have been reduced to a practical form, either by the construction of the machine itself, or of a model thereof, or by making a drawing of it, or by such disclosure of its exact character that a mechanic, or one skilled in the art to which it relates, can and does, from the description given, construct the improvement, or a model thereof, before it will prevent a subsequent inventor from obtaining a patent.

MODE OF PROCEEDING TO OBTAIN A PATENT APPLICATION.

What is required in an Application.

7. No application for a patent can be placed upon the files for examination until the fee is paid, the specification and the petition and oath are filed, and the drawings and a model or specimens (when required) are furnished. The application must be completed and prepared for examination within two years after the filing of the petition; and in default thereof, or upon failure of the applicant to prosecute the same within two years after any action thereon, of which notice shall have been mailed to him or his agent, it shall be regarded as abandoned, unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner, that such delay was unavoidable.

It is desirable that everything necessary to make the application complete should be deposited in the office at the same time. If otherwise, a letter should accompany each part, stating to what application it belongs, and giving the date thereof.

When Application takes Effect.

For all purposes of office practice, the date of an application for a patent will be fixed at the time when the first fee has been paid, an acceptable drawing or model received, and a specification, properly signed, witnessed, and sworn to, filed. After such date, and during the pendency of an application, either the drawing or model (but not both at the same time), may be withdrawn for correction; but the specification will not be permitted to be withdrawn for any purpose whatever.

Application and Oath, by Whom Made.

8. The application and oath must be made by the actual inventor, if alive, even if the patent is to issue to an assignee; but where the inventor is dead, the application and oath must be made by his executor or administrator.

Of Drawing Applications.

9. The application must be in writing, in the English language, and addressed to the commissioner of patents. The petition and specification must be separately signed by the applicant. The specification, claims, and all amendments must be written in a fair, legible hand; otherwise, the office may require them to be printed; and all interlineations or erasures should be clearly marked in a marginal or foot-note written on the same sheet of paper. All the papers constituting the application should be attached together. Legal-cap paper is deemed preferable, and a wide margin should always be left upon the left-hand side of the page.

Oath, and its Nature.

10. The applicant, if the inventor, must make oath or affirmation that he does verily believe himself to be the original and first inventor or discoverer of the art, machine, manufacture, composition, or improvement for which he solicits a patent; that he does not know and does not believe that the same was ever before known or used; and shall state of what country he is a citizen, and of what a resident. If the application be made by an executor or administrator, the form of the oath will be correspondingly changed. The oath or affirmation may be made before any person within the United States, authorized by law to administer oaths, or, when the applicant resides in a foreign country, before any minister, chargé d'affaires, consul, or commercial agent, holding commission under the government of the United States, or before any notary public of the foreign country in which the applicant may be, the oath being attested in all cases, in this and other countries, by the proper official seal of such notary.

Oath to Amendments.

11. In case the applicant by amendment seeks to introduce any claim or claims, not substantially embraced in the original affidavit, he will be required to file a supplemental oath relative to the invention as covered by such new or enlarged claim or claims; and such supplemental oath must be upon the same paper which contains the proposed amendment.

SPECIFICATION.

Specifications, their Requisites.

12. The specification is a written description of the invention or discovery, and of the manner and process of making, constructing, compounding, and using the same, and is required to be in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms, avoiding unnecessary prolixity, as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it appertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make, construct, compound, and use the same. It must be followed by a specific and well-defined claim of the part, improvement, or combination which the applicant regards as his invention or discovery.

Further Requisites.

13. Where there are drawings, the specification should refer by letters and figures to the different parts; and it must set forth the precise invention for which a patent is claimed, explaining the principle thereof and the best mode in which the applicant has contemplated applying that principle, so as to distinguish it from other inventions.

Specifications Must Point Out Improvements.

14. In all applications for patents upon mere improvements the specification must particularly point out the part or parts to which the improvement relates, and must by explicit language distinguish between what is old and what is claimed as the improvement, so that the office and the public may understand exactly for what the patent is granted; and in such cases the description and the drawings, as well as the claims, should be confined to the specific improvement and such parts as necessarily co-operate with it.

Application Must Embrace but one Invention.

15. Two or more separate and independent inventions cannot be claimed in one application; but where several inventions relating to the same subject are necessarily connected each with the other, they may be so claimed.

If More, one Must be Elected.

16. If more than one invention is claimed in a single application, and they are found to be of such a nature that a single patent may not be issued to cover the whole, the office will require the inventor to confine the description and claim of the pending application to whichever invention he may elect; the other inventions may be made the subject of separate applications.

Specifications, How Signed and Witnessed.

17. The specification must be signed by the inventor, or by his executor or administrator, and must be attested by two witnesses. Full names must be given, and all names, whether of applicants or witnesses, must be legibly written.

DRAWINGS.

Drawings to be Furnished.

18. The applicant for a patent is required by law to furnish a drawing of his invention, where the nature of the case admits of it.

Three Editions Published by the Office.

19. Three several editions of patent drawings are printed and published: one for office use, certified copies, etc., of the size and character of those attached to patents, the work being about 6 by 9½ inches; one reduced to half that scale, or one-fourth the surface, of which four will be printed on a page to illustrate the volumes distributed to the courts, etc.; and one reduction—to about the same scale—of a selected portion of each drawing, to illustrate the "Official Gazette."

By What Process Prepared.

This work will all be done by the lithographic or other analogous process, and in consequence the character of each original drawing must be brought as nearly as possible to a uniform standard of excellence, suited to the requirements of the process, and calculated to give the best results, in the interests of inventors, of the office, and of the public generally. The following rules will therefore be rigidly enforced, and any departure from them will be certain to cause delay in the examination of an application for letters patent.

Paper and Ink Required for Originals.

a. Drawings should be made upon paper stiff enough to stand in the portfolios, the surface of which must be calendered and smooth. "Two-sheet" bristol-board, or sheets cut from Whatman's hot-pressed drawing-paper, "antiquarian" size, are recommended.

Indian ink of good quality, to the exclusion of all other kinds of ink or color, must be employed, to secure perfectly black and solid work.

Dimensions.

b. The size of a sheet on which a drawing is made should be exactly 10 by 13 inches. One inch from its edges a single marginal line is to be drawn, leaving the "sight" precisely 8 by 13 inches. Within this margin all work and signatures must be included. One of the smaller sides of the sheet is regarded as its top, and, measuring downward from the marginal line, a space of not less than 1¼ inch is to be left blank for the insertion of title, name, number, and date. The signatures will be placed in a space left at the bottom of the sheet.

Quality of Work.

c. All drawings must be made with the pen only, using the blackest Indian ink. Every line and letter (signatures included) must be absolutely black. This direction applies to all lines, however fine, to shading, and to lines representing cut surfaces in sectional views. All lines must be clean, sharp, and solid, and they must not be too fine or crowded. Surface shading, when used, should be left very open. Sectional shading should be by oblique parallel lines, which may be about one-twentieth of an inch apart. The usual reduction will bring them to about one-sixtieth of an inch distance.

Perpendicularity, Shading, etc.
 7. Drawings should be made with the fewest lines possible consistent with clearness. By observing this rule the effectiveness of the work after reduction will be much increased. Shading (except on sectional views) should be used only on convex and concave surfaces, where it should be used sparingly, and may even there be dispensed with if the drawing is otherwise well executed. The plane upon which a sectional view is taken should be indicated on the general view by a broken or dotted line. Heavy lines on the shade sides of objects should be used, except where they tend to thicken the work and obscure letters of reference. The light is always supposed to come from the upper left-hand corner, at an angle of forty-five degrees.

Imitations of wood or surface-graining must never be attempted.

Scale.
 8. The scale to which a drawing is made ought to be large enough to show the mechanism without crowding, and two or more sheets should be used if one does not give sufficient room to accomplish this end; but the number of sheets must never be increased unless it is absolutely necessary. On the other hand, when an invention is simple and easily understood, it should be shown on a small scale, and unnecessary space should not be occupied, even on a single sheet.

It often happens that an invention, although constituting but a small part of a machine, has yet to be represented in connection with other and much larger parts. In such cases a general view on a small scale is recommended, with one or more of the invention itself on a much larger scale.

Letters of Reference.
 9. Letters of reference must be well and carefully formed; they are of the first importance. When at all possible, no letter of reference should measure less than one-eighth of an inch in height, that it may bear reduction to one-twenty-fourth of an inch, and they may be much larger when there is sufficient room.

Reference letters must be so placed in the close and complex parts of drawings as not to interfere with a thorough comprehension of the same, and to this end should rarely cross or mingle with the lines. When necessarily grouped around a certain part, they should be placed at a little distance, where there is available space, and connected by short broken lines with the parts to which they refer. They must never appear upon shaded surfaces, and, when it is difficult to avoid this, a blank space must be left in the shading where the letter occurs, so that it shall appear perfectly distinct and separate from the work.

If the same part of an invention appears in more than one figure, it should always be represented by the same letter.

When it is necessary to turn a drawing upon its side in reading a certain figure, its number and reference letters should be made to correspond, and should be so placed that the sheet will be turned to the right.

Signatures and Title.
 10. The signature of the inventor is to be placed at the lower right-hand corner of the sheet, and the signatures of the witnesses at the lower left-hand corner, all within the marginal line. (See specimen sheet.) The title should be written with pencil on the back of the sheet. The permanent names and title will be supplied subsequently by the office in uniform style.

Arrangement of Figures, etc.
 11. When figures are larger than the width of the sheet, the latter is turned on its side, and the space for heading will be left at the right, and that for the signatures at the left, occupying the same space and position as in the upright subjects, so that the heading and names will read right when the drawing is held in an upright position.

 12. As a rule, one view only of each invention can be shown in the Gazette illustrations. The selection of that portion of a drawing best calculated to explain the nature of the specific improvement would be facilitated, and the final result improved, by the judicious execution of a figure with express reference to the Gazette, but which might, at the same time, act as one of the figures referred to in the specification. For this purpose, the figure may be a plan, elevation, section, or perspective view, according to the judgment of the draftsman. It must not cover a space exceeding sixteen square inches. All its parts should be especially open and distinct, with very little or no shading, and it must illustrate the invention claimed only, to the exclusion of all other details. (See Fig. 1., opposite page 42.) When well executed, it will be used without curtailment or change; but any attempt at excessive freedom, crowding, or unnecessary elaborateness of detail, will insure its rejection for Gazette purposes.

New Transmitted.
 13. Drawings should be rolled for transmission to the office, not folded.

No Certain Marking Inventions.
 14. No agent's or attorney's stamp, nor any written address, will be permitted upon the face of a drawing within or without the marginal line.

These rules do not apply to drawings for designs and trade-marks, as the office does not duplicate these. (See Rules for Designs and Trade-Marks.)

Quantity of Drawings to Be Submitted.

15. The foregoing rules relating to drawings will be rigidly enforced; and all drawing not artistically executed in conformity therewith will be returned to the respective applicants, or, at the applicant's option and cost, the office will make the necessary corrections.

Separation of Drawings from Specification.

16. A specimen drawing, illustrating arrangement, style, and quality of work, will be furnished upon request.

New Drawings on Reissues.
 17. All reissue applications must be accompanied by new thick paper drawings, as in original applications.

Employing Artists Advised.
 18. Applicants are advised to employ competent artists to make their drawings.

Models, When Required—What they Must Show.

19. A model will be required in every case where the nature of the invention admits of such illustration, except in applications upon designs. It must clearly exhibit every feature of the machine which forms the subject of a claim of invention, but should not include other matter than that covered by the actual invention or improvement, unless it is necessary to the exhibition of a working model. When the invention is a composition of matter, a specimen of each of the ingredients and of the composition, properly marked, must accompany the application.

New Made.
 20. The model must be neatly and substantially made of durable material, metal being deemed preferable; and should not in any case be more than one foot in length, width, or height. If made of pine or other soft wood, it should be painted, stained, or varnished. Glass must not be used, but the parts should be so connected as to resist the action of heat or moisture.

Working Models Desirable.
 21. A working model is always desirable, in order to enable the office fully and readily to understand the precise operation of the machine.

Returning Models.
 22. The model, unless it is deemed necessary that it be preserved in the office, or unless it be otherwise disposed of, may be returned to the applicant upon demand, and at his expense, in all cases where an application has been rejected more than two years; and the model, in any pending case of less than two years' standing, may be returned to the applicant upon the filing of a formal abandonment of the application, signed by applicant in person.

Returning Exhibits.
 23. Models filed as exhibits, in interference and other cases, may be returned to the applicant or otherwise disposed of at the discretion of the commissioner.

THE EXAMINATION.

Order of Making Examinations.
 24. All cases in the patent office are classified and taken up for examination in regular order; those in the same class being examined and disposed of, as far as practicable, in the order in which the respective applications are completed. When, however, the invention is deemed of peculiar importance to some branch of the public service, and when, for that reason, the head of some department of the government specially requests immediate action, the case will be taken up out of its order. These, with applications for extensions, for reissue, and for letters patent for inventions for which a foreign patent has already been obtained, which cases have precedence over all others, are the only exceptions to the above rule in relation to the order of examination. If an application is found to conflict with a caveat, its examination will be suspended as hereinafter provided.

The first step in the examination of any application will be to determine whether it is, in all respects, in proper form. If, however, an objection as to form is not vital, the examiner may proceed to the consideration of the application on its merits; but in such case he must, in his first letter to applicant, state all his objections, whether formal or otherwise.

Attendance of Applicants Unnecessary.

25. The personal attendance of the applicant at the patent office is unnecessary. The business can be done by correspondence or by attorney; and if there has been an assignment of the whole or of an undivided part of the invention, the assignee, or, in the latter case, the assignee and the inventor jointly, will be recognized as the proper party to prosecute the application.

When Amendments may be Made.

26. The applicant has a right to amend after the first rejection; and he may amend as often as the examiner presents any new references. After a second rejection, and at any time before the issue of a patent, special amendments may be made on approval by the commissioner, if sufficient reason therefor be shown. But such amendments must first be submitted to the tribunal last acting on the case, for recommendation or objection. Affidavits in support of applications will not be received at any stage of the examination, unless the office denies that the device is operative.

Requirements of Amendments.

27. All amendments of the model, drawings, or specification, in the case of original applications which are capable of illustration by drawing or model, must conform to at least one of them as they were at the time of the filing of the application; further changes than this can only be made by filing a new application. If the invention does not admit of illustration by drawing, amendment of the specification may be made upon proof satisfactory to the commissioner that the proposed amendment is a part of the original invention.

How They Must be Drawn.

All amendments of specifications or claims must be made on separate sheets of paper from the original, and must be filed in the manner above directed. Even when the amendment consists in striking out a portion of the specification or other paper, the same course should be observed. No erasures must be made by the applicant. In every case of amendment the exact word or words to be stricken out or inserted should be clearly specified; and the precise point indicated where the erasure or insertion is to be made.

Proceedings on Rejection.

33. Whenever, on examination, any claim for a patent is rejected for any reason whatever, the applicant will be notified thereof, and the reasons for such rejection will be given, together with such information and references as may be useful in judging of the propriety of prosecuting his application or of altering his specification; and if, after receiving such notice, he shall persist in his claim for a patent, with or without altering his specification, the case will be re-examined.

Furnishing Specific References, and Copies of References.

34. Upon the rejection of an application for want of novelty, the examiner must cite the best references at his command, and the applicant will, if he demands it, be entitled to a specific reference (by name, date, and class, or the equivalent thereof) to the article or articles by which it is anticipated. If he desires a copy of the cases so referred to, or of the plates or drawings connected with them, they will be forwarded to him, if in the possession of the office, on payment of the cost of making such copies.

Reference of Abandoned Case.

35. When the rejection of an application is founded upon another case previously rejected, but not withdrawn or abandoned, the applicant will be furnished with all information in relation to the previously rejected case which is necessary for the proper understanding and management of his own. But this rule does not authorize the citation of pending applications as references.

Specifications to be Corrected as Required.

36. The specification, especially if the claim be amended, must be amended and revised, if required by the examiner, for the purpose of correcting inaccuracies of description or unnecessary prolixity, and of securing correspondence between the statement and description of the invention and the claim. Mere errors of orthography or of grammatical construction will be corrected by the examiner in charge.

No Removing Papers. Copies Furnished.

37. The office will not return specifications for amendment; and in no case will any person be allowed to take any papers, drawings, models, or samples from the office. If applicants have not preserved copies of such papers as they wish to amend, the office will furnish them on the usual terms.

DATE OF PATENT. Dating Patents; Withhold if Final Fee is not Paid.

38. Every patent will bear date as of a day not later than six months from the time at which the application was passed and allowed and notice thereof was mailed to the applicant or his agent, and if the final fee (or, in case the fee has been paid to the treasurer or any of the assistant treasurers, or any of the designated depositaries of the United States, the certificate of deposit) be not received at the office within that period, the patent will be withheld. The party may, however, obtain a patent upon a new application, as hereinafter provided.

WITHDRAWN AND REJECTED APPLICATIONS. Renewing Applications.

39. When an application for a patent has been rejected and the applicant fails to renew the same, or to file a new one within two years after the date when notice of the last official action was mailed to him or to his agent, his application will be held to have been abandoned.

Any act which calls such rejected application up for further consideration, within the time mentioned, will be regarded as constituting a renewal.

Fees Required with Renewed Applications.

40. When a new application is filed in place of an old one, a new fee will invariably be required.

Delay Must be Promptly Accounted For.

41. Upon the hearing of applications attempted to be renewed after the expiration of the two years after any action thereon, it must be shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such delay was unavoidable.

APPEALS. Appeals to Examiners-in-Chief.

42. Every applicant for a patent or the renewer of a patent, any of the claims of which have twice been rejected, may appeal from the decision of the primary examiner in such case to the board of examiners-in-chief, having once paid a fee of ten dollars. For this purpose a petition in writing must be filed, signed by the party, or his authorized agent or attorney, praying an appeal, and setting forth the reasons upon which the appeal is taken.

Reasons of Appeal and Answer.

This statement of the reasons of appeal should point out distinctly and specifically the supposed errors of the examiner's action, and should constitute a brief of the argument upon which the applicant will rely in support of his appeal. Before the appeal is entertained by the board, this statement will be submitted to the primary examiner, who will make answer in writing touching all the points involved therein.

If the appellant desires to be heard orally before the board, he should so indicate when he files his appeal; a day of hearing will then be fixed, and due notice of the same be given him.

Proceedings on Appeal.

43. The examiners-in-chief will consider the case as it was when last passed upon by the primary examiner, merely revising his decisions so far as they were adverse to the appellant. If, however, they discover any reason not given by the examiner, why a patent should not issue, they should make a statement to that effect to the commissioner.

If affidavits are received under Rule 31, after the case has been appealed, the application will be remanded to the examiner for re-consideration.

Prerequisites to Appeal.

44. There must be two rejections upon the claims as originally filed, or, if amended in a matter of substance, upon the amended claims; and all the claims must be passed upon and all preliminary and intermediate questions must be settled before the case is appealed to the board.

Appeal from Examiner to Commissioner.

Decisions of examiners upon preliminary or intermediate questions, or refusals to act, once repeated, will be re-examined, by the commissioner in person, upon written application setting forth the grounds of the appeal, and answer thereto by the examiner as in other appeals. For appeals of this class no fee is required.

Rehearing of Appealed Cases.

45. Cases which have been heard and decided on appeal will not be reopened by the examiner without the written authority of the commissioner; and cases which have been decided by the examiners-in-chief will not be reheard by them, except upon the same authority.

Cases which have been deliberately decided by one commissioner will not be reconsidered by his successor upon the same state of facts. They may, however, be reopened in accordance with the general principles which govern the granting of new trials.

Appeals from Examiners-in-Chief.

46. All cases which have been acted on by the board of examiners-in-chief may be brought before the commissioner in person, upon a written request to that effect, and upon the payment of the fee of twenty dollars required by law.

Appeals to Supreme Court—Proceedings.

47. From an adverse decision upon the claims of an application an appeal may be taken to the supreme court of the District of Columbia sitting in banc. In taking such appeals the applicant is required, under the rules of the court, to pay to the clerk of the court a docket-fee of ten dollars, and he is also required by law to lay before the court certified copies of all the original papers and evidence in the case. The petition should be filed and the fee paid at least ten days before the commencement of the term of court at which the appeal is to be heard.

Immediately upon taking an appeal the appellant must give notice thereof to the commissioner of patents, and file in the patent office his reasons of appeal, specifically set forth in writing.

The docket for the trial of cases appealed from the decision of the commissioner of patents will be called on the first day of each session of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term. These sessions are held three in each year, and begin respectively on the first Monday in January, the third Monday in April, and the fourth Monday in September.

Appeal in Interference Cases—None to Supreme Court.

48. In cases of interference parties have the same remedy by appeal to the examiners-in-chief, and to the commissioner, as in ex parte cases; but no appeal lies in such cases from the decision of the commissioner. Appeals in interference cases should be accompanied with a brief statement of the reasons therefor; and both parties will be required to file briefs of their arguments at least five days before the day of hearing. Printed briefs are in all cases preferred.

HEARINGS. Hearings, Regulations for.

49. All cases pending before the commissioner, the board of examiners-in-chief, or the examiner in charge of interferences, will stand for argument at 12 o'clock on the day of hearing, unless some other hour be specially designated. If either party in a contested case, or the appellant in an ex parte case, appears at that time, he will be heard, but a contested case will not be taken up for oral argument after the day of hearing, except by the consent of both parties. If the engagements of the tribunal before whom the case is pending are such as to prevent it from being taken up on the day of hearing, a new assignment will be made, or the case will be continued from day to day until heard. Unless otherwise ordered before the hearing begins, oral argument will be limited to one hour for each counsel; after any case has been argued, nothing further relating thereto will be heard unless requested by the tribunal having the decision of the case; and all interviews for this purpose, with parties in interest or their attorneys, will be invariably denied.

MOTIONS IN CONTESTED CASES. Motions, Regulations for.

50. In contested cases reasonable notice of all motions, and copies of the motion, papers, and affidavits, must be served upon the opposite party or his attorney. Proof of such service must be made before the motion will be entertained by the office; and motions will not be heard in the absence of either party except upon default after due notice. Motions will be heard in the first instance by the officer or tribunal before whom the particular case may be pending; but an appeal from the decision rendered may be taken to the commissioner in person.

INTERFERENCES.

51. An "interference" is a proceeding instituted for the purpose of determining the question of priority of invention between two or more parties claiming the same patentable subject-matter. It may also be resorted to for the purpose of procuring evidence relating to the alleged abandonment or the public use of an invention.

Before the declaration of an interference all preliminary questions must be settled by the primary examiner, and the issue clearly defined; the invention which is to form the subject of the controversy must be decided to be

Proceedings on Rejection.

33. Whenever, on examination, any claim for a patent is rejected for any reason whatever, the applicant will be notified thereof, and the reasons for such rejection will be given, together with such information and references as may be useful in judging of the propriety of prosecuting his application or of altering his specification; and if, after receiving such notice, he shall persist in his claim for a patent, with or without altering his specification, the case will be re-examined.

Furnishing Specific References, and Copies of References.

34. Upon the rejection of an application for want of novelty, the examiner must cite the best references at his command, and the applicant will, if he demands it, be entitled to a specific reference (by name, date, and class, or the equivalent thereof) to the article or articles by which it is anticipated. If he desires a copy of the cases so referred to, or of the plates or drawings connected with them, they will be forwarded to him, if in the possession of the office, on payment of the cost of making such copies.

Reference of Abandoned Case.

35. When the rejection of an application is founded upon another case previously rejected, but not withdrawn or abandoned, the applicant will be furnished with all information in relation to the previously rejected case which is necessary for the proper understanding and management of his own. But this rule does not authorize the citation of pending applications as references.

Specifications to be Corrected as Required.

36. The specification, especially if the claim be amended, must be amended and revised, if required by the examiner, for the purpose of correcting inaccuracies of description or unnecessary prolixity, and of securing correspondence between the statement and description of the invention and the claim. Mere errors of orthography or of grammatical construction will be corrected by the examiner in charge.

No Removing Papers. Copies Furnished.

37. The office will not return specifications for amendment; and in no case will any person be allowed to take any papers, drawings, models, or samples from the office. If applicants have not preserved copies of such papers as they wish to amend, the office will furnish them on the usual terms.

DATE OF PATENT.

Dating Patents: Withheld if Final Fee is not Paid.

38. Every patent will bear date as of a day not later than six months from the time at which the application was passed and allowed and notice thereof was mailed to the applicant or his agent, and if the final fee (or, in case the fee has been paid to the treasurer or any of the assistant treasurers, or any of the designated depositaries of the United States, the certificate of deposit) be not received at the office within that period, the patent will be withheld. The party may, however, obtain a patent upon a new application, as hereinafter provided.

A patent will not be antedated. WITHDRAWN AND REJECTED APPLICATIONS.*Renewing Applications.

39. When an application for a patent has been rejected and the applicant fails to renew the same, or to file a new one within two years after the date when notice of the last official action was mailed to him or to his agent, his application will be held to have been abandoned.

Any act which calls such rejected application up for farther consideration, within the time mentioned, will be regarded as constituting a renewal.

Fee Required with Renewed Application.

40. When a new application is filed in place of an old one, a new fee will invariably be required.

Delay Must be Sufficiently Accounted For.

41. Upon the hearing of applications attempted to be renewed after the expiration of the two years after any action thereon, it must be shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such delay was unavoidable.

APPEALS.*Appeals to Examiners-in-Chief.

42. Every applicant for a patent or the release of a patent, any of the claims of which have twice been rejected, may appeal from the decision of the primary examiner in such case to the board of examiners-in-chief, having once paid a fee of ten dollars. For this purpose a petition in writing must be filed, signed by the party, or his authorized agent or attorney, praying an appeal, and setting forth the reasons upon which the appeal is taken.

Reasons of Appeal and Answer.

This statement of the reasons of appeal should point out distinctly and specifically the supposed errors of the examiner's action, and should constitute a brief of the argument upon which the applicant will rely in support of his appeal. Before the appeal is entertained by the board, this statement will be submitted to the primary examiner, who will make answer in writing touching all the points involved therein.

If the appellant desires to be heard orally before the board, he should so indicate when he files his appeal; a day of hearing will then be fixed, and due notice of the same be given him.

Proceedings on Appeal.

43. The examiners-in-chief will consider the case as it was when last passed upon by the primary examiner, merely revising his decisions so far as they were adverse to the appellant. If, however, they discover any reason not given by the examiner, why a patent should not issue, they should make a statement to that effect to the commissioner.

If affidavits are received under Rule 31, after the case has been appealed, the application will be remanded to the examiner for re-consideration.

Prerequisites to Appeal.

44. There must be two rejections upon the claims as originally filed, or, if amended in a matter of substance, upon the amended claims; and all the claims must be passed upon and all preliminary and intermediate questions must be settled before the case is appealed to the board.

Appeal from Examiner to Commissioner.

Decisions of examiners upon preliminary or intermediate questions, or refusals to act, once repeated, will be re-examined, by the commissioner in person, upon written application setting forth the grounds of the appeal, and answer thereto by the examiner as in other appeals. For appeals of this class no fee is required.

Rehearing of Appealed Cases.

45. Cases which have been heard and decided on appeal will not be reopened by the examiner without the written authority of the commissioner; and cases which have been decided by the examiners-in-chief will not be reheard by them, except upon the same authority.

Cases which have been deliberately decided by one commissioner will not be reconsidered by his successor upon the same state of facts. They may, however, be reopened in accordance with the general principles which govern the granting of new trials.

Appeals from Examiners-in-Chief.

46. All cases which have been acted on by the board of examiners-in-chief may be brought before the commissioner in person, upon a written request to that effect, and upon the payment of the fee of twenty dollars required by law.

Appeals to Supreme Court—Proceedings.

47. From an adverse decision upon the claims of an application an appeal may be taken to the supreme court of the District of Columbia sitting in banc. In taking such appeals the applicant is required, under the rules of the court, to pay to the clerk of the court a docket-fee of ten dollars, and he is also required by law to lay before the court certified copies of all the original papers and evidence in the case. The petition should be filed and the fee paid at least ten days before the commencement of the term of court at which the appeal is to be heard.

Immediately upon taking an appeal the appellant must give notice thereof to the commissioner of patents, and file in the patent office his reasons of appeal, specifically set forth in writing.

The docket for the trial of cases appealed from the decision of the commissioner of patents will be called on the first day of each session of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term. These sessions are held three in each year, and begin respectively on the first Monday in January, the third Monday in April, and the fourth Monday in September.

Appeal in Interference Cases—None to Supreme Court.

48. In cases of interference parties have the same remedy by appeal to the examiners-in-chief, and to the commissioner, as in ex-parte cases; but no appeal lies in such cases from the decision of the commissioner. Appeals in interference cases should be accompanied with a brief statement of the reasons therefor; and both parties will be required to file briefs of their arguments at least five days before the day of hearing. Printed briefs are in all cases preferred.

HEARINGS.

Hearings, Regulations for.

49. All cases pending before the commissioner, the board of examiners-in-chief, or the examiner in charge of interferences, will stand for argument at 12 o'clock on the day of hearing, unless some other hour be specially designated. If either party in a contested case, or the appellant in an ex-parte case, appears at that time, he will be heard, but a contested case will not be taken up for oral argument after the day of hearing, except by the consent of both parties. If the engagements of the tribunal before whom the case is pending are such as to prevent it from being taken up on the day of hearing, a new assignment will be made, or the case will be continued from day to day until heard. Unless otherwise ordered before the hearing begins, oral argument shall be limited to one hour for each counsel; after any case has been argued, nothing further relating thereto will be heard unless requested by the tribunal having the decision of the case; and all interviews for this purpose, with parties in interest or their attorneys, will be invariably denied.

MOTIONS IN CONTESTED CASES.

Motions, Regulations for.

50. In contested cases reasonable notice of all motions, and copies of the motion, papers, and affidavits, must be served upon the opposite party or his attorney. Proof of such service must be made before the motion will be entertained by the office; and motions will not be heard in the absence of either party except upon default after due notice. Motions will be heard in the first instance by the officer or tribunal before whom the particular case may be pending; but an appeal from the decision rendered may be taken to the commissioner in person.

INTERFERENCES.

51. An "interference" is a proceeding instituted for the purpose of determining the question of priority of invention between two or more parties claiming the same patentable subject-matter. It may also be resorted to for the purpose of procuring evidence relating to the alleged abandonment or the public use of an invention.

Before the declaration of an interference all preliminary questions must be settled by the primary examiner, and the issue clearly defined; the invention which is to form the subject of the controversy must be decided to be patentable, and the claims of the respective parties must be put in such condition that they will not require alteration after the interference has been finally decided, unless the testimony adduced upon the trial should necessitate such change. (See § 41.)

When Declared.

An interference will be declared in the following cases:

First. When two or more parties have applications pending before the office at the same time, and their respective claims conflict in whole or in part.

Second. When two or more applications are pending at the same time, in each of which a like patentable invention is shown or described, and claimed in one though not specifically claimed in all of them.

Third. When an applicant, having been rejected upon an unexpired patent, claims to have made the invention before the patentee.

Interference with Patents.

52. The fact that one of the parties has already obtained a patent will not prevent an interference; for, although the commissioner has no power to cancel a patent already issued, he may, if he finds that another person was the prior inventor, give him a patent also, and thus place both parties on an equal footing before the courts and the public.

Preliminary Interferences: Proceedings.

53. Before the declaration of an interference proper a preliminary interference will be declared, in which the primary examiner will notify the respective parties when the applications of the other parties were filed, together with their names and residences. Each party to the interference will be required to file a statement under oath, giving a detailed history of the invention, showing the date of the original conception, and the date that the invention was reduced to drawings or model, and the date of its completion, and the extent and character of use. The parties will be strictly held in their proof to the dates set up in their preliminary statements. This statement must be sealed up before filing (to be opened only by the examiner of interferences), and the name of the party filing it and the subject of the invention indicated on the envelope.

These statements shall not be open to the inspection of the opposing parties until both have been filed, or until the date for filing both has expired; nor then, until they have been examined by the proper officer and found to be satisfactory. At the time of the examination of the preliminary statements the examiner of interferences will also make an examination of the preliminary declaration (testified by the primary examiner), in order to ascertain whether or not the issue between the parties has been clearly defined. If it be found, upon such examination, that the preliminary declaration is ambiguous in this particular, the interference will be suspended and the case returned to the primary examiner for amendment.

Effect of Preliminary Statement.

If the party upon whom rests the burden of proof fails to file a preliminary statement, or if his statement fails to overcome the prima facie case made by the respective dates of application, or if it shows that he has abandoned his invention, or that it has been in public use more than two years before his application, the other party will be entitled to an immediate adjudication of the case upon the record; unless a presumption is created that his right to a patent is affected by the alleged public use of the invention, in which case the interference may be proceeded with.

If the earlier applicant fails to file a preliminary statement, no testimony will subsequently be received from him going to prove that he made the invention at a date prior to his application. The preliminary statement can in no case be used as evidence in behalf of the party making it. Its use is to determine whether the interference shall be proceeded with, and to serve as a basis of cross-examination for the other party.

If either party requires a postponement of the time for filing the preliminary statements, he must present his reasons therefor, in the form of an affidavit, prior to the day previously fixed upon.

Hearing of Interferences.

54. Where no testimony is taken by the applicant upon whom rests the burden of proof, or where testimony has been taken by such applicant, but not by the other party during the time assigned to the latter, the case will be considered closed, and upon motion duly made at the expiration of the time assigned to such parties, respectively, may be set for hearing at any time not less than ten days thereafter.

Appeals in Interferences.

55. In cases of interference appeals may be taken to the examiners-in-chief and to the commissioner, in the manner provided in Rule 48.

Notice to Parties of Interference.

56. When an interference is declared, notice will be given to both parties or to their attorneys. When one of the parties has received a patent, duplicate notices will be sent to the patentee and to his attorney of record. Where one of the parties resides abroad and has no known agent in the United States, in addition to the notice sent by mail notice may be given by publication in a newspaper of general circulation in the city of Washington once in a week for three successive weeks.

Order of Taking Testimony.

57. In cases of interference the party who first filed so much of his application for a patent as is required by Rule 7, will be deemed the first inventor in the absence of all proof to the contrary. A time will be assigned in which the other party shall complete his direct testimony; and a further time in which the adverse party shall complete the testimony on his side; and a further time in which the party who first took testimony may take rebutting

Postponing Taking Testimony.
58. If it becomes necessary for either party to have the time for taking his testimony, or for the hearing, postponed, he must make application for such postponement, and must show sufficient reason for it by affidavit as provided in Rule 113, filed before the time previously appointed has elapsed, if practicable, and must also furnish his opponent with copies of his affidavits and with reasonable notice of the time of hearing his motion.

Prerequisites to, and Revolving Interferences.
59. An interference will not be declared until the subject-matter involved is decided to be patentable. If after being declared it is found that no interference in fact exists, or that there has been such irregularity in declaring the same as will preclude the proper determination of the question of right between the parties, it will be dissolved, and an appeal may be taken to the commissioner in person.

Concessions of Priority.
If, during the continuance of an interference, it shall appear that neither party is entitled to a patent by reason of abandonment, public use, or any other statutory bar, the examiner of interferences, or examiner-in-chief, as the case may be, will direct the attention of the commissioner to the facts, either by a report, if before the hearing, or in the decision of the question of priority, if the interference comes to a regular hearing. The commissioner, if in his judgment it is necessary, will then suspend the interference and remand the cases to the principal examiner for the determination of any of these questions.

If judgment be based upon a concession of priority by either of the parties, such concession must be in writing, and under the signature of the inventor himself; and if there has been an assignment, the assignee must join in the concession.

Amendments Pending Interference.—
Rebutting and Second Interferences.

60. No amendments to the specifications will be received during the pendency of an interference, except as provided in section 61. A second interference will not be declared upon a new application on the same invention filed by either party during the pendency of an interference, or after judgment, nor a rehearing be granted, unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner (in person) that the party desiring a new interference or rehearing has new and material testimony which he could not have prepared in time for the hearing, or unless other sufficient reasons be shown, satisfactory to the commissioner.

Part of Application Only in Interference.
61. When an application is adjudged to interfere with a part only of another pending application; the interfering parties will be permitted to see or obtain copies of so much only of the specifications as refers to the interfering claims. And either party may, if he so elect, withdraw from his application the claims adjudged not to interfere, and file a new application therefor: Provided, That the claims so withdrawn cover inventions which do not involve the devices in interference: And provided also, That the devices in interference are eliminated from the new application. In such case the latter will be examined without reference to the interference from which it was withdrawn.

REISSUES.

Who May Apply for Reissue.

62. A reissue is granted to the original patentee, his legal representatives, or the assignees of the entire interest, when, by reason of a defective or insufficient specification, or by reason of the patentee claiming as his invention or discovery more than he had a right to claim as new, the original patent is inoperative or invalid, provided the error has arisen from inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and without any fraudulent or deceptive intention. In the cases of patents issued and assigned prior to July 3, 1870, the application for reissue may be made by the assignee; but, in the case of patents issued or assigned since that date, the application must be made and the specification sworn to by the inventor, if he be living.

What Must Accompany Petition.
63. The petition for a reissue must be accompanied with a certified copy of the abstract of title, giving the names of all assignees owning any undivided interest in the patent; and in case the application is made by the inventor, it must be accompanied with the written assent of such assignees. In applications for reissue, under several different divisions, a petition, oath, drawing, and specification must accompany each division.

What Amendments Allowed.
64. The general rule is, that whatever is really embraced in the original invention, and so described or shown that it might have been embraced in the original patent, may be the subject of a reissue; but no new matter shall be introduced into the specification, nor shall the model or drawing be amended except each by the other; but, when there is neither model nor drawing, amendments may be made upon proof satisfactory to the commissioner that such new matter or amendment was a part of the original invention, and was omitted from the specification by inadvertence, accident, or mistake, as aforesaid.

Take Precedence in Examination.
65. Reissued patents expire at the end of the term for which the original patents were granted. For this reason applications for reissues will take precedence, in examination, of original applications.

Division of Patents.
66. A patentee in reissuing may, at his option, have a separate patent for each distinct and separate part of the invention comprehended in his original patent, by paying the required fee in each case, and complying with the other requirements of the law, as in original applications. Each division of a reissue constitutes the subject of a separate specification descriptive of the part or parts of the invention claimed in such division; and the drawing may represent only such part or parts. All the divisions of a reissue will issue simultaneously. If there be controversy as to one, the others will be withheld from issue until the controversy is ended.

Original Claims to be Examined Anew.

67. In all cases of applications for reissues, the original claim, if reproduced in the amended specification, is subject to re-examination, and may be revised and restricted in the same manner as in original applications. The application for a reissue must be accompanied by a surrender of the original patent, or, if lost, then by an affidavit to that effect and a certified copy of the patent; but if any reissue be refused, the original patent will, upon request, be returned to the applicant.

DISCLAIMERS.

68. Whenever, by inadvertence, accident, or mistake, the claim of invention in any patent is too broad, embracing more than that of which the patentee was the original or first inventor, some material or substantial part of the thing patented being truly and justly his own, the patentee, his heirs or assigns, whether of a whole or of a sectional interest, may, upon payment of the duty required by law, make disclaimer of such parts of the thing patented as the disclaimer shall not choose to claim or to hold by virtue of the patent or assignment, stating therein the extent of his interest in such patent; which disclaimer shall be in writing, attested by one or more witnesses, shall be recorded in the patent office, and shall thereafter be considered as part of the original specification, to the extent of the interest possessed by the claimant and by those claiming under him after the record thereof.

EXTENSION.

When Patents May be Extended.

69. Power is vested in the commissioner to extend any patent granted prior to March 2, 1861, for seven years from the expiration of the original term; but no patent granted since March 2, 1861, can be extended. When a patent has been reissued in two or more divisions, separate applications must be made for the extension of each division.

When to File Petition and Pay Fee.

70. The applicant for an extension must file his petition and pay in the requisite fee not more than six months nor less than ninety days prior to the expiration of his patent.

No certificate of extension will be signed after the expiration of the patent. Parties are cautioned to make their application for extension in time to allow the testimony to be taken, the hearing to be had, and decision made, so that the final fee may be paid and the certificate signed before the patent expires; otherwise, extension will be denied.

Memoranda, What is Required of Them.

71. Any person who intends to oppose an application for extension must give notice of such intention to the applicant or his attorney of record within the time hereafter named, and furnish him with a statement of his reasons of opposition. After this he will be regarded as a party in the case, and will be entitled to notice of the time and place of taking testimony, to a list of the names and residences of the witnesses whose testimony may have been taken previous to his service of notice of opposition, and to a copy of the application and of any other papers on file, upon paying the cost of copying. He must also immediately file a copy of such notice and reasons of opposition, with proof of service of the same, in the patent office. (See sec. 75.)

If the extension is opposed on the ground of lack of novelty in the invention, the reasons of opposition should contain a specific statement of any and all matter relied upon for this purpose.

What is Required of Petitioner.

72. The applicant for an extension must furnish to the office a statement in writing, under oath, of the ascertained value of the invention, and of his receipts and expenditures on account thereof, both in this and foreign countries. This statement must be made particular and in detail, unless sufficient reason is set forth why such a statement cannot be furnished. It must in all cases be filed with the petition. No exceptions will be made to this rule.

Such statement must also be accompanied with a certified abstract of title and a declaration, under oath, setting forth the extent of applicant's interest in the extension sought.

Petition to be Considered—Proofs Required.

73. The questions which arise on each application for an extension are:

1. Was the invention new and useful when patented?

2. Is it valuable and important to the public, and to what extent?

3. Has the inventor been reasonably remunerated for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it, and the introduction of it into use? If not, has his failure to be so remunerated arisen from neglect or fault on his part?

4. What will be the effect of the proposed extension upon the public interests?

No proof will be required from the applicant upon the first question unless the invention is assailed upon those points by opponents.

To enable the commissioner to come to a correct conclusion in regard to the second point of inquiry, the applicant must, if possible, procure the testimony of persons disinterested in the invention, which testimony should be taken under oath. This testimony must distinguish carefully between the specific device covered by the patent expires; otherwise denied.

What is Required of Opponent?

Who intends to oppose an extension must give notice of the opposition to the applicant or his attorney at the time hereafter named, and a statement of his reasons for opposing the extension. This he will be regarded as having done, and will be entitled to a hearing, and place of taking testimony, the names and residences of the witnesses, and the service of notice of opposition, and of the application and of the extension, upon paying the cost must also immediately file a statement of his reasons for opposing the extension, in the patent office.

73. It is opposed on the ground that the invention, the reasons for which are stated in a specific statement matter relied upon for this #### Opposition of Witnesses.

74. For an extension must furnish a statement in writing, under oath, of the value of the invention, and expenditures on account of the invention in this and foreign countries. It must be made particular and in detail, and the reason is set forth why the extension should not be granted. It must be made with the petition. No extension to this rule.

75. It must also be accompanied by a statement of the nature and character of the invention, and a declaration setting forth the patent of the extension sought.

Considered—Facts Required.

76. In which arise on each application are:—
1. The nature and character of the invention, and its utility when made and applied to the public.

2. The manner in which the invention has been reasonably examined, ingenuity, and expense, and the introduction of it, and his failure to do so from neglect or fault on his part.

3. The effect of the proposed extension on the public interests.

4. The reasons for the application, and the invention, and the points by opponents.

5. The reasons for the extension, and the points by opponents.

6. The reasons for the extension, and the points by opponents.

7. The reasons for the extension, and the points by opponents.

As claims of the patent and the general machine in which these devices may be incorporated.

In regard to the third point of inquiry, in addition to his own oath, showing his receipts, and expenditures on account of the invention, the applicant must show, by testimony under oath, that he has taken all reasonable measures to introduce his invention into general use; and that, without neglect or fault on his part, he has failed to obtain from the use and sale of the invention a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed on the same, and the introduction of it into use.

Taking Testimony and Giving Notice.

74. In case of opposition to the extension of a patent by any person, both parties may take testimony, each giving reasonable notice to the other of the time and place of taking said testimony, which shall be taken according to the rules hereinafter prescribed.

Remuneration, Tests, Duties and Penalties.

75. Any person desiring to oppose an extension must serve his notice of opposition, and file his reasons therefor, at least ten days before the day fixed for the closing of testimony; but parties who have not entered formal opposition in time to put in testimony may, at the discretion of the commissioner, be permitted to appear on the day of hearing, and make argument upon the record in opposition to the grant of the extension. But in such case good cause for the neglect to make formal opposition must be shown.

Time of Taking Testimony.

76. In contested cases no testimony will be received, unless by consent, which has been taken within thirty days next after the filing of the petition for the extension.

Service of Notice to Take Testimony.

77. Service of notice to take testimony may be made upon applicant, upon the opponent, upon the attorney of record of either, or, if there be no attorney of record, upon any attorney or agent who takes part in the service of notices, or in the examination of the witnesses of either party. Where notice to take testimony has already been given to an opponent, and a new opponent subsequently gives notice of his intention to oppose, the examination need not be postponed, but notice thereof may be given to such subsequent opponent by mail or by telegraph. This rule, however, does not apply to ex-parte examinations, or those of which no notice has been given when notice of opposition is served.

Taking Testimony and Hearing. Rules to be Observed.

78. In the notice of the application for an extension a day will be fixed for the closing of testimony, and the day of hearing will also be named. Application for a postponement of the day of hearing, or for further time for taking testimony, must be made and supported according to the same rules as are to be observed in other contested cases; but they will not be granted in such a manner as to cause a risk of preventing a decision prior to the expiration of the patent. Immediately upon the closing of the testimony the application will be referred to the examiner in charge of the class to which the invention belongs for the report required by law; and said report shall be made not less than five days before the day of hearing. As this report is intended for the information of the commissioner, neither the parties nor their attorneys will be permitted to make oral arguments before the examiner. In contested cases briefs are deemed desirable, and these should always be filed at least five days before the day of hearing.

DESIGNS.

Designs. What are Patentable.

79. A patent for a design may be granted to any person, whether citizen or alien, who, by his own industry, genius, efforts, and expense, has invented or produced any new and original design for a manufacture, bust, statue, alto-relievo, or bas-relief; any new and original design for the printing of woollen, silk, cotton, or other fabrics; any new and original impression, ornament, pattern, print, or picture, to be printed, painted, cast, or otherwise placed on or worked into any articles of manufacture; or any new, useful, and original shape or configuration of any article of manufacture, the same not having been known or used by others before his invention or production thereof, or patented or described in any printed publication, upon payment of the duty required by law, and other due proceedings had the same as in cases of inventions or discoveries.

How Long the Patents Inure.

80. Patents for designs are granted for the term of three and one-half years, or for seven years, or for fourteen years, as the applicant may, in his application, elect.

Proceedings in Applications.

81. The proceedings in applications for patents for designs are substantially the same as for other patents. The specification must distinctly point out the characteristic features of the design, and carefully distinguish between what is old and what is held to be new. The claims also should be as distinct and specific as in the case of patents for inventions or discoveries.

Models. When not Required.

82. When the design can be sufficiently represented by drawings or photographs a model will not be required.

Illustrations. How Prepared.

83. Whenever a photograph or an engraving is employed to illustrate the design, it must be mounted upon a thick Bristol-board or drawing-paper, ten by fifteen inches in size; and the applicant will be required to furnish ten extra copies of such photograph or engraving (not mounted), of a size not exceeding seven and a half inches by eleven. Negatives will no longer be required.

Whenever the design is represented by a drawing, each of the ten copies must be made to conform as nearly as possible to the rules laid down for drawings of mechanical inventions.

TRADE-MARKS. Subsidiary Act of March 3, 1901.

Who may obtain Registration.

8. (a.) Any person, firm, or corporation domiciled in the United States or located in any foreign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, and who is entitled to the exclusive use of any trade-mark and uses the same in commerce with foreign nations or with Indian tribes.

(A.) Any citizen or resident of this country wishing the protection of his trade-mark in any foreign country the laws of which require registration in the United States as a condition precedent.

Substantive Requirements.

9. Every applicant for registration of a trade-mark must cause to be recorded in the Patent Office—

(a.) The name, domicile, and place of business or location of the firm or corporation desiring the protection of the trade-mark, and the residence and citizenship of individual applicants.

(b.) The class of merchandise and the particular description of goods comprised in such class to which the trade-mark has been appropriated.

(c.) A description of the trade-mark itself, with illustrations thereof, and the mode in which it has been applied and used.

(d.) The length of time during which the trade-mark has been used by the applicant on the class of goods described.

10. A fee of twenty-five dollars is required on filing each application, except in the case hereinafter named. (See pars. 16 and 17.)

The Application.

11. An application for the registration of a trade-mark will consist of a statement and specification, a declaration or oath, and the fee-drawings, with duplicates thereof. The statement and declaration should be written on one side of the paper only.

12. These should be preceded by a letter of advice requesting registration and signed by the applicant.

13. The statement should announce the full name, citizenship, domicile, residence, and place of business of the applicant (or if the applicant be a corporation, under the laws of what State or nation incorporated), with a full and clear specification of the trade-mark, particularly discriminating between its essential and non-essential features. It should also state from what time the trade-mark has been used by the applicant, the class of merchandise, and the particular goods comprised in such class to which the trade-mark is appropriated, and the manner in which it has been applied to the goods.

14. The declaration should be in the form of an oath by the person, or by a member of the firm, or by an officer of the corporation making the application, to the effect that the party has at the time of filing his application a right to the use of the trade-mark described in the statement; that no other person, firm, or corporation has a right to such use, either in the identical form or in such near resemblance thereto as might be considered to deceive; that such trade-mark is used in lawful commerce with foreign nations or Indian tribes, one or more of which should be particularly named; and that it is truly represented in the drawings for registry.

15. This oath may be taken within the United States, before a notary public, justice of the peace, or the judge or clerk of any court of record. In any foreign country it may be taken before the consular or a notary or consular officer of the United States, or before any person duly qualified by the laws of the country to administer oaths, whose official character shall be certified by a representative of the U. S. having an official seal.

Fee-drawings to be filed.

16. Where the trade-mark can be represented by a fac-simile which conforms to the rules for drawings of mechanical persons, such a drawing may be furnished by applicant, and the additional copies will be prepared by the stereotyping process at the expense of the office. Or the applicant may furnish one fac-simile of the trade-mark, mounted on a card ten by fifteen inches in size, and ten additional copies upon flexible paper, not mounted; but in all cases the sheet containing the mounted fac-simile or the drawing must be signed by

17. The following countries have treaties with the United States in this respect, viz.: Russia, Belgium, France, Austria, the German Empire, and Great Britain.

18. These rules are detailed on application by letter to the Commissioner.

the applicant or his authorized attorney, and witnesses noted by two witnesses.

Proceedings in the Office.

19. All applications for registration are considered in the first instance by the trade-mark examiner. An adverse decision by such examiner upon the applicant's right to registration will be reviewed by the Commissioner in person upon petition without fee.

20. No trade-mark will be registered unless it shall be made to appear that the same is used as such by the applicant in commerce with foreign nations or with Indian tribes, or is within the provisions of a treaty, convention, or declaration with a foreign power, nor which is merely the name of the applicant, nor which is identical with a known or registered trade-mark owned by another and appropriated to the same class of merchandise, or which so nearly resembles some other person's lawful trade-mark as to be likely to cause confusion in the public mind or deceive purchasers.

21. In case of conflicting applications for registration, or in any dispute as to the right to use which may arise between an applicant and a prior registrant, the office will declare an interference, in order that the parties may have opportunity to prove priority of adoption or right; and the proceedings on such interference will follow, as nearly as practicable, the practice in interferences upon applications for patents. But each applicant and registrant will be held to the date of adoption alleged in the statement filed with his application. On the petition of any party dissatisfied with the decision of the examiner of interferences the case will be reviewed by the Commissioner without fee.

22. When these requirements have been complied with, and the office has adjudged the trade-mark lawfully registrable, a certificate will be issued by the Commissioner, under seal of the Interior Department, to the effect that applicant has complied with the law, and that he is entitled to the protection of his trade-mark in such case made and provided. Attached to the certificate will be a fac-simile of the trade-mark and a printed copy of the statement and declaration.

23. The protection for each trade-mark will remain in force for thirty years, and may, upon the payment of a second fee, be renewed for thirty years longer, except in cases where such trade-mark is claimed for and applied to articles not manufactured in this country, and in which it receives protection under the laws of any foreign country for a shorter period, in which case it will cease to have force in this country, by virtue of the registration, at the same time that the trade-mark ceases to be exclusive property elsewhere.

24. The right to the use of any trade-mark is assignable by an instrument in writing, and such assignment of a registered trade-mark must be recorded in the Patent Office within sixty days after its execution, in default of which it may be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice. No particular form of assignment or conveyance is prescribed, but the trade-mark must be identified by the certificate number.

25. Owners of trade-marks for which protection has been sought by registering them in the Patent Office under the Act of July 3, 1890 (declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States), may register the same for the same goods, without fee, on compliance with the foregoing requirements. With each application of this character a specific reference to the date and number of the former certificate is required.

26. Applicants whose cases were filed under the act of 1890, either prior to or since the decision of the Supreme Court declaring it unconstitutional, which are now pending before the office, are advised to prepare applications in conformity with the law and foregoing rules. On the receipt of such an application, referring to the date of the one formerly filed, all fees paid thereon will be duly applied. Those who have paid only five or a few dollars are advised that the law does not provide for a division of the legal fee of $25, and that the remainder of the entire fee is required before the application can be entered.

FOREIGN PATENTS.

Foreign Patents, Their Effect on

U. S. Patents.

27. The taking out of a patent in a foreign country does not prejudice a patent previously obtained here; nor does it prevent obtaining a patent here subsequently, unless the invention authorized attorney, and, in those cases, the fee for registration is considered in the trade-mark examiner. An applicant's application will be reviewed by the Commission without fee, and will be registered unless it shall be the same as used as such by the applicant with foreign nations or with the provisions of a treaty, or in violation of a foreign power, or the name of the applicant, nor which is known or registered trade-mark of another person.

When application is made for a patent for an invention which has been already patented abroad, the inventor will be required to make oath that, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, the same has not been in public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application in this country. An applicant whose invention has been patented abroad should state the fact that a foreign patent has actually been obtained, giving its date, and if there be more than one, the date of each.

CAVEATS.
Caveat, Filing and Proceedings Thereon.
92. Any citizen of the United States, or alien who has resided for one year last past in the United States, and has made oath of his intention to become a citizen thereof, can file a caveat in the secret archives of the patent office on the payment of a fee of ten dollars therefor. And if, at any time within one year thereafter, another person applies for a patent with which such caveat would in any manner interfere, such application will be suspended, and notice thereof will be sent to the person filing the caveat, who, if he shall file a complete application within the prescribed time, will be entitled to an interference with the previous application, for the purpose of proving priority of invention, and obtaining the patent, if he be adjudged the prior inventor. The caveat, if he would avail himself of his caveat, must file his application within three months from the day on which the notice to him is deposited in the post-office at Washington, adding the regular time for the transmission of the same to him; and the day when the time for filing expires will be mentioned in the notice or endorsed thereon.

Notice of Contesting Application Removing Caveat.
93. The caveat will not be entitled to notice of any application pending at the time of filing his caveat, nor of any application filed after the expiration of one year from the date of filing the caveat; but he may renew his caveat at the end of one year by paying a second caveat fee of ten dollars, which will continue it in force for one year longer, and so on from year to year as long as he may desire. If a caveat is not renewed at the end of the year for which it was filed, it will no longer be regarded as in the secret archives of the office.

shall have been introduced into public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application; but when a patent is taken out in this country for an invention previously patented abroad, the American patent will expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the shortest term; but in no case shall it be in force more than seventeen years.

Oath when Invention is Patented Abroad.
90. When application is made for a patent for an invention which has been already patented abroad, the inventor will be required to make oath that, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, the same has not been in public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application in this country.

Statement Required of Applicants.
91. An applicant whose invention has been patented abroad should state the fact that a foreign patent has actually been obtained, giving its date, and if there be more than one, the date of each.

CAVEATS.
Caveat, Filing and Proceedings Thereon.

92. Any citizen of the United States, or alien who has resided for one year last past in the United States, and has made oath of his intention to become a citizen thereof, can file a caveat in the secret archives of the patent office on the payment of a fee of ten dollars therefor. And if, at any time within one year thereafter, another person applies for a patent with which such caveat would in any manner interfere, such application will be suspended, and notice thereof will be sent to the person filing the caveat, who, if he shall file a complete application within the prescribed time, will be entitled to an interference with the previous application, for the purpose of proving priority of invention, and obtaining the patent, if he be adjudged the prior inventor. Notice of Contesting Application Removing Caveat.

93. The caveat will not be entitled to notice of any application pending at the time of filing his caveat, nor of any application filed after the expiration of one year from the date of filing the caveat; but he may renew his caveat at the end of one year by paying a second caveat fee of ten dollars, which will continue it in force for one year longer, and so on from year to year as long as he may desire. If a caveat is not renewed at the end of the year for which it was filed, it will no longer be regarded as in the secret archives of the office.

Oath of Caveator.

94. No caveat can be filed in the secret archives of the office unless accompanied by an oath of the caveator that he is a citizen of the United States, or, if he is an alien, that he has resided for one year last past within the United States, and has made oath of his intention to become a citizen thereof; nor unless the applicant also states, under oath, that he believes himself the original and first inventor of the art, machine, or improvement set forth in his caveat.

Description of Invention Required.
95. A caveat need not contain as particular a description of the invention as is requisite in a specification; but still the description should be sufficiently precise to enable the office to judge whether there is a probable interference when a subsequent application is filed. A caveat, equally with an application, must be limited to a single invention or improvement.

No Altering or Withdrawing Papers Allowed.

96. Caveat papers cannot be withdrawn from the office nor undergo alteration, after they have once been filed; nor will additional caveat papers relative to the same invention be received, except upon the payment of an additional fee; but the caveator, or any person properly authorized by him, can at any time obtain copies of the papers at the usual rates.

Drawings Required.
97. When practicable, the caveat must be accompanied by full and accurate drawings, separate from the specifications, well executed on tracing-muslin or paper that may be folded, and of the same size as demanded in drawings for patents.

ASSIGNMENTS.

Patents and Trade-Marks Assignable.

98. A patent or trade-mark may be assigned, either as to the whole interest or any undivided part thereof, by an instrument of writing. No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a valid assignment, nor need the instrument necessarily be sealed, witnessed, or acknowledged.

Letters, etc., Respecting Assignments Not Recorded.

99. Letters, copies of assignments, or ex parte statements in relation to assignments are not proper subject-matters for record.

Assignment to be Recorded before Patent Issues to Assignee.

100. In every case where it is desired that the patent shall issue to an assignee, the assignment must be recorded in the patent office at a date not later than the day on which the final fee is paid.

Correspondence to be with Assignee.

101. When the patent is to issue in the name of the assignee, the entire correspondence will be with him or his authorized agent.

Grants of Territorial Rights.

102. A patentee may not only assign the whole or an undivided interest in his patent, but he may grant and convey an exclusive right under his patent to the whole or any specified portion of the United States by an instrument in writing.

Assignments, etc., When to be Recorded.

107. Every assignment or grant of an exclusive territorial right, as well as of an interest in a patent or trade-mark, must be recorded in the patent office—if a patent, within three months, if a trade-mark, within sixty days, from the execution thereof; otherwise it will be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice; but, if recorded after that time, it will protect the assignee or grantee against any such subsequent purchaser, whose assignment or grant is not then on record.

Licenses, etc., Need not be Recorded.

108. The patentee may convey separate rights under his patent to make, or to use or to sell his invention, or he may convey territorial or shop rights which are not exclusive. Such conveyances are mere licenses, and need not be recorded.

Receipts of Assignments, etc., not Acknowledged.

109. The receipt of assignment is not generally acknowledged by the office; they will be recorded in their own within a few days after their receipt, and then transmitted to the person entitled to them.

OFFICE FEES AND HOW PAYABLE.

Fees, etc., Payable in Advance.

110. Nearly all the fees payable to the patent office are positively required by law to be paid in advance; that is, upon making application for any action by the office for which a fee is payable. For the sake of uniformity and convenience, the remaining fees will be required to be paid in the same manner.

Table of Fees.

111. The following is the tariff of fees established by law:

|  |         |
|--|---------|
| On filing every application for a design patent for three years and six months | $25 00 |
| On filing every application for a design patent for seven years                | 25 00   |
| On filing every application for a design patent for fourteen years             | 50 00   |
| On filing every design   | 10 00   |
| On filing every application for a patent for an invention in discovery         | 15 00   |
| On issuing each original patent for an invention in discovery                  | 50 00   |
| On filing a division   | 10 00   |
| On filing every application for a reissue                                      | 20 00   |
| On filing every application for a division of a patent                         | 20 00   |
| On filing every application for an extension on the grant of every extension   | 20 00   |
| On filing the first appeal from a primary examiner to commissioner-in-chief    | 10 00   |
| On filing an appeal to the Commissioner from commissioner-in-chief             | 20 00   |
| On depositing a trade-mark for registration                                    | 25 00   |
| On depositing a label for registration   | 25 00   |

For unrecorded copies of the specifications and accompanying drawings of patents issued since July 1, 1871

Single copies

Twenty copies or more, whether of one or several patents, per copy
For recorded copies of the specifications and drawings of patents issued prior to July 1, 1871, the reasonable cost of making the same.

Orders for Copies must Specify Fees.

In ordering copies of any drawing or specification the name of the inventor and patentee, the title of the invention, and the date of the patent must be given; and for any search required in consequence of the omission of any of these data, a charge of one dollar may be made. So, in ordering a copy of an assignment, the title and page of the record, as well as the name of the inventor, must be given, otherwise an extra charge will be made for the time consumed in making any search that may become necessary.

Final Fee. Patent Forfeited if not Paid.

112. The final fee upon a patent must be paid within six months after the time at which the application was allowed and notice thereof mailed to the applicant, or his agent; and if the final fee for such patent, or a certificate of deposit for the amount, be not received at the office within that time, the patent will be forfeited, and the invention therein described will become public property, as against the applicant thereof, unless he shall make a new application within two years from the date of notice of the original allowance.

Money for Fees, How Paid.

113. The money for the payment of fees may be paid to the commissioner, or to the treasurer or any of the assistant treasurers of the United States, or to any of the designated depositaries, national banks, or receivers of public money, designated by the secretary of the treasury for that purpose, who shall give the depositor a receipt or certificate of deposit therefor, which shall be transmitted to the patent office. When this cannot be done without much inconvenience, the money may be remitted by mail, and in every such case the letter should state the exact amount enclosed. Letters containing money may be registered. Post-office money-orders now afford a safe and convenient mode of transmitting fees. All such orders should be made payable to the "commissioner of patents."

The weekly lists will close on Saturday at 12 o'clock.

When patents are to issue to assignees the assignment must be on record before the closing of the issue, and the request to issue to an assignee must be made in writing at the time of paying the final fee.

If Sent by Mail, to an Owner's Risk.

114. All money sent by mail, either to or from the patent office, will be at the risk of the owner. In no case should money be sent enclosed with checks. All payments to or by the office must be paid in specie, treasury notes, national bank notes, certificates of deposit, or post-office money-orders.

REPAYMENT OF MONEY.

Refunding Money Paid by Mistake.
118. Money paid by actual mistake will be refunded, but a mere change of purpose after the payment of money will not entitle a party to demand such return.

POSTAGE.

Postage, When to be Prepaid.
119. After the first day of July, 1873, the postage on all matter sent to the patent office by mail must be prepaid in full, otherwise it will not be received.

TAKING AND TRANSMITTING TESTIMONY.

Taking Testimony.
120. In extension, interference, and other contested cases, the following rules have been established for taking and transmitting evidence:

- Notice to be Given.
1. Before the deposition of a witness or witnesses is taken by either party, due notice shall be given to the opposite party, as hereinafter provided, of the time and place when and where such deposition or depositions will be taken, with the names and residences of the witness or witnesses then and there to be examined, so that the opposite party, either in person or by attorney, shall have full opportunity to cross-examine the witness or witnesses; Provided, That if the opposite party, or his counsel, be actually present at the taking of testimony, witnesses not named in the notice may be examined, but not otherwise; and that neither party shall take testimony in more than one place at the same time, nor so nearly at the same time as not to allow reasonable time to travel from one place of examination to the other.

- How to be Served.
2. The notice for taking testimony must be served by delivering a copy to the adverse party, or his agent, or attorney of record or counsel, as provided in Rule 77, or by leaving a copy at the party's usual place of residence with some member of the family who has arrived at the year of discretion, or by leaving the same at the office of the attorney; and such notice shall, with proof of service of the same, and a certificate, duly sworn to, giving the manner and time of making the service, be attached to the deposition or depositions, whether the party cross-examine or not.

- How to Cross-examine and Forward Depositions.
3. The magistrate before whom the deposition is taken must append thereto his certificate, stating the time and place at which it was taken, the name of the witness, the administration of the oath, at whose request the testimony was taken, the occasion upon which it is intended to be used, the names of the adverse party (if any), and whether they were present; and immediately upon the close of the examination he shall separately set up all the evidence, etc., and forward the same verbatim to the commissioner of patents, sending upon the envelope a certificate, giving the title of the case and the date of sealing and addressing the package.

Ex-parte Testimony in Extensions.

4. In cases of extension where no opposition is made, ex-parte testimony will be received from the applicant; and such testimony as may have been taken by the applicant prior to notice of opposition will be received, unless taken within thirty days after filing the petition for the extension; Provided, That immediately upon receiving notice of opposition the applicant shall give notice to the opposing party or parties of the names and residences of the witnesses whose testimony has thus been taken.

Proceedings if Testimony cannot be Obtained.

5. If either party shall be unable, for good and sufficient reasons, to procure the testimony of a witness or witnesses within the stipulated time, it shall be the duty of said party to give notice of the same to the commissioner of patents, accompanied by statements, under oath, of the cause of such inability, and of the names of such witnesses, and of the facts expected to be proved by them, and of the steps which have been taken to procure said testimony, and of the time or times when efforts have been made to procure it; which notice to the commissioner shall be received by him previous to the day of hearing aforesaid. Copies of the papers, and notice of any motion based upon them, must also be served upon the opposite party, as provided in Rule 50.

Introducing Copies, Records, and Books.

6. Whenever a party relies upon a caveat to establish the date of his invention, the caveat itself, or a certified copy thereof, must be filed in evidence, with due notice to the opposite party, as no notice can be taken by the office of a caveat filed in its secret archives.

The official records of the office, and books and documents contained in the library, and other books in general circulation, may be used at the hearing; but notice of any special matter contained therein, upon which a party relies, should be given to the opposite party previous to the day set for closing testimony.

Depositions, How Drawn Up.

121. The folios of each deposition must be numbered consecutively, and the name of the witness be plainly and conspicuously written at the top of each folio. It is deemed desirable that the testimony be taken upon legal-cap paper, with wide margin on the left-hand side of the page, and that only one side of the sheet be written upon.

Form of Testimony.

122. The testimony may be taken in narrative form; but, if either party desires it, it must be taken in answer to interrogatories, having the questions and answers committed to writing in their regular order by the magistrate, or, unless by consent, by some person not interested in the case, either as a party thereto or as attorney. The deposition, when complete, must be signed by the witness.

Excluding Depositions.

116. No evidence touching the matter at issue will be considered upon the day of hearing which shall not have been taken and filed in compliance with these rules; but no notice will be taken of any merely formal or technical objection which shall not appear to have wrought a substantial injury to the party raising it; and in such case it should be made to appear that, as soon as the party became aware of the objection, he immediately gave notice thereof to the office, and also to the opposite party, informing him at the same time that, unless corrected, he shall urge his objection at the hearing; but this rule is not to be construed so as to modify well-established rules of evidence, which will be applied strictly in all practice before the office.

Subpoenas for Witnesses.

117. The law requires the clerks of the various courts of the United States to issue subpoenas, to secure the attendance of witnesses whose depositions are desired to be read in evidence in any contested case in the patent office.

Testimony, When Given.

118. In contested cases, whether of interference or of extension, parties may have access to the testimony on file prior to the hearing, in presence of the officer in charge; and topics may be obtained by them at the usual rates.

Printing of 10 Boundings.

As a general rule printed copies of the testimony will be required, but this requirement may be dispensed with on special application to the commissioner, and showing satisfactory reasons therefor.

Three printed copies should be furnished, two for the use of the office and one for the use of the opposing party. These copies must be filed not less than one week previous to the day of hearing.

It is also desirable that all arguments should be submitted in printed form, and all arguments filed at least two days previous to the day of hearing.

RULES OF CORRESPONDENCE.*Correspondence with Office, How Conducted.

119. All correspondence must be in the name of the "commissioner of patents," and all letters and other communications intended for the office must be addressed to him; and after July 1, 1873, postage must be prepaid in full. If addressed to any of the other officers of the bureau they will not be noticed, unless it be seen that the mistake was owing to inadvertence. A separate letter should be written in relation to each distinct subject of inquiry or application, the subject of the invention and the date of filing being always carefully noted.

Correspondence to be With Party, or Attorney or Assignee, Only.

120. When an agent has filed his power of attorney, duly executed, the correspondence will, in ordinary cases, be held with him only;

and a double correspondence with an assignee and the inventor, or with an attorney and his principal, if generally allowed, would largely increase the labor of the office. The assignee of an entire interest in an invention is entitled to hold correspondence with the office to the exclusion of the inventor.

If Principal Becomes Dissatisfied, How to Revoke Power.

121. If the principal becomes dissatisfied he must revoke his power of attorney and notify the office, which will then communicate with him.

Inspection of Papers After Second Rejection.

122. After a second rejection none of the papers can be inspected, save in the presence of a sworn officer; nor will any of the papers be returned to the applicant or agent.

Conflicting Parties Having the Same Business Interest.

123. Whenever it shall be found that two or more parties whose interests are in conflict are represented by the same attorney, the examiner in charge will notify each of said principal parties, and also the attorney, of this fact.

Applications Must Be Secret.

124. Aside from the events, which are required by law to be kept secret, all pending applications are, as far as practicable, preserved in like secrecy. No information will therefore be given those inquiring whether any particular case is before the office, or whether any particular person has applied for a patent.

Not After They Are Reexamined.

125. No information is given in relation to any case after a patent has issued, or after a patent has been refused, and the further prosecution of the application is abandoned or barred by lapse of time.

Are Then Open to Inspection.

126. The models, in each case, are so placed as to be subject to general inspection. The specifications and drawings in any particular case can be seen by any one having particular occasion to examine them, and copies thereof, as well as of patents granted, will be furnished at the cost of making them. Copies will be made on parchment, at the request of the applicant, on his paying the additional cost.

Cases Neglected for Two Years Treated as Abandoned.

127. Even after a case is rejected, the application is regarded as pending, unless the applicant allows the matter to rest for two years without taking any further steps therein, in which case it will be regarded as abandoned, and will no longer be protected by any rule of secrecy. The specifications, drawings, and model will then be subject to inspection in the same manner as those of patented or withdrawn applications.

Information as to Pending Cases, How Given.

128. Information in relation to pending cases is given as far as it becomes necessary in conducting the business of the office, but no further. Thus, when an interference is declared between two pending applications, each of the contest-dependence with an assignee or with an attorney and his ally allowed, would largely of the office. The assignee in an invention is entitled to communicate with the office to the inventor.

Discontinued, Must Be Reopened.
 If an inventor becomes dissatisfied he may re-open his case by power of attorney and notify the office. He will then communicate with the office.

Re-opening After Second Rejection.
 If an inventor's case is rejected a second time, he may re-open his case in the presence of the examiner, and may file any of the papers which he may desire to file.

Re-opening After Final Rejection.
 If an inventor's case is rejected a third time, he may re-open his case in the presence of the examiner, and may file any of the papers which he may desire to file.

Re-opening After Final Rejection.
 If an inventor's case is rejected a third time, he may re-open his case in the presence of the examiner, and may file any of the papers which he may desire to file.

Re-opening After Final Rejection.
 If an inventor's case is rejected a third time, he may re-open his case in the presence of the examiner, and may file any of the papers which he may desire to file.

one is entitled to a knowledge of so much of his opponent's case as to enable him to conduct his own understandingly.

No Information Furnished as to Inventions or the Law of Patents in General.

129. The office cannot respond to inquiries as to the novelty of an alleged invention in advance of an application for a patent, nor to inquiries founded upon brief and imperfect descriptions, propounded with a view of ascertaining whether such alleged improvements have been patented, and if so, to whom; nor can it act as an expounder of the patent law, nor as a counselor for individuals, except as to questions arising within the office. A copy of the rules, with this section marked, sent to the individual making an inquiry of the character referred to, is intended as a respectful answer by the office.

Intercourse with the Office to be in Writing.

130. All business with the office should be transacted in writing. Unless by the consent of all parties, the action of the office will be based exclusively on the written record. No attention will be paid to any alleged verbal promise or understanding, in relation to which there is any disagreement or doubt.

ATTORNEYS.

131. Any person of intelligence and good moral character may appear as the agent or the attorney in fact of an applicant, upon filing a proper power of attorney. As the value of patents depends largely upon the careful preparation of the specification and claims, the assistance of competent counsel will, in most cases, be of advantage to the applicant, but the value of their services will be proportioned to their skill and honesty. So many persons have entered this profession of late years without experience that too much care cannot be exercised in the selection of a competent man. The office cannot assume responsibility for the acts of attorneys, nor can it assist applicants in making a selection. It will, however, be a safe rule to distrust those who boast of the possession of special and peculiar facilities in the office for procuring patents in a shorter time or with more extended claims than others.

Power of Attorney, Their Value.

132. Powers of attorney to authorize the attorney to substitute for, or associate with, himself a second agent, must contain a clause of substitution; but such powers will not authorize the second agent to appoint a third.

Regulations for Practice of Attorneys.

133. A power of attorney must be filed in every case, both by original and associate attorneys, before each attorney will be allowed to inspect papers or take action of any kind. Parties or their attorneys will be permitted to examine their cases in the attorney's room, but not in the rooms of the examiners. Personal interviews with examiners will be discouraged. All intercourse in relation to pending cases ought to be in writing.

Sanctions Against Attorneys for Misconduct.

134. Attorneys will be expected to conduct their business with the office with decorum and courtesy. For gross misconduct the commissioner may refuse to recognize any person as a patent agent, either generally or in any particular case; and for lesser offences attorneys may be refused the privilege of oral interviews, and be required to transact all business with the office in writing.

Transacting Business Through Delegates in Congress Discouraged.

135. As members of Congress cannot examine cases, or act in them without regular powers of attorney, and as cases cannot be taken up out of their regular order upon their request, and as the delay in transmitting papers to and from the capitol involves a loss of time which would be avoided by communicating directly with the office, applicants are recommended not to add to the sufficiently arduous duties of their representatives by ordering copies or attempting to transact business with the office through them.

LIBRARY.

Library Regulations.

136. No persons are allowed to take books from the library except those employed in the office.

All books taken from the library must be entered in a register kept for the especial purpose, and returned on the call of the librarian. Any book lost or defaced must be replaced by another.

Patentees and others doing business with the office can examine the books only in the library-hall or the attorney's room in the office.

All translations will be made at the usual rates by the office.

No person will be allowed to make copies or tracings from works in the library. Such copies will be furnished at the usual rates.

ELLIS SPEAR,
 Acting Commissioner.

Approved,
 C. DELANO,
 Secretary of the Interior.

PETITION.

1. By a Sole Inventor.
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, a resident of _____, prays that letters patent be granted to him for the invention set forth in the annexed specification.
 A. B.

2. By Joint Inventors.
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioners, residing respectively in _____, and _____, pray that letters patent may be granted to them, as joint inventors, for the invention set forth in the annexed specification.
 A. B.
 C. D.

3. By an Inventor for Himself and an Assignee.
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, a resident of _____, prays that letters patent may be granted to himself and C. D., of _____, as his assignee, for the invention set forth in the annexed specification, the assignment to the said C. D. having been duly recorded in the Patent Office, in file _____, 1887.
 A. B.

4. By an Administrator.
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, A. B., of _____, administrator of the estate of C. D., deceased (as by reference to the duly-certified copy of letters of administration, hereto annexed, will more fully appear), prays that letters patent may be granted to him for the invention of the said C. D., set forth in the annexed specification.
 A. B.
Administrator, etc.

5. By an Executor.
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, A. B., of _____, executor of the last will and testament of C. D., deceased (as by reference to the duly-certified copy of letters testamentary, hereto annexed, will more fully appear), prays that letters patent may be granted to him for the invention of the said C. D., set forth in the annexed specification.
 A. B.
Executor, etc.

6. For a Reissue (By the Inventor):
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, of _____, prays that he may be allowed to surrender the letters patent for an improvement in coal-mines, granted to him

May 18, 1887, whereof he is now sole owner (or whereof C. D., on whose behalf and with whose assent this application is made, is now sole owner, by assignment), and that letters patent may be reissued to him (or the said C. D.), for the same invention, upon the annexed amended specification, accompanying this petition in an abstract of title, duly certified, as required in such cases.
 A. B.

Assent of Assignee to Reissue.
 The undersigned, assignee of the entire (or an undivided) interest in the above-mentioned letters patent, hereby assents to the accompanying application.
 C. D.

7. For a Reissue (By Assignee).
[To be used only when the inventor is dead, or the original patent was issued and assigned prior to July 1, 1870.]

To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioners, of the city of _____, State of _____, pray that they may be allowed to surrender the letters patent for an improvement in coal-mines, granted May 18, 1887, to A. B., now deceased, whereof they are now owners, by assignment, of the entire interest, and the letters patent may be reissued to them for the same invention, upon the annexed amended specification. Accompanying this petition is an abstract of title, duly certified, as required in such cases.
 A. B.
 C. D.

8. For an Extension (By a Patentee).
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, now residing at _____, prays that letters patent No. 12345, for an improvement in steam-engines, granted to him August 17, 1885, may be extended for seven years from and after the expiration of the original term.
 A. B.

9. For an Extension (By an Administrator).
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, A. B., of _____, administrator of the estate of C. D., deceased (as by reference to the duly-certified copy of letters of administration, hereto annexed, will more fully appear), residing at _____, prays that letters patent No. 12345, for an improvement in steam, granted to said C. D., August 17, 1885, may be extended for seven years from and after the expiration of the original term.
 A. B.
Administrator.

10. For Letters Patent for a Design.
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, residing in _____, prays that letters patent may be granted to him for the term of three and one-half years (or seven years, or fourteen years), for the new and original design set forth in the annexed specification.
 A. B.

11. For the Registration of a Trade-Mark.
 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 The undersigned presents herewith a fac-simile of his lawful trade-mark, and requests that the same, together with the accompanying statement and declaration, may be registered in the United States Patent Office in accordance with the law in such cases made and provided.
 A. B.

 To the Commissioner of Patents:
 Your petitioner, of _____, prays that an application for an improvement in _____, which application was filed on May 2, 1887, and that he failed to make payment of the fee within the time allowed by law, and which he has now renewed, be removed to letters patent for his invention, and pray that the original specification, drawings, and model may be used as a part of this application.
 A. B.

erof he is now sole owner (or whose behalf and with whose assent is made, is now sole owner, by assent of letters patent may be reissued (C. D.), for the same invention, amended specification, Application in an abstract of title, required in such cases. A. B.

Assignment to Assignee. I, the inventor (or as assignee of the entire (or as assignee of the above-mentioned letters patent) to the accompanying assignment. C. D.

13. Petition with Power of Attorney. To the Commissioner of Patents: Year petitioner, a resident of the city of —, State of —, prays that letters patent may be granted to him for the invention set forth in the enclosed specification; and he hereby appoints C. D., of the city of —, State of —, his attorney, with full power of substitution and revocation, to prosecute this application, to make alterations and amendments therein, to receive the patent, and to transact all business in the Patent Office connected therewith. A. B.

14. Power of Attorney. If the power of attorney is given at any time other than that of making application for patent, it will be in substantially the following form: To the Commissioner of Patents: The undersigned having, on or about the 20th day of July, 1887, made application for letters patent for an improvement in a horse-power, hereby appoints C. D., of the city of —, State of —, his attorney, with full power of substitution and revocation, to prosecute said application, to make alterations and amendments therein, to receive the patent, and to transact all business in the Patent Office connected therewith. A. B.

15. Revocation of Power of Attorney. The undersigned having, on or about the 20th day of December, 1887, appointed C. D., of the city of —, State of —, his attorney, to prosecute an application for letters patent, made on or about the 1st day of June, 1886, for an improvement in the raising of iron, hereby revokes the power of attorney then given. Signed at —, this 1st day of July, 1887. A. B.

SPECIFICATION.

16. For a Machine. To all whom it may concern: Be it known that I (have inserted the name of the inventor), of —, in the county of —, and State of —, have invented a new and useful improvement in saw-toothed machines, which improvement is fully set forth in the following specification, reference being had to the accompanying drawings:

The object of my invention is to replace form, on the blade of a hand-saw, teeth gradually decreasing in size from the broad to the narrow end of the blade, by the combination, in a saw-toothed machine, of a tapering barrel, B, and a chain, or its equivalent, with rollers, C, C', for feeding, or with a roller carrying the blade, A, as shown in the perspective view, Fig. 1, of the accompanying drawing.

(Here follows the drawing.) The machine is illustrated more in detail in the plan view, Fig. 2, and in the vertical section, Fig. 3, in which it has not been deemed necessary to show the driving mechanism. The blade is held by and between the two upper rollers, A and A' (the latter being a feed-roller), and two lower rollers, B and B', and is made to revolve in the direction of the arrow, at a gradually decreasing speed, by causing a barrel, B, to revolve at a constant or its equivalent from a tapering barrel, B, on the shaft, E. The several shafts have their bearings in a simple frame, F, the front portion A of the latter forming a table, which, in combination with the rollers, supports the blade, as the latter is caused to revolve with its edge in contact with the rollers, the guides, G, on the barrel, B, in this table is a feed die, or guide, H, on which the blade bears, and in which is a triangular notch, corresponding in shape to a gear, I, on a rapidly revolving shaft, O.

As the blade moves at a gradually decreasing speed in the direction of the arrow, the teeth will cut the triangular planes from the edge, and the result will be the formation of the desired graduated teeth.

It is to be understood that the driving-barrel, D, may be tapering, and the barrel, B, cylindrical, or that both barrels may be tapering, and arranged to feed gradually faster instead of gradually slower, with the same result, and that the blade may be clamped to a guided sliding bed, controlled by a tapering barrel and cord or chain. I claim as my invention:

The combination in a saw-toothed machine, substantially as described, of a tapering barrel and chain, with a roller for feeding the blade. Witnesses, C. D. A. B. E. F.

17. For a Process. To all whom it may concern: Be it known that I (have inserted the name of the inventor), of —, in the county of —, and State of —, have invented a new and useful process for separating smut and other impurities from wheat, which process is fully set forth in the following specification:

This invention relates to that class of processes employed for removing "smut" and other impurities mixed with and adhering to grain; and it consists in mixing "newly-slabed" lime, while yet warm, with the grain before it is passed through the smut-mill.

In carrying out our invention, take of lime, newly slaked and while yet warm, one and a half pounds to each hundred pounds of wheat. Mix the lime well with the wheat, let it stand one hour, then pass it through a smut-mill in the usual way, and it will be found that all the lime, smut, dirt, and other impurities attached to the wheat, of every kind, and which no smut-mill, without any liming process, will fully separate, will be entirely removed, and the flour will be as white and as sweet as though made from the best of wheat.

We are aware that lime has before been used for the purpose of cleaning wheat, being first mixed with the grain as above proposed, and the whole being then passed through a smut-mill; but in all previous processes, so far as we are aware, the lime has been used in a solid state, and for this reason they have proved ineffectual. We propose to take lime newly slaked and while yet warm.

We claim as our invention: The process of cleaning wheat by mixing with it lime newly slaked and warm before passing it through a smut-mill, so as to cleanse the wheat from all impurities, substantially as described. Witnesses, E. F. A. B. C. D.

18. For a Composition of Matter. To all whom it may concern: Be it known that I (have inserted the name of the inventor), of —, in the county of —, and State of —, have invented a new and useful compound, called "wool-oil," which compound is fully described in the following specification:

This invention relates to that class of compounds used to lubricate wool in the process of manufacturing; and it consists in a composition formed by mixing any one or more of the oils ordinarily used in manufacturing wool, such as olive, lard, or rapeseed oil, with a solution of an alkali-soap.

To prepare the wool-oil, take a quantity of oil-soap of any kind, provided the quality be good, and dissolve the same in hot water, say about thirty pounds of oil-soap to thirty gallons of water, or a sufficient quantity of soap to saturate the water. Then take equal parts, by measure, of olive, lard, rapeseed, or any other kind of oil which can be used on wool in the process of its manufacture, and mix with it the preparation above said, to wit, the soap solution, which, after such mixture, is ready to be used on the wool with an immediate effect as if pure oil only had been used. The wool-oil will not decompose by age, because the oil of soap neutralizes the alkaline in the oil; hence there is nothing to decompose. And for the same reason spontaneous combustion cannot be produced.

I claim: A compound consisting of an oil or oils, ordinarily used in the lubrication of wool, in combination with a solution of an oil-snap, substantially as and for the purpose specified. C. D. Witness, G. H.

19. For a Design.

To all whom it may concern: Be it known that I (here insert the name of the originator of the design), of —, in the county of —, and State of —, have originated and designed a pattern for carpets, or other fabric, of which the following is a full, clear, and exact description, reference being had to the accompanying photographic illustration or drawing, making part of this specification.

The nature of my design is fully represented in the accompanying photographic illustration, to which reference is made.

A represents a portion of the body of the carpet, and B a portion of the border. The body may be ornamented with any figure that may be selected; but the border consists of three parallel stripes, the middle one wide, and the other two narrow. Along the middle stripe of the border run two angular bars, crossing each other and intertwining, as shown, while the narrow stripes are ornamented with rows of spots arranged in groups of three, so as to form triangles. I prefer to make the middle stripe white and the side stripes red, while the intertwining bars are of gold and green; but I do not consider the colors selected to be an essential element in my design.

I am aware that carpet-borders composed of a wide central stripe and two narrow side stripes are not new, and I do not claim them. The distinctive character of my design is found in the figures, which are wrought into a border thus composed of stripes.

What I claim as my invention is: A design for a carpet in which the border is composed of stripes ornamented substantially in the manner above described.

20. For a Trade-Mark.

To all whom it may concern: Be it known that I, A. B., a citizen of the United States residing at —, in the county of —, and State of —, and doing business at —, have adopted for my use a trade-mark for — (as the case may be) of which the following is a full, clear, and exact specification:

My trade-mark consists of the letters and words (or arbitrary symbols, as the case may be) —, These have generally been arranged as shown in the accompanying illustration. (Here give a full description of the trade-mark, including all its features.) But — may be omitted and — changed at pleasure without materially altering the character of my trade-mark, the essential features of which are —.

This trade-mark I have used continuously in my business since —, 18—.

The class of merchandise to which this trade-mark is appropriated is —, and the particular description of goods comprised in such class on which I use the said trade-mark is —. It has been my practice to (here state fully the manner of applying it to the goods or the packages containing them).

To the Commissioner of Patents: A. B., of —, in the county of —, and State of —, hereby given notice that he has appealed from your decision, rendered on or about the 20th day of June, 1877, rejecting his application for a patent (or for a renewal of a patent granted to him June 10, 1864) for an improvement in velocipedes; and of this you are respectfully requested to take notice.

And the said A. B. assigns the following reasons for appealing from the said decision of the Commissioner of Patents, viz.:

(Here follow reasons, which should be full and explicit, and constitute a brief of the appellant's argument.)

A. B.

25. Rules of the Supreme Court in Appeals from the Commissioner of Patents, Adopted November 26, 1876.

1. The applicant's petition shall be addressed to the court, and shall be essentially as follows:

To the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in case, —, 187—.

The petition of —, a citizen of —, in the (State, Territory, District) of —, respectfully shows as follows:

a. About the — day of —, 18—, I invented (describe the subject of the desired patent in the identical words of the application to the Patent Office).

b. On the — day of —, 18—, in the manner prescribed by law, I presented my application to the Patent Office, praying that a patent be issued to me for said invention.

c. Such proceedings were had in said office, upon said application, that on the — day of —, 18—, it was rejected by the Commissioner of Patents.

d. I thereupon appealed to this court, and gave notice thereof to the Commissioner, and filed in his office the following reasons for said appeal:

e. The Commissioner of Patents has furnished me a complete copy of all the proceedings in his office upon my said application, which copy has been filed herewith, and is to be taken as part hereof.

f. And thereupon I pray that the court do review and reverse said decision, to the end that justice may be done in the premises.

g. This petition shall be filed in the clerk's office of this court; and as soon as the petitioner has made the deposit required by law at the commencement of suit in this court, or said deposit has been dispensed with, the clerk shall enter the case in a docket to be provided by him for the purpose, and in which a brief of said filing and of all subsequent proceedings in the case shall be entered as and when they successively occur, down to and including the final decision.

h. The clerk shall provide a minute-book of his office, in which he shall record every order, rule, judgment, or decree of the court in each case, in the order of time in which said proceedings occur; and of this book there shall be two identical volumes, one showing the name of the party applying for the patent, and the other designating the invention by its subject-matter or name.

i. The cases in the District of Columbia shall be successively numbered from No. 1 forward, and each case shall also be designated by the number assigned to it on the records of the patent office.

j. This docket shall be called for the trial of the case thereon on the first day of each month of this court in general term, provided the petition has been filed ten days before the commencement of the term.

k. The contents of the said minute-book shall be kept by the clerk, in the order of their delivery, and in a temporary book-let, indexed; and when a case shall have been delivered as well make a volume of convenient size he shall cause them to be bound.

l. The clerk shall furnish to any applicant a copy of any paper in any of said appeals on payment of the lawful fee.

m. Hearings of said appeals shall be subject to the rules of the court provided for other cases therein.

n. When the testimony of the Commissioner, or of any witness concerning the facts of invention, in question shall be deemed necessary, it shall be taken orally in open court, unless otherwise ordered by the court.

And, in such case, the court may order it to be reduced to writing, and filed or entered on its minutes, if it think proper.

10. The final judgment or order of the court shall not receive any of the facts made to appear in the case, but shall be to the following effect:

This appeal having been heard upon the record from the Patent Office (and upon the testimony of the Commissioner of Patents, (if one of the examiners), (touching the principles of the invention), and having been argued by (counsel for) the petitioner and (for) the Commissioner:

It is thereupon ordered and adjudged that the petition be dismissed (Commissioner do leave to the petitioner a patent), (as prayed), (granting the petitioner (as and so)).

And that the clerk of this court transmit to the Commissioner of Patents a copy of this decree duly authenticated.

26. Discontinuance.

To the Commissioner of Patents: Your petitioner, A. B., of —, county of —, and State of —, represents that he has, by grants duly recorded in the United States Patent Office (liber —, p. —), become the owner of an exclusive right within and for the several States of (Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont), to make, use, and vend to others to be used, a certain improved mechanical movement, for which letters patent of the United States were granted to C. D., of —, in the county of —, and State of —, April 1, 1869; that he has reason to believe that, through inadvertence, accident, or mistake, the specifications and claims of said letters patent are too broad, including that of which said patentee was not the first inventor. Your petitioner, therefore, hereby asserts his disclaimer to that part of the claim in said specification which is in the following words, to wit:

I also claim the sleeves A B, having each a friction cam, C, and connected, respectively, by means of chains or cords K L and M N, with an oscillatory lever, to operate substantially as herein shown and described.

A. B.

Witness, C. D.

27. Disposal.

The petition of A. B., of —, in the county of —, and State of —, respectfully represents:

That he has made certain improvements in velocipedes, and that he is now engaged in making experiments for the purpose of perfecting the same, preparatory to applying for letters patent therefor. He therefore prays that the aforesaid description of his invention may be filed as a caveat in the confidential archives of the Patent Office.

A. B.

DESCRIPTION.

The following is a description of my newly-invented velocipede, which is so full, clear, and exact as I am able at this time to give, reference being had to the drawing hereto annexed.

This invention relates to that class of velocipedes in which there are two wheels connected by a beam forming a saddle for the rider, the feet being applied to cranks that revolve the front wheel.

The object of my invention is to render it unnecessary to turn the front wheel so much as heretofore, and at the same time to facilitate the turning of sharp curves. This I accomplish by fitting the front and the hind wheels on vertical pivots, and connecting them by means of a diagonal bar, as shown in the drawing, so that the turning of the front wheel also turns the hind wheel into a position at an angle with the beam, thereby enabling it easily to turn a curve.

In the drawing, A is the front wheel, B the hind wheel, and C the standard extending from the axle of the front wheel to the vertical pivot a in the beam a and D in the cross-bar upon the end of e, by which the steering is done. The hind wheel, B, is also fitted with jaws, e, and a vertical pivot, f.

Witness, C. D.

(The form of each will be substantially that provided for original applications, except that, as a caveat can only be filed by a citizen, or an alien who has resided the court may order it to be reduced and entered on its minutes, if a ment or order of the court shall not be made to appear in the case, but having effect

42. License—Not Exclusive—With Royalty. This agreement, made this 10th day of September, 1881, between A. B., party of the first part, and C. D. & Co., party of the second part, witnesseth, that, whereas letters patent of the United States for an improvement in horse-rakes were granted to the party of the first part, dated October 4, 1881; and whereas the party of the second part is desirous of manufacturing horse-rakes containing said patented improvement; now, therefore, the parties have agreed as follows:

1. The party of the first part here, license and empower the party of the second part to manufacture, subject to the conditions hereinafter named, at their factory in —, and in no other place or places, to the end of the term for which said letters patent were granted, horse-rakes containing the patented improvement, and to sell the same within the United States.

2. The party of the second part agree to make full and true returns to the party of the first part, under oath, upon the first days of July and January in each year, of all horse-rakes containing the patented improvements manufactured by them.

3. The party of the second part agree to pay to the party of the first part five dollars, as a license-fee upon every horse-rake manufactured by said party of the second part containing the patented improvements; provided, that if the said fee be paid upon the days provided herein for semi-annual returns, or within ten days thereafter, a discount of fifty per cent. shall be made from said fee for prompt payment.

4. Upon a failure of the party of the second part to make returns, or to make payment of license-fee, as herein provided, for thirty days after the days herein named, the party of the first part may terminate this license by serving a written notice upon the party of the second part; but the party of the second part shall not thereby be discharged from any liability to the party of the first part for any license-fee due at the time of the service of said notice.

In witness whereof, the parties above named (the said Uniontown Agricultural Works, by its president) have hereunto set their hands the day and year first above written.

43. Statement and Account. In the matter of the application of E. B., of the city county, and State of New York, executor of the last will and testament of C. D., deceased, for extension of letters patent No. 1087, granted to him January 9, 1848, for improvements in mowing-machines.

To the Commissioner of Patents:

The applicant respectfully represents that, prior to obtaining the letters patent now sought to be extended, the said C. D. was a farmer; that his attention was called to the subject of mowing-machines, by the difficulty of cutting grass by the machines then in use; that, after numerous patient and costly experiments, he succeeded in perfecting his invention and in obtaining his patent. He immediately made arrangements to manufacture the improvement, and for this purpose sold three-fourths of his farm. He then, with others, built a factory and commenced operations; but, two years afterward, the establish-for one year last past in the United States, and made oath of his intention to become a citizen, the oath should be modified accordingly.)

42. License—Not Exclusive—With Royalty.

This agreement, made this 10th day of September, 1881, between A. B., party of the first part, and C. D. & Co., party of the second part, witnesseth, that, whereas letters patent of the United States for an improvement in horse-rakes were granted to the party of the first part, dated October 4, 1881; and whereas the party of the second part is desirous of manufacturing horse-rakes containing said patented improvement; now, therefore, the parties have agreed as follows:

1. The party of the first part here, license and empower the party of the second part to manufacture, subject to the conditions hereinafter named, at their factory in —, and in no other place or places, to the end of the term for which said letters patent were granted, horse-rakes containing the patented improvement, and to sell the same within the United States.

2. The party of the second part agree to make full and true returns to the party of the first part, under oath, upon the first days of July and January in each year, of all horse-rakes containing the patented improvements manufactured by them.

3. The party of the second part agree to pay to the party of the first part five dollars, as a license-fee upon every horse-rake manufactured by said party of the second part containing the patented improvements; provided, that if the said fee be paid upon the days provided herein for semi-annual returns, or within ten days thereafter, a discount of fifty per cent. shall be made from said fee for prompt payment.

4. Upon a failure of the party of the second part to make returns, or to make payment of license-fee, as herein provided, for thirty days after the days herein named, the party of the first part may terminate this license by serving a written notice upon the party of the second part; but the party of the second part shall not thereby be discharged from any liability to the party of the first part for any license-fee due at the time of the service of said notice.

In witness whereof, the parties above named (the said Uniontown Agricultural Works, by its president) have hereunto set their hands the day and year first above written.

43. Statement and Account.

In the matter of the application of E. B., of the city county, and State of New York, executor of the last will and testament of C. D., deceased, for extension of letters patent No. 1087, granted to him January 9, 1848, for improvements in mowing-machines.

To the Commissioner of Patents:

The applicant respectfully represents that, prior to obtaining the letters patent now sought to be extended, the said C. D. was a farmer; that his attention was called to the subject of mowing-machines, by the difficulty of cutting grass by the machines then in use; that, after numerous patient and costly experiments, he succeeded in perfecting his invention and in obtaining his patent. He immediately made arrangements to manufacture the improvement, and for this purpose sold three-fourths of his farm. He then, with others, built a factory and commenced operations; but, two years afterward, the establish-most was destroyed by fire, without insurance. In the autumn of the year C. D. contracted a disease which confined him to the house for three years, when he died, leaving applicant, his executrix and widow, with a large family and small means. Nevertheless, applicant made every effort to induce manufacturers to use the improvement, and at last succeeded in inducing the firm of E. F. & Co., of —, to recommence the manufacture of the machines. But after four years the firm failed, being largely in debt to applicant for royalties. After this it became impossible for applicant to do anything with the invention. She wrote to various manufacturers, and made personal application to others, but found them unwilling to make arrangements to pay royalties, or to use the invention in any way, unless she would sell the patent, including the extension, for a nominal sum. She states, however, that she has at length succeeded in perfecting an agreement with G. H. & Co., of —, conditioned upon the extension, whereby the said firm agreed to manufacture the patented machine, and to pay her a royalty of three dollars upon each one made. Aside from the interest so voted in G. H. & Co. the entire interest in the extension remains vested in her, and she has made no assignment, contract, or agreement of any kind for the sale or assignment of the extended term to any person whatsoever.

The following is believed to be a correct statement of receipts and expenditures, and is as full as it is possible to make it:

|---|-------------------|
| From profits from business (for particulars of which see schedule A)  | $1,250 00        |
| From royalties from E. F. & Co. (for details of which see Schedule B) | 2,345 50          |
| From sale of shop-right to L. M.                                      | 250 00            |
| Total receipts   | $3,845 50 |
| Expenses of preparing patent  | 250 00            |
| Net receipts   | $3,595 50 |

The invention is exceedingly useful, as will be abundantly proved. The testimony will show that it has been introduced upon some mowing-machines, and has increased the value of said machines not less than three dollars each. It is evident, therefore, that the public have been greatly benefited by the use of this invention; while the fact that C. D. devoted his entire time and means, and finally lost his life in the prosecution of his invention, is respectfully offered as proof that he has not been adequately remunerated for his time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon this invention, and the introduction thereof into use.

Respectfully submitted,
A. B.
Executrix.

[Here follows oath. See Form 03.]

48. Reasons of Opposition to an Extension (By Individuals).

In the matter of the application of A. B. for an extension of letters patent for improvements in mowing-machines, No. 12212, dated May 15, 1884.

To the Commissioner of Patents:
We wish to oppose the application above referred to, for the following reasons, viz.:

1. Applicant was not the original and first inventor of the improvement claimed by him in said letters patent, the same having been fully described in the English patent No. 27, of the year 1882.
2. If said alleged invention was ever made by applicant, which we deny, it is not useful.
3. Said invention is not valuable and important to the public.
4. Applicant has been adequately remunerated for his time, ingenuity, and expense in originating and perfecting his alleged invention.
5. Applicant has not used due diligence in introducing his alleged invention into actual use.
6. Applicant has assigned to other parties all interest in the extension; and the extension, if granted, would not be for his benefit.

7. The statement and account filed by applicant do not present a true statement of his receipts and expenditures.

Payment in forged bills is generally a nullity.<sup>1</sup> So also of counterfeit coin; but an agreement to sell goods and accept specific money is good, and payment of these coins is valid, even though they be counterfeit.<sup>2</sup> And the forged notes must be returned in a reasonable time, to throw the loss upon the debtor.<sup>3</sup> Payment to a bank of its own notes which are received and afterwards discovered to be forged is a good payment.<sup>4</sup> A forged check received as cash, and passed to the credit of a customer, is a good payment.<sup>5</sup> Payment in bills of an insolvent bank, where both parties were innocent, has been held no payment.<sup>6</sup> On the other hand, it has been held good payment.<sup>7</sup>

If a bill of exchange or promissory note be given to a creditor, and accepted as payment, it shall be a good payment.<sup>8</sup> But regularly a bill of exchange or note given to a creditor shall not be a discharge of the debt till payment of the bill, unless so accepted.<sup>9</sup> If a debtor gives his own promissory note, it is not payment, unless it is so expressly agreed,<sup>10</sup> and when so expressed it extinguishes the debt.<sup>11</sup> Whether there was such an agreement is a question for the jury.<sup>12</sup> And if payment be made in the note of a factor or agent employed to purchase goods, or intrusted with the money to be paid for them; if the note be received as payment it will be good in favor of the principal,<sup>13</sup> but not if received conditionally; and this is a question of fact for the jury.<sup>14</sup> A bill of exchange draws on a third person, and accepted, discharges the debt as to the drawer.<sup>15</sup> And in an action to recover the price of goods, payment by a bill not dishonored has been held as good defence.<sup>16</sup> Retaining a draft on a third party an unreasonable length of time will operate as payment if loss be occasioned thereby.<sup>17</sup> In the sale of a chattel, if a note of a third person be accepted for the price, it is good payment.<sup>18</sup> Not so, however, if the note be the promise of one of the partners in payment of a partnership debt.<sup>19</sup> had C. put it in his closet, and C. did so, and A. demanded his papers, which B. refused to deliver; and A. demanded back his money, and B. directed C. to give it to him, and C. did, it was held to be a payment of the mortgage.<sup>17</sup> Generally, there can be but little doubt as to acceptance and non-acceptance, and the question is one of fact for the jury to determine under the circumstances of each particular case. Of course, where notes or bank-bills are given in payment of the debt, the evidence that they were so given is to be the same as evidence of any other fact relating to payment.

PAYMENT INTO COURT is depositing a sum of money with the proper officer of the court by the defendant in a suit, for the benefit of the plaintiff and in answer to his claim.

In the absence of statutory provisions it may be made under a rule of court granted for that purpose, in which case notice of an intention to apply must, in general, have been previously given.

The effect is to divest the plaintiff of all right to withdraw the money except by leave of court,<sup>18</sup> and to admit conclusively every fact which the plaintiff would be obliged to prove in order to recover the money;<sup>19</sup> as, that the amount tendered is due,<sup>20</sup> for the cause laid in the complaint,<sup>21</sup> to the plaintiff in the character in which he sues,<sup>22</sup> the jurisdiction of the court;<sup>23</sup> that the contract was made<sup>24</sup> and broken as alleged,<sup>25</sup> but only in reference to the amount paid in,<sup>26</sup> and nothing beyond such facts.<sup>27</sup>

Generally, it relieves the defendant from the payment of costs until judgment is recovered for a sum larger than that paid in.<sup>28</sup>

THE EFFECT of payment is: 1. To discharge the obligation; and it may happen that one payment will discharge several obligations by means of a transfer of the evidences of obligation.<sup>29</sup> 2. Payment does not prevent a recovery when made under a mistake of fact. The general rule is, that mistake or ignorance of law furnishes no ground to reclaim money paid voluntarily under a claim of right.<sup>30</sup> But acts done under a mistake or ignorance of an essential fact are voidable and relievable. Laws of a foreign country are matters of fact,<sup>31</sup> and the several United States are foreign to each other in this respect. In Kentucky and Connecticut there is a power of recovery equally, in cases of mistake of law and of fact.<sup>32</sup> In Ohio it may be remedied in equity.<sup>33</sup> In New York a distinction is taken between ignorance of law and mistake of law, giving relief in the latter case.<sup>34</sup> In England money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back.<sup>35</sup> 3. Part payment of a note will have the effect of waiver of notice as to the whole sum. 4. Payment of a part of the debt will bar the application of the statute of limitations as to the residue,<sup>36</sup> even though made in goods and chattels.<sup>37</sup> But it must be shown conclusively that the payment was made as a part of the larger debt.<sup>38</sup>

A receipt is prima facie evidence of payment; but a receipt acknowledging the reception of ten dollars and acquitting and releasing from all obligations, would be a receipt for ten dollars only.<sup>39</sup> And a receipt is only prima facie evidence of payment.<sup>40</sup> And it may be shown that the particular sum stated in the receipt was not paid, and also that no payment has been made.<sup>41</sup>

Payment may be presumed by the jury in the absence of direct evidence; thus, possession by the debtor of a security after the day of payment, which security is usually given upon payment of the debt, is prima facie evidence of payment by the debtor.<sup>42</sup> If the acceptor produce a bill of exchange, such possession is prima facie evidence of payment.<sup>43</sup>

Payment is also conclusively presumed from lapse of time. After twenty years' non-demand, unexplained, the court will presume a payment without the aid of a jury.<sup>44</sup> Facts which destroy the reason of this rule may rebut the presumption.<sup>45</sup> And a jury may infer a payment from a shorter lapse of time, especially if there be attendant circumstances favoring the presumption.<sup>46</sup>

A presumption may arise from the course of dealing between the parties on the regular course of trade; thus, after two years it was presumed that a workman had been paid, as it was shown that the employer paid his workmen every Saturday night, and this man had been seen waiting among others.<sup>47</sup>

A receipt for the last year's or quarter's rent is prima facie evidence of the payment of all the rents previously due.<sup>48</sup> If the last installment on a bond is paid in due form, it is evidence that the others have been paid; if paid in a different form; that the parties are acting under a new agreement.<sup>49</sup>

Where receipts have been regularly given for the same amount, but for a sum that was smaller than was due by the agreement, it was held evidence of full payment.<sup>1</sup>

WHEN TO BE MADE. Payment must be made at the exact time agreed upon. Where payment is to be made at a future day, of course nothing can be demanded till the time of payment, and, if there be a condition precedent to the liability, not until the condition has been performed. And where goods had been sold "at six or nine months' credit" the debtor was allowed the option.<sup>2</sup> Where no time of payment is specified, the money is to be paid immediately on demand.<sup>3</sup> When payment is to be made at a certain time, it may be made at a different time if the plaintiff will accept.<sup>4</sup> The debtor cannot compel the creditor to receive payment before the debt is due.

WHERE TO BE MADE. Payment must be made at the place agreed upon, unless both the parties consent to a change. If no place of payment is mentioned, the payer must seek out the payee.<sup>5</sup> So, too, the creditor is entitled to call for payment of the whole of his claim at one time, unless the parties have stipulated for payment in parcels. Questions of payment by executors, administrators, and guardians are regulated by statute. As a general rule debts are to be paid first, then specific legacies. The personal property is made liable for the testator's debts, and after that is exhausted, the real estate.<sup>6</sup>

WHO MAY MAKE. Payment may be made by the primary debtor, and by other persons from whom the creditor has a right to demand it. An agent may make payment for his principal. An attorney may discharge the debt against his client.<sup>7</sup> One of any number of joint and several obligors, or one of several joint obligors, may discharge the debt.<sup>8</sup> Payment may be made by a third person, a stranger to the contract.

It may be stated generally, that any act done by any person in discharge of the debt, if accepted by the creditor, will operate as payment.

TO WHOM TO BE MADE. Payment is to be made to the creditor. But it may be made to an authorized agent. And if made in the ordinary course of business, without notice requiring the payment to be made to himself, it is binding upon the principal.<sup>9</sup> Payment to a third person by appointment of the principal, will be substantially payment to the principal.<sup>10</sup> Payment to the agent who made the contract with the payee (without prohibition) is payment to the principal.<sup>11</sup> But payment may be made to the principal after an authority given to an agent to receive.<sup>12</sup> Payment to a broker or factor who sells for a principal not named is good.<sup>13</sup> Payment to an agent when he is known to be such will be good if made upon the terms authorized,<sup>14</sup> if there be no notice not to pay him,<sup>15</sup> and even after notice, if the factor had a lien on the money when paid.<sup>16</sup> If the broker sell goods as his own, payment is good though the mode varies from that agreed on.<sup>17</sup>

Payment to an attorney is as effectual as payment to the principal himself.<sup>18</sup> The attorney of record may give a receipt and discharge the judgment<sup>19</sup> if made within one year.<sup>20</sup> Not so of an agent appointed by the attorney to collect the debt.<sup>21</sup> Payment by an officer to an attorney whose power had been revoked before he received the execution did not discharge the officer.<sup>22</sup> Payment to one of two copartners discharges the debt,<sup>23</sup> even after dissolution.<sup>24</sup> So payment to one of two joint creditors is good, though they are not partners.<sup>25</sup> Not payment by a banker to one of several joint depositors, without the assent of the others, was held a void payment.<sup>26</sup>

Payment to the wife of the creditor is not a discharge of the debt unless she is expressly or impliedly his agent.<sup>27</sup> An auctioneer employed to sell real estate has no authority to receive the purchase money by virtue of that appointment merely.<sup>28</sup> Usually the terms of the sale authorize him to receive the purchase money.<sup>29</sup> Payment was made to a person sitting in the creditor's counting-room, and apparently doing his business, and it was held good,<sup>30</sup> but payment to an apprentice so situated was held not to be good.<sup>31</sup> Generally, payment to the agent must be made in money to bind the principal.<sup>32</sup> Power to receive money does not authorize an agent to commute<sup>33</sup> nor submit to arbitration.<sup>34</sup>

An agent authorized to receive money cannot bind his principal by receiving goods,<sup>35</sup> or a note,<sup>36</sup> but a subsequent ratification would remedy any such departure from authority; and it is said that slight acts of acquiescence will be deemed ratification. Payment to one of several joint creditors of his part, will not alter the nature of the debt so as to enable the others to sue separately.<sup>37</sup> Payment to one of several executors is sufficient.<sup>38</sup> Payment to a trustee generally concludes the creditor pro credit in law.<sup>39</sup>

A PERSON is a man, woman, or child, considered as opposed to things, or distinct from them. A human being. A natural being. A man considered according to the position (private or official) which he holds in law, with all the rights to which the place he holds entitles him, and the duties which it imposes.<sup>3</sup> A corporation which is an artificial person.<sup>4</sup> The term "person," as is seen, is more extensive than man—including artificial beings, as corporations, as well as natural beings. But when the word "persons" is spoken of in legislative acts, natural persons will be intended, unless something appear in the context to show that it applies to artificial persons.<sup>5</sup> Natural persons are divided into males, or men, and females, or women. Men are capable of all kinds of engagements and functions, while women are restricted by the law, both civil and political. Persons are also divided into citizens and aliens, when viewed with regard to their political rights. When they are considered in relation to their civil rights, they are living or civilly dead. Persons are again divided into legitimate and illegitimate, when considered as to their rights by birth. When viewed in their domestic relations they are divided into parents and children; husbands and wives; guardians and wards; and masters and servants.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. See REAL PROPERTY.

PERSONAL PROPERTY is the right or interest which a man has in things personal. The right or interest less than a freehold which a man has in realty, or any right or interest which he has in things movable. Every tangible thing which is the subject of ownership not forming a part or parcel of real property. Personal property is to be distinguished from things personal. There may be, for example, a personal estate in realty, as chattels real; but the only property which a man can have in things personal must be a personal property. The essential idea of personal property is that of property in a thing movable or separable from the realty, or of perishability or possibility of brief duration of interest as compared with the owner's life in a thing real, without any action on the part of the real owner.<sup>6</sup>

A crop growing in the ground is personal property so far as not to be considered an interest in land under the statute of frauds.<sup>7</sup> It is a general principle in this country, that stock held in corporations is to be considered as personal property.<sup>8</sup> Title to personal property is acquired: 1. By original acquisition by occupancy; as, by capture in war, by finding a lost thing. 2. By original acquisition, by accession. 3. By original acquisition, by intellectual labor; as, copyrights and patents for inventions. 4. By transfer, which is by act of law, by forfeiture, by judgment, by insolvency, by intestacy. 5. By transfer by act of the party, by gift, by sale.<sup>9</sup>

PLEADINGS are the written statements of the parties, to an action, suit, or other judicial proceeding, by which the matter in controversy is brought to an issue, i. e., a single point, affirmed on one side and denied on the other. The written statements of the plaintiff's cause of action, and of the defendant's ground of defence.

IN CIVIL PRACTICE, pleadings are statements in a logical and legal form of the facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, or the defendant's ground of defence; it is the formal mode of alleging that on the record (this is in writing, whereby it is made a part of the record by filing, entering, or recording by the proper officer of the court) which constitutes the support or the defence of the party in evidence.<sup>10</sup> The object of pleading is to secure a clear and distinct statement of the claims of each party, so that the controverted points may be exactly known, examined, and decided, and the appropriate remedy or punishment administered.<sup>11</sup> Good pleading consists in good matter pleaded in good form, in apt time, and due order.<sup>12</sup> Good matter includes all facts and circumstances necessary to constitute the cause of complaint, or ground of defence, and no more. It does not include argument or matters of law. But some matters of fact need not be stated, though it be necessary to establish them as facts. Such are, among others:

1. Facts of which the courts take notice by virtue of their being courts; as, the time of accession of the head or ruler of the government;<sup>13</sup> time and place of convening the legislature or of Congress, public statutes, and the facts they ascertain, including ecclesiastical, civil, and marine laws; but not private or foreign laws; common law rights, duties, and general customs; the days of the week; public holidays, etc.; political divisions; the meaning of English words and terms of art in ordinary acceptation; their own course of proceedings; and that of courts of general jurisdiction.

2. Facts which the law presumes: as, the innocence of a party; illegality of an act, etc.

3. Matters which the other party should plead, as being more within his knowledge.

4. Mere matters of evidence of facts.

5. Unnecessary matter: as, a second breach of condition, where one is sufficient; or intent to defraud, where the facts alleged constitute fraud.

6. Irrelevant matter. Such matter may be rejected without injury to the pleading, if wholly foreign to the cause, or repugnant; but in many cases matter must be proved as stated, if stated.

7. The matter stated must be true and susceptible of proof; but legal fictions when allowable may be stated as facts.

The pleadings should be according to the established forms. This rule is, however, one merely of caution, as many radical changes have been made in the various States in the law of pleading. Still, reference to and some regard for old forms will be found quite profitable. In general, facts should be stated logically, in their natural order, with certainty, clearly and distinctly. So that, the party who is to answer, the court and jury, who is to try the cause, may readily understand what is meant, with precision, and with brevity. The facts stated must not be impossible or repugnant, nor ambiguous or doubtful in meaning, nor argumentative, nor by way of recital, and should be stated according to their legal effect and operation. As to the time of pleading, see GENERAL STATUTES.

The order of pleading different matters is of importance as affecting the defendant, who may oppose the plaintiff's suit in various ways. The order is as follows:

1. To the jurisdiction of the court.
2. To the disability, etc., of the person; 1. Of the plaintiff; 2. Of the defendant.
3. To the plaintiff's complaint, correct declaration, or petition (in other words to the plaintiff's cause of action as it appears in his first pleading).

4. To the writ (or summons, etc.) 1. To the form of the writ, first matter, apparent on the face of it. Second matter not appearing on the writ. 2. To the action of the writ.

5. To the action itself in bar.

This is the natural order of pleading, because each subsequent plea admits that there is no foundation for the former. An exception exists where matter is pleaded which has arisen or come to the plaintiff's knowledge since the last continuance, or since the last stage of the suit, and where the subject-matter is one over which the court has no jurisdiction, a failure to plead such new matter cannot confer jurisdiction.

Whatever may be the names given, rules made by courts, or methods prescribed by the legislature, or pursued by the parties, court, or jury, the end of pleading is still the same, namely, the production of one or more points in issue, where a single fact is affirmed by one party and denied by the other. See GENERAL STATUTES, title CIVIL PRACTICE.

IN CRIMINAL PRACTICE the rules of pleading are the same as in civil practice; there is, however, less liberty of amendment of indictments and informations.

The order of the defendant's pleading is as follows:

1. To the jurisdiction.
2. In abatement.
3. Special pleas in bar, as, former acquittal, former conviction, pardon, etc.
4. The general issue. See GENERAL STATUTES, title CRIMINAL PRACTICE.

IN EQUITY PRACTICE pleadings consist in formal written allegations or statements of the respective parties on the record to maintain the suit, or to defeat it, of which, when contested in matters of fact they propose to offer proofs, and in matters of law to offer arguments to the court. The substantial object of pleading is the same, but the forms and rules of pleading are very different in law and in equity. See EQUITY, ante, and GENERAL STATUTES, title PRACTICE.

AIR is not a subject of property; it belongs equally to all men, being indispensable to their existence. But no man has a right to use the air over another man's land in such a manner as to be injurious to him. And to poison or materially change the air, to the annoyance of the public, is a nuisance.<sup>7</sup> An easement of light and air coming over the land of another cannot be acquired by prescription in the United States,<sup>8</sup> though the rule is otherwise in England.<sup>9</sup>

ALLUVION is that gradual and imperceptible increase of the earth on a shore or bank of a river, by the force of water, as the current or waves (alluvion differs from avulsion in this, the latter is sudden and perceptible). Such increase is so gradual that no one can judge how much is added at each moment of time.<sup>7</sup> The proprietor of the bank, increased by the alluvion, is entitled to the addition, this being regarded as the equivalent for the lost he may sustain for the breaking in or encroachment of the waters upon his land.<sup>6</sup> The increase is to be divided among riparian proprietors by the following rule: Measure the whole extent of their ancient line on the river, and ascertain how many feet each proprietor owned on this line; divide the newly-formed river line in equal parts, and appropriate to each proprietor as many of these parts as he owned feet on the old line, and then draw lines from the points at which the proprietors respectively bounded on the old to the points thus determined as the points of division on the newly-formed shore. In applying this rule allowance must be made for the projections and indentations on the old line.<sup>6</sup> When the increase is instantaneous, it belongs to the State, upon the ground that it was a part of the bed of the river of which it is proprietor.<sup>6</sup> Sea-weed which is thrown upon the beach, partaking of the nature of alluvion, belongs to the owner of the beach.<sup>6</sup> But sea-weed below low-water mark, on the bed of a navigable river, belongs to the public.<sup>4</sup>

APPURTENANCES. See CONVEYANCES.

AREAS are enclosed yards or openings in houses; also, open places adjoining to the house.<sup>4</sup>

AVULSION, or the tearing away or removal of a considerable quantity of soil from the land of one man, and its deposit upon or annexation to the land of another, suddenly and by the perceptible action of the water,<sup>7</sup> does not deprive the first owner of the property thus torn away or removed.<sup>8</sup>

BENCHES. See WASTE, below.

BETTERMENTS are improvements of a higher character than mere repairs,<sup>3</sup> and also denote additional value which the property acquires from some public improvement, as laying out, widening, etc., streets, etc.

BOUNDARIES are those separations, natural or artificial, which mark the confines or line of two contiguous estates,<sup>1</sup> and those objects placed or existing at the angles of the boundary lines. Boundaries are frequently denoted by monuments fixed at the angles; in such case the connecting lines are always presumed to be straight, unless described to be otherwise.<sup>1</sup>

Artificial boundaries are those erected by man; the ownership in case of such boundaries must of course turn mainly upon circumstances peculiar to each case,<sup>2</sup> generally extending to the centre.<sup>1</sup> A tree standing directly on the line is the joint property of both proprietors;<sup>2</sup> otherwise, where it only stands so near that the roots penetrate.<sup>2</sup> Land bounded on a highway extends to the centre, though a private street,<sup>3</sup> unless the description excludes the highway.<sup>3</sup> See COURSES; LINES and CORNERS; MONUMENTS; below.

Natural boundaries are natural objects remaining where they were placed by nature. A river or stream is a natural boundary, and the centre of the stream is the line.<sup>3</sup>

The order of marshaling boundaries is as follows:

1. The highest regard is had to natural boundaries.
2. To lines actually run and corners marked at the time of the grant.
3. If the lines and courses of an adjoining tract are called for, the lines will be extended, if they are sufficiently established, and no other departure from the deed is required, preference being given to marked lines.
4. To courses and distances.<sup>4</sup>

Parol evidence is often admissible to identify and ascertain the locality of monuments called for by a description<sup>5</sup> and where the description is ambiguous the parties may be shown.<sup>6</sup> Common reputation may be admitted to identify monuments, especially if of a public or questionable nature.<sup>6</sup>

to support the action or prosecution.* Generally, the person having the right of possession to land entered upon by another, or kept from him unlawfully by a tenant holding over, may enter and take possession, using as much force as may be necessary for that purpose; provided, that in so doing he commits no act amounting to a breach of the peace, or leading directly thereto.* See ESTATES AT SUFFERANCE, below.

DOORS. See WASTE, below.

DOVEHOUSE. See WASTE, below.

DRAINAGE through another man's land can only be had under legislative authority, or where the right is granted or exists by prescription,* or by consent of the owner.

DRIPPING water from one house upon another can only be allowed where the owner has acquired the right by grant or prescription; and no one has a right to construct his house so as to let the water drip over his neighbor's land.*

EASEMENTS are rights in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such ownership, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with the general property of such owner.* Easements are as various as the exigencies of domestic convenience or the purposes to which buildings or lands may be applied.

The following easements or rights attach to land as incidents or appurtenances, viz.:

1. Pasture in other land.
2. Fishing in other waters.
3. Taking game on other land.
4. Taking wood, minerals, or other produce of the soil, from other land.
5. Receiving air, light, or heat from or over other land.
6. Receiving or discharging water over, or having support to buildings from, other land.
7. Going on other land to clear a mill-stream, or repair its banks.
8. To draw water from a spring there, or do some other act not involving ownership.
9. Carrying on an offensive trade.*
10. Burying in a church or a particular vault.*

Some of these are affirmative or positive; that is, authorizing the commission of acts on the lands of another actually injurious to it; as, a right of way; or negative, being only consequently injurious; as, forbidding the owner from building to the obstruction of light to the dormant (or existing) tenement.*

All easements must originate in a grant of the property, or an agreement, express or implied, of the owner of the servient (or subordinate) tenement. The evidence of their existence, by the common law, may be by proof of the agreement itself, or by prescription requiring actual and uninterrupted enjoyment immemorially, or for upwards of twenty years, to the extent of the easement claimed, from which a grant is implied. A negative easement does not admit of prescription; use therefore is not essential to its existence.*

Easements are extinguished: 1. By release. 2. By merger, when the two tenements or parcels of land are united under the same title and to the same person. 3. By necessity, as by a license to the servient owner to do some act inconsistent with its existence. 4. By cessation of enjoyment, when acquired by prescription, the non-user being evidence of a release, when the abandonment has continued at least as long as the user from which the right arose. In some cases a shorter time will suffice.*

EMINENT DOMAIN is a power to take private property for public use,* which exists in all cases where public convenience or the public demands its exercise.* This right may be exercised upon both corporeal property, as land, or incorporeal, as franchises.*

Eminent domain is distinguished from public domain, which is property owned absolutely by the State in the same manner as an individual holds his property.*

ENTRY. See DETAINER, above.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION is a right which a mortgagee of property, or other person having an interest in it, has of redeeming it after it has been forfeited at law by the non-payment of the money secured when due, with interest and costs. Any person who is interested in the mortgaged property, or any part of it, or who has a legal estate therein, or a legal or equitable lien thereon, provided he comes in as privy (a partaker, person interested, etc.) in estate with the mortgagor, may exercise the right. These include heirs, devisees, executors, administrators, and assignees of the mortgagor;* subsequent incumbrancers;* judgment creditors;* tenants for years;* a jointress;* dower and tenant by curtesy;* a jointress;* one having an easement.*

ESCROW. See CONVEYANCE, ante.

ESTATES may be limited in duration to the life of one's self—to the life of another, or others.*

— IN COMMON are those held in joint possession by two or more persons at the same time by several and distinct titles.*

joyed,<sup>4</sup> and in order to effect a suspension of rent there must be something equivalent to an expulsion from the premises, and not a mere trespass or disturbance in the enjoyment of them.<sup>5</sup> It is not necessary, however, in order to produce the eviction of a tenant, that there should be actual physical expulsion, for a landlord may do many acts tending to diminish the enjoyment of the premises, short of an expulsion, which will amount to an eviction in law; as, if he erects a nuisance so near the leased premises as to deprive the tenant of the use of them, or if he otherwise intentionally disturbs the tenant's enjoyment to such an extent as to injure his business or destroy the comfort of himself and family, it will amount to an eviction.<sup>6</sup>

FREE SIMPLE. See CONVEYANCES, ante.
TAIL. See CONVEYANCES, ante.

FENCES are, in general, regulated by local laws. Generally, fences or boundaries are to be built on the line; the expense, when made according to law, is borne equally between the parties. A partition fence is presumed to be the common property of both owners of the land.<sup>7</sup> When built upon the land of one of them it is his; but if it were built equally upon the land of both, at their joint expense, each would be the owner in severalty of the part standing on his own land.<sup>8</sup> See WASTE, below.

FIELDS. See WASTE, below.

FIREWOOD. See WASTE, below.

FISH-POND. See WASTE, below.

FIXTURES are personal chattels affixed to real estate, which may be severed and removed by the party who has affixed them, or by his personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold. Questions frequently arise as to whether given appendages to a house or land are to be considered part of the real estate, or whether they are to be treated as personal property. The latter are movable, the former are not. The annexation may be actual or constructive. 1. By actual annexation is understood every mode by which a chattel can be joined or united to the freehold. The article must not be merely laid upon the ground; it must be fastened, fixed, or set into the land, or into some such erection as is unquestionably a part of the realty; otherwise it is in no sense a fixture.<sup>9</sup> Locks, iron stoves set in brick work, posts, and window blinds, afford examples of actual annexation.<sup>10</sup> Some things, however, have been held to be parcel of the realty which are not annexed or fastened to it; for example, deeds or chattels which relate to the title of the inheritance, and go to the heir.<sup>11</sup> But loose, movable machinery, used in prosecuting any business, to which the freehold is adapted, cannot be considered part of the real estate, nor in any way appurtenant to it; so deer in a park, fish in a pond, and doves in a dove-house, go to the heir, and not to the executor, being, like keys and heirlooms, constructively annexed to the inheritance.<sup>12</sup>

The general rule is, that fixtures once annexed to the freehold become a part of the realty. But to this rule there are exceptions; as, 1. Where there is a manifest intention to use the fixture in some employment distinct from that of the occupant of the real estate; 2. Where it has been annexed merely for the purpose of carrying on a trade;<sup>13</sup> for the fact that it was put up for such a purpose indicates an intention that the thing should not become a part of the freehold.<sup>14</sup> But if there is a clear intention that the thing should be permanently annexed to the realty, its being used for purposes of trade would not, perhaps, being the case within one of the exceptions.<sup>15</sup>

Where the question arises between an executor and the heir-at-law, the rule is strict that whatever belongs to the estate to which the fixture appertains will go to the heir; but if the ancestor manifested an intention (which may be inferred from circumstances) that the things affixed should be considered personally, they will be so treated, and will go to the executor.<sup>16</sup>

As between a vendor and vendee the same strictness applies as between an executor and an heir-at-law; for all fixtures which belong to the premises at the time of the sale, or which have been erected by the vendor, whether for purposes of trade or manufacture, or not, as potash kettles for manufacturing ashes, and the like, pass to the vendee of the land, unless they have been expressly reserved by the terms of the contract.<sup>17</sup>

The same rule applies as between mortgagor and mortgagee.

As between devisee and executor, things permanently annexed to the realty at the time of the testator's death pass to the devisee—his right to fixtures being similar to that of a vendee.<sup>18</sup>

As between a landlord and his tenant the strictness of the ancient rule has been much relaxed. The rule is understood to be that a tenant, whether for life, for years, or at will, may sever at any time before the expiration of his tenancy, and carry away all such fixtures of a chattel nature as he has himself erected upon the demised premises for the purposes of ornament, domestic convenience, or to carry on trade, provided, always, that the removal can be effected without material injury to the freehold.<sup>19</sup>

A tenant for years may remove fixtures at any time before he gives up the possession of the premises, although it may be after his term has expired, and he is holding over; but tenants for life, or at will, having uncertain interests in the land, have, after the determination of their estates, not occasioned by their own fault, a reasonable time within which to remove their fixtures.<sup>a</sup>

If a tenant quits possession of land without removing such fixtures as he is entitled to, the property in them immediately vests in the landlord; and though they are subsequently severed, the tenant's right to them does not revive. If, therefore, a tenant desires to have any such things upon the premises at the expiration of his term, for the purpose of valuing them to an incoming tenant, or the like, he should take care to get the landlord's consent, otherwise he will lose his property in them entirely.<sup>b</sup> The rights of parties with respect to particular articles are sometimes regulated by local customs, especially as between outgoing and incoming tenants; and in cases of this kind it becomes a proper criterion by which to determine the character of the article, and whether it is a fixture or not. GROUND-RENT is a rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's land. It is a freehold estate created by deed, and perpetual by the terms of its creation; and no mere lapse of time without demand raises, at common law, a presumption that the estate has been released.<sup>d</sup> See CONVEYANCES, ante.

GROWING CROPS. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, ante.

HEDGES. See WASTE, below.

HERILOOMS include charters, deeds, and other evidences of the title of land, together with the box or chest in which they are contained, the keys of a house, and the fish in a fish pond.<sup>e</sup>

HOUSES, if divided into several apartments having no communication with each other, are considered as so many distinct and separate houses.<sup>b</sup> In a conveyance or lease of a house, the enclosed space immediately surrounding it and contained within some enclosure, and the garden, will pass, even without the words "with the appurtenances" being added.<sup>c</sup> In a conveyance or lease of a house with the appurtenances, no more will pass, although other lands have been occupied with the house.<sup>d</sup> See WASTE, below.

IMPROVEMENTS, as between the rightful owner and an occupant who in good faith has put them on, belong to the rightful owner of the land, without compensation for the increased value. This is the common law,<sup>e</sup> though the rule is otherwise in equity,<sup>f</sup> and by the statutes of some States.

INCUMBRANCES are any rights, or interests in land, which may be held by third persons, which diminishes the value of, but not the right to pass such land.<sup>g</sup> Of these are public highways;<sup>h</sup> a private right of way;<sup>i</sup> a claim of dower;<sup>j</sup> though inchoate only;<sup>k</sup> an outstanding mortgage;<sup>l</sup> other than one which the covenantee is bound to pay;<sup>m</sup> a liability to tax laws.<sup>n</sup> But does not include a condition on which an estate is held.<sup>o</sup> The vendor of real estate is bound to disclose incumbrances, and to deliver to the purchaser the instruments by which they were created or on which the defects arise; and the neglect of this is to be considered fraud.<sup>p</sup> The interest on incumbrances is to be kept down by the tenant for life,<sup>q</sup> to the extent of rents accruing;<sup>r</sup> and for any sum paid beyond that he becomes a creditor of the estate.<sup>s</sup> When the whole incumbrance is removed by a single payment, the share of the tenant for life is the present worth of the annuity, for the life of the tenant, equal to the annual amount of the interest which he would be obliged to pay.<sup>t</sup> This rule applies to estates held in dower;<sup>u</sup> in curtesy;<sup>v</sup> in tail only in special cases.<sup>w</sup>

INNINGS or lands may be gained from the sea by drainage.<sup>x</sup>

IRRIGATION. The owner of land over which there is a current stream is, as such, the proprietor of the current.<sup>y</sup> A riparian proprietor may avail himself of the river for irrigation, provided such river be not materially lessened, and the water absorbed be imperceptible or trifling.<sup>z</sup> See SPRINGS, below.

ISLANDS when they first arise in the open sea belong to the first occupant; but when they are newly formed so near the shore as to be within the boundary of some State, they belong to that State. Islands which arise in rivers, when in the middle of the stream, belong in equal parts to the riparian owners. When they arise merely on one side, they belong to the riparian owner up to the middle of the stream.* See COASTS, above; WATER, below.

JOINTURE. See ESTATES, ante.

KEYS of a house are considered real estate, and descend to the heir with the inheritance.*

LAND includes any ground, soil, earth, mineral, or liquids, and all natural and artificial growth. It may be wild, cultivated, arable, or otherwise. It includes in general all buildings erected upon it,* with some exceptions; if a stranger voluntarily erects buildings on another's land, they will belong to the owner of the land, and will become a part of it,* though under peculiar circumstances they would be considered as personal property.* It includes mines, except mines of gold and silver; and a grant of public lands will include these also.*

LEASE. See title CONVEYANCES, ante.

LICENSE may be by conveyance duly acknowledged,* by parol,* or by implication from circumstances, as opening a door in response to a knock.* It is distinguished from an easement, which implies an interest in the land to be affected, and is also distinguished from a lease, which is a right to take the profits of land. It may be and often is coupled with a conveyance of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits.* It may be granted by the owner, or, in many cases, by a servant.* An executory license may be revoked at the pleasure of the grantor.* In general, a mere license may be revoked at the grantor's pleasure,* although the licensee has incurred expense.* Not so a license closely coupled with a transfer of title to personal property.* An executed license, which destroys an easement enjoyed by the licensee in the licensee's land, cannot be revoked.* The effect of an executed license, though revoked, is to relieve or excuse the licensee from liability for acts done properly in the pursuance thereof, and their consequences.* The licensee's improvements on lands are without compensation, in equity.*

LIENS. See that title, ante.

LIME. See WASTE, below.

LINE. When a line is mentioned in a deed as ending at a particular monument it is to be extended in the direction called for without regard to distance until it reach the boundary,* and a marked line is to be adhered to although it depart from the course.* Where a number of persons settle simultaneously, or at short intervals, the same neighborhood, and their tracts, if extended in certain directions, would overlap each other, the settlers sometimes by agreement determine upon dividing lines, which are called consentible lines. These lines, when fairly agreed upon, have been sanctioned by the courts; and such agreements are conclusive upon all persons claiming under the parties to them, with notice, but not upon bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, actual or constructive.* Lines fixed by compact between nations are binding on their citizens and subjects.*

MEADOWS. See WASTE, below.

METALS. See WASTE, below.

MILLS conveyed with their appurtenances, even without the land, carries the whole right of water enjoyed by the grantor, as necessary to its use, and as a necessary incident;* and a devise of a mill carries the land used with it and the right to use the water.* A mill includes not only the building in which the business is carried on, but includes the site, the dam, and other things annexed to the freehold necessary for its beneficial enjoyment.* As to manufacturing machinery, see FIXTURES, above, and title LANDLORD AND TENANT, "Crops," "Emblements," "Fixtures," etc. See WASTE, below.

MINES of gold and silver and the precious metals belong to state or sovereign,* but pass by a grant of land, without exception or reservation, from the state or government.* Mines of other minerals belong to the owner of the soil, and pass by a conveyance thereof, unless separated;* but the owner may convey his mines by a separate and distinct conveyance so as to create one freehold in the soil and another in the mines.* In case of a separate ownership the owner of the mine must support the superincumbent soil,<sup>6</sup> and ancient buildings and other erections.<sup>7</sup> Opening new mines by a tenant is waste, unless the lease includes them; but if mines be already open it is not waste to work them even to exhaustion.<sup>8</sup>

The occupant of public lands who holds them for agricultural purposes, holds them subject to the right of any person to dig for gold.<sup>1</sup> See WASTE, below.

MONEY often has the character of realty attached to it, so far as being heritable and the like, by equity, where it is the proceeds of real estate wrongfully converted into money, or which ought to be converted into real estate.<sup>2</sup>

MONUMENTS or permanent landmarks, established or erected to indicate and mark boundaries of lands, may be either natural or artificial objects: as, rivers, known streams, springs, or marked trees,<sup>3</sup> and even posts set up at the corners,<sup>4</sup> and in a clearing.<sup>5</sup> When monuments are established they must govern, although neither courses, nor distances, nor computed contents correspond.<sup>6</sup> See BOUNDARIES, above.

PARTITION FENCE. See FENCES, above.

PLAYS, or map of land, on which are marked the courses and distances of the different lines, may be given in evidence in ascertaining the position of the land and what is included, and may serve to settle the figure of a survey and correct mistakes.<sup>7</sup>

PARK. See WASTE, below.

PARLOR. See WASTE, below.

Pews in churches are sometimes real and sometimes personal estate, depending, generally, upon local statutes; though, in the absence of statute law, it would seem they were interests in real estate and parake of its character.<sup>8</sup>

POSSESSOR applies to the right and enjoyment of a person having a term who is said to be possessed, but not seized.<sup>9</sup>

POSSIBILITIES are merely contingent interests in real or personal property.<sup>10</sup> It is uncertain whether the contingency may happen or not; whether the interest will be realized or not.

PRESCRIPTION is a mode of acquiring title to incorporeal hereditaments,<sup>11</sup> by immemorial or long continued enjoyment. The length of time necessary to raise a strict prescription was limited to sixty years.<sup>12</sup> Grants of incorporeal hereditaments are presumed upon proof of enjoyment of the requisite character for a period of years equal to that fixed by statute as the period of limitation of real actions.<sup>13</sup> Prescription properly applies only to incorporeal hereditaments,<sup>14</sup> such as easements of water, light and air, way, etc.<sup>15</sup> A class of franchises.<sup>16</sup>

QUARRIES. When a farm is let with an open quarry the tenant may, when not restrained by his contract, take out the stone; but he has no right to open new quarries. See MINES, above.

RELICTIO is an increase of land by the retreat or recession of a sea, lake, or river. Lands left dry by the sudden or sensible recession of the sea, or of a river which flows and refloes with the tide, belong to the sovereign or State, unless the property in the land so relicted has been granted to individuals; in other words, the right of property in the soil is not changed by the change of the water. But where the recession is gradual and insensible, or where it takes place in fresh water rivers, the soil of which belongs to riparian proprietors, the lands so relicted belong to the proprietors of the estates which are thereby increased.<sup>17</sup> But this reliction must be from the sea in its usual state, for if it should inundate the land and then recede, this would be no reliction.<sup>18</sup> If a navigable lake recede gradually and insensibly, the derelict land belongs to the adjacent riparian proprietors; but if the recession be sudden and sensible, such land belongs to the State.<sup>19</sup> See AVULSION; ALLUVION, above.

REMAINDERS are remnants of estates in real property expectant on a particular estate created together with it at the same and one time. A contingent remainder depends on a contingency which may or may not happen; a vested remainder is one by which the present interest passes to the property, though to be enjoyed in future.<sup>20</sup>

REPAIRS. What a party is bound to do, when the law imposes upon him the duty to make necessary repairs, does not appear to be very accurately defined. Natural and unavoidable decay in the buildings must always be allowed for, when there is no express covenant to the contrary; and, it seems, the lessee will satisfy the obligation the law imposes on him by delivering the premises at the expiration of his tenancy in a habitable state. Questions in relation to repairs most frequently arise between the landlord and tenant. When there is no express agreement between the parties, the tenant is always required to do the necessary repairs.<sup>6</sup> He is, therefore, bound to put in windows or doors that have been broken by him, so as to prevent any decay of the premises; but he is not required to put a new roof on an old, worn-out house.<sup>6</sup> An express covenant on the part of the lessee to keep a house in repair, and leave it in as good a plight as it was when the lease was made, does not bind him to repair the ordinary and natural decay.<sup>6</sup> As to the time when the repairs are to be made, it would seem reasonable that when the lessor is bound to make them, he should have the right to enter and make them, when a delay until after the expiration of the lease would be injurious to the estate; but when no such damage exists, the landlord should have no right to enter without the consent of the tenant.<sup>7</sup> When a house has been destroyed by accidental fire, neither the tenant nor the landlord is bound to rebuild, unless obliged by some agreement so to do.<sup>8</sup>

REVERSION is the residue of an estate left in the grantor to commence after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him; the return of the land to the grantor and his heirs after the grant or lease is over.<sup>9</sup>

ROOMS. See WASTE, below.

SEASHORE is that space of land on the border of the sea between high and low water-mark.<sup>1</sup> At common law the seashore belongs to the State or sovereign.<sup>1</sup> The rights of fishery and navigation remain unimpaired by the grant of lands covered by navigable water.<sup>2</sup> The power of the States is absolute, except so far as it is controlled by the federal constitution,<sup>3</sup> and they may regulate the use of their shores and the fisheries thereon, provided such regulations do not interfere with the acts of Congress.<sup>4</sup> The public right of fishing includes strimping and gathering all shell-fish, or other fish, whose natural habitat is between high and low water-mark.<sup>5</sup>

SEA-WEED when cast upon the land belongs to the owner of the land adjoining the seashore, upon the ground that it increases gradually, it being useful as a manure or in protection of the ground, and being some compensation for the encroachment of the sea upon the land.<sup>6</sup>

SEEDS which have been sown in the earth immediately become a part of the land in which they have been sown.<sup>7</sup>

SHELTERS. See WASTE, below.

SHOALS. See COASTS, above.

SHORE includes only such land on the side of a sea, lake, or river, where the water ebbs and flows, as lies between high and low-water mark.

SOIL. See WASTE, below.

SPRINGS are the exclusive property of the owner of the soil. When another has an easement or right to draw water from such a spring, acquired by grant or prescription, and the spring fails, the easement ceases; but if it returns the right revives. The owner of land on which there is a natural spring has a right to use it for domestic and culinary purposes, and for watering his cattle; and he may make an aqueduct to another part of his land, and use all the water required to keep the aqueduct in order, or to keep the water pure.<sup>9</sup> He may also use it for irrigation, provided the volume be not materially decreased.<sup>9</sup> The owner of the spring cannot lawfully turn the current, or give it a new direction; he is bound to let it enter the inferior estate on the same level it has been accustomed to, and at the same place, for every man is entitled to a stream of water flowing through his land without diminution or alteration.<sup>10</sup> The owner of the superior inheritance, or land on which there is a spring, has no right to deprive the owner of the estate below him; nor can he detain the water unreasonably.<sup>11</sup> freehold; but as soon as they are cut down they are personal property. Trees belong to the owner of the land where they grow; but if the roots go out of one man's land into that of another, or the branches spread over the adjoining estates, such roots or branches may be cut off by the owner of the land into which they thus grow.<sup>1</sup> When the roots grow into the adjoining land, the owner of such land may lawfully claim a right to hold the tree in common with the owner of the land where it was planted; but if the branches only overshadow the adjoining land, and the roots do not enter it, the tree wholly belongs to the owner of the estate where the roots grow.<sup>2</sup> When the tree grows directly on the boundary-line, so that the line passes through it, it is the property of both owners, whether it be marked as a boundary or not.<sup>3</sup> See WASTE, below.

VEST. An estate is vested in possession when there exists a right of present enjoyment; and an estate is vested in interest when there is a present fixed right of future enjoyment.<sup>4</sup>

VESTED REMAINDERS are estates by which the present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in the future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person, after a particular estate is extinguished.<sup>5</sup>

VIEW. Every one is entitled to a view from his premises; but he thereby acquires no right over the property of his neighbor. The erection of buildings which obstruct a man's view, therefore, is not unlawful, and such buildings cannot be considered a nuisance.<sup>6</sup>

WARRANTY. See title CONVEYANCES, "Covenants," ante.

WAINSCOT. See WASTE, below.

WARREN. See WASTE, below.

WASTE is any spoil or destruction done, or permitted, to lands, houses, or other real property to the prejudice of the owner or his heirs. It may be voluntary or permissive.

Permissive waste to buildings consists in omitting to keep them in tenantable repair; suffering the timbers to become rotten by neglecting to cover the house; or suffering the walls to fall into decay for want of plastering; or the foundation to be injured by neglecting to turn off a stream of water, and the like. At common law, the mere suffering of a house to remain unroofed, if it was so at the commencement of the lease, would not be waste; but a tenant assumed the responsibility of any other part of the house thereby becoming ruinous or decayed; and so although no injury or destruction of a house by lightning, tempest, or the public enemy, would not be waste, yet to suffer it to remain ruined would be.<sup>7</sup> Permissive.

waste in houses, as a general rule, is now only punishable when a tenant is bound to repair, either expressly or by implication.<sup>8</sup>

Voluntary waste is committed upon cultivated fields, orchards, gardens, meadows, and the like, whenever a tenant uses them contrary to the usual course of husbandry, or in such a manner as to exhaust the soil by negligent or improper tillage.<sup>9</sup> It is, therefore, waste to convert arable land into woodland, or the contrary.<sup>10</sup> Cutting down fruit trees, although planted by the tenant himself, is waste.<sup>11</sup> So if an outgoing tenant plough up strawberry beds which he has bought of a former tenant when he entered.<sup>12</sup> When lands are leased on which there are open mines of metal, or coal, or pits of gravel, lime, clay, brick earth, and the like, the tenant may dig out of such mines or pits, but he cannot open any new mines or pits without being guilty of waste; any carrying away of the soil is also waste.<sup>13</sup>

Voluntary waste is committed in houses by pulling them down, or by removing wainscots, floors, benches, furnaces, windows, doors, shelves, and other things once fixed to the freehold, although they have been erected by the lessee himself, unless they were mere fixtures; and this kind of waste may take place not only in pulling down houses, or parts of them, but also in changing their forms, as if a tenant pull down a house and erect a new one in its place, whether it be larger or smaller than the first,<sup>14</sup> or convert a parlor into a stable, or a grist-mill into a fuelling-mill,<sup>15</sup> or turn two rooms into one.<sup>16</sup> The building of a house where there was none before, by the strict rules of the common law, was said to be waste;<sup>17</sup> and taking it down after it was built was waste also.<sup>18</sup> Voluntary waste may be committed upon timber; and in those countries where timber is scarce and valuable, the law is strict in this respect. The law of waste accommodates itself to the varying wants and conditions of different countries; that will not, for instance, be waste in an entire woodland country which would be so in a cleared one. The extent to which wood and timber on such land may be cut without waste, is a question of fact for a jury to determine under the direction of the court.<sup>19</sup> A tenant may always cut trees for the repair of houses, fences, hedges, stiles, gates, and the like;<sup>20</sup> and for making and repairing all instruments of husbandry; as plows, carts, harrows, rakes, forks, etc.;<sup>21</sup> and he may, when unrestrained by the terms of the lease, cut timber for firewood, if there be not enough dead timber for such purposes;<sup>22</sup> but where, under such circumstances, he is entitled to cut down timber, he is restrained, nevertheless, from cutting ornamental trees, or those planted for shelter; or to exclude objects from sight." A tenant of a dove-house, warren, park, fish-pond, or the like, would also be guilty of waste, if he took away animals therefrom to such an extent as not to leave as large a stock of them as he found when he came in." Windfalls are the property of the landlord; for whatever is severed by inevitable events, as, by a tempest, or by a trespasser, and by wrong, belongs to him who has the inheritance.<sup>2</sup>

In general, a tenant is answerable for waste although it is committed by a stranger, for he is the custodian of the property, and must take his remedy over.<sup>3</sup> But he is not liable when the damage is caused by lightning, tempest, or a public enemy.<sup>4</sup> He is also liable at common law for all damages done by fire, accidental or otherwise, upon the premises, unless this be excepted in the lease, though accidental fires will not, through statutory enactment throughout the States, render him liable. The protection afforded by these statutes extends only to a case of accidental fire—that is, to one which cannot be traced to any particular or wilful cause—and stands opposed to the negligence of either servants or masters; and therefore an action still lies against a person upon whose premises a fire commences through the negligence of himself or his servants, and is productive of injury to his neighbor.<sup>5</sup>

The redress for injuries of the foregoing character are either preventive or corrective, which may forfeit the tenant's further occupancy of the premises, as well as subject him to exemplary damages for all injury done.

WATER. A pool of water, or a stream or water-course, is considered as part of the land; hence a pool of twenty acres would pass by the grant of twenty acres of land without mentioning the water.<sup>6</sup> A mere grant of water passes only a fishery;<sup>7</sup> but the owner of land over which water flows may grant the land, reserving the use of all the water to himself, or may grant the use of all or a portion of the water, reserving the fee of the land to himself.<sup>8</sup>

Water-courses in a legal sense are comprehended under the general name of land; so that a grant of land conveys to the grantee not only fields, meadows, and the like, but also all the rivers and streams which naturally pass over the surface of the land.<sup>9</sup> Those who own land bounding upon a water-course are generally known as riparian proprietors.<sup>10</sup> By the rules of the common law all proprietors of lands have precisely the same rights to waters flowing through their domains, and one can never be permitted so to use the stream as to injure or annoy those situated on the course of it, either above or below him. They have no property in the water itself, but a simple right to use it; accordingly while each successive riparian proprietor is entitled to the reasonable use of the water for the supply of his natural wants, and for the operation of mills and machinery, he has no right to flow the water back upon the proprietor above;<sup>11</sup> nor to discharge it so as to flood the proprietor below;<sup>12</sup> nor to divert the water,<sup>13</sup> even for the purpose of irrigation, unless it be returned without essential diminution; nor to obstruct or detain it, except for some reasonable purpose, such as to obtain a head of water for a mill, and to be again discharged, so as to allow all on the same stream a fair participation;<sup>14</sup> nor to corrupt the quality of the water by unwholesome or discoloring impurities.<sup>15</sup> But while such are the rights of the riparian proprietors when unaffected by contract, these rights are subject to endless modifications on the part of those entitled by their enjoyment, either by grant,<sup>16</sup> or by reservation,<sup>17</sup> or by a license,<sup>18</sup> or by agreement,<sup>19</sup> or by twenty years adverse enjoyment, from which a grant or contract will be implied,<sup>20</sup> in such a way as to adapt the uses of the water to the complex and multiplying demands and improvements of civilization.

Wherever a water-course divides two estates each estate extends to the thread or central line of the stream; but the riparian owner of neither can lawfully carry off any part of the water without the consent of the other opposite, each riparian proprietor being entitled not to half or any other proportion of the water, but to the whole bulk of the stream undivided and indivisible.<sup>21</sup> Where an island is on one side of a river, so as to give the riparian owner of that side only one-fourth of the water, he has no right to place obstructions at the head of the island to cause one-half of the stream to descend on his side of the river, but the owner opposite is entitled to the natural flow of the remaining three-fourths.<sup>22</sup>

a water-course are general proprietors. By the law all proprietors of the same rights to waters or domains, and one can use the stream as to situated on the course of flow him. They have no right to divert it to the injury of the person on whose land it comes to the surface as a spring.<sup>1</sup>

WHARFS, the several States being owners of the soil of tide waters within their respective territories, may by law authorize and regulate the erection of wharfs thereon, until the general government shall have legislated upon the subject.<sup>2</sup> In the navigable fresh-water rivers the riparian proprietors, being the owners of the bed of the stream, may wharf out to the channel, subject only to the condition that they do not materially interrupt the navigation.

RECORDS. See AUTHORITY, above.

RECEIPTS. See RECEIPTS; CONTRACTS; CONVEYANCES; RELEASES.

A RECEIPT is a written acknowledgment of payment of money or delivery of chattels.

AN ACQUITANCE is a discharge or release from a debt. The writing which is evidence of the discharge. A receipt in full, which bars a further demand. An agreement in writing to discharge a party from an engagement to pay a sum of money. It differs from a release in this, that the latter is under seal, while an acquittance is not.<sup>3</sup> But though not under seal it has nearly the same effect as a release.<sup>4</sup>

A receipt is often useful as evidence of facts collateral to those stated in it. It proves the payment, and whatever inference may be legally drawn from the fact of the payment described, will be supported by the receipt. Thus, receipts for rent for a given time have been held prima facie evidence of the payment of all rent previously accrued.<sup>5</sup> And they have been admitted on trial of a writ of right, as showing acts of ownership on the part of him who gave them.<sup>6</sup> A receipt given by A. to B. for the price of a horse, afterwards levied on as the property of A., but claimed by B., was once admitted as evidence of ownership against the attaching creditor.<sup>7</sup> A receipt "in full of all accounts," the amount being less than that called for by the accounts of the party giving it, was held in his favor evidence of a mutual settlement of accounts on both sides, and a payment of the balance ascertained to be due after setting off one account against the other.<sup>8</sup> A receipt given by an attorney for securities he was to collect and account for has been held presumptive evidence of the genuineness and justness of the securities.<sup>9</sup> And when a general receipt is given by an attorney for an evidence of debt then due, it will be presumed he received it in his capacity as attorney for collection; and it is incumbent on him to show he received it for some other purpose if he would avoid an action for neglect in not collecting.<sup>10</sup>

A receipt is executed by the person to whom the delivery or payment is made, and may be used as evidence against him on the general principle which allows the admission or declaration of a party to be given in evidence against himself. As an instrument of evidence, the receipt of one person is, in general, inoperative against another, although often useful as a voucher in the private settlement of accounts. And receipts of public officers are sometimes admissible pro se.<sup>11</sup> It is essential to a receipt that it acknowledge the payment or delivery referred to.<sup>12</sup> Also, the receipt must, from the nature of the case, be in writing, and must be delivered to the debtor; for a memorandum of payment made by the creditor in his own books is no receipt.<sup>13</sup>

The mere acknowledgment of payment made is not treated in law as binding or conclusive in any high degree. So far as a simple acknowledgment of payment on delivery is concerned, it is presumptive evidence only,<sup>14</sup> and is, in general, open to explanation,<sup>15</sup> being an exception to the general rule that parol evidence cannot be admitted to contradict or vary a written instrument.<sup>16</sup> Thus, a party may always show, in explanation of a receipt limited to such acknowledgment, the actual circumstances under which it was made,<sup>17</sup> that it was obtained by fraud,<sup>18</sup> or given under a mistake,<sup>19</sup> or that, in point of fact, no money was actually paid as stated in it.<sup>20</sup>

IN CONTRACTS, ETC.

A receipt may embody a contract, and, in this case, it is not open to the explanation or contradiction permitted in the case of a simple receipt.<sup>21</sup> The fact that it embodies an agreement, brings it within the rule that all matters resting in parol are merged in the writing.<sup>22</sup> Thus, a receipt which contains a clause amounting to an agreement as to the application to be made of the money paid—as when it is advanced on account of future transactions—is not open to parol evidence inconsistent with it.<sup>23</sup> A bill of parcels with prices affixed, rendered by a seller of goods to a purchaser, with a receipt of payment executed at the foot, was held in one case to amount to a contract of sale of the goods, and therefore, not open to parol explanation, while, in another case, a similar bill was held merely a receipt, the bill at the head being deemed only a memorandum to show to what the receipt applied.<sup>1</sup> A bill of lading which usually contains words of receipt stating the character, quantity, and condition of the goods as delivered to the carrier, is the subject of a somewhat peculiar rule. It is held that so far as the receipt is concerned, it may be explained by parol.<sup>2</sup> But as respects the agreement to carry and deliver, the bill is a contract, to be construed like all other contracts, according to the legal import of its terms, and cannot be varied by parol.<sup>3</sup>

Where the payment is made in some particular currency or medium, as doubtful bank-bills, a promissory note of another person, etc., clauses are often inserted in receipts specifying the condition in which such mode of payment is accepted. The general rule is that negotiable paper given in payment is presumed to have been accepted on the condition that it shall not work a discharge of the demand unless the paper shall ultimately produce satisfaction; and if an intent to accept it absolutely does not affirmatively appear, the creditor is entitled, in case the paper turned out to him is dishonored, to return it and claim to be paid anew.<sup>4</sup> If the receipt is silent on that subject, it is open to explanation, and the creditor may rebut it by proof that the payment admitted was in fact made by a note, bill, check, bank-note, afterwards ascertained to be counterfeit, or notes of a bank in fact insolvent, though not known to be so to the parties, etc.<sup>5</sup> But if the agreement of the parties is specified in the receipt, the clause which contains it will bind the parties, as being in the nature of a contract.<sup>6</sup> A receipt for a note taken in payment of an account will not, in general, constitute a defense to an action on the account, unless it appears by proof that the creditor agreed to receive the note as payment, and take the risk of its being paid.<sup>7</sup>

IN DEEDS.

The effect to be given to a receipt for the consideration-money, so frequently inserted in a deed of real property, has been the subject of numerous and conflicting adjudications. The general principle settled by weight of authority is, that for the purpose of sustaining the conveyance as against the vendor and his privies, the receipt is conclusive; they are estopped to deny that a consideration was paid sufficient to sustain the conveyance.<sup>8</sup> But in a subsequent action for the purchase money, or upon any collateral demand, e. g., in an action to recover a debt which was in fact paid by the conveyance, or in an action for damages for breach of covenant in the deed, and the like, the grantor may show that the consideration was not, in fact, paid—that an additional consideration to that mentioned was agreed for, etc.<sup>9</sup> And when the deed is attacked for fraud, or is impeached by creditors as voluntary, and therefore void, or when the object is to show the conveyance illegal, the receipt may be explained or contradicted.<sup>7</sup>

IN FULL, ETC.

When a receipt acknowledges payment "in full" of a specified debt, or "in full of all accounts" or "of all demands" the instrument is of much higher and more conclusive character. It does not, indeed, like a release, operate upon the demand itself, extinguishing it by any force or virtue in the receipt, but it is evidence of a compromise and mutual settlement of the rights of the parties. The law infers from such acknowledgment an adjustment of the amount due after consideration of the claims of each party, and the payment of the specified sum as a final satisfaction.<sup>10</sup> This compromise, thus shown by the receipt, will often operate to extinguish a demand, although the creditor may be able to show he did not receive all that he justly ought.<sup>11</sup> If the rights of a party are doubtful, are honestly contested, and time is given to allow him to satisfy himself, a receipt in full, though given for less than his just rights, will not be set aside. Thus, in general, a receipt in full is conclusive when given with a knowledge of the circumstances, and when the party giving it cannot complain of any misapprehension as to the compromise he was making, or of any fraud.<sup>12</sup> But receipts of this character are not wholly exempt from explanation: fraud or misrepresentation may be proved, and so may such mistake as enters into and vitiates the compromise of the demand admitted.<sup>13</sup> The evidence in explanation must be clear and full, and addressed to the point that there was not in fact an intended and valid compromise of the demand. For if the compromise was not binding, the receipt in full will not aid it. The receipt only operates as evidence of a compromise which extinguished the claim.<sup>14</sup>

 A RELEASE is the giving up or abandoning a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists, or the right is to be exercised or enforced. An express release is one directly made in terms by deed or other suitable means. An implied release is one which arises from acts of the creditor or owner, without any express agreement.
 A release by operation of law is one, which though not expressly made, the law presumes in consequence of some act of the releasor; for instance, when one of several joint obligors is expressly released, all others are also released by operation of law,<sup>f</sup> unless otherwise provided by statute.
 Releases may either give up, discharge, or abandon a right of action, or convey a man's interest or right to another who has possession is conclusive; they are a consideration was paid in conveyance.<sup>1</sup> But in a purchase money, or demand, e. g., in an action which was in fact paid by the action for damages for a deed, and the like, so that the consideration—that an additional consideration was agreed for, the deed is attacked for and by creditors as voluntary, or when the object is illegal, the receipt contradicted.<sup>2</sup> acknowledges payment "in debt, or "in full of all accounts" the instrument is more conclusive character. Like a release, operate upon distinguishing it by any force of law, but it is evidence of mutual settlement of the debt. The law infers from an adjustment of the consideration of the claims the payment of the specified amount.<sup>3</sup> This compromise, receipt, will often operate to discharge the creditor, although he did not receive all that the rights of a party are fully contested, and time is satisfied himself, a receipt for less than his just rights.

Thus, in general, a release when given with a compromise, and when the complain of any misapprehension he was making, at receipts of this character from explanation; fraud may be proved, and so a release enters into and vitiates the demand admitted.<sup>4</sup> The release must be clear and full, and point that there was not and valid compromise of the compromise was not a full will not aid it. The receipt as evidence of a compromised the claim.<sup>5</sup> of it or some estate in the same.<sup>1</sup> In the former class, a mere right is surrendered; in the other, not only a right is given up, but an interest in the estate is conveyed and becomes vested in the releasee.

In general, the words of a release will be restrained by the particular occasion of giving it.<sup>1</sup>

In releasing an interest in real estate the words generally used in the conveyance are: "Remised, released, and forever quit-claimed."<sup>2</sup> See CONVEYANCES; QUIT-CLAIM DEEDS; ante.

RELEASE FORMS.

Release—Of all Claims, Demands, etc.
I, A. B. of —, in the county of —, and State of —, for and in consideration of the sum of — dollars, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do hereby release and forever discharge C. D. (of —, in, etc.), his heirs, executors, and administrators, of and from all actions, causes of action, suits, controversies, claims, and demands whatsoever for and by reason of any matter, cause, or thing, from the beginning of the world to this — day of —.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand the day and year last above written.

Executed in presence of A. B.
Release—Mutual of all Demands, etc.
This release, made this — day of — between A. B. (of —), of the first part, and C. D. (of —), of the second part, witnesseth:

That the said parties have this day cancelled and delivered up to each other certain covenants, bonds, notes, and other written agreements, upon which the one party claimed to have demands upon the other party. And the said claims and instruments, so cancelled and delivered up, being supposed and intended to be all the claims and evidences of claims by either of said parties upon the other. And in consideration thereof, each of said parties, the said A. B. and C. D., does hereby, for himself and his legal representatives, release and forever discharge the other of and from all actions, causes of action, suits, controversies, claims, and demands whatsoever, so that neither of them shall have any claim on the other, directly or indirectly, on any agreement, contract, or supposed liability, or thing undertaken, done, or omitted to be done, from the beginning of the world to the — day of —.

In witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto set their hands the day and year last above written.

Executed in presence of C. D.

SALES. See ASSIGNMENT; CONTRACTS; CONVEYANCES; PERSONAL PROPERTY; REAL PROPERTY; ETC.

A SALE is an agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the seller, gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the buyer or purchaser, who, on his part, agrees to pay such price.<sup>1</sup> This contract differs from a barter or exchange in this: That in the latter, the price or consideration, instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation.<sup>2</sup> It differs from accord and satisfaction, because in that contract the thing is given for the purpose of quieting a claim, and not for a price. An onerous gift, when the burden it imposes is the payment of a sum of money, is, when accepted, in the nature of a sale. When partition is made between two or more joint owners of a chattel, it would seem the contract is in the nature of a barter.<sup>3</sup> An absolute sale is one made and completed without any condition whatever. A conditional sale is one which depends for its validity upon the fulfillment of some condition.<sup>4</sup> A forced sale is one made without the consent of the owner of the property, by some officer appointed by law, as by a marshal, constable, or sheriff, in obedience to a mandate of a competent tribunal. This sale has the effect to transfer all the rights the owner had in the property, but it does not, like a voluntary sale of personal property, guarantee a title to the thing sold; it merely transfers the rights of the person as whose property it has been seized. This kind of sale is sometimes called a judicial sale.

A voluntary sale is one made freely, without constraint by the owner of the thing sold. This is the common case of sales and to this class the general rules of the law of sales apply. A private sale is one made voluntarily, and not by auction. A public sale is one made at auction to the highest bidder. Auction sales are sometimes voluntary, as, when the owner chooses to sell his goods in this way, and then as between the seller and buyer the usual rules relating to sales apply; or they are involuntary or forced when the same rules do not apply.

A sale of a chattel is an exchange thereof for money.<sup>5</sup> And proof of an exchange will not support an averment of a sale of goods.<sup>6</sup> For a sale to be valid in law, there must be parties, a consideration, and a thing to be sold. All persons may be parties to a sale, unless they labor under the disabilities and restraints already mentioned.<sup>7</sup> Consideration also has been considered. The existence of the thing to be by a view of all the circumstances of the particular case.<sup>7</sup>

In sales at auction there are generally conditions of sale; and where these are distinctly made known to the buyer, they are of course binding on him, and the auctioneer or the owner of the goods is bound on his part.<sup>8</sup>

Any misstatement, made fraudulently, and capable of having any effect on the sale, will avoid it. Nor will the conditions of sale be binding against a purchaser, if so framed as to give the seller advantages which the buyer could not readily apprehend or understand without legal knowledge or advice; for the buyer is discharged from a purchase made under "catching conditions."<sup>9</sup>

MORTGAGE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.<sup>10</sup>

DELIVERY. While, as between the parties, the property passes by a sale without delivery, it is not valid, in general, as against a third party without notice, without delivery. For if the same thing be sold by the vendor to two parties, by conveyances equally valid, he who first gets possession will hold it.<sup>11</sup> In general where there is a completed sale, and no change of possession, this retention of possession by the vendor is a badge of fraud, and will avoid the sale in favor of a party who subsequently acquires title to the property in good faith, and without knowledge of the sale.<sup>12</sup> The delivery may be symbolical, or a part for the whole;<sup>13</sup> and a delivery of the key, the property being locked up, is so far a delivery of the goods that it will support an action of trespass against a subsequent purchaser, who gets possession of them.<sup>14</sup> Marking timber on a wharf, or goods in a warehouse, operates as a delivery; goods bought at a shop, weighed or measured, and separated, and left by the owner until called for, are sufficiently delivered. So selecting and marking sheep, then in possession of one who was requested by the vendee to retain possession of them for him, is a sufficient delivery.<sup>15</sup> But if goods are sent, even under a contract of sale, to which purpose they were not and could not be applied, the sender does not lose his property in them by delivery, but may recover them back.<sup>16</sup> And if property be awarded to one by arbitrators, at a certain price, the tender of the price does not pass the property, unless the other party accept the price.<sup>17</sup>

If no time be appointed for delivery, or for payment, the acts must be done within a reasonable time; and if neither party does any thing within that period, the contract is deemed dissolved.<sup>18</sup> If the goods are to be delivered when requested, the purchaser may sue without proving a request, provided the seller has incapacitated himself from delivering them, as by a resale or the like,<sup>19</sup> but, in general, a request must be made before the seller can be sued for non-delivery.<sup>20</sup> And if the vendee, either by the express terms of the contract or from its nature, is to designate the manner or place of delivery, he must do this before he can maintain his action.<sup>21</sup> If a day be fixed either for delivery or payment, the seller has the whole of it; and if any one of several days, the seller has the whole of all of them. If on a certain day, at a certain place, then it must be done at a convenient time before sunset, because the presence of the other party is necessary, and the law does not require him to be there through the whole twenty-four hours.<sup>22</sup> The seller is to keep the thing sold until the time of delivery, with ordinary care, and is liable for the want of that care, or of good faith; but if he does so keep it, he is not liable for its loss, unless it perish through a defect against which he has warranted. If the parties are distant from each other, the seller must follow the directions of the buyer as to the way of sending the thing sold to him, and then a loss in the transportation will fall on the buyer,<sup>23</sup> unless attributable to the negligence of the seller; if the seller disregards such orders, the loss in transportation falls on him, though it does not happen through his neglect. If the directions are general, as "by a carrier," without naming any one, usual and proper precautions must be taken, and will protect the seller. The vendor, in delivering goods to a carrier, must exercise due care and diligence, so as to provide the consignee with a remedy over against the carrier.<sup>24</sup> And it is a part of his duty to give such notice of the sending them by ship or otherwise, as will enable the buyer to insure or take other precautions.<sup>25</sup> If the contract be to deliver the thing ordered at the residence or place of business of the buyer, the seller is liable, although such delivery becomes impossible, unless it becomes so through the act of the buyer.<sup>26</sup> If the seller refuse to deliver it at the time and place agreed on, and it perish afterwards without his fault, he is liable for it. But if he be ready, and the vendor wrongfully refuse or neglect to receive it, the seller is not liable, unless the thing perishes through his gross and wanton negligence. And if the vendee unreasonably neglect or refuse to comply with conditions precedent to delivery, or to receive the goods on delivery, the seller may, after due delay and proper precautions, unreasonably neglect or refuse to onditions precedent to delivery, the goods on delivery, the seller delay and proper precautions, resell them, and hold the buyer responsible for any deficit in the price.<sup>1</sup> It is common and generally advisable to sell them at auction; but this is not necessary.<sup>2</sup> If the seller sell on credit, the goods are to be delivered without payment; but if the buyer becomes insolvent before the time of delivery, the seller may demand security, and refuse to deliver the goods without it.<sup>3</sup> If no place of delivery be specially expressed in the contract, the store, shop, farm or warehouse where the article is sold, made, grown, or deposited, is in general the place of delivery.<sup>4</sup> If, however, a particular place be appointed by the contract, the goods must be delivered there before an action will lie for their price.<sup>5</sup> If expressly deliverable to the vendee, but no place is named, it may be delivered to him where he is, or at his house, or place of business. Except so far as this option of the seller is controlled by the nature of the article. For if the purchaser brought a load of cotton to be worked in his mill, it cannot, under an agreement of delivery, be delivered at his distant dwelling-house, nor should a load of hay for his stable, or cooking-range for his kitchen, be delivered at his store or wharf.

The vendee is bound to receive and pay for the thing sold at the time and place expressed or implied in the contract of sale, and to pay all reasonable charges for keeping it after sale and before delivery.<sup>6</sup> And if he refuse so to take and pay for the goods sold, he will be liable to an action for the price, or in a special action for damages, unless he can show incapacity to contract, or sufficient error, duress, or fraud.

EFFECT. Upon a completed sale the property in the thing sold passes to the purchaser.<sup>7</sup>
 If it be sold for cash and the price be not paid, or if it be sold on a credit, but by the terms of the bargain is to remain in the hands of the vendor, the vendor has a lien on it for the price;<sup>8</sup> and only payment or tender gives the vendee a right to possession. And if it be sold on credit, and the buyer by the terms of the bargain has the right of immediate possession without payment, but the thing sold actually remains in the possession of the seller until the credit has expired, and the price is still unpaid, the seller then has a lien for the price.<sup>9</sup> If it be sold on credit, and there is no agreement in respect to the delivery or possession of the goods, the purchaser at once has a complete right not only of property but of possession.<sup>10</sup> subject only to defeasance under the law of stoppage in transitu. If the property passes, though not the right of possession, and the thing sold perish, the loss falls on the purchaser.<sup>11</sup> The vendor's lien is destroyed by a delivery of the goods, or by a delivery of a part, without an intention to separate it from the rest, but with an intention thereby to give possession of the whole. Mere delivery of a part will not, however, divest the vendor of his lien, as to the whole, if anything remains to be done by the vendor to the part undelivered.<sup>12</sup> If sold for cash, and the money be not paid within a reasonable time, the vendor may treat the sale as null.<sup>13</sup>

The property does not pass absolutely unless the sale be completed; and it is not completed until the happening of any event expressly provided for, or so long as anything remains to be done to the thing sold, to put it into a condition for sale, or to identify it, or discriminate it from other things.<sup>14</sup> Nor is the sale completed while anything remains to be done to determine its quantity, if the price depends on this; unless this is to be done by the buyer alone.<sup>15</sup> But where the thing to be done by the vendor is but trifling, or is but a mathematical computation, this rule will not apply.<sup>16</sup> If the parties intended that the sale should be complete before the article sold is weighed or measured, the property will pass before this is done.<sup>17</sup> And even if earnest, or a part of the price be paid, the sale is not complete under these circumstances, and if it finally fail, the money paid may be recovered back.<sup>18</sup>

PARTIES.

As a general rule, all persons sui juris, may be either buyers or sellers. There is a class of persons who are incapable of purchasing, except sub modo, as infants; and another class, who, in consequence of their peculiar relation with regard to the owner of the thing sold, are totally incapable of becoming purchasers, while that relation exists; these are trustees, guardians, assignees of insolvents, and generally all persons who, by their connection with the owner, or by being employed concerning his affairs, have acquired a knowledge of his property, as attorneys, conveyancers, and the like.

PRICE. The price to be paid must be certain, or so referred to a definite standard that it may be made certain; as, what another man has given; or what another man shall say should be the price. But if this third party refuse to fix the price, the sale is void.<sup>22</sup> A sale may be made of an article for what it is worth, for that can be ascertained by experts.<sup>23</sup> The thing sold must be specific and capable of certain identification. There must be an agreement of mind as to this; and if there be an honest error as to price, or as to the substantial and essential qualities of the thing sold, the sale may be treated as null.<sup>24</sup>

To constitute a sale there must be a price agreed upon; but upon the maxim id certum est quod reddi certum potest, a sale may be valid, although it is agreed that the price for the thing sold shall be determined by a third person.<sup>25</sup> The price must be an actual or serious price, with an intention on the part of the seller to require its payment. If, therefore, one should sell a thing to another, and by the same agreement he should release the buyer from the payment, this would not be a sale, but a gift, because in that case the buyer never agreed to pay any price, the same agreement by which the title to the thing is passed to him discharging him from all obligations to pay for it. As to the quantum of the price, that is altogether immaterial, unless there has been fraud in the transaction. The price must be certain or determined, but it is sufficiently certain, if, as before observed, it be left to the determination of a third person;<sup>26</sup> and an agreement to pay for goods what they are worth is sufficiently certain.<sup>27</sup>

The price must consist in a sum of money which the buyer agrees to pay to the seller; for, if paid in any other way, the contract would be an exchange or barter, and not a sale.

The consent of the contracting parties, which is of the essence of a sale, consists in the agreement of the will of the seller to sell a certain thing to the buyer for a certain price, and the will of the buyer to purchase the same thing for the same price. Care must be taken to distinguish between an agreement to enter into a future contract, and a present actual agreement to make a sale. The consent is certain when the parties expressly declare it. This in some cases it is requisite should be in writing.<sup>28</sup> This writing may be a letter.<sup>29</sup> When a party, by his act, approves of what has been done, as knowingly using goods which have been left at his use by another, who intended to sell them, a will by that act confirm the sale.

In order to pass the property by a sale, there must be an express or implied agreement that the title shall pass. An agreement for the sale of goods is prima facie a bargain and sale of those goods; but this arises merely from the presumed intention of the parties, and if it appear that the parties have agreed, not that there shall be a mutual credit by which the property is to pass from the seller to the buyer, and the buyer is bound to pay the price to the seller, but that the exchange of the money for the goods shall be made on the spot, no property is transferred, for it is not the intention of the parties to transfer any.<sup>30</sup> But, on the contrary, when the making of part payment, or naming a day for payment, clearly shows an intention in the parties that they should have some time to complete the sale by payment and delivery, and that they should in the meantime be trustees for each other, the one of the property in the chattel, and the other in the price.

As a general rule, when a bargain is made for the purchase of goods, and nothing is said about payment and delivery, the property passes immediately, so as to cast upon the purchaser all future risk, if nothing remains to be done to the goods, although he cannot take them away without paying the price.<sup>31</sup>

SUBJECT-MATTER OF SALE. There must be a thing which is the object of the sale; for if the thing sold at the time of the sale had ceased to exist, it is clear that there could be no sale; if, for example, you and I being in Philadelphia, I sell you my house or horse in Chicago, and at the time of the sale it be burned down or dead, it is manifest there was no sale, as there was not a thing to be sold.<sup>32</sup> It is evident, too, that no sale can be made of things not in commerce; as the air, the water of the sea, and the like. When there has been a mistake made as to the article sold, there is no sale; as, for example, where a broker who is the agent of both parties, sells an article, and delivers to the seller a sold note describing the article sold, as "St. Petersburg clean hemp," and bought note to the buyer as "Riza Rline Hemp," there is no sale.<sup>33</sup>

There must be an agreement as to the specific goods which form the basis of the contract of sale; in other words, to make a perfect sale, the parties must have agreed, the one to part with the title to a specific article, and the other to acquire such title. An agreement to sell one hundred bushels of wheat, to be measured out of a heap, does not change the property until the wheat has been measured.<sup>34</sup>

TRANSITU, STOPPAGE IN.

WHAT THE RIGHT OF STOPPAGE IS, AND WHO HAS IT. Stoppage in transitu is the right which resides in the vendor of goods upon credit, to recall them, upon discovering the insolvency of the vendee, before the goods have reached him, or any third party has acquired bona fide rights in them.<sup>35</sup> This right his peril. In any case where there was this warranty of title, a title subsequently acquired by the vendor would inure to the benefit of the vendee.<sup>1</sup> If the seller is in possession, but if the possession is of such a kind as not to denote or imply title in him, there will be no warranty of title. A general warranty does not cover defects plain and obvious to the purchaser, or of which he has had cognizance: thus, if a horse be warranted perfect, and want a tail or an ear.<sup>2</sup> This rule must not be misunderstood. A man may warrant against a defect which is patent and obvious as well as against any other. And a general warranty that a horse was sound would be broken, if one eye was so badly injured, or so malformed as to be entirely useless, although this defect might have been noticed at the time of sale.<sup>3</sup> And if a defect is obvious, yet if the purchaser be misled as to the character or extent, a warranty is implied.<sup>4</sup>

If there be no express warranty, the common law, in general, implies none. Its rule is, unquestionably, caveat emptor—let the purchaser take care of his own interests. One important and universal exception is this: the rule never applies to cases of fraud, never proposes to protect a seller against his own fraud, nor to disarm a purchaser from a defence or remedy against a seller's fraud.<sup>5</sup> The common law does not oblige the seller to disclose all that he knows, which lessens the value of the property he would sell. He may be silent, leaving the purchaser to inquire and examine for himself, or to require a warranty. He may be silent, and be safe; but if he be more than silent, if by acts, and certainly if by words, he leads the buyer astray, inducing him to suppose that he buys with warranty, or otherwise preventing his examination or inquiry, this becomes a fraud, of which the law will take cognizance. The seller may let the buyer cheat himself ad idem, but must not actively assist him in cheating himself.<sup>6</sup> As mere silence implies no warranty, neither do remarks which should be construed as simple praise or commendation,<sup>7</sup> but any distinct assertion or affirmation of quality made by the owner during a negotiation. It is essential that a warranty, to be binding, be made during the negotiation; if made after the sale is completed, it is without consideration and void.<sup>8</sup> If, however, the vendor, in a negotiation between the parties a few days before the sale, offer to warrant the article, the warranty will be binding for the sale of a chattel, which it may be supposed was intended to cause the sale, and was operative in causing it, and will be regarded as implying or as constituting a warranty. If such affirmation were made in good faith it is still a warranty; and if made with a knowledge of its falsity, it is a warranty, and it is also a fraud. It is certain that the word warranty need not be used, nor any other of precisely the same meaning. It is enough if the words used import an undertaking on the part of the owner that the chattel is what it is represented to be, or an equivalent to such undertaking.<sup>9</sup> One exception to the rule of caveat emptor springs from the rule itself. For a requirement that the purchaser should "beware," or should take care to ascertain for himself the quality of the thing he buys, becomes utterly unreasonable under circumstances which make such care impossible. If, therefore, the seller alone possesses the requisite knowledge, or means of knowledge, and offers his goods for sale under circumstances which compel the purchaser to rely upon the judgment and honesty of the seller, without any examination on his own part as to the quality of the thing offered, the rule caveat emptor does not apply.<sup>10</sup>

If goods are sold by sample, there can be no examination of the goods, but there may be of the sample. There is, therefore, an implied warranty that the goods correspond to the sample.<sup>11</sup> If there be an express warranty, an examination of samples is no waiver of the warranty; nor is an inquiry or examination into the character or quality of the things sold; for a man has a right to protect himself by such inquiry, and also by a warranty.<sup>12</sup>

If a thing be ordered from a manufacturer for a special purpose, and it be supplied and sold for that purpose, there is an implied warranty that it is fit for that purpose.<sup>13</sup> If the thing is itself specifically selected and ordered, the purchaser takes upon himself the risk of its effecting its purpose. But where he orders a thing for a special purpose, or to do a specific consideration and void.* If, however, in a negotiation between the buyer and seller, the offer to warrant, the warranty will be binding on the seller, whether it may be stipulated to cause the sale, and was causing it, and will be regarded as a warranty. If such warranty was made in good faith it is still a warranty, and it is also a warranty if made with a knowledge of its falsity, and it is also a warranty if certain that the word warranty was used, nor any other of precisely similar meaning. It is enough if the words used are an undertaking on the part of the seller that the chattel is what it is represented to be, or equivalent to such undertaking. The rule of caveat emptor is not the rule itself. For a requirement the purchaser should "beware," or "take care to ascertain for himself the value of the thing he buys, becomes utterly unnecessary under circumstances which make such a requirement impossible. If, therefore, the seller discloses the requisite knowledge, or knowledge, and offers his goods for sale under circumstances which compel the purchaser to rely upon the judgment and honesty of the seller, without any examination on the part of the purchaser as to the quality of the thing sold, the rule caveat emptor does not apply.

When goods are sold by sample, there can be no warranty of the goods, but there may be a warranty of the quality. There is, therefore, an implied warranty that the goods correspond to the sample. If there be an express warranty, an express warranty is no waiver of the implied warranty, nor is an inquiry or examination into the quality of the things sold; for a right to protect himself by such an inquiry is also a warranty.

It may be ordered from a manufacturer for a particular purpose, and it be supplied and used for that purpose, there is an implied warranty that it is fit for that purpose. If the goods are specifically selected and ordered, the buyer takes upon himself the risk of its fitness for the purpose. But where he orders a particular purpose, or to do a specific work, then he puts this risk upon the person who is to supply the thing.

No warranty can be implied from circumstances, if there be an express refusal to warrant. And where the contract of sale is in writing, and contains no warranty, there parol evidence is not admissible to add a warranty. And if there be a warranty in writing, it cannot be enlarged or varied by parol evidence.

The rule as to unsoundness is, that if at the time of sale the animal has any disease which either actually does diminish the natural soundness of the animal, so as to make him less capable of work of any description, or which, in its ordinary progress, will diminish the usefulness of the animal; or if he has, either from disease or accident, undergone any alteration of structure that either actually does at the time, or in its ordinary effect will diminish his natural usefulness, such animal is unsound. So, if a horse has at the time of sale the seeds of disease, which in its ordinary progress will diminish his natural usefulness, this is unsoundness. But a temporary and curable injury, although it existed at the time of sale, if it does not injure the animal for present service, is not an unsoundness. It seems to be immaterial whether the injury be permanent or temporary, curable or incurable, if it render the animal less fit for present usefulness and convenience. The question of soundness or unsoundness is particularly for the jury; and the court will not set aside a verdict on account of a preponderance of the testimony the other way.

Any property may be sold "with all faults." This is an emphatic exclusion of all warranty. But it gives the seller no right to commit a fraud, nor will it prevent the sale from being avoided on proof of fraud. And it is fraud if the seller conceal existing faults, and draws the attention of the buyer away so as to prevent his discovering them, or places the property in such circumstances that discovery is impossible, or made very difficult.

In general, there is no implied warranty whatever arising from judicial sales.

RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF PARTY UPON BREACH OF WARRANTY.

When warranty has been broken, the buyer may either bring his action at once, founding it upon the breach of warranty, without returning the goods; but his continued possession of the goods, and their actual value, will be considered in estimating the damages. Or, he may return the goods forthwith; and if he does so without unreasonable delay, this will be a rescission of the sale, and he may sue for the price if he has paid it, or defend against an action for the price, if one be brought by the seller. But if he has sold a part before his discovery of the breach, and therefore cannot return them, he may still rescind the sale, and will be liable for the market value of what he does not return. And if the vendor refuse to receive the goods back, when tendered, the purchaser may sell them; and if he sells them for what they are reasonably worth, and within a reasonable time, he may recover of the vendor the loss upon the resale, with the expense of keeping the goods and selling them.

TIME.

Generally in computing time one day is included and one excluded;<sup>1</sup> excluding the day on which an act is done, when the computation is to be made from such an act.<sup>2</sup> Including it,<sup>3</sup> except where the exclusion will prevent forfeiture.<sup>4</sup> Time from and after a given day excludes that day.<sup>5</sup>

In pleading, time is a point in or space of duration at or during which some fact is alleged to be committed.

In criminal actions both the day and year of the commission of the offence must appear; but there need not be an express averment if they can be collected from the whole statement.<sup>6</sup> The prosecutor may give evidence of an offence committed on any day which is previous to the making of the complaint or finding of the information or indictment;<sup>7</sup> but a day subsequent to the trial cannot be alleged.<sup>8</sup>

In personal actions all traversable affirmative facts should be laid as occurring on some day,<sup>9</sup> but no day need be alleged for the occurrence of negative matter.<sup>10</sup> A failure in this respect is, in general, aided after verdict.<sup>11</sup> Where the cause of action is a trespass of a permanent nature or constantly repeated, it should be laid as continuing. The day need not, in general, be the actual day of commission of the fact.<sup>12</sup> The exact time may become material and must then be correctly stated,<sup>13</sup> as, the time of execution of an executory written document.<sup>14</sup> The defence must follow the time laid in the plaintiff's complaint if the time is not material,<sup>15</sup> but need not when it becomes material,<sup>16</sup> or in pleading matter of discharge,<sup>17</sup> or a record.<sup>18</sup>

Generally he who has precedence in time has the advantage in right; not that time, considered in itself, can make such a difference, but because the whole power over a thing being secured to one person, bars all others from obtaining a title to it afterwards.<sup>19</sup>

DATE. Written instruments generally take effect from the day of their date, but the actual date of their execution may be shown, though different from that which the instrument bears. But it is said that the date is not of the essence of a contract, but is essential to the identity of the writing by which it is to be proved.<sup>20</sup> And if the written date is an impossible one, the time of delivery must be shown.<sup>21</sup> In general it is sufficient to insert the day, month, and year; though in process from courts the hour is sometimes required in addition.

Also, a banking day, extending from 9 or 10 A. M., to 3 or 4 P. M. A solar day is that portion of time during which the sun is shining or which the features of a man can be reasonably discerned.<sup>25</sup> Generally, in legal signification, a day includes the time elapsing from one midnight to the succeeding one.<sup>26</sup>

LAPSE OF TIME often furnishes a presumption, stronger or weaker, according to the length of time which has passed, of the truth of certain facts, such as the legal title to rights, payment of or release from debts.

MONTH. See BILLS, BONDS AND NOTES; TIME OF, ETC., p. 166.

SUNDAY. The time within which an act is to be done must be computed by excluding the first day and including the last; if the last day be Sunday it must be excluded. Where the year expires on Sunday, such Sunday is not Working day, extending from 9 or 10 A. M. to 4 P. M. That space of time during which the horizon of the earth, extends above which precedes its rising in its setting, during which, by its continuance of a man may be determined.

The time within which an act is to be performed is computed by excluding the last day, if the last day must be excluded. Where the act is to be done on Sunday, such Sunday is not excluded from the computation of the thirty days preceding the expiration of the year.<sup>6</sup>

THE WEEK commences immediately after twelve o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ends at twelve o'clock seven days of twenty-four hours each thereafter. The first day of the week is called Sunday; the second, Monday, etc.<sup>7</sup>

THE YEAR. The civil year differs from the astronomical, the latter being composed of three hundred and sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight seconds and a fraction, while the former consists sometimes of three hundred and sixty-five days, and at others (leap years) of three hundred and sixty-six days.

The year is divided into half year, which consists of one hundred and eighty-two days; and quarter of a year, which consists of ninety-one days.<sup>8</sup> It is further divided into twelve months.

The civil year commences immediately after twelve o'clock at night of the thirty-first day of December, that is, the first moment of the first day of January, and ends at midnight of the thirty-first day of December twelve months thereafter.<sup>9</sup>

Title. See CONVEYANCES.
Title Deeds. See CONVEYANCES.

TORTS OR WRONGS. See CONTRACTS.
A TORT is a private or civil wrong or injury. A wrong independent of contract.<sup>10</sup> The commission or omission of an act by one without right whereby another receives some injury, directly or indirectly, in person, property, or reputation.<sup>11</sup>

DISTINGUISHED FROM AGREEMENTS OR CONTRACTS. As recognized by the law for the enforcement of rights and redress of injuries, torts may be distinguished from contracts or agreements by these qualities: That parties jointly committing torts are severally liable without right of contribution from each other; that the death of either party destroys the right of action; that persons under personal disabilities to contract are liable for their torts; that attachment, arrest, and imprisonment are allowed on claims arising under contracts.<sup>12</sup> A tort, however, may grow out of, or make part of, or be coincident with, a contract, as in the familiar case of a fraudulent sale, or fraudulent recommendation of a third person; the wrong of fraud almost necessarily implies an accompanying contract.<sup>13</sup> In these cases the law often allows the party injured an election of remedies; that is, he may proceed against the other party either as a debtor or contractor, or as a wrong-doer.<sup>14</sup> Where personal property has been tortiously taken and turned into money or money's worth, the party injured may proceed upon the supposition of a contract implied by law in his favor. In such cases he is said to waive the tort.<sup>15</sup>

DISTINGUISHED FROM CRIMES. The same act may constitute a public wrong (crime), and a private wrong (tort), and, either at the same time or at different times, be the subject of a criminal prosecution and a private action for damages.<sup>16</sup>

In reference to the nature of the act, manual taking, interference, or removal is not necessary to constitute a tort. Any act of a party who has come rightfully into the possession of property in excess of or contrary to his authority over it, and which negatves or is inconsistent with the rights of the owner, constitutes a tort.<sup>17</sup>

ACTIONS FOR.
The liability to make reparation for an injury rests upon an original moral duty.<sup>18</sup> And an action on the case lies, in general, where one may sustain an injury by the misconduct or negligence of another for which the law has provided no other adequate remedy.<sup>19</sup> But to justify an action there must be a loss as well as a wrong.<sup>20</sup> But in a variety of cases, a wrong being proved, consequent damage will be presumed.<sup>21</sup>

In order to maintain an action the relation of cause and effect must be shown between the act and the injury; and the damage must not be remote or indirect,<sup>22</sup> although every person who does a wrong is responsible for all the mischievous consequences that may reasonably be expected under ordinary circumstances from such misconduct.<sup>23</sup> In general, courts can enforce only local obligations and redress injuries to local rights.<sup>24</sup> Hence the legality or illegality of any act may sometimes determine whether it is to be viewed as a tort. In general, if a party in the exercise of a legal right, more especially if conferred by express statute, does an injury to another's property, he is not liable for damages, unless caused by the want of ordinary care and skill.<sup>25</sup>

In general, no right of action can arise from an illegal transaction.<sup>26</sup> But the rule does not interfere with the right of property even in articles the sale of which is forbidden by law.<sup>27</sup> A party may be debarred from an action by a license, by estoppel, or by a waiver.<sup>28</sup>

In general, a party injured cannot maintain an action for the injury if caused in any degree by his own neglect or wrong.<sup>7</sup> Various and nice distinctions, however, are made upon this general subject, involving the degree of neglect or wrong on the part of the plaintiff, which will debar him from maintaining an action, and its nature, as being proximate or only the remote cause of the injury.<sup>8</sup> But the whole question is in general for the jury.<sup>9</sup>

COMMISSION OF AND LIABILITY FOR TORTS.

A wrongful or malicious intent is an essential element in many torts, as, for example, assault, fraud, slander, and malicious prosecution. In general, a prominent distinction between torts and crimes is that in the former the party's intent is immaterial, while in a prosecution for the latter a criminal purpose must always be alleged and proved. On the other hand, an act which does not amount to a legal injury and violates no legal right, is not actionable because done with a bad intention.<sup>10</sup>

A tort may consist in the violation of a statute,<sup>11</sup> or the abuse of a privilege given by statute.<sup>12</sup> And, in general, though a party's original act or conduct may have been right and lawful, there may be such an abuse of the powers and privileges which the law confers upon him as will render him liable to an action—as for a trespass, in the first instance—or make him a trespasser ab initio.<sup>13</sup> Acts lawful and innocent in themselves may also become wrongful when done without just regard for the rights of others, and without suitable reference to the time, place, or manner of performing them.<sup>14</sup> But an action cannot be maintained for annoyance received from acts done on land adjoining the plaintiff's, which the proprietor might lawfully do in exercise of his dominion over his own.<sup>15</sup>

The most comprehensive and various class of torts consists of wrongs to property. In general, possession alone is sufficient to maintain an action for tort; while property alone is not sufficient without possession, or the right of possession.<sup>16</sup> Even a wrongful possessor may maintain an action against a third person in the title; and the title of a third person, unless the defendant claims under him, is no defence.<sup>17</sup> But there are no one is in actual possession, the title is sufficient constructive possession to maintain an action; more especially possession of a part gives constructive possession of the whole.<sup>18</sup> And title is generally a good defence to an action founded upon mere possession.<sup>19</sup>

DEFENCE. With respect to the defence of one's self, wife, children, servants, etc., from torts, etc. See CRIMINAL LAW, "Self-defence." With respect to the defence or protection of one's personal property a man may repel force by force in its defence, and even justify homicide against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a known felony, as robbery. With respect to the defence or protection of real property, although it is justifiable to even kill a person in the act of attempting to commit a forcible felony, as burglary or arson; yet this justification can only take place when the party in possession is wholly without fault.<sup>20</sup> And when an illegal forcible attack is made upon a dwelling-house, with the intention merely of committing a trespass, and not with any felonious intent, it is generally lawful for the rightful occupant to oppose it with force.<sup>21</sup> See DETAINER, above, and TRESPASS, below.

HARBORING. See PRATICESHIP.

INJURIES arise in three ways: 1. By nonfeasance, or the not doing what was a legal obligation, or duty, or contract, to perform. 2. Misfeasance, or the performance in an improper manner of an act which it was either the party's duty or his contract to perform. 3. Malfeasance, or the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right, or which he had contracted not to do.

The remedies are different as the injury affects private individuals or the public. When the injuries affect a private right and a private individual, although often also affecting the public, there are three distinct classes of remedies.

1. The preventive, such as defence, resistance, recaption, abatement of nuisance, survey of the peace, injunction, etc. 2. Remedies for compensation, which may be by assumpsit, debt, action, or summary proceedings before a justice of the peace. 3. Proceedings for punishment, as by indictment, or complaint, and prosecution before a justice of the peace. When the injury is such as to affect the public it becomes a crime or misdemeanor, and the party may be punished by indictment or conviction for the public injury or offence, and by civil action, at the suit of the party, for the private wrong. But in cases of felony, the remedy by action for the private injury is generally suspended, unless the party particularly injured has fulfilled his duty to the public by prosecuting the offender for the public crime; and in cases of felony the remedy is merged in the felony.<sup>22</sup>

There are many injuries for which the law affords no remedy. In general, it interferes only where there has been a visible physical injury inflicted, while it leaves almost wholly unprotected the whole class of the most malignant mental injuries and sufferings, unless in a few cases where by a fiction it supposes some many injuries for which the law remedy. In general, it interferes here has been a visible physical and, while it leaves almost wholly the whole class of the most malig-injuries and sufferings, unless in a here by a fiction it supposes some pecuniary loss, and sometimes affords compensation to wounded feelings. A parent, for example, cannot sue in that character for an injury inflicted on his child, and when his own domestic happiness has been destroyed, unless the fact will sustain the allegation that the daughter was the servant of her father, and that by reason of such seduction he has lost the benefit of her services. Again, a party cannot recover damages for verbal slander in many cases, as, where the facts published are true; for the defendant would justify their utterance by their truth, and the party injured must fail, nor will the law punish criminally the author of a verbal slander, imputing even the most infamous crimes, unless done with the intention to extort a chattel, money, or valuable thing. The law presumes that a man is incapable of being alarmed or affected by such injuries to his feelings.<sup>5</sup> The true and sufficient reasons for these rules are, the uncertain character of the injury inflicted, the impossibility and the danger supposing a pecuniary compensation to be attempted, that injustice would be done under the excitement of the case, hence the sound principle of the law, confirmed by experience, to inflict a punishment for crime;

 but not sell, through the agency of its courts, those wounded feelings which would constitute the grounds of such actions. See LIBEL;
SLANDER, below.

LIBEL is any matter, written or printed, and published, and calculated to injure the character of another by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt.<sup>1</sup> Everything written or printed, which reflects upon the character of another, and is published without lawful justification or excuse, is a libel, whatever the intention may have been.<sup>2</sup> A malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, is libel.<sup>3</sup> A censorious or ridiculous writing, picture, or sign made with a malicious or mischievous intent towards government, magistrates, or individuals, is libel.<sup>4</sup>
 There is a great and well-settled distinction between verbal and written slander; and this not only in reference to the consequences, as subjecting the party to an indictment, but also as to the character of the accusation or imputations essential to sustain a civil action to recover damages. To write and publish maliciously anything of another, which either makes him ridiculous, or holds him out as a dishonest man, is held to be actionable, or punishable criminally when speaking the same words would not be so.<sup>5</sup> The redaction of the slanderous matter to writing or printing is the most usual mode of conveying it. The exhibition of a picture intimating that which in print would be libellous is equally criminal.<sup>6</sup> Fixing a gallows at a man's door, burning him in effigy, or exhibiting him in any ignominious manner, is a libel.<sup>7</sup> The above is a general description of libel, a branch of the law which is one of the most difficult to compress into a small compass.

Any publication which has a tendency to disturb the public peace, or good order of society, is indictable as a libel. This crime is committed by the publication of writings blas-pheming the Supreme Being, or turning the doctrines of the Christian religion into contempt and ridicule; or tending, by their im-modesty, to corrupt the mind, and to destroy the tone of decency, morality, and good order; or wantonly to defame or indecorously to calumniate the economy, order, and constitution of things which make up the general system of the law and government of the country; to degrade the administration of government, or of justice; or to cause animosities between our own and any foreign government, by personal abuse of its sovereign, its ambassadors, and other public ministers; and by malicious defamation, expressed in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is living, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule. This descriptive catalogue embraces all the several species of this offence which are indictable at common law; all of which are indictable either at common law or by virtue of particular statutes.<sup>8</sup> Libels against the memory of the dead, which have a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relatives of the deceased to avenge the insult of the family, render their authors liable to indictment. The malicious intention of the defendant to injure the family of the deceased must be expressly avowed and clearly proved.<sup>9</sup> If the matter be understood as scandalous, and is calculated to excite ridicule or abhorrence against the party intended, it is libellous, however it may be expressed.<sup>10</sup> The publisher of a libel is liable to be punished criminally by indictment,<sup>11</sup> or is subject to a civil action for damages by the party aggrieved. Both remedies may be pursued at the same time.<sup>12</sup>

to character; and an action may be maintained in the following cases: To be actionable in themselves, the words when only spoken (not written) must be such as in their plain and popular sense convey to the minds of the hearers a charge of some offence for which the plaintiff is amenable to the law, or of having some disease which will exclude him from society. Words which are not actionable in themselves become so when they are spoken of a person in his profession, office, or trade, and necessarily or naturally tend to injure him therein. And any words defamatory or injurious in their nature, spoken of another, without legal justification, are actionable, if productive of special damage flowing naturally from slander. The term "libel" is applied to written or printed slander.<sup>6</sup>

In verbal slander. Actionable words are of two descriptions: first, those actionable in themselves, without proof of special damages; and, secondly, those actionable only in respect of some actual consequential damages.

Words of the first description must impute:

1. The guilt of some offence for which the party, if guilty, might be indicted and punished by the criminal courts; as, to call a person a "traitor," "thief," "highwayman," or to say that he is guilty of "perjury," "forgery," "murder," and the like. And although the imputation of guilt be general, without stating the particulars of the pretended crime, it is actionable.<sup>7</sup> An action will lie for all words spoken of another which impute to him the commission of a crime involving moral turpitude and which is punishable by law.<sup>8</sup>

2. That the party has a disease or distemper which renders him unfit for society.<sup>9</sup> An action can, therefore, be sustained for calling a man a leper.<sup>10</sup> Imputations of having at the present time the venereal disease or the gonorrhoea are actionable in themselves.<sup>11</sup> But charging another with having had a contagious disease is not actionable, as he will not on that account be excluded from society.<sup>12</sup>

3. Unfitness in an officer, who holds an office to which profit or emolument is attached, either in respect of morals or inability to discharge the duties of the office; in such a case an action lies.<sup>13</sup>

4. The want of integrity or capacity, whether mental or pecuniary, in the conduct of a profession, trade, or business, in which the party is engaged, is actionable,<sup>14</sup> as, to accuse an attorney or artist of inability, inattention, or want of integrity,<sup>15</sup> or a clergyman of being a drunkard,<sup>16</sup> is actionable. It is one of the general rules governing the action for words spoken, that words are actionable, when spoken of one in an office of profit, which have a natural tendency to occasion the loss of his office, or when spoken of persons touching their respective professions, trades, and business, and which have a natural tendency to their damage. The ground of action in these cases is that the party is disgraced or injured in his profession or trade, or exposed to the hazard of losing his office, in consequence of the slanderous words; not that his general reputation and standing in the community are affected by them. It will be recollected that the words spoken, in this class of cases, are not actionable of themselves, but that they become so in consequence of the special character of the party of whom they were spoken. The fact of his maintaining that special character, therefore, lies at the very foundation of the action.<sup>17</sup>

Of the second class are words which are actionable only in respect of special damages sustained by the party slandered. Though the law will not permit in these cases the inference of damage, yet when the damage has actually been sustained, the party aggrieved may support an action for the publication of an untruth,<sup>18</sup> unless the assertion be made for the assertion of a supposed claim,<sup>19</sup> but it lies if maliciously spoken. In this case special damage is the gist of the action, and must be particularly specified in the declaration. For it is an established rule that no evidence shall be received of any loss or injury which the plaintiff had sustained by the speaking of the words, unless it be specially stated in the declaration. And this rule applies equally where the special damage is the gist of the action and where the words are in themselves actionable.<sup>20</sup>

The charge must be false.<sup>21</sup> The falsity of the accusation is to be implied till the contrary is shown.<sup>22</sup> The instance of a master making an unfavorable representation of his servant, upon an application for his character, seems to be an exception, in that case there being a presumption, from the occasion of the speaking, that the words were true.<sup>23</sup>

The slander must, of course, be published,—that is, communicated to a third person,—and, if verbal, then in a language which he understands; otherwise the plaintiff's reputation is not impaired.<sup>24</sup> A letter addressed to the party, containing libellous matter, is not sufficient to maintain a civil action, though it may subject the libeller to an indictment, as tending to a breach of the peace.<sup>25</sup> The slander

Plaintiff's Possession. The possession of the plaintiff may be actual or constructive. And it is constructive when the property is either in the actual custody and occupation of no one, but rightfully belongs to the plaintiff. A tenant at will and one entitled to the mere profits of the soil, with the right of culture, may also sue and recover for an injury to the emblements to which he is entitled.<sup>1</sup> A general owner has also a constructive possession as against his tenant, who having a special property, has violated his trust by injuring or destroying that which was confided to him. Thus, if a tenant at will cuts down trees, the interest of the wrong-doer is thereby determined, and the possession, by legal intendment, immediately reverts to the owner or co-tenant, and proof of the wrongful act will maintain the allegation that the thing injured was in his possession.<sup>2</sup> So, if one enters upon land, and cuts timber upon a parol agreement for the purchase of the land, which he afterwards repudiates as void under the statute of frauds, his right of possession also is avoided ab initio, and is held to have remained in the owner, who may maintain trespass for cutting the trees.<sup>3</sup> And generally, where a right of entry, or other right of possession, is given by law, and it is afterwards abused by any act of unlawful force, the party is a trespasser ab initio.<sup>4</sup>

But where the general owner has conveyed to another the exclusive right of present possession and enjoyment, retaining to himself only a reversionary interest, the possession is that of the lessee, who alone can maintain an action of trespass for a forcible injury to the property. Thus, a tenant for years may have an action of trespass for cutting down trees.<sup>5</sup> And a tenant at will, for throwing down fences erected by himself, and destroying the grass.<sup>6</sup> The lessor or general owner never being permitted to maintain this action for an injury done to the property while it is in the possession of a lessee entitled to its exclusive enjoyment.<sup>7</sup>

Where the subject of the action is a partition fence between the lands of two adjoining proprietors, it is presumed to be the common property of both, unless the contrary is shown.<sup>8</sup> If it is proved to have been originally built upon the land of one of them, it is his; but if it were built equally upon the land of both, though at their joint expense, each is the owner in severalty of the part standing on his own land;<sup>9</sup> if the boundary is a hedge and one ditch, it is presumed to belong to him on whose side the hedge is; it being presumed that he who dug the ditch threw the earth upon his own land, which alone was lawful for him to do, and that the hedge was planted as is usual on the top of the bank thus raised,<sup>10</sup> but if there is a ditch on each side of the hedge, or no ditch at all, the hedge is presumed to be the common property of both proprietors.<sup>11</sup> If a tree grows so near the boundary line, that the roots extend into the soil of each proprietor, yet the property in the tree belongs to the owner of the land in which the tree was originally sown or planted.<sup>12</sup> But if the tree stands directly upon the line between adjoining owners, so that the line passes through it, it is the common property of both, whether it be marked as a boundary or not; and trespass will lie if one cuts it down without the consent of the other.<sup>13</sup>

Proof of an actual and exclusive possession by the plaintiff, even though it be by wrong, is sufficient to support an action against a mere stranger or wrong-doer, who has neither title to the possession in himself, nor authority from the legal owner.<sup>14</sup>

Injury to. The plaintiff must, in the next place, prove that the injury was committed by the defendant, with force. And the defendant will be chargeable, if it appears that the act was done by his direction or command, or by his servant in the course of his master's business, or while executing his orders with ordinary care; or if it be done by his domestic or reclaimed animals.<sup>15</sup> The law of this State as to enclosures makes the party having a fence insufficient in law, guilty of negligence, and he cannot recover for injuries done his crops by stock running at large and roaming upon his land through such insufficient fence, nor can such a party recover even if the owner of the stock was himself chargeable with negligence, unless it amounts to a wilful, wanton or malicious want of care.<sup>16</sup> The object of the law regulating fences is not to protect a wanton trespass, nor a trespass with intent to injure.<sup>17</sup> It will not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the act was done with any wrongful intent; it being sufficient if it was done without a justifiable cause or purpose, though it were done accidentally, or by mistake.<sup>18</sup> And though the original entry or act of possession were by authority of law, yet if a subsequent act of force be unlawfully committed, such act would have made the party a trespasser if no authority or right existed, he is a trespasser ab initio.<sup>19</sup> Nor is it necessary, in order to enable a party to recover for injuries done to his property, caused by the negligence of others, that he should be entirely free from all negligence himself; but if his negligence is slight, and as lawful for him to do, was planted as is usual on his raised, but if there is of the hedge, or no ditch presumed to be the common proprietors. and exclusive possession though it be by wrong, is an action against a mere trespasser, who has neither title in himself, nor authority from

The plaintiff must, in the event the injury was committed with force. And the defendant, if it appears that the direction or command, or the course of his master's executing his orders with it to be done by his domestic. The law of this State is the party having a fence on his property, and he is liable for negligence, and he injures done his crops by the defendant from any other cause, short of any such extraneous force as deprived him of all agency in the act, it cannot be shown under this issue, but must be specially pleaded. So, also, matters in discharge of the action; but matters in mitigation of the wrong, and damages which cannot be so pleaded, may be given in evidence under the general issue. The general rule is, that all matters which confess and avoid, whether alleged by the plaintiff or defendant, must be specially pleaded, otherwise the proof of them is not admissible.

In some cases trespass is justifiable, or, in other words, entry on another's land or house is not accounted trespass; as if a man comes to demand or pay money there payable, or to execute in a legal manner the process of the law. So, entering into an inn or public house without first asking the owner's leave, because when a man professes to keep an inn, or public house, he thereby gives a general license to any person to enter his doors. In like manner the law warrants the hunting of ravenous beasts of prey, because the destroying of such creatures is said to be profitable to the public. But he cannot justify breaking the soil and digging him that of the other party is gross, or if his is remote, and that of the other is the proximate cause of the injury, he may recover. It is a question of fact for the jury to determine, whether there has been negligence, and its nature and degree; but it is a question of law, for the court to determine, what degree of care and diligence on the one side, and of negligence on the other, will entitle the plaintiff to recover. The allegation of the time when the trespass was committed is not ordinarily material to be proved; the plaintiff being at liberty to prove a trespass at any time before the commencement of the action, whether before or after the day laid in the complaint.

Defences. In the defence of this action, the general issue is not guilty; under which the defendant may give evidence of any facts tending to disprove either of the propositions which, as we have seen, the plaintiff is obliged to make out in order to maintain his action. And any matters which go to show that he never did the acts complained of may be given in evidence under the general issue. He may show under this issue that the freehold and immediate right of possession is, in himself, or in one under whom he claims title; thus disproving the plaintiff's allegation that the right of possession is in him. But if he acted by license even from the plaintiff, without claiming title in himself; or if he would justify under a custom to enter; or under a right of way; or if the injury was occasioned by the plaintiff's own negligence, or was done by the defendant from any other cause, short of any such extraneous force as deprived him of all agency in the act, it cannot be shown under this issue, but must be specially pleaded. So, also, matters in discharge of the action; but matters in mitigation of the wrong, and damages which cannot be so pleaded, may be given in evidence under the general issue. The general rule is, that all matters which confess and avoid, whether alleged by the plaintiff or defendant, must be specially pleaded, otherwise the proof of them is not admissible.

In some cases trespass is justifiable, or, in other words, entry on another's land or house is not accounted trespass; as if a man comes to demand or pay money there payable, or to execute in a legal manner the process of the law. So, entering into an inn or public house without first asking the owner's leave, because when a man professes to keep an inn, or public house, he thereby gives a general license to any person to enter his doors. In like manner the law warrants the hunting of ravenous beasts of prey, because the destroying of such creatures is said to be profitable to the public. But he cannot justify breaking the soil and digging him out of the earth; for though the law warrants the hunting of such noxious animals for the public good, yet it must be done in the ordinary and usual manner. But in cases where a man misdeems himself and makes ill use of the authority with which the law intrusts him, he is a trespasser ab initio. If a defendant justifies the destruction of the plaintiff's property, by the defence of his own, he must aver and prove that he could not otherwise preserve his own property. If, however, the plaintiff's dog were killed in the act of pursuing the defendant's deer in his park, or rabbits in his warren, or poultry within his own grounds, or worrying or injuring sheep, this will justify the killing without any higher necessity. If the issue is upon a right to dig and take gravel or other material for necessary repairs, the defendant must allege and prove that the repairs were necessary, and that the materials were used or in the process of being used for that purpose.

If the defendant succeeds in establishing a title to that part of the premises on which the trespass was committed, he is entitled to recover, though he does not prove a title to the whole premises.

VEXATIOUS SUITS, which are instituted maliciously, without probable cause, whereby damage has resulted to the defendant whether they are criminal prosecutions before a magistrate or civil actions, are another class of torts or wrongs. Such a suit need not be altogether without foundation; if the party which is groundless has subjected the party to an inconvenience to which he would not have been exposed had the valid cause of complaint alone have been insisted on, it is injurious. To make it vexatious the suit must have been instituted maliciously, as malice in any case of injurious conduct necessarily to be inferred from the total absence of probable cause for exciting it, and in the present instance the law will not allow it to be so inferred from that circumstance, for fear of being mistaken; it casts upon the suffering party the burden of proving express malice. It is necessary that the prosecution should have been carried on without probable cause; the law presumes that probable cause existed until the party aggrieved can show the contrary, hence he is bound to show the total absence of probable cause; he is also under the same obligation when the original proceeding was a civil action. The damage which the party injured sustains from a vexatious suit for a crime, as either to his person, his reputation, his estate, or his relative rights:

have been momentary, and the party released on bail.<sup>1</sup> 2. When the bill of indictment contains scandalous aspersions likely to impair the reputation of the accused, the damage is complete.<sup>2</sup> 3. Notwithstanding his person is left at liberty, and his character is unstained by the proceedings (as when the indictment is for trespass);<sup>3</sup> yet if he necessarily incurs expense in defending himself against the charge, he has a right to have his losses made good.<sup>4</sup> If a master loses the services and assistance of his domestics in consequence of a vexatious suit, he may claim a compensation.<sup>5</sup>

Concerning the damage resulting from a civil action, when prosecuted in a court of competent jurisdiction, the only detriment a party can sustain is the imprisonment of his person, or the seizure of his property; as to any expense he may be put to, the law contemplates that the costs adjudged fully compensate him.<sup>6</sup> It would be otherwise if the suit were brought in an improper court, and imprisonment of the person or seizure of one's property is made.<sup>7</sup>

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

A MEASURE is a means or standard for computing amount. A certain quantity of something taken for a unit, and which expresses a relation with other quantities of the same thing.

WEIGHT is a quality in natural bodies by which they tend towards the centre of the earth. The weights now generally used in the United States are the same as those of England.

The Constitution of the United States gives power to Congress to "fix the standard of weights and measures."<sup>11</sup> This power has never been exercised. By a resolution of Congress of the 14th of June, 1836, the secretary of the treasury is directed to cause a complete set of all weights and measures adopted as standards, and now either made or in the progress of manufacture, for the use of the several custom houses, and for other purposes, to be delivered to the governor of each State in the Union, or to such person as he may appoint, for the use of the States respectively, to the end that a uniform standard of weights and measures may be established throughout the United States.<sup>12</sup> The States possess the power to legislate on this subject, or at least the existing standards at the adoption of the constitution remain in full force.<sup>13</sup>

METRIC SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

In the year 1866 the Congress of the United States passed a bill authorizing the use of a new system of weights and measures. In this system the principal denomination is the metre, from which all the other denominations in all the tables are derived. Hence, this system is called the metric system.

The principal denomination for the measure of surface is the are; for the measure of capacity, the litre; and for weight, the gram.

The lower denominations in each table are tenths, hundredths, or thousandths of these; and their names are formed by prefixing deci, centi, or milli to the name of the principal denomination.

The higher denominations are 10, 100, 1,000, or 10,000 times the principal denomination of any table; and their names are formed by prefixing deka, hecto, kilo, or myria to the name of that principal denomination.

The weights and measures of this system are in general use in France, Belgium, Spain, and Portugal; and their use has been legalized by Great Britain, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Greece, Mexico, and most of the South American governments.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.
A certain quantity of some unit, and which expresses a quantity in natural bodies by towards the centre of the earth, and is now generally used in the same as those of England. The United States gives us the standard of weights and measures. This power has never been exercised by a resolution of Congress in 1836, the secretary of the Treasury to cause a complete set of weights and measures to be made or in the progress of the use of the several custom duties, to be delivered to each State in the Union, or he may appoint, for the use of the States, to the end that a uniformity of weights and measures may be maintained throughout the United States. The power to legislate on this subject is vested in the Congress of the United States. Hence, this system is the standard of weights and measures.

SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The Congress of the United States authorized the use of a system of weights and measures. In this system the principal denomination is the metre, and other denominations in all derived. Hence, this system is the standard of weights and measures.

Denominations for the measure of length are: the metre, and for weight, the gram. Denominations in each table are in multiples, or thousandths of these; and are formed by prefixing deci, centi, or milli to the name of the principal denomination.

Denominations are 10, 100, 1,000, the principal denomination of their names are formed by prefixing kilo, or myria to the name of the principal denomination.

Measures of this system are used in France, Belgium, Spain, and the United States. It has been legalized by the United States, Norway, Sweden, Greece, and the South American governments.

10 centimetres = 1 decimetre.
10 decimetres = 1 metre.
10 metres = 1 dekametre.
10 dekametres = 1 hectometre.
10 hectometres = 1 kilometre.
10 kilometres = 1 myriametre.
1 millimetre = .001 metre.
1 centimetre = .01 metre.
1 decimetre = .1 metre.
1 metre = 39.37 inches.
1 dekametre = 10 metres.
1 hectometre = 100 metres.
1 kilometre = 1,000 metres.
1 myriametre = 10,000 metres.

Measures of Surface.

100 centares = 1 are.
100 ares = 1 hectare.
1 centare = .01 are.
1 are = 100 square metres, or 119.6 square yards.
1 hectare = 100 ares.

Weight.

10 milligrams = 1 centigram.
10 centigrams = 1 decigram.
10 decigrams = 1 gram.
10 grams = 1 dekagram.
10 dekagrams = 1 hectogram.
10 hectograms = 1 kilogram.
10 kilograms or kilos = 1 myriagram.
10 myriagrams = 1 quintal.
10 quintals = 1 millier, or tonneau.
1 milligram = .001 gram.
1 centigram = .01 gram.
1 decigram = .1 gram.
1 gram = 15.432 grains.
1 dekagram = 10 grams.
1 hectogram = 100 grams.
1 kilogram or kilo = 1,000 grams, or 2.2046 pounds.
1 myriagram = 10 kilos.
1 quintal = 100 kilos.
1 millier = 1,000 kilos.

ORDINARY SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Angular Measure - Division of a Circle.

60 seconds = 1 minute.
60 minutes = 1 degree.
90 degrees = 1 sign.

90 degrees = 1 quadrat.
360 degrees or 12 signs = 1 circumference.
Apothecaries' or Pharmacologists' Measures, etc.

60 minims (M) = 1 fluid-drachm, f℥
8 f℥ = 1 fluid-ounce, f℥
16 f℥ = 1 pint, O
8 O = 1 gallon, C

When Roman numerals are used after the signs to which they relate: thus ℥i = 1 drachm; ℥iv = 4 drachms, they indicate troy weight.
ss = one-half; thus ℥ss = one-half drachm.
When Arabic numerals are used before the signs to which they relate: thus 7℥ = 1 drachm; 7℥ = 4 drachms, they indicate avoirdupois weight.

Measures of Fineness of Powders.

30 meshes to an inch = very fine.
60 meshes to an inch = fine.
80 meshes to an inch = moderately fine.
40 meshes to an inch = moderately coarse.
20 meshes to an inch = coarse.

Astronomers' and Geographers' Measures.

60'' (seconds) = 1' (minute), or 1 geographical mile.
60' = 1° (degree).
30° = 1 sign of the zodiac (S).
12 S = 1 great circle of the heavens.
60° = 1 sextant.
360° or 6 sextants = 1 C. circumference.
1 geographic mile = 1.15 statute mile.
3 geographic miles = 1 league (L).
60 geographic miles, or 69.16 statute miles = degree (Deg.) of latitude or of longitude on the equator.
69.16 miles is the average degree of latitude as used by the United States Coast Survey.

Measure of Books.

1 sheet folded in—
2 leaves = 2 folio.
4 leaves = 2 quarto (4to.)
8 leaves = 1 octavo (8vo.)
12 leaves = 6 duodecimo (12mo.)
16 leaves = 16mo.
18 leaves = 18mo.
24 leaves = 24mo.
32 leaves = 32mo.
48 leaves = 48mo.

Civil Engineers' Measures.

1 link (l) = 1 foot (ft).
100 l (or ft.) = 1 chain.
5280 ft. (1760 yds.) = 1 mile (mi.)

Measures of Copying.

72 words = 1 folio, common law.
90 words = 1 folio, chancery.
100 words = 1 folio, statute law.
2 figures = 1 word, statute law.

For Measuring Goods Sold by the Yard.

2 1/2 inches = 1 sixteenth.
3 sixteenths or 3/8 inches = 1 eighth.
3 eighths or 9/16 inches = 1 quarter (qr) or fourth.
4 qrs = 1 yard.
1 yard U. S. Standard = 3 feet or 36 inches.

Mariners' Measures.

6 feet = 1 fathom (depth at sea).
120 fathoms = 1 cable's length.
1 nautical mile or knot = 1.15 statute miles.
3 nautical miles or knots = 1 league.

Measures of Length.

Generally.
12 inches = 1 foot.
3 feet = 1 yard.
5 1/2 yards = 1 rod or pole.
40 poles = 1 furlong.
8 furlongs = 1 mile.
69 1/2 miles = 1 degree of a great circle of the earth.

Measures of Cloth.

1 nail = 1/4 inch.
4 inches = 1 quarter.
4 quarters = 1 yard.
3 quarters = 1 ell.

Measures of Depth.

6 feet = 1 fathom.

Measure of Height of Horses.
In measuring horses 4 inches = 1 hand, the measure being taken directly over the forehead.

Measure of Land.
70-100 inches = 1 link.
100 links = 1 chain.
10 square chains = 1 acre.
640 acres = 1 square mile or section.
36 square miles = 1 township.

Measures of Paper.
24 sheets = 1 quire.
20 quires = 1 ream.
5 reams = 1 bundle.
5 bundles = 1 bale.

Measures of Solidity and Capacity.
Measures of Capacity for Commodities Sold by Heaped Measures.

1 gallon = 1 peck.
3 gallons = 1 bushel.
1 bushel U. S. Standard = 2150.42 cubic inches.
3 bushels = 1 sack.
12 sacks = 1 chaldron.

Measures of Capacity of Liquids, etc.
For liquids several denominations have heretofore been adopted: for beer the firkin of 9 gallons, the kilderkin of 18, the barrel of 36, the hoghead of 54, and the butt of 108 gallons. For wine or spirits there are the anker, runlet, tierce, hogshead, puncheon, pipe, butt, and tun; these are, however, rather the names of the casks in which the commodities are imported than an expressing any definite number of gallons. It is the practice to gauge all such vessels and to charge them according to their actual contents.

4 gills = 1 pint.
2 pints = 1 quart.
4 quarts = 1 gallon.
1 gallon U. S. Standard = 231 cubic inches.
2 gallons = 1 peck.
8 gallons = 1 bushel.
3 bushels = 1 quarter.
3 quarters = 1 load.
The last four denominations are used only for goods, not liquids.

Measures of Solidity.
1728 cubic inches = 1 cubic foot.
27 cubic feet = 1 cubic yard.
1 cord stove wood = 128 cubic feet.

Measures of Surface.
144 inches = 1 square foot.
9 square feet = 1 square yard.
36 $\frac{1}{2}$  square yards = 1 perch or rod.
40 perches = 1 rood.
4 roods or 160 perches = 1 acre.
640 acres = 1 square mile.

Surveyors' Measures.
7.92 inches = 1 link (l).
100 l = 1 chain (ch).
80 ch = 1 mile (mi).
See MEASURES OF LENGTH, above.

Measures of Things.

12 = 1 dozen.
12 dozen = 1 gross.
12 gross = 1 great gross.

Measures of Time.

60 seconds = 1 minute.
60 minutes = 1 hour.
24 hours = 1 day.
7 days = 1 week.
28 days or 4 weeks = 1 lunar month.
28, 29, 30, or 31 days = 1 calendar month.
12 calendar months = 1 year.
365 days = 1 year.
366 days = 1 leap year.
The second of time is subdivided like that of angular measure.

Measures by Weight.
The following articles are generally sold by the bushel, hundredweight, or ton, and are generally regulated by statute:

Apples, dried; barley; beans, white; beans, castor; bluegrass seed; bran; buckwheat; clover seed; coal (anthracite, bituminous, cannel, stone, and all other mined coals); corn, Indian, in the ear; corn, Indian, shelled; corn meal; fax seed; hair (for plastering); hay; hemp seed; hennery; Hungarian grass seed; lime (unsalted); malt; millet seed; oats, chaffed; onions; peaches, dried; peas, ground; potatoes, Irish; potatoes, sweet; rye; salt; salt, fine; timothy seed; turnips; wheat, etc., etc.

Weights are of two kinds, avoirdupois and troy.

Apothecaries' or Pharmacologists' Weights.
Used in Prescribing and Mixing Dry Medicines. (Dry medicines are sold by avoirdupois weight, and prescribed and mixed by troy weight.)

20 grains (gr.) = 1 scruple (Sc. or)  $\mathfrak{z}$
3  $\mathfrak{z}$  = 1 drachm (Dr. or)  $\mathfrak{d}$
8  $\mathfrak{d}$  = 1 ounce (oz. or)  $\mathfrak{z}$ 12  $\mathfrak{z}$  = 1 pound troy (lb.).

See MEASURES, above.

Avoirdupois Weight.
For Butter and Cheese.

3 pounds = 1 clove.
56 pounds = 1 firkin.

In most Commercial Transactions and Common Dealings among Individuals.

17 $\frac{1}{2}$  grains = 1 drachm.
16 drachms = 1 ounce (oz.).
16 ounces = 1 pound (lb.).
1 pound = 7000 troy grains, U. S. Standard.
25 pounds and 28 pounds = 1 quarter (qr.).
4 quarters = 1 hundredweight (cwt.).
20 hundredweight = 1 ton.

For Fish and Meat.

2 pounds = 1 stone.

For the West Trade.

7 pounds = 1 clove.

14 pounds = 1 stone.

2 stones = 1 tod.

6 $\frac{1}{2}$  tods = 1 wey.

2 weys = 1 rack.

12 racks = 1 last.

Troy Weight.

These are the denominations of troy weight when used for weighing gold, silver, and precious stones, except diamonds. Troy weight is also used by apothecaries in compounding medicines; and by them the ounce is divided into eight drachms, and the drachm into three scruples, so that the latter is equal to twenty grains. For scientific purposes the grain only is used, and sets of weights are used consisting in decimal progression from 10,000 grains downward to one-hundredth of a grain. The carat used for weighing diamonds is three and one-sixth grains.

24 grains = 1 pennyweight.
30 pennyweights = 1 ounce.
1 ounce = 480 grains, U. S. Standard.
12 ounces = 1 pound.
1 pound = 5,760 grains, U. S. Standard.

PART II.

COLLECTION

CLAIMS, DEBTS AND DEMANDS.

WHEN a claim, debt or demand is due or overdue; when payment is unreasonably deferred or refused; when satisfaction can only be had by aggressive action on the part of the creditor, it becomes necessary for him to inquire into the various methods of collecting or securing such claim, etc.

1. Amicable adjustment of Claims, Debts and Demands by parties. As between parties a claim may be satisfied, paid or adjusted in any manner, as by part payment, services, goods, etc., etc. It may also be secured in various ways, by note of hand; by note of hand with a sufficient indorser; by an order on and accepted by a third responsible party; by a mortgage, pledge, etc., etc.

2. Arbitration by third persons when a Claim, Debt or Demand is disputed. When parties are unable to adjust claims, debts or demands between themselves, and wish to avoid the expense and incident of a suit at law, they may agree upon a person or persons before whom to submit the points of controversy, and abide his or their decision.

3. Action or suit to recover or defeat a Claim, Debt or Demand. Whether the demand, debt or claim be disputed or not, it is often necessary to commence an action or suit for its recovery, to which suit a legal defence, set-off or counter-claim must be interposed, or judgment will be obtained so far as far as the demand, etc., is proved, often for the amount (sometimes unjustly) claimed. Where the parties are in the same neighborhood, or at a convenient distance, the matter may be attended to personally or by agent or attorney. Where they reside or do business at a distance from each other, this must be done through agents or attorneys. In the latter case, the following forms of correspondence may be observed by the creditor:

Letter of Enquiry.

A. Y., Esq., Attorney-at-law, at ---, in ---, in --- county, State of ---.

Dear Sir:—I herewith enclose you a copy of an account or note, or other evidence of debt (naming it), in my favor and against D. E., of ---, engaged to (state terms) at --- (in your city or county). Be kind enough to state your terms and price of collection, and oblige yours, etc., C. R.

Order to Collect.

Place ---, Date ---, 18---
A. Y., Esq., Attorney-at-law, at ---, in ---, in --- county, State of ---

Dear Sir:—Please collect the enclosed (account or note, etc.) in my favor and against D. R., and remit the same, less your fees, as per terms stated in your note of ---, inet: Providing, That if the same is found to be worthless, that it be returned to me without charge, Yours, etc., C. R.

(When security for costs is required add:)
Enclosed find $---, as per your request, to pay cost in advance (or to secure the costs of this suit).

WHAT COURTS TO SUE IN.

Justices' Courts afford a simple and speedy means of collecting small claims and demands without delay, and their judgments are, when filed in the office of the clerk of the proper court, as efficient a lien of the debtor's real estate, as the judgment of a court of record. This is a simple and inexpensive mode of obtaining a judgment and lien. The proceedings of courts of general jurisdiction are more direct, and must be resorted to for the collection of large claims and enforcing general remedies.

When an Action or Suit May be Commenced.

Limitation. By the common law, a party who had any legal ground of complaint against another, might compel him to answer in a court at such time as suited his convenience. This privilege was not only productive of inconvenience, but often of great injustice. Parties might, and often did, wait till witnesses were dead, or papers destroyed, etc., and then proceed to enforce claims which at an earlier date might have been honestly defeated. To prevent these evils, insecurity in title, uncertainty of tenure of property, and fruitful subjects of litigation, statutes were passed, limiting the time within which a party having a cause of action should appeal to courts for redress. These statutes are called Statutes of Limitation.

When Costs are Required in Advance.

Costs. The object of requiring security for costs in any case is, that the defendant may have some responsible party within the jurisdiction of the court to whom he can look for the payment thereof in the event he succeeds in the action or suit (15 Wis. 54). When security for costs is required, a fee should accompany the claim, so that the costs may be secured by resident surety or paid at the commencement of the action or suit.

Process in an Action or Suit.

In a Suit or Action a Summons notifies the defendant to appear at a certain time and place to answer whether he owes the debt or not, and if he has a set-off or defence, to then present it.

An Order of Arrest or Capias compels him not only to answer the debt, but also the acts of fraud in contracting or afterwards trying fraudulently to cheat his creditor out of his dues, and may also commit him to prison.

An Order of Attachment effects the seizure of such goods and property as can be found.

Garnishee or Trustee Process effects a discovery of goods, debts, effects, etc., etc., in the hands of outside or third parties, and compels their delivery of the same to satisfy such judgment as may be obtained.

Judgment, Execution, etc., are noticed above and below.

Arrest and Imprisonment for Debt.

Arrest and Imprisonment for Debt are proceedings of so summary a character that few persons of responsibility will risk either without the strongest evidence to support the one, or as a last means of obtaining satisfaction of a judgment through the other. Arrest is allowed in many of the States, but only in cases of fraud; fraud in obtaining goods, moneys, etc., or fraudulently secreting, selling, removing his property to avoid the payment of just debts, etc., etc. Imprisonment for debt is, with a few exceptions, generally abolished.

The proceedings are generally as follows: An affidavit is made by the creditor, his agent, or attorney, charging the debtor with the acts of fraud, etc. A bond is given by the creditor to indemnify the debtor if his arrest should be wrongful, etc. A writ is then issued for the apprehension of the debtor. When arrested, the debtor is brought before court to answer the charges of fraud, which, if proved, justify his imprisonment until he gives up the goods, property, etc., or is lawfully discharged from confinement.

Attachment, Garnishment, Trustee Process.

Attachment, Garnishment, Trustee Process, etc. (i. e., seizing goods or property of the debtor either before, during, or after the suit), is common to every State.

Attachment Proper is seizing either goods or property of the debtor for the debt, where he is charged with fraudulently concealing, selling or removing, etc., of them. Garnishment, Trustee Process, etc., is as follows: D owes C a debt, D has no property of his own, in his own hands or possession, but some one else has, or is indebted to him. C discovers this, and as an attachment proper could only take property of D, in D's own hands, or some place where it could be come at directly, C must resort to some other process. This is called a Garnishee or Trustee Process—that is, a writ which compels this outside party to come into court and tell what he has, holds, controls, or owes to D, and to deliver it over to the officer holding the garnishee or trustee writ, that it may be used to satisfy the creditor's claim or demand.

The Trial of an Action or Suit and its Incidents. See below.

The Nature and Effect of a Judgment.

Judgments, once obtained, are evidence to the whole world of the facts they contain—they cannot be impeached or disputed. The only way to affect them is to pay or satisfy them. They may be transferred from one county to another, from State to State, from country to country, and from court to court; they always face the debtor, and are always ready for any excess over and above the exemptions allowed by law. They gradually increase by the addition of interest.

COURTS AND PARTIES APPEARING THEREIN, etc. Judges and Officers of Courts.

A judge or justice cannot sit or act in cases where he is a party, or is interested, or where he is related to either party by consanguinity or affinity.

A judge or justice cannot practice in his own court.

A judge or justice will not have a partner practice in his own court.

A judge or justice will not take part in a trial when his partner is attorney or counsel therein.

A judge or justice will not have a voice in decisions where he has been attorney or counsel.

Partners of clerks of judges or Court officers do not practice before their judges.

Clerks of Courts and other ministerial officers do not practice as attorneys in their own courts. Courts are always open to the public.

Legal Proceedings.

Legal Proceedings must be in the English language, without abbreviation; numbers may be expressed in figures.

A party may always appear in person or by attorney. Any person of full age and sound mind, may prosecute or defend any action or suit of his own, or any defense against an action or suit brought against him by another, in any court or tribunal.

Any person of good moral character, although not an attorney, may manage, prosecute, or defend the suit of another person, if he is specially authorized to do so by the party for whom he appears. This authority may be by request when in court, or by written authority when the party suing, or sued, is absent.

Costs of suit generally fall upon the losing party; whatever costs have been prepaid are included in the bill of costs.

WHERE TO COMMENCE AN ACTION OR SUIT.

An action or suit must be brought before a court or judge or justice, who has a right to and can legally hear and determine it, otherwise his judgment would be like that of any other person without authority.

For example:

1. A justice of the peace has the right and authority to hear and determine actions or suits upon accounts, bills, bonds, contracts, judgments, notes, etc., etc., as well as for damages in some instances, and many other things, up to a certain sum or amount, beyond which he cannot lawfully go, even though the parties to the suit agree that he may; for the law has said what he shall do, and this is his only authority.
 On the other hand justices of the peace cannot sit to try the title to land, suits for slander, libel, breach of marriage contract, etc., for they have no authority by law to do so, and, besides, they are specially prohibited by law from trying suits of this character.

2. The justice having the right and authority to try the matter, in order to exercise it upon application of a party suing, must bring the party required to answer before him; this is done by a summons, and in suits before justices it is often absolutely necessary to sue a person in the same town or township in which he resides, though generally he may be sued anywhere in the county.

3. Any party, however, appear before any justice or court, and in any county, township or place they choose, and there submit their controversy.

How to Commence an Action or Suit.
 An action or suit may be commenced by voluntary appearance and agreement of parties, or by legal process issued at the instance and request of the party suing.

1. If by agreement the parties appear before the court or justice, and set out all their controversy, with such evidence as they may require or present, and the court or justice decides such controversy, and so enters his judgment upon his docket or record, and judgment stands and execution issues, in the same manner as in an ordinary action or suit.

2. When by legal process. Upon application (and filing one's account, bill, bond, claim, demand, note or other "cause of action," which is called a "complaint," "statement of demand," "bill of particulars," etc., etc., according to the custom of the court), a summons is issued and directed to the constable or other officer, who serves it upon the party complained of, who is called the defendant. This summons commands the defendant to appear before the court or justice at a certain place and time, to answer the plaintiff's demand (describing it), and to set up whatever defense he may have to it. In addition to the summons (which is merely a notice to appear and answer), there are cases

Notes.—The plaintiff's demand or cause of action should be given to the court or justice to be filed, when he obtains his summons. The defendant's set-off or defense should be given to the court or justice when he appears on the day of trial or by his evidence.

in which the defendant may be arrested, and also cases where his goods and effects may be attached, and also the money and property due him from persons indebted to him or having such property, may be taken or retained.

These forms of process are described under ARREST and ATTACHMENT above.

Witnesses may be compelled to attend and give their evidence. The party desiring their evidence should give their names to the court or justice and request him to subpoena them for the trial; and if they fail to attend, he should request the court to compel their attendance, which is done by attaching them and bringing them forcibly into court, there to answer for their contempt or excuse it, and give their evidence in the case as well.

Every person offered as a witness must be affirmed or sworn before giving any testimony.

How to Try an Action or Suit.

On the day of trial the party may conduct his own suit or defense, or have an attorney or other competent person do so for him.

If a party is under twenty-one years of age, he must sue or defend by guardian or next friend. (The court will attend to this upon the suggestion of any person.)

All parties should be in prompt attendance at the time fixed for trial (and in no event later than within one hour thereafter, though in some cases this will be too late).

Trial by Jury.

If a jury is desired by either party, such party should request it of the court or justice, who issues a summons or venire for the number of jurors required by law or agreed on by the parties.

When it is time for the jurors to appear their names are called out by the officer, and they are seated together and sworn for the purpose of ascertaining their competency to sit in the case.

If there are persons upon the jury that a party would rather dispense with, he can request the court or justice to excuse them from serving. The number of objections are limited, and therefore a party should discreetly choose the most objectionable persons first.

The jury will then be sworn by the court or justice, and hear the proofs and allegations of parties, and after the court's remarks or charge, if there be any, they retire and agree upon their verdict, and return it to the court, and the court thereupon gives judgment accordingly.

Trial by the Court.

If a jury is not desired by either party, the parties, if present, submit their proofs by witnesses or other testimony, and make whatever argument they wish to, and thereupon the court or justice finds for the party having, in his opinion, the preponderance or greater weight of evidence to support his side of the case, and renders and enters judgment accordingly.

The Law and Evidence.

For points in the various subjects concerning ACCOUNTS, BILLS, BONDS, NOTES, EVIDENCE, CONTRACTS, etc., etc.

See INDEX TO LAW, post.

Incidents to the Trial by the Court or a Jury.

If the defendant, being served with a summons, neglects to appear, the court or justice will proceed to hear the proofs of the plaintiff, and give judgment thereon.

The plaintiff's account, bill, bond, claim, demand, note, or other cause of action, and defendant's matters of defense, when required by the law, the court or justice or plaintiff, being filed and their substance or copy entered by the justice on his docket or record, the plaintiff proceeds and proves his account, demand, etc., by such proofs as is necessary, and the defendant, on the close of the plaintiff's evidence, produces his proofs, in case he has any, to defeat, lessen, or modify the plaintiff's demands or charges against him.

When a defendant establishes a set-off equal or exceeding the plaintiff's claim, judgment will be rendered in his favor, and also for the costs of this suit. But if it be for less than the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff will have judgment for the residue and also for costs.

When the defendant's defense defeats the plaintiff's claim only, judgment will be in the defendant's favor for costs.

If the plaintiff fails to appear on the day of trial, the case may be dismissed with costs; and if the defendant have a set-off, this may be proven and judgment obtained.

If the defendant fails to appear on the day of trial, the plaintiff will take judgment for so much of his claim as he proves, for the full amount often, although it really exceed his just dues.

Adjournments.

A trial may be adjourned for a reasonable time by consent of parties, or on the application and oath of a party, on sufficient cause, as, the absence of a material witness or testimony, etc., but the application should be made before proceeding to trial.

Judgment.

Judgment may be rendered upon the admission or confession in person by the defendant, or upon being established by competent witnesses.

Judgment may also be rendered by dismissing the case without affecting its merits in any way; this occurs where a plaintiff fails to appear at trial, or at the time to which the case is adjourned, also when the plaintiff discontinues or withdraws his action. In such case the judgment is for costs only.

Execution, &c.

Execution follows upon judgment, in favor of the successful party in the action. It may issue at once, in a few days, weeks, or months, at the option of the party succeeding in the suit. After a time (generally defined by law) from the date of serving the last execution, the judgment, in general, must be revived before an execution can issue.

EXECUTION is of four kinds:

1. Against the goods and chattels of the debtor.
2. Against the lands and tenements of the debtor.
3. Against the body of the debtor.
4. Against all or either goods, chattels, lands, tenements, and the body of the debtor.

THE FIRST MAY BE EFFECTUAL by an immediate issue and levy upon what goods may be found, and may be further assisted by the attachment, garnishee, or trustee process.

It may be defeated by the exemption law, assignment or insolvency law, or the corrupting of the officer who serves it.

THE SECOND IS MADE UNEFFECTUAL by having a transcript of the judgment filed in the office of every clerk of a court of record of every county wherein the judgment debtor has lands, in the State where this judgment was rendered. (Executions must then be issued, within say — years—different times in different States—or the judgment still cease to be a lien upon the real estate.)

If judgment is rendered in another State, then, in order to have it effectual in this State, suit must be brought on it, and then upon judgment on such judgment, a filing of transcripts in the offices of clerks of courts of record in each county where the debtor has lands, effects a lien as above stated, wherever filed.

THE THIRD IS ALLOWED IN CASES OF FRAUD. FOURTH. Execution also issues against goods, chattels, lands, tenements and effects of the debtor. It also issues against goods, chattels, lands, tenements (and the body of the debtor, whenever fraud is shown).

ALABAMA.

In general.—A claim, debt or demand for less than $100 may be collected in a Justice's Court, except for torts, when jurisdiction is limited to $50, appeals may be taken to Circuit Court.

Arrest or Imprisonment for debt is not allowed.

Parties to the suit, or interested therein, are competent Witnesses.

Costs of suit must be secured in advance, or suit dismissed, where plaintiff is a Non-Resident.

It is at least 30 Days between the service of summons on the Debtor and obtaining of judgment in the Circuit Court, and 3 Days in Justice's Courts.

Execution may issue in the Circuit Court immediately after adjournment of court, and in Justice's Court in 5 Days, unless such execution is stayed. Such stay is allowed in Justice's Courts.

The judgment of a Justice of the Peace, when a transcript thereof is filed in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the county where rendered, is a lien upon the Debtor's real estate in such county. The judgment is a lien upon personal property only after levying of an execution.

ARIZONA.

In general.—A claim, debt or demand for less than $100 may be collected in a Justice's Court when title to real estate is not involved. When over $100 in the District Court.

Arrest and Imprisonment for debt is not allowed, except in cases of fraud.

Attachment is allowed against Non-Residents, and against Debtors in cases of fraud, whether the debt is due or not.

Parties to the suit, or interested therein, are competent Witnesses.

Costs of suit must be secured in advance when the plaintiff is a non-resident, or a foreign corporation if required by the defendant, or the suit will be dismissed.

It is at least 10 to 40 Days between the service of summons on the Debtor and obtaining of judgment in the District Court, and 3 Days in Justice's Courts.

Execution may issue at any time after entering of judgment, unless such execution is stayed.

The judgment of a Justice of the Peace, when a transcript thereof is filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the county where rendered, is a lien upon the Debtor's real estate in such county. The judgment is a lien upon personal property only upon the levy of an execution.

ASSIGNMENT AND INSOLVENCY In the United States, Territories, Etc.

The repeal of the Bankrupt Act and its amendments, which took effect September 8, 1878, revives the operation of the various State and Territorial Acts and Laws relating to the Assignments and insolvency of debtors. In most States, etc., these local Acts and Laws have been upon the Statute books for many years. In some States, etc., they have been enacted in anticipation of the repeal of the national laws on the subject of Bankruptcy, and in others there are no laws whatever upon the subject.

ALABAMA.

No insolvent law.

Assignments.—To secure existing debts and giving preferences, if they inure to all creditors alike. Creditor can require trustee to give bond.

ARIZONA.

No insolvent laws, but assignment may be made for benefit of creditors.

ARKANSAS.

No insolvent law. There are three Sections in the code of laws respecting assignment for the benefit of Creditors.

Assignee shall give a bond and file a complete inventory of the property assigned in the office of the Clerk of the Court exercising probate jurisdiction. The bond is to the State in double the estimated value of the property, conditioned that the assignee shall execute the trust, sell the property to the best advantage, and pay the proceeds thereof according to the terms thereof and faithfully perform the duties required by law.

The Assignee is required at the first term of said Court after one Year from the date of assignment, and at the corresponding term of said Court every year thereafter, until the proceeds of the property assigned are disposed of for the benefit of the creditors, to present to said Court a fair written statement or account current, showing substantially the condition of the estate or fund assigned, which when filed becomes a part of the record, and certified copies thereof are evidence in other Courts as other records.

The Assignee is required to sell all the property assigned, for the payment of debts, at public auction, within 120 Days after the execution of the said bond, and is required to give 30 Days' notice at least of the time and place of sale.

Any person damaged by the neglect, waste or improper conduct of such Assignee is entitled to bring his action on the bond in the name of the State for his use.

CALIFORNIA.

A resident owing more than $500 may petition the Superior Court with schedule. The court orders the sheriff into possession until Creditors appoint an Assignee, not less than thirty days after published date of order. All debts due and to become due may be proved. (Assignee gives bond with two sureties). Involuntary insolvency is by petition of not less than five Creditors with claims aggregating not less than $500, and verified by at least three petitioners showing fraudulent intentions or acts, or (unsatisfied) legal process, for four days, or suspension of payments for forty days. If petition is granted, proceedings same as in voluntary insolvency. Discharge may be after three months from time of adjudication. Any Creditor may oppose discharge, and issue tried by jury. Fraud punished by imprisonment.

COLORADO. No insolvent law.

Assignment must be for benefit of all creditors.

CONNECTICUT.

The insolvent law is the same for foreign Creditors as for domestic ones.

Any Creditor having a claim of $100 or over, founded on a contract, may cause a writ of attachment to issue. The Officer returns he can find no property to attach, and then the Creditor brings a petition to the Court of Probate asking for the appointment of a Trustee to take charge of the Debtor's estate. The Trustee sells the property and pays the Creditor pro rata. The Debtor obtains no discharge unless he pays 70 per cent.

The Debtor can also make a voluntary assignment, and the Trustee acts the same as in an involuntary case.

DAKOTA, NORTH.

An Assignment in good faith may be made, in trust for the Creditors.

An insolvent cannot give a preference to one or more of his Creditors.

DELAWARE.

Persons imprisoned for debt, damages or costs, by virtue of any process, or commitment in a civil action, having resided in the State for one Year next preceding such imprisonment, may obtain a discharge upon petition to the Superior Court of the county where imprisoned.

Such petition shall set forth the imprisonment and the cause thereof, the Petitioner's insolvency, a full and true account of all his real and personal property, debts, credits, money, etc., with a true list of all his Creditors, with the same due them respectively.

The Creditors shall be summoned to appear and show cause why the Petitioner is not entitled to his discharge upon assigning all his property for the benefit of his Creditors.

Service of such summons upon the Agent or Attorney of a Creditor residing out of the State shall be a valid service as to such Creditor.

Any Creditor in any sum over $50 can allege fraud by affidavit, and the Petitioner may plead to such allegation, and it shall be tried by Jury.

If fraud be proved, or it be shown that any goods, property, etc., have been secreted, conveyed, etc., the Petitioner is to be remanded.

If no fraud or other cause be shown, the Petitioner is entitled to his discharge after an affidavit setting forth substantially the facts contained in his petition, and after executing a deed of assignment of all his property to a Trustee, or Trustees appointed by the Court.

of Creditors may, by statute, be made in trust to parties approved by the Chancellor.

Said Trustee must file in the office of the Register in Chancery, within 30 Days after the deed of assignment has been executed, an inventory of the estate assigned, with an affidavit that it is full and complete.

Two disinterested persons are then appointed as Appraisers, who return their appraisement to the Register.

Bond must be given by the Assignee for double the amount of the appraisement, and he must render an account of his Trusteeship once a year.

Exceptions can be filed, by any interested party, to the accounts, any time within a year.

The Assignee can be removed by the Chancellor for cause shown, and a new one appointed.

Property assigned is liable for rent. The net proceeds of the estate shall be distributed pro rata among the creditors.

A demand existing at the time of executing the assignment, but payable at a future day, shall be admitted in the distribution of the estate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

No insolvency Act, except one providing for the discharge from arrest of insolvents.

No one can be discharged of his debts. Only Congress can legislate on the matter for the District.

FLORIDA.

No insolvent law, but a general assignment releases Debtor.

Assignment must be general. Preferential assignment void.

GEORGIA.

Persons and Corporations may assign for benefit of Creditors by deed, without reserve, giving names of Creditors and amounts due each, under oath, together with sworn schedule of assets. Preferences are allowed and the schedule must set forth the preferred Creditors.

IDAHO.

An assignment of all a debtor's property, real and personal, deducting the exemptions, will release him from his debts.

Notice of hearing must be published in the county where the Debtor resides, 30 Days before hearing, and Creditors, having proved their claims, elect an Assignee, who must give bonds.

A Creditor proving fraud before a Jury will forever deprive the Debtor of the benefit of the insolvent law; otherwise he shall have his discharge.

Mortgages and liens on the Debtor's property are good, notwithstanding the assignment.

ILLINOIS.

Insolvent Act in force July 1, 1877.

It provides for voluntary assignment by the insolvent, which must be immediately recorded in the office of the Recorder of Deeds, where the Debtor lives, and the assignment must have attached a list of debts and names of Creditors, also a sworn inventory of both real and personal assets.

The Assignee must give bond in double the amount of the estate, and shall notify all Creditors by mail to prove their accounts within three months.

The County Court has jurisdiction, and can remove one Assignee and appoint another.

Every assignment containing a preference for one or more Creditors shall be void. Foreign and domestic Creditors share alike.

INDIANA.

Assignment by an Insolvent must be general, and for the benefit of all Creditors, and the retention or concealment of any of his property, or a preference to any Creditor or Creditors, makes the assignment void.

The Debtor is not released unless his Creditors are paid in full, and they can again proceed for the balance of their claims.

IOWA.

Assignments must be for the benefit of all the Creditors.

An inventory under oath must be annexed of all his real and personal estate, and duly recorded, together with list of Creditors and their demands. The Assignee files with Clerk of District Court a valuation of said estate. He must give bond with approved surety for double the amount of said inventory, publish notice of assignment for 6 weeks in county newspaper, and notify each Creditor by mail.

Any Creditor may, within three months from the filing of Assignee's report, appear in Court and object to the claim of any Creditor.

The estate is divided pro rata, but a Debtor is not cleared of his responsibility unless estate pays in full, and judgment may be had for the balance.

All claims must be filed within three months from date of first publication of notice.

KANSAS.

Assignment must be for the benefit of all Creditors alike, no preference of any kind being allowed.

Debtor selects an Assignee, who merely holds the property in trust till the Creditors elect a permanent Assignee, who is chosen at a meeting of Creditors by the majority present.

The estate is converted into money and each Creditor paid pro rata, but the Debtor is not discharged from his debts except so far as they are paid.

KENTUCKY.

A Debtor may assign his estate in trust for the benefit of all his Creditors.

If he should, in contemplation of insolvency, make preference of any Creditor, it will be set aside if suit be brought by another Creditor within six months. Assignee must give bond, and close the estate within two years.

LOUISIANA.

A Debtor may ask his Creditors for a respite, and a majority may grant such, not exceeding three years.

Should this be refused, surrender follows; but preference to any Creditor is void.

The Debtor obtains a discharge from his debts upon surrender of his property, and all Creditors proving their debts, and accepting a dividend, are barred from farther proceedings for the balance.

MAINE.

A Debtor owing over $300 may apply for benefit of insolvent act by paying $25 into Insolvent Court with his petition.

When two or more Creditors make oath as to their belief in the insolvency of a Debtor, and that they believe their aggregate debts amount to more than one-fourth part of the debts provable against a debtor, the Judge shall declare him insolvent, if such allegations are proved.

An Assignee is chosen at the first meeting of Creditors, such choice being made by three or more in number of the meeting, whose debts amount collectively to one-half in number of the amount proved; and in the interval between the declaration of insolvency of Debtor and choice of Assignee by Creditors, the Court Messenger shall hold the estate of Debtor.

Upon application of Creditors, the Assignee may be required to give bond.

An Assignee may recover any money paid a Creditor on writ, judgment or execution, when such payment is made within four months prior to commencement of insolvency proceedings, when such money is received as a preference, and known at the time that Debtor is insolvent.

A discharge shall not be granted if Debtor has sworn falsely, concealed assets, or otherwise fraudulently acted.

A discharge may be granted any time after four months from the time of issuing the warrant of insolvency.

Should Debtor at first meeting produce an agreement, signed by a majority of the Creditors, representing three-fourths of his indebtedness, agreeing to accept a certain percentage, the Judge shall grant a discharge when Debtor has paid or secured such percentage.

MARYLAND.

State insolvency law permits preferential assignment if made bona fide for value.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The United States Bankrupt Act of 1867 was framed from the General Insolvency Act of this State.

Insolvency Courts in each county are Courts of Record.

Any inhabitant of the State, owing not less than $200 of debts contracted while an inhabitant of the State, may apply by petition to the Judge for the county within which he resides, setting forth his inability to pay all his debts, and his willingness to assign all his estate for the benefit of his Creditors.

The Judge issues a warrant to the Sheriff ul-recting him forthwith as Messenger to take possession of all the estate, and keep the same safely until an Assignee is appointed, and to issue due notice of the proceeding, and the Judge may order the sale of such part of the effects as are of a perishable nature.

At the first meeting, the Debtor shall give to the Register a schedule of his estate.

Debts may be proved and allowed at any meeting, and a set-off of debts is allowed where there have been mutual credits.

All debts must be proven by oath of the Creditor or his Agent or Attorney, and the Debtor, or any party proving a debt, may be examined on oath.

Claims are not allowed where preference has been made or given contrary to the provisions of the law.

Appeals are allowed by Creditors or Assignee from the decision of a Judge to the Superior Court, and appeals must be entered with the Register, and at the next term of Court the party appealing must set forth in writing his claims the same as in a declaration in an action at law.

The final judgment of this Court is conclusive.

Assignees are chosen at the first meeting in the presence of the Judge, the choice to be made by the greater part in value of the Creditors who have proved their debts, provided that when Creditors present are over five and less than ten, the votes of two, at least, and, when the number present amounts to ten or more, the votes of three at least shall be necessary to a choice, and all elections are subject to the approval of the Judge, and the Assignee may be required to give bonds, and the Judge assigns and conveys all the estate to the Assignee.

This vests all the estate in him, and, subject to the law, dissolves all attachments.

The Debtor must submit himself to examination on oath at all times upon reasonable notice.

The second meeting shall be appointed by the Judge not more than three months after the date of the warrant, and the Debtor can then amend his schedule.

The third meeting shall be appointed by the Judge within six months from the appointment of the Assignee, and at that meeting, or any meeting thereafter, if shown to the satisfaction of the Judge that the Debtor has conformed to all requirements of the law, he may issue a certificate of discharge.

Debtor or Assignee may appeal within ten Days from a decision of a Judge, upon the question of granting a discharge, which appeal is to the Superior Court.

Discharge is forfeited by proceedings on the part of Debtor in fraud of Creditors, or by any fraudulent preference of any Creditor. A Debtor may offer compromise, which if accepted by three-fourths in number and amount of Creditors who have filed claims, becomes binding on all.

At the third meeting, the Assignee shall exhibit a fair and just account of all receipts and as Messenger to take proceeds, and keep the same safely deposited, and to issue dividends, and the Judge may do such part of the effects as are required.

The Debtor shall give to the Assignee a full and true list of all his debts, and the Assignee shall give to the Debtor a full and true list of all his credits.

Proven by oath of the Creditor, Attorney, and the Debtor, a debt, may be examined.

of this Court is conclusive.

At the first meeting in Court, the choice to be made of the value of the Creditors who have debts, provided that when the debts are over five and less than ten, at least, and, when the debts are ten or more, the next shall be necessary to a meeting are subject to the appointment, and the Assignee may be appointed, and the Judge assigns the estate to the Assignee.

The estate in him, and, subject to all attachments.

He shall submit himself to examination upon reasonable notice. The Judge shall be appointed by the Court three months after the date of the Debtor can then amend.

The Judge shall be appointed by the Court, and at that meeting, or any other time, if shown to the satisfaction of the Court the Debtor has conformed to the law, he may issue a certificate of discharge.

Such discharge releases the Debtor from debts of all Creditors uniting in proceedings. Preference or fraud bars a Debtor from any discharge.

By a General Act of Insolvency Debtors make petition to the Court setting forth schedule of debt and inventory of their estate. Notice is issued to each Creditor, and day assigned for hearing; a Debtor may be examined on oath.

If it appears at the hearing that he has complied with the provisions of the Statute, an assignment is ordered to Assignee chosen by the Creditors.

A Debtor is entitled to his discharge on certificate of Assignee of his compliance with the Statute.

Such discharge releases the Debtor from debts of all Creditors uniting in proceedings.

Preference or fraud bars a Debtor from any discharge.

payments touching the estate, and can be examined on oath as to the truth of such accounts, and the Judge shall order dividends.

Fraudulent concealment of any part of the estate, or removal of it out of the State, is punished by imprisonment in State Prison for a term not exceeding five years.

In case of partners, a warrant may issue by the Judge of the county in which either of the partners resides, and separate estates of the partners are taken with the partnership effects, and similar proceedings are held.

Corporations created by authority of this State may apply for relief in like manner, except railroad and banking corporations.

If any person is arrested on mesne process in a civil action for the sum of $100 or more, and has not given bail before the return day of the writ; or has been imprisoned for thirty days; or any person whose goods or estate are attached in a civil action for $100 or upwards, and has not dissolved the attachment according to law; or if any person has removed himself or any part of his property from the State with intent to defraud his Creditors, or to prevent it being attached; or has procured himself or his property to be arrested or attached; or made any fraudulent payment or conveyance of his property; or any of his Creditors, whose claims provable against his estate amount to the sum of $100 or more, may, within 90 Days thereafter, apply by petition to the Judge for the county in which the Debtor resides, or in the county where he last had his residence, setting forth the facts and the nature of each claim, verified by oath, and praying that his estate may be seized and distributed according to law; and after due notice and a hearing before the Judge, if the facts appear to be true, the Judge shall issue his warrant, and the same proceedings shall be had as in cases of voluntary insolvency.

NEW YORK.

By a General Act of Insolvency Debtors make petition to the Court setting forth schedule of debt and inventory of their estate.

Notice is issued to each Creditor, and day assigned for hearing; a Debtor may be examined on oath.

If it appears at the hearing that he has complied with the provisions of the Statute, an assignment is ordered to Assignee chosen by the Creditors.

A Debtor is entitled to his discharge on certificate of Assignee of his compliance with the Statute.

Such discharge releases the Debtor from debts of all Creditors uniting in proceedings.

Preference or fraud bars a Debtor from any discharge.

MINNESOTA.

Creditors to the amount of $500 may petition for the appointment of a receiver. Conveyances and preferences within four months prior are void.

Creditors, to participate in distribution, must release the Debtor, who is discharged by the Judge of the District Court except fraud appears.

MISSISSIPPI.

Assignment Act of 1868 compels assignee to file petition and bond in 24 hours. He then becomes an officer of the Court for the purposes of the assignment. Preferences are allowed, and Creditors may attack by competition.

MISSOURI.

No insolvent law. Assignments.—The Statute provides for assignments, but debtor is not released, unless assigned estate pay in full, without assent of creditors. No preferences allowed.

MONTANA.

No insolvent law. Common Law assignment may be made; preferential if not fraudulent.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Insolvent Debtors, in order to obtain a discharge, must file a petition and full schedule of property and debts, when a Trustee will be appointed to hold the property for the benefit of Creditors.

The Debtor is then entitled to a personal discharge.

The debt is not discharged; Creditors to be bound must be notified.

Fraudulent proceedings subject the Debtor to imprisonment till he makes full surrender.

NEBRASKA.

General Insolvency Act passed in 1877. Any person, solvent or insolvent, may assign his property for the benefit of his Creditors. No discrimination is made in favor of home or against foreign Creditors, and no discharge of any unpaid portion of debt. No preference except for labor, not to exceed $100. District Court has power to enforce the law; appeals may be taken to Supreme Court. Party making assignment selects his own Assignee.

NEVADA.

Insolvent debtor may file his petition in the District Court of district where he resides and surrenders his property. The Judge sets aside exempted property. Assignments must be for benefit of all creditors.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

There is an insolvent law, P. S. 1291.

An Assignment may be made by a Debtor for the benefit of his Creditors, and such assignment does not annul any prior mortgage or sale, or dissolve any attachment, or bind any Creditor who within 30 Days from public notice signifies his objection to such assignment, but for which objection he is under no obligation to assign a reason.

The law is not of any practical service to either Debtor or Creditor.

NEW JERSEY.

Under the general insolvent law Debtors may assign their property for the equal benefit of all their Creditors, file an inventory and schedule of assets under oath to the Surrogate of the County. But the debts of those who do not present and prove their claims, are not discharged.

An Assignee makes dividend after 3 months at the next term of Court following assignment, and has power to sell property, either at private or public sale. Assignees shall account finally in one year.

NEW MEXICO.

Assignment laws provide for voluntary assignment for the benefit of all Creditors. No preferences.

NEW YORK.

The insolvent law was passed in 1877. It requires the recording of the assignment in the county where the Debtor resides.

The Assignee shall file an inventory of assets and liabilities.

County Courts have jurisdiction with power to cite and examine parties, and compel production of books, to require Assignee to account, to decree payment of dividend, and to discharge Assignee and his sureties.

In practice the whole matter is sent to a Referee, who reports what percentage the estate ought to pay.

The confirmation of this report authorizes the payment of the pro rata share, and on proof of payment or deposit of unclaimed shares, the Assignee is entitled to his discharge.

OHIO.

Insolvent Debtors may assign to Trustees for the benefit of Creditors. Trustees must, within ten days, file a copy of the original assignment in the Probate Court, and file a bond at the approval of the Judge, and within 30 days file an inventory of the property. The property is then appraised by three disinterested parties appointed by the Probate Judge. Trustee files at the same time a schedule under oath of all the debts within his knowledge, and gives notice of appointment in newspapers for three weeks. He then must proceed to convert the property into money by order of the Probate Judge. Creditors have six months in which to file their claims. Assignee can pay dividend at the expiration of eight months from his appointment, and thereafter on order from the Probate Judge.

OKLAHOMA.

The civil code of Kansas is in force, with few changes.

OREGON.

Assignments must be recorded. Claims must be presented within three months after notice of the assignment, or they are postponed until the rest are paid in full, unless 30 per cent. of the debt has been paid. The assignment does not discharge the Debtor.

PENNSYLVANIA.

All assignments of property in trust by insolvent Debtors are held for the benefit of all the Creditors, must be recorded within 30 days, and Assignee must file inventory and appraisal of the estate to the Court of Common Pleas, and give bond in double appraised value.

The Court has full discretion in the settlement and distribution of the assets; claims can be presented at any time before common distribution.

The right of dower is not barred by the assignment, and a Debtor may make preference by confessing judgment.

RHODE ISLAND.

There is no distinct insolvent or bankrupt law, but assignments are regulated by common law and public statutes. No assignment can give preference to Creditors, except Creditors of the State or United States, or wages not exceeding $100 for each person, earned within 6 months of the assignment.

All judgments must be by virtue of suit and regular proceedings in open Court. Bona fide conveyances are valid at any time. Fraudulent conveyances to conceal property from Creditors are void as against other Creditors.

All Creditors must present their claims to the Assignee inside of 6 months from the date of published notice of assignment or they will be barred as against funds in hands of Assignee.

Any assignment at common law is good, except as modified by the Statutes. Attachments or levies on Debtor's property may be suspended by Debtor, if within 60 days from its date he executes and records a general assignment for the benefit of all his Creditors equally.

Costs of attaching Creditors are saved and become part of their claims.

In case a Debtor commits or omits an act by means of which a Creditor obtains preference, Creditors representing a fifth of Debtor's liabilities may petition the Supreme Court for appointment of a receiver to distribute the estate equitably under supervision of Court.

Conveyances and payments made within 60 days of such proceedings are void as to Creditors receiving same with knowledge that Debtor was insolvent.

The Debtor must file a schedule of his debts and property.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Insolvency and assignment are the subject of distinct Statutes and their amendments. No Debtor can make a preferential assignment. A Debtor is excluded from the benefit of the act "who shall have within three months before his assignment, or at any time since, paid or assigned his estate, or any part thereof, to one Creditor in preference to another, or fraudulently sold, conveyed or assigned his estate to defraud his Creditors."

Whenever execution against a judgment Debtor has been returned unsatisfied, or even upon execution issued, and affidavit is made that the Debtor has property which he refuses to apply to the judgment, the Judge may cause him to appear and answer by examination. Either party may call Witnesses. Attendance can be enforced. If affidavit alleges concealment or intent to leave State, defendant must give bond not to dispose of his property, and in default of bond may be committed.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

There is an assignment but no insolvent law. There can be no preferential assignment, but judgment by default or confession can be made to friends if not tainted with fraud. Assignor must make and file inventory show-

RHODE ISLAND.
 No distinct insolvent or bankruptcy assignments are regulated by and public statutes. No assignee preference to Creditors, except the State or United States, or exceeding $100 for each person, within 6 months of the assignment. Assignments must be by virtue of suit and judgments in open Court. Bona fide assignments are valid at any time. Fraudulent assignments to conceal property from Creditors gain no preference over other Creditors. Assignments must present their claims to the Assignee inside of 6 months from the date of assignment or they will be void against funds in hands of Assignee. Assignments at common law is good, but assignments under the Statutes. Attachments on Debtor's property may be void if the Debtor, if within 60 days from the date of execution and records a general assignment for the benefit of all his Creditors.

Attaching Creditors are saved and their claims. Debtor commits or omits an act which a Creditor obtains preference representing a fifth of Debtor's property petition the Supreme Court for the appointment of a receiver to distribute the property under supervision of Court. Assignments and payments made within 60 days of proceedings are void as to Creditor same with knowledge that Debtor insolvent. Debtor must file a schedule of his property.

SOUTH CAROLINA.
 Assignment and assignment are the subject of Statutes and their amendments. Assignee can make a preferential assignment. Debtor is excluded from the benefit of assignment who shall have within three months assigned his estate, or any part thereof, or sold, conveyed or assigned his property in preference to another, or fraud his Creditors." Execution against a judgment been returned unsatisfied, or even if a writ of execution is issued, and affidavit is made that Debtor has property which he refuses to pay, the judgment, the Judge may cause the Debtor to appear and answer by examination, and may call Witnesses. Attendance may be enforced. If affidavit alleges concealment of property, defendant must not dispose of his property, and if he does, he may be committed.

 An assignment but no insolvent law can be no preferential assignment. Attachment by default or confession can be void if not tainted with fraud. Debtor must make and file inventory showing ing the Creditors, kind and amount of debt due each, and all his own property, within 30 Days of date of assignment, and to be verified by affidavit. Assignee must file bond in 30 Days. The Circuit Court Judge has charge of all proceedings in assignment.

TENNESSEE.
 No general insolvent law. A Debtor may make an assignment for benefit of all Creditors equally. No preferences allowed.

TEXAS.
 Assignments must be recorded as deeds are by Assignee, who gives bond. Assignee must give notice within thirty days of appointment.

Creditors must file claims under oath within six months after notice, they having accepted the assignment within four months after notice. Debtor stands discharged from further liability to assenting Creditor, when assignment has paid 33 1/3 per cent. of said Creditor's claim.

UTAH.
 No insolvent law.

VERMONT.
 Insolvent law passed 1876, to take effect on repeal of "United States Bankruptcy Act," is modeled on the Massachusetts insolvency law.

Under this law foreign Creditors will be notified and be entitled to participate.

VIRGINIA.
 No insolvent law. Debtors may assign for the benefit of Creditors, and may prefer Creditors.

WASHINGTON.
 The insolvent Debtor petitions the Superior Court, and obtains a discharge from his debts upon surrender of his property unless guilty of fraud. No distinction between foreign and home Creditors. Thirty days' notice of meeting of Creditors must be given, when they elect not more than three Assignees, who give bond.

WEST VIRGINIA.
 An assignment law, no insolvent law. Any Debtor may make a general assignment for all his Creditors, but all preferences are void.

An assignment does not operate as a discharge in full.

WISCONSIN.
 General insolvency law, and voluntary assignment act.

Insolvent Debtor may assign his property, make a petition to the Judge of the Circuit Court containing a schedule of his affairs under oath, and be discharged.

A record of the assignment is made in the office of the Register of Deeds.

The Assignee must be a resident of the State and execute a bond to the County Judge for the nominal value of the assets.

He must convert the estate into money and distribute in according to the order of the Court.

WYOMING.
 The Assignee of insolvent Debtor gives undertaking to State with at least one sufficient security, to be approved by Clerk of District Court, in a sum double the value of assigned property, for the faithful discharge of his duty. Creditors accepting dividends release the Assignor from further liability.

Collection of Claims, Debts and Demands.

OKLAHOMA.
 The civil code of Kansas is in force, with few changes.

 In general.—Circuit Courts have unlimited jurisdiction. County Courts have original probate jurisdiction and concurrent jurisdiction with Circuit Courts in counties whose population is over 10,000, to amount of $1,000; in other counties to $500. Justices' Courts have jurisdiction where claim does not exceed $100 and title to real estate is not involved.

Arrest allowed in cases not arising out of contract, where defendant is Non-Resident or about to remove, for penalties, damages for breach of promise, embezzlement, concealment of property, fraud.

Attachment issues against Non-Residents, and against Debtors for concealment of property, removal, or fraud.

Interested parties may be witnesses.

In Circuit or County Courts defendant has 30 Days, exclusive of day of service, in which to answer before judgment can be had for default. In Justices' Courts summons returnable in not less than three nor more than 12 Days, and judgment may be entered on day of return. Service may be had by 6 weeks' publication in newspapers, where defendant cannot be found.

Money judgments in Circuit or County Courts are a lien on all real property except homestead, in any county where judgment or transcript of same is entered. Execution may issue any time in 5 years, returnable to Circuit and County Courts in 60, and to Justices' Courts in 30 Days.

EXEMPTION OF PROPERTY FROM SALE, ETC., In the United States, Territories, Etc.

Exemption is the right of a Debtor to retain a certain amount of property without its being liable to attachment, distress or execution, or any other process at the suit of a Creditor.

A judgment creates no lien upon property exempt from execution, etc., and execution creates no power over it. (21 Illinois, p. 105; 14 Ben. Monroes, p. 475.) It is placed beyond the reach of the law, in the absolute control of its Owner. The law will take cognizance of it only for the purpose of protecting the Owner in its enjoyment. (40 Mississippi, p. 49.)
