Charles Tucker

Electrocuted

MURDERER OF MABEL PAGE WAS EXECUTED YESTERDAY--MADE NO CONFESSION.

Boston, June 12.—Charles Louis Tucker, of Auburndale, was electrocuted at the Massachusetts State prison at 12.12 o'clock this morning pursuant to a sentence of death passed against him as the penalty for having murdered Miss Mabel Page who was found dead, stabbed to death at the secluded home of her father on a Weston highway on March 31st, 1904.

The condemned murderer whose case has aroused the public interest and public discussion unparalleled for many years in the history of Massachusetts crime and to save whom the most extraordinary measures have been undertaken both by his counsel, opinion of a great body of people who believed him guiltless, walked from the death cell to the death chair unassisted, and then without the guiding arm clasp of prison guards.

CONDEMNED MAN WAS CALM.

His manner was solemn, yet calm. He walked with precision, yet with indifference. The prison guards had opened his cell door and said "Tucker, we are ready," the condemned man stepped quickly from his cell and almost before the legal witnesses to the execution, who numbered but six persons, had realized that the moment of the death punishment was at hand, he had appeared before them in advance of the electric chair he drew from the right hand pocket of his trousers a piece of paper. From this paper he read mechanically, and in a tone so low that the witnesses could hear but a few of the words, the following:

TUCKER'S LAST STATEMENT.

"I hope that God will forgive me for all the wrongs I have ever done in my past life. I forgive everybody who has ever wronged me. I am at peace with my Maker. May God have mercy on my soul."

Letter From J. B. Whitman

To the Editor of the Monitor: Sir,—Counselor DeWitt's statement in last week's Monitor re water supply discussion, that I was not able to give a level when asked, is not true. I did the work I was requested which included the taking of certain levels. I gave the information obtained and can do so again.

ELUSIVE SHIRT WAIST BUTTON COST THIS GIRL A BROKEN ARM

Belleville, Ill., June 11.—One little button clear out of latitude and longitude, in an inaccessible spot on the rear elevation of a shirt waist—a protruding pearl button that refused to budge the sixteenth of an inch north or south where pink fingers were grasping frantically after it—brought more grief to Miss Annie Weisenborn than all the peep holes in all the "peek-a-boos" waists have brought to all other girls in the State of Illinois.

Miss Weisenborn is carrying her left arm in a sling. The bones in it are broken. The shirt waist is in a bureau drawer and the button is still unbuttoned. Hereafter Miss Weisenborn will evince a haughty disdain for any decree of fashion which says the shirt waist opening must be in the back. It is a front ingress and egress henceforth or nothing.

Miss Weisenborn was alone when the button began to misbehave. She was due for a party at eight o'clock. Her half-past seven o'clock and she was happy as she glanced into the mirror. She tried the elusive waist and hummed bits of a love song as she buttoned up.

One button was still unconquered when it lacked five minutes of eight o'clock. Over one shoulder went a white arm. It was no use. Over the other shoulder went another arm. The finger tips just touched the edge of the button. She tried from the other angle, working from a low base of operation upward. She strained, twisted and grimaced. At eight o'clock she made a mighty effort; there was a snap of bones, a shriek, and then—the victim fainted. Miss Weisenborn did not go to the party. Instead a doctor was called.

ROCKS AHEAD FOR THE BRITISH CABINET

EDUCATION BILL HAS AROUSED CLERICALS, ROMAN CATHOLICS AND IRISH TO STRONG PROTEST.

London, June 12.—The keynote of home politics is the ever increasing unpopularity of the government and the clamor call of Mr. Chamberlain when, at the meeting of the unionist workers, he affirmed that the Education bill would never pass and that they might expect a general election in six months. "Therefore," said Mr. Chamberlain, "keep your powder dry."

This will surely fire the populace of London and then spread throughout the country in a wave of violent protest such as no government has ever known before.

Meanwhile that political veteran, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, who owes his position to the fact of his character, which has made him leader in a party whose fractions are at constant upheavals, has taken flight at the storm rising so rapidly around his head and strives to persuade the electors that the Education bill was a legacy of the late government.

To make the lead's position still worse it is an open secret that the members of the government are divided among themselves not only on the Education bill but on many other questions. Mr. John Burns, bombastic and unscrupulous, has got the date bringing forward a measure for the abolition of the House of Lords, which with the help of the liberals they have hopes of carrying.

A CLERICAL PROTEST.

Thirty-two special trains arrived here on Friday filled with Lancashire folk who came up to protest against the Education bill. They numbered in all ten thousand people and were headed by the bishops of Manchester and London. All tomorrow the parks will be filled with gatherings, and spokesmen will inveigh against the government's pet bill.

Other members aggrieved. Sir Edward Grey took office on condition that he was not to be tampered with, and he stands aloof, while Mr. Asquith, the cleverest man of his party, kept from the leadership which naturally belonged to him, does not at all approve of the Premier's milk and water policy of giving way to the demands of urban suffragists and other cranks in the hope of gaining general popularity.

Eventually the Education bill has to be submitted to the House of Lords. There it will quite surely be rejected and returned to the lower house with crushing amendments which the government cannot possibly accept.

But in the meantime, from what is clearly visible now, the majority of electors will be up in arms and if the government should be forced to appeal to the country one of the most remarkable volte faces of parliamentary constitutional history might have to be recorded—that of a government never known before being swept from power in the quickest run of any Ministry known.

From millions to Poverty

husband, strolling placidly with his old dog on the beach, was once the largest employer of labor in a great Northern town, and lost his money by the guilt of a poor protegee whom he had befriended too trustfully.

A SHABBY HEROINE.

The case rises to our mind of an old lady who carried her daily bread under mistresses at a large high school. She wore the shabbiest of old clothes, with an austere dignity which was the object of much secret mockery, and veiled a tenderness of heart beneath an aspect of cynical hardness.

There is all the consciousness of a hostile rejecting at his downfall, among many light friends of former days; the fierce struggle for a while to keep up appearances, the downhill fight, losing ground all the time; the desperate plunge to retrieve the fallen fortunes; then ruin, and oblivion.

The rich man is rich no longer; and his little world has no more room for him. His plume henceforth is with the crowd, his horse with the pack of dogs, his carriage with the hundreds every day of his life! It is poverty, grinding poverty—as acute as that of the starving beggar at the street corner.

MILLIONAIRE TURNED STREET ARTIST.

There is a story, for the truth of which I cannot vouch, that a man who made over a million out of sal-guine figured till recently as a street artist on the London pavements. In the days of prosperity he had made a hobby of art, and the desultory lessons thus acquired kept him from starvation. He was a cheery soul, and kept his patrons amused with anecdotes and jokes as he produced their portraits on the flags with his perishable materials. He would tell without a shadow of regret how his little fortune turned against him, and how he had one last week spent up all that was left, and forsook his old haunts forever. Most regiments have their quota of gentlemen rankers, men who have ridden with the pick of the Queen, and to whom life as a private soldier presented itself as the only way, after money and favor left them together.

LIFE'S FAILURES.

History has little account to give of the world's failures; their little day is over and forgotten; only from time to time those whose work lies among the poor turn up one of these former plutocrats, the "has-beens" of tender phraseology.

A dabbler died not long ago in a country workhouse, whose only personal possession was a locket containing the hair of his husband, who was one of the notable suicides of Monte Carlo.

An old blind man, employed by charity at basket weaving in a Church Army home, was once a Liverpool shipowner, and lost fortune and all his hopes in three successive misadventures at sea. Combined with a few speculations which proved disastrous, he was plunged from a state of opulence to the direst poverty. In which, perhaps, he found consolation in the sad fact that wife and child had perished in the same great disaster. Already past middle age, the shock and anxiety ruined his health and partially unshook his mind, which never quite recovered. He has a little bell on the table at which he works, and finds much comfort in ringing for a footman's summons to which some good-natured fellow in adversity is always ready to make believe to respond.

DISAPPOINTED EXPECTATION.

Cruelest of all is the position of one who has been brought up in expectations of great wealth, only to be pushed away into a cold and cruel world at the whim of a fickle patron. A young man, now serving before the mast on an ocean tramp, was adopted in infancy by a wealthy and childless lady, educated at Eton and Ox-ford, and eventually discarded without a shilling when he was found to be growing an incorrigible roval moustache.

There is a North-country saying very typical of the rise and fall of Manchester merchant princes. It runs: "Three generations from cloze to carriage, three generations from carriage to cloze." It gives a longer period for the dispersal of hard-earned wealth than is sometimes the case; for a wretched clan throw away in a week what another man has got together in a lifetime.

EASILY WON, EASILY LOST.

Money that is lightly come by is often quickest parted with; and a bugger on horseback generally hastens to ride to the proverbial destination.

One such, a commercial traveller, who, by several deaths, became heir to a large estate and fortune, in ten years impoverished his lands, played ducks and drakes with all the money he could lay hands on, and left his fair heritage in the hands of the Jews with an imbecile son to succeed to the title. The tenantry had no talk to tell, no doubt, of neglected buildings, extortionate rents, and a pitiless agent, to provide for the folly and wantonness of one beggar on horseback.

It is indeed, as the saying goes, a very pleasant thing to be born "with a silver spoon in one's mouth," but on the whole, the best heritage a man can have is the discipline of necessity, which guides the child gently in the path of industry and integrity, but which proves a hard and relentless taskmaster, if the pupil comes to it in middle-life, pampered and spoiled by the worship of the silver spoon, which lured his poor task so cruelly when fickle fortune snatched it from his lips.

WOMAN'S INHUMANITY TO WOMAN

The women of Keokuk, Iowa, would not allow a certain man to be elected Alderman of their city the other day. The man acknowledged publicly that he had written a letter of sympathy to Nan Patterson during the famous trial of that well known person, and the women of Keokuk held a mass meeting and each woman pledged herself to get her husband to vote against that particular Alderman if he never got him to do another thing in his life.

Now we shall hear all sorts of sermons concerning woman's inhumanity to woman.

What a lot of rubbish that talk always has been, is and ever will be.

The fox is inhuman to the hound, the lamb is inhuman to the wolf, according to this line of reasoning.

What do you want a nest full of rabbits to do when they hear the bay of the dogs—run out to meet the pack and show them the way to the nest where the babies are?

I was in the theatre the other day when two women, elaborately dressed, swished into a box where two quiet little creatures in gray were sitting.

The two quiet little creatures in gray gave each a long, lingering look at the picture hats and the thumb rings and the swishing petticoats of the two newcomers.

Then they gathered up their wraps and left the theatre. A man I know said to me: "What a lot of intolerable cranberry women are; how would it have hurt those two little nobodies to sit in the box with those chorus girls for an hour or so?"

I didn't say a word; I felt too much like leaving the theatre myself; for I happened to know that the thumb rings or opals and diamonds worn by the most conspicuous of the young persons, in the biggest picture hat were paid for by the husband of one of the women in gray and the son of the other.

It is a bit difficult for a woman, who stays at home darning stockings, to save money for her husband, to meet with equanimity the unusual stare of a woman whose stockings are never darned at all, because she always has money enough to buy all the new ones she wants. The repentant Magdalen is a tear-moving creature—in the books and pictures—also in the plays.

I never see a girl in a long black cloak with a hood on the rain and the snow, and weeping about her lost good name, but what I feel very true about the lasher.

But somehow the Magdalens we see in real life are so audaciously unrepentant, poor things, so long as they are young enough to be interesting without the touching tear of remorse.

"You want to please because you were a fool, and a selfish fool at that. You liked the easiest way the best, and you tried to make yourself believe that whatever you wanted to do was right for you to do, no matter whom you hurt in the doing of it."

"You're a fool no longer, and you're going to be selfish no longer. This world is a great big, clean, wholesome, joyous place. You're going to live a great, big, clean, wholesome, joyous life in it."

And I'll warrant I'd never find even a piece of straw put in my path.

We're all willing to help you, and to be fair with you, women who have thrown away the jewel of a good conscience, but we are not willing to look pleasant and pretend to approve of you when the very fact of your existence is a never-dying threat to everything we love and prize.

Why should we?

Women friends, too.

It is all very well to feel sorry for little Johnnie when he has eaten too much jam and wishes he hadn't, but it is a bit hard to get up much sympathy for him when he keeps right on eating the jam the next day, just as if he'd never heard of the doctor or his bitter medicine.

Women must be virtuous and men must be honest. If they are not they must take their medicine and say no more about it. The man who steals money goes to jail. The woman who steals another woman's husband goes to Coventry, not because women are inhuman, but because she ought to go there. That's where she belongs.

When men invite a felon just out of his penitentiary plaids to join their clubs, and sit with them in their own homes, women will show what the sentimentalists call "mercy" to the women who have proved that they are bitter enemies to everything and everybody that the honest woman holds dear.

If I were a woman who made what the story writer calls a "mistake" and wanted to get back into clean, decent, honest life again, I would crawl on my hands and knees if I had to, to get somewhere where no one knew me, and then I would go to work, like any other honest, self-respecting woman, and I'd keep very still about what the speakers in revival meetings love to call the sinful path. I wouldn't worry about it a minute. What's past is past; who you have been and what you're going to be, don't count; what you are is the only thing that is of the least importance.

I wouldn't draw a veil of romance between myself and the truth in my own heart, either. I'd face the facts and say to myself, "My dear, you've put your hand in the fire; you'll have to suffer from the sting of the burn for awhile, and very likely your hand will be scarred for a long time, perhaps for always."

"What of it? Men have gone through life, happy and useful citizens with one leg cut off, and women with

If I were a woman who made what the story writer calls a "mistake" and wanted to get back into clean, decent, honest life again, I would crawl on my hands and knees if I had to, to get somewhere where no one knew me, and then I would go to work, like any other honest, self-respecting woman, and I'd keep very still about what the speakers in revival meetings love to call the sinful path. I wouldn't worry about it a minute. What's past is past; who you have been and what you're going to be, don't count; what you are is the only thing that is of the least importance.

I wouldn't draw a veil of romance between myself and the truth in my own heart, either. I'd face the facts and say to myself, "My dear, you've put your hand in the fire; you'll have to suffer from the sting of the burn for awhile, and very likely your hand will be scarred for a long time, perhaps for always."

The Woman Who Smokes

(By Mrs. John A. Logan.)

I have always felt that American women contracted the habit of cigarette smoking abroad, but was not prepared to read that our English cousins had become so addicted to the pernicious habit as to make it necessary for the railroad officials to assign cars and compartments conspicuously marked "Ladies' Smoking Car," or to realize that cars so labelled would be sought by the majority of lady travellers. I trust that this report is very much exaggerated, as newspapers are prone to magnify the indiscretions of women.

I had supposed that those addicted to so vicious an evil were confined to Spain, Russia, Egypt and Turkey. I had seen so much of it in these countries that I was laboring under the impression that other European countries had an altogether different standard for women, especially England, where the women impressed me as having the highest sense of morality and Christian character, and of being incapable of adopting a thing so vile as the use of tobacco. The same might be said of the French woman, except perhaps, the denizens of la belle Paris, where an abandonment to all sorts of dissipation seems to be the rule and not the exception.

I remember once, in Rome, I witnessed, at a large dinner given principally to titled Italians, by an American woman supposed to be the personification of intelligence, beauty and high character, that the hostess had caused cigarettes to be passed so that her guests might indulge in smoking between the courses of this elaborate dinner, and was greatly shocked to see her take a cigarette between her dainty fingers, light it and puff it with as much nonchalance as if she had been accustomed to such indulgence all her life, and I must confess she has never since occupied the same exalted position in the opinion of others as well as myself that she had previously.

It seemed a lowering of her standard to demoralizing foreign customs that were diametrically opposed to our own, and I felt that I should have to do as Romans do, no matter how seriously their customs may conflict with the Puritan principles we are supposed to represent; a most fallacious and unfortunate construction of this old maxim.

I have always noticed that foreigners who come to this country do not hesitate to adopt our customs if they in any way conflict with theirs. They are prone to think that they are an example which we must follow; whereas we have always had the opinion that it is our duty to ignore the customs of other nations.

What is the code of etiquette established long ago for Americans, whether at home or abroad.

My observation has been that few American women who have not been abroad indulge in the use of tobacco. We know that in the very long ago some of the descendants of the tobacco contingent of some of our States, used tobacco, especially the elderly women of the lower class. It was unheard of for refined women to join men in smoking cigars and pipes.

The world inclined to pity women devotees of the weed because of their lack of intellectual resources to occupy their leisure. It was looked upon as a sort of solace for those who were unequal to higher and more cerebral diversions from the treadmill lives which they led.

It was not until our frequent intercourse with Europe that cigarette smoking was introduced into the United States, and for a long time after its first appearance it was only men who paid little attention to their moral and physical health and strength who became slaves to the deleterious cigarette.

Unhappily, women have now become so demoralized as to imitate men in this the most serious of all vices. Naturally, the cheapness of cigarettes recommends them strongly not only to men, but to women, a national disease that is rapidly undermining the moral stamina, keen mentality and vigorous physical strength of the nation, and the matter must at no very distant date occupy the attention of State and national legislation.

At a seaside watering-place, a couple, who shall be nameless, ate out a scanty income with summer boarders, and few of the visitors who vow that their landlady is the kindest, most honorable and obliging of her kind, ever imagine that her quiet husband, strolling placidly with his old dog on the beach, was once the largest employer of labor in a great Northern town, and lost his money by the guile of a poor protégé whom he had befriended too trustfully.

A SHABBY HEROINE.

The case rises to our mind of an old lady who earned her daily bread as an under-mistress at a large high school. She wore the shabbiest of old clothes, with an austere dignity which was the object of much secret mockery, and veiled a tenderness of heart beneath an aspect of cynical aloofness. It looked out after this lady's death that her whole life had been devoted to rigorously paying off the debt of her father—an army officer of good family, who had been killed in the hunting field, leaving his family heavily involved.

"Her hand is gone and money spent, then learning is most excellent," but it is seldom that the learning acquired by a girl without the object of earning a living can be put to such good account. She had until the manufacture of cigarettes is prohibited within the boundaries of the United States.

It is incredible that this deadly vice should have got such a hold in England as is reported, as that stalwart nation has every opportunity of observing its disastrous influence among the people of its dependencies.

We do not relish the insinuation that the English railroad officials have adopted the smoking car and compartments for the accommodation of American women. Every self-respecting woman should resent this reflection upon the morals of her countrywomen, notwithstanding there may be some silly, reckless American women who disgrace themselves and their country by indulgence in what they are pleased to call small vice; vice is vice, without any degree of comparison, and of all God's creatures, women should stand together for the suppression of every form of evil by their example and by a continued warfare upon evil and evil-doers.

I am proud to think that in discussing the question, American railroad men manifest their respect for their wives, mothers and sisters by insisting that they would not insult the "dignity and womanliness which have made our American women the envy of the world."

I agree with one of those railroad officials, who says: "I do not believe the grandchildren of the younger generation today will see such an institution, for the American spirit is sufficient to uphold a dignity which such a course would not only lessen, but destroy altogether."

American women have wrought too grandly for virtue, education and civilization to surrender to so profligate a habit as cigarette smoking.

Every intelligent person who has given the matter any thought whatever knows that every cigarette that has ever been made has been dragged. This has been proven over and over again by specialists who have examined the question with a view to awakening the nation to the consequences of their universal use.

I recall an American who was an officer of the old Khedive, and his charming wife, who became such slaves to the cigarette habit that they not only destroyed their health, but before death came to their relief were total mental wrecks.

Innumerable instances could be cited of insanity, and all the ills to which mind and body are heir, which could be traced to nicotine poisoning.

From millions to poverty!

From millions to poverty! What a contrast the words suggest, what deprivation of all the artificial surroundings of luxury, which habit so disguises as to make them appear almost in the light of necessities! What a downfall from the influential position which the man of wealth fondly imagined he held by virtue of his personal attributes, but which is no longer accorded to him when the golden halo ceases to encircle his head! What bitterness of discontent, of pride humbled at the feet of poorer rivals, who rise in the scale even as he descends, bitterest of all, the pain of "friend remembered not."

There is all the consciousness of a hostile rejoicing at his downfall, among many light friends of former days, the fierce struggle for a while to keep up appearances, the downhill fight, losing ground all the time; the desperate plunge to retrieve the fallen fortunes; then ruin, and oblivion.

The rich man is rich no longer; and his little world has no more room for him. His place hereon is with the workers, amongst whom he is a stranger. He has few friends, for in his palmy days he never troubled to cultivate those who were not in a position to pursue his expensive hobby, the extravagant and indulgent life that is second nature to

THE FARM

WHAT IS A GOOD POTATO? Most people, I suppose, take it for granted that the best potatoes are the ones that contain the most starch. On the contrary, it is the ones that contain the most gluten, because gluten is a nutritious food, and starch is much cheaper than albumen.

First comes the skin of the potato. In a new potato it is thin and clear; while a corky skin indicates a mature potato, and one more likely to be mealy.

Second is a thin layer varying from one-eighth of an inch to one-half an inch in thickness. This is the gluten. This comes the largest part of the potato—the starch. If this is very dense the potato will be mealy, but if non-uniform the potato will be of poor quality.

Fourth is the very centre of the tuber, which contains little starch and a great deal of water. If this area branches out into the starch the potato will not be a good cooker.—Garden Magazine.

HONEY OF WHITE CLOVER. Some of our more pronounced honeys with a decided flavor and aroma, when used as a staple adjunct of food, might become too much for many lovers of good honey, but used day by day, white clover honey taken judiciously never falls on even the most delicate palate, who enjoy honey can return to it time after time without experiencing any feeling of satiety, because the blending of the several properties are in clover so fine and evenly balanced that the whole forms an almost ideal antidote. Everywhere we have large areas of this plant spread like a rich mantle, and the course of cropping practiced by most of our farmers particularly favors the luxurious growth and full development of this beautiful honey-yielding plant. Too much of its precious bloom is wasted for want of willing bees' tongues to suck it up and supply it almost gratis.

GARDEN SNAPSOTS. Get the poisons ready for the early insects. Beginning with the advent of spring there are few places so interesting as the hardy flower garden. The annuals have to be sown and the half hardy have to be planted before they can be enjoyed.

If a gardener has not experimented with his soil so as to know what fertilizing elements it really needs he must use a formula, and one carrying about 3 to 3 1/2 per cent. nitrogen, 5 to 6 per cent. available phosphoric acid and 4 to 5 per cent. potash. Usually he is found as follows: If seeds are planted in dry soil or in soil that is less moist than the seeds the drier soil will extract the moisture from the seed and retard development.

The radish is one of the favorite early spring vegetables, and it is one of the best for forcing. We naturally look forward to this as the one very early if not the first, that we are to grow to maturity, either in the frame or outside ground.

For success with parsnips use fresh seed, plant very early and quite thick and thin out the seedlings to six to seven inches apart.

FEED FOR CHICKENS. Young chickens should be fed a little at a time and often. If they are given ground food alone, there is a great danger of over-feeding. A very good result may be obtained by feeding entirely of cracked grains from the time the chickens are hatched until they reach maturity, says the Massachusetts "Poultryman." There are on the market many prepared feeds of cracked grains, which are very suitable. After the chickens are five or six weeks old the prepared chick feed may be dropped and the chickens fed on cracked corn, cracked wheat and hulls oats. If kind of green food should be provided. Lettuce and cabbage are very good for this purpose. Some kind of meat should be provided, such as green cut bone or meat scraps. Finally, cracked grit should be kept in a box where the chickens can help themselves at all times. Water should be provided from the start and should be put in such a dish that the chickens cannot get into and get wet.

SKINNING HOGS. In Yates County, N. Y., says "Goodall's Farmer," the farmers have found it more profitable to skin their hogs than to scrape them. This change in method was brought about by an enterprising butcher, who found a market for hog skin. He found a skin hog for farmers, taking the skins for pay, as they are worth from fifty cents to a dollar apiece. It is a paying business, and from the standpoint of the owner of the hog it is a good thing, too. It is not required to make any extensive preparations at butchering time, as before. No scalding platform to build, no water to heat, no extra help to employ. Now the butcher drives into the yard, kills, skins and cleans the hogs, and hangs them up ready for market. The loss in weight is slight, from five to fifteen pounds, according to the size of the hog, and the butcher will pay half a cent a pound more for pork skinned to cut up on the block, and for home use it is much better.

TREATING NURSERY TREES. Offentimes the trees and shrubs and plants received from nurseries are not packed in the best possible manner and dry out on the road. They may be brought back to a proper condition, unless they are too badly wilted, by packing the roots. This is best done by selecting a convenient spot where the ground is rather clayey in its nature, digging a hole sufficiently large to take in the roots of the largest tree to be set and, with more clay or other soil, if clay is not obtainable, and cover to a large mud puddle. Into this dip the roots of the trees and thoroughly cover them with the mud, allowing them to remain there as long as possible. If many trees are to be set it will be a good plan, after taking them from the puddle, to lay them in a trench, at an angle of 45 degrees, and cover the roots with moist earth, allowing them to remain in this trench for two or three days, and even thoroughly wetting the soil which covers the roots if it is very dry. This treatment will keep all the trees in good shape, and if when they are set plenty of water is used there should be no doubt but what they will start off and grow quickly. It pays to do this with trees or shrubs of any kind, particularly if they come from a considerable distance.

FARM CARE OF CREAM. Prof. E. H. Farrington, of the Wisconsin dairy school, gives the following advice in regard to the care of cream on the farm.

1. Place the separator on a firm foundation in a clean, well-ventilated room where it is free from all offensive odors.

2. Thoroughly clean the separator after each skimming; the bowl should be taken apart and washed, together with all the tinware, every time the separator is used; if allowed to stand for even one hour without cleaning there is danger of contaminating the next lot of cream from the sour bowl. This applies to all kinds of cream separators.

3. Wash the separator bowl and all the tinware with cold water and then with warm water, using a brush to polish the surface and clean out the seams and cracks, finally scald with boiling water, leaving the parts of the bowl and tinware to dry in some place where they will be protected from dust. Do not wipe the bowl or tinware with a cloth or dry rag towel; heat them so hot with steam or boiling water that wiping is unnecessary.

4. Rinse the milk receiving can and separator bowl with a quart or two of hot water just before running milk into separator.

5. Cool the cream as it comes from the separator or immediately set it to a temperature near fifty degrees F., and keep it cool until delivered.

6. Never mix warm with cold cream, or sweet with slightly tainted cream.

7. Provide a covered and clean water tank for hobbing the cream cans, and change the water frequently in the tank so that the temperature does not rise above sixty degrees F. A satisfactory arrangement may be made by allowing running water to flow through the cream tank to the milk water tank.

8. Skim the milk immediately after each milking, as it is more work to save the milk and separate once a day, and less satisfactory than skimming while the milk is warm, since the milk must be heated again when grown F., and keep it cool until delivered.

9. A rich cream testing 35 per cent fat, or more, is the most satisfactory to both farmer and factory. The best separators will skim a rich cream as satisfactorily as a thin cream, and more skim-milk is left on the farm when grown F., and keep it cool until delivered.

10. Cream should be perfectly sweet, containing no lumps or clots when sampled and delivered to the haulers or parties buying it.

There is a good demand for sweet cream, and can easily be supplied by keeping the separator, tinware, strainer cloth and water tank clean and the cream cold.

MAGGOTS IN RADISHES. The usual radish-infesting maggot originates from eggs laid by a fly somewhat smaller than the ordinary house fly. These eggs are deposited near the base of the plant on or slightly beneath the surface of the ground. Several broods occur each season. A number of plants are subject to attack, possibly the most common being cabbage and cauliflower. The insect is a difficult one to successfully combat, and only partial success need be expected. The principle to work on is to keep the maggots from entering the plants rather than to try to destroy them after they have made their way into the fleshy portions, as poisonous gases, kupa or insecticides will then fail to reach them.

Two of the easily applied remedies are, beginning with the first appearance of the plant, weekly application of white hellebore or tobacco dust. Either material should be sprinkled in a strip at least one and a half inches wide along both sides of the row. Another remedy advised by Dr. J. B. Smith, of New Jersey, is a fertilizer made as follows: Nitrate of soda, 700 pounds; ground rock, 1,000 pounds; and muriate of potash, 300 pounds. The mixture should be applied at the rate of 500 pounds to the acre soon after the plants are up.—New England Homestead.

MIXED CREAM, DIRTY SEPARATORS. A certain hand separator agent, while soliciting patronage, claimed that separator bowls need to be washed but once in two days. Evidently this agent did not intend to travel the same road twice. By such precaution he is perpetrating the worst kind of an outrage on the hand separator, as poor skimming and albuminous cream must follow in the wake of such advice.

Do not fail to wash the hand separator after every separating, as warm milk in an enclosed separator bowl, mixed with the little refuse that is certain to remain there, soon becomes a rotten, stinking mass, and adheres to every portion of the bowl. In a short time this becomes a veritable incubator for hatching the bacteria that will infest and multiply in the warm milk that follows, and soap-water better than any other will not remove them. The filthy farm separator and gilt-edged butter will never travel together.

Do not mix the warm cream fresh from the farm separator with the cool cream from the previous skimming. Cool before mixing, if you do, the butter maker will be justified in refusing the whole mass.

DOGS KILLING SHEEP. HOW PREVENTED. To the Editor of The Monitor.

Sir,—One of the many things talked of now-a-days is wire fence. A short time ago an article in one of the newspapers stated that foxes were kept on a farm in the State of Maine by a wire fence, and if foxes can be kept on the farm by a wire fence, surely dogs or other animals can be prevented from getting into the enclosure where sheep are kept on the farm by a wire fence. One kind of fence that keeps foxes from leaving the farm. Dogs or other animals may be prevented killing sheep if a wire fence is erected sufficient to keep them out of the enclosure where sheep are kept, which if you do as best you can, then would be required to provide for and pay the wages of a shepherd or man to devote his whole time to attend them.

The best breeds of sheep if kept in good condition, their fleeces will pay the cost to winter. The usual number of lambs raised in the flock is one for each sheep. Some of the old farmers used to say they wanted an additional dog for the ram, and often that was found. For a number of years lambs have made an average sale of two dollars each, and one dollar will pay for all necessary attendances and feed while in the pasture, and interest on the money invested, leaving one dollar for each sheep in the flock. Proceeds that for sheep at four dollars each being twenty-five per cent. The demand for wool, mutton and lambs is such there need be no fear of loss in the transaction.

Should the owner at any time desire to quit the business he should be able to sell for as much as they cost.

WEAK KIDNEYS Restored to Strength by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Bed blood is the cause of weak kidneys. The impurities of the blood clog the kidneys so that they are unable to perform their work of separating the waste matter from the blood. The kidneys are numbered among the diseased organs of the body. The dull, swollen eye, the coated tongue, the backache, weak shaky limbs, dizziness, swollen face, all show what is wrong. This disease must not be neglected. Every day delayed in finding a cure is a day nearer "Bright's Disease," that trouble is incurable. Do not waste time and money on a medicine which acts only on the kidneys. It may relieve, but it cannot cure you. The trouble to be permanently cured must be treated through the blood. Good blood makes healthy kidneys. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new, rich red blood—that is why they cure when other medicines fail. Thousands owe good health—some life itself—to this blood-purifier. Among them is Roy Davidson, who resides with his uncle, Mr. C. B. Maclean, says: "My nephew, Roy had weak kidneys. About a year ago he took the measles and this left him in a bad state. His kidneys were so weak that they were incapable of performing their functions. He suffered from backache, weakness and restlessness. For a time he had to leave school. Our family doctor was unable to help him. In fact he told me that Roy might never get better; that the disease would probably grow worse. I then procured a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, with great benefit and felt confident they would cure Roy. He began taking them, and continued their use until he had taken a half dozen boxes, which fully cured him. He is now stronger and better than he ever was and neither study nor work about the farm seem to fatigue him. I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved him from a life of misery."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do just one thing—they do it thoroughly. They actually make new, rich, red blood, which feeds and strengthens every nerve, purifies the blood, and cures such common ailments as anemia, general weakness, headaches and backaches, indigestion, palpitation of the heart, rheumatism, neuralgia, and the ailments which make the lives of so many women and young girls miserable. Don't take anything else which the dealer may say is "just as good."

If you can't get the genuine Pills from your dealer send to Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and get them by mail at 20 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

You can shake down a "Sunshine" furnace without getting covered with ashes and dust—has a dust flue through which all the dust and ashes escape when you shake down the fire.

This heater is so easily regulated and operated, and so clean, that it makes the entire household bright and genial.

Sold by all enterprising dealers. Booklet free.

THE APOLIZING HABIT AND ITS CURE.

Is any trait of our fellow man or woman quite so distressing as a bad case of this particular malady. And the cure? Well, the best one is a good dose of apologies from another chronic apologist.

It is only less annoying than family skeletons brought out in public.

Said a bright woman the other day: "I kept on making apologies for real or imaginary causes until I chanced to be the guest of a woman who went so far beyond what I had attained in that line that it occurred to me I was in a fair way of making my friends as uncomfortable as she unconsciously did me."

"This woman was an ideal housekeeper and one of the best of cooks; but not a meal did I enjoy of her cooking, because of uncalled-for apologies."

"I forgot to salt my bread and it is so tasteless that it is not fit to eat; I am afraid you cannot make out a supper."

"Oh! I made haste to say that I had not noticed the omission and assured her that her cooking never called for excuses, she would accuse me of trying to flatter her and would continue to apologize, until at the end of a meal I felt as if I had swallowed a stone instead of perfectly cooked food."

"Observation has taught me that guests, as a rule, do not see what in the eyes of the hostess seems to call for apology."

"I recently called upon a woman of culture and was greatly enjoying her vivid account of her trip abroad, when she suddenly came to a pause and in a hoarse tone exclaimed: 'The maid neglected to dust that piano! Why, I could write my name upon it!'"

"Then from seeing through her eyes the beautiful scenery mine had never rested upon, I was called back to the drudgery of life; when the truth was that my back was toward the piano, and so I should, but to the apology, have remained in ignorance of the neglect of the maid. The call, which otherwise might have been wholly interesting, ended in complaints."

"The most enduring lesson came to me from one who, under the most trying circumstances, refrained from making any apologies. This sensible woman at that time I did not count as a friend, though I had long known of her as a gifted personality, and had once had the pleasure of entertaining her in my home."

"Finding myself in her home city, I thought I would call upon her. When I halted before the house I saw such an obstruction of plaster and debris that I was about to turn back, but a workman near the open door said: 'If you are looking for Mrs. A., I will call her.'"

"Oh, don't!" I exclaimed, thinking "not at home" would be the result, but the man evidently knew the woman he was working for. He bounded off; and in an instant later the lady appeared at a door back of the parlors, which were being replastered, and with a warm welcome written on her face, exclaimed:

"This isn't the sort of reception you gave me, but I am delighted to see you, anyhow." And then, when I was drawn into a room overcrowded with furniture, what cared I for the lack of order, in view of such a welcome?

"I had expected to go back to the hotel for lunch, but I forgot to note the flight of time as I conversed with the woman who was superior to trying circumstances; and never shall I forget how, with a roguish smile, she reminded me that it was lunch time by putting this query:

"My dear, do you like hasty pudding and milk?"

"When I unthinkingly responded to the affirmative, she exclaimed: 'Then you must share my lunch with me, for otherwise I shall be alone. Now don't make excuses, for you will be doing me a real kindness to stay.' I could not resist the invitation, which was evidently so heartfelt, and from that visit and simple meal dates a friendship which has extended over long years, cemented at a time when almost any housekeeper would have excused herself from seeing anyone."

"In fact, so easily and unobtrusively does the habit grow that freedom from it under given circumstances may often be taken for an evidence of thoroughly good breeding."—Cleveland Leader.

HELPING HIM OUT.

The female life insurance agent, radiant with a new shirt waist and a stunning line of conversation, had talked one arm of the arm while the other arm hung loose at his side, threatening to go out of commission almost any moment.

She had repeated everything in the book of instructions for catching a sucker forward and backward and was starting in the middle to repeat it from there both ways at once.

"Provide for the loved ones" was the burden of her refrain.

"But I have no loved ones," said the man when he was able to shove a word in edgewise.

"Oh," said the female life insurance agent, rising gracefully to the occasion and throwing her arms about his neck, "this is so sudden!"

Prominent athletes throughout the country find that a better treatment for sore muscles after severe exercise or hard work of any kind, is a hot bath at bed time, which opens the pores. This should immediately be followed with an application of Chamberlain's Pain Balm vigorously rubbed into the skin. This liniment removes all stiffness and soreness and has become a favorite rub down, as it acts promptly, relieves the muscles in excellent condition. For sale by S. N. Wear.

When the bread or cake or pastry comes from the oven light, crisp and appetizing, you are wont to say you have had good luck with your baking.

The "good luck" idea is a relic of the time when housekeepers tried their competency against poor flour.

To-day good baking isn't a matter of good luck in any home where

Royal Household Flour is intelligently used.

In the hands of competent housewives it never fails because it is the whitest, lightest, purest and best baking flour to be had.

If the goodness of your baking is due to chance, your grocer is giving you the wrong kind of flour. Ask for Ogilvie's Royal Household.

THE CABUL-TRAGEDY
A beaten British army is terrible, and thank God, rare enough. This fugitive race was not only beaten, it was disgraced. Incompetency amongst officials, indiscipline amongst men, was its record. A record to be atoned for by the direct suffering for all, the supreme sacrifice for many, and individual acts of such high courage and patient endurance as will take rank for all time in the annals of our race.

It is sorry reading. The scene of slaughter was dreadful. All baggage was abandoned. The enemy not only poured in a murderous fire from every rock and crevice in the hills on each side, but descended into the Pass and slew men, women and children. The whole road for a distance of five miles is covered with dead and dying. Our loss this day was computed at about 3,000 or one-sixth of our people. The 27th N. I. men, with the exception of Captain Soutar, of the 4th Queen's, who had wrapped around him his regimental colors, and five soldiers taken prisoners, were massacred.

"Thus perished, after dreadful sufferings, the remnants of an army that had left Cabul seven days previously, composed of 4,000 fighting men and 13,000 camp followers."—From "The Cabul Tragedy," in Blackwood's Magazine.

Good Words From Famous Missionary The Social Atmosphere of The Maritime Express.

Canada's famous train, the "Maritime Express," the I. C. R. through train between Montreal, Quebec, Montreal, St. John and Sydney, is earning fresh words of commendation from distinguished persons. According to Rev. Dr. Grierson, returned Missionary from Korea, was one of the features of Wednesday's session of the Convention of the St. John Presbytery.

Dr. Grierson spoke on the recent international students' convention at Nashville. There were 5,000 delegates at the convention, and one of the exercises was the repeating of the Lord's Prayer by them in unison.

The I. C. R. to travel over six different railway lines to reach Nashville, but found none so well appointed and comfortable as the I. C. R.

In addition to this The Montreal Herald of May 30th has the following expression of opinion of a well known professional man:

"Talking to a reporter recently a well known professional man who travels considerably remarked: 'I always enjoy the trip by the Maritime Express between Montreal and Halifax. There is more than a mere sense of comfortable travel, there is something that always makes me thoroughly contented, and never do I feel that irritability and impatience one is so apt to feel when taking a railway journey of long duration. The splendid cars and accommodation, the inviting meals and prompt service on the dining car contribute greatly to this feeling. I know, and the passing view of so many scenes of various beauty is soothing to the senses. But there is something more, something I can hardly describe, but an inclination to attribute to the social atmosphere. You meet all classes and conditions of men while travelling, but it seems to me that on the Maritime Express one always finds himself a fellow passenger among people of a pleasant and interesting type. Some of my happiest hours have been spent on this journey.'

All that reaches the ear need not pass the life.
A soft voice may go with a hard heart.
There is a time to labor and a time to rest.
Not every caller becomes a companion.
The sweetest may yet be the sourest.
Some preach and more, pray—better than they practice.
The ignorant lack comunity to take the measure of the wise.

He'll need tomorrow.

Wireless Telegraphy at the Exhibition

C. J. Milligan in response to his request that the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company exhibit at St. John has received the following reply: Manager Milligan will accept the offer.

If we send messages from Partridge Island to Sable Island or to passing ships, we will of course charge our usual tolls, but will make no charge for messages exchanged with Partridge Island.

SOME REASONS WHY MARRIED WOMEN SHOULD BE HAPPY

The eleventh commandment of the married woman is this: "Thou shalt give thanks upon thy knees for a good man's love, and shall offer praise in the temple because thou hast a home of thine own and a husband to provide for thee."

The one thing in the world that would conduce more than everything else to comital bliss would be for every woman in her youth to go out into the world in search of what she is pleased to call a "career," and find out that there is nothing in it but elders, ashes and dust.

At the bottom of almost every woman's discontent with her lot, her dissatisfaction with her husband and her distaste for domesticity lies the secret belief that the only reason that she isn't famous is because she got married instead of going in for art, or literature, or the stage, or finance.

You couldn't expect a woman who is sure she could have written novels like Miss Braddon and poetry like Mrs. Wilcox—if she had turned her attention to it—to devote her great mind to seeing that the baby's bottle is kept clean and the twins don't choke themselves with pins.

It would be absurd to suppose that a lady who felt that her real mission in life was to play Lady Macbeth and tear passion to pieces like Bernhardt and Ellen Terry could come down off her pedestal long enough to sweep under the bed and see that the food was decently cooked for dinner.

If every woman had tried to support herself—if she had burned into her very soul the memory of long and weary days in which she had stood with aching back and tired feet behind a counter, or through the blinding mist of a headache pounded upon a typewriter, if she could recall the thousand indignities to which every woman who has to work out of her own home is subjected; if she had but to shut her eyes to see again a miserable bedroom and the table of the fourth-rate boarding house, and to feel once more the cold dread with which she looked forward to losing her employment and not being able to afford even that poor shelter, there would be fewer discontented, complaining, critical wives in the world.

The women who have good husbands and good homes, a big man to stand between them and the world, should be down on their knees thanking God for their luck, and occasionally hugging hubby to show him how they appreciate him.

Perhaps women do not realize how discouraging it is to a man who has done his best—and has toiled to provide his wife with comfort—to get no gratitude for his efforts, but always reproach that he didn't do better.

The woman who wants to institute comparison should reflect for awhile on how much better living a husband makes for her than she could make for herself. Then she would not begrudge the poor fellow his meed of gratitude.

We put on the head the donkey that draws the family load—certainly we might do as much for our husbands.

The average man who is married gets precious little out of all his work and worry but his wife's appreciation.

If he misses this also he is poor indeed; for, after the family bills are paid, there is little money left for the man who has made it to indulge himself in any personal taste.

Surely it is worth women's while to remember this, and to at least make the small return of thanks to their husbands. It is easy to do things for those that appreciate them, and so hard to do them for those who don't.

The following unique notice was fixed to a church door recently in England: Missing—Last Sunday, some families from church.

Stolen—Several hours from the Lord's day by a number of people of different ages dressed in their Sunday clothes.

Strayed—Half a score of lambs, believed to have gone in the direction of "No Sunday school."

Misplaced—A quantity of silver and copper coins on the counter of a public house, the cover being in a state of great excitement at the time.

Wanted—Several young people, when last seen were walking in pairs up Salford-breakers' Lane, which leads to the city of No Good.

Last—A lady, carefully reared; not long from home, and for a time very promising. Supposed to have gone with one or two older companions to "Prodigal Town, Husk Lane."

Any person assisting in the recovery of the above shall in no wise lose his reward.

The boy who saves his money some day owns a farm, or becomes the banker, the merchant, the professional man. The boy who never saves a cent makes the man who "earns his bread by the sweat of his brow," who never owns a home or enjoys the luxuries of life. He thinks he always has a kick coming and never lets a chance go by. Everything goes wrong with him—when he is a man. Parents should try to make graduates of industry and economy of the boys and girls if they desire the good things of life for their children.

The Postal Congress, in session in Rome for some time past, practically closed on Wednesday last. The British proposition to raise the weight of letters to one ounce was agreed upon.

The Zion City middle grows thicker. An injunction has been issued by Judge Landis, restraining Voliva, or any of his attorneys, from disposing of any part of the estate, or in any way interfering with Dowie.

A horrible thing is reported from Grand Rapids, Mich. Two monkeys, one of them carrying a butcher knife, entered the room of a five-year-old boy and slashed his face and pounded his body until he became unconscious and is not expected to recover. The brutes belonged to a doctor in the city, and had in some way escaped from their chains.

Since the introduction of the electric tramway car into Leeds, England the local legal mind has been much exercised on the question, "What constitutes a workman?" in relation to the privilege of workmen's tickets on the cars. There has been a test case in Leeds, but the result was indefinite and it still lies with the tram conductor to decide the point. It appears that the conductor is guided by one simple fact. If a man wears a collar he is not a workman, and is charged a higher rate. But if he wears a muffler he is entitled to the privilege of a cheap ticket.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has received from the Imperial Government a formal invitation to the Colonial Conference, to be held in London next spring.

The annual fight at the Mount of Olives, between the Greek monks and Franciscan friars as to which should celebrate services there, resulted in victory for the Franciscans.

The labor unions of Chicago are now hot after Mayor Dunne because they discovered that he was having some of the city's printing done at a shop in which, according to the Typographical Union, there is a strike.

The quarrel of the Grand Trunk and the Wabash and Erie railroads with the Nickel Plate and other lines, which threatened to cause a general rate war from St. Louis and Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard, has been patched up.

The Bishop of Ulster at a public meeting in London this week advised the establishment of a training home for engaged couples. Vast sums were, he said, spent on training young people for medicine and law, but for a profession where great issues of the state were involved nothing.

The amount of inaudible sound running at large in Massachusetts may be judged from the fact that a petition a mile long, and containing 115,000 signatures, has been presented to the Government of the State, asking him to commute the death penalty on Charles Tucker, the murderer of Mable Page.

The Carnegie Steel Company is opposing the eight-hour bill before the House Committee at Washington recently. Mr. A. C. Hayden, representing the company, said when at one time the company made the experiment of working three shifts of men eight hours instead of two shifts for twelve hours, the products of the factory decreased 20 per cent.

New York State is at last in earnest in its efforts to protect its wild birds. A notice has been issued through the press to all milliners, wholesale and retail, warning them that for every dead wild bird found in their possession they will be fined $60 and $25 additional for each bird or part of a bird sold, offered for sale or possessed.

Weston came to the lawyer's office, admitted that he was married to Miss Denison. He was staggered, however, when the inspector asked, "What did you do with your first wife?" He was completely at a loss for an answer, and when the inspector further asked him if he had ever secured a divorce, he admitted that he had not.

He was taken to the police station and locked up, where he practically broke down. He expressed deep regret for what he had done, but seemed to feel worse over the predicament into which he had got, while number two, than on account of any injustice he had done wife number one, whom he said he didn't love and never could get along with.

The marriage certificates issued by City Clerk Somes of this city and in each Weston states that it was his first marriage.

Weston is well known in this city, and formerly was in the employ of Gorham Davis.

The police inspector went to the Hamlin house on Brown street, where the couple had lived since their marriage, and notified the bride of the part that the husband had played in her life. She could hardly believe it at first, and when she did become hysterical. She could not believe that her husband was guilty of the wrong, and she said that she wished to see him. The young woman was advised not to, and later came to this city, where she spent the night with her sister.

Rev. Joseph B. Palmer, who married the couple, in an interview yesterday, told of the arrangements for the wedding being made by Weston a week ago last night. The latter on being asked if he was a married man replied that he was not. The date was set for Tuesday, and on that evening the certificates, performed the ceremony.—Gloucester Times.

Salon Authorities Knew Weston Was Married—Former Gloucester Man Held on Polygamy Charge.

In the district court at Salem yesterday, Avery M. Weston, formerly of this city, pleaded guilty of polygamy, and was held in $1,000 for the superior criminal court.

Rev. Joseph B. Palmer and City Clerk J. Clifford Ennis of Salem express much indignation at the police, who knew the intentions of Weston, allowed him to marry a second time. Rev. Mr. Palmer says that as the police were aware that Weston had taken out a marriage license, all the clergy of Salem and this city should have been notified not to perform the ceremony.

The police had knowledge of the issuance of the marriage certificate more than 24 hours before the wedding took place.

City Clerk Entwistle says that the case was in charge of the police and that they should have acted. Otherwise he would have had Weston placed under arrest before he married Miss Denison.

The arrest of Weston was made as the result of charges made by his first wife. She stated that from friends she learned of her husband's attachment for Miss Denison, and last week made the trip from Nova Scotia to Boston to investigate, stopping with friends at Roxbury.

The fact that Weston had married the Denison girl was established by the police and Saturday, after a consultation with her lawyer, Mrs. Weston No. One decided to swear out a warrant which was done that afternoon.

Weston came to the lawyer's office, admitted that he was married to Miss Denison. He was staggered, however, when the inspector asked, "What did you do with your first wife?" He was completely at a loss for an answer, and when the inspector further asked him if he had ever secured a divorce, he admitted that he had not.

He had asked Mr. Whitman the elevation of the Crosskill Lake from the lake to the stream which feeds the reservoir, and Mr. Whitman replied that he had not taken it. This was brought on through a question asked by him as to why the bill had not come up before.
