GREAT BRITAIN TAKES A HAND

Case of Child Kidnapping Has Developed an International Side.

BOSTON, June 18.—An international phase has developed in the case of the Sully child of Malden, who were taken to Denver by their aunt, Mrs. Bella Fenwick.

Through the efforts of Sir Mortimer Durand, British ambassador at Washington, and Captain W. W. Weyland, British consul here, papers have been obtained from the British government calling for the arrest of Mrs. Fenwick on the charge of having kidnapped Reita Sully from Malden on Feb. 14, and Mabel Sully from Montreal, Que., last year.

When it was discovered that Mrs. Fenwick was keeping a lodging house in Denver, Governor Gault issued requisition papers, and an inspector and John Sully, a travelling salesman, and father of the child, went to Denver to bring them back. Governor McDonald of Colorado refused to honor the Massachusetts papers.

The only remaining course for the father was to appeal to the British government, of which he and the children are subjects.

Massachusetts officials received word yesterday that the United States officers will be given the papers and ordered to serve them on Mrs. Fenwick in Denver. If the service is successful, Mrs. Fenwick and the two children will be taken to Montreal.

HIS INJURIES PROVED FATAL

Man Who Was Injured by Falling From E. F. Greany's House Died Yesterday.

George T. McNutt, the carpenter who was so severely injured on Thursday last while working on E. F. Greany's house, on King street east, died yesterday at the General Public Hospital. He was 33 years of age and leaves one son and three daughters, his wife having predeceased him. Coroner Berryman has been looking into the case and has decided that an inquest is unnecessary. McNutt was working on a scaffolding about twenty feet above the sidewalk, and, in loosening a board, he lost his balance and fell to the ground.

The body will be taken from his late residence on Meadow street to Truro, N. S., where interment will be made.

LABOR TROUBLE ENDS FATALLY

One Sailor Killed Three Others Wounded in Row

IN 'FRISCO HARBOR

Non-union Sailors on Schooner Fired Upon Union Delegation That Came to Induce Them to Quit Work—Result Fatal.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 16.—As the result of lockouts and the trouble existing between the shipowners and union sailors in San Francisco, one union sailor was shot and killed and three were wounded last night. The dead man is Andrew Kellner.

The shooting occurred when a launch, occupied by about 15 union sailors was fired from the schooner National City as it lay near the Union Iron Works.

According to the men who were in the launch, several volleys were fired at them without warning when they were within a few feet of the schooner.

It is said that it was the intention of the union sailors to make an attempt to have the non-union crew of the National City desert the vessel, which was scheduled to sail today. As a part of the plan to carry out the non-union movement, a launch was engaged and filled with volunteers from the Sailors' Union.

The trip was made with utmost secrecy, but it is evident that the men on the National City were expecting a visit.

After the launch came up to the National City, a rifle was thrust over the side of the schooner and a shot rang out, followed by several volleys in rapid succession. The terrified union men immediately sought the shelter of the small cabin.

THE RUSSIAN STORM THREATENS TO BREAK AND DELUGE COUNTRY

Unhappy Russia Faces Most Serious Crisis—Conditions Daily Grow Worse—Anarchy and Lawlessness on the Increase—Government Fears Repetition of November Troubles.

ANARCHY AND LAWLESSNESS

ST. PETERSBURG, June 18.—The constitutional democrats seem almost ready to throw in their lot with the revolutionists. The popular agitation is so great that as a caucus lasting three mornings the question of changing the party's tactics and abandoning any further attempt to postpone an open rupture with the government was seriously debated. M. Reditcheff, and M. Naboukoff, leaders of the constitutional democrats in the lower house, led the Radical wing, urging the absolute necessity of keeping pace with the revolutionist movement and insisting that unless they moved forward to battle immediately they would be overwhelmed and left stranded.

Prof. Mikhoff, M. Vlaver and others counselled caution, saying it was not yet time to begin the storm, but the Radicals were in the majority.

The Novoe Vremya today says that the constitutional democrats have actually resolved to break with the government within a few days, but M. Struve, editor of the Osvobodjennie, informed the Associated Press that no decision had been taken. He admitted, however, that the leaders' plans were secret. Many of the Liberals fear a rupture and regard the contemplated step as a grave error.

The government seems to fear a repetition of the November mutiny at Cronstadt, where the sailors and marines and the soldiers and workmen are reported to be extremely turbulent. Two infantry regiments have been lately dispatched to Cronstadt from Krampoye Solo, 12 miles southeast of St. Petersburg, and two batteries of artillery of the guard and two machine gun batteries have been sent there from Oranienbaum, 10 miles west of St. Petersburg. The streets of Cronstadt are filled with troops and the well-to-do inhabitants are hurriedly leaving the island on which the town is situated.

Awful Scenes at Bialystok. ST. PETERSBURG, June 18.—No fresh news was received from Bialystok this morning, and most of the newspapers can get a word directly from there. The correspondent of the Associated Press, who should have arrived there from St. Petersburg yesterday morning, has not been heard from.

Nothing has been received here from the parliamentary commission sent to Bialystok to inquire into and report upon the massacre of Jews. It is evident that the authorities will not allow any despatches to be sent from the terror-stricken town, which is regarded as ample proof of the horror of the situation. The last telegram known to have been received here reached Mostrovozi, a member of the lower house of parliament, from Grodno yesterday. It was as follows:

"The Jews outrage at Bialystok was produced by provocation. The police participated in it and the troops actually supported the rioters. The military authorities now have full control. The governor has left the city. Persons who tried to leave Bialystok were killed at the railroad station and others who succeeded in reaching the open fields outside the town were run down by dragoons. There seems to be no hope of stopping the attacks. The number of victims is large."

"While this appeal for immediate assistance is being written we hear about the sound of volleys."

WARSAW, June 18.—The chief of police of Warsaw today issued a proclamation, warning the people against the efforts to provoke racial hatred and staling matters by the rioting which is being meted out by force of arms. Anti-Jewish riots have broken out at Zduow and Gostinow, in the province of Grodno, and at Osowiec, in the province of Lomza.

ODESSA, June 18.—The Novosti of this city, published a despatch today from its correspondent at Bialystok, saying: "I personally counted two hundred and ninety Jewish corpses, a great number of which were horribly mutilated. Only six Christians were killed and eight wounded."

Will Reform U. S. Consular Service

WASHINGTON, June 16.—Secretary Root in appointing a commission for reform in the consular service of the United States selected for the purpose members of the service who were either in this country or could be spared from their posts without loss to the department at the time. He expressed himself as feeling that he had been very fortunate in obtaining the services of Consul General Frank P. Mason, stationed at Paris; Consul General Charles M. Dickinson, at Constantinople; Consul Edward S. Chilton, at Toronto; Consul Edward S. Ozmun, at Stuttgart; and George H. Murphy, consul at St. Louis. In his circular letter of instructions the secretary urged the commission, besides reporting duty to William J. Carr, chief of the consular bureau, to call freely upon Mr. Carr for advice and assistance, so that Mr. Carr is practically on the board in an advisory capacity.

The letters asks the commission to especially make recommendations along these lines:— Relations between members of the consular and diplomatic services. Promotion for efficient officers and the desirability of insisting upon change of location. Revision of the fee system.

OTTAWA, June 18.—(Special)—The Conservatives intend bringing up in the house today or tomorrow the local deal at Montreal. A resolution of want of confidence will be moved. Mr. Ames, M. P., is working up the case.

THE HOSPITAL MIX-UP. The mixup in the hospital has created much comment among the medical men some of whom stated to the Times this afternoon that they are of the opinion that matters will be straightened out satisfactorily and the nurses will be reinstated. The doctors, however, will not go back to their positions.

W. M. Bodney of the Halifax office of the Royal Bank of Canada, passed through today en route to Montreal, where he will assume the management of the Montreal branch.

A RELENTLESS CHASE. Rodney slip for the past few days has been the scene of a very interesting game of tag, the participants being the rebellious Ludlow, the obstinate Quonpondy and the strenuous Beaver. The Ludlow has been moored in the slip with the Quonpondy near her. Behind them the Beaver has been burrowing into the bottom of the slip and effecting changing conditions over there. As the Beaver proceeded with her work she came nearer to the ferry steamer until it became apparent that if they were not moved the big dredge would be liable to tag them both with a dipper full of real estate in partial liquidation, or a 17 ton boulder. Admiralty (Glasgow) now has the power to throw away from the threatening danger. All was well for a time, but then the Togo of the ferry fleet or the best ferry received the intimation that the dredge dipper was dangerously close to the Quonpondy, and at any moment might dip her clean out of her snug quarters and deposit her somewhere in the vicinity of the Martello Tower. Another steamer was

KANSAS WANTS HARVEST HANDS

At Present There is a Shortage of More Than 25,000 Men

CHICAGO, June 18.—A despatch to the Record-Herald from Topeka, Kansas, says: "Kansas is sending the strongest appeal of her history for men to work in the harvest fields."

At least 25,000 more men than are in eight now will be needed, desperate measures will be adopted to draw men into the service behind the self-interest of the State free employment agent, Gerow, holds that a number of railroads are largely to blame for the shortage of harvest hands. He says the railroads need every man they can get to complete their own work, and for this reason have refused to grant the one cent a mile passenger rate that usually is made for the harvest hands.

They fear, it is said, that the call from the wheat fields, with the attractive wages will draw away their laborers, who get only $1.25 for working on the track.

THE ETOLIA'S CREW

Sixteen of Them Brought to Halifax From Sable Island.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 18 (Special)—Sixteen of the crew of the steamer Etolia, ashore at Cape Sable, arrived yesterday on the steamer Seneca, and some of them may go for London on the Purussic liner Almerina. The party consisted of two cooks, two stewards, two deck boys, carpenter, apprentice, two able seamen and six firemen. The underwriters have taken control of the vessel and are considering an offer for an attempt to float her. One of Bradley brothers' lighters called last Friday and was under orders to proceed to Cape Sable with pumps, but remains in port waiting final orders. If the steamer is not floated this week the rest of the crew will come here on Sunday next.

The Helmet of Navarre

BY BERTHA RUNKLE. GROSSET & DUNLAP Publishers: New York.

M. Etienne looked from one to another with the childlike smile of his bare lips, demanding if any here spoke Italian.

"I," answered Pierre himself. "Now, what may your errand be?"

"Oh, it's soon told," M. Etienne cried volubly, as one delighted to find himself understood. "I am a jeweller from Florence; I am selling my wares in your great houses. I have just sold a necklace to the Duchesse de Joyeuse; I crave permission to show my trinkets to the fair ladies here. But take me to them, and they'll not make you repeat it."

"Go tell madame," Pierre bade one of his men, and turning again to us gave us kindly permission to set down our burden and wait.

"For incredible good luck, the heavy hangings were drawn over the sunny windows, making a soft twilight in the room. I sidled over to the bench in the far corner and was feeling almost safe, when Pierre—beware him!—called attention to me.

"Now, that is a heavy box for a maid to help lug. Do you make the lazees do porters' work, you Florentines?"

"But I am a stranger here," M. Etienne explained. "Did I hire a porter, how am I to tell an honest one? Believe me, I'll run off with all my treasures, and where is poor Giovanni then? Besides, it were cruel to leave my little sister in our lodging, not a soul to speak to, the long day through. There is some where we lodge, knows Italian, as you do so like an angel, Sir Master of the Household."

Now, Pierre was no more maître d'hôtel than I was, but that did not dampen his pleasure to be called so. He sat on the bench by M. Etienne.

"How came you two to be in Paris?" he asked.

My lord proceeded to tell him I know not what glib and convincing farrago, with every excellence, I made no doubt, accent and gesture. But I could not but tell him I had affairs of my own by this time. The lackys had come up close round me, more interested in me than in my brother, and the same Jean who had held me for my beating, who had wanted my coat stripped off me that I might be whacked to bleed, now said:

"I'll warrant you're hot and tired and thirsty, mademoiselle, for all you look as fresh as roses. Will you drink a cup of wine if I fetch it?"

I had kept my eyes on the ground from the first moment of encounter, in mortal dread to look these men in the face; but now, gaining courage, I raised my glance and smiled at him bashfully, and faltered that I did not understand.

He understood the sense, if not the words, of my answer, and repeated his offer, slowly, loudly. I strove to look as blank as the wall, and shook my head gently and helplessly, and turned an enquiring gaze at the others, as if beseeching them to interpret. One of the fellows clasped Jean on the shoulder with a roar of laughter.

"A fall, a fall!" he shouted. "Here's the all-conquering Jean Marchand tripped up for once. He thinks nothing that some petticoats can withstand him, but here's a maid that hasn't a word to throw at him!"

"Baw! it doesn't understand me!" Jean returned, undaunted, and promptly pointed a finger at my mouth and then raised his fist to his own, with such a gulp. I allowed myself to comprehend then. I smiled in an coquetish fashion as I could contrive, and glanced on the ground, and slowly looked up again and nodded.

The men burst into loud applause.

"Good old Jean! Jean wins. Well played, Jean! Vive Jean!"

Jean, flushed with triumph, ran off on his errand, while I thought of Margaret, the steward's daughter, at home, and tried to recollect every air and grace I had ever seen her assume before us ladies. It was not hard fun, this. I hid my hands under my apron and spoke not at all, but sighed and smiled and blushed under their stares like any fine lady. Once in one's life, for one hour, it is rather amusing to be a girl. But that is quite long enough, say I.

Jean came again directly with a great silver tankard.

"Burgundy, pardieu!" cried one of his mates, sticking his nose into the pot as it passed him, "and full! Giel, you must think your lass has a head." Jean answered, "Oh, I shall drink with her." Jean answered.

I put out my hand for the tankard, running the risk of my big nose's betraying me, resolved that he should not drink with me of that draught, when of a sudden he leaped over to snatch a kiss. I dodged him, more frightened than the abeyst maid. Though in this half-light I might perfectly look a girl, I could not believe I should kiss like one. In a panic, I fled from Jean to my master's side.

M. Etienne, wheezing about, came near to laughing out in my face, when he remembered his part and played it with a zeal that was like to undo us. He sprang to his feet, drawing his dagger.

"Who insults my sister?" he shouted.

"Who is the dog does this?" he asked.

They were on him, wrenching the knife from his hand, wrenching his lame arm at the same time so painfully that he gasped. I was scared chilly. I knew if they mishandled him they would brush the wig off.

"And your manners, sirrah!" Jean cried, Monsieur's ardour vanished; a gentle, appealing smile spread over his face.

"I cry your pardon, sir," he said to Jean, then turning to Pierre. "This answer does not understand me. But tell him, I beg you, I crave his good pardon. I was but angered for a moment that any should think to touch my little sister. I meant no harm."

"Nor he," Pierre retorted. "A kiss, forsooth! What do you expect with a handsome lass like that? If you will take her about—"

"Madame says the jeweller fellow is to come up," our messenger announced, returning.

"My lord brought Pierre:

"My knife? I may have my knife? By the beard of St. Peter, I swear to you I want no harm with it. I drew it in you."

Now, this, which was the sole true statement he had made since our arrival, was the only one Pierre did not quite believe. He took the knife from Jean, but he hesitated to hand it over to the owner.

"No," he said, "you were angry enough. I'll keep this little toy of yours till you come down."

"Very well, Sir Majordomo," M. Etienne rejoined indifferently, "so be it you give it to me when I go." He grasped the handle of the box and we followed our guide up the stair, my master offering me the comforting assurance:

"It really matters not in the least, for if we are caught the dagger's not yet forged can save us."

We were ushered into a large, fair chamber hung with arras, the carpet under our feet deep and soft as snow. At one side stood the bed, raised on its dais; opposite were the windows, the dressing-table between them, covered with see's-bottles and boxes, brushes and combs, very glittering and grand. Fluttering about the room were some half-dozen fine dames and demoiselles, brave in silks and jewels. Among them I was quick to recognize Mme. de Mayenne, and I thought I knew vaguely one or two other faces as those I had seen before about her. I started presently to discover the little Mlle de Tavanne; that night she had worn sky-color and now she wore rose, but there was no mistaking her saucy face.

We set our box on a table, as the duchess bade us, and I helped M. Etienne to lay out its contents, which done, I retired to the background, well content to leave the brunt of the business to him. It was as he prophesied; they paid me no heed whatever. He was smoothly launched on the third relating of his tale; I trow by this time he almost believed it himself. Certes, he never faltered, but rattled on as if he had two tongues, telling in confidential tone of our father and mother, our little brothers and sisters at home in Florence, our journey with the legate; his kindness and care of us (I hoped that dignity would not walk in just now to pay his respects to madame la generale); of our arrival in Paris, and our wonder and delight at the city's grandeur, the like of which was not to be found in Italy; and, last, but not least, he had much to say, with an innocent, wide-eyed gravity, in praise of the ladies of Paris, so beautiful, so witty, so generous! They were all crowding around him, calling him pretty boy, laughing at his compliments, handling and examining over his trinkets, trying one out of a buckle or a bracelet, prying and cooing like bright-breasted pigeons about the corn-thrasher. It was as pretty a sight as ever I beheld, but it was not to smile at such that we had risked our heads. Of Mlle. de Montlieu there was no sign.

No one was marking me, and I wondered if I might not slip out unseen and make my way to mademoiselle's chamber. I knew she lodged on this story, near the back of the house, in a room overlooking the little street and having a turret-window. But I was somewhat doubtful of my skill to find it through the winding corridors of a great palace. I was more than likely to meet some one who would question my purpose, and what answer could I make? I scarce dared say I was seeking mademoiselle. I am not ready at explanations, like M. le Comte.

Yet here were the golden moments flying and our cause no further advanced. Should I leave it all to M. Etienne, trusting that when he had made his sales here he would be permitted to seek out the other ladies of the house? Or should I strive to aid him? Could I win in safety to mademoiselle's chamber, what a feat!

It so irked me to be doing nothing that I was on the point of gingerly disappearing when one of the ladies, she with the yellow curls, the prettiest of them all, turned suddenly from the group calling clearly:

"Lorraine!"

Our hearts stood still—mine died, and I can vouch for his—as the heavy window-curtain swung aside and she came forth. She came litely. Her hair sweeping against her cheek was ebony on snow, so white she was; while under her blue eyes were dark rings, like the smears of an ink finger. M. Etienne let fall the bracelet he was holding, starting at her oblivious of aught else, his brows knitted in distress, his face ashy with love and sympathy. He made a step forward; I thought him about to catch her in his arms, when he recollected himself and dropped on his knees to grope for the frail trinket.

"You wanted me, madame!" she asked Mme. de Mayenne.

"No," said the duchess, with a tartness of voice she seemed to reserve for Mlle. de Montlieu; "it was Mme. de Montpenser."

"It was I," the fair-haired beauty answered in the same breath. "I want you to stop stooping over there in the corner. Come look at these bangles and see if they cannot bring a sparkle to your eyes. You wanted me, madame! The having too many lovers is nothing to cry about. It is an affliction many and many a lady would give her ears to undergo."

"Take heart of grace, Lorraine!" cried Mlle. de Tavanne. "If you go on looking as you look today, you'll not long be troubled by lovers."

She made no answer to either, but stood there passively till it might be her pleasure to have done with her, with a patient readiness that it wrong her heart to see.

"Here's a chain would become you vastly, Lorraine," Mme. de Montpenser went on, friendly enough, in her brisk and careless voice. "Let me try it on your neck. You can easily coax Paul on some one to buy it for you."

She fumbled over the clasp. M. Etienne, with a "Permit me, madame," took it boldly from her hand and hooked it to himself about mademoiselle's neck. He delayed longer than he need over the fastening of it, looking with burning intensity straight into her face. She lifted her eyes to his with a quick frown of displeasure, drawing herself back; then all at once the color washed across her face like the dawn flush over a gray sky. She blushed to her very hair, to her very ruff. Then the red vanished as quickly as it came; she clapped at her bosom, on the verge of a swoon.

He threw out his arms to catch her. Instantly she stopped dead and, turning with a little unsteady laugh to the lady at whose elbow she found herself, asked:

"Does it become me, madame?"

The little scene had passed so quickly that it seemed none had marked it. Mademoiselle had stood a little out of the group, monsieur with his back to it, and the ladies were busy over the jewels. She whom mademoiselle had addressed, a big-nosed, loud-voiced lady, older than any of the others, answered her bluntly:

"You look a shade too green-faced to-day, mademoiselle, for anything to come you."

"What can you expect, Mme. de Brié?" Mlle. Blanche promptly demanded. "Mlle. de Montlieu is weary and worn from her vigil at your son's bedside."

"I am quite well," Mlle. Blanche had the temerity to laugh; but for the rest, a sort of little groan ran through the company. Mme. de Mayenne tude sharply. "Peace Blanche!" Mme. de Brié, red with anger, flamed out on her and Mlle. de Montlieu.

"You impudent minx! 'Tis enough that one of you should bring my son to his death, without the other making a mock of it."

"He's not dying," began the irrepressible Blanche de Tavanne; her eyes twinkling with mischief; but whatever naughty answer was on her tongue, our mademoiselle's despairing voice overbore her:

"I am quite well of the charge, madame. It was through no wish of mine that your son, with half the guard at his back, set on one wounded man."

"I'll warrant it was not," muttered Mlle. Blanche.

"Mr. has turned traitor, and deserves nothing so well as to be spitted in the dark," Mme. de Brié cried out.

Mademoiselle waited an instant, with flashing eyes meeting madame's. She had spoken holy before, but now, in the face of the other's passion, she held herself steadily.

"Your charge is as false, madame, as your wish is cruel. Do you go to vespers and come home to say such things? M. de Mar is no traitor; he was never pledged to us, and may go over to Navarre when he will."

It was quietly spoken, but the blue lightning of her eyes was too much for Mme. de Brié. She opened her mouth to retort, faltered, dropped her eyes, and finally turned away, yet seeming to feign interest in the trinkets. It was a rout.

"Then you are the traitor, Lorraine," chimed the silvery tones of Mme. de Montpenser. "It is not denied that M. de Mar has gone over to the enemy; therefore are you the traitor to have intercourse with him."

She spoke without heat, without any appearance of ill feeling. Here was merely the desire, for the fun of it, to keep the French, foisted his eyes recklessly on her, hurrying, applauding, adoring her. I went softly around the group to pull his sleeve; but he was lost if any turned to see him.

"Madame," mademoiselle addressed her cousin of Montpenser, speaking particularly clearly and distinctly. "I mean ever to be loyal to my house. I come here a penniless orphan to the care of my kinsman Mayenne; and he has always been to me generous and loving."

"If not madame," murmured Mlle. Blanche to herself.

TO REVOLUTIONIZE THE ELECTRIC WORLD

ASHVILLE, N. C., June 13.—The Asheville Citizen publishes an interview from Thomas A. Edison, who says that he has made cobalt discoveries in North Carolina that will revolutionize the electric world. Mr. Edison claims he will reduce thereby the weight of storage batteries in automobiles 50 per cent. and the cost of traffic in cities 55 per cent. He has been in this state some time prospecting for cobalt. He says:

"I knew that a North Carolina trip would be successful, and, although I am satisfied now, I was well confident that I would not be disappointed. There is a streak of it running from a point just east of Nashville, Tenn., into this state, and I must add that some of the richest beds I have found have been in North Carolina. There is a large quantity of it, and my discovery means a revolution in the electrical world. I can reduce the cost of city traffic 50 per cent. and cut the weight of storage batteries just in half. It can be seen very readily that more automobiles and electrical vehicles will be built, because the cost will be placed within the reach of many people who cannot now afford to own them."

"I have found cobalt in Lincoln, Gaston, Shelby, and Jackson Counties. In Jackson county there is a large quantity of it, while the beds are valuable in the other counties. I made assays of the mineral in many places, and I find the quality to be just what I was looking for."

"The electric vehicles have been under a great handicap because of the very heavy storage batteries we are forced to put in them, and also on account of their high value. Under the present plans electric autos cannot be made without a large outlay of money, and that has kept the people—the majority of the people I mean—from using them. An automobile is considered a luxury even by our richest citizens. When I can equip an automobile propelled by the cobalt system, the weight will be one-half, thereby giving a new machine an enviable advantage over the ones now in use, and when the price is reduced so as to place them within the reach of everybody it means that the horse is a thing of the past. The crowded streets of the cities will be cleared, and that will mean a great thing in some of our largest towns. I have left a force of men in this state, where I found the mineral, and they will investigate thoroughly as to the quality to be found."

LODGEMEN ARE ANGRY

P. W. A. Lodges Demand the Resignation of Their Grand Secretary Because He Mixed Into Politics.

SYDNEY, June 17.—(Special)—Several of the P. W. A. Lodges in Cape Breton passed resolutions last night condemning in unqualified terms the action of John Moffatt, the grand secretary, in publicly favoring one of the political parties in the present campaign in preference to the other, thus violating one of the great principles of the association that it should be distinctly non-political. The resolutions demand Mr. Moffatt's resignation.

Mr. Moffatt took the platform at Dominion No. 1 recently and spoke strongly in favor of the liberal candidates. This has displeased members of the association so much that they are now asking for his immediate retirement from office. The introduction of politics would be fatal to the association and this is what the lodges wish to guard against most particularly. The action of the lodges has created a mild sensation in political circles.

ALONG THE RIVER

When the steamer Elaine arrived at In-diantown this morning she was crowded with passengers returning to the city from points as far up as Hampton. For the next two months or more the resorts along the river will be populous centres of healthful enjoyment. There are so many steamers, and the fares are so low, and the services so accommodating that it is easy for many who do not have cottages of their own, to go to one of the numerous pretty places along the shore on Saturday, returning on Monday morning. The beautiful river takes to itself the careworn toiler in store or office, and even in a day or two works in him a transformation. The more one sees of the St. John river, the stronger is the call back again to its peaceful shores and smiling waters. The stately villa of an older and richer civilization has yet to come, but the visitor of today gets closer to nature, and finds in the pretty settings all the comfort that is needed.

THE REAL ENEMIES

Representatives of large corporations naturally deprecate attacks made upon corporations management and methods. One of them addressing the State Bankers' Association of Iowa, a few days ago, professed to be much concerned over the outlook. He feared that "indiscriminate assaults upon capital" would create a general feeling of distrust and fear, destructive of the prosperity of the country. He also protested that there was too much legislation regulating the affairs of corporations. To this gentleman and others like him the New York Journal of Commerce makes this forcible reply:

"These critics who complain of exaggeration, extravagance, lack of discrimination, in the current criticism of the abuses of the time, seem whenever they get started in speech, whether as doctors of divinity or financiers, to indulge in exaggeration and extravagance of utterance those whom they condemn. Because the intricacies of certain life insurance methods are exposed, because will practices of railroads are the subject of deserved attack, because such corporate performances as stock-watering and swindling promotions are condemned, because the offenses of fraud and greed which are beyond denial or defense are made the subject of discussion and legislation, and efforts are made to arouse the moral sense of the community and insist upon standards of common honesty and justice, we are told that it is the fashion to indiscriminately and persistently attack every form of co-operated capital, that all corporations, are assailed, that there is 'indiscriminate assault upon capital wherever it is co-operated,' and that the critics are killing property."

"There is low truth in this kind of defense, or counter attack upon the critics, than there is in the extreme statements of the wildest radical or the yellowest newspapers. It is farther from fact and from justice of statement, and ten times more harmful. The exposures, denunciations and demands of the time, though not always fair or within bounds, are aimed against real evils which sap the very sources of prosperity and well-being, and they are working a regeneration of sentiment and correction of conduct that is full of promise. It is one of the best evidences of fundamental soundness in the community, which will eventually purge the community and curb the forces of unscrupulous greed."

THE BONUS SYSTEM

The Toronto Globe is decidedly opposed to the municipal bonus system, by which a majority in a community may "lay their hands on private property through the power of taxation, and give it over to favored individuals in the form of bonuses." The question is being taken up in the new provinces, and Edmonton, Lethbridge and Strathcona ask for legislation restricting the power of municipalities to grant bonuses to railways or factories. As the Globe points out, however, the difficulty is one not easily overcome. "The real danger," says the Globe, "will be found, as in other provinces, to lie in the absolute power of the legislature. After each legislative session is adopted in Ontario private bills came in from various municipalities asking power to grant bonuses to favored individuals. These bills were actively supported by interested parties, while the people who were to suffer were not organized and made no appearance before the committee. The result was a continuation of the practice through the permission afforded by the unlimited power of the legislature. Western experience will be identical with our own unless they devise some provision akin to a constitutional safeguard. Citizenship should not involve the complete surrender of property to the will of the majority. The purpose for which the tax collectors can take the property of citizens should be definitely settled. If the new provinces can devise adequate safeguards against the abuse of their power they will make property more secure, citizenship more desirable, and industrial development more stable and self-sustaining."

The bishop who discovered infidelity in an Ontario school geography was not able to convince many people that he was right. On this point the Toronto News says: "The charge that the High School Geography is an infidel book is an unfair and baseless one, as the following sentence on page 5, paragraph 15 will make plain: 'The story told by the unstarred rocks... takes us away from the earth; carries us to the heavens, and makes us look upon our world as only one of the innumerable stars, like them in its present or past condition, with a like future history, and with them forming a part of one universal plan designed by the Almighty Architect.' We can trace no iconoclastic atheism here."

At the formal closing of the manual training department of the schools of Dartmouth, N. S., last week, a display of the year's work by pupils evoked much favorable comment. The chairman of the school board stated that he regarded manual training as one of the most useful departments in the school, and various other speakers voiced similar views.

A Carleton county district has unanimously decided to apply the provisions of the compulsory education act. The same question should be considered in St. John.

THE RELIGION OF THE AVERAGE MAN

Rev. J. G. Hindley preached an eloquent sermon yesterday on The Religion of the Average Man. He asked if present day interpretations of religion are reaching the average man. The church has made an honest effort, but only about a third of the population of the United States were church-going people. Compare the streets, cars, parks, resorts of St. John, Saturday evening and the churches Sunday morning. The case is no different in this city of church-topped hills. The church is failing to reach the average man.

(a) It has been unprogressive, ultra-conservative. We have advanced in every field, but the preaching today is too much like the sermons of our grandfathers. Our theology must be expressed in living terms, not dead symbols. (b) Its administration has not been sane. There are too many "good" men who are not good for anything. The church has suffered from denominational rivalry and competition. (c) Ministers have studied books too much and men too little. Their menu of life has been forced and artificial. They do not live in the same world as the average man, and so fail to reach him. He breaks away from home, Sunday school and church because he is not good, not because they are not. He is far from ideal. He is selfish, tends to become brutal and is false to his own ideals. He does not practice justice, kindness, truth. The remedy is a living message from a living voice in the pulpit, and full sympathy with the average man from the pew. The average man needs to know the ideal man - this divine man Jesus - and the solution of humanity's problems, the kingdom of God, will come when the average man looks to Christ for inspiration and instruction in his progress toward justice, kindness and truth.

A FREAK STATUE

One of the most interesting freak statues in England is to the memory of Sir R. Holmes. It is to be seen in the church at Yarmouth, Isle of Wight. The funny thing about it is that it was not originally intended to represent the naval celebrity. It was sculptured for and represents Louis XIV. of France and was being conveyed to that country when the vessel containing it (and also the sculptor) was captured by an English ship commanded by Sir R. Holmes. The body was finished, the head being left for completion on its arrival in France. On learning who it was for, the English commander compelled the sculptor to finish it by chiseling his (Holmes') head on the king's body.

THE FIRST CHAUFFEURS.

Chauffeurs existed long before there were automobiles. History tells us that along about the year 1793 there sprang up in France, principally in the eastern and central regions, fantastically dressed men with their faces blackened with soot and their eyes carefully concealed who gained admittance to farm houses and other isolated dwellings at night and committed all kinds of depredations and outrages. They had an atrocious habit, especially, from which they obtained the name that posterity has preserved for them. They first garroted their victims, and dragged them in front of a great fire, where they burned the soles of their feet. Then they demanded of them where their money and jewels were concealed. Such interrogatories could scarcely be resisted. It is from this that is derived the application of chauffeur.

NO INFIDELITY IN GEOGRAPHY

Question Shelved by Synod of Toronto After Interesting Discussion.

(Mail and Empire, Friday.) At yesterday's meeting of the synod of the Church was presented. Referring to religious instruction in the public schools, it was mentioned that two other bishops had referred to the materialistic tone of the geography text-books, and it was recommended that joint action should be taken.

On the report being taken up clause by clause Canon Welch expressed the opinion that the committee had not studied the text-books as a search through it since hearing the bishop's charge had failed to reveal anything that anyone could object to. It may have referred to certain hypotheses on the process of evolution but he could find nothing in it contrary to Holy Canon Cody, who had also brought a copy, claimed that there was not a single passage in the whole book that could be pointed out as subverting Christian teaching. If he had any fault to find with the book it was that it was too far advanced for the classes for which it was intended. He assured other members of the synod, whatever might be the extent of their attainments, that they would find the book a regular "brain-twister."

Quoting from it, Canon Cody claimed that the world we inhabited was not produced by chance or at hapchance. He also thought that the synod should exercise the greatest care in criticizing educational works or it might find itself in the position of the Medieval Church which condemned Galileo. Bishop Swetnam explained that in drawing attention to the text-book in question he had merely intended that the committee should investigate it. He had admitted that he had received information from the author of a work entitled the "Supremacy of the Bible." From what he knew of the author he thought he was justified in quoting his critique of the text-book. He had, however, since found that the author of the text-book was a member of the church and a communicant in good standing, who was very far from entertaining the materialistic views he had supposed.

It was proposed to refer the matter back to the committee on Religious Instructions for a report. Professor Wrong demurred to the matter going back to the committee without the synod expressing its condemnation of the manner in which it had been included in the report. It looked to him like a case of hanging a man first and trying him afterwards. The church could not be too careful to avoid every appearance of narrowness and bigotry. His lordship, who evidently misunderstood Professor Wrong's condemnation of the committee for not investigating the book, but taking instead the reference to it in three episcopal charges as proof of its nature, said he could not plead guilty to "hanging a man first and then trying him," he had merely reported to the synod what had been conveyed to him from an apparently reliable source and he had depended on the committee to investigate the matter. Finally the clause was referred back to be dealt with in a proper manner.

ANOTHER RUMPUS IN THE GENERAL PUBLIC HOSPITAL

Two Nurses are Dismissed and Three Doctors Resign in Consequence--A Serious State of Affairs

The exact state of affairs that has existed in the Public Hospital will in all probability be disclosed within the next few days, as the result of the commissioners dismissing two of the nurses and as a consequence also of the resignations of the three house doctors, viz. Dr. W. J. Scott, superintendent, and the assistant resident physicians, Dr. Shirley O. McMurry and Dr. W. S. Loggie. The dismissals were made Friday and the resignations took effect Saturday morning, when visitors could have seen the physicians taking their packs and departing from the institution.
 The resignations and the dismissals followed an infraction of the regulations of the institution and the affair will not in the least affect the good name or professional standing of any of the parties concerned.
 A by-law states that, save in the ordinary routine of the hospital, the nurses are not to associate with the doctors, and it is reported that on Wednesday night last Mrs. Scott and McMurry had by invitation spent the evening at the home of the parents of one of the nurses, on which occasion the two nurses who were dismissed were present.
 The superintendent of nurses, Miss Duff, was notified of the occurrence by a nurse, and an investigation was held, with the result that the crisis came at the meeting of the commissioners, which was held Friday afternoon. At 11 o'clock the same evening the three doctors handed in their resignations to Dr. T. Walker, stating that they would go out the following morning at nine o'clock.
 It is understood that Dr. Walker asked a few local doctors to fill the vacancies and finally obtained the services of Dr.

Scandal Shrouds Roosevelt Home Club Operations.

Offices of R.E. Mylius and G.E. Graham in the Robinson Building

NEW YORK, June 16.—Sincere friends of President Roosevelt in New York and elsewhere are expressing pronounced disapproval of methods employed by a few persons associated with the Roosevelt Home Club in raising funds to purchase, as a memorial, the house at No. 28 East Twenty-ninth street, where the president was born. While it is represented by the club members that the president has given his tacit approval to all that is being done, it is known by his intimate friends that he is ignorant of the inside workings of the movement, and it is expected that his vigorous repudiation will follow speedily upon the heels of an investigation which some of his real friends are preparing to bring about.
 There are few public officials or wealthy persons known or supposed to be admirers of Mr. Roosevelt who have not been requested by personal solicitation or vassals have been employed on large commissions, letters by the thousand have been sent into all parts of the country, and representatives have been made of the birthplace of the president was to be converted into an emergency hospital, and the names of prominent persons have been used without their knowledge or consent.
 While this diversified work of solicitation has been going on for months, certain members of the club who have withdrawn from the organization are adding embarrassment to the situation by asserting that they have been unable to find out how much money has been received or what disposition has been made of all of it. On the other hand, promoters of the enterprise declare that the undertaking has been a failure and that they are out of pocket many thousands of dollars.
 Most of the criticism and inquiry at present centers about the Public Funds Committee and a so-called "secret contract" which four members of the committee have with the club for financing the memorial enterprise. Outside of Rodgeric Begg, president of the club, and George E. Graham, a former associate of the president, no member of the club has been allowed to see the document or know its terms.
 Mr. Begg and members of the committee say that it provides that the four

The Roosevelt Home Club and Bazaar

Public Funds Committee took hold, and disturbing developments began. This committee is composed of S. Pratt, who is at the head of a large bill posting business; O. F. Veider, Mr. Pratt's brother-in-law; Peter E. Mylius, one of Mr. Pratt's solicitors; Thomas J. Crotty, Mr. Pratt's secretary; Peter Begg, brother of the club's president, and Mr. Graham, Mr. Mylius and Mr. Graham occupy a suite of expensively furnished offices on the tenth floor of the Flatiron Building. Mr. Graham, with the prestige of the president's personal acquaintance, assumed charge of the literary end of the business and put in his share of the $6,000. Crotty and Peter Begg were not included in the "secret contract." Mr. Begg resigned from the committee at its last meeting.
 What has most disturbed the friends of the president is the unauthorized use that has been made of their names. In the literature sent out there is a long list of honorary members, with Vice-President Fairbanks at the head. Then follow the names of thirteen United States senators, thirty-three governors of states, many of them being quoted as giving warmest endorsement to the undertaking. After these comes another long list of prominent citizens, representatives in congress, state legislators and officials. Andrew Carnegie and General Horace Porter head this list.

WEARY WILLIE WALKER

As far as can be officially learned every essential element of fun and music device enters into a musical comedy composition entitled "Weary Willie Walker" which comes to the Opera House next Thursday. At the same time the fact should not be lost sight of, that a story of laughing interest has been made to do the ground work for the rational employment of an extremely prepossessing lot of girls, whose principal duties are to sing with discretion, act sprightly and to wear pretty gowns becomingly. As for the comedians, they are said to find abundant chances to exercise some very exceptional fun talent. In all other respects "Weary Willie Walker" is guaranteed to measure up handsomely with the highest musical comedy achievements ever attained, and to out class by far the general average in the manner of elaborate production.

INTERESTING SERVICE

Children and Chinese Scholars Participate in Special Exercises in Brussels Street Church.
 A very interesting service was conducted in Brussels street Baptist church yesterday morning, when the children of the Sunday school and members of the Chinese class presented a pleasing programme. There was a good attendance at the service and all thoroughly enjoyed the exercises. The programme was as follows: Organ voluntary, hymn No. 123, "Praise Him"; prayer by pastor, Rev. A. B. Cohoe; solo, Miss Myriam Blanche; recitation, Frank Kierstead; solo and chorus, Miss Kathleen Golding; recitation, Helen Genter; recitation, Miss Jennie Matthews; solo, Miss Willie Stammers; recitation, Douglas Oliver; solo and chorus, Miss Vera McKay; chorus, Summer Land, by the school and choir. There was also a solo and scripture reading by members of the Chinese class.
 Rev. A. B. Cohoe, delivered a short address in which he gave the young people some good advice, telling them to be always truthful, if they did or said anything wrong to be not ashamed to acknowledge it.
 Mrs. Cohoe acted as accompanist for the children, her work at the piano adding much to the success of the entertainment. The Chinese department which is under the direction of Mrs. J. N. Golding Sr., is a very important feature of the Sunday school work, and the scholars are all very eager to learn.
