The order of procession on this occasion was as follows: 1st, a company of grenadiers; 2nd, constables of the town; 3rd, magistrates; 4th, civil officers of government; 5th, constables; 6th, the provent marshal with two deputies on horseback; 7th, a band of music; 8th, constables; 9th, the Commander-in-Chief of the prevince, the Honourable Jonathan Belcher, with Lord Colville and Colonel Forster, commandant of the garrison, and the members of His Majesty 6 Council; 16th, the Speaker and the members of the House of Assembly, followed by the principal inhabitants. In the afternoon the company waited on the Commander-in-Chief at Governor Lawrence's head tavern, when a very elegant entertainment was provided for them, and after dinner His Majessiys health was drunk under a royal sainte from the batteries; also other toosts, and the evening concluded with great rejoicings and illuminations, bon fires and artificial fireworks, played off by the Royal Artillery. A sermow was afterwards ordered to be preached—18th Pelmusry, 1761—18 St. Faul's Ohurch, on account of the decease of George II, and all public amusements were ordered to cease for one mounts from that day. The 17th was accordingly set apart and the armon preached by the Rey. I. Wood, the curate. A part of St. Paul's Church was daped in black, and minute guns were fired for an hour and a balf, and the flags on the Citadel and George's Island were half-mast during the day.

cheers from the assembled citizens. The troops then presented arms, and at word of command gave three cheers—bugles sounding, bands playing, and the church bells ringing in very imposing harmony. From the Parade, the herald bands, guard of honour, and inhabitants, repaired to the market, Government House, South and North Barracks squares, at which places the proclamation was again read, thus concluding the ceremony in which all ranks seemed to take a most hearty part. During the day minute guns were fired at Fort George and on board His Majesty's ships Winchester and Fallas, while the Royal Standard floated mounfully half-mast high, On the following day, the Royal Standard was bosted to the masthead, and a royal salute fired in honor of King William's succession. The salors manned the yards in beautiful style, and from their elevated positions, gave simultaneous cheers, exciting enough almost to "awake soul under the ribs of death."

The accession of William IV to the interest to the inhabitants of Halifax.

As Prince William Henry he had been a visitor to Halifax on several occasions. In fact he spent a greater part of his time as a midshipman in the West Indies and off the coast of Nova Scotis and Canada. In 1786 he was appointed first lieutenant of the Pegasus, 28 guns, and a few months afterwards, passing over the intermediate step of commander, he received his commission as captain of that frigate, in which he immediately after stilled for Nova Scotis. In October he arrived at Halifax, and remained in the town nearly a month. In June, 1787, he returned and spent a fortnight. In October he squamed in the town hearly a month. In June, 1787, he returned and spent a fortnight. In October he again made the town a visit, and for ten days there was nothing but balls and dinners and social functions. interest to the inhabitants of Halifax.

DEAR STR:

I received the Company's chaque, through you to-day, in the amount of $62.86 for my lickness claim. As the claim papers only went in on the 16th inst., I was completely surprised by the promptness with which it was settled, and I feel that personally I am under an obligation to you for your activity in the matter. Certainly no other company could have been compler, and it is doubtful if any other agent would have expedited matters as speedily. I shall have much pleasure in recommending your excellent Company to my friends. Yours very sincerely.

SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 17, 1918. Yesterday's riot.

The RECORDER has been in existence a hundred years, and during that period has witnessed many events occurring in this city, but has never recorded anything fax has been noted for its sense of law and order from the beginning, and it was with difficulty that the people were persuaded to organize a police system at all. Even now we have but few policemen in proportion to population as compared with many other towns. Such has been our position and such our reputation. It is therefore with unfelgned regret that we have to chronicle the events of yesterday, which threaten to give our city a reputation of a very different sort. No matter what the provocation may have been, there is no excuse or galliation for those who precipitated the riot. Such procedure never has been and never will be any help towards bettering any cause even the most just.

See And Table difference of the process of the proc and ta defend it in war. To-day the feeling in Australia may be summed up in these words—that Australia is a portion of the Empire, that we are defending in the service of the Empire, that we are defending in the service of the Empire, that we are defending in the ferminal attack. While we relieve the Mother Country from responsibility in that connection, we in due measure contribute to the general safety of the Empire. For many years to come I think it will be a profound mistake to seek to press Australian sentiment beyond that point. We feel the best proof we can give at present is the setting of our own home in order and being prepared to hold our own burien against all comers. That is the polley which dominates the plans of the Australian Government to-day. Whether that is a polley to be entirely approved of technically is a matter I can offer no opinion upon.

MISS FEARLESS AND COMPANY Delightfully given at Chebucto Road School last evening. DARTMOUTH NEWS.

The Assembly Hall of Chebucto Road School was crowded to the doors last night to witness the performance of the comeditat, "Miss Fearless and Gompany," by teachers of this school. The play was successfully given, all the parts being well taken. The quartette of young ladies—Margaret, Barbara, Bettle and Marlon, all did excellently, as did Ratie with her Irish thoque.

Miss Addison and Miss Lovejoy were well represented. The character of "Just Lizzie" was very naturally taken. The silent sisters, "Alias and Alibi," executed their parts well. Throughout the play there was a strain of comedy, which was always appreciated by the audience with rounds of applause.

"Middle Temple lane," he directed, pausing on the step,

"Middle Temple lane is opposite Clifford's inn," he explained as he took his place beside her. "When we get out there we have only to cross Fleet street."

Eve bent her head in token that she derstood, and the cab moved out into the roadway.

Within a few minutes the neighborhood of Grosvenor square was exchang-ed for the noisier and more crowded one of Piccadilly, but either the cabman was overcautious or the horse was below the average, for they made but slow progress through the more crowded streets. To the two sitting in silence the pace was well nigh unbearbable. With every added movement the tension grew. The methodical care with which they moved seemed like the tightening of a string already strained to breaking point, yet neither spoke, because neither had the courage necessary for the words.

Still in silence, the stapped to the pavement and stood andie while Loder dismissed the ceh. To both there was something symbolic, something prophetic, in the dismissal. Without intention and almost unconactorally they drew closer together as the force turned, its hoofs elattering on the readway, its noved away down the long, shadowed thoroughfure toward the lights and the crowds that they had left. At last involuntarily they turned toward each other.

Inquisit tenes, has little place in the region of the city, and they gained the opposite footpath, unnoticed by the essual passerby. Then, still holding apart, they reached and entered Clifford's inn. Inside the entrance they paused, and Eve shivered involuntarily. "How gray it is!" she said faintly. "And how cold! Like a grussyssid."

Loder turned to her. For one moment control seemed thates. His blood surged, his vision clouded. The sense that life and love were still within his reach flied him overwhelmingly. He turned toward Eve; he half extended his hands. Then, stirred by what impulse, moved by what instinct, it was impossible to say, he let them drop to his sides again.

"Come!" he said. "Come! This is the way. Keep close to me. Fus your hand on my arm."

He spoke quietly, but his eyes were resolutely averted from her race as they crossed the dim, silent coust.

Entering the gloomy doorway that led to his own rooms, he felt her fingers tremble on his arm, then tighten in their pressure as the bare passage and cheerless stairs met her view, but he set his lips.

"Ome!" he sepanted in the same strained voice. "Come! It isn't farthree or four flights."

With a white face and a curious expression in her eyes Eve moved forward. She had a palned, numb sense of submission, of suffering that had suphit to apathy.
