AGENCY; ASSIGNMENT; ATTORNEY; CONTRACTS;

Abstracts of Title are brief accounts of all the deeds upon which titles rest, and judgments and instruments affecting such titles. A synopsis of the distinctive portions of the various instruments which constitute the muniments of title.

The evidences of title are usually conveyances, wills, orders or decrees of courts, judgments, judicial sales, sales by officers appointed by law, acts of the legislature and of Congress.

CONVEYANCES. The abstract of conveyances should show:

1. Date.

2. Character (whether an absolute or conditional conveyance; as, in fee, mortgage, or a lease).

3. Names and residence of parties, and if executor, administrators, guardians, trustees, corporations, officers, or the like.

4. All recitals which materially affect the title.

5. The testatum clause. This part of the conveyance embraces:

1. Name of grantor. 2. Name of grantee and words of limitation; as, to "C. D., his heirs and assigns," or, to "C. D. and his assigns," or, to "C. D. and E. F., and the heirs of C. D." 3. The consideration. 4. The description of the premises or parcels. This is generally done by giving the premises at large in the abstract of the first conveyance, and in subsequent conveyances to note each variation.

5. The habendum—carefully and accurately stated. 6. The declaration of uses, trusts, limitations, or special agreements, if any. 7. Powers. If a settlement is made in pursuance of articles, or an appointment by virtue of a power, an inspection should be made of the articles or power. A deed executed by attorney should be produced with evidence that the power of attorney was recorded, and that the principal was alive when the deed was executed. 8. Covenants which may affect the vendee, and especially exceptions against incumbrances. 9. By what parties the deed is executed, the fact of signing, sealing, attestation and acknowledgment, and recording, as required by statute.

If any of the deeds in the chain of title are quit-claim, the reason therefore should be ascertained.

WILLS. In abstracting wills it is necessary to consider:

1. The date of the testator's death.

2. The court in which the probate is made. The date of letters testamentary, and any change in the executor or administrators, by death, removal, or otherwise.

3. Any charge imposed by the payment of debts, legacies, etc.

4. The persons to whom the lands are devised.

5. Words of limitation, modification, conditions, charges on the devise, etc.

6. Facts which operate a partial revocation of the will; as, the birth of a child, or the subsequent alteration of the estate inconsistent with the terms of the will.

Codicils should be given in the order of their dates.

ORDERS OR DECREES. Orders or decrees material to the title should be abstracted.

JUDGMENTS. A party claiming title to real estate under an execution must show:

1. A valid judgment.

2. A levy and sale as required by law.

3. A deed. The sheriff's deed must, in general, recite the substance of the execution, the names of the parties, the action, the amount, and the date of the rendition of the judgment by virtue of which the estate was sold, and be executed and acknowledged as required by law.

Judicial sales made by officers, executors, administrators, guardians of minors, lunatics, etc.:

1. Must be examined for the appointment and authority of the person making the sale, and whether his authority continued in force till the sale.

2. The service of summons, notice, or other process, upon all defendants, or persons interested.

3. The appointment of guardians ad litem for minors when necessary.

4. The order of sale and its confirmation.

5. The deed.

Other sales include those by assignees or commissioners of insolvents, or assignees of bankrupts, and tax sales. In the latter case, the proper records should be examined with the utmost care, in order to detect any omission or defect in compliance with all the requisitions

ASSIGNMENTS. See that title, ante.

CONVEYANCES are transfers of the title of land from one or more persons or corporations to another or others. It is the instrument of writing for effecting such transfer.

Absolute conveyances of real property are either original (primary) or derivative (secondary). Original conveyances are by exchange, feoffment, grant, lease, and partition. Secondary conveyances are by assignment, confirmation, defeasance, and surrender. See these titles, below.

Conditional conveyances of real property are by mortgage. See MORTGAGE, below.

Conveyances deriving their force from statutes of uses are: Bargains and sale, covenants to stand seized, deeds to lead or declare the uses of other more direct conveyances, deeds of revocation of uses, and lease and release.

Conveyances by matter of record are: By common recovery, by fines, by grants (as by patents) of lands, and by private acts of the legislature.

Derivative (or Secondary) conveyances are those which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to alter, confirm, enlarge, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance.

Fraudulent conveyance is a conveyance the object, tendency, or effect of which is to defraud another, or the intent of which is to avoid some duty or debt due by or incumbent on the party making it.

All conveyances made with intent to defraud creditors are void. Voluntary conveyances are not so construed, where the subsequent purchaser has notice, especially if there be a good consideration. But although such conveyances are void as regards purchasers and creditors, they are valid as between the parties.

Original (or Primary) conveyances are those by which the benefit or estate first arises or is created, as by gift, grant, lease, exchange, partition, etc.

Voluntary conveyances are transfers of estate made without any adequate consideration of value.

Whenever a voluntary conveyance is made, a presumption of fraud properly arises. This presumption may be repelled by showing that the transaction on which the conveyance was founded virtually contained some conventional stipulations, some compromise of interest, or reciprocity of benefits, that point out an object and motive beyond the indulgence of affection or claims of kindred, and not reconcilable with the supposition of intent to deceive a purchaser.

But unless so repelled, such a conveyance, coupled with a subsequent negotiation for sale, is conclusive evidence of a statutory fraud.

A distinction is made between previous and subsequent creditors; such a conveyance is void as to the former, but not as to the latter. And a conveyance by a father who, though in debt, is not in embarrassed circumstances, who makes a reasonable provision for a child, leaving property sufficient to pay his debts, is not per se fraudulent.

Gifts of goods and chattels, as well as of lands, by writing or otherwise, made with intent to delay, hinder, and defraud creditors, are void as against the person to whom such frauds are prejudicial.

As between the parties such conveyances are in general good. And when it has once been executed and delivered, it cannot be recalled, even where an unmarried man executes a voluntary trust deed for the benefit of future children; nor can he relieve himself from a provision in the conveyance to the trustee under which the income of the trust property is to be paid to him in the discretion of a third person.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. See that title, ante, where the precise legal requisites and practical forms in general use in each of the States, Territories, and Canadas are given.

of the transfer of property, is called an assurance.<sup>a</sup> Common assurances are deeds or conveyances which make safe or assure to a man the title to his estate, and this whether they are instruments of conveyance or to charge or discharge.

"Further assurance" is a phrase frequently used in covenants when a covenantor has granted an estate, and it is supposed that some further conveyance may be required; he then enters into a covenant for further assurance, that is, to make any other conveyance which may lawfully be required. See COVENANTS, below.

ATTESTATION is the act of witnessing an instrument in writing, at the request of the party making the same, and subscribing it as a witness.<sup>b</sup>

Conveyances at common law did not require attestation in order to be valid.<sup>c</sup>

Attestation of conveyances is required in many of the States, in others it is not necessary.

The attesting witness need not see the grantor write his name; if he sign in the presence of the grantor, and at his request, it is sufficient.<sup>d</sup> Where there are statutory regulations on the subject, they must be complied with.

Wills must be attested by competent and credible witnesses,<sup>e</sup> who must subscribe their names attesting in the presence of the testator.<sup>f</sup>

See attestation clauses in ASSIGNMENTS; CONTRACTS, ante.

BACKSIDE is the yard at the back part of or behind the house, and belonging thereto. This term was formerly much used, both in conveyances and pleading, but now is seldom used, and occurs only in conveyances which repeat an ancient description.<sup>g</sup> See YARD, below.

BARGAIN AND SALE is a contract or bargain by the owner of land in consideration of money or its equivalent paid, to sell land to another person called the bargainee, whereupon a use arises in favor of the latter, to whom the seizin is transferred by force of the statute of uses.<sup>h</sup> In consequence of the consideration paid, and the bargain made by the vendor, of which the conveyance was evidence, a use was raised at once in the bargainee; to this use the statute of uses transferred and annexed the seizin whereby a complete estate vested in the bargainee.<sup>i</sup>

All things, for the most part, that may be granted by any deed may be granted by bargain and sale, and an estate may be created in fee, or for years.<sup>b</sup> There must have been a valuable consideration,<sup>c</sup> though it need not be expressed.<sup>d</sup>

The proper and technical words to denote a bargain and sale are "Bargain and sell," but any other words that are sufficient to raise a use upon a valuable consideration are sufficient;<sup>e</sup> as, for example: "Make over and grant," "Release and assign."<sup>f</sup>

BEARING DATE. These words are frequently used in conveyancing to introduce the date which has been put upon an instrument, and to designate some instrument to which reference is made. For example: Whereas, by an instrument of writing, bearing date the — day of —, C. D. did, etc.

BEHOOF is advantage, benefit, profit, use, service.

BIPARTITE is the being in two corresponding parts; two similar conveyances, one for each party. The usual form of introduction is: "This conveyance (or indenture) bipartite between A. B. of the one part and C. D. of the other part, witnesseth," etc.

BONDS. See title OBLIGATIONS, post.

BY ESTIMATION. See ESTIMATION, below.

CONFIRMATION: Where a conveyance has been informally made it may be confirmed by a valid conveyance confirming the voidable one. See CONTRACTS, ante.

CANCELLATION is the act of crossing out or obliterating a writing; the manual operation of destroying or tearing a written instrument.<sup>g</sup>

COVENANTS are subject to the same rules as other contracts, in regard to the qualification of parties, the assent required, and the nature of the purpose for which the contract is entered into. See CONTRACTS, ante. No particular words are necessary to raise a covenant, express or implied.<sup>h</sup> Describing lands in a deed as bounded on a street of a certain description raises a covenant that the street shall be of that description,<sup>i</sup> and that the purchaser shall have the use thereof,<sup>j</sup> and binds subsequent purchasers from the grantor.<sup>k</sup>

To convey are those by which the covenantor undertakes to convey to the covenantee the estate described in the covenant under certain circumstances.<sup>l</sup> It is satisfied only by a perfect conveyance of the kind bargained for,<sup>m</sup> and not satisfied where an imperfect conveyance has been accepted.<sup>n</sup>

which the covenantor undertakes to do such reasonable acts, in addition to those already performed, as may be necessary for the completion of the transfer made, or intended to be made, at the requirement of the covenantee. It relates both to the title of the vendor and to the instrument of conveyance to the vendee, and operates as well to secure the performance of all acts for supplying any defects in the former as to remove all objections to the sufficiency of the latter.<sup>1</sup> The covenantor, in the execution of his covenant, is not required to perform unnecessary acts.<sup>2</sup>

Against incumbrances are those having for their object security against those rights to, or interests in, the land granted, which may subsist in third persons, to and thus diminish the value of the estate, though consistently with the passing of the property by the deed of conveyance. The mere existence of incumbrances constitutes a breach of this covenant,<sup>3</sup> without regard to the knowledge of the grantee.<sup>4</sup> The covenantee may extinguish the incumbrance and recover therefor at his election, in the absence of an agreement.<sup>5</sup> The measure of damages is the injury actually sustained.<sup>6</sup>

Not to sue are those entered into by a party who has a cause of action at the time of making it, by which he agrees not to sue the party liable to such action. A limited covenant not to sue, by which the covenantor agrees not to sue for a limited time, does not operate a release; and a breach must be taken advantage of by action.<sup>7</sup> A perpetual covenant not to sue (or one by which the covenantor agrees not to sue the covenantee at any time) operates as a release to the covenantee, and may be set up as such.<sup>8</sup> But such a covenant with one of several jointly and severally bound will not protect the others so bound.<sup>9</sup> And a covenant by one of several partners not to sue cannot be set up as a release in an action by all.<sup>10</sup>

For quiet enjoyment are assurances against the consequences of a defective title, and of any disturbances thereupon.<sup>11</sup> When it is general in its terms the covenantor stipulates at all events<sup>12</sup> to indemnify the covenantee against all acts committed by virtue of a paramount title;<sup>13</sup> not, however, including the acts of a mob,<sup>14</sup> nor a mere trespass by the lessor.<sup>15</sup>

But this rule may be varied by the terms of the covenant, as where it is against acts of a particular person,<sup>16</sup> or "those claiming or pretending to claim,"<sup>17</sup> or molestation by any person.<sup>18</sup> It occurs most frequently in leases,<sup>19</sup> and is there held to be raised by the words grant, demise, lease, yielding and paying, give, etc.,<sup>20</sup> and extends impliedly in a parol lease.<sup>21</sup> It is frequently replaced in conveyances by the covenant of warranty.<sup>22</sup>

Of seisin (or possession) are assurances to the grantee that the grantor has the very estate, both in quantity and quality, which he professes to convey.<sup>23</sup> A covenant for indefeasible seisin is everywhere held to run with the land,<sup>24</sup> and to apply to all titles adverse to the grantors.<sup>25</sup> A covenant of seisin of whatever form is broken at the time of the execution of the deed if the grantor has no possession either by himself or another, and no rights can pass to the assignee of the grantee.<sup>26</sup> The existence of a life estate,<sup>27</sup> a material deficiency in the amount of land,<sup>28</sup> non-existence of the land described,<sup>29</sup> the existence of fences or other fixtures on the premises belonging to other persons who have a right to remove them,<sup>30</sup> concurrent seisin of another as tenant in common,<sup>31</sup> adverse possession of a part by a stranger, constitutes a breach of this covenant. But the covenantee cannot recover against his grantor when the covenantee purchased knowing that he had no good title.<sup>32</sup>

To stand seized to uses are covenants by means of which, under the statute of uses, a conveyance of an estate may be effected.<sup>33</sup> Such a covenant cannot furnish the ground for an action of covenant broken. And the consideration for such a covenant must be relationship, either by blood or marriage.<sup>34</sup> As a mode of conveyance it has fallen into disuse, though the doctrine is often resorted to by courts in order to give effect to the intention of the parties who have undertaken to convey lands by deeds which are insufficient for the purpose under the rules required in other forms of conveyance.<sup>35</sup>

Of warranty are assurances by the grantor of an estate that the grantee shall enjoy the same without interruption by virtue of paramount title.<sup>36</sup> Such covenants give the covenantee and grantee of subsequently acquired titles,' to the extent of their terms' (but not if an interest actually passes at the time of making the conveyance upon which the covenant may operate);<sup>6</sup> in case of a term for years as well as conveyances of greater estates,<sup>7</sup> as against the grantor and those claiming under him,<sup>8</sup> including purchases for value.<sup>9</sup> And this principle does not operate to prevent the grantee's action for breach of the covenant, if evicted by such title.<sup>10</sup>

When general, this covenant applies to lawful adverse claims of all persons whatever. When special, it applies only to the particular person or claims to which its operation is limited or restricted.<sup>11</sup> A limitation may arise from the nature of the subject-matter of the grant.<sup>12</sup>

The covenant of warranty, until broken, passes with the land to the heir of the grantee; or if the land be assigned or conveyed, it passes to the assignee, and when broken, the heir or assignee injured by the breach can, in his own name, maintain an action against the warrantor, and may maintain an action against every intermediate warrantor, and prosecute the same to judgment. A judgment against one will be no bar to a suit against another. A satisfaction is the only bar.<sup>13</sup> To constitute a breach, there must be an eviction by paramount title,<sup>14</sup> which may be constructive.<sup>15</sup> And it is sufficient if the tenant yields to the true owner, or if, the premises being vacant, such owner takes possession.<sup>16</sup>

The action for breach should be brought by the owner of the land, and, as such, assignee of the covenant at the time it is broken,<sup>17</sup> but may be by the original covenantee, if he has satisfied the owner.<sup>18</sup>

The form of the covenant of warranty in common use is as follows: "And I (or we) the said (here give name of grantor or grantors) for myself, my (or ourselves, our) heirs, executors, and administrators, do covenant with said (here give grantee or grantees' names), his (or their) heirs and assigns, that I (or we), my (or our) heirs, executors, and administrators, shall WARRANT and DEFEND the same to said (repeat grantee's names), his (or their) heirs and assigns forever, against the lawful claims and demands of all persons (or of all persons claiming by, through, or under me [or us]), but against none other, or any other special covenants).

DATE. Written instruments generally take effect from the day of their date, but the actual date of execution may be shown, though different from that which the instrument bears. Though the date is not of the essence of the instrument it is essential to the identity of the writing by which it is proved.<sup>19</sup> If a written date be an impossible one, the time of delivery must be shown.<sup>20</sup>

When the place is mentioned in the date of a deed the law presumes, unless the contrary appears, that it was executed at the place of the date.<sup>21</sup>

DEEDS are absolute conveyances; instruments of writing by which lands, tenements, or hereditaments are conveyed for no less an estate than for life, and which the grantee holds in his own right, subject to no superior, nor to conditions. As to their requisites, see DEED FORMS, below.

— To declare uses, are deeds made after a fine or common recovery to show the object thereof.

— To lead to uses, are deeds made before a fine or common recovery to show the object thereof.

— Poll, are deeds made by a single party only. That is, only the party making it executes it or binds himself by it as a deed.<sup>22</sup> Its purpose is merely to transfer the rights of the grantor to the grantee. A deed poll is an instrument of one part only, an indenture is an instrument of two parts. See INDENTURES, below.

In form this instrument begins: "Know all men by these presents that I, A. R., have given, granted, and enfeoffed, and by these presents do give, grant, and enfeoff," etc.

DEFESANCE may be effected in two ways: 1. By a separate instrument (if not prohibited by statute), which defeats the force or operation of some other conveyance or estate. 2. By a clause in the same instrument or conveyance which defeats the force or operation, the conveyance or estate. In the first case it is called a "defesance," in the latter a "condition."<sup>23</sup>

The defesance may be subsequent to the deed in case of things executory,<sup>24</sup> but must be a part of the same transaction in case of an executed contract.<sup>25</sup> Yet where the instrument of defesance is executed subsequently, in pursuance of an agreement made at the time of making the original conveyance; it is sufficient,<sup>26</sup> as well as where the conveyance and defesance bear different dates, but are delivered at the same time.<sup>27</sup> The instrument of defesance must, in law, be of as high a nature as the principal conveyance." Defeasance of deeds conveying real estate are generally subject to the same rules as deeds respecting record and notice to purchasers.<sup>2</sup> And in some States actual notice is not sufficient without recording the defeasance.

DELIVERY is the transfer of a deed from the grantor to the grantee, or some person acting in his behalf, in such a manner as to deprive the grantor of the right to recall it at his option.

Absolute delivery is that which is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the possession of the grantor.

Conditional delivery is that which passes the deed from the possession of the grantor, but is not to be completed by possession in the grantee, or a third person as his agent, until the happening of a specified event. A deed delivered in this manner is an "escrow," and such delivery must be always made to a third person,<sup>7</sup> though where the transfer to the possession of the grantee was merely to enable him to convey it to a third person to hold as an escrow, it was held not an absolute delivery to the grantee.<sup>8</sup>

No particular form of procedure is required to effect a delivery. It may be by acts merely, by words merely, or by both combined; but in all cases an intention that it shall be a delivery must exist.<sup>9</sup> The deed of a corporation is generally delivered by affixing the corporate seal.<sup>10</sup> Delivery may be made by an agent as well as by the grantor himself,<sup>11</sup> or to an agent previously appointed,<sup>12</sup> or subsequently recognized,<sup>13</sup> but a subsequent assent on the part of the grantee will not be presumed.<sup>14</sup>

To complete a delivery, acceptance must take place, which may be presumed from the grantee's possession,<sup>15</sup> from the relationship of a person holding the deed to the grantee,<sup>16</sup> and from other circumstances.<sup>17</sup>

There can ordinarily be but one valid delivery,<sup>18</sup> which can take place only after complete execution;<sup>19</sup> but there must be one,<sup>20</sup> and from that one the conveyance takes effect.<sup>21</sup>

ESTIMATION. In sales of land it frequently happens that the property is said to contain a certain number of acres "by estimation," or so many acres, "more or less." When these expressions are used, if the land fall short by a small quantity, the purchaser will receive no relief. In one case of this kind the land fell short two-fifths, and the purchaser received no relief.<sup>22</sup> The meaning of these words has never been precisely determined by judicial decision.<sup>23</sup> See MORE OR LESS, below.

ESCROW is a deed delivered to a stranger, to be by him delivered to the grantee upon the event of certain conditions, upon which last delivery the transmission of title is complete.

The delivery must be to a stranger.<sup>24</sup> The second delivery must be conditioned, and not merely postponed.<sup>25</sup> Care should be taken to express the intent of the first delivery clearly.<sup>26</sup> An escrow has no effect as a deed till the performance of the condition<sup>27</sup> takes effect from the second delivery.<sup>28</sup> See DELIVERY, above.

EXECUTE is to make and deliver.<sup>29</sup> It includes all the essential and formal parts of a conveyance of real property.

EXPENSE. When there is no express agreement to the contrary, the expense of the conveyance falls upon the purchaser,<sup>30</sup> who must prepare and tender the conveyance.<sup>31</sup> The expense of the execution of the conveyance is, on the contrary, always borne by the vendor.<sup>32</sup>

FEE SIMPLE is an estate belonging to a person and his heirs, absolutely. An estate of inheritance.<sup>33</sup> The word "simple" adds no meaning to the word "fee" standing by itself, but it extends all qualification or restriction as to the persons who may inherit it as heirs, thus distinguishing it from a "fee tail," as well as from an estate which, though inheritable, is subject to conditions or collateral determination.<sup>34</sup> A fee simple is the largest possible estate a man can have, being an absolute estate in perpetuity; it is where lands are given to a person and his heirs absolutely, without any end or limitation being put upon the estate.<sup>35</sup>

FEE TAIL is an estate limited to particular classes of heirs. An inheritable estate which can descend to certain classes of heirs only. It is necessary that these heirs should be heirs "of the body" of the ancestor. The descent of property is in general regulated by statute, and unless disposition be expressly made by the owner during his lifetime will, after his death, descend according to such statutory regulations, and not by common law.

PROFEMENT was one of the earliest modes of conveyance used at common law.

GRANT is a generic term, applicable to all transfers of real property.<sup>1</sup> It is a technical term made use of in deeds of conveyance of lands to import a transfer,<sup>2</sup> and is said to be construed into a general warranty.

GRANT AND DEMISE. GRANT, BARGAIN, SELL. GRANT, BARGAIN, SELL, ALIEN, AND CONFIRM. These words are used in a similar manner to the word grant being used in instruments of conveyance of real estate.<sup>3</sup>

GRANTEES are those to whom a conveyance is made.

GRANTORS are those by whom a conveyance is made.

HABENDUM is the clause which usually follows the granting part of the premises of a conveyance or deed, and which defines the extent of the ownership of the thing granted to be held and enjoyed by the grantee.<sup>4</sup> It commences with the words, "To have and to hold," etc.<sup>5</sup> This is not an essential part of a conveyance or deed, but serves to qualify, define, or control it, and may be rejected if clearly repugnant to the rest of the instrument.<sup>6</sup>

HEREDITAMENTS are those things which are capable of being inherited, whether they be corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed, and it includes not only lands and everything thereon, but also heirlooms and certain furniture, which by custom may descend to the heir together with the land.<sup>7</sup> This term denotes such things as may be the subject-matter of inheritance, but not the inheritance itself; therefore it cannot, by its own intrinsic force, enlarge an estate, prima facie a life estate, into an absolute fee.<sup>8</sup> Corporeal hereditaments are such permanent, substantial objects as may be inherited; the term "land" will include all such.<sup>9</sup> Incorporeal hereditaments are such intangible, invisible things as are the subject of ownership, and are inheritable.<sup>10</sup> Of these are annuities, easements of air, light, etc., equities of redemption, franchises, reversions, rents, and the like.<sup>11</sup>

INDENTURE. This is a formal written instrument between two or more persons in different interests, as opposed to "Deed Poll" (which is made by a single person, or by several having similar interests). Its name comes from a practice of indenting or scalloping such an instrument on the top or side in a waving line. The ancient practice was to deliver as many copies of an instrument as there were parties to it; to write the copies on the same parchment, with the word "chirographum," or some other word, written between them, and then to cut them apart through such word, leaving part of each letter on either side of the line, which was at first straight and afterward "indented" or notched.<sup>12</sup>

IN WITNESS WHEREOF. These words, when conveyancing was in the Latin language, were "in cuius rei testimonium;" they are the initial words of the concluding clause in conveyances: "In witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto set their hands," etc.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF. These words are the initial words of the concluding clause in the acknowledgment: "In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and official seal," etc.

INTENDED TO BE RECORDED is a phrase frequently used in conveyancing, in deeds which recite other deeds which have not been recorded. It has been construed to be a covenant on the part of the grantor to procure the deed to be recorded in a reasonable time.<sup>13</sup>

INTER PARTES (between the parties). This signifies an agreement which in the outset, and before any stipulations are made, to be between such and such persons; as, for example: "This conveyance, made this — day of —, between A. B. of the one (or first) part and C. D. of the other (or second), witness, &c." Such an introduction is a solemn declaration that all the covenants comprised in the conveyance are to be covenants between these parties and none others. And should a stipulation be found in the body of an instrument by which "the said A. B. covenants with E. F. to pay him one hundred dollars," the words "with E. F." are inoperative unless they have been used to denote for whose benefit the stipulation may have been made, being in direct contradiction with what was previously declared, and C. D. alone can sue for the non-payment, it being a maxim that where two opposite intentions are expressed in a contract the first in order shall prevail.<sup>14</sup> But this rule does not apply to simple contracts. When there are more than two sides to a conveyance "inter partes," as between A. B. of the first part, C. D. of the second, and E. F. of the third, there is no objection to one covenanting with another in exclusion of the third.<sup>15</sup>

JUDICIAL MORTGAGES are liens resulting from judgments, whether rendered on contested cases or by default, whether in actions or special proceedings, and whether final or provisional in favor of the person obtaining them.

JUDICIAL SALES are sales by authority of some competent tribunal, by an officer authorized by law for the purpose.

When real estate is sold by the sheriff or marshal, the sale is subject to the confirmation of the court."

LINE AND CORNERS are boundary lines and their angles with each other."

LOCATIVE CALLS are calls describing certain means by which the land to be located can be identified. Reference to physical objects in entries and deeds by which the land to be located is exactly described." Special are to be distinguished from general calls or descriptions."

MISREADING—MISRECITAL. When a conveyance is read falsely to an illiterate or blind person who is a party to it, such false reading amounts to a fraud, because the contract never had the assent of both parties."

MORE OR LESS are words in a conveyance of lands or contract to convey lands, importing that the quantity is uncertain and not warranted, and that no right of either party under the contract shall be affected by a deficiency or excess in the quantity." So in contracts of sale generally."

In case of an executory contract, specific performance may be enforced without changing the price, in the excess or deficiency is "very small," but not if the excess or deficiency is great, even though the price reserved be per acre. If a deed adding the words more or less to the description of the property is not a sufficient fulfillment of a contract to convey the described property, when more or less was not in the original contract, if there is an actual deficiency. But after such a conveyance is made, and a note given for the purchase money, the note cannot be defended against on the ground of deficiency.

In case of an executed contract it will not be disturbed unless there be a great deficiency, or excess, or actual misrepresentation without fraud, and there be a material excess or deficiency.

Eighty-five feet, more or less, means eighty-five feet, unless the deed or situation of the land in some way controls it."

The words more or less will not cover a distinct lot." See ESTIMATION, above.

NATURAL AFFECTION (the affection which a husband, a father, a brother, or other near relative naturally feels towards those who are so nearly allied to him) sometimes supplies the place of a valuable consideration in contracts; and natural affection is a good consideration in a deed.

PARTITION is the division of real estate. Compulsory partition is that which takes place without regard to the wishes of one or more of the owners, and is made by virtue of special laws providing that remedy. Voluntary partition is made by the owners, and on mutual consent, and is effected by mutual conveyances or releases, to each person, of the share which he is to hold, executed by the other owners.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. See MORTGAGES, below, and title PROPERTY, ETC.; SALES.

POLL. See DEED POLL; INDENTURE, above. POWER OF ATTORNEY. See title AGENCY; ATTORNEYS, ante.

PREMISES. "The premises" is that part of a conveyance which precedes the "habendum"; it embraces the statement of the parties, the consideration, recitals inserted for explanation, description of property granted, with the intended exceptions. When lands are granted by metes and bounds, all the area within those bounds, and no more, passes." Growing crops are part of the land while in the owner's hands, and unless excepted, pass by the deed."

PRIMARY CONVEYANCES. See ORIGINAL CONVEYANCES, above.

PROPERTY, ETC. See LEASES; MORTGAGES, below, and title PERSONAL PROPERTY; REAL PROPERTY, ETC.

PUNCTUATION. See title CONTRACTS, ante.

QUADRIPARTITE is having four parts, or divided into four parts, as, This conveyance quadripartite, made this — day of —, between A. B. of the one (or first) part, C. D. of the second part, E. F. of the third part, and G. H. of the fourth part, witnesseth, etc.

QUIT-CLAIM is a form of deed in the nature of a release containing words of grant as well as release."

The term is in constant and general use. It presupposes a previous or precedent conveyance, or a subsisting estate and possession." It is a conveyance at common law, but differs from a release in that it is regarded as an original conveyance." The operative words are "re-mise, release, and forever quit-claim." Covenants of warranty against incumbrances by the grantor are usually added. See DEED FORMS, post.

REAL PROPERTY. See title PROPERTY, ETC.; REAL PROPERTY.

RECEIPTS. The general principle settled by weight of authority is, that for the purpose of sustaining the conveyance as against the vendor and his privies, the receipt is conclusive; they are estopped to deny that a consideration was paid sufficient to sustain the conveyance.<sup>1</sup> But in a subsequent action for the purchase-money or upon any collateral demand, e. g., in an action to recover a debt which was in fact paid by the conveyance, or in an action for damages for breach of a covenant in the deed, and the like, the grantor may show that the consideration was not in fact paid; that an additional consideration to that mentioned was agreed for, etc.<sup>2</sup>

And when a deed is attacked for fraud, or is impeached by creditors as voluntary, and therefore void, or when the object is to show the conveyance illegal, the receipt may be explained or contradicted.<sup>3</sup> With this exception of receipts inserted in a sealed instrument having some other purpose, to which the receipt is collateral, a receipt under seal works an absolute estoppel on the same principles and to the same general extent as other specialties.<sup>4</sup>

RECITALS are repetitions of some former writing or statement of something which has been done. It is useful to explain matters of fact which are necessary to make the transaction intelligible.<sup>5</sup>

The party which executes a deed is bound by the recitals of essential facts contained therein.<sup>6</sup> The amount of consideration received is not an essential averment under this rule.<sup>7</sup> The recitals in a conveyance bind parties and privies thereto, whether in blood, estate, or law.<sup>8</sup> A deed of defeasance which professes to recite the principal deed must do so truly.<sup>9</sup>

RECORDING. By the laws of the several States, certain conveyances and instruments must be recorded in order to perpetuate the matters which they contain, and that copies thereof from such records shall have the same effect as the records themselves. The fact of an instrument being recorded is held to operate as a constructive notice upon all subsequent purchasers of any estate, whether legal or equitable, in the same property.<sup>10</sup> But all conveyances and deeds which may be in fact recorded, are not to be considered as giving notice. In order to have this effect the instruments must be such as are authorized or required to be recorded. And the registry must have been made in compliance with law—otherwise the recording is to be treated as a mere nullity, and will not effect a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer, unless he has such actual notice as would amount to a fraud.<sup>11</sup>

REDDENDUM is that clause in a conveyance which reserves something new to the grantor, which must be of some other thing issuing or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself; nor of something issuing out of another thing; and it must be made to one of the grantors, and not to a stranger to the conveyance. "Saving and excepting," etc.<sup>12</sup> The thing excepted must be particularly described.<sup>13</sup>

RE-ENTRY. Conveyances in fee reserving a ground rent, and leases for a term of years, usually contain a clause authorizing the proprietor to re-enter in case of the non-payment of rent, or of the breach of some covenant in the lease which forfeits the estate. Without such reservation he would have no right to re-enter for a mere breach of a covenant, although he may do so upon the breach of a condition which, by its terms, is to defeat the estate granted.<sup>14</sup> See LEASES, below.

RELEASE. A release is a conveyance of a person's interest or rights unto a thing to another who has the possession thereof or some estate therein.<sup>15</sup> The relinquishment of some right or benefit to a person who has already some interest in the tenement, and such interest as qualifies him to receive or avail himself of the right or benefit so relinquished.<sup>16</sup>

REMISE, RELEASE, AND QUIT-CLAIM are the ordinary effective words in a release. These words are sufficient to pass the estate in a primary conveyance.<sup>17</sup> Remise is a French word synonymous with release.<sup>18</sup> See SURRENDER, below.

RESERVATION is that part of a deed or instrument which reserves a thing not in esse at the time of the grant, but merely created.<sup>19</sup> It is the creation of a right or interest which had no prior existence, as such, in a thing or part of a thing granted, by means of a clause inserted by the grantor in the instrument of conveyance.

A reservation is distinguished from an exception in that it is of a new right or interest; thus a right of way reserved at the time of conveying an estate, which may have been enjoyed by the grantor as owner of the estate, becomes a new right.<sup>7</sup>

A reservation may be of a life-estate,<sup>8</sup> of a right of flowage,<sup>9</sup> right to use water,<sup>7</sup> right of way,<sup>8</sup> and many other rights and interests.<sup>8</sup>

SCRIVENERS, or conveyancers, are those whose business it is to write conveyances and other instruments for others. They act also as agents for the purchase and sale of real estate.

SIGNATURE is the act of putting one's name at the end of an instrument to attest its validity. The name thus written is also called a signature.<sup>10</sup>

It is not necessary that a party should write his name himself to constitute a signature; his mark is sufficient though he was able to write.<sup>10</sup> A signature made by a party, another guiding his hand with his consent, is sufficient.<sup>10</sup>

The signature is usually made at the bottom of the instrument.

SPELLING. See title CONTRACTS, ante.

SURRENDER is the yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, by which act the lesser estate is merged into the greater by mutual agreement.<sup>11</sup> It is the instrument by which the surrender is made.

A surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; the latter operates by the greater estate descending upon the less, the former is the falling of a less estate upon the greater by deed. The surrender may be express or implied; the latter is when an estate incompatible with an existing estate is accepted, or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands.<sup>11</sup>

The technical and proper words of this conveyance are, "Surrender and yield up," but any form of words by which the intention of the parties is sufficiently manifested will operate as a surrender.<sup>11</sup>

TAX DEEDS are absolute conveyances made by a public officer, of the title of the owner to the purchaser, at a tax sale<sup>12</sup> or sale of lands for non-payment of taxes. By the principles of the common law, this conveyance is simply a link in the chain of the grantee's title. It does not ipso facto transfer the title of the owner, as in grants from the government or conveyances between man and man. The operative character of it depends upon the regularity of the anterior proceedings. The deed is not the title itself, nor even evidence of it. Its recitals bind no one. It creates no estoppel upon the former owner. No presumption arises upon the mere production of the conveyance that the facts upon which it is based had any existence. Where it is shown, however, that the ministerial officers of the law have performed every duty which the law imposed upon them, and every condition essential to its character, then the deed becomes conclusive evidence of the title in the grantee, according to its extent and purport.<sup>13</sup> See GENERAL STATUTES.

TENENDUM was that part of a conveyance which was formerly used to express the tenure by which the estate conveyed was held. Its effect is now expressed by the clause called the "Habendum," which see above.

TESTATUM is that part of a conveyance which commences with the words, "This conveyance" (or deed, or indenture), etc., witnesseth.

TITLE is the means whereby the owner of lands has the lawful possession thereof.<sup>14</sup>

Muniments of title are those instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, and by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate.

Title deeds are those deeds which are evidences of the title of the owner of an estate. The person who is entitled to the inheritance has a right to the possession of the title deeds.<sup>15</sup>

TRANSFER is the act by which the owner of a thing delivers it to another person with the intent of passing the rights which he has in it to the latter.

TRIPARTITE is the consisting of three parts; as, "This conveyance tripartite between A. B. of the first part, C. D. of the second part, and E. F. of the third part," etc.

WILL. Last will and testimony, see WILLS, below.

WITNESS ATTESTATION is not essential to the validity of a conveyance unless required by statute.

Careful conveyancers, in general, have all instruments of conveyance, as well as other important instruments, attested by at least one witness.

YARD. A yard is a piece of ground enclosed for the use and convenience of the occupants of a house. See BACKSIDE, above.

The Introduction. This is the part of the deed which contains the name of the grantor and the name of the grantee.

1. The Premises. This contains the statement of the parties, the consideration, recitals, and the description of the property granted, with the intended exceptions. When lands are granted by messes and bounds, all the area within those bounds and no more passes. Growing crops are a part of the land while in the owner's hands, and unless stopped pass by the deed.

Dower. If a wife unite with her husband in the granting part of a deed conveying her real estate, she is thereby barred of her right of dower, as against all those who claim under such deed. All that the statute requires of a married woman in order to convey her own estate, or her dower interest, is, that she should join with her husband in the granting part of the deed. If she do this, her dower is thereby barred without express words for that purpose.

2. The Habendum. "To have and to hold," etc. This limits and defines the estate which the grantee is to have.

3. The Reddendum. This is used to reserve something to the grantor, which must be of some other thing, or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself. "Saving and excepting," etc. The thing excepted must be particularly described.

4. The Condition. This is a qualification or restriction annexed to the conveyance, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or grantee does or omits to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or be defeated.

5. Covenants. See COVENANTS, above. The Covenant of Warranty. This is an assurance by the grantor of an estate that the grantee shall enjoy the same without interruption by virtue of paramount title. Such covenants give the covenantee and grantee the benefit of subsequently acquired titles to the extent of their interest (but not if an interest actually passes at the time of making the conveyance upon which the covenant may operate); in case of a term for years as well as conveyances of greater estates, as against the grantor and those claiming under him, including purchasers for value. And this principle does not operate to prevent the grantee's action for breach of the covenant, if evicted by such title.

The covenant of warranty, until broken, passes with the land to the heirs of the grantee; or if the land be assigned or conveyed, it passes to the assignee, and when broken, the heir or assignee injured by the breach can, in his own name, maintain an action against the warrantor, and may maintain an action against every intermediate warrantor, and prove who the same to judgment. A judgment against one will be a bar to a suit against another. A satisfaction is the only bar. To constitute a breach there must be an eviction by paramount title, which may be constructive.

6. The Conclusion. This mentions the execution, date, etc.

7. The Signature by the grantor or grantors (and their seals when required by law).

8. The Attestation by competent witnesses when required by statute.

9. The Acknowledgment or proof.

ALABAMA. All persons twenty-one years of age, not under legal disability, may convey or encumber real estate or any interest therein. All conveyances must be in writing or printed upon parchment, and must be signed at their Acknowledgment. See that title, ante. Acknowledgment dispenses with the necessity of witnesses. Dower may be relinquished by the wife joining with her husband in the conveyance of land; or by a power of attorney authorizing the attorney to convey the land; or, subsequent to a conveyance, by a separate instrument executed by her alone; and in either case her signature must be attested by two witnesses who are able to write or acknowledged by her according to the form prescribed for the acknowledgment of their conveyances in the State. Husband must join in wife's conveyance of real property, except he be non compos mentis, insolvent, has abandoned her, or is imprisoned under conviction for exceeding two years.

Recording. Conveyances, whether by absolute deed or by mortgage, must be recorded within thirty days from their date in the office of the judge of probate for the county. Other conveyances must be recorded before the rights of purchasers, mortgagees, or judgment creditors accrue.

A scroll is not necessary. A scroll is customary. Witnesses. The execution of such conveyances must be attested by one, and if the party cannot write, by two witnesses who are able to write, and who must write their names as witnesses.

(2) A covenant that the mortgagee "will pay the indebtedness, as provided in the mortgage, and if default be made in the payment of any part thereof, the mortgagee shall have power to sell the premises therein described, according to law," shall be construed as meaning that the mortgagee for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators or successors doth covenant and agree to pay to the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, successors and assigns the principal sum of money secured by said mortgage and also the interest thereon as provided by said mortgage. (3) A covenant "that the mortgagor will keep the buildings on the said premises insured against loss by fire, for the benefit of the mortgagee," shall be construed as meaning that the mortgagor, his heirs, successors and assigns will, during all the time, until the money secured by the mortgage shall be fully paid and satisfied, keep the buildings erected on the premises insured against loss or damage by fire, to an amount and in a company to be approved of by the mortgagee, and will assign and deliver the policy or policies of such insurance to the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, successors, or assigns, so and in such manner and form that he and they shall at all time and times, until the full payment of said moneys, have and hold the said policy or policies as a collateral and further security for the payment of said money, and in default of so doing, that the mortgagee or his executors, administrators, successors or assigns, may make such insurance from year to year, in a sum not exceeding the principal sum for the purposes aforesaid, and pay the premium or premiums therefore, and that the mortgagor will pay to the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, successors or assigns, such premium or premiums so paid, with interest from the time of payment, on demand, and that the same shall be deemed to be secured by the mortgage, and shall be collectible thereupon and thereby in like manner as the principal moneys, and in default of such payment by the mortgagor, his heirs, executors, administrators, successors or assigns, or of assignment and delivery of policies as aforesaid the whole of the principal sum and interest secured by the mortgage shall, at the option of the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, successors or assigns, immediately become due and payable.

(4) A covenant that the mortgagor "will execute any further necessary assurance of the title to said premises, and will forever warrant said title," shall be construed as meaning that the mortgagor shall and will make, execute, acknowledge, and deliver in due form of law, all such further or other deeds or assurances as may at any time hereafter be reasonably desired or required for the more fully and effectually conveying the premises by the mortgage described and thereby granted or intended so to be, unto the said mortgagee, his executors, administrators, successors or assigns, for the purpose aforesaid, and unto all and every person or persons, corporation or corporations, deriving any estate, right, title or interest therein, under the said indenture of mortgage or the power of sale therein contained, and the said granted premises against the said mortgagor, and all persons claiming through him will warrant and defend.

All covenants contained in any grant or mortgage of real estate shall bind the heirs, executors, successors, administrators and assigns of the grantor or mortgagor, and shall inure to the benefit of the heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of the grantee or mortgagee, in the same manner and to the same extent, and with like effect, as if such heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns were so named in such covenants, unless otherwise in said grant or mortgage expressly provided.

§ 6. The schedules hereto annexed contain forms of instruments such as are authorized by this act, and shall be taken as a part thereof, but nothing herein contained shall invalidate or prevent the use of other forms.

Administration of Decedent's Estate.

Letters of administration and letters testamentary are issued by the surrogate. Administrators are required to give bond; executors are not required to give bond unless objection is made and the surrogate satisfied that his circumstances are such that they do not afford adequate security to the creditors or persons interested for the due administration of the estate, and where he is not a resident of this State. The testator may, by provision in his will, relieve a non-resident executor from giving bond. Before letters of administration or testamentary are issued all heirs and legatees are cited by the surrogate to appear and object, if they desire. Citations are served personally or by publication.

Descent and Distribution of the Property of Decedents.

1. Real estate. Widow has common-law dower. Husband has courtesy in property of which wife dies seized. (See Married Women.) Real estate of intestate descends: 1. To lineal descendants; 2. To father; 3. To mother; 4. To collateral. Descendants take shares of parents, except when all are of equal consanguinity, when all share alike.

2. Personal estate. After debts are paid, personal property is distributed: 1. One-third to the widow and the residue to children or their heirs or legal representatives; 2. If there are no children, one-half is given to the widow and the other to the next of kin; 3. If there is no descendant, parent, brother, sister, nephew or niece, the widow takes all; 4. If there is no widow, the children and their representatives take all; 5. If there is no widow or children, all goes to the next of kin; posthumous children take as survivors; married women's personal estates are distributed as men's, the husband taking to the same extent as a widow.

See FEASURES IN DEEDS, etc.

LEASES are conditional conveyances; species of contracts for the possession and profits of lands and tenements, either for life or for a certain term of years, or during the pleasure of the parties. A lease is a contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements on the one side, and a recompense of rent or other income on the other.<sup>a</sup>

One of the essential properties of a lease is that its duration must be for a shorter period than the duration of the interest of the lessor in the land; for if he disposes of his entire interest it becomes an assignment, and is not a lease. In other words, the granting of a lease always supposes that the grantor reserves to himself a reversion in the leased premises.

The party who leases is called the lessor; he to whom the lease is made, the lessee; and the compensation or consideration of the lease is the rent.

WHAT MAY BE LEASED. Anything corporeal or incorporeal lying in livery or in grant, may be the subject-matter of a lease; and, therefore, not only lands and houses, but commons, ways, fisheries, franchises, annuities, rent charges, and all other incorporeal hereditaments, are included in the common law rule.<sup>b</sup> Goods, chattels, or live-stock may also be leased, and although rent cannot technically be said to issue out of these, the contract for its payment is good, and an action for rent in arrear may be maintained on such leases.<sup>c</sup>

WHO MAY LEASE. All persons in possession of lands and tenements may grant leases of them, unless they are under some legal disability; as otherwise defining their rights and duties in relation to repairs, taxes, insurance, renewals, residences on the premises, modes of cultivation, fixtures and the like. In every well drawn lease provision is made for a forfeiture of the term in case the tenant refuses to pay rent, commits waste, or is guilty of a breach of the covenant to repair, insure, reside on the premises, or the like. This clause enables the lessor or his assigns to re-enter, in any such event, upon the leased premises and eject the tenant, leaving both parties in the same condition as if the lease were a nullity; but in the absence of a proviso for re-entry, the lessee would possess no such power, the mere breach of a covenant enabling him to sue for damages only. The forfeiture will generally be enforced by the courts, except where the landlord's damage are a mere matter of compensation, and can be readily compensated by money. But in the case of a forfeiture for the non-payment of rent, the proviso is allowed to operate simply as a security for rent, and the tenant will be relieved from its effects at any time by paying the landlord, or bringing into court the amount of all arrears of rent, with interest and costs.

LEASES—VARIOUS DETAILS.

Introductions in Leases.

The introduction to a conveyance, deed, lease, mortgage, etc., is called the "Tocatum" clause. See the text preceding DEED FORMS, above.

That the said party of the second part will pay, or cause to be paid, all water-rates and all taxes and assessments that may be laid, charged or assessed on said demised premises, pending the existence of this lease;

That if at any time after any tax, assessment, or water-rate shall have become due or payable, the party of the second part, or his legal representatives, shall neglect to pay such water-rates, tax, or assessment, it may be lawful for the party of the first part to pay the same at any time thereafter, and the amount of any and all such payments so made by the party of the first part shall be deemed and taken, and are hereby declared to be, so much additional and further rent, for the above demised premises, due from and payable by the party of the second part; and may be collected in the same manner, by distress or otherwise, as in hereinafter provided for the collection of other rents to grow due thereon.

It is especially understood and agreed, by and between the parties aforesaid:

That if the rent above reserved, or any part thereof, shall be behind or unpaid on the day of payment, whereas the same ought to be paid, as aforesaid, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained to be kept by the party of the second part, his executors, administrators, or assigns, it shall and may be lawful for the party of the first part, or his heirs, executors, administrators, agent, attorney or assigns, at his or their election, to declare said term ended, and into the said demised premises, or any part thereof, either with or without process of law, to re-enter, and the party of the second part, or any other person or persons occupying, in or upon the same, to oust, remove, and put out, using such force as may be necessary in so doing, and the party of the second part, or his heirs, executors, administrators, agent, attorney or assigns, shall be bound to restore the said premises again to possession and enjoy, as of his or their first and former estate; and to discharge for any rent that may be due thereon, upon any property belonging to the party of the second part, whether the same be exempt from execution by law or not; and the party of the second part, in that case hereby waives all legal rights which he now has, or may have, to hold or retain any such property under any exemption laws now in force in this State, or in any other way.

That it is intended hereby to give the party of the first part, his heirs, executors, administrators, agent, attorney, or assigns, a valid and first lien, upon any and all the goods, chattels, or other property belonging to the party of the second part, as security for the payment of said rent, in manner aforesaid, anything heretofore contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

That if at any time said term shall be ended at such election of said party of the first part, or his heirs, executors, administrators, agent, attorney, or assigns, as aforesaid, or in any other way, the party of the second part does hereby covenant and agree to surrender and deliver up said above-described premises and property, peaceably, to the party of the first part, or his heirs, executors, administrators, agent, attorney, or assigns, immediately upon the determination of said terms, as aforesaid.

That if the said party of the second part, or his legal representatives, shall remain in possession of the same one day after notice of such default, or after the termination of this lease, in any of the ways above named, he or they shall be deemed guilty of a forcible detainer of the premises, and shall be subject to all the conditions and provisions above named, and to eviction and removal, forcibly or otherwise, with or without process of law, as above stated.

That neither the right given to this lease, to collect the rent that may be due under the terms of this lease by sale, nor any proceedings under the same, shall in any way affect the right of said party of the first part to declare this lease void and the term hereby created ended, as above provided upon default made by said party of the second part.

That said party of the first part hereby waives his right to any notice from said party of the second part, of his election to declare this lease at an end, under any of its provisions, or any demand for the payment of rent, or the possession of premises leased herein; but the simple fact of the non-payment of the rent reserved shall constitute a forcible entry and detainer as aforesaid.

That said party of the second part shall not remove any buildings or other improvements on said premises without written consent of said party of the first part.

That the said second party shall pay and discharge all costs and attorney's fees and expenses that shall arise from enforcing the covenants of this indenture by the party of the first part.

It is further understood and agreed, That all the conditions and covenants contained in this lease shall be binding upon the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the parties to these presents respectively.

In witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

MORTGAGES are conditional conveyances; conveyances of estates or property by way of pledge, for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it.<sup>1</sup> It is an estate created by a conveyance absolute in form, but intended to secure the performance of some act (generally specified in the conveyance as the condition, etc.), such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed (in the conveyance or) at the time of making such conveyance.<sup>2</sup>

All kinds of property, real or personal, which are capable of an absolute sale, may be the subject of a mortgage; rights in remainder and reversion, franchises and choses in action, may, therefore, be mortgaged. But a mere possibility or expectancy, as that of an heir, cannot.<sup>3</sup>

Both real and personal property may be mortgaged, and in substantially the same manner, except that a mortgage being in its nature a transfer of title, the laws respecting the necessity of possession of personal property and the nature of instruments of transfer being different, require the transfer and conveyance to be made differently in the two cases.

Mortgages are to be distinguished from sales with a contract for repurchase; the distinction is important,<sup>4</sup> but turns rather upon the evidence in each case than upon any general rule of distinction.<sup>5</sup>

A mortgage differs from a pledge; the general property passes by a mortgage, whilst by a pledge only the possession, or at most, a special property passes. Possession is inseparable from the nature of a pledge, but is not necessary to a mortgage.<sup>6</sup>

TRANSFER OF PERSONAL PROPERTY by way of mortgage is a common class of transfers on condition, and is regulated by statute. A mortgage of personal property, like that of real estate, may (in the absence of a statute otherwise) consist of an absolute bill of sale; and a separate instrument of defeasance given at the same time.<sup>7</sup> And although the bill of sale is absolute, and no writing of defeasance is given back, parol testimony is still admissible to prove that it was intended only as collateral security.<sup>8</sup> It is well settled that mortgages of personal property need not be under seal.<sup>9</sup> In the absence of stipulations to the contrary, the mortgagee of personal property has the legal title thereto, and the right of possession; and he may have an action against any one taking them from the mortgagor.<sup>10</sup> And parol proof is not admissible to show an agreement that the mortgagor should remain in possession, the mortgage itself being silent upon the subject.<sup>11</sup> And although the mortgage contains an express stipulation that the mortgagor shall remain in possession until default of payment, and with a power to sell for the mortgage debt, the mortgagee may nevertheless sustain trover against an officer attaching the goods as the property of the mortgagor.<sup>12</sup> As between the mortgagor and mortgagee, a mortgage is valid, although there be no delivery of the property, and no possession by the mortgagee, or deposit of the mortgage in the proper office for record.<sup>13</sup> But as to creditors, subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, the mortgagees must have and retain the possession of the mortgaged property, or the mortgage acknowledged, must be recorded in the proper office in the county in which the property conveyed, or a greater part thereof, shall be. Such record is equivalent to actual delivery and continued possession of the property.

A MORTGAGE MUST BE IN WRITING when it is intended to convey the legal title.<sup>14</sup> It must be in one single deed which contains the whole contract. In the absence of a statute to the contrary it may be in two separate instruments—the one containing an absolute conveyance and the other a defeasance;<sup>15</sup> and generally whenever it is proved that a conveyance was made for the purposes of security, it will be treated as a mortgage, and all the incidents thereof attached thereto.<sup>16</sup> The defeasance must be of as high a nature as the conveyance to be defeated.<sup>17</sup> The rule as to the admission

they must be accompanied by immediate delivery and changed possession of the mortgaged goods unless the mortgage is recorded in recorder's office of county where mortgagor resides within ten days from the time it is executed.

upon the margin of the record, or by a satisfaction piece duly acknowledged and recorded.
See GENERAL FORMS, below.

Mortgages of Personal Property.
Chattel mortgages are in the usual form.

Foreclosure is effected at any time. Due notice thereof must be served upon the mortgagor and upon all purchasers from him subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, and upon all persons having recorded liens upon the same property which are prior to the mortgage.

Possession, in the absence of stipulations to the contrary, is and remains in the mortgagee.

Sale. After notice has been served upon the parties, it must be published in the same manner and for the same length of time as is required in cases of the sale of like property on execution, and the sale is concluded in the same manner. The sheriff conducting the sale executes to the purchaser a bill of sale of the property, which affixtually transfers to the purchaser all the title and interest on which the mortgage operated as a lien.
Recording. Necessary immediately against third persons.

Acknowledgment is unnecessary.

After condition broken, the mortgagor or his assignee may proceed to sell the mortgaged property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the mortgage and costs of sale, having first given notice of time and place of sale, by written or printed hand-bills, posted up in at least four public places in the township or city in which the property is to be sold, at least ten days previous to the sale.

A chattel mortgage which is not accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued possession of the things mortgaged is void unless such mortgage is forthwith deposited in the office of the register of deeds in the county in which the property is then situated, or the mortgagor resident, etc.
Chattel mortgages are renewable, yearly.

Sec. 5. If, after breach of the conditions, the mortgagor or any person claiming under him is not desirous of taking and holding possession of the premises, he may proceed for the purpose of foreclosure in either of the following modes: R. S. 1879, Ch. 90.

First, he may give public notice in a newspaper if any, or if not, in the State paper, three weeks successively, of his claim by mortgage, on such real estate, describing the premises intelligibly, and naming the date of the mortgage, and that the condition in it is broken, by reason whereof he claims a foreclosure; and cause a copy of such printed notice, and the name and data of the newspaper in which it was last published, to be recorded in each registry of deeds in which the mortgage deed is or by law ought to be recorded, within thirty days after such last publication.

Second, he may cause an attested copy of such notice to be served on the mortgagor or his assignee, if he lives in this State, by the Sheriff or his Deputy of the same County, by delivering it to him in hand, or leaving it at his last and usual abode; and cause this original notice and the Sheriff's return thereon to be recorded within thirty days after such service as aforesaid. And in all cases the certificate of the Register of Deeds shall be prima facie evidence of the fact of such entry, notice, publication of foreclosure, and of the Sheriff's return.

Sec. 6. The mortgagor, or person claiming under him, may redeem the mortgaged premises within three years next after the first publication of service of the notice mentioned in the preceding Section, and if not so redeemed the right of redemption shall be forever foreclosed.

Sec. 26. In all cases the mortgage may be discharged by the deed of release from the person authorized to discharge it, or by causing satisfaction and payment under his hand to be entered in the margin of the record of such mortgage in the Register's office. But the practice is to make and file of foreclosure one year by agreement of parties in the instrument.

Mortgages of Personal Property.

Chattel mortgages are void against third parties unless recorded in the clerk's office of the town where the mortgagor lives, or possession is taken and retained by the mortgagee.

The right of redemption is lost after sixty day's notice of foreclosure. A bill of sale gives absolute title to the grantee and must be recorded.

MARYLAND.

Mortgages of Real Property.
Acknowledgment. Same as DEANS, above.

Executed same as DEANS, above, containing power authorizing sale on nonfulfillment of conditions Foreclosure in Baltimore is effected by a decree of sale from the court of equity; a trustee is appointed by the court, who gives bond, advertises the property, makes sale thereof, and reports to said court for confirmation, etc.

In the various counties the mortgagee, or his legal representative, sells under the power in the mortgage, after due notice, and giving bond, makes sale, and reports the same to the court of equity for confirmation.
Recording. Same as DEANS, above.

Mortgages of Personal Property.
 Chattel mortgages are in use, but in practice are equivalent only to bills of sale. See title SALE.

MASSACHUSETTS.

 Acknowledgment, Execution and Recording. Same as DANES, above.

Execution. Same as DANES, above; with the insertion of the condition, with provisions authorizing a sale of the premises in case of failure by the mortgagor to perform the condition.

Foreclosure is effected either by an action at law, or by entry and possession continued peaceably for three years, or else by a sale in accordance with the provisions of the power in the mortgage.

Redemption cannot be made after a valid sale. Satisfaction, release, or discharge of a mortgage may be on the margin of the record, as follows:

I, C. D., acknowledge to have received full payment and satisfaction for the debt secured by the within deed of mortgage here recorded, given to me by A. B., and do hereby cancel and discharge the same. Witness my hand. C. D.

Chattel mortgages need not be acknowledged nor under seal. Foreclosure may be effected at any time within the statute of limitation. Recording. Absolute bills of sale, intended to operate as mortgages, must be recorded. Chattel mortgages must be recorded on the records of the city or town where the mortgagor resides when the mortgage is made, and on the records of the city or town in which he principally transacts his business. If the mortgagor is a non-resident of the State, then the recording must be in the city or town where the property then is. Unless so recorded the mortgage is not valid except between parties, unless the mortgagor has and continues actual possession of the mortgaged goods. Vessels and goods at sea, mortgages or transfers thereof need not be recorded.

MICHIGAN.

Mortgages of Real Property.

Acknowledgment. Same as DANES, above. Execution. Same as DANES, above; with power of sale on breach of condition, etc. Foreclosure is effected either in chancery, or by advertisement under a power of sale. Recording. Same as DANES, above. Sale may be had one year after foreclosure by a court of chancery, and fifteen months when sold under the power contained in the mortgage.

Satisfaction or discharge may be by the mortgagor or his personal representative, acknowledging the same in writing on the margin of the record in presence of the register, or by a written certificate, duly acknowledged and recorded at length in the same manner as the original mortgage. See GENERAL FORMS, below.

Mortgages of Personal Property.

Chattel mortgages are in the usual form; they are absolutely void unless accompanied by an immediate delivery of the goods and chattels mortgaged, and a continued possession of the same by the mortgagor, unless the mortgage, or a true copy thereof, shall be filed in the office of the township clerk of the township, or city clerk of the city, where the mortgagor resides.

Concealment, disposition, embargement, or removal of property thus mortgaged is a misdemeanor.

Renewal. Chattel mortgages extend and are valid for one year only, but may be extended from year to year upon the mortgagor's affidavit annexed to a copy of the mortgage, stating the mortgagor's interest. See GENERAL FORMS, below.

MINNESOTA.

Mortgages of Real Property.

Acknowledgment, Execution and Recording. Same as DANES, above. They usually contain a power of sale authorizing foreclosure by advertisement, in which case, upon six weeks' publication of the notice of sale prescribed by law, the premises may be sold to satisfy the mortgage debt. An absolute conveyance in form, if intended as security, will be deemed a mortgage.

Foreclosure may be effected by an action at law, and a personal decree obtained in the same action against the mortgagor for any deficiency from the debt and costs arising on the sale of the mortgaged premises. The mortgagor has his action for a strict foreclosure, but a final decree cannot be rendered until one year after judgment for the amount due on the mortgage.

Redemption, where the mortgage is foreclosed by publication, can be made within one year from the date of sale. If foreclosed by action at law and sale of premises, the right of redemption expires one year from the date of confirmation, at which time the purchaser is entitled to a final decree.

Satisfaction or discharge of a mortgage is made by an entry on the margin of the record thereof, signed by the mortgagor or his legal representative, acknowledging satisfaction, etc.; also by a separate instrument in the usual form, duly executed, acknowledged, and recorded in the same manner as the original mortgage. See GENERAL FORMS, below.

Mortgages of Personal Property.

Acknowledgment before some officer authorized to take acknowledgments or a town clerk is necessary. They must be filed in the office of the town or city clerk, both where the property is situated and where the mortgagor resides at the time of the execution thereof. They are valid only for two years after date. See GENERAL FORMS, below.

MISSISSIPPI.

Mortgages of Real Property.

Acknowledgment and Execution. Same as DANES, above. Foreclosure is effected by bill in equity in the chancery court, which may be filed at any time after the debt secured becomes due. Lien of the mortgage attaches only from the date of delivery to the clerk for record. Recording must be within three months from execution. Satisfaction. Upon receiving satisfaction the mortgagor shall enter the same upon the margin of the record of the mortgage, upon which the title inverts in the mortgagor. Deeds of trust are in frequent use instead of mortgages. They have foreclosure proceedings. See GENERAL FORMS, below.

MISSOURI.

Mortgages of Real Property.

Acknowledgment, Execution and Recording. Same as DANES, above. Foreclosure by action at law. Sale after foreclosure. GENERAL FORMS, below.

The property is conveyed to a trustee with power to sell and to convey the property absolutely if the debt is not paid. Foreclosure or suit. Releases are made by deed. Trustees must be joined by the creditors in order to give a valid release.

Mortgages of Personal Property.

Satisfaction must be entered within seven days under pain penalty and actual damages, etc.

NEBRASKA.

Mortgages of Real Property.

Acknowledgment, Execution and Recording. Same as DANES, above. Every deed, though absolute, shown by any other instrument of writing to be intended as a security in the nature of a mortgage, is deemed a mortgage. Foreclosure may be effected after any delinquency or default of condition or payment, and sale may be made by decree of court. Possession remains in the mortgagor.

When the consideration of the mortgage is less than five hundred dollars, the mortgaged property may be sold by the sheriff or any constable of any county in which such mortgage has been filed, upon written request of the mortgagor, his agent or attorney.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Acknowledgment. Same as Deeds, above.

Executed same as Deeds, above. An absolute conveyance as security is deemed a mortgage. A mortgage is usually accompanied by a bond and warrant to confirm judgment thereon, which may be entered in any court at any time and execution issued when any part of the debt or interest is due.

Foreclosure is effected by writ of scire facias, according to statute. This cannot be used out within a year after the mortgage becomes due, unless it contains an express waiver of delay. Ejectment is rarely resorted to on account of the equity of redemption.

Lien of a mortgage (except for purchase-money) dates from the time of recording it. When a mortgage is prior in time to all other liens except other mortgages and ground rents, the lien is not discharged by a sale under execution upon any other lien. Otherwise, it is discharged by any judicial sale.

Married woman need not join in a mortgage of her husband's property unless in fraud of her rights. A sheriff's sale of the mortgaged property discharges her dower.

 Etc., etc.

And upon the further condition, that if the said parties of the first part will well and truly indemnify and save harmless the said party of the second part of, from and against all of the notes remaining unpaid, which were given by said party of the second part to E. POWERS OF ATTORNEY. See title AGENCY, subject ATTORNEYS IN FACT, ante, p. 72, et seq.

WILLS are either absolute or conditional conveyances of property.

A WILL (last will and testament) is the disposition of one's property, to take effect after death.

The word will includes codicils. Wills are unwritten (or nuncupative) and written. The former are called nuncupative from nuncupate, to name, declare, or make a solemn declaration; because this class of wills were required to be made in solemn form before witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing, and by the appointment and naming of an executor.

The practice of allowing the owner of property to direct its destination after his death is of very ancient date, coeval with civilization itself, and with rare exceptions has existed always and everywhere.

BEQUEATHING is the giving of personal property, by will, to another.<sup>1</sup> The word may be construed "devise."<sup>1</sup> A gift, by will, of personal property, is called a "bequest."

BLINDNESS. See TESTATOR — CAPACITY, below.

CANCELLATION of a will, with an intention to revoke, is a revocation, and the destruction or obliteration need not be complete,<sup>2</sup> but must be by the testator or in his presence, and by his direction and consent.<sup>3</sup> It must be done with an intention to revoke; and evidence is admissible to show with what intention the act is done.<sup>4</sup>

CHARITIES are gifts to general public uses, which may be extended to the rich as well as the poor.<sup>5</sup> They embrace gifts to the poor of every class, including gifts to poor relations, where the intention is manifest;<sup>6</sup> for every description of college and school, and their instructors and pupils, where nothing contrary to the fundamental doctrine of Christianity is taught; to all institutions for the advancement of the Christian religion;<sup>7</sup> to all churches,<sup>8</sup> chapels, hospitals, orphan asylums,<sup>9</sup> dispensaries,<sup>10</sup> and the like;<sup>11</sup> to general public purposes,<sup>12</sup> as supplying water or light to towns, building roads and bridges, keeping them in repair, etc.,<sup>13</sup> and to other charitable purposes general in their character.<sup>14</sup>

A CODICIL is an addition to, or qualification of, a last will and testament.

All codicils are a part of the will, and are to be so construed.<sup>15</sup> A codicil duly executed, and attached or referring to a paper defectively executed as a will, has the effect to give operation to the whole as one instrument.<sup>16</sup> There may be numerous codicils to the same will; in such cases the later ones operate to revive and republish the earlier ones.<sup>17</sup> But in order to set up an informally executed paper by means of one subsequently executed in due form, referring to such informal paper, the reference must be such as clearly to identify the paper.<sup>18</sup>

It is not competent to provide by will for disposition of property to such persons as shall be named in a subsequent codicil, not executed according to the prescribed formalities in regard to wills; since all papers of that character, in whatever form, if intended to operate only in the disposition of one's property after death, are of a testamentary character, and must be so treated.<sup>19</sup>

CY PRES (as near as) is the rule of construction applied to a will (but not to a deed) by 518; 1 Somn. C. C. 273; 10 Penn. St. 23; 35 N. H. 445; 28 Penn. St. 23. 6-7 B. Mon. 351, 401; 4 Ired. which, where the testator evinces a particular and a general intention, and the particular intention cannot take effect, the words shall be so construed as to give effect to the general intention.<sup>3</sup> The principle is applied to sustain wills in which perpetuities are created, so that, if it can possibly be done, the devise is not regarded as utterly void, but is expounded in such a manner as to carry the testator's intention into effect, as far as the law respecting perpetuities will allow. This is called a cy pres construction. Its rules are vague and depend chiefly upon judicial discretion applied to the particular case.<sup>4</sup> It is also applied to sustain devises and bequests for charity.

DESIGNATION is the expression used by the testator to denote a person or thing instead of the name itself; thus, a bequest of the farm which the testator bought of a person named, or of a picture which he owns, painted by a certain artist, would be a designation of the thing. So a legacy "to the eldest son" of A. would be a designation of the person.<sup>4</sup>

A person to whom a devise is made is called the "devisee." A person to whom the residue of a testator's real estate is devised, after satisfying the debts and bequests and devises, is called the "residuary devisee." All persons having an existence, and even embryos, may be devisees, unless excepted by some positive law. But the devisee must be in existence, except in cases of devises to charitable uses.<sup>5</sup> In general, whosoever can acquire property by his labor and industry may receive a devise.<sup>6</sup> So, aliens, married women, minors, and persons of non-sane memory, may be devisees.<sup>7</sup>

A testator, being one who devises real estate, is called also a devisor. Any person who can sell an estate may, in general, devise it; and there are some disabilities to a sale which are not such to a devise.<sup>8</sup>

The term devise properly and technically applies only to real estate. The object of the devise must therefore be that kind of property.<sup>1</sup> But it is also sometimes improperly applied to a bequest or legacy.<sup>1</sup>

Devises are contingent or vested; that is, after the death of the testator. When the vesting of any estate in the devisee is made to depend upon some future event, it is contingent; if the event never occurs, or until the event does occur, no estate vests under the devise. But where the future event is referred to merely to determine the time at which the devisee shall come into the use of the estate, this does not hinder the vesting of the estate at the death of the testator.<sup>2</sup> The law favors the construction of the will that shall vest the estate; but this construction must not be carried to such an extent as to defeat the manifest intent of the testator.<sup>3</sup> Where the estate is given absolutely, but only the time of the possession is deferred, the devisee or legatee acquires a transmissible interest, although he never arrive at the age to take possession.<sup>4</sup>

Where the devisee dies during the life of the testator, and the devise has lapsed, the estate so devised will go to the heirs, notwithstanding a residuary devise. But if the devise be void, as where the devisee is dead at the date of the will, or is made upon a condition precedent which never happens, the estate will go to the residuary devisee if the words are sufficiently comprehensive.<sup>5</sup>

EFFECTS denotes "property," and this in a more extensive sense than "goods."<sup>6</sup> In a will "effects" will carry the whole personal estate,<sup>7</sup> but not real estate unless the word "real" be added.<sup>8</sup> When preceded or followed in a will by words of narrower import, if the bequest is not residuary, it will be confined to species of property of the same kind with those previously described.<sup>9</sup>

FARM. In a will the word "farm" may pass a freehold, if it appears that such was the intention of the testator.<sup>10</sup>

GOODS. In wills "goods" is a most comprehensive and general term, and, if there is nothing to limit it, it will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as bonds, furniture, money, notes, stocks, etc., etc.,<sup>11</sup> but in general it will be limited to the context of the will.<sup>12</sup>

GOODS AND CHATTELS. In wills the term "goods and chattels," if unrestrictive, will pass all personal property.<sup>13</sup>

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE. By this expression, in wills, all personal chattels will pass that may contribute to the use or convenience of the household, or the ornament of the house: as, china, linen, pictures, and plate. But goods or plate in the hands of the testator in the way of his trade will not pass; nor will books nor wines.<sup>14</sup>

GOODS. This expression, in wills, will pass everything of a permanent nature (that is, legacy may be of animals or inanimate things, provided they are specified and separated from all other things; a specific legacy may, therefore, be of money in a bag, or of money marked and so described, as, "I give two eagles to A. B. on which are engraved the initials of my name." A specific legacy may also be given out of a general fund.<sup>7</sup> If the specific article given be not found among the assets of the testator, the legatee loses his legacy; but, on the other hand, if there be a deficiency of assets, the specific legacy will not be liable to abate with the general legacies.<sup>8</sup>

Most persons are capable of becoming legatees, unless alien enemies, or prohibited by statute. Legacies to subscribing witnesses to a will are frequently declared void by statute.<sup>7</sup> Bequests to further or carry into effect any illegal purpose which the law regards as subversive to sound policy or good morals, would be held void, and the executor justified in not paying them.<sup>8</sup> But bequests to charitable uses are favored,<sup>9</sup> and decisions have been liberal in upholding bequests for the most diverse objects, and expressed in the most general terms.<sup>6</sup>

Abatement is a reduction of a legacy, general or specific, on account of the insufficiency of the estate of the testator to pay his debts and legacies. When the estate of a testator is insufficient to pay both debts and legacies, it is the rule that the general legacies must abate proportionately to an amount sufficient to pay the debts. If the general legacies are exhausted before the debts are paid, then the specific legacies abate, and proportionately.<sup>6</sup>

Ademption is the extinction or withholding of a legacy in consequence of some act of the testator, which, though not directly a revocation of the bequest, is considered in law as equivalent thereto, or indicative of an intention to revoke. Republication of a will may prevent the effect of what would otherwise cause an ademption.<sup>4</sup>

The question of ademption of a specific legacy depends entirely upon the intention of the testator, as inferred from his acts under the rules established in law. Where the relations of the parties are such that the legacy is, in law, considered as a portion, an advancement during the life of the testator will be presumed an ademption, at least to the extent of the amount advanced; but not where the advancement and portion are not of the same kind;<sup>10</sup> or where the advancement is contingent and the portion certain;<sup>11</sup> or where the advancement is expressed to be in lieu of, or compensation for, an interest;<sup>12</sup> or where the bequest is of uncertain amount;<sup>13</sup> or where the legacy is absolute, and the advancement for life merely;<sup>14</sup> or where the devise is of real estate.<sup>15</sup> But where the testator was not a parent of the legatee, nor standing in loco parentis, the legacy is not to be held a portion, and the rule as to ademption does not apply,<sup>16</sup> except where a bequest for a particular purpose, and money is advanced by the testator for the same purpose.<sup>17</sup>

The ademption of a specific legacy is effected by the extinction of the thing or fund without regard to the testator's intention;<sup>18</sup> but not where the extinction of the specific thing is by act of law, and a new thing takes its place;<sup>19</sup> or where a breach of trust has been committed, or any trick or device practised with a view to defeat the specific legacy;<sup>20</sup> or where the fund remains the same in substance, with some unimportant alterations;<sup>21</sup> or where the testator lends the fund on condition of its being replaced.<sup>22</sup>

Construction. 1. The technical import of words is not to prevail over the obvious intent of the testator.<sup>23</sup> 2. Where technical words are used by the testator, or words of art, they are to have their technical import, unless it is apparent that they were not intended to be used in that sense.<sup>24</sup> 3. The intent of the testator is to be determined from the whole will.<sup>25</sup> 4. Every word shall have effect if it can be done without defeating the general purpose of the will, which is to be carried into effect in every reasonable mode.<sup>26</sup> 5. Where a will of personality is made abroad, the law of the testator's domicile (lex domicilii) must prevail, unless it appear that the testator had a different intent.<sup>27</sup>

rent intention, but not against it. Where there is no such internal evidence the following positions of law appear established: 1. If the same specific thing is bequeathed twice to the same legatee, in the same will, or in the will and again in the codicil, in that case he can claim the benefit of only one legacy. 2. Where two legacies of a quantity of equal amount are bequeathed to the same legatee in one and the same instrument, there also the second bequest is considered a mere repetition, and he shall be entitled to one legacy only. 3. Where two legacies of unequal amount of quantity are given to the same person in the same instrument, the one is not merged in the other, but the latter shall be regarded as cumulative, and the legatee entitled to both. 4. Where two legacies are given to the same legatee by different instruments, in that case the latter shall be cumulative, whether its amount be equal or unequal to the former.

Debt—Release of by legacy. If one leave a legacy to his debtor, it is not to be regarded as a release of the debt, unless that appears to have been the intention of the testator. Where one appoints his debtor his executor, it is at law regarded as a release of the debt; but this is in general regulated by statute. But in equity it is considered that the executor is still liable for the amount of his own debt. Where one appoints his creditor executor, and he has assets, it operates to discharge the debt, but not otherwise.

Satisfaction of by legacy. In equity, if a legacy equal or exceed the debt, it is presumed to have been intended to go in satisfaction; but if the legacy be less than the debt, it is deemed satisfaction for that amount. Courts allow very slight circumstances to rebut this presumption of payment; as where the debt was not contracted until after the making of the will; where the debt is unliquidated and the amount due not known; where the debt was due upon a bill or note negotiable; where the legacy is made payable after the debt falls due; where the legacy appears from the will to have been given with a different intention; where there is express direction in the will for the payment of all debts and legacies, or the legacy is expressed to be for some other reason.

Legatee. One to whom a legacy is bequeathed. A residuary legatee is one to whom the residuum of the estate is bequeathed or devised by will.

Children. The description of children as legatees may have reference to the time of testator's death, or that of making the will; the former is the presumed intention, unless from the connection or circumstances the latter is the apparent intent, in which case it must prevail. This term will include a child unborn; but it will sometimes have a more restricted application, and thus be confined to children born before the death of the testator; it will make no difference whether the bequest be to children begotten or to be begotten, or which "may be born." "Heirs" may be construed children, and "children," when used to designate one's heirs, may include grandchildren; but if the word "children" is used, and there are persons to answer it, then grandchildren cannot be comprehended under it. The general rule is, that a devise to a man and his children, he having children living at the time when the will takes effect, creates a joint estate in the father and children; but if he has no children he takes an estate tail; and a similar legacy of personal estate gives the father a life-estate if he have no children at the time the will takes effect; but if there are children living they take jointly with the father.

The term "children" will not include illegitimate children, if there are legitimate children to answer the term; otherwise it may or may not, according to circumstances.

Cousins. The term "cousins" will be restricted to its primary signification when it is before used in the same will in that sense. Upon a bequest "to my cousin T. S.," if I have two cousins of that name, evidence may be adduced to show which of the two was intended.

Heirs. A legacy to one and his heirs, although generally conveying an absolute fee in real estate, and the entire property in personality, may by the manner of its expression and connection be held to be a designation of such persons as are the legal heirs of the person named; and thus they take as purchasers by name.

Interest in property bequeathed or devised. Property given specifically to one for life, and remainder over, must be enjoyed specifically during the life of the first donee, although that may exhaust it; but where the bequest is not specific, as where personal property is limited to one for life, remainder over, it is presumed that the testator intended the same property to go over, and if any portion of it be perishable, as long annuities, it shall be sold and converted into personal property, for the benefit of all concerned.<sup>1</sup> In personal property there cannot be a remainder in the strict sense of the word, and therefore every future bequest of personal property, whether it be preceded or not by any particular bequest, or limited on a certain or uncertain event, is an executory bequest, and falls under the rules by which that mode of limitation is regulated.<sup>2</sup> An executory bequest cannot be prevented or destroyed by any alteration whatsoever in the estate out of which or after which it is limited,<sup>3</sup> and this privilege of executory bequests, which exempts them from being barred or destroyed, is the foundation of an invariable rule, that the event on which an interest of this sort is permitted to take effect is such as must happen within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years and a fraction of another year, allowing the period of gestation afterwards.<sup>4</sup> Legacies may be made conditional; in such case the condition may be either precedent or subsequent; in the former case no interest vests in the legatee until the performance of the condition, and in the latter it is liable to be defeated by the failure or non-performance of the condition.<sup>5</sup>

No particular form of words is requisite to constitute one a residuary legatee. It must appear to be the intention of the testator that he shall take the residue of the estate, after payment of debts and meeting all the appointments of the will.<sup>6</sup> The assent of the executor to a specific legacy is requisite to vest the title in this legatee.<sup>7</sup> This will often be presumed where the legatee was in possession of the thing at the decease of the testator and the executor acquiesces in his right.<sup>8</sup>

Names. Mistakes in the name or description of legatees may be corrected whenever it can be clearly shown by the will itself what was intended.<sup>9</sup> The only instance in which parol evidence is admissible to show the intention of the testator as to a legatee imperfectly described is that of a strict equivocation; that is, where it appears from extraneous evidence that two or more persons answer the description in the will.<sup>10</sup> See COURSES, above.

Nephews and nieces are terms which, in the description of a legatee, will receive their strict import, unless there is something in the will to indicate a contrary intention.<sup>11</sup>

Wife. A bequest to "my beloved wife," not mentioning her by name, applies exclusively to the wife at the date of the will, and is not to be extended to an after-taken wife.<sup>12</sup>

One not lawfully married may, nevertheless, make a legacy by the name or description of the wife of the one to whom she is reputed to be married,<sup>13</sup> but not if the reputed relation is the motive for the bequest.<sup>14</sup>

Payment. A legacy given generally, if no time of payment be named, is due at the death of the testator, although not payable until the executor has time to settle the estate in due course of law.<sup>15</sup> Legacies are not by common law due until one year after the decease of the testator, in order to allow the executor time to dispose of the estate and pay debts; and sometimes, by special order of the probate court, this is extended from time to time, according to circumstances.<sup>16</sup> Where legatees are under disabilities, as infancy or coverture, the executor cannot discharge himself by payment except to some party having a legal right to receive the same on the part of the legatee, which in the case of an infant is the legally appointed guardian, and in the case of a married woman is her husband; but in the latter case the executor may decline to pay the legacy until the husband makes a suitable provision out of it for his wife according to the order of the proper court.<sup>17</sup> The proper course in such case is for the executor to deposit the money on interest, subject to the order of the court.<sup>18</sup>

Translation is the bestowing of a legacy which has been given to one, on another; this is a species of ademption; but it differs from it in this, that there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption.<sup>19</sup>

MIND AND MEMORY. See TESTATOR, below. MOIETY is the half of anything; as if a testator bequeath one moiety of his estate to A., and the other to B., each shall take an equal part.<sup>20</sup>

MOVABLES. In a will "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass a growing crop, nor building materials on the ground.<sup>21</sup>

MYSTIC TESTAMENT is a will under seal.<sup>22</sup> It is a form of making a will which consists principally in enclosing it in an envelope and sealing in the presence of witnesses.

NUNCUPATIVE. See introduction to this subject, above.

OLOGRAPH is a will that is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself.<sup>23</sup>

PENCIL is any instrument made of black lead, red chalk, or other suitable substance, for writing. Any instrument for writing without ink. A will written with a pencil cannot on this account be annulled.<sup>24</sup>

PRECATORY WORDS. See WORDS, below.

PROBATE (or probation) of a will must always be made in the probate court, or the court having exclusive jurisdiction in all matters pertaining to the settlement of estates. The probate of a will has no effect until the jurisdiction of the court before which the will is made, either as to persons or property, is established by foreign jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup>

Any person interested in a will may compel probate of it by application to the probate court, who will summon the executor or party having the custody of it.<sup>2</sup> The judge of probate may cite the executor to prove the will at the instance of any one claiming an interest.<sup>3</sup> The attesting witnesses are indispensable, if the contestants so insist, as proof of the execution and authenticity of the will and the competency of the testator, when they can be had.<sup>4</sup> But if all or part of the subscribing witnesses are absent from the State, deceased, or disqualified, then their handwriting must be proved.<sup>5</sup> It will be presumed that the requisite formalities were complied with when the attestation is formal, unless the contrary appears.<sup>6</sup>

Wills over thirty years old, and appearing regular and perfect, and coming from proper custody, are said to prove themselves.<sup>7</sup> Wills lost, destroyed, or mislaid at the time of the testator's death may be admitted to probate upon proper proof of the loss and of the execution.<sup>8</sup>

RECOMMENDATORY WORDS. See WORDS, below.

REPUBLICATION is an act by a testator from which it can be concluded that he intended that an instrument which had been revoked by him should operate as his will; or it is the re-execution of a will by the testator with a view of giving it full force and effect. The republication is "express" where there has been an actual re-execution of it.<sup>1</sup> It is "implied" when, for example, the testator, by a codicil executed according to the statute of frauds, reciting that he had made his will, added, "I hereby ratify and confirm my said will, excepting in the alterations after mentioned;"<sup>2</sup> the will might be at a distance, or not in the power of the testator, and it may be thus republished.<sup>3</sup> The republication of a will has the effect: 1. To give it the full force of a will made at the time of the republication; if, for example, a testator by his will devise "all his lands in A," then revokes his will, and afterwards buys other lands in A, the republication made after the purchase will pass all the testator's lands in A.<sup>4</sup> 2. To set up a will which has been revoked.<sup>5</sup>

RESIDUUM is that which remains of something after taking away a part of it; as, the residuum of an estate, a part which has not been particularly devised by will. A will bequeathing the general residue of personal property passes to the residuary legatee everything not otherwise effectually disposed of; and it makes no difference whether a legacy falls into the estate either by lapse or as void at law, the next of kin is equally excluded.<sup>6</sup>

The residuary clause is that clause in a will by which the part of the property is disposed of which remains after satisfying previous bequests and devises.<sup>7</sup> The residuary estate is what remains of the testator's estate after deducting the debts and the bequests and devises. See DEVISER and LEGATEE, above.

SINGULAR NUMBER. In law the singular number often includes the plural. A bequest to "my nearest relation," for example, will be considered as a bequest to all the relations in the same degree who are nearest to the testator. A bequest made to "my heir" by a person who had three heirs, will be construed in the plural.<sup>1</sup>

TESTAMENT. A testament is a solemn, authentic instrument of writing, by which a person declares his will as to the disposal of his estate and effects after his death. A testament, to be valid, must be made when the testator is of sound mind; and it must be subscribed, witnessed, and published in such manner as the law prescribes.<sup>2</sup> Testaments are nuncupative or written. See the beginning of this article, and LAST WILL, above.

TESTATE is the having made a valid will. The condition of one who leaves a valid will at his death.

TESTATOR is a person who makes and leaves a testament or will at death. In general, all persons may be testators; but to this rule there are various exceptions: 1. Persons who are deprived of understanding cannot make wills; idiots, lunatics, and infants are among this class. 2. Persons who have understanding, but being under the power of others cannot freely exercise their will; and this the law presumes (in the absence of a statute to the contrary) to be the case with a married woman, and therefore she cannot make a will without the express consent of her husband to the particular will. When a woman makes a will under some general agreement on the part of her husband that she shall make a will, the instrument is not properly a will, but a writing in the nature of a will or testament. 3. Persons who are deprived of their free will cannot make a testament; as, a person in duress.<sup>2</sup>

Age. A testator must be of full age. See DEMENTIA SENILE, and law of various States, as given below.

Blindness is so far an incapacity that it requires express and satisfactory proof that the testator understood the contents of the will, in addition to what is required in other cases.<sup>3</sup>

Deaf and dumb persons will labor under a similar inconvenience, and especially in communicating with the witnesses, unless they have been educated so as to be able to write.<sup>4</sup> But the witnesses must be present with the testator, be within the possible cognisance of his remaining senses.<sup>5</sup>

Delirium from disease or stimulus, while the paroxysm continues to such an extent as to deprive a person of the right exercise of reason, is a sufficient impediment to the execution of a will.<sup>6</sup> But there is not the same presumption of the continuance of this species of mental perversion, whether it proceed from the intoxication of stimulus or the delirium of fever, as in ordinary insanity.

Dementia senile. This is a defect of capacity frequently in question in courts of justice in testing the validity of wills. If the testator has sufficient memory remaining to be able to collect the elements of the transaction, viz. the amount and kind of property he had, and the number of his children, or other persons entitled to his bounty, and to hold them in mind sufficiently to form an understanding judgment in regard to them, he may execute a valid will.<sup>7</sup> Age itself is no sure test of incapacity.<sup>8</sup> But when one becomes a child again, he is subject to the same incapacities as in his first childhood.<sup>9</sup>

Idiots are wholly incapable of executing a will, whether the defect of understanding is congenital or accidental.

Lunatics are incapable of executing a last will and testament, except during such lucid intervals as allows the exercise of memory and judgment. It must be an absolute, but not necessarily a perfect, restoration of reason and reflection, and not a mere temporary remission.<sup>10</sup>

Mind and memory. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words he "ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the object of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them."<sup>11</sup>

Monomania or partial insanity. This is a mental or moral perversion, or both, in regard to a particular subject or class of subjects, while in regard to others the person seems to have no such morbid affection.<sup>12</sup> It consists in the belief of facts in regard to the particular subject of the affection, which no sane person would or could believe.<sup>13</sup> When it appears that the will is the direct offspring of this morbid affection it should be held invalid, notwithstanding the general soundness of the testator.<sup>14</sup>

Persuasion. While the person is confined within those limits which leave the mind free, persuasion may be used to induce another to make his will, or even to make it in one's own favor. But if such persuasion should so far operate on the mind of the testator that he would be deprived of a perfectly free will, it would vitiate the instrument.<sup>15</sup>

TRADITION. See IN TERRORUM, above. TRANSLATION. is the bestowing of a legacy which has been given to one, on another; it is a species of ademption, but it differs from it in this, that there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption.<sup>16</sup> See ADEMPITION, above.

UNCERTAINTY. See CONTRACTS, CERTAINTY, ante.

UNINTELLIGIBLE. When a contract, a law, or a will is unintelligible, it has no force or effect whatever. See CONTRACTS, title CONSTRUCTION.

WARNING. See IN TERRORUM, above. "When" in wills, standing by itself, is a word of condition denoting the time at which the gift is to commence.<sup>17</sup> The context of a will may show that the word "when" is to be applied to the possession only, not to the vesting of a legacy; but to justify this construction there must be circumstances, or other expressions in the will showing such to have been the testator's intent.<sup>18</sup>

WORDS. It is a general rule that contracts and wills shall be construed as the parties understood them; every person, however, is presumed to understand the force of the words he uses, and therefore technical words must be taken according to their legal import even in wills, unless the testator manifests a clear intention to the contrary.<sup>19</sup>

Precatory words are expressions in a will praying or requesting that a thing shall be done. Although recommendatory words used by a testator, of themselves, seem to leave the devisee to act as he may deem proper, giving him a discretion, as, when a testator gives an estate to a devisee, and adds that he hopes, recommends, has confidence, wish, or desire that the devisee shall do certain things for the benefit of another person, yet courts have construed such precatory expressions as creating a trust.* But this construction will not prevail where either the objects to be benefited are imperfectly described, or the amount of property to which the trust should attach is not sufficiently defined.]

LOUISIANA.

Mystic, Noncupative, and Olographic Wills and Testaments.

Execution, form, regulations, etc. Donations inter vivos or morte causa, cannot exceed two-thirds of the property of the donor, if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child; one-half, if he leaves two children, and one-third, if he leaves three or a greater number. The same children included descendants of whatever degree they be, it being understood that they are only counted for the child they represent.

Donations inter vivos or morte causa cannot exceed two-thirds of the donor's property, if the donor, having no children, leaves a father, mother, or brother.

Any disposal of property, whether inter vivos or morte causa, exceeding the quantum of which a person may legally dispose to the prejudice of the forced heirs, is not null, but only reducible to that quantum.

In all dispositions inter vivos or morte causa, impossible conditions, those which are contrary to the laws, or to morals, are considered not written. Substitutions and fiduciary contracts are and remain prohibited.

Every disposition by which the donee, the heir, or legatee is charged to preserve for, or to return a thing to a third person is null, even with regard to the donee, the instituted heir, or the legatee.

The disposition by which a third person is called to take the gift, the inheritance, or the legacy, in case the donee, the heir, or the legatee does not take it, shall not be considered a substitution, and shall be valid. The same shall be observed as to dispositions inter vivos and morte causa, by which the usufruct is given to one, and the naked ownership to another.

There are four different forms of wills:

1. Noncupative (or open) by public act.
2. Mystic (or sealed).
3. Olographic.

A noncupative testament, under private signature, must be written by the testator himself, or by any other person from his dictation, or even by one of the witnesses, in presence of five witnesses residing in the place where the will is received, or of seven witnesses residing out of that place. Or it will suffice if, in the presence of the same number of witnesses, the testator presents the paper on which he has written his testament, or caused it to be written out of their presence, declaring to them that that paper contains his last will. In either case, the testament must be read by the testator to the witnesses, or by one of the witnesses to the rest, in the presence of the testator; it must be signed by the testator, if he knows how, or is able to sign, and by the witnesses, or at least two of them, in case the others know not how to sign, and those of the witnesses who know not how to sign must affix their mark.

§-Civil Code, art. 2293. c-Id. art. 2294. f-Id. art. 2295. g-Id. art. 2297-2302. h-Id. art. 2303-2307. i-

In the country, it suffices for the validity of noncupative testaments under private signature, if the testament be passed in the presence of three witnesses residing in the place where the testament is received, or of five witnesses residing out of that place, provided a greater number of witnesses cannot be had.

A noncupative testament by public act must be received by a notary public in the presence of three witnesses, residing in the place where the will is executed, or of five witnesses not residing in the place.

This testament must be made by the testator, and written by the notary as it is dictated.

It must then be read to the testator, in presence of the witnesses.

Express mention is made of the whole, observing that all these formalities must be fulfilled at one time, without interruption, and without turning aside to other acts.

This testament must be signed by the testator; if he declares that he knows not how, or is not able to sign, express mention of his declaration, as also of the cause that hinders him from signing, must be made in the act.

This testament must be signed by the witnesses, or at least by one of them for all, if the others cannot write.

A mystic, or secret testament, is made in the following manner: the testator must sign his dispositions, whether he has written them himself, or has caused them to be written by another person.

The paper containing these dispositions, or the paper serving as their envelope, must be closed and sealed.

The testator shall present it thus closed and sealed to the notary, and to seven witnesses, or he shall cause it to be closed and sealed in their presence. Then he shall declare to the notary, in the presence of the witnesses, that that paper contains his testament written by himself, or by another by his direction, and signed by him, the testator. The notary shall then draw up the act of superscription, which shall be written on that paper, or on the sheet that serves as its envelope, and that act shall be signed by the testator, and by the notary and the witnesses.

All that is above prescribed shall be done without interruption or turning aside to other acts; and in case the testator, by reason of any hindrance that has happened since the signing of the testament, cannot sign the declaration made by him thereof, without it being necessary, in that case, to increase the number of witnesses.

Those who know not how or are not able to write, and those who know not how or are not able to sign their names, cannot make dispositions in the form of the mystic will.

If any one of the witnesses to the act of superscription know not how to sign, express mention shall be made thereof.

In all cases the act must be signed by at least two witnesses.

An olographic testament is that which is written by the testator himself. In order to be valid it must be entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator. It is subject to no other form, and may be made anywhere, even out of the State.

It suffices, for the validity of a testament, that it be valid under any one of the forms prescribed by law; however defective it may be in the form under which the testator may have intended to make it.

Testaments made in foreign countries, or the other States or Territories of the Union, shall also suffice in this State if they be executed with all the formalities prescribed for the validity of wills, in the place where they have been respectively made.

art. 2307-2308. j-Id. art. 2309-2310. k-Id. art. 2311-2312.

The form of foreign wills is regulated by law of domicile.

Testaments of persons employed in armies in the field, or in a military expedition, may be received by a commissioned officer, in presence of two witnesses. If the testator is sick or wounded they may be received by the physician or surgeon attending him, assisted by two witnesses. These testaments are subject to no other formalities than that of being reduced to writing, and being signed by the testator, if he can write, by the person receiving them, and by the witnesses. The testament made in this form shall be null in six months after the return of the testator to a place where he has an opportunity to employ the ordinary forms.

Testaments made during a voyage at sea may be received by the captain or master, in presence of three witnesses, taken by preference from among the passengers; in default of passengers, from among the crew. The testament made at sea can contain no disposition in favor of any person employed on board the vessel, unless they be relations of the testator. This testament is subject to the same formalities as the preceding one, and no others, and is not valid unless the testator dies at sea, or within three months after he has landed, in a place where he is able to make it in the ordinary forms.

Heirs. Ascendants and descendants are called forced heirs, because they cannot be deprived of a certain portion of the estate of their ascendants or descendants. The portion of which they cannot thus be deprived is called their legitime, and that portion of his estate of which the testator may dispose is called the disposable portion.

Witnesses. The following persons are absolutely incapable of being witnesses to testaments:

1. Women of what age soever.
2. Males who have not attained the age of sixteen years complete.
3. Persons insane, deaf, dumb, or blind.
4. Persons whom the criminal laws declare incapable of exercising civil functions.
5. Persons who are constituted heirs or named legatees, under whatsoever title it may be. Mystic testaments are excepted from this provision.

Also, I further give and devise unto my said dear wife the use and occupation of my dwelling-house of —, in the said county of —, with the garden and offices therunto belonging, and also — acres of land adjoining thereto, called —, to be enjoyed by her so long as she shall continue my widow and shall choose to reside in the said dwelling-house; and I do direct my trustees of the said term of — years hereinafter limited, to permit her to reside for, &c., and occupy the same accordingly.

ANOTHER.
— And my will is, that my said wife shall and may reside in the house wherein I now dwell, situate at — aforesaid, in case she shall think proper so to do, and shall and may have and enjoy the use of all my furniture, plate, linen, china, and glass, which shall be therein at my decease, for and during her life, if she shall so long continue my widow, and unmarried, but not otherwise. Written Will—General Form.With Various Bequests and Devises.*

I, A. B., of, etc., do make and publish this, my first as well as last will and testament:

I direct, that my body be decently interred in the burial ground of — church, in —, according to the rites and ceremonies of said church, and that my funeral be conducted in a manner corresponding with my estate and situation in life.

And, as to such worldly estate as it hath pleased God to intrust me with, I dispose of the same as follows:

First: I direct that all my debts and funeral expenses be paid as soon after my decease as possible, out of the first moneys that shall come into the hands of my executors, from any portion of my estate, real or personal.

Also: I direct that a fair valuation or appraisement be made, according to law, of all my estate, by three competent and impartial neighbors.

Also: I direct that all my stock in trade be sold at public vendue, or outcry, for good current money, but not upon credit; and that all the real estate of which I shall die seized, or possessed, shall be sold by my executors, for its reasonable value, for like current money, or on such credit, and the amount thereof be secured, in such a manner as is usual in like cases, to insure the full and punctual payment thereof: And to effect this, my intention, I do hereby vest in my executors full power and authority to dispose of my real estate, in fee simple, or for a term of years, or otherwise, in as full and large a manner, in every respect, as I could myself do, if living.

Also: I direct that the whole of my household furniture shall be and remain the absolute property of my beloved wife, if she shall be living at the time of my decease; but, if she shall not survive me, then that the same shall be given, absolutely, to my daughters, so long unmarried, as shall be living, share and share alike, and to be apportioned by three impartial neighbors, mutually chosen by my said daughters for that purpose.

Also: I do direct that the net proceeds of my personal estate, heretofore ordered by me to be disposed of, be divided equally as soon as it can be done, share and share alike, amongst my said wife and my several children who shall survive me; and that the proceeds of my real estate, if sold on credit, shall be divided in like manner, as soon as they shall come into the hands of my executors.

The heirs or representatives of any of my children, who shall have died between the time of my decease and the time of such division or distribution, to be entitled to such share or shares as their respective ancestors would have been entitled to receive if they were living.

And, the share of my real and personal estate, herein bequeathed to my wife, to be in lieu of her dower, at common law, if she shall so elect.

And, I do hereby appoint and nominate my esteemed neighbors, C. D. and E. F., executors of this, my last will and testament, reposing full confidence in their integrity to perform the trust thus committed to them.

In the name of God. Amen.

I, A. B., of the county of —, in the State of —, farmer, being weak in body (or in perfect health of body, as the case may be), and of sound mind, memory, and understanding; but considering the uncertainty of this transitory life, do make and publish this, my last will and testament, in manner and form following, to wit:

First: It is my will, and I do order, that all my just debts and funeral expenses be duly paid and satisfied, as soon as conveniently can be, after my decease.

Item: I give and bequeath unto my dear wife, W., one bed, one cow, etc., together with such of my household furniture and kitchen utensils as she may choose to keep for her own use.

Item: I give and bequeath unto my said wife, the use and occupation of my plantation, etc., until my son, S., shall attain the age of twenty-one years (she maintaining and educating my minor children thereout), and from and after his arrival at such age, then I give and devise the said plantation, etc., unto my son, S., his heirs and assigns, forever; he or they paying thereout, unto my other children hereinafter named, the several sums of money to them respectively bequeathed; and also paying unto my said wife the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars (which sum I hereby bequeath to her) yearly, and every year, during her natural life, for her maintenance and support;

All which legacies to my said wife I do hereby declare to be in lieu and stead of her dower, at common law. And, in case of the death of my said son, S., before his arrival to the age aforesaid, then I do order and direct that my executors, hereinafter named, or the survivor of them, shall, as soon as conveniently may be, after his decease, sell and dispose of my said plantation, etc., to such person or persons, and for such price or prices, as may be reasonably gotten for the same; and for that purpose I do hereby authorize and empower my said executors, or the survivor of them, to sign, seal, execute, and acknowledge all such deeds or deeds of conveyance as may be requisite and necessary for the granting and securing the same to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, in fee simple: And the moneys arising from such sale, to put and place out to interest, on good security, for the payment of the said annuity, hereby bequeathed to my said wife; the residue of the interest to be applied to the maintenance and education of such child, or children, as shall then be under age.

Item: I give and bequeath unto my son, O., the sum of one hundred dollars; to be paid to him six months after my decease.

Item: I give and bequeath unto my daughter, D., the sum of one hundred dollars, to be paid to her on her arrival at the age of twenty-one years, or the day of her marriage, whichever shall first happen.

And, as touching all the real, residue, and remainder of my estate, real and personal, of what kind or nature whatsoever the same may be, in the county of — aforesaid, or elsewhere, I give and devise the same unto my said wife, W., during her natural life, and from, and immediately after her decease, I give and devise the same unto my three children, S., O., and D., and to their heirs and assigns forever, to be equally divided among them.

And, lastly, I nominate, constitute, and appoint my said wife and my son S. to be the executors of this, my will, hereby revoking all other wills, legacies, and bequests by me heretofore made, and declaring this, and no other, to be my last will and testament.

Written Will—General Form.
Appointing Residuary Legatee, Executors—Disposing of Stock in Trade—Granting Annuities, Bequests, Devise—Power to Employ Attorneys, Prosecute Suits Abroad, etc., etc.

I, A. B., of —, in the county of —, ssd., being in a very infirm state of health, and sensible of my liability to sudden death, at the same time being in my own apprehension of sound mind, do judge it best to make, and accordingly do hereby make this my last will and testament.

It is my will that all my just debts and the charges of my funeral be paid and discharged by my executors hereinafter named and appointed, and that my estate, as soon as conveniently may be after my decease, and I leave the charges of my funeral to the direction of my said executors.

I give, devise, and dispose of all my estate, real and personal (save what shall be necessary for the payment of my just debts and funeral charges), in the following manner:

I give to my daughter, D. R., and to her heirs and assigns, seven thousand five hundred dollars lawful money, which with what I heretofore advanced to and for her, viz., before her interment, amount to —, I judge to make at least two thousand dollars. And I discharge her and the heirs of her late husband, L. H. A., and all concerned, and that may be concerned with and for her and them, of what I charged him with in my books.

I give to my daughter, D. U., and to her heirs and assigns, ten thousand dollars lawful money.

I give to my daughter, D. T., and to her heirs and assigns, ten thousand dollars lawful money, to be paid to her when she shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, if she shall live so long; if she shall die before she shall arrive at such age, I give the same sum to such issue, to be paid to such issue, in equal shares, when and as each of them shall arrive at twenty-one years of age, or at the time of his or her marriage, whichever first shall happen. And in the mean time, it is my will that the same sum be put and kept at interest for the benefit of the said D. T., and for such issue, and I empower my executors, or whoever shall have the care of the same, ten thousand dollars, to apply as much of the interest and income of the same sum, as they shall judge best for and towards her and their support and education.

I give to my beloved wife, W. B., sixteen hundred and seventy-five dollars lawful money, also the value of five hundred dollars, like money, more, in such of my household goods as she shall choose; also the household goods and other things which belonged to her, and which she brought to me at our marriage, and all the personal estate since left to her by Madam M. M. by her will.

I also give to my said wife, W. B., and to her heirs, my negro boy, named Titus, as a servant for life, with the apparel he shall have at the time of my decease.

I also give to her my two-wheeled chaise, and what belongs to it or tacking, etc., and one of my carriage horses, namely, that which she shall choose of them.

I also give to my said wife, W. B., during her residence at —, the right of sitting in my new house, where she and my children usually sit; in the meeting-house in said, etc., wherein the Rev. Mr. P. R. usually officiates as pastor, and in such part of the same pew as she shall think proper, she paying one sixth part of the taxes which shall be charged or laid on and for said pew during the same time.

I also give and grant to my said wife, W. B., during her life, the annuity and sum yearly of eight hundred dollars lawful money, which, with what I have heretofore given to her, I mean to be, and that she accept the same in full of her right of dower in my estate, and I give to her, as above, upon condition, that she, my said wife, shall give to my executors, when a-Where a testator in his will directed his executor to support a person, it was held that such direction amounted to a legacy, and if the executor (or in case demanded, a release of all demands and claims of dower and otherwise, of and against my estate, save what I have herein given to her.

As my body servant, named B. S., has generally served me with great diligence and integrity I give to the same B. S. — dollars lawful money, together with his apparel, agreeably to a writing I have heretofore executed for that purpose; and if hereafter he be unable to support himself, that he be supported by my sons, B. and C., in equal shares, and so by their respective heirs, and so as to free the town of — from any charge for the support and maintenance of the said B. S.; and I charge what I hereby give to my sons, as well as themselves, with the performance hereof.

I give and grant to my honored mother, M. B., during her life, the annuity and sum yearly of five hundred dollars lawful money, on condition that it be received by her in discharge of my part of the yearly payment, to be made to her by myself and others, by force of the last will of my grandfather, Capt. G. R., deceased; yet I mean that this payment or annuity shall not be so made or understood, as to be my said mother from her claim which she has and may have against others, by force of my said grandfather's will.

I give to Mr. M. F., on the day and at the time of my decease, — dollars lawful money, provided and on condition he shall then be employed or engaged in my business in like manner as he now is. This gift I so make him in testimony of the great regard I have for him, and the sense I have of his great faithfulness in my service.

I give to the Rev. Mr. P. R. — dollars lawful money.

And to the end that the payment of the annuities and yearly payments aforesaid, may be effectually secured, and the same duly paid, it is my will that — thousand and — hundred dollars lawful money of my personal estate shall not be received by or for my children, or any of them, until the said annuities and yearly payments be completed and cease to become due; but that the same sum of my personal estate shall, until the same annuities cease to become due as aforesaid, rest in the hands, and be under the management and improvement of my executors hereinafter named and appointed, to be placed and kept at interest on what they shall judge to be good security, and that such interest shall be applied and used as by this my will is directed. Except, and it is my will, that if there be any surplus arising from the interest of the said — thousand and — hundred dollars, in any year, after the several annuities, in this my will ordered, are fully paid for the same year, in such case, the same surplus, as it shall be received, as soon as conveniently may be done, shall be placed and kept at interest for the uses, ends, and purposes in this my will mentioned. But in case of the death of my executors before the said annuities, and each of them shall cease to become due, or their refusing or neglecting to take the care of the said — thousand and — hundred dollars and the income thereof, then it is my will that the said — thousand and — hundred dollars of my estate, and what may have arisen by the income thereof, if any be, shall be delivered over and put into the hands of any two gentlemen (not being children), the judge of the probate of wills for said county for the time being, shall judge fit to nominate and appoint as agents or trustees (which I empower and request him to do) to receive the same, to be by them managed, let, and placed at interest as aforesaid, for the purposes aforesaid, and the interest thereof annually by them applied to payment of the said annuities and agreeably to my other directions about the same. And in case the said judge shall refuse or neglect, in the opinion of my said wife, reasonably to nominate, appoint, and engage such agents or trustees, then it is my will, that the same — thousand and — hundred dollars, and the interest thereof unapplied, if he refused the trust, the administrator cum testamento annexo, neglected it, an action would well lie, where there were sufficient assets. any be, shall be delivered over and paid or put into the hands of any two gentlemen my said wife, W. E., shall please to nominate and appoint to receive the same, and those persons shall and may receive the same, in like manner, and for the uses, intents, and purposes aforesaid. But it is to be understood, that into whose handssoever the said — thousand and — hundred dollars and the interest thereof, shall be delivered as aforesaid, being nominated and appointed by the said judge of probate, or by my said wife, W. E., as aforesaid, the same shall be so received as that such receivers shall, at the time of the receipt of the same, make themselves accountable for the said — thousand and — hundred dollars and the interest thereof, according to the intent of this, my will, relative thereto, and that the gentlemen into whose hands the said — dollars and any interest or income thereof shall be put and placed as aforesaid, shall, as receipt thereof, give bond to the said judge of probate to account for the same sum and the interest thereof, according to the tenor and intent of this, my will, and apply the interest thereof as hereinbefore directed.

And it is my will, that when the annuities aforesaid, and each of them, shall cease to become due, the said — dollars, with the overplus interest thereof, if any there be, shall be divided to and among my children hereinafter named, to whom I give the same accordingly, as followeth, videlicet: To my daughter, D. R., and to her heirs, — hundred and — dollars thereof. To my daughter, D. T., and to her heirs, other — hundred and — dollars thereof. To my daughter, D. U., and to her heirs, other — hundred and — dollars thereof. And the residue and remainder thereof to my three sons, E., D., and O., in equal shares, and so to their respective heirs.

The residue and remainder of all my estate, both real and personal, not herein otherwise disposed of, I give and grant to my sons, E., D., and O., in equal shares and proportions, and so to their respective heirs forever. The share of my son, O., of the same residue and remainder of my estate, to be paid to him when he shall come to the age of twenty-one years, but until then the same share to remain and be in the hands of my said executors, the personal estate to be let and placed at interest, and the real estate improved or let to the best advantage, for the use of the said O., and so in like manner his share of all surpluses of interest and income, which I would have added to the capital stock, and let at interest for his benefit, saving, nevertheless, that the same interest and income may be used, paid, and applied, as I do by this will grant, allow, order, and provide.

If my estate at —, or any part thereof, should at my decease remain by me unseised, and my executors shall think it best, that the same, or any part thereof, should be sold before my son, O., shall arrive at twenty-one years of age, in such case, I give and grant to my executors full power to grant and sell the share or part I give to the said O. therein, for such consideration as to my executors shall seem reasonable, and to make and duly execute any deed or instrument they shall judge proper for the purpose, and the money arising from the same sale to remain and be in the hands of the said executors during said O.'s minority, and by them be let at interest for the use of the said O. Provided, nevertheless, that my sons, E. and D., shall at the same time sell their respective shares in the same estate.

And it is my will that if my son, O., shall die before he shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, then what shall remain of his share in the whole of my estate, according to this, my will, shall go, and I in this case give the same to his surviving brethren aforesaid, in equal shares, and so to their respective heirs. But if either of these brethren shall happen to die without legal issue living, and this while the said O. shall be living, then I, in the case aforesaid, give the same to the survivor of said brethren (namely, E. and D.), and the heirs of such survivor.

And in case my daughter, D. T., shall die before she shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, leaving no lawful issue living, then what shall remain of the share of the said D. T. of my estate and the interest thereof, unapplied, shall go, and I give the same in such case as follows, viz.: one-half part thereof to my daughter, D. R., and to her heirs, and the other half part thereof to my daughter, D. U., and to her heirs. But if either the said D. R. or D. U. shall die without issue and before the said D. T. shall arrive at twenty-one years of age, and the said D. T. dying aforesaid, then I give the whole of the same to the survivor of the said D. R. and D. U., and to the heirs of such survivor.

In case my executors shall judge it best not to sell my stock in trade, or any part thereof, immediately after my decease, but to continue the same, or any part thereof, in trade, for the benefit, but at the risk of such of my children as shall be concerned therein, then I empower my executors, for any term not exceeding twelve months next after my decease, to employ and improve my trading stock, or any part thereof, in the common course of trade as they shall think best for the benefit, and so at the risk of those, to whom, according to this will, this part of my estate shall belong; but I mean to limit the time of such improvement, that if any of this interest shall be at sea at the expiration of said twelve months, a further reasonable time shall be allowed to complete the voyage and voyages, the same interest may then be brought upon.

And it is my will, that my executors may pay the same first mentioned to be given to my said daughters respectively, in good bonds, payable to me at the time of my death, or thereabout, accounting such bonds at the value of them on the day of my death. And I desire my executors, if need be, to lend their names in said capacity to my daughters respectively, when desired, for the recovery and receipt of what shall be due on such bonds, and give proper power therefor. But if my executors shall not think fit so to do, when requested, then my will is that my daughters be paid in money equivalent.

And as my executors must necessarily have much trouble, and employ a great deal of time in executing this, my will, I desire and empower them to employ Mr. A. A., or any other person they shall think fit, in assisting them in the settlement of my accounts and affairs, and in the improvement of my trading stock, and that they agree to give and pay to him and them such sums of money out of my estate therefor, as they, my said executors, shall judge reasonable. Although it is my will, and I choose that the estates I have given to my son, O., and to my daughter, D. T., respectively, shall remain in the hands of my executors as aforesaid; yet, if my executors shall choose it, I consent that guardians be legally appointed for the said O. and D. T., respectively, and that their respective shares of my estate be paid to their respective guardians for the uses and intents in this, my will, limited, directed, and expressed.

And as it is my will, that so much of the income of what I have given to my daughter, D. T., as may be needful, may be applied for her support and education, so I will that the income of the estate I have given to my son, O., may be applied and expended for his support and education, until he shall arrive at twenty-one years of age, so far as shall be thought reasonable and best by such person or persons, as, during his minority, shall have the care of his share of my estate.

And it is my will, that my executors or either of them, join with Messrs. A. A. and A. V. in prosecuting the cause now or late depending in England for the recovery of the schooner I and cargo, and that he or they do everything which I might or could do for that and, so far as he or they shall think fit and judge best.

And I hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint my brother, E. B., and my friend, Mr. E. F., jointly and severally, to be executors of this my last will and testament, and so as that in case of the death of one of them, the survivor of lets shall be converted into money as aforesaid, then I will and direct that the same shall be divided into four equal parts or shares, and disposed of as follows, to wit:

One full, equal fourth part or share thereof I give, devise, and bequeath unto my said executors, hereinafter named, and the survivor of them, in trust, that they or he do and shall put and place the same out at interest on good, real security, or in the funded debts of the United States, the State of —, or the city of —, and pay over the interest or dividends thereof from time to time, when and as the same shall be got in and received, unto my beloved wife, W. B., during all the term of her natural life; which is to be in lieu of the dower to which she is entitled by law.

And from and immediately after the death of my said wife, W. B., I give, devise, and bequeath the principal of the said one-fourth part or share of my said residuary estate to be equally divided, share and share alike, between my daughters, D. B. and R. B., and my son, S. B., and any other child or children which I may have born by my present marriage; the part or share in this bequest of my said two daughters, D. B. and R. B., to be held, however, by my said executors, in trust, in the same manner and for the same uses as are hereinafter set forth and declared of and concerning the parts or shares of my said residuary estate bequeathed to them for the use of my said two daughters, D. B. and R. B.

One other of the said full, equal fourth parts or shares of the proceeds of my said residuary estate, I give, devise, and bequeath unto my said executors, hereinafter named, and the survivor of them, in trust, that they or he shall and do put and place the same out at interest in manner aforesaid, from time to time, when and as the same shall be got in and received, unto my said daughter, D. B., for and during all the term of her natural life; so, nevertheless, that the same shall be for her sole and separate use, notwithstanding any coverture, and not to be in any way or manner whatever liable to the contracts, debts, or engagements of any husband which she may hereafter have or take, and not to be in any way or manner whatever subject to the control or interference of such husband. And from and immediately after the decease of her, my said daughter, D. B., then, as to the said principal, in trust to and for the only proper use and benefit of all and every the child and children which she, my said daughter, D. B., may have, and the lawful issue of any of them who may then be deceased, having left such issue, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, such issue of any deceased child or children of my said daughter, D. B., taking, however, only such part or share thereof as his, her, or their deceased parent or parents would have had and taken, had he, she, or they been living.

One other of the said full equal fourth parts, etc. (as in preceding clause, only substituting R. B. for D. B.)

And the remaining one full equal fourth part or share of the proceeds of my said residuary estate, I give, devise, and bequeath unto my said executors, hereinafter named, and the survivor of them, in trust, that they or he do and shall put and place the same out at interest in manner aforesaid, and pay and apply such interest, or so much thereof as shall be requisite, toward the education and maintenance of my said son, S. B., until he attains the lawful age of twenty-one years; and when and as soon as he, my said son, arrives at the age aforesaid, then in trust to pay over the principal thereof, together with any accumulation of interest thereon which may be in their hands uninvested, unto him, my said son, S. B.

Item. In case of the decease of my said daughters, D. B. and R. B., or either of them, without leaving lawful issue, or of the decease of my said son, S. B., under age, and without leaving lawful issue, then, in such case, I give, devise, and bequeath the said part or share, hereinafter given, devised, and bequeathed to such child or child, unto my said executors, hereinafter named, and the survivor of them, in trust, to hold the same for my surviving child or children, in equal shares and proportions, in the same manner, for the same uses, intents, and purposes, and under the trusts and limitations as are hereinafter set forth and declared of and concerning the parts or shares of my said residuary estate hereinafter given, devised, and bequeathed for the use, benefit, and behoof of my said children, respectively. Item. I nominate, constitute, and appoint my friends, E. X. and J. N., of the said —, merchants, executors of this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all former wills and testaments by me at any time heretofore made; and do declare these presents only to be and contain my last will and testament.

In witness, etc.

The last will of me, A. B., of the town of —, in the county (or district, or parish) of —, and State of —, being of sound mind at the time of making and publishing this my last will and testament.

I give and devise all my estate, real and personal, whereof I may die seized or possessed, to T. T., of the said town of —, and B. X., of the same place; to have and to hold the same to themselves, their heirs and assigns forever, upon the uses and trusts following, namely:

In trust first to pay all my debts and funeral expenses:

Second, to pay to my wife, W., upon her sole and separate receipts, the interest, income, and revenue, of all my said estate, during the term of her natural life;

And third, upon the decease of my said wife, to convert all my said estate into money, if such a course shall be thought best by my said trustees, and pay to my daughter, D., the one third part thereof, it seeming to me best to give her an large share on account of her bodily infirmities and inability to provide for herself, and the remaining two-thirds equally to divide between my four sons, P., R., Q., and N.

If either of my children shall, before such division, have died, leaving lawful issue, such issue to receive the parent's share; but if there be no issue, then such share to fall into the general fund, to be divided among the survivors in the manner before directed.

And I hereby give to my said trustees full power and authority to sell any or all of my real estate at private or public sale, and invest the proceeds, or to lease the same as they may deem best for the interest of my family.

And if my said daughter, D., shall not have attained the age of twenty-one upon the decease of her mother, I hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint my said trustees guardians of the person and estate of my said daughter, D., during the remainder of her minority, commencing her to their fatherly care and protection.

And I hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint my said trustees, T. T. and B. X., executors of this my last will and testament.

In witness whereof, etc.

And I hereby declare, that if my said daughter, D. COPYRIGHT is the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing, and vending any original book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, photograph or negative thereof, or of a painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, and of models or designs intended to be perfected as works of the fine arts, upon complying with the provisions of the law of copyright; and in case of a dramatic composition of publicly performing or representing it, or causing it to be performed or represented by others. Also, the right to dramatize or translate one's own work.<sup>1</sup>

Copyright is not of a simple, but a complex nature, involving two conditions: one of publication, the other of exclusion.<sup>2</sup>

Statutes of copyright do not grant monopolies; they are only protective legislation against trespass on the rights of authors. Not that writers are a more important body than many others, but because it gives the State more trouble to keep thieves off their productions than of those of other skilled laborers, and also because it needs superior intelligence to see that ideas and woven words can be made property, and that they must be, or else their authors outlawed, degraded, and starved, and the community suffer in the end.<sup>3</sup>

In order to acquire a valid copyright in a work it is necessary that it should be original. If any part of the composition is copied or adopted by the writer from a prior existing work, of course the title falls with respect to this, as the writer cannot be the author of what he has adopted from another.<sup>4</sup> The law does not require that the subject of a book should be new, but that the method of treating should have some degree of originality. Copyright may exist in a novel arrangement, as well as in recent corrections and additions to an old work not the property of the compiler.<sup>5</sup>

The law rests upon no code of comparative criticism. It protects alike the humblest efforts at instruction or amusement, the dull productions of plodding mediocrity, and the most original and imposing displays of intellectual power.<sup>6</sup> It will secure to every person the property in every genuine product of their own mental labor, whether that product take the form of compilation, abridgment, new arrangement, or a wholly original work, if indeed there can be any such thing as a wholly original work.

The law will be liberally construed in favor of authors; and, leaving their comparative merits to be settled by critics at the tribunal of public opinion, it will protect and encourage their labors; the fruits of their literary toil are secured to them by the highest title, in order that they may keep open the springs of thought; and feed the intellectual life of the nation.<sup>7</sup>

ABRIDGMENTS. Writers of abridgments have in general been favorably regarded by both the courts of law and equity.<sup>8</sup> "Abridgments may with great propriety be called a new book, because not only the paper and print, but the invention, learning, and judgment of the author is shown in them, and in many cases are extremely useful, though in some instances prejudicial, by mistaking and curtailing the sense of the author." A fair abridgment is always entitled to protection.<sup>9</sup> To constitute a true and proper abridgment of a work the whole must be preserved in its sense, and then the act of abridgment is an act of the understanding, employed in copying a large work into a smaller compass, and rendering it less expensive and more convenient, both to the time and use of the reader, which make an abridgment in the nature of a new and meritorious work. An abridgment, when the understanding is employed in retrenching unnecessary and uninteresting circumstances, which rather deaden the narration, is not an act of plagiarism upon the original work, nor against any property of the author in it, but an allowable and meritorious work.<sup>10</sup>

A mere selection or different arrangement of parts of the original work, so as to bring it into smaller compass, will not be held a bona fide abridgment. There must be a real, substantial condensation of the materials, and intellectual labor and judgment bestowed thereon, and not merely the facile use of the scissors, or extracts of the essential parts constituting the chief value of the original work.<sup>11</sup> The abridgment must not only contain the arrangement of the book abridged; the ideas must also be taken from its pages. It must be in good faith an abridgment, not a treatise interlarded with citations. To copy certain passages from a book, omitting others, is in no sense a just abridgment; the judgment is not exercised in condensing the views of the author not condensed.<sup>12</sup> Between a compilation and an abridgment there is a clear distinction; a compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of the author. The former cannot be extended so as to convey the same knowledge as the original work; the latter contains an epitome of the work abridged, and consequently conveys substantially the same knowledge. The former cannot adopt the arrangement of the works cited; the latter must adopt the arrangement of the work abridged. The former infringes the copyright if the matter transcribed when published shall impair the value of the original work; a fair abridgment, though it may injure the original, is lawful.<sup>13</sup>

Copyright is personal property, and may be assigned. It must, however, be in existence to be assigned at law.<sup>12</sup> An execution purchaser, however, does not acquire the rights of an assignee in the article sold on execution; and a seizure and sale on execution of plates for which the debtor has obtained a copyright does not transfer the copyright to the purchaser; the debtor is entitled, without reimbursing the purchaser for money paid on such sale, to an injunction to restrain the purchaser from striking off and selling copies therefrom.<sup>13</sup> The assignee under a commission in bankruptcy are not entitled to the manuscripts of an author, although the copyright of a book which has been printed and published will legally pass for the benefit of creditors,<sup>14</sup> and the price paid by the bookseller is as completely open to the diligence of creditors as the price of another commodity or merchandise. The reason assigned for this distinction is that the author's right of withholding the publication continues till the very moment his book is actually given out to the public; even the printer of the book would not be entitled to sell it for his payment, although there was not the smallest doubt that he has a complete lien over it till delivery, to prevent the author or his creditors from taking advantage of the publication till he shall have been paid.<sup>15</sup>

The assignment of a copyright in general terms will be referred to what was in existence at the date of the assignment, and not to any future contingency.<sup>16</sup> It should not by construction be extended beyond the first term, unless it seems to be actually meant by the author to be transferred forever, and including any future contingency.<sup>17</sup> Where, however, it is clear that the author intends to transfer all his interest in the copyright, as well as his right in the continuance or extension of the term, a court of equity will enforce a reformation of the contract so as to include all the assignee's interest.<sup>18</sup> See 11 Beav. 212. —Laws U. The assignment of an interest in a copyright must be in writing, though an agreement to assign may be by parol; and such assignment though unrecorded will be valid as between the parties, and as to all persons not claiming under the assignees.<sup>4</sup>

An assignment of the copyright of a work must have been in writing, and attested by two witnesses, in order to entitle the assignee to maintain an action for pirating it,<sup>6</sup> for the statute requires two witnesses to a consent to publication, and it is naturally inferred that an assignment which is of a higher nature than a mere consent must have at least the same solemnity.<sup>7</sup>

In the absence of a special contract, the assignor of a copyright is entitled after assignment to continue selling such stock of the work as remains on hand at the date of the assignment.<sup>8</sup>

An agreement to assign will be treated in equity as a valid assignment, upon the maxim that equity considers done that which ought to have been done.<sup>9</sup>

An assignment made by parol may be valid if registered in the office where the copyright was entered, and certainly so if afterwards acted upon by the parties.<sup>1</sup>

An author or proprietor may assign a distinct portion of his copyright.<sup>2</sup>

ARRANGEMENT. See introduction to this chapter, and ABRIDGMENTS, above.

ARTICLES. In order to give the proprietor of an encyclopedia, magazine, periodical, review, or serial, a copyright in articles composed for him by others, it is not necessary that there should be any express contract that he should have the property in the copyright; the fact of the author being paid by the proprietor for articles supplied expressly for the periodical raises the presumption that the copyright is intended to be the property of the proprietor; otherwise, the articles might be published by the writer simultaneously, or shortly afterwards, possibly to the detriment and injury of such proprietor. But any author may reserve to himself the right to publish any such composition in a separate form, and he will be entitled to the copyright therein when published separately, without prejudice to the right of the proprietor of the publication in which such article may have first appeared.

AN AUTHOR is one who, by his own intellectual labor, applied to the materials of his composition, produces an arrangement or compilation new in itself.<sup>1</sup>

Authors may be considered as: 1. Originators; 2. Compilers; and 3. Translators.<sup>2</sup>

1. An originator has choice of his own thoughts and words, and his work is an entirely new and original one composed of such words and thoughts.

2. A compiler, abridger, arranger, or editor, is one who, by his own intellectual labor and judgment, arranges, composes, frames, or makes a composition of literary or scientific matter from various sources, and not originally produced by him.

3. A translator or interpreter is one who renders or interprets literary matter from one language to another, retaining the idea and the sense which are not his, and clothing them in words of his own selection. He is not a mere paraphraser, since a creditable paraphrase may be produced without the slightest familiarity with knowledge of, or reference to the language of the original work, by a mere reference to a previous translation and a book of synonyms. The labor of a conscientious and faithful translator must be much more original and primary.

Where a person employs another to compile a book, and gives him some suggestions as to its character and form, and agrees to pay for such compilation, and thereupon the author conveys the copyright to the employer, such conveyance relates only to the original or first term of the copyright. The author has the sole interest in the additional term allowed to authors, and may renew the copyright and enjoy the benefit of such renewal.<sup>3</sup>

When, in the course of the composition or production of a literary or scientific work, an author employs another or others to assist him, the product of their individual labor will belong to him who is the author and proprietor of the whole.<sup>4</sup>

Where a person is employed, for a reward paid to him, to write a musical composition to be used as part of the representation of a dramatic piece, and as a mere accessory to such dramatic piece, the composer of the musical accessory has no copyright therein; the property in music so composed becomes vested in the employer, and he does not require the consent of the composer in order to represent it.<sup>5</sup>

Unknown author. Where an author is unknown, the copyright of a book belongs to its publisher.<sup>6</sup>

BANKRUPTCY. The assignees under a commission of bankruptcy are not entitled to the manuscripts of an author, although the copyright of a book which has been printed and published will legally pass for the benefit of the creditors.<sup>7</sup> And the price paid by the book-seller is as completely open to the diligence of creditors as the price of any other commodity or merchandise.<sup>8</sup>

BEQUEST. Copyright may be the subject of a bequest, and on the death of the person to whom it belongs, without any such bequest, will devolve on his personal representatives.<sup>9</sup>

BOOK. A "book" within the meaning of the act may consist of a single sheet, as the words of a song or the music accompanying it.<sup>10</sup> But a newspaper or price current is not a book within the meaning of the act.<sup>11</sup>

A label used in the sale of any article is not a book within the provisions of the copyright act.<sup>12</sup>

BUSTS. See SCULPTURE, MODELS, AND BUSTS, below.

BLASPHEMY AND PROFANITY are offences not only against morals and the public weal, but in many States made a penal offence. They tend to undermine not only Christianity, which is a part of our law, but also disturb the peace and corrupt the morals of the community. If these offences in the shape of publications cannot be dealt with criminally, as in most cases they can, they are beyond the reach of any protection in law or equity; and while they are without relief from invasion by others, they will be restrained where any positive injury results from their publication.

CALENDARS, COURT GUIDES, DICTIONARIES, DIRECTORIES, AND WORKS OF THIS DESCRIPTION, ETC. The difficulty as to this class of cases is, that they do not only relate to a subject common to all mankind, but the mode of expression and language is necessarily so common that two persons must, to a very great extent, express themselves in identical terms in conveying the instruction or information to society which they intend.<sup>13</sup> In all cases where the sources from which materials for composition are to be derived are of a common or general nature, they are open to any one to gain a copyright in any arrangement of them which he chooses to make.<sup>14</sup> But although a person may thus acquire a copyright in his own arrangement of common materials, the materials themselves are equally open to every one else who chooses to have recourse to them, and different copyrights may be acquired in different arrangements of the same common materials. These arrangements must, however, be independent;

a later arrangement must not be a servile imitation or reproduction of an earlier one; otherwise it subjects its author to the charge of piracy.<sup>4</sup>

Of the whole class of works embracing tables of figures, dictionaries, calendars, court guides, etc., etc., the only mode of arriving at the amount of labor bestowed is by the common test resorted to of discovering the copy of errors and misprints indicating a servile copying.<sup>5</sup>

work is not a mortgage on the profits arising from a use of the copyright.<sup>6</sup>

COMPILATION. "It is a great mistake to suppose because all the materials of a work, or some parts of its plan and arrangements and modes of illustration, may be found separately, or in a different form, or in a different arrangement in other distinct works, that, therefore, if the plan, or arrangement, or combination in another work is new, or for the first time made, the author, compiler, or framer of it is not entitled to a copyright. The reverse is the truth in law," etc.<sup>7</sup> No person has a right to borrow another's plan and arrangement and illustrations, and servilely copy them into any other work.<sup>8</sup>

The preparation and collection of notes from various sources is a work of no small labor and intellectual exertion: the plan, the arrangement, and the combination of these notes belong exclusively to the person collecting and arranging them. He is justly deemed the author of them in their actual form and combination, and is entitled to a copyright accordingly. If no work could be considered by our law as entitled to the privilege of a copyright, which is composed of materials drawn from many different sources, and for the first time brought together in the same plan and arrangement, and combination, simply because those materials might be found scattered up and down in a great variety of volumes, perhaps in hundreds, and even thousands of volumes, and might have been brought together in the same way and by the same researches of another mind equally skilful and diligent, then what would become of the elaborate commentaries of modern scholars upon the classics, etc., treatises upon astronomy, mathematics, natural philosophy and chemistry, legal treatises, digests and text books, the materials of which must essentially depend upon faithful abstracts, formulae, and illustrations?<sup>9</sup>

See REQUISITES OF A VALID COPYRIGHT, below.

LISHERS, ETC.

In all agreements between authors and publishers the terms should be distinctly stated, and the respective rights of the parties clearly defined. The number of copies of which the edition is to consist should be declared; otherwise the publisher might, if so disposed, print 20,000 as one edition.<sup>11</sup>

Agreements between authors and publishers should express beyond a doubt whether they are to operate as assignments of the copyright in the work, or merely as licenses to publish.<sup>12</sup>
If the author sell and dispose of his manuscript in specie to a publisher, with the express understanding that the latter is to publish it, he cannot afterwards copyright in his own name;
the copyright belongs to the publisher.<sup>13</sup>

Where an agreement between author and publisher is that the publisher shall take the whole charge, risk, and duty of bringing out the work (as he thinks best for the interest of both parties), such publisher has the right of fixing the price of such work when brought out.<sup>14</sup>

When an agreement between author and publisher states that after payment of the expenses of publication, etc., "the profits remaining in every edition that should be printed of the work are to be divided into two equal parts, one moiety to go to the author, and the other to the publisher," this points out certain definite times for the adjustment of the accounts, and at which the author becomes entitled to terminate his agreement with the publisher. Nor can the publisher by stereotyping the work deprive the author of this

lisher, where the publisher agrees to publish the work and pay the author for copyright seven and a half cents for every copy of the book published, the publisher does not obtain the exclusive right to publish the work.<sup>16</sup>

If an author agree in writing to supply a bookseller or publisher with a manuscript of a work to be printed by the latter, an action for damages can be maintained for refusing to furnish the same,<sup>17</sup> provided the work be one which, if published, would not subject the author to punishment.<sup>18</sup>

Where, however, the author is engaged for a certain sum to write an article to appear, among others, in a work which is discontinued before any of it had been published, the publishers are not entitled to claim the completion of the article in order that it may be published in a separate form for general readers, but are bound to pay the author a reasonable sum for the part which he has prepared.

An author may bind himself not to write upon a particular subject, or only for a particular person.

COPY—DEFINITION OF, ETC. A copy (of an engraving, cut, print, photograph, painting, drawing, chromo, etc., etc.) is that which comes so near to the original as to give every person seeing it the idea created by the original.<sup>1</sup>

Trifling variations are not material,<sup>2</sup> whether reduced to the size of an engraving, or still more diminished in a photograph,<sup>3</sup> or enlarged to a painted diorama copy.<sup>4</sup> It is for the jury to consider whether the main design of the plaintiff's engraving had been copied, and whether the defendant's engraving was substantially a copy of the plaintiff's.

COPYISTS. The mere copyist, or the slavish imitator, who produces old materials substantially in their own forms, without new combination, is entitled to no protection under the statute.<sup>5</sup>

CRIMINAL PUBLICATIONS. "No author or printer who fairly and conscientiously promulgates opinions, with whose truth he is impressed, for the benefit of others, is answerable as a criminal. A malicious and mischievous intention is, in such a case, the broad boundary between right and wrong; it is to be collected from the offensive levity, scurrilous and opprobrious language, and other circumstances, whether the act of the party was malicious."<sup>6</sup>

DELAY. If any delay occurs in the assertion of the title to copyright infringed, the delay must be accounted for to the satisfaction of the court; otherwise, no assistance will be given.<sup>7</sup>

DICTIONARIES. In dictionaries there may be a certain degree of skill exhibited as to order and arrangement, or ingenuity exhibited in the selection of phrases and illustrations, which are the best exponents of the sense in which a word is to be used; there may also be great labor in the logical deduction and arrangement of the word in its different senses, when the sense of the word departed from its primary signification. On the other hand there is a large mass of words that admit of only one acceptation, and can be translated only one way, and the large mass of dictionaries are composed of words of that description; hence the new dictionary must, of necessity, contain much of the information and the results obtained from its predecessors.<sup>1</sup> Where words are of such a nature that the information contained in them must of necessity, if it be correct, be exactly the same in both, the test frequently applied by the courts to determine whether the second is a mere unlaborious production of the first, or has been compiled by original effort from common sources, is this:—to examine the inaccuracies which appear in both works, and see whether they are identical; if so, the inference of piracy is almost invariably drawn.<sup>2</sup>

See CALENDARS, COURT GUIDES, ETC., ETC.

DIGESTS, ETC. The digest of a report usually included in and known as the head note is a species of property that will receive protection.

The head note, or the side or marginal note of a report is a thing upon which much skill and exercise of thought is required; it may be considered in itself a species of brief and condensed report—an abstract of the decision conveying the principle upon which it is founded, and the pith and substance of the case.<sup>3</sup>

The right of selecting passages from books of reports (including entire judgments) in treatises upon particular subjects is not disputed.

Had it been, the greater part of our law libraries would be much thinned, and we deprived of many valuable works, as a great portion consists of mere transcripts from books of re-

Digests of legal decisions are somewhat of the nature of abridgments. They give, under headings arranged alphabetically, a summary of the legal points decided in each case referred to, and if such arrangement and summary are the product of skill and mental labor on the part of the compiler, and the compiler is guilty of no infringement of the copyright in the published reports, he is entitled to a copyright; but if the compiler's labor is purely mechanical, and he only arranges in alphabetical order the marginal or head notes of cases contained in published reports, he is guilty of infringing the copyright in such reports.<sup>5</sup>

"A digest, undoubtedly, may be made from the published reports without necessarily subjecting the compiler to the charge of piracy; for instance, where the party applies the exertion and skill of his own brain in extracting the principal or the substance of the decisions before him, dressing it up in his own language, so as to produce an original work, not a mere stringing together of marginal or side notes which the labor and intelligence of the authors have fashioned ready to the compiler's hand."<sup>1</sup>

DIRECTORIES, GUIDE BOOKS, MAPS, ETC. In the case of a directory, dictionary, guide-book, map, or the like, where there are certain common objects of information, which must, if described correctly, be described in the same words, a subsequent compiler is bound to set about doing for himself that which the first compiler has done. The compiler may not cut out slips from the former work and go and see whether they are accurate, and if so, copy them verbatim into his own work, but he is quite justified in referring to the former book in order to guide himself to persons on whom it would be worth while to call.<sup>2</sup>

ENGRAVINGS, ETC. Where the subject from which the engraving is taken is common and open to all, the first engraver of a print of it is not entitled to restrain any one else from making an engraving of the same subject, provided it be made from the original subject and is not a copy of the first engraving; but he can prevent another from copying his own engraving.<sup>5</sup>

EXECUTION. Copyright in a published print is not the subject of seizure or sale by execution, although it may be reached by creditors' bill, and applied to the payment of the debts of the author.<sup>6</sup> But in case of such a remedy it would be necessary for the court to enforce a transfer to the purchaser in conformity with the requirements of the copyright act in order to invest such purchaser with a complete title to the property.<sup>7</sup>

Whether this right extends to the publishing an unpublished work of an author, or otherwise making the same available, is very doubtful.<sup>8</sup>

A manuscript in the author's hands, or a book half-printed, or in the process of publication,<sup>9</sup> cannot be taken in assignment or execution.

GRATUITOUS DISTRIBUTION. A multiplication of copies for the purpose of gratuitous distribution is as much an infringement of the proprietor's copyright as if the multiplication had been made for the purpose of pecuniary profit.<sup>10</sup>

IGNORANCE. Copyright is like patent in this respect, that if it is infringed ignorance will not avail as a defence in the one case any more than in the other.<sup>11</sup>

IMMORAL OR LIBELLOUS WORKS. The law will not assist one in the recovery of remuneration for his labor on such works.<sup>12</sup>

IMPORTATION. Copyright may be infringed by the importation for sale or hire of copies printed abroad.

INFRINGEMENTS OF COPYRIGHT. Copyright may be invaded:<sup>13</sup>

1. By reprinting the whole work verbatim.
2. By reprinting a part of a work verbatim.
3. By imitating the whole or a part, or by reproducing the whole or a part with colorable alterations.

5. By reproducing the whole or a part under the form of a translation.

Sec. 4953. If any person, after the recording of the title of any map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, photograph, or chromo, or of the description of any painting, drawing, statue, statuary, or model or design intended to be perfected and executed as a work of the fine arts, as provided by this chapter, shall, within the term limited, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in presence of two or more witnesses, engrave, etch, work, copy, print, publish, or import, either in whole or in part, or by varying the main design with intent to evade the law, or, knowing the same to be so printed, published, or imported, shall sell or expose to sale any copy of such map or other article, as aforesaid, he shall forfeit to the proprietor all the plates upon which the same shall be copied, and every sheet thereof, either copied or printed, and shall further forfeit one dollar for every sheet of the same found in his possession, either printing, printed, copied, published, imported, or exposed for sale; and in case of a painting, statue, or statuary, he shall forfeit ten dollars for every copy of the same in his possession, or by him sold or exposed for sale; one-half thereof to the proprietor and the other half to the use of the United States.<sup>14</sup>

IMPORTING, PRINTING, PUBLISHING, SELLING, ETC., OF COPYRIGHT MATTER, WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF PROPRIETOR, IN WRITING SIGNED IN PRESENCE OF TWO OR MORE WITNESSES.

Sec. 4964. Every person who, after the recording of the title of any book as provided by this chapter, shall within the term limited, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in presence of two or more witnesses, print, publish, or import, or, knowing the same to be so printed, published, or imported, shall sell or expose to sale any copy of such book, shall forfeit every copy thereof to such proprietor, and shall also forfeit and pay such damages as may be recovered in a civil action by such proprietor in any court of competent jurisdiction.<sup>3</sup>

"Any copy of such book" under this section may be understood to mean a transcript or copy of the entire book, and no less,<sup>4</sup> and courts will only adjudge such penalty for the copies found in the possession of the defendant.<sup>5</sup>

Where any wrong has been committed in respect to a literary work, and the complainant does not ask for an injunction to protect his common law rights, or the violation of his copyright, but only prays for an accounting, the redress must be sought at law for damages, and not in equity. The asking of an injunction is what constitutes the process equitable.<sup>6</sup>

PUBLICLY PERFORMING OR REPRESENTING DRAMATIC COMPOSITION, ETC., WITHOUT CONSENT OF PROPRIETOR.

Sec. 4965. Any person publicly performing or representing any dramatic composition for which a copyright has been obtained, without the consent of the proprietor thereof, or his heir or assigns, shall be liable for damages therefor; such damages in all cases to be assessed at such sum, not less than one hundred dollars for the first, and fifty dollars for every subsequent performance, as to the court shall appear to be just.<sup>7</sup>

An assignee of an exclusive right of performing a dramatic composition within certain limits may maintain an action for injunction to restrain its representation and performance within such limits,<sup>10</sup> if he has complied with all the acts required by law to secure a copyright.<sup>11</sup>

PRINTING OR PUBLISHING MANUSCRIPT WITHOUT AUTHOR'S OR PROPRIETOR'S CONSENT.

Sec. 4967. Every person who shall print or publish any manuscript whatever, without the consent of the author or proprietor first obtained (if such author or proprietor is a citizen of the United States, or resident therein), shall be liable to the author or proprietor for all damages occasioned by such injury.<sup>12</sup>

An author has a common law right in his manuscript until he relinquishes it by contract or some other equivocal act.<sup>13</sup> And a surreptitious publication of an important part of a manuscript is as much within the statute as if the manuscript were complete. Indeed the whole of a manuscript need not be printed.<sup>14</sup>

INTENTION TO PIRATE. The existence of an animus furandi (intention to steal) is deemed essential to piracy.<sup>15</sup> This animus furandi must not be understood to mean a deliberate design to steal the product of another's labor and surreptitiously appropriate it to one's own use and credit; the offence of piracy may be committed bona fide, with no dishonest intention, and without any idea on the part of him who commits it that he is infringing a copyright. "It is enough that the publication complained of is in substance a copy whereby the work vested in another is prejudiced." In a book of avowed extracts from the poetical writings of others, "if A. takes the property of B. the animus furandi is inferred from the fact."<sup>16</sup>

The cases in which the animus furandi test properly applies is that difficult class relating to dictionaries, road books, and the like, where a certain amount of common material is used by different persons, and the matter at issue is "p... or no piracy."<sup>17</sup>

INTESTACY. Where the owner of copyright in any published or unpublished production dies intestate, the copyright in such production devolves by operation of law upon his executor or administrator, who, as such, possesses all the rights that the original owner enjoyed.<sup>18</sup>

1. For recording the title or description of any copyright book or other article, fifty cents.

2. For every copy under seal of such record actually given to the person claiming the copyright, or his assigns, fifty cents.

3. For recording and certifying any instrument of writing for the assignment of a copyright, one dollar.

4. For every copy of an assignment, one dollar.

All fees so received shall be paid into the treasury of the United States.

Sec. 495c. The proprietor of every copyright book or other article shall deliver at the office of the Librarian of Congress, or deposit in the mail addressed to the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, within ten days after its publication, two complete printed copies thereof, of the best edition issued, or description or photograph of such article as heretofore required, and a copy of every subsequent edition wherein any substantial changes shall be made.

Sec. 495d. For every failure on the part of the proprietor of any copyright to deliver, or deposit in the mail, either of the published copies, or description, or photograph, required by Sections 495b and 495c, the proprietor of the copyright shall be liable to a penalty of twenty-five dollars, to be recovered by the Librarian of Congress, in the name of the United States, in an action in the nature of an action of debt, in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the delinquent may reside or be found.

Office of the Librarian of Congress, Washington, 1877.

1. A printed copy of the title of the book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, print, photograph, or a description of the painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statutory or model or design for a work of the fine arts, for which copyright is desired, must be sent by mail or otherwise, prepaid, addressed,

LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

This must be done before publication of the book or other article.

2. A fee of fifty cents, for recording the title of each book or other article, shall be received with the title as above required, unless by indication for one dollar in all) for each certificate of copyright under seal of the Librarian of Congress, which will be transmitted by return mail.

Sending two Complete Copies, Penalty, 50c.

3. Within ten days after publication of each book or other article, two complete copies of the best edition issued must be sent to perfect the copyright, with the address,

LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

It is optional with those sending books and other articles to perfect copyright, to send them by mail or express; but, in either case, the charges are to be prepaid by the sender. Without the deposit of copies above required the copyright is void, and a penalty of twenty-five dollars is incurred.

No copy is required to be deposited elsewhere.

Notice of Copyright to be Given by Imprint.

4. No copyright is valid unless notice is given by inserting in every copy published, on the title page or the page following, if it be a book; or, if a map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, photograph, painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statutory, or model or design intended to be perfected as a work of the fine arts, by inscribing upon some portion thereof, or on the substance on which the same is mounted, the following words, viz: "Entered according to act of Congress, in the year ---, by ---, in the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington;" or at the option of the person entering the copyright, the words: "Copyright, 18---, by ---."

The law imposes a penalty of one hundred dollars upon any person who has not obtained copyright who shall insert the notice "Entered according to act of Congress," or "Copyright," etc., or words of the same import, in or upon any book or other article.

Translations, etc.

5. Any author may reserve the right to translate or to dramatize his own work. In this case notice should be given by printing the words, "Right of Translation reserved," or, "All rights reserved," below the notice of copyright entry, and notifying the Librarian of Congress of such reservation, to be entered upon the record.

Duration of Copyright.

6. Each copyright secures the exclusive right of publishing the book or article copyrighted for the term of twenty-eight years. Six months before the end of that time, the author or designer, or his widow or children, may secure a renewal for the further term of fourteen years, making forty-two years in all.

Renewal of Copyright.

Applications for renewal must be accompanied by duplicate statements of ownership, in the case of the author, or of relations, in the case of his heirs, and must state definitely the date and place of entry of the original copyright.

Time of Publication.

7. The time within which any work copyrighted may be issued from the press is not limited by any law or regulation, but depends upon the discretion of the proprietor. A copyright may be secured for a projected work as well as for a completed one.

Assignments.

8. Any copyright is assignable in law by any instrument of writing, but such assignment must be recorded in the office of the Librarian of Congress, within sixty days from its date. The fee for this record and certificate is one dollar, and for a certified copy of any record of assignment one dollar.

Copies, or Duplicates (Certificates).

9. A copy of the record for duplicate certificate of any copyright entry will be furnished, under seal, at the rate of fifty cents each.

Serial, or Separate Publications to be Copyrighted.

10. In the case of books published in more than one volume, or of periodicals published in successive parts, the copyright notice on the first volume is sufficient. 2 M. R. 102; 1870-1; 12 U. S. 102; 10 Ed. 102;

bars, or of engravings, photographs, or other articles published with variations, a copyright is to be taken out for each volume or part of a book, or number of a periodical, or variety, as to size, title, or inscription, of any other article.

Copyrights for Works of Art.

11. To secure a copyright for a painting, statue, or model or design intended to be perfected as a work of the fine arts, so as to prevent infringement by copying, engraving, or vending such design, a definite description must accompany the application for copyright, and a photograph of the same, at least as large as "cabinet size," must be mailed to the Librarian of Congress within ten days from the completion of the work.

No Labels Copyrighted.

12. Copyrights cannot be granted upon trade-marks, nor upon labels intended to be used with any article of manufacture. If protection for such prints or labels is desired, application must be to the patent office, where they are registered at a fee of six dollars for labels, and twenty-five dollars for trade-marks.

Full Name of Proprietor Required.

13. Every applicant for a copyright must state distinctly the name and residence of the claimant, and whether the right is claimed as author, designer, or proprietor. No affidavit or formal application is required.

LIEN. Electro or stereotype printers have not a general lien on plates not manufactured by themselves, but only put into their hands for the purpose of printing from them.<sup>10</sup> To establish a general lien such printer must show such a custom of trade that the other party to the transaction contracted with reference to such custom; "nothing short of this will dispense with an express contract," etc.<sup>11</sup>

A printer who is employed to print certain numbers, but not all consecutive numbers, of an entire work, has a general lien upon the copies not delivered for his balance due for printing the whole of those numbers.<sup>12</sup>

A printer of a book in process of publication is not entitled to sell it for his payment, although he has a lien upon it against the author or his creditors until delivery.

See title BAILMENTS, ante.

LOCAL OR STATE COPYRIGHT. Although a particular State cannot take away from an individual the property given him by act of Congress, and though the laws of such State are imperative as against the laws of the United States with which they may come in collision,<sup>13</sup> yet if an author or inventor instead of resorting to the act of Congress should apply to the general assembly or legislature of a particular State for an exclusive right to his production, there is nothing to hinder that State granting it, though the operation of such grant would be confined to the limits of the State,<sup>14</sup> and the use of the property is of exclusively local character; like all other property it must be used and enjoyed within each State according to the laws of such State.<sup>15</sup>

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Although the score of an opera or piece of concerted music is so far an independent work as to be copyrighted in the name of the compiler, it seems that one may not compile such score without the consent of the composer of the opera or piece.<sup>1</sup>

Piracy may be of part of an air as well as of the whole.<sup>2</sup> To publish in the form of quadrilles and waltzes the airs of an opera, of which there exists an exclusive copyright is an instance of piracy.<sup>3</sup>

The addition of words, prelude, and accompaniment to an old air gave the adapter a copyright in the whole composition,<sup>4</sup> and where a person adapted words to an old air and procured a friend to compose an accompaniment, his assignee was entitled to describe himself in an action for piracy as proprietor of the copyright in the entire composition.<sup>5</sup> As to how far an arrangement for the pianoforte of the score of an opera is an original work.<sup>6</sup>

NAME AND DATE, ETC. Errors in the name of a person copyrighting, or of the date of copyright, prevent the author or proprietor from proceeding by action, suit, or otherwise, until such errors have been amended; or invalidate a subsequent assignment under the act.<sup>7</sup> The name of a firm will be sufficient without the names of all its members.<sup>8</sup> A change in the style of printing an author's or publisher's name, or a change of publishers will not affect the copyrighted title of a book.

See RECORD, ETC., below.

NAME OR TITLE. The name or title of a work may be considered as a kind of a trademark which no other person than the proprietor of the work can use so as to damage him in his property in it.<sup>9</sup> Cases of this kind depend rather upon the question whether the defendant has a right to sell as his own that in which another has acquired a description of property than on the question of copyright.<sup>10</sup>

NOTES—BONA FIDE. The work or part of the work of another may be made the foundation of bona fide notes and observations, and may be published with such notes or observations without infringing the copyright in the original work. "Any person may copy and publish the whole of a literary composition, provided he writes notes upon it so as to present it to the public connected with matter of his own." If a man took "Paley's Philosophy and copied a whole essay, with observations and notes, or additions at the end of it, it would depend on the fact, of whether the publication of that essay was to convey to the Byron, De Foe, Smollett, Fielding, and others, in whose works such tares are accessories which form the great contrasts and effects intended by these writers, and which, separated by themselves, could not be tolerated.

ORIGINALITY. The law will secure to a man the property in every genuine product of his own mental labor, whether that product takes the form of a compilation, abridgment, new arrangement, or wholly original work.—If indeed there can be any such thing as a wholly original work. "In truth, in literature, in science, and in art there are and can be few, if any, things which in an abstract sense are strictly new and original throughout. Every book in literature, science, and art borrows, and must necessarily borrow and use much which was well known and used before; no man creates a new language for himself, at least if he be a wise man, in writing a book; he contents himself with the use of language already known, and used and understood by others. The thoughts of every man are more or less a combination of what other men have thought and expressed, although they may be modified, excelled, or improved by his own genius or reflection. If no book could be the subject of copyright which was not new and original in the elements of which it is composed, there could be no ground for copyright in modern times; and we should be obliged to ascend very high even in antiquity to find a work entitled to such emolument."<sup>1</sup>

To constitute one an author he must, by his own intellectual labor, applied to the materials of his composition, produce an arrangement or compilation new in itself.<sup>3</sup> In the case of subjects open to all, the work of the author must not be copied, but recourse must be had to the original sources.<sup>4</sup> One who gets another, or others, to compile a work or engrave a print is not entitled to copyright.<sup>5</sup>

The utmost that the law can do is to require and insist that the secondary author shall have exercised original labor in devising the plan, selection, arrangement, and presentation of the materials which he has found in medio (common to all) and open to all. It will not be sufficient on the one hand that he has bestowed upon his work the manual labor of copying or clipping the material; nor will it be necessary on the other, that he has used such judgment in discovering the wants of the public, and such skill as to have produced a really valuable book; the product of actual mental labor, whether valuable or worthless, will be protected by law.<sup>6</sup>

of old and well-known material may be produced by original labor, and, if so, will be entitled to protection.<sup>7</sup> But though any person may thus acquire a copyright in his own arrangement of common materials, the materials themselves remain, as always, open to the next comer who chooses to have recourse to them, and different copyrights may be acquired in different arrangements of the same common materials. These different arrangements must, however, be independent. A later arrangement must not be a servile imitation or reproduction of an earlier one.<sup>8</sup>

PARTS OF WORKS. Where the parts of a work can be separated, there may be a copyright in any distinct part of it.<sup>9</sup>

PARTS AND EXTRACTS OF A WORK. That part of the work of one author is found in another is not of itself piracy, or sufficient to support an action; but the extracts may be too many, or contain too large or important a portion of the work from which they are made; then they will amount to piracy, even though they were published in the form of quotations, and the source from which they were taken is expressly declared.<sup>10</sup>

See QUOTATIONS, below.

PERIODICALS. Copyright in periodical publications may be infringed in the same manner as in the case of other literary works; but this species of property may also be infringed in a manner peculiar to itself. Even when the copyright in contributions to encyclopedias, reviews, magazines, and other periodicals is vested in the proprietors of such encyclopedias, etc., the right of publishing his contribution in a separate form reverts to the author twenty-eight years from the first publication, and the proprietor cannot, during the term of his own copyright, publish it in a separate form without the previous consent of the author or his assigns.<sup>11</sup> A republication in supplemental numbers of a selection of various tales previously published in that periodical is an infringement.<sup>12</sup>

The author has a modified property in possession, and the sole property in reversion.

PHOTOGRAPHING. Making an unauthorised photograph of the engraving of a picture is a photographing or copying of the picture itself. If the design is copied, it is immaterial whether it is done directly from the original, or indirectly through the medium of a copy.<sup>13</sup> It would be otherwise if the owner had parted with the right to multiply engravings.<sup>14</sup>

PIANO SCORES of operas are independent musical compositions, specific, separate, and distinct from operas themselves. It requires time, reflection, skill, and mind, so to condense the opera score so to compose the piano arrangement of the score of an opera, executed without the consent of the composer of the opera, would be an infringement of his copyright therein has not been expressly decided.<sup>6</sup>

PIRACY IN GENERAL. If so much is taken as to impair the value of the original work, or so that the labors of the original author are substantially appropriated, this will constitute a piracy.<sup>7</sup> But the question of piracy does not depend solely upon quantity.<sup>8</sup> Intention is not a necessary element in the offence of piracy.
 If a copyright has been invaded, whether the party knew the work was copyrighted or not, he is liable to the penalty for violation thereof.<sup>9</sup>

The inquiry in most cases is not whether the defendant has used thoughts, conception, information, and discoveries promulgated by the original, but whether his composition may be considered a new work, requiring invention, learning, and judgment, or only a mere transcript of the whole or parts of the original, with mere colorable variations.<sup>10</sup>

PLAN OR METHOD. There can be no copyright of a mere plan or method of a work, distinct from the work itself, any more than there can be copyright of an abstract idea.<sup>11</sup>

QUOTATION is necessary for reviewing;
 the quotation for such a purpose is not to have the appellation of piracy affixed to it, but quotation may be carried to the extent of manifesting piratical intention.<sup>12</sup> "A reviewer may fairly cite largely from the original work, if his design be really and truly to use the passages for the purposes of fair and reasonable criticism. On the other hand, it is as clear that if he thus cites the most important parts of the work with a view not to criticise, but to supersede the use of the original work, and substitute the review for it, such a use will be deemed in law a piracy. A wide interval might, of course, exist between these two extremes, calling for great caution and involving great difficulty."<sup>13</sup>

See PARTS AND EXTRACTS, ETC., above.

RECIPT BOOKS. The composing receipts, or arranging them in a book, will give a copyright to the compiler. But the mere collecting them and handing them over to the publisher will not. Nor will the mere copying that which is public property. But if there be some new arrangement or classification of the subject, or the copy be not identical, and not a mere colorable variation, then a copyright may exist for it.<sup>14</sup>

RECORD. Care should be taken that the copyright record is accurate, for an error in it will be a fatal defect in the author or proprie-tor's copyright.

REMEDIES UNDER THE COPYRIGHT

ACT.

Jurisdiction.

Sec. 4970. The circuit courts, and district courts having the jurisdiction of circuit courts, shall have power, upon bill in equity, filed by any party aggrieved, to grant injunctions to prevent the violation of any right secured by the laws respecting copyrights, according to the course and principles of courts of equity, on such terms as the court may deem reasonable.<sup>1</sup>

The jurisdiction given the federal court by the acts of Congress has not taken away or diminished the original jurisdiction which before such acts<sup>2</sup> the state courts exercised; except when the jurisdiction was made exclusive in express terms, or by the necessary construction of the constitution.<sup>3</sup>

Limitation.

Sec. 4968. No action shall be maintained in any case of forfeiture or penalty under the copyright laws, unless the same is commenced within two years after the cause of action has arisen.<sup>4</sup>

Pleading and Evidence.

Sec. 4969. In all actions arising under the laws respecting copyrights, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence.<sup>5</sup>

Construction is not "SHAPE."

"Design," when used as a term of art, means the giving of a visible form to the conceptions of the mind, or, in other words, to the invention.<sup>7</sup>

See PATENTS, ETC., post.

"Inventor" is one who finds out something new. One who contrives, or discovers, or produces a thing which did not before exist.

"Map," "Chart." The words "Map" and "Chart" are to be understood as applying to a particular map or chart copyrighted, since the natural objects from which maps and charts are made are open to all.<sup>8</sup>

Proprietors are owners. Under derivation of title from non-resident authors, or the assignee of a work composed by a non-resident alien, they cannot obtain a copyright therefor.<sup>9</sup> The legal assignee of the resident author may take out the copyright, and it will make no difference whether he holds it as trustee for the benefit of another or not.<sup>10</sup>

Resident is one who has his residence in a place. Residence is personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode.<sup>11</sup> Residence differs from domicile, although it is a great matter of importance in determining the place of domicile.<sup>12</sup>

A person, to be entitled to copyright as a "resident" under the corresponding sections of previous copyright laws, and by inference under the present, must be a permanent resident of this country. One temporarily residing here, it seems, even though he has declared his intention of becoming a citizen, cannot take or hold a copyright.<sup>13</sup>

B. How to Obtain Copyrights.

Sec. 4956. No person shall be entitled to a copyright unless he shall, 1, before publication; deliver at the office of the librarian of Congress, or deposit in the mail addressed to the librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia; a printed copy of the title of the book or other article. The title-page must be deposited before publication of the book, in order to entitle the copyright to protection,<sup>14</sup> and the record from the proper office, made in the prescribed form, is prima facie evidence of the deposit.<sup>15</sup> Or a description of the painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuette, or model or design for a work of the fine arts. In case of a painting, statue, model, or design intended to be protected as a work of the fine arts, the description provided for in this section must be definite and complete, and the photograph must be at least as large as what is technically known as cabinet size,<sup>16</sup> for which he desires a copyright. (By taking this ineluctable step a right is acquired which chancery will protect until the other acts may be done.<sup>17</sup> And if the title-page has been duly entered, the author may maintain an action for infringement if the printed copies were never deposited, and even if the work was never published at all.) Nor unless he shall also, 2, within ten days from the publication thereof, deliver at the office of the librarian of Congress, or deposit in the mail addressed to the librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, two copies of such copyright book or other article, or, in case of a painting, drawing, statue, statuette, model, or design for a work of the fine arts, a photograph of the same.<sup>18</sup>

The process of copyrighting must be gone through with in the case of every volume of a work separately.<sup>19</sup>

the following words, viz.: "Entered according to act of Congress, in the year ———, by A. B., in the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington," or, at his option the word "Copyright," together with the year the copyright was entered, and the name of the party by whom it was taken out, thus: "Copyright, 18—, by A. B."

Where a work consists of a number of volumes, the insertion of the notice on the page next following the title-page of the first volume of the work is a sufficient compliance with the statute.<sup>1</sup> The author may insert the same notice in another edition without impairing the copyright.<sup>2</sup>

The record or notice must be accurate in point of date, for an error in this would be a fatal defect in the author's or proprietor's copyright.<sup>3</sup>

Sec. 4963. Every person who shall insert or impress such notice, or words of the same purport, in or upon any book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, or photograph, or other article, for which he has not obtained a copyright, shall be liable to a penalty of one hundred dollars, recoverable one-half for the person who shall sue for such penalty, and one-half to the use of the United States.<sup>4</sup>

SALE OF COPYRIGHT. Where an author sells the copyright of a work published under his own name, and covenants with the purchaser not to publish any other work to prejudice the sale of it, another publisher (who has no notice of this covenant) may be restrained from publishing a work subsequently purchased by him from the same author, and published under his name on the same subject, but under a different title, and though there be no piracy of the first book.<sup>5</sup>

Where no such covenant has been entered into, and the publisher has agreed with the author for an edition of history or the like, and the work is completed, a continuation of such work by the author, independently or with another publisher, is no violation of the previous contract.<sup>6</sup>

If an author sells his copyright in a work for a limited term, the publisher may, except in case of actual fraud, continue, after the expiration of the term, to sell copies of the work printed during its continuance.<sup>7</sup>

A contract for the sale of a copyright is enforceable in equity.<sup>8</sup>

See TRANSFER OF COPYRIGHT, below.

SALE OF EDITION, ETC. Where an author has sold an edition of a given number of copies to one publisher, he is not at liberty before they are sold to publish the same work himself or through another publisher in such a manner as to compete with the edition he has sold, but is bound to afford the publisher a full opportunity of realizing the benefit of his contract.<sup>9</sup>

THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS applies to contracts between authors and publishers in the preparation or publication of literary matter.<sup>10</sup>

TERM OF COPYRIGHT, 28 YEARS.

Sec. 4953. Copyrights shall be granted for the term of twenty-eight years from the time of recording the title thereof in the manner hereinafter directed.<sup>11</sup> —Continuance of 14 Years.

Sec. 4954. The author, inventor, or designer, if he be still living and a citizen of the United States or resident therein, or his widow or children if he be dead, shall have the same exclusive right continued for the further term of fourteen years, upon recording the title of the work or description of the article so secured a second time, and complying with all other regulations in regard to original copyrights, within six months before the expiration of the first term. And such persons shall, within two months from the date of said renewal, cause a copy of the record thereof to be published in one or more newspapers, printed in the United States, for the space of four weeks.<sup>12</sup>

The taking out of a second term of a copyright is not like the strengthening of a defective title, but rather like a new interest obtained after the general interest has expired.<sup>13</sup> The extension provided for applies exclusively to the author, his widow or children.<sup>14</sup>

An assignee alone cannot take out a second or extended term unless he has clearly and unequivocally contracted and paid for it, and is entitled to be protected in it in equity rather than according to any mere technical rule of law.<sup>15</sup>

TITLE. There cannot be what is termed copyright in a single word, although the word should be used as a fitting title for a book.<sup>16</sup> The copyright contemplated by the act must be, not in a single word, but in some words in the shape of a volume, or part of a volume which is communicated to the public, by which the public are benefited, and in return for which a certain protection is given to the author of the work. Nor will any amount of expenditure incurred upon a work not yet given to the world, or any outlay in advertisements of the title of the work, give a right to an injunction restraining another person from using the same title.<sup>17</sup> But though two periodicals or books may have a similar title, the form, title, and mode of publication of one cannot be imitated by another in such a manner as would necessarily mislead the public

Moneyed corporations are those having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, etc., insurance and the like.<sup>4</sup> Municipal corporations are public corporations created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation; for example: boroughs, cities, counties, districts, parishes, towns, townships, etc.<sup>5</sup> It is an incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government.<sup>6</sup> Private corporations are those which are created wholly, or in part, for purposes of private emolument.<sup>7</sup> Public corporations are those which are exclusively instruments of the public interest.<sup>8</sup>

By both civil and common law, the sovereign authority only can create a corporation; a corporation by prescription, or so old that the license or charter which created it is lost, being presumed, from the long-continued exercise of corporate powers, to have been entitled to their sovereign grant. Corporations are created by legislative enactment of a State, or the Congress of the United States.<sup>1</sup> All corporations, of whatever kind, are moulded and controlled, both as to what they may do and the manner in which they may do it; by their charters, or acts of incorporation, which to them are the laws of their being, which they can neither dispense with nor alter. Subject, however, to such limitations as these, or general statute or constitutional law, may impose, every corporation aggregate has, by virtue of incorporation and its incidental thereto:

1. The power of perpetual succession, including the admission, and, except in the case of mere stock corporations, the removal, for cause, of members.
2. The power to sue and be sued, to grant and receive grants, and to do all acts which it may do at all in its corporate name.
3. To purchase, receive, and hold lands and other property, and to transmit them in succession.
4. To have a common seal; to make, break, alter, and renew it at pleasure.
5. To make by-laws for its government, so that they may be consistent with its charter and the law. Indeed a corporation may, within the limits of its charter, or act of incorporation, express or implied, lawfully do all acts and enter into all contracts that a natural or individual person may do, or enter into, so that the same be appropriate as means to the end for which the corporation was created.

A corporation may be dissolved, if of limited duration, by the expiration of the term of its existence fixed by charter or general law; by the loss of all its members, or of an integral part of the corporation, by death or otherwise, if the charter or act of incorporation provide no mode by which such loss may be supplied; by the surrender of its corporate franchise to, and the acceptance of the surrender by the sovereign authority; and, lastly, by the forfeiture of its charter by the neglect of the duties imposed, or abuse of the privileges conferred by it; and forfeiture being enforced by proper legal process.

Although the charter of a public corporation may be altered or repealed at pleasure, the charter of a private corporation, whether granted by the king previous to the revolution, or by the legislature of any of the States since, is, unless in the latter case express power be for that purpose reserved, within the protection of that clause of the constitution of the United States which among other things forbids a State from passing any "law impairing the obligation of contracts."<sup>1</sup> A corporate franchise, however, as to build and maintain a toll bridge, may, by virtue of the power of eminent domain, be condemned by a State to public uses, upon just compensation, like any other private property.<sup>2</sup>

ADMISSION. In trading and joint stock corporations no vote of admission is requisite, for any person who owns stock therein, either by original subscription or by conveyance, is in general entitled to, and cannot be refused, the rights and privileges of a member.<sup>3</sup> All that can be required of the person demanding a transfer on the books is to prove to the corporation his right to the property.<sup>4</sup> In a mutual insurance company a person may become a member by insuring his property, paying the premium and deposit money, and rendering himself liable to be assessed according to the rules of the corporation.<sup>5</sup>

AMOTION (the removal of an official agent of a corporation before the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, from a station assigned to him<sup>6</sup>) may be exercised with or without an express reservation for just cause;<sup>7</sup> and in the case of mere ministerial officers appointed during the mere pleasure of those appointing them.<sup>8</sup> Mere acts which are a cause for amotion do not create a vacancy till the amotion takes place.<sup>9</sup> The causes for amotion may be: 1. Such as have no immediate relation to the office, but are in themselves of so infamous a nature as to render the offender unfit to execute any public franchise, but indictment and conviction must precede amotion for such causes. 2. Such as are on'y against his oath and the duty of his office as a corporation, and amount to breaches of the tacit condition annexed to his office. 3. Such and that the legislature cannot repeal, impair, or alter it against the consent, or without the default of the corporation; judicially ascertained and declared. 1d. 11-6 How. 507. 2-3 Mass. 284; Dougl. 264; 1 M. & R. 529. 20-808 3 Pick. 90. 10-2 Mass. 515. 0-8 T. as are an offence, not only against the duty of his office, but also a matter indictable.<sup>1</sup>

BODY CORPORATE OR POLITIC.

These terms are undoubtedly correct though very early terms applied to corporations.<sup>2</sup>

BY-LAWS, ORDINANCES, OR RULES.

The power to make by-laws is usually conferred by express terms of the charter creating the corporation; though, when not expressly granted, it is given by implication; it is incident to the very existence of a corporation. Where there is an express grant, limited to certain cases and for certain purposes, the corporate power of legislation is confined to the objects specified, all others being excluded by implication.<sup>3</sup> The power of making by-laws is to be exercised by those persons in whom it is vested by the charter; but if that instrument is silent, it resides in the members of the corporation in large.<sup>4</sup>

The Constitution of the United States and acts of Congress enacted in conformity thereto, the constitution of the State in which a corporation is located, and acts of the legislature enacted in conformity thereto, together with the common law as therein accepted, are of superior force to any by-law; and any by-law contrary to either of them is void, whether the charter authorizes the making of such by-law or not, for no legislature can grant power greater than they themselves possess.<sup>5</sup>

CAPITAL STOCK is not only the sum divided into shares and raised by mutual subscription of the members of a corporation, but also the sum upon which calls may be made upon the stockholders and dividends are to be paid.<sup>6</sup> It is the capital of the corporation. It is entered in the proper books in the name of the person owning it, and can only be transferred by such person or his attorney. Certificates are issued to the person to whom it is transferred; and when a new transfer is effected, such certificate surrendered and cancelled, a new one being issued to the transferee. Sometimes it is sold by delivering the certificate accompanied by a power of attorney to transfer it, but such a sale is merely an equitable assignment.<sup>7</sup> Bonds are transferable by delivery, and are payable to bearer. Stock held by individuals in corporation, whether States, municipal, or private, is personal property.<sup>8</sup>

Stock issued by an agent of a company transcending his authority, as in case of over issue, is not binding on a corporation or company.<sup>9</sup>

technical rule of the common law that a corporation cannot manifest its intention by any personal act or oral discourse, and that it acts and speaks only by its common seal, is no longer law in the United States.<sup>10</sup>

COMPANY property is an association of a number of individuals for the purpose of carrying on some legitimate business. Company is not partnership, usage reserving the term to associations whose members are in greater number, with greater capital and greater enterprise. When such a company is authorized by the State or general government it becomes a corporation.

DIRECTORS are appointed or elected according to law to direct and manage the affairs of a corporation or company. Collectively they form a board of directors. To make a legal board of directors they must meet at a time when and a place where every other director has the opportunity of attending to consult and be consulted with; and there must be a sufficient number present to constitute a quorum.<sup>11</sup> The acts of such a board evidenced by a legal vote are as binding upon the corporation, and as complete authority to their agents, as the most solemn acts done under their corporate seal.<sup>12</sup>

Directors are generally invested with certain powers by the acts of the legislature to which they owe their existence. In corporations created by statutes it is generally contemplated by the charter that the business of the corporation shall be transacted exclusively by the directors.<sup>13</sup>

Directors of a corporation are trustees, and as such are required to use due diligence and attention to its concerns, and are bound to a faithful discharge of the duty which the situation imposes. They are liable to the stockholders whenever there has been gross negligence or fraud, but not for unintentional errors.<sup>14</sup>

See GENERAL STATUTES.
DISFRANCHISEMENT is the depriving a member of a corporation of his right as such, by expulsion.<sup>15</sup> It differs from amotion, which applies to the removal of an officer from office, leaving him his rights as a member.<sup>16</sup>

DISSOLUTION. See INTRODUCTION, above.

DIVIDEND is that part of the principal or profits divided among the members or stockholders of a corporation, or to its creditors upon bankruptcy, dissolution, or insolvency.

EXPULSION. Corporations have an inherent right of expulsion: 1. Where an offence has been committed which has no immediate relation to a member's corporate duty, but is of so infamous a nature as to render him unfit for the society of honest men, as perjury, forgery, and the like. But before an expulsion is made for a cause of this kind it is necessary that there should be a previous conviction by a jury, according to the law of the land. 2. When the offence is against his duty as a corporator, in which case he may be expelled, on trial and conviction before the corporation. 3. When the offence is both against the member's duty as a corporator and also indictable.<sup>1</sup>

Members of joint stock, incorporated companies, or of any corporation owning property, cannot, without express authority in the charter, be expelled, and thus deprived of their interest in the general fund.<sup>1</sup>

NAME. Corporations must, in general, contract, sue and be sued, by their corporate names. Yet a slight alteration in stating the name is unimportant, even if there be no possibility of mistaking the identity of the corporation suing.<sup>1</sup>

NUMBER. When a corporation is composed of an indefinite number of persons, any number of them consisting of a majority of those present may do any act, unless it be otherwise regulated by the charter or by-laws.

PREDECESSORS. See INTRODUCTION, above.

PREDECESSORS in a corporation stand in the same relation to the successor that the ancestor does to the heir.

PRESIDENT. The president of a corporation usually directs the mode in which business is to be transacted; from his decision there is an appeal to the body over which he presides.

QUASI CORPORATIONS are those bodies or municipal societies which, though not vested with the general powers of corporations, are yet recognized by statute or immemorial usage as persons or aggregate corporation with precise duties which may be enforced, and privileges which may be maintained in actions and suits at law. They possess limited powers co-extensive with the duties imposed upon them by statute and usage, but are restrained from a general use of authority. Among quasi corporations may be ranked towns, townships, parishes, hundreds, and other political divisions of counties, which are established without an express charter of incorporation; also commissioners of a county, supervisors of highways, overseers of the poor, lean officers of the county, and the like, who are invested with corporate powers, not modo, and for a few specified purposes only; but not such a body as the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, which has not the capacity to sue and be sued.<sup>1</sup>

QUORUM is the number required to transact business. There is a difference between an act done by a definite number of persons and one performed by an indefinite number. In the first case a majority is required to constitute a quorum, unless the law expressly directs that another number may make one. In the latter case any number who may be present may act, the majority of those present having, as in other cases, the right to act.<sup>2</sup> Sometimes the law requires a greater number than a bare majority to form a quorum. In such case no quorum is present until such a number convene.

SCRIP. The possession of scrip certificates is prima facie evidence of ownership of the shares therein designated.<sup>3</sup> Such certificates are not goods, wares or merchandise within the statute of frauds.<sup>4</sup>

STOCK. See CAPITAL STOCK, above.

ULTRA VIRES are those acts beyond the scope of the powers of a corporation as defined by the charter or acts of incorporation.

As a general rule, such acts are void, and impose no obligation upon the corporation, although they assume the form of contracts, inasmuch as all persons dealing with a corporation, especially where it is created by the laws of the State or country where it exists, of which every one is presumed to have notice and information. It is otherwise as to laws imposing restraints upon it not contained in its charter, where the contract is made or the transaction takes place without the limits of the State or country under whose laws the corporation exists.<sup>5</sup> If, however, a corporation receives money or other valuable consideration under such a transaction or contract, upon rescinding or repudiating the act or contract under which it was paid or delivered, it could be recovered back by action or suit for that purpose.<sup>6</sup> So, too, the corporation is liable to be proceeded against by quo warranto, for the usurpation of powers in its name by its officers and agents, and deprived of its charter as a penalty for such acts; the defence of a want of power to bind the corporation not being available in such cases, since it would lead to entire corporate irresponsibility.<sup>7</sup>

A court of equity, at the suit of the stockholders of the corporation, will restrain the commission of acts beyond the corporate power, by injunction operating upon the individual officers and directors, as well as the corporation.<sup>8</sup> But acquiescence for any considerable time in the exercise of excessive powers after they come to the knowledge of the stockholders, would be a decisive objection to such a remedy.<sup>9</sup>

DAMAGES. See AGENCY; BAILMENTS; BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS; CONTRACTS, ETC., ETC.
DAMAGES is the indemnity recoverable by a person who has sustained an injury, either in his person, property, or relative rights, through the act or default of another. The sum claimed as such indemnity by a plaintiff in his complaint. The injury or loss for which compensation is sought.

Actual damages are those awarded for a loss or injury actually sustained; in contradistinction from damages implied by law, and from those awarded by way of punishment. Compensatory damages are those allowed as a recompense for the injury actually received. Consequential damages are those which, though directly, are not immediately consequent upon the act or default complained of. Exemplary damages are damages allowed as a punishment for torts committed with fraud, actual malice, or deliberate violence, or oppression. General damages are those which necessarily, and by implication of law, result from the act or default complained of. Liquidated damages are damages whose amount has been determined by anticipatory agreement between the parties. Measure of damages is a rule or method by which the damage sustained is to be estimated or measured. Nominal damages are a trifling sum awarded where a breach of duty, or an infringement of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved to have been sustained. Punitive damages are exemplary damages. Special damages are such as arise directly, but not necessarily, or by implication of law, from the act or default complained of. For further definition see subsequent sections of this subject. Unliquidated damages are damages whose amount has not been determined.

To constitute a right to recover damages, the party claiming damages must have sustained a loss; the party against whom they are claimed must be chargeable with a wrong; the loss must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong. There is no right to damages, properly so called, where there is no loss. Damages are based on the idea of a loss to be compensated, a damage to be made good.<sup>1</sup> This loss, however, need not always be distinct and definite, capable of exact description, or of measurements in dollars and cents. A sufficient loss to sustain an action may appear from the mere nature of the case itself.

The loss must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong.<sup>2</sup> Or, the "direct and necessary," or, "legal and natural" consequence. It must not be "remote" or "consequential." The loss must be the natural consequence. Every man is expected—and may justly be—to foresee the usual and natural consequences of his acts, and for these he may justly be held accountable; but not for consequences that could not have been foreseen.<sup>3</sup> It must also be the proximate consequence. Vague and indefinite results, remote and consequential, and, thus, uncertain, are not embraced in the compensation given by damages. It cannot be certainly known that they are attributable to the wrong, or whether they are not rather connected with other causes.<sup>4</sup>

In an action for damages for an injury caused by negligence, the plaintiff must himself appear to have been free from fault; for, if his own negligence in any way contributed directly to produce the injury, he can recover nothing. The law will not attempt to apportion the loss according to the different degrees of negligence of the two parties.<sup>5</sup> Judicial officers are not liable in damages for erroneous decisions.

When a servant is injured through the negligence of a fellow-servant employed in the same enterprise or avocation, the common employer is not liable for damages. The servant in engaging, takes the risk of injury from the negligence of his fellow-servants.<sup>6</sup> But this rule does not exonerate the master from liability of negligence of a servant in a different employment.

There is no right to damages where there is no wrong. It is not necessary that there should be a tort, strictly so called—a wilful wrong, an act involving moral guilt. The wrong may be either a wilful, malicious injury, or one committed through mere motives of interest, as in many cases of conversion of goods, trespasses on land, etc.; or, it may consist of a mere neglect to discharge a duty, with suitable skill or fidelity, as where an officer is held liable for the escape of his prisoner, or a carrier for neglect to deliver goods; or a simple breach of contract, as in case of refusal to deliver goods sold, or to perform services under an agreement; or it may be a wrong of another person for whose act or default a legal liability exists, as where a master is held liable for an injury done by his servant, or apprentice, or a railroad company for an accident resulting from the negligence of their engineer. But there must be something which the law recognizes as a wrong, some breach of a legal duty, some violation of legal right, some default or neglect, some failure in responsibility, sustained by the party claiming damages. For the sufferer by accident, or by the innocent or rightful acts of another, cannot claim indemnity for his misfortune; it is called damnum absque injuria—(a loss without a wrong), for which the law gives no remedy.<sup>2</sup> The obligation violated must also be one owed to the plaintiff. The neglect of a duty which the plaintiff had no legal right to enforce gives no claim to damages. Thus, where the postmaster of Rochester, New York, was required by law to publish lists of letters unclaimed for in the newspaper having the largest circulation, and the proprietors of the "Rochester Daily Democrat" claimed to have the largest circulation, and to be entitled to the advertising, but the postmaster refused to give it to them, it was held that no action would lie against him for the loss of the profits of the advertising. The duty to publish in the paper having the largest circulation was a duty not owed to the publisher of that paper. It was imposed upon the postmaster, not for the benefit of publishers of newspapers, but for the advantage of persons to whom letters were addressed, and they alone had a legal interest to enforce it.<sup>3</sup>

ASSESSMENT of damages is made by the court through its proper officer or clerk, where it is a mere matter of calculation; in other cases it must be done by the jury.

DAMAGE FEASANT are those injuries committed by animals belonging to one person upon the land of another, by feeding, treading down the grass, corn, or other productions of the soil.<sup>4</sup>

DOUBLE OR TREBLE damages are in some cases allowed by statute. In these cases the actual damage is doubled or trebled, and not assessed like double or treble costs.

EXCESSIVE OR INADEQUATE.
Even in that large class of cases in which there is no fixed measure of damages, but they are left to the discretion of the jury, the court has a certain power to review the verdict, and to set it aside if the damages awarded are grossly excessive or unreasonably inadequate. The rule is, however, that a verdict will not be set aside for excessive damages unless the amount is so large as to satisfy the court that the jury have been misled by passion, prejudice, ignorance, or partiality.<sup>5</sup> But this power is very sparingly used; and cases are numerous in which the courts have expressed themselves dissatisfied with the verdict, but have refused to interfere on the ground that the case did not come within this rule.<sup>6</sup> As a general rule, in actions of tort the court will not grant a new trial on the ground of the smallness of damages.<sup>7</sup> But they have power to do so in a proper case; and in a few instances in which the jury have given no redress at all, when some was clearly due, the verdict has been set aside.<sup>8</sup>

In cases where there is a fixed legal rule regulating the measure of damages, it must be stated to the jury upon the trial. The failure to state it correctly is ground of exception. And if the jury disregard the instructions of the court on the subject, their verdict may be set aside. In so far, however, as the verdict is an honest determination of the questions of fact properly within this province, it will not, in general, be disturbed.<sup>9</sup>

EXEMPLARY.
In actions for torts, strictly so called, where gross fraud or actual malice, or deliberate violence, or oppression appears, the jury are not confined to a strict compensation for the plaintiff's loss, but may, in assessing damages, allow a sum as a punishment of the defendant for his wrong committed upon the plaintiff. Such an allowance is termed "smart money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages.<sup>10</sup> They are assessed in one sum, with any allowance the jury may think proper to make as compensation for the actual loss sustained; and the whole sum is awarded to the injured party.

The propriety of allowing damages to be given by way of punishment under any circumstances has been strenuously denied in many cases, and the question has given rise to extensive discussion; but the weight of author-that a verdict will not be set aside unless the court is satisfied by passion, prejudice, or ill-will.

But this power is not exercised in numerous cases where the verdict has been set aside on the ground that the case did not fall within the rule.

As a general rule, in such cases the court will not grant a new trial on the ground of the smallness of damages, unless the plaintiff has shown a few instances in which the damages were not redress at all, when the verdict has been set aside. Where there is a fixed legal rule as to the measure of damages, the failure to award the full amount is not an error, unless the instructions to the jury are such that their verdict may be set aside, as the verdict is an invasion of the province, it will not, in such cases, strictly so called, where the damages are not excessive, or deliberate violence appears, the jury are not entitled to compensation for the plaintiff's assessing damages, allow the defendant for the amount of the plaintiff's. Each is to be assessed in one sum, with the jury may think proper to award for the actual loss sustained, the sum is awarded to the plaintiff, allowing damages to be awarded under any circumstances, the defendant strenuously denied in question has given rise to the weight of authority is decidedly that such allowance in a suitable case is proper. But they should be carefully denied whenever the defendant is criminally liable to punishment for the wrong done, by indictment and fine, or otherwise.

LIQUIDATED. Where there is an agreement between the parties for the doing or not doing particular acts, the parties may, if they please, estimate beforehand the damages to result from a breach of the agreement, and prescribe in the agreement itself the sum to be paid by either by way of damages for such breach.

The sum named in an agreement as damages to be paid in case of a breach will, in general, be considered as liquidated damages, or as a penalty, according to the intent of the parties. The mere use of the words "penalty" or "liquidated damages" will not be decisive of the question if, on the whole, the instrument discloses a different intent.

Such a stipulation in agreement will be considered as a penalty merely, and not as liquidated damages, in the following cases: Where the parties in the agreement have expressly declared it, or described it as a "penalty," and no other intent is deducible from the instrument; where it is doubtful from the language of the instrument, whether the stipulation was intended as a penalty or as liquidated damages; where the agreement was evidently made for the attainment of another object or purpose, to which the stipulation is wholly collateral; where the agreement imposes several distinct duties or obligations of different degrees of importance, and yet the same sum is named as damages for a breach of either indifferently; where the agreement is not under seal, and the damages are capable of being certainly known and estimated; where the instrument provides that a larger sum shall be paid, upon default to pay a lesser sum in the manner prescribed.

The stipulation will be sustained as liquidated damages in the following cases: Where the agreement is of such a nature that the damages are uncertain, and are not capable of being ascertained by any satisfactory and known rule; where, from the tenor of the agreement, or from the nature of the case, it appears that the parties have ascertained the amount of damages by fair calculation and adjustment.

MEASURE OF.

HILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES. See GENERAL STATUTES.

CARRIERS. Upon a total failure to deliver goods, the carrier is liable for the value of the goods at their place of destination, with interest, deducting the freight. Upon a failure to take the goods at all for transportation, he is liable for the difference between the value at the place of shipment and at the place of destination, less his freight; or, if another conveyance can be found, the difference between the freight agreed on with the defendant, and the sum (if greater) which the shipper would be compelled to pay another carrier. Upon a delay to deliver the goods, the plaintiff is entitled to an indemnity for his loss incurred by the delay, taking into account any fall in the market occurring between the time when the property should have been delivered by the carrier, and the time when it actually was.

See title BAILMENTS, ante.

CONTRACTS. Where a contract prescribes a price to be paid, the compensation recoverable for a past performance will be measured by the contract price if practicable, and not by the actual value of the services or goods, etc., furnished.

Where a vendor of real property fails to convey according to his contract, a distinction is taken, in many cases, growing out of the motive of the party in default. If he acted in good faith and supposed he had good title and could convey, the purchaser's damages have been limited to the amount of his advance, if any, interest and expenses of examining the title. But in case of a willful and fraudulent refusal to convey, the purchaser has been held entitled to the value of the property at the time of the breach, with interest. See title EJECTMENT, ante.

follows that of the guardian,<sup>6</sup> especially where the guardian is a parent.<sup>7</sup> Ambassadors and other foreign ministers retain their domicile in the country to which they belong, and which they represent.<sup>8</sup> This does not apply to consuls and other commercial agents.<sup>9</sup>

A commercial domicile is acquired by maintenance of a commercial establishment in a country, in relation to transactions connected with such establishments.<sup>1</sup>

CHANGE OF DOMICIL. Any person, sui juris, may make any bona fide change of domicile at any time.<sup>2</sup> And the object of the change does not affect the right, if it be a genuine change with real intention of permanent residence.<sup>3</sup> Children follow the domicile of the father, if the change be made bona fide,<sup>4</sup> but there are limitations to this power in the case of alien parents,<sup>5</sup> and of the mother, if a widow;<sup>6</sup> not, however, if she acquires a new domicile by re-marriage.<sup>7</sup> The guardian has the same power over his ward as a parent has over his child.<sup>8</sup> The domicile of a lunatic may be changed with the direction, or with the assent, of his guardian.<sup>9</sup> It may be considered questionable whether the guardian can change the national domicile of his ward.<sup>10</sup> The husband may not change his domicile after committing an offence which entitles the wife to a divorce, so as to deprive her of her remedy;<sup>11</sup> and the wife may not in the like case acquire a new domicile.<sup>12</sup>

DEATH. The presumption of death arises after the absence of a person from his domicile for seven years without having been heard from.<sup>13</sup> See title EVIDENCE, post.

RESIDENCE is a personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode.<sup>14</sup> A residence differs from a domicile, although it is a great matter of importance in determining the place of domicile.<sup>15</sup> Residence and habitation are usually synonymous.<sup>16</sup> Residence indicates permanency of occupation, as distinct from lodging, or boarding, or temporary occupation, but does not include so much as domicile, which requires an intention combined with residence.<sup>17</sup>

BETTERMENT, or a residence under such circumstances as to entitle a person to support or assistance in case of becoming a pauper, is obtained in various ways. 1. By birth. 2. By the legal settlement of the father in case of minor children. 3. By marriage. 4. By continued residence. 5. By payment of requisite taxes. 6. By lawful exercise of a public office. 7. By hiring and service for a specified time. 8. By serving an apprenticeship, and perhaps some others which depend upon the statutes of the particular State.<sup>18</sup>

EQUITY is natural justice—justice between contending parties. It is a branch of remedial justice which affords relief to suitors in courts of equity.

The difference between the remedial justice of the courts of common law and that of courts of equity is marked and material. That administered by the courts of law is limited by the principles of the common law (which are to a great extent positive and inflexible), and especially by the nature and character of the process and pleadings, and of the judgments which those courts can render, because the pleadings cannot fully present all the matters in controversy, nor can the judgment be adapted to the special exigencies which may exist in particular

The courts of law relieve against fraud, mistake, and accident where a remedy can be had according to their modes and forms; but there are many cases in which the legal remedy is made equal to the purposes of justice. The modes of investigation and the peculiar remedies of the court of equity are often of the greatest importance in this class of cases. Transfers to defeat or delay creditors and purchasers without notice of an outstanding title come under this head of fraud. The court does not relieve in all cases of accident or mistake.

In many cases the circumstances are such as to require the cancellation or reformation of written instruments, or of specific performance of contracts, instead of damages for the breach of them.

4. Where the court of equity administers the remedy because the relations of the parties are such that there are impediments to a legal remedy, as, for instance, in cases of partnership, joint tenancy, marshalling of assets, and the like. From the nature of a partnership there are impediments to suits at law between the several partners and the partnership in relation to matters involved in the partnership; and impediments of a similar character exist in other cases.

5. Where the forms of proceeding in the courts of law are not deemed adequate to the due investigation of the particulars and details of the case. This class includes accounts, partition, dower, ascertainment of boundaries.

6. Where, from a relation of trust and confidence, or from consanguinity, the parties do not stand on equal ground in their dealings with each other, as, the relations of parent and child, guardian and ward, attorney and client, principal and agent, executor and administrator, legatees and distributees, trustee and cestui que trust, etc.

Cases of this class are sometimes considered under the head of constructive fraud.

7. Where the court grants relief from considerations of public policy, because of the mischief which would result if the court did not interfere. Of this class are marriage brokerage agreements, contracts in restraint of trade, buying and selling public offices, agreements founded on corrupt considerations, usury, gaming, and contracts with expectant heirs.

Cases of this class are sometimes considered under the head of constructive fraud.

8. Where a party, from incapacity to take care of his rights, is under the special care of the court of equity, as infants, idiots, and lunatics, which is exercised through committees or guardians.

9. Where the court recognizes an obligation on the part of a husband to make provision for the support of his wife, or to make a settlement upon her, out of the property which comes to her by inheritance or otherwise. This jurisdiction is not founded upon either trust or fraud, but is originally derived from the maxim "that he who asks equity should do equity."

10. Where the equitable relief appropriate to the case consists in restraining the commission or continuance of some act of which the defendant administered by means of a writ of injunction.

11. Where the court aids in the procurement or preservation of evidence of the rights of a party, to be used, if necessary, in some subsequent proceeding, the court administering no final relief.

PLEADING. A suit in equity is ordinarily instituted by a complaint or petition, called a bill, and the defendant is served with a writ of summons, called a subpoena, requiring him to appear and answer.

The forms of proceedings in equity are such as to bring the rights of all persons interested before the court; and, as a general rule, all persons interested should be made parties to the bill, either as plaintiffs or defendants. There may be amendments of the bill, or a supplemental bill; which is sometimes necessary when the case is beyond the stage for amendment. In case the suit fails by the death of the party, there is a bill of revivor, and after the cause is disposed of there may be a bill of review.

The defence is made by demurrer, plea, or answer. Discovery may be obtained from the plaintiff, and further matter may be introduced by means of a cross bill, brought by the defendant against the plaintiff, in order that it may be considered at the same time.

If the plaintiff elects, he may file a replication to the defendant's answer.

The final process is directed by the decree, which being a special judgment can provide relief according to the nature of the case. This is sometimes by a perpetual injunction.

There may be a bill to execute, or to impeach a decree.

PRACTICE. The rules of evidence, except as to the effect of the answer and the taking of the testimony, are, in general, similar to the rules of evidence in cases of law. But to this there are exceptions.

The answer, if made on oath, is evidence for the defendant so far as it is responsive to the bill for discovery, and as such it prevails, unless it is overcome by something more than what is equivalent to the testimony of one witness. If without oath, it is a mere pleading, and the allegations stand for proof.

If the answer is incomplete or improper, the plaintiff may except to it, and it must be so amended as to be made sufficient and proper. The case may be heard on the bill and answer if the plaintiff so elects, and sets the case down for hearing in that mode.

If the plaintiff desires to controvert any of the statements in the answer, he files a replication by which he denies the truth of the allegations in the answer, and testimony is taken. The testimony was formerly taken upon inter-by act of the laws, or of the parties. The chief incidents to estates for life are a right to take timber from the necessary timber and natural growth for fuel, fencing, repairs, and agricultural purposes, and a freedom from injury by a sudden termination or disturbance of the estate. Under-tenants have the same privileges as the original tenant, and acts of the original tenant which would destroy his own claim to these privileges will not affect them.<sup>2</sup> Their right, however, does not, of course, as against the superior owner, extend beyond the life of the original tenant.<sup>3</sup>

PARTICULAR ESTATES are those which are carved out of larger estates, and which precede a remainder; as, an estate for life to A., remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the particular estate.<sup>4</sup>

REMAINDER. See REAL PROPERTY.

REVERSION is the residue of an estate left in the grantor to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him.<sup>5</sup> It is the residue of an estate which always continues in him who made a particular grant.<sup>6</sup>

SEIZIN. See CONVEYANCES; REAL PROPERTY.

SEPARATE ESTATES are those which belong to one only of several persons; as, the separate estate of a partner, which does not belong to the partnership.<sup>7</sup> A separate estate of a married woman is that which belongs to her, and over which her husband has no control. It may be either lands or chattels, or both.<sup>8</sup>

SEVERALTY. Estates in severalty are those held by a tenant in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during the continuance of his estate.<sup>9</sup>

SUFFERANCE. An estate at sufferance is the interest of a tenant who has come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner, and continues to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission.<sup>10</sup> This estate seldom occurs, but is recognized, as so far as an estate that the landlord must enter before he can bring ejectment against the tenant.<sup>11</sup> If the tenant has personally left the house the landlord may break in the doors,<sup>12</sup> and the modern rule seems to be that the landlord may use force to regain possession, subject only to indictment if any injury is committed against the public peace.<sup>13</sup>

UNITY. In a joint estate there must exist four unities: 1. That of interest, for a joint tenant cannot be entitled to one period of duration or quantity of interest in lands and the other to a different; one cannot be tenant for life, and the other for years. 2. That of titles, and therefore their estates must be created by one and the same act. 3. That of time, for their estates must be vested at one and the same period, as well as by one and the same title; and, 4. That of possession. Hence joint tenants each have an entire possession, as well of every parcel as of the whole.<sup>14</sup>

Co-tenants must have the unities of interest, title, and possession.

Tenancies in common require only the unity of possession.<sup>15</sup>

WILL. Estates strictly at will are of unfrequent occurrence, being generally turned into estates for years, or from year to year, by the decisions of the court or by statute.<sup>16</sup> See SUFFERANCE, above; YEARS, below.

YEARS. Estates for years are interests in lands by virtue of a contract for the possession of them for a definite and limited period of time.<sup>17</sup> Such estates are frequently called terms. The length of time for which the estate is to endure is of no importance in ascertaining its character, unless otherwise declared by statute.<sup>18</sup>

ADMINISTRATION is the management of the estate of an intestate person, under a commission from the proper authority, is called administration. The management of the estate of an intestate, or of a testator who has no executor.<sup>19</sup>

The term is generally applied as denoting the management of an estate by an executor, and also the management of the estates of idiots, lunatics, minors, non compos mentis, spendthrifts, testators, etc., in those cases where guardians and trustees have been appointed by authority of law to take charge of such estates in place of the legal owners.

ADMINISTRATION AD INTERIM. Where any considerable time has elapsed since the decease of the testator or intestate, letters of administration may be granted at once, even where a will is supposed to exist, to continue only till the executor shall prove the will, or some other steps shall be taken to compel its production.<sup>20</sup> See ADMINISTRATION TO COLLECT AND PRESERVE, ETC., below.

AUXILIARY OR ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATION is subordinate to the principal administration, for collecting the estates of foreigners. It is taken out in the country where the assets are locally situate.<sup>21</sup> For the authority of a per-

They have the unities of interest. Common require only the unity of title. Estates strictly at will are unfreezing generally turned into fee simple from year to year, by the court or by statute.<sup>5</sup> See 1 YEAR, below.

ADMINISTRATION is the management of an intestate person, under the proper authority, is the management of the estate, or of a testator who has generally applied as denoting an estate by an executor, or administrator, of the estates of infants, minors, non-compositus, testators, etc., in guardians and trustees have authority of law to take in place of the legal owners.

ADMINISTRUM. Where any estate has elapsed since the decease of the testator, letters of administration at once, even where a will exists, to continue only till the will, or some other authority, to compel its production.<sup>1</sup>

ADMINISTRUM TO COLLECT AND PRESERVE. ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATION is the principal administration of the estates of foreigners in the country where the assets are. For the authority of a personal representative is strictly limited to the State from which it is derived. Still there are some exceptions to this rule; thus, an executor or administrator, after perfecting his title to personal property of the estate by due proof, and obtaining proper letters, may maintain an action in his own name without describing himself as executor or administrator, for the recovery of damages for any injury done to any of the personal property of the estate, after the decease of the testator or intestate, such action being founded, not upon the title of the deceased, but upon that of his personal representative, as such,<sup>2</sup> and this wherever the goods may be carried, found, or withheld, and whether in his custody or not. So, too, where the title to the property in possession, and even in choses in action of a negotiable nature, becomes perfected under the administration in one state or country, any action requisite to vindicate and enforce such title in any other or foreign state or country may be maintained without recourse to any local administration. But beyond these and similar exceptional cases, the authority of an executor or administrator is limited to the state or country where it is granted.

ADMINISTRATION TO COLLECT AND PRESERVE goods about to perish, is granted where there is no executor or administrator, and is governed entirely by statute which limits and qualifies the administrator's power over them.

ADMINISTRATIO DE BONIS NON is granted where a former administrator dies leaving a portion of the estate of a deceased unadministered. The person so appointed has in general the powers of a common administrator.<sup>1</sup> But an administrator de bonis non does not succeed to any special trust reposed in the former representative.<sup>2</sup> Such administrator derives his title from the decedent, and not from the former executor or administrator.<sup>3</sup> His liability is therefore restricted to the goods remaining unadministered.<sup>4</sup>

ADMINISTRATION DURING ABSENCE of the executor, and until he has proven the will, is generally granted when the next of kin (being nominated as executor, or primarily entitled to the administration) is beyond the sea, out of the country or State, lest the goods perish or the debts be lost. But appointment of an administrator temporarily, on account of the non-residence or other cause, that the primary administrator cannot conveniently administer, is not allowable: there should be a general and responsible representative of the estate appointed within the jurisdiction. Still courts of probate appoint administrators and issue letters testamentary to non-residents; but where, for any cause, it is important to institute suits, either in law or equity, against the representative of the estate, it is essential that he should be found in the jurisdiction of the court.

ADMINISTRATION DURING MINORITY is granted when executor, or next of kin, or other party entitled to administer, is a minor. In either case the court is compelled to select some other person, either temporarily or permanently. Such administrator may collect assets, pay debts, sell perishable property, and perform such other acts as require immediate attention. Such administrator has all the authority, for the time being, of a general administrator. He must manage in a prudent manner.<sup>5</sup> He may assent to a legacy, sue and be sued<sup>6</sup> for debts of the deceased, and may retain for his own debt.<sup>7</sup> As the office expires by its own limitation upon the regular representative coming of full age, it is generally proper, in suits for or against such administrator, to allege that the regular representative is under age; and so especially where such administrator is plaintiff, this being a matter specially within his knowledge.<sup>8</sup> He must render his accounts to the probate court the same as any other administrator.<sup>9</sup> Where there are several executors, all under age, the administration during minority will cease upon any one coming of age.<sup>10</sup>

FOREIGN ADMINISTRATION is exercised by virtue of authority properly conferred by a foreign jurisdiction. It is a general rule that letters of administration granted abroad give no authority to sue or be sued in another jurisdiction (with exception above noted), though they may be ground for new probate authority.<sup>11</sup> Hence, where persons are domiciled in one country, as A., and have personal property in another, as B., the authority must be had in B., but exercised according to the laws of A.<sup>12</sup> There is no legal privity between administrators in different States. The principal administrator is to act in the intestate's domicile, and the auxiliary or ancillary administrator is to collect claims and pay debts in the foreign jurisdiction, and pay over the surplus to his principal.<sup>13</sup> It has been held that the probate of a will in a foreign State, if duly authenticated, dispenses with the necessity of taking out new letters,<sup>14</sup> and that possession of property may be taken in a foreign State, but that suit cannot be brought without taking out letters in that State.<sup>7</sup>

ADMINISTRATION PENDENTE LITE is granted pending litigation,<sup>8</sup> respecting an alleged will or right of appointment. An officer of the court is appointed to take care of the estate only till the suit terminates.<sup>9</sup> The general duty of such administrator is to represent the estate during the pendency of the litigation, and in the meantime to see that no detriment comes to the goods or effects of the estate.<sup>10</sup> He is merely an agent or officer of the court, and when the litigation is determined he must relinquish his office, and surrender all the estate in his hands to the rightful representative.<sup>11</sup> His authority merely extends to collecting the assets and preserving them, and not to investing or distributing them.<sup>12</sup> He cannot use the money of the estate or invest it, and is not, therefore, liable for interest during the controversy.<sup>13</sup> And for all the purposes of his administration he may maintain suits.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION is performed by a public administrator, by virtue of a statute, in those cases where a person dies intestate, leaving any who are entitled to apply for letters of administration.<sup>14</sup>

SPECIAL OR LIMITED ADMINISTRATION is limited either in duration or extent, time or power. The right of a testator to commit distinct portions of the settlement of his estate to different persons, whether in the same or different countries, is not recognised by our courts,<sup>15</sup> though it has been held that a general grant of administration, during the pendency of a contest for proof of a will, is a nullity,<sup>16</sup> and administrations limited to particular effects, or to the performance of a single act, granted.<sup>17</sup>

ADMINISTRATION, WITH WILL ANNEXED, occurs either:<sup>18</sup> 1. Where no executor is appointed by the will.<sup>19</sup> 2. Where an executor pre-deceases the testator.<sup>20</sup> 3. Where for any cause an executor becomes incompetent to discharge the office, or renounces it. 4. Where, after having proven the will, the testator dies before completing the administration. In this latter class of cases the administrator is also administrator de bonis non. So, also, where the person named executor is limited to his age of majority, either by the terms of the will or the laws of the State, and has not yet arrived at full age, some one must act as administrator with the will annexed in the meantime. And there are other cases where a vacancy in the office of executor may exist either temporarily or permanently, as where the person named executor is not to act until one year after the death of the testator, etc. In general, the duties of the executor wholly devolve on the administrator with the will annexed, so far as they pertain to the settlement and distribution of the estate; but where there are special trusts devolved upon the executor beyond this, which are of longer duration and more strictly personal; those should be devolved upon a trustee specially appointed for that purpose by the proper authority of court. Such administrator must follow the statute rules of distribution except when otherwise directed by the will.

JURISDICTION over administrations is vested in courts of both general and limited jurisdiction. The officer authorised to delegate the trust is called judge of probate, ordinary, registrar of wills, surrogate, etc., etc.<sup>21</sup> In some States these courts are of special jurisdiction, as county courts, probate or surrogate courts, etc., while in others the power is vested in the courts of general jurisdiction, as the circuit and superior courts.<sup>22</sup> These courts have no jurisdiction until the death of the testator or intestate has taken place. This is generally brought to their notice in the form of an affidavit. A decree of the court is prima facie evidence of such death.<sup>23</sup>

The personal property of a decedent after expenses of last sickness, allowance to widow and minor children, etc., is appropriated to the payment of his debts, so far as required, and, until exhausted, must be first resorted to by creditors. By the general statutes upon the subject the court may grant the administrator power to sell, lease, or mortgage land, when the personal estate of the deceased is not sufficient to pay his debts.<sup>24</sup> Purchasers at such sale get as full title as if they had been distributees; but no warranty can be implied by the administrator's silence.<sup>25</sup> But a fraudulent sale will be annulled by the court.<sup>26</sup>

LINE. See REAL ESTATE; BOUNDARIES.
MERGER. When a greater estate and a less meet in one and the same person without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately merged, that is, absorbed in the latter. For example, if there be a tenant for years, and the reversion in fee simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged into the inheritance, and no longer exists; but they must be one and the same person, at one and the same time, in one and the same right.<sup>1</sup> The estate in which the merger takes place is not enlarged by the accession of the preceding estate; and the greater or only subsisting estate continues after the merger precisely of the same quantity and extent of ownership as it was before the accession of the estate which is merged, and the lesser estate is extinguished.<sup>2</sup> As a general rule equal estates will not merge in each other; the merger is produced either from the meeting of an estate of higher with an estate of inferior degree, or from the meeting of the particular estate and the immediate reversion in the same person.<sup>3</sup>

SEVERANCE is the destruction of any of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenancy, but is severed. Severance is effected: 1. By alienation of one of the joint tenants, which changes the estate into a tenancy in common. 2. By partition. 3. By purchase or descent of all the shares of the joint tenants so that the whole estate becomes vested in one only.<sup>4</sup>

SURRENDER is the yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder by which a lesser estate is merged in the greater by mutual agreement.<sup>5</sup> It is the deed by which the surrender is made. A surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; for as the latter operates by the greater estate descending upon the less, the former is the falling of a less estate into a greater by deed. A surrender immediately divests the estate of the surrenderer and vests it in the surrenderee, even without the assent of the latter.<sup>6</sup> The technical and proper words of this conveyance are "surrender and yield up;" but any form of words by which the intention of the parties is sufficiently manifested will operate as a surrender.<sup>7</sup> The surrenderer may be express or implied; the latter is when the estate incompatible with the existing estate is accepted or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands.<sup>8</sup>

TERM is the limitation of an estate; as a term for years, for life, or the like. The word "term" does not merely signify the time specified in the lease, but the estate, also the interest which passes by that lease; and therefore the term may expire during the continuance of the term; as, by surrender, forfeiture, and the like.<sup>9</sup>

TITLE is the means whereby the owner of an estate holds just possession of the same. If bad, it conveys no property. If doubtful, the court will not consider it clear enough to enforce its acceptance by a purchaser, nor so defective as to declare it a bad title, but only subject to so much doubt that a purchaser ought not to be compelled to accept it.<sup>10</sup> If it be marketable a court of equity considers it so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by the purchaser.<sup>11</sup>

There are several stages or degrees requisite to form a complete title to lands. The lowest and most imperfect degree of title is the mere possession, or actual occupation of the estate without any apparent right to hold or continue such possession. This happens when one man dispossesses another. The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession which may reside in one man while the actual possession is not in himself but in another; this right of possession is of two kinds: 1. An apparent right of possession, which may be defeated by proving a better; and 2. The actual right of possession, which will stand the test against all occupants.

Title to real property is acquired by either descent or purchase. Title to personal property is acquired: 1. By original acquisition, creation, or occupancy, such as intellectual labor, copyright, and patent property. 2. By transfer by act of the parties, such as by gift, by contract, or by sale; and by transfer by operation of the law, as by forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, bankruptcy, insolvency, intestacy.

In general, possession constitutes the title to personal property, because no other means exist by which a knowledge of the fact to whom it belongs can be obtained. A seller of a chattel is not, therefore, required to show the origin of his title; nor, in general, is a purchaser without notice of the claim of the owner, compellable to make restitution; but a purchaser from a tenant for life of personal chattels will not be secure against the claims of those entitled in remainder.<sup>12</sup> Exceptions to the rule that possession is the criterion of title of property are chattels mortgaged, when such mortgage is required by law to be recorded in a public office; bills of sale, under the same requirements, and ships, the title of which can be ascertained by the register.<sup>13</sup>

To convey title, the seller must himself have a title to the property which is the subject of the transfer. But to this general rule there are exceptions. The lawful coin and currency of the United States will pass the property along with the possession. A negotiable instrument, indorsed in blank, is transferable by any person holding it, so as by its delivery to give good title "to any person honestly acquiring it."<sup>14</sup>

Eviction. See PRACTICE.
Exclusion. See REAL PROPERTY.

EVIDENCE. See AFFIDAVITS; BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS; EQUITY; LAW; PRACTICE.

EVIDENCE is that which tends to prove or disprove any matter in question, or to influence the belief respecting it. Belief is produced by the consideration of something presented to the mind. The matter thus presented, in whatever shape it may come and through whatever material organ it is derived, is evidence.<sup>1</sup> The word evidence in legal acceptance includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved.<sup>2</sup> That which is legally submitted to a jury, to enable them to decide upon questions in dispute, or issues, as pointed out by the pleadings, and distinguished from all comment and argument, is termed evidence.<sup>3</sup>

Evidence may be considered with reference to its instruments, the mode of its introduction, its nature, and its object.

The instruments of evidence and mode of their introduction are as follows:

1. JUDICIAL NOTICE OR RECOGNITION. This needs no proof; it is already known and recognized by the court.

2. LAWS. Laws are introduced and proven by printed statute books, or copies from the original rolls, duly exemplified.

3. PERSONAL INSPECTION.

4. PUBLIC DOCUMENTS printed by authority of Congress or the legislature. These are introduced and proven by printed or written copies from the original records, duly exemplified.

5. PUBLIC RECORDS AND COPIES THEREOF, consisting of registers of official transactions made by officers elected or appointed for that purpose. These are introduced and proven by printed copies or by copies from the original records, duly exemplified.

6. RECORDS AND TRANSCRIPTS of proceedings in foreign and domestic courts. These are introduced and proven by copies and transcripts, duly authenticated or exemplified.

7. PRIVATE WRITINGS, as deeds, contracts, wills, etc. These are introduced and proven by the instruments themselves, or copies duly evidenced.

8. TRANSLATIONS. These must be correctly made from the original writing to be introduced in evidence.

TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES is introduced by affidavit, deposition, and oral examination.

The nature or legal character of evidence is as follows:

1. CONCLUSIVE—being such as establishes the fact, and that satisfies the court and jury; that which cannot be controlled or contradicted by any other evidence.

2. PRIMA FACIE—being sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to establish a fact.<sup>4</sup>

3. PRIMARY—being the original, the first, the best, and highest degree of evidence of which the case, in its nature, is susceptible.<sup>5</sup>

4. SECONDARY—being such as is admissible when original or primary evidence is lost or destroyed, and which, in such an event, becomes the best evidence.<sup>6</sup>

See COPY; DECLARATION; HEARSAY, below. The object of evidence is to ascertain the truth between the parties.

It has been discovered by experience that this is done most certainly by the adoption of the following rules:

1. The evidence must be confined to the point in issue.

2. The substance of the issue must be proved; but only the substance is required to be proved.

3. The affirmative of the issue must be proved.

See PROOF, ETC., below. ACCOUNTS; ACCOUNTS STATED; see title ACCOUNTS, ante.

ACTS; see title ACTS, ante.

ADMISSIONS (concessions or voluntary acknowledgments made by a party, of the existence or truth of certain facts). As distinguished from confessions, the term is applied to civil transactions, and to matters of fact in criminal cases where there is no criminal intent. See post, "CONFESSIONS." As distinguished from consent, an admission may be said to be evidence furnished by the party's own act of his consent at a previous period.

Direct or express admissions are those which are made in direct terms. Implied admissions are those which result from some act, or failure to act, of a party. Incidental admissions are those made in some other connection, or involved in the admission of some other fact.

Admissions may be made by a party to the record, or by one identified in interest with him.<sup>7</sup> Not, however, where the party of record is merely a nominal party, and has no active interest in the suit.<sup>8</sup> They may be made by one of several having a joint interest, so as to be binding upon all.<sup>9</sup> Mere community of interest, as in the case of co-executor, trustee,<sup>10</sup> or cotenant,<sup>11</sup> is not sufficient. The interest in all cases must have subsisted at the time of making the admissions.<sup>12</sup>

They may be made by any person interested in the subject matter of the suit, though the suit be prosecuted in the name of another person as cestui que trust,<sup>13</sup> or indemnifying creditor in an action against the officer.<sup>14</sup> They may be made by a third person, a stranger to the suit, where the issue is substantially upon the rights of such a person, at a particular time, or who has been expressly referred to for information) or where there is a privity between the ancestor and heir, an assignor or assignee, intestate and administrator." They may be made by an agent so as to bind his principal; so far only, however, as the agent has authority, and not in regard to past transactions. Thus, the admissions of the wife bind the husband so far only as she has authority in the matter, and, so the formal admissions of an attorney bind his client.

Implied admissions may result from assumed character, from conduct, from acquiescence, which is positive in its nature; from possession of documents in some cases.

In civil matters, constraint will not avoid admissions if imposition or fraud were not made use of.

Admissions made in treating for an adjustment cannot be given in evidence where made under faith of a pending treaty.

Judicial admissions, and those which have been acted on by others, and in deeds, as between parties and their privies, are conclusive evidence against the parties making them.

It frequently occurs in practice, that, in order to save expense as to mere formal proofs, the attorneys on each side consent to admit, reciprocally, certain facts in the cause without calling for proof of them. These are usually reduced to writing, and the attorneys shortly add to this effect, namely: "We agree that the above facts shall, on the trial of this cause, be admitted, and taken as proved on each side;" and signing two copies now called "admissions" in the cause; each attorney takes one.

AFFIDANT. See title AFFIDANTS, ante, and LOST PAPERS, below.

AFFIRMATION. An affirmation is a solemn religious avowal in the nature of an oath.

Quakers, as a class, and other persons who have conscientious scruples against taking an oath, are allowed to make affirmation in any mode which they may declare to be binding upon their conscience, in confirmation of the truth of the testimony which they are about to give. See OATH, below.

ALIBI. When a person charged with a crime proves that he was at the time alleged in a different place from that in which it was committed, he thus proves an alibi (elsewhere), the effect of which is to lay a foundation for the necessary inference that he could not have committed it. This proof is usually made out by the testimony of witnesses, but may be made by writings properly authenticated.

ALIENDE is from another place, outside or without the will, judgment, etc., evidence aliunde may be received to explain an ambiguity in a will, but never to impeach a judgment, for a judgment obtained is valid against the world, unless, of course, it be fraudulent, invalid, non-existent, or satisfied.

BELIEF may be stronger or weaker according to the weight of evidence adduced in favor of the proposition under consideration. The conviction of the mind arises, not from actual perception or knowledge, but by way of inference, or from evidence received or information derived from others.

BEST EVIDENCE is not the highest or strongest evidence possible, but the best evidence which the nature of the thing to be proved admits; for example, a copy of a deed is not the best evidence, the deed is better. BILL OF LADING. See title BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS, ante.

BLANKS. When a blank is left in a written agreement which need not have been reduced to writing, and would have been equally binding, whether written or unwritten, it is presumed in an action for the non-performance of the contract, parol evidence may be admitted to explain the blank. And where a written instrument has been made professedly to record a fact, is produced as evidence of that fact which it purports to record, and a blank appears in a material part, the omission may be supplied by other proof. Hence a blank left in an award may be supplied. But where a creditor signs a deed of composition, leaving the amount of his debt in blank, he binds himself to all existing debts.

BONDS, NOTES, AND BILLS. See that title, ante.

BURDEN OF PROOF. The burden of proof is the duty of proving the facts in dispute on an issue raised between the parties in a cause.

Burden of proof is to be distinguished from prima facie evidence and prima facie case. Generally, when the latter is shown, the duty imposed upon the party having the burden will be satisfied; but it is not necessarily so.

The burden of proof lies upon him who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue;

but where the plaintiff grounds his case on negative allegations, he has the burden.<sup>1</sup>

In criminal cases, on a twofold ground that a prosecutor must prove every fact necessary to substantiate his charge against a prisoner, and that the law will presume innocence in the absence of convincing evidence to the contrary, the burden of proof, unless shifted by legislative interference, will fall, in criminal proceedings, on the prosecuting party, though in order to convict he must necessarily have recourse to negative evidence.<sup>2</sup> The burden of proof is throughout on the State to make out the whole case; and when a prima facie case is established, the burden of proof is not thereby shifted upon the defendant, and he is not bound to restore himself to that presumption of innocence in which he was at the commencement of the trial.<sup>3</sup>

In general, whenever the law presumes the affirmative, it lies on the party who denies the fact to prove the negative; as when the law raises a presumption as to the continuance of life, the legitimacy of children born in wedlock, or the satisfaction of a debt.

CHARACTER (opinion generally entertained of a person derived from the common report of the people who are acquainted with him).<sup>1</sup> The moral character of a person in society may be used in proof before a jury in three classes of cases: 1. To afford a presumption that a particular party has not been guilty of a criminal act. 2. To affect the damages in particular cases, where their amount depends on the character and conduct of any individual. 3. To impeach or confirm the veracity of a witness.

OF PARTIES. Where the guilt of an accused party is doubtful, and the character of the supposed agent is involved in question, a presumption of innocence arises from his former conduct in society, as evidenced by his general character; since it is not probable that a person of known probity and humanity would commit a dishonest or outrageous act in the particular instance. But where it is a question of great and atrocious criminality, the commission of the act is so unusual, so out of the ordinary course of things, and beyond common experience—it is so manifest that the offence, if perpetrated, must have been influenced by motives not frequently operating on the human mind—that evidence of character, and of a man's habitual conduct under common circumstances, is not to be considered as inferior to what it is in accusations of a lower grade. Against facts strongly proved, good character cannot prevail. It is, therefore, in smaller offences, in such as relate to the actions of daily and common life, as when one is charged with pilfering and stealing, that evidence of a high character for honesty will satisfy a jury that the accused is not likely to yield to so slight a temptation. In such case, where the evidence is doubtful, proof of character may be given with good effect. But still even with regard to the higher crimes, testimony of good character, though of less avail, is competent evidence to the jury, and a species of evidence which the accused has a right to offer. It is the privilege of the accused to put his character in issue, or not. If he does, and offers evidence of a good character, then the prosecution may give evidence to rebut and counteract it. But it is not competent for the government to give in proof a bad character of the defendant, unless he first opens that line of inquiry by evidence of good character.)

OF WITNESSES. The party against whom a witness is called may disprove the facts stated by him, or may examine other witnesses as to his general character; but they will not be allowed to speak of particular facts or parts of his conduct.<sup>1</sup> For example, evidence of the general character of a prosecutrix for a rape may be given, as that she was a street-walker; but evidence of specific acts of criminality cannot be admitted.<sup>2</sup> The regular mode of inquiring into the reputation of a witness, is to ask of those introduced for that purpose whether they know the general reputation of the person in question among his neighbors, and what that reputation is. The inquiry must be as to his general reputation where he is best known, or with those among whom he is known, or with those among whom he dwells,<sup>3</sup> and whether from such knowledge he would believe him on his oath.<sup>4</sup> In answer to such evidence against character, the other party may cross-examine the witness as to his means of knowledge, and the grounds of his opinion; or he may attack such witness' general character, or by fresh evidence support the character of his own.<sup>5</sup> A party cannot give evidence to confirm the good character of a witness, unless his general character has been impeached by his antagonist.<sup>6</sup>

See WITNESS, IMPRACHMENT OF, below.

CIRCUMSTANCES. Facts proved are always accompanied by circumstances which more or less influence the mind in forming a judgment. In some instances these circumstances assume the character of irrefragable evidence; where, for example, a woman was found dead in a room, with every indication of having met with a violent death, the presence of another person at the scene of action was made manifest by the bloody mark of a Fig 1 Id. 270; 2 Ber. 225; 5 St. Tr. 1028; 1 Conz. 445; 5 B. & H. 250; 2 Bibb. 266; 3 Id. 295; 5 Day. 260; 9 Conn. 276; 14 Ala. 312; 6 Cov. 673; 3 Howland. 203; 24 Ind. 286. <sup>2</sup> 1 B. & H. 225. <sup>3</sup> 1 T. If so, are there any circumstances which render it impossible? If alleged facts are impossible, the witness ought not to be credited. For example: if a man swears that he saw the deceased shoot himself with his own pistol, and, upon examination, the ball which killed him is found too large to enter the pistol, the witness ought not to be credited. So, also, if one swears that another has committed an impossible crime.

COMMUNICATIONS, CONSULTATIONS, CONFERENCES, CONVERSATIONS, AND THE PROPOSITIONS made at and prior to the contract are part of the contract, for no parol evidence will be allowed to be given to alter, contradict, or vary a written instrument.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE is that which, while uncontradicted, satisfies the judge or jury. That which cannot be controlled or contradicted by any other evidence. That which establishes the fact, as in the instance of conclusive presumptions. The record of a court of common law jurisdiction is conclusive as to the facts therein stated. Evidence may be conclusive for some purposes, but not for others.

CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTIONS. See PRESUMPTIONS, below.

CONFESSIONS (voluntary declarations made by a person who has committed a crime or misdemeanor to another, of the agency or participation which he had in the same. An admission or acknowledgment by a prisoner, when arraigned for an offence, that he committed the crime with which he is charged. Judicial confessions are those made before a magistrate, or in court in the due course of legal proceedings. Extra-judicial confessions are those made by the party elsewhere than before a magistrate, or in the open court).

Voluntary confessions are admissible in evidence; but a confession is not admissible in evidence where it is obtained by temporal inducement, by threats, promise, or hope of favor held out to the party in respect of his escape from the charge against him by a person in authority, where there is reason to presume that such person appeared to the party to sanction such threat or inducement; but it is admissible if such inducements proceed from a person not in authority over the prisoner, or if the inducement be spiritual merely; and the temporal inducement must have been held out by the person to whom the confession is made, unless otherwise expected. A confession is admissible, though elicited by questions put to the prisoner by a constable, magistrate, or other person, even though the question assumes the prisoner's guilt, or the confession is obtained by trick or artifice, and although it appears that the prisoner was not warned that what he said would be used against him.

A statement not compulsory, made by a party not at the time a prisoner under a criminal charge, is admissible in evidence against him, although it is made upon oath; otherwise, if the answers are compulsory. A confession may be inferred from the conduct and demeanor of a prisoner when a statement is made in his presence affecting himself, unless such statement is made in the deposition of a witness, or examination of another prisoner before a magistrate.

Where a confession has been obtained, or an inducement held out under circumstances which would render a confession inadmissible, a confession subsequently made is not admissible in evidence; unless from the length of time intervening, from proper warning of the consequences, or from other circumstances, there is reason to presume that the hope or fear which influenced the first confession is dispelled, and the motives proved to have been offered will be presumed to continue, and to have produced the confession, unless the contrary is shown by clear evidence, and the confession will be rejected. Under such circumstances contemporaneous declarations of the party are receivable in evidence, or not, according to the attending circumstances; but any act of the party, though done in consequence of such a confession, is admissible, if it appears from a fact, thereby discovered, that so much of the confession as immediately relates to it is true.<sup>1</sup>

A confession made before a magistrate is admissible, though made before the evidence of the witness against the party was concluded.<sup>2</sup>

Parol evidence, precise and distinct, of a statement made by a prisoner before a magistrate during his examination, is admissible, though such statement neither appears in the written examination, nor is vouched for by the magistrate;<sup>3</sup> but not if it is of a character which it was the duty of the magistrate to have noted.<sup>4</sup> Parol evidence of a confession before a magistrate may be given where the written examination is inadmissible through informality.<sup>5</sup>

The whole of what the prisoner said must be taken together.<sup>6</sup>

A prisoner's confession, when the corpus delicti is not otherwise proved, is insufficient to warrant his conviction.<sup>7</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

AGENTS. See INTERPRETERS, below.

ATTORNEYS, COUNSELLORS, AND SOLICITORS AT LAW, and members of the legal profession generally, are not competent to testify to confidential communications. The confidential counsellor, solicitor, or attorney of any party cannot be compelled to disclose papers delivered, or communications made to him, or letters, or entries made by him in that capacity;<sup>8</sup> nor will he be permitted to make such communications against the will of his client.<sup>9</sup> The privilege extends to all matters made the subject of professional intercourse, without regard to the pendency of legal proceedings,<sup>10</sup> and as to matters discovered by the counsellor, etc., in consequence of this relation.<sup>11</sup> A barrister's clerk is considered as standing in the same relation as an attorney;<sup>12</sup> but not a student at law in an attorney's office.<sup>13</sup>

The cases in which communications to counsel have been holden not to be privileged may be classed under the following heads: When the communication was made before the attorney was employed as such;<sup>14</sup> after the attorney's employment has ceased;<sup>15</sup> when the attorney was consulted because he was an attorney, yet was not acting as such;<sup>16</sup> where his character of attorney was the cause of his being present at the taking place of a fact, but there was nothing in the circumstances to make it amount to a communication;<sup>17</sup> when the matter communicated was not, in its nature, private, and could in no sense be termed the subject of a confidential communication;<sup>18</sup> when the things disclosed had no reference to professional employment, though disclosed while the relation of attorney and client subsisted;<sup>19</sup> when the attorney made himself the subscribing witness;<sup>20</sup> when he is a party to the transaction;<sup>21</sup> when he was directed to plead the facts to which he is called to testify.<sup>22</sup>

Attorneys, clergymen, or physicians, with the consent of the party making confidential communication, may testify concerning the same.

CLERGYMEN, concerning any confessions made to them in the course of discipline enjoined by the church, are privileged in some States, but not by the common law.<sup>27</sup>

INTERPRETERS AND AGENTS<sup>28</sup> are considered as standing in the same relation as an attorney.

HUSBAND AND WIFE are excluded from giving testimony for or against each other when either is a party to the suit, or interested. And neither is competent to prove a fact directly tending to criminate the other. This rule is founded partly on their identity of interest, and partly, perhaps chiefly, on the policy of the law, which aims to protect the confidence between man and wife, that is essential to the comfort of the married relation, and through that to the good order of society. Whether, or not, the disability of husband and wife may ever be removed by consent of the other is a matter of dispute.<sup>29</sup> It does not make any difference which party is called upon as a witness,<sup>30</sup> or when the relation commenced,<sup>31</sup> or whether it has terminated.<sup>32</sup> It is not removed by death, or by the dissolution of the marriage relation.

Some exceptions to this rule are admitted out of necessity for the protection of husband and wife against each other, and for the sake of public justice.

PHYSICIANS, concerning any communication as to matters confided to them in course of their profession, provided this privilege be extended to them by statute and not otherwise. But a physician consulted as to the means of doing an unlawful act, such as procuring an abortion, is not excused from answering. The statute does not prevent the physician of a deceased person giving evidence in a testamentary cause, concerning the probate of the will of such decedent. The statute does not establish a general and absolute prohibition of such testimony in all cases, but secures a personal privilege to the party, which may be waived; and if such privilege be waived, the witness cannot object to testify.

CONJECTURE, arising from evidence too weak or remote to cause belief, is of too slight a degree to have any weight, being merely a probability without any demonstration of its truth.

COPIES cannot be given in evidence unless proof is made that the originals from which they are taken are lost, or are in the power of the opposite party; and, in the latter case, that notice has been given him to produce the original.

A copy to be evidence must be a true transcript of the original writing or record. The papers should be exchanged and read alternately, but this is not strictly necessary.

See EXAMINED COPY; ORIGINALS, below.

CREDIBILITY. In deciding upon the credibility of a witness, it is always pertinent to consider whether he is capable of knowing thoroughly the thing about which he testifies; whether he was actually present at the transaction; whether he paid sufficient attention to be qualified to make a correct report of it; and whether he honestly relates the affair as fully as he knows it, without purpose or desire to deceive, add to, or suppress the truth. With this may be considered his interest, if any, and qualities of mind and character.

The credibility of witnesses is a question for the jury to determine, as their competency is for the court.

CRIMINATE. A witness cannot be compelled to answer any question which has a tendency to expose him to a penalty, or to any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge.

An accomplice admitted to give evidence against his associates in guilt is bound to make a full and fair confession of the whole truth respecting the subject-matter of the prosecution. But he is not bound to answer with respect to his share in other offences, in which he was not concerned with the prisoner.

CROSS-EXAMINATION. See LEADING QUESTIONS; AND WITNESSES, below.

CUSTOM. Evidence of custom or usage is never admissible to oppose or alter a general principle, or rule of law, so as, upon a given state of facts, to make the legal rights and liabilities of parties other than they are by law. With respect to a custom or usage of trade, however, it is sufficient if it appears to be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law. But if not directly known to the parties to the transaction it will still be binding upon them if it appear to be so general and well established that knowledge of it may be presumed.

DAMAGE. He who it is proved caused the damage is bound to repair it; and if proven he has done it maliciously he may be compelled to pay even beyond the actual loss. Where it is shown that the damage occurred by accident, without blame to any one, the loss is borne by the owner of the thing injured; as, if a horse run away with his rider, without any fault of the latter, and injure the property of another person, such injury is the loss of the owner of the thing. When damage happens by the act of God, or inevitable accident, as by tempest, earthquake, or other natural cause, the loss must be borne by the owner.

DEATH. Persons who have been once shown to have been in life are presumed thus to continue until the contrary is shown; so that it lies on the party asserting the death to make proof of it. But proof of a long continued absence, unheard from and unexplained, will lay a foundation for presumption of death. The general rule is, that the presumption of the duration of life ceases at the expiration of seven years from the time when he was last known to be living. Such continued absence for seven years from the particular State of his residence, without showing an absence from the United States is sufficient.

See IDENTITY, below.

DECLARATIONS are statements made by a party to a transaction, or by one having an interest in the existence of some fact in relation to the same.

and admissible as such: 1. When the fact that the declaration was made is the point in question.<sup>2</sup> 2. Including expressions of bodily feelings where the existence or nature of such feelings is the object of inquiry; as expressions of affection in actions for crimes. con.,<sup>3</sup> representations by a sick person of the nature, symptoms, and effects of the malady under which he is laboring; in prosecutions for rape, the declarations of the woman forced.<sup>4</sup> 3. In cases of pedigree, including the declarations of deceased persons nearly related to the parties in question; family records.<sup>5</sup> 4. Cases where the declaration may be considered as a part of the res gestae,<sup>6</sup> including the entries made by those whose duty it was to make such entries.<sup>7</sup>

Declarations regarded as secondary evidence or hearsay, and yet admitted in some cases: 1. In matters of general and public interest, common reputation being admissible as to matters of public interest;<sup>8</sup> but reputation amongst those only connected with the place of business in question, in regard to matters of general interest merely,<sup>9</sup> and the matter must be of a quasi public nature.<sup>4</sup> 2. In cases of ancient possession, where ancient documents are admitted, if found in a place in which, and under the care of persons with whom such papers might reasonably be expected to be found,<sup>10</sup> if they purport to be a part of the transaction to which they relate.<sup>11</sup> 3. In cases of declarations and entries made against the interest of the party making them, whether made concurrently with the act or subsequently,<sup>12</sup> but such declarations and entries, to be so admitted, must appear or be shown to be against the pecuniary interest of the party making them.<sup>13</sup> 4. Dying declarations made in cases of homicide, where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declarations, are admissible<sup>14</sup> if made under a sense of impending death.<sup>15</sup> The declarations may have been made by signs,<sup>16</sup> and in answer to questions.<sup>17</sup> The substance only need be given by the witness,<sup>18</sup> but the declaration must have been complete,<sup>19</sup> and the circumstances under which it was made must be shown to the court.<sup>20</sup>

Declarations to be admissible as original evidence must have been made at the time of doing the act to which they relate.<sup>21</sup>

In order to their admission as secondary evidence, the declarant must be dead,<sup>22</sup> and the declaration must have been made before any controversy arose.<sup>23</sup> It must appear that the declarant was in a condition or situation to know the facts, or that it was his duty to know them.<sup>24</sup>

The declarations of an agent respecting a subject-matter, with regard to which he represents the principal, bind the principal,<sup>25</sup> if made during the continuance of the agency with regard to the transaction then pending,<sup>26</sup> and similar rules extend to partners' declarations.<sup>1</sup>

When more than one person is concerned in the commission of a crime, as in cases of riots, conspiracies, and the like, the declarations of either of the parties, made while acting in the common design, are evidence against the whole;<sup>27</sup> but the declarations of one of the rioters, or conspirators, made after the accomplishment of their object, and when they no longer acted together, are evidence only against the party making them.<sup>28</sup> death are the subject of depositions, are admissible if made pending death. The depositions are by signs, and the substance of the witness, but the declaration is complete, and the circumstance it was made must be admissible as original evidence made at the time of which they relate.

Admission as secondary evidence must be made before any deposition is taken. It must appear that the condition or situation to which it was his duty to know of an agent respecting a regard to which he represents the principal, if made in reliance of the agency with reference then pending, and to partners' declarations. If one person is concerned in a crime, as in cases of riots, or like the declarations of a witness, made while acting in the evidence against the whole, or of one of the rioters, or after the accomplishment of an act, they no longer act only against the party is the highest evidence. It is such as to establish all possibility of error. It is a proposition beyond a possibility of doubt. It shows the contrary position to be absurd or impossible. It is the indubitable evidence of the senses, and of reason.

DEPOSITIONS are written declarations, an oath, made upon notice to the adverse party for the purpose of enabling him to attend and cross-examine, or upon written interrogatories. The difference between a deposition and an affidavit, is the requirement of notice in the former.

Depositions were not formerly allowed in common law courts, but were admitted from necessity where the oral testimony of a witness could not be obtained. In courts of equity this is generally the only testimony which is taken. In most States both oral testimony and depositions are used.

In criminal cases depositions cannot be used without the consent of the defendant, who cannot by constitution be deprived of the right of meeting his accusers face to face. Statutory provisions are made in many States for taking depositions by the accused.

The cases in which depositions may be used, the time of taking, before whom taken, notice of taking, forms, directions and proceedings in taking, transmission, opening, exception to, and their introduction as evidence, are the subjects of special statutory regulations in all the various States.

DIRECT EVIDENCE is that means of proof which tends to show the existence of a fact in question without the intervention of the proof of any other fact. Evidence is termed direct, which applies immediately to the fact to be proved without any intervening process, as distinguished from circumstantial, which applies immediately to collateral facts supposed to have a connection, near or remote, to the fact in controversy.

It is that evidence which, if believed, establishes the truth of the fact in issue, and does not rise from any presumption. Evidence is direct and positive when the very facts in dispute are communicated by those who have the actual knowledge of them by means of their senses. In one sense there is but little direct or positive proof, or such proof as is acquired by means of one's own senses; all other evidence is presumptive; but in common acceptance, direct and positive evidence is that which is communicated by one who has actual knowledge of the fact.

DISCREDIT. In general a party may discredit a witness called by the opposite party who testifies against him, by proving that his deposition is untrue. character is such as not to entitle him to credit or confidence, or any other fact which shows he is not entitled to belief. It is clearly settled, also, that the party voluntarily calling a witness, cannot afterwards impeach his character for truth and veracity. But if a party calls a witness who turns out unfavorable he may call another to prove the same point.

DISCREPANCY is material where there is such a difference between a thing alleged and a thing offered in evidence as to show they are not substantially the same; as, when the plaintiff in his declaration for a malicious arrest averred that "the plaintiff in that action did not prosecute his said suit, but therein made default;" and the record was "that the plaintiff obtained a rule to discontinue." A discrepancy is immaterial where it does not materially affect the cause, as where a declaration stated that a deed bore the date in a certain year of our Lord, and the deed was simply dated "March 30, 1701."

EFFECT OF EVIDENCE. As a general rule, a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction directly upon a point in issue, is a bar between the same parties; and privies in blood, as an heir or privies in estate, stand in the same situation as those whom they represent; the verdict and judgment may be used for or against them, and is conclusive. But in order to constitute this bar, and to make a matter res judicata, there must be a concurrence of the four conditions following: 1. Identity of the thing sued for; 2. Identity of the cause of action; 3. Identity of persons, and of parties to the action; 4. Identity of the quality in the persons for or against whom the claim is made.

EXAMINATION (Preliminary) is made concerning a criminal offence, of the grounds which constitute the accusation against a person arrested on a criminal charge with a view of discharging the person so arrested, or to secure his appearance for trial by the proper court, and to preserve the evidence relating to the matter. This is accomplished by bringing the person accused, together with witnesses, before the magistrate (usually a justice of the peace), who hears the case for the purposes above stated, taking down in writing the evidence of the witnesses, and any statements which the prisoner may see fit to make. If no probable cause of the guilt of the prisoner appears, he is discharged from arrest. If sufficient cause of suspicion appears to warrant putting him on trial, he is committed, or required to give bail or enter into a recognizance to appear at the proper time for trial. The witnesses are also frequently required to recognize for their appearance, though in ordinary cases only their personal recognizance is required. The magistrate certifies the minutes of the evidence which he has taken, and it is delivered or transmitted to the court before whom the trial is to be had. See LEADING QUESTIONS, and WITNESSES, below.

The examination should be taken and completed as soon as the nature of the case will admit.<sup>a</sup> The prisoner must not be put upon oath (except where by statute he is competent to testify), and then only when he voluntarily consents, the witnesses must.<sup>b</sup> The prisoner has no right to the assistance of an attorney, but the privilege is granted in the discretion of the magistrate.<sup>c</sup> The magistrate's return and certificate are conclusive evidence, and exclude parol evidence of what the prisoner said on that occasion with reference to the charge.<sup>d</sup> See CONFESSIONS, above.

EXAMINATION, REDIRECT. See WITNESSES, below.

EXAMINED COPIES, or papers which are copies of records, public books or registers, which have been compared with the originals,<sup>e</sup> are admitted in evidence because of the public inconvenience which would arise if such records, public books, or registers, were removed from place to place, and because any fraud or mistake made in the examined copy would be so easily detected.<sup>f</sup> But in an answer in chancery on which the defendant was indicted for perjury, or where the original must be produced in order to identify the party by proof of handwriting, an examined copy would not be evidence.<sup>g</sup>

EXPERTS. Those who are skilled by experience. Witnesses who are admitted to testify on account of their peculiar knowledge of some art or science requisite or of value in settling the point in issue. Such persons are selected by the court or parties in a cause, on account of their knowledge or skill, to examine, estimate, and ascertain, and report their opinions.<sup>h</sup> Persons professionally acquainted with the science or practice in question.<sup>i</sup> Persons conversant with the subject-matter or questions of science, skill, trade, and the like<sup>j</sup> are thus selected, and their opinions received in evidence upon points in issue.

See OPINIONS; WITNESSES, below.

EXTRACTS. In general an extract is not evidence, because the whole of the writing may explain the part extracted, so as to give it a different sense; but sometimes extracts from public books are evidence; as extracts from the registers of births, marriages, and burials, kept according to law, when the whole of the matter has been extracted which relates to the cause or matter in issue.

EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE is external evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agreement, contract, and the like.

It is a general rule that extrinsic evidence cannot be admitted to contradict, explain, vary, or change the terms of a contract, or of a will, except in a latent ambiguity, or to rebut a resulting trust.<sup>k</sup>

EYE-WITNESSES. See WITNESSES, below.

FACTS. Fact is used in distinction from law. Thus in every case to be tried there are facts to be shown to exist to which the law is to be applied. Material facts are facts essential to the right of action or defence. Material facts must be shown to exist. Immaterial facts need not. The existence of facts is generally determined by the jury, but there are many facts of which the courts take cognizance. See title, ACTS, ante; and JUDICIAL RECOGNITION; PRESUMPTION, below.

HANDWRITING. When it is necessary to prove that a certain instrument or name is in the handwriting of a particular person; this is done either by the testimony of a witness, who saw the paper or signature actually written, or by one who has by sufficient means acquired such a knowledge of the general character of the handwriting of the party as will enable him to swear to his belief that the handwriting of the person is the handwriting in question.<sup>l</sup>

The mode of deducing evidence of the authenticity of a written instrument is, by showing the likeness of the handwriting to that of another instrument proved to be that of the party whom it is sought to establish as the author of the instrument in question.<sup>m</sup> At common law, as a general rule, this manner of obtaining evidence was not allowed. There were exceptions to this rule. 1. Where the writings were of such antiquity that living witnesses could not be procured, but were not old enough to prove themselves.<sup>n</sup> 2. Where other writings admitted to be genuine were already in the case.<sup>8</sup>

The rule on the subject of admitting documents irrelevant to the matter in issue for the purpose of comparison of handwriting is not settled uniformly.

HEARSAY is the evidence, not of what the witness knows himself, but of what he has heard from others. That kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given to the witness himself, but rests also, in part, on the veracity and competency of some other person.<sup>9</sup>

Such mere recitals or assertions cannot be received in evidence, for many reasons, but principally for the following:

1. That the party making such declarations is not under oath; and,

2. Because the party against whom it operates has no opportunity of cross-examination.<sup>10</sup>

The general rule excluding hearsay evidence does not apply to those declarations to which the party is privy, or to admissions which he himself has made.

The term hearsay evidence applies to written as well as oral matter; but the writing or words are not necessarily hearsay because those of a person not under oath. Thus: information on which one has acted;<sup>11</sup> conversation of a person suspected of insanity;<sup>12</sup> replies to inquiries;<sup>13</sup> general reputation;<sup>14</sup> expressions of feeling;<sup>15</sup> general repute in the family in questions of pedigree;<sup>16</sup> entries made by third persons in the discharge of official duties;<sup>17</sup> entries in a party's shop-book,<sup>18</sup> or other books kept in the regular course of business;<sup>19</sup> and indorsements of partial payments<sup>20</sup> are admissible as original evidence under the circumstances, and for particular purposes.

As a general rule, hearsay reports of a transaction, whether oral or written, are not admissible in evidence.<sup>21</sup> The rule applies to evidence given under oath in a cause between other litigating parties.<sup>22</sup>

Matters relating to public interest, as for example, a claim to a ferry or highway, may be proved by hearsay testimony;<sup>23</sup> but the matter in controversy must be of public interest;<sup>24</sup> the declarations must be those of persons supposed to be dead,<sup>25</sup> and must have been made before the controversy arose.<sup>26</sup> The rule extends to deeds, leases, and other private documents,<sup>27</sup> maps,<sup>28</sup> and verdicts.<sup>29</sup> Ancient documents purporting to be a part of the res gesta are also admissible, although the parties to the suit are not bound.<sup>30</sup>

IDENTITY of the things in question must be proved in larceny, replevin, and trover.<sup>31</sup> So, too, the identity of articles taken or injured must be proved in all indictments where taking property is the gist of the offence, and in actions of tort for damage to specific property. Many cases occur in which identity must be proved in regard to either persons or things, the question is sometimes one of great practical difficulty, as in case of the death of strangers, reappearance after long absence, and the like.<sup>32</sup>

IMPEACHMENT is proof that a witness who has been examined is unworthy of belief. Every witness is liable to be impeached as to his character for truth; and, if his general character is good, he is presumed at all times to be ready to support it.<sup>33</sup>

INCONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE. See PRESUMPTIONS, below.

IN CHIEF. Evidence in chief should be confined to such matters as the pleadings and the opening warrants; and a departure from this rule will be sometimes very inconvenient, if not fatal. Suppose, for example, two assaults have been committed, one in January and one in February, and the plaintiff prove his cause of action to have been the assault in January, he cannot abandon that, and afterwards prove another committed in February, unless the pleadings and openings extend to both.<sup>34</sup> The object of this is, to prevent the plaintiff from introducing in evidence a different case from the one which he had prepared the defendant to expect from the pleadings.

INDIRECT EVIDENCE is that which does not prove the fact in question directly, but one from which such fact may be presumed. It is inferential evidence as to the truth of a disputed fact, not by testimony of any witness to the fact, but by collateral circumstances ascertained by competent means.<sup>1</sup>

INFERENCES are conclusions drawn from premises established by proof. It is the province of the judge who is to decide upon facts to draw the inference. When the facts are submitted to the court, the judge or judges draw the inference; when they are to be ascertained by a jury, it is their duty to do so. Witnesses are not, as a general rule, permitted to draw an inference and then testify such inference to the court or jury; it is their duty to state the facts simply as they occurred.

See DEPOSITIONS; HEARAY, above.

INTERPRETERS may be sworn to testify (and make translations) whenever necessary.<sup>3</sup> They should be sworn before they translate the testimony of witnesses.<sup>4</sup> A person employed between an attorney and client to act as an interpreter, is considered merely as an organ between them, and cannot be compelled to testify as to what he has acquired in those confidential communications.<sup>5</sup>

INTERROGATORIES. See title EQUITY, ante.

IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE is that which does not support the issue, and which may therefore be excluded.

JUDGES are not allowed to testify to what was made known to them, or took place before them in the hearing of causes.<sup>6</sup> They are not competent witnesses in a cause being tried before them, for, among other reasons, they can hardly be deemed capable of impartially deciding upon the admissibility of their own testimony, or weighing it against that of another.<sup>7</sup>

JUDGES' NOTES—which usually contain a statement of the testimony of witnesses, of documents offered or admitted in evidence, or offers of evidence and whether it was received or rejected, and like matters—are not evidence of what transpired at a former trial, nor can they be read to prove what a deposed witness swore to on such former trial; for they are no part of the record, and he is not officially bound to make them. But in chancery, when a new trial is ordered of an issue sent out of chancery to a court of law, and also, perhaps, where witnesses at a former trial are of an advanced age, an order may be made that, in event of death or inability to attend, their testimony be read from judges' notes.<sup>8</sup>

JUDICIAL NOTICE OR RECOGNITION OF LAW. There are divers things of which courts take judicial notice, without the introduction of proof by the parties; such as the territorial extent of their jurisdiction, local divisions of their own countries, seats of justice, courts of general jurisdiction, their judges, their seats, their rules and maxims in the administration of justice, their course of proceeding, public acts, laws, etc. If the judge or justice needs information on subjects, he will seek it from such sources as he deems authentic.<sup>9</sup>

All courts, tribunals, and officers, shall take notice of the official signature of any officer of the State, of the United States, or of any State or Territory in the United States.<sup>10</sup>

The several courts of the Commonwealth take judicial notice of all acts and resolutions of the General Assembly.<sup>11</sup>

Although a private act may not be read in evidence, yet if it manifestly appear that it was relied on in the court below, the court of appeals will take judicial notice of it.<sup>12</sup>

LAW. The existence and the tenor or effect of all foreign laws, beyond the limits of the United States, may be proved by the parol evidence of persons learned in those laws. But if it appear that the law in question is contained in a written statute, the court may reject such parol evidence, unless it be accompanied by a copy of the statute.

The printed laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory, which have been or shall be received in the secretary's (or other authorized) office of this State, and which has been printed under the authority of the United States, of such State or Territory, or a copy thereof, when duly certified by the secretary of such State, may be admitted and received as evidence of such laws.

Any printed volume or pamphlet of laws of any State or Territory, showing on its face that it was published by authority of such State or Territory, is prima facie evidence of the laws contained therein.

Every act of the legislature of any one of the States or Territories of the United States, certified by the secretary, and having the seal of the State or Territory affixed thereto, is deemed authentic, and receives full faith and credit when offered in evidence in any court.

The unwritten or common law of any other State, Territory (or foreign government), may be proved as facts by parol evidence.

The books of reports of cases adjudged in their courts will also be admitted in evidence of such law.

Elementary works on law are not admissible in evidence as to what the law is.<sup>13</sup>

Courts are not to take notice, ex officio, of the laws of other States. When a question depends on the laws of a sister State, such laws are a part of the evidence in the case, and, like any other fact, must be proved by him who holds the affirmative.<sup>14</sup>

States and Territories of the United States, purporting to be printed by authority, and which are now, or may be hereafter, deposited in the office of the secretary of any State, and required by law to be kept there, certified under the hand and seal of office of such secretary, may be admitted as evidence.

PRINTED COPIES OF THE ORDINANCES, RESO-LUTIONS, RULES, ORDERS, and BY-LAWS of any city or incorporated town, published by authority of such city or incorporated town, and manuscript copies of the same, certified under the hand of the proper officer, and having the corporate seal of such city or town affixed thereto, may be received as evidence.

LEADING CASES. See title AUTHORITIES, ante.

LEADING QUESTIONS, or questions which put into the witness's mouth the words to be echoed back, or suggest the answers which the party wishes to get from him,<sup>7</sup> cannot, in general, be put to a witness in his examination in chief.<sup>8</sup> But in an examination in chief, questions may be put to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry, and they are allowed when it appears the witness wishes to conceal the truth, or to favor the opposite party, or w<sup>9</sup>ore, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry without a particular specification of such subject.<sup>10</sup>

In cross-examination, the examiner has generally the right to put leading questions.<sup>11</sup>

LOST PAPERS. When agreements, contracts, deeds, wills, and the like have been lost, and it is desired to prove their contents, the party must prove that he has made diligent search, and in good faith exhausted all sources of information accessible to him. For this purpose his own affidavit is sufficient.<sup>12</sup> On being satisfied of this, the court will allow secondary evidence to be given of their contents.

See title AFFIDAVITS, ante.

MANIFEST See CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE,
above.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE is that given by physicians and surgeons in their professional capacity. The evidence of a medical witness is strictly that of an expert.<sup>13</sup> A professional witness should not be permitted to make up an opinion to be given in evidence from what other witnesses say of the facts in the case, because he would thus take the place of the jury as to the credibility of the witness, and also determine what part of the testimony of other witnesses applies to the case, a duty that belongs to the court. "If the symptoms and indications testified to by other witnesses are proved, and if the jury are satisfied of the truth of them, the question is, whether in his (the witness's) opinion, the party was insane, and what is the nature and character of that insanity, and what did they indicate, and what would he (the witness) expect would be the condition of such a person in any supposed circumstance."<sup>14</sup> Under this rule the medical witness passes upon the condition of the person whose condition is at issue. To do it correctly he must hear all the evidence that the jury hears; he must judge as to the relevance of the evidence of others; he must make an application of the facts that legally bear upon the case to it, and reject all others: in short,

he is judge and jury in the case.

It is not the province of the expert to draw inferences of fact from the evidence, but simply to disclose his opinion on a known or hypothetical state of facts. For this purpose the counsel on each side put to the physicians such states of fact as they deem warranted by the evidence, and take their opinions thereon. If any of these states of fact are considered proved, then the opinions are admissible to be weighed by the jury, otherwise their opinions are not applicable to the case.<sup>15</sup> The attention of the witness being called to a definite state of facts, constituting a hypothetical case, his opinion is then unembarrassed by any collateral questions or considerations, and the jury, under the instructions of the court, determines how far the facts sustain the hypothetical case, and, consequently, how far the opinion of the witness applies to the case under investigation.<sup>16</sup>

A medical witness is not a privileged witness (unless so made by statute), for where the ends of justice absolutely require a disclosure, a medical witness is not only bound, but may be compelled, to give evidence on all matters that will enlighten the case. If a medical man was to voluntarily reveal these secrets, to be sure he would be guilty of a breach of honor and of great indiscretion; but to give that information which, by the law of the land, he is bound to do, will never be imputed to him any indiscretion whatever.

Medical books are not received in evidence.
They are subject to the same rule that applies to scientific and other professional books.
Even the elementary works on law are not admissible in evidence as to what the law is.<sup>17</sup> Facts or opinions on the subject of insanity, as on any other subject, cannot be laid down before the jury except by the testimony under oath of persons skilled in such matters.
Whether stated in the language of the court or of the counsel in a former case, or cited from books of legal or medical writers, they are still statements of facts, and must be proved on oath, etc.<sup>18</sup>

NATURAL PRESUMPTIONS. See PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE, below.

NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE will afford ground for a new trial; but courts only interfere with verdicts for this cause under very special circumstances. To entitle the party to relief, certain well-defined conditions are indispensable. It is a rule subject to rare exceptions, and applied perhaps with more stringency in criminal than in civil cases, that the sole object of the new evidence must be to impeach or contradict witnesses sworn on a former trial.<sup>1</sup> It must not merely multiply testimony to any one or more facts already investigated, but must bring to light some new and independent truth of a different character; it must be a point before in issue, and be so material as to impress the court with the belief that if a new trial were granted, the result would probably be different;<sup>2</sup> it must not have been known to the party until after the trial,<sup>3</sup> and the least fault in not procuring and using it at the trial must not be imputable to him.<sup>4</sup>

OATHS. An oath is an outward pledge given by the person taking it, that his attestation, or promise, is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God.<sup>5</sup> Before testifying, the witness is sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. The mode of administering the oath must be such as may be most consistent with, and binding on the conscience of the witness. It may be varied to conform to the religious belief of the individual, so as to make it binding on his conscience.<sup>6</sup> The form of administering the oath in ordinary cases is substantially that of the old Scotch covenants, omitting the ceremony of holding the Bible open before the witness. The Gospels are not now generally used.<sup>7</sup> The witness stands with head uncovered, and right hand uplifted.

The witness may be asked before he is sworn, whether he considers the oath he is about to take as obligatory upon his conscience.<sup>14</sup>

Though a witness be an atheist, or does not express what manner of oath is most binding upon his conscience, yet if the court administer an oath to him he is bound by that oath; for all oaths and affirmations alike subject the party who falsifies them to the pains and penalties of perjury.

In general, the word "oath" includes "affirmation;" and the word "swear" includes "affirm."

ONUS PROBANDI. See PROOF, etc., below.

OPINIONS are inferences or conclusions drawn by a witness as distinguished from facts known to him as facts.

It is the province of the jury to draw inferences and conclusions; and if witnesses were in general allowed to testify what they judge as well as what they know, the verdict would sometimes prove, not the decision of the jury, but that of the witnesses. Hence the rule that, in general, the witness cannot be asked his opinion upon a particular question.<sup>15</sup>

Some confusion in the application of this rule arises from the delicacy of the line which divides that which is to be regarded as matter of observation from that which is matter of judgment founded upon observation. Thus, an unprofessional witness may testify to the fact that a person whom he saw was intoxicated, whether he is able to state all the constituent facts which amount to drunkenness or not.<sup>16</sup> But, on the other hand, insanity or mental incapacity cannot, in general, be proved by the mere assertion of an unprofessional witness.<sup>17</sup> So, handwriting may be proved by being recognized by a witness who has seen other writings of the party in the usual course of business, or who has seen him write.<sup>18</sup> But, on the other hand, the authorship of an anonymous article in a newspaper cannot be proved by one professing to have a knowledge of the author's style.<sup>19</sup>

From necessity, an exception to this rule of excluding opinions is made in questions involving matter of science, art, or trade, where skill and knowledge possessed by a witness, peculiar to the subject, give a value to his opinion above that of any inference which the jury could draw from facts which he might state.<sup>20</sup> Such a witness is termed an expert; and he may give his opinion in evidence.

The unwritten or common law of foreign countries may be proved by the opinion of witnesses possessing professional knowledge.* So the degree of hazard of property insured against fire; handwriting; mechanical operations, the proper way of conducting a particular manufacture, and the effect of a certain method; negligence of a navigator, and its effect in producing a collision; sanity; impotency; value of chattels; value of land; value of services; benefit to real property by laying out a street adjacent thereto; survey marks identified as being those made by United States surveyors; and sea-worthiness.

Such opinions are taken with the qualifications necessary to make, as far as possible, the judgment of the jury, and not that of the witness, the final means of determining the issue. Thus opinions of experts are not admissible upon the question of damages; and experts are always confined to opinions within the scope of their professions, and are not allowed to give opinions on things of which the jury can as well judge. A distinction is always observed between a feeble impression and a mere opinion or belief.

ORAL TESTIMONY is spoken testimony—used in contradistinction to written. It is delivered by a witness verbally by word of mouth. See PAROL EVIDENCE, below.

ORIGINALS are single or duplicate. Single when there is but one; duplicate when there are two. In the case of printed documents all the impressions are originals, or in the nature of duplicate originals, and any copy will be primary evidence.*

When an original document is not evidence at common law and a copy of such original is made evidence by an act of the legislature, the original is not, therefore, made admissible evidence by implication.†

PAROL EVIDENCE is that verbally delivered by the witness, by the living voice, by word of mouth. Parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict a written instrument. As to the cases in which such evidence will not be received or rejected.‡

PERPETUATING testimony is a practice whose origin may be traced to the canon law. Statutes exist in most States for this purpose. Equity also furnishes means, to a limited extent, for this same purpose.

POSITIVE EVIDENCE is distinguished from circumstantial evidence. It is that which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of the fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption.

PRESUMPTIONS. See PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE, below.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE is any evidence which is not direct and positive. That which shows the existence of one fact by proof of the existence of another, or others, from which the first may be inferred; because the fact or facts shown have a legitimate tendency to lead the mind to the conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be proved.

CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTIONS are inferences which the law makes so peremptorily that it will not allow them to be overturned by any proof, however strong. They are called, also, absolute and irrebuttable presumptions.

INCONCLUSIVE OR DISPUTABLE PRESUMPTIONS are inferences of law which hold good until they are invalidated by proof of a stronger presumption. They are called, also, inconclusive presumptions. Presumptive evidence consists of presumptions of law and presumptions of fact.

PRESUMPTIONS OF FACT are not the subject of fixed rules, but are merely natural presumptions, such as appear, from common experience, to arise from the particular circumstances of any case. Some of these are "founded upon the knowledge of the human character, and of the motives, passions, and feelings by which the mind is usually influenced." They are the conclusions drawn by the mind from the natural connection of the circumstances disclosed in each case, or, in other words, from circumstantial evidence.

Circumstantial evidence is sometimes used as synonymous with presumptive evidence; but presumptive evidence is not necessarily, and in all cases, what is usually understood by circumstantial evidence. The latter is not the evidence which tends to prove a disputed fact by proof of other facts which have a legitimate tendency from the laws of nature, the usual connection of things, the ordinary transaction of business, etc., to lead the mind to a conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be established. Presumptive evidence may sometimes be the result, to some extent, of an arbitrary rule—as in the case of the presumption of death, after an absence of seven years without being heard from—derived by analogy from certain statutes. The jurists and the jury draw conclusions from circumstantial evidence, and find one fact from the existence of other facts shown to them, some of the presumptions being so clear and certain that they have become fixed as rules of law, and others having greater or less weight, according to the circumstances of the case, leaving the matter of fact inquired about in doubt until the proper tribunal to determine the question draws the conclusion.

In giving effect to presumptions of fact, the presumption stands until proof is given of the contrary.<sup>1</sup> This contrary proof may be a conflicting presumption. In such cases the following rules apply: 1. Special presumptions take the place of general ones;<sup>2</sup> 2. Presumptions derived from the ordinary course of nature are stronger than casual presumptions;<sup>3</sup> 3. Presumptions are favored which tend to give validity to acts;<sup>4</sup> 4. The presumption of innocence is favored in law.<sup>5</sup>

Conclusive presumptions are estoppels;<sup>6</sup> solemn admissions of parties; and unsolemn admissions which have been acted on.<sup>7</sup> So, also, that an officer's return is correct as to facts stated therein as between the parties;<sup>8</sup> that an infant under the age of seven years is incapable of committing a felony;<sup>9</sup> that a boy under fourteen is incapable of committing a rape;<sup>10</sup> that the issue of a wife with whom her husband cohabits is legitimate, though her infidelity be proved;<sup>11</sup> that all persons subject to any law which has been duly promulgated, or which derives its validity from general or immemorial custom, are acquainted with its provisions.<sup>12</sup>

Rebuttable presumptions are presumptions that a man is innocent of the commission of a crime;<sup>13</sup> that the possessor of property is its owner;<sup>14</sup> that possession of fruits of crime is guilty possession;<sup>15</sup> that things usually done in the course of trade have been done;<sup>16</sup> that solemn instruments are duly executed;<sup>17</sup> that a person, relation, or state of things once shown to exist continues to exist, as in a partnership,<sup>18</sup> insanity;<sup>19</sup> that official acts have been properly performed.<sup>20</sup> certain cases, either forbid or dispense with any ulterior inquiry.<sup>1</sup> Inferences or positions established, for the most part, by the common, but occasionally by the statute law, which are obligatory alike on judges and juries.<sup>2</sup> They are adopted from motives of public policy, and are those which arise in certain cases by force of the rules of law, directing an inference to be drawn from proof of the existence of a particular fact or facts. They are conclusive or inconclusive.

Conclusive presumptions are those which admit of no averment or proof to the contrary. Thus, the records of a court, except in some proceedings to amend them, are conclusive evidence of the matter there recorded, being presumed to be rightly made up.

Rebuttable or disputable presumptions of law are those where a fact is presumed to exist, either from the general experience of mankind, or from policy, or from proof of the existence of certain other facts, until something is offered to show the contrary. Thus, the law presumes a man to be sane until the contrary appears, and to be innocent of the commission of a crime until he is proved to be guilty. So, the existence of a person, or of a particular state of things, being shown, the law presumes the same or state of things to continue until something is offered to conflict with that presumption.

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE is that which appears to be sufficient proof respecting the matter in question, until something appears to controvert it, which may be contradicted or controlled. It is evidence of fact, in law, sufficient to establish the fact unless rebutted.<sup>3</sup> For example, when buildings are fired by sparks emitted from a locomotive engine passing along the road, it is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of those who have the charge of it.<sup>4</sup>

The holder of a bill of exchange, or note indorsed in blank, is prima facie the owner.

PRIMARY EVIDENCE is the best evidence, or that proof which most certainly exhibits the true state of facts to which it relates.

The non-production of the best evidence, when it can be had, creates a presumption that, forbid or dispense with inferences or positions most part, by the common, the statute law, which are judges and juries. They serve of public policy, and in certain cases by force directing an inference to the existence of a party. Rebuttable presumptions are those which are not proof to the contrary. of a court, except in some other them, are conclusive after there recorded, being only made up.

Prima facie evidence is that sufficient proof respecting which, unless something appears to the contrary, may be contradicted by other evidence of fact which tends to establish the fact unless the contrary is shown. When buildings are erected from a locomotive on the road, it is prima facie evidence on the part of those who build of exchange, or of the fact that the owner.

if produced, it might operate against the party who declines to produce it.

The rule excludes only that evidence which itself indicates the existence of more original source of information.

The law requires this, and rejects secondary or inferior evidence when it is attempted to be substituted for evidence of a higher or superior nature; for example, when a written contract has been entered into, and the object is to prove what it was, it is requisite to produce the original writing if it is to be attained; and, in that case, no copy or other inferior evidence will be received. This is a rule of policy grounded on a reasonable suspicion that the substitution of inferior for better evidence arises from sinister motives; and an apprehension that the best evidence, if produced, would alter the case to the prejudice of the party. This rule relates, not to the measure and quantity of evidence, but to its quality when compared with some other evidence of superior degree.

Oral evidence cannot be substituted for a

1. Any instrument which the law requires to be in writing; such as records, public documents, official examinations, deeds of conveyance of lands, wills, other than nuncupative, promises to pay the debt of another, and other writings mentioned in the statute of frauds.

2. Any contract which the parties have put in writing. Here the written instrument may be regarded, in some measure, as the ultimate fact to be proved. Thus, where in a suit for the price of labor performed, it appears that the work was commenced under an agreement in writing, the agreement must be produced.

3. Any writing, the existence of which is disputed, and which is material either to the issue between the parties, or to the credit of witnesses, and is not merely a memorandum of some other fact.

The fact that in such cases the writing is in the possession of the adverse party does not change its character; it is still primary evidence of the contract; and its existence must be accounted for by notice to the other party to produce it, before secondary evidence of its contents can be received.

Exceptions. The contents of any record of a judicial court, and of entries in any other public books or registers, may be proved by an examined copy. This exception extends to all records and entries of a public nature, in books required by law to be kept, and is admitted, because of the inconvenience to the public which the refusal of such documents might occasion, especially if they were wanted in two places at the same time; and also, because of the public character of the facts which they

For the same reasons, and for the strong presumption arising from the undisturbed exercise of a public office, that the appointment is valid, it is not in general necessary to prove the written appointments of officers. All who have acted as such are presumed to have been duly appointed to the office, until the contrary appears.

Where the evidence is the result of voluminous facts, or the inspection of many books and papers, the examination of which could not conveniently take place in court, a witness who has inspected the accounts of parties, may testify to the general balance without producing the accounts; so, also, inscriptions on walls and fixed tables, mural monuments, grave-stones, surveyors' marks on boundary trees, etc.

The verbal admission of the contents of a writing, by the party himself, if against his interest, will supersede the necessity of proving it.

As it refers to the quality rather than the quantity of evidence, it is evident that the fullest proof that every case admits of is not requisite; if, therefore, there are several eye-witnesses to a fact, it may be sufficiently proved by one only.

It is not always requisite when the matter to be proved has been reduced to writing, that the writing should be produced; as, if the narrative of a fact to be proved has been committed to writing, it may be proved by parol evidence. A receipt for the payment of money, for example, will not exclude parol evidence of payment.

Where a document is not itself evidence at common law, and a copy of it is made evidence by statute, the copy alone is evidence, and not the original.

PROOF OF ISSUE.

CONFINING THE EVIDENCE TO THE POINT IN ISSUE. It is a general rule, both in civil and criminal cases, that the evidence must be confined to the point in issue. Justice and convenience require the observance of this rule, particularly in criminal cases; for, when a prisoner is charged with an offence, it is of the utmost importance to him that the facts laid before the court or jury should consist exclusively of the transaction which forms the subject of the complaint, information, or indictment against him, and which alone he has come prepared to answer. To this general rule there are several exceptions, and a variety of cases which do not fall within the rule. In general, evidence of collateral facts is not admissible; that I think the purposes of justice require the strict enforcement of the rule." Id. B & B. 287. 14 Greenl. Ev. 190. 22-1 Greenl. but where such a fact is material to the issue joined between the parties it may be given in evidence; as, for example, in order to prove that the acceptor of a bill knew the payee to be a fictitious person, or that the drawer has general authority from him to fill up bills with the name of a fictitious payee, evidence may be given to show that he had accepted similar bills before they could, from their date, have arrived from the place of date.<sup>1</sup>

When special damage sustained by the plaintiff is not stated in the plaintiff's complaint, it is not one of the points in issue, and, therefore, evidence of it cannot be received; yet a damage which is a necessary result from the defendant's breach of contract may be proved, notwithstanding it is not alleged in such complaint.<sup>2</sup>

In general, evidence of the character of either party is inadmissible; yet in some cases such evidence may be given.<sup>3</sup>

When evidence incidentally applies to another person or thing not included in the transaction in question, and with regard to whom or which it is inadmissible, yet if it bear upon the point in issue it will be received.<sup>4</sup>

PROVING THE AFFIRMATIVE OF THE ISSUE. The affirmative of the issue must be proved. The general rule with regard to the burden of proving the issue requires that the party who asserts the affirmative should prove it; but this rule ceases to operate the moment the presumption of the law is thrown in the other scale. When the issue is on the legitimacy of a child, therefore, it is incumbent on the party asserting the illegitimacy to prove it.<sup>5</sup>

PROVING THE SUBSTANCE OF THE ISSUE JOINED. The substance of the issue joined between the parties must be proved.<sup>6</sup>

— IN CIVIL ACTIONS. 1. It is a fatal variance in a contract if it appear that a plaintiff who ought to have been joined has been omitted.<sup>7</sup> But it is no variance to omit a person who might have been joined as defendant; because the non-joinder may be remedied by amendment. 2. The consideration of the contract must be proved; but it is not necessary for the plaintiff to set out in his complaint, or prove on the trial, the several parts of a contract consisting of distinct and collateral provisions; it is sufficient to state so much of the contract as contains the entire consideration of the act, and the entire act be done in virtue of such consideration, including the time, manner, and other circumstances of its performance.<sup>8</sup>

It is a general rule of evidence, that if the substance of the issue, or the material facts contended by the pleadings, be established, it is sufficient.

— IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS, it may be laid down that it is, in general, sufficient to prove what constitutes an offence. It is enough to prove so much of the charge as shows that the defendant has committed a substantive crime therein specified.<sup>9</sup>

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS. No person is liable, either civilly or criminally, in respect to anything published by him as a member of a legislative body, in the course of his legislative duty. Nor in respect to anything published by him in the course of a judicial proceeding. This privilege extends not only to parties, counsel, witnesses, jurors, and judges in a judicial proceeding, but also to proceedings in legislative bodies, and to all who, in the discharge of public duty or the honest pursuit of private right, are compelled to take part in the administration of justice or in legislation. A fair report of any judicial proceeding or inquiry is also privileged.<sup>10</sup>

PROBABILITY. There is always a strong probability that a man of good moral character, and who has heretofore been upright and truthful, will, when examined as a witness, under oath, tell the truth; and, on the contrary, that a man who has been guilty of perjury will not, under the same circumstances, tell the truth; the former is, therefore, entitled to credit, the latter is not.

PROVING THE ISSUE. See BURDEN OF PROOF; ISSUE, above.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS. Public documents purporting to be edited or printed by authority of Congress, or the State legislature, or either house thereof, are evidence to the same extent that authenticated copies of the same would be.

QUESTIONS are either general or leading. General questions are those which require the witness to state what he knows, without any suggestion being made to him; as, "Who gave the blow?" A leading question is one which leads the mind of the witness to the answer, or suggests it to him; as, "Did A. give the blow?" or "Is not your name A.?"

REBUTTING. It is a general rule that anything may be given as rebutting evidence which is a direct reply to that produced on the other side,<sup>11</sup> and the proof of circumstances may be offered to rebut the most positive testimony.<sup>12</sup> But there are several rules which exclude all rebutting evidence. A party cannot impeach his own witness, though he may disprove, by other witnesses, matters to which he has testified; nor can he rebut or contradict what a witness has sworn to which was immaterial to the issue.<sup>13</sup> Parties and powers are estopped from contradicting a written instrument by parol proof; but this rule does not apply to strangers.<sup>14</sup> But the parties may prove that before breach the agreement was abandoned, or annulled, by a subsequent agreement not in writing.<sup>15</sup> And when the writing was made by

RECORDS—COPIES OF RECORDS, ETC.

JUDICIAL AND PUBLIC RECORDS AND TRANSCRIPTS.

A foreign judgment is the judgment of a foreign tribunal. The various States of the United States are in this respect considered as foreign to each other.

Such judgments may be evidenced by exemplifications under the great seal of the State or country where the judgment is recorded, or under the seal of the court where the judgment remains by a copy proved to be a true copy, or by the certificate of an officer authorized by law, which certificate must itself be properly authenticated. The acts of foreign tribunals which are recognized by the law of nations, such as courts of admiralty and the like, are sufficiently authenticated by copies under seal of the tribunal, in the absence of a statute to the contrary.

The records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief-justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that said attestation is in due form; and the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States, as they have by law or usage in the courts of the State from whence the said records are or shall be taken.

All records and exemplifications of office books, which are or may be kept in any public office of any State, not appertaining to a court, shall be proved or admitted in any court, or office in any other State, by the attestation of the keeper of the said records or books, and the seal of his office thereto annexed, if there be a seal, together with the certificate of the presiding justice of the court of the county or district, as the case may be, in which such office is or may be kept, or of the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or the keeper of the great seal of the State, that the said attestation is in due form, and by the proper officer; and the said certificate, if given by the presiding justice of the court, must be further authenticated by the clerk or prothonotary of the said court, who shall certify, under his hand and the seal of his office, that the said presiding justice is duly commissioned and qualified; or if the said certificate is given by the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or keeper of the great seal, it shall be under the great seal of the State in which said certificate is made; and the said records and exemplifications, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court and office within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts or offices of the State from whence the same are or shall be taken.

The provisions of both acts extend to the records, etc., of the Territories.

If the court, whose record is certified, has no seal, this fact should appear, either in the certificate of the clerk or in that of the judge.

RE-EXAMINATION. See WITNESSES, below.

REFRESHING MEMORY. A witness has a right to examine a memorandum or paper which he made in relation to certain facts when the same occurred, in order to refresh his memory; but the paper or memorandum itself is not evidence.

REGISTERS. Although not originally intended for the purposes of evidence, public registers are in general admissible to prove the facts to which they relate. Of these are registers of births, deaths and marriages, etc.

REPUTATION. In general, reputation is evidence to prove a person's character in society; a pedigree. Certain prescriptive or customary rights and obligations; and matters of public notoriety. But as such evidence is in its own nature very weak, it must be supported, when it relates to a right or privilege, by proof of acts of enjoyment of such right or privilege within the period of living memory. Afterwards, evidence of reputation may be given. The fact must be of a public nature; it must be derived from persons likely to know the facts. The facts must be general, and not particular; they must be free from suspicion.

RUMOR. In general, rumor cannot be received in evidence; but when the question is whether such rumor existed, and not its truth or falsehood, then evidence of it may be given.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE is that species of proof which is admissible when the primary evidence cannot be produced, and which becomes by that event the best evidence. But before such evidence can be allowed it must be clearly made to appear that the superior evidence is not to be had. The person who has it must be applied to, whether he be a stranger or the opposite party; in case of a stranger, a subpoena and attachment, when proper, must be taken out and served; in the case of a party, notice to produce such primary evidence must be proved before the secondary evidence will be admitted.<sup>3</sup> After proof of due execution of the original, the contents should be proved by a counterpart, if there be one, for this is the next best evidence; and it seems that no evidence of a mere copy is admissible until proof has been given that a counterpart cannot be produced.<sup>1</sup> If there be no counterpart, a copy may be proved in evidence by any witness who knows that it is a copy, from having compared it with the original.<sup>2</sup> But there are no degrees of secondary evidence; and when a party has laid the foundation for such evidence he may prove the contents of a deed by parol, although it appear that an attested copy is in existence.<sup>3</sup> See DECLARATIONS; LOST PAPERS, above.

SUGGESTIONS. See LEADING QUESTIONS; QUESTIONS, above.

TELEGRAMS. Telegraphic communications must be proved in the same manner as other writings, such as letters and contracts are—that is, by the original. If that is lost, it may be proved by copy, or, in default of that being obtainable, by oral testimony.<sup>1</sup> Sometimes the person to whom it is addressed is in the office when it is received; in such case, if it is not reduced to writing, it can only be proved, like other matters resting in parol, by the recollection of the witnesses in whose hearing it was repeated.<sup>2</sup>

TESTS are those things by which to ascertain the truth respecting other things.<sup>3</sup> A paper may be submitted to a jury as a test or standard by which to determine the genuineness of other writings.<sup>4</sup> They are only admissible when no collateral issue can be raised concerning them.<sup>5</sup>

TREATS. When a confession is obtained from a person accused of crime, in consequence of a threat, evidence of such a confession cannot be received, because, being obtained by torture or fear, it comes in the questionable a shape that no credit ought to be given to it.<sup>6</sup> This is the general principle, but what amounts to a threat is not so easily defined. It is proper to observe, however, that the threat must be made by a person having authority over the prisoner, or by another in the presence of such authorized person and not dissented from by the latter.<sup>7</sup>

BY TRANSLATIONS. Whenever any written evidence in a cause is in a language other than the English, a written translation of it in the English language, made by a competent translator, and verified by his affidavit, may be read in evidence instead of the original, if such original be competent evidence.

VIVA VOCE. It is said a witness delivers his evidence viva voce (with living voice)

when he does so in open court; the term is opposed to deposition; it is sometimes opposed to ballot; as, the people vote by a written or printed ballot, but their representatives in legislature vote viva voce.

VOIRE DIRE is a preliminary examination of a witness to ascertain whether he is competent; as, where he has an interest in the cause of action, for he might be tempted to perjure himself if he testified when interested.

WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE. In civil causes the preponderance or weight of evidence determines the case in favor of the party possessing it. In criminal causes, proof beyond a reasonable doubt is required; a preponderance of evidence may fall far short of proof, and proof may be of a much lower degree than proof beyond such a doubt, which should be required to warrant the conviction of the accused.

When a verdict has been rendered against the weight of evidence the court may, on this ground, grant a new trial; but the court will exercise this power not merely with a cautious but a strict and sure judgment, before they send the case to a second jury. The general rule, under such circumstances, is, that the verdict, once found, shall stand; and setting aside is the exception. A new trial will be granted on this ground to either party; the evidence, however, is not to be weighed in golden scales.<sup>8</sup>

WITNESSES. TESTIMONY is the statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation.

A WITNESS is one who testifies to what he knows. One who testifies, under oath, to something which he knows at first hand.<sup>9</sup> A disinterested witness is one who has no interest in the cause or matter in issue. An ear witness is one who attests to things which he heard himself. An eye witness is one who saw the act or fact to which he testifies.

The principal rules relating to witnesses are the same in civil and in criminal cases, and the same in all courts.<sup>10</sup>

The testimony of witnesses is taken in three modes:

1. By affidavits.
2. By deposition.
3. By oral examination.

COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES. All persons, of whatever nation, may be witnesses.<sup>11</sup> But in saying this we must, of course, except such as are excluded by the very definition of the term, and such as cannot qualify himself by taking an oath.<sup>12</sup> Therefore all who cannot understand the nature and obligation of an oath, or whose religious belief is so defective as to nullify and render it nugatory, or who are otherwise disqualified by statute, or otherwise are excluded.

open court; the term is sometimes opposed to the vote by a written or oral representative in legis-a preliminary examination to ascertain whether he is interested in the case might be tempted to testify when interested.

EVIDENCE. In civil cases, the weight of evidence is not sufficient to sustain a verdict, proof beyond a reasonable doubt is required; a preponderance of evidence is required where the proof is less than proof beyond a reasonable doubt, and a lower degree than proof beyond a reasonable doubt which should be required in criminal cases.

When a witness has been rendered against the interest of the party, the court may, on this ground, refuse to receive his testimony; but the court will not exclude testimony merely with a cautious judgment, before they send the jury. The general rule is, that the verdict is not to be set aside on account of a mistake in the trial will be granted on account of the evidence, how- ever weighed in golden scales.

Statement made by a witness.

Who testifies to what he has seen, under oath, to some extent at first hand. A disinterested witness who has no interest in the issue. An ear witness is one who saw the things which he heard testified to.

Witnesses are sworn in criminal cases, and the testimony is taken in Witnesses.

WITNESSES. All persons, competent to be witnesses. But in some cases, except such as are defined by the term, a person may qualify himself by taking an oath, all who cannot undertake an obligation of an oath, or whose testimony is so defective as to be nugatory, or who are disqualified by statute, or otherwise

Atheists. Such as are insensible to the obligation of an oath, from defect of religious sentiment or belief, are incompetent. Atheists, and persons disbelieving in any system of divine rewards and punishment, are of this class. It is reckoned sufficient qualification, in this particular, if one believe in a God, that he will reward and punish us according to our deserts. It is enough to believe that such punishment exists in this world only. It would seem to be sufficient to believe in such punishment as for perjury only, if, indeed, it be supposable that a man might believe thus much without extending his faith to any general system of rewards and punishments. The oath may be administered in any form whatever, and with any ceremonies whatever, that will bind the conscience of the witness.

Grand jurors, and persons present before a grand jury, are not permitted to testify to the proceedings had before that body.

Husband and wife are excluded from giving testimony for or against each other when either is a party to the suit or interested.

This rule is founded partly on their identity of interest, and partly, perhaps chiefly, on the policy of the law which aims to protect the confidence between man and wife that is essential to the ties of the marriage relation, and, through that, the good order of society. Whether or not the disability may be removed by consent of the other is a matter of dispute. Some exceptions to this rule are admitted out of necessity for the protection of husband and wife against each other, and for the sake of public justice.

Idiots, lunatics, intoxicated persons, and generally those who labor under such privation or imbecility of mind that they cannot understand the nature and obligation of an oath. The competency of such is restored with the recovery or acquisition of this power. And so a lunatic in a lucid interval may testify. Persons deaf and dumb from their birth are presumed to come within this principle of exclusion until the contrary be shown. A person in a state of intoxication cannot be admitted as a witness.

Infants so young as to be unable to appreciate the nature and binding quality of an oath are incompetent. A child under the age of fourteen is presumed to be incapable until capacity be shown. But the law fixes no limit of age which will of itself exclude; a child five years old has been admitted to testify. A person over fourteen years of age is presumed competent to testify.

Interpreters. A person employed between an attorney and client, to act as an interpreter, is considered merely as an organ between them, and is not bound to testify as to what he has acquired in those confidential communications.

Judges are not allowed to testify to what was made known to them, or took place before them in the hearing of causes.

Persons in possession of secrets of state, or matters the disclosure of which would be prejudicial to the public interest, are not allowed to testify thereto.

Parties to the record are not competent witnesses for themselves or their co-suitors. Nor are they compellable to testify for the adverse party, but they are competent to do so; although one of several co-suitors cannot thus become a witness for the adversary without the consent of his associates. Regard is had not merely to the nominal party to the record, but also to the real party in interest; the former will not be allowed to testify for the adverse side without the consent of the latter.

By the statutes of many States all parties in interest may, subject to some restrictions, testify in their own or any other person's behalf in any action or proceeding.

A party to a suit who is made a witness by statute is to become such under the same requisitions and restrictions as any other witness. He must be of sane mind, of sound memory, of suitable age, willing to be sworn, and capable of taking an oath. The law which renders the parties to a suit competent and compellable to give evidence has not altered the rule of law which requires the execution of attested instruments to be proved by the subscribing witness.

When a party to the action is made a witness by his adversary, he is entitled to be paid witness-fees, as a condition to creating his duty to attend and be sworn as one who is not a party to the action.

The party who calls his adversary as a witness thereby represents him as worthy of credit, and cannot afterward impeach him by showing that either his general character for truth is bad, or that he has made previous contradictory statements. But he may prove a fact to be otherwise than his adversary has testified, and he may do this by proving admissions of such adversary. And the testimony of a party may be controverted or impeached in the same manner as any other witness.<sup>7</sup>

Defendants cannot testify for themselves unless allowed by statute. But where a material witness for the defendant is indicted jointly with the defendant, and no evidence is given against him, he will be acquitted at once, and may be a witness for the other defendant.<sup>7</sup>

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES. An oral examination is an examination in the presence of the jury or tribunal which is to decide the fact, or act upon it; the testimony being heard by the jury or tribunal from the lips of the witness.

Examinations of witnesses are had visu voce, by questions and answers.

On motion, in civil and criminal cases, witnesses will generally be excluded from the court room while others are undergoing examination in the same case; this, however, is not a matter of right, but within the discretion of the court.<sup>8</sup>

Witnesses are required to testify from their own knowledge and recollection, yet they are permitted to refresh their memory by reference, while on the stand, to papers written at or very near the time of the transaction in question—even though they were not written by themselves, and though the writing in itself would be inadmissible in evidence.<sup>9</sup>

Being once in attendance, a witness may, in general, be compelled to answer all questions which may legally be put to him.<sup>10</sup> Yet there are exceptions to this rule. He is not compellable where the answer would have a tendency to expose him to a penal liability, or any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge.<sup>11</sup> But the court decides as to the tendency of the answer, and will instruct the witness as to his privilege.<sup>12</sup> The question whether an answer would have this tendency is to be determined by the oath of the witness.<sup>13</sup> And, in point of fact, out of the necessity of the case, it is a matter which the witness may be said practically to decide for himself. The witness may answer if he chooses; and if he do answer after having been advised of his privileges, he must answer in full; and his answer may be used in evidence against him for all purposes.<sup>14</sup> Whether a witness be compellable to answer to his own degradation or infamy is questionable; but a witness cannot refuse to testify simply because his answer would tend to disgrace him; it must be seen to have that effect certainly and directly.<sup>15</sup> He cannot refuse to give testimony which is material and relevant to the issue, for the reason that it would disgrace him;<sup>16</sup> but he may refuse where the question (being put on cross-examination) is not relevant and material, and does not in any way affect the credit of the witness.<sup>17</sup> Whether a witness, when a question is put on the cross-examination which is not relevant and material to the issue, yet goes to affect his credit, will be protected in refusing to answer simply on the ground that his answer would have a direct and certain effect to disgrace him, is a matter not clearly agreed upon. There is good reason to hold that a witness should be compelled to answer in such a case.<sup>18</sup> But the whole matter is one that is largely subject to the discretion of the courts.<sup>19</sup> And there seems no doubt that a witness is in no case competent to allege his own turpitude, or give evidence which involves his own infamy or impeaches his most solemn acts, if he be otherwise qualified to testify.<sup>20</sup>

One of the principal objects of the cross-examination of a witness is to ascertain the full extent of his knowledge as to the facts to which he testifies. It is certainly one of the most efficacious tests which the law has devised for the discovery of the truth; and greater latitude is allowed in the manner of putting questions, and a witness may be so led as to bring him directly on the point as to the answer; but not to go to the length of putting into the witness' mouth the very words which he is to answer,<sup>22</sup> or echo back again. Leading questions, however, are allowed upon cross-examination. Nor are the rules against questions not relevant and material to the issue always enforced upon cross-examination—a stage of the trial at which great latitude in the form and subject-matter of questions is generally allowed, in order that juries may be fully apprised of "the situation of the witness with respect to the subject of litigation, his interest, his motives, his inclination, and prejudices, his means of obtaining correct and certain knowledge of the facts to which he bears testimony, the manner in which he has used those means, his powers of discernment, memory, and description."<sup>23</sup> Yet witnesses cannot be cross-examined as to collateral and irrelevant matters for the purpose of contradicting them by other evidence.<sup>24</sup> Their testimony as to such matters is always conclusive against the party questioning. "If, by an unfortunate or unskillful question put on cross-examination, a fact be extracted which need not have been evidence upon an examination in chief, then it becomes evidence against the party so cross-cross-examination) is not, and does not in any way affect the witness.<sup>3</sup> Whether a question is put on the cross-examination is not relevant and material to affect his credit, will require him to answer simply on matters which would have a direct disfigurement upon him, is a matter upon which there is good reason why a witness should be examined in such a case.<sup>4</sup> But the fact that a witness is largely subject to cross-examination is not a matter which is in no case competent to impeach his credit, or give evidence in his infamy or impeach his credit, or give evidence in his infamy or impeach his credit, or give evidence in his infamy or impeach his credit.

After a witness has been examined in chief, the other party has a right to cross-examine him.

The principal objects of the cross-examination are to ascertain the full extent of the witness's knowledge as to the facts to which the law has directed him; and to show in the manner of his testimony that a witness may be so directly on the point as to go to the length of his own mouth the very words of the witness, or echo back again. The witness, however, are allowed upon cross-examination. Nor are the rules against cross-examination and material to the issue of cross-examination—such as the great latitude in the matter of questions is generally granted that juries may be fully satisfied of the witness with of litigation, his interest, bias, and prejudices, his correct and certain knowledge which he bears testimony, and he has used those means, present, memory, and detestation, cannot be impeached and irrelevant material of contradicting them by their testimony as to such exclusive against the party by an unfortunate or unnecessary cross-examination, which need not have been made in chief, then it is against the party so cross-examining.<sup>5</sup> The cross-examination of a witness is a matter depending much upon the discretion of the court, which will sometimes permit one to cross-examine his own witness when he appears to be in the interest of the adverse party.<sup>6</sup>

A cross-examination as to matters not admissible in evidence entitles the party producing the witness to re-examine him as to those matters.<sup>7</sup>

Inquiry may be made in regard to collateral facts in the discretion of the judge,<sup>8</sup> but not merely for the purpose of contradicting the witness by other evidence.<sup>9</sup> Irrelevant questions cannot be allowed; but if answered, cannot be contradicted.<sup>10</sup>

A witness who has not been sworn cannot be cross-examined; but if sworn, he may be cross-examined, though no question has been asked him in chief.<sup>11</sup>

Direct examination. The course of examination is, first, a direct examination by the party producing the witness; then, if desired, a cross-examination by the adverse party, and a re-examination by the party producing.<sup>12</sup> As to the direct examination the general rule is, that leading questions (i. e., such as suggest the answer expected or desired) cannot be put to a witness by the party producing him; but in an examination in chief leading questions may be put to direct the witness's attention to the subject of inquiry,<sup>13</sup> or, where he seems to be hostile to the party producing him; or, in the adverse party's interest; or, unwilling to give evidence;<sup>14</sup> or wishes to conceal the truth, or favor the opposite party; or where, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry without a particular specification of such subject.<sup>15</sup>

Re-examination. The right of re-examination extends to all topics upon which the witness has been cross-examined; but the witness cannot, at this stage, be questioned as to any new facts unconnected with the subject of the cross-examination, and not tending to explain it.<sup>16</sup> But in civil cases the court will allow the plaintiff's counsel, after he has closed his case, to recall a witness to prove a point omitted in the first instance.<sup>17</sup>

The mode of determining the credibility of witnesses is the same in civil and criminal cases.<sup>1</sup>

Impeachment of Witnesses. Impeachment is an allegation, supported by proof, that a witness who has been examined is unworthy of credit. Every witness is liable to be impeached as to his character for truth; and if his general character is good, he is presumed at all times to be ready to support it.<sup>2</sup>

A party cannot impeach the credit of his own witness; but he is sometimes, in cases of hardship, permitted to contradict it by other testimony.<sup>3</sup>

The credit of an adversary's witness may be impeached by cross-examination, or by general evidence affecting his reputation for veracity (but not by evidence of particular facts, which otherwise are irrelevant and immaterial); and by evidence of his having said or done something before which is inconsistent with his evidence at the trial; also, of course, he may be contradicted by other testimony.<sup>4</sup> Generally, where proof is to be offered that a witness has said or done something inconsistent with his evidence, a foundation must first be laid, and an opportunity for explanation offered, by asking the witness himself whether he has not said or done what it is proposed to prove, specifying particulars of time, place, and person.<sup>5</sup> These rules apply to depositions, unless the inconsistent statements were made after the depositions were taken.<sup>6</sup>

A witness assailed on a point of general bad character is sometimes sustained by a cross-examination of witnesses to character, to show their improper motives, or the unsatisfactory grounds of their alleged knowledge; or he may be sustained by the testimony of witnesses who will swear that his general character is good.<sup>7</sup>

A witness assailed by proof of former inconsistent statements may be corroborated by proof of other statements, consistent with his testimony in court;<sup>8</sup> whether the statement thus used in corroboration was on oath or not is not material.<sup>9</sup>

Evidence of general good character may be offered to support a witness, whenever his credit is impeached, either by general evidence affecting his character, or on cross-examination.<sup>10</sup> See title CHARACTER.

There is no difference in evidence between sealed and unsealed writings; and every writing not sealed has the same force and effect that it would have if sealed.

Proof of handwriting is made by the testimony of a witness who saw the paper or signature actually written, or one who has by sufficient means acquired such a knowledge of the general character of the handwriting of the party as will enable him to swear to his belief that the handwriting of the person is the handwriting in question.

An instrument in writing must be proved by at least one subscribing witness.<sup>1</sup> If there be none, by competent proof that the signature of the person whose name is undersigned is genuine.<sup>2</sup> A knowledge of a party's handwriting may be derived from a fixed correspondence between the parties, and by letters,<sup>3</sup> and where the witness has directed letters to the parties and received answers,<sup>4</sup> and by a clerk employed to inspect franks.<sup>5</sup> The opinions of persons accustomed to the examination of handwriting, of the genuineness of a signature, by comparing it with papers in the party's handwriting, already filed in the case, may be permitted.<sup>6</sup> Proof of the death of the attesting witness,<sup>7</sup> or his insanity,<sup>8</sup> his residence beyond the jurisdiction of the court; that his name is unknown; or that he cannot be found after diligent inquiry; in all these cases the execution of the instrument may be proved by other evidence.<sup>9</sup>

If the adverse party, pending the cause, agrees to admit the execution, other proof is not necessary.<sup>7</sup>

FRAUD is the unlawful appropriation of another's property with knowledge, by design, and without criminal intent: Fraud is sometimes used as a term synonymous with "covein," "collusion," and deceit, but improperly so. "Covein" is a secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another of his rights. "Collusion" is an agreement between two or more persons to defraud another under the forms of law, or to accomplish an illegal purpose. Deceit is a fraudulent contrivance by words or acts to deceive a third person, who, relying thereupon, without carelessness or neglect of his own, sustains damage thereby.<sup>1</sup> Actual or positive fraud includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice used to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another.<sup>2</sup> For instance, the misrepresentation by word or deed of material facts, by which one exercising reasonable discretion and confidence is misled to his injury, whether the misrepresentation was known to be false, or only not known to be true, or even made altogether innocently; the suppression of material facts which one party is legally or equitably bound to disclose to another; all cases of unconscionable advantage in bargains obtained by imposition, circumvention, surprise, and undue influence over persons in general, and especially own fault or folly, and he cannot ask the law to relieve him from the consequences.<sup>6</sup> Where a party is obliged to rely upon the statements of another, and not only may but should repose peculiar confidence in him, this is in the nature of a special trust, and the law is very jealous of a betrayal of this trust and visits it with great severity. So all transactions with feeble persons, whether they are so from age, sickness, or infirmity of mind, are carefully watched.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, if the statement be false in fact, and injurious because false, if it were believed to be true by the party making it, it is not a fraud on his part.<sup>2</sup> If the statement be in fact false, and be uttered for a fraudulent purpose, which is in fact accomplished, it has the whole effect of fraud in annulling the contract, although the person uttering the statement did not know it to be false, but believed it to be true.<sup>3</sup> If the falsehood be known to the party making the statement, malice or self-interest will be inferred.<sup>4</sup>

The fraud of an agent, by a misrepresentation which is embodied in the contract to which his agency relates, avoids the contract. But the party committing the fraud cannot in any case himself avoid the contract on the ground of fraud.<sup>5</sup>

In general, concealment is not in law so great an offence as misrepresentation. Concealment to be actionable must of course be of such facts as the party is bound to communicate.<sup>7</sup> A false representation, in order to have the full effect of fraud, must relate to a substantial matter of fact, and not merely to a matter which rests in opinion, or estimate or judgment.<sup>8</sup> Men differ in opinion; and if any one relies on mere opinion, instead of ascertaining facts, it is his own folly.

Misrepresentation need not be made by the party whom it benefits, in order to constitute a fraud against him. And it is for this reason that if A. trust B. upon the fraudulent recommendation of C., A. is not left to his action for damages against C. for the deceit, but the fraud of C. invalidates the contract between A. and B., and gives A. the same right to retake the goods as if the fraud had proceeded directly from B. himself.<sup>9</sup> It may be his by adoption.<sup>10</sup> A principal may commit a fraud by an agent; or may even be affected by the fraud of his agent, although personally honest.<sup>11</sup>

whether they are caused by mistake, and occur wholly without fault, or are designed and fraudulent.<sup>12</sup> This principle is carried so far, that if one acquires property by a purchase founded upon his misrepresentations, especially if they are not only false but fraudulent, he acquires no right in the property, but the seller may retake it in the same manner as if it had been stolen; that is, with all reasonable necessary force.<sup>13</sup> The obtaining goods under false pretences, under color of purchasing them, or otherwise, does not change the property.<sup>14</sup> Where a sale is fraudulently procured by the vendee, he may be sued by the vendor, before the expiration of the credit agreed on to be given.<sup>15</sup>

A fraudulent party cannot himself assert his fraud, and claim as his right any advantages resulting from it; for no man can be permitted to found any rights upon his own wrong;<sup>16</sup> and if both parties are in fault the law will not interfere between them; and this is so, if both parties be actually fraudulent, although the beginning, and the greater fraud, may be on one side or the other.<sup>17</sup>

The fraud may be proved by parol evidence, or any circumstances, however contrary to apparent facts or statements in the written instrument.<sup>18</sup> This rule does not, however, avail the general one against the admissibility of parol testimony against written, as the effect and result of such evidence is, that the instrument never had any operation; and on grounds of policy and necessity this rule may be supported.<sup>19</sup> The mode of proving fraud must depend upon the facts of each particular case.

Fraud gives no action in any case without damage,<sup>20</sup> and in matters of contract it is merely a defence; it cannot in any case constitute a new contract.<sup>21</sup> It is essentially ad hominem (to the interests or passions of the party).

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. No action shall be brought in any of the following cases, (unless made in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby, or by some person thereunto by him legally authorized):

ment or promise, made in consideration of marriage; or,

4. Upon any contract for the sale of lands, or,

5. Upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, unless the promise, contract or agreement, upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized; excepting, however, leases not exceeding the term of three years.

The consideration of any such promise, contract, or agreement, need not set forth in such writing, but may be proved.

No action shall be maintained, to charge any person by reason of any representations made concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person, unless such representation be made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged thereby, or by some person thereunto by him legally authorized.

It is obvious that the general purpose of the above section is to permit no party to bind himself except by a written promise signed by him; because this will secure an exact statement and the best evidence of the terms and conditions of the promise.

What is a sufficient signing.—A substantial signing of the agreement is sufficient, although it is not literal and formal.<sup>1</sup> Hence if the agreement be not itself signed, but a letter alluding to and acknowledging the agreement is signed, and is sufficient.<sup>2</sup> It is not, however, enough that the agreement be written by the party himself, unless he also signs it.<sup>3</sup> If, however, he writes his name in any part of the agreement, it may be taken as his signature;<sup>4</sup> but not otherwise.<sup>5</sup> Where one is in the habit of using instruments with his name printed in them, this will be his signature.<sup>6</sup> And so if he writes it in pencil.<sup>7</sup> The agreement need not be signed by both parties, but only by him who is to be charged by it;<sup>8</sup> and he is estopped from denying the execution of the instrument on the ground that it wants the signature of the other party. The signature may be made by an agent,<sup>9</sup> but the agency must be an agency for this purpose.<sup>10</sup> The agent may be authorized by parol.<sup>11</sup>

The agreement must contain all that belongs essentially to the agreement,<sup>12</sup> and more than this is not needed; nor can parol evidence be received to supply anything which is wanting in the writing, to make it the written agreement on which the parties rely.<sup>13</sup> The form of the agreement must be adequately expressive of the intent and obligation of the parties. It may be upon one or many pieces of paper; provided that the several pieces are so connected by mutual reference or otherwise that there can be no uncertainty as to the meaning and effect of them all, when taken together and viewed as a whole;<sup>14</sup> but this connection of several parts cannot be established by extrinsic evidence.<sup>15</sup> The written agreement must be certain.<sup>16</sup> If the contract be in its nature entire, and in one part it satisfies the statute, and in others it does not, then it is altogether void.<sup>17</sup> But if these parts are severable, then it may be good in part and void in part.<sup>18</sup>

"To answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person." This clause covers all guarantees, and is of great importance in reference to them. Its general effect is to make it necessary that all collateral promises should be in writing; and only when the promise is distinctly collateral is it within this clause of the statute. In the absence of evidence showing distinctly that a promise is collateral, it will be treated as an original promise.<sup>19</sup> Nor is it then material whether the promise is made before or after the delivery of the goods.<sup>20</sup>

There must be some one who owes the debt directly. There must exist an original liability, as the foundation for the collateral liability, and one of these liabilities must be entirely distinct from the other. If, therefore, the creditor trusted to one of the parties more than to the other, but did in fact trust to one together with the other, it is not within the statute. The party for whom the promise has been made must be liable to whom it is made; and it is equally necessary that he continue liable after making the promise; that is, the promise of the party undertaking must not have the effect, prior to its performance, of discharging the party originally liable. In order to bring a promise within this clause of the statute, it must be made to a party to whom the person undertaken for is liable. The statute applies only to promises made to the persons to whom another is already, or is to become answerable; it must be a promise to be answerable for a debt of, or a default in some duty by that other person towards the promisee. A promise, therefore, by A. to B. to pay a debt due from B. to C. is not within the statute.

Whenever the main purpose and object of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some purpose of his own, his promise is not within the statute. If one of several persons, who are liable jointly or severally for the payment of the same debt, promises the creditor to pay the debt, this is not a case within the statute; for although the performance of the promise will have the effect of discharging the others, it is to be presumed that the thing in contemplation of the promisor was his own discharge. This clause of the statute does not embrace cases in which the liability to pay the debt of another arises by operation of law, out of some transaction between the parties, without the aid of any special promise. Thus, if A., who is indebted to B., sends money to C. to pay the debt, and C. accepts the trust, he thereby becomes liable to B. for the debt of A. The words "debt, default, or miscarriage," extend to a liability for a mere tort.

"No action shall be brought upon any contract for the sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them, unless," etc. These words are very general, and intended to have a wide operation; but they have been somewhat controlled by construction. Thus, if the question be whether a contract for the sale of growing crops be a contract or sale of "any interest concerning lands," it seems to be answered in conformity with the intention of the parties. If grain be reaped and stacked, or stored in barns, it becomes a chattel. If it be growing when sold, yet if the sale contemplates its severance when grown, and delivery of it then, distinct from the land, it is in the contemplation of the parties a mere chattel, and is therefore so in the view of the law, so far as this statute is concerned. So, growing grass, growing trees, or fruits. A promise to pay for improvements on land is only a promise to pay for work and labor, or materials, and not for an interest in lands, and therefore need not be in writing. And a contract for the sale of removable fixtures is not within the statute. A mere license to use land, as to stack hay or grain upon it for a time, is not an interest in lands within the statute. But any contract, of which the effect is to give one party an easement on the land of another, is within the statute.

"No action shall be maintained upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof, unless," etc. An executory promise capable of entire performance within one year is not within this clause of the statute. The decision of this question does not seem to depend entirely upon the understanding or intention of the parties. They may contemplate as probable a much longer continuance of the contract, or a suspension of it, and a revival after a longer period; it may itself be liable to such continuance and revival; and it may in this way be protracted so far that it is not in fact performed within a year; but if, when made, it was in reality capable of a full and bona fide performance within a year, without the intervention of extraordinary circumstances, then it is to be considered as not within the statute. There are three classes of cases arising under this clause of the statute: 1. Where by the express agreement of the parties the performance of the contract is not to be completed within one year. These cases are clearly within the statute. 2. Where it is evident from the subject-matter of the contract that the parties had in contemplation a longer period than one year as the time for its performance. These cases are within the statute. 3. Where the time for the performance of the contract is made to depend upon some contingency, which may or may not happen within one year. These cases do not come within the statute.

GIFTS. See CONVEYANCES; "WILLS;" SALES. A GIFT is a voluntary conveyance; that is, a conveyance that is not founded on the consideration of money or blood; a transfer of the title to property to one who receives it without paying for it.<sup>1</sup> The act by which the owner of a thing voluntarily transfers the title and possession of the same from himself to another person without any consideration. Gifts inter vivos are gifts made from one or more persons, without any prospect of immediate death, to one or more others. Gifts causa mortis are gifts made in prospect of death.

BETWEEN LIVING PERSONS. This is a contract which takes place by the mutual consent of the giver, who divests himself of the thing given in order to transmit the title of it to the donee gratuitously, and the donee, who accepts and acquires the legal title to it. This gift takes place when the giver is not in any immediate apprehension of death, which distinguishes it from a gift causa mortis.<sup>2</sup> Gifts inter vivos have no reference to the future, and go into immediate and absolute effect. Delivery is essential; without actual possession the title does not pass. A mere intention or naked promise to give, without some act to pass the property, is not a gift. There exists repentance (the locus penitentiae) so long as the gift is complete and left imperfect in the mode of making it.<sup>3</sup>

The subject of the gift must be certain; and there must be the mutual consent and concurrent will of both parties. Delivery must be according to the nature of the thing. It will have to be an actual delivery, so far as the subject is capable of delivery. If the thing be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it. The donor must part not only with the possession, but with the dominion. If the thing given be a chose in action, the law requires an assignment or some equivalent instrument, and the transfer must be executed.<sup>4</sup>

When the gift is perfect by delivery and acceptance, it is irrevocable unless it is prejudicial to creditors, or the donor was under legal incapacity, or was circumvented by fraud. If a man intending to give a jewel to another say to him, "Here, I give you my ring with the ruby in it," etc., and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift notwithstanding the gift bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himself to the person to whom given.<sup>5</sup> Where a father bought a ticket in a lottery, which he declared he gave to his infant daughter E., and wrote her name upon it, and after the ticket had drawn a prize he declared that he had given the ticket to his child E. and that the prize money was hers: this was held sufficient for a jury to infer all the formality requisite to a valid gift and that the title in the money was complete and vested in E.<sup>6</sup>

IN PROSPECT OF DEATH.

This is a gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers, or causes to be delivered, the possession of any personal goods to keep as his own in case of the donor's decease.<sup>7</sup> It differs from a legacy, inasmuch as it does not require proof in the court of probate.<sup>8</sup> And no assent is required from the executor to perfect the donee's title.<sup>9</sup> It differs from a gift inter vivos, because it is ambulatory and revocable during the donor's life, because it may be made to the wife of the donor, and because it is liable for his debts. To constitute a good gift causa mortis: 1. The thing given must be personal property; a bond,<sup>10</sup> bank notes,<sup>11</sup> and a check offered for payment during the life of the donor will be so considered.<sup>12</sup> Not so a promissory note of the sick man made in his last illness.<sup>13</sup> 2. The gift must be made by the donor in peril of death, and to take effect only in case the giver die.<sup>14</sup> 3. There must be an actual delivery of the subject to or for the donee, in cases where such delivery can be made,<sup>15</sup> but such delivery can be made to a third person for the use of the donee.<sup>16</sup>

IGNORANCE OF FACT is the want of knowledge as to the fact in question. It would be an error resulting from ignorance of fact, if a man believed a certain woman to be unmarried and free, when in fact she was a married woman; but if he were to marry her under that belief he would not be criminally responsible.<sup>a</sup> Ignorance of the laws of a foreign government, or of another State, is ignorance of fact.<sup>b</sup> Ignorance of fact excuses; ignorance of law does not excuse.<sup>c</sup>

edge of those laws which it is our duty to understand, and which every man is presumed to know. Thus, for example, the law forbids any one marrying a woman whose husband is living; if any man, then, imagined he could marry such a woman he would be ignorant of the law; and if he married her he would commit an error as to a matter of law, and in doing this would be presumed to know the law respecting bigamy, and that he knew that he was committing, and that he intended to commit, the offence of bigamy; and this is true in regard to all offences.

Every man may acquire a knowledge of the laws that have been promulgated; and a neglect to become acquainted with them is voluntary ignorance.<sup>d</sup>

INSURANCE. See HALLMENTS.
INSURANCE is a contract whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to indemnify another against loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the indemnity is usually called the insurer or underwriter; the party to receive the indemnity is called the insured or assured; the agreed consideration is called the premium; the written contract is called the policy; the events insured against are termed risks or perils; and the subject, right, or interest to be protected is denominated the insurable interest. Insurance against accidents to travellers is confined to risks in travel, etc. Insurance against fire on land to buildings and all species of property, real or personal, that is subject to destruction or direct damage by fire. Insurance on lives is, in general, upon human life, but is also made upon the lives of domestic animals or such as are in possession of the insured. Insurance on risks in carriage and navigation is upon vessels and other navigable craft, freight, cargo, and litters, either by bottomry, respondentia, mortgage for commissions or otherwise, and on profits. Companies who issue policies of insurance are incorporated, and are either stock companies, mutual companies, or a mixture of the two. In a stock company the members or stockholders pay in a certain capital which is liable for the contracts of the company. In a mutual company the members are themselves the parties insured; in other words, all the members contribute premiums to the fund which is liable to each member for loss, according to the terms of the contract. In the mixed class certain members, who may or may not be insured, contribute a certain amount of the capital, for which they hold certificates or shares, and are entitled to interest on the same at a stipulated rate, or to an agreed share of the surplus receipts, after payment of losses and expenses to be estimated at certain periods.

The business of insurance companies is usually transacted through agencies. The agent for effecting insurance may be such either by appointment, or the recognition of his acts done as such. He may be agent for either of the parties to the policy, or for distinct purposes, or for both. An insurance agency may be more or less extensive according to the express or implied stipulations and understanding between him and his principals. It may be for filling up and issuing policies signed in blank by his principals; for transmitting applications to his principals, filled up by himself as their agent, or that of the applicant; for receiving and transmitting premiums; for adjusting and settling losses; or granting liberties and making new stipulations; or for any one or more of these purposes. Notice to an agent of matters within his commission is notice to the company.

AGREEMENT FOR INSURANCE. An agreement containing specific stipulations is often made in short terms preliminary to the filling out and delivery of an insurance policy. Such an agreement, specifying the rate of the premium, the subject, and risk, and amount to be insured in general terms, and being assented to by the parties, is binding. Though it is usually in writing, it may nevertheless be by parol, or by parol acceptance of a written proposal. It must be in such form or expression that the parties, subject, and risk can be thereby distinctly known, either by being specified or by references so that it can be definitely reduced to writing. Such an agreement must have an express or implied reference to some form of policy. To be valid it must be on a legal interest against legal risks. When the agreement is by a communication between parties at a distance, an offer by either will be binding upon both on a despatch by the other of his acceptance within a reasonable or the prescribed time, and prior to this offer having been countermanded.

See APPLICATIONS, ETC., below.
APPLICATIONS AND REPRESENTATIONS FOR INSURANCE. The preliminary statement made by a party applying for an insurance on life, or against fire, is called the application. It generally consists of written answers to interrogatories proposed by the company applied to respecting the proposed subject. It corresponds to the "representations" preliminary to maritime insurance. It is usually referred to expressly in the policy as being the basis or a part of the contract, and this reference is in effect a warranty of the truth of the statements. An oral misrepresentation of a material fact will defeat a policy on life, or against fire, no less than in maritime insurance, on the ground of fraud.<sup>3</sup> Insurance against fire and on life rests upon the same general conditions of good faith as maritime insurance; but in the first two classes the contract is usually based mainly upon statements by the applicant in his written replies to the numerous inquiries expressly referred to in the policy, which answers are thus made express warranties, and must, accordingly, be strictly true, whether their being so is or is not material to the risk; the inquiries are intended to cover all material circumstances, subject, however, to the principle, applicable to all contracts, that fraud by either party will exonerate the other from his obligations, if he so elects.<sup>4</sup>

INSURANCE POLICIES. A policy of insurance is the contract or instrument whereby insurance is made by the insurer or underwriter in favor of the person insured, expressed, implied, or intended, against some risk, peril or contingency in reference to some subject. It is usually against accident or fire, on a life, or marine. An interest policy is one when the party insured has a real substantial assignable interest in the thing insured. An open policy is one on which the value is to be proved by the party insured.<sup>5</sup> Also, one in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time.<sup>6</sup> A valued policy is one where a value has been set on the goods or ship insured, and the value inserted in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages. In such a policy the value of the subject is expressly agreed, or is, as between the parties, the amount insured. A wager policy is a pretended insurance founded on an ideal risk, when the insured has no interest in the thing insured, and can, therefore, sustain no loss by the happening of any of the misfortunes insured against. Such policies are strongly reprobated.<sup>7</sup>

Every policy, whether accident, fire, life, or marine, specifies or imports parties, and specifies the subject or interest intended to be insured, the premium on the consideration, and the amount insured, the risks or perils for which indemnity is stipulated, and the period of the risk, or the terminus from whence and where to.

Blanks. If a blank is left in a policy of insurance, it is void. 1-1 Phill. Ins. insurance for the name of the place of destination of a ship, it will avoid the policy.<sup>8</sup>

A date is necessary to the validity of a policy of insurance; but where there are separate underwriters, each sets down the date of his own signing, as this constitutes a separate contract.<sup>9</sup>

The duration of the risk under a marine insurance, or one on inland navigation, is either from one geographical terminus to another, or for a specified time; that of an accident or life policy is either for days, weeks, months, a term of years, or for life; that of a fire policy is for a specified time.

It is a leading principle as to the construction of a policy of insurance, that its distinguishing character as a contract is to be favored by the law.<sup>10</sup> Records and documents expressly referred to in the policy are, in effect, for the purpose of reference, a part of the policy or contract of insurance.<sup>11</sup>

A policy may take effect on actual or constructive delivery, and may be retrospective where neither party knows the prior circumstances.<sup>12</sup>

In marine insurance the contract has necessarily more implied reference to customs and usages than most other contracts; or, in other words, the larger proportion of the stipulations are not specifically expressed in the instrument.<sup>13</sup> Thence it has been thought to be an imperfect, obscure and confused instrument.<sup>14</sup> But the difficulty in giving a practical construction seems to arise more from the complication of the circumstances necessarily involved, than from any remediable defects in its provisions or phraseology. New provisions are needed from time to time to adapt the contract to new circumstances.

A mistake in filling up a policy may be corrected by order of a court of equity or of equity jurisdiction or powers.<sup>15</sup>

Policies of insurance are liberally construed.<sup>16</sup>

ABANDONMENT is a term used only in reference to risks in navigation; but the principle is applicable to fire insurance where there are remnants, and sometimes, also, under stipulations in life policies in favor of creditors.<sup>17</sup> The object of abandonment being to remove the whole value of the subject of the insurance to the reinsurer, it is requisite that the subject be in peril, or the remains of it, or claims on account of it, surmount the peril which is the occasion of the loss.<sup>18</sup>

In such case the assured must elect, immediately upon receiving intelligence of a loss, whether to abandon to the company—he cannot delay for the purpose of speculating on the state of the markets.<sup>2</sup> The right to abandon is waived by commencing full repairs, but not by temporary repairs;<sup>3</sup> but is not lost by reason of the enhancement of the loss through the mere negligence or mistakes of the master of the vessel, or of the crew, but it is too late to abandon after the arrival in specie at the port of destination. An inexpedient or unnecessary sale of the subject by the master does not strengthen the right.<sup>4</sup>

Abandonment may be made upon information entitled to credit, but if made speculatively, upon conjecture, it is void; and it must be made without delay after reasonable reliable information of loss is received; otherwise the right will be waived, the assured not being permitted to wait in order to speculate upon the state of the markets.<sup>4</sup> In the absence of any stipulation on the subject no particular form of abandonment is required; it may be in writing or oral; in express terms or by obvious implication; but it must be absolute and unconditional and the ground for it must be stated.<sup>5</sup> Acceptance may cure a defect in abandonment, but is not necessary to its validity.<sup>6</sup> Nor is the underwriter obliged to accept or decline; he may, however, waive it.<sup>7</sup> But it is not subject to be defeated by subsequent events.<sup>8</sup> And the subject must be transferred free of incumbrance except expense for salvage.<sup>1</sup>

See SALVAGE; TOTAL LOSS, below.

Acceptance of abandonment in insurance is in effect an acknowledgment of its sufficiency, and perfects the right of the assured to recover for a total loss if the cause of loss and circumstances have been truly made known. No particular form of acceptance is necessary, and the underwriter is not obliged to say whether he accepts.<sup>1</sup> An acceptance may be a constructive one, as, by taking possession of an abandoned ship to repair it without authority to do so,<sup>2</sup> or by retaining such possession an unreasonable time; under a stipulation authorizing the underwriter to take such possession.<sup>3</sup>

ADJUSTMENT (determining the amount of loss).<sup>4</sup> There is no specific form essentially requisite to an adjustment. To render it binding, it must be intended and understood by the parties to a policy to be absolute and final. It may be made by indorsement on the policy, or by payment of the loss, or the acceptance of an abandonment.<sup>5</sup> If there is fraud by either party to an adjustment it does not bind the other.<sup>6</sup> If one party is led into a material mistake of fact by fault of the other, the adjustment will not bind him.<sup>7</sup> The amount of the loss is governed by that of the insurable interest, so far as it is covered by the insurance.

AMOUNT COVERED—AMOUNT OF LOSS.

THE AMOUNT COVERED or insured is limited by that specified in the policy to be insured, and this limit may be applied to an identical subject only, as a ship, a building, a life, etc.; or to successive subjects, as successive cargoes on the same ship, or successive parcels of goods transmitted on a certain canal or railroad during a specified period; and it may be also limited by the terms of the contract to a certain proportion, as a quarter, half, etc., of the value of the subject or interest on which the insurance is made.<sup>1</sup>

THE AMOUNT OF LOSS is the diminution, destruction, or defeat of the value of, or of the charge upon the insured subject by the direct consequence of the risk insured against, according to the value of the policy or the contribution for loss, so far as the value is covered by the insurance.<sup>2</sup>

DEVIATIONS, or variations from risks described in the policy from a necessity which is not inexcusably incurred, does not forfeit the insurance;<sup>3</sup> as to seek an intermediate port for repairs necessary for the prosecution of the voyage;<sup>4</sup> changing the course to avoid disaster;<sup>5</sup> delay in order to succor those distressed at sea;<sup>6</sup> damage merely in defence against hostile attacks.<sup>7</sup>

Change of risk in insurance against fire, so as to render the insured subject, or its surroundings, or the use made of it different from those specified in the application, will discharge the underwriters.<sup>8</sup> A change of risk under a life policy, in contravention of its express provisions, will defeat it in like manner.<sup>9</sup> Though such a policy does not appear to have any implied condition other than those relative to fraud common to all contracts.

The effect of a deviation in all kinds of insurance is to discharge the underwriters or insurers, whether the risk is thereby enhanced or not; and the doctrine applies to lake and river navigation as well as that of the ocean.<sup>10</sup>

INSURABLE INTEREST. It is essential to the contract of insurance, as distinguished from a wager, that the assured should have a legally recognizable interest in the insured subject, the pecuniary value of which may be appreciated and computed and valued. It is not requisite that the insured party should have an absolute property in the insured subject, or that the subject or interest should be one that can be exclusively possessed, or be transferable in trade or assignment. The subject or interest must, however, be such that it may be destroyed, lost, damaged, diminished, or intercepted by the risks insured against. The interests usually insured are those of the owner in any species of property, of mortgagor, mortgagee, holder of bottomry or respondentia bond, of an agent, consignee, lessee, factor, carrier, bailee, or party having a lien, or entitled to a rent or income, or being liable to a loss depending upon certain contingencies, or having a certainty or probability of a profit or pecuniary benefit depending on the insured subject.<sup>7</sup> The certainty or probability, direct or incidental, of pecuniary benefit by the living, or pecuniary loss or damage to any one by the decease of another, gives an insurable interest in his life.<sup>8</sup>

The amount of insurable interest is the value of the insured subject as agreed by the policy, or its market value, or the pecuniary loss to which the assured is liable by the risks insured against, though the insured subject—for example, life or health—has not a market value.<sup>9</sup>

LOSS is the destruction of or damage to the insured subject by the risks insured against according to the express provisions and construction of the contract of insurance.<sup>10</sup> These accidents, or misfortunes, or perils, as they are usually denominated, are all distinctly enumerated in the policy; and no loss, however great or unforeseen, can be a loss within the policy unless it be the direct and immediate consequence of one or more of these perils.<sup>11</sup> Loss under a life policy is simply the death of the subject by a cause, the risk of which is not expressly excepted in the policy, and when the loss is not fraudulent, as when one insured, who insures the life of another for his own benefit, procures the death.<sup>12</sup> Loss in insurance against fire must, under the usual form of the policy, be the partial or total destruction or damage of the thing insured against fire. In maritime insurance, in which loss by fire is one of the risks usually included, the loss insured against may be absolutely or constructively total, or a partial or general average loss, or a particular average.<sup>13</sup>

Partial losses are sometimes called average losses, because they are often in the nature of those losses which are the subject of average contributions; they are distinguished into general and particular averages. Total losses in maritime insurance are absolutely such when the entire thing perishes or becomes of no value. Constructively, a loss may become total where the value remaining is of such a small amount that the whole may be surrendered. See ADJUSTMENT, above.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. In cases of loss of goods which have been insured from maritime dangers when the adjustment is made, the damages are settled by valuing the property, not according to prime cost, but at the price at which it may be sold at the time of selling the average.<sup>14</sup> See ADJUSTMENT, above.

MEMORANDUM. A clause in a policy limiting the liability of the insurer is called a memorandum. Policies of insurance on risks of transportation by water generally contain exceptions of all liability from loss on certain articles other than total, or for contributions for general average, and for liability for particular average on certain other articles supposed to be perishable, or specially liable to damage under specified rates, or each varying from three to twenty per cent., and for any loss, whatever, under three or five per cent. Some seventy or eighty articles are subject to these exceptions of particular average in the diverse forms of policy in use in different localities.<sup>15</sup> These exceptions were formerly introduced under a "MEMORANDUM," or "N. B.," and hence have been called "memorandum articles," and the body of exception the "memorandum." The list of articles and rates of exceptions vary much in different places, and from time to time at the same place.<sup>16</sup>

PART OWNERS. See INSURABLE INTEREST, above.

POLICY. See INTRODUCTION, above.

PREMIUM is the consideration for a contract of insurance. A policy of insurance always expresses the consideration, called the premium, which is a certain amount, or a certain rate upon the value of the risk, paid wholly in cash, or partly so and partly by promissory note (called a premium note, and collaterally secured by a stipulation in the policy for its being forfeited by its non-payment) or otherwise.<sup>17</sup> By the charters of mutual fire insurance companies the insured building is usually subject to a lien from the premium.<sup>18</sup> The premium may be payable by service rendered.<sup>19</sup> In life insurance the premium is usually payable periodically,<sup>20</sup> and the continuance of the risk is usually made to depend upon the due payment of a periodical premium.<sup>21</sup> So far as the agreed risk is not given in amount or time under a marine policy, the whole, or a proportional, stipulated, or customary part of the premium is either not payable, or, if paid, is to be returned unless otherwise agreed.<sup>22</sup>

RISKS AND PERILS. The risk or peril in an accident policy is the injury or death; in a life policy, is death; under a fire policy, destruction or damage by fire; under a marine policy, by perils of the seas, usually including fire; and under a policy upon subjects at risk in lake, river or canal navigation, by perils of the same.

Under a marine insurance the risks are from a certain place to a certain other, or from one date to another. The perils usually insured against as "perils of the seas" are: fire, lightning, winds, waves, rocks, shoals, and collisions; and also the perils of hostile capture, piracy, theft, arrest, barratry (seizing and running away with the vessel, negligence, mutiny, etc.), and jettisons (casting the goods away, from necessity, whereby they sink and are lost). But a distinction is made between the extraordinary action of perils of the seas, from which insurers or underwriters are liable, and wear and tear, and deterioration by decay, for which they are not liable. Perils of lakes, rivers, etc., are analogous to those of the seas.

Insurers or underwriters are not liable for loss occasioned by the gross misconduct of the assured, or imputable to him; but if a vessel is seaworthy, with suitable officers and crew, underwriters are liable for loss, though occasioned through the mistakes or want of assiduity and vigilance of the officers or men. Underwriters are not answerable for loss directly attributable to the qualifications of the insured subject independently of the specified risks, or for loss distinctly occasioned by the fraudulent or gross negligence of the party insured.

Insurance against illegal risks, such as trading with the enemy, the slave trade, piratical cruisers, and illegal kinds of business, is void.

Policies usually contain express exceptions of some risks besides those impliedly excepted. These may be in maritime insurance, contraband and illicit interloping trade; violation of blockade, mobs and civil commotions; in fire policies, loss on jewelry, paintings, sculpture, by hazardous trade, etc.; in life policies, loss by suicide, risks in certain climates or localities, and in certain hazardous employments, without express permission. See AVERAGE; LOSS, above.

SALVAGE. See MARITIME LAW.

TOTAL LOSS in marine insurance is either the absolute destruction of the insured subject by the direct action of the perils insured against, or a constructive—sometimes called technical—total loss, in which the party insured is deprived of the possession of the subject, still subsisting in specie, or where there may be remnants of it, or claims subsisting on account of it, and the assured by the express terms or legal construction of the policy has the right to recover its value from the underwriters, so far as, and at the rate of which it is insured, on abandonment and assignment of the still-subsisting subject, or remnants or claims arising out of it.

A constructive total loss may be by capture; seizure by unlawful violence, as piracy, or damage to ship or goods over half the value at the time and place of loss, or a loss of the voyage; though the ship or goods may survive in specie, but so as not to be fit for use in the same character for the same service or purpose; or by jettison; or by necessity to sell on account of the action and effect of the peril insured against; or by loss of insured freight consequent on the loss of cargo or ship. There may be a claim for a total loss in addition to a partial loss. A total loss of the ship is not necessarily such of cargo, nor is submerston necessarily a total loss, nor is temporary delay of the voyage.

A constructive total loss, and an abandonment thereupon of the ship, is a constructive total loss of freight; and a constructive total loss and abandonment of cargo has a like effect as to commissions or profits thereon; and the validity of the abandonment will depend upon the actual facts at the time of the abandonment, as the same may subsequently prove to have been.

above.

WARRANTY in insurance is a stipulation or agreement on the part of the insured party, in the nature of a condition. It is express when the stipulation is introduced into the written contract by agreement of the parties. It is implied when it naturally results from the nature of the contract; as, that the ship shall be seaworthy when she sails on the voyage insured.

An express warranty must be strictly complied with, and the assured is not permitted to allege, in excuse for non-compliance, that the risk was not thereby affected, since the parties have agreed that the stipulated fact or act shall be the basis of the contract, unless compliance is rendered illegal by a subsequent statute.

The most frequent express warranties in maritime policies are, the time of sailing, and, in time of hostilities, the national character of the insured subject and neutral insignia and conduct. In fire and life policies warranties are quite numerous, comprehending all the facts stated by the applicant in his application when incorporated, as it usually is, into the policy, and expressly contracted by reference thereto. In fire insurance express reference is often made to the charter of the company; specially so in mutual companies, and, in such companies, to rules and regulations, and conditions indorsed upon the policy.<sup>1</sup> A policy of insurance, no less than any other contract, is subject to the condition of fraud.<sup>2</sup>

Intention. See CONTRACTS; CRIMINAL LAW.

INTEREST. See CONVEYANCES.

INTEREST. Is the compensation which is paid by the borrower of money to the lender for its use, and, generally, by a debtor to his creditor in recompense for his detention of the debt. It is a payment for the use of money.

ALLOWANCE OF INTEREST. The contractor who has expressly or impliedly undertaken to pay interest is, of course, bound to do so. Executors,<sup>3</sup> administrators,<sup>4</sup> assignees of bankrupts or insolvents,<sup>5</sup> guardians,<sup>6</sup> and trustees<sup>7</sup> who have kept money an unreasonable length of time,<sup>8</sup> and have made, or might have made, it productive,<sup>9</sup> are chargeable with interest.

The lender upon an express or implied contract for interest is entitled to receive and enforce its payment. Executors, administrators, etc., are, in some cases, allowed interest for advances made by them on account of the estates under their charge.<sup>10</sup> The rule has been extended to trustees,<sup>11</sup> and compound interest even allowed them.<sup>12</sup>

EXPRESS CONTRACTS. When the debtor expressly undertakes to pay interest, he or his personal representatives having assets are bound to pay it. But if a party has accepted the principal, it has been determined that he cannot recover interest in a separate action.<sup>13</sup>

IMPLIED CONTRACTS where, from the course of dealings between the parties, a promise to pay is implied, the debtor is bound to pay.<sup>14</sup> So, also, on an account stated, or other liquidated sum, whenever the debtor knows precisely what he is to pay, and when he is to pay it on an unsettled claim, after a demand of payment.<sup>15</sup> But interest is not due for unliquidated damages, or on a running account, where the items are all on one side, unless otherwise agreed upon;<sup>16</sup> on the arrears of an annuity secured by a specialty,<sup>17</sup> or given in lieu of dower;<sup>18</sup> on bills and notes, if payable at a future day certain, after due;<sup>19</sup> if payable on demand, after demand made.<sup>20</sup> Where the terms of a promissory note are that it shall be payable by instalments, and on the failure of any instalment, the whole is to become due; interest on the whole becomes payable from the first default.<sup>21</sup> Where, by the terms of a bond or a promissory note, interest is to be paid annually, and the principal at a distant day, the interest may be recovered before the principal is due. On a deposit by a purchaser, which he is entitled to recover back, paid either to a principal or an auctioneer. For goods sold and delivered after the customary or stipulated term of credit has expired,<sup>22</sup> if there be no credit, then from the time of sale.<sup>23</sup> On judgments debts, from the rendition of judgment.<sup>24</sup> On money obtained by fraud, or where it has been wrongfully detained.<sup>25</sup> For whoever receives money not his own, and detains it from the owner unlawfully, must pay interest therefor. Hence, a public officer, retaining money wrongfully, is chargeable with interest during the time of such wrongful detainer.<sup>26</sup> So, an agent, unreasonably neglecting to inform his principal of receipt of money, is liable for the interest from the time when he should have communicated such information.<sup>27</sup> But an agent is not generally liable for interest on funds in his hands, unless he uses them, or is in default in accounting for them.<sup>28</sup> On money paid by mistake, or recovered on a void execution.<sup>29</sup> On money lent or laid out for another's use.<sup>30</sup> On money had and received after demand.<sup>31</sup> On purchase money which has lain dead, where the vendor cannot make a title.<sup>32</sup> On purchase money remaining in the purchaser's hands to pay off incumbrances.) Rest from the time that it is due.<sup>1</sup> Even if the rent is payable otherwise than in money, but is not so paid.<sup>2</sup> Interest cannot, however, be recovered for arrears of rent payable in wheat.<sup>3</sup>

When the rate of interest is specified in any contract, that rate continues until full payment is made.

JUDGMENTS. Upon a note made payable in a certain number of years, with interest annually, judgment can be recovered only for simple interest on the principal sum.<sup>4</sup>

TIME DUE—DATE OF ALLOWANCE, ETC. In actions for money had and received, interest is allowed from the date of the service of the writ.<sup>5</sup> On debts payable on demand, interest is payable only from the demand.<sup>6</sup> The words "with interest for the same" carry interest from date.<sup>7</sup> The mere circumstance of war existing between two nations is not a sufficient reason for abating interest on debts due by the subjects of one belligerent to another.<sup>8</sup> But a prohibition of all intercourse with an enemy during war furnishes a sound reason for the abatement of interest until the return of peace.<sup>9</sup>

A debt barred by the statute of limitations, and revived by an acknowledgment, bears interest for the whole time.<sup>10</sup>

COMPOUND INTEREST. Interest upon interest is not allowed, except in special cases,<sup>11</sup> and the uniform current of decisions is against it, as being a hard, oppressive exaction, and tending to usury.<sup>12</sup> If an agreement is made to convert interest already due into principal, or if accounts between parties are settled by rents, and therefore in effect upon the principal of compound interest, which may be done by an express accounting,<sup>13</sup> or under a custom of forwarding accounts, quarterly, half-yearly, or yearly, to the debtor who acquiesces in them by his silence;<sup>14</sup> these transactions are valid, and sanctioned by the law; and such a method of computation is even directed by courts.<sup>15</sup> If compound interest has accrued, even under a prior bargain for it, and being actually paid, it cannot be recovered back.<sup>16</sup> But compound interest cannot be recovered as such, even if it be expressly promised.<sup>17</sup> But annual rests in merchants' accounts are allowed,<sup>18</sup> though not after mutual dealings have ceased.<sup>19</sup> In cases where it is expressly stipulated that interest shall be payable at certain fixed times, it has been held that interest may be charged upon the interest from the time it is payable.<sup>20</sup>

Where a partner has overdrawn the partnership funds, and refuses, when called upon to account, to disclose the profits, recourse would be had to compound interest as a substitute for the profits he might reasonably be supposed to have made.<sup>21</sup> And when executors, administrators, or trustees convert the trust money to their own use, or employ it in business or trade, or fail to invest, they are chargeable with compound interest.<sup>22</sup>

In an action to recover the annual interest due on a promissory note, interest will be allowed on each year's interest until paid.<sup>23</sup>

An infant's contract to pay interest on interest will be binding upon him when it is for his benefit.<sup>24</sup>

COMPUTING INTEREST. In casting interest on notes, bonds, etc., upon which partial payments have been made, every payment is to be first applied to keep down the interest; but the interest is never allowed to form a part of the principal so as to carry interest.<sup>25</sup> When a partial payment exceeds the amount of interest due when it is made, it is correct to compute the interest to the time of the first payment, cast interest on the remainder to the time of the second payment, add it to the remainder, and subtract the second payment, and in like manner from one payment to another, until the time of judgments.<sup>26</sup> And the same rule applies to judgments.<sup>27</sup>

Where a partial payment is made before the debt is due, it cannot be apportioned part to the debt and part to the interest. As, if there be a bond for one hundred dollars, payable in one year, and at the expiration of six months fifty dollars be paid in, this payment shall not be apportioned part to the principal and part to the interest, but at the end of the year interest shall be charged on the whole sum, and the obligor shall receive credit for the interest of fifty dollars for six months.<sup>28</sup>

allowed where such place is specified,<sup>1</sup> otherwise of the place of making the contract.<sup>2</sup> But the rate of interest of either place may be reserved; and this provision will govern, if an honest transaction, and not a cover for usury.<sup>3</sup>

LIMITATION OF INTEREST. When the money due is tendered to the person entitled to it, and he refuses to receive it, the interest ceases.<sup>4</sup> Where the plaintiff is absent in foreign parts beyond the seas, evidence of that fact may be given in evidence to the jury on the plea of payment, in order to extinguish the interest during such absence.<sup>5</sup>

Whenever the law prohibits the payment of the principal, interest during the prohibition is not demandable.<sup>6</sup>

If the plaintiff has accepted the principal, he cannot recover the interest in a separate action.<sup>7</sup>

TO THE PENALTY OF BOND. It is a general rule that the penalty of a bond limits the amount of the recovery.<sup>8</sup> But in some cases the interest is recoverable beyond the amount of the penalty.<sup>9</sup> The recovery depends on principles of law, and not on the arbitrary discretion of a jury.<sup>10</sup>

The exceptions are: Where the bond is to account for moneys to be received;<sup>11</sup> where the plaintiff is kept out of his money by writs of error,<sup>12</sup> or delayed by injunction;<sup>13</sup> if the recovery of the debt be delayed by the obligor;<sup>14</sup> if extraordinary emoluments are derived from holding the money;<sup>15</sup> or the bond is taken only as a collateral security;<sup>16</sup> or the action be on a judgment recovered on a bond.<sup>17</sup> But these exceptions do not obtain in the administration of the debtor's assets, where his other creditors might be injured by allowing the bond to be rated beyond the penalty.<sup>18</sup>

RISK OR SERVICE. A lender may charge an extra price for the risk he incurs, if that risk is distinct and different from the mere personal risk of the debtor being unable to pay; for nothing of this kind is any justification whatever for more than legal interest. But where repayment of money loaned is made to depend upon the happening of contingent events, there the lender may take, beside interest for the sum loaned, enough more to insure him against the casualty which might destroy his claim; that is, as much more as the risk is worth. So, a lender, whether banker, broker, engaged in trade, or lending his own money, may charge, in addition to the discount, a reasonable compensation for his trouble or services. But the sum paid as such compensation or commission for service and trouble in any case must not exceed the amount usually taken in the course of trade or business; and if it do, such excess will make the contract usurious.<sup>19</sup>

SALES OF NOTES, ETC. Negotiable paper may be sold for less than its face, and the purchaser can recover its whole amount from the maker when it falls due, although he thereby gets much more than legal interest for the use of his money; and this principle extends to bonds and other securities for money loaned. For such paper is property; and one may sell the notes which he holds at a price made low, either by doubts of the solvency of the maker, or by stringency in the money market, as well as his house or his horse at a less than the average price. But the purchase must be actual, and made in good faith, and not merely intended to give efficacy to a usurious contract. For if a person makes his own note, and sells that for what he can get, this, while in appearance the sale of a note, is in fact a loan and a borrowing, and nothing else. If the seller of a note acquired it by purchase, or if it is his for money advanced or lent by him to its full amount, he may sell it for what he can get; but if he be the maker of the note, or the agent of the maker, and receives for the note less than would be paid him if only a lawful discount were made, it is a usurious loan. Where a note has been fairly executed, and where there is no usury between the original parties, so that the payee has acquired a legal right to sue the maker upon the note, he may then dispose of it, at any rate of discount from its face, and the purchaser will have a right to enforce it for its full amount against the maker.<sup>20</sup>

USURIOUS INTEREST. Usury is the taking of more interest than the law allows. The excess over the legal rate charged the borrower for the use of money. There must therefore be the use of money; which may be by a loan, or by the continuance of an existing debt. To one or the other of these classes all contracts for the use of money may be referred.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See ASSIGNMENTS; BONDS; CONTRACTS; CONVEYANCES, etc.
LANDLORD AND TENANT is a term used to denote the relation which subsists by virtue of the contract, express or implied, between two or more persons, for the possession or occupation of lands or tenements, either for a definite period, for life, or at will.

A LANDLORD is a person who owns or holds lands and tenements which he leases or rents out to others.

A TENANT is one who has the temporary use and occupation of lands and tenements which belong to another, the duration and other terms of whose occupation are usually defined by an agreement called a lease, while the parties thereto are placed in the relation of landlord and tenant.<sup>4</sup>

A LEASE is a contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements on the one side, and a recompense of rent or other income on the other.<sup>5</sup> The party who leases is called the lessor; he to whom the lease is made, the lessee; and the compensation or consideration of the lease is the rent.

and a recompense of rent or other income on the other.<sup>5</sup> The party who leases is called the lessor; he to whom the lease is made, the lessee; and the compensation or consideration of the lease is the rent.

EXPRESS CONTRACT. When the relation of landlord and tenant is created by an express contract, the instrument made use of for the purpose is called a lease. One of the essential properties of a lease is that its duration must be for a shorter period than the duration of the interest of the lessor in the land; for if he disposes of his entire interest, it becomes an assignment, and this is not a lease. In other words, the granting of a lease always supposes that the grantor reserves to himself a reversion in the leased premises.

IMPLIED CONTRACT. The relation of landlord and tenant may arise by necessary implication from the circumstances of the case and the relative position of the parties to each other; for the law will imply its existence whenever there is an ownership of land on the one hand, and an occupation of it by permission on the other; and in all such cases it will be presumed that the occupant intends to compensate the owner for the use of the premises.<sup>6</sup> This relation may be inferred from a variety of circumstances; but the most obvious acknowledgment of its existence is the payment of rent; and this principle applies even after the expiration of an express term of years; for if the tenant continues to hold over after his term has run out, the landlord may, if he chooses, consider him a tenant, and he is, in fact, understood to do so, unless he proceeds to eject him at once. If the landlord suffers him to remain, and receives rent from him, or by any other act acknowledges him as tenant, a new tenancy springs up of so definite a character that it cannot be terminated by either party, except by a reasonable notice to quit.<sup>6</sup> The payment of money, however, is only a prima facie acknowledgment of the existence of a tenancy; for if it does not appear to have been paid as rent, but stands upon some other consideration, it will not be evidence of a subsisting tenancy.<sup>6</sup> Neither does a mere participation in the profits of land, where the owner is not excluded from the possession nor the letting of land upon shares, unless the occupant expressly agrees to pay a certain part of the crop as rent, in either case amount to a tenancy.<sup>7</sup>

But the relation of landlord and tenant will not be inferred from the mere occupation of land, if the relative position of the parties to each other can, under the circumstances of the case, be referred to any other distinct cause; as, for instance, between a vendor and vendee of land, where the purchaser remains in possession after the agreement falls through. the possession in that case was evidently taken with the understanding of both parties that the occupant should be the owner, and not tenant; and the other party cannot, without his consent, convert him into a tenant, so as to charge him with rent.<sup>1</sup> The same principle applies to mortgagee and mortgagee, as well as to that of a mortgagor and the assignee of the mortgage; for no privity of estate exists in either case; and, as a general rule, a tenancy by implication can never arise, under a party who has not the legal estate of the premises in question.<sup>2</sup>

RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES GENERALLY. The rights and obligations of the parties will be considered as having commenced from the date of the lease, if there be one, and no other time for its commencement has been agreed upon; or, if there be no date, then from the delivery of the papers. If, however, there be no writings, it will take effect from the day the tenant entered into possession, and not with reference to any quarter-day.<sup>3</sup> And these rights and duties attach to each of the parties, not only in respect to each other, but also with reference to other persons who are strangers to the contract. The landlord retains certain rights over the property, although he has parted with his possession, while the tenant assumes obligations with respect to it which continue so long as he is invested with that character.

After the making of a lease, the right of possession, in legal contemplation, remains in the landlord until the contract is consummated by the entry of the lessee. When the tenant enters, this right of possession changes, and he draws to himself all the rights incident to possession after this. The landlord's rights in the premises are suspended, or confined to the protection of his reversionary interest; that is, to the maintenance of actions for such injuries as would, in the ordinary course of things, continue to affect his interest after the determination of the lease. Of such are actions for breaking the windows of a house, cutting timber, or damming up a rivulet, whereby the timber on the estate becomes rotten.<sup>4</sup> The injury must be of such a character as permanently affects the inheritance; but it may be so if any one interferes with his tenants, and disturbs their enjoyment so far as to cause him loss of rent or other damage.<sup>5</sup>

The landlord may, however, go upon the premises peaceably for the purpose of ascertaining whether any waste or injury has been committed by the tenant or any other person, first giving notice of his intention. He may also use all ways appurtenant thereto, demand rent, make such repairs as are necessary to prevent waste, or remove an obstruction. But if rent is payable in hay or other produce, to be delivered to him from the farm, he is not entitled to go upon the land and take it, until it is delivered to him by the tenant, or until it has been severed and set apart for his use.<sup>6</sup>

The landlord's responsibilities in respect to possession, also, are suspended as soon as the tenant commences his occupation. If, therefore, a stranger is injured by the ruinous state of the premises, or the tenant creates a nuisance upon them, or if the fences are suffered to fall into decay, whereby the cattle of a stranger stray and are injured or lost, the landlord is in neither case answerable. But it would be otherwise if he had undertaken to keep the premises in repair, and the injury was occasioned by his neglect to keep up the repairs, or if he should renew the lease with a nuisance upon it.<sup>7</sup>

TERMINATION OF THE RELATION. The relation of landlord and tenant may be terminated in several ways. If it is a tenancy for life, it will, of course, terminate upon the decease of him upon whose life the lease depends. If it be for a certain number of years, depending upon some particular event, the happening of that event will determine the tenancy. So if it be for a certain number of years, independent of any contingency, it will expire at the last moment of the anniversary of the day from which the tenant was to hold in the last year of the tenancy. And in all these cases depending upon the express conditions of the lease, no notice to quit will be necessary in order to dissolve the relation of the parties to each other.<sup>8</sup> But a tenancy from year to year, or at will, can only be terminated by a notice to quit; this notice must be in writing; it must be explicit, and require the tenant to remove from the premises; it must run in the name of the person to whom possession is to be given, and not of his agent; and, if given by one of several tenants in common, it is valid only to the extent of his share, but if made by one of several joint tenants, it will inure to the benefit of all.<sup>9</sup> So is a notice by one co-partner of a firm.<sup>10</sup> But notice to quit is not necessary where the relation of landlord and tenant does not subsist, or where the tenant distinctly acknowledges the title of the landlord.<sup>11</sup> No particular form of the notice is necessary, but there must be a reasonable certainty in the description of the premises and in the statement of the time when the tenant must quit. If there is more than one tenant, the notice should be addressed to all, but it may be served on either one.<sup>12</sup> A valid notice, properly served, vests the premises in the

LANDLORDS. The principal obligation on the part of the landlord, which is, in fact, always to be implied as a necessary condition to his receiving any rent, is, that the tenant shall enjoy the quiet possession of the premises,<sup>1</sup> which means, substantially, that he shall not be turned out of possession of the whole or any material part of the premises by one having a title paramount to that of landlord, or that the landlord shall not himself disturb or render his occupation uncomfortable by the erection of a nuisance on or near the premises, or otherwise oblige him to quit possession.<sup>2</sup> But if he be ousted by a stranger, that is, by one having no title, or after the rent has fallen due, or if the molestation proceeds from acts of a third person, the landlord is in neither case responsible for it.<sup>3</sup> Another obligation which the law imposes on the landlord, in the absence of any express stipulation in the lease, is the payment of all taxes and assessments chargeable upon the property, or any ground-rent or interest upon mortgage to which it may be subject. Every landlord is bound to protect his immediate tenant against all paramount claims. And if a tenant is compelled, in order to protect himself in the enjoyment of the land in respect of which his rent is payable, to make payment which ought, as between himself and his landlord, to have been made by the latter, he may call upon the landlord to reimburse him, or he may deduct such payment from the rent due or to become due.<sup>4</sup> But the landlord is under no obligation to make repairs, or to rebuild in case the premises should be burned; nor does he guarantee that they are reasonably fit for the purposes for which they were taken. And it is not in the power of a tenant to make repairs at the expense of his landlord, unless there be a special agreement between them authorizing him to do so; for the tenant takes the premises for better or for worse, and cannot involve the landlord in expense for repairs without his consent.<sup>5</sup> Even if the premises have become uninhabitable by fire, and the landlord having insured them has recovered the insurance-money, the tenant cannot compel him to expend the money so recovered in rebuilding, unless he has expressly engaged to do so; nor can he, in such an event, protect himself from the payment of rent during the unexpired balance of the term, unless exempted therefrom by statute or the terms of the lease.

The uninhabitableness of a house is not a good defence to an action for rent.<sup>6</sup> And if the landlord expressly covenanted to repair, the tenant cannot quit and discharge himself of the rent because the repairs are not made, unless there is a provision to that effect.<sup>7</sup> And if a landlord is bound by custom or by express agreement to repair, this obligation, and the obligation of the tenant to pay rent, are independent of each other, so that the refusal or neglect of the landlord to repair is no answer to a demand for rent.<sup>8</sup>

TENANT. The tenant, upon taking possession, is at once invested with all the rights incident to the possession; is entitled to the use of all the privileges and easements appertaining to the tenement, and to take such reasonable estovers and emblements as are attached to the estate. He may maintain an action against any person who disturbs his possession, or trespasses on the premises, though it be the landlord himself.<sup>9</sup> As occupant, he is answerable for any neglect to repair highways, fences, or party walls, it being generally sufficient, except where a statute otherwise provides, to charge a man with such repairs by the name of occupant. He is also liable for all injuries produced by the mismanagement of his servants, or by a nuisance kept upon the premises, or by an obstruction of the highway adjacent to them, or the like; for, as a general rule, where a man is in possession of property, he must so manage it that other persons shall not be injured thereby.<sup>10</sup>

One of the principal obligations which the law imposes upon every tenant, independent of any agreement, is to treat the premises in such a manner that no substantial injury shall be done to them, so that they may revert to the landlord at the end of the term unimpaired by any wilful or negligent conduct on his part. In the language of the books, he must keep the buildings wind-and-water-tight, and is bound to make fair and tenable repairs, such as the keeping of fences in order, or replacing doors and windows that are broken during his occupation. If it is a furnished house, he must preserve the furniture, and leave it, with the linen, etc., clean, and in good order. But he is not bound to any ornamental repair, as painting, papering, etc., although so broad a covenant on his part as "to leave the premises in good and sufficient repair, order, and condition," might cover these repairs. If he expressly agrees to keep the premises in repair, and to deliver them up in good repair, he is not justified in permitting them to remain out of repair by the fact that they were so when he received them. But the age and character of the premises must be considered in determining the proper extent of the repairs. If the landlord is under no legal obligation to repair, and the tenant voluntarily makes them, the landlord is not bound to repay him for the expense. But there would be a sufficient consideration to sustain a subsequent promise by the landlord. A tenant is not bound to rebuild premises which have accidentally become ruinous during his occupation, nor is he answerable for ordinary wear and tear, nor for an accidental fire, nor to put a new roof on the building, nor to make what are usually called general or substantial repairs; neither is he bound to do painting, whitewashing, or papering, except so far as they may be necessary to preserve exposed timber from decay. With respect to farming leases, a tenant is under a similar obligation to repair, but it differs from the general obligation in this; that it is confined to the dwelling-house which he occupies—the burden of supporting the out-buildings and other erections on the farm being sustained by either the landlord or the tenant, in the absence of any express provision in the lease, by the particular custom of the country in which the farm is situated. He is always bound, however, to cultivate the farm in a good and husbandmanlike manner, to keep the fences in repair, and preserve the timber and ornamental trees in good condition; and for any violation of any of these duties, he is liable to be proceeded against by the landlord, and this whether the act be committed by the tenant or a stranger.

The tenant's general obligation to repair also renders him responsible for any injury a stranger may sustain by reason of his neglect to keep the premises in a safe condition; as, by not keeping the covers of his vaults sufficiently closed, so that a person walking in the street falls through, or is injured thereby. If he repairs or improves the building, he must guard against accident to the passers-by in the street, by erecting a suitable barricade, or stationing a person there to give notice of the danger, in any unreasonable obstruction which he places in the highway adjoining his premises, he may be indicted for causing a public nuisance, or obstructing the highway, as well as rendered liable to an action for damages, at the suit of any individual injured. The law will tolerate such a partial and temporary obstruction of the street as may be necessary for business purposes; as, in receiving and delivering goods from a warehouse, or coals or fuel on the sidewalk, or the like; provided, always, that the public convenience does not suffer from it.

The tenant's chief duty, however, is the payment of rent, the amount of which is either fixed by the terms of the lease, or, in the absence of an express agreement, is such a reasonable compensation for the occupation of the premises as they are fairly worth. If there has been no particular agreement between the parties, the tenant pays rent only from the time he has had the beneficial enjoyment of the premises; but if he has entered into an express agreement to pay rent during the term, no casualty or injury of the premises by fire or otherwise—nothing, in fact, short of an eviction—will save him from such payment, in the absence of a statute or agreement exempting him in such event. But if he has been deprived of the possession of the premises, or any part thereof, by a third person under a title superior to that of the landlord, or if the latter annoys his tenant, erects or causes the erection of such a nuisance upon or near the premises, as renders his occupation so uncomfortable as to justify his removal, he is, in either case, discharged from the payment of rent. But it is no answer to a demand for rent that the premises are not in a fit and proper state and condition for the purposes for which they were hired. If, therefore, the premises are burned down, and the tenant is under no obligation to rebuild (not having agreed to keep in repair), or are destroyed by the act of God or the public enemies, yet he is bound to pay rent thereafter. Unless the lease contains a provision that the rent shall cease or proportionately abate while the premises remain wholly or in part unfit for use.

The obligation to pay rent may be apportioned; for, as rent is incident to the reversion, it will become payable to the assignees of the respective portions thereof, whenever that reversion is severed by an act of the parties, or of the law. But the tenant's consent is necessary for the apportionment when made by the landlord, unless the proportion of rent chargeable upon each portion of the land has been settled by the intervention of a jury. ast, however, cannot get rid of or apportion his rent by transferring the whole or a part of his lease; for if he assigns it, or underlets a portion of it, he still remains liable to his landlord for the whole.<sup>7</sup> Instances of an apportionment by act of law occur where there is a descent of the reversion among a number of heirs, or upon a judicial sale of a portion of the premises belonging to them respectively. So, if a man dies, leaving a widow, she will have a right to receive one-third of the rent, while the remaining two-thirds will be payable to his heirs,<sup>8</sup> unless the apportionment be made different by statute.

A tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title. For he is estopped from changing by his own act the character and effect of his tenure.<sup>9</sup> And whenever a tenant disclaims his tenure, or denies his landlord's title, or claims adversely to him, or attorns to another as having title against him, he forfeits his estate. But where the lease was obtained by the fraud of the landlord, the tenant may defend against an action brought on the lease by impeaching the landlord's title.<sup>10</sup> But this fraud must be practised directly against the tenant. A disclaimer by a tenant will work a forfeiture only when it amounts to a renunciation of his character as a tenant, which may be either by setting up a title in another, or claiming title himself.<sup>11</sup>

THIRD PERSONS. The rights and liabilities of landlords and tenants are not confined to the immediate parties to the contract, but attach to all persons to whom the estate may be transferred, or who may succeed to the possession of the premises either as landlords or tenants. This principle follows, as a necessary consequence of that privity of estate which is incident to the relation of landlord and tenant. A landlord may not violate his tenant's rights by a sale of the property; neither can a tenant avoid his responsibilities by substituting another tenant in his stead without the landlord's consent. The purchaser of the property becomes in one case the landlord, and is entitled to all the rights and remedies against the tenant or his assignee which the seller had, while in the other case the assignee of the lessee assumes all the liabilities of the latter, and is entitled to the same protection which he might claim from the assignee of the reversion; but the original lessee is not thereby discharged from his obligations.<sup>12</sup>

LAW. See EQUITY; EVIDENCE; IGNORANCE; KNOWLEDGE; PLEADING; PRACTICE, ETC., ETC.

LAW is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a State.<sup>13</sup> A rule or enactment promulgated by the legislative authority of a State; a long established local custom which has the force of such an enactment. The rules and methods by which society compels or restrains the action of its members. The aggregate of those rules and principles of conduct which the governing power in a community recognizes as the rules and principles which it will enforce or sanction, and according to which it will regulate, limit, or protect the conduct of its members.

Arbitrary law is a law, or provision of law, so far removed from consideration of abstract justice that it is necessarily founded on the mere will of the law-making power, so that it is rather a rule established than a principle declared. The principle that an infant shall be bound by his contract is not arbitrary; but the rule that the limit of infancy shall be twenty-one years, not twenty nor twenty-two, is arbitrary. The term is also sometimes used to signify an unreasonable law—one that is in violation of justice. Irrevocable laws are those which have not in their nature or in their language some limit or termination provided, and are, in theory, perpetual; but the perpetuity is liable to be defeated by subsequent abrogation. It has sometimes been attempted to secure an absolute perpetuity by an express provision forbidding any abrogation. But it may well be questioned whether one generation has power to bind its posterity by an irrevocable law.<sup>14</sup> Municipal law is a system of law proper to any single State, nation, or community. Positive law is the system naturally established by a community in distinction from natural law. A prospective law or statute is one which applies only to cases arising after its enactment, and does not affect that which is already past. A retrospective law or statute is one that turns backward to alter that which is past, or to affect men in relation to their conduct before its enactment. These are also called retroactive laws. In general, whenever a retroactive statute would take away vested rights, or impose the obligation of contracts, it is so far void.<sup>15</sup> But laws which only vary the remedies, or merely cure a defect in proceedings otherwise fair, are valid.<sup>16</sup> A penal law is one which inflicts a penalty for its violation. A private or special law is one which relates to private matters which do not concern the public at large. A public or general law is one which affects the public either generally or in some classes.

ADMIRALTY relates to maritime affairs, maritime games, civil and criminal.

Admiralty jurisdiction is exercised in the first instance by the United States District Courts, from which causes may be removed in certain cases to the United States Circuit Court, and ultimately to the Supreme Court of the United States.

ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION IN CRIMINAL CASES extends to all crimes or offenses committed on the high seas or beyond the jurisdiction of any country.<sup>18</sup>

CIVIL LAW. The term civil law is generally used to designate the Roman Jurisprudence, Jus civile Romanorum. In its most extensive sense the term Roman law comprises all those legal rules and principles which were in force among the Romans, without reference to the time when they were adopted, but in a more restricted sense we understand by it the law compiled under the auspices of the Emperor Justinian, and which are still in force in many of the states of modern Europe, and to which all refer as authority or written reason.

CODE LAW. A code is a body of law established by legislative authority of the State, and designed to regulate completely, so far as a statute may, the subject to which it relates.

When it is considered how rapidly statutes accumulate as time passes, it is obvious that great convenience will be found in having the statute law in a systematic body, arranged according to subject-matter, instead of having it unorganized—scattered through the volumes in which it was from year to year promulgated. But this transposition suggests amendments for the purpose of harmonizing inconsistencies, supplying defects brought to notice, and also the introduction of a system of all other rules which are recognized as the unwritten or common law of the State. Still, however successfully a code might be supposed to embody all existing and declared law, so as to supersede all previous sources, it cannot be expected to provide prospectively for all the innumerable cases which the diversity of affairs rapidly engenders, and there must soon come a time when it must be studied in a light of numerous explanatory decisions resting in the reported cases upon the same or a similar statute. These discussions have called attention to a subject formerly little considered, but which is of fundamental importance to the successful preparation of a code—the matter of statutory expression. There is no species of composition which demands more care and precision than that of drafting a statute. The writer needs not only to make his language intelligible, but he must make it incapable of misconstruction. When it has passed to a law, it is no longer his intent that is to be considered, but the intent of the words which he has used, and that intent is to be ascertained under the strong pressure of an attempt of the advocate to win whatever possible construction may be most favorable to his cause. The true safeguard is found not in the old method of accumulating synonyms and by an accumulation of particulars, but rather by concise but complete statement of the full principle in the fewest possible words, and the elimination of description and paraphrase by the separate statement of necessary definitions. One of the rules to which the New York revisers generally adhered, and which they found of very great importance, was to confine each section to a single proposition. In this way the intricacy and obscurity of the old statutes were largely avoided.<sup>19</sup>

COMMON LAW. Common law is that system of law, or form of the science of jurisprudence, which has prevailed in England and the United States of America, in contradistinction to other great systems. Those principles, usages, and rules of action applicable to the government and security of persons, and of property which do not rest for their authority upon any express or positive declaration of the will of the legislature.<sup>20</sup> The law of any country; to denote that which is common to the whole country in contradistinction to laws and customs of local application.

The most prominent characteristic which marks its contrast with other great systems of the law, and perhaps the source of its distinction, lies in the fact that in the common law neither the stiff rule of long antiquity on the one hand, nor on the other the sudden changes of an arbitrary power are allowed ascendancy, but, under the sanction of a constitutional government, each of these is set off against the other; so that the will of the pro-other acts done there; the resulting rights and duties growing out of these contracts and acts, and the remedies and modes of administering justice in all cases.<sup>6</sup>

Whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depends upon the laws and municipal regulations of the latter; that is to say, upon its own proper jurisprudence and polity, and upon its own or tacit consent.<sup>7</sup> When a statute or the unwritten law of the country forbids the recognition of the foreign law, the latter is of no force whatever. When both are silent, then the question arises, which of the conflicting laws is to have effect. Generally, force and effect will be given by any State to foreign laws, in cases where, from the transactions of the parties, they are applicable, unless they affect injuriously her own citizens, violate her express enactments, or are contra bonos mores (contrary to good morals).

ASSIGNMENTS AND TRANSFERS. Voluntary assignments of personal property, valid where made, will transfer property everywhere,<sup>8</sup> not as against citizens of the state of assign attaching prior to the assignee obtaining possession.<sup>9</sup> An involuntary assignment by operation of law, as, under bankrupt or insolvent laws, will not avail as to attaching creditors in the place of situation of the property.<sup>10</sup> It may be a question whether the same rule would hold if the assignees had obtained possession.<sup>11</sup> An assignment by operation of law is good so as to vest property in the assignees by comity of nations.)

FOREIGN LAWS<sup>12</sup> must be proved as matters of fact.<sup>13</sup>

Unwritten Laws must be proved by the opinion of experts.<sup>14</sup>

Written Laws must be proved by the text, or a collection printed by authority, or a copy certified by a proper officer, or, in their absence, perhaps, by opinion of experts as secondary evidence,<sup>15</sup> but the sanction of an oath is required in such case.<sup>16</sup>

JUDGMENTS AND DECREES OF FOREIGN COURTS relating to immovable property within their jurisdiction are binding everywhere.
And the rule is the same with regard to mov-ables within their jurisdiction.<sup>17</sup>

Proceedings in rem are held conclusive everywhere if the court had a rightful jurisdiction, founded on actual possession of the subject-matter.<sup>18</sup> But the decree may be avoided for matter apparently erroneous on the face of the record.<sup>19</sup> Proceedings under a garnishee process are held proceedings in rem; and a decree may be pleaded in bar of an action against a trustee or garnishee.<sup>20</sup> But the court must have rightful jurisdiction over the res, unless the court had actual jurisdiction over the person also.<sup>21</sup>

Judgments in personam, regular on their face, which are sought to be enforced in another country, are conclusive evidence, subject to a re-examination, in the courts where the new action is brought, only for irregularity, fraud, or lack of jurisdiction of the cause of action or parties thereto.<sup>22</sup> Any foreign judgment may be impeached for error apparent on its face.<sup>23</sup>

Foreign judgments are admitted as conclusive evidence of all matters directly involved in the case decided where the same question is brought up incidentally.<sup>24</sup>

Under the constitution of the United States,
"full force and effect" are to be given the decrees of the courts of any State in those of all other States. This is construed to mean that the judgment so obtained and properly authenticated shall be conclusive evidence of the rights of the parties,<sup>25</sup> but not unless actual personal jurisdiction was obtained.<sup>2</sup> And want of jurisdiction may be shown even to contradict the record,<sup>3</sup> and must be shown affirmatively, if the record show jurisdiction on its face.<sup>4</sup>

The constitution and rules of comity apply only to civil judgments, and not to criminal.<sup>5</sup>

PARTICULAR PERSONAL RELATIONS.

Executors and administrators have no power to sue or be sued by virtue of a foreign appointment as such<sup>6</sup> in the absence of a statute authorizing it. But an executor who has so changed his situation towards the action as to render it his own may sue in a foreign court.<sup>7</sup> Administration must be taken out in the situs (place of situation) of the property,<sup>8</sup> unless otherwise provided by statute.

In general, administration is granted as of course to the executor or administrator entitled under the lex domicilii. In such cases the probate granted in the place of domicile is the principal, and that in the situs ancillary.<sup>9</sup> There is no legal privity between them.<sup>10</sup>

All property of the decedent which is in the jurisdiction of the court granting principal or ancillary administration, or which comes into it if not already taken possession of under a grant of administration, comes under its operation.<sup>11</sup> Ships and cargoes, and the proceeds thereof, complete their voyages and return to the home port.<sup>12</sup> The property of each jurisdiction is held liable for debts due in that jurisdiction, and the surplus is to be remitted to the principal administrator for distribution under the lex domicilii.<sup>13</sup> Each administrator must give priority to claims according to the law of his jurisdiction.<sup>14</sup> But a transmission of effects or their proceeds to another jurisdiction does not divest a creditor's precedence.<sup>15</sup>

Guardians have no power over the property, whether real or personal, of their wards, by virtue of a foreign appointment.<sup>16</sup>

the comity of the States and Territories will hardly help a receiver.<sup>18</sup>

An appointment of a receiver does not vest the funds of a foreign jurisdiction.<sup>19</sup>

Sworn come under general rules, and their contracts are governed by the lex loci; but in case of government bonds the seat of government is held to be the lex loci.<sup>20</sup>

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes are to be governed, as to validity and interpretation, by the law of the place of making, as are other contracts. The residence of a drawee of a bill of exchange, and the place of making a promissory note, where no other place of payment is specified, is the locus contractus,<sup>21</sup> where the place of address is said to be the place of making. As between the drawee and drawer and other parties (but not as between an indorser and indorsee),<sup>22</sup> each indorsement is considered a new contract.<sup>23</sup> The place of payment is, however, to be considered as the place of making.<sup>24</sup> The better rule as to the rate of interest to be allowed on bills of exchange and promissory notes, where no place of payment is specified, and no rate of interest mentioned, seems to be the interest of the lex loci.<sup>25</sup> The damages recoverable on a bill of exchange not paid are those of the place where the plaintiff is entitled to reimbursement, and are generally fixed by statute.<sup>26</sup> Where the place of payment is specified, the interest of that place must be allowed.<sup>27</sup>

Chattel mortgages, valid, and duly registered under the laws of the State in which the property is situated at the time of the mortgage, will be held valid in another State to which the property is removed, although the regulations there are different.<sup>28</sup> The registration of chattel mortgages and transfer of government and local stocks are frequently made subjects of positive law, which then suspends the law of the domicile. Such mortgage will be respected in preference to claims of citizens of the State into which the property is removed.<sup>29</sup>

Questions of priority of liens and other claims are, in general, to be determined by the lex rei sitae, even in regard to personal property. The existence of the lien will depend on the lex loci."

Movables in general. Personal property follows the owner, and hence its disposition and transfer are to be determined by the law of domicile."

CRIMINAL LAW is that branch of jurisprudence which treats of criminal offences.
The extreme importance of a knowledge of criminal law is self-evident; for a mistake in point of law, which every person of discretion not only may know, but is bound and presumed to know, is in criminal cases no defence. This law is administered upon the principle that every one must be taken conclusively to know it, without proof that he does know it. This doctrine has been carried so far as to include the case of a foreigner charged with a crime which was no offence in his own country. And further, the criminal law, whether common or statute, is imperative with reference to the conduct of individuals; so that, if a statute forbids or commands a thing to be done, all acts or omissions contrary to the prohibition or command of the statute are offences at common law, and ordinarily indictable as such. When a statute punishes a crime by its legal designation without enumerating the acts which constitute it, then it is necessary to resort to the common law for a definition of the crime with its distinctions and qualifications. So if an act is made criminal, but no mode of prosecution is directed or no punishment provided, the common law (in the absence of a statute to the contrary) furnishes its aid, prescribing the mode of prosecution by indictment, its mode of punishment by fine and imprisonment. So far, therefore, as the rules and principles of the common law are applicable to the administration of the criminal law, and have not been altered or modified by legislative enactment or judicial decisions, they have the same force and effect as laws finally enacted."

The following are some of the leading principles of the criminal law:

- 1. Every man is presumed to be innocent till the contrary is shown; and if there is any reasonable doubt of his guilt, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt.
- 2. In general, no person can be brought to trial till a grand jury on examination of the charge has found reason to hold him to trial.
- 3. The prisoner is entitled to trial by a jury of his peers, who are chosen from the body of the people with a view to impartiality, and whose decision on questions of fact is final.
- 4. The question of his guilt is to be determined without reference to his general character, previous history or habits of life.

5. The prisoner cannot be required to criminate himself, nor be compelled to exculpate himself by giving his own testimony on trial.

6. He cannot be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence.

7. He cannot be punished for an act which was not an offence by the law existing at the time of its commission; nor can a severer punishment be inflicted than was declared by law at the time of its commission.

The elements of criminal offences are,
in general, as follows:

CRIMES OR PUBLIC OFFENCES are wrongs which the State or Commonwealth notices as injurious to the public, and punishes in what is called a criminal proceeding in its own name. Crimes are defined and punished by statutes and by the common law. Most common law offences are as well known and as precisely ascertained as those which are defined by statutes. Yet from the difficulty of exactly defining and describing every act which ought to be punished, the vital and preserving principles has been adopted that all immoral acts which tend to the prejudice of the community are punishable criminally by courts of justice. Criminal offences are, in general, defined, and the mode of punishment prescribed by statute.

Crimes are sometimes classified according to the degree of punishment incurred by their commission. They are more generally arranged according to the nature of the offence.
The following is, perhaps, as complete a classification as the subject admits:

ABDUCTION is the taking and carrying away of a child, a ward, a wife, etc., by force, fraud, persuasion, or open violence.

ABORTION is the criminal act of miscarriage or producing young before the natural time or before the fetus is perfectly formed, and before it has acquired the power of sustaining an independent life.

When in consequence of the means used to procure an abortion, the death of the mother ensues, it is murder. If the person, intending to procure an abortion, does an act which causes a child to be born so prematurely that it dies in consequence thereof, the person so bringing the child into the world, so putting it in a situation in which it cannot live, is guilty of murder; and this guilt is not lessened from the mere existence of a possibility that something might have been done to prevent its death.

A person is liable for whatever injury arises from the abuse of property, while in his control or custody, unless it is occasioned by inevitable accident or causes wholly beyond their control.

An ACCESSORY is an abettor; an accomplice. One who is guilty of a felony, misdemeanor, or treason; not by committing the offence in person or as principal, but by advising, assisting, or commanding another to commit the crime, or assisting him to escape, or concealing him. One who not being the principal is in some way concerned in the commission of the offence, either before or after its commission. No one who is principal can be accessory. In many States all are considered principals. An accessory after the fact is one who, knowing an offence to have been committed, assists, comforts, conceals, receives or relieves the offender.<sup>1</sup> An accessory before the fact is one who, being absent at the time an offence is committed, yet commands, counsels, or procures another to commit it.<sup>2</sup> When the act is committed through the agency of a person who has no legal discretion nor a will, as in the case of a child or insane person, the inciter, though absent when the crime was committed, will be considered not an accessory, for no one can be an accessory to the acts of a madman, but a principal.<sup>3</sup> But if the instrument is aware of the consequences of his act, he is a principal, and the employer, if absent when the offence is committed, is an accessory before the fact,<sup>4</sup> or, if he is present, a principal in the second degree,<sup>5</sup> unless the instrument concur in the act merely for the purpose of detecting and punishing the employer, in which case he is considered as an innocent agent.<sup>6</sup>

An accomplice is an abettor, an accessory, and confederate; an associate in crime; a partner or partaker in guilt. One who is in some way concerned in the commission of a crime, though not as a principal. All persons who have been concerned in the commission of a crime, all particeps criminis, whether they are considered in strict legal propriety as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact.<sup>7</sup>

It is a rule of practice that a jury should not convict on the unsupported evidence of an accomplice; and the judge will, in general, advise the jury to acquit, unless the testimony of the accomplice is corroborated, not only as to the circumstances of the offence, but also as to the participation of the accused in the transaction; and where several parties are charged, that it is not sufficient that the accomplice should be confirmed as to one or more of the prisoners, to justify a conviction of those prisoners with respect to whom there is no confirmation.<sup>8</sup>

An ACCUSATION is a charge, in writing, upon oath or affirmation, against one or more persons of a felony or misdemeanor. An accusation is generally made in the form of an affidavit or complaint before some magistrate authorized to try, acquit, bind over, or convict the offender. In courts of competent and general jurisdiction the accusation is presented in the form of an indictment or information. An indictment is based upon the finding of a grand jury. An information is based upon the affidavit or complaint of any competent person supported by his oath or affirmation.

In an accusation before a magistrate, it is sufficient, as a general rule, to describe the offence in the words of the statute.<sup>9</sup>

The essential requisites of an accusation are:

1. It must be presented to some court having jurisdiction of the offence stated therein.

2. It must be made by a person competent to testify.
3. It must be made in writing, under oath or affirmation of the accuser.
4. It must charge the person accused with the commission of a felony or misdemeanor; for this purpose, the charge must contain a certain description of the felony or misdemeanor of which the defendant is accused, and a statement of the facts by which it is constituted, so as to identify the accusation.<sup>9</sup>
5. It must be in the English language; but if any document in a foreign language be necessarily introduced, it should be set out in the original tongue, and then translated, showing its application.<sup>10</sup>
6. It must be subscribed by the accuser.
7. It must be sworn to before an officer authorized to administer an oath.

The formal requisites of an accusation are:

1. The venue must always be laid in the county where the offence has been committed, although the charge be in its nature transitory, as a battery.<sup>11</sup> The venue is stated in the margin, thus: "State of —, — County, ss."
  2. The name of the defendant; but in case an error has been made in this respect, it is cured by the plea of the defendant,<sup>12</sup> and the facts are entered accordingly.
  3. The names of third persons, when they must be necessarily mentioned in the complaint, should be stated with such certainty as to sufficiently inform the defendant who are his accusers. When, however, the names of third persons cannot be ascertained, it is sufficient, in some cases, to state "a certain person or persons to this affiant unknown."<sup>13</sup>
  4. The time when the offence was committed should, in general, be stated to be on a specific year and day;<sup>14</sup> but, though it is necessary that a day certain should be stated in the complaint, yet, in general, the prosecutor may give evidence of an offence committed on any other day previous to the making of the accusation.<sup>15</sup>
  5. The offence should be properly described. And, as a general rule, it is sufficient to describe the offence in the words of the statute.
- The whole facts of the case necessary to make it appear judicially to the court that the accuser has gone upon sufficient premises, should be set forth; but there should be no unnecessary matter, nor anything which, on its face, makes the accusation repugnant, inconsistent, or absurd.
- The offence must not be stated in the disjunctive; as, that the defendant committed, or caused to be committed, etc., so as to leave it uncertain on what it is intended to rely as an accusation.<sup>16</sup>

The following rules should be observed in drawing an accusation:

1. Keep near the words of the statute.—The pleader must keep reasonably near the words of the statute, or there will be a variance, and on this ground the accusation will be defective.<sup>17</sup>
2. Negative averments to show affirmatively an offence.—No accusation is sufficient which alleges an act or omission in itself innocent, unless it proceed to disclose circumstances which render such act or omission illegal.<sup>18</sup>
- It is not necessary that the negative averments should be made in strict conformity to the exact words of the statute; whatever amounts to a substantial negative is sufficient.<sup>19</sup>
- An unnecessary negative will be rejected as surplusage; it needs no proof.
3. If there is an exception in the enacting clause of the statute, the party pleading must show that the defendant is not within the exception; but if there be an exception in a subsequent clause, or a subsequent statute, that is matter of defence, and is to be shown by the other party.<sup>20</sup>
4. Matters of defence are never necessary in an accusation.

Commencement and Conclusion of an Accusation.

State of —, — county, ss.
 A. B., being duly sworn, says:
 That C. D., on the — day of —, A. D. —, in the county of —, and State of —, did then and there unlawfully (or feloniously, etc.), (here describe the offence committed).
 A. B.
 Subscribed and sworn to, before me, this — day of —, A. D. —, M. R., Mayor, or P. J., Police Judge, or J. P., Justice of the Peace, etc.

See INDICTMENT; INFORMATION, below.

Amendment of Accusation.—The accusation, the accused being present and consenting, may, of course, be amended to an extent to which it is not easy to set limits; or if the evidence satisfies the magistrate that a crime different from the one charged against the prisoner has been committed by him, he may hold him until a fresh accusation is drawn, covering the crime as proved. In this case the prisoner is held on the original accusation, which, under such circumstances, the magistrate is not bound to dismiss until the proper accusation is made against him. But if a person known to the magistrate happens to be in his court, and he suspects an absent person has an accusation to make against him for a misdemeanor, he cannot detain him and send for the person. The magistrate should have the charge actually made before he detains the party.<sup>21</sup> Unless it be for a felony.

ACQUITTAL is a deliverance from the charge of an offence. A judicial decree of innocence, by a finding of the court, or the verdict of a jury. Acquittals in fact are those where upon the trial the defendant is pronounced innocent of the offence with which he is charged. Acquittals in law are those which take place by operation of law, as where one is charged as an accessory or accomplice, and the principal is acquitted.<sup>1</sup> An acquittal by a court of competent jurisdiction is a bar to any prosecution for the offence alleged in the first accusation, or for any inferior degree thereof.

AN ADMONITION is a reprimand from a judge to a person accused, on being discharged, warning him of the consequences of his conduct, and intimating to him that should he be again guilty of the same fault for which he is admonished, he will be punished with greater severity.<sup>2</sup>

ADULTERATION is the unlawful act of corrupting, or debasing, or rendering an article impure and unwholesome. Converting a pure and genuine article into something of less value for the purpose of deceit and gain, as an adulteration of food or drink.

ADULTERY is the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife.<sup>3</sup> Violation of the marriage bed; a civil injury and crime which introduces or may introduce into a family illegitimate or spurious offspring. It is a criminal offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

AFFRAY is a fight between two or more persons, by agreement, in a public place.<sup>4</sup> No quarrelsome or threatening words will amount to an affray,<sup>5</sup> there must have been a fight, and in a public place, for fighting in private is assault and battery, and not an affray.<sup>6</sup>

AFFRONT is uncivil encounter; ill treatment; insult; offence; outrage. Anything contemptuous or reproachful that excites or justifies resentment, as foul language or personal abuse. It usually expresses a less degree of abuse than insult.<sup>7</sup>

"It appears probable that judicial combat was originally permitted in order to determine the points respecting personal character or reputation of individuals, and was afterwards extended not only to criminal cases but to questions concerning property. Thus: If any man shall say to another these reproachful words: 'You are not a man equal to other men;' or, 'You have not the heart of a man;' and the other shall reply: 'I am as good a man as you.' Let them meet upon the highway. If he who first gave offence appear, and the person offended absent himself, let the latter be deemed a worse man than he was called; let him not be admitted to give evidence in judgment, either for man or woman; and let him not have the privilege of making a testament. If he who gave the offence be absent, and only the person offended be present, etc., then let him who absented himself be deemed infamous, because he uttered words he durst not support. If both appear, properly armed, and the person offended shall fall in the combat, let a half compensation be paid for his death. But if the person who gave offence shall fall, let it be imputed to his own rashness. 'The petulance of his tongue hath been fatal to him.' Let him lie in the field without any compensation being demanded for his death."<sup>8</sup> This mode of settlement in modern times takes the form of the duel, a practice without sanction of law or morals, and prohibited under heavy penalties. By the laws of the Salians, if any person called another a "hars" (i. e., a timid, cowardly fellow), or accused him of having left his shield on the field of battle, he was ordained to pay a large fine.<sup>9</sup> So, if one called another "Centus" (a term of reproach equivalent to "Arge," below), he was bound to pay a high fine.<sup>10</sup> And by the law of the Lombards, if one called another "Arge" (i. e., a good-for-nothing fellow), he might immediately challenge him to combat.<sup>11</sup> Courts Military and Chivalry, as courts of honor, were to give satisfaction to such as were aggrieved on that point; a point of a nature so nice and delicate that its wrongs and injuries escape the notice of the common law, and yet are fit to be redressed somewhere. Such, for instance, as calling a man a coward, or the more modern villifying epithets, or giving him the lie; they are productive of no immediate damage to his person or property, yet they are such injuries as will prompt every man of spirit to demand some honorable amends.<sup>12</sup> The statutes of many of the States take cognizance of these offences in some general form.

APRETHOUGHT is premeditation. It is the length of time during which the accused has entertained the thought of committing the offence. The length of time is not very material, provided he has in fact entertained such thought or premeditation; he is thereby rendered criminal in a greater degree than if he had committed the offence without premeditation.<sup>13</sup>

AGGRAVATION is the act or quality of increasing enormity, heinousness, severity, or wrong. In criminal actions one of the rules respecting variance is, that cumulative allegations, or such as merely operate in aggravation, are immaterial, provided that sufficient is proved to establish the same right, offence, or justification included in the charge, claim, or defence set up. The rule runs through the whole criminal law, that it is invariably enough to prove so much of the charge as shows that the defendant

Stat. 18, § 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

committed a substantive crime therein specified. Thus, on an indictment for murder, the prisoner may be convicted of manslaughter, for the avowment of malice aforethought is merely matter of aggravation.<sup>2</sup>

AIDING AND ABETTING is the act of being in such communication, and so situated during the perpetration of a crime, as to readily aid the perpetrators thereof. Actual presence is not necessary; it is sufficient if so situated as to come readily to the assistance of his fellows.<sup>3</sup> Although not the direct perpetrator of a crime, yet if the person be present at its commission doing some act to render aid to the perpetrator thereof he is, in contemplation of the law, an aider and abettor.<sup>4</sup>

AID AND COMFORT is assistance or encouragement, either by furnishing strength or means to effect a purpose, or to prevent or remove evil. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.<sup>5</sup>

AMERCEMENT is the pecuniary penalty or fine imposed upon an offender by a judicial tribunal.

AMNESTY is an act of oblivion; a general pardon of the offences of subjects against the government, and usually upon condition that they return to their allegiance within a given period. It is the proclamation of such act. Amnesty is either express or implied, general or limited; express when in direct terms; implied when it results from a treaty of peace made between the contending parties; general when it applies to all; limited when certain classes are excluded from its operation. It differs from pardon, for pardon is given to one who is certainly guilty, or has been convicted, while amnesty is given to those who may have been so. Amnesty is the act of the sovereign power whose object is to efface and cause a crime or misdemeanor to be forgotten; pardon is the act of the same power whose object is to exempt the individual from the punishment which the law applies for the crime he has committed.<sup>6</sup> Pardon remits a part or the whole of punishment awarded. Amnesty destroys the effect of the criminal act. Pardon is given to individuals after conviction. Amnesty is granted either before or after.

ARREST is the unlawful taking of personal property out of the possession of the owner, or of one who has a special authority in them.

ANIMO; ANIMUS. See INTENTION, below.

ARRAIGNMENT is the act of calling a defendant before the court or tribunal to answer to the accusation, charge, or imputation contained in the information or indictment.

Arraignment consists: 1. In calling the prisoner before the court for the purpose of identifying him as the person charged in the information or indictment with the commission of the offence.<sup>7</sup> 2. In reading the information or indictment to the accused in order to enable him fully to understand the charge against him.<sup>8</sup>

3. In asking the prisoner, "How say you," or "What say you, P. R.; are you guilty or not guilty?" Thereupon, if the prisoner confesses the charge, and it appears to the satisfaction of the court that he fully comprehends the effect of his plea of "guilty," he at once, or after hearing such evidence as he may require, or after deliberation, pronounces judgment. If, however, he answers "not guilty," this plea is entered of record, and forms the issue for trial. If he fails to answer, or cannot or will not answer, the court orders a plea of "not guilty" entered in his behalf.

When the offence charged is punishable by fine only, personal appearance for arraignment is unnecessary, provided some responsible person appears in his behalf.

ARREST is the taking of a person into custody that he may be held to answer for a public offence.

An arrest is the taking, attaching, or seizing a person or thing, either by a public officer in execution of the command of some court, or minister of justice, or by a private person, according to the command or permission of the law.<sup>9</sup>

An arrest is made by an actual restraint of the person of the defendant, or by his submission to the custody of the officers.<sup>10</sup> The arresting of an offender and the retaking of him on fresh pursuit after an escape constitutes but one effective arrest.<sup>11</sup>

An officer must inform the defendant that he acts under the authority of a warrant, and must show the warrant if required.<sup>12</sup>

If, after notice of intention to arrest the defendant, he either flee or forcibly resist, the officer may use all necessary means to effect the arrest.<sup>13</sup>

To constitute an arrest it is not ordinarily sufficient that words of arrest be spoken; there must be something done by way of actual physical restraint, though it is enough, if the party arresting touch the other "even with the end of his finger."<sup>14</sup> So, if a bailiff comes into a room, and tells the defendant he arrests him, and locks the door, that is an arrest; for he is in custody of the officer.<sup>15</sup> So, also, if there is neither a touching of the person, nor other force employed in the first instance, yet, if the party to be arrested submits on being informed of the intended arrest, nothing more is required, especially when he is in the power of the officer, to make the arrest complete.<sup>16</sup>

copy of the information or indictment, but this is rarely done, he or his counsel being permitted to examine the original. B-The prisoner may demand a reasonable time, which, if necessary, is usually granted. C-Law of Arrest, London, 1740, p. 1. D-Black, sup. E-C. & H. p. 277, § 23. F-Id. § 24. G-Id. § 25. H-C. Mod. 171; 1 Inst. 70. I-Com. Jur. Clerkw. 262, 263; and see 4 Black. (N. R.) 270; 5 Bosc. 260. J-25 K. H. 120; 100 Mass. 79, 80.

Thus: If the bailiff, who has process against one, says to him, when he is on horseback or in a coach, "You are my prisoner, I have a writ against you," upon which he submits, turns back, or goes with him, though the bailiff never touched him, yet it is an arrest, because he submitted to the process; but if instead of going with the bailiff, he had gone or fled from him, it could be no arrest unless the bailiff laid hold of him.<sup>1</sup>

Restraint does not alone constitute an arrest; 'tis the duty of one seeking to arrest another to make his purpose known,<sup>2</sup> unless the circumstances are such as to render the purpose obvious;<sup>3</sup> for, where circumstances are such as to make the intention to apprehend plain to the mind of him who is to be apprehended, he need not be told this; and the arrest will be legal, and the resistance of the arrested person illegal, the same as if the purpose had been announced in words.<sup>4</sup>

A person making an arrest should not use unnecessary violence.<sup>5</sup> Though the officer may lay hands on another in order to serve him with process,<sup>6</sup> yet he cannot drag about or strike the defendant, unless these acts are rendered necessary by his resistance.<sup>7</sup> He may make use of as much force as is necessary to accomplish his object, and cannot be made liable by the defendant, except for wanton violence.<sup>8</sup> Officers of the law, when engaged in the performance of their duties, are invested with a peculiar prerogative. If resisted when so employed, and the party resisting be killed in the struggle, such homicide is justifiable. And, on the other hand, if the party having such authority, in exercising it properly, happen to be killed, it will be murder in all who take part in such resistance,<sup>9</sup> though there be no malice.<sup>10</sup> An officer is justified, who, in the execution of his office, either in a civil or criminal case, kills a person who assaults and resists him. The resistance will justify the officer in proceeding to the last extremity. So that, in all cases, whether civil or criminal, where persons having authority to arrest and imprison, are resisted in so doing, they may resort to force with force, and need not give back; and if the party making resistance is unavoidably killed in the struggle, this homicide is justifiable.<sup>11</sup> But where a party does not resist, but merely flies to avoid the arrest, the conduct of the officer should be critically regulated by the nature of the proceeding. For in civil cases, and also in the case of a breach of the peace, or any other misdemeanor, short of felony, if the officer should pursue a defendant flying in order to avoid an arrest, and should kill him in the pursuit, this will be murder or manslaughter, according to the circumstances by which such homicide may have been attended.<sup>12</sup>

If a man is committing a felony, and an officer attempts to arrest him, yet he runs away, and the officer calls on him to stop, if he will not stop, the officer is justified in shooting at him to compel him to stop; but if the offence is a misdemeanor, he has no right to take this extreme measure.<sup>13</sup>

Where the arrest has actually been made, whether for felony or misdemeanor, if the person attempts to break away, he may be killed to prevent it, provided this extreme measure is necessary.<sup>14</sup>

Where there is an attempt at an unlawful arrest, as, for instance, where an officer undertakes to arrest without a warrant, and not in fresh pursuit, one whose crime is no more than a misdemeanor, the person on whom the attempt is made may lawfully resist, though not to the taking of life;<sup>15</sup> and if, in such resistance, he takes the officer's life, his crime will only be manslaughter.<sup>16</sup> So, the person thus unlawfully arrested is justified in escaping if he can;<sup>17</sup> and an attempt to re-arrest him will be equally unlawful with the first arrest.<sup>18</sup> But there are circumstances in which, if the person arrested submits, he waives an objection which he might have taken; and in these circumstances, he has no right afterward to escape.<sup>19</sup>

One having custody of an arrested person should treat him well, but may even inflict death to prevent his escape, where no other means are available. A feloni, an officer who has a prisoner under arrest may tie him if this is necessary; and where an officer acts honestly and from pure motives, he is to be blamed the less judge of the real utility of such a measure as this. If, then, having arrested the prisoner lawfully, the latter breaks away, he may retake him without any fresh warrant,<sup>20</sup> and this even where the officer has consented to the escape.<sup>21</sup>

— ARREST WITHOUT A WARRANT.

By private persons. In felonies and in trespass. If the offence has been in fact committed, and a private person has reasonable cause to suspect a particular person to be guilty of its commission, he may, acting in good faith, whereas, a private person, having made such an arrest, needs only to deliver his prisoner into the hands of the constable.<sup>6</sup> Accordingly, it is in the power of an officer making an arrest, though without a warrant, to call in the aid of the bystanders—for the sheriff may call out the power of the county, and the officer may command the inhabitants of his precinct. And this extends not merely to the arrest, but equally to the detaining of the prisoner after the arrest is made. If any one obstructs the officer in the performance of these duties, he may at once be taken into custody.

— ARREST UNDER A WARRANT. Where a warrant in due form is put into the hand of an officer, to whom it is addressed, he is justified in executing it, if the magistrate who issued it had jurisdiction over the cause, even though it was improperly or unlawfully obtained. But it is otherwise if the warrant is illegal on its face, or if the magistrate had no jurisdiction; which question of jurisdiction the officer must decide at his peril.<sup>5</sup> And if, in a civil case, an arrest is made after the process is returnable, the officer becomes thereby a trespasser.<sup>1</sup> Where process under which an officer makes an arrest is voidable, by reason of some irregularity or mistake, he is justified; though he is not when it is void.

One who is called upon to assist an officer in making an arrest under warrant, and who acts in good faith, is justified, though the process is not valid to the extent of justifying the officer himself; for if all those summoned had to examine and judge the legality of the process, and then to act upon their own responsibility, this necessary power in the officer would, in practice, be paralyzed to a great degree.<sup>2</sup>

The warrant must be executed by a public officer (as the sheriff or constable of the county, marshal of any incorporated city), or some person specially appointed, in writing, by the court or magistrate.

Form of Special Appointments on the Warrant.
I hereby appoint S. A. to execute the within writ.
[Signature, seal, and official title.]

The warrant must be executed by the officer or person to whom it is directed and delivered. And in all cases where an arrest is made by virtue of a warrant, the warrant, if demanded, at least should be produced.<sup>3</sup> Where the officer is not known to be such, he must show his authority, his warrant, before making the arrest.<sup>4</sup> If the officer permits the prisoner to take the warrant into his hands to peruse, and the latter refuses to return it, he may use "just so much violence as is necessary to retake it, and no more;"<sup>5</sup> but if he cannot retake it by reason of its destruction, or otherwise, he may still execute the command of the warrant, and return the facts.

The officer should, as soon as he conveniently can, though he may do so at any time afterward until the object of the warrant is satisfied, proceed with secrecy to find out and actually arrest the party, not only in order to secure him, but also to prevent him, and all other persons, to the consequences of escape and rescue. And if he refuse or neglect to execute the warrant, he will be punishable for his disobedience or neglect.

— Breaking Doors, &c. To make an arrest in criminal actions the officer may break open any outer or inner door or window of a dwelling-house, or other building, or any other enclosure, if, after notice of his office and purpose, he be refused admittance.<sup>6</sup> But this does not authorize any officer executing a search-warrant to enter any house or building not described in the warrant.

A private individual, in order to justify breaking open doors without a warrant, must, in general, prove the actual guilt of the party arrested; and it will not suffice to show a felony has actually been committed, or that reasonable ground of suspicion existed. But an officer acting bona fide on the positive charge of another will be excused, and the party making the accusation will alone be liable.<sup>7</sup>

The breaking of an outer door is, in general, so violent, obnoxious, and dangerous a proceeding that it should be adopted only in extreme cases, where an immediate arrest is requisite.

The house of a third person, if the offender fly to it for refuge, is not privileged, but may be broken open after the usual demand; for it may even be so upon civil process.<sup>8</sup> But it is at the peril of the officer, that the party against whom he obtained the warrant be found there.<sup>9</sup> This doctrine is also recognized as respects civil process.<sup>7</sup>

If a party be once actually arrested and escaped from custody, any door may be broken open to retake him, after proper demand of admittance.<sup>10</sup>

When an officer, after obtaining admittance, is locked in, or otherwise prevented from retiring, and whether executing civil or criminal process, he may break out by any means in his power. And a sheriff may break open the years of age, under pretence of thereby treating her medically, she making no resistance from a bona fide belief that such was the case, was held an assault.* An unlawful imprisonment is also an assault.*

Assault is generally coupled with battery, and for the excellent practical reason that they generally go together; but the assault is rather the initiation or offer to commit the act of which the battery is the consummation. An assault is included in every battery.* Where a person is only assaulted—still the form of the complaint is the same as where there has been a battery: "That the defendant assaulted, and beat, bruised, and wounded the plaintiff."† One who incites or procures another to commit an assault, though not present at its commission, nor otherwise participating therein, may be indicted and punished as a principal.*

AN UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY is the meeting of three or more persons to do an unlawful act—although they may not carry their purpose into execution. It differs from a riot or rout, because in each of the latter cases there is some act done besides the simple meeting.*

ATTAINDER upon a felon is, in effect, in general terms, that all his estate, real and personal, is forfeited to the State; that his blood is corrupted, and so nothing passes by inheritance to, from, or through him;† that he cannot sue in a court of justice.* The effect of attainder is abrogated by the constitution, q. v.

AN ATTEMPT is an endeavor to accomplish a crime, carried beyond mere preparation, but falling short of its execution or any part of it.* It is an intent combined with an act which falls short of the offence intended.* There must be an intent to commit some offence which would be punishable if committed, either from its own character, or that of its natural or probable consequences;† and the offence intended must at least be a misdemeanor.*

BANISHMENT is a punishment inflicted upon criminals by compelling them to quit a city, place, or country for a specified period of time, or for life.*

BARRATRY is the offence of frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law or otherwise.* An indictment for this offence must charge the offender with being a common barrator;† and the proof must show at least three instances of offending.* An attorney is not liable to an indictment for maintaining another in a groundless action.*

BATTERY is an unlawful beating, or other wrongful physical violence or constraint inflicted on a human being without his consent.* It must be either wilfully committed, or proceed from the want of due care.* Hence, an injury, be it never so small, done to the person of another in an angry, spiteful, rude, or insolent manner,* as by spitting in his face,* or on his body,* or in any way touching him in anger,* or violently pushing him,* are batteries in the eye of the law.* And anything attached to the person partakes of its inviolability. If, therefore, A. strikes a cane in the hands of B. it is a battery.*

A battery may be justified:

1. As a mode of correction—a parent may correct his child; a master his apprentice; a school-teacher his scholar;† and a superior officer one under his command.*

2. As a necessary means of defence of the person against the plaintiff's assault in the following instances: in defence of himself, his wife,† his child, and his servant.‡ So, likewise, the wife may justify a battery in defending her husband,* the child its parent,* and the servant his master or mistress. In these relations the party need not wait until a blow has been given, for then he might come too late, and be disabled from warding off a second stroke, or from protecting the person assailed. Care, however, must be taken that the battery do not exceed the bounds of necessary defence and protection; for it is only permitted as a means to arrest an impending evil, which might otherwise overwhelm the party, and not as a punishment, retaliation, or revenge, for the injurious attempt.‡ The degree of force necessary to repel an assault will naturally depend upon and be proportioned to the violence of the assailant; but with this limitation any degree is justifiable.*

3. As a defence to one's property. If the plaintiff is in the act of entering peaceably upon the defendant's land, or, having entered, is discovered, not committing violence, a request to depart is necessary in the first instance.* And if the plaintiff refuses, the defendant may then gently lay hands upon the plaintiff and remove him from the premises, and for this purpose may use, if necessary, any degree of force short of striking the plaintiff; as, by thrusting him off.* If the plaintiff resists, the defendant may to an indictment for making a groundless action,<sup>1</sup> unlawful beating, or other violence or constraint in being without his consent,<sup>2</sup> wilfully committed, or profited of due care.<sup>3</sup> Hence, an assault, done to the person as angry, spiteful, rude, or as by spitting in his face,<sup>4</sup> or in any way touching or violently pushing him,<sup>5</sup> are acts of the law.<sup>6</sup> And any person partakes of it therefore, A. strikes a cane in his hand, is a battery.<sup>7</sup>

Justified:—A parent may be justified in the use of force to correct a child, a master his apprentice; a scholar, and a superior his command.<sup>8</sup> A servant means of defence of the plaintiff's assault in the following: defence of himself, his wife,<sup>9</sup> servant.<sup>10</sup> So, likewise, the use of force in a battery in defending her husband, and the servant in defending his master. In these relations the use of force until a blow has been given might come too late, and be considered a second stroke, or the person assailed. Care must be taken that the battery do not consist of necessary defence and is only permitted as a means of preventing evil, which might befall the party, and not as a means of retaliation, or revenge, for the assault. The degree of force necessary will naturally depend upon the violence of the assault, and with this limitation any defence is to one's property. If the defendant enters peaceably upon the land, or, having entered, is admitting violence, a request to desist in the first instance.<sup>11</sup> And if the defendant may then upon the plaintiff and remove the plaintiff, and for this purpose any degree of force short of assault, as, by thrusting him, or resisting, the defendant may oppose force to force.<sup>12</sup> But if the plaintiff is in the act of forcibly entering upon the land, or, having entered, is subverting the soil, cutting down a tree or the like,<sup>13</sup> a previous request is unnecessary, and the defendant may immediately lay hands upon the plaintiff.<sup>14</sup> A man may justify a battery in defence of his personal property without a previous request, if another forcibly attempt to take away such property.<sup>15</sup>

4. As a means of preserving the peace, in the exercise of an office, under process of court, and in aid of an authority at law. See ARREST, below.

BAWDY HOUSES are houses of ill-fame, kept for the resort and unlawful commerce of lewd people of both sexes. It must be reputed of ill-fame; it may be a single room;<sup>16</sup> but more than one woman must live and resort there.<sup>17</sup> It need not be kept for lucre.<sup>18</sup> Such a house is a common nuisance,<sup>19</sup> and the keeper may be indicted; and, if a married woman, either alone or with her husband.<sup>20</sup> One who assists in establishing such a house is guilty of an indictable misdemeanor,<sup>21</sup> including a lessor who has knowledge.<sup>22</sup> A charge of keeping a bawdy house is actionable, because it is an offence which is indictable at common law as a common nuisance, and clearly involves moral turpitude.<sup>23</sup> See BROTHEL, below.

BIGAMY is the wilfully contracting a second marriage, when the contracting party knows that a first is subsisting—the state of a man having two wives, or of a woman having two husbands, living at the same time. When the man has more than two wives, or the woman more than two husbands, living at the same time, then the party is said to have committed polygamy; but the name of bigamy is more frequently given to this offence in legal proceedings.<sup>24</sup> If a woman who has a husband living marries another person, she is punishable, though her husband has voluntarily withdrawn from her, and remained absent and unheard of for any term of time less than seven years, and though she honestly believes, at the time of her second marriage, that he is dead.<sup>25</sup> On trial of a woman for bigamy, whose first husband had been absent from her for more than seven years, the jury found that they had no evidence at the time of her second marriage she knew that he was alive, but that she had means of acquiring knowledge of that fact, had she chosen to make use of them. It was held upon this finding that the conviction could not be supported.<sup>26</sup> If a man is prosecuted for bigamy, his first wife cannot be called to prove her marriage with the defendant.<sup>27</sup> Where the first marriage was made abroad, it must be shown to have been valid when made.<sup>28</sup> Reputation is not sufficient to establish the fact of the first marriage.<sup>29</sup> If the second marriage be a foreign State, it is not bigamy,<sup>30</sup> except statute.<sup>31</sup> The second marriage is not necessarily valid.<sup>32</sup>

The punishment of this offence varies in the different States.

BILLS OF INDICTMENT are written accusations of one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, lawfully presented to a grand jury. If twelve or more members of the jury are satisfied that the accused ought to be tried, the return is made, "A true bill;" but when no sufficient ground is shown for putting the accused on trial, a return is made, "Not found," "Not a true bill," or "Ignoramus."<sup>33</sup> See ACCUSATION, above.

BILL OF PAINS AND PENALTIES is a special act of the legislature which inflicts a punishment less than death upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offences, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings.<sup>34</sup> It differs from a bill of attainder in this, that the punishment inflicted by the latter is death. It has been thought by some that the clause in the federal constitution prohibiting bills of attainder includes bills of pains and penalties.<sup>35</sup>

BLASPHEMY consists of speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the reverence of God. It is purposely using words concerning God calculated and designed to impair and destroy the reverence, respect, and confidence due to him as the intelligent Creator, ruler, and judge of the world. It embraces the idea of detraction, when used towards the Supreme Being; as "calumny" usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual. It is a wilful and malicious attempt to lessen men's reverence of God by denying his existence, or his attributes as an intelligent Creator, governor, and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in him as such.<sup>36</sup>

The statutes of the different States enacted against this offence are not understood in all cases to have abrogated the common law; the rule being that where the statute does not vary the class or character of an offence, but only authorises a particular mode of proceeding and of punishment, the sanction is cumulative, and the common law is not taken away. Neither these statutes nor the common law doctrine is repugnant to the constitutions of those States in which the question has arisen.<sup>37</sup>

purity of the bailment by the wrongful act of the bailee. Thus, where a carrier has agreed to carry certain bales of goods which were delivered to him, to Southampton, but carried them to another place, broke open the bales, took the goods contained in them feloniously, and converted them to his own use, the majority of the judges held that if the party had sold the entire bales it would not have been felony; "but as he broke them, and took what was in them, he did it without warrant," and was so guilty of a felony.<sup>1</sup> If a miller steals part of the meal, "although the corn was given to him to grind, nevertheless if he steal it, it is a felony, being taken from the rest."<sup>2</sup>

BRIBERY is the (giving or) receiving or offering any undue reward by or to any person whomsoever, whose ordinary profession or business relates to the administration of public justice (as well as all other officers), in order to influence his behavior in office, and to induce him to act contrary to his duty, and the known rules of honesty and integrity.<sup>1</sup> An attempt to bribe, though unsuccessful, has been held to be criminal, and the offender may be indicted.<sup>2</sup>

BROTHEL is a bawdy house; a common habitation of prostitutes. Such places have always been deemed common nuisances. For a history of these pernicious places.<sup>3</sup>

BURGLARY is the breaking and entering the house of another in the night time, with intent to commit a felony therein, whether the felony be actually committed or not.<sup>1</sup>

1. To be burglary the breaking and entry must be felonious; if a felony, however, be committed, the act will be prima facie evidence of an intent to commit it.<sup>2</sup> If the breaking and entry be with an intention to commit a trespass, or other misdemeanor, and nothing further is done, the offence will not be burglary.<sup>3</sup>

2. To be burglary, there must be both a breaking and an entry, or an exit. An actual breaking takes place when the burglar breaks or removes any part of the house or the fastenings provided for it, with violence.<sup>4</sup> Breaking a window, taking a pane of glass out, by breaking or bending the nails or other fastenings;<sup>5</sup> cutting and tearing down a netting of twine

nailed over an open window;<sup>6</sup> raising a latch when the door is not otherwise fastened; picking open a lock with a false key; putting back the lock of a door, or the fastening of a window, with an instrument; lowering a window fastened only by a wedge or weight; turning the key when the door is locked on the inside, or unloosening any other fastening which the owner has provided; lifting a trap door;<sup>7</sup> are several instances of actual breaking.<sup>8</sup> Constructive breakings occur when the burglar gains an entry by fraud;<sup>9</sup> by conspiracy; or threats.<sup>10</sup> The breaking of an inner door of the house will be sufficient to constitute a burglary.<sup>11</sup> And even the least entry, with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, will be sufficient to constitute the offence.<sup>12</sup> But the introduction of an instrument in the act of breaking the house will not be sufficient entry, unless it be introduced for the purpose of committing a felony.<sup>13</sup> The whole physical frame need not pass within.<sup>14</sup>

3. To be burglary, it must, in general, be committed in a mansion or dwelling-house, actually occupied as a dwelling; but if it be left by the owner with an intention of retreating, though no person resides in it in his absence, it is still his mansion or residence.<sup>15</sup> But burglary may be committed in a church at common law,<sup>16</sup> or in a stable, warehouse, barn, vessel, or railway coach or car. It must be in the dwelling, &c., of another person.<sup>17</sup>

4. To be burglary, the offence must be committed in the night; for in daytime there can be no burglary.<sup>18</sup> For this purpose it is deemed night, when by the light of the sun a person cannot clearly discern the face or countenance of another.<sup>19</sup> This rule does not apply to moonlight.<sup>20</sup> The breaking and entering need not be done the same night,<sup>21</sup> but it is necessary the breaking and entering should be in the night-time; for if the breaking be in daylight, and the entering be in the night, or vice versa, it will not be burglary.<sup>22</sup>

superior to an inferior, of a parent to a child,<sup>1</sup> or a master to his servant, or a principal to his agent,<sup>2</sup> may amount to coercion.

As to persons acting under the constraint of superior power, and, therefore, not criminally amenable, the principal case is that of a married woman, with respect to whom the law recognizes certain presumptions: thus, if a wife commits a felony, other than treason or homicide, or, perhaps, highway robbery, in company with her husband, the law presumes that she acted under his coercion, and, consequently, without any guilty intent, unless the fact of non-coercion is distinctly proved.<sup>3</sup> This presumption appears, on some occasions, to have been conclusive, and is still practically regarded in no very different light, especially where the crime is of a flagrant character; but the better opinion seems to be that in every case the presumption may be rebutted by positive proof that the woman acted as a free agent.<sup>4</sup> And a married woman cannot be convicted under any circumstances as a receiver of stolen goods, when the property has been taken by her husband, and given to her by him.<sup>5</sup>

Whether the doctrine of coercion extends to any misdemeanor may admit of some doubt; but the better opinion seems to be that, provided the misdemeanor is of a serious nature, as, for example, the uttering of base coin, the wife will be protected in like manner as in cases of felony; although it has been distinctly held that the protection does not extend to assaults and batteries, or to the offence of keeping a brothel.<sup>6</sup> It is probable that in all inferior misdemeanors this presumption, if admitted at all, would be held liable to be defeated by far less stringent evidence of the wife's active cooperation than would suffice in cases of felony.<sup>7</sup> For the law upon the responsibility of married women for crime.<sup>8</sup>

COMMON SCOLD is one who by practice of frequent scolding disturbs the neighborhood.<sup>9</sup> The offence of being a common scold is cognizable at common law. It is a particular form of nuisance, and was punishable by the ducking-stool at common law; but this punishment is substituted by fine and imprisonment.<sup>10</sup>

COMPLAINT is an accusation made to a proper officer that some person, whether known or unknown, has been guilty of a designated offence, with an offer to prove the fact, and a request that the offender may be punished. It is also a technical term, descriptive of proceedings before a magistrate.<sup>11</sup> To have a legal effect the complaint must be supported by such evidence as shows that an offence has been committed, and renders it certain or probable that it was committed by the person named or described in the complaint.

The general and specific requisites of a complaint are stated at length under the title ACCUSATION, above. See EXAMINATION, below.

COMPOUNDING A FELONY is the act of the party immediately aggrieved, or of the officer in charge of the prosecution, who agrees with the thief or other felon that he will not prosecute him, on condition that he return to him the goods stolen, or who takes a reward not to prosecute. This is an offence punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, and at common law rendered the person committing it an accessory.<sup>12</sup> A failure to prosecute for an assault with an intent to kill is not compounding a felony.<sup>13</sup> The accepting of a promissory note, signed by a party guilty of a larceny, as a consideration for not prosecuting, is sufficient to constitute the offence.<sup>14</sup> The mere retaking by the owner of stolen goods is no offence, unless the offender is not to be prosecuted.<sup>15</sup>

The compounding a felony is an indictable offence, and no action can be supported in any contract of which such offence is the consideration in whole or in part.<sup>16</sup>

COMPOUNDING OF MISDEMEANORS is also a perversion or defeating of public justice, and is in like manner an indictable offence at common law.<sup>17</sup> But the law will permit a compromise of any offence, though made the subject of a criminal prosecution, for which the injured party might recover damages in a civil action. But if the offence is of a public nature, no agreement can be valid that is founded on the consideration of stifling a prosecution for it.<sup>18</sup> A receipt is still of all demands given on consideration of stifling a criminal prosecution is void.<sup>19</sup>

CONFEDERACY is an agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act, or an act which, though not unlawful in itself, becomes so by the confederacy. The technical term usually employed to signify this offence is conspiracy.

CONFESSION. See title EVIDENCE, ante.

CONSPIRACY is a combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose, not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means.<sup>20</sup> The terms "criminal" and "unlawful" are used because it is manifest that many acts are unlawful which are not punishable by indictment or other public prosecution, and yet there prove the basis of the corpus delicti by presumptive evidence.<sup>3</sup>

The presumption arising from the possession of the fruits of crime recently after its commission, which in all cases is one of fact, rather than of law, is occasionally so strong as to render unnecessary any direct proof of what is called the corpus delicti. Thus, if a man were to go into a wine-cellar wherein much wine was stowed, quite sober, and shortly afterwards were to be found very drunk, staggering out of such cellar, this would be reasonable evidence that the man had stolen some of the wine in the cellar, though no proof were given that any particular vat had been broached, and that any wine had actually been missed.<sup>4</sup>

CORRUPTION is an act committed with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others. It includes bribery, but is more comprehensive; because an act may be corruptly done, though the advantage to be derived from it be not offered by another.<sup>1</sup>

CUCKING STOOL, called also a trebucket-tambri, and castigatory, was an engine or machine for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women. Bakers and brewers were formerly also liable to the same punishment. Being fastened to the machine, they were immersed over head and ears in some pool.<sup>1</sup>

CULPRIT is a person guilty, or supposed to be guilty, of a public offence.

DEAD BODY. To take up a dead body without lawful authority, even for the purpose of dissection, is a misdemeanor for which the offender might be indicted at common law.<sup>2</sup> This offence is, in general, punishable by statute. There can be no larceny of a dead body, but may be of the clothes or shroud upon it.<sup>3</sup> Removing a dead body from its place of burial is an indictable offence. But when the master of a workhouse, having as such the lawful possession of the bodies of paupers who died therein, and who, therefore, was authorized by statute to permit the bodies of such paupers to undergo anatomical examination, unless to his knowledge the deceased person had expressed in his lifetime, in the manner therein mentioned, his desire to the contrary, "or unless the surviving husband or wife, or any known relative of the deceased person, should require the body to be interred without such examination," in order to prevent the relatives of the deceased paupers from making this requirement, and to lead them to believe that the bodies were buried without dissection, showed the bodies to the relatives in coffins, and caused the appearance of a funeral to be gone through, and having by this fraud prevented the relatives from making the requirement, then sold the bodies for dissection, he was held not to be indictable at common law.<sup>4</sup> The preventing a dead body from being interred is also an indictable offence.<sup>5</sup> To inter a dead body found in a river would, it seems, render the offender liable to indictment for a misdemeanor, unless he first sent for a coroner.<sup>6</sup> The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant is bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable misdemeanor, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial.<sup>4</sup>

See MEDICAL LAW; DEATH, below.

DECLARATIONS. See title EVIDENCE, ante.

DEFAULTING. A public officer or any other person acting in a fiduciary capacity becoming a defaulter is liable to indictment therefor.

DERELICTION is an unlawful abandonment of the public service in the army or navy; the unlawful abandonment of a wife or child.

DISCRETION is the ability to know and distinguish between good and evil, between what is lawful and unlawful. The age at which children are said to have discretion is not very accurately ascertained. Under seven years it seems that no circumstances of mischievous discretion can be admitted to overthrow the strong presumption of innocence which is raised by an age so tender.<sup>1</sup> Between the ages of seven and fourteen, the infant is, prima facie, destitute of criminal design; but this presumption diminishes as the age increases, and even during this interval of youth may be repelled by positive evidence of vicious intention; for tenderness of years will not excuse a maturity in crime, the maxim being, "malice supplies the want of age." At fourteen children are said to have acquired legal discretion.<sup>2</sup>

DISORDERLY HOUSE is a house the inmates of which behave so badly as to become a nuisance to the neighborhood. The keeper of such a house may be indicted for maintaining a public nuisance.<sup>3</sup>

DISORDERLY PERSONS. See GENERAL STATUTES.

DISUADING a witness from giving evidence against a person indicted is an indictable offence at common law.<sup>4</sup> The mere attempt to stifle evidence is also criminal, although the person should not succeed, on the general principle that an incitement to commit a crime is in itself criminal.<sup>5</sup>

DUELING is the fighting of two persons, one against the other, at an appointed time and place, upon a precedent quarrel. It differs from an affray in this: that the latter occurs on a sudden quarrel, while the former is always the result of design. When one of the parties is killed, the survivor is guilty of murder. Fighting a duel, even where there is no fatal result, is of itself a misdemeanor; by statute in many States a felony.

EAVENDROPPERS are such persons as wait under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to listen to the discourses within and thereupon to frame mischievous tales. The common law punishment for this offence is fine and a finding of sureties for good behavior.

ELECTION. See PRACTICE.

EMBEZZLEMENT is the fraudulently removing and secreting of personal property, with which the party has been intrusted, for the purpose of applying it to his own use. The principles of the common law not being found adequate to protect general owners against the fraudulent conversion of property by persons standing in certain fiduciary relations to those who were the subject of their peculations, certain statutes have been enacted creating new criminal offences, and annexing to them their proper punishment. A taking is requisite to constitute a larceny; an embezzlement is in substance and essentially a larceny, aggravated rather than palliated by the violation of a trust or contract, instead of being, like larceny, a trespass. The administration of the common law has been not a little embarrassed in discriminating the two offences. But they are so far distinct in their character that, under an indictment charging merely a larceny, evidence of embezzlement is not sufficient to authorize a conviction; and in cases of embezzlement the proper mode is to allege sufficient matter in the indictment to apprise the defendant that the charge is for embezzlement. Although the statutes declare that a party shall be deemed to have committed the crime of simple larceny; yet it is a larceny of a peculiar character, and must be set forth in its requisite and distinctive character.

When embezzlement of a part of the cargo takes place on board of a ship, either from the fault, fraud, connivance, or negligence of any of the crew, they are bound to contribute to the reparation of the loss in proportion to their wages. When the embezzlement is fixed on any individual, he is solely responsible; when it is made by the crew, or some of the crew, but the particular offender is unknown, and, from circumstances of the case, strong presumptions of guilt apply to the whole crew, all must contribute. The presumption of innocence is always in favor of the crew, and the guilt of the parties must be established beyond all reasonable doubt before they can be required to contribute.

Embezzlement of arms, munitions, and habiliments of war, property stored in the public storehouses, letters, precious metals, and coins from the mint are prohibited by acts of Congress under severe penalties.

EMBRACERY is an attempt to corrupt or influence a jury, or in any way incline them to be more favorable to one side than to the other, by money, promises, threats, or persuasions, whether the juror on whom such attempt is made give any verdict or not, or whether the verdict be true or false.

ENGROSSING is buying up such large quantities of an article as to obtain a monopoly of it for the purpose of selling at an unreasonable price, especially provisions. Merely buying for the purpose of selling again is not necessarily engrossing.

ENTRY is the act of entering a dwelling-house, or other building, vessel, or enclosure in order to commit a crime. In cases of burglary, the least entry of the whole, or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument, or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, is sufficient to complete the offence. It is an entry where the person descends a chimney but is arrested before he can get low enough to enter any room; it is an entry to open a window entirely, but not to push it up or down when partly opened; putting a finger or pistol over a threshold is an entry, but not a centre-bit or crowbar, these instruments being intended for breaking, and not for committing a felony. It is not necessary in all cases to show an actual entry by all the prisoners, there may be a constructive entry as well as a constructive breaking. A., B., and C. come in the night, by consent, to break and enter the house of D., to commit a felony; A. only actually breaks and enters the house; B. stands near the door, but does not actually enter; C. stands at the lane's end, or orchard gate, or field gate, or the like, to watch that no help come to aid the owner, or to give notice to the others if help comes; this is burglary in all, and all are principals though one only did actually enter. See BURGLARY, above.

ESCAPE is the departure of a prisoner from custody before he is discharged by due course of law. It is the voluntarily or negligently allowing any person lawfully in confinement to leave the place. The deliverance of a person who is lawfully imprisoned out of prison before such person is entitled to such deliverance by law. Escape takes place without force; prison breach, with violence; rescue through the intervention of third parties. Actual escape takes place when the prisoner in fact gets out of the prison and unlawfully regains his liberty.

forgery,<sup>2</sup> and this, although it be afterwards executed by a person ignorant of the deceit.<sup>1</sup> The fraudulent application of a true signature to a false instrument for which it was not intended, or vice versa, will also be a forgery.<sup>3</sup> For example, it is forgery in an individual who is requested to draw a will for a sick person in a particular way, instead of doing so, to insert legacies of his own head, and then procure the signature of such sick person to be affixed to the paper without revealing to him the legacies thus fraudulently inserted.<sup>4</sup> A party who makes a copy of a receipt and adds to such copy material words not in the original, and then offers it in evidence on the ground that the original has been lost, may be prosecuted for forgery.<sup>5</sup> It is a sufficient making where, in the writing, the party assumes the name and character of a person in existence.<sup>6</sup> But the adoption of a false description and addition where a false name is not assumed and there is no person answering the description, is not a forgery.<sup>7</sup> Making an instrument in a fictitious name, or the name of a non-existing person, is as much a forgery as making it in the name of an existing person,<sup>8</sup> and although a man may make the instrument in his own name, if he represent it as the instrument of another of the same name, when in fact there is no such person, it will be a forgery in the name of a non-existing person.<sup>9</sup> But the correctness of this decision has been doubted.<sup>10</sup> Though, in general, a party cannot be guilty of forgery by a mere non-factum, yet if in drawing a will he should fraudulently omit a legacy which he had been directed to insert, and by the omission of such bequest it would cause a material alteration in the limitation of a bequest to another, as where the omission of a devise of an estate for life to one causes a devise of the same lands to another to pass a present estate which would otherwise have passed a remainder only, it would be a forgery.<sup>11</sup>

With regard to the thing forged, it may be observed that it has been held to be forgery at common law fraudulently to falsify or falsely make records and other matters of a public nature,<sup>12</sup> a parish register,<sup>13</sup> a letter in the name of a magistrate, or of the governor of a gaol directing the discharge of a prisoner.<sup>14</sup> With regard to private writings, forgery may be committed of any writing which, if genuine, would operate as the foundation of another man's liability or the evidence of his rights, as, a letter of recommendation of a person as a man of property and pecuniary responsibility,<sup>15</sup> an acceptance of a conditional order for the delivery of goods,<sup>16</sup> a false testimonial in character,<sup>17</sup> a railway-pass,<sup>18</sup> a railroad-ticket,<sup>19</sup> or fraudulently to testify or falsely to make a deed or will.<sup>20</sup> Forgery may be of a printed or engraved as well as of a written instrument.<sup>21</sup> A forgery must be of some document or writing; therefore the printing an artist's name in the corner of a picture, in order falsely to pass it off as an original picture by that artist, is not a forgery.<sup>22</sup>

FORNICATION is unlawful carnal knowledge by an unmarried person of another, whether the latter be married or unmarried. Fornication is distinguished from adultery from the fact that the guilty party is not married. Four cases of unlawful intercourse may arise: 1. Where both parties are married. 2. Where the man only is married. 3. Where the woman only is married. 4. Where neither is married. In the first case such intercourse must be adultery; in the second case the crime is fornication only on the part of the woman, but adultery on the part of the man; in the third case it is adultery in the woman and fornication (by statute in some States adultery) in the man; in the last case it is fornication only in both parties. By the statutes of many of the States fornication is an indictable offence by statute,<sup>23</sup> and where it is there may be a conviction for this offence on an indictment for adultery.<sup>24</sup>

FRAUD includes all deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty. In considering fraud in its criminal aspect it is difficult to determine whether facts in evidence constitute a fraud, or amount to a felony. In general, if the property obtained, whether by means of a false token or false pretence, be parted with, absolutely, by the owner it is a fraud; but if the possession only be parted with, and that possession be obtained by fraud, it will be felony.<sup>25</sup> Examples of gross frauds are: uttering a fictitious bank bill;<sup>26</sup> selling unwholesome provisions;<sup>27</sup> malpractice of a physician;<sup>28</sup> rendering false accounts, and other frauds, by persons in official situations;<sup>29</sup> fabrication of news tending to the public injury;<sup>30</sup> cheats by means of false weights and measures;<sup>31</sup> and generally, the fraudulent obtaining the property of another by any deceitful or illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public,<sup>32</sup> as with the common cases of obtaining property under false pretences.

FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE are those who, having committed crime, flee from the jurisdiction within which the offence was committed to escape punishment. As one State cannot pursue those who violate its laws into the territories of another, and as it concerns all that those guilty of the more atrocious crimes should not go unpunished, the practice prevails among the more enlightened nations of mutually surrendering such fugitives to the justice of the injured State. This practice is founded on national comity and convenience, or on express compact. The United States recognizes the obligation only when it is created by express agreement, and have contracted this obligation with several foreign States by treaty, and with one another by their federal constitution and laws.

The various treaties with foreign powers enumerate the crimes for which persons may be surrendered, and limit in other particulars their application. Before any person can be surrendered a demand for him must be made upon the executive by the executive power of the State whose laws have been violated. It is usual to make this demand before judicial proceedings are instituted for the arrest of the fugitive; but this is not required by act of Congress. The usual method of action is for some police officer or other special agent, after obtaining the proper papers in his own country, to repair to the foreign country, carry the case through with the aid of his minister, receive the fugitive, and conduct him back to the country having jurisdiction of the crime. The expense of the apprehension must be borne and defrayed by the party making the requisition.

Under the United States Constitution and laws, etc.

"A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, and to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime." On demand of the executive authority of a State, and production of a copy of the indictment found, or an affidavit made before a magistrate charging the person demanded with treason, felony, or other crime certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the State from whence the person so charged fled, that the executive authority of the State or Territory to which such person shall have fled shall cause the person charged to be arrested and secured, and notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear; but if such agent do not appear within six months, the prisoner shall be discharged.

The treason, felony, or other crime, extends to and embraces all acts which by the laws of where they were committed are made criminal. The accusation must be in the form of an affidavit, or indictment found and duly authenticated. If by affidavit, it should be sufficiently full to justify arrest and commitment for hearing. The accused must have fled from the State in which the crime was committed; and of this the executive authority of the State upon which the demand is made should be reasonably satisfied. This is sometimes done by affidavit. In the absence of direct evidence on the question of flight, if it appear from the indictment or affidavit produced that the crime charged is atrocious in its nature, and recently committed, and the prosecution promptly instituted, the unexplained presence of the accused in another State immediately after the commission of the crime may be regarded as prima facie evidence of flight, sufficient at least to warrant an order of arrest. The order of surrender is not required, by act of Congress, to be made at the same time with the order of arrest, and time, therefore, can be taken in doubtful cases, after the accused is arrested, to hear proof to establish or rebut such prima facie evidence.

The surrender of the accused must be made to an agent of the executive authority of the demanding State, duly appointed to receive the fugitive. The proceedings of the executive authority are subject to be reviewed on habeas corpus by the judicial power, and if found void the prisoner may be discharged.

Any person setting at liberty or receiving a fugitive from an agent while transporting a fugitive to the State or Territory from which he fled is liable to a fine of five hundred dollars and imprisonment not exceeding one year.

GAME LAWS. See GENERAL STATUTES.

GAMING is an agreement between two or more persons to play by certain rules at cards, dice, or other contrivance that the result shall determine the owner of the amount staked, contributed, or wagered upon the game. In general, at common law, all games are lawful, unless some fraud has been practised, or such games are contrary to public policy. Each of the parties to the contract must have a right to the money or thing played for. He must have given his full and free consent, and not have been entrapped by fraud. There must be equality in the play. The play must be conducted fairly. But even when all these rules have been observed, the courts will not countenance gaming by giving too easy a remedy for the recovery of money won at play. But where fraud has been practiced, as in all other cases; the contract is void; and in some cases when the party has been guilty of cheating, by playing with false dice, cards, and the like, he may be indicted at common law, and fined and imprisoned, according to the heinousness of the offence.<sup>1</sup>

For the laws forbidding gaming, see the GENERAL STATUTES.

GAMING HOUSES are houses kept for the purpose of permitting persons to gamble for money or other valuable things. They are nuisances in the eye of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices.<sup>2</sup>

GAOL. See JAIL; PRISON, below.

GOOD BEHAVIOR. Surety for good behavior may be demanded from any person who is justly suspected, upon sufficient grounds, of intending to commit a crime or misdemeanor. Surety for good behavior is somewhat similar to surety of the peace, but the recognizance is more easily forfeited, and it ought to be demanded with greater caution.<sup>3</sup>

GOODS AND CHATTELS. Choses in action, as bank notes, mortgage deeds, and money, do not fall within the technical definition of "goods and chattels;" and if described in an indictment as goods and chattels, these words may be rejected as surplageous.<sup>4</sup>

GRAND LARCENY. Simple larceny is divided into grand larceny and petit larceny. Grand larceny is made a felony in most States, while petit larceny is made a misdemeanor—the former embraces larcenies from a prescribed minimum (e. g. five dollars in value) to any amount in value, however great; the latter is any amount in value less than the prescribed maximum (e. g. five dollars in value).

GRAVE. The violation of the grave, by taking up a dead body, or stealing the coffin or grave clothes, is a misdemeanor at common law.<sup>5</sup> Penalties for violation of the grave, desecration of cemeteries, etc., are enacted in most of the States.

See DEAD BODY, above.

GUILT is criminality; offense; liability to punishment; it is opposed to innocence. In general, every one is presumed innocent until guilt has been proved; but in some cases the presumption of guilt overthrows that of innocence; as, for example, where a party destroys evidence to which the opposite party is entitled. The spoliation of papers material to show the neutral character of a vessel furnishes strong presumption against the neutrality of the ship.<sup>6</sup>

HARD LABOR is, in general, a part of the sentence of convicts in States where the penitentiary system has been adopted. This labor is such as is ordinarily performed voluntarily by laborers and mechanics, and is generally

HIGHWAY ROBBERY. See ROBBERY, below.

HOMICIDE is the killing of a human being, by human agency.<sup>1</sup> Excusable homicide takes place under such circumstances of accident or necessity that the party cannot strictly be said to have committed the act wilfully and intentionally, and whereby he is relieved from the penalty annexed to the commission of a felonious homicide. Felonious homicide is that committed wilfully under such circumstances as to render it punishable. Justifiable homicide is that committed with full intent, but under such circumstances as to render the act one proper to be performed. The distinction between justifiable and excusable homicide is that in the former the killing takes place without any manner of fault on the part of the slayer; in the latter there is some slight fault; between justifiable or excusable and felonious homicide there is a great and important distinction. For example: "If a person driving a carriage happens to kill another, if he saw or had timely notice of the mischief likely to ensue, and yet wilfully drove on, it would be murder; if he might have seen the danger, but did not look before him, it will be manslaughter; but if the accident happened in such a manner that no want of due care could be imputed to the driver, it will be accidental death and excusable homicide."<sup>2</sup>

To constitute the offense of homicide there must be a person in actual existence; but the destruction of human life at any period after birth is homicide, however near it may be to extinction from any other cause.<sup>3</sup> The person killed, to constitute the homicide felonious, must have been entitled to his existence. Thus, a soldier of the enemy in time of war has no right to life, but may be killed. A criminal sentenced to death has no right to life; but no person can take life but the authorized officer, and in the manner prescribed by law.

See MURDER; MANSLAUGHTER; SELF-DEFENCE.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION is an asylum or prison for incorrigibles or those who have committed minor crimes.

HOUSE OF ILL-FAME is a house resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness. Keeping a house of ill-fame is an offense at common law.<sup>4</sup> So, the letting of a house to a woman of ill-fame, knowing her to be such, with the intent that it shall be let for purposes of prostitution, is an indictable offense at common law.<sup>5</sup> If a lodger lets her room for intent with distinctness and precision, and to support the allegations with proof. On the other hand, if the offence does not rest merely in tendency or in attempt to do a certain act with a wicked purpose, but consists in doing an unlawful or criminal act, the evil intention will be presumed, and need not be alleged, or, if alleged, it is a mere formal averment which need not be proved.<sup>5</sup>

Proof of intention may be of external and visible acts and conduct from which the jury may infer the fact,<sup>6</sup> or it may be by proof of an act committed; as in the case of burglary with intent to steal; proof of burglary and stealing is conclusive.<sup>7</sup>

When a man intending one wrong falls, and accidentally commits another, he will, except where the particular intent is a substantive part of the crime, be held to have intended the act he did commit.<sup>8</sup>

JAIL. COUNTY JAIL is a place provided for the confinement of persons arrested upon civil or criminal process, and held in custody of the sheriff. It is the common place of confinement for persons confined for contempt of court, witnesses, and persons without bail awaiting trial, and those convicted of lesser offences. It is generally inhabited by the sheriff or keeper and his family, and is an inhabited dwelling-house within the statutes against arson.<sup>1</sup>

JEOPARDY is exposure to danger, death, hazard, or injury. This is the situation of a prisoner when a trial jury is impanelled and sworn to try his case upon a valid indictment. Such a jury has been charged with his deliverance.<sup>2</sup> And should the prosecution be abandoned at this stage of the case, and the jury be discharged, or otherwise, the prisoner cannot be again put upon his trial by the same jurisdiction, unless this privilege be waived by the defendant.<sup>3</sup>

KIDNAPPING is the act of stealing or forcible abduction of a human being from his own home or country.<sup>4</sup> It includes false imprisonment.<sup>5</sup> A carrying away is not essential.<sup>6</sup> This was a capital offence by the Jewish law; and is a highly penal offence in all the States. See ABDUCTION, above.

KNOWLEDGE is the power of knowing; it is a perception of that which exists; cognizance of truth and fact; information. Many acts are perfectly innocent when the party performing them is not aware of certain circumstances attending them; for example, a man may pass a counterfeit note, and be guiltless, if he did not know it was so; he may receive stolen goods, if he were not aware of the fact that they were stolen. In these, and like cases, it is the guilty knowledge which makes the crime. Such guilty knowledge is made by the statute a constituent part of the offence; and, therefore, it must be averred and proved as such. But it is, in general, true, and may be considered as a rule almost necessary to the restraint and punishment of crimes, that when a man does that which, by the common law or by statute, is unlawful, and, in pursuing his criminal purpose, does that which constitutes another and different offence, he shall be held responsible for all the legal consequences of such criminal act. When a man, without justifiable cause, intends to wound or maim another, and in doing it, kills him, it is murder, though he had no intention to take life. But, in general, such bad motive or criminal will and purpose—that disposition of the mind and heart which is designated by the generic and significant term "malice"—is implied from the criminal act itself. But if a man does an act which would be otherwise criminal, through mistake or accident, or by force or the compulsion of others, in which his own will and mind did not instigate him to the act or concur in it, it is a matter of defence, to be averred and proved on his part, if it does not rise out of the circumstances of the case adduced on the part of the prosecution.<sup>7</sup>

LARCENY is the unlawful or felonious taking and carrying away by one person of the personal goods and chattels of another with intent to convert them to his own use, and without the consent of the owner.<sup>8</sup> Larceny is either grand or petit. See GRAND LARCENY, above. The property of the owner taken may be either general or special.<sup>9</sup> There must be a taking against the consent of the owner,<sup>10</sup> and the taking will not be larceny if consent be given, though obtained by fraud.<sup>11</sup> When the possession of an article is intrusted to a person who carries it away and appropriates it, this is no larceny;<sup>12</sup> but where the custody is merely parted with, such misappropriation is a larceny.<sup>13</sup> The taking must be in the county where the criminal is to be tried,<sup>14</sup> but when the taking is in the county or State, and the thief is caught with the stolen property in another county than that where the theft was committed, he may be ware of certain circumstances at the time, for example, a man may pass a note, and be guiltless, if he did not know of the fact that it was stolen; or he may receive stolen goods, and be aware of the fact that they were stolen, and like cases, it is the guilty knowledge which makes the crime. Such knowledge is made by the statute a condition of the offence; and, therefore, it must be proved as such. But it is not necessary to the restraint and punishment, that when a man does that which is common law or by statute, is unlawful in pursuing his criminal purpose, which constitutes another and different offence shall be held responsible for all the consequences of such criminal act. A man without justifiable cause, intends to kill another, and in doing it, he commits murder, though he had no intention to kill. But, in general, such a criminal will and purpose—that disposes the mind and heart which is the generic and significant term implied from the criminal act of a man does an act which would be criminal, through mistake or accident or the compulsion of others, and his own will and mind did not instigate the act or concur in it, it is a matter to be averred and proved and does not rise out of the circumstances adduced on the part of the defendant as the unlawful or felonious taking away by one person of the personal chattels of another with intent to convert them to his own use, and without the consent of the owner.<sup>1</sup> Larceny is either simple or grand. See GRAND LARCENY, above. The value of the owner taken may be either small or great. There must be a taking of the property of the owner,<sup>2</sup> and the taking must be larceny if consent be given, or by fraud.<sup>3</sup> When the possession is intrusted to a person who is to have the custody, this is not larceny where the custody is merely entrusted to him, and appropriation is a larceny.<sup>4</sup> It must be in the county where the taking is done, or in the State, and the thief is caught in another county than that in which the theft was committed, he may be tried in the county where arrested with the goods; as, by construction of law, there is a fresh taking in every county in which the thief carries the stolen property.<sup>5</sup> There must be an actual taking away of the article,<sup>6</sup> but a very slight removal, if it amounts to a taking into possession, is sufficient.<sup>7</sup> The property must be personal,<sup>8</sup> and it must be of some value though but slight.<sup>9</sup> Things annexed to the freehold, as growing grain, grass, trees, and the like, or lead, or fixtures attached to a house, are not the subject of larceny until severed.<sup>10</sup> Nor can larceny be committed of things which are not the subject of property, such as the dead body of a human being. Animals of a wild nature unclaimed, cannot be the subject of larceny, for there is no property in them absolute or qualified,<sup>11</sup> it is otherwise if they are reclaimed or confined.<sup>12</sup> And animals may be of so base a nature as not to be the subject of larceny, though tame and salable, as tame bears, cats, dogs, and monkeys.<sup>13</sup>

LEVYING WAR. See TREASON, below.
LIMITATION is a time within which an accusation may be made, or an indictment found or an information made against a person for the commission of a crime or misdemeanor. Limitation never expires during the life of the offender for treason or murder. Limitation in cases of felony varies from ten to two years; for misdemeanors or the lesser offences it is generally from two years to sixty days.

LYING IN WAIT is ambuscade for the purpose of murder. Lying in wait is evidence of premeditation, malice, intention, deliberation.

MAINTENANCE is an officious interference in a suit in which the offender has no interest, to assist one of the parties against the other, with money or advice, to prosecute or defend the action, without any authority or interest, at law.<sup>1</sup> It is the intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing the litigation.<sup>2</sup> There are many acts in the nature of maintenance which become justifiable from the circumstances under which they are performed. They may be justified: 1. Because the party has an interest in the matter in variance; as, when he has a bare contingency in the lands in question, which possibly may never develop into being.<sup>3</sup> 2. Because the party is of kindred or affinity, as father, son; heir apparent, husband, wife, etc.<sup>4</sup> 3. Because the relation of landlord and tenant, master or servant, etc., subsists between the party to the suit and the person who assists him. 4. Because the money is given out of charity.<sup>5</sup> 5. Because the person assisting the party to the suit is an attorney or counselor; the assistance to be rendered must, however, be strictly professional, for a lawyer is no more justified in giving his client money than another man.<sup>6</sup> See title CONTRACTS, "Maintenance," ante.

MALPRACTICE. See MEDICAL LAW, below.
MALICE is the intentional doing of an unlawful or felonious act without just cause or excuse.<sup>1</sup> Express malice exists when the party evinces an intention to commit the crime. Implied malice is that inferred by law from the facts proved.<sup>2</sup> Malice is implied in every case of intentional homicide; and the fact of killing being first proved, all the circumstances of accident, necessity, or informality are to be satisfactorily established by the party charged, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him to prove the homicide, and the circumstances attending it. If there be in fact circumstances of justification, excuse, or palliation, such proof will naturally indicate them. But where the fact of killing is proved by satisfactory evidence, and there are no circumstances disclosed tending to show justification or excuse, there is nothing to rebut the natural presumption of malice. It is material to the just understanding of this rule, that it only applies where the killing, and nothing further, is shown. For if the circumstances disclosed tend to extenuate the act, the prisoner has the full benefit of such facts.<sup>3</sup> It is a general rule that when a man commits an act unaccompanied by any circumstances justifying its commission, the law presumes that he has acted advisedly, and with an intent to produce the consequences which have ensued. And therefore the intent to kill is conclusively inferred from the deliberate violent use of a deadly weapon.<sup>4</sup>

MALICIOUS INJURIES are those committed willfully and wantonly without cause.<sup>5</sup>

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF is unlawful, wilful, wanton, or reckless destruction of property. In order to a conviction of the offence of malicious mischief, the jury must be satisfied that the injury was done either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty, or wicked revenge.<sup>6</sup>

MALICIOUS TRESPASS is a wilful, malicious, or mischievous injury of private or public property, real or personal.<sup>7</sup>

MANSLAUGHTER is the unlawful killing of one human being by another, without malice or intention.<sup>8</sup> The distinction between manslaughter and murder is, that in the former, though the act which occasions the death be unlawful, or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice, express or implied, which is the very essence of murder, is presumed to be wanting in manslaughter. In manslaughter there can be no accessories before the fact, because there has been no time for premeditation.<sup>6</sup> Involuntary manslaughter happens without intention to injure. Voluntary manslaughter happens from intention to produce the injury. Homicide may become manslaughter in consequence of provocation; by mutual combat; resistance to public officers, etc.; killing in the prosecution of an unlawful or wanton act; or killing in the prosecution of a lawful act improperly performed, or performed without lawful authority. The provocation which reduces the killing from murder to manslaughter is an answer to the presumption of malice, which the law raises in every case of homicide; it is, therefore, no answer where express malice is proved.<sup>7</sup> And to be available the provocation must have been reasonable and recent; for no words or slight provocation will be sufficient, and if the party has had time to cool, malice will be inferred.<sup>8</sup> In cases of mutual combat it is manslaughter only when one of the parties is killed.<sup>9</sup> When death ensues from duelling the rule is different; and such killing is murder. The killing of an officer by resistance to him while acting under lawful authority is murder; but if the officer be acting under a void or illegal authority, or out of his jurisdiction, the killing is manslaughter, or excusable homicide, according to the circumstances of the case.<sup>10</sup> When death ensues from the performance of a lawful act, it may in consequence of the negligence of the offender amount to manslaughter. For instance, if the death has been occasioned by negligent driving.<sup>11</sup> Again, when death ensues from the gross negligence of a medical or surgical practitioner, it is manslaughter. It is no crime for any person to administer medicine, but it is a crime to administer it so rashly and carelessly, or with such criminal inattention, as to produce death; and in this respect there is no difference between the most regular practitioner and the greatest quack.<sup>12</sup>

MAYHEM. Simple mayhem consists in violently and unlawfully depriving another of the use of any bodily member, or in unlawfully and wilfully disabling the tongue or eye; slitting or biting the nose, ear, or lip of another. Malicious mayhem consists in the purposely, and with premeditation, committing any of the above acts. See GENERAL STATUTES.

At common law mayhem was an injury to any part of a man's body which might render him, in fighting, less able to defend himself, or annoy his adversary.<sup>13</sup> So, the cutting off the ear or nose was not held mayhem at common law.<sup>14</sup>

MERGER is the absorption of a less offence in a greater. When a man commits a great crime which includes a lesser the latter is merged in the former. Murder when committed by blows necessarily includes the assault and battery; battery necessarily includes an assault; a burglary when accompanied with the felonious taking of personal property necessarily includes such larceny. In all these and similar cases the lesser crime is merged in or swallowed up by the greater. But when one offence is of the same character with the other, there can be no merger, as in case of a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, and the subsequent commission of the misdemeanor in pursuance of the conspiracy; the two crimes being of equal degree, there can be no legal merger.<sup>15</sup> Where the violation of a right admits of both a civil and criminal remedy, the right to prosecute is not merged in another. A defendant is liable in a civil action to the party injured either after his conviction,<sup>16</sup> or acquittal.<sup>17</sup>

MISDEMEANORS are offences punishable by fine, or imprisonment in the common jail, or both. They are all offences inferior to felonies.

MUTINY is the unlawful insurrection or revolt of soldiers or seamen against the authority of their commanders; open resistance of officers or opposition to their authority. A mutiny is properly the act of numbers; but by statute and ordinances for governing the army and navy, the acts which constitute mutiny are multiplied and defined; and acts of individuals, amounting to a resistance of the authority or lawful commands of officers, are declared mutiny. Officers beginning, causing, exciting, or joining mutiny are guilty of the offence. Mutiny is punishable in the navy by fine or imprisonment, or both.<sup>19</sup> And in the army by death or such other punishment as a court martial shall direct.<sup>20</sup> be otherwise, that which makes the contrary of a thing impossible. If man's actions are determined by causes beyond his control he acts from necessity, and is not responsible— nevertheless, no man can plead necessity in excuse for crime.

NIGHT WALKERS are those who sleep by day and walk by night for some unlawful pursuit. They are liable to arrest.

OBSCENITY. See INDECENCY, above.

OBSTRUCTING PROCESS is any act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent, or do prevent the due execution of lawful process. This is an offence against public justice of a very high and presumptive nature; and more particularly so where the obstruction is upon criminal process; a person opposing an arrest upon criminal process becomes thereby an accessory in felony, and a principal in high treason. The officer must be prevented by actual violence, or by threatened violence, accompanied by the exercise of force, or by those having capacity to employ it, by which the officer is prevented from executing his writ. The officer is not required to expose his person by a personal conflict with the offender.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO HIGHWAYS; NAVIGATION; STREAMS; RAILWAYS; ETC. See GENERAL STATUTES.

OVERT ACTS are those which are open to view, apparent, uncoaleced. Thus, an overt act of treason is distinguished from a secret design or intention not carried into effect; and even from words spoken. An overt act of treason is proof of the intention of the traitor, because it opens his designs; without an overt act, treason cannot be committed.

PARDON is an act of grace proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws (or a body having power therefor) which exempts an individual upon whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. Absolute pardon frees the criminal unconditionally. Conditional pardon frees the criminal upon performance of the conditions annexed, and not otherwise. General pardon extends to all offenders of the same kind; and is either express, as, when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute.

The pardoning power is lodged in the executive of the United States and of the various States, and in boards established by law. In some States a concurrence of one of the legislative bodies is required. It is to be exercised in the discretion of the power with whom it is lodged. In order to render pardon valid, it must express with accuracy the crime intended to be forgiven. In case of a conditional pardon, if there be a breach of condition, the pardon is avoided. The effect of pardon is to protect from punishment the criminal for the offence pardoned, but for no other. But pardon for an assault and battery which afterwards becomes murder will not operate as a pardon of the murder. In general, the effect of a full pardon is to restore the convict to all his rights; but to this there are some exceptions. 1. It does not restore civic capacity. 2. It does not affect a status of other persons which has been altered, or a right which has accrued, in consequence of the commission of the crime or its punishment. When pardon is general, either by an act of amnesty, or by the repeal of a penal law, it is not necessary to plead it; because the court is bound, ex-officio, to take notice of it; and the criminal cannot waive such pardon, because by his admittance no one can give the court power to punish him when it judicially appears there is no law to do it. But when the pardon is special, to avail the criminal it must judicially appear that it has been accepted, and for this reason it must be specially pleaded, and if he has obtained a pardon before arraignment, and instead of pleading it in bar he pleads the general issue, he is deemed and taken to have waived the benefit of it, and he cannot afterwards avail himself of it in arrest of judgment.

All contracts made for buying or procuring a pardon for a convict are void.

PERJURY is the act or crime of (wilfully and corruptly) making a false oath when lawfully administered in any judicial proceeding. The intention must be wilful; the oath must be taken and the falsehood asserted with deliberation and consciousness of the nature of the statement made; for if it has arisen in consequence of inadvertency, surprise or mistake of the import of the question, then there is no corrupt motive. The oath must be false; the party must believe that what he is swearing is false. The party must be lawfully sworn; an oath therefore taken by a private person or before an officer having no jurisdiction will not amount to perjury. The proceedings must be judicial; and perjury cannot be committed when the matter is not regularly before the court.<sup>4</sup> The assertion must be absolute; but if a man swears that he believes that to be true which he knows is false, it will be perjury,<sup>5</sup> and it is immaterial whether the testimony is given in answer to a question or voluntarily.<sup>6</sup> On a question of estimation of the value of a thing in question, there can be no perjury,<sup>7</sup> unless in some cases a false statement of opinion may become perjury.<sup>8</sup> The oath must be material to the question depending.<sup>9</sup> Perjury may be committed by making a false affirmation as well as a false oath, by an atheist, heathen, Jew, etc., as well as a Christian.

PERSONATION (false) is the assumption of the character of another: without lawful authority, for the purpose of committing some act to the prejudice of him personated, without his consent. This was a misdemeanor at common law and punishable as such.<sup>10</sup> See GENERAL STATUTES.

PROSTITUTION. See HOUSE OF ILL-FAME; LEWDNESS; NIGHT-WALKER, above.

PROVOCATION is that which excites anger; the cause for resentment. No words, epithets, or vituperation whatever will justify an assault, or assault and battery. Provocation simply, unaccompanied by a crime or misdemeanor, will not justify any breach of the peace. In case of homicide, provocation shows to be sufficient may reduce the offence from murder to manslaughter. But when the provocation is given for the purpose of justifying or excusing an intended murder, and the party provoked is killed, it is no justification.<sup>13</sup>

PUNISHMENT is some fine, forfeiture, or penalty prescribed or warranted by law, inflicted upon and suffered by a person for the commission of a public offence, or for the omission of some duty or act required by law, lawfully imposed by a competent judicial tribunal. The object of punishment is two-fold: to reform the offender, and deter him and others from committing like offences; and to protect society.<sup>14</sup>

Punishments may be corporal or otherwise: corporal by death, whipping, imprisonment, or banishment, etc.; otherwise by fine, forfeiture, or other deprivation or penalty imposed upon the goods of the offender, etc.

RAPE. See AFRAY; DUELLING, above. RAPE is the carnal knowledge of a woman by a man, forcibly and against her will. The knowledge of a woman's person must be forcibly and against her will; and if her consent has not been voluntarily and freely given, the offence is complete; nor will any subsequent acquiescence on her part do away with the guilt of the ravisher. A consent obtained from a woman by actual violence, by confinement, or threats of murder, or by the administration of stupefying drugs, is not such a consent as will shield the offender, or turn his crime into adultery or fornication; and if the connection took place when she was in a state of insensibility from liquor, having been made drunk by the prisoner, though the liquor was given only for the purpose of exciting her, it is a rape.<sup>15</sup> Having carnal knowledge with a woman by a fraud which induces her to suppose it is her husband does not amount to rape;<sup>16</sup> but the party may be indicted for assault. A husband cannot be guilty of a rape on the wife, for his act is not unlawful; but he may be a principal in the second degree of a rape committed on his wife, as where he held her while his servant committed the rape.<sup>17</sup> As a child under ten years of age is incapable, at law, of giving her consent, it follows that the offence may be committed on such child whether she consents or not.

A male infant under fourteen years of age is supposed by law incapable of committing the offence.<sup>18</sup> But not only can an infant under fourteen years, if of sufficient mischievous discretion, but even a woman may be guilty as principal in the second degree.

Penetration alone, without emission, is sufficient.<sup>19</sup>

REPRIEVE is a withdrawal of sentence for an interval of time, and operates in delay of execution.<sup>20</sup> It is granted by the favor of the pardoning power. They are granted from a necessity of law; for example, when a woman is convicted of a capital offence, after judgment

REQUISITION. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE, above.

RIOTS are acts done in a violent and tumultuous manner, by three or more persons, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended was lawful or unlawful.<sup>o</sup> A riot cannot be committed by fewer than three persons;<sup>o</sup> a judgment against one person for a riot would be void.<sup>o</sup> It must be proved: 1. That there was an unlawful assembling,<sup>o</sup> or a lawful assembly converted into a riot.<sup>o</sup> 2. That there was actual violence and force on the part of the rioters, or such a tendency to force and violence as to strike terror to the public mind.<sup>o</sup> 3. That the defendants acted in the riot, and were participants in the disturbance.<sup>o</sup>

ROBBERY is the forcible and felonious taking, from the person of another, goods, money, personal property or any article of value, by violence or putting in fear.<sup>o</sup> The property must be taken by force or putting in fear,<sup>o</sup> and fear must be induced from apprehension of danger.<sup>o</sup> The knocking down of a man; the snatching of an earring from the ear;<sup>o</sup> pulling out a watch from a fob, by the chain,<sup>o</sup> are examples of violence; but snatching property from a person unawares will not be robbery unless some injury is done to the person.<sup>o</sup> Presenting a pistol and demanding money;<sup>o</sup> threatening to take and kill another child;<sup>o</sup> to destroy one's house;<sup>o</sup> are examples of putting in fear.

Obtaining money by false pretences, misrepresentation or fraud, unaccompanied by violence or putting in fear, is not robbery.

If the property is once taken it will be no defence that the robber delivered it back to the owner.<sup>o</sup>

If a man under an impression that the property is his own obtain it by threats, it is merely trespass and not robbery.<sup>o</sup>

ROOF is a clamorous and tumultuous assembly. It is a disturbance of the peace by persons assembled to do a thing which, if executed, would have made them rioters. It generally agrees in all particulars with a riot, except only in this—that it may be a complete offence without the execution of the intended purpose.<sup>o</sup>

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY is the offence of procuring another to commit legal perjury, who, in consequence of the persuasion, takes the oath to which he has been incited.<sup>o</sup> To complete the offence the false oath must be actually taken, and no abortive attempt to solicit will complete the crime.<sup>o</sup> But the criminal solicitation to commit perjury, though unsuccessful, is a misdemeanor at common law.<sup>o</sup>

SWEAR. See PERJURY; SUBORNATION OF PERJURY, above.

SWINDLER. See FALSE PRETENCES; FRAUD, etc., above.

SMUGGLING is the unlawful and fraudulent taking into a country or out of it any articles of merchandise prohibited by law, or to avoid the payment of duties upon the same.

SODOMY is a carnal copulation by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast.<sup>o</sup> It may be committed between two persons, both of whom consent, even between husband and wife;<sup>o</sup> and both may be indicted.<sup>o</sup> Penetration of the mouth is not sodomy.<sup>o</sup>

SELF-DEFENCE is the act of defending one's person and property from injury.

A man may defend himself and even commit a homicide for the prevention of any forcible and atrocious crime, which, if completed, would amount to a felony,<sup>o</sup> and, of course, under like circumstances, mayhem, wounding and battery would be excusable at common law.<sup>o</sup> A man may repel force by force in defence of his person, property, or habitation against any one who manifests, intends, attempts, or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a forcible felony, such as murder, rape, robbery, arson, burglary, and the like. In these cases he is not required to retreat, but he may resist, and even pursue his adversary, until he has secured himself from all danger.<sup>o</sup>

A man may defend himself when no felony has been threatened or attempted: 1. When the assailant attempts to beat another, and there is no mutual combat; as where one meets another and attempts to commit or does commit an assault and battery on him, the person attacked may defend himself;<sup>o</sup> and in

In these cases both parties are aggressors; and if in the fight one is killed, it will be manslaughter at least, unless the survivor can prove two things, viz., that before the mortal stroke was given, he had refused any further combat, and had retreated as far as he could with safety, and that he killed his adversary from necessity, to avoid his own destruction.

TREASON is the actual levying war against the United States; adhering to their enemies and giving them aid and comfort. In England high treason affects the sovereign or state, such as offences above enumerated. Petit treason affects only individuals, as breach of fidelity. Treason is the highest crime of a civil nature of which a man can be guilty. It is punishable by death or imprisonment at hard labor, not less than five years, and fine not less than ten thousand dollars, and disqualification for any office under the United States. No person can be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

TRESPASS. See MALICIOUS AND MISCHIEVOUS TRESPASS, above.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY is a disturbance of the public peace by three or more persons, who meet together with an intent mutually to assist each other in some unlawful enterprise of a private nature with force and violence. If they move forward towards its execution it is then a riot; if they actually execute their design it amounts to a riot.

VAGRANTS are described as follows:

1. "All persons who unlawfully return into any district whence they have been legally removed, without bringing a certificate from the proper authorities of the city or district to which they belong, stating that they have a settlement therein."

2. "All persons who refuse to perform the work which shall be allotted to them by the overseers of the poor, as provided by law."

"All persons who shall come from any place without the State or Commonwealth to any place within it and shall be found loitering or residing therein, and who follow no labor, trade, occupation, or business, and have no visible means of subsistence, and can give no reasonable account of themselves or their business in such place."

The punishment for this offence is labor upon the poor farm, upon the roads or highways, or confinement in the common jail, work-house, house of correction, or poor-house for a term of from ten days to six months. See GENERAL STATUTES.

DOMICIL—LAW OF.

DOMICIL is that place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning.

The law of the place of domicile governs as to all acts of the parties when not controlled by the law of the place where the contract was made or law of the place where the thing is situated. Personal property of the woman follows the law of domicile upon marriage. A divorce valid under the law of domicile of both parties is good everywhere. But there must be an actual domicile of one party at least, and personal jurisdiction over both parties to make a divorce binding extra territorially.

The state and condition of the person, according to the law of his domicile, will generally, though not universally, be regarded in other countries as to acts done, rights acquired, or contracts made in the place of his native domicile; but as to acts, rights, and contracts done, acquired or made out of his native domicile, the law of place will generally govern in respect to his capacity and condition. If a person goes into a foreign country and engages in trade there, he is, by the law of nations, to be considered a merchant of that country, and subject for all civil purposes, whether that country be hostile or neutral, and this whether the effect be to render him hostile or neutral in respect to his bona fide trade.

The disposition of, succession to, or distribution of the personal property of a decedent, wherever situated, is to be made in accordance place where a man has his permanent home and principal place of abode, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning. The law of domicile governs as to the parties when not controlled by the place where the contract was made, and as to the personal property of the woman following domicile upon marriage. A divorce is granted under the law of domicile of both parties. But there must be domicile of one party at least, and jurisdiction over both parties to make the divorce extra-territorially.

and condition of the person, according to the law of his domicile, will generally not universally be regarded as acts done, rights acquired, or made in the place of his native domicile, as to acts, rights, and contracts made or made out of his native domicile will generally govern in a capacity and condition. If a man goes into a foreign country and engages in business, he is, by the law of nations, to be regarded as a merchant of that country, and will civil purposes, whether that be hostile or neutral, and this whether he be a citizen of that country or a bona fide trader.

of succession to, or distribution of, the personal property of a decedent, is to be made in accordance to the law of his actual domicile at the time of his death; the principle applies equally to cases of voluntary transfer, of intestacy, and of testaments.

Wills are to be governed by the law of the domicile as to the capacity of the parties, and as to their validity and effect in relation to the transfer of personal property, but by the law of the place where the thing is situated as to the transfer of real property. The forms and solemnities of the place of domicile must be observed. The local law is to determine the character of property. The interpretation of a will is to be according to the law of the place of actual domicile. The succession to the personal property of an intestate is governed exclusively by the law of his actual domicile at the time of his death. This includes the ascertainment of the person who is to be their heir. The question as to whether debts are to be paid by the administrator from the personalty or realty is to be decided by the law of his domicile.

An assignment of property for the benefit of creditors, valid by the law of the domicile, is generally recognized as valid everywhere, in the absence of a positive statute to the contrary, but not to the injury of citizens of the foreign state in which property is situated. But a compulsory assignment by force of statute is not of extra-territorial operation. Distribution of the effects of insolvent or bankrupt debtors is to be made according to the law of the domicile, subject to the same qualifications.

EX POST FACTO LAW.

Ex post facto is, after the act. An ex post facto law is a statute which would render an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed. A law made to punish acts committed before the existence of such law, and which had not been declared crimes by preceding laws. By the Constitution of the United States Congress is forbidden to pass ex post facto laws. And by Section X., Subdiv. 1, of the same instrument, as well as by our own constitution, a similar restriction is placed upon the State legislature. Such law is void as to those cases in which, if given effect, it would be ex post facto; but so far only. In cases arising under it, it may have effect; for as a rule for the future it is not ex post facto. There is a distinction between ex post facto laws and retrospective laws; every ex post facto law must necessarily be retrospective, but every retrospective law is not ex post facto law; the former only are prohibited. It is fully settled that the term ex post facto, as used in the Constitution, is to be taken in a limited sense, as referring to criminal or penal statutes alone, and that the policy, the reason, and the humanity of the prohibition against passing ex post facto laws do not extend to civil cases, to cases that merely affect the private property of citizens. Some of the most necessary acts of legislation are, on the contrary, founded upon the principles that private rights must yield to public exigencies.

Laws under the following circumstances are to be considered ex post facto laws within the words and intent of the prohibition:

1. Every law that makes an act done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action.
2. Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than it was when it was committed.
3. Every law that changes the punishment, and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed; though it would be otherwise of a law mitigating the punishment.
4. Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offence, in order to convict the offender; though it might be otherwise of a law merely modifying the remedy or mode of procedure.

The right to pass retrospective laws, with the exceptions above mentioned, become obligatory, unless prohibited by the constitution of the State. And laws should never be considered as applying to cases which arose previously to their passage, unless the legislature have clearly declared such to be their intention.

FOREIGN LAW.

FOREIGN LAWS are the laws of a foreign country,<sup>1</sup> not the laws of the different States of this country.

The courts do not judicially take notice of foreign laws; and they must, therefore, be proved as facts.<sup>2</sup> The manner of proof varies according to circumstances. As a general rule, the best testimony or proof is required; for no proof will be received which presupposes better testimony attainable by the party who offers it. When the best testimony cannot be obtained, secondary evidence will be received.<sup>3</sup>

Exemplified or sworn copies of written laws and other public documents must, as a general thing, be produced, when they can be procured; but should they be refused by the competent authorities, then inferior proof may be admitted.<sup>4</sup>

Where our own government has promulgated a foreign law or ordinance of a public nature as authentic, that is held sufficient evidence of its existence.<sup>5</sup> When foreign laws cannot be proved by some mode which the law respects as being of equal authority to an oath, they must be verified by the sanction of an oath. The usual modes of authenticating them are by an exemplification under the great seal of the State, or by a copy proved by oath to be a true copy, or by a certificate of an officer authorized by law, which must itself be duly authenticated.<sup>6</sup>

Foreign unwritten laws, customs, and usages may be proved, and are ordinarily proved, by parol evidence; and when such evidence is objected to on the ground that the law in question is a written law, the party objecting must show that fact.<sup>7</sup> Witnesses in Cuba, examined under a commission touching the execution of a will, testified, in general terms, that it was executed according to the law of that country; and, it not appearing from the testimony that there was any written law upon the subject, the proof was held sufficient.<sup>8</sup> A defendant pleaded infancy in an action upon a contract governed by the law of Jamaica; held, that the law was to be proven as a matter of fact, and that the burden lay upon him to show it.<sup>9</sup>

law and competent to state it correctly under oath.<sup>10</sup> The public seal of a foreign sovereign or state affixed to a writing, purporting to be a written edict, or law, or judgment, is of itself the highest evidence, and no further proof is required of such public seal.<sup>11</sup> But the seal of a foreign court is not, in general, evidence without further proof, and must, therefore, be established by competent testimony.<sup>12</sup>

The acts of the legislatures of the several States shall be authenticated by having the seal of their respective States affixed thereto.<sup>13</sup> But the rules prescribed by acts of Congress do not exclude every other mode of authentication, and courts may admit proof of the acts of the legislatures of the several States, although not authenticated under the acts of Congress. Accordingly, a printed volume, purporting on its face to contain the laws of a sister State, is admissible as prima facie evidence to prove the statute law of that State.<sup>14</sup>

The effect of foreign laws when proved is properly referable to the court. The object of the proof of foreign laws is to enable the court to instruct the jury what is, in point of law, the result from foreign laws to be applied to the matters in controversy before them. The court is, therefore, to decide what is the proper evidence of the laws of a foreign country; and when evidence is given of those laws, the court is to judge of their applicability to the matter in issue.<sup>15</sup>

FORUM—LAW OF.

The law of the forum (lex fori) is the law of the country, to the tribunal of which appeal is made,<sup>16</sup> or where the action or proceeding is instituted, or the remedy sought.

The forms of remedies, modes of proceeding, and execution of judgments are to be regulated solely and exclusively by the laws of the place where the action is instituted.<sup>17</sup> The law of the forum governs as to the nature, extent, and character of the remedy,<sup>18</sup> as in case of instruments considered sealed where made, but not in the country where sealed upon,<sup>19</sup> and decides as to the deprivation of the remedy. The law of the forum is to decide who are proper parties to a suit.<sup>20</sup> Foreign corporations may sue and be sued; when they have property within the jurisdiction.<sup>21</sup> Arrest and imprisonment may be allowed by the law of

INTERNATIONAL LAW is that existing and regulating the mutual intercourse between different nations. It is distinguished as the rights among nations and the rights of nations. The natural law, or the doctrine of rights and of state, forms the scientific basis of international law; for nations, like lesser communities, and like individuals, have rights and correlative obligations, moral claims, and duties. The particular sources of international law are legal and moral. The legal elements are: 1. The rights of states or nations as such, deducible from its nature and its office as protector of those who live under its law. 2.
The right which the state or nation shares with individuals, and in part with artificial persons, as the rights of property, contract, and reputation; and, 3. The rights which arise when it is wronged, as those of self-protection and redress. To these have been joined by some the rights of punishments and of conquest—the latter, at least, without good reason; for there is and can be no naked right of conquest, irrespective of redress and self-protection. The moral elements are the duties of humanity, comity, and intercourse.

Nations are voluntary: 1. In deciding the question what intercourse they will hold with each other; 2. That they are voluntary in defining their rights and obligations, moral claims and duties, although these have an objective existence beyond the control of the will of nations; and, 3. That when international law has arisen by the free assent of those who enter into certain arrangements, obedience to its provisions is as truly in accordance with natural law—which requires the observance of contracts—as if natural law had been intuitively discerned or revealed from heaven and no consent had been necessary at the outset.

ALIENS. It cannot be affirmed that a state is obligated, in strict right, to admit foreigners into or to allow them transit across its territory, or even to hold intercourse with them. All this may be its duty, and perhaps, when its territory affords the only convenient pathway to the rest of the world or its commodities are necessary to others of mankind, transit and intercourse may be enforced. But, aside from these extreme cases, intercourse is only a duty, and not definable with precision, as is shown by the endless varieties of commercial treaties. It can only be said that the practice of Christian states is growing more and more liberal, both as regards admitting foreigners into their territories, and to the enjoyment of those rights of person and property which the natives possess, and as regards domiciling them, or even incorporating them, afterwards, if they desire it, into the body politic. The multiplied and very close relations which have arisen between nations in modern times, through domiciled or temporary residents, have given rise to the question, What law, in particular cases involving personal status, property, contracts, family rights, and succession, shall control the decisions of the courts? Shall it be always the lex loci, or sometimes some other? The answers to these questions are given in private international law, or the conflict of law, as it is sometimes called,—a very interesting branch of law, as showing how the Christian nations are coming from age to age nearer to one another in their views of the private relations of men.

INTERCOURSE requires its agents, both those whose office it is to attend to the relations of states and the rights of their countrymen in general, and those who look after the commercial interests of individuals. The former share with public vessels, and with sovereigns travelling abroad, certain exemptions from the law of the land to which they are sent. Their persons are ordinarily inviolate; they are not subject to foreign, civil, or criminal jurisdiction; they are generally exempt from imposts; they have liberty of worship, and a certain power over their trains, who likewise share their exemptions. Only within five centuries have ambassadors resided permanently abroad—a change which has had an important effect on the relations of states. Consuls have almost none of the privileges of ambassadors, except in countries beyond the pale of Christianity.

RIGHTS IN GENERAL. The rights of the state or nation, as such, may be comprised under the term sovereignty, or be divided into sovereignty, independence, and equality; by which latter term is intended equality of rights. Sovereignty and independence are two sides of the same property, and equality of rights necessarily belongs to sovereign states, whatever be their size or constitution; for no reason can be assigned why all states, as they have the same powers and destination in the system of things, should not have identically the same rights. States are thus, as far as other states are concerned, masters over themselves and over their subjects, free to make such changes in their laws and constitutions as they may choose, and yet incapable by any change, whether it be union, or separation, or whatever else, of escaping existing obligations. With regard to every state, international law only asks whether it be such in reality, whether it actually is invested with the properties of a state. With forms of government international law has nothing to do. All forms of government, under which a state can discharge its obligations and duties to others, are, so far as this code is concerned, equally legitimate. Thus, the rule of non-intervention in the affairs of other states is a well-settled principle of international law. In the European system, however, there is an acknowledged exception to this rule, and also a claim on the part of certain states to a still wider departure from the rule of non-intervention, which other states have not as yet admitted. It is conceded that any political action of any state or states which seriously threatens the existence or safety of others, any disturbance of the balance of power, may be resisted and put down. This must be regarded as an application of the primary principle of self-preservation to the affairs of nations. But when certain states claim a right to interfere in the internal affairs of others in order to suppress constitutional movements and the action of a people without its own sphere, this is as yet an unauthorised ground of interference. The plea here is, on the part of those states which have asserted such a right, especially of Austria, Prussia, Russia, and at times of France, that internal revolutions are the result of widespread conspiracies, and if successful anywhere are fatal to the peace and prosperity of all absolute or non-constitutional governments. The right, if admitted, would destroy by an international law all power of the people in any state over their government, and would place the smaller states under the tutelage of two or three of the larger. England has always protested against this enlargement of the right of interference, and France has established more than one revolutionary government in spite of it.

TERRITORY. As to the question of territory, international law is tolerably clear. Beside the land and water include, within the line of boundary separating one state from another, it regards as territory the coast-water to the distance of a marine league, and the portions of sea within lines drawn between headlands not very remote, or, in other words, those parts of the sea which are closely connected with a particular country when it needs to defend itself against attack, and its laws are exposed to violation. The high sea, on the other hand, is free, and so is every avenue from one part of the sea to another, which is necessary for the intercourse of the world. It has been held that rivers are exclusively under the jurisdiction of countries through which they flow, so that the dwellers on their upper waters have no absolute right of passage to and from the sea; but practically, at present, all the rivers which divide or run through different states, are free for all those who live upon them, if not for all mankind. It has been claimed that ships are territory; but it is safer to say that they are under the jurisdiction of their own state until they come within that of another state. By comity, public vessels are exempt from foreign jurisdiction, whether in foreign ports or elsewhere.

TREATIES. Nations, like individuals, have the rights of contract, and their treaties are subject to the same rules of interpretation and of morality which govern in municipal law. An interesting description of treaties are those of guaranty, by which sometimes a right of intervention in the affairs of other states is secured beforehand. But treaties may be broken, and all other rights invaded; and there is no court of appeal where wrongs done by states can be tried. The rights of self-defence and of redress now arise, and are of such importance that but for redress by force or war, and to prevent war, international law would be a very brief science.

WARFARE. The laws and usages of modern warfare show a great advance of the nations in humanity since the middle ages. The following are among the leading principles and usages:

That declarations of war, as formerly practised, are unnecessary; the change in this respect being due chiefly to the intimate knowledge which nations now have, through resident ambassadors and in other ways, of each other's movements and dispositions.

That at the opening of war the subjects of one hostile state within the territory of another are protected in their persons and property, and this notwithstanding it is conceded that by strict right such property is liable to confiscation.

That war is waged between states, and by the active war agents of the parties, but that non-combatants are to be uninjured in person and property by an invading army. Contributions or requisitions, however, are still collected from a conquered or occupied territory, and property is taken for the uses of armies at a compensation.

That combatants, when surrendering themselves in battle, are spared, and are to be treated with humanity during their captivity, until exchanged or ransomed.

That even public property, when not of a military character, is exempt from the ordinary operations of war, unless necessity requires the opposite course.

That in the storming of inhabited towns great license has hitherto been given to the besieging party; and this is one of the blots of modern as well as of ancient warfare. But humane commanders avoid the bombardment of fortified towns as far as possible; while more fortresses may be assailed in any manner.

The laws of sea-warfare have not as yet come up to the level of those of land-warfare. Especially is capture allowed on the sea in cases where it would not occur on the land. Yet there are indications of a change in this respect; privateering has been abandoned by many states, and there is a growing demand that all capture upon the sea, even from enemies, except for violations of the rules of contraband, blockade, and search, shall cease.

When captures are made on the sea, the title, by modern law, does not fully vest in the captor at the moment, but needs to pass under the revision of a competent court. The captured vessel may be ransomed on the sea, unless municipal law forbids, and the ransom is of the nature of a safe-conduct. If a vessel is recaptured, or rescued from other perils, a compensation is due to the rescuer, which is called salvage; which see.

In modern international law, questions of neutrality play a great part. A neutral is one, strictly, who affords assistance to neither party; for assistance afforded to both alike, in almost every case, would benefit one party and be of little use to the other. The neutral territory, on land and sea, must be untouched by the war; and for all violations of this rule the neutral can take or demand satisfaction.

The principal liabilities of neutral trade are the following:

In regard to the nationality of goods and vessels, the rule, on the whole, has been that enemy's goods were exposed to capture on any vessel, and neutral's safe on any, and that the neutral vessel was not guilty for having enemy's goods on board. Owing to the declaration of the peace of Paris in 1856, the humane rule that free ships make free goods will no doubt become universal.

Certain articles of especial use in war are called contraband, and are liable to capture. But the list has been stretched by belligerents especially by England, so as to include naval stores and provisions; and then, to cure the hardship of the rule, another—the rule of pre-emption—has been introduced. The true doctrine with regard to contraband seems to be that nothing can be so called unless nations have agreed so to consider it; or, in other words, that articles cannot become occasionally contraband owing to the convenience of a belligerent.

An attempt of a neutral ship to enter a blockaded place is a gross violation of neutrality; and, as in cases of contraband trade the goods, so here the guilty vessel, is confiscated. But blockade must exist in fact, and not alone upon paper, must be made known to neutrals, and, if discontinued, must be resumed with a new notification.

To carry out the rights of war, the right of search is indispensable; and such search ought to be submitted to without resistance. Search is exclusively a war right, excepting that vessels in peace can be arrested near the coast on suspicion of violating revenue laws, and anywhere on suspicion of piracy. The slave-trade not being piracy by the law of nations, vessels of other nations cannot be searched on suspicion of being engaged in this traffic. And here comes in the question which has agitated the two leading commercial states of Christendom: How shall it be known that a vessel is of a nationality which renders search unlawful? The English claim, and justly, that they have a right to ascertain this simple fact by detention and examination; the United States contend that if in so doing mistakes are committed, compensation is due, and to this England has agreed.

MEDICAL LAW is that branch of the law which is affected by medical facts, and in which the principles and practice of medicine is required for the elucidation and settlement of doubtful questions arising in the course of judicial proceedings. These questions are embraced in five different classes: they arise: 1. From the relations of sex; as, delivery, hermaphroditism, impotency, legitimacy, pregnancy, rape, sterility. 2. From injuries inflicted upon the living organization; as, Infanticide, poisons, wounds, persons found dead,

3. From disqualifying diseases; as, different forms of mental alienation or derangement.
4. From deceptive practices; as, feigned diseases.
5. From miscellaneous causes; as, age, identity, life insurance, presumption of seniorship, and medical evidence.

ABORTION is the act of miscarrying or producing young before the natural time, or before the fetus is perfectly formed. The expulsion of the fetus during utero-gestation, and before it has acquired the power of sustaining an independent life.

The criminal and unnatural means of producing abortion are of two kinds. General, or those which seek to produce the expulsion through the constitution of the mother, which are cathartics,<sup>a</sup> diuretics,<sup>b</sup> emetics,<sup>c</sup> ammenagogues,<sup>d</sup> and venestion.<sup>e</sup> Local or mechanical means, which consist either of external violence applied to the abdomen or loins, or of instruments introduced into the uterus for the purpose of rupturing the membranes, and thus bringing on premature action of the womb. These local or mechanical means not unfrequently produce the death of the mother, as well as that of the fetus.

The innocent or natural causes of producing abortion are of two kinds. In the mother, as great debility, disease, excessive venereal indulgence, habit of miscarriage, malformation of the pelvis,<sup>f</sup> phthisis,<sup>g</sup> or irritable or nervous temperament in the fetus,<sup>h</sup> or its dependencies; usually disease existing in the ovum,<sup>i</sup> the membranes, placenta, or the fetus itself.

ACCOUCHMENT is delivery in child-bed; the act of giving birth to a child. When it is necessary to prove the filiation of an individual by the accouchment, it may be proven by the direct testimony of one who was present, as a physician, midwife, or other person.<sup>j</sup>

APOPLEXY AND PARALYSIS imply an affection of the brain; supposed to be only different degrees of the same affection. In apoplexy the patient is suddenly deprived of consciousness and sensibility, and so continues for a period varying from a few hours to a few days, when he dies or begins to recover. The recovery may, however, be imperfect, leaving some mental impairment, or loss of power in the muscles of voluntary motion, remaining for a time, if not for life. In paralysis there is a loss of power in some of the voluntary muscles—those of the arms, eyes, face, or legs; it may be the sequel of apoplexy, or it may be the primary affection; occurring very much like an attack of apoplexy. Apoplexy is the abolition of sense and voluntary motion, from suspension of the functions of the cerebrum; apparent death; suspended animation, as fainting, swooning. Paralysis is an abolition of function, whether of intellect, general or special sensation, sympathetic or voluntary motion.

In cases where wills are made in that equivocal condition which sometimes follows an attack of apoplexy or paralysis, and their validity is contested on the score of mental incompetency, there are generally two questions at issue, viz.: 1. The absolute amount of mental impairment; and 2. The degree of foreign influence exerted upon the testator. These questions cannot be considered independently of each other; neither of them alone might be sufficient to invalidate an act, while together they might have that effect.

In testing the mental capacity of paralytics, reference should be had to the nature of the act in question. The question is, "Had the testator sufficient mental capacity to make the will in dispute?" and not "Had he sufficient capacity to make a will?" In order to arrive at correct conclusions on this point, we must remember, among other things, that the power to appreciate the terms of a proposition must not be confounded with the power to discern its consequences and relations.

In testing the mental capacity of one who has lost the power of speech, it is difficult, and often impossible, to arrive at correct results. If the person is able and willing to communicate his thoughts in writing, his mental capacity may be clearly revealed. If not disposed to write he may communicate by constructing sentences by the help of the alphabet, block letters, or dictionary; falling in this, resort must be had to the expression of assent or dissent by signs to propositions made by others. If the act in question is complicated in its relations, unreasonable in its dispositions, or bears the slightest trace of foreign influence, it will be regarded with suspicion; for a will thus drawn is not absolutely the will of the testator, since every disposition originated in the minds of others.<sup>k</sup>

ASPHYXY is suspended animation, particularly from suffocation or drowning, or the inspiration of irrespirable gases; a temporary suspension of the motion of the heart and arteries; cessation of breathing and pulsation; fainting; swooning. Where the cause of asphyxy becomes the subject of legal inquiry, it is necessary to ascertain whether the person has been deprived of his senses by accident, by his own act, or as the victim of another. See DEATH, below.

BIRTH is the act of bringing forth a human being, or of its coming into life, of its being wholly born. The conditions of live birth are not satisfied when a part of the body is born; the whole body must be brought into the world, and detached from that of the mother (but it is not necessary that there should be a separation of the umbilical cord; that may still connect the child with its mother); and after this event the child must be alive. The circulating system must also be changed, and the child must have an independent circulation.

Breathing, though a usual sign of life, is not conclusive that a child was wholly born alive, as breathing may take place before the whole delivery of the mother is complete.

Delivery or child-birth; the act of a woman in giving birth to a child.

If the female be examined within three or four days after the occurrence of delivery, the following circumstances will generally be observed: greater or less weakness, a slight paleness of the face, the eye a little sunken and surrounded by a purplish or dark-brown colored ring, and a whiteness of the skin like that of a person convalescing from disease. The belly is soft, the skin of the abdomen is lax, lies in folds, and is traversed in various directions by shining reddish and whitish lines, which especially extend from the groin and pubes to the navel. These lines have sometimes been termed linea albicans, and are particularly observed near the umbilical region, where the abdomen has experienced the greatest distension. The breasts become tumid and hard, and, on pressure, emit a fluid, which at first is serous and afterwards gradually becomes whiter; and the presence of this secretion is generally accompanied with a full pulse and soft skin, covered with a moisture of a peculiar and somewhat acid odor. The areolae round the nipples are dark-colored. The external genital organs and vagina are dilated and tumefied throughout the whole of their extent, from the pressure of the fetus. The uterus may be felt through the abdominal parietes, voluminous, firm, and globular, and rising nearly as high as the umbilicus. Its orifice is soft and tumid, and dilated so as to admit two or more fingers. The fourchette, or anterior margin of the perinæum, is sometimes torn, or it is lax, and appears to have suffered considerable distension. A discharge (termed the lochial) commences from the uterus, which is distinguished from the menses by its pale color, its peculiar and well-known smell, and its duration. The lochia are at first of a red color, and gradually become lighter until they cease.

These signs may generally be relied upon as indicating the state of pregnancy; yet it requires much experience in order not to be deceived by appearances.

The lochial discharge might be mistaken for menstruation, or fluor albus, were it not for its peculiar smell; and this it has been found impossible, by any artifice, to destroy.

Relaxation of the soft parts arises as frequently from menstruation as from delivery; but in these cases the os uteri and vagina are not so much tumefied, nor is there that tenderness and swelling. The parts are found pale and flabby when all signs of contusion disappear after delivery; and this circumstance does not follow menstruation.

The presence of milk, though a usual sign of delivery, is not always to be relied upon; for this secretion may take place independent of pregnancy.

The wrinkles and relaxation of the abdomen which follow delivery may be the consequence of dropsy, or of lankness following great obesity. This state of the parts is also seldom striking after the birth of the first child, as they shortly resume their natural state.

Concealed delivery generally takes place when the woman either has destroyed her offspring or it was born dead. In suspected cases the following circumstances should be attended to: 1. The proofs of pregnancy which arise in consequence of the examination of the mother. When she has been pregnant, and has been delivered, the usual signs of delivery, mentioned above, will be present. A careful investigation as to the woman's appearance before and since the delivery will have some weight; though such evidence is not always to be relied upon, as such appearances are not unfrequently deceptive. 2. The proofs of recent delivery. 3. The connection between the supposed state of parturition and the state of the child that is found; for if the age of the child do not correspond to that time it will be a strong circumstance in favor of the mother's innocence. A redness of the skin and an attachment of the umbilical cord to the navel indicate a recent birth. Whether the child was living at its birth, belongs to the subject of infanticide, which see below.

Protracted delivery may present itself in three points of view. 1. When the female who feigns has never been pregnant. When thoroughly investigated, this may always be detected. There are signs which must be present and cannot be feigned. An enlargement of the orifice of the uterus, and a tumefaction of the organs of generation, should always be present, and if absent are conclusive against the fact. 2. When the pretended pregnancy and delivery have been preceded by one or more deliveries. In this case attention should be given to the following circumstances: the mystery, if any, which has been affected with regard to the situation of the female; her age; that of her husband; and particularly, whether aged or decrepit. 3. When the woman has been actually delivered, and substitutes a living for a dead child. But little evidence can be obtained on this subject from a physical examination.

Monsters. (Beings contrary in conformation to the order of nature; unnatural creations.)<sup>1</sup> Although born of women in lawful wedlock, cannot inherit. Those who have, however, the essential parts of the human form, and have merely some defect of conformation, are capable of inheriting if otherwise qualified.<sup>2</sup> See DELIVERY, below.

No living human birth, however much it may differ from human shape, can be lawfully destroyed.<sup>3</sup> The killing of a child, though joined to its mother by the umbilical cord, is murder.<sup>4</sup>

BRUISES are injuries produced by violence upon the person without breaking the continuity of the skin. It is nearly synonymous with contusion.<sup>5</sup>

See CONTUSIONS; WOUNDS, below.

COMMON-SENSE is the common association, judgment, and perception in relation to persons and things which agrees with that of the generality of mankind. When a particular individual differs from the generality of mankind or persons in these respects, he is said not to have common sense, or not to be in his senses.<sup>6</sup>

CONTUSIONS are injuries arising from shocks of the body with large surfaces, which presents no loss of substance and no apparent wound. If the skin be divided, the injury takes the name of a contused wound.<sup>7</sup>

DELIRIUM FEBRILE is a mental aberration incident to fevers, and sometimes in the last stages of chronic diseases.

The aberration is mostly of a subjective character, maintained by the inward activity of the mind rather than by outward impressions. "Regardless of persons or things around him, and scarcely capable of recognizing them when aroused by his attendants, the patient retires within himself, to dwell upon the scenes and events of the past, which pass before it in wild and disorderly array, while the tongue feebly records the varying impressions, in the form of disjointed, incoherent discourse, or of senseless rhapsody."<sup>8</sup> It comes on gradually, being first manifested by talking while asleep, and by a momentary forgetfulness of persons and things on waking. Fully aroused, however, the mind becomes clear and tranquil, and so continues until the return of sleep, when the same incidents recur. Gradually the mental disorder becomes more intense, and the intervals between its returns of shorter duration, until they disappear altogether. Occasionally the past is revived with wonderful vividness, and acquirements are displayed which the patient before his illness had entirely forgotten. Instances are related of persons speaking in a language which, though acquired in youth, had long since passed from their memory.

The only acts which can possibly be affected by delirium are wills, which are often made in the last illness during the periods when the mind is apparently clear. Under such circumstances it may be questioned whether the apparent clearness was or was not real; and it is a question not always easily answered. In the early stages of delirium the mind may be quite clear, no doubt, in the intervals, while it is no less certain that there comes a period at last when no really lucid interval occurs and the mind is reliable at no time. The person may be still, and even answer questions with some degree of pertinence, while a close examination would show the mind to be in a dreamy condition and unable to appreciate any nice relations. In all these cases the question to be met is, whether the delirium which confessedly existed before the act left upon the mind no trace of its influence; whether the testator, calm, quiet, clear, and coherent as he seemed, was not quite unconscious of the nature of the act he was performing. The state of things implied in these questions is not fanciful. In every case it may possibly exist, and the questions must be met.

After obtaining all the light which can be thrown on the mental condition of the testator by nurses, servants, and physicians, then the character of the act itself and the circumstances which accompany it require a careful investigation. If it should appear that the mind was apparently clear, and that the act was a rational act rationally done, consistent one part with another, and in accordance with wishes or instructions previously expressed, and without any appearance of foreign influence, then it would be established. A different state of things would to that extent raise suspicion and throw discredit on the act. Yet at the very best it will occasionally happen, so dubious sometimes are the indications, that the decision will be largely conjectural.<sup>9</sup>

DELIRIUM TREMENS (Mania a potu) is a mental disorder induced by the excessive and prolonged use of intoxicating liquors. It generally appears as a sequel to a few days abstinence.

The nature of the connection between this disease and abstinence is not yet clearly understood. Where the former succeeds a broken limb, or any other severe accident that confines the patient to his bed and obliges him to abstain, it would seem as if its development were are found in the vicinity; and all such instruments should be carefully preserved, so that they may be identified.<sup>6</sup>

As thorough an examination as possible should be made of the body before changing its position, or that of any of the limbs, or varying in any respect its relations with surrounding bodies. So, also, of the wounds, if any, in order from their nature, character, form, and appearance, to determine the instrument by which they were inflicted, and also their agency in causing the death, the direction from which they were dealt, their extent, depth, vessels severed, etc. So, also, of the clothes worn by the deceased, and any parts torn, or presenting any unusual appearance. A memorandum should be made of the color of the skin, the temperature of the body, the existence and extent of cadaveric rigidity of the muscular system, the state of the eyes and sphincter muscles, noting at the same time whatever swellings, ecchymosis, or livid, black, or yellow spots, wounds, ulcers, contusions, fractures, or luxation may be present. The fluids which have exuded from the nose, mouth, ears, sexual organs, etc., should be carefully noted; and when the deceased is a female, it will be proper to examine the sexual organs with care, with a view of ascertaining whether before death the crime of rape had or had not been committed. The amount of decomposition should also be noted, with a view of determining when the death took place.

Evidence of Death by Violence. This involves the inquiry, as to the cause of death in all cases of the finding of bodies divested of life through unknown agencies. It seeks to gather all the evidence furnished by the body and surrounding circumstances bearing upon this difficult, and, at best, doubtful subject; it more immediately concerns the duties of the coroner; but is liable to come up subsequently for a more thorough and searching investigation. Hence, its brevity here needs no comment.

The first point for determination is, whether the death was the act of God, or the result of violence. Sudden death is generally produced by a powerful invasion of the living forces that develop themselves in the heart, brain, or lungs; the first is called syncope,<sup>7</sup> the second, apoplexy,<sup>8</sup> and the third, asphyxia.<sup>9</sup> The two last are the most important to be understood in connection with the subject of persons found dead.

In death from apoplexy, the sudden invasion of the brain destroys innervation, by which the circulation is arrested, each side of the heart containing its due proportion of blood, and the cavities are all distended from loss of power to propel its contents. Death by apoplexy is disclosed by a certain apoplectic make, or form of body, consisting of a large head, short neck, and plethoric frame, from the posture in which the body is found, and the appearance revealed by dissection, particularly in the head.

Death by asphyxia is more important to be understood. It is limited to cases where the heart's action is made to cease through the interruption of the respiration, or breathing. It is accomplished by all the possible modes of excluding atmospheric air from the lungs. The appearance in the body indicating death by asphyxia are: violent discoloration, eyes prominent, firm, and brilliant; cadaveric rigidity early and well marked; venous system of the brain full of blood; lungs distended with thick, dark-colored blood; liver, spleen, and kidneys gorged; right cavities of the heart distended, the left almost empty.

Death by burning presents a narrow white line surrounding the burnt spot; external to that, one of a deep-red tint, running by degrees into a diffused redness. This is succeeded in a few minutes by blisters filled with serum.

Death by cold leaves few traces in the system. Pale surface, general congestion of internal organs, sometimes effused serum in the ventricles of the brain.

Death by drowning is caused by asphyxia from suffocation by nervous, or syncopeal asphyxia, or, by asphyxia from cerebral congestion. In the first, besides other indications of asphyxia, the face is pale or violet, a frothy foam at the mouth, froth in the larynx, trachea, and bronchi, water in the trachea, and sometimes in the ramifications of the bronchia, and also in the stomach. In the second, the face and skin are pale, the trachea empty, lungs and brain natural, and no water in the stomach. In the third, the usual indications of death by apoplexy are found on examination of the brain.

Death by hanging is produced by asphyxia suspending respiration by compressing the larynx, by apoplexy pressing upon the veins and preventing the returning of blood from the head, by fracture of the cervical vertebra, laceration of trachea or larynx, or rupture of the ligaments of the neck, or by compressing the nerves of the neck. The signs and indications depend upon the cause of death. Among these are: face livid and swollen, lips distended, eyelids swollen, eyes red and projecting, tongue enlarged, livid, compressed, froth about the lips and nostrils, a deep ecchymosed marked cord about the neck, sometimes ecchymosed patches on different parts of the body, fingers contracted or clenched, and the body retaining its animal heat longer than in other modes of death.

Death by strangulation presents much the same appearance as death by hanging, the mark of the cord being lower on the neck, more horizontal, and plainer and more distinctly ecchymosed.

Death by starvation produces general emaciation; eyes and cheeks sunken; bones projecting; face pale and ghastly; eyes red and open; skin, mouth, and fauces dry; gall bladder large and distended; body exhaling a fetid odor; heart, lungs, and large vessels collapsed; early commencement of putrefactive process.

DELUSION is a diseased state of the mind, in which persons believe things to exist which exist only, or in the degree they are conceived of only, in their own imaginations, with a persuasion so fixed and firm that neither evidence nor argument can convince them to the contrary. The individual is, of course, insane. For example, should a parent unjustly persist, without the least ground, in attributing to his daughter a course of vice, and use her with uniform unkindness, there not being the slightest pretence or color of reason for the supposition, a just inference of insanity or delusion would arise in the minds of a jury; because a supposition long entertained and persisted in, after argument to the contrary, and against the natural affections of a parent, suggests that he must labor under some morbid mental delusion.<sup>1</sup>

DEMENTIA is a mild form of insanity characterized by mental weakness and decrepitude, and a total inability to reason correctly or incorrectly. The mind dwells only in the past, and the thoughts succeed one another without any obvious bond of association. Delusions, if they exist, are transitory, and leave no permanent impression; and for everything recent the memory is exceedingly weak. In mania, the action of the mind is marked by force, hurry, and intensity; in dementia, by slowness and weakness. It is mostly the sequel of mania, of which, in fact, it is the natural termination. Occasionally it occurs in an acute form in young subjects; and here only it is curable. In old men, in whom it often occurs, it is called senile dementia, and it indicates the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of the bodily decay. It is this form of dementia only which gives rise to litigation; for in the others the incompetency is too patent to admit of question. It cannot be described by any positive characters, because it differs in the different stages of its progress, varying from simple lapse of memory to complete inability to recognize persons or things. And it must be borne in mind that often the mental infirmity is not so serious as might be supposed at first sight. Many an old man who seems to be scarcely conscious of what is passing around him, and is guilty of frequent breaches of decorum, needs only to have his attention aroused to a matter in which he is deeply interested, to show no lack of vigor or acuteness. In other words, the mind may be damaged superficially, while it may be sound at the core. And therefore it is that one may be quite oblivious of names and dates, while comprehending perfectly well his relations to others and the interests in which he was concerned. It follows that the impressions made upon casual or ignorant observers in regard to the mental condition are of far less value than those made upon persons who have been well acquainted with his habits and have had occasion to test the vigor of his faculties.

The wills of old men are often contested on the ground of senile dementia, and the conflicting testimony of observers, the proofs of foreign influence, and the indications of mental capacity all combine to render it no easy task to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. The only general rule of much practical value is that competency must be always measured, not by any fancied standard of intellect, but solely by the requirements of the act in question. A small and familiar matter would require less mental power than one complicated in its details and somewhat new to the testator's experience. Less capacity would be necessary to distribute an estate between a wife and child than between a multitude of relatives with unequal claims upon his bounty. Such is the principle; and the ends of justice cannot be better served than by its correct and faithful application. Of course, there will always be more or less difficulty; but generally, by discarding all legal and metaphysical subtleties and following the leading of common sense, it will be satisfactorily surmounted.

The legal principles by which the courts are governed are not essentially different whether the mental incapacity proceed from dementia or mania. If the will coincides with the previously expressed wishes of the testator, if it recognizes the claims of those who stand in near relation to him, if it shows no indications of undue influence—if, in short, it is a rational act rationally done—it will be established, and very properly so, though there may have been considerable impairment of mind. See INSANITY, below.

DRUNKENNESS is the condition of a person who is under the immediate influence of intoxicating liquors.

This condition presents various degrees of intensity, ranging from a simple exhilaration to a state of utter unconsciousness and insensibility. In the popular phrase, the term drunkenness is applied only to those degrees of it in which the mind is manifestly disturbed in its operations. In the earlier stages it frequently happens that the mind is not only not disturbed, but acts with extraordinary clearness, promptitude, and vigor. In the latter the thoughts obviously succeed one another without much relevance or coherence, the perceptive faculties are active, but the impressions are misconceived, as if they passed through a distorting medium, and the reflective powers cease to act with any degree of efficiency. Some of the intermediate stages may be easily recognised; but it is not always possible to fix upon the exact moment when they succeed one another. In some persons peculiarly constituted, a fit of intoxication presents few if any of these successive stages, and the mind rapidly loses its self-control, and for the time is actually frenzied, as if in a maniacal paroxysm, though the amount of the drink may be comparatively small. The same phenomena is observed sometimes in persons who have had some injury of the head, who are deprived of their reason by the slightest indulgence.

The habitual abuse of intoxicating drinks is usually followed by a pathological condition of the brain, which is manifested by a degree of intellectual obtuseness, and some insensibility to moral distinctions once readily discerned. The mind is more exposed to the force of foreign influences, and more readily induced to regard things in the light to which others have directed them. In others it produces a permanent mental derangement, which, if the person continues to indulge, is easily mistaken by common observers for the immediate effects of hard drinking. These two results—the mediate and the immediate effects of drinking—may co-exist; but it is no less necessary to distinguish them from each other, because their legal consequences may be very different. Moved by the latter, a person goes into the street and abuses or assaults his neighbors; moved by the former, the same person makes his will, and cuts off those who have the strongest claims upon his bounty with a shilling. In a judicial investigation, one class of witnesses will attribute all his extravagances to drink, while another will see nothing in them but the effect of insanity. The medical jurist should not be misled by either party, but be able to refer each particular act to its proper source.

Another remarkable form of drunkenness is called dipsomania. Rather suddenly, and perhaps without much preliminary indulgence, a person manifests an insatiable thirst for strong drink, which no considerations of propriety or prudence can induce him to control. He generally retires to some secluded place, and there, during a period of a few days or weeks, he swallows enormous quantities of liquor, until his stomach refuses to bear any more. Vomiting succeeds, followed by sickness, depression, and disgust for all intoxicating drinks.

This affection is often periodical, the paroxysms recurring at periods varying from three months to several years. Sometimes the indulgence is more continuous and limited, sufficient, however, to derange the mind, without producing sickness, and equally beyond control. Dipsomania may result from moral causes, such as anxiety, disappointment, grief, sense of responsibility; or physical, consisting chiefly of some anomalous condition of the stomach.

The common law shows but little disposition to afford relief, either in civil or criminal cases, from the immediate effects of drunkenness. It has never considered drunkenness alone as a sufficient reason for invalidating any act. When carried so far as to deprive the party of all consciousness, strong presumption of fraud is raised; and on that ground courts may interfere.<sup>1</sup> Drunkenness in such a degree as to render the testator unconscious of what he is about, or less capable of resisting the influence of others, avoids a will.<sup>2</sup> In action for torts, drunkenness is not regarded as a reason for mitigating damages.<sup>3</sup> And courts of equity decline to interfere in favor of parties pleading intoxication in the performance of a civil act.<sup>4</sup> The law does, however, recognise two kinds of inculpable drunkenness, viz.: that which is produced by the "unkilfulness of his physician," and that which is produced by the "contrivance of enemies."<sup>5</sup> To this may be added cases where a party drinks no more liquor than he has habitually used without being intoxicated, and which exerts an unusually potent effect on the brain in consequence of certain pathological conditions.<sup>6</sup>

EMISSION is the act of sending out or throwing from the body any matter whatever, as the emission of urine, emission of semen, etc. Emission is not necessary in the commission of a rape to complete the offence.<sup>7</sup> It is, however, essential in the offence of sodomy.<sup>8</sup>

EPILEPSY is the falling sickness; so called because the patient falls suddenly to the ground; it is a disease characterised by general muscular agitation occasioned by clonic spasms (that is, spasms in which the muscles, or muscular fibres, contract and relax alternately in quick succession, producing the appearance of agitation without sensation or consciousness, and commonly recurring at intervals.) When long continued and violent, this disease is very apt to end in dementia. It gradually destroys the memory, and impairs the intellect, and is one of the causes of an unsound mind.<sup>9</sup>

FÆTUS is the human being from the time its parts are distinctly formed until its birth; an unborn child; an infant in its mother's womb.

Until about the middle of the fourth month it is called embryo. At that time the development of the principal organs begins to be evident and they present something of their mature form.

Although it is often important to know the age of the fetus, there is great difficulty in ascertaining the fact with the precision required in courts of law. Nothing on this subject can be learned solely from its weight, size, or progress towards maturity.

The great difference between children at birth, as regards their weight and size, is an indication of their condition while within the womb, and is a sufficient evidence that nothing can be decided as to the age of the fetus by its weight and size at different periods of its existence.

Thousands of healthy infants have been weighed immediately after birth, and the extremes have been found to be two and eighteen pounds. It is very rare indeed to find any weighing as little as two pounds, but by no means uncommon to find them weighing four pounds. So it is with the length, which varies as much as that of the adult does from the average height of the race.

Neither can anything positive be learned from the progress of development; for although the condition of the bones, cartilages, and other parts will generally mark with tolerable accuracy the age of a healthy fetus, yet an uncertainty will arise when it is found to be unhealthy.
It has been clearly proved, by numerous dissections of new-born children, that the fetus is subject to diseases which interfere with the proper formation of parts, exhibiting traces of previous departure from health, which had interfered with the proper formation of parts and arrested the process of development.

Interesting as the different periods of development may be to the philosophical inquirer, they cannot be of much value in legal inquiries, from their extreme uncertainty in denoting precisely the age of the fetus by unerring conditions.

GESTATION is the period during which a woman carries young in her womb, from conception to delivery; it is pregnancy. This directly involves the question of the duration of pregnancy, questions concerning which most frequently occur in cases of contested legitimacy. That which is termed the usual period of pregnancy is ten lunar months, forty weeks, two hundred and eighty days, equal to about nine calendar months and one week. One question that has here been much discussed is whether the period of gestation has a fixed limit, or is capable of being contracted or protracted beyond the usual term. Many have claimed that the laws of nature on this subject are immutable, and that the fetus, at a fixed period, has received all the nourishment of which it is susceptible from the mother, and becomes as it were a foreign body. Its expulsion is, therefore, a physical necessity. Others claim, and with stronger reasons, that as all the functions of the human body that have been carefully observed are variable, and sometimes within wide limits, and as many observations and experiments in reference to the cow and horse have established the fact that in the period of utero-gestation there is more variation with them than in the human species, there should remain no doubt that this period in the latter is always liable to variation. There are some women to whom it is peculiar always to have the normal time of delivery anticipated by two or three weeks, so that they never go beyond the end of the thirty-seventh or thirty-eighth week, for several pregnancies in succession.<sup>1</sup> So, also, there are many cases establishing the fact that the usual period is sometimes exceeded by one, two, or more weeks, the limits of which it is difficult or impossible to determine. Lord Coke seems inclined to adopt a peremptory rule that forty weeks is the longest time allowed by law for gestation.<sup>2</sup>

But although the law of some countries prescribes the time from conception within which the child must be born to be legitimate, that of England and America fixes no precise limit, but admits the possibility of the birth's occurring previous or subsequent to the usual time.
The following are cases in which this question
PREGNANCY, below.

GOUT is an inflammation of the fibrous and ligamentous parts of the joints; it is a chronic disease occurring by paroxysms; the paroxysms exacerbating (increasing its violence) and remitting. It consists essentially in a perfectly specific and topical (local) inflammation, having its regular seat in the largest joint of the great toe; and an equally specific and peculiar constitutional febrile (fever) affection. The forms of this disease are very irregular, numerous, and various. In cases of insurance on lives, when there is warranty of death, a man subject to gout is capable of being insured, if he has no sickness at the time to make it an unequal contract.<sup>4</sup>

HALLUCINATION is the faulty sense of erroneous imagination. Hallucinations of the senses arise from some defect in the organs of sense, or from some unusual circumstances attending the object. They are sometimes symptoms of general disease, as in fevers. Maniacal hallucinations arise from some imaginary or mistaken idea; similar hallucinations occur in reverie.
This state of the mind is sometimes called delusion, or waking dreams. An attempt has been made to distinguish hallucinations from illusions; the former are said to be dependent upon the state of the intellectual organs, and the latter on that of sense.<sup>5</sup> An instance is given of a temporary hallucination of Ben Jonson. He told a friend that he had spent many a night in looking at his great toe, about which he had seen Turks and Tartars, Romans and Carthaginians, fight in his imagination.<sup>3</sup> This example is unfair both to Jonson and the reader, for it seems tortured out of merely casual remarks of this eminent poet. If, instead of being temporary, this affection is permanent, then it may be considered insanity.

HERMAPHRODITES are human beings who have in appearance the sexual organs of both sexes, having the parts of generation of both male and female. Hermaphrodites are adjudged to belong to that sex which prevails in them.<sup>5</sup> The several characteristics of the human species are widely separated, and the two sexes are never, perhaps, united in the same individual.<sup>6</sup> Cases of malformation, however, sometimes are found, in which it is very difficult to decide to which sex the person belongs.<sup>4</sup>

HUNGER. See DEATH FROM, above.

IDIOCY is a natural defect of the understanding; a form of insanity resulting either from congenital (natural) defect or some obstacle to the development of the faculties in infancy. It always implies some defect or disease of the brain, which is generally smaller than the standard size and irregular in its shape and proportions. Occasionally the head is unnaturally large, being distended by water. The senses are very imperfect at best, and one or more are often entirely wanting. Noise can articulate more than a few words; while many utter only cries or muttered sounds. Some make known their wants by signs or sounds which are intelligible to those who have charge of them. The head, the features, the expression, the movements, all convey the idea of extreme mental deficiency. The reflective faculties are entirely wanting, whereby they are utterly incapable of any effort of reasoning. The perceptive faculties exist in a very limited degree, and hence they are rendered capable of being improved somewhat by education, and redeemed, in some measure, from their brutish condition. They have been led into habits of propriety and decency, have been taught some of the elements of learning, and have learned some of the coarser industrial occupations. The moral sentiments, such as self-esteem, love of approbation, veneration, benevolence, are not unfrequently manifested; while some propensities, such as cunning, destructiveness, sexual impulse, are particularly active.

In some parts of Europe a form of idio-cy prevails endemically (in a manner peculiar to a people or nation), called cretinism. It is associated with disease or defective development of other organs besides the head. Cretins are short in stature, their limbs are attenuated, the belly tumid, the neck thick. The muscular system is feeble, and their voluntary movements restrained and undecided. The power of language is very imperfect, if not entirely wanting. In the least degraded forms of this disease, the perceptive powers may be somewhat developed, and the individual may evince some talent at music or construction. In Switzerland they make parts of watches. Unlike idiocy, cretinism is not congenital, but is gradually developed in the early years of childhood. It is owing chiefly to atmospheric causes, and is transmitted from one generation to another. Both idiocy and cretinism exhibit various degrees of mental deficiency, but they never approximate to any description of men supposed to be rational, nor can any amount of education efface the chasm which separates them from their better-endowed fellow-men. The older law-writers, whose observation of mental manifestations was not very profound, thought it necessary to have some test of idiocy; and accordingly Fitzherbert says, "If he have sufficient understanding to know and understand his letters, and to read by teaching or information, he is not an idiot."<sup>7</sup> Again, he says, "A man is not an idiot if he hath any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents his age, or the like common matters." The inference was, no doubt, that such a man is responsible for his criminal acts. At the present day such an idea would not be entertained for a moment, nor are we aware of any case on record of an idiot suffering capital punishment. Of course, they are totally incapable of any civil acts; but in this country—in some of the States, at least—they would not be deprived from exercising the right of suffrage. See INSANITY, below.

ILLUSION is deceptive appearance; it is a species of mania, in which the sensibility of the nervous system is altered, excited, perverted, or weakened. The patient is deceived by the false appearance of things, and his reason is not sufficiently active and powerful to correct the error; and this last particular is what distinguishes the sane from the insane. Illusions are not unfrequently a state of health, but reason corrects the error and dissipates them. A square tower, seen from a distance, may appear round, but on approaching it the error is corrected. A distant mountain may be taken for a cloud, but as we approach we discover the truth. To a person in the cabin of a vessel under sail, the shore appears to move; but reflection and a closer examination soon destroy this illusion. An insane individual is mistaken on the qualities, connections, and causes of the impressions he actually receives, and he forms wrong judgments as to his internal and external sensations; and his reason does not correct the error.<sup>8</sup> See HALLUCINATION, above.

their voluntary movements. The power of intellect, if not entirely wanting, may be somewhat developed, and may evince some talent at times. In Switzerland they are called "idiot savants." Unlike idiocy, cretinism is gradually developed during years of childhood. It is a cerebral disease, and is inherited from one generation to another. Idiots exhibit various degrees of deficiency, but they never acquire any amount of education which separates them from their fellow-men. The observation of mental manifestations is very profound, thought is a strong test of idiocy; as Herbert says, "If he have the ability to know and understand, he can be taught to read by teaching or in an idiot." Again, he says, "If he hath any glimmering that he can tell his parents of common matters." The defect, that such a man is incapable of rational acts. At the present time he is not entertained for any case on which capital punishment is totally incapable of any country—in some of the cases he would not be debarred of the right of suffrage. See INT

MENTAL DEFECT; it is a defect which the sensibility of the mind is altered, excited, perverted, or destroyed. The patient is deceived in his judgment, and his activity is weak and feeble, and his intellect is not fully active and powerful to the extent of this last particular is the same from the insane. The patient is in a state of health, but the error and delirium are not seen from a distance, but on approaching it the error is discovered. A distant mountain may appear to be a plain, but as we approach we find it to be a mountain. To a person in the cabin of a ship, the shore appears to be a plain, but as we approach and a closer examination is made, the true nature of the land is discovered. An insane individual is in a state of health, but the error and delirium are not seen from a distance, but on approaching it the error is discovered. See HAL

IMBECILITY is weakness; want of strength; feebleness of body and mind; not possessing the vigor that usually belongs to men, and which is necessary to the due performance of the functions of the body and intellect. It may be natural, or induced by violence or disease. It may be congenital (natural) or resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.

Generally, it is manifested both in the intellectual and moral faculties; but occasionally it is limited to the latter, the former being but little, if at all, below the ordinary standard. Hence it is distinguished into intellectual and moral. In the former there are seldom any of the repulsive features of idiocy, the head, face, limbs, movements, being scarcely distinguishable, at first sight, from those of the race at large. The senses are not manifestly deficient, nor the power of articulation; though the use of language may be very limited. The perceptive faculties exhibit some activity; and thus the more obvious qualities of things are observed and remembered. Simple industrial operations are well performed, and, generally, whatever requires but little intelligence is readily accomplished. Occasionally a solitary faculty is prominently, even wonderfully developed,—the person excelling, for instance, in music, in arithmetical calculations, or mechanical skill, far beyond the ordinary measure. For any process of reasoning, or any general observation or abstract ideas, imbeciles are totally incompetent. Of law, justice, morality, property, they have but a very imperfect notion. Some of the affective faculties are usually active, particularly those which lead to evil habits, thieving, incendiarism, drunkenness, homicide, assaults on women.
