Thousands Delighted With Attractions at the Big Fair Tuesday Night

Rain Interfered Somewhat With Attendance Yesterday, But Nearly 9,000 People Passed Through Turnstiles--Everything Now in Perfect Shape and Record Number of Visitors Expected Today--The Judging Results--Programme for Today.

Wednesday, Sept. 7. Although the attendance at the big fair yesterday was only 8,713, 2,617 less than the same day last year, the total attendance so far is several thousand in excess of that for the similar period of the last exhibition. The falling off in the attendance yesterday may be attributed to the adverse weather conditions, rain falling throughout the greater part of the evening. The dull murky sky which hung overhead all afternoon also contributed much in keeping intending visitors away.

The judging was well advanced and at the rate they are going the men who did the most important matter of who will win the various colored ribbons denoting the merits of the animals or articles passed upon will get through with their work early in the afternoon.

SIR WILFRID AND HIS CRITICS

The Telegraph's special cables bring the news that one or two London newspapers and one or two Conservative publicists have been criticizing Sir Wilfrid Laurier's tariff views as expressed during his western tour.

The London Daily Mail, for example, expresses alarm over what it assumes to be a tendency on the part of the Canadian Premier to make this country's tariff too favorable toward the United States, and it vaguely hints that there may be annexation at the bottom of such a tariff policy.

In another London paper Mr. H. Beckles Wilson, who is a sort of professional Canadian in London newspaper circles, airs some views concerning the unimportance of our western provinces, and seeks to persuade his public that any low tariff sentiment west of Toronto is not worth considering.

There is in London a portion of the newspaper world which objects to Sir Wilfrid's tariff views for the sole reason that they cannot be used to bolster up the cause of tariff reform in Great Britain.

THE ROADS AND BRIDGES

The Telegraph is favored with a letter from Mr. Charles T. White, of Sussex, who discusses an interview recently published in The Telegraph in the course of which Mr. Joseph Dryden gave some particulars about roads and bridges between Point Wolfe in Albert county and Penobscus in Kings county.

Mr. Dryden is in the employ of Mr. White, and Mr. White now writes a letter intended to offset the impression created by the statements of his employee. Incidentally, Mr. White desires to create the impression that the Hazen administration is not responsible for the mishaps which Mr. Dryden and his load met with while moving over the public highway.

was built by the former government and neglected by that government, never collapsed under the old regime though it did so under the present one.

Mr. White argues, in general, that the present local government is doing rather well with respect to the roads and that it deserves credit for this and for its administration of the Crown Land department.

MR. ROOSEVELT AND THE FUTURE

Mr. Roosevelt's recently issued political platform continues to attract the attention of the reviewers, and many of them are wondering what will follow if it attempts to carry his ideas into effect by forcing them upon the Republican party.

"Mr. Roosevelt," says the Montreal Witness, "means to be the second father of his country. It has been in theory a group of sovereign states, but in point of fact it has been becoming more and more a nation.

His series of propositions may therefore be taken as expressing the present conscience of the nation as a whole. Some of them like the first 'the elimination of special interests from politics,' are general truisms such as all political programmes are largely made up of meaning anything or nothing according to the steps that may or may not be taken to apply them.

"Others of these paragraphs contain most important matter. The second, which demands complete and effective publicity for the affairs of joint stock companies, is one that men have been wonderfully long in coming to, and one which will necessarily be greatly resented as an invasion of personal rights.

Some American newspapers have been devoting close attention to statistics concerning the wonderful battleships and Dreadnought cruisers lately launched by Great Britain.

THE LION

What will be the representation of the Maritime Provinces in the Dominion House of Commons after the next census? Several western papers are attempting to answer this question, and they agree in guessing that both Ontario and the Maritime Provinces will lose several seats as a result of the increased population of the West.

will have the support of all but machine politicians, but, in politics, that is a great 'but.' His plan of continuous tariff reform by a commission has been forestalled by Mr. Taft.

PEACE, GENTLEMEN

One of the ancient Spanish fairy tales relates the story of a certain cock which ruled over a poultry yard, that formed a friendship with a goose that had dabbled in the fountain of knowledge.

It appears as though the advocates of peace are at length realizing that the cock or the goose cannot compass peace so long as the cat retains its claws, its tastes and temper.

THE INTERCOLONIAL

In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia it is hoped that the Intercolonial Railway will soon absorb the best of the branch lines and re-equip them as valuable feeders.

JAPAN'S WAY

When the naval campaign between Japan and Russia was at its height, the world heard much of the destruction of Russia's ships by Japanese guns and torpedo fire.

"Satisfactory progress is reported from Japan in the restoration of the captured Russian ships. The battleship Hizen (ex Retzivan) and Iwami (ex Orel), and the cruiser Tsugaru (ex Pallada) are already fitted for sea, while the battleships Sagami (ex Peresviet) and Suo (ex Pobieda), and the cruiser Sutsuya (ex Novik) are expected to be ready for the pennant before the end of the year.

AFTER THE CENSUS

What will be the representation of the Maritime Provinces in the Dominion House of Commons after the next census? Several western papers are attempting to answer this question, and they agree in guessing that both Ontario and the Maritime Provinces will lose several seats as a result of the increased population of the West.

of the Royal Navy, and its replacement and development according to the changing needs of a vast Empire to which sea power is absolutely vital.

MARITIME UNION

Several articles on the subject of Maritime union which appeared recently in the Moncton Transcript have elicited comment from the press in other parts of Canada.

The writer quoted does not believe that a consolidation of the existing governments of this province would result in saving much money, and in that respect he is right; but he does think that if the provinces were united, the taxpayers would receive a better return for their money and that union might be "an inspiration for progress, for engaging in new enterprises and new forms of public service."

Here in the East we have tremendous resources of our own. Our exports, our lumber, our coal, our forests, our fisheries—these we would not exchange for a vast expanse of prairie country, even if we were able to do so.

In Ontario today they are discussing the extension of the Intercolonial to Toronto and the wheat belt. The Toronto Star says: "A railway in Canada cannot very well be a local affair, whether it is publicly or privately owned."

The growth of such opinion in Ontario is a hopeful sign. It means that any attempt to scuttle the government road by turning it over to one of the big corporations would be resisted by Ontario representatives in Parliament, as well as by those of the Maritime Provinces, and the West.

The scheme of illuminating the streets and making a "great white way" to the exhibition grounds has been worked out thirteen seats and Ontario and the Maritime Provinces would each lose four, a curious result when one considers the fact that it is believed Ontario's population has increased by half a million since the last census.

It is thought that the West will have forty-seven members as against thirty-four at present, and if these figures prove correct twenty per cent of the members of Parliament will come from west of Ontario.

Such a line of conduct would, of course, be highly praiseworthy, but it would not do away with the fact that the whole is greater than any of its parts, and that the electors of other provinces by similarly taking thought could still hold their advantage of numbers.

BEHOLD at our door the power of a man abiding through eight generations! Taught to shrink from the forms of arbitrary power whilst a boy lounging about the doors of the star chamber, taught law from the living lips of Coke, tolerant charity and reforming love from the private hours of Milton, many languages at Oxford, where the classic statue of liberty broke in Grecian model upon his sight, taught experience and trial, sorrow and courage in Massachusetts, Roger Williams came hither from fortunes as varied as romantic, as those of John Smith or Walter Raleigh, and planted the first purely free government on the globe.

BURNING DAYLIGHT

By JACK LONDON

CHAPTER I.

It was a quiet night in the Tivoli. At the bar, which ranged along one side of the large chinked log room, leaned half a dozen men, two of whom were discussing the relative merits of spruce tea and lime juice as remedies for scurvy. They argued with an air of depression and with intervals of morose silence. The other men scarcely heeded them. In a row against the opposite wall were the gambling games. The crap table was deserted. One lone man was playing at the faro table. The roulette ball was not even spinning and the game keeper stood by the roaring, red hot stove talking with the young, dark eyed woman, comely of face and figure, who was known from Juneau to Fort Yukon as the Virgin. Three men sat in at stud poker, but they played with small chips and without enthusiasm, while there were no onlookers. On the floor of the dancing room which opened out at the rear three couples were waltzing daintily to the strains of a violin and a piano.

Circle City was not deserted nor was money tight. The miners were in from Moosehide Creek and the other diggings to the west, the summer washing had been good, and the men's pouches were heavy with dust and nuggets. The Klondike had not yet been discovered, nor had the miners of the Yukon learned the possibilities of deep digging and wood firing. No work was done in the winter and they made a practice of hibernating in the large camps like Circle City during the long Arctic night. Time was heavy on their hands, their pouches were well filled, and the only social diversion to be found was in the saloons. Yet the Tivoli was practically deserted, and the Virgin, standing by the stove, yawned with uncovered mouth and said to Charley Bates:—

"If something don't happen soon I'm gona' to bed. What's the matter with the camp, anyway? Everybody dead?"

Bates did not even trouble to reply, but went on moodily rolling a cigarette. Dan MacDonald, pioneer saloonman and gambler on the upper Yukon, owner and proprietor of the Tivoli and all its games, wandered ferociously across the great vacant space of floor and joined the two at the stove.

"Hello, Daylight," the Virgin asked him.

"Looks like it," was the answer.

"Then it must be the whole camp," she said with an air of finality and with another yawn.

MacDonald nodded and nodded and opened his mouth to speak when the front door swung wide and a man appeared in the light. A rush of frost, turned to vapor by the heat of the room, swirled about him to his knees and poured on across the floor, growing thinner and thinner and perishing a dozen feet from the stove. Taking the vapor from its nest inside the door the newcomer brushed the snow from his moccasins and his German socks. He would have appeared a large man had not a huge French-Canadian stepped up to him from the bar and gripped his hand.

"Hello, Daylight," was his greeting. "By Gar, you good for some eyes!"

"Hello, Louis. When did you all blow in?" returned the newcomer. "Come up and have a drink and tell us all about Bone Creek. Why, dog-gone you-all, shake again. Where's that partner of yours? I'm looking for him."

Another huge man detached himself from the bar to shake hands. Olaf Henderson and French Louis, partners together on Bone Creek, were the two largest men in the country, and though they were but half a head taller than the newcomer, between them he was dwarfed completely.

"Hello, Olaf, you're my meat, savvy that?" said the one called Daylight. "To-morrow's my birthday and I'm going to put you-all on your back—savvy? And you, too, Louis. I can put you all on your back on my birthday—savvy? Come up and drink, Olaf, and I'll tell you-all about it."

The arrival of the newcomer seemed to send a flood of warmth through the place. "It's Burning Daylight!" the Virgin cried, the first to recognize him as he came into the light. Charley Bates' tight features relaxed at the sight, and MacDonald went over and joined the three at the bar. With the advent of Burning Daylight the whole place became suddenly brighter and cheerier. The barkeepers were active. Voices were raised. Somebody laughed. And when the fiddler, peering into the front room, remarked to the pianist, "It's Burning Daylight," the wait-time perceptibly quickened, and the dancers, catching the contagion, began to whirl about as if they really enjoyed it. It was known to them of old time that nothing languished when Burning Daylight was around.

He turned from the bar and saw the woman by the stove and the eager look of welcome she extended him.

"Hello, Virgin, old girl!" he called. "Hello, Charley! What's the matter with you-all? Why wear faces like that when coffins cost only three ounces? Come up, you-all, and drink. Come up, you unbred dead, an' name your poison. Come up, everybody. This is my night and I'm going to ride it. To-morrow I'm thirty, and then I'll be an old man. It's the last fling of youth. Are you all with me? Surge along, then. Surge along."

"Hold on there, Davis!" he called to the faro dealer, who had shoved his chair back from the table. "I'm going you one flutter to see whether you all drink with me or we all drink with you."

Pulling a heavy sack of gold dust from his coat pocket, he dropped it on the high chair.

"Fifty," he said.

The faro dealer slipped two cards. The high card won. He scribbled the amount on a pad and the weigher at the bar balanced fifty dollars' worth of dust in the gold scales and poured it into Burning Daylight's sack. The wait in the back room finished, the three couples, followed by the fiddler and the pianist and heading for the bar, caught Daylight's eye.

"Surge along, you-all!" he cried. "Surge along and name it. This is my night and it ain't a night that comes frequent. Surge up, you Siwash and salmon eaters. It's my night, I tell you-all!"

"A blame mangy night," Charley Bates inter-olated.

"You're right, my son," Burning Daylight went on gayly. "A mangy night, but it's my night, you see. I'm the mangy old he-wolf. Listen to me how!"

And how! he did, like a lone gray timber wolf, till the Virgin thrust her pretty fingers in her ears and shivered. A minute later she was whirled away in his arms to the dancing floor, where along with the other three women and their partners a rollicking Virginia reel was soon in progress. Men and women danced in moccasins, and the place was soon a-roar, Burning Daylight the centre of it and the animating spark, with quip and jest and rough merriment rousing them out of the slough of despond in which he had found them.

The atmosphere of the place changed with his coming. He seemed to fill it with his tremendous vitality. Men who entered from the street felt it immediately, and in response to their queries the barkeepers nodded at the back room and said comprehensively—"Burning Daylight's on the tear." And the men who entered remained and kept the barkeepers busy. The gamblers took heart of life and soon the tables were filled, the click of chips and whirr of the roulette ball rising monotonously and imperiously above the hoarse rumble of men's voices and their oaths and heavy laughs.

Few men knew Elam Harnish by any other name than Burning Daylight, the name which had been given him in the early days in the land because of his habit of routing his comrades out of their blankets with the complaint that daylight was burning. Of the pioneers in that far Arctic wilderness where all men were pioneers he was reckoned among the oldest. Men like Jack Mayo and Jack McQuestion antedated him, but they had entered the land by crossing the Rockies from the Hudson Bay country to the east. He, however, had been the pioneer over the Chilcoot and Chilcat passes. In the spring of 1883, twelve years before, a stripling of eighteen, he had crossed over the Chilcoot with five comrades. In the fall he had crossed back with one. Four had perished by mischance in the bleak, uncharted vastness. And for twelve years Elam Harnish had continued to grope for gold among the shadows of the Circle.

And no man had groped so obstinately or so enduringly. He had grown up with the land. He knew no other land. Civilization was a dream of some previous life. Camps like Forty Mile and Circle City were to him metropolises. And not alone had he grown up with the land, for raw as it was he had helped to make it. He had made history and geography, and those that followed wrote of his traverses and charted the trails his feet had broken.

Heroes are seldom given to hero worship, but among those of that young land, young as he was, he was accounted an elder hero. In point of time he was before them. In point of deed he was beyond them. In point of endurance it was acknowledged that he could kill the hardest of them. Furthermore, he was accounted a nery man, a square man and a white man.

In all lands where life is a hazard lightly played with and lightly flung aside men turn, almost automatically, to gambling for diversion and relaxation. In the Yukon men gambled their lives for gold and those who won gold from the ground gambled for it with one another. Nor was Elam Harnish an exception. He was a man's man primarily, and the instinct in him to play the game of life was strong. Environment had determined what form that game should take. Born on an Iowa farm, his father had emigrated to Eastern Oregon, in which mining country Elam's boyhood had been lived. He had known nothing but hard knocks for big stakes. Pluck and endurance counted in the game, and the great god Chance dealt the cards. Honest work for sure but meagre returns did not count. A man played big. He risked everything for everything and anything less than everything meant that he was a loser. So, for twelve Yukon years, Elam Harnish had been a loser. True, on Moosehide Creek the last summer he had taken out twenty thousand dollars and what was left in the ground was twenty thousand more. But, as he himself proclaimed, that was no more than getting his ante back. He had anted his life for a dozen years and forty thousand was a small pot for such a stake—the price of a drink and a dance at the Tivoli, of a winter's flutter at Circle City and a grub stake for the year to come.

The men of the Yukon reversed the old maxim till it read, Hard come, easy go. At the end of the reel Elam Harnish called the house up to drink again. Drinks were a dollar apiece, gold rated at sixteen dollars an ounce, there were thirty in the house that accepted his invitation and between every dance the house was Elam's guest. This was his night, and nobody was to be allowed to pay for anything. Not that Elam Harnish was a drinking man. Whiskey meant little to him. He was too vital and robust, too untroubled in mind and body, to incline to the slavery of alcohol. He spent months at a time on trail and river when he drank nothing stronger than coffee, while he had gone a year at a time without even coffee. But he was gregarious, and since the sole social expression of the Yukon was the saloon he expressed himself that way. When a lad in the mingling camps of the West men had always done that. To him it was the proper way for a man to express himself socially. He knew no other way.

He was a striking figure of a man, despite his garb being similar to that of all the men in the Tivoli. Soft fanned moccasins of moosehide, beaded in Indian design, covered his feet. His trousers were ordinary overalls, his coat was made from a blanket. Long gaudied leather mittens lined with wool hung by his side, being connected, Yukon fashion, by a leather thong passed around the neck and across the shoulders. On his head was a fur cap, the earflaps raised and the tying cords dangling. His face, lean and slightly long, with the suggestion of hollows under the cheekbones, seemed almost Indian. The burnt skin and the keen dark eyes contributed to this effect, though the bronze of the skin and the eyes themselves were essentially those of a white man. He looked older than thirty, and yet, smooth-shaven and without wrinkles, he was almost boyish. This feeling the onlooker had of age was based on no tangible evidence. It came from the abstract facts of the man, from what he had endured and survived, which was far beyond that of ordinary men. He had lived naked and tensity, and something of all this smoldered in his eyes, vibrated in his voice and seemed forever a-whisper on his lips.

The lips themselves were thin and prone to close tightly over the even, white teeth. But their harshness was retrieved by the upward curl at the corners of his mouth. This curl gave to him sweetness, as the minute puckers at the corner of the eyes gave him laughter. These necessary graces saved him from a Circle. After that Kearns had fallen back on his posts at Forty Mile and Sixty Mile and changed the direction of his ventures by sending out to the States for a small sawmill and a river steamer. The former was even then being sledged across Chilcoot Pass by Indians and dogs, and would come down the Yukon in the early summer after the ice run. Later in the summer, when Behring Sea and the mouth of the Yukon cleared of ice, the steamer, put together at St. Michael's, was to be expected up the river loaded to the guards with supplies.

Jack Kearns suggested poker. French Louis, Dan MacDonald and Hal Campbell, who had made a strike on Moosehide, all three of whom were not dancing because there were not enough girls to go around, inclined to the suggestion. They were looking for a fifth man when Burning Daylight emerged from the rear room, the Virgin on his arm, the train of dancers in his wake. In response to the hall of the poker players he came over to their table in the corner.

"Want you to sit in," said Campbell. "How's your luck?"

"I sure got it to-night," Burning Daylight answered with enthusiasm, and at the same time felt the Virgin press his arm warningly. She wanted him to go for the dancing. "I sure got my luck with me, but I'd sooner dance. I ain't hankerin' to take the money away from you-all."

Nobody urged. They took his refusal as final, and the Virgin was pressing his arm to turn him away in pursuit of the supper seekers when he experienced a change of heart. It was not that he did not want to dance, nor that he wanted to hurt her, but that insistent pressure on his arm put his free man nature in revolt. The thought in his mind was that he did not want any woman running him. Himself a favorite with women, nevertheless he did not bulk big with him. They were toys, playthings, part of the relaxation of the bigger game of life. He met women along with the whiskey and gambling, and from observation he had found that it was far easier to break away from the drink and the cards than from a woman once the man was properly entangled.

He was a slave to himself, which was natural in a man with a healthy ego, but he rebelled in ways either murderous or panicky at being a slave to anybody else. Love's sweet servitude was a thing of which he had no comprehension. Men he had seen in love impressed him as lunatics, and lunacy was a thing he had never considered worth analyzing. But comradeship with men was different from love with women. There was no servitude in comradeship. It was a business proposition, a square deal between men who did not pursue each other, but who shared the risks of trail and river and mountain in the pursuit of life and treasure. Men and women pursued each other, and one must needs bend the other to his will or hers. Comradeship was different. There was no slavery about it, and, though he, a strong man beyond strength's seeming, gave far more than he received, he gave not something due but in royal largesse, his gifts of toll or heroic effort falling generously from his hands. To pack for days over the gale swept passes or across the mosquito ridden marshes and to pack double the weight his comrade packed did not involve unfairness or compulsion. Each did his best. That was the business essence of it. Some men were stronger than others, true; but so long as each man did his best it was fair exchange, the business spirit was observed, and the square deal obtained.

But with women—no. Women gave little and wanted all. Women had apron strings and were prone to tie them about any man who looked twice in their direction. There was the Virgin, yawning her head off when he came in and mightily pleased that he asked her to dance. One dance was all very well, but because he danced twice and thrice with her, and several times more, she squeezed his arm when they asked him to sit in at poker. It was the obnoxious apron string, the first of the many compulsions she would exert upon him if he gave in. Not that she was not a nice bit of a woman, healthy and strapping and good to look upon, also a very excellent dancer, but that she was a woman with all a woman's desire to rope him with her apron strings and tie him hand and foot for the branding. Better poker. Besides, he liked poker as well as he did dancing.

He resisted the pull on his arm by the mere negative mass of him, and said:—

"I sort of feel a hankerin' to give you-all a flutter."

Again came the pull on his arm. She was trying to pass the apron string around him. For the fraction of an instant he was a savage, dominated by the wave of fear and murder that rose up in him. For that infinitesimal space of time he was to all purposes a frightened tiger filled with rage and terror at the apprehension of the trap. Had he been no more than a savage he would have leaped wildly from the place or else sprung upon her and destroyed her. But in that same instant there stirred in him the generations of discipline by which man has become an inadequate social animal. Tact and sympathy strove with him, and he smiled with his eyes into the Virgin's eyes as he said:—

"You-all go and get some grub. I ain't hungry. And we'll dance some more by and by. The night's young yet. Go to it, old girl."

He released his arm and thrust her playfully on the shoulder, at the same time turning to the poker players.

"Take off the limit and I'll go you-all."

"Limit's the roof," said Jack Kearns.

"Take off the roof!"

The players glanced at one another and Kearns announced, "The roof's off."

Elam Harnish dropped into the waiting chair, started to pull out his gold sack and changed his mind. The Virgin pouted a moment, then followed in the wake of the other dancers.

"I'll bring you a sandwich, Daylight," she called back over her shoulder.

He nodded. She was smiling her forgiveness. He had escaped the apron string and without hurting her feelings too severely.

"Let's play markers," he suggested. "Chips do everlastingly clutter up the table. If it's agreeable to you-all."

"I'm willing," answered Hal Campbell. "Let mine run at five hundred."

"Mine, too," answered Harnish, while the others stated the values they put on their own markers, French Louis, the most modest, issuing his at a hundred dollars each.

In Alaska at that time there were no rascols and no tinhorn gamblers. Games were conducted honestly and men trusted one another. A man's word was as good as his gold in the blower. A marker was a flat, oblong composition chip, worth perhaps a cent. But when a man bet a marker in a game and said it was worth five hundred dollars it was accepted as worth five hundred dollars. Whoever won it knew that the man who issued it would redeem it with five hundred dollars' worth of dust weighed out on the scales. The markers being of different colors, there was no difficulty in identifying the owners. Also, in that early Yukon day, no one dreamed of playing table stakes. A man was good for all that he possessed, no matter where his possessions were or what was their nature.

Harnish cut and got the deal. At this good angry, and while shuffling the deck, he called to the barkeepers to set up the drinks for the house. As he dealt the first card to Dan MacDonald, on his left, he called out:—

"Get down to the ground, you-all Malemites, buskies and Siwash pups! Get down and dig in! Tighten up them traces! Put your weight into the harness and bust the breast-bands! Whoop! Yow! We're off and bound for Helen Breakfast! And I tell you-all clear and plain there's gold to be stiff grades and fast gold to-night before we win to that same lady. And somebody's going to bump—hard."

The Weigher at the Bar Balanced Fifty Dollars' Worth of Dust in the Gold Scales and Poured It into Burning Daylight's Sack

nature that was essentially savage and that otherwise would have been cruel and bitter. The nose was lean, full-nostrilled and delicate, and of a size to fit the face; while the high forehead, as if to atone for its narrowness, was splendidly domed and symmetrical. In line with the Indian effect was his hair, very straight and very black, with a gloss to it that only health could give.

"Burning Daylight's burning candlelight," laughed Dan MacDonald, as an outburst of exclamations and merriment came from the dancers.

"An' he iss der boy to do it, eh, Louis?" said Olaf Henderson.

"Yes, by Gar! you bet on dat," said French Louis.

"Dat boy is all gold!"

"And when God Almighty washes Daylight's soul out at the last big sluicin' day," MacDonald interrupted, "why, God Almighty'll have to shovel gravel along with him into the sluice boxes."

"Dot iss goot," Olaf Henderson muttered, regarding the gambler with profound admiration.

"Ver good," affirmed French Louis. "I tink we take a drink on dat one time, eh?"

CHAPTER II.

It was two in the morning when the dancers, bent on getting something to eat, adjourned the dancing for half an hour. And it was at this moment that Jack Kearns suggested poker. Jack Kearns was a big, bluff featured man, who, along with Bettles, had made the disastrous attempt to found a post on the head reaches of the Koyukuk, far inside the Arctic

"Surge along, you-all!" he cried. "Surge along and name it. This is my night and it ain't a night that comes frequent. Surge up, you Siwash and salmon eaters. It is my night, I tell you-all."

BRITISH VIKING FISHERY

United States Loses Main Points

Three-Mile Limit to Begin at Headlands of Bays

Colonies Have Power to Enact Laws to Protect Fisheries—Gloucester Sees the Finish of Their Industry—Washington Admits Defeat.

The Hague, Sept. 7.—The following is the award of the Hague tribunal on the fisheries dispute:

Answer to first question—The right of Great Britain to the exclusive jurisdiction over the coast fisheries of the United States to the exercise of the liberty to take fish, referred to in Article 1 of the treaty of October 20, 1818, in the form of municipal laws, ordinances or rules of Great Britain, Canada or Newfoundland is inherent to the sovereignty of Great Britain. The exercise of that right by Great Britain is, however, limited by the said treaty in respect of the said liberties therein granted to the inhabitants of the United States, in that such regulations must be made bona fide and must not be in violation of the said treaty regulations which are (1) appropriate or necessary for the protection and preservation of such fisheries, or (2) desirable or necessary on grounds of public order and morals without unnecessary interference with the liberty itself, and in both cases equitable and fair, as between local American fishermen, and not so framed as to give unfairly an advantage to the former over the latter class, are not inconsistent with the obligation to execute the said treaty in good faith, and are therefore reasonable and not in violation of the treaty.

Colonial Laws.

For the decision of the question whether the British or is not reasonable, as being in accordance with the disposition of the treaty, and not in violation thereof, the treaty of 1818 contains no special provision. The settlement of the differences in this respect that might arise hereafter was left to the ordinary means of diplomatic intercourse.

By reason, however, of the force in which Question 1 is put and by further reason of the admission of Great Britain by her counsel before this tribunal that it is not now for either of the parties to the treaty to determine the reasonableness of any regulation made by Great Britain, Canada or Newfoundland, it is decided, must be decided not by either of the parties, but by an impartial tribunal in accordance with the principles of international law.

In the matter proposed in the recommendation made by the tribunal, in virtue of Article 4 of the agreement.

The tribunal further decides that Article 4 of the agreement is, as stated by counsel of the respective parties at the argument, permanent in its effect and not terminable by the expiration of the general arbitration treaty of 1908 between Great Britain and the United States. In execution thereof the responsibilities imposed upon this tribunal in regard to articles 2, 3 and 4 of the special agreement are hereby pronounced in their regard as follows:

The Award.

Answer to question 2—Now therefore in view of the preceding considerations this tribunal is of the opinion that the inhabitants of the United States, while exercising the liberties referred to in the said article, have a right to employ as members of the fishing crews of their vessels persons, not inhabitants of the United States, in view of the preceding considerations the tribunal, to prevent any misunderstanding as to the effect of its award, expresses the opinion that non-inhabitants, employed as members of the fishing crews of United States vessels, derive no benefit of immunity from the treaty and it is so decided and awarded.

Answer to question 3—The requirement that an American fishing vessel should report, if proper conveniences for doing so are at hand, is not unreasonable for the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion. There should be no such requirement, however, unless there be reasonably convenient opportunity afforded to report in person or by telegraph, either at a custom house or to a customs official, but the exercise of the fishing liberty by the inhabitants of the United States should not be subjected to the purely commercial formalities of a report, entry and clearance at a custom house, nor to light, harbor or other dues imposed upon Newfoundland fishermen.

Not Necessary to Enter at Customs.

Answer to question 4—And it is decided and awarded that such restrictions are not permissible unless American fishermen entering such bays for any of the four purposes aforesaid and remaining more than forty-eight hours therein should be required, if thought necessary by Great Britain or the colonial government, to report either in person or by telegraph at a custom house or to a customs official if reasonably convenient opportunity therefor is afforded and it is so decided and awarded.

The Three-Mile Limit

Answer to question 5—For these reasons the tribunal decides and awards in case of bays, the three marine miles are to be measured from a straight line drawn across the body of water at the place where the contour of the bay is confirmed and characteristics of a bay. At all other places the three marine miles are to be measured following sinuosities of the coast. Now this tribunal hereby recommends for the consideration and acceptance of the high contracting parties the following rules and method of procedure for determining the limits of the bays herebefore enumerated:

In every bay, not hereinafter specifically provided for, the limits of exclusion shall be drawn three miles seaward from a straight line across the bay in the part nearest the entrance, at the first point where the width does not exceed ten miles.

(2). In the following bays where the configuration of the coast and the local climatic conditions are such that foreign fishermen, when within the geographic headlands, might reasonably and bona fide believe themselves on the high seas, the limits of exclusion shall be drawn in each case between the headlands hereinafter specified as being those at and within which such fishermen might be reasonably expected to recognize the bay under average conditions.

New Brunswick Limits.

For the Baie des Chaleurs, the line from the light at Birch Point on Miscou Island to Macqueraine Point light.

For the Bay of Miramichi, the line from the light at Point Beauséjour to the light on the eastern point of Tabusinat Gully.

For Egmont Bay, in Prince Edward Island, the line from the light at Capé Edouard to the light at West Point, and off St. Ann's Bay, in the province of Nova Scotia, the line from the light at Point Anconi to the nearest point on the opposite shore of the mainland.

For Fortune Bay, in Newfoundland, the line from Connaigre Head to the light on the southeasterly end of Bonnet Island, thence to Fortune Head.

For or near the following bays, the limits of exclusion shall be three marine miles seawards from the following lines, namely: For or near Barrington Bay, in Nova Scotia, the line from the light on Stoddard Island to the light on the south point of Cape Sable, thence to the light at Baccaro Point.

At Chedabucto and St. Peter's bays, the line from Cranberry Island light to Green Island light, thence to Point Rouge.

For Miramichi Bay, the line from the light on the eastern point of Miramichi Island to the northeasterly point of Cape Morien.

At Placentia Bay, in Newfoundland, the line from Latine Point on the eastern mainland shore to the most southerly point of Red Island, thence by the most southerly point of Mersheen Island to the mainland.

Long Island and Brier Island in St. Mary's Bay in Nova Scotia shall for the purpose of delimitation be taken as the coasts of such bays.

Bay of Fundy Exempt.

It is understood that nothing in these rules refers either to the Bay of Fundy, considered as a whole apart from its bays and creeks, or as to the Innocent Passage through the Gut of Canso which was excluded by the agreement, and by the exchange of notes between Mr. Bacon and Mr. Bryce, dated February 21, 1909, and March 4, 1909, or to Conception Bay, which was provided for by the decision of the privy council in the case of the direct United States Cable Company vs. the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, in which decision the United States have acquiesced.

Answer to question 6—Therefore this tribunal is of the opinion that American fishermen are entitled to fish in the bays, creeks and harbors of the coast of Newfoundland and the Magdalen Islands, and it is so decided and awarded.

Answer to question 7—For these reasons the tribunal is of the opinion that the inhabitants of the United States are so entitled, in so far as concerns this treaty, there being nothing in its provisions to disentitle them, provided the treaty liberty of fishing, and the commercial privileges are not exercised concurrently, and it is so decided and awarded.

A Blow to Americans.

Boston, Sept. 7.—(Special)—The Hague fisheries decision, as a whole, is regarded as adverse to the interest of Gloucester vessels. Under the decision the American vessels will be barred from bays where the most successful operations have been carried on.

The claim of the Newfoundland government that it has a right to regulate fishing conditions in the bay, is being made it difficult for Americans to operate profitably in a poor fishing season. Under this decision the Newfoundland government has the right to fix the time and methods of fishing, thus forbidding the use of trawls and other equipment within the three-mile limit, while the decision names from headland to headland, blocking off numerous bays which have been entered heretofore by American fishermen. Gloucester despatch to the Globe says:

"Since the Newfoundland government is allowed to take measures to protect its fisheries in treaty waters, the fishing here will be badly hampered. In case the Newfoundland government should think it advisable to prohibit the taking of the fish for a period in winter, it would be all off with the herring fishery during that time."

The Boston Transcript says editorially:

"The Hague Tribunal on the fisheries controversy is essential to an exact balance of gain and losses between the United States and Great Britain, but at present writing it is evident that one of our main contentions has been rejected, and that the fate of another is dependent on the interpretation of an expression that is always elastic. The British idea has been to shut out our fishermen from the deep, far-reaching bays to which fish resort in millions. The tribunal has decided, according to its interpretation of the treaty of 1818, that the British interpretation is correct, thereby justifying the exclusion of American fishermen from bays wherein their own could be most liberally rewarded. Our intent and purpose pronounced in the treaty was to give a 'contour line' to the bay, the second of our main contentions, which has failed ill at the hands of the arbitrators, is that the colonial legislatures cannot enact rules governing American fishermen without the consent and approval of the United States."

United States Admits Defeat.

Washington, Sept. 7.—A substantial victory for Great Britain, or perhaps the two most important points, a consoling triumph for the United States in the other five points, with the prospect of another arbitration later at the instance of the United States government, is the way the decision of the Hague tribunal in the Newfoundland fisheries case is viewed here.

The decision eliminates the right of the United States to share in making and enforcing "reasonable regulations" governing the fisheries in the disputed territory, and it is that qualification "reasonable" that may permit this government some time to re-open the question of joint action as to the regulations. The state department has not been officially advised of the decision, and therefore declines to comment upon it.

The treaty coats involved are the southern and western coast of Newfoundland, from Rameau Island, around by Cape Ray to Quiron Island, and the Labrador coast, from Mount Joli northward indefinitely.

The treaty of 1818, around which the whole long-fought controversy evolves, declared the United States right to "take, dry and cure" fish on these coasts and to "dry and cure" only on any of the unsettled bays, harbors and creeks on the rest of the southern Newfoundland and Labrador coasts.

Under the treaty Great Britain conceded the rights just mentioned and the United States renounced any claim to take, cure or dry fish within the three mile limit not included in this specified territory, except that American fishermen were to be permitted to enter British waters for shelter, etc.

The defeat of the Washington contention on the first which includes regulations as to time and method of fishing, is especially deplored here.

Under the lost ground concerns the headland doctrine, wherein the British contention was that the three marine miles, within which the United States agreed not to take, dry or cure fish, should be measured from an imaginary line drawn across the mouth of a bay from headland to headland.

The United States contended that the treaty referred only to bays not exceeding six miles in width, and that the coast line was to be taken across the entrance to those bays so as to give Great Britain a three mile belt beyond the entrance line, but that in any larger bays the limit on territorial water followed the sinuosities of the bays coast.

The Washington claim apparently grew out of the migration of mackerel to the Bay of Fundy, where they were followed by the United States fishermen. On virtually all the other contentions on the American side seems to have won. The British cannot make the United States fishermen report to the customs houses; they cannot impose upon these fishermen lights, harbor or other dues; Newfoundlanders may be employed on the United States fishing vessels, and these vessels, upon entering treaty coasts, are accorded the right to purchase supplies and other commodities, and they may fish in the bays on the treaty coasts, except Labrador.

The Washington claim apparently grew out of the migration of mackerel to the Bay of Fundy, where they were followed by the United States fishermen. On virtually all the other contentions on the American side seems to have won. MUCH SUFFERING AT CAMPBELLTON

Cold Storm Adds to Misery of Homeless Families

Campbellton, N. B., Sept. 7.—Last night and today's cold easterly storm has created consternation among the inhabitants of the tented city and is only a foretaste of what can be expected almost any time during the month. The storm set in early last night and this morning there were sorry sights about the tents. Children suffering from the cold with no hope of warmth; mothers struggling over open fires or without shelter to prepare food for the family; men hastily dressing in the dark and snatching a cold bite, then off for the day's work.

People who have not visited the tents in weather such as prevails today can form no conception of the misery of those whose only home is a tent.

The weather has acted as a stimulus to those who are building, and all are making greater efforts to get into their winter quarters. The thirty cottages being erected by the relief committee in which to house the homeless, are taking shape and by Sept. 15 about half of them will be ready for tenants.

The cold weather has also created discomfort at the temporary post office. This shack was hastily constructed after the fire and while the roof is tight, the sides, ends and floor are wide cracks, through which the cold, damp wind finds access and the postmaster and his staff have suffered severely. It was so disagreeable today that Postmaster Mackendrick was forced to lock up the office and look for more comfortable quarters.

Contractor Corbett, of St. John, has commenced work on the Lonsbury brick block. This will be a fine structure when completed.

A young man, who conducted a restaurant at the upper end of Water street, was arrested Monday morning on the Maritime Express while endeavoring to leave town quietly. He is accused of selling liquor illegally.

TOO COLD TO WORK IN THE POST OFFICE SHACK AND POSTMASTER FORCED TO SEEK WARMER QUARTERS—THIRTY COTTAGES FOR VICTIMS BEING ERRECTED BY RELIEF COMMITTEE.

London, Sept. 6.—Dr. Crippen and the LeNeve woman again appeared in Bow street today. Apparently there was no diminution in interest in the case, and an eager crowd assembled as early as 7 o'clock.

A Canadian Justice of the Peace in a call there was a great rush, which the police had difficulty in stemming. Crippen arrived with a special guard.

The prosecution has dropped the murder charge against Miss LeNeve. Her husband, Dawson, was accommodated on the bench at the sitting. Dr. Crippen had an alert air, but Miss LeNeve again hid her face in her blue scarf.

The Goodfryes, prosecuting attorney, outlined the history of the peace, named the home time on which the accused and his wife existed were more apparent than real. Crippen said his wife gave way to fits of anger and as a consequence they occupied separate rooms. Her life was of no interest to him, she seemed to have become fond of another man.

For three years, said Mr. Humphreys, Miss LeNeve had lived on very intimate terms with Crippen. In January Miss LeNeve had been in a call on him and during that time his opinion of Canada's greatness had lessened.

"With one thing was I especially struck while in the west," continued Sir Wilfrid Laurier, "I met many men from many lands. The people we met were not all French and English but have come from the four corners of the earth, but whatever tongue they spoke, whatever blood they owned, they were all proud to call themselves Canadians. I met men who had recently come more proud to call themselves Canadians than were even the native born."

"There was yet another thing which struck me strongly and that was the growing broadness of view. Not yet but I met many men from many lands. The pride of locality will have passed and there will remain in its place only a pride in Canada, our common country."

In conclusion he said that he had seen many charming cities in the west, and in Winnipeg and Vancouver especially, had seen more proud to call themselves Canadians than were even the native born.

"There was yet another thing which struck me strongly and that was the growing broadness of view. Not yet but I met many men from many lands. The pride of locality will have passed and there will remain in its place only a pride in Canada, our common country."

Dr. Crippen was escorted by a cortege of carriages to his home on Laurier avenue, where Lady Laurier, who returned yesterday from Banff, was waiting to greet him. Tomorrow he will at once resume the multifarious duties of his office as first minister. All the ministers' availed themselves of the opportunity to attend a cabinet meeting this afternoon. On Saturday morning Sir Wilfrid will be in Montreal to address the eucharistic congress.

The premier returns to the capital in excellent health and spirits despite the almost constant physical and mental strain of his two month tour of the west. Some of the extent of his tour and of the nicety of arrangements which characterized all its various details is shown by the fact that during the sixty days the party traveled nearly 10,000 miles over a quarter of a continent, and was addressed at various public gatherings and yet there was not a single failure to keep to the minute every appointment of the itinerary as originally planned last June.

To F. P. Pender, M. P., chief government whip, the success of the tour in respect to administrative details of arrangement is largely due.

Sir Wilfrid and the members of his party addressed some thirty-two large mass meetings from Port Arthur west and in addition the premier made brief speeches from his car to the people assembled at hundreds of places en route. In addition, Sir Wilfrid received many deputations throughout the west and took part in numerous public ceremonies, including the laying of the corner stone for the new university of Saskatchewan.

HATTIE LeBLANC'S TRIAL IN JANUARY

Rev. A. A. Rideout, of Fredericton, to Take Up Massachusetts' Pastorate Sept. 18.

Boston, Sept. 7.—Owing to the press of business, the trial of Hattie LeBlanc, of Arichat (N. S.), for the murder of the wealthy Waltham laundry owner, Clarence Glover, has been postponed until January.

In response to a unanimous call sent by the Blaney Memorial Baptist church, Dorchester Lower Mills, Rev. Allen A. Rideout, of Fredericton, has accepted the position of pastor of that church, and will begin his first sermon Sept. 18. Mr. Rideout was born in Hartland (N. B.), thirty-four years ago. He is assistant secretary of the United Baptist Association of New Brunswick.

TALKS OF TRIP

Sir Wilfrid Declares East and West Jealousies Will Soon Be a Thing of the Past and All Will Work for Canada as a Whole—Cabinet Meeting Today.

Ottawa, Sept. 7.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier was welcomed back to the capital this afternoon by the cheers of several hundred of his fellow citizens. Irrespective of party they assembled at the Union station to meet the special train bringing the prime minister and his party home again. The band of the Governor-General's Foot-Guards greeted him with the rousing strains of 'O Canada, and the surging crowd cheered and cheered again as Sir Wilfrid bowed his acknowledgments from the car.

An address of welcome on behalf of the French-speaking citizens of Ottawa was read in French by A. Allard, M. P., and an English address was read by L. J. Kehoe, president of the Ottawa Reform Association.

Sir Wilfrid, in reply, said he wished he could find words to express the feelings aroused in him by this warm welcome back to the place which had been his home for over fourteen years. For six weeks it had been his privilege to visit many places in the Canadian west and during that time his opinion of Canada's greatness had lessened.

"With one thing was I especially struck while in the west," continued Sir Wilfrid Laurier, "I met many men from many lands. Englishman Leads All Competitors

Soars Over Boston Harbor for $10,000 Prize

Does Thirty-three Miles in About Forty Minutes—After Return He Chases Brookins in Altitude Race and Beats Him 800 Feet.

Boston, Sept. 7.—Over land and sea, Claude Grahame-White, of England, sailed out to Boston light and return late today in his Bleriot Dragon, to the plants of 40,000 people, the first competitor for the Globe's $10,000 prize, the blue ribbon event of the Harvard-Boston air meet at Atlantic.

The course was one of thirty-three miles, being a straight away drive over seven miles to the light, in the outer harbor, which was repeated, then a number of turns on the course to make the total mileage.

The Englishman made a mark of forty minutes one and three-fifths seconds, which, if it is not bettered before the meet closes next Tuesday night, will give him the big money of the meet. It was the first clear day of the meet, and while the wind was blowing from the west, gradually subsided to easy eight miles per hour sunset.

The stands were packed with people and the enthusiasm was unbounded as event after event was run. The first event was a flight to the Boston light interest centered during the afternoon on the fifty flights of Johnstone, and Brookins, of the Wright camp, and White, of England, who went out after altitude marks.

Johnstone was the first to pilot his Bleriot to the light, and it was but a few moments before his wide circles had sent him several thousand feet into the air.

Glenn H. Curtiss came out in his new Bleriot in the meantime, and did three circuits of the one and three-quarters mile course in six minutes 29.35 seconds.

White at the same time took up his trial for the first in the accuracy test, and only succeeded in landing 102 feet over the inches from a given point, it being the first mark in that event. White used the Farman biplane. A little later he brought the motorless monoplane and whipped around the course in a speed event, and the trick in six minutes 15.35 seconds, which was 14.35 seconds slower than his best time for the event made Monday.

White Starts for Big Prize.

The three laps of the course were but a warning up for the Bleriot before starting out for the Boston light trip, however. Another lap was made and then White, at an elevation of approximately 1,000 feet, headed his Bleriot toward the light, and succeeded in landing 102 feet over the inches from a given point, it being the first mark in that event. White used the Farman biplane. A little later he brought the motorless monoplane and whipped around the course in a speed event, and the trick in six minutes 15.35 seconds, which was 14.35 seconds slower than his best time for the event made Monday.

BETTER PAY FOR NOVA SCOTIA CLERGYMEN

Bishop Worrell Hopes to Make Minimum Stipend $1,000 Yearly--Church Congress Discusses Important Matters.

White Starts for Big Prize.

Halifax, Sept. 6.—Twelve distinct subjects were considered by the Church of England conference at its sessions today, and it was a busy day for the delegates and the public who attended the various conferences and meetings.

One of the topics of more than ordinary interest, was that taken up in section B, where "our relations with the church of the motherland" was discussed by the Archbishop of Ottawa, Rev. Canon Phair, of Winnipeg; Rev. P. Storr, of London, and the Bishop of Montreal.

Canon Phair outlined four propositions: (1st) In theory the church in Canada is independent of the church in the home-land; (2nd) Practically the same dependence is justified on account of the close connection; (3rd) The frank recognition of this would be useful to us; (4th) There should be some central authority or board for the Anglican communion, in view of the practical autonomy of the Canadian church.

Diocesan problems and parochial problems were two topics discussed in succession, in section A the speakers being Canon MacNab and the Bishop of Washington on the first and Rev. P. Storr, of Montreal; the Bishop of Algoma and the Bishop of Massachusetts on the second.

The Cathedral, Its Place and Its Maintenance was the next topic. The cathedral idea was shown to be making great advances in Canada and the United States during the past quarter of a century.

The Bishop of Algoma deprecated the multiplication of sects and saw in this a great problem.

Another problem is the divorce of religious from secular education in the day schools and the inadequacy of teaching in the Sunday school.

Bishop Worrell announced this afternoon, amid applause, that the thanks of the congregation be given to the Rev. P. Storr, of Montreal, for his able and energetic ministrations in Nova Scotia while ministering here for a year.

ELEVEN-YEAR-OLD HARRY BRUNDAGE SHOT TO DEATH ON THE PIKE THURSDAY AFTERNOON

Received Bullet Through Heart from Gun in Hands of Boy Latter Was Working Around the Shooting Gallery, and Was in the Act of Fixing One of the Rifles—This Attraction is Now Closed—Lad and His Employer Held Pending Inquiry.

Friday, Sept. 9. Harry Masters Brundage, the eleven-year-old son of Mrs. Joseph Brundage, Broad street, was accidentally shot and killed on the exhibition grounds yesterday afternoon by William Humphreys, a young lad of twelve years, who was assisting Patrick Walsh, manager of a shooting gallery on the Pike.

Just when the merriment on the show grounds was at its height, about 3.30 p. m., while Mlle. Bergerat was being strapped into her automobile preparatory to taking her death swing, a shot rang out, heard only by those in the immediate vicinity, owing to the noise of the many Pike attractions, and in a few minutes little Harry Brundage was dead with a bullet wound through the heart.

The first intimation that the majority of the people had of the tragedy was when a voice was heard through a megaphone asking if there was a doctor within hearing—a boy had been shot. Instantly a tremor ran through the vast throng and as two men were seen hurrying in the direction indicated by the voice from the megaphone, the crowd surged that way. The police and a number of attendants along the Pike did their utmost to keep back the people who were clamoring to know who had been shot, for many fathers and mothers were fearful lest it was one of their own. Finally a rope was stretched and room afforded for the physicians to examine the little form that was lying on the top of a counter in front of a ring-the-bell booth.

Dr. Johnson, of Grand Manan, and Dr. Camp, of Upper Sheffield, the latter a guest of Mr. N. Dean, were the first to reach the scene, and after a hasty examination they sadly announced that there was no hope. The boy was then breathing but very feebly, and soon all sign of life was extinct.

The little form looked pitiful as it lay, with its face to the sky, and there were wet eyes in the crowd of a rough-looking man who had the appearance of having seen the seamy side of life, remarked: "He was a fine kid, but that's always the way, the good ones are taken and the bad ones left." The little chest was bared and a small hole showed where the bullet had entered the left ventricle. Word was sent for the ambulance and while awaiting its arrival the body was carried to the police headquarters in the transportation building. Mr. Scudamore, Campbell and Policeman Sullivan in the meantime, Policeman Marshall held the Humphreys lad, pending an inquiry. When the ambulance arrived the boy and the lifeless body were taken to the central station to await an inquiry by Coroner Berryman.

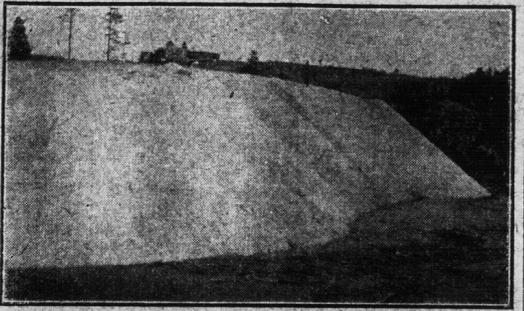

William Quinn, an uncle of the dead boy, was notified immediately after the accident happened. He was in the industrial building, where he conducts a glass-blowing exhibit. After viewing the body he hastened to break the news to the lad's mother.

Where Victim Worked. Paul Dooley, for whom young Brundage was working, conducts a booth in which the visitor is invited to employ wood in dolls. The lad was employed in picking up the balls and at the time of the accident was standing at the side of the booth farthest from the shooting gallery, which was alongside. It appears that a man had just been shooting and something apparently going wrong with the gun, he handed it to young Humphreys to fix. While working with it, the weapon discharged and the bullet passed between the boards in the side wall and struck Brundage. Mr. Dooley said he was standing alongside the boy and did not at first realize what had happened. Then he saw the boy sway and exclaim: "I'm shot." He quickly opened the lad's blouse and saw blood trickling from a small wound over the heart. The boy was sent for a doctor. In the meantime for about a minute the boy was conscious and cried and talked hysterically, then lapsed into unconsciousness. Mr. Dooley said the boy was willing and anxious to earn a little money he had given him a pocketful of money. He was greatly affected by the sad occurrence.

The shooting gallery concession was granted to T. J. Phillips. After the accident the police department closed, fearing other accidents might occur.

A Sad Home. A Telegraph reporter called at the home of Mrs. Brundage, the dead boy's mother, and the scene there was sorrowful. Four little tots, the youngest not quite two years old and the oldest only twelve, were playing around the door, not realizing the terrible calamity that had befallen their brother. Their mother, a frail little woman, lay on her death bed, being critically ill with tuberculosis, and not expected to live long. The news of her loved one's death came as a great shock to her and will undoubtedly hasten her death.

PHOTOGRAPH SHOWING HOW GEO. B. JONES, M.P.P., AT APOHAQUI OBSERVES THE LAW CONCERNING THE PROTECTION OF STREAMS FROM SAWDUST

Pile of Sawdust, with Dump-cart at top of the pile, about to dump a load over.

A few days ago an enterprising photographer had occasion to visit Jones Bros' mill, which is situated on the Millstream, very near its junction with the Kennebecasis. There is an immense pile of sawdust along the Millstream, so that the foot of the pile being in the bed of the stream, so that at every rise of water the stream eats into the bottom of the pile and carries away great quantities of sawdust. As the autumn rains and high water may now be expected soon, it is evident that many tons of the sawdust will be swept away and carried into the Kennebecasis, and evidently the sawdust is dumped on the Millstream bank with the expectation that it will be so disposed of. This is the old story.

The photograph herewith published gives some idea of the extent of the sawdust pile, and shows a man with a horse and dump cart on the top of the pile. This exhibit is a particularly interesting one because of a letter written by Jones Bros. a few weeks ago when the Dominion fishery inspector warned them against further infraction of the law against the pollution of streams. In that letter Mr.

Jones or his firm (George B. Jones is one of the members of the legislature for Kings county) solemnly asserted that while he had attempted to prevent sawdust from being dumped into the Millstream, or so placed that the stream might wash it away, he could not always watch his men and their early in the spring they had ignored his instructions and actually dumped some sawdust where it was subsequently reached by an unusual rise of water.

The picture showing the man with the dump cart on the top of the pile of sawdust would seem to indicate that Mr. Jones' employes are still ignoring his strict orders in this matter of the sawdust and that, although Mr. Jones has not yet discovered it, he could not always watch his men and their early in the spring they had ignored his instructions and actually dumped some sawdust where it was subsequently reached by an unusual rise of water.

How the photograph is to be reconciled with the statements made in Jones Bros' letter at the time the complaint was made by the Dominion fishery office is a question upon which light is needed.

Some Facts About Poultry

By J. R. Cote, Chatham, Ontario.

(By J. R. Cote, Chatham, Ont.) The poultry industry in Canada and the United States brings in more money than all the gold and silver mines combined; this may seem a wild statement but it is amply borne by statistics. Statistics are too dry, and no doubt before this had plenty of chances to see in black and white the millions of eggs which are laid and sold every year.

A hen should lay between 100 to 150 eggs, and the hen of Canada lays on an average fifty eggs which is far too low, and this is due to the carelessness attached to poultry by the farmers. Well-bred stock with good care will give the number of eggs stated, and this has been in several ways demonstrated, but I have had my own experience in my yards, and I can certify that the above statement is absolutely correct.

What about cost of producing? Under ordinary conditions a dozen of eggs can be produced for four cents a dozen. But the amount of money you could derive from poultry keeping for egg production. There are about 100 varieties of domestic fowls and these are divided into ten classes, as follows: American, Asiatic, Mediterranean, Hamburg, Polish, French, English, Game, Bantams and miscellaneous.

The American class contains those breeds which have originated in the United States such as Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Javas and Dominiques and other breeds. The Asiatic class has been bred from stock originally brought from Asia, among which we find Brahmans, Cochins and Langshans.

The Mediterranean class originated along the shores of the sea from which they get their name. But four breeds belong to that class and they are the Andalusians, the Whitefaced Black Spanish, the Leghorns and the Minorcas. The class called Mamburg is what contains the varieties known formerly as "Pheasant" and "Dutch" also the "layers", the Hamburgs and also the Campines.

The class called Polish does not originate from Poland, but is called Polish from the globular top-knot or crest which surmounts the head of the members of that variety. The name Polish derives from the word "Pol" which is the name given to that top-knot in England.

The Houdans, Coquevois and LaFleches constitutes the French class. The Houdans are not bred largely in this country, although they are a good breed, and the other two breeds are hardly found anywhere worth while to mention. The Dorkings constitute the English class, and whether they do not do well in their country or by other reasons, you can find very few in Canada, and far less in the States.

The Game class contains the Pit and the exhibition varieties, and the Bantam class contains many varieties, and these are being consequently raised in large numbers. They are about all the varieties of the larger breeds. The smaller it is the more it is raised.

There are many varieties of nearly every breed. They are the white, buff and black. There are also the golden and silver, and barred, and then there are the single, rose comb, and pea comb varieties.
