This lady had only worked for six weeks, yet they wanted to get back five months of the supplement.

I was stunned with this turn of events, in view of my being so honest in reporting what I had earned. This amount is more than half of what I earned. I asked him, why he didn't send me to jail? No answer. Friday kept saying that I had opted out; he flipped it around. I told him that I had not opted out; I was told to get out.

Remember, she had been told to resign so that she could get this supplement.

I expect when Ottawa received my letter, they immediately thought it belonged to the Victoria branch, so sent it to Mr. M., their FBI for B.C. There was nothing more I could say after being told that they would have no choice but to deduct $20 per month off my security pension until the entire $175 was paid. I walked out.

I believe that the federal government have done very well in their increase in the security pension, but their ruling on supplementary one is away out. I could live in a $30,000 home that I owned and get the minicome, but I can't pay $95 rent and get it. Now, does that make sense? And with the spiralling prices of today I can't possibly live on the $205 or whatever it is. I have to go back to work, and I am grateful that the place is there for me and it is not because they are sorry for me but because I am a good worker. I would rather work than accept any form of financial assistance and fortunately I am permitted to choose what hours I want to work.

I am grateful for this and my government should be grateful that there is a woman like me. I was treated like a common criminal at the department here. They found their man with $175 of federal money. And at Ottawa they throw money around like drunken sailors every day! I could weep over Canadian politics!

I only ask that the sentence that they have passed upon me be annulled and my money returned to me. I am not asking for a pension, I would rather work. I do not smoke nor drink and I do not even permit myself the luxury of cablevision. I know no further ways of cutting down yet the price of everything that I need to buy goes up.

I would be grateful for any pressure you could cause to be put on those who make these awful rules. I thank you.

Yours truly,

Minnie...

On January 31 I wrote to the minister. I received an acknowledgement of my letter but have not yet received a reply. I realize the minister is very busy and has to worry about millionaire football owners and who is going to control the American players who play in Canada. But this little lady of 78 years has expressed very well what is wrong with the department. I do not think anything I could add would put it any better than Minnie did.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to say how I appreciate having the opportunity to participate in this debate and the chance which the Social Credit Party of Canada has given us to discuss in the House the important question of a guaranteed annual income.

I have appreciated the comments made by members today during the debate. I believe that we have indeed witnessed a debate of a very high quality which will contribute toward advancing the ideas of the public, hon. members and the government on the poverty problem which we must now face as a country and as a society.

I should like to start by making a few comments about the allegations which were made today about certain things that I said or did not say. I refer in particular to the statement of the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Boisvert) who quoted from a newspaper clipping according to which I had objected to the establishment of a guaranteed annual income in Canada. I would suggest to the hon. member that he refer to the document which served as a basis for the article which he mentioned to the House, and that instead of reading newspaper clippings, he should read the copies of this speech which I sent him several months ago and which he could have taken the trouble to examine. He would then have seen that the said article does not represent the ideas expressed in this speech at all. I also refer him to another speech which I gave on November 20 last, in Montreal, before the representatives of the Canadian Tax Foundation.

I hope that, in all honesty—and I count on the good will of the hon. member—he will take the trouble to destroy this clipping and will admit that it is simply a hoax or an article that give a completely false report of the statements that I made. Once again, I refer him to the speech that I gave in Montreal on this occasion, and he will see that far from objecting to the guaranteed annual income, I spoke in favour of it especially with regard to those who are unable to work or unfit for work, whatever the reason may be.

I shall waste no time commenting the remarks of the hon. member on the characteristics of the Outremont riding. I suggest that he give himself the trouble of spending a day or so in that riding; he will see that the limits of the riding are not necessarily those of the city of Outremont, and that even in that city there are still quite a number of citizens who depend on welfare benefits, specially in the poorer areas. The riding of Outremont is almost twice the size of the city bearing the same name and has twice as many inhabitants. I would even be willing to bet there are more people on welfare in that riding than there are in that of Drummond.

Like him, I have on occasion had some visit me at my office in Outremont. But I shall not spend much time on this matter because I feel it is important that I spend a few minutes to discuss the motion before the House.

I must admit that if it were a mere statement of principle relating to guaranteed annual income, I would have been happy to support the motion. However,I must consider that this motion is worded in a way which, unfortunately, does not deserve support from the government, and I do not believe that it should deserve support from anyone who examines objectively the situation as it has been in the country over at least a year and a half.

The motion read as follows:

> That this House regrets that the government has taken no concrete steps to ensure the establishment of a guaranteed minimum annual income to overcome poverty in Canada and enable each Canadian citizen to cope with problems of rising prices and to fight inflation efficiently.

First, I will point out to him that it is certainly false to pretend that no concrete steps has been taken to implement a guaranteed annual income scheme. First, everyone knows that the old age security pension with the guaranteed income supplement actually represents a guaranteed annual income. That was a measure passed by Parliament several years ago.

Now, since November 1972, we improved substantially the benefits set out in that plan. Furthermore, as was recalled this afternoon by my parliamentary secretary (Mr. Cafik) we are conducting a pilot experiment in Manitoba, 75 per cent of which is financed by the federal government and which is aimed at experimenting with various aspects of guaranteed minimum income. This will surely be of very great help both to the federal government and the provinces for the implementation of any further steps we could consider taking.

Needless to recall that in the month of April of last year this government published a paper on social security. It includes two propositions—proposition No. 6 and proposition No. 7—suggesting precisely that an income supplement plan and a guaranteed income plan be set up. I quote particularly proposition No. 7:

> That a guaranteed income should be available to people whose incomes are insufficient because they are unable or are not expected to work, namely the retired or disabled, single parent families, and people who are not presently employable by reason of a combination of factors such as age, lack of skills, or length of time out of the labour market. The guaranteed income would be paid in the form of an additional income supplement over and above the general income supplementation available——to be paid out to those able to work.

As a matter of fact, that paper committed the federal government to setting up a guaranteed income and a form of income supplementation; it is following the release of that paper that we started in co-operation with the provinces the general review of our social security system.

That paper released in the month of April last year was more than a theoretical effort put before this House to gain time or delay steps which could be called for. To the opposite, as was recalled by members of my party this afternoon, we have implemented many measures both in the area of family allowances and that of old age pensions, notably the indexation of social benefits and the increase in pensions paid under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan.

To assert therefore that no positive action has been taken to ensure a minimum guaranteed income is a false statement; one is really closing one's eyes to reality when supporting seriously such an assertion.

A guaranteed annual income, in the mind of the government—and in that I agree with certain aspects of the motion under consideration—is undoubtedly an effective weapon against poverty; that is why the government supports such a proposition.

But when the mover goes even further and indicates that it is a measure that would enable every Canadian to cope with the problem of price increases and to fight inflation effectively, I must tell him that annual income in itself is no guarantee against inflation or price increases. All will depend on the level at which the guaranteed annual income will be set and how it will be occasionally adjusted according to price increases. For example, last year we adjusted on the cost of living index all social security programs, more precisely to enable the needy members of the community to face inflation and price increases. This is in no way related to the existence of a guaranteed minimum income.

Indeed, in my opinion, if we had to carry out not only the proposal as introduced in the House but also the specific proposals put forward by the hon. member for Champlain this afternoon, far from reducing inflation or obtaining a protection against it, I respectfully suggest that we would register the highest inflation rate ever experienced in this country and I will explain.

In its last report, the Economic Council of Canada, which is made up of many important representatives from all sectors of Canadian life, emphasized the necessity to maintain a reasonable rate of increase in social transfer and social benefit payments. Hon. members will recall that the Economic Council of Canada had suggested a rate of approximately 11 per cent a year. The Economic Council indicated also that if we maintained an excessively high rate of increase for these benefits, we would end up penalizing those we were trying to help, for it would result in a very high rate of inflation.

I have examined the proposals put forward this afternoon by the hon. member for Champlain who said that, although it may cost eventually a few billion dollars, this, did not appear to him to be of paramount importance. Although I admit this is only a summary evaluation, it is nevertheless close enough to reality, give or take a few billion dollars, according to my hon. friend's proposals.

His first proposal provided for a $300 grant a year to every person aged 18 or under. This would represent an additional cost of about $400 million a year.

His second proposal provided for the payment of $1,500 a year to each person aged 18 to 60. This represented a supplementary cost of about $16.5 billion a year.

His third proposal provided for the payment to all single people over 60 of $250 a month and $200 a month for the spouse regardless of his age. This proposal would represent a supplementary cost of about $7.3 billion a year.

The fourth and fifth proposals provided for the same benefits to widows and invalids and, to be generous, I did not figure out the cost of that benefit, telling myself I should leave some aside in case I would have overevaluated these proposals.

Moreover, it is suggested to increase the tax exemptions to $3,000 per individual and $6,000 per couple, with a $500 per child exemption. That would roughly represent a cost of $2.5 billion to $3 billion a year.

Once again, leaving aside the cost of proposals Nos. four and five, all this adds up to a cost of some 26 or 27 billion dollars. This is not too serious, since it is but 125 percent of the overall revenue and expenses of the federal government at the present time. So, this would be an increase, but since we have to get the money somewhere, my hon. colleague of the Social Credit Party proposes credit and the Bank of Canada as a solution, but let us forget about that for now. Let us suppose that the Bank of Canada does not want or cannot print all this good money, we would then have to increase all taxes and not only the income tax. We would have to double all present taxes to finance the proposals put forward by the Social Credit Party of Canada.

Apart from the economic and political difficulties, such a proposal, following the injection of those amounts in the economy, would give rise to an inflationary situation such as no country in the world has ever known. Yesterday I addressed an organization that was submitting some proposals and I accused its representatives of a possible lack of responsibility for not having figured what their proposals would cost. I realize that the suggestions I criticized yesterday were innocent compared to those made today and to the lack of responsibility shown by the Social Credit Party of Canada, if the members of that party are serious when they ask Parliament to enact such measures.

In fact, the social security review is under way and it is proceeding in a very encouraging way. The federal government can count on the co-operation of all the provinces and the study covers not only the principle of the guaranteed annual income, but also other aspects of social security. This afternoon, I heard with pleasure the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) stress the fact that the guaranteed annual income is not in itself a panacea and that there is a whole series of other needs that we must continue to meet. And the idea that the guaranteed annual income will allow us to eliminate everything else is only a dream in colour.

Indeed, we will have to continue to assume a wide range of social services already in existence or that will have to be created. It is not because we will grant a guaranteed annual income to the handicapped people that we may dispense with rehabilitation services and retraining. It is not by granting a guaranteed annual income to the unemployed that the need of manpower training centres will be eliminated. It is not by awarding a guaranteed annual income to housewives that day nurseries will become useless. It is not by granting a guaranteed annual income that we will dispense with the responsibility of providing social services to meet all the individual needs, either physical or psychic, to enable people in various social circles to face a problem such as alcoholism, for instance.

Finally, we must review and examine social security on an overall basis, and not pretend that through one single step, we might easily change the world and come to a final review of the social security plan in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to emphasize that we expect to conclude within the anticipated time limit the work we are doing in co-operation with the provinces. I also wish to emphasize the fact that even though Manitoba is experimenting with a program of guaranteed annual income, this is not a reason for doing nothing or delaying the measures that could be passed.

The federal government as well as the provinces intend to implement all the steps that will be agreed upon in the review we have undertaken, and to act in future as we have done last year when we began an overall review of the social security plan. The government did not hesitate to put forward before this House specific proposals that became legislation and were passed by Parliament.

The federal government has put forward many steps and we intend to continue to do so. The provinces have also made important moves last year, particularly by increasing welfare benefits. I suggest that the provinces should also escalate the welfare benefits they are paying under the Canada Assistance Plan.

The federal government has escalated almost all its social benefits and I suggest that the provinces should seriously consider the advantage they would derive from taking the same steps as Parliament in this regard.

● (2150)

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by simply saying that I am proud, like my colleagues on this side of the House, to be long to a government that achieved this review of social security and that brought forward in this House measures like those that were proposed last year. I am sure that the Canadian public recognize the value and the efficiency of the measures that were taken, and that they will continue to support the government that applies them.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, would the minister allow a question?

Mr. Lalonde: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Latulippe: Does the minister admit that all existing welfare programs would be abolished and replaced by one program, the guaranteed income program, and can he tell us what he intends to do with the program or proposals contained in the report on poverty and made by its chairman, Senator Croll, when he says that the guaranteed annual income would cost $1,900 million at the most?

Mr. Lalonde: I thought I had made it quite clear in my speech that the introduction of a guaranteed annual income would not involve the elimination of existing social services. On the contrary, those services might be extended to meet the needs of society. The guaranteed annual income might replace present welfare payments, but all existing social services will have to be maintained. I mentioned the unemployed, the disabled, the unwed mothers. I could list a whole series of others. Those social services will have to remain.

About Senator Croll's proposals, I would say that we could have a $100 million guaranteed income if you will. We would only have to set the guaranteed annual income at such a low level that it would cost practically nothing. All depends on the level it will be set, and this is a simple matter of cost.

For instance, when Senator Croll's report was made public, there was a general protest throughout the country, even from the opposition members who said, if my memory serves me right, that Senator Croll was not offering a guaranteed annual income but guaranteed poverty. Finally, everyone rejected the report and its proposals as totally inadequate.

I do not think Senator Croll's report can now be held up as the last word on the whole matter.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to take the floor immediately after the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) on such an important subject.

Of course, I have five minutes left, and I would like to use them in a sensible way, in order to take part in the best possible way in the establishment of a social policy which would make it possible to eliminate poverty as much as possible in Canada.

We often speak about the third world, Mr. Speaker. We think that the third world is in Africa, in Europe, in Asia, and we forget that there is a third world in our own parishes, as the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare rightly said earlier. There is poverty in his own constituency; and the Senate Committee on Poverty was concerned with the poor I think. That is the reason why they tabled a report containing recommendations that sought a solution to the problem of poverty in Canada, recommendations to the effect that we must necessarily adopt a guaranteed minimum annual income policy. In his report, Senator Croll and his colleagues were not frightened by figures. I think they have exaggerated more than the Social Crediters can do because, on page 23, one can read, and I quote:

> The poverty line for a person $2,140 per year.
> Income guaranteed level, $1,500.

We speak about $1,200 and it goes thus for people of all other classes. When this report was published, the Minister of National Health and Welfare was today's Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), who gave the following comments about this report, as one could see in the November 11 1971 edition of Le Droit:

> It shows common sense but is too costly.

Mr. Speaker, was man born before money or did money come before? Who created money? Is it man or is it money that created man? We always judge according to dollars and do not think about the physical potential of this country. Canada is rich, but 60 per cent of the Canadian people are poor.

That is why, following a responsible inquiry, the senators wanted to make recommendations and since the recommendations were rejected, the chairman expressed his feelings in the following words. They are from a Liberal and not from me. I quote:

> Disappointed, Senator Croll deplored the fact that governments always find good reasons to excuse themselves for rejecting the project.

An hon. Member: How true it is!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): They have been doing that for 40 years. In his comments on the Senate's report on poverty, the former Minister of National Health and Welfare explained that it could cost up to $2 billion to the federal government to achieve the annual guaranteed income project and the present minister who succeeded him is talking about $26 billion. Let us see if we can agree on figures. I have here official statistics about what is being done throughout Canada at the federal, provincial and municipal levels and if we add the administration costs of all those programs, we come to the sizeable amount of $21 billion. Therefore, we have come to the point where we are playing with billions of dollars. What can we do about it? It is this century, the year 1974 that wants that. In spite of those billions, there are still Canadians starving in Canada. That is why, today, we have decided to work together, in an attempt to find a way to give them some security, some freedom and the possibility of leading a decent life.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, we must continue to work in that direction and achieve that objective in Canada, namely the adoption of a guaranteed annual income that would give the handicapped, those who are unable to work, income security, while also allowing those with guts, those who want to work to do so without being penalized as in the case under our present social legislation such as unemployment insurance and social welfare. Today, when someone wants to leave the house and go to work, to help build his country, he is penalized right away because under our present laws he does not have the right to do so. We are thus deprived of his energy, his brains, his possibilities, his talents which could be put to good use in adopting a guaranteed annual income which would not automatically encourage sloth in Canadians, but which, on the contrary, would bring them out of their homes, get them to work and produce even more, thus enabling the country to do even more for the needy. It is in that spirit, Mr. Speaker, that we must remember today's debate, because all political parties represented in this House gave their approval to this basic principle.

Even though we do not agree completely on the fitures, Mr. Speaker, I consider this quite normal. In the past, when we talked about an old age security pension of $150 a month, people laughed at us. Today, it is even higher and everyone finds this reasonable. In a year or two, the wishes of Senator Croll and the opinions that we have expressed may come true. I hope that the young people of today, who are looking everywhere and do not know what to do with their talents, will by then be able to work, to produce, and maybe also to help eliminate the drug problem which is now overwhelming, and will also check this movement towards the destruction of the Canadian, and especially the French-Canadian, family.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SOCIAL SECURITY—POSSIBILITY OF PRODUCTION OF COST OF LIVING INDEX RELATED TO GOODS AND SERVICES PURCHASED BY PENSIONERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question for this "late show" period tonight follows rather naturally on the debate that has been taking place today. All day long we have been discussing the desirability of a guaranteed annual income, and several times during the debate spokesmen on the government side have made the point that the escalation of old age security and other pensions represents an effort on the part of the government and on the part of parliament to keep pension incomes at a certain guaranteed level.

A few days ago, on Wednesday, March 13, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) whether he would have a discussion with Statistics Canada regarding the possibility of producing a cost of living index that was based on the actual goods and services that senior citizens and retired persons have to purchase. In his reply the minister said that the matter was, to his knowledge, under consideration by Statistics Canada, and he was favourable to that study being continued. But he suggested that there might be a danger if a special cost of living index for older persons were based largely on food and the time came when the food index did not rise quite as high as other indices, or when it might even drop.

I want to say in passing that most retired people would gamble on that. They are not so worried about times when prices drop as they are about what is more normal, times when prices are rising. And, after all, there is a floor under escalations that have been added. Legislation with respect to all escalations is quite clear, namely, that once an escalation has been given it is not withdrawn. In other words, there is no drop in anyone's pension once it has been raised in accordance with the cost of living.

I recognize the problems that exist, but I want to put it to the government—and I see that tonight I am putting it to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Cafik)—that this question does have to be looked at very seriously. Nothing is ever finally settled in this place, let that be clear. I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) realizes that and he has decided to go home. Just because we had an escalation, first of 2 per cent and then equal to the actual cost of living increase, that is not the end of the story.

For example, next month, in April, there will be an increase in the basic old age security pension on a quarterly indexing basis which will amount to only $1.95. Many pensioners are writing to us and asking how come that is all they get. I try to explain to them that this is because the quarterly indexing is always at bit delayed, and that what they are getting is an increase based on the amount by which the cost of living in November, December and January went up over what it was last August, September and October. Therefore, in April pensioners get an adjustment in relation to the cost of living which in November was a certain percentage higher than it was in August, and so it is always behind.

Therefore, I submit that some improvement must be made. There are a number of ways of improving the situation. One is to have an index that does relate to the things that pensioners have to buy. Another is to do some guessing. Statistics Canada can be as good at that as in telling us what has happened in the past, and there could be estimates of how the cost of living is likely to go in the next three months. Or better still, there could be provided a new base that is higher—one of the troubles with todays escalation is that it is on a basic pension which is too low—or there could be found another index based, for example, on the increase in the gross national product or on the wages or salary standard, and so on.

I am one of those who voted with both hands for the cost of living index. It was so much better than the 2 per cent arrangement. I am one of those who voted with both hands for it to be on a quarterly basis. But, Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that it is not the last word. He likes to stand up and announce all these things that were done, but he will find that when he gets on to the hustings one of these days before too long the people will say to him that it really does not reflect the situation and that something better must be done.

I think that whatever else was agreed upon today, there was agreement that there need to be guarantees of income maintenance. The government likes to think it has guaranteed senior citizens a certain level of pension and has guaranteed that that level would keep up with the actual cost of living. Mr. Speaker, it does not. You can tell me statistically or in strict percentage terms, that it does, but in fact it does not. I hope that if the method I have proposed has some flaws in it, the parliamentary secretary has some other answer to this problem which has to be faced, namely, keeping pensions up with what it actually costs retired persons to live.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). We all appreciate the concern he has for the problems of senior citizens. I was delighted to hear him affirm something which I certainly affirm, namely, great support for the measures that have been brought forward in this country in an effort to keep the income of senior citizens at a level equal to the cost of living.

It is quite true that the incremental increases which are now made on a quarterly basis deal retroactively with a problem that occurred earlier, and if one were to adopt the kind of approach the hon. member is referring to in this debate, namely, to change the incremental increase on the basis of increases in the cost of food, one would not correct that problem. I know the hon. member realizes that. Nor would this correct the problem of being a couple or three months behind in the increment, no matter what base you used as the basis of increases in the GNP or increases in the wage index or the food index.

Dealing more specifically with this question, I would point out to the hon. member that at this point in time the bureau of statistics is conducting a thorough food expenditure survey in 14 major cities across Canada. For the first time, data on the place of purchase is being obtained. This type of information, plus an idea of what products are purchased, is essential in determining buying patterns for a particular wage group. These data, plus the total budget survey to be taken in early 1975 in the same major centres, will provide a more detailed picture of the expenditure patterns of special groups such as the elderly. As a result, these data will also be used in a further examination to determine the necessity and validity of constructing price indices for special groups of consumers.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has indicated that he is interested in the results of the work done by Statistics Canada. I assure the hon. member that when those results are brought forward and we see what the consequences are in relation to specialized groups in this country, further consideration will be given to that kind of question.

HEALTH—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE MEDICAL RESEARCH FUNDS WILL NOT BE REDUCED

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, when I asked the minister in the House the other day a question regarding the reason for cuts in research, I was concerned because research is the cornerstone of disease prevention. Canada's real beginning in medical research was in 1921 when Banting and Best, Collip and MacLeod discovered insulin at Toronto University. Thousands of diabetics doomed to early death can now live a useful life and play their part in society. One of them was a well known Toronto specialist who made a great contribution in the treatment of diabetes.

Collip then discovered the hormones of the parathyroid gland, the placenta and the pituitary gland. Minot and Murphy at about the same time were working at the University of Chicago and they discovered that liver extract would cure pernicious anaemia so that patients could live and carry on their work. Then came the discovery of the sulfas and the antibiotics as a result of those discoveries and the economy of this country has been strengthened. Before the advent of preventive medicine founded on research of one type or another, the common cause of death was infectious diseases particularly from birth to age 45. So successful has preventive medicine been that the common cause of death now is accidental in that age group.

It is rather annoying to see research funds cut from the expected 15 per cent to 5 per cent. Even at 10 per cent we might have saved face, but hardly so when we look at other government spending, such as on Information Canada which could better be replaced by the news media. I am stressing this because there is a lack of awareness on the part of Canadians regarding the need and value of our research. Otherwise, the government would not have dared to cut back on this vital research. Yet I think of the towns, the villages and the cities across Canada, with their cancer societies raising close to a quarter of all the funds that are used in research and the clarion call they sound in making people aware of this dreaded illness. All of us owe those societies a deep debt of gratitude. Now we have the sadness of having to turn back because of lack of funds any qualified man who wants to do research.

Just about one-fifth of all deaths in Canada today are due to cancer, yet we are hovering on the verge of a breakthrough; and those cancer deaths occur in people from infancy to old age. So seriously has the United States regarded this disease and its destructive forces that they increased their funds for cancer research alone by 25 per cent while we cut back our funds. About 50 per cent of all the deaths in Canada are due to cardio-vascular disease and about 80,000 people die of it annually.

We cannot afford this cutback. The Americans have increased their spending on research into the causes of cardiovascular disease by close to half a million dollars. They are finding out what is killing their citizens. Cardiovascular disease, the lipids, all have to be studied in people from their infancy. High levels of cholesterol are being discovered in children. All this needs more research. But for every dollar spent on research, a measure of prevention must be reached in the treatment of sickness. If there ever was a penny wise and pound foolish method, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has found it. Its costs may be met tomorrow in more preventable deaths and sickness.

I would ask the minister to take another look at this problem. He has the highest-spending department in the government. Its increased expenditures ran to millions of dollars last year. I ask him to go back to basic essentials in the prevention of illness and increase these funds by at least 15 per cent. Surely a Canadian life needs as much protection as an American one, and this year the Americans are making a 15 per cent increase.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, roughly a week ago the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, when it was dealing with the estimates, had before it Dr. Malcolm Brown who is the president of the Medical Research Council. All parties were there to participate in the discussion of their particular budgets. Anyone who was there would certainly agree that Dr. Brown explained the situation in relation to the Medical Research Council, their work and their budget, quite adequately. I could not detect the slightest suggestion by the president of MRC that they were in fact inadequately funded so that they would not be able to do the kind of work that they are expected to do in research for the people of this country.

I think I should make a couple of other points if I may at this time, Mr. Speaker. The amount of money spent on medical research is not all spent by the Medical Research Council. Quite clearly, within the federal sphere alone the total budget for medical research is in excess of $100 million annually, yet the budget of the Medical Research Council itself is just in excess of $41 million. There is a great deal more being done than is being done just by the Medical Research Council. A second point I want to make is that Dr. Brown indicated that our contribution as Canadians, in terms of expanding medical knowledge in the world, was certainly very high considering our population and our budget. In fact, it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of a 5 per cent annual contribution toward the world's accumulation of medical knowledge.

I am sure that past discoveries referred to by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) cannot always be related directly to federal expenditures in specific instances. At times, discoveries that are made are not related at all to the kind of money spent. Governments are not the only groups which provide funds. Private contributions are made and I think these ought to be encouraged.

There was a suggestion by the hon. member that not enough is being spent on cancer research. I wish to point out to him that the federal government itself has absolutely no jurisdiction to determine what kind of projects are funded by MRC. This is their decision and their decision alone: it is according to the priorities established by that independent body. I think Dr. Brown dealt quite adequately with that question before the committee.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

MOVEMENT OF WHEAT—ACTION TO PREVENT STRIKE BY SEAFARERS' UNION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That this House demands that the government take effective action to ensure that the threatened general strike by the International Seafarers' Union shall be prevented from taking place, otherwise, as stated by Charles Gibbings, Commissioner of the Wheat Board, there will be far-reaching detrimental and disastrous consequences to Canada's international wheat trading relationships and loss to the Canadian farmer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

DAIRYING—STUDY OF PRODUCERS' DIFFICULTIES BEFORE NEW POLICY ANNOUNCED—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the milk industry and the problems facing milk producers.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the House consider without delay all the problems facing milk producers because of the considerable increase in production costs and the alarming reduction in milk production, and that recommendations be made to remedy this situation before the announcement of the milk policy for the coming year is made.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

SUGGESTED EXEMPTION OF MUNICIPAL BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS FROM SALES TAX—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43 to request leave of the House to move a motion regarding the difficulties municipalities are having in paying their way. In view of tax exemptions granted to provincial departments and institutions I ask leave to move:

That the government be requested to consider exempting municipal boards and commissions from federal sales tax on materials required for capital works.

The motion is seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds).

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the government admits that the prices paid to meat producers are too low at the present time and that it will give a 7 cents a pound subsidy to the producers to compensate for the low price of beef, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Minister of Agriculture reconsider the subsidy given by his department so that this subsidy may be granted in such a way as to benefit the producers, contrary to the present one which is much more profitable for the dealers than for the producers, and that this may be done in the same manner as the program once implemented for pork producers, in other words, that the government subsidy go directly to the beef producers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

NATIONAL BUILDING CODE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the many incidents throughout the world of fatal fires in high-rise buildings and the recent collapse of the overhang at the Winnipeg Post Office. I would move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the National Building Code be referred to the Standing Committee on Urban Affairs with instructions to review and update this code.

RECONCILING OF COST ESTIMATES FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF GUARANTEED INCOME—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an important motion.

Since the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), when he was Minister of National Health and Welfare, stated that a guaranteed annual income scheme would cost $1.9 billion and that the Senate committee on poverty estimated that it would cost $900 million a year, while yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) said that it would cost some $25 billion to set up such a scheme, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That a committee of the House be asked to study, check and correct the miscalculations whose results give a difference of $25 billion between those of the former Minister of National Health and Welfare and those of the present minister.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO WIDEN CATEGORY OF PERSONS ENTITLED TO LOANS

On the order: Introduction of Bills:

March 14, 1974—Mr. Reynolds—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act."

Mr. Speaker: I should like to refer now to the first of the three bills which stands in the name of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta. When the proposed measure to amend the Canada Student Loans Act, standing in the name of the hon. member, was called yesterday the hon. member provided some assistance to the Chair in relation to the procedural acceptability of the bill. The Chair is very grateful to the hon. member for his assistance and since then very careful consideration has been given to his submissions. But even after taking into account the hon. member's argument it does seem to the Chair that the bill proposed by him would create a new and a direct charge upon the treasury.

The hon. member suggests that additional money will not be required since sufficient funds have been provided for this purpose in the statutory vote created pursuant to the parent act in 1964. That, of course, is a very interesting argument which gave me cause to ponder and reflect. It is after, as I said, serious reflection that I saw the flaw in the hon. member's argument.

The Chair appreciates that the recommendation which accompanied the parent statute in 1964 was stated in general terms and might not have precluded on that occasion an amendment such as that which is now being proposed. I do not think it can be contended that a financial proposal that might have been permissible as an amendment in 1964 when the original parent statute was introduced can now be put forward under the provisions of a recommendation which had effect only in relation to the initial student loans plan.

I refer the hon. member to section one of Standing Order 62, which says:

> This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session—

These are the operative words.

> —in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

In other words, it is suggested that the recommendation which was presented to the House in 1964 had force and effect for that session only. It would not be procedurally acceptable to suggest that the same recommendation could be valid a decade later for a proposition which would create a new and what I consider to be a direct and a substantial charge on the treasury. It is suggested that even the government would be required to bring in another recommendation to support a bill such as that which is now being proposed by the hon. member.

As I said yesterday, the bill is an interesting one which the House might want to look at and study. If the hon. member could find a way to obtain the required recommendation from His Excellency, I would be pleased on his behalf to put the motion to the House.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

LIP FUNDS ALLOCATED TO CONSTITUENCIES REPRESENTED BY LIBERAL AND CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS DURING 1972-73

Question No. 47—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total amount of LIP funds allocated in 1972-73 to constituencies represented in the House of Commons by (a) members of the Liberal party (b) members of the Progressive Conservative party?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) Liberal party, $106,692,373; (b) Progressive Conservative Party, $59,552,779.

MILK SUBSIDY

Question No. 51—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,361 of the First Session of the 29th Parliament that the earliest date that milk powder prices could be expected to be reduced and contained was October 15, 1973, for what reason have Dominion Stores Limited in Brockville, Ontario been selling such milk at 25 cents per quart package for some months which is considerably more than was being charged by the same company on September 4, 1973 when the subsidy was announced?

2. Is the government planning to take some action in regard to the fact that Dominion Stores Limited in Brockville, Ontario have raised the cost of powdered milk instead of either decreasing or reducing the price level as a result of the government subsidy and, if so, what will be the nature of this action and when will it be taken?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): It is assumed the quart package in question is a four-ounce package of Carnation Instant Skim Milk Powder. Prior to October 15, 1973 there was no control on skim milk powder prices at the retail level. On October 15, 1973 Carnation Company Limited reduced its wholesale price by four cents on a four-ounce package of skim milk in accordance with the agreement and this reduction was to be passed on to the consumer. The four-ounce package which was selling for 25 cents prior to October 15, 1973 in Dominion Stores, Brockville, Ontario is selling at 21 cents.

CLOSURE OF POST OFFICES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 72—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many post offices have been closed by the government in the Province of Saskatchewan since April 20, 1968?

2. In what municipality and in what electoral district are each of these post offices located?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. April 1968—September 1970, 199; October 1970—present, 8. The program to close small post offices ended in September 1970. Closings since that date are due to factors such as inauguration letter carrier or rural delivery to meet public request, amalgamation of communities, dwindling populations, inability to recruit replacement on death or retirement of former postmaster, etc.

2. Meadow Lake, 42; Regina-Lake Centre, 9; Mackenzie, 27; Prince Albert, 30; Saskatoon-Biggar, 13; Battleford-Kindersley, 27; Moose Jaw, 6; Yorkton-Melville, 17; Saskatoon-Humboldt, 16; Regina East, 5; Assiniboia, 2; Swift Current-Maple Creek, 3; Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, 10. It is not possible without going to a very large expense, to include the municipalities of each closed post office. Many former offices are located in unincorporated areas and do not belong to any municipality. Many townships have been amalgamated with other municipalities and now come under one government.

FOREIGN LOANS CANCELLED SINCE 1964

Question No. 135—Mr. Laprise:

For each year since 1964, how many loans to foreign countries were cancelled, what are the names of each country involved and what was the amount in each case?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): None.

DELAY OF CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION IN SENDING COPIES OF ORDERS TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 219—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is it the policy of the Canadian Transport Commission to delay sending Members of Parliament information copies of orders made by that Commission respecting decisions falling within their respective federal electoral constituencies for a period of 21 days after such decisions and orders have been made?

2. Is this practice supported by regulations of the Commission and, if so, on whose authority were such regulations made and on what date were such regulations formulated?

3. Is this practice supported by the responsible minister?

4. If such is not a matter of policy, for what reason was decision number R-17686, being ordered November 21, 1973 not sent to the responsible Member of Parliament until December 13, 1973?

5. With respect to order R-17686, on what dates were (a) the province of Nova Scotia (b) the city of Dartmouth (c) the Canadian National Railways (d) Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Company Ltd. (e) the Nova Scotia Power Corporation informed officially of the decision taken on November 21, 1973, by the responsible Commission?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1, 2 and 3. When information copies of orders of the Canadian Transport Commission are forwarded to Members of Parliament, as a courtesy, they are dispatched at the same time as to interested parties.

4 and 5. In the normal course, orders of the Railway Transport Committee of the Commission are dispatched within three days to a week of the date of the order. In this instance certain administrative processes led to a considerable delay, which is regretted, between the date of the order and its dispatch. Copies of Order No. R-17686, dated November 21, 1973, were mailed to all nine parties, including those specified by the Member of Parliament, and the Member of Parliament, on December 13, 1973.

OPENING OF CITIZENS INQUIRY CENTRE IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND BY INFORMATION CANADA

Question No. 321—Mr. MacLean:

TRANSPORT

EFFECTIVENESS OF POWERS OF MINISTER AND COMMISSION IN DISCHARGING RESPONSIBILITIES—DEVELOPMENT OF NEW NATIONAL POLICY—USE OF CONSULTANTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, who recently indicated in the House that he had been given certain responsibilities with regard to transportation but not the powers to carry out those responsibilities. I would ask him whether it is his position that too much authority has been delegated by statute or placed in the hands of the Canadian Transport Commission, or is it his position that neither he nor the CTC has the necessary powers to discharge the responsibilities imposed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that, at the present time, the relationship between the authority granted the department or the minister, and the responsibilities assigned to them is absolutely disproportionate. Now, I should like to see some balance between them. I have made no distinction between the authority of the CTC and that of the department or that of the other government agencies and I say—and of this I am convinced, and I believe I mentioned it to the press yesterday—there is no one in Canada today to control all fields of transport because no one is authorized to do so. I am not asking that the Minister of Transport or the department really have the authority to manage all transport operations in Canada: this has no bearing on the matter. But, to my mind, the department does not have the authority required to set up an efficient policy.

● (1420)

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: The minister has described the present transportation policy, to use his words or a translation of his words, as a mess and has indicated it will take some six months to place an appropriate policy before cabinet to be considered. Who is developing this new policy? Is it being developed within the minister's department or by consultants?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker. It is at this moment being developed within the ministry. Following that, it will have to be submitted to cabinet. Will we have to submit some aspects to consultants after that? We will have to wait and see whether we are faced with that problem. For the time being, it is being developed inside the ministry and inside the cabinet.

Mr. Stanfield: May I then ask the minister why a United States consulting firm has been retained to make a study of the revenue position of the railways?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the government, the railway companies and even the committee of western transport ministers have retained the services of many consultant firms.

Mr. Lawrence: Why don't you appoint some of them to that committee?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Am I out of order?

I say that many consultant firms are now hired. Some are even hired by the western transport committee to look into various matters, like roadbeds—

[English]

—roadbeds in English, and on cost pricing and all these things. We have consultants who have been hired. However, on the new policy, to which I admit I was referring quite vaguely, nothing has been referred to any firm of consultants.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT ACTION IN LIGHT OF LEVEL OF CORPORATE PROFITS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It arises out of a report in this morning's paper indicating that corporate profits showed an enormous increase in the fourth quarter of 1973 for various sectors of the economy. Of particular relevance is the sector of food processing which had an increase of 81.1 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1973 compared with the fourth quarter of 1972, obviously as a result of unjustifiable higher prices. Is the government considering doing something with regard to these inordinately excessive profits being made by the corporations of this country, particularly in view of the Prime Minister's statement that the government would not permit profiteering and gouging of the consumer?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that was a full question. I hope the Chair will allow me a full answer. As I said to the Canadian Labour Congress and yesterday to the Canadian Association of Railway Workers, the profit situation is a healthy one and we have reached a stage now where I can say to the business community that in my view not every cost increase need be passed along by way of a price increase. A good deal of the profit picture is reflected in higher inventory valuation. What I am particularly interested in seeing is that a good proportion of the profits has been translated and reflected in increased capital expenditures for plant and equipment which will be translated into new jobs, particularly in the manufacturing and processing industries. Insofar as profits are reflected in new investment, I would think that is a positive result. Insofar as profits are reflected in an untoward payment of dividends, that would not be as favourably received by me or by the House. The Prime Minister and I have both said that if there is evidence that profits reflect an unconscionable taking advantage of a shortage of supply or the economic situation, the government will take action.

Mr. Lewis: I did not ask the Minister of Finance to give me the answer I would hear from spokesmen for the corporations. I asked what the government would do to stop this profiteering. What other evidence does he require that it is taking place in view of the range of profit increases?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I look to the ultimate purpose of the economy and the ultimate purpose of profits to be the expanding of the industrial base of the country. That is happening, and the ultimate purpose is jobs. I think the hon. member and I can agree on that.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—FORMULATION OF NEW POLICY IN LIGHT OF PRODUCERS' REQUESTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since a member refused a few moments ago the unanimous consent required by Standing Order 43 for the debate of the serious problem of dairy producers, may I ask the minister whether he is aware of the representations of industrial milk producers and, if so, will he give them serious consideration in preparing the dairy production policy for the next year, beginning April 1, 1974?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I answered similar questions put to me by one or two hon. members along the lines that I had to make an announcement in connection with dairy policy by April 1. And we shall do this. We are taking all representations into consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for York South rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: No, Mr. Speaker. It is not unusual for a first questioner to ask two supplementary questions rather than one, and I hope to get that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member was a little slow in rising for the second supplementary.

The hon. member will excuse me.

In the meantime, I had recognized the hon. member for Bellechasse; maybe we can go on with the supplementaries later on, if in fact there are supplementaries to the first question, the one asked by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Of course, we will afterwards come back to the hon. member for York South, but for now the hon. member for Bellechasse has the floor.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the importance of the matter and the concern prevailing at this time along industrial milk producers, could the minister tell us, whether the application for a net reimbursement of the increased $2 for a hundred pounds, and I emphasize on the word "net", to the producers will be included in the government dairy policy for the year 1974-75?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: I said it was being considered.

TRANSPORT

ACTION TO SEPARATE AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PROVISION OF COST INFORMATION BY RAILWAYS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the Minister of Transport. In light of the minister's straightforward statement in the House on March 7 about his lack of a transport policy, I should like to ask him whether he is now prepared to bring forward legislation in connection with the Railway Act and the National Transportation Act, and measures to separate Air Canada from the CNR, which his predecessor promised two years ago, stating at that time he would do it soon?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): If the purpose of the question is to find out whether we intend to split Air Canada from Canadian National, I can tell the hon. member that no decision has yet been made.

Mr. MacKay: With respect, that was part of the purpose of the question. Can the minister inform the House whether he or his colleagues have received any cost disclosure information from the railways respecting the freight rate charges on the 28 commodities specified at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in July, 1973, and, if not, when this information may be forthcoming?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think it is about to be received. I do not recall the exact number of cost disclosures we asked of the CTC but we expect to receive them very shortly. The western ministers are quite satisfied with the delays that we know are necessary in these cases.

● (1430)

Mr. MacKay: Would the minister indicate, in view of the fact he said that he has little control over the operations of the railways and in view of the fact that the railways are so heavily subsidized, particularly the CNR, whether he would consider, in order to assert his authority, reducing or holding back some of the estimates until he has received the cost disclosure information so long withheld by the railways?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that for the time being we have a satisfactory arrangement with both railways concerning cost disclosure. That is not an understatement; I think it is true. We are ready to go further if the present arrangement does not work. As far as the use of subsidies is concerned, I know this is a very strong weapon but I am not ready for the time being to put any of the railways into bankruptcy in order to obtain information.

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—USE OF CONTROLLERS AT VANCOUVER AND THUNDER BAY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Would he advise the House what has happened to the two people whom he had acting, I believe, in the role of controller, one at Vancouver and one at Thunder Bay? Are they still acting and, if so, what are they doing? If they are not, why not?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there has been a change of personnel in one case, but the functions are being continued.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will see the hon. member for Vegreville for a supplementary and will then recognize the hon. member for York South for his supplementary.

SHORT-TERM MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEM OF GRAIN TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the fact that the government has no transportation policy but one is in the process of being developed, during which time this country is suffering severe dislocation as a result of disruption of transportation, may I ask the minister when we can expect an announcement regarding short-term measures to alleviate the problem of grain transportation? The other day he indicated the appointment of a co-ordinator or transportation supervisor with respect to the movement of lumber and other commodities, having regard to the fact that railway loadings are 3.5 per cent less this year than the previous year.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think what the hon. member is asking is what will be the long-term policy, not the short-term policy. As far as grain is concerned, I think the hon. member should put his question to the Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Wheat Board. As far as lumber is concerned—

Mr. Mazankowski: Is he going to be the new transport minister?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I interrupt the hon. minister? It seems to me that we are getting involved in a debate rather than in a period of questions and answers. I shall recognize the hon. member for York South on a supplementary.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PROFITS OF FOOD PROCESSING INDUSTRY—ACTION TO ROLL BACK PRICE OF BEEF

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which also arises out of the fact that the food processing industry has had such a huge increase in profits, and out of the fact that, despite a steady drop in the price of beef to the producer since about the middle of last month, there has not been a decrease in the price of beef to the consumer. May I ask the minister whether the government is considering necessary action to force a rollback in the price of beef to the consumer? If anything is obvious, it is that the consumer of beef is being gouged at the present time.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, various alternatives are constantly being studied. We have previously informed the House of the special study of beef price margins now under way and which will be completed in approximately two to three weeks. The results of the study will, I think, form a useful basis for the consideration of action by the government.

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION IN CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the chaotic conditions in cattle marketing and in the whole cattle industry, is the minister prepared to sit down this evening or tomorrow morning with industry representatives and reconsider the whole question of the beef subsidy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are in constant touch with the industry. The latest report as of ten minutes ago seems to indicate that the whole buying program is levelling out and doing what we hoped it would do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I am not saying it is perfect, but it has certainly moved a long way in the right direction today. As the day goes on the market trend seems to be to do what it should be doing, which is marketing beef according to the procedure they have followed in the past. If hon. members have any sound advice they can give—

Some hon. Members: Resign!

Mr. Whelan: —we are ready to accept it. Up till now there have been some suggestions which we are following up. Otherwise, if there are no further suggestions for improving the position, what else can we do?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot will be recognized for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I am worried about the popularity of the Minister of Agriculture, and for this reason I will direct a supplementary question to him. Would he consider spending the $3 million a week that he is now spending in an attempt to save the livestock industry on the price of feed grain, which would not interfere with the marketing of the end product?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have certainly taken a look at this suggestion, which has been made not only by the hon. member for Crowfoot but by other people in western Canada. I have met many different people in western Canada who are concerned with the beef feeding industry, and if the hon. member can find any really unanimous point of view on this subject he is better than I am, because I certainly cannot.

HARBOURS

PORT OF MONTREAL—MEASURES TO ENSURE SHIPMENT OF GRAIN NOT INTERRUPTED BY LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Although he stated openly that his own problems and those of his department were plenty, could he say what immediate measures he and his colleagues of the cabinet are considering to make sure that the port of Montreal will not be condemned to a complete shut-off or continued jeopardy because of the present situation which makes it less and less profitable?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe wrapped it up in the over-all policy of the department. The question is much simpler. What is the situation at the port of Montreal? An extremely serious one. We are trying to solve it. Dock workers in Montreal harbour are numerous considering modern technology. It must be determined how to solve this problem. We have not yet found the solution and if the member for Saint-Hyacinthe has any suggestions, I shall listen to them.

Mr. Wagner: I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

I suggest that the government resign and give way to a responsible party capable of governing the country.

Having answered the Postmaster General, rather the Minister of Transport who perhaps will become the Postmaster General, I ask him the following question: in the event of a strike or a work slowdown by the Seafarers' International Union, does the minister intend to set up an inquiry or use some means to find alternative transportation for continued shipment of grain to Quebec?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as I have spent 23 years of my life in the labour world, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe can rest assured that I will surely not reveal in advance the means of breaking down the will of the workers so as to maintain conditions they cannot accept.

STATUTORY DUTY OF RAILWAYS TO CARRY WHEAT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in light of the minister's statement that the railways are not interested in buying hopper cars to transport wheat because they lose money, has he pointed out to the railway companies that they have a mandatory and statutory duty cast upon them under the provisions of the Railway Act to provide suitable accommodation and, with due care and diligence, receive carry and deliver all such traffic? Has the minister pointed that out to the railway companies and is he prepared to carry out his constitutional responsibility to see that the law is observed?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Everyone may applaud, Mr. Speaker, but there is something lacking in the law which you will see if you read it, and I am sure the hon. member has done so. They have a legal statutory obligation to move grain, but there is no time limit.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is not provided in the law. There is no time limit. There is nothing to compel them to buy up to date equipment with which to really move the grain in due course and in due time. That is why we have this problem in respect of hopper cars and why we as a government must solve it when normally the railway companies should probably do it.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member is rising on a point of order, but I will have to seek the co-operation of hon. members again as we will soon be running short of time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is very simple. The minister did not respond when I read to him the statement of the law that the railways must carry grain with due diligence and without delay, which constitutes a statutory obligation on them.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is probably a legal point and, fortunately or unfortunately, I am not a lawyer, but in reference to the phrase "with all diligence and without delay" they can always say that is what they are doing with the equipment they have.

Mr. Baldwin: They have to buy more equipment.

An hon. Member: You are the minister, tell them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the legal argument might be adjourned for the time being or referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—SUGGESTED MODIFICATION—SUBSTITUTION OF DIRECT SUPPORT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's reply to a previous question that beef marketing had settled down—this is largely because commission agents and producers are being bludgeoned into accepting a pretty unworkable policy—I should like to ask him whether he will modify his policy at least to the extent of paying the premium on all cattle that fall into the A and B grades so the premium can be paid directly to the producers with the result that they will at least get the benefit of this program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is being considered. There are people from different parts of Canada in the offices of the Department of Agriculture discussing this with officials of my department at the present time to determine how workable and practical this may be. There are other suggestions being made by farm organizations and members of parliament which are also being considered at the present time.

Mr. Gleave: In view of the suggestions the minister has received on the subject, will he consider introducing a policy of putting a direct support feature into this program so the producers will have a support level under this program at this point in time which they really do not have now?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should have said in my reply to the previous question that I disagree to some extent with what the hon. member said about prices. I checked the prices at Toronto today and found that they are much better than they were yesterday, and they are doing what we wanted them to do.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Is that for the U.S. cattle they were buying?

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member for Crowfoot has interjected a question about U.S. cattle. They have dropped in price on the Omaha market, on which the price is based. If we are to have some kind of a system that has nothing to do with the North American market, and that is perhaps what we should have, then I should like to know if that is what the hon. member would support.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Middlesex on a supplementary question, to be followed by the hon. member for Simcoe North.

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—DETERMINATION OF GRADE OF CATTLE KILLED IN SMALL ONTARIO PLANTS

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in respect of another area of concern on which hopefully the Minister of Agriculture can shed some light. In light of the fact there are a great number of fat cattle killed in small killing plants in Ontario where there is only a provincial inspector, and consequently there are no federal grading slips, I should like to know how the grade of the cattle killed will be determined for the retroactive period?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we know approximately—I should say quite accurately—how many cattle are slaughtered in a week in Canada and what the grades are and if we take seven cents a pound for A-1 and A-2 and average that out at say five cents a pound—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. minister and the hon. member that this is argument.

HEALTH

REJECTION OF QUALIFIED CANADIAN APPLICANTS BY MEDICAL SCHOOLS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that large numbers of qualified applicants are being rejected by our medical schools, I should like to know why over the last ten years more doctors from outside Canada have been admitted to practise here than ever before instead of training more doctors in our own schools, and when is this discrimination going to stop?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for raising this question. Indeed, this very matter was raised at the last conference of ministers of health in February. As the hon. member knows, the matter of schools of medicine and medical practice in each province is a matter for provincial governments to determine. However, I have opened discussions on this subject with my colleagues and I hope there will be general agreement on a policy by the federal and provincial governments in the next few months after further meetings on the subject. I share the hon. member's concern about providing Canadian students with opportunities in this field.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—CHRYSLER CORPORATION PRICE POLICY

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is in respect of transportation and is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has he discussed with the Chrysler Corporation of Canada their review of prices and, if so, can he report to the House the results of these conversations?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the last advice I received on this matter, perhaps about an hour ago, was that the Canadian company is considering its position but has made no decision.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, my question to the minister was not in respect of what advice he had received from the company by some means but whether he had been in direct contact with the company in order to make known the views of parliament, and to express the opinion put forward in the House today by the Minister of Finance, that some of these huge profits should be converted into price reductions and that under no circumstances will an increase in the price of cars be welcome at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, officials of my department were in touch with officials of the company today who were reminded of their undertaking in respect of narrowing the differential. They indicated that they are quite prepared to live up to that undertaking.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

ACTION TO IMPROVE FINANCIAL SITUATION OF CORPORATION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister indicate whether he has received suggestions from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority in order to solve their financing problem and does he intend before long to take measures to correct the poor financial position of the authority?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are two different problems in the question that has been asked: one concerning the labour relations between the Seafarers' International Union and the Seaway Authority, and one concerning the financing problem of the Seaway Authority. I do not know which one of these questions I should answer, but I will certainly not handle both at the same time.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I think my question is very simple. The new president, Mr. Normandeau, made suggestions concerning the financing of the St. Lawrence Seaway. We know it already has a debt that is almost beyond reimbursement and I ask the minister what steps he will take to settle the matter, and whether he will take into account the recommendations the Carter report made a few years ago?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the only answer I can give is the following: settlement of the collective agreement between the Seafarers' International Union of Canada and the St. Lawrence Seaway has absolutely nothing to do with the latter's financing. With regard to financing the seaway, it is a question of deciding whether we are willing to increase the rates to allow it to become more profitable. We are now studying precisely that question.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN SEAFARERS' UNION AND LAKE CARRIERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In light of the fact that we all want to see goods moving through the St. Lawrence Seaway as they should, is the minister now in a position to tell us whether he has made an accurate assessment of the Seafarers' Union dispute at this time, in the knowledge of the disastrous error he made last Friday when he said he is hopeful and optimistic that no strike will occur?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Without in any way indicating acquiescence in the gross misinterpretation by the hon. member of what I said last Friday, I would indicate that yes, I have made an accurate assessment of the situation to the best of my ability.

Mr. Alexander: In the light of that answer, has the minister now taken upon himself to introduce special initiatives in order that the parties can return to the bargaining table? Has he done at least that?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I do not know exactly what the hon. member means by "special initiatives" but if he is asking whether we are doing everything we possibly can to assist the parties in resolving this dispute, the answer is yes.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West on a second supplementary, but we have reached the point in the question period when I have to appeal to hon. members to limit their supplementaries because there is not much more than five minutes left before I will have to call orders of the day.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact the minister has indicated that he feels his personal intervention in this matter would be a little premature, can he now advise whether he is waiting until April 1 before he takes a personal interest in this matter or whether he is at least getting on the telephone to discuss these matters with the parties involved?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I do not know from what information the hon. member draws his miscellaneous conclusions but they are totally erroneous, and that should concern him.

Oral Questions

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—SUGGESTED HALTING OF DESIGN, PLANNING AND LAND ACQUISITION IN LIGHT OF DEVELOPMENTS IN INTERCITY TRAVEL

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the minister's statement yesterday to the effect that planning for major airports at Montreal and Toronto did not take into consideration modern developments in intercity travel, does the minister intend to use whatever power he has, if any, to call a halt now to design, planning and land acquisition with regard to the ill conceived airport at Pickering?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, during a very straightforward discussion with the press yesterday, I talked about all the things that could have happened, including what could have happened if we had known 20 years ago what we know today. I think that the newspaperman reported this discussion very honestly, but to conclude that this was a judgment made upon the case of Pickering and Mirabel is to go too far.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary to the reluctant minister.

[English]

I return to the point just made by the minister. In view of the fact that the hearing which is now going on will not take into consideration the knowledge the minister claims was there and was evident before the decision to build the airport was taken, will the minister please undertake to review the whole decision to proceed with the vast expenditures involved this year in the planning and design of the airport?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the only thing I said, and I think that everybody in the House will accept it as being reasonable, is that if we had known, say 10 or 15 years ago or maybe even five years ago, that it would be possible to have trains running as fast as 200 or 300 miles an hour, maybe we would have made a decision that would have been different from the one we made. That is all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are only a few minutes left before the end of the question period. Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN SEAFARERS' UNION AND LAKE CARRIERS ASSOCIATION—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am always impressed by the Minister of Transport who spoke of trains travelling 300 miles an hour. It indicates how far ahead he is of actualities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is thinking of Air Canada. In view of the fact that no action at all has been taken by the pusillanimous Minister of Labour, will the minister look into this situation regarding the Seafarers' Union dispute and do what he can, because all over western Canada people such as the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board and others are saying that failure to act will constitute a terrible blow to this country. Apparently nothing is being done. I appeal to him because he gets things done.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret to hear the hon. member say that because some things are being done, and I must admit publicly that the Minister of Labour is not only my colleague but one of my good friends and I have a lot of confidence in his capacity and ability.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You are alone.

SPORTS

INTENTION TO BAN TORONTO FRANCHISE IN WORLD FOOTBALL LEAGUE—SCOPE OF POSSIBLE LEGISLATION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of further statements by the minister over the weekend concerning his intention to ban a Toronto franchise in the World Football League and the additional indication by the Minister of Justice in committee last night that his officials are drafting legislation together with the minister's officials for presentation to cabinet tomorrow, would the minister indicate whether such legislation will apply to sports other than football and will it involve restrictions on the televising of American sporting events by Canadian stations?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to say that, contrary to the party opposite, this government and this party are not speaking with one voice in the west, one in the east, one in Toronto and one in Montreal.

An hon. Member: Your party has no national character.

Mr. Lalonde: What I said over the weekend, while the hon. member was otherwise busy I have no doubt, was that a recommendation will be made to my colleagues in cabinet, and that when a decision is made in cabinet it will be announced in due course. As the hon. member knows, the content of legislation is a subject that is made known when the bill is put forward for first reading. As to the latter part of his question about television, I do not intend to look into this matter at this time.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Atkey: May I ask the minister whether, in the preparation of the legislation, he has been consulting with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to clear up the inconsistency between his policy of protecting the monopoly of the Canadian Football League and the other minister's policy of promoting competition?

Mr. Lalonde: I think that the question itself indicates the very type of confusion that exists in the minds of members of the opposition on the whole issue of Canadian ownership and protection of a Canadian identity in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROGRESS OF PROGRAM TO DECENTRALIZE STAFF—ADVERTISING OF POSITIONS—NUMBER OF TRANSFERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In light of the advertisements appearing in newspapers across Canada this week for more than 25 senior staff positions in his department in various places across the country, can the minister indicate to the House whether in effect this means that transfers of people from the Ottawa area to the various regions and provincial capitals have been completed or whether that is to be continued, and the number of transfers that have already taken place?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not altogether certain I can answer in detail. I can say that the first phase of offering various positions to those who are eligible for such offers within the Public Service has been completed. This has now enabled us to carry out the second stage which is to have people from the regions in the various offices who know the conditions in those particular areas. Whether a full assessment of the total complement of people in each area has been completed by the various public service organizations is something I would have to check and give the hon. member a written reply.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that to date there has been very little public information except for these advertisements, about the nature of the staffing arrangements in the various regions and provincial capitals and the extent of the transfers that have taken place, would the minister agree to make an early statement in the House or to make this information generally available so that we could be aware of the situation?

Mr. Jamieson: Of course, the situation changes daily, but to the extent that it exists at this moment in time I would be glad to make information on it available to the hon. member or to any other hon. member who wishes to see it.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—REQUEST THAT MINISTER HAVE REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO BOARD OF INQUIRY IN LIGHT OF NEW EVIDENCE

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the statements made yesterday by the minister to the Canadian Railway Labour Association, the answers he has given today to the hon. member for Scarborough West respecting the Pickering airport proposal, and the fact that the independent inquiry that was set up is entitled to look into new evidence and the minister has indicated there is new evidence, would the minister be prepared to make representations through his department to the inquiry board respecting the kind of questions he alluded to yesterday and today?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): In all honesty, Mr. Speaker, I think I cannot give an answer different from the one I gave a few minutes ago. I was just talking about things that could happen and did not happen, and I do not want to interfere in any way with the inquiry that is taking place.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Greenwood; the hon. member for Yukon rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I raised this question of privilege in the previous session in connection with the propriety of parliamentary secretaries, who are part of the ministry, taking up the time of the House by asking questions. Those hon. gentlemen, sir, have telephone lines open to them. Ministers' offices are open to them. Further, these hon. gentlemen are paid an extra $4,000 a year to answer questions, not to ask them and spuriously take up the limited time of the question period which is supposed to be used by the opposition for eliciting information from the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has raised this question previously. I have looked at past precedents and have found nothing in them, and certainly I cannot find anything in the rule book, which says that because parliamentary secretaries receive an additional emolument they are not allowed to ask questions. Neither can I agree with the hon. gentleman's proposition that the question period is reserved for the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Again, that is not so. If the hon. member would study the precedents and Hansard over past years he would see that that proposition is not supported by the precedents. However, I have tried to be as conciliatory as I can in this regard by, let us say, not encouraging parliamentary secretaries to ask questions because I really feel that to some extent there is a difficulty in that the Chair often wonders whether a parliamentary secretary is rising to ask or to answer a question. That very fact is sufficient to pose a question in my mind. But as long as that privilege is not abused, perhaps we should not insist on a strict interpretation of the rule, whatever the rule may be. I would hope we might be able to continue on the basis of what we have done in the past.

My feeling is that, although the hon. member's point may be well taken to some extent, there must be some leeway allowed the Chair in the interpretation of the rules. That is what I have been trying to do, to take into account the point of view expressed by the hon. member, which has some validity, and the point of view which I take it the parliamentary secretary is now going to expound on the question of privilege.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you very much for the remarks you have made in respect of this matter. However, the point I wish to make is that in my capacity as a member of parliament I have constituents to represent. I intend to represent them and I will not be intimidated by anybody on either side of the House in the fulfilment of that responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: The second point I would like to make is that I wish members in the official opposition would at least try to be consistent on this matter because, as others in the House realize, there are members on that side who think that parliamentary secretaries should not answer questions and others who think we should not ask them. The simple fact is that the rules allow us to do both, in my humble submission, provided a parliamentary secretary does not address a question to his own minister, which I think would indeed be an abuse of the House. I think that I am as entitled as anybody else to ask questions of anybody in a position of responsibility in the House of Commons, on any subject, in the interests of the people I represent, and I shall continue to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon has made his point and the hon. member for Ontario has responded to the question of privilege. I am not sure whether we should allow the matter to develop into a debate. I recognize the validity of, and the interest in, the points of view expressed by both the hon. member for Ontario and the hon. member for Yukon. I am not sure that there is an easy solution, but I shall try to take both aspects of the matter into account.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a personal matter arising out of your remarks from the chair, I am sure if the Chair had heard me correctly you would have appreciated the fact that I was not advancing—and the record will show I was not advancing—the proposition that the question period should be reserved for the opposition. I said that the purpose of the question period was to enable the opposition, primarily—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Nielsen: —but including all members, to make inquiries of the ministry. Certainly at no time did I say the question period should be reserved for the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have now lost ten minutes or so on these questions or alleged questions of privilege. I point out that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris was waiting yesterday for a chance to ask a question. Before the first question of privilege was raised, the hon. member for Greenwood had the floor, so perhaps he might be allowed to ask his question. Then, with consent, the Chair will see the hon. member for Brandon-Souris who, as I say, was cut off at the end of the question period yesterday.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON MAINTAINING MEMBERSHIP IN INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION, LAOS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is of a non-controversial nature. It is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who has not had too many questions today. Has the Canadian government threatened or considered withdrawing Canada's contribution to the International Control Commission in Laos unless certain conditions are met and, if that is the situation, what are those conditions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not threatened to withdraw from the International Control Commission in Laos. What we have done is to advise the Laotian government, which we did on March 13, as well as the co-chairmen of the 1962 Geneva conference and all other parties, that we intend to move the adjournment sine die of the Laos commission at a meeting which we have requested for that purpose.

POST OFFICE

WAGE DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN POSTAL CODERS AND POSTAL SORTERS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO END CODE BOYCOTT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General, but he seems to have disappeared. In view of the fact that it has taken me as long to ask this question as it takes the Postmaster General's department to deliver the mail, perhaps I could address it to the President of the Treasury Board who is responsible for maintaining happy relationships in the Public Service. Now that the Union of Postal Employees has launched a postal code boycott in protest against the difference in wage rates between the postal coders and the postal sorters, would the President of the Treasury Board review this policy with a view to establishing equity between these two job classifications before Canada's unhappy postal service suffers complete collapse?

● (1510)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss this question with the Postmaster General.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the public accounts for the years ending March 31, 1972, and March 31, 1973, and the reports of the Auditor General thereon, together with the evidence adduced by the committee while considering the said matters in previous sessions of parliament, be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFERENCE OF SYSTEM OF READJUSTING REPRESENTATION TO COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the system of readjusting representation in the House of Commons, including the method of determining the number of members for each province established by section 51 of the British North America Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Motion agreed to.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, ADMINISTRATION AND OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-7, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on resuming the debate on Bill C-7 I believe we should first realize that the government is using a rather featherlike approach in this bill. I suggest that the legislation will perhaps hurt competition rather than make it freer and easier in Canada. In a sense, the government is being quite naive in their approach concerning the matter. I suggest that there are four large elements bearing upon competition in Canada any one of which will have greater influence on competition, its restriction or its freedom, than the legislation proposed by the government.

I refer, for example, to the foreign ownership of industry in this country and to the fact that in the international economic report of the President of the United States, tabled in February, 1974, we find there is listed total American investment in this country of $44.1 billion. As we know, Mr. Speaker, there has been an incident in recent weeks affecting part of that investment. MLW-Worthington in Montreal, because they are 52 per cent owned by their parent in the United States have encountered some restriction with respect to a deal they hoped to make with Cuba, because of legislation now in force in the United States.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What restriction was that?

Mr. Stevens: I understand it is still under review in the United States whether the parent company will be prosecuted if the subsidiary company goes ahead with the deal which they would like to make with the United States.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With Cuba.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, with Cuba. I mention this because not only is this featherlike legislation but the Canadian government have followed a consistent policy of tolerating foreign investment and have encouraged it at every opportunity through the utilization of government funds to support such investment in Canada.

It is interesting to consider the record of the Export Development Corporation which this government proposes to enlarge further and to expand to a $4 billion organization. I think it is interesting to note that that organization has been oriented by the government so that over 50 per cent of the benefit of their loan goes to foreign-controlled companies in Canada. The minimum loan from that organization is $1 million, and we find that in 1972 the Export Development Corporation made loans on an average of $23.3 million, while the Industrial Development Bank made loans on an average of $45,000. The interest rate in the EDC, effectively, to foreign borrowers was approximately 7 per cent, while Canadian borrowers who turned to the International Development Bank paid 9.8 per cent.

I will demonstrate, Mr. Speaker, that this government does not know whereof they speak when they talk about competition in this country. If it is seriously suggested to the House that somehow this legislation will free competition and, as the Prime Minister has indicated—I am pleased to see he is still with us—that it will even contain inflation in this country, then I say God help this country if this is one of the pillars that the government intends to use to resist or to contain inflation.

With inflation at 9.1 per cent, I think it is time we demanded that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) brought in a budget to show us exactly what he intends in the way of fiscal and monetary measures to contain inflation over the coming months. For the Prime Minister or any of his ministers to suggest that somehow this legislation will help contain inflation is, I strongly suggest to hon. members, misleading. In fact, it will likely increase rather than lower the cost of goods in this country.

I come back to the broader spectrum, Mr. Speaker, which is: what are the forces in this nation that are working against free competition? I suggest that hon. members should look at the large corporate power units, the large union power units and the large banks in the country. I suggest that any one of those groups has an extremely important role to play when we consider whether there is to be freerer competition in Canada. Take banks, for example. With their assets standing at $55 billion and general loans at $30 billion, perhaps the best role for any person in this country is that of director of one of these banks. Each director of our banks represents assets which on average amount to some $170 million per director. Each director controls loans amounting on average to almost $100 million.

I grant that the Liberal party is heavily indebted to the chartered banks in that it receives substantial campaign funds from them. Nevertheless, the government should not go through the charade of saying that somehow Bill C-7 will provide for greater competition. It should not be allowed to ignore the fact that it is not doing anything substantive to ensure competition with regard to foreign ownership, the large banking interests, the large corporate interests and the large unions in the country. Not only is it extremely unlikely that this bill will increase competition in the country and reduce the inflation rate, but it may damage business in many respects. It will hurt especially smaller businessmen.

When I last spoke on this bill I mentioned a constituent of mine, who, having been subjected to government bureaucracy and red tape, wrote to me in exasperation. I quote as follows part of his letter to me which expresses his concern about government controls:

> I cannot help but speculate on the costs to business and the resultant effect on our profits in carrying out the seemingly endless tasks demanded by various governments. The very same governing bodies who order that we carry out these tasks free of charge unhesitatingly expand their various departments to better carry out their functions of harassment, interruption and annoyance. Let's take a brief look at some of these government imposed workloads: we must keep accurate records for, make accurate deductions for, prepare accurate returns for, provide inspection facilities for, and in certain areas make prompt payments to the following government departments or government controlled agencies: Workman's Compensation Board, provincial income tax, Canada Pension Plan, provincial department of labour, federal sales tax, Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Ministry of Transportation, Minister of National Revenue, federal income tax, unemployment insurance, provincial hospitalization, federal Department of Labour, provincial sales tax, Department of Agriculture, Ministry of the Environment, corporation tax divisions.
> These services can only be classified as additional forms of indirect taxation which unfortunately are very real costs to the Canadian business community. I would speculate that the figure runs into multimillions of dollars.

This letter was sent by a relatively small businessman who does on average half a million dollars' worth of business and makes on average about $20,000 per year. He has referred to the type of red tape which frustrates business people more and more, including himself. I suggest that the government should introduce legislation which will deal effectively with the big power blocs of this country. Such action would be more effective in bringing about competition than the present bill, or the setting up of a new commission whether it is called the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission or by any other name.

Surely, if the government intends to subject businessmen to this new type of review and investigation, it should in fairness include in the legislation some provision for providing funds to companies who are being investigated. The money would enable the companies to present a proper case and do the necessary red tape work in connection with any review or investigation which will be undertaken by civil servants who will administer the act. I agree that large corporations can probably live with this type of investigation. I think smaller businessmen deserve protection from the unrelenting efforts of civil servants who often investigate for the sake of investigating.

The bill is alarming in some respects. The provision for giving wide discretionary powers to the commission referred to needs to be questioned. I think every member of the House should question the extremely wide powers to be given to civil servants with regard to investigation. Surely no one suggests that such investigations in the past have always been objective. Personal influence has sometimes been brought to bear by competitors on civil servants to ensure that other competitors are put at a disadvantage in the market place. I think this House ought to move cautiously in dealing with legislation like this and should bear in mind that it is superficial legislation which may do more harm than good.

It should be noted that in our country the inflation rate has reached 9.1 per cent and, according to unofficial predictions, may reach 10 per cent; yet no budget has been introduced. The government has given priority to the bill before us.

Housing starts fell by 36.8 per cent in the last three months compared with the previous three months, yet the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) has not brought forward legislation which will ensure a plentiful supply of housing at reasonable prices. I remind hon. members again that since this government took office in 1968, housing in my area has risen in value by 72 per cent. Yet here we are, expected to give precedence to a bill which will do little to help us meet our housing needs.

This bill is to have precedence over legislation dealing with the unemployment insurance fiasco which is costing the nation well over $1 billion in needless pay-outs. This bill is to have precedence over other bills even though the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has said flatly that he cannot or will not do anything to establish an industrial strategy in this country. Having said that, he has told us that he will not intervene in any attempt to control commodity prices in this country, even though commodity prices have risen by 25.7 per cent within the past year. We are asked to give precedence to this bill even though the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), on March 7 in this House, virtually threw up his hands, said the entire department is out of control and that there is little he can do. Today he was asked the direct question whether he proposed to bring in any legislative measures to attempt to control the out of control situation to which he referred, and the minister declined to answer.

Speaking of things out of control, there is also the matter of energy. Not only do we have a government that has failed to make this country self-sufficient as far as transportation of oil is concerned, but we have a minister who last night had to admit that the American officials know more about internal affairs concerning the importation of oil into this country than he or his department. I am referring to the fact that according to the latest economic report from the United States, it is estimated that the cost to this country of foreign imports of oil will be $4 billion in the current year. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) was not able to furnish that figure to the committee last evening.

To return to Bill C-7 and to deal with clauses in it specifically, I first wish to mention that I believe the wording is too wide in clause 31(2). It gives virtually unlimited discretionary power to the commission to control the distribution system of individual suppliers in most industries in Canada.

I would point out there is no onus placed on the director to be appointed under the act to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt or even on the balance of probabilities. Surely the director should be expected to be more precise and state the findings on which he bases his decision or judgment. Once an inquiry has been initiated by the director, we must remember that the commission will become its own investigator, judge and jury. When it reaches a decision on a purely subjective basis, on its own appraisal of the facts which it has elicited, there is really no effective court of appeal to which one may refer.

The term "market" is used in Bill C-7 but it is not defined. While we recognize this is the case under existing law, the vagueness of this concept becomes more serious because of the extended scope of the commission's power under the bill. I feel it is not clear whether the term refers to the market area of the complainant, of the supplier or the international market for the article in question.

The term "adversely affected" is used. Surely that is a broad term that virtually anyone could use to show that he could probably sell an article at a profit if he could obtain supplies. He would thus meet the test that it is suggested has to be met in this bill. There is a reference to usual trade terms but unfortunately it is very vague. It is clear that it includes a credit worthiness and willingness to buy in usual quantities, but the term "and otherwise" which appears with the phrase is undefined. I am mentioning these points because I feel that in spite of the fact the legislation has been under review for many months, if not years, it is ineptly drafted and will bring hardship to those now in the business community, especially the smaller businessman.

I have already referred to the costs that will be incurred by businessmen who will have to deal with this commission. I feel it is unfortunate that these costs should be mounted, as I have indicated, mount on mount on the back of the businessman. I would again point out that these costs are inherent in clause 4.1 of the bill. They apply to manufacturers, retailers and customers. They far outweigh any possible benefit to persons who are unable to get supplies. I believe this bill is inconsistent with the aims of a competition policy and will work to the disadvantage of most manufacturers, retailers and consumers. It will not in fact benefit small business people or bring competition into the marketplace of Canada.

I would again emphasize that the type of legislation being contemplated by the minister is really the brainchild of his civil servants. It is their method of handling, or their suggested solution to increase competition in Canada, but they are talking of a field about which they know little. We have had other examples of such new commissions or bureaux being set up by this government. The majority have been most unhappy. Last year, for example, the foreign investment review bill was passed by this House. The foreign investment review board was established as a result of that legislation. Subsequent to the passage of that act I had informal chats with civil servants who were drafting the regulations they hope to issue from time to time concerning the workings of the legislation. It is not an overstatement to say it is shocking to learn what little knowledge those civil servants have in the field they are attempting to regulate. If they were Tories, I would hope they would be a little more capable than the people to whom I am referring.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Those in this House who are members of the legal profession have undoubtedly noticed that in the bill there is a reference to the solicitor-client privilege that has been assumed to exist in this country for many years. While the amendments to section 20 do not appear to cause a problem, it has been learned from the Department of Justice that they intend to take the position that the privilege attaching to communications between solicitor and client will not be available under this section. If that is so, I feel we must be gravely concerned. Such an intention by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would be contrary to established legal precedents. It may be that if the government and the House is determined to pass this type of legislation, we should at least insert in the bill something similar to section 103(2) of the United Kingdom fair trading act of 1973.

That provision reads as follows:

Nothing in this section shall be taken to compel the disclosure by a barrister, advocate or solicitor of any privileged communication made by or to him in that capacity, or the production by him of any document containing any such communication.

I feel we must consider the right to cross-examine statisticians, civil servants and others who may appear before any commission to deal with this subject. It is of the greatest importance that all persons giving evidence of such a nature be subjected to cross-examination, and I would again urge that a provision in terms similar to those in section 45(3)(2) should be included in this legislation.

I know the minister treats this bill lightly because in his own brief remarks he said we should get on with it, pass it at second reading, get it into committee and then dispose of it quickly. At least, that was his hope. I would suggest otherwise. If the government and the House are seriously concerned about the absence of competition in this country, they should step back and take a look at the entire economic competitive fibre in this country. There are some hard decisions to be made if we wish a free and totally open marketplace in Canada. The suggestion that another commission should be set up to deal with largely superficial matters will not ensure a completely free market.

In many ways this is an unfortunate example of the government's tendency to gloss over an issue rather than deal with it effectively. This is not the first time they have come up with a solution which in their hearts they realize is ineffective—something like Mrs. Plumptre's board which we all know has been totally powerless to deal with inflation.

The time has come to ask ourselves whether the banking industry in Canada should not be reviewed again, whether there should not be another Porter commission inquiring into banking, which has grown from $20 billion to $80 billion. Should we not ask ourselves whether the banks are ensuring a truly competitive marketplace in Canada as far as their lending activities are concerned? Surely we should take steps to make certain that this industry is competitive in the sense that a businessman with proper security and a legitimate need gets the credit necessary to enable him to compete, regardless of his size.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry, but I must interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired. He may conclude his remarks if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: With over 90 per cent of our banking business controlled by five institutions, perhaps we should look into the establishment of a commission to ascertain whether the industry is serving the needs of the business community effectively, rather than deal with superficial matters such as are touched in the bill before us. I suggest, also, that there should be a thorough investigation into the activities of foreign-owned corporations in this country to make sure they are adding to, not detracting from, the competitive nature of our business community. The large corporate blocs in our country should also be reviewed, as should the large union power blocs. I am sorry to say it, but I believe Bill C-7 is an ineffective measure, one which does not deal with the real need in this country, which is the enhancement of a truly competitive business community.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, one of the strong points of our democratic form of government is the fact that we allow all sorts of debates to take place, not only in the House of Commons and in the various legislatures but in the newspapers, on radio, television, and so on. But one of the weak points, at least in my estimation, is the length of time this process is apt to take. Just how long should we allow debate to take place before a decision is reached? Surely at some point along the line debate has gone on long enough. Discussion of a bill such as that we are considering this afternoon should result, without too much delay, in the bill being sent to committee where it can be examined in detail and either chucked out or brought back for final reading in order that the people of Canada might have the opportunity of enjoying the benefits of the legislation.

I listened with great interest, as I always do, to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I am constantly amazed by the variety of viewpoints held by members in the official opposition. The hon. member has just told us that in his opinion the bill before us would, in the long run, hurt competition. This is certainly not what has been said by other members of his party. I wonder if it is fair to ask whether members of the official opposition are not just holding the bill up for purely political reasons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: If they will study the views which have been expressed in newspapers, on television and elsewhere across Canada they will find that the vast majority of media commentators have accepted the bill. Some have expressed criticism on the ground that it does not go far enough, but the majority have stated that in their opinion it is a good bill and it should go forward; and they believed it should go forward, not a month from now or five months from now or five years from now but immediately. Indeed, some members of the official opposition have expressed a similar view. Members belonging to the NDP, too.

One of the leading members of the official opposition, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), has been quoted in the Ottawa Journal as saying the bill proposed worth-while measures of consumer protection. He said it offered a lot more than he expected. He called it an important piece of legislation. And he has not disclaimed this quotation in the course of the debate here. That is not what the hon. member for York-Simcoe said. All of us watched on television the meeting the Conservatives held in the Chateau Laurier. We admired the unity which was evident in that great meeting. It is unfortunate they do not show the same unanimity in the caucus meetings they hold every Wednesday morning, because it seems to me that one member says one thing and another says something quite different; they do not know where they are going. As a result, the Canadian people know they are holding up certain laws which ought to be passed if for no other reason than the need to get on to considering other and more important laws. For example, my hon. friend from York-Simcoe suggested inflation, and who am I to say he is not correct that inflation is a major problem in Canada today? But before we can tackle inflation and the many other government bills that are ready to come before this parliament, we have to get this measure out of the way.

Mr. Stevens: Why?

Mr. Whicher: My hon. friend from York-Simcoe asks why. One reason is that the hon. member for St. John's East has said that it is a good bill. So not only does the government say it is a good bill, but members of the hon. member's own party opposite say it is. I know the press says it is a good bill, that television says it is a good bill and so does radio, yet the government is up against members like the hon. member opposite.

The chief whip of the opposition party on "Question Period" broadcast on Sunday, March 17, had this to say, and I ask hon. members, particularly of the opposition, to listen:

> We are still waiting for legislation and we have been here for two weeks now. We are still waiting for legislation to deal with inflation and the immediate problems thereto and there has been nothing come forward at all. We are on the combines law which has been talked about for years. It is going to take months to get through that combines law.

I say shame. Surely the people of Canada are fed up with this attitude that has become so evident in this House of Commons for the last year or so of deliberately holding up legislation, legislation not only that the government and people of Canada want but in many instances which many members of the chief opposition party want. Yet that is the party that holds up the democratic process, which in my opinion, and I might add in the opinion of many other people, is unfortunate.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege or on a point of order?

Mr. Stevens: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering whether the hon. member would accept a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, it does not matter whether it is or not; I am willing to accept a question from my hon. friend at any time, as long as he accepts my answer.

Mr. Stevens: I was wondering whether the hon. member would not agree that the act has two main divisions, one dealing with consumer orientation and the other dealing with the establishment of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, and that we have attempted to make it clear that we are not in disagreement with the consumer portion of the bill, whereas we do have misgivings about the corporate side. If the minister would like to divide the bill or somehow deal with it differently, then we can facilitate passage of the consumer provisions without delay.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of my hon. friend, if one may call it that, I would be sympathetic with his views and would suggest that perhaps he might have a question there. But he emphasizes the problem faced by the government. He said that if the bill were divided he would be pleased, as far as he is concerned, to let the bill go through. But that is not what the hon. member for St. John's East, a member on his own side of the House, has said. He did not say that half the bill was worth while; he said that all the bill was worth while, that it gave a lot more than he expected and that it was an important piece of legislation. Let hon. members opposite hold a caucus so they can get together and find out exactly what they want. Then this government, of which I am a backbencher, can bring forward other important pieces of legislation that will benefit all Canadians, not just members of the Liberal Party or opposition parties but the taxpayers of Canada who, after all, are the most important people as far as this country is concerned.

One of the things that my hon. friend did not mention is this. When I had the honour of being a member of the Ontario legislature, for years this question came up periodically: Can Canada sell trucks to China, or to Russia, or to some country that the United States regarded as an enemy, without getting permission from the United States? That was a very touchy question. Certainly I as a Canadian could never accept such a state of affairs. I have always felt that we should be able to sell manufactured goods, raw materials or any type of goods we wished to sell to foreign countries with whom we were friendly, whenever we wanted to do so, provided a satisfactory deal could be arranged. But in the past such deals have been stopped.

As a matter of fact, only a week or ten days ago there were many questions from members on the opposite side of the House about a proposed sale to Cuba of railway locomotives, and it appeared we had almost to bow to our United States friends and ask the United States government for permission to sell these locomotives to Cuba even though they were made right here in Canada. As far as I am concerned, this is a ridiculous situation. This bill will make it absolutely clear that we as Canadians can sell to any country in the world we wish to. In this regard I have a clipping from the Ottawa Journal reporting that this train deal has gone through. I am sure that all of us, not necessarily as parliamentarians but as Canadians, are proud of this. The report is headed "$14 million train deal: Cuba signs rail pact". It is datelined Journal Wire Services, Miami, Florida, and reads as follows:

> Cuba has signed a $14-million contract for 30 railway locomotives with a Canadian firm controlled largely by a U.S. company.
> Havana radio, monitored in Miami, said today the pact was signed in the Cuban capital by MLW-Worthington Ltd. of Montreal and the Cuban railway enterprise.
> Fifty-two per cent of the Canadian company is controlled by Studebaker-Worthington Inc. of Harrison, N.J.
> The contract had been held up because of U.S. laws prohibiting U.S. firms from doing business with Cuba. But the directors of MLW-Worthington voted earlier this month to pursue the negotiations despite U.S. state department objections.
> The sales by U.S. corporate subsidiaries in Canada are likely to stir long-stifled desires of some U.S. companies to do business with Cuba.
> More trade would be seen as a step toward eventual resumption of diplomatic relations with Havana.
> The embargo on trade with Cuba was proclaimed by President John F. Kennedy on Feb. 3, 1962, "in light of the subversive offensive of Sino-Soviet communism with which the government of Cuba is publicly aligned."
> Under the trading with the enemy act, according to officials, the embargo applies to foreign subsidiaries of U.S. corporations as well as to the parent companies.

What this means is simply this. If the United States had had its way, it would have stopped trade with Cuba as far as Canada is concerned. Without this law, Mr. Speaker, in every instance where a trade agreement was reached or a deal of this sort, as we like to call it, was made, the government would have had to make a special plea to get the deal through. Bill C-7 will make it absolutely legal from now on for us to trade with whomever we wish, and indeed the bill should have been passed many years ago in my opinion. Surely this is something that is good for Canada, yet it is not mentioned by my hon. friends opposite.

As a matter of fact, there are many other things in the bill that they have not mentioned. I would be the first to admit that perhaps this is not a perfect bill by any means. My hon. friend believes that the only thing that is perfect is the seat in which he is sitting, but let me tell him that there is no such thing as perfection around here. I am not perfect, and with respect I say to my hon. friend that he is not either. Neither is the government. We have not said that. We are doing the best we can, but we want to get this bill to the committee so members of all parties in this House and the people of Canada can examine it. We do not appreciate the eternal frustration we have had to endure as a result of speaker after speaker from the opposition saying the bill is no good and it should be examined for a few more years.

● (1600)

I am sure you understand, Mr. Speaker, that this matter has been before the Canadian parliament and the people for years. If anything is said about this matter at all, perhaps it should be that it should have been passed by this House years ago. Perhaps it should have been passed when our Tory friends were in power. They are great ones to tell us what we should do now, but we should remember that they did not do a darned thing about this matter when they had the opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: There are many provisions of this bill that will be of assistance to the Canadian consumer. I have heard members of my own party and members of other parties in the House, as well as the media on television and over the radio, say there has been misleading advertising in Canada. While this bill is not perfect, and I am the first to admit it, at least it does something to protect the consumer when he buys goods in any store.

Part of the bill deals with warranties and guarantees. I agree with the hon. member for York-Simcoe who pointed out that there is nothing wrong, as a whole, with Canadian business but that unfortunately there is a bad apple in every barrel whether it be in the political or business sense. This country has been built by hardworking people through a system of free enterprise. As a result, we have one of the best systems in the world, with the best standard of living. So I do not want to be too critical of business or offer carte blanche criticism but I do suggest that the odd business takes advantage of the consumer, who will be offered some protection under this measure.

So far as warranties and guarantees are concerned, this measure will make absolutely sure that goods cannot be offered until they have been subjected to adequate tests. We have heard talk of pyramid selling. I agree that these things may be of little consequence in the over-all picture, but they are very important to the individual Canadian. We have also heard talk of referral selling. In this regard, someone may buy a washing machine, and if he gives a list of 25 or 100 prospective purchasers of washing machines he gets the machine cheaper, or for nothing, whatever the case might be. That practice will be banned under this bill.

How many times have we read advertisements of cars for sale saying that the price has been cut by $100, but on going to the agency involved people have found that only two cars were offered for sale at the reduced price, with the remainder being sold at the original price? That practice will be stopped by this measure, and I am sure my Conservative friends will admit that this will at least offer some protection to individuals who are in the market for a car; they will be sure of the opportunity of buying such a car at the advertised price.

During the last few months we have heard a lot about the practice of double-ticketing, particularly by grocery chains. An article may have sold for 22 cents, but when the housewife goes to purchase it the price has been jacked up to 27 cents, or whatever it might be. From now on, according to the law, when there are two prices on an item, the customer will have the right to purchase the item at the lowest price.

There are many other things covered by this bill, including services. The hon. member for York-Simcoe referred to the fact that there are many lawyers in this House. In my experience in politics I have found this to be necessary because those of us engaged in politics are making and changing laws. However, the fact is that lawyers have shown a tendency to submit to inflationary pressures by charging increased fees for their services. Let me point out that it is certainly not unknown in various areas of Ontario that every lawyer will charge the same fee for the same service. I should like to know whether it is fair that the legal profession should do this. The fact is that lawyers have been able to get away with it, but they will not be able to get away with it in future because services are included in this measure.

Lawyers will no longer be able to get together to create artificial costs for their services. After the passage of this measure, lawyers will not be able to follow this practice, just as glass companies and other companies will not be able to fix prices as many of them have in the past. The fact is that they will be subject to this Canadian law and can be brought into court if they do not live up to it.

It is my opinion that the fines being levied against companies which have been found guilty of collusion in fixing prices contrary to the Combines Investigation Act have been far too low. I hope the fines in respect of such practices in respect of personal services will be substantial because services represent an important part of our economy. I am sure services will be considered within the terms of this measure when it becomes law.

I have no intention of continuing much longer as I think that everything that might be said in respect of this bill has been said not only in this House but outside through the media. I think the bill should be thoroughly examined. Without in any way trying to cut off the debate—I have not the power to do so if I wanted to—I would urge hon. members to send the bill to the committee after a reasonable period of time, say a couple of days, where it can be examined thoroughly.

Before I sit down I should state that I hope members of the official opposition will hold a caucus not only in respect of this bill but all others that come before the House in order that they can decide where they stand, rather than waste the time of parliament and the Canadian people bickering among themselves through not knowing on which side they really stand.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to a great part of this debate and have read the rest of it, and frankly I am beginning to wonder what the fuss is all about. Among the major protagonists we find the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), whom I regard as the typical Canadian response to Ralph Nader, urging us to pass this omnibus bill to the committee with all possible dispatch. He regards the bill, obviously, as a substantial part of the government's plan to protect our inflation—ravaged consumers.

On the Conservative side, starring roles have been assigned to those staunch defenders of collective bargaining rights, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) and, of course, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), who essentially say, "Let's go easy," "Why so fast?" or, "Don't hustle this bill into committee in unusual or unseemly haste".

I have heard them and others in that party insist that it is only fair and democratic to give Canada's consumers a chance to prepare briefs for committee presentation. Pity those poor consumers; they need time to prepare arguments, their voices are muted and they are underfinanced. Few, if any, references have been made by the Conservative Party, the hon. member for St. Paul's, the hon. member for Trinity and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), about the well-heeled Chamber of Commerce or the CMA's louder voices who will also want to jam the committee with representations to repeat their arguments for the third monotonous time.

As for my position, I honestly do not care much one way or the other. I think Bill C-7 is largely cosmetic or tokenistic. I do not believe that its passage will make very much difference in ensuring improved competition in Canada. And even if it does, I fail to be convinced that the resulting benefits of improved competition—if there are any—will be passed on to the Canadian public. Very impressive, I thought, was the admission of the hon. member for Trinity that in an oligopolistic industrial and commercial society, which is our present one, price leadership and other under-the-table deals were never made in written form. Usually, the hon. member reported, in such instances where price-fixing and combine arrangements were agreed to, they were made among the boys on the golf course, at lunch in the club or in some back room and sometimes hardly a word was spoken. I found that admission particularly revealing and I thought he displayed unusual frankness.

The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) told us a moment ago that this legislation will do a great deal to protect us from being gouged by lawyers, doctors and glass companies. Under a situation where there is no cartel per se—that is, a formal one—and when only the informal one exists I do not see how this bill can protect us from unwritten professional tariffs.

Another impressive revelation on the subject of competition was made a couple of weeks ago by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) who in an equally rare moment of candour admitted that in terms of a Canadian transportation policy, at least, the policy of competition between carriers had been both ineffectual and costly. The whole policy appeared to him to be a blunder and we urgently need a new policy. Naturally, when two distinguished members of parliament representing the major political parties, such as on the one hand the hon. member for Trinity who tells us that in industry dominated by a few major firms competition does not occur, and the Minister of Transport who says that in transportation competition has not worked, how does a person's faith in competition remain firm?

I am at once impressed and distressed because both the major parties have been selling the Canadian public on the joys and benefits of competition for as long as I can remember. If competition does not work or does not happen, and when it does happen it does not work, what are we left to believe in? It is shattering, I think. It is like discovering for the first time that there is no Santa Claus.

This bill does little, if anything, to enhance fairness in the marketplace. This came through as the theme of the hon. member for St. Paul's: the bill's passage is not to the benefit or to the detriment of either business or the consumers. And at least that much was implied by the hon. member for Trinity who also said that he will vote for the bill eventually. If Bill C-7 is a "nothing" bill, what is the point of hanging around here for ever and ever debating second reading? I agree with the members of my party, the hon. member for Bruce and the minister who urged us to hurry passage of the bill to the committee for detailed examination. If we just want to hang it up, then that is political strategy in itself. All parties are guilty of that from time to time—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: —except, of course, the Conservative Party! I therefore opt for an early delivery of the bill to the committee so that this House can get down to more crucial matters.

Now, to heed my own advice, I should like to get down to discussion of some aspects of the bill. There are numerous details because this is an omnibus bill which covers a variety of subjects. However, I will limit myself. I should like to discuss only some of the aspects of the bill which I believe require elaboration and explanation. My first reference will be to section 7 on page 5, which requires six persons over the age of 18 to bring forth an application to the director before an inquiry can be launched on an alleged contravention of the Combines Investigation Act. Under paragraph (2) of that section, the rights of those six persons are further limited by requiring them to provide evidence and name names to support their request to the director.

I think the thrust of this section is all wrong. I think it is wrong to leave it up to citizens to prod a possibly reluctant director into action. I think its further limitation is in the evidence-gathering provision, because all of us know that the evidence-gathering abilities and powers of citizen groups or even, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe pointed out, small business groups is quite limited and, in addition, evidence-gathering can be costly. At the moment the director is free to respond or not and to remain in his customary comatose posture.

What we need in this country, and what we want is a self-starting, vigorous ongoing monitoring by the commission of all aspects of Canadian business and commerce. We need a commission that is busily engaged in launching its own investigations, not waiting for citizen groups to bring infractions to his attention. The commission should be investigating in an ongoing way possible price-fixing, gouging and all the rest of the unfair and criminal business practices wherever they might exist. For instance, citizens may suspect that they are being gouged by a concrete company, a steel company, a sugar company or any other company, and therefore their right to request an investigation should continue to be acknowledged. I have no objection to the provision, but I think that in addition self-initiated investigation should be the constant preoccupation of the director.

Clause 9, dealing with private inquiries, also causes me some concern. Why "private"? Certainly parts of the investigation might benefit from privacy up to a point, but any representation and evidence set before a tribunal should have the full force of publicity as a deterrent to further transgressions. When criminal trials are conducted in this country, except in cases involving minors the cause of justice is better served by public ventilation. We only encourage the law to be broken by in-camera proceedings which protect the reputations of those people who may or may not be wrong. We do not apply the same kind of rules to criminal cases whether the person is subsequently proved guilty or not.

At this point I should like to make a comment or two on restraint of trade which could result in undue restrictions in the Patent Act and the Copyright Act or in general restrictions on profits of intellectual properties. I suppose this sort of thing could be compared to the often repeated story about the carburettor in a Cadillac which would give you 60 miles to a gallon being repressed. While there may be some examples of a limited manufacture, transportation of dissemination of intellectual properties causing either business or consumer economic hardship, the representations which I as a member of parliament most frequently encounter are directed in quite the opposite direction.

When we were considering Bill S-9 in the previous parliament we heard many representations from actors, authors, dramatists, writers and musicians to the effect that inadequate legislation existed in Canada to protect the legitimate interests of the creators of intellectual properties. Suggestions to improve this ranged from readership logs for libraries to more adequate rewards for Canadian writers. We heard about performance fees to compensate Canadian actors and musicians. The then minister, now the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), assured our committee that the whole copyright legislation was being reviewed. Considering the elapse of some two or three years, I can only assume that this review must be exceedingly exhaustive and detailed, because the House has heard no more about that issue. You yourself, sir, now acting as Mr. Deputy Speaker, were involved in those committee deliberations and I am sure you can corroborate what I have to say.

Nothing has happened in the interim despite the fact that one of the major people making representations before the committee at that time was the Minister of Science (Mrs. Sauvé) who was then a private citizen. To date we have heard no more about adequate rewards for Canadian artists' creative and intellectual properties. But while we are on the subject of the recording industry and recording rights societies, may I say it appears to me that the copyright appeal board might well consider a substantial review of the present regulations relating to the payment of fees by radio stations, clubs, Canadian Legion branches and even fairs and exhibitions from which fees are levied by the large performing rights societies such as BMI, an American outfit, and CAPAC, the Canadian equivalent of ASCAP.

I think we can all agree that some of the jukebox radio stations get their most important product, music, dirt cheap through these performing rights societies. But other radio stations which specialize in such things as talk shows and which employ music sparingly pay through the nose for this product because they are asked to pay a 2½ percentage of gross fee to U.S. and Canadian performing rights societies. And what about the injustice accorded by our legislation to a non-profit fair or small club which cannot afford a list so that its manager can select between BMI and CAPAC properties? In the United States a fair is considered a non-profit organization and as such is not subjected to these fees.

It is time we had a look at this matter and it is time that through our laws we provided a list of the properties belonging to these performing rights societies so that the manager of a fair, of a club, of a Canadian Legion branch, or even of a radio station can play music for his customers from one or other of these lists. Of course he will have to remit his fees to one or other of the societies, but hopefully the manager would select a Canadian performing rights society such as CAPAC.

I would now like to draw attention to part IV of the bill which deals with those matters "reviewable by the commission." This concerns itself with the preclusion of a person to meet competition because of inability to obtain adequate supplies anywhere in the market on his usual trade terms. I would like to recount the recent experience of a manufacturer in my riding. The case is not at all unusual, and I think it is representative all over western Canada because of western Canada's lack of a steel mill and/or equitable freight rates. Incidentally, I am glad that the Minister of Transport is still in the House.

The story is that my constituent, a steel fabricator, bid on a $250,000 contract for a national company, in this case Air Canada. The contract was for the manufacture of animal cages. When preparing for his bid he was saddened to learn that the raw product, in this case steel wire material, cost $20 a hundredweight imported into Vancouver from Japan. Upon inquiry he discovered that the same grade of wire was produced in Quebec by Sidbec corporation, a government-owned corporation and the grateful recipient of generous federal government grants. Sidbec was selling this steel wire for $10 a hundredweight, or approximately half the cost of the stock imported from Japan. But when my constituent attempted to purchase this wire from Sidbec he was advised that since he had not purchased raw material from that corporation in the past year, and because Sidbec had export commitments—which was later denied—he was not eligible to become a customer. In other words, Mr. Speaker, that is what part IV precisely attempts to remedy.

He later discovered that he could buy the wire from a Winnipeg firm, wire allegedly produced in Canada but imported from the United States, at a cost of $14 a hundredweight. What this story points out is that it is virtually impossible for the west to compete in manufacturing with central Canada as long as in the west raw materials are far more expensive and no law enforces the concept of price equity. If this bill helps here, then it is worth while.

Under the loophole clause in 31.2(c) of the same part, "ample supply" as stipulated there would perhaps, I am afraid, enable a supplier to get out from under his obligations because what constitutes ample supply is a very debatable matter. I suppose that any supplier could plead short supply. I find that throughout this bill there are some other very equivocal words and statements which, although they may not be deliberately vague, should be tightened up in committee. As I say, any supplier could plead short supply, somewhat in the same manner as the U.S. oil companies which deliberately refrained from going ahead and building refineries during the past five years. As a result, they can deliberately and accurately plead short supply simply because they have not built the refineries, and premeditated refinery shortage is used as an excuse to raise prices.

With special reference to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), we welcome the reference in proposed new section 32.3 to professional and amateur sport. For far too long sport has been regarded as of no particular concern of government. Of course, other countries have not felt the same way and as a consequence were much quicker to see the cultural, physical and propaganda benefits of sport. Our country has only belatedly begun to interest itself in sports promotion and regulation. It is fair to say that over the past five years we have spent only about half of the annual $6 million budget for fitness and amateur sport. So lethargic has been Canada's approach to sport and fitness that some $15 million allocated over this period was never used for the benefit of our citizens.

In spite of this underspending, Mr. Speaker, I notice that this year the budget is increased to $17 million from $12 million in 1973. I take it that the extra budgeting is somehow related to pre-Olympic preparations. I do not know whether it is for the fitness of our citizens or for hot-housing some athletes—the minister shakes his head—but it is interesting that, not having spent the money budgeted over the past five years under a different minister, now the budget all of a sudden is increased to $17 million. As I say, I find it interesting.

But far outstripping the growth and support for amateur athletics, the past five years have witnessed an outstanding growth in professional sport both here and in the U.S.A. Professional sport is no longer the preoccupation of a few sports-minded hobbyists. Coupled with our affluence, both gate and TV revenues from sport are extremely attractive to the diamond-studded aristocrats who can afford to buy sports franchises in major centres of the continent. There must be a number of these men in North America because the expansion of leagues and frianchises, certainly in football and hockey, is enormous.

But, I insist, we are no longer dealing with simple game playing but a developing sports industry of major proportions. This major industry, I submit, should be subject to legislation and control, as is any other business. It is a business, and that is why I cannot accept the argument of those people who say it is not the government's business whether the World Football League is allowed a Toronto franchise or whether the proposed $178 million Olympic stadium in Montreal, paid for by the people of Canada, will or will not be the future home of an NFL franchise. A Montreal NFL franchise would be attractive, of course, not to benefit the people of Montreal but for the economic benefit of whichever mogul or covey of private entrepreneurs is successful in securing such franchise.

In supporting the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his attempts to arrive at some solution to American Athletic imperialism, many members of my party are extremely concerned about the future of the Canadian Football League and especially about the community-owned teams in western Canada. We are concerned about the current World Football League player raiding of the CFL, and that is why we back the minister in his stand against the WFL Toronto franchise application.

Incidentally, if some members of the official opposition can justify keeping out American beef to protect the Canadian cattle industry, why can't they extend the same logic to keep the WFL out of Canada? To get back to the sports provisions under section 32.3, while we welcome them I would remind the House that they seem to be a bit equivocal and raise more questions than they adequately answer. The appearance of the word "unreasonably" as in 32.3(1)(a) "to limit unreasonably the opportunities for any other person to participate as a player," etc., or in section (b) "to limit unreasonably the opportunity for any other person to negotiate", or in 32.3(2)(b) "a reasonable balance among teams", seems very subjective to me and naturally subject to a number of interpretations depending upon who is making the determination. As a result, we are not at all sure what the whole section means to professional and amateur sports because in spite of the fact that much explanatory space is given to the other sections of the bill, the pages opposite pages 27 and 28, the sports sections, are blank. There is no explanation at all for the rationale behind the clauses given for members of parliament or the interested sports groups who are following the legislation with much interest.

I suggested that the section raises a great many questions and I will list three. First, will the section disturb the cozy reserve and option clauses which are rampant in pro sports and which have been the subject of much heated controversy both in Canada and the U.S.A. over the years? When I speak of the reserve or option clauses, I am speaking of the extra year after a contract runs out which binds the player to a kind of peonage for one year after he has fulfilled his obligations. I do not know of any other business or vocation where this sort of thing is allowed. It is a practice which was criticized vehemently by the government's task force on sports in their report issued a few years ago.

Second, will this section ensure that cities wishing franchises—like Vancouver which wanted an NHL franchise some years ago—will be guaranteed a reasonable opportunity to receive them? Or will the practice continue that the league governors will be permitted to dally for years as they did in Vancouver's case. Parenthetically, I suspect this section appears at the behest of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs because of the Vancouver situation when the delay in granting the franchise caused the price tag to go from $2 million to $6 million, when it was finally granted to a group of American entrepreneurs. I find a good deal to agree with in the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe about American-owned interests and what the hon. member for Bruce said about the extraterritoriality of foreign loans relating to our own exports.

Third, will the section guarantee that a minor hockey player or team will be allowed to play other hockey teams in organized leagues even if that team is not part of the league? What happens is that certain minor leagues gang up and will not let their teams play against rebel teams even though the boys are in the same age group. It is these questions and many others that are left unanswered in this section on sports. The section indicates merely what certain players and leagues may not do, but nowhere does it spell out in any detail what they may do. For this reason I am certain that at least a dozen sports groups will be anxious to appear before the committee, if we ever get to committee stage.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like the House to know that others besides the hon. member for Trinity are concerned about oligopolies which, as we know, are informal cartels operating in Canada. Oligopolies can result in unfair prices for the Canadian consumer. We have heard from a number of people that there is virtually no way of controlling the excesses of oligopolies either through this bill or through any other legislation. An article in the business section of today's Globe and Mail tends to confirm the suspicion that large, informal cartels do exist, that they co-operate and indulge in price leadership schemes to the detriment of the consumer. It is interesting that firms in the best position to control prices because of limited competition in their respective fields have also shown the best performance in terms of profits for the past year.

What is the answer to this gouging? Certainly not this bill, as there is little in it that deals with today's corporate business realities. This bill will not do it, but I am certain that a flat excess profits tax would be a partial answer and I call on the government to introduce such a measure with all possible haste. What would be wrong with using the returns from an excess profits tax to subsidize food for consumers? Naturally, I do not mean only domestically produced food, but the excess profits tax or the returns from it could be used to subsidize also the food that we import from developing countries. All of us are familiar with those foods—sugar, bananas, oranges and other things not grown in Canada.

Internal cartels are illegal, but external ones are not. In the developing countries, which have a monopoly on certain commodities upon which the world is dependent, we see a flexing of combined muscle, a getting together in an external cartel to ensure themselves a better slice of the world's economic pie. I do not believe we can blame poor countries for that. There is nothing wrong with giving developing countries a fair price for their products, provided that price in Canada is not increased and inflated by excess profits of our own domestic cartels or informal cartels.

To lower prices we should provide ourselves in this parliament with power, as suggested by my party earlier, to roll back unwarranted price increases; otherwise Bill C-7 will be largely ineffectual as an inflation fighter. It will not help much. I think we should refer the bill to committee as quickly as possible, as I am sure members of my party will agree. Let us close off this debate and deal with the bill's details in committee.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, let me straighten the record. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) more than once in this debate referred to comments made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). Let me say that the hon. member for St. John's East has not yet spoken in the debate. Any comments he made were made outside the House or to the press. It is appropriate to record that. Before commenting, the hon. member should wait and see what the hon. member for St. John's East has to say. He should not comment on remarks made outside the House.

I am pleased to participate in the debate on second reading of Bill C-7. The title of the bill is somewhat misleading as it suggests that this is a bill to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act, as well as other acts. On reading through the bill you will see that the proposed legislation leaves Canadian banks pretty much alone. When the bill goes to committee I think we should take a really close look at why the Canadian banking system is not to be regulated along with other businesses under the amended Combines Investigation Act.

Before coming to parliament I spent many years in various types of businesses, in manufacturing, in distribution and, in one period, in construction. I have worked with and for relatively large companies, multinational companies and several small companies. What I know about business I learned by doing it. I have had the experience of a large corporation "lifting" a product line from a company I was associated with, merely because the large corporation had decided to follow the policy of vertical integration. Let me say that I would not wish to repeat that experience.

After you have built up a large sales, installation and service organization and find that by a simple boardroom decision 75 per cent of your business is suddenly taken away, you are left feeling very, very empty. When that happened I reached for a book on business law and began to read the Combines Investigation Act. Actually, I consulted some learned friends in the legal profession, only to be told that they had rarely consulted the act since leaving law school. I found, after inquiring, that if I wanted advice on the Combines Investigation Act I would have to go to Toronto. Although my office was some distance from Toronto, I found that if I wanted advice I would really have to go there because that was where the action was.

The changes in the act are timely, but I cannot stress too strongly that we should proceed with extreme caution for there is much more to this bill than meets the eye. I have spent a good deal of my business life making businesses work, making them operate better, making them operate more profitably and efficiently. I have turned businesses that were in serious trouble and making losses around until they broke even and then made profits. There are no academic courses on this. There are few guidebooks to follow. It is a job you accomplish with the application of common sense and looking reality in the face during this process. That is the procedure we should follow here. We should look reality in the face when we discuss this bill in the House and particularly in committee.

I have mentioned the foregoing because my approach to this debate and these amendments is not that of the legal expert or of the idealistic academic whose concept of business never seems to go beyond a flow chart. My approach is that of a practical, practising businessman for I am still involved in the operation of a business. I mentioned just now that I will want to hear argument in committee to show why we should not include the banks under this legislation. I think this is a very serious matter for if there is one group that should be examined closely by the committee, it is the group of banks making up the Canadian banking system. The banking business is probably without exception the most pampered, catered to and protected business in this country. Leaving the supervision of competition in the banking business to the Inspector General of Banks is just pure sham as far as I am concerned.

Let us see, for example, how the various banks handle loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act. I ask any member to go to the local branch of a chartered bank and ask about a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act or any similar type of legislation. The manager will see you and tell you first of all that you do not qualify because he does not really want to lend you money under such legislation. Why should he lend you money at 8¼ per cent, the rate presently set under such legislation, when the going rate for bank loans is 10 per cent or 11 per cent? Even the Industrial Development Bank, which charges rates well beyond those charged by the chartered banks, never advises the use of the Small Businesses Loans Act. The IDB has a form which it asks you to sign. It says that you have been unable to get financing from private, commercial sources and you are therefore applying to that bank. In other words they are saying, "We are not supposed to be in competition with the chartered banks."

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that many chartered banks refer clients to the Industrial Development Bank or to similar provincial agencies. It is well known to anyone who has ever floated a loan with IDB that your bank manager and the IDB people put their heads together very closely. You will find various tactics used by the chartered banks to discourage small businessmen from availing themselves of the facilities of the Small Businesses Loans Act. I am bringing this fact into the discussion on this bill which is to amend the Combines Investigation Act because to my mind and the minds of many small businessmen there is a conspiracy afoot.

As I said, you will find various tactics used by the chartered banks. A favourite tactic is referring you to a small branch bank which is remote from the downtown business centre. If your business is in a downtown area of a large urban centre, the bank will say, "Yes, we can handle the loan, but you will have to go to our branch bank." It may be four or five miles away. In other words, they will make it as inconvenient as possible for you to use the facilities of the act.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has been less than helpful in this matter. I have asked him in the House and in committee about the inability of many small businessmen to get loans under the act, and about the practices of the chartered banks in connection with the Small Businesses Loans Act. Let me read into the record, if I may, the reply given to me in committee by the deputy minister. I had been reassured that the minister was again going to look into this matter of banks not giving small businessmen a good break with regard to the Small Businesses Loans Act. He told me he was going to have a chat when he had lunch with the chairman of the Canadian Bankers Association and would see what they could do. That did not reassure me at all.

At the committee meeting I asked the deputy minister the current rate for loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act. He could not tell me offhand. I do not say that as a criticism; I realize he has many more things to think about in these times. I eventually got a reply. This is the reply that came through to my office. I wonder whether hon. members can decipher it better than I can. I quote from the Canada Gazette, part II, volume 102, November 27, 1968, page 523. Under item 2 it reads:

> The base rate for each interest period shall be equal to the simple arithmetic mean of the Wednesday closing mid-market yields for all Wednesdays in the averaging period immediately preceding the interest period as computed from the yields as published by the Bank of Canada on all Government of Canada bonds payable in Canadian currency and due to mature in one to ten years, rounded to the nearest one-quarter of one per cent or, if the result would be equidistant from two multiples of one-quarter of one per cent, to that multiple thereof that is the lower.

I asked someone the interest rate. He said he would write me. That is what I got in the mail. Hon. members must admit that is hardly very helpful. I leaned a bit heavily on the Department of Finance. We had a few words over the telephone. I eventually received something that said in fact the rate was 8¼ per cent and that it was adjusted on March 31 and October 1 each year, based on the average yield of government bonds. This is what all that means. I took that quotation to a banker and asked if he could tell me the rate from looking at government bonds. He replied that he could not. I took it to an economist; he was unable to decipher it.

Before I leave the bank provisions of Bill C-7, let me press this point a little further. I think that statistics with regard to the Small Businesses Loans Act bear out what I am saying. The average loan in 1972 was $9,000, below the limit of $25,000. I might point out that a new bill was given first reading in this House which, among other things, will raise the limit to $50,000. I certainly welcome that. I hope that after we have a chance to look at that bill we will be able to facilitate many more small businessmen with these loans.

For the calendar year 1972 there was a total of 2,846 loans made to small businessmen in Canada. I can guarantee that in any large urban centre in Canada any one bank could make 2,846 loans. It is interesting to see the distribution of these loans. It is as follows: British Columbia, 456; Alberta, 275; Saskatchewan, 174; Manitoba, 133; Ontario, 596; Quebec, 1,096; New Brunswick, 45; Nova Scotia, 37; Prince Edward Island, 31; Newfoundland, 5. There was one in the Yukon and two in the Northwest Territories. That makes a total of 2,846 loans for the whole year throughout all of Canada.

I have a question which I hope the minister will answer when we get into committee. Will the provisions under section 31.2 of this act, refusal to deal, apply to a bank? If all we can do is underwrite 2,846 loans to small businesses in one year, when there are hundreds of thousands of small businesses operating in Canada today, there is evidence of a conspiracy on the part of the banks, and perhaps even the Department of Finance, to restrict these loans. There have certainly been enough questions put to the minister on this subject, but we have never had a clearcut answer.

I will now move on to other matters. Contrary to the views of some members opposite and their colleagues in the NDP, I do not feel we should rush this bill. The hon. member for Bruce implied that we were holding up the bill. This legislation in various forms was before this House in 1971 and 1972 as Bill C-256, last October as Bill C-227 and now as Bill C-7. It is only fair to remark that it is the government's responsibility to bring in legislation. It is not the responsibility of the opposition. The government has the responsibility to put legislation on the order paper, not the opposition. If Bill C-227 had been introduced earlier last year, it probably could have been sent to committee. It may have passed last year. The responsibility for introducing legislation in this House rests strictly on the government. When the hon. member for Bruce implied we were holding up the bill, he was not quite as straightforward as usual.

I am worried about this bill. Any piece of legislation that will affect the sale or distribution of products in this country deserves a really good look. Irreparable damage could be done to a system which although perhaps faulty in places has served the people of this country well. I am not saying there is no room for improvement; there is always room to improve anything. In my business experience I have met businessmen from all walks of life. The vast majority are honest, sincere, law-abiding people. They contribute greatly to the economic and cultural life of Canada. They are proud of their achievements in business and the part they play in the life of the community. You will find them at various times of the week at Rotary, Lions, Optimists or Kinsmen clubs performing a public service to their community.

An hon. Member: What about the Rideau Club?

Mr. Kempling: Yes, and possibly the Rideau Club. Any attempt to rush this bill through its various stages could do damage to the consumer as well as the supplier, manufacturer and business community. There is a supply problem in many product lines today. The thrust of this bill implies that the interests of the consumer will be best served if price competition is maximized and by this action the problems of the consumer will be lessened if more competition is created by applying the "refusal to deal" section of this bill.

The drafters of this bill are saying that by creating more competition the consumer will have lower prices. This is what they are implying. That is not necessarily true. They seem to be saying that by providing protection from pyramid sales, bait and switch, product guarantees and warranties, the consumer will be protected and will in effect get the most for the least. As many members know, many provinces have this legislation in effect today. I feel the people who drafted this bill have only an academic knowledge of the Canadian marketplace. Price is only part of a transaction. A sale is a two-way transaction. There is hardly anyone in a legitimate business who does not want return customers. The whole idea of a business is to develop a market, which means creating or supplying products or services which people will purchase over and over again.

I do not believe anyone ever designed or invented or created or caused to be manufactured a product or article by first looking at what the law said he could or could not do with that product or article. I do know that the universally accepted practice of purchasing low bid has caused products to be designed or manufactured to minimum specifications, and that the consumer has been the lower. Eventually machinery is designed to these standards and in the long run both consumers and taxpayers are the losers.

Millions are spent each year in researching and developing products and on trademarks and patents, product testing and market research, to put into the marketplace products which will be serviceable, useful and attractive enough to cause consumers to purchase them again as required. Yet the bill before us implies that trademarks, patents and brand names could become worthless if the refusal to deal provision is not clearly defined. The bill does not say refusal to deal is an offence, but that it is subject to review.

Another clause mentions injunctions against someone refusing to deal. I think clearly defined explanations of this clause, together with examples, must be forthcoming. At stake here is the distribution in Canada—a unique system. Because of the nature of our geography, market dimensions of roughly 2,500 miles in width and 200 miles in depth, market practices exist here which are not found in other countries. They have been developed to suit our particular geography.

Consider the machinery business, for example. In order that a manufacturer of machinery may offer proper technical and service representation in a remote market area, it may be necessary for him to arrange to grant exclusive distribution rights. It may be necessary for the manufacturer of a product to agree to select a dealer to sell his products exclusively because the market will only support one dealer. The dealer may quite rightly demand an exclusive arrangement with the manufacturer and distributor in order to justify the cost of product inventory, service parts inventory and technical staff for servicing.

Some segments of our distribution system may become a jungle if the right to deal provisions set forth in this bill are not closely examined and defined. This will certainly not be to the benefit of the consumer. It might well be that a complete segment of the sales and service industry which supports and sustains our manufacturers could be seriously jeopardized. Again, the consumer would not be well served by such a development.

Consignment selling has been mentioned and the practice has been questioned. Mr. Speaker, there is scarcely a manufacturer or distributor who has not at some time been offered goods on consignment or been asked for consignment inventory. The suggestion has been made that this is wrong, that the consignee may be caused by the consignor to act in a certain way. This is possible, but usually the consignor is acting as banker for the consignee as a result of the monetary and fiscal policy of the government which subsequently becomes the loan policy of the chartered banks. The effect of this policy is that the consignee cannot get access to the necessary financing.

We say without fear of contradiction that the banks in this country have not kept pace with the changes which have taken place in manufacturing and distribution in Canada. Examination of most manufacturing processes reveals that the marketing arm of the manufacturer requires that someone in the distribution stream forecast annual requirements so that production runs may be planned. It may well be that the fiscal and monetary policy of the government is designed to cool out the economy. The dealer downstream finds he cannot get financing for his industry from the banks, and consequently he asks the manufacturer for a consignment inventory.

The question which comes to mind at this point is: Where is the fault? Does it lie with the banking system or with the manufacturer? I do not deny there have been occasions on which dealers have been pressured by manufacturers to get rid of the items in the inventory at a certain price. Other sanctions may be imposed in these circumstances. But in my opinion this is a rather rare practice today. I agree, though, that this is a matter which one should take into account, not superficially—let us not rush it through—but we should take the time to hear competent witnesses who can discuss all these matters in committee.

Most dealers establish a line of credit at their banks. The collateral they offer consists of accounts receivable and negotiable securities, in most cases, plus personal guarantee. In other jurisdictions the inventory which will be acquired may be offered as security under certain circumstances, but in Canada the Bank Act does not allow this. The act does, however, under section 88, allow a manufacturer to offer raw material and unfinished inventory as collateral, but no such provision exists for the dealer downstream. In these circumstances it is possible for some questionable practices to be engaged in as between manufacturers and marketing dealers. The situation bears looking into, though, as I said earlier, we should also inquire into the banking facilities made available to the dealer.

There is also the question of provincial licensing as it affects some areas of machinery sales. In many provinces licensing bodies to protect the consumer and see that machinery is repaired and serviced by competent people have long been established. The automobile industry is a good example. Garages are required to be licensed and in a number of provinces automotive mechanics are required to possess licences before they can repair or service motor vehicles. We must examine carefully the provincial implications of certain of the provisions contained in the bill before us. I realize the minister has sent copies of the bill to all the provinces, and no doubt submissions will be made to him. But this is an area in which no confusion should be allowed to arise. In considering legislation of this kind where both federal and provincial jurisdiction is involved, we should move carefully and do our best to bring all requirements into harmony and make it smooth-working for the benefit of all.

Another point I should like to discuss is the right of the supplier to choose his customers as he sees fit. It is the only way to ensure a stable market in some products. The consumer may be better served if sellers compete with quality of service rather than price alone. It may well be that there are products with regard to which the manufacturers feel their customers' only concern is price, and that quality of service, service after sale, warranties and so forth are not necessary. But the decision should be determined by market forces and conditions, not by rules established by an act of parliament and interpreted loosely by a quasi-judicial group. The right of a manufacturer or distributor to select his customer is a long established business practice. I do not know of one jurisdiction in what we call the free world where this practice does not exist. I have travelled and done business in 31 different countries and I know whereof I speak.

One need only examine the distribution system to see the disruption that will be caused if the right to deal section of the bill is not given the closest scrutiny. For example, manufacturer A could establish distribution of a technical product that requires a high level of skill to market. He may invest money and considerable time in downstream distribution processes, assuring that the dealers he selects have adequate financing and technical know-how to sell, install and service his product. Manufacturer B who has a similar or competitive product, but does not have the desire or resources to market his product in this way, will now find that under the provisions of this bill he can market his product through the distribution system of manufacturer A. In my view, if the refusal to deal section of the bill is strictly enforced, manufacturer A would be discriminated against.

Everyone recognizes that there are price levels. We all recall the famous statement that what this country needs is a good ten-cent cigar. There are many people who are prepared to pay only a certain amount for a given product. We should be cautious not to enact any regulations that will circumvent patents, trademarks and brand name products. As I read this bill, it could be necessary for manufacturers, under the refusal to deal section, to sell a proprietary product that they have been manufacturing under a brand name to anyone who feels that he is being denied a share of the market and who meets the other terms and regulations regarding conditions of sale. This is bound to create problems with other statutes and regulations and I am sure would work to the disadvantage of the consumer in the long run.

The section of Bill C-7 dealing with services demands that there be a period of time allowed for adequate consultation with the provinces. Some provinces have legislation covering the fees of some service groups. Some provinces have legislation pending. I believe that we should approach the matter of services in the fullest spirit of co-operation with the provinces so that the final regulations will meld or dovetail with provincial legislation, to the advantage both of those in the service field and those who use the services offered.

It seems to me that since coming to this House much of the legislation presented has had an underlying direction away from the courts or parliament, that it tends to endeavour to place quasi-judicial power in the hands of boards or commissions. I do not disagree that much of the technology of today is beyond the competence of the courts, and I do not find fault with this particular process provided the right of appeal is given to those persons who are the object of the rulings of a group such as the Restricted Trade Practices Commission. But I do object to legislation that in fact removes the power to act from the courts and from parliament.

There has been concern expressed by business groups across the country over the powers that will be given to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission to regulate Canadian business. These business groups, indeed any group or individual, must be given an opportunity to express their views and to request the exact terms of reference and powers to be given to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. It is not enough to suggest, as some members of the NDP have suggested, that because Bill C-256 was discussed by the business community, enough representations have been made and that those representations should serve for Bill C-7. That is not consistent. I agree with my colleagues that adequate time must be given to allow for discussion of the bill and for representations to be made by the business community and the service industry as well as by professional sport.

Recently we had the example of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) telling the House that under the Transport Act he cannot remedy certain situations because he does not have the power to act. We do not want another situation like that, and this is why I suggest a more cautious approach here so we are sure to cover the matter thoroughly.

We find reference in the bill to amateur sports, and I should like to read into the record a letter recently received from a constituent of mine that is typical of a number of letters that I have received on this subject. I know other members are going to speak about professional sports, but this is a letter that I received on March 14 last:

> Dear Mr. Kempling: This is the first time that I have written my member of parliament about a subject which concerns me. Since this is a "first" in my 20 years of electing people to parliament, I trust that will indicate the degree of my concern.
> I am most disturbed over the attitude taken by Mr. Lalonde towards the Toronto Northmen. Firstly, let me state without qualification that I am a supporter of the Canadian Football League and have been since I first started regularly attending games in the late 1940s. I intend to continue this support even with a WFL team in Toronto.
> What bothers me is having my freedom of choice legislated away. Giving people, by government law, only one choice whether it be football games, newspapers, beer or toothpaste is to me a very dangerous course to embark upon. The right to compete and offer an alternative product is basic to our way of life.
> I am afraid I cannot accept this image of the CFL as being a great Canadian institution with 90 per cent of the coaches and general managers and 50 per cent of the players being American. The teams in the east are private enterprise situations and are in the "football business" with the hope of making a profit. Surely the Northmen are entitled to the same right.
> If the CFL is going to survive, as I think it will, it must be on the basis of the calibre of their product and not the fact that they are a government backed monopoly. It is the right of the public to choose where they spend their sports/entertainment dollar.
> Surely with unresolved problems like unemployment, inflation and welfare abuses, the government of Canada has more important issues to command their attention. The CFL is a great thing but not deserving of becoming a government protected monopoly if it is done at the expense of eliminating the personal right of choice of millions of southern Ontario citizens.

That is signed by my constituent, Mr. Jack G. Williams, and I think it expresses adequately my feelings on this matter.

I see my time is drawing to a close, so in the remaining 60 seconds I should like to say that another section of the bill that I am concerned about is the part dealing with the power of the commission to forbid foreign judgments or court orders directing Canadian subsidiaries away from export trade. I really do not think we are handling this in the right way. Quite frankly, I doubt whether the decision of a board or commission would have any effect on United States law. I do not believe this provision will be effective. I believe that this section of the bill has to be negotiated at the highest level in this country and in the United States before we can resolve the matter. With that remark, Mr. Speaker, I conclude.

● (1720)

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-7 which we are debating today on second reading has the following rather cumbersome title:

> An act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

It seems more and more to be referred to as the consumer protection bill. I want to deal this afternoon with two particular aspects. Amendments in this bill are aimed at bringing improved benefits to consumers, small businessmen and to Canadians in general. The principal features of the bill include additional measures to deal with undesirable trade and advertising practices and the creation of a new civil function of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission enabling it to issue orders to modify or prohibit certain trade practices put before it, and provisions that would bring services in general under the legislation.

A major concern of the construction industry is that the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission will apparently have wide discretion in determining what acts or practices are to be entertained as complaints and considered prohibitive. There are very long standing trade practices and procedures in the construction industry which could be considered suspect unless qualified, and therefore the commission must be regulated.

The clauses to amend the Combines Investigation Act could create several new offences, including bid rigging. The practice is defined as either an agreement to refrain from bidding in response to calls or the submission of bids or tenders arrived at by collusion, and the prohibition against the practice will extend to services as well as physical articles. The proposed revision to the act is expected to make it easier to prosecute in cases involving bid rigging because it relieves the Crown from having to prove that the practice lessens competition unduly, as is currently required. Generally, proof of undueness has rested upon showing that the participating firms had substantial market control. However, cases of bid rigging that come to the attention of the Director of Investigation and Research sometimes involve only local firms with a small share of the construction market. Because of the requirement of proving that rigging of construction bids would have an undue effect upon competition, successful prosecutions of these practices have been thwarted.

The bill's proposal to remove this hindrance to bid rigging prosecutions by making the practice per se an offence flows from a recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada in its interim report on competition policy. It recommended that section 32 of the Combines Investigation Act be revised and suggested that bid rigging is a practice that could surely be prohibited without any qualification whatsoever. The construction industry agrees that bid rigging per se must be prohibited, but the terminology referring to collusion, conspires, combines, etc., all used in the same sense, must be clarified. An honest agreement or arrangement between builders with the owner's knowledge could mistakenly be considered a breach. If the owner or customer initiates or is aware of agreements between contractors, this should not be prohibited.

The bill now makes so-called bid rigging an offence. The Canadian Construction Association has stressed that the application of this provision to the contracting sector of the industry would go beyond the required prohibition and could adversely affect competitive tendering procedures. The vast bulk of construction work is carried out on the basis of competitive tenders submitted by prime and subtrade contractors. This involves the allocation of expensive resources for each individual tender call inasmuch as there is no homogeneity in construction and design, location, topography, weather and supply conditions all affect the bid amount.

Tenders are based on plans and specifications which on many projects are extremely complex and may require special explanation to enable bidders to tender competitively and equitably. Pre-tender conferences are very often convened by the owner or his consultant designers to clarify many aspects of the project. In some instances, agreements between the owner or his agent on the one hand and the tenderers on the other are necessitated by the complexity of a particular tender call. Such agreements should in no way be considered as being either price fixing or bid rigging, but could be construed as coming within the intent of section 32.2.

In connection with bid rigging, I feel it might be just as well at this moment to give two very specific situations which under the present act could quite easily lead to the prosecution of the participants. I am going to use instances in the cities of Toronto and Montreal, and I do not want that be construed as the expression of an anti-west sentiment. When tenders were called in respect of the new Toronto city hall—I guess it could still be termed new—the construction industry considered that the conditions imposed by the city were grossly unfair and could lead to all kinds of abuses by the owner, the city of Toronto. After meeting together, the group of tenderers agreed among themselves, with the full knowledge of the construction industry, to include in their tenders a qualifying clause. It is interesting to note that when these tenders were opened it was found that one general contractor had decided not to include the qualifying clause. His was not the lowest bid; nevertheless, the city of Toronto awarded this contract to the contractor who did not qualify his tender. The contractor lost a small fortune in the construction of the Toronto city hall and the company is now bankrupt.

The other instance, in what I like to term as my file of the city of Montreal concerns, relates to Expo '67. At the beginning of this mammoth construction program representatives of the construction industry met and discussed the terms and conditions under which the contractors would be obliged to bid for work on the Expo site. The terms and conditions were considered unacceptable to the industry and could only lead to disastrous consequences, either financial or, what would be even worse, the failure to complete construction on time ready for the opening. As a result, all members of the Montreal Construction Association in unity agreed that there would be a qualifying clause in their tenders.

They all used the same wording which, I submit, under the legislation as it is before us today could very easily have led to prosecution. When the tenders were opened, there was no choice; there was unity in the industry. All tenders included a qualifying clause. The result was that the purchaser, the corporation of Expo '67, recognized that it was not going to be able to proceed in the fashion that it intended; it had to take a more reasonable approach to the construction industry. I think I can say without fear of contradiction that the result was a fantastic success in that the contractors were able to complete that huge undertaking on time, and most of them with a reasonable profit margin.

The bill before us also states that a company can be forced to deal on usual trade terms. The construction association suggests that there is really no such usual arrangement in the industry and that the question of reputation, financial status and payment practices all pertain.

Referring to allowances, discounts, etc., this brings us to the question of the buyer's over-all reputation, financial status, volume of business and the like. No businessman should be forced to do business with all would-be customers. Financial institutions are permitted to grant favourable interest rates on comparative risks. The construction industry should be afforded the same privileges and permitted to evaluate customers. Again, the Canadian Construction Association recommends that those agreements related to the clarification of tendering provisions made with the full knowledge and consent of the owner or his agent should be expressly exempted in the interests of efficient and economical tendering practices. They further request that the necessary practice of evaluating whether a customer is bona fide, together with the other risks of undertaking a project resulting in differing prices, not be the subject of discrimination charges.

I think there must be very few subcontractors in this country today who would not readily admit that the amount of profit they are likely to make on any one project can vary enormously depending on who the general contractor may be. It depends on such factors as the scheduling of the general contractor, his efficiency in keeping the site clean, the manner in which he provides access to the site, the ease and the timing in providing equipment for hauling materials to higher levels, and so on. All these factors have a tremendous influence on whether a subcontractor will make a profit or a loss.

Unfortunately, in the public image the contracting business is big profit business. This comes about from the fact that it is a very high-risk business. It is acknowledged that in some instances a general contractor and his subcontractors can make what might be considered, on a percentage basis, high profits. However, because of the fact that it is a high-risk business, these high profits have to be balanced against losses or often jobs on which the margin is negligible. I might refer hon. members to an interesting study that was done in my company several years ago. We found that by taking all the projects that we had undertaken over a period of several years and looking at the profit margins, if we had had the foresight—or call it ability if you like, but there is a certain amount of luck in the construction industry also—to have picked only the profitable jobs, we would have done about one-third of the total volume of work and we and our partners in the company would have been millionaires. I can assure you that that situation does not exist; I am not in that fortunate category today. All I want to emphasize is that in the construction industry we have to permit more discretion than is applicable in other lines of business.

The minister, in speaking of the situation where some contractors are not considered to be good business risks and would therefore not receive bids from subcontractors at the same level as contractors enjoying their full confidence, admitted that this might well constitute a breach of section 34(1) of the act. In other words, a subcontractor might be forced into a position of loss. I think this is contrary to the intention of the act.

I want to speak now about the complaints of small businessmen in connection with this bill. Small businessmen are clamouring to protect themselves from the growth of large corporations. They are particularly concerned about two practices—predatory pricing and loss leader selling. Let us look at section 31(4) of the bill, which is new. It deals with tied sales, exclusive dealing and market restriction imposed by a supplier of products. The government's view is that while these practices are often acceptable business methods, they may in other instances have an adverse effect upon competition, especially when engaged in by a major supplier or when they are widespread in a given market.

The common objection is that they prevent the free operation of market forces and consumers' choice. Accordingly, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission would be empowered under the amendments to review such situations and to make remedial orders as required. The term "market restriction" has been adopted for the practice in which a supplier requires his customer to sell only in a prescribed market area or to pay a penalty for selling outside it. One European car manufacturer adopted it and allotted precisely defined territories to his dealers. This discouraged dealers from seeking business outside their allotted area and had the effect of depriving customers of effective price competition for that particular product.

Under his system, dealers who sold outside their franchise area had to pay part of their profit margin to the dealer in whose territories the customers resided. I must say that in this particular proposed amendment I am most pleased to see that provision is made to terminate this market restriction, because at the present time—again referring to the construction industry—we are aware that by agreement, or perhaps by chance, suppliers will find it more economical to supply in areas near their warehouses and supply depots, so that the materials in short supply in the construction industry at the present time are being restricted by region, thus making it impossible for contractors to obtain competitive pricing when in effect there is only one supplier open to them.

The term "tied sales" describes the situation where a supplier requires his customer to purchase a second product as a condition of being supplied with the product he really wants. One example of this is where a film distributor requires exhibitors to rent additional films in order to obtain the film of their choice. Another example is where makers of machinery have made it a condition of sale or rent that supplies used in connection with the machinery be obtained only from them. Tied sales also extend to a requirement that the product not be used in combination with some other product. This covers a situation where more favourable terms of sale are offered in order to induce the customer to engage in the tying arrangement.

Again referring to the construction industry, there is a practice common at the present time where, for example, if one wants to buy insulation material the supplier may state that the customer must stay with a particular brand and purchase other materials which he is already purchasing elsewhere. So at the present time we find ourselves in the ridiculous situation where a contractor, placing an order for materials that are quite plentiful, suddenly finds a tied sale condition imposed upon him, and in certain instances he has had to return materials already delivered to his construction site to the original supplier and receive alternative materials from the supplier of materials which are not in plentiful supply.

Exclusive dealing and tied selling are dealt with in section 31.4(1) of the proposed amendments which include certain criteria for the guidance of the commissioners. The commission would not prohibit the practice where it is found that an exclusive dealing or market restriction arrangement is temporary and for the purpose of facilitating the entry of a new product onto the market or where there is some technological justification for it. Exclusive dealing takes place when a supplier requires his customer to buy certain products only from him, or from someone he nominates, or when he induces his customer to do so by giving him more favourable terms. Farm implement companies, for example, have required their retail dealers to stop selling the products of competing manufacturers, some of whom specialize in a few products not constituting a full line. The tendency of this is to deprive the market of products which are in demand and which would produce needed price competition in the market. Major oil companies have also engaged in exclusive dealing. This practice can damage competition if it unfairly prevents other suppliers from having access to outlets.

It has been brought to my attention, and I think it is worth mentioning here, that there is one practice which has not been dealt with in this proposed section and, if I may, I will read the complaint of the National Association of Tobacco and Confectionery Distributors as follows:

The distribution industry for tobacco products, preserves and miscellaneous goods greatly contributes to the welfare of the consumer by its efficient distribution system at economical prices through small retailers and other retail centres.

This system and its benefits for the consumer are being threatened by the tactics of the large distribution chain predators. No present or proposed legislation offers any protection against these tactics, of which the most serious is the use of loss leaders.

Not only must we protect the competitive structure against the acts of predators, but also promote the system by allowing the additional functions and services that it provides to be recognized.

We suggest two basic changes to the Combines Act: one to prevent the use of loss leaders, not only when this is an established policy, but also in the case of repeated offers, and the other to enable the suppliers to offer functional discounts for additional services.

[English]

I felt it best, in dealing with this bill this afternoon, to concentrate on one or two particular points. I am also aware that the minister has received many representations. I am personally somewhat disappointed that Bill C-7 is a reprint of Bill C-227 which was presented to the House in the last session, but I am assured that reasonable changes will be discussed and amendments proposed in committee. It is my belief that with the co-operation of all parties we should be able to produce a good bill, and therefore I recommend passage of the bill on second reading.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I think some answer should be given to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who spoke earlier today. He suggested there should not be any debate and said the bill should go to committee as soon as possible. There is a purpose for debate in the House of Commons; it is to make the country aware of just what is intended in a bill and how a bill will affect people's lives and livelihood.

This bill touches on many things. It is a bit of an omnibus bill in a sense, covering a number of things. It has what is called a consumers' section, it includes some changes to the Bank Act and proposes changes in competition among corporations. It also reaches into the amateur and professional sports field. It will affect a wide number of people throughout Canada in various occupations and walks of life. All bills discussed in parliament go to committees where they are studied. Interested parties can appear before committees, ask for changes and demand clarification of certain provisions in order to determine how they will be affected by a particular bill.

Many governments believe that pieces of legislation will affect the community or the country in such and such a manner and then, as soon as the legislation is passed, to their surprise and amazement it has the opposite, or the wrong effect. We see a glaring example of that today. In his concern for the livestock industry, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) convinced the cabinet that they should offer a subsidy of 7 cents per pound for beef sold in Canada. I am sure that his intentions were the very best and he really wanted to help the livestock industry. But his action has caused chaos and hardly any cattle have been sold in auction marts across Canada for the past three days. This was done by order in council, a short-term method by which governments can impose their will upon the people. Legislation is harder to bring in and harder to change.

I do not think members of parliament should ever be apologetic about looking at legislation which the government wants to implement. We should take the time to understand it and to explain it to the country so that the people will know exactly how they will be affected by it. That is particularly true of a bill as encompassing as this one. People and groups should be alerted so that they can seek permission to come before the committee to present their views and have some of their fears set aside.

There is no question that the development of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in recent years has brought safety measures and improvements to products offered for sale on the Canadian market. But as legislators I think we should ask if it has paid for itself. Has the safety that it has brought to the Canadian consumer cost too much? The more security, the more safety measures we have, the more difficult it is to manufacture a product and to meet government requirements.

I am sure that if a survey was sent around the food processing industry asking for their biggest complaint with government today, the first would be that too many forms have to be filled out. That is not so difficult for a firm like General Motors. They hire a lot of secretaries anyway, so I suppose they just hire one more to work for the government. But for a small concern it is pretty difficult to fill out all these forms and it adds to the cost of the product. We must make certain that consumers are going to get a fair deal and also a safe product.

I think all of us feel that Canada is one of the most fortunate countries in the world. Very few of our people are illiterate. But the higher the standard of education, the more knowledgeable the buyer should be, the more capable the buyer should be and the more able to determine what he wants to buy. If a poor product comes on the market, an educated buyer should be able to reject it and, if it does not sell, the company either goes broke or changes the product. That is the principle to which I have always subscribed. But if you have a society where 97 per cent of the people do not have a higher education, then the government should move in and attempt to protect them from the sharp dealers, the pyramid sellers and all the rest. If you have the direct reverse, a highly educated society, I think you need less and less of this type of protection.

This bill deals with a lot of things. It has tried to outlaw pyramid selling, which I am not in favour of but I think it is a recognizable practice and people should be able to reject it. If the government wants to pass laws prohibiting it, however, I guess I would support that. We have price maintenance and a number of other things in this legislation, as well as a section dealing with amateur sports. There are many would-be athletes, many retired athletes in this House and many people sympathetic to the younger generation, who feel that we must do something to control this contracting of amateurs and younger people in our society. One could become very sympathetic toward the youth of society, but of course there is another side to the story.

There used to be only 16 teams in the NHL and many of us felt that there should be more. Many hockey players could have made the NHL if there had been more teams. Competition actually broke the close combine that operated in those 16 teams—competition and the demand for entertainment. On this continent we now have 28 professional hockey teams. I do not think the calibre of play is as good as it used to be, but certainly we must encourage a great many hockey players. Canada can be proud of its record in this sport. We are training a lot of hockey players to meet the demands of the 28 professional teams. For this training we have to build arenas, and many parents have to give freely of their time.

I see that it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I should like to expound a great deal further on this bill and I hope I will be in the House when it is next debated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE (CHARLEVOIX)—VETERANS LAND ACT—EXTENSION OF APPLICATION PERIOD

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege prompted by the successive and contradictory statements made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) in the last few weeks. On March 7, he said to the House that he had no intention of reviewing the possible extension of the deadline applicable to the Veterans Land Act and I quote his own words:

In the circumstances, adherence to the lending deadline specified in the act will not represent a denial of benefits to any veteran.

A few lines above that, he clearly stated, and I quote:

I am of the opinion, therefore, that veterans sincerely interested in obtaining VLA benefits for the purposes contemplated by the act have had ample time in which to do so. Virtually every veteran—

I skip a bit of his speech and come to the sentence that I read a while ago.

After the non-confidence motion moved by the official opposition, the minister said, as is reported on page 434 of Hansard for March 12, 1974:

For many months now, together with the officials of my department, I have studied very closely the possible implications of such an extension.

And a bit further on, he added:

—I wish to further emphasize that I am quite prepared to take another look at this whole question in light of the plea made today. If, after looking at all the evidence, I can conclude that the deadline should be extended, then I would be prepared to so recommend.

Yesterday, the minister repeated this same statement in committee. Today, following a letter which I wrote to the minister on February 13, 1974, once again about the Veterans Land Act, the minister gave me the same explanations that he had given in his first speech on March 7, when he refused to consider an extension for the application of this act. Moreover, the last paragraph of the letter dated March 20, 1974 that I have received from the minister reads as follows:

I thank you for having written to me since it has given me an opportunity to review with you the various provisions of this act, and particularly to explain to you why the date of March 31, 1974 will—

There is no supposition. He says "will". This is clear enough.

—will put an end to the applications made by veterans eligible for obtaining loans to buy a property.

Mr. Speaker, I protest against such a reply which is completely discriminatory and which contradicts the statements made yesterday and on March 19 by this same minister.

I should like to obtain today from the minister either a statement or a revision of the letter which I received today, stating exactly what he intends to do, in order that he stop playing politics on this issue.

● (1410)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Caouette) raised a question of privilege and submitted to the House that the minister had made statements the hon. member thinks are inconsistent. The Speaker has no other responsibility than determining whether there is a prima facie question of privilege which later on could be submitted to the House in the form of a motion. I cannot conclude that the circumstances described by the hon. member for Charlevoix warrant a debate under Standing Order 17. I call the hon. member's attention to citation 113 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, and I quote:

A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in Parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the House power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

The hon. member for Charlevoix may have a grievance against the minister, but I suggest that he could raise the matter during the proceedings, either in the House or in committee, or ask an oral or written question. I repeat that I do not think the rules or practice of the House allow to settle a matter by raising a question of privilege.

Hon. CUT FLOWERS

SEASONAL DUMPING DUTIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity relating to the signs of spring on this first day of spring, the vernal equinox, to ask the unanimous consent of the House for the following motion:

That the Minister of Agriculture, in consultation with his colleague, the Minister of Finance, undertake a review of the regulations relating to the imposition of seasonal dumping duties against cut flowers from Europe as well as from the United States, so that the flower growers in the garden riding of Esquimalt-Saanich shall be able to continue their commercial operations so as to provide those of us who have to spend part of our lives under the snow in the east with some of the early evidences of spring, such as the daffodils which came from that riding and are available in the lobbies for all hon. members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I shall see whether hon. members want to declare an interest in the motion proposed by the hon. member. I hesitate to put the motion in those terms. I am sure that the hon. member, for many reasons, is counting on the support of hon. members and of the Chair in putting the motion. I will put the motion but I hope that the hon. member, despite his generosity to other hon. members, will not be disappointed if some of his colleagues on one side of the House or the other say no. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROVISION OF PENSIONS TO INVALIDS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of pressing urgency. As several social welfare schemes have flaws leading to much unfairness and as, at least in the province of Quebec, some people who did not contribute enough to the Quebec Pension Plan cannot receive disability pensions and must beg, on bended knee, for the mere pittance granted them by the social welfare department, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Tétrault):

That this House study the advisability of extending to all disabled persons the right to a disability pension.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

DAIRYING—PAYMENT OF SUBSIDY TO PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent matter.

In view of the present precarious situation of industrial milk producers in Canada and the rise in production costs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) explain in detail to the House what procedure will be followed for the payment of subsidies to producers during the next season, in order that Parliament be given the opportunity to discuss and consider extensively the effects of this program on prices to consumers and producers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE PERMANENT VOTERS LIST

Mr. Judd Buchanan (London West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-265, to amend the Canada Elections Act (permanent voters list).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, we were all impressed by the brevity of the recent British election which was called, contested and decided within a 20-day period. This was accomplished because Great Britain has a permanent voters list. The purpose of this bill is to establish a similar list in Canada and shorten the election campaign for the Canadian people.

MANPOWER

PROVISION OF WORKERS FOR MAPLE SYRUP INDUSTRY

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the problems facing maple syrup producers in this season, because of labour shortage and the possibility of recruiting the necessary workers among unemployment insurance benefit recipients.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Compton has given the Chair the notice required under Standing Order 26. Having duly considered the hon. member's proposal for an adjournment of the House, I must regretfully advise him that it would be very difficult for me to set aside, as he suggests, the business scheduled for today for the purpose of considering instead the problem which is the subject of his proposed motion.

The House will recall that, last Tuesday, an adjournment motion under Standing Order 26 was moved, while a notice of a motion under Standing Order 58 had already appeared on the order paper. I concluded then that, when an opposition motion under Standing Order 58(3) has already been moved, only in the most extreme circumstances could such a motion be set aside to give priority to an adjournment motion under Standing Order 26. The same circumstances exist today, since a notice of motion in the name of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is already on the order paper. I regret therefore that the motion moved by the hon. member under Standing Order 26 cannot be put today.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INFORMATION

PROTECTION OF CONFIDENTIALITY OF GOVERNMENT COMPUTER-STORED INFORMATION CONCERNING INDIVIDUALS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. It arises out of the great concern about the confidentiality of the information the government collects from individuals. Has any directive been issued to ministers regarding the confidentiality of the information the government possesses concerning individual Canadians and stored in the government's own computers? Has the Prime Minister issued any particular directive to ministers with regard to preserving the confidentiality of this stored information?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I have not issued any particular directive though I have talked about the matter to ministers. The directives are contained in the statutes of parliament and as far as I know every minister observes them with utmost rigour.

Mr. Stanfield: As the Minister of Communications has made the statement that the government has wasted millions of dollars on computers and that he cannot guarantee the confidentiality of the information stored in them, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the views the minister is reported to have expressed represent the position of the government on this matter?

Mr. Trudeau: I have not seen the report of those views, Mr. Speaker, but as they are reported by the Leader of the Opposition I can say it is not the government position.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the Prime Minister has indicated that no special instructions have been issued with regard to a matter which is of very deep concern, and in view of the ease with which it seems to be possible to get this information out of government computers, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether he intends to take any measures to ensure the security of information stored in the government's own computer banks?

Mr. Trudeau: I know this matter is one of great concern to the Minister of Communications. The fact that the Leader of the Opposition tells us that the minister has been talking about the subject indicates that the minister is, indeed, concerned about it and that he is studying the matter. He has not yet brought to me or to cabinet any specific recommendations, but we are anxiously awaiting his report.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary must be directed to the Minister of Communications. In view of the fact he has been expressing concern since December of 1972 and in view of the fact that anybody with $1,800 can buy and operate a piece of equipment, manufactured not far from here, with which they can dial a government telephone number and get police intelligence files and income tax returns along with the deciphering instructions, and since these alarming facts have been known to the government for some time, I should like to know when the government intends to do something about the situation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first I want to say that I cannot admit the allegations of the hon. member who spoke previously because, in the opinion of all Canadian experts, who have dealt with this matter in an official report published under the title Privacy and Computers, there is no reason in Canada for alarm or panic as the hon. member seems ready for. As for the measures to be taken at present, this is quite a complex action. I can simply say that the government was certainly not negligent in this matter as it is generally recognized that Canada is more advanced in the formulation of a total security plan concerning computers than most other countries in the world, with one exception.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the fact that on December 7, 1972 a joint statement by the minister and the Minister of Justice of that day indicated very serious concern about security leaks and the whole field of computerized data retrieval leaks and that right then the government was working on several measures to plug these security gaps, what has happened to the task force report and the very specific recommendations that the minister himself said he would be adopting immediately in respect of those matters?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the answer is simple: The work went on. There are 21 groups now working under the direction of a secretariat of the Department of Communications under Dr. Von Naeyer. The activity continues. New measures are taken daily and this work is not a task that can be performed in a few months. Work has started, it is underway and will be finished soon.

As to the legal aspect, the hon. member could ask the Minister of Justice who will introduce a bill covering this matter among others.

[English]

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO PERMIT ACCESS BY INDIVIDUALS TO STORED DATA TO CHECK ACCURACY AND TO PROTECT CONFIDENTIALITY

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Communications. In view of the fact that many nations of the world whose government services store information in computer data centres have passed legislation to protect the rights of individuals in terms of this information, would the minister inform the House whether he is going to introduce legislation to allow individuals to see files kept on them in order to determine whether they are accurate, and to protect the confidentiality of that information so that corporations cannot use it in their own private business interests?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is the general intent of a bill that will be brought forward by the Minister of Justice. I suppose the hon. member will have to wait until the bill is tabled to know exactly in what fashion these objectives will be implemented.

ACTION TO PROTECT PRIVACY IN LIGHT OF SHOWING OF COMPUTER PRINT-OUTS BY OTTAWA TELEVISION STATION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Minister of Communications that we have nothing to be alarmed about, and in view of the fact that last night an Ottawa television station showed over public television copies of confidential computer print-outs on unemployment insurance claimants for the Atlantic region, thus illustrating the ease with which information can be taken out of computer data banks, would the Prime Minister take immediate steps to stop this invasion of privacy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I was not aware of this particular television program or of the invasion of privacy which is alleged. I will look into the matter but my reaction is inclined to be the same as the minister's, that I would not panic until I knew more about it.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon on a supplementary and then go to the second question. I appreciate that there may be further supplementaries later, and we can come back to this question. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon and then the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, in view of the television program last night I am afraid I am not lulled by the Prime Minister's assurance that there is nothing to panic about. According to reports by the same television station, pay cheques by the Department of Supply and Services normally issued by computer were delayed for one day by outside interference. In view of that fact, will the Prime Minister now issue a specific order to protect access to government computers when no such protection, obviously, currently exists?

● (1430)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that I am not aware of this practice and I will look into it. I still do not think I should panic about it. I remember the hon. member alleging a couple of years ago that there were listening devices on telephones and he was not able to substantiate that. I am glad I did not panic at that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. members opposite jeer, but those who were members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs know full well the inaccuracy of the Prime Minister's remarks. Members of that committee heard evidence by officials of the RCMP that well over 1,000 electronic surveillances were kept on private telephones in this country. I think that the allegation I made has been well substantiated by that evidence and by the passage of a bill outlawing eavesdropping by such electronic devices:

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS RESPECTING PIPELINES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether discussions are being held between Canadian and United States government officials in respect of the formulation of an agreement covering oil and gas pipelines? Can he tell the House the purpose of these discussions and whether they are to cover existing and future pipelines? What is the general nature of them and what is the objective the government has in mind in taking part?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the general objective is one which has been stated by myself and, I believe, by other ministers, that the possibility of having an agreement or treaty which would protect both countries if they were using privileges acquired on the territory of the other is an interesting one. Beyond the general exploration of the idea, I think I can say there is no specific discussion of measures to implement that at this time. Indeed, it seems to me that the idea would be linked to the acceptance of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline transporting U.S. resources and, as the hon. member knows, this is something which has not come up before the National Energy Board yet.

NATURAL GAS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INSTRUCT ENERGY BOARD TO REVISE EXPORT PERMITS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the consortium which today is applying for permission to build the Mackenzie Valley pipeline on the ground that Canada will have a natural gas deficiency by 1979 is made up largely of the same companies which in 1970 persuaded the government to permit the export of 6.3 trillion cubic feet of gas on the ground that we had adequate supplies to meet all our requirements until 1995, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is prepared to instruct the National Energy Board to review and revise these export permits for natural gas, as it is empowered to do under Section 17 of the National Energy Board Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as this is a representation, I am sure it will be heard by the board. In so far as the hon. member is asking for a government directive, I will raise the matter with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who will be back in Ottawa later today.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—INQUIRY WHETHER UNITED STATES URGING THAT CANADA NOT PROCEED WITH CONSTRUCTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one important supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister inform the House whether, in the discussions which are taking place between Canadian and United States officials regarding an over-all pipeline agreement, U.S. representatives have urged that Canada not proceed with the extension of the oil pipeline to Montreal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to discussions between officials on a particular question. I must confess that if his allegation is correct he is better informed than I am. I do not know and I did not answer that there were specific discussions on this specific pipeline question. I will look into the matter and if the hon. member has some information that I do not have I will ask why that is so.

CRIMINAL CODE

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—PROTECTION OF SOCIETY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Following the unfortunate events which happened yesterday to Princess Ann and her husband and since a Senate committee in the United States, by a majority vote, has recently voted in favour of restoring the death penalty, does the government intend to reconsider the death penalty as a deterrent to crime in Canada as suggested in the United States and also to prevent criminal attempts such as the one which occurred yesterday in Great Britain and which could also happen in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member probably knows that I have expressed on behalf of the Canadian people our regrets and our surprise following the criminal attempt made yesterday. However, as for the last part of his question, I must answer negatively that we do not intend to reintroduce that bill in Parliament. The legislation approved by the House is valid for 5 years and till then the government will merely administer it.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister tell us also whether his government intends to introduce in this House other measures to prevent crime in Canada and to protect society rather than criminals?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must have specific punishments in mind. If he cares to make me those suggestions he is thinking about, I am prepared to give them consideration.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER INCREASE IN PRICES OF BREAD AND MILK—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the impasse reached between the Bakery Council and the Food Prices Review Board, and in view of the statement made in Toronto today by the Bakery Council that the price of bread will go up next month regardless, what steps does the government now propose to take to prevent any further increase in the price of bread?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just received a preliminary report, which is, of course, subject to further confirmation, and it is just the opposite of my hon. friend's remarks. I am working actively to confirm this today, and our action will follow in light of confirmed information we get today.

Mr. McGrath: By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I might point out that the report issued today by the board indicates that its original findings were justified and that any further increase in the price of bread cannot be justified. That is a report issued today at one o'clock which the minister obviously has not seen. I ask him what action the government proposes to take to prevent any further increase in the price of bread? While I am on my feet may I also ask the minister what action the government proposes to take with regard to the finding of the board in respect of the dairy industry, and what steps it proposes to take to prevent a further increase in the price of milk?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I do have the report of the Food Prices Review Board on bread and obviously I have read it more closely than did my hon. friend. As I said, I have received a preliminary report from the Bakery Council which indicates that its members do not intend to make increases beyond present levels unless they can make a case before the Food Prices Review Board that cost increases are such as to warrant further price increases. As I say, this is a preliminary report subject to further confirmation, and I would be happy to correct it if my information is incorrect. I think I would want to get firm and definite information as soon as possible today before giving further indication of the need for government response in this very important matter. In respect of my hon. friend's other question, the report to which he refers is not a report of the board itself but a publication of a study commissioned by the board. I know we would want to consider it very carefully.

PERIOD COVERED BY DAIRY POLICY—STEPS TO PREVENT INCREASE IN PRICE OF MILK

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has seen the report issued by the Food Prices Review Board on the dairy industry in which it recommends a five-year policy instead of the present one-year policy of the government? If so, does the minister intend to act on it immediately, and what steps does he intend to take to prevent any further increase in the price of milk in Canada?

● (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member reads the House of Commons reports from day to day to find out what goes on here. I said before that we were working on a dairy policy for ten years, not for five years. All I can say now is that I have read part of this report because it was just submitted today by the group who were asked to do it for the Prices Review Board, and I congratulate them for picking up some of the things I have been saying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—SUGGESTED ADMINISTRATION OF PROGRAM BY PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the uncertainties within the beef industry with regard to the administration of the recently announced beef subsidy program, would the minister agree to have the ministers of agriculture of the various provinces administer this program for the producers in their provinces?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think that the uncertainty is rapidly disappearing. I do not doubt the capabilities of the provincial ministers of agriculture, but to make this a really national plan and to make it work in that way I think it has to be administered by the federal authority.

Mr. Towers: Would the minister clarify the statement he made that there is a possibility of the return of the surtax? Would he tell us his opinion on this?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, in the statement I made concerning the beef industry I said that so far as I was concerned it was important that the producers get a proper return, and that the beef subsidy program we have put into effect does just that. It gives them this return and also maintains a fair price to the consumer. Until it can be proven we are not accomplishing this, we will not change our program.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR DISCOUNT FARES FOR HANDICAPPED

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the fact that the young and people over 65 years of age get discount rates on air fares, will the minister give consideration to extending the same privilege to the handicapped who, I am quite sure, need it even more than those in the other two categories?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to discuss this with the air carriers at any time. I think the suggestion has a lot of merit. I am just wondering how we can define "handicapped". I am sure some people will argue that I am handicapped.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: We mean physical, not mental.

Mr. Darling: I am sure the minister is well aware what "handicapped" means. It means physically handicapped, and there are a great many of these people. Many people over 65 who are eligible for discounts are millionaires.

PENSIONS

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE GREATER PROTECTION AND ESCALATION FOR PERSONS IN PRIVATE PLANS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the government giving consideration to making amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act or to introducing any other legislation to provide greater protection for those who are enrolled in private pension plans? May I also ask him if that consideration will extend to the matter of the escalation of pensions paid under private pension plans, which is now permitted by income tax regulations but not yet implemented?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, these are some of the various elements to which we are giving consideration, and I thank the hon. gentleman for calling to the attention of the House that by reason of the new regulations escalation in private pensions can now be registered for income tax purposes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I appreciate the fact that the minister agrees this is now possible, but will he take steps to provide in the legislation that all private pension plans must escalate their pensions, during the years of retirement, according to the rise in the cost of living?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's first question was whether this was being considered, and of course it is being considered.

FINANCE

RESPONSE TO GOVERNMENT'S LATEST BOND OFFERING

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister explain to the House the reasons why the government's latest bond offer of $550 million, placed on the market on Monday, has fallen flat on its face, requiring the Bank of Canada to take up most of the issue instead of the public and the chartered banks who usually do that buying? Will he also explain why he and his department so grossly miscalculated the market in this important instance?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course the bond market during the last few weeks softened in the United States and in Canada as a result of the hardening of interest rates in the United States. The issue has received a broad distribution and most of the issue has been sold. I have full confidence that the issue will be completely taken up.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the issue has mostly had to be taken up by the Bank of Canada, the minister's answer has no reality at all. Would he not agree that the real reason this issue did not sell is that the people of Canada have lost confidence in the government?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, sir, and not even the speeches of the hon. gentleman shake that confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMBINES

ALLEGED PRICE FIXING BY B.C. CEMENT COMPANIES—INVESTIGATION THEREOF

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs regarding combines investigations. Last week he made a statement in the House that he would discuss the possibility of an inquiry into the British Columbia cement industry with the Minister of Justice. Has he had that discussion and will there be an open inquiry into the cement industry in British Columbia?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to do so yet, but I will be happy to report to the hon. member on the result of this discussion.

Mr. Reynolds: In view of the fact it has been reported that one small cement company in the Fraser Valley cannot buy cement in the province and has to go to the United States for supplies, will the minister please speed up his discussion with the Minister of Justice so that we can get on with an inquiry into this situation?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member to ask his friends to speed up consideration of Bill C-7 so that practices such as refusing to deal can be dealt with by law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE MINISTRY

NATURE OF POSSIBLE CHANGES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask today about the question I asked the right hon. Prime Minister a few days ago concerning the appointment of ministers.

Did he tell a journalist outside the House that he considered seriously appointing New Democratic Party members as ministers to form a popular liberal socialist coalition government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I told a journalist that the answer I had given in the House should be considered seriously. I remind the hon. member that if he reads Hansard, he will see that I have also offered the Progressive Conservative member for Brome-Missisquoi and other members of the same party who have a liberal mind to join us, thus we could form one party—

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—POLICY RESPECTING MARKETING

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the government's intention to throw domestic western farm feed grains totally on the open market, does the government intend to modify its policy in view of the expressed request of the majority of farm organizations that the Canadian Wheat Board remain the sole marketing agency for western feed grains and that there be a guaranteed initial price for all feed grains?

● (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the opening statement of the hon. member is not quite accurate and I do not want to seem to be endorsing it. The fact is that a good number of organizations have expressed themselves on both sides of the feed grains question, which is specifically the reason for the period of discussion we initiated with our announcement on August 3. It was significant that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture expressly avoided arriving at a conclusion on the issue because of the known division among farm organizations on the subject. It is our continued objective to ensure that there be equitable pricing and movement of feed grains across the country on a one market basis. We are working toward that program but of course we are taking into consideration all suggestions with regard to specific details of the program so that, as usual, we can introduce a program that best serves the interests of all Canadians.

Mr. Nesdoly: Since the government of Manitoba is presently conducting a survey or plebiscite to find out if the farmers of Manitoba want all feed grains marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board, will the minister tell the House whether his final decision will be influenced by the result of the plebiscite since he believes in plebiscites and going by the wishes of people who vote in plebiscites?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the compliment from the hon. member about my interest in taking note of people's views. I take it he is complimenting us on the manner in which we conducted the rapeseed poll.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: No. You have it all wrong.

Mr. Lang: I hope in contrast, he does not seriously elevate to the level of a plebiscite the cheap partisan politics being played by the government of Manitoba.

Mr. Hellyer: Oh, oh, there is the old coalition broken up.

Mr. Bell: Don't forget Tuesday night!

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTION—PUBLICIZING OF CLINICS IN NEWSPAPERS

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice.

Last year I asked him the following question:

Is the minister aware of advertisements in the press inviting pregnant women to get a legal abortion in Montreal or at low cost in New York clinics? If so, has the minister made any inquiries to determine whether this is contrary to the provisions of the abortion legislation?

The minister had then replied that he was going to look into the matter. Can he tell me if there is any new development in this thorny situation?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is a subject which was discussed among Attorneys General at a meeting last May. The matter is not very free from doubt as the law now stands. If the law as it does stand is to be tested or enforced, that is specifically the responsibility of the provincial Attorneys General who must initiate proceedings under the Criminal Code.

INFORMATION

RETURN TO CANADA OF INFORMATION ABOUT CANADIANS NOW STORED IN UNITED STATES—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary to the Prime Minister with respect to the question raised by the leader of my party. Noting that the task force on privacy and computers, 1972, stated that "A great deal of personal information about Canadians, much of it highly sensitive, is stored beyond Canadian borders and therefore out of reach of Canadian law", and noting the abuses that have been referred to in the House today, would the Prime Minister personally intervene to see whether steps can be taken to return personal and confidential information about Canadians now in the United States, to Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the hon. member is catching up with government policy. If he reads the Speech from the Throne he will see that we indicated action precisely in this area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the acting government House leader. Can he tell the House when he is going to introduce the rather important piece of legislation to which the Prime Minister has called attention?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the legislation is not yet ready and therefore it is difficult to indicate a specific date for its introduction, but it will be discussed further.

An hon. Member: Like the whole throne speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would remind hon. members at this point that there are about four minutes left before the end of the question period and if hon. members want to ask further supplementaries that will take us to the end of the question period.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT ON CO-OPERATIVE COLLEGES AND CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO GRANTS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. At the same time as the Prime Minister is taking steps to safeguard private and confidential information stored in the United States referring to Canadians, would he undertake to make available to the Canadian public the report on the co-operative colleges prepared by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and other correspondence to and from the government in respect of grants and other allocations from the government which for generations have been considered as public information and which are now being withheld by this government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall gladly look into the matter.

TRANSPORT

SOURCE OF MINISTER'S INFORMATION FOR STATEMENT RAILWAYS LOSE MONEY HAULING WHEAT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statements made by the minister in recent days that the railways lose money in hauling wheat, I should like to ask him what source this information comes from in view of the fact no document has ever been published by the railways proving that they lose money in hauling wheat?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are two sources of information, one coming from the department and another coming from the railways. If the hon. gentleman wants me to check more closely I shall be happy to do so.

An hon. Member: Table it.

ENERGY

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR EVALUATION OF MACKENZIE GAS PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF ADDITIONAL HEARINGS TO THAT BY ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Can he tell the House who in his cabinet has been assigned the over-all responsibility for the government's evaluation of the Mackenzie gas pipeline, and has he issued any new and specific directives to that minister as to the manner in which the government will assess this immense project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings was talking so loudly that I could not hear the question.

Mr. Hees: Pay more attention! I was not talking to you.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the right hon. gentleman for his apology. Can the Prime Minister tell the House who in his cabinet has been assigned the over-all responsibility for the government's evaluation of the Mackenzie gas pipeline, and has he issued any new and specific directives to that minister as to the manner in which the government will assess this immense project?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there are several ministers implicated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is a good word.

An hon. Member: Why did you not say "indicted"?

Mr. Trudeau: —as I indicated earlier in the House. The Minister of the Environment is responsible for his aspect of the question. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who of course would have jurisdiction for the territories, is involved, and of course so is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. They have formed a committee and the spokesman, depending on the particular aspect of the subject, will be one of those three ministers and, if there is any doubt, it will be myself.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister but perhaps he could clarify it a little bit for the benefit of the House and the nation. Does the government feel that the National Energy Board as currently constituted provides an adequate means for evaluating this project, or is the government planning separate hearings by the Department of the Environment, the Department of Finance and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, under the act the National Energy Board has definite powers in the enforcement of certain measures. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, under its responsibility regarding lands in the territories will soon set up a special inquiry board which will be asked to study the economic and social aspects of such a project for northerners as well as environment problems which will arise in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. We intend to appoint a judge to undertake an early inquiry.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—RESTRICTION ON EDMONTON VIDEO LIMITED

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. The Canadian Radio-Television Commission granted a licence to Edmonton Video Limited to establish a third English language television station, CITV, in Edmonton, Alberta. In view of the fact the commission requires that station KREM, Spokane, Washington, not be distributed by the licensee until one year after the commencement of broadcasting by CITV, do my people have to move to Vancouver, Victoria, Montreal, Oshawa or Hamilton in order to find a choice of television channels? What is the purpose—

● (1500)

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I had not finished. Go ahead.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I was about to say to the hon. member that, whether he is a spiritual guide or temporal guide of his constituents, does not concern me personally. I wish to add that restrictions on cable did not happen only in Edmonton but happened in various other places throughout the country for reasons which have to do with the economic viability of the Canadian stations in the various capitals. I cannot reasonably say any more in the time allowed for an answer in the question period, but that is the basic reason.

PENITENTIARIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF PSYCHIATRIC SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that more and more sentences by our courts include recommendations for psychiatric treatment for those convicted, and in view of the fact that most federal inmates are not getting adequate psychiatric treatment before parole, what measures is the minister now taking to meet this ever-growing crisis?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we are setting up five regional medical and psychiatric centres across the country. We have already set up three of the five. We hope to start two new ones this year, one in Saskatoon and one in the Maritimes. I might say that we are having difficulty engaging a sufficient number of psychiatrists for the positions we now have available. It is very difficult to get them to work in our service.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN SEAFARERS' UNION AND LAKE CARRIERS ASSOCIATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EFFORTS TO SETTLE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Labour, one of imperative and immediate necessity for consideration. As the Great Lakes shipping season will open five days earlier than the normal date, April 1, and as it is imperative that the strike on the part of the Seafarers Union should not be permitted to take place, will the minister say what action he has taken since he gave a general report yesterday and the day before to assure a settlement between the employers, the 17 shipping companies, and the union, because, with wheat piling up, it is important that action be taken and that there be no delay in shipments through the Great Lakes?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the right hon. gentleman before in the House, the government is well aware of the very serious consequences if this strike is not settled. Having said that, I would assure the right hon. gentleman that everything possible is being done in order to resolve this dispute. That includes efforts by our very experienced mediators in my department as well as private contact by myself with the parties.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the right hon. member for a supplementary and then the hon. member for Huron, after which the Chair will have to call orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has given a report to the House, would he say whether he is satisfied with the progress so far made in the negotiations and with the contribution made by his department? Is he reasonably sure that there will not be a strike, as a strike today would mean a K.O. to the western wheat market abroad and to the farmer?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, without intentionally trying to be technical on this matter, I suggest that there is actually a strike on at the moment, although not very many men are involved. I think the right hon. gentleman is aware of that. As to whether I am satisfied, of course no one is satisfied until the strike is actually resolved. I can only say that I do not believe any alternative action at the moment would be more satisfying either to the government or the House than the course we are presently following. Talking about any type of legislation at this point would, I think, only exacerbate the matter and not bring beneficial results for the western wheat farmer or anybody else.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CAMP TO TRAIN ATHLETES FOR OLYMPICS—SUGGESTED USE OF ABANDONED CANADIAN FORCES BASE AT CLINTON, ONTARIO

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last Saturday night the minister said that athletes training for the 1976 Montreal Olympics may have the use of a national multisport training camp before the year's end. As the Canadian Armed Forces base at Clinton, Ontario, was closed and as the Prime Minister suggested that federal assistance would be considered before any of these bases were closed, and it has not been forthcoming, would the minister consider the establishment of such a multisport training centre for the Montreal Olympics at that location?

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take the representations made by the hon. member to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and he will respond in due course.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the number of hon. members who were anxiously waiting for the opportunity to ask questions. We have already gone some five minutes beyond the question period in an attempt to recognize two or three additional members. I have tried to note which hon. members have been trying today and yesterday to ask questions, and I will attempt to give them priority tomorrow. I apologize for not having been successful in recognizing them. Orders of the day.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In his reply to me regarding the report of the Food Prices Review Board and statement regarding bread prices, the minister misled the House out of ignorance. Obviously, at that time he was not acquainted with the contents of the report. I assume he is now acquainted with the contents and I expect that the minister would want to rise in his place and correct the record.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend should indicate in what particular instance he thinks I have given the House inaccurate information.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps there might be consultation between the minister and the hon. member. That might be the easier way to resolve the difficulty which seems to have arisen out of the questions and answers earlier in the question period.

Mr. Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On March 15, I directed a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, as the minister was not in the House that day. The parliamentary secretary assured me that I would receive the answer to my question on last Monday. As I was not in the House on Monday, I wonder whether the minister has had a chance to look at the question and has the answer ready for me.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will have to inquire. I do not know to which question the hon. member is referring.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from the fact that throughout yesterday's question period I attempted to put a question to the Minister of Labour. Having failed in that, I spoke to the minister after the question period and, to my surprise, found that Mr. Perry, who had been commissioned to examine accident and safety conditions in the Devco mines, had after nine days, I think he said, given it up as a lost cause. He is now available in the capacity of adviser. If Mr. Perry needed assistance, I would ask the minister why he did not contact the mine examiners who are under the minister's jurisdiction and the shot firers who are responsible for safety in the mines for the assistance he apparently needed. Will the minister report to the House on Mr. Perry's failure to do so?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member has referred to his private conversation with me, I believe he would agree that I told him I would look into the matter and he indicated he would be kind enough to put it in writing. He has not done so; I have not received anything in writing. I indicated to him at that time that I would be pleased to look into the matter and he seemed to be satisfied with this procedure.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. When the minister requested that this matter be put in writing, I informed him that I had been three weeks without a secretary. It does no good to call the pool. I told him I would explain the situation to him, which I did. I told him that because I was without a secretary it was difficult to correspond, and I had other obligations with which I could not comply. I asked him why Mr. Perry quit after nine days without even contacting the examiners who are responsible for safety, and I asked him if he would report to the House as to the reasons for this happening. He did not do so.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Perry, and I believe the hon. member and others in the opposition would want it no other way, wanted to be unfettered in the way in which he proceeded with the investigation so that no charges would be made about his being under governmental control. It is completely within the ambit of his authority—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —and the hon. member's question—

Business of the House

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rose on a point of order and he rose on a question of privilege. To my mind there was neither a point of order nor a question of privilege. After the expiry of the question period, the hon. member asked a question. He claims the floor again on a question of privilege. I will, of course, hear him.

● (1510)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on behalf of examiners in Cape Breton who are under the minister's jurisdiction. The minister made an accusation against members of his own department. He said that Mr. Perry did not want to be restricted. Is he to be restricted if he is contacting men under the minister's jurisdiction working on the question of mine safety?

Mr. Speaker: I again suggest to the hon. member and the minister that this matter might be pursued some other way. It should not be discussed or debated under the guise of a question of privilege. The Chair has called orders of the day. I apologize to the House. Apparently we are still on points of order.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask the government House leader the Thursday question about business of the House. We all know that the next four days, including today, are designed for the completion of the allotted days. Can the government House leader give us an idea of priority items after that so we can be thinking about them?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On Wednesday next we will deal with the competition bill. This will be followed by CNR financing, export development and fisheries development. I ask the hon. member to now tell us his subjects for the next four days so that we can be thinking about them.

Mr. Bell: We will have lots of surprises.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The open negotiations among House leaders a few minutes ago had to do with a possible change in time limits with respect to the speeches in today's debate. I think Your Honour will find there is agreement among the four parties to modify Standing Order 58(13) for today in these terms: The mover of the motion to have 30 minutes, the principal speaker for the government to have 30 minutes, the first speaker for the Progressive Conservatives to have 20 minutes and the first speaker for the Social Credit to have 20 minutes. Everyone else is to have 15 minutes and there are to be no extensions. I think Your Honour will find that is agreed to by all parties.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED NEED FOR NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY, NATIONALIZATION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC AND APPOINTMENT OF CONTROLLER

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved:

That in the opinion of this House all forms of national transportation should be integrated as a public utility to serve Canada's transportation needs instead of being governed by considerations of competition and profit so that Parliament can deal effectively with freight rate discrimination, rail line abandonment, insufficient railway equipment, inadequate rail passenger service, and urban and northern transportation;

This House is further of the opinion that to this end the Canadian Pacific Railway, including its subsidiaries, should be brought under public ownership and that both national systems should be under full public control;

And, further, in order to meet the present emergency in the movement of grain and other products, this House is of the opinion that the Government should consider the immediate appointment of a transport controller with full authority to allocate and control railway rolling stock.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) must be the envy of his colleagues in the cabinet. Who else among them could have risen in the House and outside the House to say that the national transportation policy is disastrous and, indeed, that there is no national transportation policy and be praised for it by editorial writers and commentators? That is why I say I imagine he is the envy of his colleagues. They could not get away with that. It was because of the minister's charm and transparent honesty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I do not begrudge the minister the praise which he has received. He at least had the courage to admit to the people of Canada that the present transportation policy in this country is a failure. However, I want to emphasize that in my view the people of Canada ought not to be beguiled by this honest and frank confession by the minister. The people of Canada have to remember that it was a Liberal government in 1966 and 1967 which proposed this policy which the minister now finds to be a failure. Indeed, this minister was a member of the government at that time. I cannot imagine otherwise than that the policy presented by the Hon. Mr. Pickersgill to the House at that time was one that was carefully studied and discussed by the whole cabinet in view of the importance of transportation to Canada. This minister, like other members of the then government, and most of them are still on the treasury benches, must have subscribed to the principles of the act presented at that time.

The people of Canada must also remember and not be beguiled by the minister's frankness, desirable and admirable though it may be, that the policy has been administered by a Liberal government since it was introduced. For the past five or six years it has been administered by this government. Finally, they must remember that this minister has been minister of the department for about a year and a half. While it is refreshing and encouraging to find the minister admit the failure of the national transportation policy—encouraging because it at least indicates that a really serious look is being taken at that policy in view of the minister's admission—I just want to say that it is impossible for me and the people of Canada to wash the Liberal government since 1967 clear of any responsibility, (a) for the policy which was a disaster and, (b) for the disastrous implementation of that policy since 1967.

I put this motion on the order paper because the minister informed the House and the country that the full policy is now being discussed within his department. That makes me uneasy. As far as I know, he is surrounded by a good many of the same people who were responsible for the policy introduced in 1966-67. I only hope they have seen the same light the minister has seen, have the same illumination he has evidenced and the same conversion that he has talked about. I hope the discussion inside his department will not be the kind of frustrating effort that I am worried about because, I repeat, many of the same people will be doing it.

Because of that it seemed necessary that this House of Commons discuss this very important subject at the earliest opportunity. Not that we will be able to solve it. My colleagues and I do not claim to have the in-depth knowledge that is necessary to solve every part of this very vexing and complex problem. However, it will give us an opportunity to discuss the general principles which ought to underline a national transportation policy.

I did not have the pleasure of hearing the minister's speech on March 7. However, as I read it, the Minister of Transport suggested there had been no objection to the principle of the bill which forms the basis for the present national transportation policy. I looked up Hansard because I had vague memories about objections voiced by my then leader, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and by myself as a matter of fact. I should like to read from the statement made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on September 2, 1966, as recorded at page 8044 of Hansard just so that the minister knows there were some people in this House who were very strongly opposed to the basic principles that underlay the bill they were putting through and which is now the law of Canada. The hon. member said:

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe that free enterprise and the competitive system of transportation can give Canada an adequate transportation policy at a price we can afford. There may be countries where they can afford to have all sorts of free enterprise and competition; different forms of transportation and different companies competing with each other, duplicating services. However, in a country of 20 million people where, as I said before, we are more dependent than probably any country in the world on getting our goods to market over long distances at competitive prices, where we spend more per capita on transportation than probably any other country in the world, I do not think we can afford the luxury of having a free enterprise, competitive transportation policy.

Those are the words of my colleague, the leader of this party on that day. Toward the end of his speech at page 8046 he said these words which seem to me to be relevant:

I am convinced that this government or the government that succeeds it will find that in a few years this transport commission, because of its lack of power and authority, will not be able to solve the problem. If the house does not at this time give that commission some power and put some teeth into the bill, then some subsequent parliament will be compelled to do so, after we have lost valuable years and very large sums of money.

Mr. Speaker, if ever I heard a prophetic statement, in view of the minister's admission of failure, that certainly was one. On January 27, 1967 I participated in the debate on third reading of the bill and said things along similar lines. It was the New Democratic Party which at that time, when the bill was first introduced in Parliament and thrust on the people of Canada, said that a transportation policy based on competition, profit and on the principles of free enterprise would fail. Both my colleague and I emphasized in the speeches, to which I referred that the result of that policy would be great hardships on the prairies, on northern Ontario, on northern Quebec, on the northern part of Canada and on the Atlantic provinces and that it would interfere with the development of secondary industry in all these underdeveloped parts of Canada. We saw that not because we were more intelligent or brighter than other people but because we were not prisoners of the free enterprise fetish that controls the Liberal and Conservative Parties. Because of that we were able to see the consequences of the kind of policy that the Hon. Mr. Pickersgill introduced in this House and pushed through this House. Later, when the policy became law, he was able to leave us and take up the chairmanship of the commission. Ever since Mr. Pickersgill became Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission Canada has suffered without end in the transportation field.

In the time available I want to indicate some general lines which ought to guide us in the development of a transportation policy. I do not expect, although I hope, all my suggestions on behalf of my party will be accepted by all members of this House, but in my view they are basic to any really relevant and effective national transportation policy.

First, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to members of the House and to the minister that we must pass laws, take action and have policies that will make transportation a public utility. A transportation policy for Canada must not be controlled by the principles of profit and by the alleged principles of competition in this society. That does not mean that the transportation system has to lose money. There is no reason for that. The transportation systems have always made money. It does mean, however, that the transportation system in Canada must serve the needs, both national and regional, of the people of this country, sometimes without regard to profit and never governed by the profit motive so far as service is concerned.

I shall have something to say about the Canadian Pacific a little later, but let me deal very briefly with a number of the problems with which the minister is now faced. There is a constant fight against the Crowsnest Pass rates, particularly by the CPR. As I Informed the House in my speech of January 27, 1967 I had occasion over a number of years to act on behalf of some railway unions on a number of occasions. Every time I was in that situation I heard the CPR at that time, through the man who is now president of the CPR, Mr. Ian Sinclair, tell the board and the unions how the CPR was losing money through loading and carrying grain. They used to calculate it into tens of millions of dollars or hundreds of millions of dollars over the years. I remember saying that if they were telling the truth then the CNR and the CPR ought really to be bankrupt instead of being very effective organizations, particularly the Canadian Pacific. The objection to the Crowsnest Pass rates and the calculations they make always are based on comparing the cents per ton mile that they get for carrying grain with the cents per ton mile that they get for carrying those commodities for which they charge much higher rates. That is a pretty false way to tell us they are losing money. That is why I do not accept the statement of the railways, repeated the other day by the minister, that the railways lose money carrying grain.

Sure, they do not make as much money carrying grain as carrying other commodities, but it is their duty to Canada to carry this grain at the Crowsnest Pass rates. Furthermore, when I study the history of the CPR in this country and transportation generally-I have not bothered to look up the details but I have a vivid memory of them—I find that when the agreement for the Crowsnest Pass rates was made with the railways the CPR received additional millions of dollars and additional millions of acres of land as a quid pro quo which enabled this outfit to become one of the largest economic empires in this country. But they forget what they got from the people of Canada and object to the Crowsnest Pass rates. If any one gives in to the CPR on this issue we will have betrayed not only the interests of the farmers in the west but also the interests of all the people of Canada.

The policy which Mr. Pickersgill shoved through parliament in 1967 gave the railways the possibility of entering upon a plan for wholesale rail abandonment. The consequences were disastrous for many communities. Of course, the railways could prove that certain routes, certain bits of line in various parts of Canada were, in themselves, unprofitable. In a country the size of Canada where only 22 million of us are scattered across an entire continent, a relatively smaller population being in the northern regions, of course there are railways lines which are unprofitable and which always will be unprofitable. But that should not be the only reason for permitting a course which not only takes away an essential service from people who deserve it but which has sounded the death knell for many communities.

I honestly sympathize with the minister because of the situation in which he now finds himself. He has to come before parliament, as well as tell the nation on radio and television, to say that there is not enough rolling stock to move all the grain and carry all the other bulk commodities, particularly from the west and from the north, which need to be delivered. And why? Because the railways have decided they can make more money in other ways than by purchasing hopper cars or whatever other cars are needed to serve the Canadian economy. Sir, the railways of this country were created by the people of this country and they ought, by law, be made to provide adequate rolling stock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Everybody in this House is aware of the anomalies and discrimination which exists in the freight rate structure. I shall not take any of the relatively short time available to me by citing examples. I am sure that other members of my party, and other members of the House, will do so. But everybody knows how much cheaper it is to ship steers to central Canada than it is to ship processed meat. Everybody knows how much cheaper it is to ship rapeseed rather than rapeseed oil, how much cheaper it is to transport unprocessed raw materials from the north than it is to transport processed goods. This freight rate policy on the part of the railways means they have added another almost insuperable obstacle to the development of secondary industry in precisely those parts of Canada which require it most.

All these difficulties which the minister faces result, as he correctly states, from the fact that competition has never been possible as a basis for national transportation policy. Indeed, profit-making is immoral when applied to national transportation policy in a country such as Canada where transportation, just as much as energy, is the lifeblood of the economy. So my first point is this: we must consider the introduction of a policy which regards transportation as a public utility concerned not with alleged competition but concerned with costs and expenses and with profit only in the sense that it should make enough money to enable it to purchase new equipment and buildings, keep the track in repair, carry out necessary renovations, and so on. All these things cannot be done unless a surplus is earned by the transportation system and no one is suggesting that this should not be a consideration. But the profit objective must be an overall objective for the entire system, not something related to one particular part of the line or to a particular commodity at the expense of the interests of the people of Canada.

We ought not to tolerate a system which denies people a reasonable passenger service. I do not travel by train very often nowadays, but on occasions I do so. I have travelled both on Canadian Pacific and on Canadian National. Neither one is better than the other. The CP is just as bad as the CN and the CN is just as good as the CP. Each is doing everything it can to discourage travellers. If passengers wish to eat on the train in some parts of the country they get a stale sandwich, almost unpalatable and certainly indigestible. The whole atmosphere of the railway cars as well as the service provided is aimed at deliberately discouraging the use of the facilities. What are the railways for? We are making a very grave mistake, it seems to me, because as the minister has indicated, either in one of his answers in this chamber or in a statement made outside the House, developments are presently taking place affecting air travel and other forms of air transport which might well result in rail transportation becoming a great deal more desirable than it has been in the last few years.

I cannot end this part of my comments without expressing my horror at the number of accidents which have occurred on the railways. I expect one of my hon. friends will be dealing with this subject later, if he catches your eye, Mr. Speaker. The CTC has produced a report on this subject. There is no doubt in my mind that one of the reasons for these accidents, and probably the main reason, is the failure of the railways to take proper care of the tracks. This is another way of showing a profit, another way of making money. In this case it is done at the expense of the welfare of Canadians and, sometimes, at the expense of lives.

The second point which the government should keep steadily in mind when considering a national transportation policy is that there must be an integrated national system. We can no longer talk about rail separately, or air transport separately, and so on. There must be an integrated system under which duplication is limited as far as possible, one which recognizes that the so-called competition is a sham. Who is competing with whom? The CN, as well as CP, now controls not only a railway but an air line, shipping, and trucking enterprises. The CP is already in the pipeline business and I gather from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) that the CN is also going into pipelines. They are into every form of transport in this country. So who are they competing with, except themselves?

Mr. Peters: And when necessary, they join hands.

Mr. Lewis: Yes. When necessary, they join hands. They agree on rates in many cases. It is meaningless to talk about competition. When one considers the present national transportation policy based on the false concept of profit-making, we realise, to use the words of Pierre Berton, that the national dream has, in this country, become a national nightmare, particularly for the Minister of Transport. And I sympathize with him, though I wish that he and his colleagues who preceded him had shown the wisdom to draw attention a great many years ago to the disastrous effects of the course upon which the government embarked in 1967.

It is in this context we propose that Canadian Pacific Limited be brought under public ownership. When I say this, I am talking not only about the rail operation, I am talking about the whole shebang—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —the entire economic empire which they built as a result of Canadian grants. Everybody knows the history, and if they don't, they should. Everybody knows about the millions of dollars, the hundreds of millions in grants and subsidies which the Canadian people have given the CP, the millions of acres of land. As a result of these gifts from the Canadian people, CPR not only owns an airline, a shipping line, a trucking line and a telecommunications network, but a large complex in Trail and in other parts of British Columbia, Cominco, the Pine Point mine in the Northwest Territories, other properties all over the country through another subsidiary, and an oil company. Despite the earnings and the profits that these subsidiaries make, every time CPR is questioned about its railway, it says, "You cannot look at profits that we make anywhere else but only at the profits we make from the railway". My answer to Canadian Pacific is that they are making money out of other subsidiaries because the Canadian people enabled them to build a railway, and those profits belong to the people of Canada.

● (1540)

I urge that we bring the CPR under public ownership. I say this not for doctrinaire reasons—though I will doubtless be accused of that—but because of my conviction that it is impossible to develop an integrated national transportation policy and let CPR remain in private hands. If CPR remains a private corporation concerned with making more and more profit, then it will continue in the future, as in the past, to sabotage—I do not use that word lightly but quite deliberately—every attempt to achieve a national transportation policy that seeks to serve the interests of Canada and not the profits of the CPR.

Fourth, I suggest that the government or an agency of the government, whether the CTC or some other body, must have the power to oversee and control investments of transportation companies so as to make sure they get sufficient rolling stock, take sufficient care of their roadbeds, and do all the other things that are necessary to maintain a decent and adequate transportation system.

Fifth, I urge that the government, or an agency of the government, must have real control over freight rates that serve national and regional interests and assist, rather than obstruct, the development of secondary industries in the parts of Canada that require them so badly.

Finally, I urge that the government should appoint immediately a freight controller, not only to meet the immediate emergency in regard to the movement of grain and other bulk commodities, but on a permanent basis to make sure that the railways provide the necessary rolling stock to meet the requirements of our import and export trade and needs of the Canadian people, rather than serve the interests of the CPR, or even the CNR.

There is no doubt that no other country in the world is so dependent on transportation as Canada. This is why we built the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is why we took over bankrupt railways and formed the Canadian National Railways. We realized the importance of a transportation system for the future wellbeing of Canada. The only policy that will serve the interest of Canadians for generations to come is an integrated policy that places all the major transportation systems under public ownership and control, a policy that is governed by those interests, not only national but also regional, that the Canadian people require to be met and fulfilled.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that I am not in an easy position, even if the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) made a long statement at first, that I believe to be a very honest one, saying that he agrees with the criticisms I made, but has grave doubts about whether I can follow up on them or revise them.

If I had not made these criticisms, I would obviously be accused of not having made them and of neglecting my duty. Anyway, I think that the rule of the game in Parliament as in court is that you should not try to prove yourself to the witnesses of your opponent. However, I do not hold this against him, because I find that I am not in complete disagreement with any of the ideas contained in the resolution of the New Democratic Party.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I find some of these ideas too general. As a matter of fact, the hon. member left himself an opening in his statement, and I believe that he was right to do so. He does not wish to make political gestures which would only be doctrinary and which would refer, if I may say so, to a somewhat outmoded form of intervention by the state.

Indeed, I have heard the same thing said by the British Columbia, the Manitoba and the Saskatchewan premiers. All three make this distinction at all times and I think that they are right. I do not blame them at all.

Of course, we agree on most criticisms. I have made an overall criticism, not to get the attention of the reporters, but to stir up enough attention that those problems might be solved. As we know, some problems are not solved unless the public is mobilized enough to force those in my trade to study them seriously. Otherwise, they are never solved.

And so, I did not do so to attract attention, nor to get into the limelight, Mr. Speaker, but because I think the problem is serious. In my speech, in this House or outside, I did not make a complete analysis of the transport system in Canada. Of course, some things are working very well in the field of transportation. Everything need not be demolished and built up again from scratch. Clearly, when one wants to go from Montreal, or Toronto, to Vancouver the service is excellent. Trains on certain lines are operating quite nicely.

Usually, they operate well when the corporations make profits and on this point I agree with the New Democratic Party. As soon as they incur losses, they are inclined to neglect train repairs, for example, so that means of transport becomes unfit. People are disgusted and do not dare use it.

However, when we consider how subsidies are granted, we realize that we pay, if I am right, some $100 million a year to the railway companies to maintain passenger trains. However, the corporations are not entitled to use one cent of those $100 million to get new equipment. That amount is solely used to cover what are called operating deficits.

Evidently, they are not interested in reinvesting. The cars, the rails are deteriorating and as stated recently, there are even some bridges which fall down and are not rebuilt.

We are therefore in a situation where passenger trains, which are more and more essential to this country, cannot be of any service to the population. Obviously I am accused and we are accused collectively of not thinking since 1967 about redrafting this law. It includes many extremely simple principles and I believe that this has helped solve many problems.

But this left us with large problems on our hands, in other words we thought, and there I do not exclude or excuse myself as indeed the first time in the House, that through competition, between railways, trucks and boats, we would get a near perfect system, which unfortunately did not happen because in certain areas there is no competition.

You will make your speech in a few minutes, but I am referring to one aspect. Maybe I will agree with you that in certain cases we have not used the powers we have under the law to correct what should have been corrected. In any event, we have a series of problems and all I want to say is that I am not just making a speech after which, having admitted before this House that we have problems, I should just say goodbye. I am being very honest. I think we have already started to solve some of these problems. We have already started negotiations with the western provinces on certain freight rates, and I think we are going to have some concrete results. Maybe we are not going to agree on the conclusions. Okay, that will be part of the political battle which is normal in a country like ours, but at least we are going to have the facts.

The provinces asked for certain cost disclosures and they are going to get them. The committee to study those cost disclosures has already started to work and we hope it will be successful. We have included branch lines, and that is something we think is very positive. The problem now is in respect of what we are going to do when the lines will no longer be frozen. This is a good question, but do not ask it because I am not in a position to answer it at this moment.

Mr. Paproski: Can we have an answer before the next election?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We will see, but if we do go for an election we will do like all political parties, and like you are trying to do. The only difference between us is that we are a little more skilful, but that is a matter of opinion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You are skilful in politics but you are not doing anything for the people.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will then try to give my speech a style which is somewhat higher than the heaviness attributed by others to bring it down. In any case, I wish to speak of transportation problems. There was also the development of the north. To my mind, the department has some very interesting accomplishments to its credit. I refer here to airports and highways. We are undertaking a study to determine the possibility of building a railroad to serve the Northwest Territories. Substantial efforts have therefore been made. There has been progress in the field of winter navigation.

If we compare, which is perhaps a normal and a very tempting thing to do for a government in power, if we compare our system with that of other countries, the United States, France, Germany or Italy, I am sure that we have to conclude that ours is the best. However, the best system is not the same as a perfect system nor is it a system that cannot be improved upon. It is indeed possible to improve it considerably.

We are making efforts in the area of freight rates. I think that considerable efforts have been made in the area of northern development. In the area of civil aviation, we are also making concerted efforts to obtain the share of the market we are entitled to. These are facts, Mr. Speaker, and this is why I should not like anybody, including myself, to give the impression that everything that has been done up to now has been useless, that this was a case of misdirection and that all civil servants were wrong at the same time. This is not true. A mistake was made, and I agree with hon. members of the New Democratic Party when they say it was wrong to believe that the profit principle and competition would settle all problems. Well, there are large areas in our country where it will never be profitable for a railway, bus or truck company to operate and make money. It will never go there. This is the very principle on which private enterprise is based, and I do not see anyone in this House, not even among the NDP members, who would accept to open a highway or establish a bus service in the great north if he had to absorb a one or two million deficit every year.

The structure of our system does not allow it but, as a country, we must serve the people living in these areas, and it is there the system proves its inefficiency, that is the nature of our whole country has not been taken into account. However, I must mention that serious efforts have been made, that we have the parts of a system that works extremely well. The problem before us now is to correct the defects. Of course our friends in the New Democratic Party remid us of nationalization. And some find it a panacea to nationalize CP, non only CP, but all it subsidiaries, which means a great deal of people. I think that the CP company has 47 subsidiaries, if I am well informed, and it administers hundreds of millions of dollars.

Some may suggest that these subsidiaries were born from things given to them by the Canadian people. This is a public and political debate that would be extremely interesting to have one of these days, and maybe our views do not differ greatly on this matter. However, should CP now be brought under public ownership? I would rather see a policy and national objectives set up first in order that we may know exactly where we are going, and see if that is necessary. Personnally, I am not interested in bringing CP under public ownership. Mr. Speaker, if hon. members want to know how many companies are involved in the field of transportation in Canada, I have figures here—21,000 in the trucking industry and 48 in the rail transport industry because CN and CP are not the only ones operating a railway. BCR was also brought under public ownership in British Columbia but several companies do not come under the jurisdiction of the federal government. There are 694 air carriers. With respect to gas pipelining 175 companies are involved in that field. I admit quite frankly that before stomaching all that, Mr. Speaker, I would much rather see an adequate policy set up because if we had to deal with all that tomorrow morning I really wonder how we could manage to do it. I think we would not be the only government to react that way and if our hon. friends opposite were on this side of the House they would think it over twice before passing such a general resolution although I do not object to it in principle. It seems basic to me for a country like ours to have control mechanisms and if at some point private enterprise is not doing what it should we should have the means available to us to make it act as it should which is often something we do not have.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): That has been the case with CP for years.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is not generally known, but I know that I am not considered as a close friend of CP for several reasons and I do not intend to kill myself for that company. I am not here for that. As long as I am Minister of Transport the only thing that can be expected from me is that I will try to correct what is wrong in our system, to see to it that we have adequate passenger trains and freight rates which permit our economy to grow—

[English]

Mr. Paproski: We want Mackasey.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They never know why they lose elections. It is just because they behave that way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Those are our major objectives. We now have the problem of the lack of railway equipment and cars. It is always the same situation. The government says to the railway companies: Listen, you must be motivated by profit, your grants will be reduced; you had better try to compete with trucking and so everything will be for the best in the best of worlds. But when those companies consider they are making no money by investing in cars they do not build any. To me the problem is as follows: Should we chance buying equipment which next year, for instance, will not be used because the year will not be as good as we thought, or should we have a situation where we would have an extraordinary year but where we will not be able to haul our merchandise for lack of the required equipment? Decisions must be taken. Who takes them? Private companies, of course. Naturally we could ask CN to build cars but CP can see no reasons to build cars unless the level of our economy becomes higher than they forecast or than we forecast.

Mr. Speaker, we are also at grips with the whole problem of urban transportation. As I said once, I do not know where, everybody believed a few years ago that rail transportation was obsolete and that air and road transportation were the modes of transport of the future. Billions of dollars were invested in highway and airport systems. Today, all urbanized modern societies realize more and more that they made a mistake, and that they should never have abandoned railways as a means to link our urban centres. For instance, it is possible today to have a train that runs at 200 miles an hour. I am sure that you will travel by train between Ottawa and Quebec City and that it will be faster than by plane or by any other means of transportation. Therefore, we must re-assess our traditional concept. We are not the only ones who made this mistake. All European countries did the same. There used to be streetcars in the cities. Today people think that it might be better to have streetcars, less pollution and fewer cars parked along the streets.

That is the policy that the federal government must develop. We must do it, not on our own, but with the co-operation of provinces and municipalities. Recently, Mr. Speaker, I accepted in this House the suggestion that a controller be appointed, somebody who might report to us on how railway cars are allocated in Canada. I prefer this idea to the suggestion that somebody be appointed to decide, because I wonder to whom this person would report. Would he report to a politician, to the Minister of Transport, who would decide?

[English]

We could say to the CNR that it has enough cars in British Columbia and that it should send the cars to the east. Surely, we can solve the problem within the structure. However, we should know what it is so that if there is something wrong in the system we can use this information and all the facilities of the government to correct what must be corrected. But, I am not sure the best formula would be to give this power to a controller. As a matter of fact, the only exception I take to the resolution is the reference to the general nationalization of the CPR and its subsidiaries. I do not take this position merely because it is a matter of principle with me but because I do not believe it would be useful to do that. I do not know. If some people believe that the CPR has stolen from us and that it owes money to the Canadian society, let us settle that with the CPR and tell it that this money belongs to the government of Canada and not to the CPR. But let us not mix that with a national transportation policy because I think the two are quite different.

But if it should be necessary to nationalize the CPR in order to have a really integrated system, if it should be silly to have two railbeds following the same path and the CPR should not want to correct that situation or wish to sell their property at such prices that they become prohibitive when they know they got it practically free, then we can use the instruments we have and I would have no objection to nationalization. So I think this is the situation. I do not say no immediately. I just say that the first thing we have to elaborate is a new policy, a corrected or improved policy, to determine national objectives and after that see by what weapons we can really attain those objectives. Whatever some people may think I have no vested interest anywhere. If the party to which I belong should have a vested interest to the point that it would not be acting in the interest of the public just because some of them were linked a little too tight, well at that time you know I think I am free enough to say just what I think about the whole business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): But up until now, I think what we have been doing has been proper. We have been trying to develop the north. We have been spending a great deal of money in opening up the northern part of British Columbia. I hope we will be successful. We are trying to see if we can build some railway cars, including hopper cars. We are making a real effort in that direction. We are trying to correct the situation in the west and the situation in the maritimes. We are trying to see, in cooperation with the province of Ontario, for example, if it is possible to have good commuter trains like those, for instance, between Richmond and Toronto and Barrie and Toronto.

We have a similar proposal in respect of Montreal and probably will receive proposals in respect of Winnipeg and Vancouver. This is what we are trying to do. We are trying to find new ideas so that the needs of the people will be met, not only their needs but also their expectations. I am reminded of something, and I see one of my colleagues here who is interested in that. Many years ago the CPR decided to abandon the small train from Montreal to the north country. In French there is a song about this, "Le petit train du Nord". Perhaps from an economic point of view it was a very expensive link to the north. However, the highway is so crowded that the people no longer can move and they ask why the train is not reinstated or why they cannot have a fast train to Montreal. I would be ready to do the same thing any place there is congestion because we know in this country of ours we have too many cars in the city which are causing pollution. One of the solutions is trains, and this is what we are going to do. Mr. Speaker, I think I have exhausted my 30 minutes. I thank you very much. So far as the rest is concerned, I will say it on television.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has put on another virtuoso performance in the course of his speech, but I feel we are still somewhat in the dark in respect of what he intends to do. It is a tribute to his extraordinary personal qualities, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) said, that he makes the sort of disclosures he does with frankness and honesty as he did on March 7 in this House and today. Nonetheless the implications of what he said, though well received, are staggering and disturbing to all Canadians.

The current Speech from the Throne indicates that the government has attached great importance to transportation as related to regional development. Now, it is apparent that not only are we without the capacity and capability to solve many of the urgent problems relating to transportation, but we are also left with the very foundations of our regional development policies in jeopardy. I was surprised that the leader of the NDP did not touch on this point.

It is said very unequivocally in the Speech from the Throne that:

Transportation in particular is a key factor in regional development.

Canadians are now told the unpleasant truth that two of the very high priority items necessary for the country's economic progress are in jeopardy. I say in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, that if the government is at all capable of embarrassment it must indeed be very embarrassed today. I challenge members to name policies of greater importance to our national economic well-being and progress than those which are necessary in these two vital areas of transport and regional development. And yet, by the admission of one of the key ministers in the government, we are given the hard facts of life as to how deficient we are in these vital policy areas.

Our national transportation problems hold back our economic development in all parts of the nation. They are impeding our capacity to move commodities. They are injuring our trade relations with other nations. They are hurting our economy in so many ways that it would take hours to detail the damage done by the government's lack of policies. I am sure all of us remember that not long ago, when we were debating the so-called energy crisis, it was pointed out, and seemed to be tacitly accepted by the government, that we did not necessarily have an energy crisis, but that if there was an energy crisis at that time it was related to transportation because we did not have the capacity to move fuel from areas of surplus to areas in need. It was not that we did not have the fuel, it was that we lacked the capacity to move it.

I am sure the Minister of Transport must have realized at that point, and perhaps for the first time, just how much work had to be done to solve our transportation difficulties. I may say that I am very happy that the minister at this point does not agree with the NDP that we should exclude the private sector from transportation. If the NDP could say with any justification to the House that those Crown corporations which we have in the transportation field are manifestly superior to those which remain in the private sector, that they are cheaper and more efficient, then I suggest with some logic that they could put forward this type of motion for debate today. As I say, I am happy that the minister does not agree that this is a proper policy for him to consider, although of course he has left the door somewhat open.

I bring to the attention of the minister, as the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has done in the past, and presumably will again in the future, that motor transport is one of the policy areas in which the government has been most deficient. As a suggestion from this party, Mr. Speaker, I urge the minister to consider, in conjunction with the provinces because as he pointed out the provinces are, of course, necessary partners, some sort of practical policy to establish an interprovincial trucking board, or to establish reciprocal arrangements, so that the barriers and the impediments confronting Canada's motor transport industry can be removed. This must be one of the key factors in considering a transportation policy for the nation.

It is nearly impossible to pick a particular aspect of transportation that is not in difficulty, whether it be labour relations, administrative efficiency, or policy goals. Our national Crown transportation agencies and companies are in trouble. The minister himself is certainly well liked, well respected, and well qualified in labour relations and trade union affairs. I can think of few people in this House, if any, who are better qualified in this respect, and he should be especially qualified to cope with and solve the problems that exist in this particular aspect of transportation. I am speaking of labour-management difficulties, and I am thinking in particular of Air Canada.

But if one can believe what the minister is saying—I am sure we all want to do that—what he is saying publicly, what he is saying on the radio, and is reported in the press as saying, that unless he can get better co-operation and control he will resign, then surely it must be because he is not getting the proper type of co-operation from his cabinet colleagues in expediting the kind of decisive legislative and administrative changes needed to cope with the very complex difficulties he has to face.

Certainly nothing has changed since his predecessor said two years ago, I believe it was on March 20, 1972:

> I propose to bring before the House in the next session three important pieces of legislation on which work is proceeding at the present time. The first of those is a bill designed to reconstitute Air Canada as a separate Crown corporation, thus divorcing it, as it were, from the CNR. I will also introduce a Canadian National Railways revision act and a companion piece of legislation covering amendments to the Railway Act. Hon. members will know how involved and far-reaching these changes are; they have been asking for them for the last two or three years. These changes have entailed a great deal of work, which is still proceeding. I believe, however, that these bills are essential and I will bring them forward as soon as they are ready.

Obviously, those bills were not ready before the House was dissolved and an election took place. However, the real point is that the country has been under the administration of a Liberal government for about ten years. The minister is no recent recruit, such as I am. He has been here for a good many of those years. He has been associated with the cabinet, and with affairs of state on a high level. While it is very admirable that he has been so honest and frank with us, nonetheless it is a great indictment against the administration that now we are faced with the revelations recently made to us concerning our present transport policies and how they affect the economy of the country.

While the minister is undoubtedly correct in seeking the co-operation of the unions in an attempt to overcome the lack of efficiency in our transportation systems, I think he should be more concerned with management. I submit that it is here that many of the problems have arisen. In my opinion management has been derelict in adapting to technological changes, and has shown great deficiencies in labour and public relations, as well as a lamentable lack of foresight in adapting to changing economic conditions. Certainly the minister, as I have said, is uniquely equipped to deal with labour relations and he has competent colleagues to assist him, such as the former minister of manpower and immigration and the former minister of labour, the latter having an enviable record in such matters.

I would strongly urge the minister to study seriously the question of encouraging discussions between labour and management, under the auspices of the Department of Labour, with the idea in mind of having the labour contracts for our two major railway systems expire at different times. I realize there are reasons why this might not be acceptable, but on the other hand it could help avoid nationwide paralysis in times of labour disputes, paralysis which because of its magnitude hinders normal labour-management relations and causes parliament to step in, perhaps not always when it is in the best interests of the workers. This type of arrangement is normal in other industries such as the automotive industry, where one big company sets the trend for the others. As I say, I realize there may be objections. Perhaps some labour people think this is not a good idea, but I urge the minister, as part of his on-going policy re-assessment, to consider it.

It would also be a good idea, and I make this suggestion to the minister at the same time although it should more properly be discussed in connection with marine transport policies, to press on with establishing separate Crown corporations to manage the ferry services operating between our mainland and the maritime provinces. They, too, are affected when an incident arises where our national railway system and the CPR go out on strike. This is something that the minister should take under advisement, and I hope he will.

● (1620)

As far as direction from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is concerned, with respect, Mr. Speaker, I doubt if he could run a church bazaar. I do not think he is a practical type of person and I doubt whether the Minister of Transport will get very much assistance or direction from him. Surely, that is not the case with the minister himself and some of his colleagues, however. I think he will agree that at this time we do not want to exclude the private sector from this nation's transportation systems. I am not surprised to see the NDP indicate this sort of action in this motion. It is consistent with the principles of socialism and while we in the Progressive Conservative Party cannot agree with them, still, we would like to be able to respect the sincerity of our friends to the left.

Many Canadians know how difficult it is to believe in the current New Democratic Party philosophy because even their own followers realize that they are not sincere and have lost credibility as an opposition party without having the intestinal fortitude, on the other hand, to form an open coalition with those on the treasury benches. It must be, to put it in Biblical phraseology "sharper than a serpent's tooth" for the leader of the New Democratic Party to read in the Vancouver Sun of March 2 that one of the candidates nominated by the federal NDP, Ken Novakowski has dropped his candidacy because, as reported in the article:

> The federal party caucus has compromised too much, . . .
> They've backed some pretty wish-washy legislation . . .
> The principles of the NDP are more important than gaining or losing a few seats.

They have some principles, apparently, in the eyes of their supporters outside this House but their credibility in this chamber has diminished. It is interesting for us in the official opposition to watch and listen to what my friends on the left say about transportation, and other things as well. They may explain and rationalize all they like. They want the credit for anything constructive this parliament has done, but they accept none of the blame or criticism.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party, a prominent lawyer, has come up with a new legal or parliamentary concept—it could be termed "responsibility without guilt". He castigates the government for its many failures in transportation and other fields but the only time he sounds sincere is when he attacks the official opposition. His logic must be, "the government is not doing anything so let's attack the opposition and blame it on them". He does not include himself in this particular category of an opposition member, obviously.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Progressive Conservative Party realize that the problems of transportation are immense, but much can be done by determined effort and some sort of pragmatic, down to earth approach; doing something that needs to be done. I believe that the majority of members of this House sympathize with the minister when he says that he does not appear to have enough authority to make the type of managerial and policy decisions that he seems to think are now necessary.

We advocate the immediate reassessment of the current goals and managerial policies of Air Canada. We feel that the object should be to ensure that these Crown corporations are devoting sufficient energy to their principal role of providing efficient transportation of goods and people in this country and that they cease participating in activities which are only incidental to this role. There is a great need that the primary role of transportation in this country be filled, and these agencies should be devoting their energies to this end.

I should like to make a suggestion to this House, although it is not primarily related to what I have already said. As far as the safety aspects of transportation are concerned, I believe that the minister should give careful consideration to making public the findings of accident investigations carried out by the CTC, by his ministry and other investigative bodies. The secrecy that presently exists is consistent with the attitude that I find so aggravating so far as the management of our Crown corporation is concerned.

It is obvious that the Minister of Transport is not able to exert sufficient control over the Crown corporation and private sectors in transportation. Certainly, as hon. members from all parties have pointed out, there is a basis for authority to be exercised under the National Transportation Act and, as pointed out by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) yesterday, under the Railway Act. If the minister is sincere in wanting still more authority to deal with these problems, I am sure he would get it speedily if he were to bring forward some concrete measure that would demonstrate his desire to take effective action.

The fact that members have been so reluctant to pass the CNR financing bill, is related to the attitude of which I have just spoken. This particular bill, now known as Bill C-5, previously known as C-164 and before that C-4, has a ridiculous and almost farcical history. It is an indictment of the way these Crown corporations are managed. If you look at the history of this matter, it is easy to see why members of parliament get their backs up about the way the government handled this aspect of the financing of Crown corporations. Little wonder the government is having difficulty getting that particular bill passed.

The executive officers of Air Canada and the CNR will not divulge how much their many vice-presidents are being paid or what their specific responsibilities and duties are. Although I was promised at the last committee hearings by Air Canada that they would let me know how much rent they paid last year, I still have not received the information. The whole financing setup of CNR and Air Canada should be changed, and I put that suggestion forward to the government through you, Mr. Speaker.

In effect, we now have a period covering the CNR and Air Canada financing from January 1, 1971 to June 30, 1974. The very fact that this is possible demonstrates how little control this parliament has over this aspect of Crown corporations. It is obvious that the financial affairs of CNR and Air Canada are not really in the hands of the elected representatives any more. I say to my friends on my left, why nationalize all Canada's transportation if the government cannot control our present Crown transportation agency?

An hon. Member: That does not make Crown corporations bad; that makes the government bad.

Mr. MacKay: That may well be.

I should like to deal with marine policies now, Mr. Speaker, which are of particular interest to me, coming as I do from eastern Canada. It is well known that these are vital to Canada. We have one of the longest coastlines of any country in the world and a great deal of interest has been expressed in reviving a Canadian shipping fleet. This nation should share in the transportation of its export and imports. About one-third of our imports and about 40 per cent of our exports are moved by water. Canadian vessels, chiefly in the Great Lakes fleet, carry about one quarter of our water borne imports. The remainder is carried in foreign flag vessels. That is not a healthy condition. Canadian dollars—$133 million in 1969, for example — were drained away to pay freight charges to those vessels. Much of that money could be kept at home if a Canadian ocean fleet were available to carry our exports and imports.

At the beginning of the 1970's Canada had begun to conclude long-term contracts for large-scale export sales of products such as iron ore, coal and wheat. The prediction is that exports of this type will grow steadily throughout the 1980's. Many will go to the Orient. There is no reason at all why Canadian flag vessels should not carry these exports.

We, in this party, believe that we should definitely concentrate on establishing a viable Canadian merchant fleet. We should also upgrade the Canadian Coastguard service, to provide more comprehensive and efficient environmental and fisheries surveillance and protection. That definitely is needed. I also urge the minister, and I hope he will consider my suggestion worthwhile, to establish an Arctic fleet capable of providing economic transportation to northern Canada and establishing more firmly Canadian sovereignty in northern waters. I also suggest that the minister should pay more attention to the needs of the Ports of Churchill and Prince Rupert, because of their potential for reducing costs to western Canadian shippers.

I see that you are about to say my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. May I close by suggesting this to the minister. If he will bring forward constructive legislative changes which are essential for any reassessment of this country's transportation policy, I am sure he will be able to count not only on our support but on the support of the majority of the members of this House.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member of the Creditiste Party who was to speak just now for allowing me to participate ahead of him. I have a train to meet and I appreciate his co-operation and hope to reciprocate one day.

For the moment I want to talk about two subjects. Neither is controversial and both fall within the ambit of government responsibility rather than of private industry. Both the situations, to which I am about to refer can be rectified. I do not intend to talk at great length, because I know that some people have talked on one subject for years and will talk on it again. I am glad to see the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) in the House as he, too, is interested in the question of pensions of retired railway workers.

I do not pretend to be an expert on the subject of pensions. There is an organization or association which is now looking after the pension problem. It calls itself the Senior Council of Canadian National Pensioners Association. It is headed by a close friend of mine from my community, Dick Wooraker. He gives nearly all his spare time, working virtually without pay in the cause of retired workers.

Several private members bills have been presented on the subject. The one which has intrigued me most is Bill C-139, proposed by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) which, if passed, would go a long way towards rectifying the problem of retired workers. The hon. member might be fortunate in having his bill adopted in private members hour, because it involves nothing more than a change in the regulations.

The group in which I am particularly interested and of which the hon. member for Moncton is aware is a group known as ICR workers who draw their pensions from what is known as the provident fund, that being a fund set up by Parliament away back. Some said it was a wonderful plan. I remember that when my dad died at the age of 56 he was receiving $58 a month pension after 41 years of continuous service, including service in the war years. I always remember the last cheque arriving a few days after he died and our having to send it back. The plan provided nothing for the survivors, for the wives and children. Only a few thousand workers are involved. The union must bear some of the blame for what has happened, because it showed very little interest in that particular group which, for one reason or another, was left with little in the way of pension. That is, when the workers reached age 65, they had little in the way of pension.

I want to talk about other subjects, as well. Let me say that the provident fund was set up by an act of Parliament. It is true that, in 1935, the people involved in that plan were given the opportunity to join the CNR plan. In those days many people were unemployed and those who were not did not have the money to join the CNR plan, the result being that only 110 out of 3,000 elected to transfer to the CNR plan. On the second opportunity in 1941 only 86 transferred to the CNR plan. As of January, 50 employees still worked for the railway and belonged to the old ICR provident fund plan. I understand that about 2,000 pensioners right now are drawing money from the fund.

As a result of attrition, which is the polite way of saying what happens to people over 65, about 2,000 people were left in the plan in 1972. As I say, another 50-odd are to retire. I wonder if we could not, on humanitarian grounds, without needing to worry about putting up a few miserable dollars, transfer these 2,000 people to the CNR plan and treat them as if they had always belonged to it? Could we not treat them in the way that all workers will eventually be treated who retire from the CNR? These people have been the neglected people of this country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I must confess that I have forgotten to mention the subject before, but I am happy to see the hon. member for Moncton present. I know he is concerned about this, as he and other members of the House have talked about it privately on many occasions. I hope they take up the cudgels on behalf of those people who draw benefits from the provident fund.

My other point, and I am trying to stay within the 15-minute limit, concerns transportation, particularly transportation by water in this country. A situation has been developing in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec, which in time I suspect will affect Saint John and Halifax. For years, as those who know anything about longshoremen will tell you, men who worked on the waterfront did casual work which needed strength and little else. In the old days when a ship came in the employers went out to hire men to unload that ship. A battle of wits developed. Workers wanted to stretch out the only work that might be available that week for as long as possible, and ship owners wanted cargoes to be unloaded as quickly as possible. You ran into the strange circumstance on the waterfront of workers impeding productivity and employers engaging in a degree of corruption in order to speed up production.

The situation has improved as a result of the work of the National Harbours Board. Many of the corrupt practices of the past have been virtually eliminated in the trade, in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. Good collective agreements have been entered into, under which virtually every impedence to productivity on the waterfront has been eliminated. In return for the elimination of restrictive practices, the employers, in the collective agreement, have agreed to guarantee the workers 37 weeks of work per year at 40 hours per week. We talk about unemployment insurance; but what is it? It is a plan of which employers have taken advantage. The workers have assumed what should be the social, moral and legal obligation of employers, namely, improving the conditions of workers, by providing income for workers all year round instead of for three, four or five months of the year. We generally forget that the UIC helps employers as well as employees. The ones who cry most about it are the biggest users of the funds, the employers in the construction industry, and yet unemployment insurance benefits subsidize their payroll.

In these three ports we have employers who brought in a modified guaranteed annual income. They said to the workers, the longshoremen, eliminate the restrictive practices in the existing collective agreement, the size of the gang, give us complete flexibility and in return we promise you work for 40 hours a week for 37 weeks over the life of the contract, that is the normal period in the ports because of ice.

What has happened has been that, as a result of this better collective agreement, we have a tremendous increase in productivity in these ports. Add to this increased productivity in these ports, increased mechanization of what is known as break-bulk cargo; add to that the tremendous growth in the containerized field or technological change, as was mentioned by the very eloquent member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). When you put those ingredients together, you have a situation in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec which results in greater volume with substantially less people to the point that management, some months ago, bought up, if I may use that expression, 550 men. In other words, 550 men were fired or laid off in return for a certain amount of money. Despite that, there is still a surplus of men available on the waterfront.

When that collective agreement comes to an end at the end of this year, unless something drastic is done, it is very obvious what is going to happen. Management is going to refuse to continue the feature of a guaranteed annual income for the duration of the new contract. They are going to try and reduce the work force by between 500 and 1,000 men. It is quite natural that the longshoremen will want to revert to their old practices, if only to protect the only job they are trained for or capable of doing.

What has management done to alleviate the present dilemma? Management bought up these men at $12,000 each. This is being paid for by a royalty assessed on the goods coming into the port. That is fair enough. The money is to be borrowed from the bank. If it is to be repaid in a very short period of time over the life of the present collective agreement, it is obvious that the royalty has to be fairly substantial since the money involved is fairly substantial. If this is done, the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec will no longer be competitive with New York and other ports.

I am not a member of the cabinet. One or two of the cabinet members present are not paying too much attention anyway. If they were, they would appreciate one thing. That is, all that is needed to make the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec competitive with New York, Saint John, Halifax, Boston or any other port around the world, is in place, productivity, containerization, and mechanization. Incidentally, buying hopper cars for private industry is never a problem. Why then is it a problem for the government to act as a guarantor and nothing more in order that the needed bank loan can be amortized over 10 or 20 years. The employers are capable of paying the money back over any period, but in order to pay it over the life of a contract, the royalty must be of such dimension that the port would no longer be competitive. This problem has been unsettled for six or seven months. Nobody really knows where they are going.

You can say what you like about the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), but he is a humanitarian. He understands the most important thing is people. I am encouraged that he is there. If anyone can solve the problem, he can. The minister understands human relations. He understands that productivity is based not only on machinery, but on the willingness of people to accept it. What he needs is the support of the rest of the cabinet—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: —in order that he can introduce a concept that I do not think is Eutopian. Simply as a result of technological change and the tremendous importance these ports play in the general prosperity of the province, we are only asking and the Merchant Carriers Association is only suggesting that the government act as a guarantor, perhaps through the National Harbours Board, so the ports can remain productive and free of labour unrest. That seems to be common sense. In fact, I could justify it if the government picked up the tab for the elimination of these particular workers for no other reason than that productivity and technological change have caught up with them. We did it for the textile and shoe industries.

We have seen what happened with the railways. It has come to the point where 250,000 jobs have been reduced to 120,000 jobs and 120,000 passive men. Some people think they are strike happy. They think the railway unions wield unnecessary power. I suggest those people take a look at Judge Hall's arbitration report which is just an honest opinion of an honest individual. They will see his arbitration cost both railways tremendously more than a collective agreement arrived at between two parties would ever have cost the CNR and CPR. This fact indicates that in all our collective bargaining over the past 15 years the strong parties were the companies, not the unions.

I am just making a case for the cabinet to turn around and help the Minister of Transport solve what can be a very difficult problem. This gentleman understands human relations and industrial relations. You cannot divorce that from reality. You cannot make this country as it should be, capital intensive, and introduce technological change without resistance from the worker if it means the worker is to be shoved out on the street without a care.

Technological change in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec in the form of containerization and mechanization means a reduction of 1,000 jobs over the next few years. The companies are prepared to buy up these men so they can take $10,000 or $12,000 and start a new life in some other field. They could buy a cab, a home or a business. The Merchant Carriers Association is prepared to pay for it. All they need is the government's guarantee in order that the port will not be put at a competitive disadvantage to the extent you can unload a container and bring it in by Amtrac to Montreal from New York cheaper than you can bring it into Montreal by waterpower today.

You cannot divorce the two. We need a humanitarian in transport. If this country in the next 50 years is to be kept together it will take perhaps more than culture; it will need a wise transportation policy. I make this plea to my former colleagues to accept the wisdom of the Minister of Transport and do the right thing. Give him the authority to authorize some branch of his department to act as a guarantor of a normal business venture.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott)—Health—Presence of DES in United States cattle imported into Canada; the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth)—Energy—Reason Imperial Oil allowed to drill for oil and gas in Beaufort Sea before completion of environmental studies.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED NEED FOR NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY, NATIONALIZATION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC AND APPOINTMENT OF CONTROLLER

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That in the opinion of this House all forms of national transportation should be integrated as a public utility to serve Canada's transportation needs instead of being governed by considerations of competition and profit so that Parliament can deal effectively with freight rate discrimination, rail line abandonment, insufficient railway equipment, inadequate rail passenger service, and urban and northern transportation;

This House is further of the opinion that to this end the Canadian Pacific Railway, including its subsidiaries, should be brought under public ownership and that both national systems should be under full public control;

And, further, in order to meet the present emergency in the movement of grain and other products, this House is of the opinion that the Government should consider the immediate appointment of a transport controller with full authority to allocate and control railway rolling stock.

● (1650)

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, on January 4 of this year, in this House, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I asked for the unanimous consent of the House so that ways would be found to reduce the number of railway accidents across Canada, especially derailments. I even proposed the appointment of a royal commission on the administration of railways and on the means to be taken to remedy the consequences of this deplorable deterioration of this service of prime necessity and national interest.

As usual, my motion under Standing Order 43 did not receive the unanimous consent of the House. I notice with pleasure today that a full day has been reserved for the study of the desired improvement in railway management.

In my constituency, at Mont-Joli, a Canadian National employee in charge of checking the trains retired last December. He was not replaced. By the way, I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that I sent him a request about this and that I have not yet received an answer in my office. I asked him to be good enough to appoint an immediate replacement for this supervisor who had retired.

Another time, a freight car crashed into the Mont-Joli station partly demolishing it in a tragic and funny way. Mr. Speaker, it should not be forgotten that the Mont-Joli station is especially busy since Price Brothers operate a sawmill six miles from Mont-Joli and ship all their lumber by CN railway. It greatly increases the activity in the Mont-Joli railway yard.

As I said, the Price Company uses that railway yard so that the railway traffic controller plays a vital role and cannot vanish with impunity. In early March, there was another funny and costly accident which could also have been tragic. Seven or eight passenger cars ran off the line near Luceville between Mont-Joli and Rimouski. That time, the engine as well as eight cars completely left the tracks. Luckily, there was no loss of life, but I think that some people were injured. It should be noted that 15 minutes before the derailment of the east-bound train another passenger train had just gone by.

I should like to make a suggestion to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) about the supervision of railway tracks. I would suggest that after the passage of every train, the track be inspected in order that such accidents may be prevented. This would provide employment, since people complain about the high rate of unemployment today. At the same time, it would prevent costly accidents like those that have already happened.

Early in March, another funny and costly accident happened, as I mentioned earlier, when a car lost its shipment of $27,000 between Toronto and Winnipeg. This shipment consisted of 5 cent coins which were sown over a land unsuitable for cultivating silver or nickel.

I agree that those are trivial incidents compared with the big businesses that handle billions of dollars right across Canada, one of the wealthiest and most capitalistic countries in the world.

I think we should congratulate the opposition party that took the initiative of calling the attention of the government to our railroads which have long been the pride of Canadians, financiers, administrators and employees. One wonders now whether that reputation is not about to wane.

As I cannot trust my impressions alone in forming an opinion, I get my information wherever I can, but always from the most reliable sources. For instance, early in January, a CP report published in Le Droit of Ottawa mentioned that it is the CTC that asks the companies to reduce the speed of the trains, to limit their loads and better inspect the rails, and this all year round.

They try everywhere to reduce the number of employees, thus increasing unemployment and encouraging lower quality services. There is nothing to laugh about, Mr. Speaker, when we look at all the derailments which have occurred since 1970. Referring to statistics for 1959, I find that 40 derailments occurred that year, 69 in 1969 and 132 in 1972, accounting for an average increase of 90 per cent in those three years.

That makes me suggest that railways are in a very bad shape. I was listening earlier to the minister expressing his intention to improve that situation.

In the past, as I remember, the ballast under the rails rested on slag and accidents were fairly infrequent because the tracks were very well maintained. There were four mem assigned to the maintenance of each seven mile section. Inspections took place daily and often after the passage of various passenger or freight trains.

Today it is thought wise to extend sections to 18 or 20 miles, I think, and two employees and one foreman look after and maintain the tracks.

With regards to the inspection of railways, I wish to inform the minister that, it is rather funny to say, the employees and the inspectors of the tracks now travel often by car on the highway. They drive around and claim that they did inspect the tracks.

Also, I would bring the attention of the minister to the fact it is often said by public servants that there are more chiefs than Indians, and to my mind such is the situation prevailing now in the CN. There are too many civil servants and not enough employees to maintain and accelerate the development of railways.

I do not know if the minister is aware of this, but there are civil servants in the railways companies who enjoy all sorts of privileges, including the use of a company car, credit cards, paid expenses and often a bottle of scotch, up to a maximum of $50 a month.

When they need to replace a window at the Rimouski station, they must send for a worker from Campbellton to do the necessary work.

There is so much merchandise, pieces of rail and sleepers along the way between Halifax and Vancouver that, if an inventory were made, the amount would be enough to pay the salaries of all employees for a year.

Therefore, the CN is certainly poorly administered. There are too many civil servants, too many unjustified expenses and an enormous waste of money.

If we compare the derailments that took place during the same period for CP and CN trains, we find that for 1969 to 1971 CPR had 52 derailments and 80 in 1972. When compared with 132 for the CP, one must admit that a private company certainly takes more care of its rolling stock and railway tracks than a publicly owned company such as the CN.

I called for a royal inquiry on the quality of railroad transportation on October 24, 1973 in a speech I delivered in this House. Members of the New Democratic Party go faster and recommend definite measures, such as, for instance, public ownership of the CP and integration of the whole railroad transportation system into a single government controlled utility.

That is what I call coming quickly to extreme and definite solutions before reconsidering the whole problem and comparing the efficiency of both systems, namely a national enterprise on one hand and a private enterprise on the other. Therefore, we should analyse all comparative results of both companies, namely the CNR, a government controlled company, and the CPR, a privately owned company.

That is the main point to be clearled up. Despite its profits that are distributed among its shareholders, one often wonders whether the private enterprise is not even more efficient, more profitable and less expensive than a public enterprise. A serious royal inquiry might enable us to determine more precisely the deficiencies of the present administrations and to take remedial action as required without disturbing anything in the existing financial and administrative structures.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, to know how to distinguish between casual and localised deficiencies of administration that may be corrected right away, and basic and structural deficiencies that would demand a major overhaul and a complete change in organisations. Under current circumstances, what is the best decision to take? Should we take a drastic decision prior to a royal inquiry or should we conduct a royal inquiry prior to taking a decision fitting the circumstances?

I do not think this question will be settled today but I commend the NDP party for drawing the attention of the government and of this House on a major question which deserves our best attention and efforts if we want to maintain our railways prestige and current reputation which are recognized throughout the world as most efficient in such a great country whose needs and temperatures are so varied.

Today is not the day to deal with the many circumstances connected with the administration of our railways but the whole financial system of the CN and CP needs an in-depth study. In both cases, we are speaking of financing in terms of billions and in both cases an interest rate differential of 3, 5 and 10 per cent has considerable effects on administration costs both for the state company and the private company.

And the whole question of interest rates, in the field of railways as in other areas, is a matter under the supreme authority of the government of Canada under the British North America Act. It is not because of the dividends paid to CN stockholders that administration is too costly but because of the interests paid on its debt in the form of bonds and, in this connection, the CPR and CNR are both suffering from exorbitant interest rates on billions of eternal debts which are renewed automatically every 20, 30 or 40 years at higher interest rates. The same applies to the bonds issued by the government of Canada.

Perhaps you noticed again that last Monday all our major newspapers mentioned that the government of Canada is floating a $550 million issue at 6½ and 8 per cent, of which $350 million will be used to redeem a maturing issue which was marketed at 5 per cent. Is it known that without any further effort on their part, Canadian and foreign millionnaires will receive some $15,000 or $30,000 more per million in the future, that is a total of $65,000, $70,000 or $80,000 instead of $50,000 during several years more, and that finally, the government, unable to pay for its debts, will have to renew its loans at still higher rates? Is that known? Was that thought of? Are these mere trifles? Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. The CN should go through a good inventory so that measures can be taken to ensure the best decisions are made to meet more satisfactorily the needs and hopes of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by my leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), contains a fundamental part of the New Democratic Party's policy on transportation. I am sorry that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has had to leave, but I hope that his parliamentary secretary will hear my words and take them back to him, and that they will persuade him to accept the points made by my leader as well as the points I have to make.

This issue has been raised two or three times in every session of parliament in the past almost six years that I have been here. The same problem has confronted us in almost every one of these debates; it is with us now, and it will continue to be with us unless we make some fundamental changes in transportation policy and in how we operate our transportation systems.

Transportation is fundamental to the social and economic life of Canada. It is so essential to our national wellbeing that it falls naturally into the category of being a utility. The priority of any utility, of course, must be the provision of service. The principle of service must replace that of competition and must supersede that of profitmaking. As my leader said, this is not necessarily socialist dogma, though socialist thinkers originated the idea. It has been accepted by governments and parties of all political stripes that anything that is an essential public service is best operated as a utility that is publicly owned and operated.

Society, after many decades of bitter experience, has learned that competition and private profit have no place—and I repeat, no place—in developing and operating an essential public service. Society has brought into being many kinds of services under public ownership, such as our streets, sidewalks, highways, sewer and water systems, city transit systems, and in much of Canada our telephone and electrical systems. Major national modes of transportation remain under a mix of private and public ownership, the prime objective of both of which, I regret to say, is competition and profitmaking.

The present national transportation policy and the legislation of 1967 enshrine withim them the principle of competition, which does not allow for or require the meeting of the transportation needs of the people or the economy. Neither do they recognize transportation as a vehicle to foster regional economic development. For too long our transportation systems have discriminated against people and places because of our geography. Those same systems were also party to the prevention of economic development in Atlantic and western Canada.

The New Democratic Party believes that these major modes of transportation must be placed under public democratic ownership and made to function for the real social and economic use of this country. By making our major transportation systems a public utility, so-called competition is then automatically ruled out, as has been the case over the years with other kinds of utilities. That is the first essential of a national transportation policy which will bring about a real national transportation system, namely that it is a publicly owned, operated and controlled utility.

To be more specific, the New Democratic Party believes, and a New Democratic Party government would undertake to implement, the following. I shall go through my list of points for as long as my time will permit.

● (1710)

First, to emphasize what my leader had to say on this point, and again I hope what I have to say will persuade my hon. friends in other parties, we would bring into public ownership the Canadian Pacific system, now called Canadian Pacific Limited. This would include the subsidiary companies over which Canadian Pacific has ownership or control and which are felt necessary either to the wellbeing of a national transportation system or other national interests, with the full proviso that no employee shall suffer from the transfer to public ownership. For example, in addition to CP Rail right of way, trackage, buildings, rolling stock, etc., all lands and mineral rights still held would be returned to the people of Canada. I might say that while the figure of 25 million acres is the one recalled by the public and members here, they should know that all land grants to the Canadian Pacific system since 1881 from national, provincial and municipal governments total 43,962,546 acres. These lands and the mineral rights must be returned to the people of Canada.

The taking into public ownership would include CP Air as that is an essential public utility of transportation. It is foolish to have competing airlines. It would be as foolish to have competing subway systems or sewage and water systems. Competition has no place in a national public utility. Something that is a natural monopoly should not be the subject of competition.

CP Oil and Gas and Pan-Canadian Petroleums, both Canadian Pacific subsidiaries, should, in the national interest rather than just transportation interests, be taken over. I believe they would be marvellous addition to a real national petroleum corporation, and, as the government is proposing legislation in that area, this would be a good beginning.

CP hotels are essential and a proper adjunct to a publicly owned and held national transportation system. CP Telecommunications should also be publicly owned since, for the purpose of market sharing and the elimination of competition, this area is already jointly operated with Canadian National and they have divided up the country between them, so that all that remains to be done is the transfer of ownership. CP trucks and ships again represent a necessary part of a national transportation utility system. CP ships could provide the beginning of a real Canadian merchant marine.

My next point is that the Canadian National Railway system must be relieved of the burden of debt that has been continually compounded since its inception as a way of bailing out bankrupt private railways. One of the methods I suggest of doing this is by having full disclosure in respect of those who hold the remaining private debt of the CNR and transferring that private debt, which I believe amounts to something in the neighbourhood of $1.8 billion, to the public accounts of Canada, and in this way the people of Canada would finally become the sole shareholders of their railway.

In addition, our national transportation policy would requires the elimination of freight and passenger rate inequities through equalization or subsidization or a combination of both. There should be a moratorium on rail line abandonments with an assurance that the railways maintain adequate standards of facilities and services, as well as maintaining sufficient rolling stock and locomotive power.

In addition, the NDP advocates the restoration of certain services already eliminated. May I say to all of those who think that all we should do is take over the railway right of way and road leeds, this would be an economic disaster, since both railways have allowed a major portion of their trackage and roadbeds to deteriorate to such an extent it would require the expenditure of several hundreds of millions of dollars to bring them back up to proper standards, and the taxpayers of Canada would again have to pay for the mistakes of previous transportation policies and the deliberate mistakes, at least in my mind, of our railway systems.

My next point is that by direct assistance or in conjunction with the provinces we should develop a publicly owned, provincial and regional air carrier system which would be integrated and operated in conjunction with our national air transportation system. We should have provision for substantial expansion of air services, routes and facilities at subsidized fares and rates in the northern territories and probably in the northern parts of some of our provinces.

My next point is that our policy would provide that a rate-setting structure, developed under a public utility approach, would be based on the cost of shipment rather than on the value of the commodity shipped. An NDP federal government, acting in concert with provinces and territories, would assume direct responsibility for all matters of transportation rate setting and related activities rather than allowing federal regulatory bodies to assume wide discretionary powers in this area. In order to reflect regional concerns in the operating of a public transportation utility there should be direct regional representation on regulatory bodies responsible for transportation policies, and the provinces would be fully involved in the setting of trucking rates across the country.

My next point is that the Port of Churchill must be developed as a major supply depot for the north and, along with Prince Rupert, be expanded to handle larger quantities of western agricultural and finished products. In other words, an NDP government would develop these into major seaports.

The next point I have here is that we would provide for greater participation and input by transportation employees regarding their pensions, working conditions and safety procedures. Beyond that, we would give them more direct participation in the operating of the railroad or the airline because they know how to run the transportation systems by which they are now employed.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) spoke out partially against the idea of public ownership in this field. I have only to remind him and all other members that with the exception of Canada and the United States, the governments of pretty well every other country in the world, of all political affiliations and persuasion, democratic and dictatorial, have transportation systems which are publicly owned and operated. We can learn some lessons from these countries, and I think of nations in western Europe, Japan, Australia, the Soviet Union and Scandinavian countries, all of which gave up a long time ago the idea of transportation being a place for competition or profit making.

I want to submit, as sincerely as I can, that there are some areas of human endeavour in which those two principles, which are adhered to by those who claim to believe so strongly in the so-called free enterprise system, have no legitimate place, and where competition in fact prevents such an endeavour from functioning properly. Even the Minister of Transport now admits that competition in transportation in Canada does not work.

With a publicly owned national transportation system, with all major modes of transportation included, we could have the efficient and integrated transportation of goods, services and people at the least possible cost, without discriminating against Canadians because of where they happen to live, meeting the transportation needs of any given part of the country, and meeting the transportation requirements of the producers of any given goods whether they be agricultural or manufactured products. It would allow for a much more equitable division and distribution of Canada's processing, manufacturing and distribution industries. Most of all I believe it would help to do as much or more for national unity than anything else.

One issue which has divided Canadians for decades has been the kind of transportation and communication systems we have had. This has caused us to quarrel among one another since the 1880's. This is still the case. The bitterness and division, I submit, would be substantially reduced if this and succeeding parliaments would move to bring about a publicly-owned and operated national transportation utility in the best interests of Canadians and the country.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the motion before us I am sure no one will disagree about the problems referred to in this motion connected with the transportation system. I think there is agreement that there must be more integration in respect of certain forms of transportation and that some immediate action must be taken to speed up the movement of grain and other important commodities across this land. I believe also there would be general agreement to the appointment of a railway transportation controller or coordinator immediately. However, I believe the agreement ends there.

We have before us a simplistic socialist policy, based on the philosophy, that civil servants can provide an effective and efficient transportation system better than the private sector. That I suggest is rather naïve. It is the major thrust of the NDP solution, but that is the kind of unadulterated socialistic rhetoric in which they engage. I was interested to note that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) indicated some qualified support for the proposals advanced by the NDP. I am not surprised, given the cosy relationship that exists between the NDP and the Liberals. I would suspect the government could very well be directed on that course. Judging from statements made by the minister outside the House, this particular course may be undertaken sooner than later. There has been a great deal of cross fertilization between the two groups.

One thing my NDP friends forget is the fact that there are two major nationalized transportation companies in this country which do absolutely no better and in many cases worse than those involved in the private sector. If nationalized transportation is the most desirable thing, the CN should be a model of railway transportation services in this country. I ask hon. members opposite and their colleagues to the left if, for example, the CN does any better than the CPR in the movement of grain, in the movement of lumber or in the movement of fruits and vegetables, either east or west, or does the CNR maintain its trackage and its equipment in a more desirable fashion than the CPR. The answer to that is no. The NDP know this very well and yet they say we should nationalize everything. This does not add up. The point I wish to make very emphatically—and here I point out that the CNR is as guilty as the CPR—is that the railways have failed to fulfil their mandate to the Canadian people.

The mandate of the railways is to provide an efficient and effective service of rail, freight and passenger transportation for the Canadian people. Furthermore, this government has failed to hold the railways to this mandate. The government does have power to do this. I intend to point this out later in my remarks. Let us look at the operations of the CNR. Year in and year out the government-owned corporation is heavily subsidized at the expense of the taxpayers. Rather than have a model of an advanced futuristic rail system, we have an antiquated system that has failed to recognize and develop new technology. It has failed to upgrade and maintain its equipment. It has failed to maintain its trackage in a safe and efficient condition. It has failed to meet the challenge of the twentieth century in respect of rail transportation requirements.

What has it engaged in? My hon. friend from Central Nova pointed this out. It has engaged in some exotic collateral ventures such as building towers, establishing shopping centres, and engaging in other real estate ventures such as luxury hotels. Only the CN can lose money in the operation of the hotels. It has even been involved in consulting agencies. I want to reiterate that the government must tell the railway to honour their commitment to the Canadian people and do the job for which they were given the mandate.

I believe the prominence of the railroads must be restored. They are a vital asset of this country. They must be upgraded, conserved and fully utilized. But the Liberals, and this particular government as well as previous Liberal governments, have allowed the railways to merrily go on their way. This has cost the taxpayers a great deal of money. The CNR now has a debt of $1.8 billion with notes bearing 5 per cent interest. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what private corporation can borrow money at that rate of interest. Still the CNR loses $25 million a year. And this is a company which has assets totalling $4 billion. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) can squawk all he wants. He will certainly have an opportunity to speak later and I will listen to him, although I have listened for many years and never heard him say anything constructive.

Let us not forget—and this is for the benefit of my NDP friends—that back in 1952 the government wrote off half of the CNR debt of $1.5 billion and further reduced it by $120 million later on. That is the fabulous success story of the CNR. I do not think we have to blame its failure on competition but rather on mismanagement and government misdirection.

What is the CNR's major competition? Of course, it is the trucking industry. The CNR was losing money long before the trucking industry was established and long before the National Transportation Act was in effect, so I suggest the argument proposed by the NDP has absolutely no validity. Using their argument we could say we would be better off with one political party rather than four. We are down to three now. I do not want this to be taken as a vendetta against the employees working for the CNR because there are many faithful, hard-working citizens of the country employed by the CNR. However, I do have some criticism of the management and above all the concept of nationalized enterprises.

What about the trucking industry? I want to reiterate that so far as I am concerned, in my humble opinion the principle of competition is not all that bad in fostering an effective transportation network. Certainly there have to be trade-offs when considering competition and the necessary economies of scale, but on the whole I suggest it has been a reasonable and realistic goal. However, the government has failed to implement the provisions of the National Transportation Act to carry out the basic principle of that legislation, namely, competition. It has failed to take the necessary initiatives. I blame provincial governments as well, including my own province of Alberta, for failing to reach any sort of uniform agreement so far as reciprocal arrangements and a uniform code of regulations are concerned so that the trucking industry could operate throughout this country unimpaired and uninhibited. If the provinces cannot reach some agreement, the federal government should take stern action to bring about an agreement that will allow motor vehicle transport to operate effectively across the country. At one time the federal government had that power, but the Liberals gave it away back in 1954.

● (1730)

Just look at the melange of weight restrictions that the motor trucker is faced with across the country. For example, look at weight limits for a tandem tractor-trailer combination. In Manitoba we have a GVW of 80,000 pounds, in Saskatchewan it is 74,000 pounds, in Alberta 72,000 pounds, in British Columbia 82,000 pounds and in both Ontario and Quebec it is 82,000 pounds. The western provinces seem to be the ones that are squawking the loudest about the removal of freight rate anomalies. Perhaps they should be the ones to take the initiative in building up their road systems, in conjunction with the federal government if necessary, so that a uniform weight code can be established.

Another matter which is greatly bothering the trucking industry at present is the status of the railway freight rate freeze. In short, this has cast a very gloomy shadow upon the trucking industry. We all know that freezing railway freight rates automatically freezes the trucking industry's freight rates because the two forms of transportation compete with each other. Yet we have the government granting something like $41 million to the railways to compensate them for the losses they incurred as a result of the freeze, while nothing goes to the trucking industry. In the miscellaneous estimates committee today we were not even given an opportunity to ask for an explanation of that situation. Mr. Speaker, we have three major railroads operating in Canada today. We have the CNR, the CPR, and the "railroading" job that is done by the miscellaneous estimates committee.

The government does absolutely nothing for the truckers. The trucking industry may very well be wrecked if something is not done soon. As I say, if you freeze railway freight rates you automatically freeze trucking rates. The trucking industry is not immune from inflationary pressures. Diesel fuel has risen by six cents a gallon since July last, and I understand it is due to increase in the order of 8 cents during the next month or so. Salaries to employees have increased by 15 per cent. The cost of tires has increased by 15 per cent to 20 per cent, and parts by 20 per cent to 25 per cent—if they can be obtained. How is this industry going to survive? Is the way it is being treated fair? I say it is discriminatory.

Let me warn the minister and his socialist friends that truckers have been instrumental in holding down freight rates in Canada. Moreover, they have been instrumental in making railways toe the line in maintaining decent services where competition exists. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Transport alluded to this at the western economic opportunities conference in Calgary when he said that competition between the railways and the truckers, as was envisaged by the National Transportation Act, has been of great benefit to the people at large. I agree with that. I only hope he will give equal treatment to both sectors of the transportation industry. As a matter of fact, he himself said we must recognize the importance of equal treatment for all modes of transportation. I would ask the minister to live up to that undertaking, because if the trucking industry disappears or is greatly diluted we all know what the railways do when they do not have competition: they simply charge what the traffic will bear. I suggest to the minister, in all fairness and on behalf of the truckers, that if he is going to subsidize the railways he must give equal treatment to the truckers.

I have mentioned the record of the CNR as a Crown corporation. I could also refer to Air Canada and its move into collateral ventures. Air Canada is part of the same family as the CNR and therefore has the same lofty ideals. My colleague from Central Nova touched on those. We are getting into a situation where these Crown corporations are engaging in far too many other activities rather than fulfilling the mandates which they were given. This is why we propose to separate the operations of these two Crown corporations and appoint different boards of directors which would make them answerable and responsible to parliament for meeting their particular obligations. We firmly believe that under the present system, corporations such as Air Canada and the CNR do not answer effectively to parliament. We have lost parliamentary control.

We have had relatively poor performance from Air Canada, particularly in the areas of service and profit, notwithstanding the fact that it has had basically a captive market, low interest on its debt, an excellent route structure, the highest load factor in the industry and behind it the nationalistic pride and sentiment which make Canadians travel by Air Canada. In short, it does a poor job when compared with other trunk carriers on the North American continent which do not have these built-in advantages. This Crown corporation to which we have taken strong objection basically has become a haven for political friends of the government, immune from the shareholders, immune from the close scrutiny of parliament and engaged in the pleasant task of empire building. We all know what happened in Air Canada with respect to labour relations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the motion moved by the leader of the NDP because it gives me an opportunity to deal with a subject that it is very much in the minds of Canadians, including those in my constituency. I shall deal mainly with that part of the motion which reads:

> —as a public utility to serve Canada's transportation needs instead of being governed by considerations of competition and profit—

This is just the occasion I had been waiting for to reassess in fact the purpose the Canadian railways had assigned themselves. The original purpose and the philosophy that prevailed when the railways were built were to forge a link between all Canadians from all parts of Canada. It was somewhat like the spirit that prevailed at the time the CBC, Canada's national network, was developed—a venture or a project that could not be expected to record a profit in the foreseeable years and that the state alone could provide that service to which all Canadians were entitled. Railways belong to that type of service, Mr. Speaker. That service should be available to all Canadians. As the years went by, Mr. Speaker, I believe the purpose for which the national railways were built was lost in that under the banner of effective administration we are more interested in profits and in showing interesting figures to shareholders than in serving the purpose that the railways had first undertaken to achieve.

If one looks at the circumstances in which railways were built, and we were reminded a while ago that no less than 43,920,000 acres of Canadian land were given to the two main railways companies, one realizes, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose in building those two railways was really to provide communications between all Canadians, somewhat, as I said a while ago, like the spirit that prevailed when the CBC was established. That philosophy is waning because of that passion for administrative efficiency that calls for showing profits.

I believe the time has come and this motion is the opportunity we need to reexamine perhaps the real purpose of the railway companies.

We must consider the enormous costs of transportation at the present time, when 36 per cent of the mileage travelled by the public in urban centres such as Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Hamilton and Quebec City, is done by automobile. Actually, while the cost of transportation by car continues to increase and that this mode of transportation is very costly for governments, we do not have at our disposal the figures concerning the costs of maintenance and construction of roads in the province of Quebec.

As a simple example, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that, recently, either last October or November, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) announced the participation of the Canadian government in the development of autoroute No. 13 which will join Mirabel Airport to Dorval Airport. Thus, for a road of 13 linear miles, the cost is estimated at $130 million, or $10 million per linear mile.

I wonder whether the Canadian economy can afford such a fabulous luxury at $10 million a mile. I would recall the huge amounts which have been invested at the beginning of the 20th century for building tracks such as those I have in my constituency. This is a CPR track between Montreal and Mont-Laurier and it is used by only three trains each week at hours which do not meet requirements. I intend to revert to this subject which is of some interest to my constituents.

However, I would like to proceed with my examination of transportation cost in Canada, specifically the most popular means of transportation—cars. Transportation expenses are becoming increasingly prohibitive for Canadians and both CP and CN are studying this continuously aggravating problem to try and find solutions.

In the Speech from the Throne there are several important items but two of them are particularly important for those interested in transportation problems.

Let me read extracts from the Speech from the Throne, and I quote:

> Transportation in particular is a key factor in regional development. A number of measures will be taken in the larger context of ensuring that Canada's transportation capability supports the government's national goals and is safe and efficient.

And further on:

> Steps will be taken to end any discrimination in freight rates.

Another part in the Speech from the Throne advocated and I quote:

> Improvements in Canadian grain rail transportation capabilities.

Certainly the government is most concerned about this question in view of the cost of road building and of the necessity to protect the environment, a question increasingly exciting to Canadians. The Department of Transport is already engaged in important research work, Mr. Speaker, to develop means of transportation meeting present needs.

I indicated a moment ago the concern of my constituents for the transportation problem. I thank the Minister of Transport for mentioning in his speech my interest in improvements to transportation in my constituency. It becomes increasingly expensive to build highways, bridges and overpasses. A rational use of structures built some eighty years ago must be done. To this end, Mr. Speaker, I have made representations to the president of the CPR to re-establish the services of this company to travellers between Montreal and Mont-Laurier, a run which goes through a good part of the constituency I represent in the House of Commons.

To my first letter of December 21, 1973, the president of CPR answered in somewhat unusual terms. This is what he answered to the request I made, and I quote:

● (1740)

[English]

In its decision and order of December 14, 1973, the railway transport committee of the Railway Transport Commission declared the present passenger service to Mont Laurier uneconomic and ordered that the service be continued.

As I indicated a while ago, Mr. Speaker, I know the operation of the railroads is to become profitable in the name of an efficient administration, but I say that it is a challenge to the administrators of the Canadian Pacific; and I say to them that if they gave adequate service, with modern equipment, I am convinced that in next to no time the service we ask of them would be profitable.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that since I launched that campaign of representations to the CP administration, no fewer than about twenty municipalities in my riding have already supported them through resolutions. In fact, 14 associations made representations and recommendations to me, assuring me of their support; a large number of citizens in my riding who travel daily between Montreal, Sainte-Agathe, Sainte-Adèle and Saint-Jérôme have written to me expressing their support for the campaign I launched with the view to restoring the Canadian Pacific service.

[English]

To this end, in my last letter to the chairman of the CPR on March 4 I made the following recommendations:

1. Immediate inauguration of daily commuter service between Mont Laurier and Montreal with trains leaving Mont Laurier every morning and returning each evening.

2. Beginning in the fall of this year, regular weekend ski trains providing same-day service to the Laurentians and back to Montreal.

That is for the skiers who go to the Laurentians region.

3. Renovation of existing stations along the line as required.

4. A survey of the potential commuter market between St.-Jerome and Montreal. (One is reminded of the recent order of the Canadian Transport Commission that the CNR provide commuter service between Barrie and Toronto).

5. An in-depth assessment of present rolling stock which is used to service this line with a mind to providing whatever equipment required to fulfil future needs. (The practice of allowing usage to meet the service that existing equipment can provide is "putting the cart before the horse").

6. A study to determine the linking of present rail commuter needs with a future rapid transit link between Mirabel airport and downtown Montreal. It appears that for much of the route, existing CPR lines will be used.

[Mr. Dupras.]

Those, Mr. Speaker, were my representations to the president of the Canadian Pacific and I hope that he will give them serious consideration because I have no intention of changing my mind in view of the unexpected support that I am getting from the population of my constituency as well as of Montreal, and in view of the ecological needs that are at stake. I now find it unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that each time the construction of a new road is announced, a swath of at least 200 feet of often fertile land is taken over and the scenery is irreparably damaged.

For all these reasons, I believe that the facilities that the CP owns from Montreal to Mont-Laurier should be put to use as soon as possible.

I therefore ask all those who are concerned with this question to support me because I believe that this line which I mentioned earlier could show a profit in a few months, and that it could enable us to prove that the Canadian population really needs a modern public transportation service. If we compare the services and equipment that the Europeans have with our own, it is easy to see why Canadians no longer travel by train.

This is regrettable because it is an excellent way to travel, and a safe way which does not endanger the environment.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the mover of this motion, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), for his initiative, and as I stated at the beginning of my comments, he has my support for one part of the motion, that which concerns the railway operations of the Canadian Pacific.

● (1750)

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the time remaining before six o'clock I shall try to cover a number of items. I know I will not complete my remarks before six, so I shall probably speak again at eight o'clock.

I was interested to hear the minister's remarks. In his speech, when speaking about the difference between the Tories and the Liberals, he said the only difference was that the Liberals are more skilful. I am sure he did not mean they are more skilful in bringing forward a transportation policy, because that is what this debate is about. Members of my party for years have been saying there is no difference between the Liberals and the Tories. I was pleased to hear such a distinguished gentleman as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) confirm our view.

Others taking part in this debate have dealt with various difficulties associated with achieving an efficient and integrated transportation system in Canada. They have also talked about how competition in the private sector has impeded the functioning of an industry so necessary to our economic survival. Some of us in my party view transportation not only as another industry but as a required public utility.

The leader of my party asserted that we face our present transportation mess because both our multinational corporations, the CN being the so-called public corporation and Canadian Pacific being the private one, have followed identical policies directed to making profits which are largely based on the principle of greed. I wish to spend a few moments talking about the philosophy of greed and what greed does to the morale of those working in the industry. I say that because a high level of employee morale is vital for the successful running of any transport system. You can have all the good equipment in the world, but if the morale of the employees is poor you will not get the most out of your equipment. Productivity will lag, no matter how much you have spent in purchasing and maintaining equipment.

I will make a few general remarks on topics such as wages and working conditions and, of course, rail safety. Then I want to speak briefly about the inadequacies of pensions, especially with regard to those who have already retired and have nobody left to speak on their behalf except possibly the muscular member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In all these areas the record of the railway companies has been appalling.

At one time, most people who worked for the railways looked on railroading as a lifetime career. Now, because of conditions which have persisted over the past 10 or 20 years, that attitude on the part of employees has been eroded to the point where they are leaving the railways in droves. The CNR, with respect to which information is more readily available and which is therefore subject to more criticism than is the CNR, loses 15 per cent of its work force every year. This year, probably about 7,000 employees will leave.

Let me tell the House that 23 per cent of the CNR work force has been on the job less than two years. How can such a proportion of new people, no matter how skilful, be as efficient as older, more experienced workers? How can they know as much about rail safety, for instance, as workers who form part of a more experienced work force? It seems to me that such factors add to the inefficiency of the system. This holds true no matter what your policy may be or how progressive and enlightened it is.

How can tracks, equipment or anything else be maintained when 20 per cent of the machinists, 18 per cent of the electricians, 10 per cent of the carmen and at least 40 experienced yardmen left the railroad in disgust in the Vancouver area in 1973? You would need to do a lot of looking to find another national industry in which such a high proportion of workers is leaving. Where else will you find such a rot in the work force? If you add the scores of truckers who left after difficult wage negotiations, and add the fact that wage negotiations are so lengthy, so protracted, the fact that the companies know parliament will bail them out, and they will not bargain in good faith, and the feeling of railroaders working on the job that their views and suggestions count for nothing, you will not wonder why the trains do not run on time.

Last week two Kamloops men were killed in a tragic CP derailment at Spences Bridge in the Fraser canyon of British Columbia. The very next day there was another derailment near the same spot. In case one thinks such derailments are rare, let me put the record straight. I have a number of figures relating to these derailments. They are current; that is to say, up to date. My only difficulty is that I cannot find them. If we could call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I could use the dinner hour to find these figures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It is six o'clock in any event. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, just before the recess at six o'clock I was saying that the two tragic deaths in the Fraser Canyon last weekend were part of a pattern. I was about to cite some figures to support my contention. I received these figures from the Canadian Transport Commission today: they list the derailments and accidents on railway lines between Vancouver and Kamloops from January 1, 1953, to March 1, 1974, a period of 21 years. In the case of Canadian National derailments, there were 86 accidents, 9 killed and 41 injured. For other accidents, and I presume these had to do with unmarked crossings and automobile accidents, there were 10 accidents, 1 killed and 23 injured.

The CP rail record is equally appalling. There were 29 accidents, 5 killed and 10 injured. For other accidents, and I again presume this to be rail crossing accidents involving personnel other than railroaders, there were 19 accidents, 2 killed and 19 injured.

I think I have given sufficient documentation and statistical material to indicate to members present this evening that this particular piece of trackage is a suicide run as far as Canadian railwaying is concerned. There has been a good deal of carnage throughout the Fraser canyon for a great number of years. I make no reference whatsoever, except incidentally, to the number of people killed building the railway. I think we have to admit it is the toughest terrain in the world. In spite of the fact it is difficult terrain, we have to assure ourselves that the maximum safety standards are always adhered to.

According to an editorial in the January-February Canadian Railwayman, the number of CP and CN derailments across Canada in 1972 is up three times over 1959 and nearly double that of 1969. The CTC became so alarmed over this increase that a rail safety committee began an intensive study of the problem in 1970 and to date had issued three volumes of a five-volume report. If the last two are anything like the first three, they will be equally devastating in their criticism of current safety measures on Canadian rail lines. Canadian Railway Labour Association spokesman J. M. Walter, in the same editorial, places the blame for wrecks squarely on the shoulders of the rail companies. He asks why, if as they railways insist many of the committee's recommendations have already been instituted, the derailment record remains so bad, and why there was not a cutback by at least two-thirds in 1973 over 1972.

There is no doubt about it, without pressure from CTC reports and the safety advisory committee the rail lines would have persisted in ignoring safety and men's lives would have been sacrificed for the sake of the buck. In the northern part of British Columbia, track maintenance is deplorable. Last fall, in seven subdivisions with authorized manpower calling for 126 section men and foremen, only 56, or less than one half, were on the job. I had an opportunity to ask Mr. McMillan and his chief of operations, Mr. Hunter, about this in committee hearings. He admitted that even the new rates of arbitrated pay were still too low to attract sufficient manpower to that region.

We could go on to document the fact of poor track maintenance and resulting poor rail safety because it applies throughout the whole system, but perhaps I have made the point. Men on the job and retired railroaders constantly write me with complaints and suggestions. Members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers have been under a legal threat since 1972 because they dared to push to CPR with respect to a litany of 30 or more and working condition safety complaints, many of them centering in the Fraser caynon.

After last weekend's accident, the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications received a wire from the engineers calling for the installation of ditch lights, slide fences, padded engine cabins and roll bars to prevent future fatalities of the kind that occurred. I have a few suggestions to offer the Canadian Transport Commission in their pursuit of better safety. First, I think we have studied this problem long enough. We should start telling the railways what to do, give them a time to improve and, if they do not improve, take strong sanctions against them. Second, we should start publishing the results of inquiries, produce the facts, name names and shed the full light of publicity on the people responsible for the problem. There are far too many rail accident inquiries hidden in CTC files. If the CTC needs a PR man or a PR department to publicize what they are doing, then I urge them to obtain one.

Third, the present regulation limiting a railway employee called before management on a disciplinary matter regarding one of his colleagues to speak on his behalf, is not sufficient. Why not consider making a CTC official available for all kangaroo courts in which they issue demerits, and make certain there is an independent person in addition to the employee concerned and the management personnel, before management is allowed to hand out demerits. There is a club in Vancouver called the Take 30 Club. This is a group of people who have had to accept at least 30 demerits. It puts them in a certain kind of jeopardy.

Fourth, the CTC should constantly and actively seek information from the rank and file, and not limit itself to receiving information from labour representatives who have to pay part of the national rail leadership in Ottawa. Someone has suggested that with the publication of reports from the CTC rail safety committee and the stablishment of the CTC union-management safety advisory committee, things are improving. We are rounding the bend, they say; there is light at the end of the tunnel. Let us hope that rounding the bend doesn't lead to another derailment, and that the light at the end of the tunnel is not affixed to the front end of an on-rushing freight train.

I should not like to turn my attention to a matter of great importance, that is, the subject of pensions, especially those of retired railway employees who have no one to fight on their behalf, neither the unions nor railway management. One is reminded of the plight of the family of the former minister of labour, the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) whose father was a railwayman. I do not think he would mind if I were to reveal the story.

[Mr. Rose.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, and under the Draconian measure to which we agreed earlier today there can be no extension.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) when addressing the House earlier today talked about the enormous land grants given to the Canadian Pacific in the eighties and nineties. Those grants were made 75,80, nearly 100 years ago. Yet they are still called up continually by detractors of this railroad. Let us think about the background to these land grants. In the eighties everything possible was done to attract settlers to Canada. One way of doing this was to give land to a corporation and hope that the corporation, on a private basis, could stimulate settlement.

The CPR did a great many things for this country. The program put out by the CBC based on a story prepared by Pierre Berton is the story of the building of Canada. Looking back now, it might seem the country was well rewarded in return for these grants of land. The railway encountered extraordinary difficulties when it tried to raise money by pledging what were then considered to be worthless land holdings. The government gave the railway a few built-up lines, $25 million and a pile of land, and that is all the company ever received.

What do we hear from socialists on this side of the House such as the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre? He wants to take over the CPR. He wants to do that because it is the only railway we have which has made a profit and made it consistently, and done a job and done it consistently. The hon. member's party is only calling for nationalization of this railroad because party dogma demands it, because of a philosophy developed in Regina years ago in another era. These people to my left simply carry it on because they have no new policy, no new philosophy, no new drive for the development of Canada. They do not believe in the building of Canada. They believe in the nationalization of Canada. They believe in putting Canada in blue jeans. They believe in making everybody equally poor. They do not really believe in the development of a transportation system.

A week ago I was amazed to read in Toronto papers and elsewhere statements made by the minister that the transportation system is botched up. Well, who has been botching it up? I was a Liberal government which appointed the famous Edgar Benson to be in charge of the CTC. It took a guy who had messed up the financial affairs of this country and put him in charge of transportation so he could mess that up, too. I pity the minister if he has to work with Edgar. But he should have known better when he accepted this portfolio.

The minister says he has no authority to do things. He has all sorts of authority under the National Transportation Act. It is time he used that authority to develop a consistent transportation policy. A new transportation policy does not need to be based on the nationalization of the CPR. That is old crap. If we are talking about the nationalization of railway companies, let us compare the activities of the CP and the CNR. On one hand we have a railway which from rail operations alone was able to make $57 million a year, according to the last financial statement; on the other hand we have a railway which before debt is taken into account makes $23 million and, when debt is taken into account, lost $17 million.

An hon. Member: Where did you get that figure?

Mr. Blenkarn: They talk about debt. When I was a student in high school they said the reason the CN failed to make a profit was that it was forced to carry a heavy load of debt caused by being obliged to take over a lot of bankrupt railway companies. The truth is that the debt charges, in terms of total revenue, borne by the Canadian Pacific is in excess of cost of interest on debt paid by the Canadian National. Yet every year this House is required to pour money into the CNR to keep in operation the inept management of that railroad.

One of the major problems the country faces is this: we are stuck with a national railroad which is improperly and ineptly managed. It is not managed as a business; it is managed in a political fashion, and therein lies the problem. It is not managed sensibly or capably. In the early 1950s, the financing of the CNR was reorganized. We settled all its debts. It was virtually debt-free. Who was appointed to manage that railroad? A pseudo-politician by the name of Donald Gordon. He had a great record of experience: he had worked for the wartime prices and trade board; he was in charge of the Bank of Canada. This gave him long experience in working for government. They put him in charge of CNR. That is how government departments run government departments.

How is Air Canada run? We appointed a president, a fellow by the name of Baldwin. He worked for the Department of Transport for a long time and then suddenly it was decided he should go into the private enterprise system and run Air Canada. You know, Mr. Speaker, you cannot run a business like you run a government department because politics and business do not necessarily mix. Business is concerned in doing things effectively and efficiently, while politics is not business-oriented. Politics is interested in social affairs, and those two things do not mix.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us about Brinco and Moores.

Mr. Blenkarn: Let's not worry about Brinco and let's not worry about Moores. He may be a bit misguided in some ways, but he is doing a good job in that province—a lot better job than the fellow you have running the province of Saskatchewan.

One of the difficulties about Crown corporations is that in the railway field the CPR has it made. I am sure friends to my left will agree when I say that the CPR is responsible for moving 55 per cent of the grain in this country while the CN is responsible for moving 45 per cent. The CPR doesn't like to move grain any more than the CNR does, but the CPR is really smart; they hide under the umbrella of state ownership and they move exactly 55 per cent of the grain. They organize their boxcar movement on the basis of the efficiency of the CNR. If the CNR were to move its quota of boxcars, the CPR would move its quota of boxcars. The CPR is fortunate to have the CNR around because the CNR, a nationally-owned corporation, is the prime example of poor, inept socialist management of a Crown corporation. This is exactly the kind of thing that happens when you have socialism—you have inept management, which leads to inept political management.

If, Mr. Speaker, you had had the opportunity to attend the meetings last fall of the House committee on transport and communications when it was debating Bill C-164, you would have been shocked at the way the management of the CNR and Air Canada spent day after day trying to bamboozle members of parliament. We asked them some embarrassing questions, like some of the questions I asked about the Bessborough Hotel. Let me tell the House about the Bessborough Hotel scandal. This is a hotel which is worth, on the books, $3 million to $4 million. If appraised on the basis of efficient management, it is only supposed to be worth $800,000. The Bessborough Hotel property occupies some of the choicest land in the city of Saskatoon. The bricks and mortar alone, on anybody's appraisal, are worth $1,600,000.

Somewhere along the line the CNR lost $400,000 in 1971 and another $400,000 in 1972. That year they decided they had better fix the place up, so they spent another $214,000. So there is $1 million. They then decided they would like to get rid of this lemon because they could not operate it properly, so they called for bids. A fellow went from Saskatoon to Montreal and offered $1,600,000 for the hotel. They snapped that up like a lunge going after a small fish. Having bought the hotel for $1,600,000, it was immediately mortgaged for $2 million. That is the kind of management you get from socialism. They do not know which end is up, and if they do know which end is up, they do not know where down is.

The Hotel Bessborough scandal—which is what it is—is what you get from the management of Crown corporations. One reason we get that kind of management is that politicians appoint to boards of directors people who really have no vested interest in the success of their company. They know that if they need a little more money to do the job, they can always call upon the government. They plead with the House that they are doing a necessary job, just as the CNR pleads with the committee for $5.6 million for hotel expansion because hotels are necessary for the community. Yet the CNR has not yet invested 1 per cent of its own money in hotels.

The history of Crown corporations in this country has been abysmal. The suggestion of the New Democratic Party that the railroads be nationalized is amazing. They suggest the CPR be taken over by the government. At least at the present time the government of Canada is collecting enormous corporate taxes from the CPR. What kind of corporate taxes is the government collecting from the CNR? None.

The truth of the matter is that a railroad never makes a profit. And if it did, it could go on to the year 3000 and never pay a dime in taxes. The truth is that this railroad must continue to be fed and fed because it has management that is inept. The reason its management is inept is that the government uses jobs on the board of directors of the railroad, and this, that, and the other thing which goes with the perks of office, as a reward to its friends. It looks after those people it likes to look after.

The problem with Crown corporations is politics. This is why the socialists want to become involved—because they are in league with the bureacrats. They really do not care about the ordinary guy, about the taxpayer, and neither does the government. They want to reward their friends, to look after everybody. They have a paper image, if I may call it that. This is the kind of situation we have with socialism, and that is the intent behind this motion.

Of course we have many transportation problems in this country, but a lot of them are caused by stupid, band-aid measures that are taken by the government. For example, we have a frozen branch lines policy. Although there are rail lines in this country that are no longer required, we do not have a government that is prepared to do something about them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by agreement earlier today has expired.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, after listening to members of the opposition, particularly of the loyal opposition, this afternoon and this evening it is very obvious that they were not listening to the minister when he spoke in the throne speech debate and again today. It is obvious because they are repeating the same old speeches I have heard since I have been here. It is the same old swan song, the same old story.

The minister outlined to the House the problems in his department and told the opposition parties what he intended to do about them. He said he would be bringing in soon legislation that would give him authority which at the present time he does not have. At the present time he has all the responsibility but no authority. The opposition applauded the minister at the time and thought his speech was great. They know this matter had been discussed in cabinet. Yet all the opposition can do is to repeat what they have been saying all along without giving any consideration to what is being said in this House.

In other words, I believe that the purpose of being a member of this House is to listen to what a minister has to say, and certainly the announcement made by the minister should have been interesting to members of the opposition because he was telling them how he was going to resolve our transportation problems. Having said that—

Mr. Knight: What was it you said?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member was not listening, and that is the problem. That is way they will not be re-elected; they do not know how to listen to members who have something to say.

The views expressed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) are very laudable in some respects, while in other respects they are very unrealistic, at least at the present time until the government and all parties have had an opportunity to assess in depth what the ramifications of any major changes in the regulation and management of our transportation systems would mean to the social and economic well being of our country.

As the minister has stated, we do have some transportation messes and in some areas competition is not working like all parties thought it would in 1967. In fact, some members of the loyal opposition who spoke this afternoon have not suggested how to solve the problem. They were talking about us dragging our feet in respect of some of the powers we have given to these Crown corporations. Yet the same members of the loyal opposition, or at least some of them, were in power back in 1958 to 1962 with the biggest majority of any government, and what did they do? They did nothing about the problem, Mr. Speaker. They did not want to look at the needs of the country, yet they have criticized this government for years.

They do not like to look at these things; they just like to look at everything else—that is, everything but the real problems. They could never face them anyway, and when they get a government like this, even though it is a minority government, trying to do something for the benefit of all Canadians, what do we get instead of co-operation? I suggest all we get is criticism, with no help whatsoever, not even one small suggestion that might help.

An hon. Member: Just bring on the legislation and we will co-operate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I should like to repeat what the minister stated: we do have some transportation messes, and in some areas competition is not working in the way that all parties in the House thought it would back in 1967. This is one of the main reasons the Ministry of Transport was restructured in 1970, so that the minister could be given a total overview—I repeat that—of what was required on a modal and intermodal basis with the basic aim of making transportation in Canada more responsive to the objectives of the government and the needs of the people.

At that time the government said that as new social and economic demands evolved, adjustments would have to be made in the years ahead in the areas of administration and regulation. This is a continuing process and never will it be resolved by a one-time decision of any government. The process is working. The very fact that we are discussing transportation today as an important issue is proof of that, Mr. Speaker.

I think we all have a common objective, and that is an economic, efficient and adequate transportation system making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest cost. That principle, incidentally, is already contained in the National Transportation Act. What this government is striving for now is the mechanism which will ensure that we can achieve those objectives in the short and long term. Unless it is absolutely necessary, it is not this government's desire to operate transportation systems, but rather, as I have mentioned before, to ensure that adequate systems are in place and operating efficiently for the people and the economy of this country.

As the minister mentioned this afternoon, we have 694 commercial air carriers in this country. Many people do not realize that fact. We also have 48 railways which are regulated by federal and provincial governments, and we have more than 21,000 trucking companies. In addition to that, of course, we have pipelines, ferries, urban transportation systems and terminals. I do not think any government would want to be the operator of all those facilities. However, by and large most of these systems are dependent upon one another and this is why we have been evolving the Ministry of Transport concept over the past four years. The operative word is "management" and not "operation".

The minister mentioned this before, but I believe it is worth repeating: there are real problems within the area of transportation. Sure there is a lack of rail cars within this mess, and there is also freight discrimination. But there are other messes as well. The port of Montreal is a mess, but we will clean it up. Our railway access to the port of Vancouver is also a mess, and that will be cleaned up.

Ahead of us in the long and the short term lie exciting challenges. These are challenges which, if properly handled, will ensure that Canada maintains an over-all transportation system which will continue to be unparallelled by the system of any other country in the world. Many forward and positive strides have been made in the past few years. I should like to name a few of them if hon. members will listen. For example, the Ministry of Transport, as it now stands, is structured in such a way that we have better control and integration for planning all modes of transport—central planning for all ports and harbours and a ministry approach which permits decentralization of management but centralization of control.

The positive aspects of a ministry approach are such that all modes are covered, with a central ministry staff that exercises co-ordination over air, marine and all surface modes including urban transit. Integration is essential and that is why the ministry is so structed as to provide integration of all modes. The ministry concept has permitted the creation of the Transport Development Agency, TDA, as a focus for the determination and development of future technological changes in transportation.

Having regard to that aspect, under the old system we had programs which were carried on only by their own momentum. Now we can integrate and direct investments in order to get the best pay-off possible. We can direct money and resources where the need exists. There are no quick and easy solutions. For example, the National Transportation Act needs to be reviewed, and will be reviewed: but the problems are here now and we must face them. We need action here and now, and this is what the minister intends to do.

An hon. Member: Let's get on with it.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Just listen for a moment; I am not through yet. The main problem in respect of the National Transportation Act is its reliance on competition. The underlying objective of the National Transportation Act is to have an economic, efficient and adequate transportation system making full use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest cost. These are some of the things that hon. members in the opposition do not like us to speak about. They hate us when we come up with proper solutions, they hate it when they know we are coming out in the right way to solve the problem, because they know they can no longer criticize us. Every time we come up with a good solution, we are criticized because they do not know anything but criticism. They never offer good solutions or suggestions.

To carry on with what I began to say, this objective is sound, but how you translate objectives into action is where it is weak. The role of the ministry—

An hon. Member: Who wrote this speech, Joe?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I could write some of your speeches and make sense of them. The trouble with most members in the opposition is they do not know how to put speeches together. I could write them and I could make them flow, but if I wrote some of their speeches I guarantee they would make a lot more sense. I am sure their constituents would be surprised if they heard a speech that was well written. If their constituents read some of the things they have said this afternoon, in the House, I would be surprised if they re-elected them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The role of the ministry is to define national objectives. What are those national objectives? They are a transportation system that is an integral part of regional development—but that is not the only factor. As a resource, like all other resources, a transportation system should be directed in order to achieve social and economic well-being. A transportation system should be reliable and provide reasonably priced transportation services as a fundamental right to all Canadians in all regions of Canada according to their needs. It should guarantee the provision of reliable, low-cost services for the movement of key commodities in the national economy. It should provide a system within which each mode must be allowed to provide those services, and only those, which it does best and in doing so achieve the most efficient utilization of public and private resources.

The transportation system must be responsive to our needs, both in the normal pursuit of our affairs and in times of extraordinary demands. The transportation system must be safe and people must have confidence in that safety. This is also important. It should be a transportation system which will serve Canadians from coast to coast, which will join regions and areas and allow Canadians to become familiar with all sections of Canada and not only some parts. Right now this government is working on all these types of programs and will be presenting legislation in the next few months to take care of the short term. The long-term situation, however, is another matter. But, like all parties, we can see far enough in the future to realize that as much action as is humanly possible must be taken now to minimize the recurrence of these problems in the future. That is what we call the exciting transportation challenge of the months ahead, which includes urban transportation, development of the north, a national port policy and a safety program for all modes of transportation for the benefit of all Canadians.

I see I have a few moments remaining, Mr. Speaker; therefore I should like to refer to the matter of the CNR employees who for years have been asking for pensions on a parity with those of the public service. I am rather proud to say to the House tonight that I have presented a bill which was suggested by the president of the CNR in a letter to me dated March 4, which would require that these employees would be given parity pensions which they have requested for a long time and would be applicable to retired employees and those still in the service.

My bill is C-139. If I may, I should like to refer briefly to the explanatory note which reads as follows:

The purpose of this amendment is to remove Canadian National Railway company from the scope of the act in order that it may, without adding substantially to its annual deficit, improve its pension plan by providing pensions for its existing and retired employees on a basis similar to that applicable in the public service.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual for a minister in this government to be highly critical of a former minister in a former government for lack of action and inefficiency as well as failure to meet the problems and so on. I do not suppose that in the parliamentary history of the past 65 years there has been the kind of positive action we have seen in the past couple of weeks. After all, we have had a Liberal government since 1963. We have had a Liberal government headed by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) since 1968. For more than ten years, therefore, the decisions in respect of our transportation policies have been made by Liberal governments on the advice of Liberal ministers of transport.

The present minister has held the position for about a year and a half. Before that we had the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) and before that we had the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). Before that we had the man who piloted through the House the present National Transportation Act, the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill. If we are in such a hell of a mess, where were these cabinet ministers before? If they were on the job, how could we be in the mess we are in now? We are in a mess because Liberal governments set the kind of policies which we have.

The minister, when he made his great conversion—probably the greatest conversion since Saul was on the way to Damascus—attempted to implicate everybody in the mess. He said all parties were in support of the basic principles of the present transportation act under which we operate our transportation system. Nothing could be further from the truth. This afternoon my leader placed on the record some of the comments made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) back in 1966. I wish to place on the record a few remarks made by the former member for Springfield, the present premier of the province of Manitoba, because he placed his finger on what was wrong with the act. As recorded at page 11,380 of Hansard December 20, 1966, he said:

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

They—

The government.

—have put too much faith in competition as an effective means of protecting the public interest.

Then he said:

I think that those regions of this country which produce primary products will be adversely affected by the provisions of this legislation when it becomes law.

We opposed the basic principle of the law then, and still do. Today we brought forth a motion which is being debated at this time which suggests that national transportation should be integrated as a public utility. We heard an attack by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) which demonstrates clearly the reason the Conservatives very seldom win elections in this country. He demonstrated his ignorance of what goes on in Canada. He talked about public ownership as if it were the most horrible thing in the world, on a day when the Conservative premier of Newfoundland is proposing the nationalization of Brinco. He talks of public ownership as being horrible, at a time when the Conservative government of Alberta is proposing to take a 22 per cent interest in the pipeline in co-operation with the government of Saskatchewan. Since he speaks of public ownership as being something terrible, he should have said this to the present leader of the Conservative Party when he involved this country in a fiasco over heavy water in Cape Breton. It cost the country over $200 million before we produced heavy water.

There is a great deal wrong with the transportation policy of this country. We are not alone in so thinking. I have before me a statement on transportation prepared jointly by the premiers of the four western provinces, including the Hon. Peter Lougheed, Premier of Alberta. Let me read one or two clauses from this statement. Premier Lougheed agrees with the other three premiers in the following:

National policy must recognize that an efficient and adequate transportation system, making the best use of all available modes of transportation, is essential for the economic and social well-being of Canada and its various regions. National transportation policy must recognize that competition at present acts unevenly between the various regions of Canada and between large and small users of transportation services. As a consequence, the development of the western region of Canada is inhibited by the lack of positive policy direction and the discrimination inherent in our present system of freight rates.

That is what the Premier of Alberta had to say. It is almost word for word what our resolution today calls for. That was last July. The premiers asked the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to co-operate with them in reassessing the transportation system and the freight rates system and to make sure that the Canadian Transport Commission and the railways co-operated in this reassessment. They were not being unreasonable. They wanted, on a confidential basis, the actual costs of moving a whole series of important freight items. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport both promised that this information would be made available to the western premiers. Now, seven months later, despite repeated assurances by the Minister of Transport nothing in the way of hard, factual information has been provided to the western premiers.

The Minister of Transport has said publicly that if the railways would not provide this information voluntarily, he would introduce legislation requiring them to do so. No one in this party would object to that kind of legislation. I am sure that the Alberta members of parliament would be the first to urge quick passage of such legislation. If the minister means business, why have we not had that legislation? Mr. Speaker, we have not had it because the minister does not mean business, because he is not really interested in a transportation policy and because he is not really interested in the welfare of the people of the western provinces.

The minister is only interested in picking up an issue which the people of the four western provinces have indicated is important to them and in making speeches which will get support for the Liberal Party in the next election. The minister has had more than enough time to begin to deal with some of the specific cases of discrimination and injustice. He does not need to revamp the whole transportation system, although that is a laudable ambition.

The minister knows the difficulty facing him. He knows how complicated is this country because of its size, geography, sparse population, environmental problems and all the rest. He knows that even if he meant business, he is really talking about something which would take two or three years' work at a minimum. But the people of western Canada are not prepared to wait while the minister makes brilliant speeches and is the subject of laudatory editorials. The people of western Canada, regardless of party, want action and they want it now. The people of western Canada have told the minister, the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission and the Prime Minister the kind of problems with which they must live. They have pointed out that it costs as much to ship steel products from Regina, where a rather substantial steel plant has been built up, to Vancouver as it costs to ship steel from Hamilton to Vancouver. They have pointed out how cheap it is to ship rapeseed from Saskatchewan to Toronto and how expensive it is to ship rapeseed oil, resulting in the processing and associated industries being located in eastern Canada rather than in western Canada where the grain is grown. They have pointed out how much cheaper it is to ship livestock from Calgary to Toronto or Montreal than it is to kill the livestock in the packing plants in Calgary and ship the finished product to Toronto or Montreal. The facts are so clear and abundant that there is no reason for continual delay on the part of the government.

For the minister to speak so glowingly about the need for a new transportation policy is simply to admit the shocking lack of attention and the complete indifference of Liberal governments up until now in dealing with the serious matters that affect western Canadians. The hon. member for Mississauga may think that because these problems are 75 years old they are not important. The fact remains that they have been a cause of dissatisfaction to western Canada from the time the west came into confederation. In fact, they have become more important rather than less important. I have no confidence that the minister and the government will act. They have not acted up until now. They have not dealt with the question of freight rates. They have permitted the railways to destroy the passenger service system: the railways are still continuing that policy.

At present we are involved in the development of a short take-off and landing plant at a cost of $100 million. What will this do? I suppose it will get people from the heart of Ottawa to the heart of Montreal in an hour and a half. But, Mr. Speaker, the railways have been moving people from Ottawa to Montreal in two hours over the last 50 years. Instead of encouraging the railways to upgrade their service and to carry more passengers, the government has permitted them to downgrade passenger service so that people are encouraged to travel from Ottawa to Montreal by any other mode of travel. I use these two locations just as an example. People are encouraged to take a plane, to take a bus; and even with a worldwide shortage of oil, people are encouraged to drive their own cars rather than take a train. We have had another illustration of what the railways and the government think about passenger service.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am afraid I must interrupt the hon. member; the time allotted to him by special order today has expired.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the motion put forward today by the NDP because it gives me a chance to speak once again on what has become my favourite lead-off topic in the House. I do not apologize for my interest in transportation because there is no doubt in my mind that it is the most important single element related to economic policy in Canada. After all, it was the provision of transportation between east and west that brought this country together.

It is shocking that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) should stand in this House and confess that the government has no policy, and that what policy it has, has failed. We have been stumbling along for the past six years without a transportation policy. It is even more shocking to hear his parliamentary secretary somehow blame the opposition for this lack of transportation policy. He seems to forget that his party has been in power for ten years. His party passed the National Transportation Act. His party has been responsible for administering that act. Surely he is reaching for extremes, reaching for the clouds when he tries to place the blame on the opposition.

After that the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) got up and stated categorically that he has no faith in the present minstry, that he does not believe they are capable of enacting proper legislation and that even if they had the legislation, he doubted they would enforce it. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I simply ask him: Why do you keep this crowd in power? You have had your chance, and you are doing nothing.

If there was any question of the urgency of this problem, the fact that we ran into a simulated oil energy crisis is an example. It turned out not to be a crisis of supply but a crisis of transportation. In its shortsightedness, this government had not provided facilities to move the oil from the west to the east. There is also the fact that we ran into a wheat transportation crisis because, again, in its lack of wisdom and failure to formulate a proper policy this government has not provided the facilities to move the grain to the ports so that it can be shipped to the export markets which we have developed.

The crisis is here, the problem is here, and this motion is very appropriate at this time. I agree with the premise of the motion, that we need some sort of policy to end indiscriminate rail line abandonment, to do something about supplying new, modern equipment to move goods and get passenger service back where it should be. I agree with all those things, and action should be taken to get us out of this mess.

Having said that I agree with the objective of the motion, my agreement with the party that proposed it ends. I certainly do not agree with the approach my socialist friends would take. It is too easy. They always say that if something is not working, it should be nationalized. But surely we have had a great deal of experience in this country and know what happens when something is turned over to a Crown corporation. We have seen the horrible mess in the Post Office. Surely any business operated as that one is would not long survive. We saw what happened with the waste and duplication in Manpower offices. Also, there is the horrible example of the CBC. But the thing that disturbs me most, Mr. Speaker, was referred to briefly by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) earlier today: it is all right to talk about public ownership, but judging from what I have seen during my time in this parliament, once something is turned over to public ownership the public loses all control of it.

We have had examples of this in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications when officials of the CNR and Air Canada have appeared. We have watched them deliberately dodge questions when they did not want to give information on the operation of those companies. Surely this information should be public knowledge and at least available to the representatives of the people. We have seen what happens when Crown corporations are set up: parliamentary control is lost. This does not make me very receptive to any suggestion of further nationalization of our transportation system.

In his speech on March 7, when he first admitted that things were in such a mess, the minister told us what we in the opposition have been telling the government for six years; things, incidentally, that everybody knew. I do not know why it took the minister so long to become aware that the transportation policy had broken down, but at least we can give him full marks for admitting it in public in the House. I cannot agree with all that the minister says because I do not think he can lay all the blame for this breakdown on the legislation. I feel that there is statutory authority both in the Railway Act and in the National Transportation Act which gives the minister the power to force the railways to move grain when necessary. There is power in the National Transportation Act under Section 3(2) and section 26 for the CTC to act if it is felt that the carriers are discriminating against any particular region. These are powers that the minister has not used, Mr. Speaker, and this is my chief criticism of the minister and the government.

In committee we have heard from the CNR and Air Canada. They complain and criticize and say, "If only someone in the government would define and delineate our responsibilities . . ." The minister's appointee, Mr. Pratt, made this statement two or three years ago. He said that Air Canada was prepared to carry out its responsibilities if only the minister or someone in government would define which routes would be operated on a public service basis and which on a profit basis. The president of Canadian National Railways has said the same thing. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that while the existing legislation is not perfect, there are powers that can be used; therefore, this minister and this government are derelict in their duty because they have not used those powers. They have not said to the carriers, "This is your responsibility. This you must do."

I should like now to refer briefly to another matter of policy which has disturbed me greatly. This is another example of the government's failure to give direction. I was very pleased when the hon. member for Verdum (Mr. Mackasey) referred to CNR pensions today. I know that, with his vast experience in labour relations, he is a man who is entirely sympathetic to the underdog and he has always tried to give help where necessary. The hon. member referred to the sad situation existing in the original pension plan, the provident fund or, as we in the maritimes know it, the ICR pension plan. It is unbelievable that former employees of Crown corporations or quasi-Crown corporations should be expected to live under the conditions that these pensioners have been enduring for the past ten or fifteen years since they retired. It is unbelievable in this day and age that many of these people retire on a pension as low as $25, and when they die their widows are cut right off, or maybe left with $5 and—as the hon. member for Verdun mentioned—they take 10 per cent off that.

The sad thing is that there are so few of these people that it would not cost very much to give them something extra to bring them in line with present-day costs. I have not estimated the amount, but in the over-all budget of this government it would be infinitesimal. I have heard it said that there might only be about 2,000 of them altogether, and maybe 40 or 50 still working for the railway. There may be 40 or 50 widows, but those widows have no pension at all. I know the minister has compassion for people, and I know the parliamentary secretary is interested in this problem because I have talked to him about it. Here is an area where the government can give direction to the CNR and other Crown corporations. Surely there must be a way to bring some measure of justice to these people who have been deserted by the unions and the company. I call upon the minister and his parliamentary secretary to look into this problem.

We hear the argument that the National Transportation Act has broken down because it is based solely on the profit motive. I do not agree with that entirely, but we cannot disregard that motive. There is no reason why a company, whether a Crown corporation or a private corporation, should not be operated efficiently and pay its way. But in a country such as ours, with regions where a rail line or airline cannot make a profit, such areas should be delineated as public service runs and supported from the general treasury.

This idea of phasing out the profit motive and running everything as a Crown corporation is hogwash; you have to operate a business and make a profit where it can be made. This was brought home to me a few weeks ago when the CTC held hearings on the efficiency of air services. In brief after brief the complaint was made that service in the area was not adequate because the main carrier, Air Canada, had no competition and as a result service had run down to the point where actually there was no service; In other words, if there is to be service there must be competition.

May I refer briefly to something the minister mentioned this afternoon. The great weakness of the National Transportation Act is that it makes no provision for regulatory authorities to supervise carriers in order to make sure they give efficient service. The minister referred to the subsidies the railways receive. Yet there is nothing to force them to upgrade service or to buy new equipment. This matter should be looked into. A regulatory body ought to be set up which on a day to day basis will make sure that efficient service is provided.

I could say much more on this topic, Mr. Speaker, but in my limited time I wish to say that I feel the Minister of Transport is sincere in wanting to clean up this mess. I know he is disturbed because the government has let transportation policy deteriorate to this point. Yet I remind the parliamentary secretary that we on this side are somewhat skeptical when we hear promises, promises but see no action. Only two years ago the previous minister of transport said in the House that he would immediately bring in an entirely new transportation policy. We have not yet seen it. Is it any wonder that we grow skeptical when the minister says he will bring in a new policy?

I feel that the legislation the previous minister had in mind was blocked either by the cabinet or by officials in the department. If these officials still have their jobs, they will continue blocking action which the present minister might take. As he does not have sufficient power to correct the ills of the transportation system, I feel that new legislation should be passed to give him that power. If he is honestly and sincerely trying to clean up this horrible mess, he can count on my full and complete co-operation in rushing the legislation through.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by saying how pleased I am to have heard what the minister announced today and during the previous few days. He admits that there is something seriously wrong with our transport system. That is the only way you can straighten out a difficulty: first you must admit there is something wrong, and then you work toward realigning transportation policy by bringing in a new set of policies which will be relevant for Canadians. I shall examine some of the problems inherent in our transport system and I shall confine my thoughts first to railroads and then deal with intermodal possibilities. The root of the problem is the National Transportation Act of 1967, as the minister admitted. There is general agreement about this.

We must face the difficulty that parliament lacks control over our transportation system. Neither the minister nor parliament can exercise direct control over the CTC.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is not correct. The minister has that authority.

Mr. McRae: In some respects he has the power. However, in day to day administration the CTC has control and tends to act in the manner of similar regulatory bodies.

Mr. Mazankowski: Read section 64.

Mr. McRae: We have already dealt with that. As I said, the CTC tends to behave like other regulatory bodies in that it has become sympathetic to the views of those it is regulating. That seems to be the basic difficulty. Not long after you appoint new people to the CTC, they begin to speak and think as if they are operating a railroad. You can make similar observations about other regulatory bodies. There is a great body of literature about regulators. I think the minister, the government and parliament must assume more power in order to control transportation, particularly in view of our difficulties in moving grain and lumber this year. At Thunder Bay, there are many problems connected with grain movement, with elevators being only half full when at this time of year they should be pretty well topped up.

Our second problem which concerns the act itself is the whole notion that transportation must pay, must be competitive and must be based on competition. I do not think that is a reliable policy in a country as broad as Canada, as thinly populated as Canada. It just does not work. Although competition may work in some areas, I am not sure that we really understand the effects of competition on the railroads.

As I said, I shall also be talking about intermodal systems. It seems to me that the underlying feature of the act should be in the preamble, which should say that the act shall be designed to redistribute growth throughout the country and bring equality to the regions of the country suffering from disparity. That ought to be the aim of our transportation system. A competitive system may work if it serves Toronto, Montreal and the golden horseshoe, but it does not work in the maritimes or the outer areas of this country. With these thoughts in mind, the act ought to be changed. It should take cognizance of the notion that transportation systems should be designed to bring equality to all parts of this country. That notion is missing from the act and from the regulations governing the CTC. As a result we see massive problems in the field of freight rates. It is much cheaper, for instance, to move cargoes west than to move them east. It is cheaper to move cattle on the hoof east than to move the finished product east. Anomalies like that must be removed. I know it will not be simple to sort out freight rates, but these anomalies stem from the present act.

Something else which disturbs me is how the railroads get subsidies. How do they get them? They apply for discontinuance and then downgrade the passenger service.

It is anathema to me that a railroad should get a subsidy after it has downgraded the service. To prevent its discontinuance after the service has been downgraded, the subsidy is granted. As the previous speaker mentioned, such a system encourages the downgrading of service. In other words, the subsidy is provided for not giving service. This must be changed.

During the recess I had the pleasure of taking my family by rail to the west coast. We went out by Canadian National and came back by Canadian Pacific. The trip was interesting. I went to find out what was happening and to talk to as many railroaders as possible at various points. I had great difficulty in getting a bedroom on the Super Continental. When we got on the train there were already 15 cars well filled. The bedroom rate was $126 and the fare was $67, so that the one-way trip cost us $193. As I say, the train was full; it was hard to get reservations. They had to put on an extra car at Winnipeg. This was even though we travelled in mid-February. I must say this: the food was good, the service was good and a definite attempt was made to accommodate people who could not afford sleeping car accommodation. They had what is known as a day and night car on the train for which the price was reasonable, about $8.

The story of the CP train was entirely different. The fare cost us $232, for example, almost $40 more than the CN fare. There were seven cars on the CP train, with four or five people in each car. The company was not being at all competitive. I heard Conservatives talking about competition and about how wonderful CP is and how bad the CN is. Let me tell them there was no comparison between the services. As far as I am concerned, if there is a way to do this I will move that the subsidy for The Canadian of the CPR be reduced to $1 because they really are not doing their job.

Mr. McRae: I just do not grab this thing. Because it is private enterprise, it is bound to be good. Because it is public, it is bound to be bad. Although there are inefficiencies and problems with CNR, they are trying. But the CPR does not give a damn. As far as I am concerned, there should be no subsidy for CPR.

I wish to deal with some other problems. They do not deal specifically with the act but they are basic problems in the transportation system. Neither railroad is aggressive. This is one of the problems. They are not aggressive in comparison with other segments of our industry. Where were the railroads when we were talking about the Pickering airport scheme? Where were the railroads when a ground transportation scheme was an alternative? Where were they when STOL was being considered? They were not there. Where was the privately-owned CPR? The railroads have not been aggressive in the same way as other industries.

International Nickel in my area has a mine in Shebandowan, a mile or two from the CN siding. The ore is being trucked to a CP siding 50 miles away. The province of Ontario had to spend a great deal of money to reinforce the highway. There had been a series of accidents. This could have been taken to a CN siding for a small amount of money. Where are the aggressive railroads we should have in this country? This is a very serious problem.

I do not, however, blame the railroads entirely for all the problems that occurred this winter. One interesting feature of our trip is that we arrived in Kamloops six hours late. That was because on almost every siding on the north line CN had a freight train or we were sitting waiting for a freight train. I was told by employees that with one or two more trains the system would break down. CN is carrying a tremendous load. This heavy demand was creating some of the problems we were running into last winter.

I wish to talk about another problem. This has not been looked at as carefully as it might have been. I refer to the whole notion of intermodal aspects of transportation. It is the user who pays, or is it the state? When we talk about competition between truckers and railroads, are we really using similar cost figures? I cannot find decent cost figures. I can find figures based on the cost per ton-mile but I cannot find cost figures that say: In order to put a 50 ton truck on the road, it will cost so much more to build a suitable highway and maintain it. This kind of figure does not exist. I do not think we have done a decent job of understanding relating figures. Certainly of late there has been a move away from trucking and toward rail, particularly the notion of piggyback.

The other aspect of the intermodal situation we have not looked at is energy consumption. Up until now we have only talked about cost. We now have to consider the cost of energy and energy consumption. In this regard rail is certainly a far more efficient system. In terms of gross tonnage, for rail it is about 550 ton-miles per gallon. The highway user gets about 38 ton-miles per gallon, and the air user about 30 ton-miles per gallon. In terms of net tonnage the ratio is about four to one; 210 ton-miles for a railroad and about 50 ton-miles per gallon for a truck. This is another factor that has to be looked at very seriously. In terms of energy, the railways are far more efficient.

The intermodal form of transportation, the pipeline, has not been discussed in this debate. I give notice here and now that I am not at all happy about the building of the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline. There are all kinds of problems with that, but that is another story for a future debate. In conclusion, I wish to go over what I think, needs to be done. First, control of our transportation system, particularly our railways, must be put back in the hands of parliament. Second, there must be a preamble to the act which states that one of the major functions of railroads in this country is to redistribute growth and move goods back and forth with some equality so that all areas of Canada have equal economic opportunities. Third, the subsidy for passenger service should be a subsidy for service, not taking away service. It should not be based on a system of asking to remove a service. Fourth, management must be made aggressive.

The federal government will have to assert a great deal more control and perhaps take over ownership also. In some way the railways must become more aggressive. Fifth, a much more careful study must be made of the rationalization of costs and energy use in terms of the intermodal use of our transportation system.

This country is very fragile. It is far too difficult a country to put together when railroads and our transportation system in general is not working. We cannot afford the luxury of railroads that do not care. Our railroads must be aggressive. They must work for Canadians. The control should be put back in the hands of parliament where it belongs.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, for many years I have listened to various parties discuss the problem raised today by the New Democratic Party, namely, the development of a transportation policy. I think it would be possible to take a motion that was moved ten years ago and put it today; I am sure there would be great similarity between it and the motion we are presently debating.

Governments do not have too great an opportunity to make a mark and ministers usually do not have a very great opportunity to make a mark in history. However, if the minister really understands what he said in the past few days, namely, that we have no national transportation policy and he is fed up with the fact he cannot provide boxcars to move national produce across our nation, he will do something. If he has been watching Pierre Berton reliving, or rewriting history, and if he wants to join Pierre Berton in the second episode of the National Dream, he will try to do something about what we have suggested.

If we are going to do anything about transportation in this nation, we will have to unite all rail transportation into one unit and make it a viable force. We will have to put great effort into making the railways our national transportation system for now and for many years to come.

I note that the National Energy Board has been presented with the first batch of 200 pounds of documents concerning transportation facilities. They do not count them any more by the number of pages; they weigh them. This concerns the Mackenzie Valley pipeline proposal. If the dream of the government at the time of confederation had any merit, Canadians would be well advised to take a close look at this proposition and determine whether or not a railway would be the answer to bringing our resources out of the far north.

A few years ago the Russians came to this country and were impressed by our transportation system. They were developing an industrial complex in their northern region and they felt Canadians had great expertise in the transportation field. If they were to return today, 15 years later, they would find we have gone backward instead of forward. Some of our troubles are caused by the fact that transportation system is so complex. We are experimenting with small STOL aircraft. There could not be a poorer designation for an Otter aircraft than to call it a STOL aircraft. The Otter is the old Norseman, but with two engines instead of one. It is an aircraft built primarily for bush operations. Yet we propose to use it to move passengers between Ottawa and Montreal, 18 at a time, and consider this to be a step forward. It is not a step forward, it is a step backward. We are moving a bush pilot operation into the cities now, plying between cities instead of between remote rural points. A great deal of money has been spent on this project. Rockcliffe airport has been revitalized, as has the Expo airstrip in Montreal. The point is, we have dissipated our abilities in the transportation field.

If the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) wants to do anything at all, I suggest he concentrate on the railroads. I think it is possible that if he were to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway to give him the railway, lock, stock and barrel, it would probably do so because those people are not interested in the railroad business. I am sure they do not have the capital invested in it nor, any more, the experts who can run it. They are interested in diversification, in industries and operations which produce far more money for them than the railroad has ever produced. The only advantage they get out of the railway is the product of the millions of dollars the Canadian people gave them, money they have used, not to maintain the railroad but to reinvest in other directions, making a pot of money in the process.

The railway operation is the poor cousin, and we are continually asked to subsidize it. The railway service should be nationalized. I believe we ought to nationalize not only the Canadian Pacific but the Canadian National as well. The president of the CNR has appeared before the railway committee on a number of occasions. He could not even tell us what the directors were supposed to be doing. One of them is responsible for the communications tower in Toronto—the needle. How will that project help operate a railroad? We must divest the railroads of the other operations in which they are engaged. I think this involves the trucking operation too, though this is open for debate; it might be that there is advantage in running a trucking operation together with the railroad.

I spoke to a senior official of the Ontario Northland railroad some time after the bad accident which took place on Highway 401 in which a number of people were killed following a collision between a truck from my area, a bus and 13 or 14 other vehicles. He told me that the Northland railway could put on trains, particularly at weekends, which could move trucks and trailers of the kind involved in the accident directly into Toronto by rail, taking this traffic off the highway and making a profit both for the truckers and for the railroad.

There is much that could be done along these lines, but if the minister intends to do anything to improve the system he should devote his attention only to the railroads. I believe we can upgrade our railroads. We could investigate new types of rolling stock, though here again there may be setbacks. I am sure we are the laughing stock of the world, having spent millions of dollars on the rapid transit system between Montreal and Toronto only to find we have not been able to match the Silver Bullet which operated some 30 years ago between Buffalo and Detroit and which could even take on water while travelling at 60 miles an hour. We have not been able to match this, and why? The CN is really more interested in its investment portfolio than it is in running a railroad.

Last year I opposed Air Canada buying into the air charter business through Wardair. I would have been happy if the intention was to buy Wardair and operate it as an airline, because I think Air Canada should be flying airplanes. But the idea was to establish an investment portfolio. The idea, now, is to buy into Comstock. I remember Comstock as the organization which changed electric motors over from 25 cycles to 60 cycles right across Ontario. I am sure they have a lot of expertise in the aircraft industry. But Air Canada proposes to buy into it. Is this because it plans to fly De Havilland aircraft, or Otters? I doubt it. They are going to buy into it because it is an investment, and I am utterly opposed to the corporation getting into this field. If Air Canada wants to fly airplanes and be a national airline, let it stick to being a national airline, without letting third-rate carriers get into the feeder line business.

The same is true of the railways. If we were so stupid as to allow the Canadian Wheat Board to put up $400 million to buy 20,000 hopper cars—

Mr. Gilbert: Four thousand.

Mr. Peters: My hon. friend says 4,000. They already have 4,000. They have 4,000 now and the order is in for another 2,000. Over the next five years they want 20,000, at a cost of $400 million. My colleague does not know, but he did not attend many of the meetings where the Wheat Board made this request. In fact, they requested 20,000 cars, and the potash industry received $39 million from the government to buy hopper cars.

● (2140)

The premiers of the western provinces ask the federal government to upgrade roadbeds because they are unable to bear the loads of today. I suggest we will be establishing a third new railway system, one that has no engines. I imagine someone will come along shortly and say, "Let us give the Wheat Board some engines and some employees". Then the potash industry will ask for some engines. So we will be providing the rolling stock and the roadbed, and the railroads are going to haul our cars because they do not have their own. In Regina they were burning cars, but agreed to allow the federal government to select some of them and fix them up. Canadian National offered to pay 50 per cent of the cost, but Canadian Pacific said the government would have to pay 100 per cent of the cost and pay for the scrap as well. If the minister is going to do anything at all for Pierre Berton, and if there is going to be a sequel to the great national dream, then something must be done about the great national tragedy of today where there are not enough cars to haul the freight of the nation.

There is no question that passenger service on the railways today is a disgrace. Anyone who has recently travelled on a train will have discovered they were travelling on the same cars that were used during the war. There have been no new passenger cars put on our railways for years and years. It costs as much for a sleeper on the CNR today as it does to stay at the Royal York Hotel.

In closing, if the minister wants to make a name for himself, he will get the support of the Canadian people and other members of this House if he will concentrate on making the railway system of Canada a viable unit, making this unit, as Mussolini did, run on time and provide service to the Canadian people, something the railways are not doing at the present time.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this opposition day on the motion proposed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) on behalf of his party. One of the main things I have become more aware of over the years is transportation, and the CPR has been foremost in this respect. I am reminded of the story that I once heard and believed to be true, that when the hon. member for York South was appearing before the board that was selecting Rhodes scholars, one of the board members, who was president of the CPR at the time, asked him what he would do with the CPR if he had the chance. The hon. member replied, "I would nationalize it". Now, some 30 years later, he is still taking up the same cause.

My involvement with the CPR started very early in my life. The hon. member for York South talked today about the land that the CPR was given by the Canadian people. I happen to have been born and raised on one of these sections of land and I was there for about 21 years. I ran a farm and in the last few years before I joined the air force we had, in my opinion, a fair deal from the CPR, especially during the thirties when it was very hard even to make any kind of payment. I should like to remind hon. members what land costs today in the province of British Columbia since the NDP government has taken over. I am sure the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) knows full well of what I am saying.

There are certainly many problems in our transportation system. It seems to me that to say they can all be solved by nationalization is a gross oversimplification. The problems are very real and must be faced with determination. I can tell the House from experiences I have had with the CPR on many occasions that I have found them superior to the CNR. During some 13 trips that I made in wartime over the Rocky Mountain passes from the prairies to Vancouver, I always found the CPR superior in every way to the CNR. During the change from reefer cars to mechanical cars, the CPR at least constructed new cars and made them large enough to conform to Canadian and United States regulations, whereas the CNR did a great deal of converting of cars. Thus the load limits of their cars are too small. Both of these railway companies, however, have let Canada down. The CNR, in my opinion, is certainly no example, and if nationalization is the answer, then they should be.

I get many complaints from my constituents regarding the mail service that is run by the Post Office, a government department. The Post Office had a program of assured mail. The program was supposed to assure prompt delivery, yet letters took anywhere from a week to ten days to come to my home town from Vancouver, 300 miles away. This shows lack of leadership. If we are to have nationalization and government-owned companies, they should be setting the example.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has finally recognized that truth of what I said in the transport committee on November 20 last year when the president of the CNR was a witness. As reported at page 20:92 of the committee proceedings, I said:

I know that there are two railways. The CPR is almost as bad. I would certainly be recommending that the CNR people go on the block and sell to a private enterprise, but here we have a private enterprise that cannot do very much better.

It has come to the point, to my way of thinking, that the railways are really telling the government. The government is not telling the railways. Probably the person in the government that I should be talking to is the Minister of Transport, because I think it is high time this government sould be doing something about telling the railways and making sure that they have the rolling stock and have the cars.

In the fruit and lumber industry there is a crucial shortage of cars in British Columbia to haul the products. The railways are recommending that the companies buy or lease cars themselves. It almost appears as if the shortage is deliberate so they can force or bully these companies into buying cars, thus freeing them from any responsibility to do so. This is a responsibility that I believe must rest with the railways. Once they have bought cars, I would not trust the railways even to return the cars to their original destination. The next step would be for the railways to say, "Now you have bought the cars, you may as well buy engines too". This is not what I would call showing responsibility. Certainly the government should see to it that the railways carry out their responsibilities. The railways should be told they will not receive any subsidy unless they listen to what the government says. Instead, the government allows the railway companies to operate on tax dollars in spite of the fact that one of them is already government-owned. Perhaps it should hold back these grants in the hope that this might make more responsive the attitude of the railways to government demands.

I am very pleased to see that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) is here this evening and I hope he will listen to my remarks. We had a problem in my constituency as a result of which we were sending products to the United States and shipping them on U.S. railways to eastern Canada because we could not get rail cars from a Canadian carrier. Suddenly there was an order issued that Customs officers should not go down to seal these cars. I think the excuse given was that it was too costly, even though the U.S. carrier was prepared to pay the cost of the trip of the Customs officers in order that the cars could go through the United States. This was being done on a short line of the Burlington Northern Railway which was running into Canada. A bridge had been washed out on the rail line and they were loading cars for us and shipping out of a small point just below the border. I suspect it was this action by the railway that caused the government to take certain action.

Let me read from a letter I received from the Minister of National Revenue as follows:

Originally we were advised by the Canadian railroad that they could supply the required rolling stock.

I do not know which railroad he meant by that. He went on to say:

Subsequently it was ascertained that there was, in fact, a scarcity of reefer cars in British Columbia and the railroad could only look after their regular customers.

There certainly was a shortage of reefer cars in Canada, but as far as we were concerned we had always been a regular customer. The minister continued:

—it would seem prudent for B.C. Tree Fruits Limited to get in touch with Canadian carriers to discuss their requirements for rolling stock so that they will be considered as "regular customers" and the problem can be eliminated.

It is very evident that Canadian railways still cannot supply sufficient rolling stock and that is the reason there is a shortage about which the grain people are complaining. It is for that reason the lumber people, the fruit people and almost anyone you might consider is complaining about rail service in Canada. Our grain shippers are surely regular customers of the railways. Perhaps they should be told to get in touch with these companies in respect of their requirements, in order that they can be considered as regular customers. The minister should and must know that these people are all regular customers. There is a problem but it will never be solved by that kind of action or that kind of statement.

If we are to solve these problems, the government must become more responsive to our needs and take stronger action. If that were the case, I suggest we would not be told that nationalization is the cure-all for everything. We must put the onus on these carriers, and we must take a hard line with them.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the CNR bill in 1968 I suggested that the trouble with the CNR was that there were too many chiefs and not enough Indians. Tonight I suggest that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) should fire the chiefs and let the Indians take over. I am sure that then the railways would be operated at 100 per cent efficiency, because the workers are transportation men, they know the transportation business and they could rectify the problems we are now facing. They could provide the services and the CNR would make a lot more money. These men have spent their lives in the railway business, whereas the officials have not.

During the past winter a man told me that there were no cars and no locomotives available because they were being held away from home at terminals for up to 24 hours. What a way to run a railroad! Certainly the CPR makes money because it takes only the cream and leaves the milk for the public system. There was no money in passenger business, and the CPR gave the public system what was left after it had done with it.

Canada is a large country and the CNR has to take the good with the bad and provide service to areas which the CPR will not handle. Between Windsor and the United States border the Canadian Pacific Railway makes plenty of money on their short and long haul freight runs, as nearly all the traffic is long-haul and the CNR has to look after the short as well as the long haul runs between Sarnia and Portland, Maine.

If a person buys stock in a company, he has the right to attend the annual meetings and question the president and officials about the operations of that company. However, thousands of railway employees pay into pension plans but are not supplied with any information about the type of investments made. The employees could not care less where the money is invested, but surely they should receive an annual statement showing a list of those investments and the interest made. All the employees are asking for is open books and proof that the CNR and CPR pension funds are not generating a 2 per cent pension per year of service. We should give the employees of the CN and CP and other railways the facts and let them decide what they want done with their pension funds. Surely these employees have a right to know where their money is being invested and at what rate.

Canada does not have a deep-sea merchant marine. The government is, however, taking the first step toward strengthening and enlarging our small fleet by closing the coastal trade to all but Canadian vessels. Legislation will soon be introduced to make this effective. Nevertheless, this legislation will take into consideration the fact that parts of Canada, especially the eastern provinces, are dependent upon water-borne transportation and the viability of their enterprises may depend on the lowest possible rates by water.

A second step to enlarge our fleet may occur in Arctic regions, where Canadian resources should be exploited by Canadian technology, giving rise to Canadian enterprise and employing Canadian labour. None of the major shipping countries of the world has vessels that can operate safely in the Canadian Arctic except for a few months a year. The ministry is currently devising ways and means of encouraging Canadian enterprise to take up the challenge of operating Canadian flag vessels in our Arctic on an extended season basis.

In the past, Canada has bought its deep-sea transportation at economical rates from the lowest bidders, whether they be Liberian vessels, British Commonwealth vessels or Russian vessels. This has been favourable costwise and ships have always been available. The changing pattern of world shipping must now be studied to determine whether Canada will be able effectively to continue marketing its products worldwide and at a reasonable cost without any ships of its own.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—PRESENCE OF DES IN UNITED STATES CATTLE IMPORTED INTO CANADA

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my remarks tonight are addressed to both the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). On two separate occasions, on February 28 and March 6, I tried to get an answer from these ministers on a question of vital concern to all Canadian consumers. I asked what the government was doing to ensure that no beef would be imported from the United States which came from cattle fattened with the chemical agent DES.

Reliable evidence has been available for some months that the chemical DES causes cancer in both humans and animals, and on the basis of that information the present government banned the use of DES in this country. In the meantime, the United States supreme court handed down a decision overthrowing the ban on its use in that country and this has raised a very serious question. It means that there is a danger that DES-treated beef can be imported into Canada and pose a threat to the health of Canadian citizens. That is my concern in this matter.

I thought that, between the two ministers, I would have received some assurance that the government had worked out this problem at about the same time the ban on the use of DES in Canada was imposed. However, Mr. Speaker, it now appears that nothing was done. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said on March 6 that necessary steps would be taken to ensure that DES-treated beef would not enter Canada. That was not good enough. He should have said that necessary steps had been taken months ago. It would appear that the health of our citizens is less important to the minister than football franchises.

When the use of DES was banned in the United States there was no guarantee that all beef producers in that country stopped using it as a feed additive. There is no way in which we can know whether or not we have been importing DES-treated beef during the period of the ban, because we have not required exporters in the United States to certify that every beef carcass had been inspected and found to be free of DES. Traces of the chemical can only be detected in the livers of slaughtered cattle, and even then slight traces of DES can go undetected unless very careful tests are made.

I heard recently that the government will undertake spot checks of beef being imported from the United States to ensure that none of it contains DES. This falls far short of what is needed. We cannot do less than demand that every carcass intended for export to Canada is checked and certified. We must insist that the liver test be made on all beef intended for export to this country, and that could not be made at border points. Last year, for instance, we imported 160 million pounds of retail cuts of beef from the United States, and it is obvious that the tests must have been made at the slaughterhouses under United States government supervision.

We cannot do less than demand that guarantee, Mr. Speaker. I think it was in 1952 that we had a serious outbreak of hoof and mouth disease in the western provinces, and the U.S. imposed a total ban on beef imports from Canada until they got assurances that Canada was free of the disease. When a health hazard is known or even suspected in imported foods, the United States government does not hesitate to erect the necessary safeguards for their citizens. Why should we be prepared to do less for our citizens?

Mr. Speaker, we are told that there are two ways that DES can be used to fatten cattle. The first is the way I have already mentioned, and that is by adding DES to the feed. The other way is what is called an ear implant: the chemical is implanted in the ear of the cattle. This can be done many times during the period the animal is being fattened. It is widely believed that the marks of DES implants can be detected on the ear of a slaughtered animal, but while it might be possible in some cases it is not a sure test. And even if we could assume that it would be a valid test, there would still be animals that were given DES in their feed. In those cases we should have assurances that tests had been made on the livers of the slaughtered animals.

We should not lose any more time in setting up some kind of arrangement whereby the United States government would certify that all beef exported to Canada had been tested at the slaughter-house and found to be free of any trace of DES. We cannot, and must not settle for less than that, Mr. Speaker.

It is significant to note that the U.S. court did not overthrow the ban on the use of DES because the hazard to human health had not been proven. It was overthrown on a purely legal point in that the U.S. food and drug administration had not held public hearings on the issue before the ban was imposed. The ban was imposed on the basis that DES presented a hazard to human health, and there is good reason to suppose that a ban will be imposed again in that country as soon as the legal niceties have been ironed out.

In the meantime, no one in Canada can be sure that DES-treated beef will not show up on food counters. In fact, we cannot even be sure that we have not been eating DES-treated beef during the entire period of the ban in our country, which dates from January, 1973. This is an appalling situation and one that cannot be passed over with the answer that some day, someone in the government is going to do something about it.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare have been irresponsible in the handling of this matter. They made the assumption that all U.S. beef producers would discontinue the use of DES during the period of the ban, and therefore all beef that we have imported from the U.S. has been free of the chemical. That was a dangerous assumption.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the remarks made by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) and would like to point out that on March 6, 1974, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) responded to the hon. member's question, he indicated that there would be no importation of DES-implanted beef into Canada. That decision still stands.

I do not think it is really fair or responsible to become so alarmist as to indicate that people have been eating DES-treated beef when there is just no evidence to show that that has been so. The Department of National Health and Welfare is very deeply concerned with the health of Canadians, and it has been concerned with this question for a considerable length of time.

As the hon. member pointed out, up until the decision was made by the supreme court in the United States on January 26 to throw out the embargo on the use of DES in that country, it would have been unreasonable to think that some farmer, either an American or a farmer in any other part of the world, would have been so silly as to run the risk of destroying all his herd by implanting DES when such beef was not allowed to be sold in the U.S. or in Canada. I have a considerable number of rural people in my riding, just as the hon. member has in his, and they are certainly not dumb enough to do anything like that; and I do not think American farmers are that dumb, either.

In any event, we in the Department of National Health and Welfare have an inspection branch which is responsible for this kind of health question. It is not under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture at all. The Minister of Agriculture is concerned with the protection of farmers and with the quality of beef that is imported, but is certainly not directly involved in how it might affect the health of Canadians. That is our responsibility. We are discharging that responsibility. We have said that no beef implanted with DES will be allowed into this country. We are making representations this week to the Americans, through the Department of Agriculture, informing them that we want primary certification in respect of any beef that will be brought into Canada from the U.S. or else we will have to close down the border to imports of beef. I think that is a pretty strong and determined stand that we have taken.

We are concerned about the problem. We are certain DES—implanted beef has not arrived in this country to date, and there is no way it will be available to come in until May 24, 120 days after the ban in the U.S. was lifted. We assure Canadians, including all members of this House, that DES—implanted beef will not be allowed into this country under any circumstances.

ENERGY—REASON IMPERIAL OIL ALLOWED TO DRILL FOR OIL AND GAS IN BEAUFORT SEA BEFORE COMPLETION OF ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight on the subject of gas drilling in the Beaufort Sea, a matter which seemed to upset the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) when I brought it up last week. It was just last week that the minister claimed that a heap of silt dredged from the floor of Shallow Bay is an island. In a moment or two I will be returning to the subject of this so-called island.

Today, tears of joy must have come to the eyes of various ministers as a long awaited dream came true and an application was presented to the National Energy Board to export natural gas from the Mackenzie Delta. This project evidently has the support of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself. Last December, dreaming of all the precious gas reserves that might one day be sent south of the border via a Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline, the Prime Minister declared to the House:

> The government believes that it would be in the public interest to facilitate early construction by any means which do not require the lowering of environmental standards or the neglect of Indian rights and interests.

One would hope that environmental standards and native rights would be of some importance in the drilling for this gas which the government seems to eager to export, but there is some question as to whether this is the case in the drillings now going on in the Beaufort Sea.

Two weeks ago we were told that the government would allow no offshore drilling until environmental studies are completed, two years from now. At about the same time we learned that Imperial Oil had made a substantial find after drilling from a man-made offshore sand bar in the Beaufort Sea. But this was not offshore, insisted the minister; this was an island. Imperial Oil named it Adgo, or something like that. I suggest that after the spring break-up the island will no longer be there, so I call it a sand bar.

Oilweek, the government's favourite ecology magazine, stated on page 17 of its March 4 issue that Adgo is, and I quote:

—made of dredged silt, now frozen. It will "self-destruct" during spring break-up.

Mr. Speaker, it will disappear like the sand bars in the Mackenzie River which I have seen disappear after a flood and perhaps reappear further downstream.

It would appear that the only purpose of building the island at all was to snow the minister and his people who advised the Tuktoyaktuk council to grant a land use permit. A land use permit to drill for gas in the Beaufort Sea! The minister knows, or ought to know, that if a blow-out occurs it will take between four and eight months to drill a relief well. That can mean a lot of gas, and maybe oil too, in the Beaufort Sea. And is this such a far-fetched possibility? Imperial's first island well, Immerk, had to be capped after drilling to a depth of 7,000 feet because of the intense pressures encountered, well above the level at which they said this could happen. As Oilweek put it:

Geopressures will continue to cause moments of excitement as drillers attempt to harness high pressure zones.

Mr. Speaker, I hate the thought that at every "moment of excitement" serious damage may be threatened to the environment and to the native peoples of whose heritage it forms such an important part. I should like the minister to produce the environmental studies on the basis of which the government allowed the Beaufort Sea drilling to go ahead. I believe this would be a minimal indication of the government's sincerity in protecting environmental standards and native rights. If not, it will become very plain that the government speaks with a forked tongue.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member rose tonight, but I am a bit surprised by the tone of his remarks because he is the member for the Northwest Territories and should be happy that we were right when we gave the permit to drill from land on a man-made island and that we have found oil and gas in that formation so quickly. Now the people of the north can be assured of a great future because we have found the way to drill efficiently and to protect the ecology at the same time.

Being the member of parliament for this area, he is not very well advised to come here today and tell me I was wrong when I got the permission of the people of Tuktoyaktuk to drill from a man-made island in very shallow water. There is no great problem there, such as there would be if you were drilling either from a platform or a ship in deep water. The drilling was in very shallow water and was carried out in accordance with regulations the government had put forward after studies had been carried out by my department, and after the advice of experts of the Department of the Environment and the people involved in the wildlife service had been given. So, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a great moment for the people of the north. They see that there is even more oil and gas there. This will help the economy of the north.

The hon. member raised the question of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. That pipeline is very important because it will mean that the resources in the north will some day be available for the Canadian market. The pipeline will not be used only for transportating American resources, Alaska, of course, being an American state. There is gas there which will go through the pipeline to the American market, but I hope at the same time that we can use that pipeline for Canadian resources we are finding in the north, resources which will meet the needs of Canadians. If there is enough there, perhaps we can sell some to the Americans. But if there is to be no pipeline, the resources we are finding in the north will not be available to Canadians. I therefore think that it is important for Canadians, because energy is so important.

We must utilize the resources we have. We have been drilling for them in a safe way on a man-made island built in shallow water in the Beaufort Sea. By so doing we are making sure that Canadian resources will be available for Canadians. These are resources for the south which come from the north. I therefore welcome this discovery by Imperial Oil, which came after drilling had been done in shallow water in the Beaufort Sea. The hon. member should be just as happy that we are proving to Canadians that the north is a great part of Canada.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW ACT

TABLING OF GUIDELINES CONCERNING REAL ESTATE BUSINESSES

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table in both official languages copies of the foreign investment review guidelines concerning real estate businesses.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills. First reading of Senate public bills. Government notices of motions. Oral questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to move a motion. Apparently it was not brought to the attention of the Chair. I would ask the House to grant leave because it is a matter of extraordinary importance to western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might revert to motions for the purpose of allowing the right hon. member for Prince Albert to propose his motion.

TRANSPORT

CLOSING BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS OF CERTAIN SASKATCHEWAN SUBDIVISIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, by leave of the House I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House condemns as indefensible the action of the Canadian National Railways in totally or partially closing 21 of the 41 railway subdivisions in Saskatchewan for freight under the grain block loading system and for other carload traffic for an indefinite period at a time when the shipment of grain to the major markets is of imperative importance, and the action taken will result in serious and detrimental consequences to the farming population of the province of Saskatchewan in particular as well as to the national economy.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert under the terms of Standing Order 43. It requires unanimity. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSAL TO INCREASE OLD AGE PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent and important question.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House ask the government to consider the possibility of raising the old age security pensions to $200 a month for a person of 60 and his spouse under 60, and to abolish the supplement now subject to a needs test.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

VETERANS LAND ACT

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING TERMINATION OF LOANS ON MARCH 31, 1974

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Veterans Affairs I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It arises out of a letter dated March 20 written by the Minister of Veterans Affairs to the hon. member for Charlevoix in which the minister gives this explanation:

[Translation]

—will put an end to the applications made by veterans eligible for obtaining loans to buy a property.

[English]

In view of the fact the letter, which is dated the day before yesterday, indicates that the program of loans to veterans for the purchase of property will terminate on March 31, 1974, and gives the reasons for this, will the Acting Prime Minister state whether this still represents the policy of the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, the government has been reviewing the situation in light of the speeches that were made in the House when a motion was moved to extend the date. This consideration is still under way and no decision has yet been reached.

Mr. Stanfield: As the Acting Prime Minister has indicated the matter is still being considered, I gather this statement in the minister's letter does not represent the policy of the government. In view of the great concern all across the country about the termination of this program at the end of this month, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House that the government will give the House its decision very early next week and terminate the inexcusable uncertainty that faces the veterans of this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that just as soon as the decision is made it will be communicated to the House.

Mr. Bell: Playing with the veterans.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. In addition to the discussion taking place in cabinet on the March 31, 1974 deadline, was consideration given to repealing the October, 1968, deadline for certification, increasing the maximum loan ceiling from $18,000 to an amount to meet today's requirements and to reducing the minimum lot requirements?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, these views, which the hon. member has expressed on previous occasions, are also being looked at in cabinet.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that an extension of the deadline will require an amendment to the Veterans Land Act and as there are only five sitting days left next week before expiry, will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that that legislation will be introduced before March 31?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I said in reply to the question from the Leader of the Opposition, just as soon as the government's decision is made it will be communicated to the House.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTION TO PREVENT POSSIBLE FURTHER INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Oh, he has arrived. In the presence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I should like to direct this question to him. In view of the fact that the Food Prices Review Board yesterday reconfirmed that a general increase of two cents on a loaf of bread was all that could be justified at present, and in view of yesterday's statement by the Bakery Council that a further increase of one cent can be expected, what steps is the minister taking to protect the consumer from the effects of this general stampede by the bakeries to get higher prices at the earliest possible moment?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think there is some misunderstanding on the part of the hon. member. According to the information I have with respect to the situation, the bakeries are going along with the position taken by the board, and the increase referred to by some industry spokesmen is the one cent increase which the board would consider justified in individual cases if there were costs which would call for an increase of that sort.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): I believe the minister omitted something in his reading of the statement by the Bakery Council. The council has indicated it is seeking a general increase, not an increase in individual cases as the board recommended. In view of this situation, is the government now prepared to bring in legislation to enable the Food Prices Review Board to make its decisions stick?

Mr. Gray: Again, my information is that the position of the Bakery Council is not that stated by the hon. member. If it is in fact the case that the bakeries are not, in effect, agreeing with the position taken by the Food Prices Review Board, there will obviously be a responsibility on the part of the government to take appropriate action.

PRICE OF BREAD—NEED OF INDEPENDENT BAKERIES TO HAVE INCREASE TO REMAIN IN BUSINESS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether the government intends to bring in a measure to allow the independent bakeries to stay in business, because the information I have is that if they are not permitted to increase the price of bread many of these smaller independent bakeries will go under, something which would be to the detriment of the consumer?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, recommendations in this area were made in the report of the board yesterday and they are certainly being given urgent consideration. It is interesting that the hon. member should now be speaking for business rather than for consumers.

STUDY OF TOTAL COST OF ALL PROGRAMS COMPARED WITH COST OF PROPOSED GUARANTEED INCOME

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has he ordered the department to make studies on the total cost of all social assistance programs now in effect in the provinces and at the federal level and has he compared those costs with those suggested by the Social Credit Party of Canada, in other words, does the minister consider the establishment of an universal and guaranteed minimum annual income program as financially feasible?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are continuously reviewing the programs whose cost the provinces and the federal government share in the welfare and employment fields. I am also in rather constant communication with my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare on this matter.

TRANSPORT

SHORT-TERM MEASURES TO PROVIDE RAILWAY CARS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): My question is for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. I should like to return to the boxcar situation. In light of massive lay-offs—the minister is smiling. I am gravely concerned. It is not at all funny.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Your leader is smiling, too.

Mr. Oberle: In light of massive lay-offs in the logging and lumber industry in central and northern British Columbia, and in light of the fact that one company has been forced to cut back its operation to a four-day week, along the lines of what was done in England recently, resulting in the lay-off of 500 people in this case alone, can the minister tell us today how he is responding to the demands from his western counterpart for a short-term solution to the boxcar problem affecting the lumber and logging industry in central and northern British Columbia?

● (1120)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope that I will not smile at all. I think the problem is very serious. I was not smiling about it, but I think we should keep a little sense of humour.

Mr. McGrath: Don't let them take that away from you.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As hon. members know, ten days ago I met with the premier of British Columbia in regard to bringing Canadian National Railways and the British Columbia Railway together to find a solution. I think the best thing to do in British Columbia at the moment as a short-term solution is for the CNR to lend cars to the BCR so that lumber can be moved. I am told that they are about to reach an agreement and maybe this will produce results, but that is all that I can do.

Mr. Oberle: May I ask the minister whether he would consider a takeover of the CPR, nationalizing the CPR, a short-term solution to this problem?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: For the benefit of the members to my left, I should like the minister to explain to the House how he considers that a Crown corporation can run two railroads better than the one they are running right now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In order to understand these recent revelations about the difficulties in the Ministry of Transport, can the minister say when he discovered that the former minister had left the department in such a mess?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that that question is hardly in order. The minister rises on a point of order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very unfair question. I have never indicated that my predecessor, the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, was in any way responsible, and probably the hon. member for Trinity was not either. I refrain from accusing any civil servant and simply say we did not foresee the situation as it is now. We are trying to correct it, but I do not accept such comments about it made in the House.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the minister in charge of DREE, the former Minister of Transport. Was the minister aware when he left the Department of Transport that there were any of the difficulties that the present minister has laid on his doorstep?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that that question is out or order.

PROVISION OF BOXCARS FOR LUMBER AND WHEAT—USE BY MINISTER OF POWER UNDER RAILWAY ACT

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport concerning the shortage of boxcars to supply the needs of the lumber industry and the wheat industry. Is the minister prepared, under section 262 of the Railway Act, to demand that the railways supply the needed equipment, and does he intend to use that power?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am going to meet with the companies and I hope with the shippers early next week to examine this question. I hope the shippers can come. The problem is that even if we start to build boxcars, that does not mean we are going to have additional boxcars next month.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will notice that there are quite a few who are seeking supplementaries on this question. Perhaps we should try to limit them to some extent. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, then the hon. member for Vegreville, and we will see where we go from there.

Mr. Rose: There have been suggestions by the minister and by others in the House that the government is considering the establishment of a controller to allocate boxcars. Would the minister tell the House if there is anything new on this question, whether a decision has been reached or when he expects a decision to be reached?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, last week or early this week—I do not remember exactly when—I said there were at least three decisions involved in getting boxcars quickly. There was the decision to refurbish a certain number of boxcars in order to move wheat to the west coast. After that there was a decision by the CNR to spend $50 million in order to buy boxcars and locomotives. There is also a decision which is going to be taken by the government, or which is before the government, concerning a certain number of hopper cars. We are trying to handle the problem as best we can.

POSSIBILITY OF BRINGING CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY UNDER PUBLIC OWNERSHIP—STATEMENT BY MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Transport stating government policy when he said in the House yesterday, "Personally I am not interested in bringing CP under public ownership", or was he reflecting government policy when he said he would nationalize the CPR to members of the media outside this chamber last evening?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Transport is doing an excellent job—

An hon. Member: What has he done?

Mr. Sharp: —in bringing before the House and the country the very difficult and fundamental issues this country faces in respect of transportation.

An hon. Member: He has done nothing.

Mr. Sharp: May I just add that, as the minister always does, he prefaced his personal views by saying "personally".

An hon. Member: That's the whole trouble.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—FORMULA USED TO DETERMINE ALLOCATIONS TO CONSTITUENCIES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Local Initiatives Program. In light of the statistics given Wednesday in reply to a question on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Leeds, would the minister explain to the House the formula used to determine LIP allocations to each constituency?

Mr. Speaker: I trust the minister can answer the question briefly, otherwise he should indicate whether he will make a statement on motions.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the formula for the 1972-73 Local Initiatives Program has been disclosed to the House on many occasions. If the hon. member is really serious about each constituency, I would have to give the statistical details for 264 unit breakdowns, which I do not think would be possible in the time available during the question period.

Mr. Scott: If, as the minister indicated some time previously, allocations are based on unemployment figures in the area, does it follow that certain cabinet ministers' ridings have an overabundance of unemployment?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the unemployment statistics in various areas represented the prime factor, but if the hon. member will look back at the comments made by myself and my predecessor which apply to 1972-73 he will find that is not the only factor.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AMOUNTS ALLOCATED TO WESTMOUNT AND BROME-MISSISQUOI RIDINGS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Since he agrees that slow growth and high unemployment should be or are the criteria for awarding LIP grants, on what basis was $1 million allocated to Westmount riding represented by the President of the Treasury Board when only $300,000 was allocated to Brome-Missisquoi even though the number of applications which met the criteria from both areas was approximately the same?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: They have a better member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please.

An hon. Member: Another example of pork-barrelling.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Another Bonaventure.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister may reply to the hon. member's question, but I hope we do not get involved in statistics dealing with all constituencies.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out on many occasions, the particular riding of Westmount contains, in addition to some rather prosperous homes, a great number of people who suffer from deep poverty. I might add that many projects approved for the riding cover a great deal wider area than the riding of Westmount, as has been pointed out by the people who have made an objective examination of this situation on many occasions.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, on the basis of carefully researched facts I would ask this further supplementary question. Can the minister explain on what basis grants were awarded when proportionately across Canada Liberal ridings go $2 for every $1 in Conservative ridings?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very apparent—

Mr. Bell: There is going to be an election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: —that a great deal of the representation provided by the Liberal party in this House of Commons is from areas of Canada that do suffer from unemployment, including Quebec and the Maritime provinces. I defy any member of the House to deny that the degree of unemployment in those areas is not higher than it is in the rest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary—

Mr. Nystrom: My question is addressed—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, it is a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I heard the hon. member as well as many other members asking for supplementaries. I indicated previously I would recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, who has been recognized.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

INQUIRY AS TO AWARDING OF CONTRACTS TO HUDSON INSTITUTE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Science and Technology. In view of the fact that Herman Kahn's think-tank, the Hudson Institute, recently established a branch office in Montreal which is apparently directed by a former Power Corporation vice-president, Claude Frenette, I should like to ask the Minister of Science and Technology whether or not contracts are being given to the Hudson Institute by her department and, if so, what is the nature of the contracts?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the nature of our relationship with the Hudson Institute is that of an annual subscription which has been going on for a number of years.

INDUSTRY

ROLE OF HUDSON INSTITUTE COMMITTEE ON CORPORATE ENVIRONMENT AND DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES IN FORMULATING POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the Hudson Institute is now in Canada and has established a committee on the corporate environment, and as the minister has a representative on that ongoing committee, I should like to ask him what the role of that committee and the Hudson Institute is in the future formulation of an industrial policy in this country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is just one of a number of different and important inputs. It is concerned with the corporate environment from 1975 to 1985.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the fact the Minister of Supply and Services has just issued a statement saying that he has entered the field of futures' research to do forecasts in social, political and economic fields, and also in view of the minister's statement and Khan's ideas on the tar sands, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce what impact that committee and what impact the new adventures of the Minister of Supply and Services will have on industrial development in this country in the future?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think that is far too general a question to give a succinct answer. I have already indicated that the corporate environment study is a worldwide study which includes Canadian firms as well as international firms. I think the Department of the Minister of State for Science and Technology, which has retained the Hudson Institute and did so when I was minister, is the only government department of any government in the world to participate in this kind of adventure. I think it is a very useful type of activity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister and hon. members that we have reached the point where supplementaries might be placed on the order paper or the minister might be given an opportunity to make a statement on motions.

Mr. Nystrom: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that the Minister of State for Science and Technology said that the Hudson Institute had not been retained. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce now says it has been retained. I think this is a very important issue. Perhaps the Minister of State for Science and Technology should be allowed to shed some light on this very important question.

Mr. Speaker: Then perhaps we should have two statements on motions. The hon. member for Yukon.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF REASONS FOR SUICIDES, INCIDENTS INVOLVING DISCHARGE OF FIREARMS AND DISAPPEARANCE OF NARCOTICS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In light of the apparent alarming incidence of suicides and attempted suicides, incidents involving the discharge of firearms, and the disappearance of narcotics from police exhibit lockers, I should like to ask the minister whether any internal inquiry is going on within the RCMP to determine the reason for these rather alarming incidents?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member is referring to suicides within the RCMP, among members of the force.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes.

Mr. Allmand: We have had suicides from time to time, unfortunate cases, but I do not know whether the level is one that would be alarming. We are always concerned when there are suicides and measures are taken to try to deal with personality problems, but I do not think there is an alarmingly high level in comparison with the level among the general population.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am not referring to the level of suicides but rather to incidents involving suicide attempts, suicides, the discharge of firearms, and the disappearance of narcotics from police lockers—there is a trial now going on in British Columbia in that regard. In view of such events, which seem to be on the rise, would the minister say whether an over-all internal investigation is now being conducted within the force to determine the reasons?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to two things. One is the disappearance of narcotics. I must say that no particular case has been brought to my attention recently where there has been taking of narcotics by RCMP officers. There have been cases where the use of firearms by members of the RCMP has led to unfortunate incidents. Members of the RCMP all have weapons, and there have been cases where they have been used against themselves and against others in unfortunate incidents. We are trying to make sure that the rules we have in effect in this respect are followed.

STATISTICS CANADA

SUPPLYING OF MAILING LISTS FOR COMMERCIAL PURPOSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister recently stated he was reviewing the selling of lists by Statistics Canada and would report back to the House. Is he now in a position to clarify this situation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, and I both agreed that the practice of selling lists should be reviewed. Statistics Canada thereupon suspended the selling of lists until the review was completed. I am now advised by Statistics Canada that the review has been completed and that it has discontinued the practice of selling these lists.

ACCURACY OF STATISTICS ON AMERICANS TEACHING AT CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES IN LIGHT OF INDEPENDENT SURVEYS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same minister. Noting that a large discrepancy exists between figures published by Statistics Canada on the proportion of Americans teaching at Canadian universities and similar statistics published by independent surveys of academics, will the minister now instruct Dr. Ostry to reassess the survey base used by Statistics Canada in obtaining such information?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will draw the representation to Dr. Ostry's attention.

PROPOSED ADMISSION OF STATISTICS CANADA DATA AS EVIDENCE IN PROSECUTIONS WITHOUT RIGHT OF CROSS-EXAMINATION TO TEST ACCURACY

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the matters just raised by my colleague concerning statistics and the accuracy of the nationality of university and college teachers in Canada and also in view of revelations yesterday concerning the extent of confidentiality of Statistics Canada data related to unemployment insurance claimants, would the minister indicate whether he or his department were consulted or even approved the sections in the Combines Investigation Act amendments now before us which would make Statistics Canada data admissible in evidence in any prosecution or proceeding under that act without the right of cross-examination for purposes of testing accuracy?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is always a large amount of inter-departmental consultation with regard to any legislation. I cannot give a precise answer to a specific point, but I will undertake to make inquiries and report back.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for the operation of Information Canada. In view of the fact that the practice of marking up prices of goods on hand is frowned on by the Food Prices Review Board and by his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as well as by customers, would the minister explain why Information Canada is following the practice of marking up the prices of books on hand, as a matter of fact, even above the shelf list price?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe I am aware of the particular incident to which the hon. member is referring and which was written up in the press a day or two ago. I am checking that matter out. As far as I am aware, no policy has been approved by Information Canada of indulging in such a practice, but we are checking the accuracy of that particular incident.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns a constituent of mine who has had his social insurance card stolen and his identity is being used by another person.

An hon. Member: By a member of parliament?

Mr. Kempling: This is a serious matter, so please listen to the question. This person is accepting employment in my constituent's name and has amassed criminal charges that are presently standing in the name of my constituent. Inasmuch as this has been known to the government since 1972 and the government has refused to issue a new social insurance number, claiming that it would cause confusion in the Canada Pension Plan, UIC and National Revenue, but has recommended that my constituent change his name legally—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask the question.

Mr. Kempling: My question is whether it is the government's policy to advise citizens to change their names legally to accommodate the government's computer system?

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AMOUNT ALLOCATED TO CONSTITUENCY OF VANCOUVER CENTRE

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Local Initiatives Program and concerns Liberal ridings in poverty areas. Why is it that when the minister made his announcement the minister in charge of housing and urban affairs was to get $1.3 million in his riding while on the order paper we find that his riding has received $3 million? Could he explain that?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is mixing two fiscal year periods. I believe the information tabled the other day related to one fiscal year and included extensions before May 31 whereas the second figure referred to the projection for the 1973-74 period. If I am incorrect, I shall certainly check the information, but I think the hon. member is mixing the two figures. On the basic question, it should be recognized that a great number of projects did receive extensions and many of them had as a basic mailing address the particular constituency to which they were credited but in fact the activities were carried on city wide and in some cases on a region-wide or province-wide basis.

Mr. Reynolds: Is the minister telling me that the sum of money allocated to the minister's riding was cut from $3 million last year to $1 million this year?

Mr. Andras: I presume that is the conclusion the hon. member can come to, yes.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Why did the riding of Brome-Mississquoi receive more funds than the riding of Saint-Denis?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is well known that this is a problem which Air Canada is studying. Of course, Air Canada is the one that will decide where the base will be located, but I know that my colleagues from Winnipeg are interested in the matter and it is being discussed. In view of the fact that departmental officials administering the Family Allowance Act are interpreting the word "parent" not to include grandparents and are taking away family allowances from children who have lost their parents, would the minister consider changing the regulations immediately so as not to contravene the intention of parliament on this issue?

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the serious and insecure situation at Millhaven prison in my constituency. It results from an incident Wednesday evening at Millhaven prison in which Donal Pyke, a guard, was assaulted by a prisoner and seriously injured. Will the minister hold an investigation into this incident and all the other troubles there with the objective of charging prisoners who assault guards?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is an investigation under way at present. I might say that the two inmates who attacked the guards have been placed in dissociation.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the fact that the position of OFY co-ordinator for Prince Edward Island was vacant for many months and was filled only one day before the March 15 deadline for submission of applications, will the minister give sympathetic consideration to extending that deadline in these special circumstances or at least give sympathetic consideration to applications that have been or may be received late?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as of the other day we had received and coded about 93 applications from Prince Edward Island. I have looked into the matter and I do not think there is justification for extension of the March 15 deadline there or anywhere else. I do not think P.E.I. applicants received any less aid than those of any other province. It is true there was a change in the co-ordinator. There is no co-ordinator in each province; this one happens to be headquartered in Halifax for the maritime region. A new co-ordinator was hired early in March but the previous one remained in office until his replacement arrived, so the Atlantic region has never been without a co-ordinator. There was a project officer in P.E.I. until January 31 and that position was filled shortly thereafter. In the meantime, there was a very competent secretary who helped those applicants she was able to and referred all others to Halifax where they received assistance. OFY information was sent to schools, libraries, CMCs, the Student Manpower Centre, universities, and the Atlantic regional co-ordinator went on television and—

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED NEED FOR DAIRY POLICY AND INCREASED SUBSIDY FOR MILK

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette) moved:

That this House, considering the necessity for a reform of our troubled dairy industry, requests that the government immediately introduce its policy on dairy products and, furthermore, that it announce an increase of two dollars in the price paid per hundredweight of milk.

Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to speak as member for Joliette, a constituency very much interested in that industry which is experiencing difficulties and danger at the present time. As I must reply first to those who are involved in the dairy industry in my constituency, and considering the importance for the dairy producers in my province who represent, I believe, 50 per cent of the dairy production in this country, and without forgetting of course all the milk producers throughout Canada who are also worried, I am convinced that our party had to reply to the invitation of the people responsible for the dairy farmers of Canada as well as the Quebec Federation, and all those closely or less closely connected to it, to consider such an important question, since the minister responsible for this should also let us know about the decisions of the Canadian Dairy Commission in a few days.

I believe our suggestions, our speeches today will, I hope, reply to the people concerned and to the suggestions they made to us a long time ago and I hope of course the suggestions and recommendations that I will have the opportunity to make and that all members will make to the government will prompt the government to reply in a very clear and precise way, taking account of the importance of this question.

We readily recognize that the milk producers' situation is untenable and again, as I know that the Canadian Dairy Commission will let us know their new policy in a few days, it was exceedingly important, I believe, to select this day and to enable all parties to speak on this question. In this way, we meet fondest wishes of all those concerned with this industry.

Mr. Speaker, the dairy farmers of Quebec and the dairy farmers of Canada who produce industrial or fluid milk met with representatives of all political parties. The members held discussions recently with these officials and we know full well that the officials of the dairy industry are still waiting for the answer they sought. Considering the importance of an early answer, I believe it is our duty to press the government to intervene much more rapidly.

Mr. Speaker, why are we in such a situation and why has the government waited so long? Personally I have been receiving briefs from responsible organizations warning of the danger facing us and this dairy industry today, namely the possible collapse and the obvious inadequacy of milk production in this country.

Responsible organizations have made repeated representations and requests to the government which were ignored, I regret to say. For this reason alone, we are holding today a special debate on the matter and we note a deep concern among milk producers as well as a reduction in the number of milk producers which is increasingly being felt.

Therefore, does the government intend to act? I feel that all the same the government cannot allow such an industry to deteriorate much longer. We are quite aware of the importance of this industry for the consumer or the ordinary citizen, as well as the huge amounts invested in it. Therefore, we have every reason to believe that the government intends to act, but we thought that it was about to act five, four or three years ago.

Once again, this year we find ourselves in a situation where responsible organizations have to send delegates to Ottawa to try and sensitize us again as well as to urge us as an opposition party to force the government into action. I think this is unfortunate. Today I hope that by outlining our party's position which fully agrees with the recommendations of the dairy farmers of Canada, there will be no hesitation. We urge the government to respond to the dairy farmers, that is to meet the producers' wishes and requirements.

Therefore, in view of the fact that my province produces 50 per cent of the Canadian milk, I am calling upon all Quebec members to compel the government to meet the essential requirements which would enable the producers to stay in business.

I would like to make a few remarks on the main recommendations made by the Dairy Farmers of Canada. They make no bones about saying that the government should formally commit itself without delay to implement a national policy providing that it will use our dairy production to meet the needs of Canadians.

It is only natural that milk producers should obtain the assurance that they may produce according to consumer needs. And if a government will not acknowledge this fact, I wonder why, because it would then prevent Canadians from producing a commodity which would meet Canadian needs.

The brief goes on, and I quote:

> 2. Never in the past have the representatives of the milk producers of Canada, assembled in annual meeting of Dairy Farmers of Canada felt so strong a sense of urgency and concern: urgency over the need for basic commitments and decisions that must be made by the Government of Canada over the next month or two; concern that if those commitments are not made, and the decisions wisely taken, serious and perhaps irreparable harm will be done to Canada's dairy industry, and to the basic interests of Canadian consumers and the Canadian economy.
> 3. There are three essential priorities:
> (i) an overall increase in returns to industrial milk and cream production equivalent to at least $2.00 per hundred pounds of milk.

As all hon. members know, government ministers met with Quebec officials recently. That was reported in the press, and it was shown that an additional $2 would be a minimum. As for us, we understood that those figures were justified and the needs were real, and we readily support that recommendation which is vital for the future of the milk industry.

Is this government now in a position to respond in the same way rather than wait a few more weeks? We know producers are concerned and it is up to us to dispel those anxieties. I think this government could at least answer this question today by making, and I quote:

> (ii) a commitment by the federal government, and preferably by Parliament in legislative form, to future maintenance of income from milk production at fully adequate levels.

I said earlier that it is absolutely necessary for us to try and match production with consumption. Of course, it is always difficult for the Commission to come up with accurate forecasts. However, when we consider that this year, we had to import 54 million pounds of butter, we have every reason to be shocked by those irresponsible and inaccurate forecasts. Therefore, milk producers have grounds for complaint, because they are compelled to restrict their production and to accept butter imports worth 54 million pounds.

It has also been stated in the light of serious studies made that as the situation is now evolving, we will have to import another 100 million pounds of butter. I would think that no one in this House will accept that without a word and that we will all try to force the government into acting quickly.

I was told recently that the number of milk producers had decreased, and please correct if I am mistaken, but I think that the number has been cut in half during the past five years. It will be stated that the producers involved are older people who have decided to give up dairy farming. This is not true, Mr. Speaker.

For instance, some forty milk producers have decided to auction their stock this year, and we are already expecting still a further spectacular and extraordinary number of auctions later on. These people know their arithmetic and they realize that they cannot at the present time support their families with what they get from their dairy operations. They have therefore decided to sell their farms.

And do not dare tell me that it is because these people are getting tired and have reached a ripe old age, that they have decided to live off the Old Age Security Pension, for it is simply not true! Obviously then, milk producers need normal and adequate incomes to cope with the needs of their families. I do not think Canadians will be against that. No hon. member will be against this principle either. Just how far can we go with words to try and solve these problems. I therefore urge hon. members to try and understand how important it is to solve this persistent and dangerous problem which might jeopardize the future of the milk industry in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, they also ask for one quota system for industrial milk and cream, instead of the present double system of marketing quotas and subsidy quotas. It is quite normal, logical and legitimate to give a favourable answer to such a request.

We know perfectly well that in view of the fact that the production quota is not subsidized, this results in a price that is below the cost of production. There again, those who followed the problem of our dairy industry are perfectly aware of this fact and cannot deny it. They will recognize that this is fair and true, but nothing has been done for two years in this regard. And yet, we knew long before today that dairy farmers were obliged to produce milk at a loss. Therefore, I suggest that the consumer himself will understand and will not demand that dairy farmers produce at a loss. Nobody wants to work without getting a minimum return, an adequate return. As regards those three priorities of our party relating to milk producers' requests, I hope that all hon. members will give a favourable answer and will oblige the minister to make a policy statement now rather than to wait ten more days. But if we must wait for ten days, if this is what the Canadian Milk Commission wants, then we agree to wait ten more days.

But when the Canadian Milk Commission makes its announcement, I hope that the minister who, I am sure, is aware of the situation, will respond as hon. members so kindly did. The Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellett) took part in discussions and met dairy farmers; by the way, I read his statement which was encouraging. But there again, following their recent meeting with government members as well as Social Credit Party, NDP and Progressive Conservative members dairy farmers hope to get satisfaction because their claims are justified.

So I do hope that this debate and this chance that we have today to reply favourably to their requests will also be followed by positive action on the government's part.

Mr. Speaker, I continue reading the brief from which I select very interesting abstracts:

> These things must be achieved for the 1974-75 dairy year beginning April 1st.
> The major shortfalls in the present position and policies of the Canadian dairy industry are as follows:
> Returns to producers of industrial milk and farm-separated cream are sharply below necessary and equitable levels: necessary to provide Canadian consumers with their requirements for industrial milk products; equitable in relation to the income milk producers must receive for their labour, their investment and their management skills.
> The fluid milk consumer subsidy policy, by which the federal government has involved itself in the negotiation of fluid milk price levels to producers, has marked its entry into a field of policy from which it should immediately withdraw, ending the setting of any restraints upon the level of producer returns as a condition of payment of the subsidy.
> Present policies of the federal government limit to a fixed amount the quantity of milk upon which direct assistance payments are made with the result that production of milk over this amount (which is below national requirements) is unprofitable.
> Present policies of the federal government on maximum limits for entitlement to direct assistance payments for dairy enterprises are discouraging progressive producers and hindering efficiency improvement.
> Present policies of the federal government are resulting in serious discrimination against producers of farm-separated cream in the returns they receive.
> Federal and provincial policies for encouragement and assistance to the dairy industry in education, extension, credit and finance, and farm labour are inadequate and too often ineffective, with far too little planning and co-operation jointly with producers themselves.
> The industry is being severely damaged by the lack of concrete commitment by government to stability and adequacy of returns to producers in the years ahead, and a systematic basic of forward planning for the industry. Fears and uncertainty created by references to the "temporary" nature of the dairy subsidy program must be brought to an end.
> There must be a sharp upward revision in present thinking by government, on the level of returns that is required in the dairy industry today compared with other occupations, farm and non-farm.
> Increasingly, the producers of milk for fluid consumption must be recognized as having a legitimate, vital and probably growing place in the production of milk for industrial use, and policies must be designed to take this into account.
> In relation to all these matters, and in spite of representations by Dairy Farmers of Canada over recent months and indeed years in some cases, corrective action and policy has been too long delayed. The result is that the need now is for extensive decision-making and action on all of these fronts immediately. There is a critical need for early announcement of policy this year, for late-winter decision-making on production plans by producers.
> Dairy Farmers of Canada is however encouraged by evidence that there is increasing appreciation by Canadian consumers of the value and attractiveness of milk and milk products in the Canadian diet. New and important confirmation of the nutritional value of milk has come forward from the Nutrition Canada Survey, and consumption of a wide range of products is rising. Canada's dairy farmers take great pride in their products and express the hope and belief that the place of milk and milk products in the Canadian diet will continue to expand.

[Mr. La Salle.]

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this part of the brief which has been sent to every member highlights the necessity of doing something for that industry if we intend to give sincere and serious consideration to everyday problems.

I find it is important to be responsible enough and tell the truth. We are asked to approve a cost increase and the government can reply immediately: You are asking for grants, for additional rates on account of added costs, but who is going to foot the bill?

I am right, I think, in saying that the risk involved in letting this industry go bankrupt could cost Canadians much more if the matter is not attended to immediately. I think it is important to remind consumers of the necessity to keep this industry alive for their own sake even if they had to bear part of the additional costs. If we think that this is an essential industry, we should have the courage to publicize it, to claim for a publicity that would make the consumer understand that it would be much more economical for him to pay for this increase, even if he had to pay part of it, than to let this industry die and rely on imported products that will be more expensive and which he will have to pay for, anyway.

Even if the government recognizes that such a measure would be a bad political move or a non profitable one, it has the responsibility to apply it if it is convinced that it is essential for the future of the Canadian people.

I do hope that the government will react that way and once again, I will not hide it and I do not want the consumer to believe that he will have to pay part of it, but it is up to the government, up to us as members of parliament, to make the consumer understand that it is more important to save our dairy industry and to guarantee a sufficient income to our milk producers than to let it go down, as is the case today.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that there was a decrease in the number of milk producers and I recently learned that there will be even more auctions this spring, and this is unfortunate. It has been said that young people no longer want to get into farming in general and dairy production in particular.

What concrete steps has the government taken to encourage these young people to replace the head of the family? Of course, there have been openings for loans, but at interest rates that are way out of reach of the young farmer.

The minister recently said in committee that the young people are not interested in agriculture and wish to have a better quality of life or the opportunity to live like the young people in the cities.

I do not agree with such a statement, Mr. Speaker. For instance, it is obvious that the youth, who has seen his father face current problems and who has grown up in a family that has had great difficulty in making ends meet because the farming policies were not sufficient to give the farmers the necessary income, is worried and is reluctant to get into the business.

In my opinion, the young people could have this assurance, this security that no farmer could get compared with other labour sectors.

If a young Canadian were assured of surviving, of making a decent living, he would not hesitate to take over the family farm, but to the extent that we will offer him incentives. As regards loans, I think we should consider the possibility of granting a minimum interest rate, perhaps a respite on payment of interests for the first years and tax deductions. The role, the responsibility, the future of our agricultural industry are at stake.

In that regard, farmers and dairy producers complain about labour shortage in the summer. I invite the government to establish a youth labour bank, ensuring fair and attractive wages, thus allowing farmers to reduce their production costs so they can get the absolute minimum return they need.

Mr. Speaker, barely a day or two ago we received from the Food Prices Review Board a very interesting document prepared by Professors Fischer and MacFarlane. In its conclusion they recognize that the requests of the Dairy Farmers of Canada are justified. May I quote you an excerpt from this document:

> The Board considers that the urgency of the situation requires that the conclusions of the report be brought to the attention of governments without delay. It calls on government and industry to give these proposals immediate and serious consideration as practical suggestions for the resolution of significant problems facing the dairy industry and the consumer.
> Through reporting to the public in this way, the Board wishes to draw the attention of the federal and provincial governments to the strong sense of concern with which it views circumstances affecting the dairy industry which threaten the future availability of milk supplies at reasonable cost.

In this brief, Mr. Speaker, the problems of the dairy industry are mentioned, and I quote:

> (1) low financial returns to dairy producers and declining production despite substantial public support in the form of subsidies;
> (2) a lack of available skilled dairy farm labour, and the inability of dairy producers to compete with off-farm employment opportunities;
> (3) excessive seasonal fluctuations in production of milk for manufacturing which limits total annual output; and
> (4) the present high level of feed grain costs.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is important to consider all of these problems which have direct implications on the dairy industry. The government has made reference to a fair price for feed grains; nevertheless, the people responsible, that is the producers, especially in Quebec, and I think the same thing applies anywhere, are still expecting this fair price.

Last fall, we just about had standard prices and this led to a shortage in supply and the product which could be bought at competitive prices was simply not available.

All this, Mr. Speaker, is discouraging for the producer. He finds himself in a very difficult situation; he sees practically no way out. Then, we are wondering why young people are not interested in carrying on with farming. I think it is important that every hon. member should ponder over these documents, which are now available and give a favourable answer to the basic requests and to the very particular points made by the Dairy Farmers of Canada. The future of the industry throughout the country depends on it and it also assures the consumer that a Canadian product is maintained. I think that out of pride and for the sake of a truly Canadian nationalism, we have as our duty to maintain and to preserve this Canadian resource which is the dairy industry. I do hope that all the speeches made in this House today on this matter will force the government to say yes, Mr. Speaker, I should rather say "invite the government" because they have had such invitations extended to them during the past 10 years through all sorts of briefs submitted to them. This practice of refusing to take position and introduce positive measures has caused this concern on our part and today we asked to let this House answer and speak on behalf of our milk producers. I am convinced that on both sides of the House, there are hon. members who know more on this matter than I do, and who will rise to speak to it and thus induce the Minister to give the producers a favourable answer and assure the Canadian consumers that they will be able in the future to get Canadian dairy products and will agree to pay a certain price, if necessary. There is no point in dissimulating that, but we will have preserved an industry which has left its mark and enabled many Canadians to earn their living. But since revenues are totally inadequate, we must take action as soon as possible, and not only by giving temporary grants but by adopting policies ensuring security to this industry and to the producers who have been waiting for so long.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say a few words about the motion. Toward the end of his remarks the hon. member said there were others who would speak, perhaps on behalf of other parties who knew more about the dairy industry than he did. As to the motion itself, I am surprised it got past the office of the Official Opposition. As you will see, Mr. Speaker, the reference is only to milk. But the federal government does not have total authority in that sphere, though it does with regard to most industrial milk products. The motion refers to the "troubled dairy industry". We do not have full authority federally over the dairy industry.

I should like to comment about some of the things the hon. member said when he talked about the report of the Food Prices Review Board. There are some things about the dairy industry in that report with which I agree. He, too, seems to be in agreement with at least portions of that report. However, there is a certain amount of that famous "economists' jargon" in there with which I disagree very much. I think every dairy farmer in Canada, though, will agree with some of the things contained in that report, as well as every consumer of dairy products, too, if some study were devoted to the subject.

I hope the hon. member has the concurrence of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and other members of his party, who think the agricultural industry can be run in a way different from any other section of society, that dairy farmers are not entitled to any increases in price and are not entitled to compensation to offset any increase in costs. He thinks farmers can inhabit a yesterworld with prices much below those prevailing in the rest of the world. I hope the hon. member has the consent of the hon. member for St. John's East to go along with our dairy policy when we do announce it.

[Mr. La Salle.]

Mr. Speaker, the dairy industry is in a bind today as I stated at the annual meeting of the Guernsey Breeders' Association here in Ottawa a couple of weeks ago. Milk production at today's prices simply doesn't pay. Let me draw the picture. Last year, milk production in Canada dropped 4.7 per cent, the sharpest decline ever recorded since Statistics Canada began gathering figures on milk production back in 1920. At the same time, consumers are demanding more milk and dairy products than ever before. Fluid milk sales increased by 3 per cent and cheese sales increased by 8 per cent.

Canada is not alone in registering a decline in milk production. The United States registered a 3 per cent decline and in New Zealand, milk production was also cut in spite of the excellent climate which that country enjoys. Production in New Zealand went down by 5 per cent. And this is where some of the experts told us, and are still telling us, we should get our dairy products—countries like New Zealand and Australia. Even in Europe, where very heavy subsidies are paid to dairy farmers, total production levelled off last October and November. In some countries it began to fall off in November and December. If the consumers of Canada think we subsidize dairy farmers, they should find out what is being done in the countries of the European community to keep up dairy production.

In spite of this situation, consumers all over the world are calling for increased milk production. The United States has met this need by lifting quota restrictions on imports. This great free trader to the south of us imposes restrictions and tariff barriers of every kind until it wants a certain product. I think a lot of people should change their minds and their ideas about these free traders to the south. The only time that they left quota restrictions on imports, as they did for skim milk powder and cheese, is when they want a certain product. That new attitude of our neighbour to the south presents Canada with a new and growing market for our industrial milk products.

In 1973 Canada exported 27,407 purebred dairy animals, for a total value of over $20 million. Exports of dairy grade animals over 200 pounds numbered 41,268, for a value of $15.8 million. We exported 59,417 calves weighing less than 200 pounds, for a value of $7 million. I do not mind saying that I have some reservations about the exportation of so many calves. Those statistics are at once an indication that our dairy cattle are very much sought after, but it is also an indication that our producers are beginning to make more money selling the animals rather than selling dairy products.

Let me explain the reason that these animals are so valuable. Historically the price for our dairy cattle in Canada was lower than that for cattle in the United States. This trend was reversed last year and has continued this year. The 1973 values reported by breed journals on auction sales of dairy cattle going all the way from milking age females through calves with dams, bred heifers, open yearlings, heifer calves and bulls—the whole family—have increased by a full 33 per cent in 1973 over 1972. As far as I am concerned, that is a very impressive record. Those increasing values of animals are not an indicator of a failing industry, Mr. Speaker. If the House will bear with me for a moment I will cite some more statistics to illustrate the strong position of dairying in Canada.

The values of milk production in 1972 was $773 million, but in 1973 it jumped to $900 million. The government subsidy in 1972 was $101 million and in 1973 $150 million. Dairy beef sold in 1972 was worth $300 million, and in 1973 it jumped to $350 million, In other words, farm cash receipts to dairy producers last year were up 19 per cent, from $1.1 billion to $1.4 billion.

Compared internationally, Canada ranked sixth in importance in total milk production in the world. Although production per cow in Canada in 1970 was below that of Holland and the United States, we are catching up fast. Our production per cow is way above that of New Zealand and Australia. Considering our climate and the difficulties that our dairy producers face as a result, I repeat that our milk producers are the most efficient in the world. We have the best cows, the international demand and the prices paid for the cows by other countries proves it. These other countries know the full value of milk as a food. Most of the countries buying these cattle are much poorer than Canada, such as Mexico, Cuba, many of the South American countries, Spain and Italy.

This is where the government's programs come in. Under ROP testing and breeding programs, we have bred cattle superior to those of practically any other country in the world. This has taken time, and it has also taken good programming on the part of the government and producers. They can be very proud of that. Their cattle have become so productive that this helps them to stay in business.

It was only a few weeks ago that I gave recognition to the owners of Ingholm Rag Apple President that produced a 365 day world record by giving 36,594 pounds of milk with a butterfat test of 2,098 pounds. The owners of the animal are Mr. and Mrs. Ingram from Campbellford, Ontario. These people wrote me letters and we had our government inspectors actually sleep in the barn to make sure this cow was not being fed any drugs, etc. We were very cautious in our approach because we value our ROP testing. The value we place on it is so high that we wanted to make sure that no drugs, etc., were being given to this cow.

When this cow gave this much milk, Mr. Speaker, some people said that she had just gone crazy. These people were ordinary dairy farmers, not large operators. Whenever anyone went by this cow they just gave her another shovelful of feed and she ate it. They are now trying to do the same sort of thing again. We work with these dairy farmers so that no one can doubt the records. We had seven different inspectors watching them feed and milk this cow just to make sure that the records were authentic.

These people wrote letters to me saying that they were not a bunch of thieves or crooks, that they were doing just what they should. I told them that they should protect themselves, because if this cow produced a male calf, you can imagine how valuable it would be to an artificial insemination unit. If the offspring of that calf were anything like his grandmother, then you could imagine the tremendous increase in production that could occur all over Canada. Through artificial insemination you could increase this type of productive animal manyfold, certainly more so than was possible many years ago. It has been part of our dairy policy in Canada to do this sort of thing, and world buyers will be watching progress and bidding for the semen and the stock from the offspring of this great cow. As I say, Mr. Speaker, the owners of this animal are very proud. But this just did not happen; it needed co-operation between producers and the government in order to make sure it was done correctly. If the people concerned do not have the knowledge and the dedication that is necessary to bring this about, then an important part of the process is missing.

In this regard, many articles appear in the press about subsidies and how people are made rich. Most of them are similar to the kind of article that appeared in the Ottawa Journal last night. Although it was not about the dairy industry, we do see some written about the dairy industry from time to time. This article had this to say:

> The beef subsidy should be ended. Mr. Whelan should direct his efforts to get his beef producers to be more efficient.

I do not know who wrote this baseless editorial. All I can say is, let him check the beef industry of Canada and he will find that the beef producers, the beef feedlot operators and the people in the beef industry in general are some of the most efficient operators in the world. It goes without saying that the same applies to the dairy industry. Our exotic cross-breeding programs, improvement in our feeding program and all of our research have allowed our cattlemen, not only beef but dairy, to become the most efficient in the world. I say that anyone who writes an editorial like this which tries to convey to the public of Canada the impression that beef prices are so high because we have inefficient producers should be chastised for inflaming people with inaccuracies, innuendoes and jargon. As far as I am concerned this is nothing more than a damnable lie and downgrades a paper like the Ottawa Journal, which is so worthy in many ways.

The problems faced by the dairy industry today are those of maintaining production in the face of recent large input price increases, rising returns in alternative enterprises, and a growing disinclination on the part of farmers to accept the hours of work required in dairying without sufficient compensation. I recently attended the annual meeting of a 4-H Calf Club in the hon. member's constituency of Timiskaming. It was the night for the presentation of awards. Practically every member of the audience was either a producer or the son or daughter of a beef or cattle farmer. Not one of the young people I talked to, and I did not talk to them all, had any intention of becoming a farmer. I asked one young person "Why don't you want to become a farmer like your father who has a nice farm?" He said: "I can tell you why, Mr. Whelan. I can never remember my dad taking a vacation. The vacations I have had have been with my uncle who is an electrician. The weekends when I went fishing I went with my cousin and my uncle, and he is an electrician, not with my dad because he works on Saturdays and Sundays. My uncle is away on vacation in Florida for four weeks. My dad has never gone out of the community since I have known my father and can remember. That is one of the reasons, Mr. Whelan, why I don't want to be a dairy farmer. I am not saying that my dad has not supplied a good home with everything we needed in it, but that way of life is not for me."

There is one thing that we too often take for granted. Some people seem to think you can turn the cow off on Friday night and start it back up on Monday morning. The other day during a discussion with some officials, not from my department but from another department, one of them suggested that when you had an over-production you should cut the feed off a little bit and the cow would not produce so much milk. What a ridiculous and asinine thing to say. We know that when you cut back feed milk production does cut back, but in 99 9/10ths of the time when you increase that feed after short-circuiting it, the production does not come back. A cow is not a machine. This man thought he had a punch press or something. What he has is a machine with four spigots that depends on you taking care of it and forcing it with everything you have, including every kind of good food 24 hours a day, seven days a week. In a way, a cow is a machine but no man has invented anything that compares with a cow when it comes down to the nourishment you get from dairy products, and that is something that we in our society take so much and so often for granted.

Because of higher dairy input prices, the support levels for dairy products were raised significantly for the dairy year 1973-74. I suggest that we reacted quicker to the requests of dairy farmers than anyone else since I have been here, beginning in 1962. We reacted to their requests last year and we will do so again. In April, skim milk powder prices were increased by 21 per cent and butter prices by 4 per cent to provide an increase in the milk price of 60 cents per hundred weight, the equivalent of about 14 per cent on the average market price. In August, 1973, the dairy farmers of Canada again made representations to me for a further price increase. The return per hundred weight of milk was increased by $1 including a temporary subsidy of 56 cents per hundred weight. Dairy farmers have recently claimed that still further increases in returns are needed to offset rising input costs, and I agree that they are needed.

This government, through the establishment of the Canadian Dairy Commission and the policies handled by them, has maintained a healthy dairy industry in Canada. This government is not now about to see it go down the drain. The Canadian Dairy Commission has substantially fulfilled the objective for which it was established, namely to give efficient dairy producers an opportunity to obtain a fair and equitable return; to provide the maximum of stability for the dairy industry; to assure consumers a continuous and adequate supply of high quality dairy products, the highest in the world; to make the dairy sector more efficient by increasing the number of larger units and, most important, to secure from the market the largest possible proportion of the milk price required by dairy producers.

I want to say this about the Canadian Dairy Commission. It is a commission which was set up by this parliament, and it operates as a marketing board, no matter what anyone else wants to call it. I would challenge those people who condemn marketing boards to show that the Canadian Dairy Commission has not seen fit to make sure that the producers get a proper return, with the result that not only has there been stabilization of the income of dairy producers, but the increase in the cost of dairy products to our consumers has been less than anywhere else.

Dairy producers have been afforded the opportunity of obtaining a fair return on their labour and investment. On production covered by direct subsidies, manufacturing milk shippers have received a return estimated to be $2 to $3 above the equivalent of world prices. In the absence of Canadian Dairy Commission programs, farmers' gross receipts from dairying would have been more than one-third lower, and the output of the manufacturing milk and cream sector alone would have been only half as large. A relatively high degree of short-term stability has been provided, both through protection from fluctuations in international dairy product markets and through compensation for the exceptional input inflation of the past two years.

Consumers have been provided with a continuous and adequate supply of dairy products of high quality. All domestic requirements of skim milk powder have been provided from Canadian milk production, and until 1972 Canada was self-sufficient in butter production. With the exception of specialty cheeses, other dairy products have been provided exclusively from domestic sources. The dairy commission has seen fit to make sure that butter supplies were adequate by foreseeing what was going to happen and importing enough butter to cover our needs.

The effort to increase the efficiency and health of the industry has resulted in a very substantial increase in the number and proportion of medium to large-size dairy operations. Between 1968 and 1973 the number of quota holders in the 3,500 pound to 17,500 pound category has increased from 32 per cent to 42 per cent of all quota holders. These people represent the backbone of Canada's dairy industry.

A few relative price comparisons between Canadian cheddar cheese and equivalent Edam or Gouda cheese in other countries illustrates the point. In mid-January of this year a pound of cheddar cheese in Ottawa cost $1.11; the equivalent cheese in Stockholm cost $1.55; in Washington, $1.35; in Rome, $1.23, and in Australia, Canberra cost $1.24 and so on.

Let me quote some additional figures as to the retail price in December, and I use butter as an example. In 14 cities in Canada butter cost 77 cents a pound, whereas in 56 cities in the United States it cost 89 cents a pound; in Brussels, $1.24; in Copenhagen, $1.19; in lucky Ireland, 79 cents; in The Hague, $1.29; in Hamburg, Germany, $1.54; in Paris, $1.44, and in Rome, $1.60. The difference in prices is further emphasized when one compares the average earning in Italy as compared to the average in Canada. One can check the efficiency of our dairy producers by looking at the fact that with our program butter can be produced and marketed at 77 cents a pound, or it was possible to do so at that time. We cannot continue to do that, but the price will not go up to anything near $1.60 a pound.

The federal government's dairy policy for 1974-75 and beyond will be announced within the next few days. Therefore, I do not wish on this occasion to go into detail on what action the government intends to take in that regard. I have told the farmers and have said publicly that we are working on a long-term dairy policy. Announcements will be made by April 1 according to the legislation. We are fully aware of the situation faced by our dairy farmers. I hope it is not the hon. member's intention to use the motion today for political gain, and then to say to his constituents that, when speaking in the House, he told the government what must be done for the dairy industry, and the minister is doing it. It will not do him any good no matter what he says because we have been working on it for three months as hard as we can. We have worked very closely with the dairy industry. I do not think another Minister of Agriculture has worked as closely as I have with the dairy industry. We are attempting to really find out what is needed to maintain the dairy industry.

● (1250)

As I said earlier it is not merely a question of economics. It is a way of life. I heard the hon. member, when speaking in support of his motion, say that he did not know much about the dairy industry. If he had to milk cows seven days a week, twice a day and before he went to school he would understand a little about the seven-day week to which I referred, which includes Sundays, holidays, Christmas, New Year's and even St. Patrick's Day. Some hon. members probably have heard about it but they would understand it much better if they actually experienced it. This is the problem in respect of some of our world programs related to agriculture.

I wonder if any hon. member has any idea how many ministers of agriculture I met who were actually farmers when I attended the FAO meetings in Rome?

An hon. Member: None.

Mr. Whelan: That is right. I did not meet all of them because there are 132. If we say that the agricultural situation in the world is in a mess we cannot blame the farmers. We should blame the economists, lawyers and others who are trying to run the agriculture and dairy industries in the world. To say that milk is an important food is to state the obvious. It is a food that we cannot afford the luxury of expecting some foreign country to produce for us. We must forget about depending on some foreign country. We have had this experience in respect of energy when we depended on some foreign country to supply it cheaper than we could ourselves. We have had a similar situation in respect of the sugar industry.

With regard to the dairy industry, it is obvious that we must make our dairy industry capable of supplying every product we need. It is a cornerstone of our agriculture. Dairying is important for reasons other than the basic milk product. Dairy animals supply a high percentage of the beef we eat as well as all kinds of other products, everything from leather to pet food. The government is most anxious that dairy farming remain an attractive line of work for both farmers now in the business and for those young farmers whom we would like to get started in dairy farming.

Last year we doubled the amount of money spent on the dairy industry and many people in the dairy industry have confidence in what we are doing. They have confidence in this government and I am taking for granted that they have some confidence in what this minister says. The dairy industry has its own special problems. It is a highly skilled occupation. It is not surprising then that many farmers have opted for types of farming that are a little less demanding, like beef-raising or cash-crop farming. On the way here this morning I met a man who sold his farming operation not far from Ottawa. He is 45 years of age now, and is running an elevator. He said he has a much easier life now than before and has more take-home pay. Do not forget that. One must also realize that the whole family is involved in a farming operation. What the dairy farmers need is the guarantee of a decent living over an extended period. That is why we are working on a long-term policy. This is the reason the dairy industry asked for a long-term policy to which I am committed. A long-term policy is required so that the farmers can plan ahead.

In the middle of the current dairy year, we raised the industrial milk subsidy when it became apparent that farm costs had outrun returns on the product. We did not wait until now to take action. We instituted a consumer subsidy of five cents a quart, to solve the twin problems of rising consumer food costs and diminishing net profits for the producer. The producers need long-term help as well, so that they can plan ahead and take risks in investing in buildings and in livestock with some hope that eventually it will pay off and that their industry will be what it should be and must be so far as I am concerned. I stated this in the House before. We want a dairy industry that will attract our young people and the federal government is working very hard on this right now, not only with measures already in place, but with measures to be announced soon.

The world dairy situation is changing on an almost daily basis. A few years ago, we could not give away our skim milk powder. Today, the price is about 12 cents a pound above our own support level. This is a product we use in external aid and foreign aid all over the world. That is how quickly things can change. So, while we need a long-term policy, we must remain flexible enough to react quickly to a changing situation in other areas of the world. We cannot be so fixed in respect of a plan that we cannot change. We proved last year that we would react to the needs of the producers. No matter how good our long-term policy might be, we must always be in a position to react when the producers need it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to call it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Dairy Policy

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as the minister indicated the Official Opposition, in putting forward today its motion to subsidize milk production by $2 per hundredweight, is confused because the federal government is only responsible for a section of the dairy industry, namely, industrial milk production, and the provinces have total control over the fluid milk production.

In March, the minister announced an increase of $1 per hundredweight of milk in the form of a federal support program for industrial milk production. If we added to this the $2 subsidy proposed by the Official Opposition, we would solve many problems facing the industrial milk producer. But I suggest that we should give consideration to the problem that is confronting dairy farmers, and in fact all farmers in Canada today, and ask ourselves whether or not the kind of programs we are implementing are really the programs we should be implementing.

On at least two occasions the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) rose to the emergency by putting forward ad hoc legislation which, in my opinion, has caused more difficulty than the original problem was causing, and at the same time has cost the Canadian taxpayer a great deal of money. I am uncertain whether or not it would be wise for the House to seriously consider why we are involved in subsidy programs for the dairy industry. I think it would be wise to go back several years, in fact quite a number of years, and consider the legislation that has been passed by the House. Until the last year or two the purpose of the legislation with regard to all agricultural commodities has been to provide farmers with a method of disposing of a surplus in a specific commodity. For years, Canada has been capable of overproducing practically every agricultural commodity, and nowhere has this been more evident than in the case of industrial milk production. I can remember many experiments that have been tried to dispose of our surplus products. One bright proposition which was put to parliament a number of years ago had us converting surplus butter into butter oil, but we found that there was no way of converting it back to butter nor was there any way to use it in the form of oil. That experiment proved both costly and foolish.

All of our experiments over the years have been designed to get rid of surpluses but we are no longer faced with surplus dairy products. It is true that there is an occasional surplus in powdered milk because the world is not yet willing to use powdered milk as a substitute for fluid milk, but in all other fields we find ourselves in the position of having to import many dairy commodities. This affects the consumer, and we should think what it will mean if that policy has to be followed for almost all agricultural commodities, not just to dairy products. We will shortly have to make our minds up whether we want to export water, oil, hydropower and lumber—in fact all of our raw and mostly non-renewable resources. Once we start exporting them it is difficult to regain control, so we must make the decision on whether we want the money or whether we want to maintain self-sufficiency in these commodities.

We can produce almost every agricultural commodity, from the dairy industry, from the vegetable and legume industry as well as cereals, and under normal circumstances we can produce far in excess of our requirements. However, Mr. Speaker, we have not done that. We now find ourselves importing butter because it is cheaper to do that than to produce it. We find that it is cheaper to import almost every kind of fresh vegetable from the United States than it is to produce it here. Canadians are often shocked to see pictures in the newspapers and read accounts of apples being destroyed or not picked because it is not worthwhile to do so. We learn that tomatoes are left in the fields here because it is cheaper to import them. We have gone to great expense to develop a hot house industry in Canada, only to find that it cannot compete with Mexico or the United States when those countries dump these products here. On these occasions we have used the economic yardstick, and decided that it is cheaper to import than it is to produce.

This is particularly true of the dairy industry, and it was therefore very wise of the minister to cover the waterfront as he did. The Canadian public has not yet decided whether it is to our advantage to be self-sufficient in agricultural products or whether we should buy where the price is cheapest. At the moment, we are importing tomatoes and all kinds of fresh vegetables, whilst we are growing them and then destroying them because we do not have the ability to pick, pack, grade and distribute them.

The Conservative Party will have to consider whether it is to our advantage to pay an additional $2 to maintain the industrial milk industry. What do we do about the commodity by the time it reaches the consumer? Do we tell him he will have to pay what the supermarkets charge or do we tell him that his taxes pay the subsidy on the product or do we tell him that there is already a reasonable markup allowed in the field and there is going to be no more? This is what we have done with butter, not by design but by accident. We have done it to the extent of keeping butter in short supply. In doing so, we put many hundreds of thousands of small farmers out of business, mainly in western Canada. We got rid of the butter surplus and now we are buying butter. We will have to decide whether that is the way we want to operate our business.

I am of the opinion that if we are to subsidize the dairy industry to a greater extent, then we will have to nationalize Kraft. The hon. member who moved this motion is well aware that a very great percentage of the cheese consumed in Canada is produced and sold by Granby Co-op. That company sells 80 per cent to 90 per cent of all cheese manufactured in the province of Quebec and produces almost 90 per cent that is bought by Kraft.

Mr. Côté: Good!

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says good; in my opinion he is being irrational. Kraft is rooking him, is rooking the Co-op, is rooking everybody in this country because they are usually selling it to the consumer at twice the price. Maybe the hon. member does not know that the floor price on cheese is something like 54 cents and that the consumer is paying between $1.09 and $1.29 for that product; that Kraft has cornered the market, put a label on the product and doubled the price. I know the hon. member is a farmer but he is willing to settle for less than half the proper return for that commodity, even when it goes into the Granby Co-op, because he is allowing Granby Co-op to operate in conjunction with Kraft, a monopoly.

The minister will have to look at some of those monopolies in the food chain. He will have to look at the international control of the food chains and how the monopolies control the distribution of products which results in the consumer paying far more for them than is justified by the returns the producer receives. The hon. member opposite, who I am sure is going to reply, should keep something else in mind. If the farmers do not get enough money for the products they are selling, more and more of them will go out of business. I agree with the minister when he said that it is damned hard to get up in the morning and milk those cows, seven days a week, 365 days a year. We have not yet developed a good cow that will take Saturday and Sunday off or one that will give you a regular two week holiday. In fact, it will be a hardship for the milk industry if such a cow ever is developed!

It is all right for the people in the dairy. They can cut out all the frills. They can work a five day week. They do not have to milk the cow on the farm. But that does not mean that the farmer does not have to put the milk into the bulk tank after he has milked the cow. We must make sure that the farmer earns the kind of money which will enable him to live a totally different kind of life from the one farmers now live. The farmer of today is perhaps 65 or 70 years old. The next generation of would-be farmers has already opted out. Those young people are not going on the farm; they have already gone into the factories. We must talk about the second generation, the grandchildren of the man on the farm. We must make sure they can live a totally different kind of life and we must guarantee them a standard of living which will be high enough to convince the wife and family that they should live in the rural community and work the farm in a way which will guarantee Canadians supplies of food.

No matter at which segment of farming you look, you will find the farming population has been declining over the past few years. If, in the next few years, this trend is not reversed, we will not be able to choose whether or not we want to be self-sufficient. We will be forced to sell our capital assets, our non-renewable resources, and we shall find it difficult to get people to take up farming again or to resume production of renewable resources, because we shall not have the experts, the farm units or the other conditions in this country under which it was possible for farmers in previous generations to provide Canadians with cheap food.

I suggest to my hon. friends opposite that we must provide the farmer with the standard of living which will induce him to remain on the farm. We must guarantee it; otherwise, he will move off the farm. Furthermore, if the farmer is forced to provide, say, Granby Co-op or Kraft Industries with his product, and those firms sell this food in Canada at much higher prices than they pay the farmer it will be extremely difficult to convince the consumer that he ought to pay subsidies to keep the farmer on the farm. The farmer produces industrial milk, which he sells to the Kraft company. The company sells it at a very much greater price. That transfer from the farmer to the consumer, with Kraft company acting as middle man, is made with no major expense to the company.

Mr. Whittaker: Does the hon. member know what he is talking about?

Mr. Peters: Well now, my hon. friend sitting in the back row is making noises, yet I assume he knows absolutely nothing about the cheese industry. If he did, he would realize that the making of cheese and butter involves a very simple process. Actually, those foods are about the simplest to transfer from the farm into the showcase. So simple are they to handle that for many years farmers used to put those products into the store and look after the counter. The mark-up in the grocery store normally was about 2 per cent or 3 per cent, considerably lower than that on other items handled by the retail grocery trade. I suggest that I have raised an important question. The problem cannot be met merely with the continuation of subsidies.

The minister, in my opinion, faces terrible trouble in the beef industry. We must make sure that the beef producer is kept in business because, once he goes out of business, it will take many years before beef production is in full swing in this country again. With producers out of business the price of beef will go sky-high because there will be a shortage. On the other hand, if we ask the taxpayer to subsidize the beef producer but do nothing to bring down the price in the store, the consumer will decide pretty soon that he is no longer willing to pay the subsidy for that commodity and will demand a totally different system for the handling of such commodities.

As I said previously, for 20 years, long before I came to this House, we faced agricultural surpluses. We designed many programs to dispose of agricultural surpluses, whether they were in wheat, butter, skim milk powder or casein. All such products, with the exception of fluid milk, have been handled on an emergency basis, because we had accumulated surpluses we could not handle. It cost too much to keep them. That situation no longer holds true. In many fields we have reached the limits on production. We have, under the present system, reached those limits in the dairy industry, as is evident if you look at the rate of production.

The minister paid a tribute to farmers for the type of cattle they are producing in this country. This has been a fabulous development of which Canada should be exceedingly proud. I can remember when I milked cows as a young lad. We had a large farm and we milked lots of cows. I can remember when we were producing a large volume of milk, but the butter fat content was less than 2.8 per cent. At that time the regulations provided for a minimum of 3.2 per cent, or you would be eliminated as a supplier. My father had to go to southern Ontario and buy two Jersey cows so that we could stay in the fluid milk business. We could not get our Holstein cows to produce milk with the required butter fat level. Today, Holstein cattle are producing milk with as much as 5 per cent butter fat. This is a great tribute to the farming community, to agricultural schools and colleges, and to farmers who have been willing to take advice with regard to ROP. They have listened, and the result has been a long period of technical development.

The farmer has done his share and often the government has been helpful. We are under an obligation to tackle monopoly concerns such as Kraft, which put little or nothing into the system, but sure as hell take out a whole lot more than their share. Unless we tackle this situation, we will find that levels of production will decrease and costs to the consumer will rise.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the motion of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) is a timely one. It answers the desire of the Canadian dairy producers who want the Canadian parliamentarians to seriously study this grave problem which is now facing the dairy industry in order to help the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the federal cabinet to improve the lot of the farmers who work in this industry, the dairy industry, which is generally called the primary industry, especially in Quebec.

I would have liked myself to move a motion concerning agriculture during these opposition days, but it was impossible because of the way the time is allotted between the parties in this House. However, I wish to congratulate the mover of this motion. He has given an excellent description of the dairy problem and I am very happy to see that he supports the justified requests of the producers.

I should also like to say that I listened most attentively to the speech given by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, at least the major part of it. He dealt quite seriously with the problem and with great competence. I was impressed above all by the fact that he had the courage to say that dairy farmers are of those who cannot allow themselves holidays. If they do, they run the risk of seeing their production diminish, as well as their income, because their animals are very sensitive and must be disturbed as little as possible. They must always have the same master, and be taken care of by the same man everyday, because, when disturbed, they produce less milk; a herd of 50, 60 or 75 cows can soon lose 100 or 200 pounds of milk.

Without blaming anyone in particular, I feel that the minister does not have enough support in the cabinet. I am convinced he has done all he can and that today's debate will help find a more satisfactory solution to the dairy farmers' problems.

The situation is nothing new: as repeated time and time again in this House, the farming industry has always had many problems. It is the most important industry of all because it feeds the people.

This industry has always been the most neglected one by governments and produced the smallest income to those engaged in it. If a number of farmers can still be found today it is because they are convinced of their mission, confident that the future will bring improvements.

This industry's survival is due to the courage and steadfastness of those workers of the soil who wanted to carry out their task and who are still determined to do so but who become increasingly demanding, and rightly so, since they want their fair share of national income. In 1974 I think it is quite fair that the farmers get the return they are entitled to.

Dairy producers have been facing the same problem for several years. They are constantly caught in the "cost-price" squeeze.

I remember that in 1967 the dairy producers of Quebec and Ontario organized a march on the Canadian Parliament so as to make the federal cabinet and parliament aware of their problems. Since I participated in this march, I remember it as if it had taken place yesterday. I was glad to be among them but at that time I was far from thinking that one day I would sit in the House and in a position to help those workers obtain justice. If I am sitting here today it is because certain reasons led me to take a more active part in the political life of my country and to accomplish as far as possible what can be expected from a dedicated member of the House who wants to improve the lot of his constituents.

Government intervention came at a certain time and mainly from 1967 but quite slowly. Progress has been slow. In 1967, the support price of butter was then amounting to 63 cents a pound. There was a slight increase in 1969 to 65 cents a pound. There was no progress in 1970. In 1971, the support price was 65 cents a pound and 68 cents in 1972. In 1973, it skyrocketted to 71 cents. It has gone up very slowly which means that dairy farmers are certainly not responsible for the cost of living increase.

In the light of the figures I have just quoted and because of the replies the Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board made to the Committee of Miscellaneous Estimates on March 14, 1974 when I asked her this: Madam, concerning the prices of dairy products, for instance, have you received any communication from consumers complaining about the excessively high prices for Canadian manufactured goods? Have you examined the situation to find out whether dairy farmers get a reasonable return, or do they in turn abuse consumers? Have you had the opportunity to go to the root of the problem?

The Chairman answered as follows, and I quote:

> Yes. We expect to publish soon a very interesting brief on this industry that was presented to us. We expect to publish it as soon as the council has considered it. It is now being translated; we have already reached this stage. We keep a close look on dairy products and we have had very few complaints. I will just quote the figures: three, very few complaints; nine about all dairy products.

This means that consumers do realize that dairy farmers are not responsible for the increase in the cost of living and that they are not the ones by whom they are being gouged.

Therefore, I hope that consumers will be reassured at least in this regard, because I wanted to know whether gouging was actually exercised by producers. If consumers are being gouged, it has nothing to do with producers. Therefore, we will have to investigate that matter in order to determine whether it might be possible to improve the producers' situation without harming too much the consumer.

As I said earlier, the producer always finds himself in a bind which is called a cost, production and cost price squeeze. Over the last three years, there has been a tremendous increase in the price of machinery and spare parts. This is nonsense because users, those who must get these spare parts, have to pay prohibitive prices, and the year 1974 is expected to be even more difficult for them.

The same applies to dairy farmers who are affected as well when they must make new construction works or repair existing buildings. For them as well as for others, the cost of materials has substantially increased.

What about labour! We have had, in February, a two day conference in Ottawa with officials of all farming organizations of this country and officials of the Department of Agriculture, and we came to realize that qualified farm labour has become scarce. It is difficult to obtain the services of skilled farm labour because young people are quite wise and are not interested in working in a sector of the economy which does not yield at least the same return as the industrial sector for instance. They are turning away from farming and this has resulted in a gradual decrease in the number of operators which in turn will very soon cause very serious food problems.

We have lived through a phoney oil shortage, but that will be nothing compared to the problems that a shortage of food products will create, if we are not determined to act now.

With regard to feed grains, it is one of the reasons for the rise in production costs. I had set nonetheless high hopes on the measures announced by the Minister of Justice on September 14, 1973, but the results have yet to come. We still experience difficulties in that respect in the province of Quebec and in the eastern provinces. Therefore I invite once more the government to study very seriously the problem, or rather to put an end to the studies and act without delay, so that the Canadian Wheat Board and the Livestock Feed Board come under the jurisdiction of the same government department, so that decisions taken in one department are not overruled by the other.

And I am convinced that our suggestion, which I am repeating again today, is worthwhile because this same minister would thus have authority to make decisions and this would settle the transportation problems.

I would also like to talk about fertilizer prices. It is a colossal disgrace. While they were set last year at $80.00 a ton, now they have reached $156, almost twice the amount.

How can farmers look to the year 1974 with optimism? And here again we wonder whether supplies will be adequate. Concerning seeds, we have the same phenomenon. I notice that even the price of every day commodities—electrical power, insurance, union fees, transportation rates—is zooming up. And accordingly dairy producers must now pay $10.15 per hundredweight to produce their milk. And at the present time producers are lucky if they can can get $7.70 per hundredweight for their industrial milk. Their deficit is therefore considerable. The farmers are asking a $2 increase. But at the time they filed their request, production costs had not reached today's level. By asking a $2 increase per cwt., they are trying to avoid what happened in the past. When the government authorized increases, the producers pocketed only part of them because, instead of getting all of the increases, a mere 25 to 30 per cent of them managed to reach them.

If possible, I should like to make a few suggestions to the minister. If the Constitution does not allow it—silly Constitution that is blocking us at everytime—why can we not amend it? It is made by people. We are no more stupid than those who drafted it in 1867. They made it in 1867 to suit them, their weight, their height. The country has grown, its population as well, and new problems have come up. And so, the Constitution should be revised so that it might not paralyze us constantly, that our administrations might become more efficient and that, in short, we might, as intelligent citizens, solve our problems.

Mr. Speaker, given the difficulties encountered by the dairy producers, the Minister of Agriculture, the federal cabinet and hon. members cannot say they were not made aware of the problem. Mr. Speaker, I will dispense from reading those briefs but I have one here dated November 20, 1973, which was submitted at an extraordinary meeting of Dairy Farmers of Canada. The attention of the authorities was drawn to the serious problem faced by milk producers. They are quite tenacious, and I congratulate them for it because they are fulfilling their mission. They look after their business and if we looked after ours in the same way they look after theirs, we would be performing very well together.

A brief submitted again to the authorities in December 1973 reads in part, and I quote:

> The announcement of assistance levels well ahead of decisions regarding production is undoubtedly necessary but it must be pointed out that the further ahead the announcement is made, the more risk there is that the level of assistance itself will prove inadequate when the crop reaches the market. This makes it necessary to include in assistance levels announced ahead of time a provision allowing for a further adjustment to offset changing cost conditions. In the cattle industry, developments over the past year have made producers quite aware of the need for such a requirement.

I think that was a practical piece of advice, a quite valid suggestion so that during the year the Minister of Agriculture might say to his colleagues in the cabinet that, as regards such or such a decision, the situation has changed during the year. That is why I am respectfully submitting the necessary change so producers will not be forced to wait month after month and run into heavy debts.

In January 1974, one month later, as they do month after month, Dairy Farmers of Canada came back charging with another brief containing valid suggestions. They asked what policy should be followed and said once again, hurry up, this is an urgent matter. People are quitting production. That area is on the downgrade. On March 7, 1973, the Dairy Council of Canada submitted a paper on the problems of the dairy industry. In March 1974, another paper was submitted to the federal ministers and the Liberal members of Quebec, drawing the attention of the authorities. The farmers were told: "Hurry up." They were asked something which is never asked to large corporations which increase their prices rightly or wrongly, but according to their whims. The milk producers were asked: "Prove that you are right, show us your production costs." I am pleased to see that the dairy farmers of Canada acceded to that request and gave specific figures—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Dairy Policy

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in today's debate which concerns a very current issue, that of the Canadian dairy industry.

Mr. Speaker, in 1973-74, the dairy industry is going through a regression period which is due to several factors of which I shall try to enumerate a few.

As concerns a first valuable solution, we know that the dairy producer needed a substantial increase, Mr. Speaker, because dairy policies are traditionally announced on March 31 of each year; as there are only a few days left to learn about these policies, I repeat that I place all my confidence in those who are in charge of making decisions in this respect and I can assure the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that the Canadian farmers will once more be satisfied with these new policies.

The hon. member for Joliette is worried about the threatened dairy industry. I shall leave it up to my colleagues to compare today's dairy industry with the one that existed when the Conservative party was in power. I should like to ask the hon. member for Joliette if he consulted his leader before moving this motion in the House today—the hon. member for Joliette indicates that he did consult his leader—to ask that the hundredweight of milk be increased by $2 immediately, since we know that his leader may right now be telling at a press conference or on television that if he was in power, he would freeze prices for maybe 90 days.

I therefore wonder if he did consult his colleagues.

How does the federal government support the farmers in their efforts to produce at full capacity? Last year, several basic changes were made to the income tax legislation and regulations. All were designed to leave the farmer more money so that he may invest it to increase his production. Someone made a special study of those changes and made his findings known at a meeting I attended. He figured that the taxes on farm income had been reduced by almost half through those government measures. Moreover, the Farm Credit Corporation has more than doubled the amounts of loans granted last year to farmers and the government maintained a 7 per cent interest rate although the loans cost more. In addition, the federal government has increased the subsidies on certain products, has more than doubled its subsidies to the dairy industry, has increased its spendings in support of crop insurance, and has increased by more than 70 per cent its support to wheat for domestic consumption.

Finally, and what is most important, the government did not apply any price controls which would have restricted the farmers' income. In spite of this increased support, additional price increases will, of course, be necessary if dairy farmers are to meet increased production cost. I understand why the producers are considering other possibilities and are wondering whether they should sell their herds and turn to commercial farming or other farming ventures with higher incomes and less work, and yet demand for dairy products is increasing and the long-term outlook for dairy farmers has never been so good in years.

The United States have increased their imports of butter, cheese and skimmed milk powder as their production was decreasing. It keeps on decreasing in the United States and the demand for our milk powder and cheese is increasing there. Total American imports amount to the equivalent of 6.5 billion pounds of milk, or 60 per cent of the milk processed in Canada. No doubt that a market does exist in Canada and elsewhere and that it is expanding. It is also obvious that Canada will not be able to rely on low-price imports to meet its domestic needs, surely not in any case while demand is rising so fast south of the border. In a few years the United States will be prepared to buy all the dairy products available on international markets.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger).]

Our milk producers will require higher prices to maintain their operations and increase production. Although prices are of basic importance, there are other factors which affect dairy production, notably manpower shortages and quotas. The federal government is acting to solve these two problems. This year we intend to create farm manpower centres throughout Canada. In the beginning, we will set up 30 on a trial basis. These centres will be run by retired farmers or by people who know and understand agriculture. There will be three persons in charge of those centres: a farmer as manager, an accountant, a secretary and an assistant manager, if necessary.

The farmers who will need assistance will obtain it from those centres and the workers looking for a job can register there. The farmer hiring a worker will no longer have to bother about administrative problems such as unemployment insurance deductions, Canada Pension Plan, income tax and other paperwork since the accountant and the secretary of the centre willl handle these problems. The only thing the farmer will be required to do is send a cheque every week or every two weeks to the Manpower Centre which will take care of the rest.

If the manpower centres for farmers work as we hope they do, they will enable us to establish the number and the kind of workers we need in a specific area. If there is no manpower available in the area, we can then import workers from elsewhere, or train local people for the kind of work to be done.

The Canadian Dairy Commission will amend its regulations so that dairy producers may incorporate, which will enable them to go away for a week end, to have a holiday from time to time or to look after the herd of one of the partners who is ill or injured. The quota portion which can be subsidized has been restricted up to now to 700,000 pounds of milk. That limit was entirely sufficient for a family farm; it is not, however, for two or three families willing to pool their resources in a joint venture. The Commission will amend that regulation in order to increase this maximum for joint ventures and corporations. In order to avoid that some cunning person use an old aunt, a cat or a dog as a pretense to increase his quota, thus contravening the purpose of the regulation, the Commission will require each of the partners to be a full time producer and to have a fair amount of the capital of the joint venture. Each partner will also have to do some part of the work. We do not want this amendment to be profitable to some rich lawyers or doctors who try to evade income tax through false corporations or cooperatives. We want it to be beneficial to the real milk producers of Canada.

For too long now, the farmer has been at the bottom of the economic pyramid. The Canadian consumer has always had the cheapest food in the world. This bargain can go on under the sole condition that farmers be enabled to improve their chances of a fair and reasonable return.

It is a fact that very few people are aware of the primary role played by agriculture in the Canadian economy. Canadian dairy cattle producers now have a large export market. The exports of pure breed cattle have reached a record figure, to which a large number of non registered dairy cattle are added each year. Canadian dairy cattle are in great demand abroad.

The federal government has established a certain number of programs aiming at subsidizing our agriculture and our farmers, and these programs are largely responsible for the very low prices of food products in Canada at the present time. I do not intend to examine all of them, but I should like to give a few examples, if I may.

Through our Health of Animals Branch, we have kept our cattle free from a number of foreign diseases. The federal government has led the way by ridding Canadian cattle of tuberculosis and keeping them relatively free from brucellosis. Our cattle are among the healthiest in the world, which has contributed in reducing to the minimum the production cost and administration problems.

Our government intends to continue helping farmers meet in an objective and competent way the competition on international markets.

That is why we have insisted so much on marketing. Results are beginning to show. Farmers naturally want to take the best advantage from their relatively good position in the production of many farm commodities.

I would like to add that the Canadian Dairy Commission is constantly looking for export markets. When the United States asked for 25 million pounds of powdered skim milk, the commission was first in taking action and calling for tenders. We did all we could to obtain this market and as a result half the American demand has been supplied with the stocks of the Canadian Dairy Commission and those earmarked for trade, at competitive prices on world markets. On January 25, 1974, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced in Ottawa the sale to Mexico of over 35,000 metric tons of Canadian powdered skim milk worth $4 million.

Here is a minister who wants to help agriculture, who does not intend to slow down his efforts to help farmers get an adequate standard of living.

That is the most important sale of skim milk powder ever achieved between Canada and Mexico. The deal was signed by the representatives of the Canadian Dairy Commission and Conasupo, the Mexican government agency in charge of purchases. That is the type of quick action that can be expected from a national marketing agency and it should give those who oppose such boards another good reason to dispute those boards' ability to co-ordinate export development efforts.

Our aim is to make the Canadian Dairy Commission the best agency in the world. It is a great challenge, but we surely intend to meet it.

The Department of Agriculture of Canada co-operates with provincial representatives in setting a better and more complete program of establishment inspection.

The federal government worked very hard behind the scenes to open the new markets we have today. Those valuable achievements have contributed to improve the status of farmers. And it is only a beginning. But now, we should certainly not rest on our laurels.

On the contrary, we are decided to continue our work even harder because we think there are even greater opportunities. Yet, I am convinced that Canadian farmers deserve at least 100 per cent of our efforts. I know that we shall have to be tenacious in order to get new and expanded markets for the benefit of Canadian farmers at home and in other countries.

Mr. Speaker, we did not dare interfere with the farm products business. We have merely passed legislation allowing provinces to co-operate in marketing in order to prevent confusion in the sale of farm commodities at the national level.

Our farmers know how to increase their output and improve the efficiency of their farm but they need sufficient incomes to invest in equipment, buildings, fertilizers and the management systems required for optimum efficiency.

For at least ten years now the dairy industry has been asking the federal government to pass measures to ensure the future of producers and stabilize their production.

In his very famous book entitled: Future Shock Alvin Toffler foretells that the pace of change will steadily increase. According to him, people, institutions, businesses and even nations that will be able to adapt themselves to change and orient it towards their own interests will be the ones that will succeed.

In the last months, we had cause to lose all our illusions about the possibilities of creating a stable dairy industry, economically independent, protected as it were against the disruption affecting other farm sectors as well as the economy as a whole. The changes that took place with regard to feed grain and protein additives were a blow to the very heart of our industry. Beef production now seems more attractive to some dairy farmers. The increasingly obvious shortage of skilled labour has checked expansion and has caused some farmers to go out of business altogether. Finally, the energy crisis affects all farmers.

The dairy industry cannot, must not be and is not immunized against change, whether it likes it or not. As a matter of fact, it even showed in the past that what mattered above all was to accept change and profit by it.

More than 40 per cent of the dairy farmers have actually gone out of business during the last five years. Still more important changes took place in the consolidation of factories and creameries. Within 20 years, the yield of a cow increased by 57 per cent in Ontario. Five years ago, only 32 per cent of the cream and milk suppliers had at least 18 producing cows. That percentage has gone up to 44 now. The rate of change increases steadily. It can still be increased. For instance, the yield per cow, which amounts to 8,000 lbs. per year in Ontario at the present time, has still not reached West Germany's figure of 8,600 lbs., that of Denmark, of 8,800 lbs., nor that of the Netherlands, of 9,400 lbs., and I must add that our own average is still far from the 20,000 lbs. registered by some Canadian producers.

The farmers' lot has also improved compared to other sectors of the economy. In ten years, the farm cost index has surely increased by 49 per cent, but during the same period, incomes have increased by 168 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that in 1962-63—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired.

[English]

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all sure where my hon. friend lives, but I know that what he has been saying does not reflect the problems of the dairy farmers in eastern Ontario; that is for very sure. As has happened a number of times in the past, once again the Conservative Party is acting as the conscience of the Canadian people. If the present government were carrying out its duly constituted responsibilities, there would be no need for the motion introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

The motion is couched in the very proper terms normally used in this august assembly, asking that the House consider reform of the dairy industry, requesting that it immediately introduce its policy and also requesting that it announce an increase of $2 in the price per hundred weight of industrial milk. That language is very fine for the heady atmosphere of the House of Commons, but in fact the farmers in my riding are the more earthy type and they want no part of that highfalutin' language. They are demanding, and rightly so, a dairy policy and saying with the conviction of years of hard labour that if it is not damn soon coming, there will be no dairy industry to worry about.

It is not very long ago that the big majority of the members of this House, and in fact the majority of the members in every provincial legislature in Canada, were either farmers or farm-oriented. This is no longer the case, and more's the pity. In those days the problems that exist now were unheard of. Simple policies made sense then. A farmer had to be allowed to earn a decent living and, as a result of his hard work, a reasonable profit—not a big profit, by a long shot. Food reached the tables of all Canadians at a price they could afford.

A product of the urban environment myself, I have made a point of becoming aware of the problems of the farmers in Hastings county. It is interesting to note that from a purely statistical point of view, the number of people on farms is down to a mere 5,000 out of a total of 65,000 in the federal riding of Hastings. This is a riding where milk and milk products form a major part of the farming area. Cheddar cheese from Hastings county, whether it is from Mapledale, Foxboro, Buelah, Eldorado Cheese factories, or as marketed by the world famous Black Diamond Cheese Company in Belleville, is without question known to be the finest Cheddar cheese in the world. Yet politically speaking, the clout of the dairy farmer has dwindled to very little, and so it is that a city boy like myself joins with all my colleagues to demand action on behalf of the dairy farmers.

Members of the government ridicule a policy of controls and sometimes it is hard for a rightwing, free enterprise conservative like myself to accept a principle of greater government intervention. Let me show you some of the costs that the farmers in my riding are encountering now, unreasonable costs and even more unreasonable increases. If these were not in fact actually foisted upon them by an uncaring federal government, at least there is no evidence of any sympathy or assistance from that same government.

I dislike the reading of bare-bone statistics, but the numbers which I intend to quote now are more than just bare-bones; they could be the death-rattle of the entire industry. During the recent recess I made it a point, with some of my colleagues, to get even more deeply involved in the problems of the dairy industry, and the prices that I intend to quote now for 1974 are current as of four weeks ago. I have a long list of figures here and I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I might have permission to table the list and then merely comment on it. This is a full page of statistics.

An hon. Member: We want to verify them.

Mr. Ellis: I will give them so that you may verify them. Let us look at some of the figures. The price of cob corn increased from $61 per ton between 1973 and 1974 to $112, an increase of 84 per cent; 16 per cent dairy ration increased from $73 per ton in 1972 to $138 a ton in 1974, an increase of 90 per cent; soybeans have increased in price 100 per cent from 1972 to 1974; corn gluten, which sold at $54 per ton in 1972, now sells for $106 a ton, an increase of 96 per cent; binder twine increased from $7.50 per bale in 1973 to $23.25 in 1974, an increase of 210 per cent.

Then in respect of seed—and farmers need to seed their pasture land—vernal alfalfa increased from $42.50 per 50 pounds in 1973 to 92.50 in 1974, an increase of 118 per cent. Other types increased in this period from $46.50 to $100, an increase of 115 per cent. Hay pasture mixtures increased from 77 cents per pound to $1.45 in the period between 1973 and 1974, an increase to 88 per cent. The Canadian dairy farm type of pasture mixture increased from 72 cents in 1973 to $1.35 in 1974, an increase of 87.5 per cent. Spring grains increased from $2.75 to $4.95 per bushel in this period, an increase of 80 per cent. That is for certified No. 1 Rodney oats. Certified Herta barley, which sold for $2.85 per bushel, now sells for $5.75 per bushel, an increase of 102 per cent.

Considering the impact of those price increases, is there any wonder that the farmers are demanding an increase in the price of industrial milk? The price increase that was requested a few months ago was in consideration of the prices in effect at that time. What will be necessary to even meet costs, never mind show a small profit, is hard to estimate from day to day.

Is it any wonder that dairy farmers are going out of business? The production of milk is nothing like building widgits in a factory. If the government were to suddenly say that they would be prepared to pay a price, any price, fantastically high, for all the milk that every farmer could produce at the present time, it would not increase milk production by a single drop. It takes time and planning and careful management. Cows are bred, the strain is improved and they grow to maturity and begin to produce milk. Barn facilities have to be prepared or reactivated. The gleaming, stainless-steel receptacles for milk fully refrigerated-cost a small fortune to install and maintain. The milking parlour of today bears absolutely no resemblance to the stable of even 25 years ago. How can we possibly expect farmers to plan three year in advance?

Here we are, on the 22nd day of March, and the dairy year begins exactly five working days from now. If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) knows what the policy for the year 1974-75 is to be, it is a big secret and he is not telling anyone, least of all the farmers who must have some information on which to base their forecasts for the coming year. It is absolutely imperative that the federal government come up with a long-term policy, fair to the farmers, one that they can bank on and one where they will know where they will be in the years to come, instead of going from hand to mouth. I ask hon. members in this House today, if they had the information that the dairy farmers of Canada have right now with regard to their future, would they invest $100,000 to a quarter of a million dollars? Would they be prepared to put their entire future in hock based on the information that has been given to us by the Minister of Agriculture so far this year?

At one of the many meetings I attended during the recess I spoke to a young farmer. Luckier than most, he had inherited some of his father's milk quotas and had a bit of a head start on some, but at 24 years of age he was looking forward to a debt that would last him beyond the year 2000, with no real certainty that it would be paid off by then. That takes a tremendous amount of courage, a lot of guts and a lot of daring considering the flimsy promises he has from the federal Minister of Agriculture with regard to any assistance for his future.

We heard the airy promises of the throne speech some weeks ago. But farmers cannot build on promises. I have letters on file too numerous to mention, from farmers of all sorts, who point out that they are actually locked in with an investment of over $150,000 and a rate of return far less than 1 per cent. They are actually struggling to make ends meet, when some of the giant corporations who market the foodstuffs that they produce are showing increasingly larger profits. I want no one to misunderstand me. I am not taking up the "corporate-bum" cry of my left wing friends, nor have I anything against profits. As I stated earlier I am, and will continue to be, a strong free enterpriser; but there is an obvious need for controls.

I am pleased that the policy of my party with regard to agriculture is also a free enterprise policy. It is a policy that demands that this government ease restrictions on lending to farmers of all ages, that will allow part-time farmers to qualify under the Farm Credit Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act. It is not unusual in my riding to have a man who sincerely wants to become a full-time farmer get up at 4 a.m., work on the farm until seven, drive to a factory where he has to work in order to keep his family alive, and after a full day in the factory return to the farm to work until nine o'clock at night.

The ARDA program must be vigorously expanded. An area within my riding and the surrounding ridings that is of considerable concern, and has been for the past few years, is the problem of the disposal of whey, a by-product of the cheese industry. At present, it is a pollutant on the land and in the streams. We have known for a long time that this material contains tremendous quantities of protein and other valuable ingredients, but despite all efforts I have not been able to persuade the federal government to participate and assist in the extraction of these nutrients for the benefit of all Canadians.

Fortunately, the provincial government of Ontario is working toward this end. I know that at least one plant adjacent to my riding is being established which I hope, by dint of the ingenuity of private enterprise and with some government assistance, will be able to produce a worth while and needed product and remove a threat to our environment. As I have said in earlier speeches on the subject, the resource material will come to around a quarter of a billion pounds annually. Certainly it is a quantity to reckon with.

Probably the most important facet of our policy is our willingness to ensure the farmer a stable price for his product provided he is willing to produce the commodities in demand. We firmly believe that farmers will produce at the maximum if they have some assurance that they will not be forced out of production during periods of high input cost and unstable world market conditions.

A strong commitment must be made by this government to a national policy of meeting Canada's dairy product needs from Canadian production, and it must be made at once. The fact that we are having to import butter in millions of pounds, and do not have enough of our fine Cheddar cheese to meet export demands, is nothing short of scandalous. In order to get this production to where it should be, there must be a sharp upward revision in present thinking in government on the level of return that is required in the dairy industry today compared with other occupations both farm and non-farm.

One of the very real costs of production is in the labour force. Recently, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) recommended that pools be formed of high school and university-age youths to meet the seasonal demands of farming. This perhaps would be an excellent suggestion, but the dairy farmer who must milk his cows morning and night, 365 days a year if he is a fluid milk producer, and almost that long if he is an industrial milk producer, needs help to provide a stable labour force where the hours of work can be shortened and the pay improved so that wages are more in line with income available from alternative employment.

We talk about energy shortages and other international problems. These are serious problems. But does anyone have any idea what the crisis would be like if the housewife in the supermarket, no matter how much money she has in her hands, could not purchase enough food? This is a very real possibility if the farmer is not assisted to remain on the land. Frankly, I do not know how to state this dread possibility strongly enough.

At one of the many meetings I have referred to, a veterinary not too many years old, but with a wisdom well beyond his years, stated the problem in a way that no city boy representing the farmers could ever do. I shall try to quote Dr. Murray to the best of my ability. This is what he said: "All the statistics, the input costs, the marketing schemes probably completely miss the point. We are no longer dealing with an old-timer who came through the depression when milk was 50 cents a hundred weight. No matter how tough times get, he can always refer back to those days and decide that the present situation is at least better than that. Those farmers were patriotic, but they were only a couple of generations removed from the old country. During the war they produced food out of patriotism. Ceilings were removed from labour costs after the war, but not on food. The old-timer took the attitude that times were worse during the depression and he went on producing."

"In the past some organizations have tried farm strikes, but they failed because of the dedicated old-timer's patriotism. But these men are quietly fading from the scene. The educated sons are taking over, and if our educational system has done nothing else it has taught this generation that you don't do one damn thing unless you get paid for it. They'll try farming, but unless you lay some of that green stuff on the palm of their hand they quit and do something else. You and I have got to show these young men that they can make a living, plus interest on their investment, and if not we will have no farmers tomorrow. This is what has to be done." Those words, from one of the wisest men in the dairy industry whom I have ever encountered, sum up the situation pretty well.

We must have new and aggressive policies that will reverse the trend of Canadians leaving the farms. The aim must be to bring the terms and conditions of life in the agricultural sector up to par with the financial and other returns of urban existence. The Canadian agricultural industry and all its allies and subsidiary components basically require two ingredients for economic stability. These are: a constant market for its product and a fair margin of profit on the labour and capital invested. If today's evidence of the problem of uncertainties in rural food production and in the world economy teaches anything, it must be that we must have a regular and dependable supply of food products from Canadian production. Not to utilize the great agricultural resource base of Canada to produce our own dairy products would be a tragedy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean).

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Madame Speaker, although I have been in this House for some time, this is the first time that I have had the pleasure to address a Madame Speaker in the chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLean: I think it is a very important resolution that is the subject matter of this debate, but it has wider ramifications than just the production or the cost to the consumer of one particular product. Of course, what we are referring to chiefly in the motion is manufactured milk, and for a few moments, I wish to refer to the problem with regard to its special application in Prince Edward Island, the area from which I come, where the agricultural industry consists mainly of mixed farming, a very important element of the success of which is the dairy industry. This is true in many of the older and more settled parts of Canada. I believe the same is true in the province of Quebec. The income from dairying is an important factor in the life of an agricultural area. I can imagine urban people who have been cut off from the countryside for a generation or two becoming a little tired of hearing farmers like myself and others in the House—we are diminishing breed both in the House and in the country—complain about what they think is our particular problem.

Madame Speaker, in my opinion this is not just a problem of dairy farmers; it is not just a problem of farmers; it is not even just a problem of rural Canada. It is a problem that has far wider ramifications and implications than that. This problem concerns all Canadians. It concerns urban people, and I hope they realize this, even more than rural people who are the producers of dairy products. Although the first impact may be felt by the producer, a worse impact will inevitably fall upon the urban dweller if we do not have national policies that make good sense.

Recently, a royal commission in Prince Edward Island known as the Adams royal commission made a report on the dairy industry in that province. I should like to quote from the introduction and observations as follows:

> While there can be little need to remind dairy farmers of the fact, it is worth making the point for those who have never had the pleasure, that dairying is a particularly demanding occupation. In a society becoming increasingly leisure conscious that seven day a week nature of the business is not one that is accepted lightly. This fact has two very important implications which are frequently overlooked. Firstly, those in the business have a particularly clear right to fair and stable prices and that, secondly, if this is not forthcoming and they leave it, there is no endless queue waiting to fill the vacancies. Given this and the fact that dairying brings in about one-fifth of total agricultural income in P.E.I., and failure on political, partisan or prevaricatory ground to take the steps which are necessary to resolve the industry's problems will be especially unforgivable and extract a price which will be heavy and shared ultimately by every citizen of the province.

I believe that these remarks apply nationally as well, because many people, including the minister, have said this is not an industry that can be turned on and off at will. This is an industry in which there has to be a reasonable expectation of security before young men will enter it and produce dairy goods in the years ahead; I was going to say "for future generations" but that is looking unnecessarily far into the future. If we do not ensure this, the dairy products required for the nutrition of Canadians will not be available within the next decade. We are already importing large amounts of butter and some other dairy products.

There is another very important side effect, and this is especially true in the mixed farming areas of Canada, the backbone of rural Canada in a way; and that is not to deprecate the one-crop experts who frequently operate large areas growing specialty crops such as wheat and tobacco. I refer to the family farm, what we think of as the rural life of Canada, for whom a stable market for dairy products is a necessity, just as the products themselves are a necessity for Canadians.

The royal commission report continues:

The dairy industry is of very considerable significance in the total agricultural picture in P.E.I. Although over the last decade there has been a steady decline in both cow numbers and total output, cash income from dairy producers has remained fairly stable at around 15 per cent of total cash income from farming. Its importance, in fact, goes much beyond the actual cash receipts which show up in statistics. This arises from the fact that the year-round income from dairy cattle is a very important stabilizing factor to both the cash flow and general economic health of many farmers and the fact that the further processing of the product takes place on P.E.I. results in the creation of many more jobs and increased economic activity.

Over the last ten years there has been a fairly steady decline in the numbers of dairy cattle on farms in P.E.I. In 1971 the number was down to approximately 28,000 cows and heifers of two years and older, which compares with a figure of 35,000 in 1967 and 39,600 in 1961. Over the same ten-year period, total production of milk declined from 227 million pounds to 198 million pounds.

The report goes on:

Thus in 1967 no less than 66 per cent of all census farmers in Prince Edward Island ... were deriving part of their income from the sale of either cream or milk.

Possibly of even greater significance is the fact that while between 1967 and 1972 the number of census farms declined by approximately one-third, over the same period the number of milk producers was halved and fell to 48 per cent of all census farmers.

The dairy aspect of farming in my province has been so unsatisfactory that those engaged in it are leaving at a greater rate than people in other types of farming. The criticism that I am about to make is not a partisan one, but for many years I have felt that the machinery of government is terribly deficient in evolving agricultural policy and rural policy in general. The reasons for this are difficult to pinpoint. I think it is because governments take most of their advice from experts in economics, in statistics, finance or some related field and they do not really understand the implications when they try to apply this advice to agriculture or to the rural philosophy of society in Canada. There is not enough input from rural Canada.

Time and time again governments, with the best intentions in the world, evolve policies which have a bias in favour of urban Canada written all over them. I think one of the greatest tragedies that history will show, and indeed it is still happening, is that Canada has become so urbanized over such a short period of time in a few large centres. This has created, and will continue to create, great problems for us as a nation in all areas, from crime to pollution, food prices to the price of land for homes, and everything else.

Mr. Reid: Madame Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Does the hon. member for Malpeque agree?

Mr. MacLean: Yes, Madame Speaker.

Mr. Reid: Madame Speaker, I agree with the hon. member's premise that the continued urbanization of Canada has unfortunate effects on employment. Does he suggest that the motion put forward by his party will slow down the urbanization of Canada, or is that merely one aspect of the general policy thrust which the hon. member is suggesting?

Mr. MacLean: Madame Speaker, this is one small aspect of the general problem. People, especially young people, have been driven off farms and out of rural Canada and have crowded into cities. Often they have created problems with regard to employment. Those problems do not affect them, as usually those who migrate have attained an educational standard and standards of health, ability, intelligence and responsibility which enable them to find employment. Nevertheless, their migration increases competition for jobs available in urban centres. That is only one factor which must be considered if we are to maintain a healthy rural society which will be attractive, especially to young people who are growing up and being educated on farms.

Part of our mistake has been that in the past few years we have worshipped false gods, or golden calves: perhaps I had better say that since we are talking about the dairy industry. We have been sold a bill of goods. We have been told that size is equivalent to what is desirable, that progress is synonymous with growth and that a healthy economy must grow rapidly. It is elementary to observe that nothing can grow indefinitely. Things which grow too large and too long collapse under their own weight and become extinct, like the dinosaur.

It is obvious that Canadians, both urban and rural-dwelling, want a high quality of life in a suitable environment. They want to be reasonably free from pollution and from anxieties created by crime. If they can look forward to reasonably priced housing on land which can be bought for reasonable prices, instead of for prices which are so high because demand is greater than supply and they are being gouged, and if they can look forward to a reasonable diet at a reasonable cost, the prerequisites for the good life will have been met.

Yet, as someone else said, man does not live by bread alone. We must consider the sociological aspects of this rural and urban problem. One aspect, of course, has to do with the dairy industry's troubles which we are considering at present. We must look at the whole picture and make sure we act in such a way as to lessen the economic difficulties of farmers, especially dairy farmers, so that there will not be the continued migration of people from agriculture generally and from dairy farming in particular. If present trends continue much longer, the countryside will be almost totally depopulated. Cities will be overcrowded and their inhabitants will pay exorbitant prices for food much of which probably will be imported from other countries. That situation is totally unnecessary.

I believe, Madame Speaker, that my time is nearly up; I did not notice the clock when I started. May I conclude by quoting something written by a former constituent of mine, Dr. Gordon A. MacEachern. Writing in Reader's Digest of October, 1973, he said in part:

When I was a boy in Prince Edward Island, our village, Appin Road, was a happy farm community like hundreds of others in rural Canada. It had a church, school, two small stores, and some 30 families in and around it. Three miles away at Bonshaw were more stores, two churches, a dance hall—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

● (1550)

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): Madame Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise for the first time with the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) in the chair.

Some members have probably noted that I do not often rise to speak in the House. This is not because I do not see the problems in my country and in certain classes of society, but rather because of a kind of philosophy inherent in some people as a result of which each person conducts his business in his own way. I have always thought that good opinions are fine and can be expressed very strongly, but I am much more interested in the possibility of influencing those who make the decisions than in making long speeches.

As for the motion before the House, I just had to say a few words about it since my constituency is the one most affected in Canada by the changes in the dairy industry. Like my colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), I can boast that I have lived from this dairy industry, and we can both use something else besides figures or words like those used in connection with this motion.

I was very disappointed that the motion introduced by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), which I feel is very important, received so little support from the members of his party, who have all left the House. Because this problem concerns the eastern provinces, at one time there were only three Progressive Conservatives in the House to listen to the only French-speaking member who can speak knowingly about the dairy industry. They all left the House, and I thought that maybe his motion was considered—

[English]

Mr. McKinley: I rise on a point of order, Madame Speaker. Having listened to what the hon. member has said, I think it should be brought to the attention of the House that when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was speaking there were no cabinet members here to listen to him. This is typical: he talks and the government turns a deaf ear.

Mr. Goyer: How many members of the hon. member's party are present in the House?

Mr. Côté: Madame Speaker, it is understandable that no ministers were here to listen to the Minister of Agriculture, because within the party that governs the country the dairy policy and what it will become are common knowledge, while the opposition which does not know what the dairy industry is all about should at least listen to the member for Joliette.

For me, the motion of the hon. member for Joliette is like the oscillating piece of a clock that goes tick-tock. As the clock, the hon. member is making a little bit of noise. There has been no fundamental explanation of the motion nor of the way in which the people should consider the $2 increase that the hon. member has suggested. I thought at one time that the motion might have been introduced to allow the hon. member for Joliette to make some kind of a stand. He knew government members were in a very good mood for it, knowing the situation and aware that the policy would be announced in the near future. The hon. member had to boost his credit somewhat, as with the motion on the French language which was introduced at the Progressive Conservative convention and put off indefinitely. That was a great disappointment to me because on a subject so important members of his party might have given him some support.

I will now turn to certain criticisms which were made. The hon. member for Joliette says that in the past five years this government failed to understand the needs and demands of farmers. Here again, he should have kept in closer touch with farmers and studied with more depth the explanations given by farm associations. He could also realize through the statistics that in the past five years the situation changed a great deal which I think is not yet enough for the farmer. At least the situation changed. Prices in five years rose from $4.98 to $7.16.

Mr. La Salle: Yes, but milk costs $10.

Mr. Côté: It is unfortunate, Madame Speaker, that the hon. member for Joliette was not lucky enough to be in the same position as I was at the time when he was selling tobacco. I was milking cows and I knew what it was like to be faced with understanding governments. And I will give an example. If the hon. member for Joliette wants to understand, because he needs to be informed, I am prepared to give him a refresher course whenever he feels the need for it but for the time being he could listen to me. He might realize that I understand his motion a lot better than he does but he is going to help me as well as his colleagues to try and implement what I ask.

In five years, there has been such an increase but I remember, as I mentioned earlier, that at the time he was selling tobacco and I was milking cows, I was making representations on behalf of the farmers associations, as a member of UCC, as a leader of the UCC confederation of the Nicolet diocese and of the Coopérative fédérée. I have been a little upset by the fact that the hon. member for Temiscaming (Mr. Peters) did not recognize a few minutes ago the true values of the Coopérative fédérée du Québec, the only agency in the world who is "setting" prices. No agency in Canada or in the world can give the farmer a definite price as such and there is no company able to do that. Therefore, I find it a pity that such a thing has been said.

So, Madame Speaker, I was making those recommendations in 1956-57. We no longer live in that period but I gave them for comparison purposes.

I do not merely want to utter words, but I shall confine myself to the philosophy of an individual, of a group or a political party, so that words take on more weight.

I was pointing out that we were selling our milk $3.25 per hundredweight. I also made representations to Quebec. At the same time in the sixties, the Progressive Conservative leader in Quebec, who should have been here today since he represents a dairy area and his constituents have to come and see me to solve their problems, namely the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) was minister in a Liberal government and was compelled to pay. It was the only time since Confederation that the province had to pay something because the Conservative government in Ottawa did not understand the dairy policy. Madame Speaker, the price paid is different after six years of a Liberal administration. I sold milk for $3.25 per hundredweight in 1961-62 and I hope that the hon. member for Joliette will accept those figures—

Mr. La Salle: I was then selling cigarettes for 25 cents a pack.

Mr. Côté: —I could send them to him so that he may let his Progressive Conservative colleagues know that the price of milk was set at $2.53. For six years there had been a reduction and, at that time, there was also an increase in production costs. Everybody was moving to the cities. I say to the hon. member who spoke before me and who was complaining about farmers leaving their lands, that he is himself contributed to that as a member of the government of the day which demonstrated what it meant to do with the milk industry in Eastern Canada.

I used to compile figures at the time I was a member of the UCC, figures which I should like the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) to explain to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who also needs to understand the situation. At the time I compiled these figures in 1963, a Liberal administration was elected in the province of Quebec which had really been had for believing the Conservative government.

At that time, the government invested 75 per cent of the agriculture budget in the three Prairie provinces where there are only 35 per cent of the farmers. This means that British Columbia, Ontario and the Eastern provinces which account for 65 per cent of the farmers shared 25 per cent of the budget.

Let us consider if in 1972 the government was fair towards all farmers in Canada. I have come to the conclusion that net income of Western as well as Eastern farmers has not decreased but rather increased, with nothing being taken from one to be given to the other.

However, if the hon. member for Joliette does not believe it, he only has to refer to La Voix Métropolitaine of March 12 which reports that the hon. member was introduced by the former Minister of Agriculture in the province of Quebec, also formerly in this House, and who, like a pendulum, went from one side to the other and was eventually beaten.

I do not wish anything like that to the member for Joliette, but that is what is going to happen to him. When he was introduced by the former Quebec minister, the member for Joliette said in my own region, in Sorel, that the 56 Liberal members from Quebec are good for nothing, that they have no sense of representation and give everything away to westerners. If that is not true. I ask him to read an article published about this in La Voix Métropolitaine and demand a retraction from the editor; and if it is true, how can he feel at home in a party that blames us and prevented us from passing specific measures for the marketing of farm products, at the very moment when he left that party. And now he joins that party again, perhaps hoping to be appointed minister, something I do not wish him because unfortunately he is not able to fill that position. But he comes to Quebec to make such statements; that is wrong and I resent it; it is fostering separatism to pretend in Quebec that Quebec members give everything away to westerners. How will he go about convincing members of his party of such things?

Unfortunately, Madame Speaker, there were not very many people at the meeting; I should have liked to have seen a better attendance: the criticism would then have been of greater value. But the damage was not really serious because hardly anyone listened to him, which made the representative of the former minister say that he could certainly give a retraining course to the hon. member for Joliette.

Madame Speaker, I do not want either to speak beyond the time allotted me, and although this does not happen to me often, I wish I had had time to express of a few more thoughts. The hon. member for Joliette forgot that some farmers' groups have said publicly that the Liberal party was the only one that understood them to some extent, although not as much as they could have wished perhaps. They said: We will go also to the opposition parties because they too have members in the House who represent the authority. And so they went to see them. But when they came to me last Saturday, they said: Had this been a majority government, we would not have to make representations this year.

In a minority government, you are obliged to "push" a lot, because of the obstruction of the opposition member.

The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), Madame Speaker, could really have said something in his speech, and in the first place, he should have made suggestions as all my colleagues who are concerned with agriculture have done. There are many of them on the Liberal side and we all made suggestions in private to the minister.

We know that when this policy is announced, it will be meaningful! We too would like to get a maximum. If we suggest to increase the subsidy on milk, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) will be blamed by Progressive Conservative members for increasing the cost of living.

If I ask the Minister of Agriculture to increase the subsidy on butter, the opposition immediately will blame the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for allowing costs to increase and they will go and cry on the consumer's shoulder.

As far as we are concerned, we are going to run a risk, not a political one, but a risk that will be announced in due time. The hon. member for Joliette will not understand a thing but I will then give him a retraining course. We are going to run a risk. I wish the government would carefully consider the very important matter the hon. member for Joliette did not think of, namely that portions of money that should be spent on the marketing quota that was not covered previously and which hopefully, will be covered this year. He had not even anticipated this, and I challenge him to tell me what return this would bring to the province of Quebec in terms of millions of dollars, if we followed that course of action.

As for me, I have all the calculations before me and I gave my views to the minister. My colleagues did it: they expressed their views to the minister. This will result in a series of quite generous ideas but maybe we will be again stopped by the opposition.

So as not to overinflate his budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will not be able to respond as generously as he wishes because he knows that he has to face a party which states one thing in one area of the country and something else again in another.

There is one thing I would like to mention in concluding and that is the manpower problem referred to by the hon. member for Joliette. But the hon. member forgot to think it over and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) made him understand.

I would like him to be able to say that if a certain small meeting should be held in the province of Quebec he should do a bit of campaigning because his plans are about to fail. But to avoid complete failure in his campaign he should at least say that an agreement has been reached between Ottawa and the provinces so that some of the students may work on farms.

And I think the hon. member for Joliette should mention this to the member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who did not seem to understand himself. Madame Speaker, I can see that my time is over and I would like to leave a few minutes to my colleagues. But I would reiterate my offer to the hon. member for Joliette and I am willing to give him and his colleagues a retraining course so that they may understand his motion.

[English]

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Madame Speaker, may I say at the outset what a privilege it is to have the opportunity to say a few words while Your Honour graces the chair? For the record, might I say the chair is occupied by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinley: I should like to take the opportunity to place on record some of the thoughts which came out of a meeting we held with members of all commodity groups in Huron county a short time ago. It was a valuable meeting. One is held every year and members of parliament are brought up to date with regard to the problems facing people engaged in agriculture, which are varied and many.

There has never been a time in recent years when there has been greater need for clearcut and decisive action by government in the field of dairy policy.

It will not be good enough in 1974 simply to carry on existing programs or to make only minor changes in them. What is needed are major policy commitments and initiatives. Figures issued by the Canadian Dairy Commission show that between September, 1972, and September, 1973, 2,179 producers left the dairy industry in Ontario alone. That represents 8 per cent of the producers in this one province. In Quebec, 3,174 left the dairy industry, representing 10 per cent of the producers in the province. These two provinces account for the majority of the production of dairy products in Canada.

Dairy farmers all over Canada face similar problems regardless of where they live. They have to put up with long hours and a seven-day work week. The cost of all their inputs has greatly increased. They are faced with demands for higher wages, increased unemployment premiums and higher compensation premiums in an industry where it is almost impossible to find reliable help, partly because the government pays people more not to work than the dairy farmer can afford to pay them for working.

Feed costs have risen beyond the range of a dairy farmer who does not benefit by a big acreage on which to grow his own grain. Mixed grain is selling at almost $105 a ton, and corn at $3 a bushel. Soybean meal costs more than $200 a ton and can be grown only in a few parts of Canada. Prices of all the other feeds are in the same range. The ratio of industrial milk returns to 24 per cent dairy supplement in Ontario dropped from a level of 1.87 in November, 1971, to a low of .85 in July of 1973.

The lack of confidence which has contributed to this massive exodus from the industry must be dispelled by the creation of a long-range dairy policy in which producers will be reassured as to their future. We heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) suggest today that the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle) was playing politics when he introduced his motion, because the minister had told the House in answer to a question a day or two ago that he was planning a long-term dairy policy.

Over a year ago, as reported in Hansard for March 26, 1973, I asked the Minister of Agriculture when he would be announcing his dairy policy and whether he would extend it for more than one year in order for producers to plan their production better. Further than that, I believe the records of the Standing Committee on Agriculture in past years will show that I have suggested that this be done when the Canadian Dairy Commission or former ministers have come before the committee.

My people suggest a five-year program in dairying which would be announced in advance and updated annually, coupled with a program to develop and use an economic return formula for industrial milk. This would ensure an adequate level of returns and a greater degree of confidence and stability in the industry to both producer and processor, as well as providing the consumer with an adequate supply at all times.

There is need for an immediate increase in returns to producers of industrial milk. The dairy farmers' convention in Regina voted a $2 per hundredweight increase for industrial producers, suggesting approximately $1 per hundred come from the trade and a $1 per hundred subsidy. If the consumer subsidy on fluid milk of five cents a quart is not a long-term government policy, then perhaps it should be phased out in such a way that it has a minimum market impact. We are all aware, as has been mentioned previously in this debate, that imports of milk products, particularly butter, have been increasing. In the last dairy year we imported more than 50 million pounds of butter. For a country like Canada this seems wrong and only indicates that past policies have not been adequate to encourage producers to stay in production in order to meet the demand of consumers.

Another problem that arises is that when the production of milk gets low, processing plants that process milk powder and butter are only able to operate a few days a week rather than full time. This inevitably raises the cost to consumers, while the producer receives nothing in terms of compensation.

Another matter I should like to mention is the recent seven cents subsidy provided to beef cattle producers. This is harmful to the dairy cattle producers. I say that because we all know that half of the cattle that are calved in the dairy industry do not produce any milk but inevitably are used for beef and a few are used for breeding. The seven cents subsidy announced a week ago today is of no advantage to most dairy cattle farmers because their cattle do not fall within the A-1, A-2, A-3 or A-4 category but, generally speaking, would be marketed as grade B or grade C cattle, or in other words commercial cattle.

I do not know whether the Minister of Agriculture gave any consideration to this fact, but I suggest this is discrimination. These dairy farmers feel they are beef producers just as much as anyone else. Further to that, when the seven cents subsidy was put on, the market dropped by over half of this seven cents subsidy, so one can easily see that those who could take advantage of the subsidy immediately lost half of it, about 3.5 cents a pound. This is probably one consideration that the Minister of Agriculture and the government did not take into account before the subsidy was announced.

Since the subsidy was announced we have seen great havoc in the cattle industry and in the marketplace. I am advised today that in some markets in Canada, cattle are being sold with the seven cents a pound being added after the sale; and other markets cattle are sold with the seven cents a pound included in the price. I ask, how can an industry operate in such a fashion? It seems to me some consideration should have been given to farmers with dairy cattle such as Holsteins, Guernseys and Jerseys that are sent to market and form a large part of the income of our dairy farmers.

The loss of 3½ cents a pound to the cattle producers has generally come about as a result of the lack of thought given to the situation before the announcement was made. This has caused great difficulty but is typical of some of the actions the government takes. It would have been much better for the industry had the government provided some protection from imports, which I believe is what the industry asked for. Certainly this is where the original problem arose. The minister said the government did not want to take action against imports since it had put a tariff on imports previously and had been charged for the damage suffered by United States producers. This was damage suffered as a result of the tariff put on by the government a few months ago as a short-term measure to assist the beef producers of Canada.

I suggest that that is a very poor excuse. If the government is being billed for any damage done to U.S. producers from the surcharge the government imposed, then I hope it will refuse to pay the charge levied against it. If it does not, then it will appear to be just as uninformed and to have the lack of business knowledge that a lot of people in this country think it has.

May I also point out that many milk producers in this country also raise hogs. According to letters I have received lately, the hog producers are in a similar situation to the beef producers and are faring just as poorly in terms of returns from the marketplace. The cost of their feed is equally as high. We all know that beef and pork compete for the same market and you cannot lower the price of beef without this also having some effect on the price of pork. People are wondering what the government is going to do to assist the pork producers similar to the way the beef producers have been assisted, even though the assistance was given in a way that did not do the most good.

Let me read from a letter I received recently in regard to the cost of producing hogs. Perhaps I could put a few of these costs on the record so that our consumer friends may realize that the production of pork is not all roses. This gentleman states in his letter:

> In regards to our phone conversation of this evening I am enclosing some figures on our cost of production. We have a farrow to finish operation. It takes 14 bushels of corn and 200 lb. of soyameal and mineral pre-mix to produce a pig—this includes feed for the sow, boar, and starter and finishing. With corn at $3.20 per bushel and soya at $200 per ton and pre-mix at $270 a ton, our cost for feed totals $66 for each hog we produce. The market at present in Toronto is $45 per hundred pounds of dressed weight—which is returning approximately $70 a pig. We are now faced with the position of having $4 per head for labour, interest, building, equipment, medication, insurance, profit, marketing, hydro and fuel—leaving us with a loss of approximately $12 per head. We market about 1,200 a year.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should suggest that this man is never going to become a millionaire when you consider those costs of production. He goes on to say:

> As I stated on the phone, I don't mind competing with any producer, whether beef or pork, but when it comes to competing with the government and its treasury, I am afraid I just don't have that kind of money.

I suggest that the hog producer requires some kind of protection and I do not think it should be provided by lowering the price through government subsidy, and that is actually what has happened as a result of government subsidy, although many consumers are not willing to admit it. This man then says in his letter:

> I have the plans for a new building, and the contractor ready to go, but I just can't justify going ahead if I have to work against these odds.
> Thank you for your phone call—it was much appreciated. I have enclosed these figures so that you could see our position more clearly.

I hope the minister will consider that situation and will see what he can do in respect of hog production. I hope we will make some change in the method he adopted in his attempt to help beef producers.

There are one or two suggestions I wish to put on the record in the hope that the minister will give them further consideration before making his policy announcement in respect of the dairy industry. I listened to the words of the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) and noted that he did not make many suggestions but spent most of his time condemning the hon. member for Joliette. A similar situation existed yesterday at the meeting of the miscellaneous estimates committee: members from Quebec seemed to spend much of their time ridiculing Conservative members rather than trying to obtain opinions from the witnesses or express policies of their own. It became obvious to me that some members across the way from Quebec have been stung a little bit and do not have things the way they used to have them. They do not have their own way all the time, as they once did. I apologize for those remarks and must say that I am very seldom political, because that is not my nature; but I could not help noticing these things.

The Canadian dairy producers have stated that they require an immediate commitment from the government of Canada to a national policy in order to meet Canadian dairy production, and that three essentials are required. They require an over-all increase in returns to industrial milk and cream production equivalent to at least $2 per hundred pounds of milk. This is a figure that seems to be agreed to by everyone, but we do not know whether it has been agreed to by the government.

In addition, the dairy industry requires a commitment by the federal government, preferably by parliament in legislative form, to the future maintenance of income for milk production at fully adequate levels. I suppose that will have some reference to the ten-year program about which the minister has spoken, and I hope this is taken into account when he makes his announcement.

The industry suggests that it needs a single quota system for industrial milk and cream, in place of the present two-part market share quota and subsidy eligibility quota system.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for having to interrupt him, but his time has expired. He will be recognized for a few more remarks, with the consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the indulgence of the House. I should like to close by suggesting that a national dairy policy for Canada should be designed so that the requirements of the Canadian consumer for milk and milk products is met, with few exceptions, by Canadian production. Such a policy must be maintained in view of today's uncertainties in world food production. If evidence of these uncertainties in world food production and in world economic conditions teaches us anything, it is that it would be the worst kind of mistake to sacrifice a policy of regular and dependable supply from Canadian production for the imagined and, to say the least, highly uncertain benefits of a policy allowing the Canadian industry to decline, with increased reliance on imports. Not to utilize the great agricultural resource base of Canada to produce our dairy product needs would be a tragedy indeed.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to note on a quiet day like today that hon. members of the House of Commons are finally united in one fact, namely, that farmers have to work seven days a week and cows have to be milked twice a day, including Christmas day, Easter and all the other holidays that other people normally enjoy.

An hon. Member: Including June 24.

[Mr. McKinley.]

Mr. Whicher: It is nice to note, also, that we are united in the fact that no one in our society works harder than those in the agricultural industry, and this means not only the man of the house but the mother and the children, in many instances. The farmers of Canada, not just those in the dairy industry, work as a family unit, with the result that in many instances the mothers work harder than many fathers in other branches of society.

I am sorry that the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) is not present to hear what I have to say. In his enthusiasm in pointing out the fact that he places so much importance on the agricultural industry, he overdid himself by suggesting that the Conservative Party acts as the conscience of the Canadian people in respect of the dairy industry. Let me suggest that for the first time in our history we have the conscience of the people of Canada, in respect of the agricultural industry, sitting in the House of Commons. I would be the first to admit that inasmuch as the Liberals have been in government more than any other party, we have had more Liberal ministers of agriculture than any other party. But having said that, let me point out that for the first time since 1867 we have a Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who is the real conscience of the agricultural industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I could not help thinking the other day when I was watching on television, listening on the radio and reading in the press about the great annual meeting of our Conservative friends in the Chateau Laurier who were saying they were all ready for an election, that if they had the present Minister of Agriculture in their group it might be possible that they would be ready for an election, because never in Canada's history have we had a Minister of Agriculture who has stood up so well for Canadian agriculture and Canadian farmers as the present minister who is away at this time fighting for the agricultural community. The minister does not talk politics at all. He calls a spade a spade.

Mr. Baker: You mean a shovel.

Mr. Whicher: He does not happen to be a lawyer, as the assistant House leader of the Conservative Party is who will be telling us in a few minutes how to run the farming business. That is the problem with the agricultural industry in Canada; we have too many lawyers telling us how to do things.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: But now we have a Minister of Agriculture who knows how to milk cows, unlike the assistant House leader of the Conservative Party who does not know one end of a cow from another.

Mr. Baker: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I may have some difficulty knowing much about cows, which I am prepared to admit, but I want to say to the hon. member that I can recognize anywhere the north end of a cow going south.

An hon. Member: That's a lot of bull.

Mr. Whicher: We will let that remark rest where it deserves, Mr. Speaker. Just this morning the Minister of Agriculture said, "the dairy industry in Canada is in a bind". He admits it quite frankly. There are no politics in that. He says that the dairy farmers in Canada at present are not getting a square deal. He has travelled across Canada from Vancouver to Newfoundland and told the vegetable growers, "You do not have a square deal". He told beef farmers, "You do not have a square deal, but I will get you one". He told the tobacco farmers, "You do not have a square deal". This morning in the House he told the dairy farmers, "You do not have a square deal, you are in a bind; but I will see that you get a square deal".

Granted, if you want to play politics all down the line, the minister has not been 100 per cent, successful. Granted, as my friend the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McKinley) pointed out, the seven-cent beef subsidy that was initiated one week ago today has not been 100 per cent sucessful. But one thing the farmers of Canada know is that the seven cents subsidy is a whole lot better than nothing; and it was given by the Minister of Agriculture who convinced his cabinet colleagues that this was good for the beef farming industry, and he will do exactly the same for the dairy farming industry, as will be announced in the next few days. Have no doubt about that whatsoever.

The minister does not intend to see go down the drain this great industry that is so necessary to all of us as Canadians. This morning he told us many of the problems that he has and that the dairy industry has in Canada. He pointed out, and rightly so—this has been emphasized by every hon. member who has spoken—that the number of dairy farmers in Canada is decreasing. One of the reasons for this is, not the price of dairy products even though the price should be upgraded but that all farmers have not decided that from now until they go to their natural graves they will work seven days a week. In fact, they have decided not to do it. This is not a peculiarity of Canadian farmers; it has happened all over the world. As was pointed out this morning, in New Zealand the rate of decrease in the dairy industry is more substantial than in Canada. However, we have enough problems here in Canada without thinking about our New Zealand friends, although it is always good to make comparisons.

Something must be done about the dairy industry in Canada, and much has been done in the past by the present government. But the time has come when even more must be done and will be done, I hope, within the next week or ten days or so. As has been pointed out by members of the opposition and members of my own party, it is not right that a country as huge as Canada, the second largest in the world, as sparsely populated as we are, should have to import 56 million pounds of butter as it did last year, particularly when we remember that five years ago we had so much butter that we did not know what to do with it, and we had so much powdered milk in storage that we did not know what to do with it. We were trying to give it away or to sell it at six cents a pound. But today the price has increased substantially and we can sell it at a good profit.

Mr. Mazankowski: But you drove the small dairy producer out of business.

Mr. Whicher: It is still not right that we have to import large amounts of butter. People who are not engaged in the agricultural industry should remember that last year, if my figures are correct, we imported butter from New Zealand and Australia at 58 cents a pound f.o.b. Vancouver. It came in huge blocks. From there it was taken out to various dairies, put into one-pound packages and distributed across Canada. The significance lies, not in the fact that the butter went for 58 cents a pound but in the fact that the year before the price was substantially lower, and that next year it will probably be substantially higher.

I say to all the armchair critics, particularly to people who quoted the Minister of Agriculture this morning, such as the famous Tory paper, the Ottawa Journal which stated that so far as farming is concerned we should have greater efficiency, that if the Ottawa Journal had the efficiency of our farmers it would have a larger subscription rate than the Toronto Star and, as my friend here says, they would not be printing such silly editorials indicating that we must have greater efficiency in the agricultural field. Of course we can do better, but the fact is that we are the best in the world in so far as efficiency in agriculture is concerned. Our farmers demand that they be paid for it, and at the same time some of them go out of business because they feel it is easier to be an electrician, a politician, a preacher or a teacher. From what I can see, coming as I do from an agricultural area, any one of those professions is somewhat easier.

My friends who brought in this motion today did so possibly with good judgment, because we all admit that the dairy business is not the best in the world. However, it is the most efficient and the cheapest. The Minister of Agriculture indicated some prices. This is a fact that I wish the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) would remember. Unfortunately, he is not here this afternoon. The minister pointed out that last year butter cost, on the average, 77 cents a pound. In Copenhagen, the capital of one of the greatest dairy producing countries in the world, Denmark, it is approximately $1.50 a pound. The only nation that could approach us in the price of butter was Ireland, which was two cents higher, 79 cents. The United States was about 89 cents a pound, and in Rome, Berlin and Paris butter was almost twice the price it was in Canada. When people say that the farmer or the industry is making too much money, let me tell them that compared to the rest of the world we can hold our heads very high.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take up much time this afternoon. Like most other members who have spoken, and the Minister of Agriculture who spoke this morning, I agree that much more must be done in order to keep our dairy farmers happy and in business so that we as consumers can enjoy Canadian dairy products in the years to come.

The hon. member for Hastings is not here, but when he spoke he was quoting the prices that dairy farmers were having to pay for the things they need, such as hay. He said hay has gone up by 87 per cent or so. Where does he think hay comes from? It comes from the farmers. So I think he picked a very poor product for an example. I know many hay farmers in the province of Ontario who are very pleased that it has gone up 87 per cent. He quoted the price of seed as an example of farmers' increased costs. I know many farmers in Ontario and the western provinces who are pleased that the price of seed has gone up. There are many things that we can be critical of, but when farmers are feeding produce to their dairy cattle I do not think they should be too serious in their condemnation of such things as hay and seed.

I am content to leave myself in the hands of the fighting Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, he could not be here this afternoon. He is away fighting for farmers and agriculture this afternoon and will make two speeches tonight. My advice to my hon. friend is, read those speeches and see what it is like to have a man who when he walks along that fence is not afraid of falling off. Every farmer in Canada knows whose side the minister is on. He is on the side of the farmer, including the dairy producer whose battle all of us are fighting this afternoon.

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity that this motion presents to make some comments and suggestions to the government on the importance of the dairy industry in Canada, and more particularly as it relates to the highly productive area of southwestern Ontario. It is interesting to hear my colleague from Bruce (Mr. Whicher) relate how well the government understands the industry. I hope he stays and listens to what I have to say.

My riding can claim the second highest production of No. 1 milk in Ontario, with somewhat over 150 million pounds annually. We also have a very high dollar value of industrial milk shipments, as well as sending dairy replacement stock all over Canada and the world. I was interested in what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) had to say to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) this afternoon. The minister severely criticized our party, trying to make us believe that it should have been unthinkable for us to even suggest devoting an opposition day to a subject that we should know his department has well in hand.

We are well aware that the minister is obligated to present his dairy policy by the first of the month, but we are also well aware of the disastrous results of the minister's current announcement respecting the beef qualify premium program. We just could not sit idly by, merely keeping our fingers crossed and hoping that when the first of the month comes we will hear a dairy policy from the minister that does not leave a lot to be desired.

The minister claims that nothing said today will change the policy which is expected to be announced next week. But remember, he had the nerve to come into this House a week ago and make a statement on a beef policy and then come back three days later with the guidelines to accompany that statement. I say, Mr. Speaker, that his department might well take into account what is said in this debate because they still have a week to go before making the dairy policy statement.

When the government recognized that the farmers of this country would listen to and accept the statements of the Minister of Agriculture he was encouraged to travel back and forth across the country, covering many thousands of miles. Being a great ambassador for the government, I am sure he enjoyed it. But I am also sure that the farmers are beginning to wonder, particularly the beef producers, just who or what went wrong in his department. There could not have been much research or forethought before the minister made his brief announcement last Friday afternoon. It immediately started the phones ringing in every rural riding. The big question is, where do we go from here? I am willing to believe that the first announcement was all the department intended to release, but when they started to get the flak, the minister then agreed on Monday that he would have a set of guidelines hopefully before the day was out.

There could be a whole debate on this one point alone, Mr. Speaker, but I do not intend to dwell on the confusion of not only the beef producers and retailers but urban consumers as well when they see the millions of dollars that are being spent on the program. My reason for mentioning this example is to emphasize to the government and to the minister that with the representation this party enjoys right across rural Canada, we could not sit idly by and keep our fingers crossed that yet another subsidy program will be announced without attempting to impress the government of its importance.

In his remarks the minister said that he hopes this motion is not just for straight political purposes. That kind of statement reminds me of one made in similar vein by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) in committee the other day when he tried to give the impression that the official opposition was the only party that resorted to political trickery. Mr. Speaker, I hope my friend had his tongue in his cheek when he said that. All anyone has to do is read some of the records of parliament the last time the Liberals were in opposition. Any so-called political trickery that our party might be accused of would look like a Sunday school picnic compared with those days.

I should like to contain my remarks, in the time I have left, to refer to some of the problems of dairy producers in Ontario and more particularly southwestern Ontario, the area I know best. First of all, I should like to say something about the cream producers. I am given to understand that there are around 4,500 cream producers in the province. Perhaps the on-the-farm cream producer did not modernize as years went by and enlarge his production from the time when the majority of milk production was handled by separating the cream on the farm.

Statistics Canada reported that production of creamery butter fell by 2.4 per cent in February to 10.2 million pounds from 10.5 million pounds a year earlier. Mr. Speaker, the cream producers are asking for about the equivalent of $1 per hundred pounds over the $2 already asked for by the industrial shippers or, in reality 30 cents per pound of butterfat. I can see where some concentrated effort to encourage cream production can be very important in order to supplement the income of a family living in the country, with the breadwinner working in town in the daytime but coming home at night to milk a few cows. He would not have to do it by hand either, as there are all kinds of used milking machines on the market today. He would then only have to separate the milk, which would give him the most natural protein supplement which is available—skim milk. He could keep a few sows, which in turn would produce litters that he could fatten with very little more than home grown grain plus the very valuable skim milk.

Even though the minister is, or has been, a practical farmer, as important as any increase which farmers can get for their product, be it cream, milk or any other product, is the fact that more stress should be put on more practical approaches. Let us have such approaches instead of the grandiose plans that economists have dreamed up in some departments in order to justify the huge salaries that we have seen included in the estimates in the last few days.

I listened with interest to the minister's remarks this afternoon. I agree wholeheartedly with many of his comments, particularly those in which he compared what we pay for cheese and butter in Canada with what people in other dairy producing countries pay. I also agree that many Canadians do not realize the high level of subsidies paid to producers in other dairy producing countries. What is bothering most of us in the opposition and most of our socialist friends to my left who are partners in a coalition caucus is the fact that the Minister of Agriculture is not putting his message across to the rest of the cabinet. They do not seem to recognize the importance of agriculture.

Today in his speech the minister asked how many of his international colleagues who attended the agricultural congress in Italy were farmers. The answer, of course, is that none of them were. Instead of worrying about how many of his colleagues who attended from around the world are farmers, he should be trying to convince other cabinet members of this government of the long-term importance of agriculture for Canada. In particular, he should be trying to convince the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray). Further, how the government can justify making one minister responsible for the Department of Justice and the Canadian Wheat Board is beyond me. Of course, we must not forget the congenial Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). He, too, should be thoroughly aware of what agriculture means to this country.

As I said earlier, I want to make suggestions as to how the dairy industry can be improved in Ontario, particularly in my own area. First and foremost, of course, we must consider the price of milk. It must be sufficiently high to enable the farmer to carry on. Sometimes, the farmer's net income can be affected by factors which may be far more important than the price he receives per hundredweight of milk. He must consider the price he pays for dairy equipment and machinery necessary for feeding his cows. He must make a sizeable investment in all sorts of equipment if he is to carry on the dairy farm. As I say, what he has to pay for equipment and for his total investment may affect his income in a direct way.

Let us consider what the average dairy farmer must invest. There has been much talk of the expertise in this country in the area of dairy farming. What do you need to operate a dairy farm? My people have operated a dairy farm for a long time. We were in the business a long time before I became involved in politics. Let us look at some of the investment necessary to enable the dairy farmer to operate a dairy farm. First, he needs between 300 and 400 acres of land. In Ontario that land will usually be near urban areas. This situation has arisen from the fact that in earlier days dairy farmers had to be close to urban centres because of difficulties of transportation. Consequently, such land today is very expensive. Being near an urban area, it could cost between $400 and $500 an acre, so his land would cost in the neighborhood of $140,000.

In addition, the farmer will maintain between 35 and 45 cows, each costing $1,000. The possible investment for that item could be $40,000. He will need machinery, if he can afford it, and tractors which could cost between $5,000 and $15,000. Let us take the figure of $25,000 for that item. His total machinery costs could easily be $100,000 higher. Then he will need some silos on the farm. Add $20,000 for that item.

The dairy farmer is not like another farmer who can spend between $15,000 and $25,000 for a combine which can do a lot of work. The dairy farmer needs sophisticated equipment such as milking machines and tanks, on which he could easily spend between $15,000 and $20,000. As well, he will need a milking house and other buildings, which will add another few thousand dollars to his investment. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, we are looking at an investment well in excess of $300,000.

I suggest that the government should consider allowing the dairy farmer to write off equipment quickly. The dairy farmer and his sons would be encouraged to stay in the business if they could be assured of being able to update their equipment and thus save time and labour. The question of labour is also important. I know that important advances have been made in making good labour available, but we have a long way to go. The government should also look at the farm credit situation and do what it can to help the farmer save money. I know that the ceiling on loans was raised last year to $100,000. That is an improvement over the previous situation, but I feel that the present ceiling is too low and ought to be raised to a far higher level.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF HEATING OIL IN RIMOUSKI—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It deals with the decision of oil retailers in the Rimouski area to increase up to 18 per cent the price of heating oil to customers whose tanks have a capacity of less than 50 gallons. Some retailers have even stopped delivery to their customers who own such tanks. As a result of the flagrant injustice which such a decision represents for the poor who are deprived of an essential service to which they are entitled, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member and remind him that the motion must be introduced without argumentation in a very short preamble. The hon. member could perhaps move his motion.

Mr. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I expected that, but to say all that I want to say, I must give a lot of explanations.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the decision of the Rimouski area oil retailers to increase the price of heating fuel by up to 18 per cent for customers having tanks with a capacity under 50 gallons.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House instruct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to intervene in order to put an end to the discriminatory practices of heating fuel retailers who unjustly penalize people with a low income who own tanks holding less than 50 gallons by arbitrarily increasing the cost of heating fuel.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

PROPOSAL TO ELIMINATE TOLLS AND DOCKAGE CHARGES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent public necessity. I hope Your Honour will permit me to give about four brief sentences by way of preamble. The strike by the Seafarers International Union will prevent the shipment of grain through the St. Lawrence Seaway system. Whereas the shipping companies cannot now compete because of the imposition of tolls and dockage charges throughout the St. Lawrence Seaway system, adding to the inflationary cost to the consumers of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the tolls and dockage charges on the St. Lawrence Seaway system be eliminated forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA PRODUCTS IMPORTATION ACT

MEASURES TO PROHIBIT IMPORTS INTO CANADA

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-266, prohibiting the importation of products from the Union of South Africa.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, "for many years Canadians have been concerned about the injustice of racist and colonial policies in Southern Africa." That statement was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) on February 21. This bill, I hope, will help to correct some of those injustices.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT, 1867

AMENDMENT RESPECTING METHOD OF APPOINTING SENATORS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon moved for leave to introduce Bill C-267, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (appointment of Senators).

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the hon. member wishes to rise for the purpose of explaining the bill. Unless there is a request made from the floor it is difficult to interpret the hon. member's intention. If the hon. member seeks the floor for that purpose he will be recognized.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. McKinnon: This bill would make the other place more representative of the wishes of the population at large and perhaps thereby restore its credibility as a function of parliament.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING TERM OF OFFICE OF SENATORS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon moved for leave to introduce Bill C-268, an act to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (tenure of place of Senators).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McKinnon: This bill will be self-explanatory when it is printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COST OF DISPOSAL OF RIGHTS-OF-WAY

Question No. 83—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What sections of the old Brockville and Westport Railway right-of-way have been sold or otherwise disposed of by Canadian National Railways since operations ceased on this route?

2. In each case what was the total cost of disposal, to whom was disposal made and what was the price paid?

3. What plans, if any, does Canadian National Railways have for portions of the old Brockville and Westport Railway right-of-way which it still owns?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1 and 3. Of the 40 miles of right-of-way involved, a strip approximately 11 miles in length extending from a point near Newboro to a road allowance between Concessions 7 and 8, Township of Bastard, is to be retained by the Railway for possible rail penetration.

2. It is not company policy to disclose information of this nature.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S STATEMENT, FREDERICTON, N.B.

Question No. 113—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Did the Solicitor General indicate to reporters on November 20, 1973 in Fredericton, New Brunswick that he hoped Mayor Leonard C. Jones would lose the case which he had before the Supreme Court of Canada against the Official Languages Act and, if so (a) was any action taken to reprimand or censure the Solicitor General for making such a statement (b) what action was taken?

2. Did the Solicitor General make a public withdrawal of this statement?

3. Was any action taken by senior members of the government to advise the court that any statements so made were not indicative of government position on the case in question?

4. What steps have been taken to prevent this type of statement being made in the future by any official who through his position in the cabinet could be construed as speaking for government?

5. If the Solicitor General did not make such a statement what was done to correct the record?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. Yes. (a) No; (b) none.

2. No.

3. No.

4. None.

5. Not applicable.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No. (a) Not applicable; (b) not applicable; (c) not applicable.

REPRINTING OF POLITICAL ADDRESS BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AT SWIFT CURRENT-MAPLE CREEK

Question No. 127—Mr. Cossitt:

Was a political address made by the Minister of Agriculture to the annual meeting of the Swift Current-Maple Creek Federal Liberal Association on Monday, February 18, 1974 reprinted at public expense and, if so (a) how many copies were printed (b) how many copies were distributed (c) what specific individual authorized this expenditure of public funds?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No. (a) Not applicable; (b) not applicable; (c) not applicable.

ESTABLISHED SUPPORT LEVEL FOR AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Question No. 131—Mr. Gleave:

1. What is the established support level for (a) beef cattle (b) hogs (c) eggs as of January 1, 1974?

2. Has the government had discussions with the government of Saskatchewan in regard to assisting that province with its support program of $57 per cwt. for hogs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The established mandatory support level under the Agricultural Stabilization Act is: (a) beef cattle, $23.21 per cwt.; (b) hogs, $26.85 per cwt.; (c) eggs, 28.60 cents per dozen.

2. Yes.

STRONTIUM 90 LEVEL

Question No. 159—Mr. Forrestall:

By region in Canada, what was the strontium 90 level at the end of December of 1973, 1972 and 1971?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The strontium 90 levels, in units of picocuries per litre of milk, are as follows:

	December 1971	December 1972	December 1973
British Columbia	5.9	6.2	4.8
Prairie Provinces	6.9	5.7	4.2
Ontario	7.6	6.3	5.3
Quebec	8.3	7.0	6.2
Maritime provinces	9.7	7.0	5.6
Newfoundland	14.0	15.4	9.6

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES PAY ALLOWANCES

Question No. 180—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government adopted as a matter of policy the principle of meeting the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index in terms of annual increases in pay and allowances for members of the Canadian Armed Forces and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): No. Pay rates for members of the Canadian Armed Forces, which are reviewed annually, reflect the principle of paying salaries comparable to those prevailing in the Public Service of Canada. Pay Rates in the Public Service compare, in turn, with those paid by outside employers. Therefore, pay rates for the Canadian Armed Forces are indirectly related to rates paid in the private sector.

PERCENTAGE OF PERSONS RECEIVING PUBLIC SERVICE SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS

Question No. 209—Mr. Forrestall:

1. As of December 31, 1973, what percentage of persons in receipt of Public Service Superannuation are in receipt of benefit under the Public Service Supplementary Retirement Benefit Act (a) including those affected by recent changes in the legislation affecting such payments (b) excluding those newly brought under the legislation?

2. As of December 31, 1973, how many persons were in receipt of benefit under the PSSA and under the PSSRBA?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. As of December 31, 1973, slightly over 92 per cent of the persons receiving benefits under the Public Service Superannuation Act were also in receipt of the benefits under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. The amendments to the latter act in 1973, do not affect the over-all number of Public Service Superannuation Act recipients who are entitled to increases.

2. As of December 31, 1973, 72,712 persons were receiving benefits under the Public Service Superannuation Act. Of these 67,163 were receiving increases pursuant to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act.

GOVERNMENT'S AGGREGATE SUPPLY AND DEMAND FORECAST

Question No. 227—Mr. Stevens:

What is the forecast of the government of aggregate domestic supply and demand for funds in 1974 and 1975?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The government's forecasts, such as those on the aggregate domestic supply and demand for funds in 1974 and 1975, are necessarily tentative, subject to regular revision as more information becomes available, and for internal purposes only.

CORPORATE BORROWINGS AWAY FROM BANKS TO LONG BOND MARKET

Question No. 228—Mr. Stevens:

Does the government foresee a major shift of corporate borrowing away from bank loans into the long bond market in 1974 and, if so, in what dollar amounts?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): In 1973 corporations relied heavily on short-term bank credit to satisfy their needs largely for working capital purposes. This was indicative of the availability of bank credit and its cost relative to the securities markets. Corporations switch their short-term borrowings between banks and the securities markets for even small shifts in the relative costs of these funds. They can be expected to switch to the money market for example, if costs there fall below the cost of bank credit. Some such shifts have already Occurred in 1974. Future shifts will depend on the relative cost of funds. As far as the long-term bond markets are concerned, it is relevant to note first that corporations have accumulated large amounts of short-term liabilities and second that corporate fixed investment is expected to be large in 1974. Taking both of these factors into account it is likely that corporations will wish to match their assets and liabilities closely and they are therefore likely to borrow larger amounts from the long-term bond markets than in 1973. The dollar amounts involved depend on a number of factors which will only emerge as the year progresses.

GOVERNMENT FISCAL POLICY STANCE, 1974-75

Question No. 229—Mr. Stevens:

In the 1974-75 period, what fiscal policy stance should the total government sector in Canada adopt and what kind of balance of taxing, spending and borrowing will be most appropriate between the three levels of government?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The considered response of the government to this question will be given in the budget address.

NUMBER OF IMMIGRATION COUNSELS AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 239—Mr. Hales:

1. How many Immigration counsels operate at the International Airport, Toronto?

2. What are the qualifications of these counsels and how were they appointed?

3. (a) What are the fees charged by these counsels (b) are they paid in advance (c) are receipts issued?

4. How do they make contact with the incoming visitors?

5. How is the fee charged for these services established?

6. Who polices their activities?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Persons who act as counsel for individuals during proceedings under the Immigration Act and Regulations at the Toronto International Airport are in no way connected or associated with the Department of Manpower and Immigration. An individual who indicates a desire to be represented by counsel at such proceedings is directed to either his country's diplomatic representative or to the local office of the Ontario Legal Aid Plan. Private counsels therefore must rely for referrals on such organizations, members of the ethnic community or friends and relatives of the individuals involved. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has no knowledge of these counsels' business practices nor their relationships with their clients.

[Mr. Stevens.]

TREASURY BOARD—PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 265—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Treasury Board on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. 1972-73, $82,415; 1973-74, $109,621.

NUMBER OF PERSONS CONVICTED OF MURDER NOW SERVING TIME OR RELEASED FROM CANADIAN PRISONS

Question No. 320—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many persons convicted of (a) murder (b) capital murder (c) non-capital murder are now serving time in Canadian prisons?

2. How many persons convicted of (a) murder (b) capital murder (c) non-capital murder were released from Canadian prisons in 1973?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. (a) 70; (b) 63; (c) 423.

2. (a) Four (includes two who died while still in penitentiary); (b) two; (c) 19.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LIP GRANTS, 1972

Question No. 328—Mr. Reynolds:

What were the British Columbia LIP figures for the past year (1972), by constituency?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The total allocations, including summer extensions, to each British Columbia constituency in 1972-73 are as follows: Burnaby-Richmond-Delta, $334,210; Burnaby-Seymour, $358,685; Capilano, $834,767; Coast Chilcotin, $1,127,810; Comox-Alberni, $1,236,030; Esquimalt-Saanich, $472,698; Fraser Valley East, $927,471; Fraser Valley West, $774,872; Kamloops-Cariboo, $1,122,355; Kootenay West, $1,050,145; Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, $833,347; New Westminster, $859,437; Okanagan Boundary, $1,053,795; Okanagan-Kootenay, $1,121,480; Prince George-Peace River, $1,199,-707; Skeena, $1,062,793; Surrey, $899,633; Vancouver Centre, $3,028,982; Vancouver East, $2,670,388; Vancouver Kingsway, $740,469; Vancouver Quadra, $895,290; Vancouver South, $339,324; Victoria, $999,660.

CANADIAN POSTAL CODE

Question No. 338—Mr. Reynolds:

For what reason is the Canadian Postal Code made out of a series of numbers and letters when the Postal Code used in the United States and other parts of the world is a straight, simple numbering system?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): The Canadian postal code is designed to enable the post office to sort mail mechanically down to letter carrier walks. In order to achieve this without making use of nine or ten digits it is necessary to use letters, which of course have the effect of permitting more choices.

DEPORTATION OF INDIVIDUALS UNDER IMMIGRATION ACT, 1967 AS AMENDED

Question No. 356—Mr. Rowland:

1. Under the terms of the 1967 Immigration Act, Section 28(1) as amended November 6, 1972, has consideration been given to the effects of deportation upon the individual who comes to visit and, if so (a) in what way (b) with what results?

2. Are changes in immigration regulations being contemplated as a result of current problems?

3. Is consideration being given to requiring prospective visitors to Canada to obtain visitors visas before departure for Canada to avoid inconvenience on arrival and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The amendment to section 28(1) of the Immigration Regulations on November 6, 1972 has no effect on the temporary admission of bona fide tourists who come to Canada and leave at the end of their visit. This section of the Immigration Regulations is used for deportation purposes only in the case of persons who seek immigrant admission and are not in possession of a valid immigrant visa where one is required.

2. The regulation is working satisfactorily and no changes are being planned. All aspects of immigration policy and procedures are, however, under review by the Canadian Immigration and Population Study group.

3. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has no plans at the moment for altering the present non-immigrant visa requirements for visitors. However bona fide tourists who do not now require such visas to visit Canada can, if they wish, obtain such visas if they feel they would facilitate their travel plans.

CANADIAN PASSPORT—JACQUES LANCTOT

Question No. 469—Mr. Dick:

Does Jacques Lanctot who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross have a Canadian passport and, if so (a) when was it issued (b) when does it expire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Jacques Lanctot who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970 following the release of James Cross does not have a valid Canadian passport.

CANADIAN PASSPORT—SUZANNE LANCTOT

Question No. 470—Mr. Dick:

Does Suzanne Lanctot who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross have a Canadian passport, and, if so (a) when was it issued (b) when does it expire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Suzanne Lanctot who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross does not have a valid Canadian passport.

CANADIAN PASSPORT—MARC CARBONNEAU

Question No. 471—Mr. Dick:

Does Marc Carbonneau who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross have a Canadian passport and, if so (a) when was it issued (b) when does it expire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Marc Carbonneau who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross does not have a valid Canadian passport.

CANADIAN PASSPORT—YVES LANGLOIS

Question No. 472—Mr. Dick:

Does Yves Langlois who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross have a Canadian passport and, if so (a) when was it issued (b) when does it expire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yves Langlois, alias Pierre Seguin, who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross does not have a valid Canadian passport.

Order Paper Questions

CANADIAN PASSPORT—JACQUES COSSETTE-TRUDEL

Question No. 473—Mr. Dick:

Does Jacques Cossette-Trudel who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross have a Canadian passport and, if so (a) when was it issued (b) when does it expire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Jacques Cossette-Trudel who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970 following the release of James Cross does not have a valid Canadian passport.

CANADIAN PASSPORT—LOUISE COSETTE-TRUDEL

Question No. 474—Mr. Dick:

Does Louise Cosette-Trudel who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross have a Canadian passport and, if so (a) when was it issued (b) when does it expire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Louis Cosette-Trudel who flew to Cuba on a government aircraft on December 3, 1970, following the release of James Cross, does not have a valid Canadian passport.

AIR CANADA PILOTS—HOURS AND DAYS WORKED, 1972

Question No. 488—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. What is the maximum number of hours per week which Air Canada pilots are permitted to (a) work (b) fly?

2. What was the total number of days worked by all Air Canada pilots in the calendar year 1972 and, of those days, how many were more than eight hours in length?

3. Have any complaints been received by Air Canada, the Department of Transport or the Canadian Transport Commission with respect to (a) pilot fatigue (b) the effect of time zone changes on pilots and crew?

4. Is the Department of Transport or Canadian Transport Commission in the process of, or planning to investigate, Air Canada flights with respect to (a) pilot fatigue (b) effect of time zone changes on pilots and crew?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1 and 2. As provided by the collective agreement, "75 hours of flying shall constitute the monthly maximum for all pilots". Each block holder (pilot) is required to have four separate time-off periods of not less than 48 consecutive hours or three separate periods of not less than 72 consecutive hours. While a pilot could be scheduled to be on duty for up to 14 hours, if he commences work between the hours of 2200 and 0500 this 14 hours is reduced to 11, and the 11 hours is further reduced by one hour for each landing in excess of five landings. It should be noted that Air Canada's flight and duty time limitations are more stringent than required by the Ministry of Transport, and, generally speaking, pilots receive considerably more time off than the minimum required by the airline itself.

3. As states publicly by the president of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, flight and duty time limitations and other matters of this nature have not occasioned any problems. Differences, if any, are resolved by CALPA and the airline with the objective always being maximum safety of the operation.

The Ministry of Transport and the Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 3. (a) No. (b) No.

4. (a) and (b). No, but the ministry is planning future studies of this problem, as it relates to the entire spectrum of Canadian Civil Aviation activities.

ADEQUACY OF PRESENT NATIONAL POLICY—FORECASTING OF REQUIREMENTS FOR RAILWAY CARS AND OTHER EQUIPMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Recognizing that we were told recently by the Minister of Transport that the country has no transportation policy, and in view of the fact that carloadings have declined by more than one per cent so far this year despite the expansion in the economy, I should like to ask the Prime Minister when the government first recognized that transportation policy is inadequate and that a completely new policy is needed, as indicated by the Minister of Transport?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Very shortly after the last Transportation Act which was passed in 1967, I believe, questions were raised about it, and at every federal-provincial meeting I have attended since the western premiers have been asking that the question of policy be reopened and restudied. I have consistently answered them, as I now answer the Leader of the Opposition, by saying we are certainly prepared to re-examine the act if the provinces and ourselves arrive at better solutions than the ones embodied in the present act. Without going into too much detail, I would remind the House that back about 1969 the three prairie provinces agreed to embark on certain studies which would, in their view, prove that the act as it now stands should be reviewed.

Mr. Stanfield: Was the Minister of Transport stating the government's position when he said in the House that the country really has no transportation policy, that the policy adopted in the 1960s is not working, and that in his judgment we have no transportation policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe, with respect, that the Leader of the Opposition is quoting the minister with a great degree of accuracy. The minister has indicated that a lot is lacking in the policy and that he is prepared to correct it to that extent. But that is not to say there is no policy; that is to say that the policy is one which is not satisfactory to all parts of the country.

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Transport referred specifically to the unwillingness of the railways to order boxcars, for example. Can the Prime Minister tell the House what kind of forecasting the government receives, say six months or a year ahead, with regard to the supply of cars and other equipment to the railways in relation to anticipated requirements? Is there a monitoring system available to the government which indicates what the situation is likely to be six months or a year ahead, and would it not be fair to say that the government knew a year ago that there would be today the approximate degree of shortage of railway equipment that the country is actually suffering?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the kind of question that I have been discussing with the Department of Transport is very much along the lines suggested by the Leader of the Opposition. There was an attempt to forecast not only a year ago but some years in advance the various quantities of goods which would be moved in Canada, the periodicity of these movements, and the quantity of boxcars which would be needed to ensure such movement. So forecasting is being attempted. I would not care to indicate that it is always accurate, but the statement of the Minister of Transport did not refer so much to the number of boxcars—and he indicated the government's past and present attempts to solve that problem—but to the question of the railways themselves not finding it profitable to move grain at certain frozen rates, the Crowsnest rates and so on. This is the nature of the difficulty, as the Leader of the Opposition knows.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are so many members seeking supplementaries on this subject that perhaps we should try to complete the first round of questioning and have all the supplementaries after we have completed the first round. I will recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and then a representative of the third party, and then return to this subject matter.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX CUTS AND ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION—AMOUNT OF ALLEGED INCREMENT TO U.S. TREASURY—STIMULATION OF INVESTMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the corporate tax cuts along with the two-year write-offs make our effective corporate tax rate lower than that of the United States, thus making for a transfer of funds from our country to the United States treasury, I should like to ask the minister whether he has calculated the total amount of funds or money that will go to the United States treasury from Canada this year as a result of Canada's corporate tax changes last year?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's preamble is inaccurate.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister's reply is inaccurate. However, leaving it at that, I should like him to say whether he is basing the report he is to make to parliament soon solely on the results of the questionnaire he sent to corporations last fall or has he received some other objective inputs in respect of that report and, if so, would he indicate from what sources?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the report will be submitted and will stand on its own merits. Concurrently, I am, of course, constantly reviewing the tax picture in this country.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the two-year write-off measure which was supposed to stimulate investment in new equipment and machinery, and also in view of the fact that investment in that area for manufacturing is only up by about 15 per cent this year compared with 20 per cent in the entire economy, and especially in light of the fact that corporate profits in manufacturing are up by 36 per cent, can the minister explain to the House whether or not these corporate tax write-offs have actually stimulated investment in new machinery and equipment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the latest figures on business capital intentions published by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce show business capital investment intentions for 1974 over 1973 up about 24 per cent to 25 per cent, and in the manufacturing and processing field up about 46 per cent. Whether these figures will be realized will depend on whether the economy, operating at or close to capacity, will be able to wend its way through the shortages in material and equipment that already exist. I might also say to the hon. gentleman that since one of the prime purposes of the corporate tax cuts and so-called write-offs was to stimulate jobs, he ought to refer to the fact that in 1973 there were 111,000 new jobs in manufacturing, which was 8,000 more than in the six previous years put together.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that unemployment continues to ravage our society and the Canadian economy, that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration implemented a very valuable program, LIP, to create employment, and in view of the large number of promising projects that were presented but not accepted for lack of funds, can he tell the House whether he is willing to recommend that additional funds be made available to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to enable him to accept a larger number of those projects which have been presented?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that the statistics on unemployment are not satisfactory, but it must also be recognized that, in 1973, thanks to our economic performance, 430,000 new jobs were created in Canada. I am constantly in touch with my colleague. If it is deemed advisable, his budget can certainly be increased: this program is under constant overall revision.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the minister's excellent reply concerning the creation of many new jobs. However, there is a point on which I am in disagreement with him and which is the subject matter of my supplementary question.

Are the hon. Minister of Finance, together with the President of the Treasury Board and his other colleagues in the cabinet, considering the possibility of granting immediately additional credits to further increase the number of 430,000 new jobs which he just mentioned?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the President of the Treasury Board, and myself have received once again the very serious and convincing representations made by the hon. member.

VETERANS LAND ACT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF EXPIRY DEADLINE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact there are only five days before the phase-out of the Veterans Land Act, would the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, indicate whether a definitive statement will be made this week on the extension of the deadline?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member the assurance that a decision will be announced this week. The Minister of Veterans Affairs has been delayed in transit to Ottawa. He will be here later today. Certainly in the course of the week he will be making an announcement.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that a statement will be made, and I thank the Prime Minister for his disclosure, will the Prime Minister assure the House that the statement will contain an indication of changes in the legislation to ensure that the deadline will be extended in line with other factors that are consistent with extension?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that assurance at this time mainly for the reason the decision has not been finalized yet in cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain had a supplementary to the previous question and should be recognized now for that purpose.

TRANSPORT

ALLEGED LOSS OF MONEY BY RAILWAYS IN MOVING WHEAT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question directed by the Leader of the Opposition to the Prime Minister. Am I right in assuming from the Prime Minister's answer that he accepts the view of the Minister of Transport that the railways are losing money by hauling Canadian wheat to export markets, based on information provided by the railways?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the minister said that or indeed if that is his position. I do know one of the difficulties the railways put forward is that with the frozen Crowsnest Pass rates they do not find it advantageous to move wheat. I cannot speak for them, of course, and I do not recall the minister having said that. I believe he is looking into the matter.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In view of the fact the minister did say that in the House last week and in view of the fact the Prime Minister used the same expression today, is the Prime Minister aware that over the last 40 years there never has been a document on record whereby the railways have been able to prove they have lost money carrying wheat under the Crowsnest Pass rates?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the expertise of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I would not be able to talk about a period of 40 years. I am aware of the hon. member's point and it is one that I have discussed with my colleagues. It is an allegation that has been often repeated. I think I was careful in my previous answer to say the minister had not indicated he had documentary proof of it, but this is indeed a matter that he is looking into at this time.

PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE OIL AFTER MARCH 31

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On March 19 the minister stated before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates that the oil pricing proposal advocated by the federal government for the next quarter would be somewhere between $6 and $6.50 a barrel. Does the minister still hold to the view that after the freeze the price of crude will not rise higher than $6.50 a barrel for the next quarter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do expect there will be an increase in price. The exact level to which it will go, as the hon. gentleman knows, is currently under active discussion with the provinces.

Oral Questions

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES RESPECTING EXPLOITATION OF ALBERTA TAR SANDS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise the House whether the Minister of Supply and Services is flying a kite on behalf of the government in his speech in Calgary today in which he suggests immediate exploitation of the tar sands by building 20 plants at a cost of $1 billion apiece, a massive exploitation in order to get the oil out of the ground before the price comes down?

● (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult to answer a question as to whether this is flying a kite. If the hon. member is asking whether that is a statement of government policy the answer is no, but if the hon. member is asking whether this is an idea which is being explored and looked at, certainly with my authorization, by the minister, the answer is yes. It is not government policy but it has not been rejected out of hand as something that would be unthinkable. It is something that would depend not only on the federal government but also on the provincial attitude.

Mr. Hellyer: Is it unthinkable to think that this minister in the cabinet shuffle which has been widely predicted will be moved—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: —in order to carry out—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The hon. member for St. Catharines.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF TOLLS AND DOCKAGE CHARGES

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of—I will not say lack of a transportation policy because the Prime Minister rejects the statement—the transportation policy of the government which at the moment denies the shipment of grain to both the east and the west—I will deal with the east in a moment—and in view of the present strike of the Seafarers International Union, has the government any plans to reduce the tolls and dockage charges along the St. Lawrence Seaway so that the shipping companies can be more efficient and so as to help them pay for the increased wages to which the SIU will be entitled?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the question presumes a lot of things. As regards the SIU, the Minister of Labour is very much involved in attempting to ensure that a peaceful and just settlement will be reached. In so far as the rest of the question is concerned, it seems to be a representation on behalf of the shipping companies, and we will listen to the representation.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Morgan: Does the government not think that the reduction of tolls and dockage charges along the St. Lawrence Seaway system and a general refinancing will help to deflate the inflationary cost of moving goods through that system?

Mr. Trudeau: Here, too, it seems to me to be a representation which embodies an opinion. It is certain that the lower we can keep the costs of all systems the better it will be for the consumer, but for the taxpayer the consequences would perhaps be very much adverse. So we are trying to keep these two things in balance.

ENERGY

APPLICATION TO BUILD MACKENZIE VALLEY GAS PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF REFERENCE OF SUBJECT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the widespread implications arising from the application to build the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline, is it the government's intention to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works in order that members of this House may familiarize themselves with all the factors that must be taken into consideration before a decision is made?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is a useful suggestion. One of the questions being raised is whether the House should consider the application before the facts are known or afterwards. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would prefer the former in terms of discussing the principles involved. I would be prepared to pursue that suggestion with the House leader.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact the National Energy Board reports not to parliament but to cabinet and the cabinet can implement by order in council any order of the board without reference to parliament, may I ask the minister what input parliament is to have prior to the making of a decision which is of such vital importance to the people of Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it has been the custom in the past for decisions of the National Energy Board to be referred to the cabinet before they are made public. This government intends to depart from that in the sense that certainly on major decisions of this kind reports would be made public before they receive final cabinet judgment. In particular, with regard to the application concerning the Mackenzie Valley pipeline it would be the government's intention to lay the report before the House before a cabinet decision has been taken on it.

Mr. Douglas: Would it be the government's intention to refer that report from the National Energy Board to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works or will we be in the same position as we were with the Columbia River Treaty which we were debating a year after it came into effect?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would correct the hon. member with regard to the latter. He may recall that the Columbia River Treaty was fully considered by a committee of the House before it was ratified.

GRAIN

MARKETING OF COARSE GRAINS—POSITION OF PRODUCERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Since both the Wheat Board and the minister have already indicated that coarse grains will be removed from the operations of the Wheat Board, will he afford an opportunity to all producers to indicate whether they approve of this action, as was done in the case of the rapeseed plebiscite, or will he use coarse grain producers as a sort of comfort station for the cattlemen who find themselves in a difficult situation because of the recent price drop in the cattle market?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is quite wrong to suggest that coarse grains are being removed from the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. Indeed, the bulk of wheat, barley and oats which have been produced in Canada will not in any way be affected by any change of policy dealing with domestic feed grains. Only a very small proportion of feed grain is involved. The question of how best to market that feed grain in Canada involves not only producers but buyers of that grain across the country, and any attempt to determine the wishes of producers and consumers would have to involve both sides of the question. As a result, we have consulted widely with farm organizations across the country in order to attempt to have their views on the right steps to take to produce equity of pricing in Canada.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask the minister whether producers of coarse grains will be afforded the opportunity to pool their resources or will they be forced to sell on the open market as has been indicated heretofore?

Mr. Lang: The government, of course, has announced the final position it will take with regard to the future of feed grain marketing in Canada. The August 3 proposals indicated a certain flexibility in the way in which sellers, owners of grain on the prairies, would sell their grain to other people. Of course, if that option becomes government policy, producers will be able to pool together so as to dispose of their grain.

HOGS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING FARMERS' TAXES

Mr. C. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact the minister said in a speech he made to the hog producers the other day in Ontario that the reason the federal government has cut farm taxes is so farmers can keep the extra income they are earning today to invest in expanding production, will he tell us how the federal government has cut farm taxes so the farmers can keep the extra income they are earning today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Chair should allow the minister to reply to the question but a question asked in those terms is, in my opinion, not in order. The hon. member is referring to a statement made outside the House, and it is a well-established procedure that a question should not be asked in those terms.

MANPOWER

REASON FOR CUT IN AMOUNT ALLOCATED FOR FEDERAL JOBS FOR STUDENTS AND OTHER YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board and is based on information made available to Mr. Hugh Segal. I should like to ask him why officials of his department, in a memorandum dated February 6, ordered other government departments and agencies to cut back by $6 million federal jobs for students and other young Canadians this year?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, for the summer student employment program the total funds provided are less in the current year than in the previous year by reason of the happily improved student employment situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Drury: When a choice had to be made as to the distribution among the various programs, a tentative allotment was made as between OFY and the direct employment program. Later consideration indicated the desirability of allocating more resources to OFY and less to the direct student employment program, one of the reasons being that with limited funds the cost per job is less in OFY than it is in direct employment. The tentative allocation made last fall was changed in favour of OFY and resulted in lesser sums of money for direct employment.

● (1440)

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Would the minister tell the House why he and his department disguised the action he has just indicated by including in the estimates $6 million worth of items that he knew would not be spent in the way the estimates said they were going to be spent?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will examine the chronology of the preparation and printing of the main estimates, I think he will see that the decision to reallocate was subsequent to the printing of those estimates.

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM AND STUDENT EMPLOYMENT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the evidence today that the minister has not been frank in indicating the amount by which jobs for young Canadians was cut back this year, and in light of the refusal to let parliament see the assessment of last year's OFY program, will the minister give an undertaking now to refer the whole question of OFY and student employment immediately to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, or some other standing committee, and to make all documents available for a full investigation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as already indicated by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, the very premise of the question is incorrect. Therefore I think the rest of the question falls on that.

BILINGUALISM

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS BY OFFICIAL LANGUAGE COMMISSIONER CONCERNING CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Transport being absent from the House, I shall direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the Annual Report recently published by the Commissioner of Official Languages, could the right hon. Prime Minister advise the House whether he is aware of the 22 recommendations of this report concerning the National Railways and, in the affirmative, whether he intends taking steps to favour the earliest possible application of these recommendations?

[English]

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport is taking Mr. Spicer's comments very seriously and he has the intention of seeing to it that the letter and, in particular, the spirit of the law are followed within the department and within Crown corporations.

INCOME TAX

DEPARTMENTAL REQUIREMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO BABYSITTERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is it the policy of the Department of National Revenue to demand from taxpayers who are filing income tax returns a full list of babysitters who have been employed by them during the taxation year, together with the social insurance number of each babysitter employed and the amount paid to each person, and is this request included as part of the regular income tax form and, if not, is it being requested on a separate form?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): There is no such form, Mr. Speaker, but naturally if taxpayers are claiming such expenses they may be asked to produce proof of the expenditures.

Mr. Gleave: Is this information requested from the taxpayer before he or she files his or her return, and is any part of a rebate or refund due to him or her withheld until the information is provided, or is there a threat to withhold the refund until such information is provided?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any request for such information before a return is filed. It is not usual to ask for such information when the return is initially assessed and a refund is issued. However, it is not unusual to ask for confirmation of any expense claim after the initial assessment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DATE OF VISIT BY UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE TO OTTAWA—SUGGESTED DISCUSSION OF GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the United States Secretary of State intends to visit Ottawa some time in mid-April, can the minister inform the House of the exact date of Dr. Kissinger's visit, and whether the government in the discussions will give high priority to the Garrison Dam project and the possible effects it may have in Manitoba and parts of Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the last word I had with Dr. Kissinger was to the effect that he would like to be here in the month of March. I think that is now very unlikely. We are trying to fix a date. It may be in April or May, but we are trying to fix a definite date so that arrangements can be made. Among the subjects to be discussed will be the Garrison Dam project. There will be many, Mr. Speaker, and that will be one of them.

MANPOWER

CHARGES AGAINST DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL INVOLVING WORK PERMITS—REQUEST FOR COMPREHENSIVE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact charges have been laid in Toronto against an official of the Department of Manpower and Immigration for offering work permits for a price, and in view of the fact the minister stated earlier this month that further charges would be laid involving civilians as well as consultants to his department, would the minister indicate whether a comprehensive investigation of the operations of his department respecting visas and work permits has been undertaken and whether that investigation, if undertaken, has been completed?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is a constant monitoring and audit of the operations of all programs of my department, including immigration. I think that perhaps some of the charges laid recently are an indication of the fact that our closer scrutiny is developing an effective response. In each of these cases in which action has been initiated by my department, it has been based on certain allegations and on some evidence of prima facie wrongdoing. These cases have been turned over to the proper authorities and pursued vigorously. I do not believe that this indicates a requirement for a wide scale or widespread investigation of the nature suggested by the hon. member.

Mr. Epp: In view of the far-reaching implications of the charges and the doubts this entire situation casts on the operation of the department, would the minister indicate whether he is willing to make public the results of the investigation as it relates to his department so that the public's fears and doubts can be laid to rest?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, in each individual case that develops to the state where charges are laid it then, of course, becomes a matter of due process of law and I would be limited in making specific comments about them. I rather think that, where some evidence has shown up, action has been taken is in itself reassuring to the public that we are prepared to act when there is wrongdoing.

TRADE

PROVINCIAL INPUT IN EXTERNAL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the repeated demands of the provinces, particularly Quebec, concerning their participation in the preparation of the federal policy in trade relations with the Common Market countries or other partners and in trade relations resulting from the GATT negotiations, is the Prime Minister prepared to create a national advisory committee enabling the provinces to communicate directly their views on these matters?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe is making a suggestion the essential part of which is already included in the government's policy. If that is so, I thank the hon. member for his support. For more details, I am convinced that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will answer.

Mr. Wagner: I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government has adopted a policy to establish a national advisory committee enabling the provinces, particularly Quebec, to take part directly in the development of the financial policy or other, as mentioned in my first question?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if direct participation means expressing their views to us. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has already set up such a mechanism. If it means for the province of Quebec or the others to undertake international negotiations in our place, the answer is no, but I do not think that the Progressive Conservative party holds such a position either.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question—

Mr. Speaker: I take leave to ask hon. members to limit the number of their supplementaries if possible, because we will soon come to the end of the oral question period. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe may ask a supplementary question, after which I shall recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, in view of the comments he just made, would the right hon. Prime Minister be willing to show less paternalism, and to simply listen to the provinces' claims, thus enabling them to participate more actively in the drafting of a federal policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, for the third time I repeat that this is the present situation. Without mentioning any in particular, we have asked the provinces to let us know their views before going to the GATT meetings. We have nearly pleaded with them to quote us statistics and to express their views as this would permit us at the GATT meetings to represent a really Canadian point of view.

I do not know what more the hon. member wants except the surrendering of our jurisdiction. Once more, I do not think that this is his party's position, unless it is his very own.

HOUSING

REASON FOR MOST SENIOR DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL BEING OUT OF COUNTRY—GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Given the problems that have emerged in varying forms in urban Canada in recent months, indeed, years, particularly with regard to housing, and focusing particularly on the debate that is to take place in the House today, can the minister explain to the House why the most senior official in his department has spent the last three weeks in Nairobi?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, he has not. The facts of the question are not right. If the hon. member is referring to the visit to the United Nations Environmental Program Directorate in Nairobi, the deputy minister of the department has been there negotiating Canada's contribution to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, which is designed to solve many of the problems the hon. member referred to. Apparently the hon. member and his party ridicule the seeking of any such solutions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind hon. members that there are only two or three minutes left in the question period.

Mr. Broadbent: Considering the fact that most parties in the House have rejected the announcement made by the minister a week or so ago outlining his program for research in this area, which I would have thought the government is not very likely to proceed with, can the minister, putting that aside, inform the House whether his department has decided to implement some program it has sitting around for getting housing to the people in the weeks and months ahead at prices they can afford?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we will be debating this subject more fully this afternoon. With regard to the specific question, of course I cannot account for the errors of the hon. member. I never announced a research program. The particular $100 million program I announced is designed to put in place, beginning this year, solutions to the problems the hon. member is talking about. It is not in any way a research program.

URBAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION ON RAILWAY RELOCATION

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. As in the last session on at least five occasions the government was asked about its impending plans for the introduction of railway relocation legislation, as the Speech from the Throne said that something would be done in that connection and, further, in view of the present uncertainty this question is causing right across Canada, including in my own areas of Chilliwack and Abbotsford, can the minister state today when the government will bring forward legislation to deal with this important matter?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have met with the Mayor of Chilliwack and I know he has a great interest in railway relocation proposals in that community. My colleague, the Minister of Transport, and I hope to be able to make an announcement in this regard very shortly.

PENITENTIARIES

SUGGESTED COMPENSATION FOR GUARDS SERIOUSLY INJURED BY INMATES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It is non-controversial and has to do with the custodial officers in the penitentiaries of this country who, in the past couple of years, have been subjected to a variety of attacks, stabbing, shooting and the like. As a result two of them are at present in serious condition and their life expectancy has been greatly reduced. Will the minister give consideration to measures whereby these fine servants, the custodial officers, will, in the event that in the course of duty they suffer physical damage serious to their health and to their continuance in life, receive compensation in the form of a bulk sum by way of damages to be assessed in the regular way?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the right hon. member that this is a serious problem. I will take his suggestion under advisement.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Peace River, and then call orders of the day.

SMUGGLING OF NARCOTICS INTO INSTITUTIONS—ONGOING INVESTIGATION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. In order to arrive at the root causes of the disturbances which have brought about the results mentioned by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, is there any ongoing study in the minister's department dealing with the smuggling into institutions and the use therein by inmates of fairly large quantities of narcotics?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there has been an ongoing inquiry into methods by which drugs have been smuggled into institutions. We have discovered that certain methods were being used and we have taken steps to close off these sources. However, despite the action taken we find that drugs are still being smuggled in. We will continue to take action in this respect. We hope to cut this activity down as much as possible.

TRANSPORT

NATIONAL POLICY—SUGGESTED USE OF HON. J. W. PICKERSGILL AS CONSULTANT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of the sea of transportation problems in which this country is drowning, has the government given consideration to calling in as a consultant Hon. J. W. Pickersgill to deal with a new transportation policy and the legislation which the Prime Minister, the present Minister of Transport and others in the cabinet so loudly and enthusiastically supported in earlier days?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that, in retrospect, the hon. member has forgotten the hon. member for Trinity who was minister of transport for a period between those of the persons he mentioned. He is probably out trying to swim away from the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S. O. 58—SUGGESTED NEED FOR CONSIDERATION OF GOVERNMENT'S URBAN AFFAIRS POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved:

That this House do now consider the record, objectives and programs of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs in light of the urgent needs of urban Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the scope of the motion before the House covers the whole field of urban affairs. I shall deal as objectively as I can with the programs put forward by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), who is responsible for housing in urban Canada. I intend this afternoon to zero in on this country's housing problems and the existing housing crisis in Canada. We intend to zero in on the program which the government announced on March 13 last. The minister announced with great fanfare that $100 million is to be provided for solving the housing problems of this country. That program is to be administered by the department. To many, it seems as if the minister is going on a power binge at the expense of the taxpayer.

I think the House is aware that two thirds of our people in Canada live in an urban environment, and that urban growth continues to accelerate rapidly. Wherever we go, whether it is Halifax, Montreal, Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton or what have you, urban growth continues to accelerate rapidly. The responsibility of the federal government in this field has grown with the acceleration of populations in our cities.

I must say at the outset that this minister and this government have failed to appreciate the tremendous growth of the problem existing in urban affairs and the problem of housing for the people of Canada. They have failed to accept their federal responsibility. I say federal responsibility because it is within the constitutional powers of the federal government. Indeed, they have even failed to set up a department.

Before I get into the question of housing and zero in on this demonstration program, I wish to ask whether Urban Affairs is as important a department as the Department of Justice or the Department of Consumer Affairs, because the whole ball of wax of urban affairs affects the quality of life. We know how badly the Department of Transport is being operated. This government has failed to set up a real department of Urban Affairs. It has failed to make certain that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is responsible to the departmental minister.

At the outset, I talked about this power-hungry binge. I might call it the $54,000 program. I will say why, mathematically, I say that. This program is called the urban demonstration program. The way I see it mathematically, there are 365 days in a year. This program will be operating for five years at a cost of $100 million. Five years is equivalent to 1,825 days, so if you divide 1,825 into $100 million, it means that whether the minister is awake or asleep, this program will cost $54,794 per day for five years, yet not one house will be built for anyone in Canada as a result of that expenditure. In rough figures, the minister has agreed to spend $54,794 every day for five years on this innovation program which, I repeat, will not build one new house. May I label this program, the power bid of the minister, "The $54,000 per day plan for five years at the taxpayers expense". It is the most expensive 24 hours for fluff that has ever been designed. It is the greatest fraud ever perpetrated on the people of Canada seeking shelter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Get the facts.

Mr. Woolliams: My friend says, get the facts. I know he is good at mathematics. When he works it out, he will find the figures to be correct.

We have today a most serious housing crisis in Canada. I wish to quote from the March 16 edition of the Toronto Star. Perhaps these facts will impress the hon. member who likes to speak while remaining seated rather than on his feet. This article on the front page of the Toronto Star puts this program in the proper perspective. I quote:

Some home prices in Metro go up by $4 every hour

We know what the minister is spending every day on a program that will not do anything. Now, we know that the price of a house for average people in Canada is going up at the rate of $4 an hour. If that is not acceleration, we have never seen acceleration.

Before dealing with this program, I want to mention some of the things we should be doing. First, our party will support a broader and more reasonable interpretation of our national constitution. When we raise the question of the housing crisis in Canada, this government hides behind the constitution. To solve the national housing crisis, the federal government must move and become more involved with the provinces to expedite the development of serviced land at a reasonable cost. This is the key. It will also bring down the interest rate. Has this land banking program which the minister refers to with such affection solved the high cost of housing? Of course, it has not.

We shall create a new department of urban affairs and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be made directly responsible to the minister and his department. We have said over and over again that we will repeal the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials to ease the cost of building supplies and inflationary pressures. This Liberal with a big "L" tax that was brought in by Walter Gordon must be repealed and repealed now. When we are the government, it will be repealed.

We will carefully examine the principle that a proportion of municipal residential property taxes and interest on home mortgages shall be deductible from a person's taxable income. In addition, we will see that comparable benefits are given to tenants. We will not set up a plan like the demonstration program that is going to cost the taxpayers $100 million. We will set up a planning secretariat of personnel from all levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal. One of the great problems is getting serviced land into operation. This involves the three levels of bureaucracy.

We will encourage lending institutions to put certain portions of money into housing at reasonable rates of interest. We will integrate economic programs that will bring down the rate of interest. Today, first mortgages across this land, including CMHC, range from 10½ to 11 per cent, and in many areas second mortgages are running as high as 21 per cent. I do not think anyone could do any better.

In my opening remarks, I mentioned the housing crisis. John Doig of the Star put it this way. He is only referring to one city. Relatively speaking, the same problem exists across this land. I quote:

> Housing industry sources say the average price of a new, detached house in the city and five boroughs last month was about $85,000. It was $25,000 only 10 years ago.

This government has been in office since 1968. An ordinary house for an ordinary person with an ordinary income cost $25,000 when the government took office; it now costs $85,000.

What is the government's plan? What are they doing? We had, first, a promise of great amendments to the National Housing Act which were to cure all evils and bring down the cost of housing. We were promised land-banking to cut the cost of serviced land. Land prices continue to rise in urban centres in Canada. We were promised a public and co-operative housing program to help the low income bracket people obtain shelter. Today, there are as many people seeking that kind of shelter as there were before the program was suggested in the House. We were promised a rehabilitation program for housing. I might say that our housing committee went to Montreal. That city has its own program of rehabilitating many premises for the average man. Where is the government's program?

In many cities today, less than 5 per cent of the wage earners can afford to buy a new home or a rehabilitated one. The vacancy rate is less than one per cent in Toronto. People will soon, if not now, have to place their names on a list to wait for an apartment because the same people cannot raise money for a down payment or pay the high rates of interest. When the vacancy rate is less than one per cent, what is the result? There are not only higher prices, but we will soon be in the same position as the U.S.S.R. where people place their names on waiting lists for shelter.

I will now come to grips with what I want to say. On March 13, 1974, we were promised a most novel program. We were promised a $100 million innovation planning program spread over five years, from 1975-76 to 1980-81. Let me review once again this Habitat 2000 Program. This makes one feel it will not be implemented until the year 2000, judging by the housing crisis across this country. On page 2 of the minister's statement of March 13, we find this:

> I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this 100 million dollar fund will be used to support urban projects in many critical areas.

● (1510)

He said we needed to develop innovative projects to show the effective working of new methods of house design and construction, to demonstrate the feasibility of a new, low-energy, urban system, to illustrate new ways of getting the utmost value from scarce and expensive natural resources by recycling for multiple use and applying new technology in many other critical areas such as improved public transportation and arrangements for finances, and the building and administration of new communities or renewed communities. This is what he said the program was about. This is called the innovative program. It will be concerned with new designs for houses, new types of house construction. There is to be another feasibility study concerned with low-cost energy directed to houses. They will study recycling, whatever that means—I do not know whether they intend to recycle the people, or recycle the houses or recycle a program which doesn't exist at all.

An hon. Member: How about recycling the Grits?

Mr. Woolliams: This program will not build a single house for anyone in the whole of Canada. If the minister wishes to deny it, let him stand up and say so when he speaks later today. The day the program was announced I labelled it, not an innovation program, but an inhalation program. I said, then, that any minister who had the nerve and lack of responsibility to announce a $100 million program to examine the causes of the national housing crisis must have been sniffing glue. I heard the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) speak this afternoon. He said the program announced involved wrong spending at the wrong time in the wrong manner. I could not agree with him more.

A number of reports on housing have already been made public, and I shall deal with that aspect. There was a report issued by the federal task force on housing headed by a minister in the previous government, a man who had been deputy prime minister. He went across the country and made an excellent study on housing. It came to grips with the problem. When it was presented to cabinet, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) threw it into the waste paper basket and denied the basis of the recommendations. I am happy that the minister concerned resigned from a government of that kind, because it shows that someone on the treasury benches had a sense of responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Do we need a new report? We have the Dennis report, known as the Basford hidden report—we cannot find out what it is. I could use tougher language but I will leave it to your imagination, Mr. Speaker. We have had study after study. I called CMHC today. I also called my research people. They said it would take days to find out how many studies had been conducted since 1968. Take a look at some of them.

There was the study on housing in Canada, Market Structure and Policy Performance, made in 1971 by the minister then responsible for housing. There was the task force on housing and urban development in January, 1969. There was the new National Housing Act Program for 1973. There was a federal-provincial study on housing in January, 1973. There were the deliberations of the annual conference of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada which took place in January, 1973. There was a mid-Canada Development Conference involving study groups, a CMHC study on housing statistics, the annual reports of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, an interim report on a $200 million low-cost loan program for housing by a study group in May, 1971. There was a study group concerned with planning for mobile homes; a study carried out by the Canadian Council on Social Development entitled, "Housing and People", in the fall of 1973. There was a study undertaken by the architects of Canada for the government in July, 1973, paid for, like most of the others, out of taxpayers' money. And, of course, there was Habitat—the year 2000. Then there was the study on low income urban housing.

I could go on and on. I understand that the number of studies conducted in this area amount to hundreds. Yet the minister tells us he intends to spend another $100 million in the next five years on a spending binge in an effort to solve the housing crisis. I wish he would take the $100 million and do something about building shelters for those on fixed incomes who need them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I have to ask this question, Mr. Speaker. We in the Opposition need to find out what the minister is doing. It is not easy, because he is very glib. He is a very charming minister. Why are we spending $100 million for a study? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. The purpose is to impress the world at the meeting of the United Nations to be held in Vancouver in the minister's constituency. That is why. And do you know what we are going to tell them? We are going to say: Look at the housing mess in Canada! Please do not follow our program because we are making nothing but mistakes. Once the world sees this it will never follow the housing program which this government is following. We want to show the world why Canada's housing plan should not be followed. Do anything, but don't follow Canada. That is really what we shall be saying.

The government believes the mere fact it establishes task forces, study groups and secretariats solves the problem, but the cost of housing is still increasing, as I have said, at the rate of $4 an hour in Toronto and, relatively speaking, it will be increasing at $2 an hour somewhere else or a dollar and a half an hour somewhere else. Today, people are being burdened with debt for life. The shackles of high payments in respect of interest and principal are around their ankles. That is a situation which presently exists. Yet we are spending another $100 million to find out what the problem is. The disparity between the rich and the poor grows day by day. The heel of domestic inflation caused by the government continues to crush those on fixed incomes.

The minister reminds me of a story about a hungry donkey. He was going down the road, mile after mile, getting more and more hungry. Finally, in a desperate condition of starvation he saw on the right side of the road a pile of hay and he saw on the left side of the road a pile of hay. In his desperate condition he was struck with transfixation. He could go neither to the right, to the left, nor could he move forward. He died on the spot from starvation. That is exactly like the minister. He looks at the problem to the right. He looks at the problem to the left. And he looks at the problem ahead. But he does nothing. He is like the little donkey who dropped dead from starvation, even though there was a pile of hay on each side of the road.

Mr. Caccia: I like your stories but you should not call the minister a donkey.

Mr. Woolliams: I would not say it. I said he was a charmer. I know you enjoyed my story. I labelled this program the other day as a bunch of fluff. I was misquoted in Hansard; Hansard reported me as saying "a bunch of bluff". I make nothing of that. I did not say "bluff" but I will accept either word. The minister has been bluffing with a bunch of fluff. The minister convicted himself in his own statement on March 13 when he said he intended to manage the program and its funds so that "the impact of innovation will be as pervasive as possible". Then, later he said:

● (1520)

> Governments must press forward, Mr. Speaker, with immediate solutions employing proven methods . . . But we must also adopt strong measures to generate new approaches . . . improved technology and innovative solutions.

This minister is on a power binge at the taxpayers' expense in agreeing to spend $100 million over the next five years, a program which amounts to $54,794 each day over the next five years and does not build one house. According to the minister's own words on March 13, he is going to be in charge of this great program. He is going to see whether he can invent some new methods to solve the crisis which exists today, a crisis which has grown worse since 1968, and certainly worse since he has become minister. Mathematically, as I see this program, there are 365 days in a year, which means that over five years there are 1,825 days. Divide that figure into $100 million and the program amounts to $54,794 per day for five years. This program is not going to solve even one of the housing problems in Canada today.

Whether you label this program a spending binge on the part of the minister or not, it is going to cost the taxpayers of Canada $54,794 a day for the next five years and represents the failure of his own government. This must be the most expensive 24 hours ever. I do not know who created this program; perhaps it was the hon. member opposite who comes from Toronto. I am going to give him some facts and figures in a moment, and I have already cited some from his own riding. I want him to go to his constituents and to tell them that he is satisfied with this program, that he is satisfied with the fact that a house which 10 years ago cost $25,000 today costs $85,000. I want him to tell his constituents that when he is on the hustings during the next election campaign, which I hope will be pretty soon since Canada cannot afford any longer this sort of government.

Mr. Caccia: You are power-hungry.

Mr. Woolliams: Let me now continue in a more sombre tone and with less anger, Mr. Speaker, although you cannot help getting angry when confronted with a program like this. We believe in the principle that every Canadian should, as of right, be able to obtain and live in suitable, reasonable cost shelter with the amenities of landscape. Surely, this should not present a problem in a country with as many resources and capable people as ours. Within the natural constraints of geography and necessary economic and social limitations, the aim of government policy should be to generate sufficient housing stock of various forms so that all Canadians may exercise their own freedom of choice as to the style and tenure of housing in which they live. Surely that is not too much to ask.

Several months ago I made a speech on housing, and I do not often receive the compliment of mentioned on the editorial page of the Globe and Mail. I suppose everybody likes to be paid a compliment, and I know my hon. friend opposite does. On June 13, 1973 this is what the Globe and Mail had to say about my speech in an editorial headed "Housing's roller coaster":

> Land is not the biggest villain in the rising costs of housing. Interest rates are. This is true even in the urban areas and their commuter satellites, where speculation has sent land prices skywards.
> Eldon Woolliams (PC, Calgary North) reduced it to simple figures for the Commons this week. An ordinary bungalow in many urban centres now costs $35,000—

Of course, Mr. Speaker, you cannot find one at that price any more; they have already gone up $10,000 since I made my speech.

> —or more, he said. If the buyer puts $10,000 down and carries a 40-year $25,000 mortgage, his total cost when the mortgage is paid off, depending upon the interest rate, would be: $75,000 at 6 per cent interest; $101,000 at 9 per cent; $110,000 at 10 per cent.

At that particular time I set out many other examples and illustrations. Who today can afford to save the down payment on a house, let alone make the payments of interest and principal that are piling up? If inflation continues—I think any Canadian can understand this, you do not have to be a high blown economist— and the cost of housing continues to rise, there will be the largest number of foreclosures in Canada that this country has ever seen, even outdoing the thirties. Surely, somebody in the department can come up with a better plan than wasting $100 million of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, last week we had a public confession by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) that the national transportation policy was a mess. Today we should have the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) getting up and saying that the housing policies of the federal government are a hell of a mess. They are a tragedy, a disaster.

The motion now before the House asks us to consider the record, objectives and programs of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs in light of the urgent needs of urban Canada. To put it mildly, the record is pitiful; the objectives are based—wrongly—on the profit oriented motive, with reliance on the private sector, and the programs have certainly been meagre. I charge the Minister of State for Urban Affairs with lack of leadership and assistance in solving Canada's number one problem, housing. For months we have seen housing costs, including cost of land, mortgage interest rates and building materials, reach their highest peak and, in fact, become the highest costing component in the cost of living index across this country.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

What has the Minister of State for Urban Affairs done, Mr. Speaker? He has done nothing. I looked at the Speech from the Throne but there was not one word about the housing problem in Canada. There was not one mention of bringing forth legislation to deal with the housing problem. All he has done has been to make a statement last week with regard to an urban demonstration program, spending, as my hon. friend from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has said, $100 million over a period of five years.

Let me tell the House that this is only a retread of the special innovative program that the government set forth in 1971, the result of which, after an analysis conducted by an independent authority, proved that we were making smaller homes on smaller lots. That was the result of the program in 1971, and when I read the details of the urban demonstration program of 1974, I have the same feeling about it as I had about the other program. This reminds me of a constituent who owned one of these small homes on a small lot. He said to me: "You know, I am going to spend the rest of eternity in a small box and the federal government wants me to spend my days on earth in the same place". I felt that was so true.

All these measures are like giving a starving elephant a peanut. As I say, there is nothing in the Speech from the Throne to deal with the housing problem, and when I look at the speech from the throne delivered in the Ontario Legislature, I find the same thing—nothing. I know that Premier Davis has stated that there is no crisis in Ontario, yet we have a 23 per cent increase in the cost of housing in Ottawa and a 25 per cent increase in Toronto. At the same time, people in the lower income groups are expending half their gross incomes on housing.

When I read in the Globe and Mail this morning that the new minister of housing for Ontario, Sidney Handleman, said we must depend on the private sector, which is euphemistically called the developers, I had a sad heart and a sad feeling for the people of Ontario. In no time at all he will probably change his name from Handleman to "mishandleman" in regard to this housing problem.

● (1530)

Mr. Basford: You are reaching for that one.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That's really Monday afternoon stuff.

Mr. Gilbert: We in the New Democratic Party want to set forth three new programs immediately in respect of the housing crisis in Canada. First, we should have a 6 per cent limit on all new mortgages for person of moderate and low income, with a direction to the financial institution to set aside a percentage of their investment portfolios to ensure an adequate flow of mortgage money. This would indicate the financial institutions had a sense of social responsibility instead of profit-hungry motive. We would also give tax credits to people now paying more than 6 per cent interest on the mortgages they have.

I did mention very briefly the impact of housing on the cost of living. Let me set forth for you the savings people would make if they paid no more than 6 per cent interest on their present mortgages. If we consider a mortgage of $35,000 over a 25-year term at the current rate of 10¼ per cent, the monthly payment works out at $316, and of that $316 some $295 represents interest charges. If we were to freeze mortgages at the 6 per cent rate, the monthly payments on that same house would decrease from $316 to $223. In other words, the homeowner would be saving $93 a month, or $1,116 per year as a result of that NDP scheme.

When you consider the interest payment as a separate item from the total monthly payment, the figures are even more startling. At the 10¼ per cent interest rate the interest payment per month adds up to $295, and at the 6 per cent rate the interest payment per month would be only $175, so this would mean a saving of $120 x 12, or $1,440 to the person per year. This would have a tremendous impact on the heavy burden Canadians are carrying in respect of housing, more especially in respect of interest rates, and it would have an indirect effect on rents that are chargeable.

I can just hear the minister and some of his colleagues saying that we cannot afford to do this, that it would be improper or not right. Let me refer him to what has happened in the TransCanada Pipeline Company, that old friend of the government. It sent out a notice of its annual meeting and one of the items in the notice indicated that as of March 4, 1974 several officers of the company were indebted on account of loans in connection with the purchase of their residences. It then sets forth the names of three officers who have obtained mortgages, the highest of which was $20,000, the next $15,000 and the third $11,000. The interest chargeable on those loans was 7 per cent on one, 6½ per cent on another and 6 per cent on the third. I suggest that the old biblical saying that those who have shall get more applies to the TransCanada Pipeline Company, particularly when we see these senior officers of that company paying those low interest rates.

I might mention that we made an investigation of this particular item because we assumed they were first mortgages, but we found out that these were second mortgages at 6 per cent, 6½ per cent and 7 per cent.

An hon. Member: All $50,000 a year men.

Mr. Gilbert: Surely, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has no right to say that we cannot afford 6 per cent mortgages across the board for all Canadians, and the minister would indicate a social responsibility to all Canadian if he adopted that line.

Moving from that suggestion of 6 per cent mortgages for all Canadians, we in the NDP say there should be a federal land banking program with an immediate target of acquiring at least 50,000 acres of serviced land which the federal government should develop. It should also lend financial assistance to municipal governments in order that they might acquire and service land for building purposes. I can hear the minister say that they have programs along these lines, but these programs have not worked because the federal government has not taken the initiative. It has relied on provincial governments to pick up the programs and implement them, but they have not done so.

I was rather surprised last week when Robert Nixon, the leader of the Ontario Liberal party, made an impassioned speech during the debate on the Speech from the Throne of the Ontario government, setting forth his alarm in respect of German, Swiss, U.S., Japanese and British investors investing in land and real estate in Ontario. He said the reason they had done this was that the 10 per cent mortgages and the capital gains law make investments very lucrative and attractive in Ontario. I hope the Ontario leader of the Liberal party has brought this to the attention of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, and I hope that minister will not only listen to that Liberal, but will act. This present minister is not a man of action, but rather a man of words.

A policy of direct loans to municipalities was a recommendation set forth in the Dennis report. That report envisaged the need for municipalities to participate in the acquisition and servicing of land to protect land costs and values. I give the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) some marks for his insistence that federal moneys be directed to municipalities along this line, but I give him no marks for his past record with regard to lifting the ceiling on CMHC rates. I give him no marks in respect of cancelling out 25-year mortgages, allowing five-year mortgages on the rollback theory. As I said, I do give him a few marks in respect of direct loans to municipalities.

Mr. Hellyer: We would have had 50,000 units a year less without those two things, just keep that in mind.

Mr. Gilbert: When I think of the hon. member for Trinity and his zeal when rushing across this country to solve the housing problem, almost a religious zeal, and then when I see his performance, I am really sick at heart, to put it quite mildly, Mr. Speaker.

Let me move on to the third point, which I think is very important. We must take the profit out of housing for speculators by tax changes. I am not talking about the ordinary citizen who buys a home, re-sells it and makes a profit, because he is caught in the present bind of high prices. I am talking about the land developers and building corporations which have ripped-off the Canadian public to such a great degree. It is time, in fact it is past time, to stop them. When I read the philosophy set forth in the Hellyer task force report, that all Canadians are entitled to clean, warm shelter, and when I read the principles set forth by our party and by the Canadian Social Development Council, that every Canadian is entitled to decent housing at a reasonable cost, I ask myself what has gone wrong?

Here we have set forth a principle which should be the underpinning of a housing policy in Canada. It should be the social right of all Canadians to have decent housing in the same way they are entitled to Medicare and education. What has gone wrong, because the home prices have soared out of sight. When one thinks of the city of Toronto, the average cost of a house in Toronto as at February 1, 1974 was $46,210. This represents an increase of 50 per cent in a period of 23 months. Housing has become so expensive in Toronto that only 136 NHA loans for new housing were made in 1973 out of the nearly 40,000 new units built in metro Toronto last year. The average price of that NHA house was $36,218 and the purchaser had an average income of $15,293. Because of the $30,000 ceiling on an NHA loan the act, as an instrument of home ownership in Toronto, has become virtually inoperative. With average weekly earnings at less than $150 in Toronto during 1973 the dream of home ownership is virtually impossible of realization.

I could give the same story with regard to similar prices and the similar impossibility of buying homes in all major cities across the country. In fact my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) whose constituency is a fair distance from Toronto the other day told me the cost of an unserviced lot in his area is $6,000 and the cost of a serviced lot is $8,200. In my own area, a home which I could have purchased in 1962 for $26,000 sold less than a month ago for $83,000 cash. The seller went to the real estate agent to list the property and said he wanted $70,000 for it. The agent told him that he would get him more than that. The property was listed at $87,000 and sold for $83,000 cash. This is an indication of how prices have soared out of sight. It is also an indication that something must be done about it.

What would the New Democratic Party do? We would institute a 100 per cent capital gains tax in respect of people who are in the business of buying and selling real estate. In other words, we would skim off the windfall gains of the developers and building corporations. If necessary, we would impose an excess profits tax on land developers and building corporations. Third, we would implement the recommendation of the Dennis Report regarding land developers and building corporations. Back in 1971 when we had the tax reform proposals the government closed the loophole for individuals with regard to capital investment and said that no charges could be applied to this, but it did not close the loopholes with regard to corporations.

We have these land developers and building corporations charging tax deferrals, accelerated capital cost allowances, the cost of holding land which includes mortgage interest payments, municipal taxes and so forth. The result of all these tax advantages has been that companies like the Cadillac Development Corporation in Toronto had, between 1966 and 1971, earnings of $62,968,000 on which they paid taxes of $20,506. This almost reminds me of a comparison in respect of the taxes that a certain president nearby has paid in recent years. In this case, the amount is only $20,506 out of earnings of $62 million. Consolidated Building Corporation, also a Toronto-based firm, in July 1973 purchased 18 acres of land and 17 days later sold it at a profit of $1.5 million. This company, which prior to this was involved in extensive building of homes and development of commercial property, has now gone into the land development business. Their president said that this company is a public company in the business of making a profit. Mr. Speaker, that is not a reasonable profit; it is an unconscionable profit.

These are three areas in which the minister could act immediately with regard to the housing crisis in Canada. I hope he will call together the provincial ministers, in the same way the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has called together the provincial ministers with regard to the oil crisis, to consider the housing crisis, accept the federal responsibility and give federal leadership with regard to this important problem. I hope Canadians will not have a total lack of faith in this government, but at this stage they are certainly following that trend. Surely, the minister should assume his responsibility and see to it that he implements his philosophy and that of most Canadians that Canadians are entitled to decent housing at reasonable cost.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to thank the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for allowing such a debate today, since housing in Canada is a major problem.

This does not mean that there are no other problems. We are now undergoing a housing crisis as well as many other crises, namely as regards employment, unemployment, food and energy. The housing crisis is in addition to all the other crises which the government is trying to get us used to.

While listening to the speeches of the two previous speakers I noted that the housing problem exists practically throughout Canada. Few areas, cities, and municipalities are spared. Perhaps some of its causes have been unconsciously deliberate, but I note that in the province of Quebec, about ten years ago, a so-called quiet revolution began and a number of pretexts were invoked to prompt people to leave rural areas and bring them to live in the cities.

This is one of the causes of the many problems experienced in the medium and large cities. Today we must deal with those problems.

The hon. member for Calgary North asked for the elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and an income tax rebate in mortgage interest on family homes. I would point out to the House and particularly to the hon. member for Calgary North that the Social Crediters have been demanding the elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials for a few years already, and my colleague from Portneuf (Mr. Godin) has brought still another motion before the House on this subject during this session. It is motion No. 2 which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of granting an income tax rebate equal to the amount paid in mortgage interest on a family home and in municipal and educational taxes, the whole not to exceed $1,000 per year.

That means, Mr. Speaker, that Progressive Conservative and New Democrat members are not the only ones asking for tax abatements for homeowners.

The Social Credit Party of Canada leads the way in that area. We have also been demanding for very long for interest rates on loans that owners would be able to afford.

Any family in need of housing realizes today that interest rates are too high, even under the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation program. In some cases, the interest rate can be lowered to 8 per cent, but even that, Mr. Speaker, is too much for some people.

Just like everybody else, we realize that for several reasons, there is a housing shortage in every Canadian region. We have failed to get enough family units under construction, particularly where a high increase in demand was foreseen. For instance, a few years ago, an important development was announced in northern Abitibi, that of the James Bay hydroelectric project. That meant that many northern cities would need a far greater number of houses.

● (1550)

In my opinion, home builders, developers and, to some extent, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials which has an office in Val d'Or, have done everything possible to meet the demand, but to no avail, because it was much greater than the supply. The demand is still very great, Mr. Speaker, so much so that many families are wondering whether they will find suitable housing not too far from their place of work. This is a lack of foresight. There has not been adequate planning to provide enough houses in order to meet the demand. Arrangements should have been made since the programs were advertised. There was a lack of foresight. Fewer houses will probably be needed when the work is completed. A very great number of houses will be available, but it will be too late.

I am also thinking about the program announced a few days ago by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), a $100 million program referred to a while ago by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Speaker, within such a program, the minister wants new initiatives. I do not think that failed in the past, I even mentioned it when the minister made his statement in the House. There would no doubt be room for other projects, but we should take advantage of those that now exist. However, there are some problems. Certain housing promoters would like housing projects called "modular housing" to be approved. If people do not need a big house at the time they are buying one, they could start with a small one and add to it later on with the modular system according to their needs.

Now the cost price of these modular houses is in accordance, I believe, with the government low-cost housing program.

One can imagine how municipalities dread the building of modular houses or any other low-cost shelters. Municipalities have to contend with services, streets, sidewalks, sewers, water pipes at costs that increase as rapidly as in any other building field.

Those municipalities must also resort to loans, the rate of interests of which also increase and are increasingly hard to get.

Those municipalities prefer the building of houses that, for the same services, will yield much more in the municipal tax field. One can understand that a $25,000 or $30,000 house will be much more profitable to the municipality than a $15,000 or $20,000 one. And the municipality does not have to spend more for building streets where are the more valuable houses.

That is why municipalities dread the building of such low-cost houses.

There is also another risk in the development of these low-cost houses, namely the mass construction of slums. In almost all our towns and cities, we are at grips with decayed houses that are almost no longer livable, and in which families on welfare must live. If we try to lower the cost of construction of low-cost houses, we might build houses that within two or three years will look like the slums we want to replace at present.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we should be careful when designing housing plans, because people want and are entitled to demand a livable house, with a minimum of comfort inside. The worse a house is built, the more difficult it is to heat it, and the less comfort there is inside.

Mr. Speaker, we must be careful, I suggest, as regards this kind of low-cost housing and provide the Canadian people with houses of an usual quality, that can be built.

I will quote one single example in this regard, Mr. Speaker. In the town of Amos, houses have been built many years ago under the so-called war time housing program. These houses had been built for low income families. In principle, these houses are still designed for low income families. But in the city of Amos, in particular,—and the same probably occurs elsewhere—one may find that families whose annual incomes exceed $12,000 and even $15,000 are living in these houses, while other working-class families, whose incomes are lower, sales clerks whose incomes are not very high, must pay a higher price to find suitable shelter while families with incomes of $12,000 or $15,000 can be allowed to live in these war time houses for $80 or $82 a month.

In my opinion, this situation should be reviewed. If we are to be fair, we must review this program that was designed for low income families, and continue to offer these benefits to low income families. Some go as far as suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that those houses built for low income families be made available to those with no income, that is those with no income other than social welfare allowances. I think those suggestions should be studied carefully by the minister so the required amendments to that program might be introduced to make housing available to those in need of them.

In his $100 million program the minister asks that new initiatives be taken. I think some have already been taken, and I wonder whether the minister is aware of some of the transformations now taking place in the province of Quebec. The same situation is probably developing along the same lines in other provinces. At least there is a movement going on now, and in the Abitibi area, the Témiscamingue area, northwestern Quebec in particular, some promoters are buying at low prices as many vacant lots as possible, divide those lots in five acre holdings and then put them up for sale. They do promotion work in the United States, in certain states, to offer those lots for sale to Americans. They also offer them to Canadians interested in buying those small lots called hobby farms. Even if today those lots are not located in towns or municipalities with the transportation and communication facilities of all sorts available today it is easy to live away from urban centres. Apparently up to now some retired or near-retirement Americans seem interested in those small land holdings. I think that initiative might have been thought in terms of Americans wanting to come and live in Canada during the nice season. I wonder if more foresight would not be called for. As was pointed out earlier by the hon. member from the NDP who spoke before me and who recognized that most lots made available for house building purposes were much too small I think it would be a way of extending the land, thus allowing families not only to build a home there but also to have a piece of land where to grow vegetables and flowers and space to breathe non polluted air in the summer.

Mr. Speaker, this is a step that the minister should consider and make his own. He should ask his officials to consider steps such as this one in order to find possible ways of relieving large cities, of decentralizing these living areas that are causing all kinds of problems, one of which being public transit, for instance, among a great many others.

Mr. Speaker, these are subjects that the minister should consider carefully. During these few minutes, I have been unable to give him all the information needed, but I know he can find it elsewhere to examine the feasibility of such projects all across Canada.

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this motion put forward by the Conservative party on the objectives of the government's urban policy and housing policy provides us with a useful occasion to debate these issues. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), the official spokesman of the Conservative party, of course stated that the government's urban and housing objectives as outlined in the Speech from the Throne were inadequate. I had hoped that the Official Opposition would have been at least sufficiently interested in these issues to have their official spokesman participate in the throne speech debate, rather than remain silent.

Mr. Alexander: He did.

Mr. Basford: Not on housing; the Official Opposition did not have its official spokesman speak on housing and urban policy in that debate.

Mr. Alexander: We were waiting for today.

Mr. Basford: I am delighted at the reaction I am getting from hon. members opposite. Obviously, they now realize that this is a matter of such concern that they should have had their spokesman deal with it in that previous debate. But of course at that time they had not held their convention, and I presume that at the time they did not have any policy. Now, having had their convention they feel they have a policy. This is a change.

The last time we had a major debate on housing was when the National Housing Act was amended. Some 18 members of the Conservative party took part in that debate, and if one reads their speeches one will see they expressed 18 different Conservative policies.

My hon. friends opposite have put forward some suggestions. One is that the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials should be removed. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, we all like to remove taxes. There is no question about that. But one would have wished that the Conservative party had given this suggestion a little more thought, at least more than expressed in their policy position as put forward today. Obviously, the principal beneficiaries of the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North would be the large industrial and commercial builders, the people who put up the huge office buildings and shopping centres.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Alexander: We are not talking about them.

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) says they are not talking about them. I have a copy of their policy right here. It says they are prepared for the challenge. Mr. Speaker, the Tories have prepared for the challenge by turning their backs on the twentieth century. There is no mention of this policy being restricted to housing. It is clearly stated that this will assist the developers of office buildings and shopping centres. It is the typical Tory policy of giving the greatest help to those who need it least.

To the extent that the Tories' suggestion would apply to residential construction, again the people benefiting the most would be those with the most expensive housing. That is their answer to the housing problem in Canada. Surely, the Conservatives could have suggested that the tax be removed from housing alone. Surely, we don't need to remove it from shopping centres. Surely, they could have developed a system under which rebates could be paid to those who need assistance most; but they, of course, look after their rich and wealthy friends.

This debate, as I say, allows us to review the government's urban objectives and housing policies. The objectives of my ministry can be explained very simply: they are to improve urban Canada for urban Canadians, to respond to urban problems and urban issues to the utmost of our ability. We are responding to them. This government's record in responding to the problems of urban Canada is outstanding. We are dealing with housing and, in co-operation with other governments, are tackling issues such as urban transportation. We are tackling the issue of housing in new and imaginative ways. We are taking action, and urging action by other governments and the private sector, to deal with housing issues.

The important element, as speaker after speaker in the House has made clear, in housing costs is the cost of land.

Mr. Alexander: Particularly serviced land.

Mr. Basford: Yes, particularly serviced land. I am glad for the assistance of the hon. member for Hamilton West. For many reasons, not the least of which is the financial burden of residential development in most municipalities, not enough serviced land has been coming onto the market. The objective of the federal land assembly program is to correct that, to bring more serviced land onto the market fast and to help bring supply and demand more closely into balance. This calls for large scale intervention by governments through the provisions of the newly amended National Housing Act, under which funds will be made available for the assembly of land. Hon. members opposite ridicule this program. When, about one year ago, we undertook to provide $100 million a year under a five-year program for land assembly purposes, they ridiculed us. Their official position, as I recall, was that they would provide $20 million.

Mr. Broadbent: Who are "they"?

Mr. Basford: The Conservatives. As a result of the response of other governments to this offer, we exceeded our target in 1973 and were able to commit $150 million for land assembly funds in 1973. We are continuing and will continue to make substantial commitments in this area.

In order to obtain the best effect or return from this investment, I have proposed to the provinces and municipalities a set of guidelines to govern the allocation of land assembly funds. I have urged that priority and funding should be given to those projects that promise quick starts, quick development, and that will put on the market serviced lots as quickly as possible. And, although we need in this country land banks for development in five, ten or fifteen years, we are encouraging land assembly projects which will provide, as I say, for quick starts and quick development. Those are the guidelines we have given to the provinces.

Second, I have proposed that a reasonable proportion of those public land assemblies so assembled should be designated for low and modest income housing. There has been wide acceptance of these principles and these guidelines are being effectively applied with regard to our loans and commitments to provinces and municipalities. The intention of these guidelines, of course, is not only to get land onto the market quickly but to make residential development more attractive to municipalities and to remove deterrents to the opening up of residential land.

The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) suggested that we should accept the recommendations of the Dennis report with regard to the involvement of municipalities. I have accepted them. I wish the hon. member knew more about housing policy. If he did, he would know that at the Peterborough tri-level meeting we made it clear that the federal government would support municipalities in land assembly project. Also, just before the new year we approved, in a matter of weeks, a $9 million loan for the city of Toronto for land assembly purposes, which can be carried out as soon as provincial consent is given. We approved at the same time a substantial loan for the city of Vancouver, to enable that city to move into the land assembly business. In a speech in Toronto this morning I repeated our eagerness and willingness to support municipalities in land assembly. Let there be no doubt: we are urging the municipalities to become involved and we have the funds with which to support them.

As with most of the housing issues, the speeding up of planned residential growth is not something which can be laid at the feet of the federal government or solved by the federal government alone. Obviously, such action involves provinces and municipalities. We are urging provinces and municipalities to take every possible step to cut through red tape and bureaucratic procedures which tend to drag out the process of land development and delay the bringing onto the market of serviced lots which are for sale.

Let me remind hon. members, while we are dealing with the question of how we should bring more serviced lots onto the market, that another tool for bringing more houses into production, that is, for the creation of new housing, and for bringing supply more nearly into line with demand is the long standing sewage treatment assistance program with which hon. members are familiar. During 1973 more money than ever before was made available by way of loans and forgiveness under that program. In addition, during this session of parliament I intend to introduce legislation which, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne, will provide assistance for trunk sewers for storm water, in cases where they are used to create new developments. This should assist municipalities in areas of new development and will help to bring more lots on stream. Storm sewers until now have not been included in the program and could be used both to increase the supply of serviced land and as an instrument for planned urban growth.

Third, as an additional means of bringing more land onto the market, we will be introducing very shortly legislation related to railroad relocation. Railroads, as you know, have influenced the patterns of Canadian cities and towns right across this country. One has only to know cities such as Vancouver, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, as well as many other smaller centres, to appreciate the amount of railroad land to be found within our urban centres. Much of that land, because of changes in transportation systems, is underutilized at present. The railroad relocation proposals would mean that much of this vast acreage of railroad land can be brought back onto stream and used for development. Much of it, I hope, can be made available quickly for housing.

Finally, let me speak of another means of bringing more urban land onto the market. I refer hon. members to the neighbourhood improvement proposals and the repair and rehabilitation sections of the National Housing Act which are to come into effect in 1974. Under the leadership of the federal government, the housing act was amended and provided legislative and financial support for those who live in older areas of our cities. The act will be effective in improving those areas in which housing has been deteriorating and going out of inventory, so to speak. As a result of federal support and federal leadership we shall be able to preserve much of that housing as good housing. Most of it will be available for low or moderate income people. That way we shall preserve the use of that urban land for the people of Canada.

These are important measures, designed to get at the heart of the housing cost problem, namely, the cost of serviced lots on the market. They are designed to bring lots onto the market. They are important measures and ought to be used to the full. The government is doing everything it can to persuade provinces and municipalities to use the funds available in order to solve the housing problem and the problem with regard to price.

The next problem to be considered is the one of distribution, that is, who has access to housing and who can get into a house. Never before, Mr. Speaker, have there been so many social instruments available to help people on low and moderate incomes obtain housing. Never before in the history of this country has there been so much help available. One could go back a long way before finding programs, even such as the public housing program, which will match the ones I want to mention.

First, there is the approved assisted home ownership program by which the federal government will subsidize people on low income, not to live in public housing and not to go into rent supplement programs, all of which are good programs, but to actually assist them to buy a house as an alternative to public rental. That program is being widely used across this country. Since the program became law, we have approved such loans to more than 8,000 Canadian families. These total almost $160 million for this program. Applications are continuing to come in at a very high rate which suggests that by the end of this year the benefits of this program can be extended to a total of 18,000 families.

People across the way talk of interest subsidies and the need to help the rich by subsidizing their interest. Surely, to the extent that we can apply public monies to interest subsidization, the most effective and efficient way of doing it is through the assisted home ownership program so that that interest subsidization in fact gets directly to those whose need is the greatest.

Second, Mr. Speaker, addressing this question of distribution, I want to refer to the support we are providing to non-profit and co-operative housing organizations. Traditionally in this country we have built housing either through the private sector in accordance with the profit motive or we have built government housing—constructed and owned by the government. It seems to me there is a place in this country for what, in housing circles, has become known as the third sector. Each of the non-profit and co-operative housing sections of the act are designed to give every possible support by way of start up funds, loans and 10 per cent grants to non-profit and co-operative housing organizations.

I was at a federal provincial conference this morning on non-profit and co-operative housing. I had planned to spend the day there. I had to cut short my attendance in order to listen to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Was it worth it?

Mr. Basford: I will not reflect on whether it was worth it. The hon. member was gracious enough to describe me as charming, so I do not want to disillusion him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: What I said in Toronto this morning at that meeting of non-profit and co-operative housing groups was that in their efforts to build in this country, they have the complete support of the financial and legislative programs of the government of Canada and the minister responsible for housing. In 1974 we are substantially increasing our budget. Thanks to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), there will be about $170 million in loans, and close to $20 million in capital grants, for new projects and co-operative housing projects throughout Canada.

I am amused at the way Conservative members are sort of ridiculing my remarks about non-profit and co-operative housing groups. Within the last week, the Conservative minister from Ontario made a very big fellow of himself by announcing $4 million in support for non-profit and co-operative housing. I very much welcomed that announcement. Members opposite really should not ridicule their Ontario colleague as they appear to be doing.

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We were not laughing at the program that is being implemented. We were merely smiling at the toothpaste system used by the minister. He just squeezes it out.

Mr. Basford: The hon. member should know something about squeezing things out.

Mr. Alexander: Let's keep it clean around here.

Mr. Basford: In addition to non-profit and co-operative loans and that program which has our complete support, we are continuing to fund, along with the provinces, our long standing program of public housing. In 1973, we committed to this program some $177 million. We are constantly improving the public housing program in both its physical and social aspects. It remains for many Canadian families the most suitable response to their particular housing need.

Hon. members opposite say that nothing has been done on this side. By way of conclusion, I just want to list where this government is exercising and has exercised real leadership in the urban affairs area and in housing policy. First, the support which I have just been mentioning for non-profit and co-operative groups is without precedent in this country. I am delighted to see that the provinces are following our leadership in support of non-profit and co-operative housing groups.

We are exercising leadership in the allocation of legislation and all budgets in public intervention in the land business by way of public federal-provincial or federal-municipal land assemblies. The provinces are following that leadership.

The Tory party speaks in its pamphlet about the need for better intergovernmental relationships. We are exercising leadership in the establishment in this country of new methods of tri-level consultative processes to assure that all governments in this country, federal, provincial and municipal, are going in the same direction and addressing the same problems in the same coherent and co-ordinated way.

We are and have been exercising leadership in getting municipal governments involved in land assembly and in the support of non-profit and co-operative groups. I refer these measures to the hon. member for Broadview who criticized us in this area. We have made it very clear that those amendments to the National Housing Act allowing federal support of municipally owned non-profit housing is in fact our policy.

This morning in Toronto I made it clear that we have approved in principle a loan to the city of Toronto. It is one of the first cities to get involved in the program of municipally-owned non-profit housing. We approved that loan in principle for a major rehabilitation project in downtown Toronto. I urged this morning, and I again urge, that the municipalities of this country with provincial approval get involved in municipally-owned non-profit housing corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: We are exercising leadership in convincing the provinces and municipalities of this country that unbalanced and run-away urban growth is compounding the problems that face our cities and towns. We have got to pay attention how we manage growth and the rate of growth. We have got to concentrate on how we give health, strength and growth to smaller centres to take the pressures off the Montreals, Torontos and Vancouvers, how to support those smaller centres and how to go back into the core areas of our major cities to recycle and re-use them. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) spoke of this very subject. We are hard at work learning in this country, taking leadership and showing how we, as a country, must manage growth if we are to solve our urban problems.

We are exercising leadership in the establishment in this country of policies of urban transportation and the development of a national urban transportation development agency. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and I are currently consulting and negotiating with the provinces toward the establishment and introduction into this House of legislation for such an agency.

We are exercising leadership in putting before the country and this parliament meaningful policies for the first time to cause the relocation, re-use and recycling of underutilized railway land.

Through amendments to the National Housing Act, we have exercised leadership in going back into our older areas of our cities through the neighbourhood improvement, rehabilitation and repair provisions of the act and conserving the older areas of many of our cities. The provinces are following this leadership by developing programs of neighbourhood improvement and rehabilitation.

● (1630)

Next, we are exercising leadership in the area of native and rural housing. I am glad my statement the other day on the subject was welcomed by spokesmen representing native housing and Metis housing groups across Canada. I shall be consulting with the provincial governments to ensure that where necessary federal-provincial agreement is reached to enable the policies announced by me to come into effect and be operational in time for the 1974 construction season.

Finally—and I see my time is running short—I should like to comment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Calgary North and by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) who the other day ridiculed my announcement of an urban demonstration project.

Mr. Alexander: Justly so.

Mr. Basford: I can only conclude that hon. members opposite are deliberately misrepresenting my statement. First, this is not a research project, and there was nothing in my statement about any research project. Neither is any such project planned. That is clear. Second, it is not a study. It is a proposal for putting in place improved solutions to urban problems. I am sorry, though in a way politically delighted, that hon. members opposite are so out of step with urban needs that they should be opposed to a proposal of this kind.

Mr. Woolliams: More toothpaste.

Mr. Basford: Well, in the course of his speech the hon. member ridiculed the proposal for recycling garbage. I have read statements of his in the press to the same effect. I can tell him that I hope to have in operation by the end of 1974 in the City of Toronto a demonstration project which will show how to recycle human waste within a building or small community. I am sure this program will prove to be economically feasible. The cost of servicing a lot runs at about $5,000. If we can develop a new way of servicing that lot, as I am confident we can, and cutting out even half of that servicing cost we shall be reducing the price of an urban lot by $2,500. Members opposite are obviously opposed to action of that kind. They are opposed to action which would reduce the price of a lot by $2,500.

What is even more puzzling to me is that the hon. member for Calgary North should ridicule his own party, because in that great statement from the Tory party called "Prepare for the Challenge" we find these words:

> There must be an examination of improved methods of refuse collection and disposal in our large metropolitan areas.

I would have hoped that the official Conservative Party spokesman would at least have read the policy statement of his own party before he rose to speak.

Mr. Woolliams: I happened to write it.

Mr. Basford: He and his supporters are opposed to using funds to develop new ways of transportation. At the same time, their policy statement "Prepare for the Challenge" states:

> The Conservative Party will give high priority to assigning federal financial assistance to the provinces and municipalities for the development and construction of pollution-free rapid transit systems.

Mr. Woolliams: Right on!

Mr. Basford: What, in Heaven's name, is the point of an urban development project if it is not to develop that kind of rapid transit system? Nevertheless, they ridicule it. The hon. member who spoke for the NDP ridiculed the suggestion. At the same time, one group from Thunder Bay, made up mainly of supporters of his party, wants to form a new kind of co-operative which will show us in real terms how to build cheaper housing. But the NDP is against this type of solution, against this type of demonstration.

Mr. Speaker, in moving about this country as minister responsible for urban affairs, I find there is real concern among Canadians who live in the urban areas as to the future of their cities and towns. They have in mind the cities of New York, Detroit, Chicago, Los Angeles, and they are fearful that, unless we are careful, the type of urban development those cities represent will appear in Canada and that we should be forced to accept the noise, the pollution, the crime and the urban decay we see elsewhere. Hon. members across the way appear not to recognize this concern. They are saying in effect that there is no need to seek new solutions, that with a budget running to billions a year we ought not to allocate $100 million to find real solutions to these problems.

What the Tories and the New Democrats are saying, really, is that they want more of the same—more urban noise, more urban pollution, more congestion. They are really saying: Keep on doing the same old things in the same old way. That is the traditional Tory position and it really does not surprise me to hear them expressing it. I must admit, though, I am a little disappointed at the position taken by the NDP which likes to pretend that it is in the forefront of development.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: The applicable word is "pretend", and must be "pretend".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Alexander: On behalf of the spokesman for our party, who made such a brilliant speech that the minister now has to refer to it constantly, as well as to our policy, may I say we are prepared to give the minister three or four minutes more, because he has not said much, anyway. If he would like to close his remarks, we would agree to his continuing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So would we, Mr. Speaker. We hope the minister can say something more substantial if we give him, say, another three minutes.

Mr. Basford: I am grateful to the House for extending this courtesy to me. Anyway, I had almost completed my remarks, except for one further reference to the Conservative Party statement entitled "Prepare for the Challenge".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A very hypothetical document.

Mr. Basford: It is not only hypothetical; the official spokesman over there does not appear to have read it. That statement is, really, a joke. They are preparing for the challenge faced by urban Canada by turning their backs on the Twentieth Century, by turning their backs on real solutions to urban problems. This is why their statement is wholly hypothetical. With that kind of attitude, I am sure they will never be prepared to put that policy into practice.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Public Service—Regional pay differentials—Request for action to correct; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Administration of Justice—Enforcement of maintenance orders issued by family courts—Recommendation of Law Reform Commission.

[Mr. Basford.]

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED NEED FOR CONSIDERATION OF GOVERNMENT'S URBAN AFFAIRS POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Woolliams:

That this House do now consider the record, objectives and programs of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs in light of the urgent needs of urban Canada.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take part in the debate on the opposition motion:

That this House do now consider the record, objectives and programs of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs in light of the urgent needs of urban Canada.

I think we are all aware, Mr. Speaker, of the serious situation which exists in many of our larger cities in connection with the lack of adequate and proper housing. It may seem naive and presumptuous of me, representing a rural riding, to speak on the needs of urban Canada. Two-thirds of all Canadians now live in the cities, and urban growth continues to increase rapidly every day. Our party supports the principle that every Canadian should, as a right, be able to live in suitable accommodation at a reasonable cost.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) announced on Wednesday, March 13, his new $100 million urban demonstration program designed to find solutions to urban problems. This fund is to support urban projects in critical areas. He also stresses new methods of house design and house construction, and new ways of getting the top value from scarce and expensive natural resources. He also mentions improved public transportation. Let me emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that improved public transportation would certainly help housing problems, especially in our two largest cities, Toronto and Montreal. Faster and better train service would enable housing to be built in areas where land is available and not nearly as expensive. In Toronto now, as an example, developers do not bat an eye in asking $35,000 for a small lot.

In theory, and on paper, this program sounds excellent. However, the plan, with its $100 million expenditure over five years, will not build one additional house in Canada. The crying need at the present time and in the foreseeable future is for cheaper land, cheaper houses and, more important, cheaper mortgage money. I believe at the present time it is estimated that only four per cent of the people living in metropolitan Toronto will be able to afford to purchase a home, and only five per cent of the people living elsewhere.

I happen to be one of those rural members of parliament who advocate more housing in the rural parts of Canada to remove the pressure from the large cities. On previous occasions I have pointed out that many people now living in our larger cities, when they come to retirement age, would consider and appreciate moving to smaller towns or other rural areas if housing were available at moderate cost. This would provide existing housing for the many people who work in the cities and, of course, wish to live there as well.

I am aware that there would have to be close co-operation between the municipal and provincial governments, as well as with the federal ministry of housing and urban development. I am well aware of the difficulty of getting available lots in many parts of rural Canada, especially in the province of Ontario, because of strict planning by-laws which make it next to impossible to have lots surveyed and severances approved on existing land within a reasonable period of time, if at all.

I have some doubts what this $100 million fund will accomplish. Governments in the past have had many studies made on housing, and this applies to provincial governments as well. The Dennis report on low income housing in Canada pointed out the many needs, and the Hellyer task force report on housing was also an important document. Provincial studies have been made. It all boils down to one thing: we need more and cheaper housing in all parts of Canada, not in the urban areas alone.

As for new ideas and innovations, we would all welcome some new inventions to enable houses to be built with materials other than bricks, mortar and lumber. Synthetic materials are now even more expensive, and therefore out of the question. I am wondering if some of the "brains trust" could come up with a house made out of—I will qualify it and say wind and water, and heated entirely by the sun. This may very well be possible in the future, but we are talking about housing needs today which must be met with material that is available today.

Despite the new and innovative ideas of architects, both young and old, in planning housing the cost keeps going up every day. I believe it is suggested that the cost of a house in Toronto is now increasing at the staggering rate of $4 an hour. Adding greatly to the cost of houses in many areas is the cost of municipal sewage systems. I appreciate the contributions that the federal government makes to encourage small municipalities to instal sewers, also the fact that the minister is broadening government assistance to include storm sewers and is increasing government grants. I certainly feel that in particular cases of need and high priority as far as pollution is concerned, grants should be as high as 90 per cent to enable the smaller municipalities to instal sewage systems. We know that certain provinces—Ontario, I think, is one of the leaders here—have taken advantage of this money. We are also aware that a certain province, the one to the east, has not taken advantage of the money. As a result it now has some serious pollution problems and should be forced to do something along this line.

One other priority which will greatly help increase the supply of housing is the extension of the Veterans Land Act to enable those veterans who still wish to build or purchase homes to be able to do so without any deadline. If this government expects to survive much longer, I emphasize that a statement to this effect must be made at once, and I suspect it will be made later this week. I am also hoping that the amount of available money for each veteran will be increased to at least $25,000 and that the size of the lots will be reduced to the size of ordinary building lots in cases where everything else is in order.

Our party, when we become the government, will create a new department of urban community and housing affairs which will be directly responsible for shelter. Central Mortgage and Housing will be made directly responsible to this new minister rather than continue as an independent corporation. We will also set up a planning secretariat, as mentioned by our speaker on housing, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). This secretariat will assist the officials of the three levels of government in formulating and putting into effect an imaginative and co-ordinated attack on our housing problems. With this co-operation we will be able to improve regional rapid transit systems, the location of airports, greenbelt park facilities and handle refuse collection in our large cities.

The minister mentioned that we were not interested in this sort of thing, but let me tell him that we certainly are. I am speaking for both sides of the House when I say that all hon. members are very worried and concerned about pollution. A lot of members from rural areas are a damned sight more worried than city members, because a lot of cities are trying to foist their pollution and garbage on those who live in rural areas of Canada. This garbage originated in the cities and should be disposed of there. I compliment the minister on his statement today that plants are being constructed to convert human waste so it can be used for some useful purpose. I guess he sent out an s.o.s. to that effect, to which we can say that "s.o.s." means "same old stuff". I would add another "o.s." and say "only softer". Let us hope something can be done to solve this problem.

A new and more flexible national building code must be developed, taking into consideration the regional differences and disparities. In other words, what is very necessary for the highly built up areas in large cities is not necessarily a must in the rural parts of Canada. Let me emphasize once again that our great problem has to do with the availability of money and the cost of housing. On many occasions I have recommended to the government that the 11 per cent federal sales tax on building materials should be abolished. I might add that previous speakers have made the same suggestion, and it has been made in parliament on numerous occasions. Let us hope that at some time in the near future this will become a reality.

The high cost of borrowing money represents one of the greatest stumbling blocks to new housing. We do not believe high interest rates are an effective way of containing inflation, and there must be lower borrowing costs for the purchasers of homes. We further pledge lower interest rates for all CMHC mortgages in line with the existing ceiling on direct loans now made by corporations to the provinces, municipalities and individuals. We also strongly support federal loans for repair, rehabilitation and improvement of existing housing. These loans should be made available to low income home owners wherever they are located in Canada.

As the head of a municipal council for a great many years, I presented resolutions on numerous occasions to municipal associations proposing that municipal property taxes be deductible from federal income tax for homeowners up to a maximum of $500. This certainly would be no rip-off for the wealthy people. It seems unreasonable to me that a property owner should have to pay tax on tax.

There is also a great deal of merit in the suggestion that at least a portion of mortgage interest rates over 6 per cent should also be deductible from income tax. Our friends in the New Democratic Party have spoken at some length and with a great deal of feeling about the minister's proposed $100 million fund. I am just wondering how that junior partner of this coalition actually feels about this, and what that party will do when the chips are down. Certainly, if anyone has to accept the blame for what this government does or does not do, that junior partner in the lefthand corner of this House should accept at least a share. I will be interested to hear their comments in this regard at a later time. Am I to understand that they now agree with members of this party? I certainly look forward to hearing their comments.

I fully appreciate the time the minister has taken to read the coverage of that very successful and wonderful annual meeting held here in Ottawa last Monday and Tuesday. Unfortunately, he referred to policy papers, when in actual fact they were discussion papers for the 2,700 delegates who took time out in bad weather to attend this annual meeting. One can see the great support there is for this party from one end of the country to the other. I see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is listening with intense interest.

An hon. Member: We are delighted to learn that this was not policy.

Mr. Darling: I was pleased to hear reference by the minister to the land which is available as a result of railway relocations in the cores of towns, villages and cities. I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) will be able to apply some pressure on these railway companies with regard to the disposition of those lands.

Let me refer to one case in a small village in my riding, that famous village of Callander. The railway has abandoned its right of way in this area. The land is a useless strip for which the railway has no more use, and I am sure it acquired that land in the 1800's, just prior to the turn of the century, for something less than the staggering amount now being asked. The municipality of North Himsworth tried to buy that piece of land at a nominal rate. It is a useless strip, but the company is asking $200,000. I suggest that is absolutely ridiculous. The municipality had to settle for two or three small strategic areas, and had to pay a substantial amount for those. The rest of the land is still lying there unused.

Until I took on the full-time job of member of parliament for Parry Sound-Muskoka I was a real estate broker. When talking with one of the property men of the CNR I made a bet of one steak dinner, and perhaps I will end up having to buy it. That individual said he could guarantee me that the company would get a minimum of $175,000 for that strip of useless land. I can certainly tell you that such a price is even more inflated than other land values in the area.

I can see or understand such high prices for abandoned railway property in the centre of a large city such as Toronto, because land in those urban centres is a very expensive commodity. I am sure the railways will be reimbursed on that basis, but surely this is not true of the hundreds of thousands of acres along railway rights-of-way in rural areas. I am certain that our friends to the left in the NDP will agree with us 100 per cent in that regard. When this land is made available, I hope it will be made available for public housing or to municipalities at a nominal rate. I am looking forward with great interest to what my friends in the NDP will have to say in this regard during the debate on this motion.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the federal government places top priority on its responsibilities to urban communities and urban Canadians. It is responding now and will continue to respond to the challenge created for all of us by the conflicting manifestations of urban growth with which we have to deal, and implicit in that response is the need to maintain and improve the quality of the urban environment in our large cities and in our smaller towns and communities.

This responsibility underlies the policy development, research and co-ordination activities of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs, and the housing programs of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That is why last October, at the second national tri-level conference in Edmonton, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) urged the provinces and municipalities to recognize the dangers to Canada of unbalanced, runaway urban growth. The minister suggested then that unbalanced urban growth, and the rate at which it is taking place, is one of the central issues facing all governments. At Edmonton all agreed with very little hesitation on the need for concerted action to respond effectively to urban growth. Implicit in that consensus was the need to respond to this growth in all its regional manifestations. The federal government intends to honour the commitment it made at Edmonton with speed and with effective policies and programs. The urban environment is of first priority for the federal government, and that priority is manifest in a decision taken by the federal Cabinet last summer.

In July, the Cabinet agreed to a proposal by the minister on a federal-regional goal which has two main objectives: First, to achieve a more balanced pattern of cities and towns throughout Canada with increased emphasis on support for improving small and medium size communities and for new communities where needed and, second, to improve the physical and social environment of larger urban centres, particular the core areas, or the inner city. That decision by the Cabinet last summer is one of the most fundamental that has been made by a Canadian cabinet in many years. It will take a few years for that decision to become visible, but in the long run it is going to mean a dramatic diminishing of growth in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver with a parallel increase in growth in smaller centres right across Canada. What this decision means is that federal policies and programs will be massively redirected and reshaped over the coming years to make them more responsive to the needs of an urban nation. And it means that the federal government views "urban" in the broadest possible terms, not solely in terms of Toronto or Vancouver but in terms as well of the smaller communities and their place in the Canadian economy.

This reshaping of policies and programs affects not just the policy development activities of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs or the programs of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The commitment made by the Cabinet implies an urban redirection to the policies and programs of many departments and agencies whose activities affect the lives and future of urban Canadians. It means, further, that increasingly the federal government will join with the provinces and their municipalities to effect beneficial changes in the evolving urban future. We are already making headway in many of these policy and program areas as the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has already indicated. The amended National Housing Act, for example, has a greatly expanded potential to aid smaller communities as well as the larger centres.

The Neighbourhood Improvement Program can and will be applied to helping smaller cities as well as large ones. The Assisted Home Ownership Program has a high degree of flexibility built into it and can provide positive support for smaller cities and towns. The sewage treatment legislation, which will be introduced shortly in the House, will aid small communities as well as the large centres. The problems encountered by small towns where, because of limited population, the cost of installing sewage systems puts a very high per capita burden on the individual taxpayer will be recognized. For these communities and for others, where, because of topography, sewage costs are unusually high, additional assistance will be provided to make the program as equitable as possible across the country. It will supplement similar assistance which the provinces may provide. It will not displace such necessary support.

The national transportation development corporation, which the Minister of State for Urban Affairs proposed on behalf of the federal government at the Edmonton tri-level conference, will provide a national response to meet the cumulative need for public transportation systems and components. Such a national agency will help marshall our resources to the task of meeting current and future urban transportation demands. The proposal for a national transportation development agency was made contingent on provincial interest. That interest has been thoroughly tested in consultations across the country and everywhere a high degree of interest has been shown. The federal initiative in launching this national transportation development corporation will pay off in a number of ways, Mr. Speaker.

First, the corporation will provide a means of responding in a collective way, an integrated way, to the transportation needs of urban communities. It means that we, and not foreign entrepreneurs, will develop the systems and equipment needed to solve our urban transportation problems and not just for the large centres but, equally, for small and medium-sized centres. Second, we will be enabling Canadian companies to meet the needs of our domestic and foreign markets. This will significantly increase job opportunities as we develop export market possibilities. Third, the corporation's activities will develop and spin off new technology which will be of advantage to other Canadian industries. Fourth, it will encourage the regional location of new transportation development and manufacturing establishments.

The domestic market for urban transportation is estimated at $5 billion to 1990. And the opportunity to develop export markets holds out an even greater economic potential. Total world demand for urban transportation system components, Mr. Speaker, are estimated at $500 billion to 1995. A strong, Canadian urban transportation capability, encouraged by this transportation development corporation, will be able to compete in that market and capture some of its benefits. Failure by the federal government to act when it did might have resulted in a degree of foreign control or influence over the development of urban transportation systems in Canada, a low level of domestic transportation development, a Canadian urban environment conditioned to foreign technology, greater regional disparity, increased importing of components and systems, and a loss of employment potential.

Mr. Speaker, the solution to our urban transportation problems will be solved in part by imaginative federal-provincial co-operation. As a result of an imaginative step by the federal government it will be solved in part by the close federal-provincial co-operation which the national urban transportation corporation envisages. This is important because we have found early on that urban problems require co-operation and consultation among governments, not competition. That accounts for the high degree of success which has accompanied the initiative of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, in establishing tri-level action committees in a number of urban communities.

In February, 1973, a tri-level committee was established for the Halifax-Dartmouth area to review plans for regional development, to further regional co-operation and to attack pressing urban problems ranging from core development and transportation to housing and land use control. A tri-level action committee is operating in Quebec City. In Ontario, the first tri-level committee at the provincial level has been developed, while special ad hoc tri-level groups have been formed to deal with regional or local issues such as the federal waterfront park in Toronto and railway relocation at Sault Ste. Marie. Railway relocation and new methods of public transit and land assembly have been studied by the tri-level group functioning since June 1972 in Winnipeg. The Vancouver tri-level committee first met in March, 1973, bringing together the three levels of government to review plans for the proposed expansion of the Vancouver International airport and to discuss a wide range of urban issues related to growth on the lower mainland.

It is through continuing action like tri-level consultation, as well as through new initiatives, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government is responding, and will respond to urban problems and the needs of the urban environment. In respect of the railway relocation legislation which we hope will appear in the House soon, the minister at the Edmonton tri-level conference last autumn in a paper delivered there indicated some of the things we can expect in the legislation. Among other things, we can expect the use of funding in order to relocate railways which run across our towns and cities and to put the land freed from railway use to more optimum use from the point of view of the municipality concerned and also—and this seems to be missed by most people who read about railway relocation—there is a potential for using this proposed legislation for upgrading existing rail lines for rapid transit purposes such as in an area like mine, a southshore constituency opposite Montreal, which is traversed by rail lines which long ago ceased to carry passenger traffic. This proposed legislation has the potential for putting to use tremendously expensive capital facilities which are not now serving the public of Canada as they should. This legislation we are looking forward to—and members generally are extremely interested in the legislation the minister talked about at the tri-level conference last autumn—along with the energy crisis, is one of the emerging urban issues, because energy shortages will have a profound effect on the urban environment.

It is hard for us to even imagine all the effects which a fuel shortage, and all the problems that follow, will have on the way we live in cities. What we are going to see, and what we are already seeing, is a re-thinking of many wishful thoughts we all had about the future, about technological progress, about how our cities are laid out, about how we travel within and outside our own hometowns, and about the dependence we North Americans have built around machines and cars and other fuel gobblers. And, parenthetically, this development, if no other, makes our federal initiative in proposing a national transportation development corporation all that much more important.

On this continent in the past century we have thought of resources as being unlimited and have lauded anything that increased consumption, production and development. The energy crisis has challenged that ethic as has virtually no other happening. The world does not possess infinite supplies of oil and gas. The world has only a certain number of coal deposits and uranium deposits. Some experts look at this process of rethinking as another gift of the Magi. They express a rather masochistic gratitude to the oil producing countries for forcing the world to it. Rising costs of fuel, whether based on political whim or real problems in finding sources, are making some previously economically unviable sources—in Canada the obvious example being the Athabasca oil sands—feasible prospects. But whether we pay more for the already available fossil fuels or for bringing into production known reserves, the fact is we will pay more to fuel our urban system.

How should we deal with these rising costs? First, we can manipulate supply, which is the traditional approach. We can continue to search out alternate sources of conventional energy sources, or we can begin to make wider use of alternate energy sources, such as nuclear power, solar power, and so on. Second, we can manipulate demand. That is, we can force policies of conservation of energy. We can learn to change our habits and our life style.

The phenomenon of oil shortages had a pocket book impact. So, naturally, we are reacting fast. We are involved in, we read about, we take heed of advice on saving oil, inspecting the installation in our homes, putting radial tires on our cars, and staying home on Sundays. These small acts may already be having an impact on the urban environment. Already, in the city of Ottawa, the cost of gas has contributed to changes in traffic patterns and to increased use of public transit—moves that were long needed. I think the energy crisis was the final blow to many motorists and the best of all added attractions to public transit.

In the last week or two, the government announced certain measures which would help to contribute to a solution of these energy problems that are facing our cities. The minister has alluded to them at some length in his remarks. But I feel that this reference to the official reaction of the opposition bears repeating, and I intend to repeat it not only here but elsewhere. This $100 million program which was a program not for research or for studies as opposition members have tried to make the public believe but for $100 million worth of practical projects in cities, small and large, across Canada—proposes innovation, new methods of solving problems such as ways of recycling sewage and garbage, disposal of garbage so as to produce heat for either small towns or city cores, new modes of urban living, new attacks on public transportation problems, and this is what official spokesman of the Official Opposition said:

> . . . the government is setting up a bluff of $100 million. It is a joke.

Mr. Alexander: I support that statement.

Mr. Watson: It is to be expected that the Official Opposition would be opposed to innovation and new ideas. While that was to be expected, the amazing thing about that particular announcement was the reaction of the NDP. This is what the official spokesman of the NDP said:

> I suggest in all seriousness that all this program is going to mean is $100 million down the drain . . .

When these practical projects are put into effect across Canada, it will be a pleasure for me to remind some of the recipients of what the two major opposition parties in the house said about one of the most imaginative and innovative programs that this government has announced in a long time.

Mr. Alexander: Let us build houses now.

Mr. Watson: If we are going to set about conserving energy, we can have an immediate effect on the character of Canadian cities, and the principal change will be made in public transportation. In the United States, transportation consumes about one quarter of the total energy budget of the country. More than 95 per cent of that fuel comes from petroleum. Here in Canada, 44 per cent of all petroleum products used go into transportation, and one half of that in urban areas.

It is not too far out to predict that the energy crisis will change and accelerate that change in what the experts call "urban form". It will change what the city looks like and how it is laid out. The response to the fuel situation and the need to look at means of conserving fuel over the long term will take the form of innovative urban experiments with both technology and behaviour, hardware and software, if you like. This is part of what this $100 million program is all about. We already hear of experiments with district heating in which whole blocks of homes are heated by a central plant. We hear of the possibility of whole cities with a thermostat—climate controlled environments. I do not know whether we can do that with the $100 million program. In any event, there will be a number of practical innovative projects that will benefit Canadians from coast to coast in this venture which the minister announced to opposition laments two weeks ago.

In Canada, money has been set aside by the federal government through CMHC for provincial and municipal assembly of land for new communities, the ideal locales for some of these experiments in energy conservation and recycling. I should like to speak for a moment on the question of land assembly and the federal programs designed to deal with that matter. Let me say that since 1954 the federal government has had on its books legislation which permits federal-provincial partnerships in the ownership of land for land banking purposes, 75 per cent federal, 25 per cent provincial. Since the early '60's we have had an additional option on our books which provides for 90 per cent of the money for the cost of land assembly to be lent to a province or municipality by the federal government. These provisions, which were taken up to some extent in the 1950's, such as the Malvern project which dates back to almost 1954, is a good example of what could have been done, the potential that was there. This must be one of the major tragedies of postwar Canada—the legislation and the money were there and yet the provinces, and Ontario in particular, did not take advantage of them.

When I hear the Conservative members from Ontario, and from the Toronto area in particular, talking about what is lacking in federal housing policies, I think that if ever there was a national scandal it was the deliberate decision by the Ontario Conservative government that it would leave to private developers the development of land around Toronto, with the result that we have in the Toronto area the highest land costs in North America. This is a direct result of the lack of usage by the Ontario provincial Conservative government of legislation which has been on the federal statute books since the early 1950's.

I am surprised that the Tory opposition would even dare to propose that a day be set aside for discussion of urban problems when their party has been so deficient, not only in advancing its own policy federally but as well in the principal province where the problem occurs, and where events have shown them to be so dramatically wrong. The solution lies in the public assembly of land around Toronto for new cities, something which is provided for in our legislation. It lies in land banks. Unless this is done in much greater measure than is the case now, then not only the population of Toronto but the population of Ontario as a whole, as well as the taxpayers of Canada, will suffer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to participate for a few moments in a debate on what I think is one of the most important questions facing governments at all levels, a question that has faced the federal government since it assumed office in 1963. This is a debate that concerns the actions, or really the lack of actions, attributed to the federal government since it first assumed office when there was time to undo, or at least to remedy some of the situations that any vigilant government—if you are to believe its own propaganda—ought to have seen developing. It is a matter of some profound regret to me, representing an area which is largely urban, that the situation in urban Canada has been allowed to deteriorate to the extent that even this government, which as a result of its dinosaur attitude faces extinction, finally decided in 1973 that there was a problem and something ought to be done about it.

We have just had an interesting two or three weeks in this House. Last week we had the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) say that the farmer was in a bind. We had the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) make his public confession of failure. We had the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) indicate that the government has wasted millions of dollars on a computer program that is just about as unco-ordinated as the government's housing program. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) has done nothing but issue press releases about the programs which he intends to institute at some future time. Each time the cost of living index comes out the focus is turned on the failures of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Now we have the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), who deals with something that is just as fundamental to the development and well being of our citizens as food, and we have his record and his litany of failure with respect to housing.

It is easy to make partisan comments about the question of housing, but we have to remember the parameters within which this debate is taking place. Housing for Canadians, indeed housing for all people is a primary social, economic and physical need. It is unfortunate that we have to say these things but in Canada that need in terms of government, indeed in terms of governments in the plural sense, has been a matter of secondary consideration, at least until the federal government had its deathbed conversion in 1973. There is in fact a persistent shortage of housing across Canada in terms of the available number of units, and the shortage is growing. There is a tremendous shortage in terms of choice of housing for Canadians.

It is fair to say that sophisticated studies are not necessary to learn that there are still thousands and thousands of Canadians who are ill housed, and this includes the native peoples. It also includes the people in our cities, people in our towns, and some people in rural areas. It is axiomatic that if the government is entitled to credit for its achievements, if there are achievements, then it is also entitled to and should be condemned for its failures, and in respect of housing its policy over the years has been a monument to failure.

A few days ago the minister launched another study. His parliamentary secretary has taken great pains to say that it is not a study.

Mr. Watson: There is not one mention of study in it.

Mr. Baker: I quote now from Hansard at page 453 where the minister said on March 13:

> This demonstration program is designed to foster projects that will find solutions to urban problems and demonstrate those solutions for adoption and implementation in all regions of Canada.

Mr. Watson: Not one word about study.

Mr. Baker: The difference between this study and the conventional study is that in the conventional study the result comes out on a piece of paper, having been written by those who make the study, but in this particular study program the result will be in bricks and mortar, perhaps on an experimental basis, and perhaps with mistakes. If you read the minister's statement you see it is a study leading to an event that culminates in a structure in the minister's riding called Habitat 2000. A rose by any other name is still a rose. This is a study.

It was roundly condemned by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Normally, I do not agree with the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby but I must concede that his description of it was correct. He stated, as recorded at page 454 of Hansard:

> The minister said he wants this conference to be known as Habitat 2000. I suggest in all seriousness that all this program is going to mean is $100 million down the drain, of no help to people in meeting housing requirements in Canada.

That is a fairly true, fairly sound assessment of this program in the first instance. If I needed any reinforcement as to the soundness of that assessment and the truth of that assessment, it was to be found in the reaction by the parliamentary secretary to the minister a few seconds ago, he being thrust into this debate to defend the indefensible.

A little further on the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby stated:

> —most of the studies that have been done have led to total inaction.

He was commenting on studies done by the department of Urban Affairs. There have been hundreds of studies undertaken by the government. Now, we have a housing situation which is supposed to respond to the clarion call given by the minister a few minutes ago. He talked about support for municipal projects, and for non-profit and co-operative groups. Why did he wait until 1973 suddenly to think of that? Does he give any forecast as to the extent of this program, how it is going to be received, and the number of units that are planned for development under it?

The minister talked about leadership in legislation and an increase in budgets. Has he indicated to the country the effects of inflation on the efficacy of those budgets? He talked about better intergovernmental relationships, and said the government was providing leadership in that field. But what do we have in this region, Mr. Speaker, close to the area which I represent? We will have them developing the so-called southeast city, the city which would be established in the township of Gloucester according to the election promise in 1972. That idea put forward by the minister and the department is not acceptable to the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton or to the township of Gloucester. The very purpose of the concept is questionable. If that is an example of this government's leadership in intergovernmental affairs, I say it is a fraud.

The minister has provided no leadership with respect to housing. Lacking forecasts—yet being abundant with words, the minister has perpetrated a fraud on the Canadian people. Canadians have looked to the government for housing in this country. I will never forget my conversation with a young couple in an apartment building which was never meant to accommodate young families with children. In my election campaign I discovered that many people like them lived in such high-rise apartments. I will never forget what that young person said to me in Parkwood Hills. He said, "Mr. Baker, I am imprisoned in this place." He wanted to get out. He was saving money. Because the government failed to act in the field of housing, and because what it did made his dollar less valuable, he could not afford a house and found himself imprisoned. Some, of course, want to live in a high-rise and I respect their choice. But what of those who do not? What are they to do as the choices become ever more limited for more and more people? That this should be so stands as a monument to the failure of this government.

Mr. Basford: Apparently the hon. member opposes giving them a choice.

Mr. Baker: Not at all. I want them to have a choice. In his speech on this motion the minister tried to defend the policies of this government. I want him to remember the young man of whom I spoke. Oh, yes, there are task forces, studies, commissions, and so on. But they will not solve the housing needs of that person. They will not answer the housing needs of the native people of this country. They will not answer the difficulties of people on lower incomes who want houses. They will not meet the needs of our senior citizens.

The time for words such as those the minister spoke this afternoon has long passed. For ten years this problem has been growing. The government has been warned, but has done nothing. For that it stands condemned. The problem has been apparent for all to see: there is the rub. I emphasize in the strongest way I can that the government ought to be roundly condemned for perpetrating against Canadians what I can only charitably characterize as a fraud.

The government has embarked upon another $100 million study or demonstration program. Let me put some figures on the record with respect to the national capital area, the area touted by the minister as a model for communities in Canada, not merely in terms of bricks and mortar but, I hope, in terms of quality of life as well as availability and choice of housing.

It is interesting to note that the average price of housing sold in Ontario rose by 26 per cent between 1970 and 1973. The price of the average Ottawa house lot rose from $5,000 in 1965 to $12,500 in 1972. The price of the average house and lot went up from $25,100 to $39,000 in the same period. The Ottawa Housing Authority, which has been involved in low-rent and limited dividend housing since 1962, has been running into increasing difficulties in every area of its operations in this period. The waiting lists for families and senior citizens' accommodation have grown to appalling proportions.

As of December 31, 1973, 2,089 senior citizens and 1,541 families were on the Ottawa Housing Authority waiting lists. Under construction at that time were 1,643 senior citizens' units and 380 family units. With the need growing, that construction does not even begin to keep up with requirements. Without doubt, the lack of serviced lots is driving up the price of house lots and is a factor in housing costs. There is also no doubt that the situation is becoming more serious. Current housing programs at the federal and provincial levels are not integrated. If the government assures us that it is showing leadership in the field of housing, then the blame for its failure to integrate housing programs must be laid at its doorstep.

Members of the NDP sometimes suggest that reducing the mortgage interest rates would provide the answer and would make available more houses for the people of Canada. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) suggested something like this in his remarks this afternoon. With all respect, I do not think his position is correct. House prices have been forced upward primarily as a result of demand. If interest rates were lower, demand would not decrease, neither would price. I suggest that price would actually continue to increase. At first blush, it might appear that the hon. member is right; however, having given the matter much thought I do not think the NDP suggestion would reach the root of the problem, which is how to satisfy demand. Surely leadership in this field must come from the federal government, which must co-operate with provincial governments in solving the existing housing crisis. We require more co-operation.

What is the government doing? Every now and then we hear of a housing conference between federal and provincial governments. In his speech the minister said he had spoken in Toronto earlier today. He meant to imply, no doubt, that he had delivered one of his epistles inscribed on tablets of stone. I suspect the conference was improved once he left it because the question could then be discussed realistically with those in the field. There is no ongoing consultation between the federal and provincial governments. Such consultation is so necessary if we are to meet the housing needs of this country.

The minister talked about the federal home ownership assistance plan. On paper it is a good plan and the idea is good on paper. The trouble is this: it is not working effectively, particularly in the large metropolitan areas where assisted home ownership is needed. CMHC mortgage loans under this program are not forthcoming in most cities. This is the result, primarily, of the distortion in house prices. That is unfortunate as this is basically a good plan.

For example, in Chicoutimi, where the average home sells for $22,000, 204 loans were approved by the end of 1973. In Toronto, on the other hand, where the average house price is $45,000, only 27 loans were approved in the same period. In Ottawa, 40 loans were approved for the eastern Ontario region, but only 20 of those were for metropolitan Ottawa. Montreal is the exception in Canada. Housing costs there are not so high. In that city, 1,927 loans were made. The difficulty is this: in those areas where the home ownership assistance plan is important and needed, the plan is not working. The minister should face this.

I think the real monument, or perhaps tombstone of the minister is what has happened to the consumer price index with regard to housing. In October, 1972, it stood at 145.3; in February, 1974, it stood at 159.4—an increase of 9.7 per cent. That is higher than the over-all index for all commodities and services in Canada. The figures are devastating. In St. John's, for example, there has been an increase of 8.6 per cent. That area suffers from unemployment as well. In Ottawa there has been a 7.3 per cent increase in that period of time. In Vancouver the increase has been 6.3 per cent, and in Halifax 8.7 per cent.

Those figures are really the minister's tombstone. They are the best indicator of the failure of this minister's policy. It is not all the fault of the minister because he has had some assistance in this failure. It is really the failure of the government to fight inflation and deal adequately and in a straightforward manner with this basic and fundamental problem. The housing cost figures are alarming.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret I must interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, some remarks could be made before six o'clock in relation to the debate that is taking place, but before doing so and with Your Honour's permission I wish to read into the record some statements and reveal their source. They were made by a political figure. He is quoted as saying:

"What we are trying to do is expand supply; it is the old-fashioned market philosophy—if you increase supply, the price will come down and stabilize."

In relation to housing, he is also quoted as saying:

—war against speculation is twofold: public wariness, and private negotiations. In public he is giving notice that the government is going to attempt to "depress and even roll back prices," and in private he is negotiating with what he calls "the other two points in the triangle—the municipalities and the private sector."

Another quotation of interest is the announcement of a housing action program as follows:

—to increase the supply of housing available, naming areas, target dates and housing prices. The theory is that this increase in supply will depress the cost of housing . . .

"A lot of this speculative boom is psychology," Mr. Handleman said. "People say you can't lose by buying land—and they've been right. What we would like to do is at least start throwing out the idea among the people who are speculating—'Hey, maybe this guy is going to put an end to this; we better start by being careful.'

". . . And when the first guy says, 'No, I think I'll put my money into stocks and bonds instead of buying land and that is mutliplied several times, the market forces will begin to work. As word gets around, you can break the psychological circle, or start to, by just warning people."

These remarks were made by a person who today fills the position of minister of housing for the province of Ontario. They were published in today's Globe and Mail. An innocent bystander in the galleries today who had been listening to this debate until now would wonder what on earth is going on in this country and who is responsible for what. In this statement the Ontario minister of housing admits responsibility for the provision of housing in that province. This has not been put forward in one speech by the proposers of this motion, including the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) does not misquote me. I referred to the federal responsibility within the terms and conditions of the constitution. I thought the hon. member would understand the constitution. There is some provincial jurisdiction and some federal jurisdiction. I am always fair with the hon. member and the minister. I hope he will be as fair with me as I am with him.

Mr. Caccia: Just this afternoon the hon. member for Calgary North accused the federal government of hiding behind the constitution. How can he make the statement he just made, having said only three hours ago that the federal government is hiding behind the constitution? He knows very well that one of the basic reasons houses are so costly is the high cost of serviced land. Whose responsibility is that, if not the provinces'? Who is hiding behind what? Obviously there is a very important responsibility that has to be discharged by provincial governments. If it is not discharged, that is not the place to raise it and accuse the federal government of shortcomings.

A copy of the speech of the hon. member for Calgary North ought to be delivered to the Premier of Ontario: he is the person who at federal-provincial conferences in Ottawa publicly states that housing is definitely a jurisdiction for the province to preserve and protect. How can you have it both ways? Can you blame the federal government for not providing serviced land in the Toronto area, and at the same time deny the Premier of Ontario the right under the constitution to do that very job? Obviously not.

There is a lot of inconsistency of logic on the part of the Tories, particularly by the hon. member for Calgary North, whether he likes it or not. We admit that we have a responsibility in the other component in the cost of housing, namely, the cost of mortgages. For those who cannot afford it, the federal government should and is doing something about subsidizing mortgages. Under the assisted home ownership program the federal government has made a very significant step toward providing assistance to low income families, probably newly formed families, to recover a portion of the cost of mortgages.

It is becoming quite clear that the value of these programs is limited to the two areas where the cost of land and the cost of mortgages is still relatively low compared to other parts of the country. It is going to benefit small towns and certain rural areas. That is fine. However, we agree with those who say it is desirable for the federal government to introduce a plan of financing mortgages on a national basis and on a proper scale. This would permit for a limited number of years, perhaps ten, newly formed families to acquire their first house for the children and have a portion of the mortgage subsidized. This would, of course, require substantial expenditure. That is an important factor in such a policy. However, to come here and say, as did the hon. member for Calgary North, that prices in metro Toronto are high because of the federal government's housing policy is not knowing what one is talking about.

● (1750)

If we do face a tight situation in Ontario, particularly in metropolitan Toronto, it is because the level of government charged with responsibility for providing serviced land has failed to take the necessary action. During the last 20 years it has failed to take advantage of the land bank provisions which have existed in federal statutes since 1954. At that time, loans are subsidized to the tune of 75 per cent. Later, the subsidy was increased to something like 90 per cent. But it is only very recently that Ontario has shown an interest in this legislation.

Mr. Woolliams: That is just one province.

Mr. Caccia: I do not know about other provinces. Perhaps the province from which the hon. member comes has done the same thing. It is another Tory province. The Tories, in their hunger for power, are saying one thing from one corner of their mouths and the opposite from the other corner. They are criticizing the government because of the effect of inflation on poor people in particular. Yet they are, by tradition, the chief proponents of private enterprise and in that capacity they are the first to protect the interests of the lending agencies, the trust companies and the banks. These are the people who would encourage the operations of the land speculators. It is they who quote in this House figures given by the Urban Development Institute. It is the hon. member for Calgary North and his hon. friend from Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) who speak in support of the Urban Development Institute. These are the proponents of the big interest groups. They now have the nerve to condemn the government and accuse it of causing inflation, when inflation is really caused by speculators behind the scenes.

A debate like this does, of course, tend to deteriorate when it becomes political. I am afraid I have been tempted into following the pattern set by the hon. member for Calgary North who, instead of trying to throw some light on the subject, slipped along the road of political expediency and ended by shedding as much light on this subject as a blind glow-worm attempting to find his way home in a one-way lane in Toronto. The hon. member for Calgary North is a master at confusing himself, confusing his colleagues and sometimes confusing even the press. He was at his best this afternoon.

Seriously, though, when we look at the question of housing we realize that once the political speeches have been made and the political dust has settled, we are confronted by an extremely complex problem. It is one which requires—

Mr. Blenkarn: A good government; a government which cares.

Mr. Caccia: I am glad to see this is beginning to hurt and that some response is forthcoming from over there. Its solution requires the co-operation of three levels of government, each of which is jealous of its independence. Second, housing is needed where there are jobs. Houses provided in areas where there are no jobs are likely to remain empty. Thus, a housing policy is, of necessity, related to job location.

In an economy such as ours, generated chiefly by the large cities, more and more jobs are created in the principal urban centres. Effectively, the time comes when we run out of land in these urban centres and the question then arises: What do you do when you run out of a commodity which you cannot replace? Is the answer to increase the urban sprawl until, beginning in Ontario, it ends at the North Pole? The opposition tells us that cities should be contained within certain limits; that urban sprawl should not be encouraged.

The solution appears to lie in creating jobs in areas where the cost of land is still reasonably low and to which people should be encouraged to move in the expectation of finding employment. At this point, policy becomes the concern of the government at the federal level. I frankly recognize this. If we believe that every Canadian family should own a house, the answer might well lie in the policies put forward by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson): this is the department which is trying to create new jobs in less populated areas, thus relieving the enormous pressure on the larger centres.

If what I am saying is acceptable as a theory, another important role has to be played by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In addition, there is a role to be played by the Department of Finance in providing certain specific incentives. To expect that the supply of houses can be increased today by the tens of thousands in areas where appropriate land no longer exists is, in my opinion, to entertain hopes which are altogether unrealisitic, unless hon. members are prepared to argue in favour of a policy of building high-rise apartments, a policy of replacing neighbourhood low-rise with high-rise structures—a policy which every sociologist has criticized as being inadequate.

Another important question is whether our policies are adequate in terms of providing housing for people with low incomes. We have been fairly successful in developing a variety of programs which meet the needs of middle income Canadians, but it is becoming clear now that the opportunities open to low income Canadians are rapidly diminishing. Housing and jobs go together. This is a subject not only for debate within the political arena; it is one which calls for creative thinking and the provision of practical alternatives, in the absence of which we shall still be debating housing when we are grandparents and great-grandparents, with extremely limited results.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—I am sorry he is not here this evening—thought he was going to shed some light on the housing problem facing those of us who live in urban areas, and in particular the urban area known as metropolitan Toronto and its environs. Sir, he did not shed any light at all. He attempted to make an apology for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) by suggesting that the minister was not responsible for doing anything about housing, that really it was a matter for the provinces. I think all members of the House would agree that it is a matter of joint responsibility of the municipal, provincial and federal authorities, but that a great portion of that responsibility rests with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in this parliament.

On March 13 last the minister stood in this House and made a great pronouncement. He said he was going to enter into another demonstration program. Almost like one of the famous streakers, he came forward with a new program of which he was so proud. He was going to demonstrate to all in Canada the kind of new, innovative housing that was possible today. He said that this demonstration would culminate in the creation of Habitat 2000.

The minister then sat down, and from every corner of this House opposition spokesmen said what they thought about this minister and his program, and the minister slumped further and further into his seat. This is the minister who really is responsible for nothing except sound and fury. What he says really signifies nothing. He is like Nero playing the fiddle. He is the kind of fellow who really has nothing to offer other than famous words and slogans.

Last year the minister introduced AHOP and NIP. Last week he brought to us MIC. What have they produced for the people of Canada? A great big zip. The minister of housing should be called the minister of zip, for that is what he is. This minister fiddles while the price of houses climbs and climbs and climbs. A year ago, less than 5 per cent of the people of this country could afford to buy a new, single family dwelling. Today the percentage is much less than that. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), speaking in Ontario this weekend, said that a person had to earn $23,000 to qualify for a new home in Toronto. Pretty soon only the very wealthy will qualify for a home in this country. Members of parliament cannot qualify for a new home in metropolitan Toronto even on their salary, and we are supposed to be so well paid, the leaders of the country.

We told the minister last year that there was a shortage of serviced land. We pleading with him all last session and asked him to put some money into serviced centres, transportation, water mains and sewers. We asked him to lend municipalities money, to make grants to them. But what did he do? He land banked for tomorrow. That is the kind of minister he is. "Old tomorrow", they call him.

An hon. Member: What about the national dream?

Mr. Blenkarn: I will be coming to that. A year ago when I spoke in this House about housing costs, the price of lots in my riding was $20,000. They are now up to $42,500. All the minister has done is land bank. What has he done to curb speculation in housing? The reason he has done nothing is that he and his government are responsible for the highest inflation this country has ever seen. The proof of the pudding is in the fact that this government went to the people of Canada last week with a bond issue. The bond market in this country said, "Keep your bonds. We don't believe in your paper money. We don't believe in investing in bonds because we know that if we do, they will buy us nothing when we get our money back". The people of this country are looking for something more solid to put their money in.

Since this government does not care about inflation, Canadians are running out and buying real estate because at least real estate is bricks, mortar, land—something of value. The government does not care. It says, "Protect yourselves. We cannot do anything about it; inflation is a worldwide problem". People are realizing that this government does not care and they are buying real estate in order to protect their savings. So what we have now is the sort of situation that exists in my constituency, where a house which sold for $23,900 four or five years ago sold only last week for $59,500. When the house was first sold at $23,900 it bore a first mortgage of somewhere around $16,000. In the resale the new mortgage will be $40,000. The mortgage company that put up the mortgage money is a company supervised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) through the Department of Insurance.

This mortgage company is making loans to enable inflation to continue. The government is pumping money into the economy in drunken fashion so as to enable speculation in real estate to continue and roll over and over. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs does not know anything about that at all, because he does not understand that housing is purchased and sold on a low down-payment basis with huge leverage factors.

When asked what he is going to do about this problem, the minister just shrugs his shoulders and talks about land banking, AHOP, NIP and MIC. What have the minister and this government really accomplished for the people of Canada? I suggest they have accomplished nothing at all. Instead of getting down to the needs of the people and doing something about controlling financing which enables speculators to make such excessive profits, this government does nothing whatsoever.

I was in Calgary last Saturday, sitting in a coffee shop at two o'clock in the morning waiting for a flight. I met a constituent who informed me that he had purchased a house for $35,000 in March of last year and was now moving to Montreal and had sold the house last week for $54,000. That is an increase of only $20,000! He was not happy about it because he has a son who married recently and is going to buy a house. This is the kind of speculation in financing allowed by this government. This government lacks any planning in respect of control over the money supply. This is the kind of response we get from that minister across the aisle. I suggest he does not care.

Ministers over there continue to tell us that they can do nothing about inflation because it is an international problem. I suggest they cannot do anything about it because they do not want to do anything about it. At the present rate of inflation, particularly in respect of housing, it will not be very long before only the very wealthy will be able to afford accommodation, and perhaps even they will require subsidization. What hope is there in that situation?

[Mr. Blenkarn.]

The number of housing units being built for those of deprived circumstances in our economy, including people on old age assistance, on welfare and on widows' allowances, is far less than we require. The hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton, speaking earlier today, indicated that the number of people who line up for social assistance in respect of housing is continually growing. At one time those entitled to assistance in housing could earn only a maximum of $4,000 to $5,000 a year. That maximum has now increased to $7,000 or $8,000, and I suggest that soon you will be able to qualify for social assistance in housing with a salary of $12,000. And that will eventually increase to $15,000 or $18,000, the way price structures have been rolling over and over. This government has an obligation to step in and make sure that we no longer allow increases in profits on housing to the point where homes will soon be unobtainable to all citizens.

One of the greatest problems in the housing situation can be directly related to our presently accepted methods of financing and the leverage involved. Traditionally, houses were sold with a 10 per cent or 15 per cent down payment and the balance was paid through mortgage financing. Under the present system, mortgage companies and lending institutions will lend 75 per cent of the sale price. If a house is worth $20 a square foot, a house with 1,000 square feet is worth $20,000 to build. When such a house sells for $60,000 one can only assume that the remainder represents the cost of the land. We wind up with 75 per cent financing on the total package. This leads to financing speculation on the land. The minister should realize this, and it is about time he got down to brass tacks and did something about it. I suggest we are getting no leadership from this minister, with his AHOP, NIP and MIC.

This government could not only do something about the cost of financing; it could do something about the housing shortage. The major difficulties in metropolitan areas have resulted from an acute lack of serviced land. It is all very well for the minister to say that this is the responsibility of the provinces, but with the taxing system in this country the federal authority has the taxing power and the ability to do something in this regard.

With the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, this government has an obligation to plow back at least that money into the cost of servicing land. Every brick that is laid in my municipality carries an 11 per cent tax, but the city of Mississauga does not get a dime of that back in terms of assistance toward the cost of building roads, commuter lines, water mains, parks and recreational centres to serve the people who come there. The people in my municipality throw up their hands when talking to the Ontario minister of housing. When questioned, Mr. Handleman always asks where the province is going to get the money for services. We all know that the province cannot print the money, like these fellows opposite us. The province must get its money legitimately.

The federal minsiter keeps telling us housing is a provincial responsibility. That is a wonderful way to duck his responsibility, which is to make it possible in areas of the country where growth is taking place to have on hand a surplus of serviced land. This could be achieved through the enormous revenues this government is obtaining from the building tax; and the people who pay the building tax are in areas where the growth is taking place. I suggest that the minister could do one of two things. He could abolish the building tax and thereby reduce the cost of construction, or he could use the tax to offset the cost of servicing the land. The minister has not considered these possibilities. He thinks in terms of Habitat 2000. He thinks in terms of Habitat in Montreal, which is a marvellous demonstration of building where the wealthy can live in the downtown area. Let us have a Habitat for the ordinary guy who is trying to raise a family. Let us have a place where the ordinary man can buy a lot and build a house. I suggest the only way that can be done is by making money available for servicing land.

The minister's parliamentary secretary spoke about land banking and blamed the province of Ontario for not accepting assistance in this field. I would ask him what he proposes to do. Does he intend to go to the McLaughlin and Cadillac corporations and ask them to buy up the land, allowing them tremendous profits; or is he prepared to adopt a policy of servicing this land with the use of funds such as those created by the building tax in order that developers will not be able to speculate but will have to develop these areas in a legitimate way?

Is the minister prepared to step in and stop the speculation on vacant land? These speculators are not just the big fellows. Is he prepared to step in and say that they will be taxed to the ears for taking advantage of the ordinary citizen? I suggest he is not prepared to make a move like that. All he is prepared to do is talk about AHOP, NIP and MIC. He does not have anything new to offer. His whole concept in housing was out of date ages ago. The minister tours the countryside attending housing conferences. He has studies made and he initiates building projects through Central Mortgage and Housing. But he does not do a thing to assist the ordinary guy in his responsibility to look after his wife and kids.

A year and a half ago I knocked on many doors in apartment buildings that were not designed for people with children. Unfortunately, the children had to learn to ride their tricycles in the corridors. What has happened since then? The rent for those apartments has gone up, not $10 a month or $20 a month but in some cases $50 and $60 a month. At that time there was a vacancy rate of about 2 per cent or 3 per cent, but now it is less than 1 per cent. People are being forced to pay outrageous prices which they cannot afford, because of great speculation in housing.

It is up to the government to do something about this speculation, and not just wash its hands and say it cannot do anything about it because it is an international problem. How did housing ever become an international problem? Do we live in some far away island, in the United States, in Germany or in France? No, we live in Canada and there is enough land for all Canadians. There is more land for each person in Canada than there is in almost any country in the world. It is disgraceful for this government to say there is no place for a young family to plant its seed and grow simply because there is no serviced land with transportation arteries, water, sewage and the like.

To say it is necessary to bank land in order to put it away for some time in the future is a disgrace. The problem is right now. Young families are growing up, and they cannot afford houses. It is up to the government to do something about this problem. The government should use its funding, its taxation and resource abilities and step in and get on with it, instead of demonstrating. We have had enough demonstrating, new ideas and innovative thought. The people of my riding, and I am sure the people of all ridings of this House, want housing; they want four walls and a good roof to keep them warm in the wintertime. They want a place where they can live with their children. They want a backyard.

They do not want to hear about demonstrations and Habitat 2000, international conferences or the sending of $100 million down the drain in respect of demonstration Habitats 2000. They are not interested in these things. They are interested in the ordinary things they are entitled to have. They are entitled to have a piece of Canada, a place to plant their seed and raise their children. That is financially possible, it is economically possible and it is the responsibility of this government to produce.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I must say I have been rather discouraged by the empty, silly rhetoric coming from the other side, the party which introduced the motion today. I have not yet heard one constructive suggestion. They seem determined to badger the minister and they use every possible initiative in doing so. They really are not interested in setting out policies to deal with a very serious problem. They are just interested in scoring political points. I think that is disgusting in respect of a serious problem. They confuse the whole issue.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) seeks the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would hope the hon. member would be fair. I certainly made five or six specific suggestions in respect of our program. I do not know whether the hon. member was in the House, but the kind of nonsense he is peddling is an attempt to get propaganda. We do not have to take it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All hon. members are entitled to make speeches, including the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson).

Mr. Danson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I sat through the whole of the hon. member's speech and do not recall hearing any constructive suggestions; but perhaps my memory fails me. I think we have a serious problem in respect of inflation. No one denies that. However, I wish we could separate the two problems. They are interrelated, but I do not think we are discussing inflation now. The fact of the matter is that year after year since I have been a member of this House, every previous prediction with regard to the number of housing starts has been exceeded.

I stood on platforms in the election of 1968 and said that if we did not have at least 200,000 housing starts per year I would not stand on an election platform for our party again. I knew we would meet this commitment. We not only met it but exceeded it. Last year there were 269,000 housing starts. Qualitatively, and quantitatively we are the best housed people in the world. This has not been accidental. I do not say it is good enough. We should be the best housed people in the world and should be doing better. However, I do not think there is anything to justify the type of comments which have been made.

When I talk about 269,000 housing starts, this was in a year when the net family formations were 130,000. So the net family formations have virtually matched the number of single family dwelling starts in Canada last year. I think that is a record. I am sorry I do not see my friend the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) here, because he picked out the ludicrous statistic about houses in the year 2000 costing $200,000. This type of thing does not get to the root of the problem. Of course there are major problems. There are major population movements which themselves involve problems. Although many of us are aware of this, the comments which appear in the paper on public consultation on population questions of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs bears repeating:

> The proportion of urban population constituted 76.1 per cent of the total population in 1971. The corresponding figures for 1966 and 1961 were 72.6 and 69.6 per cent respectively. The majority of urban population live in urban centres with population over 100,000. The high concentration of population in big urban centres reflects the great transition from an agrarian, to an industrial, and now to a service-oriented economy with the dominance of commercial, professional and industrial activities. With the exception of Nova Scotia, all the provinces registered an increase in the proportion of urban population between 1966 and 1971.

So we see the situation and it is pretty obvious it is upon us. I think we must ask ourselves what the urban concept is. I think we also must ask ourselves what a home is, when we speak of price. Instead of talking about big, growing cities I think we have to be thinking in terms of urban systems. Transportation is critical to this concept. Those of us from the Toronto region I think rejoice over the decision to operate the Barrie commuter service to Toronto and also the one from Toronto to Richmond Hill. This provides an opportunity for new communities to spread out over a broad area with provincial planning. We are not splitting hairs about whose responsibility it is. We have met our responsibility. The government has allocated $500 million for the land banking of serviced land. This is half a billion dollars.

Mr. Woolliams: Half a million?

Mr. Danson: No, half a billion dollars. What has my great province of Ontario done? I have not heard about any of this money having been picked up yet. We are providing the tools to do the job. The provinces guard their prerogative jealously, and I do not quarrel with this because I believe it is a provincial prerogative. Since 1954 the federal government has paid 75, per cent of land assembly costs. One might ask where the provinces have been in this regard, because the problem is obtaining serviced land. There have been loans for sewers, low-cost loans with a 25 per cent forgiveness clause. It has applied to sanitary sewers but now applies to storm sewers, which again helps land assembly.

● (2030)

Where is the province of Ontario and where are other provinces on this? We are providing money, we are responding. I wager there would be more money forthcoming as soon as the provinces responded. It is the province which has the prime responsibility for the planning, for land assembly. I have not been able to get the facts, but I wager that the province of Ontario has taken some of this money. I would bet my bottom dollar that they will use it for land assembly at Cedarwood near the proposed airport site. If that is the case, I would consider it to be a misuse of funds because the Cedarwood development was committed before this fund became available. The fund is designed to open up new areas. If the province of Ontario is using this fund for Cedarwood, I would say that they are hoodwinking the people of Ontario and the people in the Toronto region. I urge my colleagues from that region to look at this very carefully. If Ontario has taken part of that fund and is using it at Cedarwood, they are misusing the fund because they would be spending that money anyway.

I would not like that to be a repetition of another development, Malvern, when people in the region had to draw lots and in some cases pay under-the-table money to even have their name considered for houses at a lower cost. What happens when one sector of the population buys housing at a lower cost than others? Who gets that right, and what right have they to resell houses which were purchased at a lower cost because of the foresight of the federal government and the delay of the provincial government? Who makes a profit on this lower-cost housing?

With the greater opportunity which is presented to the provinces by this federal funding, and the federal decision to run commuter trains north at Toronto as well as those running east and west—and I give the province full marks on getting the east-west commuter service going—their planning requirements are intense. The danger is that we will continue this sprawl which my colleague from Davenport (Mr. Caccia) mentioned. It could go right up to the North Pole, although I say at least to Lake Simcoe. That could happen if the present government of Ontario stays in office, but I do not think there is too much fear of that.

We have to open up areas for new communities, use this money for intelligent planning, for smaller communities to grow and thrive under proper plans. We should use this money to put into force the Toronto-centred region plan because, in spite of all its weaknesses, it is a reasonable plan. Frankly, I can criticize portions of it but the thrust is great. It leaves great areas for green belt, but regrettably the province narrows down the areas of the green belt just to let the hydro lines through. The plan must provide adequate recreational areas and agricultural areas. These are the important things that develop an urban system—not to concentrate people in the downtown core and make better living areas there.

I have serious doubts about central core renewal and its value. To be able to get decent single family dwellings on a decent piece of land one has to move away from the central core because in the central cores of the cities there will be high density, high rise and very high cost or heavily subsidized housing. I am not sure that that is the route to take. If those people who want to live there persist, they must be prepared for high density, high rise and high cost. I object to subsidization for normal housing and I would rather use those funds more constructively in developing more humane communities where there is some greenery, some air and a recreational area.

My friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), probably has the same trouble in Calgary that we have in Toronto. The inflationary problem with respect to housing is a serious one to young people in particular. When I came out of the army I bought a house for $7,600, which at the time I thought was an awful amount. It was away up in North York, which is metropolitan Toronto now. Everybody thought I was crazy, and I did too; but I could do nothing else. It was my first house. I have traded up until I have a decent one now; a very old one, mind you, but one with which I am very happy. Now it is worth 20 times the amount I paid for the original house. But at least I had a start.

The house I bought had two bedrooms, one small bathroom and a kitchen that did not have push-button gadgets all over. It had an attached garage, but no paved driveway. It was a heck of a lot better than living in my parents' home or in an apartment, although those who choose an apartment can have it. It was enough to get a start. Now the houses we are talking about have 2½ bathrooms, finished recreation rooms, many of them have dens, libraries and are landscaped. Really, I think that is beyond our expectation. What should be our expectation? I think it is great if people can have all that if they can afford it, but we must look after those who cannot afford it.

The determining factor is the price of serviced land, because it is so expensive that you can only build expensive houses on it. If you went to see what was built as temporary housing at the agricultural farm in Ottawa during the last war, you would see that these are rather attractive houses. Over the years flowers and trees have grown around them. They are not a bad place in which to start a married life. From there you can move on to somewhere else. Neither are they a bad place to go to when you are older. I think we have lost the concept of that type of house.

Last week in my constituency, in Richmond Hill, there was a display of mobile homes. They are not really mobile; they are prefabricated homes. I was astounded to find them quite attractive. They are roomier than any moderately priced apartment I have seen. They are attractively appointed and are selling for $18,000 to $20,000. These were fully furnished. Some had a washer and dryer, all had a refrigerator and a stove, and they were very attractive. Perhaps someone would not want that for the rest of their life, but it is not a bad place in which to start or for when you are older and your family is grown.

We do not have to go after a $40,000, $50,000, $60,000 or $80,000 house. It is not everybody's right in Canada to own a mansion. This is what we are talking about in relative terms. We are talking about people who are forced to buy houses which they cannot afford and which are away above their means. We have to watch it very carefully because cities are becoming oppressive places in which to live. There is a lot of action and excitement in them. I happened to be born and raised in Toronto and I love it dearly. I have lived in every province in Canada and in places abroad, yet I am always delighted to come home. But there is an oppressiveness in cities; and the bigger they are, the tougher they are.

There must be relief from tension. We see it here in Ottawa which on its doorstep has the Gatineau national park and is particularly favoured in that way. I stayed in Ottawa this weekend and yesterday went cross-country skiing. One can get there in 15 minutes and it is beautiful. People in Ottawa, although they have a difficult housing problem in that housing is so high-priced, can still live on a more humane scale. In the city of Toronto they have done a pretty good job of parks, but we have to keep this up. Regrettably, in Toronto we take a beautiful wooded ravine, which is a great asset, with a river flowing through it, and then we pave it to make it into the Don Valley parkway. This is very unfortunate. It helps the traffic to move but we have given up something else.

I urge the people in my province and in the area in which I live to pay greater attention to urban national parks. I believe the minister himself urged them to follow through on this initiative which brought the waterfront park to Toronto. The city of Toronto owns the Langstaffe jail farm in my constituency. It is 640 acres, sitting north of the city. I plead with the mayor of Richmond Hill, Mr. Lazenby, and the mayor of Toronto, Mr. Crombie, never to let that go for major development. They wanted to build a dome stadium on it. I opposed that. I may not have been popular with them, but I think you could do some imaginative things with that land in the form of reforestation. I do not mean a camping area but a place to grow trees so that kids from the city could go out there and see trees growing. It could be turned into a recreation area of some type. I say, let's get the trees planted. You can always cut some down if you have too many, but first get them planted. It takes time for trees to grow. They provide oxygen, and are a rejuvenating force in urban life.

Then there is talk about 18,000 acres for a major airport. Mr. Speaker, it could end up as Toronto's equivalent of the Gatineau park. Even if the airport is built, it would take up only a small portion, maybe only one quarter of those 18,000 acres. The rest could be turned into a park, with trees, streams and ponds and a recreation area. It is needed now, and if that is what this debate is all about—

An hon. Member: It is about housing.

Mr. Danson: It is also about urban matters and you cannot dissociate the two. What is needed now is a continued infusion of federal funds to permit the provinces to do sensible planning so that we can get lots of serviced land in urban areas upon which people can build their homes. Here I am not suggesting that these be poor homes: I mean adequate, attractive homes. People should be helped to get them. I happen to think that owning a single, detached home is part of the great Canadian ideal. Those who want an apartment can have that type of life, but the other is the Canadian ideal.

The fact remains that we have provided the initiative. I regret to say that the province of Ontario has been very slow in picking up that initiative. I could almost promise, Mr. Speaker, even though I do not have the authority to promise anything, that if the province of Ontario got off its seat with its new minister of housing and really used these funds to acquire land, more federal funds would be provided to follow up that initiative.

In the meantime we have a way of life second to none in the world. But as Canadians we are never satisfied. It may be recognized that on a purely material basis we do not have the highest standard of living, but we have the best way of life in the world. Surely we can all recognize that. It has not been achieved as the result of political backbiting: it has been the result of long-term planning and proper use of land. And, Mr. Speaker, the land is strong, by gosh!

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): The land may be strong, Mr. Speaker, but by gosh the price isn't right these days. It is always worth while to listen to the hon. member preceding oneself because often that way one can pick up a few notions. I always enjoy listening to the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson). For one thing, he did save me a task that I felt I might have to undertake following the recriminations of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) which were so severe that I thought the minister would be totally shattered. I would like to see him shaken occasionally, but not totally shattered. Anyway, the hon. member for York North did pick him up a bit, so I do not feel obliged to rescue the minister.

I also have gratitude to express to the hon. member for York North for his suggestion, his serious suggestion, that the Toronto area needed more parkland. I totally agree with that. About a year and a half ago, during the federal election, the government saw the light. Somebody discovered that the city of Toronto did need parkland, and right in the middle of the election we had the offer of a Toronto harbour waterfront park at a cost of $30 million to $40 million. But we still have to wait to see that park manifest itself. I was down there recently, Mr. Speaker. I saw a tiny bit of lawn along a pier, and some park benches. They were not imported from Expo, so they must have been bought somewhere. But we are still waiting for the park.

There are many other areas in Toronto which need parks, and perhaps none more than the area I represent, Scarborough, and particularly my riding of Scarborough West. I know that if the minister takes a look at Scarborough West—which, by the way, is that part of Toronto just east of Victoria Park—he will say, "The hon. member for Scarborough West might have a good idea, but how can he bring it off, because most of the area is taken up by housing, or expressways, or roadways, or railways, or factories, a couple of small golf courses and a few ravines which have not been completely paved over," as the hon. member for York North remarked a while ago. "Where indeed," he might ask, "shall we build or establish a park in Scarborough West?"

I would ask him to look at a map of that part of Toronto and he will see a marvellous piece of free, green land; that is to say, land free of housing, factories and roadways. But it is not free to the people because they cannot get into it.

[Mr. Danson.]

However, Mr. Speaker, it is there, it is green, it is ready and it is available. It is known by some people in Toronto as the Toronto Hunt. I get a reaction from one of the Toronto members. I do not expect to get a reaction from western members because they do not understand what it is to ride to the hounds in a red jacket. In Toronto that kind of thing is still done—

An hon. Member: You're kidding!

Mr. Harney: —metaphorically at least, and it is done in my riding which is predominantly a workingclass riding but where the upper crust of the city come out to entertain themselves on a magnificent piece of land. As a matter of fact, if you consider the whole area of Scarborough West which faces on Lake Ontario on a piece of magnificent geography, the Scarborough bluffs, it is about the only free space on the Scarborough bluffs. Yet the unfortunate part of it is that it is completely sealed off to the population of Scarborough West. This is a fairly densely populated part of the city of Toronto. I do not need to point out that the population of metro Toronto is now some 2.8 million.

As the hon. member for North York suggested a while ago, the pressure of population just cries out for recreational space, for green space, for places for trees to grow and indeed for people to go. I would suggest to the minister, were he here—but I am sure some of his colleagues are here and hearing—that there is a marvellous place in the eastern part of Toronto which could be taken over for a park. I am sure many people in Scarborough would appreciate it, although some people in the Toronto Hunt would not appreciate the insidious and practically seditious suggestion I am making here tonight. I do not know what they do in Victoria, but I suggest this is the only place in Canada where people still evoke riding to the hounds in red jackets. There are many people in Scarborough who would enjoy that initiative. Actually, some of the neighbours of the Toronto Hunt Club would not until recently have appreciated that suggestion because, naturally, the area immediately adjacent to the Toronto Hunt Club contains some relatively high-income people. They are in the Fallingbrook area.

The Toronto Hunt Club, in its disdain for the entire neighbourhood, including the Fallingbrook area, has put up a 12-foot wire fence to keep out the upper middle-class Fallingbrook residents because they are not quite good enough. The minister ought to know that the few members of the Toronto Hunt Club enjoy the freehold of this property for the paltry sum of $10,000 or $11,000 a year in municipal taxes. When you consider that they control 100 acres of choice, green, open space in an area in which people cry out for access to open spaces, that is very cheap territory.

I suggest to the minister that his ministry, on behalf of the federal government, should get in touch with the provincial government and, together with the municipality of Scarborough, purchase or appropriate in some decent and proper way the Toronto Hunt Club land so that it can be used not only by the people of Scarborough West but, as well by the people of Scarborough East—I see the hon. member over there nodding—and also perhaps, by people as far away as York North. They, too, would like access to that magnificent body of water, Lake Ontario.

I was intrigued, when I heard the Speech from the Throne on February 27, to hear some reference to problems facing this country. The pertinent paragraph in the speech is worth reading in part. It is:

> In the domain of social policy the government is playing a vital role to achieve a more balanced pattern of urban growth and to increase the quality of life in our cities in co-operation with the provinces and municipalities. Improved means of public transportation are indispensable to the achievement of these urban goals. Measures will be introduced to establish a national urban transportation development corporation to co-ordinate and market the development of required new technology in this field.

It was good to hear that reference to the problems our cities face. It was good to hear that the government is aware of the problem of urban growth. It was even good to hear that it is concerned about urban transportation. Even though members who have spoken have assailed your ears about the problem of housing, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that that problem has not gone away. However, there is an added problem. People in large urban communities do not simply face the problem of finding adequate housing; they also face the difficulty of going home to their houses and of going to work from those houses.

If you ask the people of my riding what it is they complain of most apart from high food prices, high living costs and high rentals, they will tell you that they complain most generally about transportation. You do not need to take my word for it, Mr. Speaker. The venerable and honourable Toronto Star had a survey commissioned in Scarborough a few weeks ago. It discovered that people were proud of being residents of Scarborough. Although they are part of a large urban conglomeration known as Toronto, the people of Scarborough tend to identify themselves as being from Scarborough. If asked, they say, "yes, we are from Scarborough." They mention that area instead of Toronto; whereas the people in Etobicoke, the mystical and mythical land at the far western end of our city, tend to identify themselves as Torontonians. As I say, the people of Scarborough tend to identify themselves as citizens of Scarborough. Although they like to live there, some 59 or 60 per cent of them say that their major concern is that of transportation.

I was pleased to see that the government had promised in the Speech from the Throne a national urban transportation development corporation, until I read the words "to co-ordinate and market the development of required new technology." If you study those words, what do you have? Nothing. There is nothing in the speech but phraseology, and phraseology we have had in superabundance from this government. I have listened to the speeches made by the minister and other cabinet colleagues and have heard nothing specific about the problems facing the cities except fine phraseology. Go back over the record of this session and of the previous session: yes, all the promises are there in the finest, flossiest Liberal language—but there is nothing specific.

Let me allude to one of the problems which faces major urban centres in this nation and my riding of Scarborough, the problem of transportation. This government really has had nothing to do with the major debate which has raged in Toronto as to what system of transportation we should develop. Some of us have taken sides. I, myself, opposed the development of the Scarborough expressway. Some in my area think differently. We had an excellent report produced by Mr. Richard Soberman. He produced a report a number of years ago, for the Department of Transport, on commuter rail. His recent report came out squarely against the construction of the Scarborough expressway. It was a milestone decision. Furthermore, it was an important decision because of the alternative it proposed. It said that we in eastern Toronto should be served by what is known as light rail transit; that is, not a subway, not a heavy rail operation such as the Go train, but light rail transport.

There are several advantages to such light rail transit. For one thing, it is relatively cheap. We can build a light rail transit system extending from downtown to Guildwood in the relatively far eastern end of Scarborough for about $85 million which, when compared with the cost of expressways, is peanuts. The light rail transit system would be flexible. It could adapt itself very well to our innercity transit system and could connect us very well with our intercity transport system. It would be flexible in a way in which no subway system can be flexible. There is much to recommend it, including the fact that the rolling stock can be produced in Canada. It is true, as Mr. Soberman points out in his report, that we would now need to buy the rolling stock from the United States because we have stopped making fast, light streetcars in Canada. Yet there is no reason why in the next two or three years we should not develop such an industry in this country. We have the plans, the capacity, the skills and the resources to produce our own rolling stock.

It is worth while pointing out to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) that if we decide to build our own rolling stock, not just for Toronto but for the other major cities, Montreal, Halifax, Winnipeg, Vancouver and other places, we would develop an extremely worth while Canadian industry which would make appropriate use of our resources and the skills of our working people. It could do this without interfering with the famous, or infamous, auto pact, depending on how you see it. There is no reason why we should not enter the field of light rail transit in this country to satisfy the transportation needs of our urban populations. For one thing, such a system is much cheaper to operate than some other systems. Light rail transit would be more efficient than the automobile in taking people to and from work and in and out of their communities.

Without going into the complicated engineering figures, we know it costs some 50 per cent more per passenger-mile to transport a person in an automobile than it does to transport the same person in public transit of the kind I have been describing. These days, particularly when we are energy conscious, we should be doing everything in our power to redirect the use of our resources in the most economic way possible and in the way which pays the most heed to conservation. This is all very well but, you might ask, "What can the federal government do? It is sitting here in Ottawa, and you are talking about something that is going on in the cities of Canada." If we wanted to make urban transit more attractive, one of the best ways to do it is to make it less expensive. The federal government could, for example, dispose of the federal sales tax on diesel fuel. It could, for example, dispose of the federal sales tax on rolling stock and equipment used by our public transit systems across the country.

Let us think of it for a moment. Does it make sense for one public entity, the federal government, to tax another public entity, a municipal or provincial government, so that it in turn can tax the citizens? It is true that we have three levels of government in this country, but the citizens of this country are not split three ways. We are all dealing with the same taxpayer. Let us get out of the habit of taxing one public entity at another level, because obviously this is a silly thing to do and in fact there are huge diseconomies involved in it. To make public transit more attractive, let's make it cheaper and insist that the federal government take the steps that it can take, rather than produce mere phraseology, in order to make public transit more available, more effective and less expensive.

Are there other measures which can be taken by the federal government? I hesitate to suggest the next because it has something to do with transport, the Department of Transport and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) who has confessed to us that he is relatively powerless. We did not know that. We suspected the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) was relatively powerless and that is why he had to resort to phraseology, but we thought the Minister of Transport had power until he told us he was relatively powerless.

If we had a powerful Minister of Transport, he could say to the railroads of this country that their rights of way in the cities of Canada can be used for the development of light rail urban transit and they shall make these rights of way available at nominal cost. After all, Canadian National Railways is public property, and Canadian Pacific has been given public property. Therefore, there is no reason why they should stand in the way of our cities and municipalities. They should make these facilities available as readily and as freely as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue only with the consent of the House. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will see if I can cover the rest of this universe in two minutes. I know it is impossible, but I will try to make one point. I have heard a lot today about the need to control what is happening in our cities, the need to control urban growth. I doubt if I have heard anything of significance from either side of the House. Let me give a couple of examples of the kinds of things that worry me.

An hon. Member: All that in two minutes?

Mr. Harney: I will give the worst examples. People in my area, again, stated in a recent survey that they want less growth and more parks. They are, very simply, saying that they want more of the amenities of life. They do not want to be forced into a situation where a community is growing out of control.

In my last minute or so I want to ask the government what suggestions will be coming forward. What legislation will be coming forward to control urban growth in a serious and sensible way? What shall be done? What shall be proposed to control the depredations of the speculators? Nothing that I have heard from either side of the House. To put the matter as simply and bluntly as possible, we will not be able to control urban growth. We will not be able to see that the amenities of life are brought to the citizens of our large cities until we decide on a policy which will ensure that the major part of the land in our cities is publicly owned. As long as the main consideration and ownership of land is financial, and solely financial, private interests will be able to change the face of our communities without reference to us, the citizens, or to any level of government.

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is usually a pleasure to speak following the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) and the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney), but tonight it just seemed that the old coalition was back at work. They really said nothing about the serious housing problem in this country—just a lot of niceties. I notice that even the minister had to leave the chamber. It is unfortunate that the minister is not in the House, but considering the dismal failure of his department it is not surprising that he would find it opportune to be absent when so much well deserved criticism is aimed directly at him and his department.

One aspect that cannot be overlooked in this entire debate is that regardless of the location of the riding of the member who is speaking, the problem is the same. Whether the speaker be, like myself, from an urban riding in British Columbia, or from a rural riding in Newfoundland, the needs of our respective constituents are equally great. When the cost of a home is out of reach for the average Canadian, then something is drastically wrong. And, Mr. Speaker, when a wage earner must be making about $17,000 per year to qualify for a mortgage at current market prices, we are indeed facing a crisis in the housing field.

There was a time when the Canadian people could look to their elected government for guidance, assistance and leadership in an area so critical to their very well-being. The Canadian people, however, have long despaired of such policies from the government's housing minister. His mammoth bureaucratic monster has succeeded only in spending large amounts of the taxpayers' dollars. The building of this giant white elephant has not even succeeded in bringing forth the squeak of a mouse. Undaunted, however, by the past failures of his department, the minister has proposed the expenditure of $100 million as an urban demonstration project. As the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) said, that is approximately $55,000 per day for five years.

It is typical of the minister's department that this $100 million will not actually build a single home. His department can find millions upon millions of dollars and can build bigger and bigger bureaucratic organizations. In fact, Mr. Speaker, about the only thing the minister's department cannot do is build homes for the Canadians people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Watson: Only 269,000 this year.

Mr. Reynolds: I will be glad to include that in my speech. The hon. member says "only 269,000 homes this year." Tell that to the people of this country who cannot find a home to buy. I, like hundreds of thousands of Canadians people, want to know when the minister is going to do the job he was elected to do. One would think that after the mistakes made in his previous portfolio, he would have learned that not only the Canadian people but his own party expect some results, however infinitely small they may be.

The Canadian people will no longer tolerate the government's policy that nothing can be done about inflation, that it is purely dependent upon international events and we will simply have to roll with the punches. While this may be convenient for various ministers of the Crown and may afford them the opportunity to hide behind the failure to come to grips will the inflationary cycle, it does nothing to alleviate the problems facing this nation, particularly in the field of housing.

There are steps which could be taken immediately if the government wished seriously to attack this problem head-on. Some of these points have been raised on numerous occasions by the leader of this party, by our housing critic, the hon. member for Calgary North, and by other concerned members of this party including myself. Mr. Speaker, let us cut out the nonsense, let us cut out the red tape, let us cut out the millions of dollars being wasted on smoke-screen, political gimmickry and let us get on with the job which the people of Canada elected us to do.

A person does not have to be a financial wizard, and economist or even a contractor to identify the problems. It would appear, however, that the only thing a person does not have to be to identify these problems is a minister of housing. Two weeks ago in this House, during the debate on the address in reply to the throne speech, I referred to an advertisement in a paper from Houston, Texas, in which was illustrated a 1,700 square-foot house selling for $22,900. Now, if houses can be built and sold in the United States at this price in one of the largest metropolitan areas, then surely they can be built here in Canada. But government interference at all levels has so tied up the housing industry that the frustrations alone are multifold.

Recent changes in the tax structure in this country have adversely affected the profitability of constructing apartments. As a result, demand for these dwelling units is far outstripping availability. With almost 99 per cent occupancy of available space, the resulting situation is a sellers' market and nothing else, and those forced to rent units have been charged all the traffic will bear. For young families, the situation is impossible. Not only must they earn substantial incomes even to qualify for a mortgage, they must also make substantial down-payments. For a young family this is not always possible. Add to this the current interest rates, and we are faced with a situation in which the vast majority of Canadian cannot hope to own their homes.

In both the United States and in Great Britain a home owner is allowed a tax deduction in respect of interest paid on a mortgage, with the result that a far greater proportion of people are in a position to consider the purchase of a home. If the minister were serious about tackling the problems in his department, he could begin here. If the minister were serious about tackling this problem, he could immediately remove the 11 per cent federal sales tax on building materials.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: He doesn't care.

Mr. Reynolds: If the minister were serious about tackling this problem, he could recommend that tax incentives he reinstituted so that dwelling units would once again become an attractive form of investment and stimulate apartment and townhouse construction.

Mr. Paproski: In all of Canada, not just the Vancouver area.

Mr. Reynolds: If the minister were serious, he could develop a policy directed at lowering interest rates on all CMHC mortgages. If the minister were serious, he could establish a federal fund, utilizing federal participation, which could be used on a regional basis to set up regional land banking agencies for serviced land. If the minister were serious, he would develop new and flexible national planning and building codes taking into consideration regional differences and disparities. If the minister were serious, he would incorporate rapid transit systems to serve land banks, thus making these available land banks attractive to potential home owners. One of the worst areas in the country as far as rapid transport is concerned is the minister's own riding.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. Reynolds: The minister knows it is a serious problem in the lower mainland of British Columbia. He is a member of the federal government, yet he has done nothing. All they did before the last election was offer a bunch of money to build a crossing which was rejected by the province and rejected by the people. But they thought a few dollars going into that bridge might get them elected, and I must say it did; the ministers on either side of the bridge are still in the House. However, I think they are only here until the next election, because the people know the Liberal government is doing nothing for British Columbia, and the two ministers from British Columbia are part of the Liberal government.

An hon. Member: Bring back Rudnicki.

Mr. Reynolds: It makes me sick to hear members on the other side criticize my party for not putting forward housing policies. We have a distinct housing policy. The government knows it might work, but they just sit back and hope the problem will go away. I think they will get a surprise, because their government will go away after the next election.

Mr. Speaker, these are only a few of the proposals recommended by the leader of this party in an effort to meet the most basic need of all Canadians, the need for reasonable and comfortable shelter. Certainly the minister responsible for housing cannot continue to head his department without showing some sign of progress, somewhere—anywhere.

Only a few days ago the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) referred to me in an interview as a fool because I questioned whether there was a connection between his removal as minister of consumer and corporate affairs and the scandal involving several well known British Columbia cement companies and accompanying political ties. I do not feel that his comments were warranted, I felt, rather, that they were spoken out of frustration at not being able to come up with a plausible explanation to offset what I had stated in the House. On the other hand, based on the minister's past performance in both portfolios, consumer affairs and urban affairs, some people might be inclined to wonder if the minister wasn't talking about himself, because only a fool would continue in the job which he had not been able to do properly since he began it and which it is obvious he will never be able to do properly as long as he holds it. Possibly the minister is content to be the government's court jester. I can assure him, however, that the people of this country are not.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to a great deal of rhetoric today, most of it quite negative, I am afraid. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn). There seem to be more problems in his riding than in any other riding in the country. One of the solutions would seem to be to remove some of the growth which is going on around Mississauga to other parts of the country where growth is needed; for example, the maritimes, northern Ontario and the west. This would solve some of the problems experienced by members from the Toronto suburbs.

I was appalled at the reaction of the Conservative Party to the minister's announcement. I would point out that the announcement was not intended to solve all housing problems. It was intended to look into the future to see what we are going to do about housing problems then. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) was so confused that his confusion spread to the New Democratic Party. I think we should try to understand what this bill is attempting to do in the long term.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not a bill.

Mr. McRae: It was not meant to solve all our housing problems. The amount involved is $100 million spread over five years, roughly $20 million a year. This is about 2 per cent of what is being spent on housing, so it is not a vast amount of money. The bill does not initiate research projects. The bill is for demonstration projects. Research will be going on, but that is not the purpose of the bill which will follow.

I should like to consider the urban problems of the future and see the type of world we are moving toward and ask whether we ought to carry on using the same type of urban development 20 years from now. If the answer is no, we need to redirect our thinking and find new ways of approaching this challenge.

[Mr. Reynolds.]

The urban areas of the developed world will double in about 25 years. If we continue with this growth rate in Canada—and I shall have something to say about that at another time—we are going to need about six Torontos between now and the turn of the century, though I am sure we can do better than having six Torontos, or 20 Ottawas. That gives the House an idea of the kind of growth we can expect. Therefore, I ask, is it satisfactory to continue building homes in the way we are building them now, using the same patterns, methods of building, the same techniques, building materials, and so on, in order to double the number of houses we have now? I think the answer is no.

One very serious problem being faced by the construction industry, the industry that builds our cities, our commercial buildings, houses, industrial plants, and so on, is the shortage of conventional resources. One of the west coast firms moved into Thunder Bay last year and the province gave them reserves that had already been cut over, though I do not know whether the province realized this. This company is going to have a lot of difficulty getting sufficient wood to plan its operations. In order to supply the wood required, the province asked all farmers to cut reserves to supply MacMillan Bloedel only. In other words, if you were cutting in Nipigon you would have to move your supplies to Thunder Bay, and so on. The reason for this is that we are running short of resources. Even though these resources are renewable, there is a limit, and given the kind of growth we have in the construction industry we will soon be reaching those limits.

So far as methods of construction are concerned, much has to be done here. Galbraith, in his latest book on economics, talked about the planning economy and the market economy. The best example he gave of the market economy, the best in terms of power and productivity, was the housing industry. We would never put automobiles on the road if we had to build them as inefficiently as we build houses. All kinds of new techniques are needed to develop a new housing industry, one that will function efficiently. Land development, methods of construction, building codes are all problem areas.

One of the most serious problems in the field of housing—and I am not the first to say this—is the high cost of mortgages. This is a question that must be attacked by the government and by this House. If one looks at the profits made by the banks of Canada during the last 12 months, one finds they increased by 200 per cent in some cases. This is one reason interest rates can be lowered. I suggest that part of a first mortgage, say the first $10,000, be at a lower rate than the rest and that this be established as a pattern across the country. The government should be introducing measures to solve this kind of problem.

Another serious problem that we face is shortage of land. By this I mean shortage of land suitable for housing, not farmable. It is not a good idea to convert good farmland to use for housing. I would prefer to see the kind of land that we have in northern Ontario used for housing, instead of land around the Niagara fruit district, which is high-priced agricultural land. We cannot continue to use this kind of land for housing. Food production is going to be all important over the long term, which is why we must not use for housing land that is presently used for producing food.

As far as energy is concerned, we in Canada need a great deal of fuel to keep our houses warm. About 50 per cent of our consumption of energy is used to heat houses and buildings. In addition, the cost of energy is increasing and shortage of energy supplies over the long term is a matter that must be considered.

Let me say a word or two about demonstration projects. Last week I had the good fortune to attend the meeting of a group called the Castle Green Co-op. This is a group that is building 200 housing units and is funded by a bill passed in the last session of parliament that gives assistance to co-ops and co-op housing. About 100 people attended this meeting, all of them members of this particular co-op. I have never seen a more enthusiastic gathering at a straight grass-roots project. I am proud the project is in Thunder Bay and I am proud to be associated with the government that provided funds for the project. I spoke to this group—one of my shorter speeches—for about two minutes, outlining the Minister's proposal for demonstration projects.

I had not left this meeting for more than half an hour when I received a telephone call asking me whether I would meet the caller and talk about this project. We, that is, the people directing the project and myself, spent the better part of the night, until two or three in the morning, talking about the possibilities for this kind of project. We talked about extra funding for central heating, about locating housing to take full advantage of solar heat. We talked about closed sewage systems in areas where it was difficult to dispose of sewage. We talked of recycling garbage and using it to create energy for heating and cooling systems. We also talked about recreational activities and other things.

This kind of project is fascinating and is strictly grass-roots. The whole idea of this demonstration project is to develop the grass-roots talent that we have. I explained to them very carefully that it was not a research project. If technological know-how is required, they will have to use technology already developed. But this does not mean we are not researching today projects that will be introduced four or five years from now.

I should like to say a few words about the cost of energy, not in terms of dollars and cents but in terms of the remaining energy resources of the world. I think this is what the people at the Castle Green Co-op meeting were talking about. The first thing that came to their minds was the question how to set up economic housing units in terms of energy cost in a cold part of the country, not as cold as the territories, perhaps, but nevertheless cold enough.

If we look at the energy demand curve in Canada as we double our population, the energy curve rises gently to start with but by about 1978 starts to go up and is almost perpendicular by 1982. This kind of curve is constant throughout the world. All energy curves are drawn in this way. On the other hand, supply curves tend to rise gently, and then between the years 1978 and 1982 or 1983, depending on how gentle or steep the curves are, they cross, which means that by 1983 at the latest we might be in for some serious trouble, especially if present demand continues.

My feeling is that we must do something to anticipate this, and this is why we should take another look at housing construction. Houses in a cold country require a lot of energy. Therefore, we should look at ways to cut this demand effectively now. That is what I think we can do with this particular program. In terms of developing countries, Canada stands forty-second or forty-ninth in relation to the efficient use of energy. We tend to use our energy in a very inefficient way; we waste a great deal of it. Sweden, on the basis of its population, uses only about half the energy per capita, with the same gross national product. I suggest we have a long way to go toward solving some of our energy demand problems. Just as an example of this problem, many of our commercial buildings are extremely wasteful in terms of energy use. I understand the Commerce Court building in Toronto uses the same amount of hydro as the city of Peterborough. This is the type of energy waste which we can no longer afford.

Many suggestions have been made, including some by the Castle Green Co-operative. One suggestion has to do with the better use of waste heat, that is, heat from 80 to 100 degrees from thermal nuclear generating plants. There are many ways of using this heat to create energy in various forms, and this is the kind of thing that must be done. Some of these things can be done under the demonstration project activities suggested by the minister.

Another suggestion relates to the use of garbage as a fuel. It has been found that a pound of garbage can be used to produce 4½ pounds of steam. I have not worked that out in terms of BTU's but it would be extremely significant. Another suggestion is that we use raw sewage for conversion into methane. Such a conversion project has been carried out in Toronto. This is something we should be looking into as the kind of project that should be funded. I understand that one industry in Toronto has established a plant at the Toronto stockyards to convert biomasses into methane.

There is also a fairly simple operation which allows the mixture of coal and oil, producing about the same flame with the same amount of heat one gets from using straight oil. Such an operation would have the effect of increasing the life expectancy of our oil reserves by about 33 per cent. I suggest there is a tremendous area in respect of alternate means of developing heat. Heat conservation is another area that must be examined. Various kinds of insulations should be developed and tested. We must also develop, examine and test various alternative and improved building materials.

Perhaps the shortages of conventional building materials, including wood, will reach the point where we will have to reconsider the effectiveness of conventional insulation. Perhaps it will be proved that we should not be burning all our oil, but should be converting it into plastics of various forms which are better building materials. Perhaps they can be produced in the planning sections of our economy rather than in the market sections—produced much more efficiently with much better insulating qualities. These are some of the things I think can be done.

Having pointed out these things, let me say there is a very definite need to find new techniques if we are to double our housing needs in urban centres in the next 25 years. This is not a matter of taking a new research approach but is a matter of demonstration projects. What we must do is use some of the technology that now exists. This same Toronto industry used existing technology in its conversion of sewage to methane. This is the kind of thing that can and must be done. We must use existing technology of this kind, perhaps in a model city or a community, in an effort to show how we can avoid this kind of waste. Perhaps then the proposed $20 million a year will be money well spent. If that is how it is intended we spend this money, I think the money will be well spent and I support such an expenditure for that reason.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to some of the comments of hon. members on the other side, including the minister. When the minister finished his speech I was quite convinced that there was no housing crisis in this country. He indicated that as a result of the many great things he is doing there is absolutely nothing else that can be done. I suggest this is the kind of rather negative attitude in respect of our housing situation which has created the severe problem which exists in Canada today.

I am inclined to think the minister has failed to take action of any kind in the area of providing additional serviced land and cutting down interest rates because the people involved in the financial institutions and development corporations which are making huge rakeoffs on serviced lands are friends of and contributors to his party. It is well known that the Liberals are in the pockets of these institutions and do not want to do anything to rock the boat too much.

The hon. member who preceded me made a good deal of fuss about new techniques and new ways of doing things. This is an indication of the fact that people on that side are living in a world of daydreams and are not really prepared to grapple with our problems, using the knowledge and information we have at hand, but are content to sit back and do nothing but suggest they are trying to think up new techniques to solve our problems.

The parliamentary secretary used the same old type of criticism we hear from Liberals all across the country. The only thing they can say about the Conservative Party is that we have no new policies. It is obvious that those hon. members have not done their homework or they were not in the House when the minister spoke. Anyone who had listened to him would have seen that the minister had a copy of our policy discussion paper in his hand when he spoke.

An hon. Member: You should have heard the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Basford: One of your members said it was not even a policy paper.

[Mr. McRae.]

Mr. Yewchuk: I am not so sure that the minister knows that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) did have a good deal to do with the production of that paper. It is obvious from the minister's statement that he does not know what he is talking about. However, I was happy to see him holding a copy of the paper, and if he reads more than the first page—I doubt that he has done that so far—I am sure he will find it contains some good ideas.

Mr. Baker: He may even find something he can steal.

Mr. Yewchuk: Perhaps while he is still temporarily the minister he will be able to implement some of the good ideas which are contained in that paper, which will go a long way toward salving some of our problems in respect of housing. In spite of the glowing terms used by the minister when he spoke about his housing policies, I think his record speaks for itself. The policies which have been in effect for the past 11 years of Liberal government have led us to the point where we are becoming a nation of renters with virtually no one able to afford his own home today, and the situation is getting much worse. Fewer people even dare to dream about owning their own home.

We do not have to look far to see what has happened in respect of the housing market this year. Let us look at the situation in Ottawa, where in the past five years the price of the average house has doubled. One of my hobbies is to follow fairly closely this market and I should like to give an example of what has happened in Ottawa. In the neighbourhood in which I live, a house was sold last April for $45,000 to $47,000. That house was resold about three months ago for $72,000, and it is now advertised for sale at $95,000. In less than a year this house has more than doubled in price.

With that kind of inflationary pressure, I do not understand how the minister can sit back and smugly say he is doing everything he possibly can, or that there is really no problem in respect of housing in this country. I think it is fair to say that if something is not done about the inflation we are experiencing, the housing situation will be aggravated severely. Conversely, if the housing market is not stabilized, this will contribute to inflation. Inflation breeds high housing costs, and high housing costs breed inflation. This is a cycle that has to be broken somehow.

We have also heard many members on the government side state over and over again that we do not have in this country the land required for housing. That is a strange statement. The fact is that this country has more land than any country in the world. It is presently a matter of not having a government which has a policy to service the land and make it available to Canadians at reasonable cost. When we think of the millions of acres of land presently unoccupied in Canada, we find it rather difficult to understand why a building lot in the city of Ottawa, which I believe is a typical community, should cost $35,000 or $40,000. I am referring to a lot which is perhaps 100 feet by 100 feet.

I saw an advertisement in the paper the other day concerning a lot with trees on it. That made it valuable. It was advertised at $75,000. This was a lot which would contain a one-family dwelling. While this type of situation occurs, it is no wonder the price of housing is becoming out of reach of the ordinary Canadian. It might be useful to look at the cause of this difficulty. Part of the cause, no doubt, is the fact that a large part of the development is left entirely in the hands of the developers. In spite of the minister's statement that there is a huge land assembly program, I have no knowledge of such a program working very effectively anywhere in this country. I do not see any such program in Ottawa.

We have a situation, for example, where a developer might buy a section of land perhaps for $2,000 or $10,000 an acre. About a third of that land will be taken for parks, roads, lanes, and so on, and he will wind up with probably three or four building lots per acre which he will in turn sell for $30,000 or $35,000 a piece. These lots are not available to individuals but are simply used by the developer for the construction of houses which are sold at a huge profit.

Another thing which would seem to be contributing to the high cost of housing, on which the minister, did not touch, of course, is the speculation which is carried on in land. People buy land and hold it for a month, two months, or less, and by this method tie up whatever land is available, simply to resell it at a profit. I think the minister should look into this situation to see that reason is instilled into that part of the housing situation.

Although I am a believer in the private enterprise system, I think there are certain areas where this system becomes self-defeating and does not serve the public interest. I hate to say that, but it seems to be the case in so far as the availability of serviced lots for individuals wishing to build homes is concerned. Even though the minister says there is a land assembly program in operation, it just does not work. It is not making land available at cost or slightly above cost. The demand is still for higher than the supply at the present time. So I really wonder whether the minister is serious about his land assembly program. He seems to be quite satisfied to sit back and do nothing more. It seems more like political window-dressing.

Another aspect of the housing problem which is contributing to the high cost of housing is financing. Over the past decade we have seen varying rates of interest. In 1966-67 the rate was around 6 per cent. At that time, and with that kind of interest rate, there was no undue inflation. The financial institutions seemed to survive and did not fold up because of the low interest rate. Things seemed to go along pretty well. Now, however, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) tells us it is impossible to do anything about interest rates which are in the vicinity of 10 per cent and 11 per cent.

The present interest rates are a crushing burden on any home owner. It is almost impossible for most individuals to consider owning a home because of this burden. I think the fact that the minister continually refuses to consider taking action to lower the interest rate suggests that the Liberal Party is subject to a good deal of pressure from various financial institutions. It could be that they are sharing the pot. I do not know for sure, but this is a possibility and perhaps it is why they are not willing to take the kind of action necessary to reduce interest rates to a reasonable level.

Another thing which could be done with regard to the financial market is to ensure that a larger percentage of the funds available is allocated to single family housing. I think this would be a step in the right direction. An additional factor in the high cost of housing is building materials. In the past year or so there have been rapid increases in the cost of building materials. Builders in some cases will not even quote a price on a house before it is built because they do not know from day to day what will be the cost of the materials necessary to construct the house.

Inflation has been so rampant in the area of building materials that something must be done quickly. We should ensure an adequate supply of building materials. There are various ways to do this, including reduction of exports and increased production. Another method is the removal of the sales tax on building materials. The Liberal way is to tax everything to death, but I think at this point the Conservative way would be better; that is, remove this tax and give people a chance to have a breather so far as building materials costs are concerned.

Then there is the cost of labour. I believe it would be appropriate at this point to compliment labour, including the labour unions which I think have shown, in the face of absolutely uncontrolled inflation, a good deal of restraint in not seeking unusually high wage settlements and by continuing to do their jobs. Therefore, labour is not the most serious aspect in respect of housing costs at this time.

It may be that the most important thing we could consider in relation to housing is the quality of life which is provided by the various housing programs in the country. Research seems to have shown that the aim we must have is that every individual or family which wishes to have a home should be able to own a private, single-family dwelling as opposed to the various multiple dwellings now available. It is not necessary for me to go into the various advantages of this apart from saying there is no structure which leads an individual family to feel more at home and enjoy privacy than the single-family dwelling.

Perhaps there has been too much of a trend in recent days toward townhouses, condominiums and dwellings of that nature. No doubt this is a reaction to the shortage of houses—a reaction to a crisis. In its reaction to this crisis, the government does not seem to have given any thought to the quality of life actually produced by this type of multiple housing. So when looking at the housing situation we should not simply look at it in terms of numbers but also in terms of the kind of housing starts we produce.

If we look around Ottawa we see hundreds upon hundreds of townhouse structures. Just imagine what those places will look like 30 years from now. My prediction is that they are slums of the future. We have not learned from past experience of crowding too many people into small areas for the sake of expediency at present. It is true that when these units are new, they are attractive and fairly pleasant, but I know they are not what Canadian families want and the danger is great that in 20 or 30 years' time they will simply be slums with which a future government will have to cope. So I would like to see a trend away from building these townhouses and condominiums that are now spotting the urban environment a little too frequently.

One of the other things I wanted to speak about was land development and the type of lots that are made available to people today. Almost all the new developments in the major cities of Canada consist of building lots without any back lanes. When we consider the quality of life about which we are so concerned, this is a serious omission, for several reasons. One of them is that children are forced to play in the streets if they want space to run outside the boundaries of their own lot. The other reason is that lack of a back lane leads to a highly unsatisfactory sanitary arrangement because there is no room for the storage of garbage and people are forced to store it inside their garages or their basements where it attracts flies to the building. They take it out to the front of the lot once a week and in the summertime when it attracts flies, this is very unsatisfactory.

The other thing that makes lots without back lanes not very useful is the fact that there is no access to the back yard for machinery. If an individual who owns the house wants to get into the back yard to put in a swimming pool, plant a tree, etc., he cannot do so because houses are built too close together and there is no access to the back. For these various reasons I think the national building policy should encourage communities to return to the old system of subdividing lots with the inclusion of back lanes or at least the inclusion of a 20-foot strip of publicly-owned land which is not fenced and which would provide a playground or access to backyards.

I have been told that part of the reason for building subdivisions with no back lanes is that we have too many European planners coming into the country who are accustomed to planning in conditions where there is a severe shortage of land, so they try to get the maximum use out of each acre, and the maximum number of lots. The other possibility is that we are leaving this planning too much in the hands of developers who, because of the profit motive, are interested in getting the maximum number of lots out of each acre of land which they are servicing. Whatever the case may be, I consider this to be a very unhealthy trend which will lead to a reduction in the quality of life that people enjoy in our new neighbourhoods.

Finally, I want to say that Canadians should realize that what has happened in the housing market in Canada did not happen by accident. It happened as a result of 11 years of Liberal policies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by Standing Order has expired. He can continue with unanimous consent. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hear a "no".

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, in the very short time allotted to me I would like to point out some aspects of the housing situation as it exists in this country and particularly as it exists in my riding. In my constituency the needs are not restricted to the urban areas where I am concerned with the increased cost of housing and land and a steady rise in population, adding a further strain to the existing difficulties. They are also felt in the rural areas where the government has done little or nothing in the past.

It is time that some interest was shown in order to bring adequate housing to those who have been cut off from the benefits of an urban society. Rural housing must be supported with generous rehabilitation loans and grants made available to co-operative and non-profit housing groups as well as low income families. CMHC rules as applied to rural housing must be made flexible to accommodate those who can least afford to comply with the standards necessary in order to qualify for financial assistance. CMHC policy toward the Indian people must also be made as flexible as possible because these are the people who deserve as much support as is possible in the field of housing. Inadequate housing and lack of concern in the past has contributed to poor and unsanitary housing conditions that are so obvious to those who have the responsibility of dealing with such conditions.

The federal government, with the support of the Conservatives, passed the residential mortgage financing act which was Bill C-135. This was supposed to provide the necessary funds for mortgage investments and supplement Bill C-133. However, that act meant that the supply and control of mortgage funds for residential housing will be determined by the free play of market forces. It will not ensure the availability of adequate mortgage funds for new and existing dwellings in rural areas as there is no provision for compulsory allocation of funds in these areas. It will not provide special housing for Indian people or those on low incomes. It is simply a means of attracting capital to an area where a good profit can be realized at the expense of the home buyer.

Therefore, it is important for the government to take the necessary steps and to assume responsibility for ensuring an adequate supply of mortgage funds at low interest rates, to determine housing requirements together with the provinces, and to set annual targets and obtain firm commitments from financial institutions to meet housing needs in this country. There is no excuse for inaction in an area of the Canadian economy where adequate shelter for all Canadians must be the primary objective of the federal government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 10 p.m., proceedings on the motion being debated today are deemed to have been concluded pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—REGIONAL PAY DIFFERENTIALS—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, in his always kindly way, the venerable President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) said that my question on March 15 relating to regional pay inequalities in Canada was based on lack of knowledge. If he said so, then of course that must be the case because, after all, he is the head of the Treasury Board and his attitude on all matters relating to his department is above reproach. Or is it? Well, I may not have the learned gentleman's knowledge, but what I do have is some appreciation of what constitutes fair play and equity so far as his pay policies are concerned. So once more, as so many members of my party have done in the past, I want to bring to the attention of this House the inequitable and regressive attitude exhibited by this government toward the concept of equal pay for equal work for employees under Treasury Board jurisdiction.

● (2200)

The President of the Treasury Board has taken a militant and unprogressive stand in support of an entirely indefensible position. One might say that he, in his neanderthal way, has redoubled his efforts in this regard having lost sight of his objectives, which surely should be to do away, on a gradual basis, with the situation that exists in this country whereby employees under Treasury Board jurisdiction, whether they are nurses in New Brunswick or shipyard workers in Nova Scotia, are paid differently than their counterparts in other areas of Canada.

It is not realistic to bring about an absolute removal of wage disparity all across Canada at once because of the sudden disruption this could cause in a number of trades where economies of scale are at play. However, there is no doubt that our national economy can accept the philosophy of equal pay for equal work, which should be carried out in two basic steps. One step is immediate acceptance of equal pay increases so that disparity is not further increased. The second would be to commence immediately reduction of the existing differential so that it can be eliminated over a period of time.

I and others in my party have put on record the great differentials in pay with regard to nurses under federal jurisdiction. I am sure it is well known that the bitterness that these nurses felt, and still feel, has caused a considerable amount of justifiable concern to their representatives such as Mr. Phythian, Mr. Spruin and others in the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada who worked so hard on their behalf in trying to have the arbitral award dated October 16 of last year reviewed. The President of the Treasury Board, of course, resisted any such action.

The nurses' situation is deplorable, but there are many others; for example dockyard workers who suffer from the same sort of illogical disparity. Let us look at the status of dockyard employees in Canada under the existing agreement between the Treasury Board and the Federal Government Dockyards Trades and Labour Council, which expires on March 23 of next year. The differential in wages paid to dockyard workers in Nova Scotia and British Columbia, or to be more precise in Halifax and Esquimalt, is very substantial indeed, yet the cost of living in these two cities is practically identical.

The contract rate for machine-tending at level 3 is $4.31 at Halifax, and $5.03 at Esquimalt. A classification in which the federal government should be very interested in a sense, since its members are so very good at it, is that of manipulators. For manipulating, at Halifax the rate is $4.92, and at Esquimalt $5.56. There are greater differentials existing than the ones I have cited.

It is a very ironic situation which finds that in those parts of Canada which suffer most from unemployment, inflation and various other economic maladies, workers receive considerably less wages than workers in the more prosperous parts of the nation, both doing exactly the same work. While the President of the Treasury Board attempts to explain the validity and the equity of his position with regard to the foregoing, Mr. Speaker, perhaps at the same time he will explain why he and his government are permitting the federal civil service to expand by another 13,000 employees and why projected government spending for the year starting April 1, 1974, is up so dramatically.

He should also keep in mind that the estimates are double what they were six years ago and four times what they were ten years ago. Yet this minister said on CTV "Question Period," if I am quoting him correctly, that so far as the main estimates were concerned, the government's purchases of goods and services other than transfer payments are substantially the same in the current year as they were last year.

In spite of that, the President of the Treasury Board refuses, in the midst of all these expenditures such as $750 million to be paid to outside consultants to the civil service, which itself is costing the nation in excess of $4 billion, to allocate funds to correct this very inequitable pay policy which goes straight to the heart of regional inequality and basic fairness so far as working people are concerned. I doubt if he could get one provincial premier to support the stand he takes in this regard. But of course the government has never been too concerned about what the provinces think. When we look around this chamber and see the representation that the government has from most of the provinces in Canada, the results of its attitude are plain to see.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not being here at ten o'clock when the adjournment debate started. I was detained by the miscellaneous estimates committee which was discussing the estimates of Treasury Board. The committee spent some time discussing the reason for the substantial difference between the total estimates the federal government sought from parliament ten years ago and those of today. I will not endeavour, in the space of three minutes, to repeat what I said in a somewhat longer period before the committee, but I suggest that if the hon. member refers to the minutes of that committee meeting he will find that I have not been wasting my time.

I find that the hon. gentleman is inconsistent. He complains about increases in expenditures by the public service on public servants, indicating that there is a distinct lack of care for the taxpayer's pocket, yet at the same time he accuses the government of niggardliness in not giving effect to the dogma of equal pay for equal work anywhere in Canada. I have endeavoured to explain to the House on earlier occasions that the government believes it is the government's duty to taxpayers to provide an efficient public service, that is, a service to the public and an efficient one, which means one that is not wasteful of the taxpayers' resources and is performing effectively the duties placed upon it in satisfying taxpayers' needs and demands.

In the case of regional pay policy, the government for years has taken the position that it will not be a leader in matters of pay and salary but will follow the pattern set by what is generally known in this country as the private sector. Given the choice of trying to equate the pay of the public service to that of the private sector on a national level or on a regional level, the government must, for common sense reasons, use a regional basis.

The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), I am quite sure, commends the recognition by the government that there are regional disparities, that different regions of Canada should receive even from the federal government different treatment, and that the purpose of the federal government in its employment policies is to produce the least possible regional disparity or dislocation. As a consequence, where there are large groups of employees in a region whose mobility from region to region is either very limited or non-existent, an endeavour is made to equate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his allotted time has expired.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS ISSUED BY FAMILY COURTS—RECOMMENDATION OF LAW REFORM COMMISSION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my remarks tonight will be short and to the point. On March 11, as recorded at page 353 of Hansard, I asked the following question in the House:

In light of the fact that 75 per cent of all family maintenance orders made by Canadian family courts against deserting husbands are defaulted, and in light of the fact these defaults cost Canadian taxpayers $365 million annually—

I am sure that in Manitoba the loss amounts to $10 million annually of which only a small percentage is recovered.

—does the minister intend to adopt through legislation the recommendation of the Law Reform Commission which would give family courts an investigative and enforcement apparatus to track down elusive fathers, thereby assuring compliance with any maintenance order issued?

As could have been expected, the so-called answer I received was in fact a non-answer. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) whose jurisdiction in this matter is only partial, said something to the effect that the federal government will be discussing this matter with the provinces. The problem, however, is that this is a matter of utmost urgency.

As things now stand, a court order to a man for maintaining financially the family he has abandoned is often worth no more than the paper it is written on. While the divorce law is federal, the laws that govern other aspects of marital break-up, maintenance, child support and property rights continue to vary as provincial responsibilities under the BNA Act. These responsibilities, though, are seldom enforced by the provincial courts: they leave that job to the deserted mother.

The federal government must act through whatever means possible to ensure that the job of tracking down deserting fathers is not left to deserted mothers. Presently, a deserted mother not only has to track down her spouse but has also has to keep returning to court for new maintenance orders if he defaults. As well, she has to hire a lawyer if he refuses to comply.

At present it is believed that about half the number of children entitled by court order to receive financial support from their father do not receive a cent. This is indeed an injustice. Under the reciprocal enforcement of maintenance orders, any provincial maintenance order affecting persons outside the province lacks force until it has been confirmed in a court in another province or country. An Ontario court, for instance, can order maintenance, but if the husband moves to Alberta he does not have to pay until the order has been reconfirmed through an Alberta court. Upon being contracted by an enforcement agency, a delinquent husband must either make a payment or a show cause summons will be issued. If he ignores this summons, the court seldom acts, though in rare cases if he is still around and refuses to pay he may be arrested and jailed.

Considering this disastrous state of affairs with regard to family law in Canada, the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission of Canada are most welcome and should be implemented immediately. Basically, the commission would give the family courts an investigative and enforcement apparatus to track down elusive fathers, inquire into their finances and advise the courts on how much they could pay and, by methods unspecified, "ensure due compliance with any maintenance order issued". The commission also implies that in cases of default it would favour having the courts themselves pay all moneys to the family awarded in a maintenance order, with the money coming either from the father or provincial welfare funds. The commission does not discuss methods of enforcement but these can be worked out on consultation.

The commission's major recommendation is that all matters of family law should be gathered together under one court. As the commission points out, it makes sense that the judge who grants a divorce should also deal with the division of marital property, child custody, access to the child by the parent who does not have custody, and the welfare and maintenance of the child. However, as was mentioned, the constitution presents a barrier for it splits responsibility for these matters between the federal and provincial governments and, therefore, the same case is handled by different judges and different courts. It seems obvious that the commission's recommendations should be adopted.

In conclusion, I am hopeful that the federal-provincial discussions concerning the commission's recommendations will be a starting point for these much needed changes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank my hon. friend for bringing to our attention such an important matter, which is interesting not only from the legal point of view, but also because of the human factor.

I note that my colleague has seen the conclusions of the Law Reform Commission working paper. I think we agree that the matter should be studied immediately, promptly and efficiently.

[English]

The study paper on family courts issued by the Law Reform Commission of Canada a short time ago, in which it was proposed that family courts be given more effective means to enforce maintenance orders against elusive spouses, is merely a study paper and these proposals are not at this stage recommendations of the Law Reform Commission. The Law Reform Commission will be making recommendations on the subject of family courts in due course. This report may or may not endorse the proposal advanced in the study paper.

If the proposal is recommended by the Law Reform Commission, it will be discussed with the appropriate provincial authorities since the matter of enforcing maintenance orders is one which lies within provincial jurisdiction. The proposal advanced in the study paper, if endorsed by the Law Reform Commission, is one which might profitably be explored through the medium of the Conference of Uniformity Commissioners on Legislation in Canada which meets annually to examine ways and means of achieving uniformity in laws throughout the various jurisdictions.

[Translation]

I can assure my hon. friend that this matter interests me personally, as well as the department which I am representing tonight because I admit that it is time to truly deal with these problems unrestricted by jurisdictions which are necessary, but must not have priority over the population and the serious and important problems that my hon. friend has described and that I promise to refer to the minister. I also promise to give them particular attention myself.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.22 p.m.

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO RIGHT HON. MEMBER FOR PRINCE ALBERT ON THIRTY-FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to a very agreeable event. Today is the thirty-fourth anniversary of the election to parliament of the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Being a member of this House for 34 years is in itself a tremendous service to the country. But I rise today not simply to speak of the length of the right hon. member's parliamentary service nor to dwell on his accomplishments during those 34 years, although I would like to emphasize that he continues today, as he has during the years, to be a vigorous, eloquent and effective champion of the rights of Canadians, the rights of the dog, the rights of the underdog—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: That was a bit of a Freudian slip, recognizing the fondness of the right hon. gentleman for his dog. But I do wish to congratulate the right hon. gentleman who continues to express himself so effectively and non-controversially in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: He is the dean of the House in terms of length of service and, I think we can all agree, the dean of the House in terms of parliamentary skill—a continuing example for all of us of an effective and able parliamentarian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I simply wish to take this occasion to express personally and on behalf of the members of this caucus, and, I am sure, of members in all parts of the House, our congratulations and very good wishes to the right hon. member for Prince Albert on this auspicious occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted on behalf of all of us in the New Democratic Party to join in these warm felicitations to the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Some of us remember very well the day that he was first elected. I was defeated on that day by one John Turner. However, he was not Minister of Finance and within a few years he was dead.

● (1410)

I should like to underline what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has said about the contribution of the right hon. member in having been here these 34 years and also to underline what was said about the contribution he has made in particular fields, notably in the defence of civil liberties and fundamental human rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was about to say that we are sorry that his wife, Olive, is not in the gallery, but I see she is behind a post.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are sorry that she has had a bit of illness to cope with in recent months. We hope she is making good progress and we wish to Olive and John the very best.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all my colleagues and on my own behalf, I am very happy to join all hon. members in congratulating the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Mr. Speaker, I should particularly like to emphasize the right hon. member's integrity and his important role in Canadian politics.

It has often been said that he was not understood in Quebec or that he did not understand Quebec, but I know that since the time when this was said, even Quebecers have come to recognize in Mr. Diefenbaker one of the greatest politicians of Canada, a man full of vigour and energy whose example we should all follow.

I should like to add that the first time I voted in a federal election, in 1957, I voted for this great Canadian.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the senior member of this party in terms of date of election to the House of Commons I should like to associate myself and the members of the government party with the words that have been expressed so well by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). As the member of this party with the longest service I certainly have no intention of emulating the record of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition will attempt to co-operate with me in achieving that objective.

Mr. Stanfield: I am willing.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I say that the applause that came from this side when the Leader of the Opposition expressed his sentiments with respect to the right hon. member for Prince Albert is eloquent testimony to the esteem in which he is held on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and others who have spoken for their all too generous words. Coming from an oil province, I always like to make an effort to pour oil on anything of a controversial nature, and I will continue to do so in the hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his discussions with the premiers this week will be able to make that oil available to all of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thirty-four years is a long while. Not a day passes in this institution that I do not learn something concerning the greatness of parliament. It is hard to express oneself under these circumstances because there is nothing a member can desire more than to be regarded by all, without regard to party, as one dedicated to the House of Commons.

Mention was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) of another John Turner. I recall very well that in those days Shakespeare and the classics were regularly drawn upon by members as they spoke. One evening there was a great argument about what Shakespeare had said and had not said, and that John Turner from Manitoba arose and said: "I really have never made very much of a study of Shakespeare, except one line—to beer or not to beer, that is the question".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: That evening he fully lived up to his remark about the alleged words of what he called "Mr. Shakespeare".

The older I become the more I have an affection for this institution and for its membership. We as Canadians can be proud of the fact, not unctuous in our declaration, that this country has not seen anything like what has happened under another system of government in a country for which we have so much regard.

The hon. member who spoke for the Social Credit Party I must say began right in 1957. At my age one does not look ahead; one lives from day to day.

I conclude my expression of deep appreciation to the members of this House not with a warning but simply with the illustration that others have served far longer. Sir Wilfrid Laurier served for 47 years and Sir John A. Macdonald for 48 years, which of course included a long period in the parliament of Upper and Lower Canada. Therein I see an objective.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: To all of you from the bottom of my heart I express my deepest appreciation. I thank the government House leader for his all too kind words. Both of us have been here a long while, and my expectation is that each of us will endeavour to continue.

VETERANS LAND ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR EXPIRY TO MARCH 31, 1975

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement with regard to the Veterans Land Act. Hon. members are doubtless aware that in its present form the act provides that the director may not accept any application for a new establishment after March 31, 1974. This provision was inserted in the act by parliament nine years ago.

For many months I have been giving consideration to the question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): —whether the act ought to be further extended. On March 12, I undertook to review the matter again. I have done so, and I now wish to announce that the government will introduce a measure to extend the operation of the act for one year to March 31, 1975, to enable any qualified veterans who may have been caught by the present deadline to make their applications.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, although I thank the minister for making this statement I must say I certainly cannot commend or congratulate him on the very narrow concession he has made to the veterans. It just indicates that there is a complete lack of compassion on the part of the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: All they are doing is playing politics.

Mr. Marshall: —when they only offer this narrow concession in response to our motion. It is very evident that the government does not understand the needs of the veterans in only extending the Veterans Land Act for one year. There are still hundreds of thousands of veterans whose attempts to build under the Act by acquiring a loan have been stultified because the loan ceiling is not high enough. It is possible to obtain only $15,000. They cannot build because it is impossible to buy a half acre lot for $15,000 less 20 per cent. Those veterans who did not get a certificate by October, 1968, are still denied the opportunity to do so.

I had hoped, as I am sure all hon. members did, that the minister would have done what all veterans want, namely, introduced legislation to repeal section 31 of the act, to raise mortgage loan ceilings and reduce the minimum lot requirement commensurate with today's increased costs. However, the government is not doing that and there is no way in which we can accept the proposed legislation without action being taken on these other matters. Otherwise, there is no point in extending the Veterans Land Act. We reserve the right to amend the legislation when it is introduced to insert a provision that renewal will take place 90 days before the expiration of the deadline on March 31, 1975.

Last Wednesday the minister indicated at the committee meeting, as he indicated to the press, that the government would have to raise the loan ceilings and reduce the minimum lot requirement. I can assure hon. members—this was confirmed by the administrator of the Veterans Land Act in the committee last Wednesday—that the veterans land administration will be in existence until the year 2000 because they will have to handle cases until then at least. They now have a backlog of 1,240 cases.

Accounts are being repaid at a rate of $69 million a year and of that amount some $26 million is interest. So the fund is self-sustaining and is not costing the taxpayer any undue additional amount. Why not show compassion and fulfil the commitment that has been in effect over the past 57 years? Why does the government have to break faith with the veterans who were promised that the veterans charter would be in existence as long as there was a veteran alive?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who understands the problem, will support the stand of my party, and I know he will. If the legislation is introduced it will be accepted only under the following conditions: that renewal will be made 90 days before the expiration of the deadline, that section 31 will be repealed, that the loan ceilings will be increased commensurate with today's increased costs, and that the minimum lot requirement will be amended so that it is commensurate with the needs of veterans who wish to live in cities.

I am surprised that the government does not show the compassion it should. I hope it will realize it has a duty to the veterans and will come up with legislation that will be acceptable and will give the justice to veterans that they deserve.

• (1430)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) I wish this announcement included more than it does. It is my view that any veteran who qualifies under the Veterans Land Act should be entitled to take advantage of that qualification as long as he lives. Therefore I hope this is only an interim extension to March 31, 1975.

I also agree that something must be done to protect the rights of those veterans who did not get their qualification certificates before October 31, 1968. There is also the question of the amount of money available as a loan under the act, and the problem of lowering the minimum lot requirements. These are other changes that should be made in this legislation.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we now have a chance in this session of parliament to fight for these other things. The legislation forecast in this announcement will, I take it, be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs after second reading where, as I say, we will have a chance to argue for these other improvements that we think should be made in the Veterans Land Act. As a result of this announcement the rights under this legislation will not die this coming Sunday. It gives us another year, a year in which a number of veterans will be able to get their loans, and a year in which we can continue the fight for a further extension. On that basis we welcome the announcement. We shall do our best to see that the legislation is dealt with expeditiously, bearing in mind our right in the standing committee to seek other improvements.

This announcement prompts me to say that I am proud that two weeks ago tonight we did not bring this parliament to an end.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Otherwise we would not now have this opportunity in this parliament to amend this legislation before March 31, 1974.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By the same token, Mr. Speaker, any serious effort to bring this parliament to an end tonight would be a disservice to the veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We believe we should stay here to see this extension of the deadline enacted and to use the opportunity to win still further improvements.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, we shall first allow the Liberals to rejoice for a little while, and then I shall proceed with my remarks.

Privilege, Mr. Stanbury

Mr. Speaker, I was very happy this afternoon to hear the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs announce the extension of the time limit in the case of this act. I was especially happy because veterans from almost all over Canada had started complaining of our apparent lack of consideration for them.

As usual, the hon. minister is now faced with a money problem. As Social Crediters, we keep saying that human beings should not be compelled all the time to submit to money considerations. This is why I support the minister's decision to extent the time limit for this act.

I have before me a telegram which was sent to Mr. Caouette by one of my constituents concerning this matter:

Thanks a million for having asked government to extend application of act granting loans to veterans for housing construction. We understand from our information that loans will not be granted beyond March 30, 1974. Second World War veterans were never informed of this.

I draw this last sentence especially to the attention of the minister: this letter claims the veterans were never advised of this. I go back to my quotation:

We veterans ask that period be extended beyond said date. Wish to know all aspects of the matter. Millions of dollars of veterans' money lie dormant in government coffers. Why not have them benefit from this money instead of government distributing it as it sees fit. Veterans of Canadian Legion generally displeased.

Branch 53, Drummondville, Quebec.

I will now read you the postscript:

P.S. General malaise must be felt in all other branches of Canadian Legion throughout Canada.

The letter was signed by Dr. Maurice Laperrière of Drummondville.

That is to say, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that this matter stirred a general outcry throughout Canada and that the government should have the highest regard for those who carried arms to defend our country.

It is normal that Canada should better the fate of all who fought for the ideals we believe in.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am happy that, because of its minority situation, the government was forced to give the people more consideration.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STANBURY—CORRECTION OF ANSWER RESPECTING DEDUCTION OF PAYMENTS TO BABYSITTERS FROM INCOME

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I would like to correct and clarify information I gave yesterday in response to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). I now understand that the form to which the hon. member referred is the child care expense schedule. I am advised that if this schedule contains basic information on parent, child and payee, the claimant's return and any refund are generally processed without delay, subject to any missing information being later requested and reassessment being possible if a claim cannot be substantiated.

HOUSING

LOWER MAINLAND OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the vacancy rate in the lower mainland of British Columbia is now less than one per cent, and whereas the government has not yet embarked upon a meaningful public housing program for the lower mainland, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Neale):

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs be directed to meet immediately with his British Columbia provincial counterpart with the view to providing immediate emergency housing to alleviate the present crisis situation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN GREAT LAKES CARRIERS ASSOCIATION AND INTERNATIONAL SEAFARERS UNION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the current labour dispute between the Great Lakes Carriers Association and the Seafarers International Union of Canada, and in view of the danger that a protracted strike poses for the Canadian economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson):

That this House direct the Minister of Labour, prior to contemplating any back to work legislation, to fulfil his responsibilities under Part III, section 32 of the Canada Labour Code, to ensure that the employers pay the statutory overtime rates of pay outstanding and due to the employees.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

HEALTH

INCIDENCE OF LUNG CANCER AMONG URANIUM WORKERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the extreme energy shortage being experienced throughout the world, and because uranium more and more will become one of the chief sources of power, and because of the high rate of uranium induced lung cancer now being sustained by people who work in the uranium mines, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the Minister of Labour use the powers presently vested in him to eliminate the incidence of uranium lung cancer now affecting over 130 people working in the Elliot Lake area.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ATHABASCA TAR SANDS—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him, in a specific instance, which minister is expressing government policy, the Minister of Supply and Services who continues to advocate at least consideration of a very rapid large-scale development of the Athabasca tar sands, or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has described this massive scheme of the Minister of Supply and Services as "not feasible for practical or political reasons"? Would the Prime Minister tell us which minister is expressing government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I attempted to answer this question yesterday. I can only repeat the same lines of my answer of yesterday or the day before. This tar sands project as advocated by the Minister of Supply and Services is not part of the government's energy policy. Government energy policy has been enunciated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and by myself at various occasions. This other idea, as I told the House a couple of days ago, is one in which the minister has shown a great deal of personal interest. It is one in which I find an advantage in having him explore it further and discuss it with other people.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the statements by the Prime Minister and, indeed, by the Minister of Supply and Services that the cabinet has not yet agreed to a policy on the tar sands—that is what the Minister of Supply and Services says and the Prime Minister seems to confirm it—and in view of the fact the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says, "Well, that is not correct", indicating that the government has adopted a policy on the tar sands and indicating that it is quite inconsistent with what is being said by the Minister of Supply and Services, are we to understand from the Prime Minister that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not correct when he suggests outside the House that the government has adopted already a policy with regard to the rate and scope of development of the tar sands?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate the interest shown by the Leader of the Opposition in the government's position on this matter.

An hon. Member: Don't blow so early in the day!

Mr. Trudeau: I want to reassure hon. members opposite that things are going all right in the cabinet. It is my judgment that the Minister of Supply and Services can continue to make these speeches and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can state government policy. I understand the concern of the opposition, but it would be more helpful to me as leader of the government if they were, for instance, to give guidance on their position with regard to a fair price for oil to be given to Alberta. This is the problem we will be discussing tomorrow between first ministers. It would be nice if the opposition, rather than drawing a red herring across the path, were able to state their policy on oil before we meet the provinces tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, talking about red herrings, I must say the hon. gentleman opposite is certainly a master of that art.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: May I put it to the Prime Minister very bluntly, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources expressing government policy when he says that the plans being advocated by the Minister of Supply and Services are contrary to government policy? May I ask the Prime Minister how many government policies there are at the same time? Does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources speak for the government in terms of energy policy, including the tar sands, and are we entitled to accept his statement as to what constitutes the policy of the government in that area?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition read the words which are the answer to his own question. He read words from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —the Minister of Supply and Services—

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Trudeau: —indicating that there had been no policy decision by the government on the type of program of which he is the proponent—

An hon. Member: Would the real minister please stand up?

Mr. Trudeau: I really find it incredible—

An hon. Member: We do, too.

Mr. Trudeau: —that on the eve of a conference that is to decide the future oil and energy policy of this country, when we have, for instance, the premier of Ontario saying that a $6 price for oil is enough—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and the premier of Alberta wanting more—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Trudeau: —that the Tories have no idea what it should be.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. I am not sure that we should continue this debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. It does not appear to the Chair to be—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not really sure what it is that hon. members are trying to accomplish by all this noise, but I would invite the hon. Leader of the Opposition, if he has a supplementary, to put it and then I will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the Prime Minister regard as trivial that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says there is a policy with regard to the tar sands and the Prime Minister and the Minister of Supply and Services deny that this is so? Does he regard that as a trivial matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, what I do regard as trivial is the opposition hiding its head in the tar sands when it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in answer to a question on this subject by the hon. member for Trinity the Prime Minister said, as found on page 812 of Hansard:

> If the hon. member is asking whether that is a statement of government policy the answer is no, but if the hon. member is asking whether this is an idea which is being explored and looked at, certainly with my authorization, by the minister, the answer is yes.

Has the Prime Minister authorized the Minister of Supply and Services to investigate this proposal which was first advanced by Mr. Herman Kahn of the Hudson Institute? Is this not a subject which comes properly under the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and why has the Minister of Supply and Services been asked to look into it when it does not come under his ministerial responsibility?

An hon. Member: He is the minister of trivia.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made this clear. I have authorized the minister to speak on this subject to any audience that wanted to listen. I have not gone out seeking audiences. The minister has received invitations—

An hon. Member: Which minister?

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has received invitations—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You are all mixed up.

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has received invitations—

An hon. Member: We are talking about this poor fellow here.

Mr. Trudeau: He is speaking in Toronto today at a meeting which invited him to speak on the energy problem. The Minister of Supply and Services has received invitations to speak on other subjects. He has my authorization to speak on those subjects. I repeat to the NDP what I just said to the Tory Party. I find it passing strange that in the past month we have not had one serious question or suggestion from either opposition party on the very vital questions which are going to be decided tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, just taking time to say that the Prime Minister's statement is absolutely inaccurate with respect to this party, may I ask the Prime Minister this question. I am not asking him what invitations his ministers get. I am asking him about his own statement yesterday that he authorized the minister, and I use his own words, to "explore and look at" this matter. Is the government seriously exploring and looking at the proposition as stipulated by the Minister of Supply and Services that there ought to be some $20 billion borrowed to build plants at the rate of $1 billion apiece, that 30,000 Koreans be brought in for the purpose of building them, and that repayment be made in oil, thereby committing Canada to the export of $20 billion worth of oil? I ask the Prime Minister whether it is that kind of plan formulated by the Hudson Institute that he has authorized the minister to investigate?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said earlier. The minister has my authorization.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Trinity and the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings will be recognized for supplementaries, but we will finish the first round of questioning and then return to the supplementaries on this subject.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

In view of the encouraging answer I received yesterday from the Minister of Finance about additional funds that would be made available to the Minister of Manpower for LIP projects and of the explanations the President of the Treasury Board gave the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates last night, may I once again ask the minister if he has discussed the matter with the President of the Treasury Board and whether they agreed to allocate immediately more funds to the manpower minister for that purpose and, if so, when he will be able to make his decision known to the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had the opportunity of discussing the matter at length with my colleague, but I must add that there is never enough money to meet all the requirements.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister is giving us the real reason for the first time, I would ask him very earnestly the following question: which of the two came first, man or money?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's question is hypothetical.

ENERGY

ATHABASCA TAR SANDS—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Will the minister tell the House whether his proposal for the development of the tar sands was well received by his audience in Calgary yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the minister must have gone to Calgary yesterday at public expense. He was on time which was taken away from the House of Commons and therefore was on his public duties. Consequently, he has a responsibility to answer for his acts to the House. Perhaps Your Honour will allow me to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: What about the trip to your riding last week? Were you well received?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member with his experience will appreciate that the question as asked in the first instance is not in order. I would hope we could not get involved every day in asking ministers and other members whether speeches they made outside the House were well received or ill received by their audiences. That is hardly in order. I am certainly anxious to be fair to the hon. member and I will allow him not a supplementary to that question but another question.

Mr. Hellyer: My supplementary is to the Prime Minister. Has the moratorium that the Alberta government has placed on further exploration rights in regard to the tar sands any relation to the type of proposal that is being discussed publicly by the Minister of Supply and Services and others? Was this discussed by the Prime Minister when he had lunch with the premier of Alberta? Perhaps at the same time the Prime Minister could tell us if it is once again his policy, as it was during the foreign policy review, to play one of his ministers off against another in public?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is not a question. That is debate.

Mr. Trudeau: You played yourself off against yourself.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, for generations in this country, as in other British parliamentary democracies, there has been a rule of cabinet solidarity. In the first year of the present Prime Minister's term in office he changed that rule and allowed ministers to speak publicly on different sides of an argument. Surely it is the right of this parliament and the Canadian people to know whether we have in this country at the present time a continuation of the principle of cabinet solidarity or whether in fact we have another principle—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will not prevent the right hon. Prime Minister from responding to the hon. member's point of order. If the hon. member will recall what he said, his question was, is it the policy of the Prime Minister to play one minister against another. That may not be exactly what he said but I am sure the hon. member, in fairness to the Chair, will admit that was the sense of it. The hon. member for Calgary North.

ATHABASCA TAR SANDS—SPEECH BY MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES IN CALGARY—PRIOR APPROVAL BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Supply and Services whether he submitted the script of the speech he delivered in Calgary to the Prime Minister and did the Prime Minister endorse the contents of that speech before the minister delivered it in Calgary?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I did not, of course, submit in detail all the contents of the speech. However, I find that in Calgary the people are more openminded than the people on the opposite side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the minister is not going to play ducks and drakes with me. I asked the Minister of Supply and Services a simple question. Did he submit the contents of the speech he delivered in Calgary to the Prime Minister prior to delivery and did the Prime Minister endorse the contents?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I gave a very simple answer to a very simple question to a very simple mind. I hope the hon. member understood what I said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North rises on a question of privilege. He will, of course, be recognized. But I am sure hon. members will want to go along with the Chair in that, after we have settled the question of privilege now going to be raised by the hon. member we should try to go to the next question.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would only quote one thing to the minister: "Oh wad some power to giftie gie us to see oursels as ithers see us!" The simple minister sitting over there is the former Solicitor General. His record speaks for itself throughout the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1500)

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is not every day one receives applause twice. I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services arising out of the question asked earlier relating to cabinet solidarity. Is he to be identified as the pea in the Prime Minister's shell game in this regard?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I thought the right hon. member knew nothing about cabinet solidarity until today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are you the pea? That is what I want to know.

Some hon. Members: We want George.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman must be very happy that hon. members seems to be enjoying themselves so much on his anniversary.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising from a report in this morning's Globe and Mail that interest rates are scheduled to rise once more by one-quarter of one per cent, specifically, mortgage rates. This will have the effect of increasing the price of the average house by about $1,000. Can the minister tell us whether the government plans to take steps to prevent this increase as it pertains to mortgage rates?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I have read that report. As yet, it is speculative, and I do not think I should like to comment at this stage.

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM—POSSIBLE MODIFICATION TO MAKE MORE EFFECTIVE IN LARGE CITIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House whether he has any plans to modify the AHOP program so that its provisions might become operative in the financial sense in the big cities? At the present time, as the minister knows, because of housing costs and the regulations which govern the present program it is, in effect, inoperative in the large cities.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I expect to have something to say on that subject in the speech I shall be making in the debate this afternoon which I think will interest the hon. member. In terms of tight markets such as Toronto and Vancouver, and in answer to the hon. member for New Westminster, may I say I have an appointment on Friday afternoon with the minister of housing of British Columbia.

INDUSTRY

PAPER—ALLEGED SHORTAGE AND PRICE INCREASE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce of which I gave him notice some time ago. I hope he remembers. What steps is the minister taking to ensure an adequate supply of paper at fair prices to meet what has become a critical situation in the publishing trade because of supply shortages and high costs?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): We have met with representatives of the industry. I have met with the presidents of the leading companies and I believe the problem of supply has been largely settled in favour of the Canadian user.

Mr. Fairweather: Has the minister's attention been drawn to a report this morning to the effect that there is to be a 12 per cent increase in April in the cost of quality paper? If so, how does this fit in with the minister's somewhat optimistic reply?

Mr. Gillespie: That is a separate question, the question of price.

Mr. Fairweather: I asked about both.

Mr. Gillespie: The paper industry, like every other industry, has been faced with increasing costs, increased pulp costs especially in the case of the fine paper industry. This industry, historically, has operated on a very low profit level. One would hope that with a return to reasonable profit levels new investment will go forward.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF FEASIBILITY OF ARCTIC RAILWAY—AVAILABILITY TO MEMBERS AND PEOPLE OF NORTHERN TERRITORIES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is it the intention of the government to have the result of the CN-CP study showing the feasibility of an Arctic railway referred to northerners through their elected members and also to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that hon. members may assess the full implications of this proposal?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not studied the report yet. I do not know if it has already been submitted. This report was asked by the Minister of Transport. I will discuss this matter with him and report to the hon. member.

ENERGY

NATIONALIZATION OF BRINCO—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Answering a question I asked him recently, the Prime Minister told me that the nationalization project of BRINCO by the government of Newfoundland was of no interest to the federal government. But yesterday, spokesmen for Newfoundland stated that the federal government was very interested indeed in this nationalization and that meetings have taken place between both levels of government on this subject. Therefore, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he did meet the officials concerned on this matter and what the government position is regarding that project.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, both versions are acceptable, according to me. As far as I am concerned, I never tackled the subject with the premier of Newfoundland. I still maintain that such political decisions are to be taken by the provincial governments, whether we do or do not agree with them. On the other hand, there would be many consequences for the province if it acted that way, consequences of a financial, constitutional or other nature regarding federal-provincial relations and there may be some discussions on this subject. I even see some ministers who agree with me.

There have probably been discussions between the officials concerned, but certainly not at the government leaders level, and obviously not to ask for our consent or our veto.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COMBAT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As Canadian shelter costs have risen 42 per cent since the present government gained power, the highest increase in six years ever recorded, and in view of information from Statistics Canada that the index for shelter moved up .9 per cent in February due mainly to higher mortgage interest rates, would the Prime Minister reconsider his refusal in the House on September 11 last to order a roll-back of mortgage rates or at least prevent any increase in mortgage rates that may be forthcoming?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the question was seriously put, as I am sure it was, I have no doubt the questioner would wish to add words to his preamble to indicate that since our government came to power more houses have been started and built in Canada than in any other period of our history.

SUGGESTED RAISING OF CEILING ON NATIONAL HOUSING ACT LOANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Perhaps I might direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Inasmuch as the aggregate sale value of homes in the Toronto area has jumped by $10 billion since the Trudeau government came to power, an 80 per cent increase, would the minister tell us whether he intends to raise the $30,000 ceiling on NHA loans so that such financing may become more meaningful in our urban centres and thereby hopefully trigger lower interest rates, bearing in mind that in Toronto alone it now costs $47,000 on average to buy a home that used to cost $26,000?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I shall be speaking on that subject this afternoon. By way of a general answer, I may say that the levels of lending under the regulations are constantly under review, as are particular market situations.

Mr. Speaker: I think we have reached the point at which I must seek the co-operation of hon. members in limiting the number of supplementaries if we are to get more questions in before the end of the question period.

INCOME TAX

POSSIBLE ALLOWANCE OF MORTGAGE INTEREST AS DEDUCTION FROM TAXABLE INCOME—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my further supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. Not only has the price of homes risen by 80 per cent in six years but interest rates have risen by 30 per cent since 1967 with the result that a $21,000 increase in the cost of a Toronto home involves an extra $10,000 to be paid as a result of higher interest rates. Would the minister indicate whether he intends to give some form of tax relief to home owners and tenants, and is he at least studying the possibility of allowing interest of mortgages and also municipal taxes as an expense against income before tax?

● (1510)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am studying all possibilities, but the hon. gentleman is bringing up a budgetary matter. I would draw to his attention that in the way he puts the question relief would be mainly to the wealthier classes in the country and would favour the home owner over the tenant.

FINANCE

BASIS FOR ALLEGING CORPORATE TAX CUTS AND ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION INCREASED EMPLOYMENT IN MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that employment grew faster in the construction trade, real estate and several other sectors of our economy last year than it did in manufacturing, would the minister say what part of the increase in employment in manufacturing was due solely to the corporate tax concessions and what part was due to other factors in the economy?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that would be hard to gauge. I would merely say that it is more than a coincidence—and I put it to the House—that since the corporate tax concessions were proposed in the House and passed, as well as the accelerated depreciation allowances, there were last year 111,000 new jobs in manufacturing which, as I said yesterday, is 8,000 more than the previous six years put together.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Nystrom: The minister has again said that there were 111,000 new jobs created in manufacturing. How many of those jobs are due to the fact that there has been a corporate tax cut and a two year write-off, and how many are due to other inputs in the economy other than the corporate tax cuts? Is the minister studying the question, does he know, or is he simply forgetting about it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member just has to look at the cash flows available in the manufacturing industry and how those cash flows are being used in new capital investment to understand why the incentive was put on and how the incentive is being used.

GRAIN

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ALLOCATION OF RAILWAY CARS—DECLARATION OF CERTAIN BRANCH LINES AS INOPERATIVE BECAUSE OF SNOW CONDITIONS

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that during the past several months the railways in western Canada have been required to plow some quarter of a million miles of track in a futile attempt to move grain from snow-blocked lines, can the minister say who is responsible for ordering these trains? Is it the Canadian Wheat Board or the railways?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, within the committed number of cars that are available to the Canadian Wheat Board from the railways the block shipping system, which is an organization that includes the direction of the Canadian Wheat Board and represents the operating arm of the railways, allocates cars to particular blocks week by week, and then the cars within the blocks are allocated by specific elevator companies.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Have the railways at this late date been allowed to declare certain lines inoperative until track conditions improve? If so, why has it taken so long to declare some of these lines inoperative?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, even at this stage there are bound to be serious complaints and concerns on the part of individual farmers who find lines closed. I am sure the hon. member's colleagues will in some cases criticize the government for that same reason. The railways did attempt to keep the main lines in the prairies open but they now find this is simply an impossible job in the remaining months. In the case of the CNR, they specifically indicated dates before which they do not expect to use cars on particular lines. I expect that the CPR, which has less of a problem since there is less snow in the southern part of the prairies where its main operation is, may have to do something of the same. We are meeting in a variety of committees to look at urgent measures that can be taken to use more fully the lines that are clear. Our objective is to move the grain on to the main lines, and then have the fastest possible turnaround of rail equipment in order to make up the hypothetical potential losses—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN SEAFARERS' UNION AND LAKE CARRIERS ASSOCIATION—INTERVENTION BY MINISTER—SUGGESTED VOLUNTARY ARBITRATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. It appears from a question asked previously by the NDP that the minister is now thinking about introducing back to work legislation. We have not had a report from the minister, and since April 1 is the deadline would the minister advise what is the situation at the present time and whether he still believes it is a little premature to make a personal intervention?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the House that I have been in discussion with the parties to this dispute, both directly and indirectly, in an effort to try to resolve it. It is a difficult situation. I am going to continue to intervene, along with the assistance of my officials, in an endeavour to try to resolve the dispute before April 1 if at all possible.

Mr. Alexander: For the last month or so the minister has been extolling the virtues of voluntary arbitration. Can the minister advise the House whether this suggestion has been put to the parties to the dispute and have they accepted it or what was their answer? If he has not done so, why has he not done so?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the question of voluntary arbitration in the context which I have been advancing for some months is with particular reference to the railway unions. Their collective agreement does not expire till the end of December and it was hoped that this would be a method by which we could avoid labour disputes in the future. With regard to the present situation, a dispute is already in progress. The collective agreement has been terminated and, technically speaking at least, there is a strike in operation. Whether the parties will agree to go back to work without a settlement, leaving the details of the settlement to voluntary arbitration, I would doubt.

[Later:]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question in view of the importance of this matter. The minister made an assumption that the parties to the dispute would not go along with voluntary arbitration. Would the minister give the House an assurance that he will take this matter up with the parties so that he can have a definite answer yes or no whether they find this new and unique procedure acceptable, keeping in mind the extreme urgency of the situation?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the extreme urgency of the situation, but it was not an assumption that led me to that conclusion. In view of the discussions that I have had with the parties involved, it is obvious to me that the parties would not be agreeable to voluntary arbitration, particularly one party to the dispute.

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON WATER MAIN MATERIALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Having regard to the fact that many Canadian municipalities have experienced a substantial increase in population due to the installation of numerous municipal services, and noting that provincial governments—Ontario, for example—have waived the sales tax on water main materials, would the minister consider removal of the discriminatory payment of federal sales tax on water main materials for municipalities?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the hon. gentleman's representation, which has been echoed in several quarters of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that we have now come to the end of the question period. The Chair will allow the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka a supplementary and then we will call orders of the day.

Mr. Darling: Noting that many municipalities have approved a resolution calling for the exemption from the federal sales tax of water main materials, would the minister attend the meeting of the Ontario Municipal Water Association in Windsor from April 28 to May 1 in order to participate in constructive discussions regarding this matter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have not been invited, but before I am it may be a little tough to make that meeting.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—REPUDIATION OF GOVERNMENT'S URBAN DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved:

That this House repudiates the government's $100 million urban demonstration program as a diversionary tactic and clearly ineffective to assist in solving the existing housing crisis and accordingly has no confidence in the government.

● (1520)

He said: Mr. Speaker, in order to give chronological order to this debate today I should like to remind the House that yesterday we moved the following motion for debate on that opposition day:

That this House do now consider the record, objectives and programs of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs in light of the urgent needs of urban Canada.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, that was a non-voting motion. Speeches were made by hon. members of all parties, but in respect of that motion the House was not called upon to make a decision. That is a result of the implementation of the new rules which removed the consideration of supply from the House of Commons and gave sole jurisdiction over estimates to the committees. Under the new rules a certain number of days are assigned to opposition motions, some of which are non-voting and some of which are voted upon. In line with what we said yesterday, today we are going to zero in on the housing crisis in Canada. In order to put this motion in chronological order I should read it:

That this House repudiates the government's $100 million Urban Demonstration Program as a diversionary tactic and clearly ineffective to assist in solving the existing housing crisis and accordingly has no confidence in the government.

In this context I should like to emphasize the word "repudiate", and the phrase "diversionary tactic". This motion calls for a vote tonight. Under the old system, when the government asked for supply a motion such as this was debated for two days with a vote taken on the second day. With the system under which we operate today I think we must not only set out our programs as positive alternatives, which we have already done, if we are to be critical, as we have been in reference to the $100 million Urban Demonstration Program, but we must defend the taxpayers of Canada by pointing out the deficiencies of the government's programs.

One of the deficiencies of this program is that, not only is the government now to spend $54,794 per day for five years on another experiment or study, but it is using this as a diversionary tactic to cover up the ineffectiveness of the minister and the government in solving the existing housing crisis in Canada. When I refer to the housing crisis, I am referring to the price of housing, the price of serviced land, and the fact that only 5 per cent of the wage earners in most of our cities today are able to buy their own homes. The minister can talk all he wants about the number of housing starts, but statistics are not what the Canadian people are looking for; they are looking for action so that they can afford to purchase shelter in accordance with their earnings, in this situation in which we have the highest level of inflation we have had for years.

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Woolliams: I heard the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) say: "Amen". Let me remind the House that yesterday the minister, in his usual manner, provided no solution at all to the ever-spiralling cost of serviced land or the ever-spiralling cost of housing. He offered no comfort to the wage earners or those people who find themselves on any type of fixed income. I think I speak clearly for my party in this regard when I say that we should not only speak in defence of the taxpayers of Canada, we should set forth positive programs designed to provide shelter at reasonable costs. We must make our suggestions match our needs.

For that reason we have moved the motion which appears today on the order paper and which you just read, Mr. Speaker. In this way we not only make our words work for the people of this country, we make our deeds work for them. We show the country just where we stand in respect of this government's program designed to solve the national housing crisis. We have moved this motion to zero in on this power spending program of the minister which definitely will not provide housing at a cost within the reach of the average income earner.

We repudiate the program of this government to spend another $100 million on another demonstration program. Yesterday I spoke about 18 studies which have been carried out in the last three years. Time does not permit me to outline them again. I suggest there have been hundreds of studies, yet we are supposed to spend another $100 million on another study of a problem in respect of which this government has been so irresponsible in its failure to find a solution. We repudiate this additional study by way of another urban demonstration program, just as we repudiate this government's irresponsibility in failing to face up to this national housing crisis. We will continue to fight this program, and we will again indicate today how we feel about this government's efforts to solve this crisis.

Yesterday we set out in no uncertain terms where we stand with reference to the government's housing policies. We have also set out clearly our policies in respect of this crisis in Canada. I was pleased to hear the minister yesterday quote with affection the Progressive Conservative housing policies. I can understand that these policies were a challenge to him as his policy is one wrapped up in statistics. He is using the old refrain we have heard over and over again. He has referred to the number of housing starts, 260,000 I think he said, but the Canadian people are not interested in statistics. I suggest they are interested in one thing, and that is homes they can afford to buy. That is the thing in which they are interested.

No amount of statistics in a white paper will solve this crisis. Yesterday we pointed out very clearly that our constitution places a responsibility on the federal government to become involved in housing programs. If that were not true there would be no job for this minister. If he does not have such a responsibility toward the Canadian people, then what is the function of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? We suggest that the constitution should be interpreted in such a way that the minister can work out with the provinces a program to expedite the development of serviced land at a reasonable cost. Confrontation with the provinces will not solve anything. We have seen confrontations between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the provinces in respect of various matters including energy, housing and freight rates. Such confrontations with the provinces will not lead to the solution of anything. I suggest that meaningful agreements and arrangements with the provinces will help to solve many of our problems.

Yesterday we talked about the establishment of a new and vigorous department of urban affairs, one as important as any other government department. We must remember that two-thirds of the population of Canada live in urban centres and that there are more people living in the cities of Montreal and Toronto than there are living in the whole of the province of Alberta, for example. Surely, when two-thirds of our people in Canada live in such concentration in large urban centres it is time for the government to face up to its responsibilities by setting up such a new department.

Yesterday we suggested that the government should repeal the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, but the minister scoffed at the idea. We now have a government spending somewhere in the neighbourhood of $22 billion a year, and we must realize that this sales tax is not one that is calculated on the old tax base. A home that cost $25,000 in the days when Walter Gordon implemented that tax, today would cost $85,000 to build. That tax is not on the old base but is on the inflationary price. Is this fair and equitable to the people of Canada? I suggest that the government cannot hide from its responsibility because it is responsible for the domestic inflation.

What has really happened has been that this runaway inflation has turned essentials into luxuries. Food, clothing and housing which are essentials today are becoming luxuries because this government lacks any creative program to solve the problem.

The government cannot hide from its responsibility. Through its economic policies the government has contributed to the high cost of housing. The minister speaks of cutting the tax on commercial buildings and shopping centres. We are concerned about cutting the tax on homes. I would remind the minister, after that frivolous and loose argument, that shopping centres sell food, clothing and other essentials to the Canadian people, so when there is a tax on the building and equipment this added cost is passed on to the consumers who buy the food, clothing and so on. Surely the minister is not a naive man. He knows that these costs are all passed on to the consumer. A glib statement like that is no defence. In fact it only substantiates that his $100 million demonstration program is a diversionary tactic.

Let me illustrate what the word "diversion" means. If one should go to a pond where there are ducks with ducklings in the spring the mother duck, in a desire to divert your attention from the ducklings, acts as if she has a broken leg or a broken wing. That is what this $100 million program is designed to do. It is intended to divert the attention of the Canadian people from the high cost of homes and the inability of Canadians to buy them. You could call it a broken wing program. We set out yesterday that a proportion of municipal residential property taxes and interest on home mortgages should be deductible from a person's taxable income to give the purchaser of a home a little break. Goodness knows, surely today he has been squeezed and has suffered too long. We spoke about the interest rates. The whole program of the government must be examined.

We had the answer by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today with reference to rolling back interest rates, so we know the situation in that regard. People can no longer afford to pay high interest rates. I dealt with this yesterday and shall not repeat it today. If other countries can encourage lending institutions to put a certain amount of money in mortgages at lower interest rates, surely we can do the same. If other countries can have a lower rate of interest, surely Canada can measure up.

The problem apparently is the result of two factors, the maximum qualifying limit of income and the maximum amount of gross income CMHC permits to be spent on housing. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will not approve a loan if a person must spend more than 25 per cent of his gross income for principal, interest and taxes. Thus the maximum price anyone can pay for a house under the plan is $26,000. This amount does not buy decent accommodation in any city, probably with one exception. Where can one buy a house today in Canada for $26,000? In some cities, as I indicated yesterday, such as Vancouver, Toronto and other large urban areas, there are lots worth $26,000. Yet yesterday the minister said these nice words:

> The government is doing everything it can to persuade provinces and municipalities to use the funds available in order to solve the housing problem and the problem with regard to price.

Since this minister took over, and the minister before him, what program has the Liberal government ever implemented to freeze the cost of housing or shelter in Canada? The minister says that he has this big pile of money ready. He says, "Come and get it". Does he suggest that any provinces or municipalities are resisting this money he has to offer? Ask the mayor of Calgary, the mayor of Vancouver, the mayor of Toronto or the mayor of Montreal. I have letters from these gentlemen. They will give you the answer with reference to the glib comments the minister made yesterday.

I agree with the statements made yesterday by many members. I wish to refer in particular to one, that of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), when on March 13 he criticized the $100 million urban demonstration program. Since he spoke about this program, what this program is all about bears repeating so that the people of Canada can understand it. We find the following in the statement by the government:

> We need to develop innovative projects to show the effective working of new methods of house design and house construction; to demonstrate the feasibility of new, low energy urban systems; to illustrate new ways of getting the utmost value from scarce and expensive natural resources by recycling for multiple use; and to apply new technology . . .

This is the study. I repeat it is a study which is costing the taxpayers $100 million, almost $55,000 per day for five years. In his speech as recorded at page 454 of Hansard the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby had this to say:

> Mr. Speaker, the program announced by the government involves wrong spending at the wrong time and in a completely wrong area. The minister said in his statement that this is a 'demonstration program designed to foster projects that will find solutions to urban problems', and that it will also provide the foundation for Canada's participation in the 1976 United Nations Conference to be held, incidentally, in the city of Vancouver.
> The minister said he wants this conference to be known as Habitat 2000.

I wondered whether he meant the year. Then, the hon. member continues:

> I suggest in all seriousness that all this program is going to mean is $100 million down the drain, . . .

The New Democratic Party says this is $100 million down the drain and I agree with that statement 100 per cent.

> . . . of no help to people in meeting housing requirements in Canada.

I endorse 100 per cent that statement by the New Democratic Party. I wish to refer to another statement, one made by a very knowledgeable member to whom I listen on many occasions with reference to housing. This is what the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) had to say and I agree with his comments. This appears at page 820 of Hansard for March 25:

> For months we have seen housing costs, including cost of land, mortgage interest rates and building materials, reach their highest peak and, in fact, become the highest costing component in the cost of living index across this country.
> What has the Minister of State for Urban Affairs done, Mr. Speaker? He has done nothing. I looked at the Speech from the Throne but there was not one word about the housing problem in Canada.

Let me pause there for a few moments because of the words used by the hon. member for Broadview. Yesterday the minister spoke with great affection about the Speech from the Throne. It really did not say anything. The hon. member for Broadview continues:

> There was not one mention of bringing forth legislation to deal with the housing problem. All he has done has been to make a statement last week with regard to an urban demonstration program, spending, as my hon. friend from Calgary North has said, $100 million over a period of five years.

● (1540)

Then, he came to the great crunch. The NDP member made a statement which I endorse when he said:

> All these measures are like giving a starving elephant a peanut.

My answer to that is: what a big elephant and what a small peanut!

The minister spoke with great affection about the Speech from the Throne. The Liberals are fond of the word "rhetoric". Yesterday, every one of them used the word "rhetoric" as if they had just found it. It must have been the first time they found it in the dictionary. I want to give you an example of real rhetoric. I call as my witness the Speech from the Throne. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, this is what it said. There is only one small paragraph in the Speech from the Throne in reference to housing.

An hon. Member: And it's about sewers.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: I agree with the hon. member, it is all about sewers. This program will mean $100 million down the sewer, down the drain. This is what the Speech from the Throne said. They are tremendous words. It is true rhetoric, and it reads as follows:

> Provision of adequate shelter at reasonable prices in a satisfactory neighbourhood environment has been a continuing concern of the government,—

The people of Canada are not concerned about the concern of the government; they are concerned about action, about implementation of the program of the government. We know the government is sorry; we know they love power, and we know that their sympathy runs to the degree of power they want, and they want a whole lot of power. We know all that. The paragraph goes on:

> —and levels of funding to meet this objective are being reviewed.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what it is costing the Canadian people to review them? It is costing $100 million, $55,000 every day for five years for a review. The government says that they wish to defend the taxpayers of Canada with such a program. The ministers asked why we did not listen to the Speech from the Throne. The paragraph goes on to read:

> Substantial assistance to rural and native housing programs will also be proposed.

We had a statement on that and we found it to be another lot of rhetoric.

> The sewage assistance program will be revised—

Does that mean that sewers will be made larger, smaller or will be extended?

> —to make it more effective as a means to increase the supply of serviced land. The government will introduce measures to increase the protection available to consumers in the housing market.

It did not take me very long to sum that up. That is what the minister spoke about. It was all in the Speech from the Throne. Every day the cost of housing goes up. I can bring to your attention every day, as someone else in the House did, the cost of housing in some cities which has gone up by 30 per cent. Yesterday I spoke about a house which eight years ago cost $25,000 and now costs $85,000. Serviced land continues to increase in price. Yet, as the NDP said, we are pouring $100 million down the drain. That is why we repudiate the government and we repudiate this plan as being totally diversionary. It is a tactic on the part of the government to cover up something for which they have no solution, that is, galloping inflation. The necessities of men and women in Canada today have become luxuries, and this is caused by lack of control of domestic inflation. One of the top priorities should be to look after the essentials of the average man in Canada. Those essentials have now become luxuries.

Analysing what was said in the Speech from the Throne, one finds that the government has no solution for the national housing crisis and finds no way to ease the burden of the purchaser, of the average person on a small or fixed income. As you watch this government day by day, you find that it is paralyzed and unable to do anything; it is bankrupt of ideas. Do I need to say any more except to ask every member of the House to support this motion? I ask that every member of the House, wherever he may sit, to search his own conscience and to condemn this spending of $100 million, and tonight by deed instead of words show the government of Canada that he stands with the people of Canada and the representatives of Canada in this House.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House states, in the words of the hon. member who has just sat down, that the urban demonstration program and the supporting fund of $100 million that I announced some two weeks ago is a diversionary tactic. Having now listened to the hon. member twice in two days, which is almost too much, I can only say that we are having a motion on diversionary tactics written by an expert in diversion.

I regret very much the reaction of the hon. member and of other hon. members in the House to my announcement of two weeks ago. It may well have resulted from the timing of the announcement which could have been made on a much better day. It may have resulted from the nature of the announcement two weeks ago about the urban demonstration fund. However, the reason may be that the philosophy of the Official Opposition is to oppose change and to oppose innovation and improvement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Their reaction may well be a deliberate misinterpretation of my statement two weeks ago, and I challenge the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) to read that statement again and to clear up his own obvious and deliberate misconception about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Finally, I believe that there is a misunderstanding among some members of the House and some members of the media, based on an honest misconception of what the urban demonstration program and fund are expected to accomplish, and it is to that honest misunderstanding and misconception that I want to address my remarks today.

First, the demonstration program is not another research program. I state unequivocally here today that it is not a five year research binge, as the hon. member described it; it is not intended to fund research projects and it will not fund them. I believe the hon. member for Calgary North and also the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) were concerned that this was a research project. If the program and the fund were intended for such purposes they would not have had my support. I agree with what one hon. member said, that we have been researched to death in this country. Our urban problems call for action and not for further research. The demonstration program and fund are intended to support such action. They are for real projects with real answers to real problems.

Second, the demonstration program is not a study program, and I challenge the hon. member for Calgary North to find the word "study" in that statement or any other statement that has been issued in relation to the program. We have had an over abundance of urban studies in this country, I agree.

Mr. Hellyer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: One of my problems—some of it contributed by the hon. member opposite who has just yelled "hear, hear"—is sifting through the various studies and the welters of paper in order to develop policies.

● (1550)

Third, Mr. Speaker, the demonstration program is not a gimmick, as the hon. member suggests, devised solely for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements. Probably a few projects from the program will be advanced for this important international conference, but the goal of the program is Canadian projects which are solving real Canadian problems, or can be made to solve Canadian problems. The program is designed to benefit communities across Canada, regardless of size and regardless of location, on an equitable geographical basis.

Where the hon. member for Calgary North's absolute misconception is obviously apparent lies in the fact that the demonstration program is not a substitute, and is not put forward as a substitute for a housing program. The expenditure of $20 million in the fiscal year 1975, which does not start until next spring, or in 1976, 1977, 1978 or 1979 clearly would have no visible impact at all on our immediate housing needs.

Mr. Woolliams: Of course, it wouldn't.

Mr. Basford: The hon. member makes a great deal of that. This shows his total misconception of the objectives. For the opposition to suggest that we devote project funds of this scale to our housing needs would be laughable if it did not indicate a total lack of perception and understanding. This year in this country we will be spending over $6 billion on housing alone, apart from other urban matters such as transportation. The federal government's contribution to that expenditure will be about $1¼ billion. Those are actual federal dollars being spent in the calendar year 1974 for housing and related projects and programs.

As one newspaper, the Globe and Mail, commented editorially, it is time to use ideas that are on the table, to get good ideas off the shelf and implemented. That is the express purpose of this fund. It has been my experience, and the experience of others, that this country is full of good ideas to solve many urban problems, housing problems, transportation problems and others. But it takes an injection of government leadership and government cash to get those ideas and solutions off the table, to use the words of the Globe and Mail, and into operation, into bricks and mortar. That is what this program is for, and that is what the fund will finance. It will finance action on ideas, action to reduce costs, action on projects, action to make good ideas workable, action to put two or more ideas together into a better solution to urban problems, action to show new ways of doing things, or ways of adapting existing methods to new demands—in short, action to implement, in every region across Canada, solutions to the problems facing Canadian communities.

I admit to being surprised and disconcerted by the reaction which greeted my announcement of the demonstration program and its supporting fund, but not for the reasons advanced in the House by members of the Conservative party. This demonstration program, Mr. Speaker, can be put to immediate, practical implementation in every region of the country, and in communities of every size. I reiterate that there are many programs, and many projects and ideas which can use the "lift-off"—a word coined by the present generation—that can be generated by this fund and this program.

For example, Mr. Speaker, I have visited the city of Vernon in British Columbia, as has the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), a city which has shown great leadership in developing a new way of removing not 90 per cent, not 95 per cent, not 98 per cent of the effluent from its sewer system flowing into the beautiful Okanagan water basin, but of removing 100 per cent, thereby producing a method of preserving in perpetuity the complete purity of that water. The city needs some financial support and I have committed support to it. I only hope that when the Leader of the Opposition goes to Vernon, for the fourth time this year, he will inform the mayor of Vernon that the Conservative party is opposed to that kind of project, to that kind of real work being done on an Okanagan problem.

We have talked a lot in this House about Metis and native housing, and about the need to solve the housing problems of those people. The hon. member ridiculed my statement the other day, my statement which was well received by the leaders of that group. One thing the native and Metis associations say in all their briefs is that they need financial support in the northern prairies, in Northern Ontario and in Northern British Columbia to build houses designed not for Toronto or Winnipeg, but houses suitable for the north, using local labour and local products.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: I hope the Conservative party will point out to Tony Belcourt and the other native leaders that that party is opposed to their using this kind of program.

There are proposals for the complete redevelopment of many of the waterfront areas in Canada, for example of the waterfront in the city of Halifax. Without going into the details of the project or referring to private participation in that program and the roles of the various governments, may I say it seems to me that if we can take the heart of Halifax and redevelop that waterfront in a new and better way, then we should do it. We should give the project every possible encouragement and support. I only hope that the next time the Leader of the Opposition is in Halifax he will tell the mayor that he is opposed to that kind of approach to the problems in the city of Halifax, or for that matter in the city of Vancouver, where we have somewhat the same proposal in mind.

In my speech yesterday I talked about new methods of dealing with human waste disposal. I hope to have, in operation, in the city of Toronto by the end of 1974, not in some professor's laboratory but in a real building in the city of Toronto, one of these new methods which, if successful, as I am convinced it will be, could reduce the cost of a serviced lot in Metro Toronto, or anywhere else, by several thousands of dollars. Now, I am delighted to have it on the record that the Conservative party is opposed to seeking these kinds of solutions to our housing and urban problems.

We have passed legislation in this House to provide government leadership and support for the repair and rehabilitation of older core areas in our cities and towns. This will require the imaginative use of that land. Municipal leaders all across the country have plans to go into these older areas and construct low density housing quarters in them. That is the kind of project that could be supported under the demonstration program, to show mayors and councils how to redevelop the older cores of their cities. But the Conservative party is opposed to that kind of approach.

The other day the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby spoke to me about relocation of the airport in Oshawa and converting it into 600 acres of residential land. Yesterday I met with an Oshawa planner in Toronto and discussed this project with him. I have instructed my officials to look into this situation. There are transportation difficulties and financial difficulties but if we can solve them, and if by the use of imagination we can show how to relocate an airport and use that land for residential purposes, surely that is the kind of experimental project, the kind of innovative project we should be supporting. Therefore I hope for the support of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to this kind of approach.

Each Canadian is the producer of one ton of garbage annually. Perhaps the figure is higher on the opposite side of the House. That amount is increasing year by year, and conventional land fill sites are being moved farther and farther outside city boundaries, to the disgust of city taxpayers and rural residents. The garbage can be pulverized and burned, which not only reduces it to a small residue but provides steam power which can be sold by municipalities. This is another demonstration project that needs to be considered. Hon. members opposite laughed at that suggestion but yesterday in the debate the same suggestion came from the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), who said this is one of the urban problems in this country which must be solved.

● (1600)

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member over there—

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Basford: —in the official opposition, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and others, are aware that the current housing programs of this government will produce 250,000 units or more of housing in this period 1974.

An hon. Member: At what price?

Mr. Basford: The demonstration program and fund are intended to complement that, to support it, to extend what we are doing in housing and the broader field of urban affairs. It is intended to generate solutions to transit problems, to environmental problems, to energy problems and so forth. It is a program of action to generate solutions, just as our housing program is action to generate new and better housing and greater access to housing for all Canadians.

In his speech, the hon. member sought the support of all members of the House for this motion, sought the support of the New Democratic Party and of the Social Credit Party. The group sitting opposite is the official opposition, thirsting and salivating for power. They have put forward a motion that is a subterfuge, a silly parliamentary strategy designed for no other purpose than to embarrass me and the other parties in this House.

An hon. Member: That is impossible!

Mr. Basford: It seems to me that members of the New Democratic Party and of the Social Credit Party are interested in motions that will show the money for housing legislation that is being passed to provide—

An hon. Member: You missed a bit!

Mr. Basford: —housing in this country. This motion, Mr. Speaker, will not add one red cent to housing in 1974. This year we are budgeting $1¼ billion for housing. This motion, even if it passed, would not add one red cent to that program.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, raises no money for housing in 1974; this Conservative motion, Mr. Speaker, proposes not to build one house in 1974; this motion, Mr. Speaker, that we are asked to vote for and which would result in bringing down the government, does not even propose to build one house. Surely, the members of this House in all parties are entitled, rather than that kind of subterfuge, to a motion setting forth the policy of this group which claims it is entitled to be the government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, they have just been bragging that they had a great meeting ten days ago in which their policies were determined. Yet, two weeks or ten days after that meeting they are not able to set down in this House by way of a motion of no-confidence, a constructive alternative housing program for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I see I am getting to hon. members opposite who are becoming extremely noisy. They wave a document called "Prepared for the Challenge" which the spokesman for the party called his policy statement. Yesterday another hon. member was quick to point out tnat it was not a policy statement but only discussion papers, some parts of which were stolen from the policy of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Yesterday, this group that is unable to offer a constructive alternative housing program by way of a motion, through the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn), criticized and ridiculed the various programs for housing that I am going to talk about in a moment. Only ten months ago he voted for those programs. I remind him that he voted, as did the Conservative Party, for amendments to the National Housing Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Yet last night they got up and ridiculed the repair and rehabilitation and the assisted home ownership programs as well as other programs that are now beginning to come into effect. The vote of the hon. member for Mississauga is obviously not worth a tinker's damn. Obviously, he means nothing when he rises solemnly in his place and votes, like the rest of them over there, for a piece of legislation and criticizes it afterwards.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) said last night that the trouble with housing is too much government interference. Then, he said that we should have regional land banks in the country. We already have federal-provincial land banks, land assembly programs and now federal-municipal land banking programs. They want to complicate that with a third tier of regional land banks but I am not sure for what purpose. Let us first make sure that the existing provisions apply.

In addition, the hon. member for Calgary North is opposed to my proposal for a demonstration fund. He says it is a research program, but it is not. But even the projects I have mentioned are mentioned in their own programs. In the document "Prepared for the Challenge"—Housing and Urban Affairs" appears the following:

> . . . an examination of improved methods of handling refuse collection and disposal in our large metropolitan areas.

Obviously, their program is to study and research those things but not to have any money to implement them. In another section their program refers to developing new ways of providing "pollution free rapid transit systems". More study and research on rapid transit systems without any money to implement the solutions! That is a great party but it is certainly not ready to take office tonight—or any other time.

We have had two days debate on housing and that is a good thing because it smoked out the Tories as not standing for anything or, when they do, standing for totally conflicting ideas.

Yesterday I outlined in detail the government's housing program at page 824 of Hansard. This government has introduced far reaching legislation, has given effect to more new housing assistance programs, and in recent years has built more housing than any other Canadian government.

I would remind hon. members of the recent amendments to the National Housing Act which provided for more assistance than ever before to low and moderate income people who enjoy the kind of housing they need, either as tenants or owners or supporters of non-profit or co-operative organizations. These programs are now coming into effect and every day more and more Canadians are applying them to their needs. For example, in the assisted home ownership program, even without change, I would expect some 18,000 families to benefit this year.

In terms of the capital available to minimum cost, non-profit community groups and co-operatives which are prepared to acquire or build low rental housing for the use of their neighbours, including the elderly and those on fixed incomes, this government is running, through those amendments and its budget, the most generous, forward looking and progressive support program for the elderly that this country has ever seen. This act provides that the non-profit housing groups which are building senior citizens' housing, have more complete legislative, financial and administrative support. We are continuing to provide public housing to those people who find it the best solution for their needs and we are continuing to improve this kind of housing, physically and socially. Last year we committed $173 million to this program. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) asked about this today in the question period. Mr. Speaker, I have a meeting with the provincial minister in British Columbia to discuss that and other issues on Friday afternoon and to deal with some of the problems out there.

I will have to rush to complete my remarks in time. The neighbourhood improvement program is now under way, coupled with the rehabilitation and repair program of going back into older neighbourhoods, revitalizing, using and re-using the housing stock that is in those areas.

I mentioned earlier the statement I made on rural and native housing programs by which we will help people to build or acquire up to 50,000 housing units in the next five years on terms which even the poorest will be able to afford. I intend to discuss starting Thursday night, with all of the provinces the implementation of that program to ensure that those targets can be realized so that we can get going for this summer's construction season.

Hon. members are familiar with the initiatives we have undertaken. I repeat them here for the benefit of those who are fond of saying that we have done nothing and have no policy. These measures are giving more assistance to more Canadians to acquire more and different kinds of good housing than ever before.

In addition to those policies which are obviously aimed at the question of distribution of housing, how do you give greater access to housing to those with difficulties? I, like other hon. members, welcomed the statement made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) this morning as to the extension of the Veterans Land Act which will be introduced into this House very shortly. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, we have to keep this parliament going in order to pass my colleague's very good legislation. Those are programs aimed at the redistribution of housing. They are aimed at the distribution problem.

One of the problems in this and in other countries is that most of the building industry and development industry has consistently been building expensive housing, housing for the top part of the market rather than for the middle and bottom parts. Government policies must not only be aimed at pumping government money directly into housing, as we are doing in unprecedented amounts, over $1 billion, but also aimed at getting the builders of this country to respond to the needs of the average Canadian in ways they have never done before with modest accommodation at modest cost.

One way is through the assisted home ownership program which is aimed directly at assisting people in income ranges of up to $12,000 per year by reducing the monthly payment on principle, interest and taxes and reducing interest to an effective rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. Grafftey: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: The hon. member's province uses the program widely. The price levels for houses covered by the assisted home ownership program and the income levels to be assisted were set for the first time under this new program some 12 months ago. We have now had experience with the program. It is working in many markets. Hon. members, even in yesterday's debate, complained that it is not working in some market areas across Canada. Having had the experience we have had, we are now able to reassess the program.

I have said that priorities will be given in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation programs and budget to those areas where the housing market is the most difficult. This applies to the assisted home ownership program and in those markets such as Toronto, Vancouver and Ottawa where the housing market is the tightest. We must assess the levels of support, the levels of income and the price levels of the assisted home ownership program in order to make sure it will work in the hardest markets such as Toronto, Vancouver and Ottawa and give them priority. We intend to use the assisted home ownership budget of over one quarter billion dollars to assist those in greatest difficulty and as a means of getting builders to respond to the needs of lower and middle levels of the housing market in ways they have not done before.

Second, through the National Housing Act and other lending agencies, we have endeavoured over the years to provide financing to the builders of lower and modest priced housing. The various lending requirements set out under different lending statutes have not been examined for some time. I have asked for a review of loan-levels, loan amounts, downpayment requirements and other regulations to determine the changes that should be made to slow down high cost and luxury construction and, by way of both the carrot and the stick, get lenders aiming more resources at low and moderate priced housing.

In today's question period, the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) asked whether I would simply raise the lending limit of CMHC above $30,000. I do not think that is the sole answer, but I can understand it coming from members opposite who want their builders to be able to get bigger loans. The last time that was done, the building spokesman—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but the time allotted to him has expired. He can, however, continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should say at the outset that if my voice begins to falter during the course of my remarks, it has nothing to do with the intensity of political debate in the House today, but very much to do with the medical fact that I have the flu and a temperature hovering around 100 degrees. I just say that in advance.

The motion before us basically has two important parts to it. One concerns the program announced by the minister two weeks ago tomorrow, the urban demonstration program. The other is the more general question concerning the adequacy of the government's housing program. In the course of my remarks, I want to say something about both.

It is important to be aware in this House that there is, in terms of commitment, an acceptance on the part of the New Democratic Party that housing has to be established now and has to be done at the federal level to ensure that it has a national foundation. Housing has to be established as a basic right of Canadian citizenship in the way that, after some serious years of work and development, education many decades ago and more recently medicare were established as basic rights for all citizens. We begin on that assumption and then ask how we have to deal with the economy in any given situation to ensure that that assumption can be fulfilled.

Mr. Yewchuk: Say something useful.

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member says, say something useful. That brilliant, incisive repartee came from a member to my right. I listened to the official spokesman for the Conservative party two days in a row and heard nothing but highly convoluted rhetoric. There was not one systematic demonstration of any thinking that supposedly went on at his party's convention just over a week ago, where presumably they developed an urban affairs program. There was no outline of what that party intends to do. I say to my hon. friend, with all the modesty I can muster, will he kindly shut up and listen to what I have to say. Perhaps he will learn something about social philosophy and, related to that, something about what the hell can be done in terms of practical reality in Canada. Our party takes both of those objectives seriously. I know it is difficult for a Conservative to understand that kind of approach in politics, but I ask him to be patient and at least allow an exponent of that view to have his say.

● (1620)

As I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted in such a silly fashion, our party begins with the assumption that we have to organize our economy to ensure that a right to housing is established for all Canadians. I should like to refer to a series of articles which appeared some four weeks ago in the New Yorker magazine, hardly a paragon of socialist thought. They were written by a man named Goodwin who raises this subject in a most serious, imaginative and coherent way. He deals with the kind of question I am trying to raise about housing. What he says in terms of all our human priorities, and he is speaking as a thoughtful American, is that the economy has got out of control, totally beyond the control of individual action. What he called for, in his pessimistic conclusion, was a reinjection of action from below, right outside the political sphere, the ultimate objective being that people should get control of the economic system to provide for the kind of social objectives which our community so badly needs. Hon. members to my right in the Conservative Party continue, of course, in their merry 18th Century way, with the exception of two or three honourable and thoughtful members. The rest of them still come out with notions which I thought had disappeared a decade after Adam Smith. So much for a rhetorical reaction to a rhetorical outburst.

The approach to housing by both the government and the Conservative party has been essentially to tinker with the market system. That has been the overriding approach to meeting this social objective. It would be as absurd as to have used such an approach to solve our education needs, or to have taken that approach during the debates on medicare in the 'fifties and 'sixties. We gave it up then, we took those areas of the life out of the market system, but the old parties still want to leave housing within that framework and under the control of the market economy. I think that when you begin with such an assumption you begin with a fundamental error which will have a significant impact on all the "practical" proposals you make as a government or as an official opposition.

I do not intend to trot out all the statistical information which was provided by myself during my contribution in the debate on the Address, and, indeed, provided by other members in my party as well as members of other parties in recent weeks—

Mr. Gilbert: The Tories did not bother to speak on housing in that debate.

Mr. Broadbent: That's right. The Conservative party offered no spokesman on housing during the debate on the Address. I shall not document what has been documented by myself and others in recent weeks here. The fact is, we have housing crisis of very significant proportions, particularly in urban Canada, partly because we now find the post world war two babies coming on to the housing market. We had them in terms of a crisis in elementary schools and we had them at the high school level a few years ago, we had them at the university level and now they are married and having children of their own so they are on the housing market creating a problem the like of which we have not seen before in housing. It will get worse during the next few years. What is required?

Let me just mention at this point the project, Urban Demonstration. Is this what is required to deal with that kind of crisis? Do we need to spend $100 million to do even what the minister has outlined today? I will just go back a bit on that. When the minister came into the House two weeks ago tomorrow and made his announcement on a day when we had just been reminded once again of the escalation in the cost of living, he said nothing about what the real details of that program were to be. He provided us with not one whit of information of the kind he outlined in his speech this afternoon. So I, for one, am somewhat reassured that the objectives of that $100 million program are in principle good ones, and I would say that at least in principle the $100 million program is a good one now. Two weeks ago I thought, in terms of what the minister himself had said, in terms of the limited information we were given in this House, it was going to be money wasted.

But I want to add immediately that in terms of our priorities in allocating $100 million, it is still my judgment that it is the wrong spending at the wrong time and for the wrong program. I do not retract that judgment. I do modify the statement I made that I thought the spending was going to be totally wasted. I do not think it will be totally wasted. I simply think, in terms of meeting the pressing problem, we need to spend in other areas. What are those other areas?

It seems to me this is where we do not need further research. We do not need more projects or demonstrations of any kind. The areas in which we have to act are those of interest rates and land, very traditional areas. Nothing innovative in terms of ideas is required, but something innovative in terms of cutting into our economic structure is required. That is why neither the Conservative Party nor the Liberal Party has been prepared up to this point to move in the required direction. I can certainly speak with considerable assurance about the Conservative Party because I have read their program on housing, though I am still not sure if it constitutes official policy or not. Apparently the Conservatives hold conventions and pass resolutions but they do not have the force of policy, which is certainly convenient. Anyway, the statement on housing and urban matters which emerged from that convention had nothing substantial to say in terms of dealing with the interest rate question or the land question, both of which make up the guts of the housing problem for Canadians today. They by-passed them completely.

The present government with its batch of programs passed by the House last year made a significant start in the right direction and all parties in the House supported those programs. But it is now 1974, and we can see that average and low-income people particularly in urban Canada are simply not benefitting. Eighty per cent of Canadians in urban Canada get no benefit from the urban programs which were passed by parliament last year. It is this category of person we need to be dealing with now in terms of further legislative change.

What can be done? I will say what can be done immediately at the federal level. It requires 30 seconds of repetition; it has been said by me many times. First, change the Bank Act and other federal financial legislation to make it mandatory that our financial institutions put up at no profit and indeed, in that section of their investment at current rates of interest, at some loss, mortgage money at 6 per cent for housing. We say that without hesitation, Mr. Speaker, because we believe that the financing of housing should be a social obligation. We need money to enable people to get homes to live in, just as we need money to build schools and to finance medicare. We cannot have human existence dictated to or controlled by a market system that makes it impossible, because of the interest rate structure, for ordinary people to derive these benefits. Therefore, we say that we must direct our financial institutions to make available mortgage money at 6 per cent.

Secondly, in terms of land banking, if the minister does want to take some action within the next few weeks or months, I know that some 50,000 acres of quick start land is available. The officials in his own department conducted a study, presumably for the minister, which revealed that in 15 urban areas of Canada there are 50,000 acres of available land for housing. With provincial agreement the minister could acquire these 50,000 acres and put up some 250,000 housing units. Then, not because this is a fantastically new idea, but because it is an innovation in the structure and the history of housing construction in Canada, these 50,000 acres should be retained under public ownership, with the houses only being sold.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Doing this would cut the cost of these 250,000 units by anywhere from $8,000 to $12,000 per unit. This saving in cost would be retained in perpetuity, because the person who buys one of these units would not be free to sell it on the open market; rather he would have to sell it back to the original housing authority for the original price he paid, with some allowance for inflation, any improvements he might have made to the unit, and with no capital gains tax being applicable. I say that this is a direct and useful concrete proposal that is more feasible than any we have heard in two days of wind from the Conservative party. If the government of Canada would like to act in a meaningful way to deal with the housing problem, then it could do so by adopting this idea.

In this particular area of policy the British Columbia government has already set an important precedent. This has been done essentially in the city of Kamloops, where 45 acres of land has been given to the city on the condition that the land is kept under public ownership and houses are erected on the site. This saves the new occupiers of those housing units $10,000 to $12,000 a unit. This is the kind of practical, innovative action that is required. This is the kind of change that we need in land policy, with the government acting as a large developer. We also need a change in the policies of our financial institutions so we can deal in a substantial way with interest rates.

This brings me, then, to the basic question: Do we at this time, over a $100 million item, decide that we must bring down the government tonight? It has already been indicated that if we did so, the VLA legislation which is required would not be introduced later this week, and this is a factor not to be dismissed. However, I am not speaking on the VLA matter, I am speaking about housing, and I want to deal exclusively with the argument in those terms. In the judgment of the New Democratic Party, the two areas requiring action—that is to say, land speculation in terms of taxation changes, and whatever innovation may be expected in terms of interest rates—are both budgetary items. What we are saying is that it would be wrong on this particular motion to bring down the government on housing policy. We do not say that the government's housing policy, as I have made clear in general terms this afternoon and as I outlined in greater detail two or three weeks ago, is by any means adequate. We intend between now and the date of the budget to continue to press, to badger, to cajole this government into taking appropriate action to deal with housing in the budget. If no appropriate action is taken by then, then the House can watch our vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take a few moments to comment on the motion of the Progressive Conservative Party. I congratulate the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) who introduced it.

In my opinion, this is a very current issue since the federal government, through the Ministry of Urban Affairs, does not seem to have met the legitimate expectations of Canadians as concerns housing. Several programs have been introduced by this government since 1968. But they have only taken care of the most pressing problems. In many cases, because of their complexity, they have even impeded housing developments in Canada, which has caused an increase in the number of homeless people, who are still waiting for a roof over their heads, and a home of their own. In Canada, it would be normal that everyone have his own house, even the poorest people.

● (1640)

In the last five or six years, many studies have been made to establish who should own a house, who should get the money required to buy one, and should be granted a loan to do so.

That question, Mr. Speaker, is twofold: First, is housing an absolute necessity; and, must the necessity to have a house serve to make the rich grow richer?

Mr. Speaker, in the last few years, especially since family housing has been encouraged, the demand having grown considerably, it seems increasing efforts are being made to promote construction; loan companies have taken advantage of the situation, with the blessing of the government and especially that of the Department of Finance, to increase interest rates, which has resulted in increasing considerably the income of loan companies.

I congratulate the former speaker, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) who spoke of housing loans at rates exceeding 5, 5.5 and 6 per cent. No homeowner, no average man or worker can afford the luxury of paying a higher rate of interest. I cannot insist on this too much. I would even go so far as to say that municipalities, which also borrow from trust companies to service lands, for sewers, waterworks, paving, streets, should be financed through a bank act, or else the government should give the provinces the money required to finance thoses services, that their cost not fall back on the new owners.

Mr. Speaker, municipal services are now very costly. For instance, the town planner who draws up plans now charges $20 per 65 by 100 lot in new developments. The surveyor charges $80; sewers, water mains, asphalting and sidewalks cost $75 per lineal foot; that means $4,525 for two owners, one on each side of the street. It therefore costs $2,262.50 to each owner. The municipality must be reimbursed that amount over 20 years at a rate of 9.75 per cent, which again means $254.80 for each owner. If an owner pays $325 or $328 in school and municipal taxes for a detached house valued at $17,500, he has to pay much more than $500 in taxes for those services. Mr. Speaker, this represents some $50 a month. It is impossible for a man to purchase a house and pay only $50 a month for services and taxes. Considering the costs of a loan from a financial institution or the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at 9 3/8 per cent and if the purchaser has paid $2,000 or $2,500, he has bought a house which he will never own, because he will never live long enough to pay his house. Unless his conditions change, he never has any bad luck and things always go quite well he will never pay his house. He might say, I bought a house and after four or five years I got tired of it and I sold it because the facts show that nearly 100 per cent of houses are resold within the first seven years. The owner is tired of it because he thought he had bought a house of his own but at a certain moment he woke up and realized he was supporting trust companies.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, interest rates increased from 83/4 per cent to 9 7/8 per cent, not including the increase of ¼ of 1 per cent soon to be announced. If it remains at 9 7/8 per cent, including life insurance mortgage coverage, it is obvious irrespective of any study program the hon. minister might come up with that no progress will ever be made. It is impossible, there is nothing to do but to go around in circles.

I congratulate the minister and his cabinet colleagues for making available $100 million to Central Mortgage and Housing to innovate and look for solutions. The minister said earlier this was not a research program but I do not agree with the minister because surely part of that $100 million must be for research.

He also said he expected about twenty building programs to be set up and prototype assessments to be made to improve the construction system. I congratulate him for that. But I feel there is a loophole in his statement when he says it is difficult to promote and support innovation. That money will allow for various initiatives to be made incorporating desirable innovations that are impracticable without this additional support. Therefore, I ask that this fund come under no existing federal program but that it be rather used on a discretionary basis, according to situations and circumstances.

The minister should explain, however, what he means by the word "discretionary". Does he mean existing projects at the finishing or completion stage of development or new projects that will set aside for "discretionary" action?

Moreover, the minister intends to administer the program and the fund in such a way as to emphasize innovation as much as possible. I quite agree on this point. I believe that within the next five years, this initial investment of $100 million will give rise to a wide range of projects worth much more. I agree with the minister because when one refers to the studies whose findings were made public in December 1970, special studies on housing, and in view of the fact that since 1970, developments have not been occurring as fast as they should have in the construction area in order to build houses for those who need them, I think that there is an urgent need, as the minister said, for us to find new outlets or new ways of financing new projects.

This study conducted in 1973 and made public by the former Minister of Transport, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), was very well done, and I hope that the minister will refer to it. If he has read it already, he will read it again in order to understand it fully and to improve this situation. This study deals with city slums. If you went about for a few days during the parliamentary recess and looked into the investments guaranteed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in big cities, you would be frightened, Mr. Speaker.

● (1650)

With our money, with the taxpayers' money, they demolish houses which still seem pretty good instead of repairing them. After they are demolished, those houses are replaced by 25-, 30- or 40-storeyed skycrapers with small rooms of barely 8 feet by 9, or 9 feet by 12. As far as windows are concerned, sometimes there is only one or none at all, for lack of space.

Such is the situation in Toronto and in downtown Montreal and Winnipeg. By the way, Mr. Speaker, the Montreal financiers who managed to start a project sponsored under the CMHC urban renewal program or the federal-provincial urban renewal scheme had some very good houses torn down on Dorchester Boulevard in Montreal. That is where you come from, Mr. Speaker, you must be aware of that. What are they doing with these properties now? Nothing at all. For lack of funds, these financiers who own the land are doing nothing, because the City of Montreal made other plans. Even if they do nothing, they still own these properties. What are they waiting for? They are waiting for the prices to go up. They wait till they can build skyscrapers and make profits. And all that with our money.

This must change. First there is need, I think, for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to gain nearly complete control over investments. I mean that large financing institutions like banks and trusts, having their headquarters in cities—as the Montreal Trust and the Royal Trust in Montreal or Toronto—endeavour as much as possible to make important loans to large cities.

Within a few years, we will come to the stage now reached in New York. Everybody had to invest there. People are so stupid they will all stay in New York, so huddled together that it is impossible to walk in the streets because of crowds. The very same situation exists in Montreal.

Through government and according to financial guidelines given to him, the minister should forbid the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to approve such projects in order to protect man against himself. There should be no community so big that pollution and many other problems would fall upon us tomorrow.

The minister has indicated a moment ago that sewers were a source of problems in the cities, and I understand him. The way things are going, they can only become worse. All investments are made in the cities, nothing is left for rural areas. Many excuses are given to rural communities. However, there is air, nice lands, space to build to one's content. People can make gardens, grow flowers, and lead adequate lives. But this is met with numerous objections. Does everybody work in this region? Is employment stable?

I think most people nowadays forget that cars make it easy to commute 25 or 30 miles to work. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the minister's $100 million expenses, for I think that he has made extraordinary efforts to pull the government out of the present housing dilemma.

I hope he will continue in this way to improve the situation of the less fortunate so that one day they may find adequate housing at a reasonable price.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, ever since this minority government has been in power, this House has been given strange shows on many occasions. It has sometimes been funny, and even fascinating at times. Once more, today, we get a first rate performance. The official opposition has indicated to the government, on behalf of the people of Canada, that it is to blame for wasting a sum of $100 million. A few weeks ago, the whole opposition was unanimous in making this kind of criticism against the government.

But a few minutes ago the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), who had personally violently criticized the government, spoke on behalf of his party and reconsidered his opinion, declaring that he will manage to cast a confidence vote for the government tonight, and he said: Wait till the presentation of the budget, and watch our vote.

Well, that was another clownish somersault to which we are getting used, but not the Canadian people. When those members vote tonight, of course, there will be a huge burst of laughter in the House, which will be heard all across Canada. Those members too, along with the government, will have lost the confidence of Canadians. We were also treated to a show by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) who is a nice, easy-going fellow who has all our sympathy today. We felt that he was noticeably embarrassed, ill at ease, confused, and for good reason, faced with the almost impossible mission of bringing before Parliament a policy that did not even exist, of justifying before the Parliament the activities of a government which, in the particular area of inflation, has completely failed.

Mr. Speaker, I was shocked right at the start to hear the minister complain along these lines: It is not the government that does not understand anything, it is not the government that is falling short of the target. And he explains that the misunderstanding and the ignorance of the press and the opposition are to blame for every thing. According to the minister, the press and the opposition are the ones who did not understand the great works planned by the government; it is right while everybody else is out of step.

Mr. Speaker, we had grown accustomed to such behaviour and wranglings from the government for some time. Today during the question period we had another example of the internal fights among the ministers who do not care about solidarity and are not pulling together. We were getting used to that. But today there is something else. When the minister admitted being unable to solve the housing problems of the country, he joined the ranks of all the other ministers who confessed their failures in the fields of transportation, communications, energy.

Mr. Speaker, we heard some rather extraordinary confessions recently. Those people got it off their chests, they made a clean breast of it all, they owned up to the whole country to being unable to solve the problems, they say they lacked the necessary means of powers and they should be forgiven for the failure since 1968. The situation reminds me of what happened at one point in the USSR where, after Stalin's death, everyone said to the population: Forgive us our mistakes, we shall not repeat them, we are now entering a new era.

● (1700)

Mr. Speaker, when I see the ministers contriving, it reminds me of a government of streakers which has become a household word. The members of the cabinet have pre-eminently become streakers. As streakers, they have stripped off their clothes, which are ideas, imagination and decisions. Thus divested, they do not even command attention and still less, Mr. Speaker, gain the confidence of the Canadian people.

Therefore it is against this background associated with the deplorable attitude of the government which saddens most of us, that we are going to consider its housing record.

The number of housing units for rent in Montreal for example, and elsewhere in Canada, based on—

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I think the minister is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Basford: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I listened with great interest to the hon. member speaking for the Conservative Party, but I hope by his remarks he was not suggesting I was streaking in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: Not al all, Mr. Speaker, it is mere fancy! But if it can comfort the minister, I would tell him that the way he showed who he really is is nothing compared to the moral strip off of the New Democratic members who supported the idea, but who decided this evening to vote against it.

Mr. Speaker, I was just saying that the number of units for rent was decreasing in Montreal and in other parts of the country. Today, the government, via the minister, takes its stand on statistics given by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and dares state, as we all heard, that 1973 has proven to be the best year Canada has ever known in the field of housing construction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: You just heard the frantic and assiduous applause of the hon. members for Laval (Mr. Roy) and for Lévis (Mr. Guay). I hope they will also receive the end of my speech with loud applause.

The minister should consider the revealing figures I am quoting. The number of units for rent in Greater Montreal decreased from 3 per cent in December 1972 to 2 per cent in December 1973. In Quebec City, in 1973, the number of available housing units has gone down from 5.5 per cent to 3.1 per cent. In other parts of the country, the situation is much more precarious and has reached such a point that you can definitely say there is a housing crisis in Canada.

I would say to the seemingly powerless Minister of State for Urban Affairs, who loves covering up problems with reports, studies and statistics, that a study released by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation shows that the number of available housing units, namely 2.1 per cent, is the lowest percentage in six years. I hear the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) applauding. This is a total failure and the lowest percentage in six years of administration by the self-styled just government, a past slogan gone with the wind.

The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which published today the highlights of its annual report is quite careful not to dwell on the rather somber outlook for the next few months. It seems that the current interest rate and a shortage of building materials will lead to a decrease in residential construction in 1974. Those are premonitory signs of a serious housing crisis in Canada.

If the minister so-called responsible for housing does not believe in the relative decrease in available housing units, his colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), who also admits he is powerless, recognizes this phenomenon. But, mind you, it is only to claim that the quality of those same houses has improved.

And yet, as early as 1967, the Economic Council of Canada thought that one million Canadians were living in quite inadequate housing conditions. Incidentally, since a Minister of State does not have the powers of a Minister of Transport, who admitted to be powerless, I would say to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs that insufficient consideration is given to some "lemon projects". Let him meet the owners of the "Prairies de Montréal" project. He will see how the standards of the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation have been disregarded and maybe how the inspectors did not care about them.

The average citizen is not adequately protected in the area of construction. The government agencies only pass the buck to each other; the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation claims it is only a loan agency, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has not enough powers, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) dares not or is unable to intervene.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, not only is the number of available housing units decreasing and does their quality of construction sometimes leave much to be desired, but, month after month, the government remains powerless before the increase in the cost of living in general and in the housing sector in particular.

Does the minister, who is not an agent, realize that the year 1973, as all Canadians and not only Quebecers well know, is truly remarkable in the home building sector because of the fact that housing costs have gone up by an average of more than 20 per cent?

The minister and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation say that 1973 is a record year for building. It is certainly a record year for the builders, especially because of their profits, but, along with all the people of Canada, I say that 1973 in the building sector was a record year for cost increases.

One can no longer rely only on government studies, all the more as their findings are not always made public. I am thinking of the famous Dennis report. Le Devoir referred to one of those studies on February 15 in the following terms, and I quote:

> More and more, the single family home is only available to a small part of the population, namely those who can spend $300 a month on housing.

● (1710)

This is one point on which the New Democratic Party socialists should agree. This is a prohibitive price if one considers, for instance, that in April 1973, the average weekly income of a Quebecer was $149.94. And the upward trends are still very much with us.

The Montreal section of the urban renewal and housing association is anticipating for 1974 an increase of about 25 per cent over 1973. How can we explain such increases since, according to official statistics, building materials and labour have increased by only 10 per cent in 1973? And then some people will laugh at our policy to abolish the 11 per cent tax on building materials, and especially to freeze prices, profits and other incomes, in particular in the food and housing areas.

When anyone in my party speaks about a freeze, while it is common knowledge, it is not only of a wage freeze but a freeze on all Canadian factors of the cost of living, therefore a freeze on prices, profits and other incomes as well. To pretend the opposite, as the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) did recently, to pretend that the Progressive Conservative party merely demands a wage freeze that would affect the small earners, to pretend that is to show the worst kind of dishonesty.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians must consider the following facts: a very low vacancy rate in housing, staggering rent, increases the prohibitive purchasing cost of single family houses, the smallness and the poor quality of the new dwellings and the government, particularly the hon. Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) are the firsts to speak highly of the housing achievements in 1973. Mr. Speaker, it is sheer thoughtlessness and they obviously are irresponsible.

My colleagues and particularly the dynamic hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) discussed the partial solutions proposed by our party as regards housing, which makes it unnecessary for me to do so. In this program the minister responsible would be really responsible for something and everything would be centered on the protection of the consumer and the expectations of the average family. This program demonstrates that the Progressive Conservative party is ready to accept the challenge and already presents a serious alternative to the present government as our party is ready to govern this country.

In view of the increasing price of building materials I shall merely remind you of the proposal I already made in this house to the effect that the government should set, in the case of certain materials, for instance asbestos, a price for domestic consumption and another higher price for exports. That is one way, among many others, of lowering the cost of housing, specially in Quebec.

In another vein, I must once again warn the present government, with regard to its laborious formulation of a housing policy, against its visceral tendency to take advantage of a crisis, or if need be to create one, and gradually take over jurisdictions that normally belong to the provinces.

A series of articles recently published in the daily La Presse proves, once again, how the present Liberal government, under the pretext of co-ordination, has reached the point where it wants to control all initiatives in the field of urban matters. As for me, I fear that the field in which the overly centralizing ambitions of the Liberal government will soon cause the provinces, of which Quebec in particular, to object, and rightly so, is precisely that of urban affairs.

[Mr. Wagner.]

Quebec should pull itself together before it is too late, assured as it can be that we are listening attentively.

Mr. Speaker, everything about the Ministry of Urban Affairs, its record, its objectives, its programs and even its orientation, as we very well find out today, is so confused and inadequate that we can no longer have confidence in the government. How could we in the circumstances—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, even though I was not given the same courtesy I would be happy to extend the time of the hon. member so that he may complete his speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House give unanimous consent to allow the hon. member more time?

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (Lévis): I agree, Mr. Speaker, but providing we shall hear not only criticisms, but really constructive proposals.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the ministers and members of this House for their generosity. To comply with the request from the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), I will be pleased to send him the working document containing our new dynamic and imaginative policy, which will be that of the next government very soon.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying a while ago that it was impossible, considering the present circumstances, to miss this opportunity of discussing the idea of a $100 million fund to promote, rather vaguely, from 1976 to 1981, initiatives that would bring about solutions to urban problems, initiatives in fact that would be the basis of our participation in the United Nations Conference and Exposition on Human Settlements scheduled for Vancouver in 1976.

We must reject that $100 million demonstration program because it is becoming a very costly diversionary tactic which cannot possibly assist in solving the existing housing crisis which I mentioned a while ago.

This government, having lost all sense of priorities, postpones its own commitments about which we have read in the Speech from the Throne at the beginning of this session.

● (1720)

Some of these agreements are somewhat outdated, like the relocation of railway lines and terminals within cities, suggestions which we had heard a great deal about before 1972, especially in Quebec City. There were other suggestions, of more recent vintage, concerning consumer protection on the real estate market, and finally this supercolour vision of housing in the year 2000. During the last election campaign, Mr. Speaker, they lured us with bright and awe-inspiring projects of national parks for year 2000, and in case nobody remembers them, I am sure the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) could refresh our memory with advantage.

Why should Canada make itself conspicuous with the slogan "Habitat 2000" at the United Nations Conference-Exposition in Vancouver in 1973 if, after learning nothing from the Montreal "Habitat '67" project, it did not succeed as a rich country in making available from 1968 to 1976 to the average Canadian family a single family home?

Before concluding my speech, since I have two minutes left, I hasten to say that we, of the Official Opposition, are not the only ones to say that this program of $100 million in support of demonstration programs is an untimely decision in view of inflation, a fraud and window-dressing. Our colleagues of the Social Credit and of the New Democratic Party condemned it quite unequivocally today, yesterday and as soon as the program was announced. The NDP member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) compared it to the huge project of Habitat '67, and I spare this House his statement on the subject.

As a result, we have to take concrete steps today and the only weapon available to us is to show, through the motion before the House and by the vote we will have tonight, to demonstrate clearly and unequivocally that the government is on a bad course in the area of housing.

In view of the failure, or at least of the serious procrastination of the government in the field of energy, inflation control and in view of its irresponsibility in the field of housing, we have to defeat it in order to enable the electors to choose as a government the representatives of a political party that is more familiar with the problems, that is more conscious of today's priorities and to give ourselves a new leadership, not a leadership like the one we witnessed during the question period today, tossed about between two ministers, two heads, two groups, and goodness knows what else!

If the Liberals have once again the hope to get tonight the support of the members of the New Democratic Party, the latter should realize that Canadians as a whole and very soon, on April 2 next, the citizens of Nova Scotia in particular, will judge very severely the vote of the New Democratic Party tonight.

Mr. Speaker, the question to ask oneself, and I conclude my remarks on this, is not whether we must defeat the government, but rather whether we have to let it administer the country from bad to worse another day and let it another day powerless in the face of its responsibility as national conciliator.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to point out to the House that I regret having given my unanimous consent, because I have heard nothing of substance from the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Is the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Roy (Laval): No, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a brief question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The unanimous consent of the House would be required, because the time of the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Wagner: The hon. member may ask me a question, brief or otherwise, at any time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House consent?

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fortin: No, Mr. Speaker, we have wasted enough time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I have heard a "no". The House does not consent.

[English]

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and a number of others who belong to the small "c" hard core of what used to be called the Progressive Conservative Party, must be very pleased with themselves today. The motion they have brought forward certainly does not indicate much hope in the small "c" conservative group for any progressive ideas.

The government of Canada has decided to launch a program which will allow at least 20, and I hope a lot more, practical projects across Canada, to be phased in over a five-year period. Hopefully some will be used to show the world what Canada can do to solve some of its urban problems in conjunction with the conference on man's urban environment which is to take place in Vancouver in 1976. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is an effort through which we in Canada can attempt to show the world what is possible in the way of solutions to the ever-growing urban problems of the world; surely, this effort for the brotherhood of man is worthy of more support than the kind of motion of non-confidence put to this House today. The progressive section of the Conservative Party, if that section remains at all, must be a disillusioned group in this House today.

I declared yesterday my whole-hearted support for this program that the official opposition chooses to view so cynically. They pretend that the money spent to help make Canadian cities better places to live in, ignores the needs of Canadians. The small "c" conservative group in the House chooses to pretend that a program which will allow for innovation in housing, urban transit and urban pollution control, somehow denies Canadians who are in need of a home, that very home. It chooses to pretend that the fund is just for housing; it chooses to pretend that the fund is for airy-fairy research study projects when it knows no government in its right mind would try to sell this kind of research to people whose needs are pressing and vital. No government would propose the kind of program that the opposition pretends this program is.

Mr. Speaker, opposition members choose to overlook the fact that the urban demonstration program is more than just a fund—it is also a means of exchanging the best solutions that Canadians in all parts of Canada have found for urban problems. This program is one of the most exciting ventures undertaken anywhere in the world to attack, solve, and demonstrate solutions to urban problems. It will give Canada a major innovative capability in responding to the urban challenge which confronts us. Mr. Speaker, we need this kind of capability and we need it now.

During the balance of the seventies and through the eighties we can foresee a continued high rate of urban growth stemming from a high rate of family formation and continuing movement of people to our larger towns, cities and metropolitan areas. Between 1970-1975 the average number of marriages in Canada will run at 205,000 annually. Between 1975-1980 the marriage figure will jump to 234,000 annually. Net family formation in the late sixties amounted to 110,000 annually. The projected number between 1970-1975 is 118,000 annually. And between 1975-1980 it will be 133,000 annually.

The decisions taken, and innovations adopted, over the next few years will largely determine the shape of urban Canada through the turn of the century. In fact, between now and the year 2000 we could add as many as 12 million people to Canadian cities. This means six cities the size of Toronto, although I fervently hope we can prevent that kind of concentration from taking place, and that we will have a better division of population across the country.

Canada, of course, is not unique in this. We are somewhat unique, however, in that we can look upon this not so much as a frightening prospect as a great opportunity. Unlike so many parts of this world, we really do have the opportunity to shape our urban future and to create communities, new and old, that are human and livable and for people. We have an excellent foundation on which to build; none of our present cities have passed the point of manageability. And we have the technology, skills and imagination.

What we need are ways and means to release this imagination and skill and to focus it on solving our urban problems, on creating environments of all kinds in which people will want to live. In order to do this, we will have to support small communities and medium sized communities as well as large communities. And we will have to develop new communities to check sprawl and concentration and to support resource development.

When we talk about new communities, we have provided Canadian municipalities and provinces with legislation to permit the establishment of new towns and cities. There have been two significant moves in this direction; the Pickering airport land holds promise in this regard as does the southeast city acquisition where we will, I hope sooner rather than later, have two new cities developing that will show the way to all of Canada what can be done when you plan development. Members on both sides of the House should, when they have the opportunity, visit one or two of the new cities in the United States or in the United Kingdom to see just what planning from the beginning does for the living conditions of people.

In Reston, just outside Washington, they have provided 45 per cent green space with traffic isolated walkways and bikeways. There is a mixture of housing ranging from low-income to executive housing. Recreational facilities are spread throughout, accessible without traversing traffic lanes. The total approach to planning accentuates and improves living conditions for the inhabitants without it costing them any more. Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of contribution and innovation that our program can offer yet this motion of non-confidence turns thumbs down on it. The program is one of the most progressive things to happen around here in a long time. It is a sad commentary on the official opposition when they take this attitude.

The Canadian urban demonstration program and fund is a direct response to the urban goals advanced by the government in the recent Throne Speech. As set out in the Throne Speech the federal government's urban goals call for a more balanced pattern of cities and towns throughout Canada, with increased emphasis on federal policies and programs to improve small and medium sized communities and to create new communities. They call for action to improve the physical and social environments of the larger urban centres, particularly the core area or inner city.

I might add that these goals were discussed with the provinces and municipalities at the second national trilevel conference in Edmonton last October and found widespread endorsement and support. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) discussed a number of matters at that conference. One of the most important had to do with new cities and the land banking programs that would make such new cities possible. The whole question of promoting land assembly and land banking has repeatedly been raised by the minister. He has been promoting government intervention in land markets for more than a year.

In January, 1973, the minister assured provincial governments that we would make available to them at least $100 million a year for the next five years to finance land assembly programs. The provincial governments were somewhat slow in responding. However, by the end of 1973 we were able to commit, not $100 million but $150 million for that purpose. We have been keeping our side of the bargain. At the same time that we are stepping up land assembly we are applying guidelines to give priority to those assemblies which promise to create housing quickly and make provision for low and modest income housing in return for profits to the community for the formation of parks, community facilities, day-care centres and the like.

One of the strange things about the criticism from the official opposition on the subject of land banking and land assembly is that the government should not be in the business of making a profit on land. This is totally nonsensical. It shows the bankruptcy of their total thinking on the urban problems of Canada. This so-called profit which the official opposition finds appalling is not profit. It is money which will be used to provide services for the people living in those communities and as a means of lowering the taxes they have to pay. Is that wrong? The official opposition is on record time and again as finding land banking unsatisfactory because of this element of so-called government profiteering.

The present shortage of serviced land and the increase in demand for housing is without doubt providing a field day for speculators who are enjoying windfall profits without ever moving a brick, digging a hole or putting a pipe in the ground. There is no doubt in my mind that we need to review the whole question of how to deal with these windfall profits. Runaway speculation has occurred around Toronto in particular, and to a large extent around Vancouver. It is raising prices to the point where people, even those in the middle income bracket, cannot buy a home. Only those who already own a home can acquire another. I am convinced that the situation is one which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) should review to determine whether there is some way in which we can use our taxing mechanisms to reduce the speculation that is now going on and which is affecting the well-being of the house-buying public, particularly in Ontario and British Columbia.

Before going on to the subject of this motion, the demonstration program, I want to discuss for a moment the kinds of solutions which were proposed in this and yesterday's debate by the official opposition. There are several that were repeated in the various speeches. The 11 per cent sales tax is a favourite. They want it removed. Although it would clearly benefit some home owners, it would without question be of much greater benefit to huge areas of our economy such as supermarket builders and gas station builders who have no need for this tax exemption.

Another favourite solution proposed by members opposite would allow individual home owners to deduct mortgage interest rates from their income tax. Obviously, this would be a wonderful thing for anyone who owns a house. However, it happens to be the case that people who own houses are earning larger capital gains than anyone else in the country. People who bought houses are among the most fortunate people in this country; their homes are worth far more than they paid for them. However, the Conservative Party seems to be pushing for a policy which would in effect have the taxpayers of Canada subsidize this very favoured group who are already making an enormous profit.

They further suggest we should lower the interest rates on all CMHC loans. The policy which the minister has had in effect for a number of months, since the adoption of the legislation last summer, permits persons earning salaries of less than $11,000 an interest subsidy. In these instances we are reducing interest rates.

The same argument which I have used for disallowing mortgage interest payments for income tax purposes applies to lowering interest rates. As the former member for Fort William-Port Arthur wrote a few weeks ago, the question of lowering interest rates at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer to favour home purchasers does not stand up to scrutiny, because when these people buy their homes they are getting the best possible buy in Canada. They are getting a hedge against inflation and they will inevitably end up with a very substantial capital gain. How could anyone, in conscience, justify the taxpayers of Canada subsidizing interest rates for somebody who is going to make a very substantial capital gain on an investment? It cannot be justified.

In a rather novel interjection this afternoon, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe blamed the federal government for all urban housing problems. Yet in the same breath he would deny the federal government any jurisdiction whatsoever as far as urban affairs is concerned. This series of positions is apparently the policy on housing of the official opposition. They are really the only concrete suggestions which have appeared in these last two days of debate. I stand to be corrected, but I do not remember the opposition making any other specific suggestions. They have talked about interest rates, the 11 per cent sales tax and deducting mortgage interest payments from income tax. However, they have not made any other suggestion except to denigrate this program of urban innovation which they somehow find repulsive.

The urban demonstration program can be tied to existing and new federal programs as well as to provincial and municipal programs. The program is extremely flexible. It will allow federal initiative without the usual constraints, although we shall consult, obviously, with provinces in which any project will be located. But we shall be able to do these things quickly.

Yesterday I felt the reaction of the official opposition was simply the result of neglect to study the program which the minister had announced. But when they turned around last night and proposed a motion of non-confidence in this program, they thrust the whole weight of the party behind their opposition to it. It was not only the hon. member for Calgary North sounding off without having studied the proposal adequately; it was the official opposition taking a united stand against a progressive program which will promote new ideas and bring forth new solutions to problems which affect us all for the benefit of Canadians and the world.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is usual in a debate of this kind for a member to comment on the speech of the hon. member who preceded him. I find it difficult to review the remarks of the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson). When he tells us that young Canadians are in great shape because they can buy houses, and houses are such a wonderful bargain, his logic escapes me. I think that the product of any part of the economy in which unit prices have doubled in the last few years is hardly a bargain, unless the hon. member is trying to sell the argument that inflation is good and should be pursued as an object of desire—a view which would be contrary to that held by most people who are trying to get by on low incomes or even on moderate incomes. I am shocked that someone who presumably represents the Liberal Party should come out with such a thesis.

I listened with some pleasure to the minister this afternoon as he extolled the virtues of this $100 million program. He suggested that one of the great things he was going to do involved an experiment in the disposal of human waste in metropolitan Toronto. I hope he will not put too much of the $100 million into that project. The subject has already been covered by Jonathan Swift as described in Gulliver's Travels, the voyage to Laputa. A professor at the Grand Academy of Lagado worked on this project year in and year out, and his only expense was a new barrel of that material every month.

The problem of housing in Canada is one of the most serious facing us today. There are countervailing forces working. Many young people come to members of parliament for advice as to whether they should invest their money in accommodation at what seems to them an almost incomprehensible price. Couples in their twenties earning maybe $20,000, if both are working, and needing a decent house with perhaps a bathroom and a half, wonder whether or not they should invest in a house costing, say, $60,000. They are filled with great tales from their friends who bought a house a year or so ago and sold it later at a profit of $20,000. I put it to the minister that they did not really make $20,000 on the house. The house was not worth an additional $20,000. The money they received for it was just worth that much less. Also, as soon as they sell a house at an alleged profit of $20,000 they have to buy another one and they find out—it should not come as a great surprise—that the price of the new house has also jumped $20,000.

The question of apartment buildings comes in here. I may be unusual in this respect, but it is very difficult for anybody in political life to try to say a kind word for the landlord. Mr. Benson's tax reform has done as much as anything else to cause an accommodation shortage in Canada which is particularly noticeable in the low vacancy rate in apartment buildings. Possibly with the transition from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to Statistics Canada, housing starts in the last few years have included apartment construction. This accounts for a large proportion of the high figures of housing starts; they reflect apartments that are under construction.

The question, whether Benson's tax reform resulted in restricting the profits made by landlords, is possibly of interest to those interested in finance. I would say, as I said two years ago, that there will certainly be a shortage of apartment accommodation as a result of removal of the tax incentive to own apartments. I think my forecast has been borne out. We can look across the country, and in every major city with the possible exception of Montreal there is a marked shortage of apartment accommodation.

What happened to the kindly landlord, the reasonable landlord who was not there to make a great deal of money out of the tenants but was there for what was called, when it was introduced, an incentive and which later became called a loophole? The Benson tax reform had the effect of driving reasonable landlords out of the apartment-owning business. They took their losses and left, and the apartment-owning business became a hard-nosed affair. The landlord was expected to make a reasonable return on his outlay and he had no way to make it except from the tenants. Rents went up, but apartments did not. I notice that some of the people who advocated the closing of the so-called loophole now say we need some incentive to get people to build and own apartment dwellings. So we have turned 360 degrees on that issue.

There was a practice in British Columbia a few years ago which illustrates the difficulty which socialists have. They can never see anything but an immediate problem and a quick solution. They never see the secondary effects of the quick solution. For instance, everyone agrees that arable land should be used to raise food. We have a good example in Victoria. The peninsula of Saanich is just north of Victoria, and the city was spreading out, using up very fine farmland on the peninsula. But the socialists have always preferred to use the stick rather than the carrot. The carrot might have been an inducement to build houses or apartment buildings on non-arable land. Heaven knows, we have enough non-arable land in the province of British Columbia, particularly on Vancouver Island. But that is not the socialists' way. Their way is with the stick rather than with the carrot. Their answer was that there would be a land freeze on all arable land.

● (1750)

Ever since then they have been walking around, wringing their hands and wondering what has happened to the price of city lots. It was obvious to anyone with their wits about them, anyone who knew the market, that when you freeze arable land around the city, scarcity of lots will drive up the price. A city lot in Victoria was worth $9,000 to $11,000 a year ago and people thought it was pretty high then. Such a lot is now worth $20,000 to $25,000—if you can find one, that is, and they are becoming more difficult to find. This is an example of a good concept gone completely wrong through a total lack of understanding of the secondary effect of legislation that is passed. I hope and pray that the minister will not fall into that trap with his $100 million urban demonstration program.

The New Democratic Party are having their problems in this debate. I listened, as I always do whenever possible, to the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) who usually contributes something useful to the debates of this House. But last night I heard him floundering around on the housing debate, trying to be against the government that he was going to support within 24 hours—and this does present a difficulty. I feel for the NDP members at times. They are finding out that political expediency is a very hard taskmaster. If you use political expediency as they have been doing for the last 16 months, you will look a fool at times, and I suppose this is another of those times.

The hon. member spent the first half of his speech last night talking about fox hunts. I did not understand the connection between fox hunts and housing, but he seemed to think there was a connection. Fortunately, he reverted to type and got on to something that he knew something about, and I appreciated the last half of his speech which was devoted to transportation: although it is not always too easily connected with housing, it was far more intelligent than the first half of his speech.

If the government is not going to give people any incentive to follow the line it wishes them to follow, then I would appreciate it if it would at least not club them to death when they follow their own way. The more that these all-encompassing, all-smothering bureaucracies try to regulate housing, the worse things get; and this has been going on for years. Due to the shortsighted taxation policies of the Benson budget, there is a shortage of housing. Perhaps this is part of a master design by the socialist government. We are living in a mixed economy where we have a socialist government controlling a country that is dedicated to private and to free enterprise, and sometimes I think we are getting the worst of both possible worlds. The government is putting on restriction after restriction, and if the private sector fails to build sufficient housing there is always the rumoured and veiled threat that the government will go into the housing field. I think the demonstration examples that we have had of government housing should be sufficient to warn the people of Canada directly away from it.

I have had the privilege of living in government married quarters for several years of my married life. The occupants of married quarters are never very happy. Married quarters are government quarters: they are government built and government regulated. You must not have a hedge within 27 feet or something of the walls of the house. You are not allowed to plant a vine that will crawl up the front part of the building. I am sure that anyone who drives through a town that has a military component can spot the married quarters because they are ugly. They are clean, but ugly. Unfortunately, this frequently carries through to the part of the economy where we try to give the poor or the elderly citizens of the community low cost accommodation. We have an example in Victoria—I am sure every city has similar examples—in the part of town where you never say to your guests, "We must drive through such and such a development so you can see the beautiful buildings".

I implore the minister, if he introduces some of these experimental urban demonstrations, to keep an eye on visual environment. Visual pollution is as bad as any other kind of pollution. We have one high-rise, limited dividend building in Victoria that is an eyesore to the entire city. The only people happy about it are those who live in it, because they cannot see it. I must admit that the building is well designed inside and most of the people living there are happy with it, but they do not like the appearance of the building—and you cannot do much with a solid cement building, 21 storeys high, that has been designed ugly and constructed ugly. In this particular case the surrounding area is equally ugly and nothing is ever done about it.

Of interest in this idea of low cost housing to help a certain sector is the Pruitt-Igoe development in St. Louis, Missouri. They started to clear a district in St. Louis in order to build low rent accommodation. This was an apartment complex. I should like to tell the House what the New York Times said about it. The structure was built in 1954 with $36 million of United States federal funds. It was not a balanced community. There were no shops; it was strictly accommodation and it was thought that the low rent aspect would make it a success. But it was so bad that they have knocked down 43 of the buildings in this apartment complex.

This signalled the start of a $3 million plan for renovation of the complex to make it liveable again. This massive, mostly vacant project, was built in 1954 and is now to be transformed into a balanced community of smaller apartment buildings, townhouses, commercial buildings, light industrial plants and two parks. Secretary Romney rejected St. Louis' officials pleas to raze and rebuild the entire project, fearing a chain reaction in other cities with similar complexes and problems of decay, crime, poverty, and filth.

The moral of this story is that poverty and slums cannot be cured by the creation of huge ghettoes for the poor. Segregating the poor only exacerbates the problem. Instead, they must be absorbed without stigma into a viable community. The ponderous projects so beloved by bureaucracies lead only to worse degradation for the underprivileged.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

———

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, it seems that I have obtained the floor by some kind of default.

An hon. Member: Don't knock it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Make this your finest hour.

Mr. Grafftey: We might ask ourselves briefly this evening, at this point of the debate, exactly what is the subject with which we are dealing. It seems to me we are talking about decent housing for Canadians. Surely at this time in our national life, no matter what a person's income, his right to decent housing is a basic right, just as is his right to clothing, food and humane and decent medical and health services. As a matter of fact, it has always been my view that in discussing housing we are discussing the very health of our nation. It has been said long before I say it in the House tonight, that the state of a nation's civilization can be judged to a great extent by the way it houses its people.

We often boast in Canada that we have the second or third highest material, economic standard of living in the world. This might be true, but it is of very little significance in respect of the 500,000 Canadian homes which by any standard must be deemed as substandard. It is of little comfort to the 500,000 Canadian families who by any international or national measure are living this very night in substandard housing.

In the province I have the honour to come from—Quebec—a constituency of which I represent in this House, it is deemed that one third of the houses occupied by families in the province are by any definition whatsoever substandard. It is very nice for us to play with statistics and to go around boasting that we have the second or third highest economic standard of living in the world, but I do not think we should be terribly proud of the facts I have cited.

What is the situation today? The minister can boast month in and month out about the fine job this government is doing in the housing field, but in cities such as Toronto and Vancouver only 5 per cent of the people can afford to buy houses today. Does this say much for the humaneness of government policies in the housing field?

I have the honour to represent a largely rural riding in this House of Commons. We have been promised by one minister of state for urban affairs after another that something will be done about the situation. No matter where they sit in this House of Commons, I am sure members of the NDP, the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party would have to say what I am about to say. We have voted millions and millions of dollars on the floor of this House of Commons, and before any of these moneys are voted into the rural areas they are eaten up in the large urban areas. It is only right that the urban areas in our kind of country should have in many ways a prior claim, but not such a claim that people living in a rural atmosphere have no claim on the treasury when it comes to obtaining loans from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Today in this House the minister spoke of the assisted home ownership program. I do not want to knock it, but it has been going on for a long time now and I note that not too many Canadians in the lower income brackets have applied for it or could meet the criteria, for the fact is, vis-à-vis the home ownership program, that once all calculations are made we are told that the cost of a house under the program cannot surpass $26,000. With the notable exception of the greater metropolitan area of Montreal, in no major urban area can one buy a house on a decent lot for $26,000. No matter who one speaks to, whether on this side of the House or the other, or officials involved in housing, we know that by the end of this century the demand for housing will have doubled.

What is even worse is that the average price of houses sold in Canadian cities in 1973 had increased by 20 per cent in relation to the price in 1972. What is another fact that we must look into vis-à-vis home ownership in Canada today? Generally speaking, from coast to coast, in order even to begin to contemplate buying his own home a person must have an income of $17,000 a year. What does this say about the humanitarian approach of the government in respect of supplying decent housing for the great mass of Canadians? We have said time and again that decent housing and shelter for all people is a priority social and economic item.

Mr. Basford: Do you have a program?

Mr. Grafftey: If you would take the trouble to read our program precisely and completely, you would see that it is a positive program.

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has not even read the program.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted to me I do not wish to give a litany of the problems. However, any member of parliament merely has to go back to his riding to find out that apart from inflation and maladministration of the unemployment insurance fund, housing is a basic, gut issue on the lips of every Canadian. What is the answer from this government and this minister? Another $100 million study. If there is anything this government and preceding Liberal governments have done, it is to give us a litany or a dictionary of what I might call delay procedures in the form of studies in general instead of action.

Mr. Corbin: You are killing time.

Mr. Grafftey: If I seem to be killing time, I know how frustrating this is to Liberal backbenchers. They see the writing on the wall. What have we had vis-à-vis housing from this government? We have had royal commissions and federal-provincial conferences. Under one, Mr. Nicholson, we had a housing symposium. We have had parliamentary inquiries, green papers, white papers and task forces. We had the Pestalozzi College experiment and the Rochdale experiment.

Let us look at a short list, under this government and the present minister, of studies we have actually had—studies, not action. I notice that members on the backbenches look a little unhappy because I am sure their constituents have spoken to them about the housing problem. We have had a study on housing in Canada, market structure and policy performance 1971. We have had a task force on housing and urban development, January, 1969, another study. Then there have been the new National Housing Act programs, 1971, and the federal-provincial conference on housing.

This is an esoteric one, Future Process of Policy and Program Development under the present minister. We have had an annual conference on housing and urban development. We have had the mid-Canada development conference. We have had the Canadian housing statistics, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and we have had the Central Mortgage and Housing annual report, as well as projections for the future. We had all these studies before the present one involving $100 million. Then there is the special $200 million, low cost housing program study. We have had a site planning study for mobile homes. We have had a review of the rent to income scale for public housing units. We have had a study on housing and people by the Canadian Council on Social Development. Then there was the Architecture Canada study. We also had an inquiry into where the $200 million went, by the Canadian Council on Social Development.

Back in 1968 I had the honour to represent the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on the federal task force looking into housing and urban affairs.

Mr. Basford: Who led that?

Mr. Grafftey: The very honourable and progressive minister of the time. If the government had paid attention to that report and to the minister at the time, it would have been far better off, believe me.

Mr. Basford: What did you say about it at that time?

Mr. Grafftey: If the minister would read the reports he would learn what I said about it. In a non-partisan way I said it was an excellent report. But the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), aided and abetted by the now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), said there was no housing crisis in Canada. I doubt that the Prime Minister had visited very many low income people from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

● (2020)

Let me return to my thesis. During the task force study from city to city we heard about modular housing, about new methods of building and about condominiums. We even heard men like Buckminster Fuller projecting for that task force what housing could and should look like before the beginning of the next century. The Liberal government of that day spent a good fraction of that $100 million studying housing, and the answers were clear if only the government had had the will and the backbone to act.

After all this list of studies in face of the problems we have, what do we get? Ten days ago in this House the minister, no matter how much his parliamentary secretary apologizes to us, announced in effect another $100 million study. What will this do for the low and middle income people of this country who cannot wait ten years for the minister to complete his study? They want housing today. If this government would only stop the waste in so many of its other programs, and run an efficient ship, we might do something about interest rates, which includes interest rates on mortgages, and we might with the municipalities and the provinces do something about serviced land.

Does this minister blame it on other countries and say that pressures from outside affect the high cost of housing, just as does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who tells us we cannot do anything about inflation because it is a universal problem and we have to ride with it? Or does not the minister really think, as does the leader of our party who has sat with municipal authorities and heads of the provinces, that he could do something about providing lower cost serviced land? Does he not think, in a spirit of bipartisanship, of adopting at long last our proposal to abolish the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials? That is most important.

It is my view that so long as there is a general, high rate of inflation in this country due to the irresponsible monetary and fiscal policies of this government, land interest rates and the general cost of housing will continue to go up and up. Because of their intangibility, they will always be, in my view, an inflation leader as are gold, silver and other hard commodities. It is my view that the housing policy of the present government is responsible for a great deal of what I call legitimate social unrest. It is the major source of apprehension about the future of many of our young people. It threatens the financial independence of the family unit and, what is worse, makes us a nation of debtors. In this moral climate housing is being put out of the reach of most Canadians. In my view, under the housing policies of this government we are now into another kind of age, especially for the low and middle income people—a new age of serfdom and servility.

I am very glad to note, however, that tonight we have a real chance that the party to my left will support our motion because the housing spokesman for the NDP, after the minister made his recent announcement, described the program as involving "the wrong spending at the wrong time and in the completely wrong area". He stated, in reply to the minister, that nowhere was there any indication that the government intends, at least before the budget is introduced, to move in a serious way to deal with the housing situation. He said there is every indication that in this area of policy we are saddled with a do-nothing government. So I do not expect the members of the NDP tonight to support a do-nothing government, a government which once the housing bill was passed last spring presumably decided that enough had been accomplished.

The housing critic of the NDP went on to say that he wished to put forward his reason for believing that the government's attitude is palpably absurd, that indeed it involves a serious question of social morality and the government has copped out altogether on this issue. I do not think that tonight the members of the NDP will support a government which has completely copped out in the housing field. The member of the NDP went on to say: "The minister said he wants this conference to be known as Habitat 2000". Well, people in my riding want houses before the year 2000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: He went on to suggest that all this program will mean is $100 million down the drain—of no help to people in meeting housing requirements in Canada. Will the NDP tonight vote to put $100 million down the drain? Mr. Howe used to say, "What's a million?" Today, if they vote with the government, the NDP will be saying; "What's $100 million?"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

• (2030)

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that it is rather difficult to speak as pessimistically as the previous speaker. I wonder if this is not due to the fact that members on this side of the House can finally rejoice at the fact that some people believe that we have to act now to solve the problems of the future for urban Canada.

My illustrious colleague has spoken strictly about building and not about the urban movement phenomenon of 1961, when we were building dormitory cities and rows of bungalows, which created problems at the municipal level. A few years later, municipal unity had to be established to make the situation viable and to avoid collecting the maximum amount of taxes at the municipal level. In my opinion, those are the kinds of problems that we must face immediately.

Mr. Speaker, the urban constituency of Longueuil is situated on the south shore some twenty miles from that of the previous speaker but however, I do not share his pessimism. If you allow me, I would like to quote a few examples. The City of Longueuil had some 90,000 inhabitants in 1969. In four years, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation invested there over $89 million. If this is not taking care of families, of people and citizens who really need houses, I wonder how we must invest our money and what else we can do to help them buy a house.

It is quite easy to say: The people are poor, they are not in a position to buy a house. Mr. Speaker, when one has lived the problem, one really knows what it is. It is not necessarily one of lack of money or means because, in the province of Quebec, $35,000 or $40,000 houses were built before, and Quebecers dreamed of one day owning their own home. Today, Quebecers can own a home thanks to the federal government. They can afford one if they make an annual income of $6,000, $7,000 or $8,000.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind, if the inhabitants of the riding of Brome-Missisquoi cannot afford a home on an annual income of $5,000, $6,000 or $7,000, the hon. member is not doing his job. He should prove to us that the present legislation does not allow low-income workers to purchase a home.

Mr. Speaker, if one studied in depth the proposals of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, if one went to the trouble of reading his statement, one would realize that he is really aware of the situation, for he wants investments of $100 million to be made over a fairly long period of time. He is aware that practical problems must be solved and that it is not a matter of studies, far from it. He is also aware that decisions must be made on the type of projects that will be accepted.

First, the projects under consideration will have to be geared to the solution of definite problems, contrarily—he said it openly—to those which do nothing more than determining, defining or analyzing them. They are not studies but practical applications, Mr. Speaker.

Second, a project must be applicable to most of Canada. Such quality will be judged in terms of the degree to which the project principles may be applied to other areas of the country. The minister is fully aware—he is as smart as anybody else and he knows his country—that there are different regions in Canada. And that is also written. I think that people did not bother to read it.

Third, a project must innovate and steer away from traditional practices. Now who is able to warn us about dangers which will crop up in 5 or 10 years from now as a result of today's building methods? Few hon. members here can do so.

The investment that this government intends to make is one that will permit practical research. There is a difference between carrying on research on paper and implementing it immediately. I suggest that this is the most important point that should be examined.

And they say that every demonstration project will have to meet at least one secondary criterion. Certain projects must show evidence of co-ordination and co-operation between two or more government levels. I suggest that the minister is already aware that the phenomenon of urbanization on the south shore of Montreal which I represent, as in Toronto or Vancouver, has taken a few municipal administrations by surprise. Toronto has banned the construction of highrises but elsewhere they try to advocate it.

Mr. Speaker, if need be the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) should impose restrictive measures so that in 5, 10 or 15 years, we do not repeat the mistakes that were made before 1961, when the middle class was building dormitory towns, when it was impossible for a workman to buy a house. Before 1961, all the necessary components of a policy had not been put together in order to really enable people, large families who really need a shelter, to buy a house.

Today, thanks to the steps that were taken since 1968, more and more people can afford to buy a house. If we read the non-confidence motion that was put forward today, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we are far from taking into consideration the people who need a house. On the contrary, more attention is being given to the desire for power, they try to take all kinds of means to that end at the expense of the people who cannot afford to buy a house.

When we try, through coercive measures, to provide people with necessary tools, a non-confidence motion is being put forward, while we are spending $100 million in an attempt to facilitate the purchase of homes and to find a solution to urban problems. Again I say they are not necessarily construction problems, but rather social problems. Many factors are involved. Today, cities are being build along the shore of the St. Lawrence River. It is a shame but all the sewers are flowing into the river. This is what is happening. In view of the project announced and of the optimism demonstrated by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I think that in Canada, in Quebec, in Longueuil, we will succeed in enabling all those who really want a house to buy one even though they earn $4,000, $5,000 or $6,000.

We should once and for all be logical. I hear millionaires speaking of poverty, I hear filthy rich people in Parliament speak about a poverty they have never experienced. They have never known poverty and they are labouring the point at the people's expenses. But, on the contrary, they should try to settle real problems. Let us set aside partisan issues. If they try to obtain power at the workers' expenses, as tonight, Mr. Speaker, I say it is disgusting.

[English]

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the debate this afternoon with a great deal of interest. I found certain phases of it very amusing. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) based his speech fundamentally on our ideas, and when he could not copy from us he used empty rhetoric. He did not tell us what he believed in.

The previous speaker talked about getting away from conventionality, or something like that. Mr. Speaker, why do we need to get away from the conventional? We have a lot of ideas about building and we should continue to pursue those ideas. We certainly do not need to import ideas about building from other nations whose climate is quite different from ours.

A few days ago the minister announced an innovative housing program. I think the $100 million involved is merely a sop, but I do not think—neither do my colleagues—that it is a matter upon which to call an election

An hon. Member: What is?

Mr. Nesdoly: When the time comes, gentlemen, you will know. Yesterday's motion dealt with urban needs. Today's motion deals with the same topic. What bothers me as a member from a fairly far-flung riding is that the Liberal and the Tory parties are not too concerned about rural and small town needs. About 30 per cent of Canadians do not live near huge urban areas. I should like to give some statistical information on that point later.

● (2040)

Mr. Speaker, I have heard a lot of talk about repealing the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. I would endorse such a move if I could be sure that the savings would be passed on to the consumer. The people of my riding remember what happened four or five years ago when an 11 per cent or 15 per cent sales tax on drugs was repealed. The price of drugs dropped by about 3 per cent for six months and then crept up again to dizzy heights and has not come down since. If we can find a way to ensure that the tax savings would be passed on to the consumer, I would be in favour of it; but I do not believe the Tories have any notion of how to do it.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the government could use as an example what was done by the government of Saskatchewan a number of years ago when they gave a grant of up to $800 to anyone whose income was under $8,000 per year and who built a home. That took care of the sales tax. Perhaps this government could do it by giving a rebate to people who require it.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) was rather amusing when he spent most of his time quoting from the speech of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I am glad that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is considered the housing spokesman in this chamber. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) today asked a question about decreasing the interest rates on house mortgages. Where was he six or eight months ago when the NDP had an amendment on the mortgage financing bill to lower interest rates? At that time the Conservatives lined up with their Liberal friends.

Mr. Basford: They were opposing it most of the time.

Mr. Nesdoly: The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), the boy wonder of the Quebec Conservative Party, the miracle man, the hoped for Messiah, is going to be in for a surprise come the next election.

An hon. Member: So are you.

Mr. Nesdoly: The hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) assumes that buying a house will always show a capital gain. Houses have been showing capital gains in the last year or so, but in the last 15 years I have seen them sometimes drop in value quite drastically and then go up again. We cannot work on the assumption that houses are always going to go up in value and that we do not need to worry about continuing capital gains.

The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) says that socialists see only quick solutions. A lot of the solutions found in this country today came from the socialists. We are few in number but we think a great deal. In British Columbia the right-wingers were virtually giving land away to speculators before the socialists put a stop to it. The hon. member for Victoria complained about the eyesore in Victoria. What were his friends on city council doing, I should like to know. I have been a member of town council long enough to know that through their bylaws councils can control what is built. Let us not blame a 20-storey concrete eyesore on the federal government.

My main concern today, Mr. Speaker, is the problem of rural and small town housing. Far more should be done to encourage small rural communities rather than patronizing the cities and large towns, although we know that they must be patronized to a degree. Sometimes I think the government should embark on a policy of zero growth in urban areas, telling people, "We are going to create new cities and perhaps our problems will be alleviated or will disappear."

I think the constituency of Meadow Lake is typical of rural or northern Canada. I am sorry that I do not have statistics for all of Canada, but about two weeks ago I received a pamphlet from Statistics Canada based on the 1971 statistics for housing, population, etc., in the Meadow Lake constituency. I should like to quote some of these figures because I think my constituency is representative of many rural and northern parts of Canada.

In our constituency there are 12,590 households, 530 of these having more than ten persons. There are 5,150 households where the income is under $3,000, and 3,695 family heads have an income of under $2,000 while 915 family heads have an income of over $10,000. There were 12,585 occupied dwellings. Of these, 1,340 had two rooms or less. That is approximately 11 per cent of all dwellings in Meadow Lake. I have visited some of these, Mr. Speaker, and some still have dirt floors. There are 6,095 dwellings with running water and 6,490 dwellings with no running water. That is, more than 50 per cent of the people in many of the rural and northern areas of Canada do not even know what running water is apart from the water that runs in the streams.

There are 7,410 dwellings with no flush-toilet facilities. That means over 60 per cent of dwellings have outdoor privies. Some, 3,110 dwellings, or 26 per cent, are heated by wood. Certainly those people did not have to worry about the energy crisis this winter. There are 3,170 dwellings which depend on springs or rivers for their water supply. That is, about 30 per cent of all dwellings have to get their water from the lakes or rivers. This is why we have the occasional outbreak of amoebic dysentery and other forms of dysentery. It is caused by the impure water supply.

Many people cannot afford decent homes or any home except a log cabin or a shack. They just do not have the money. So I think one of our first goals is to see that they get a decent income. I think we also have to see that they are not faced with a 9½ per cent or 10 per cent interest rate. It has to be much lower than that, or perhaps nothing at all. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) said yesterday that some very wealthy people get by with paying only 6 per cent interest. Today I found an interesting article while doing some research. An article entitled "Rich find new way to dodge taxes" has a dateline "Montreal, CPA" and reads:

> Company executives who have been deprived by new tax laws of tax-free stock option profits have found a new way to beat the tax collector.
> In a letter in the Financial Times issue of February 25, a Thomas S. Smith of Barrie points out that companies are now lending executives interest-free mortgage money with which to buy homes. The saving in interest payments is the equivalent of a tax-free hand-out.
> Mr. Smith points specifically to the current financial report of Massey-Ferguson Ltd. which, he says, informs shareholders that four officers of the company have received, "as loans, a total of $472,400 to assist them to buy residences, that they may pay this money back over a period of 25 years, that such loans are permissible under the Canada Corporations Act and that they are interest-free."
> Mr. Smith also reports that four other directors of the company split "annually a total of $754,112 and in addition are guaranteed on retirement benefits totalling annually $243,271."

● (2050)

Here we have extremely wealthy people building monumental mansions worth over $100,000. They do not pay interest. The same people who are drawing such wages at Massey-Ferguson are charging high prices for their farm implements. The farmers of western Canada know this only too well. People working in the prairies, the north, northern Ontario, New Brunswick and the forests, fields and lakes produce the wealth of this nation, yet we as parliamentarians expect them to live in substandard housing. The wealth of this nation is created in the hinterlands and backwoods, not in the cities. I think a lot more money has to be pumped back into the hinterland.

An hon. Member: Who is responsible?

Mr. Nesdoly: It is the responsibility of governments of the last 100 years who have used the hinterland as a source of capital to build magnificent mansions and factories in the cities. I am not against the cities, but let's return some of the money from whence it came.

My home town of Shelbrook had a land assembly project about ten years ago. It was a federal-provincial-municipal deal. It was a good project. There are still lots 64 feet by 120 feet available for $2,350. People would not buy them because they are on the edge of town. Instead, they bought lots in town. The lots in town are now about the same price as these, so I am sure they will be sold. People can pay $1,315 down and the rest over a period of 15 years.

The land assembly projects in some of our small towns and villages are excellent if they have a degree of flexibility. One problem has been lack of flexibility. When I was on town council we asked Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation authorities whether we could buy unused lots scattered throughout the town. We were told we could not do that, we had to buy lots that were all in one place. If we could have done what we asked, those lots would have been built up.

Officials who have lived in Saskatoon, Regina, Ottawa, Montreal or another city all their lives do not appreciate the lifestyle of rural and small town people. I plead with the government to put some flexibility into its programs. I say, listen to the advice of the local councils because these are usually pretty shrewd people. Land is not much of a problem in Saskatchewan because we have some very farsighted city councils in the province. Five or six years ago a royal commission held up Saskatoon as a model. Why? Because 20 or 30 years ago the city of Saskatoon bought thousands of acres of land around the city. It was kept out of the hands of speculators. It is still possible to get a reasonably priced lot in the city of Saskatoon. However, where the land was allowed to fall into the hands of speculators, land prices soared out of sight.

The town of Meadow Lake had a housing problem. The worst off were the low income people: there was a shortage of houses for them. New legislation was passed and new regulations were put out by the government. People looked forward to the neighbourhood improvement program and the assisted home ownership program. On paper, these programs look fine. Unfortunately, they received more publicity than they deserved. There is a problem in rendering the services which were advertised. It is necessary to wait a long time for them. This is because the people who provide the services live far from the community that requires them. It seems to be difficult to get our bureaucracy moving. This town needs a land assembly project but the program is slow in moving. There is a Saskatchewan Housing Authority which is very active. I have written to them. They advised me that the federal government is slow in releasing funds. The housing authority wants money for land assembly. Why are the funds not being released to the small towns and villages? If this is going on in Saskatchewan, I imagine it is going on throughout the country.

I have been told by town councillors that CMHC has too many regulations. They claim that all too often CMHC finds regulations to hide behind. Perhaps the thinking of small town people about CMHC is best summarized by the words of an editor of a small town newspaper. I quote from the July 25, 1973, edition of the Meadow Lake Progress:

> Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation policies are misunderstood by most citizens of this country. Many people believe the purpose of CMHC is to help people obtain homes who couldn't otherwise own a place of their own.
> Actually, nothing could be further from the truth.
> CMHC policies are set to allow large lending institutions to loan money at a high rate of interest with absolutely no risk to the lender. There is no protection for the buyer built into their policies.

I understand there is some protection built into the new act and I hope it will be used.

> At one time only those who could not obtain mortgage money through regular channels could qualify for a CMHC loan. Now CMHC does not loan money to home owners but only guarantees the repayment of loans which the lenders make.
> If you wish to purchase a home and can't pay cash, you apply to the local bank. The bank accepts an application which asks that all assets be listed, and also for references. This application is then processed by the bank and CMHC. If approval is given you are then entitled to borrow from the bank at between 9 and 10 per cent interest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, many of the comments from the other side of the House have been very reactionary. The party is known as "progressive," but I cannot see where it has shown that today. They feel that what was good enough in the past is still good enough. They have a laissez-faire attitude. They are not at all interested in innovation or trial runs. I certainly support the government's proposed fund for innovation in housing. The opposition surely should be aware of what it is trying to do. On one hand we have the problem of land and housing supply, with maintenance of urban communities and the quality of urban life; on the other hand we have the energy crisis and our continuing ecological problems. It is really almost an ecological conundrum.

I am convinced that all levels of government are prepared to work together. This has become the fashion. It is long overdue. I think we could suggest there is now a community of interest developing among and between governments as well as the private sector. We heard suggestions at the federal-provincial energy conference for a national power grid and a national industrial policy. Both have ramifications far beyond their immediate goals.

We cannot isolate industrial development from regional development, and regional development implies urban development.

The energy crisis is a warning that we must plan our national development better than we have in the past and that we must make the best use of our natural environment. The energy dilemma shows that we need to arrange our human activity nationally for optimum value with minimum waste of energy and resources.

I think one can say that the problem is the high cost of organized services. We can provide huge sums of money through CMHC for the servicing of sewage, we can devote money to land assembly programs and the other programs which have been mentioned; but we must realize that looking after sewage, water services, transportation and energy transmission is an immense undertaking. If we each took the time to go over our own communities and study the plans of the great arteries and trunk sewers underlying them, we would realize just where those millions of dollars have gone.

I am sure the department concerned with urban affairs is working to find new ways of solving the sewage problem and it is my view that within a reasonably short time complex problems such as sewage treatment, the size of sewers and the amount of water we waste in them will be overcome. This will probably take ten years or so. It is all part of a progressive and innovative program.

The demonstration program is not restricted to hardware solutions. We need better methods of regional planning, better and more artistic architecture and model land development. There is room in the plan for private industry which will find it worth while to consider carefully the opportunities presented and the funds made available to develop urban areas in an imaginative way. It seems to me the building and development industry has for a long time been demanding solutions from the government, yet every year 99 per cent of the developers come up with the same tired proposals, the worn-out clichés, the attitudes of the twenties and uninspired designs. The new plan would allow them a sensible amount of room for innovation.

I should like, now, to turn to another subject which interests me. I think we should consider not only practical matters such as land servicing, sewage, water supply and so on, but the artistic side—architectural beauty and the planning of our communities in such a way that we shall be proud to live in them and people from outside will be attracted to them.

Recently I was in Teheran. Near the airport they have a beautiful monument made of a series of arches. They held what they called a "no names" contest which was won by an architectural student who had submitted the best design for the monument. We could learn something from this. We are not bound to depend on established architects here in North America. A lot of people have good ideas and I think they should all be listened to, whether they are recognized as being important in their field or not.

The development of the national capital of Ottawa is receiving a lot of attention and would require planning over a long period. Hon. members will forgive me for referring to Ontario, but I think the Toronto civic centre is a good example of a beautiful urban centre. I was taken aback at first when I saw the two buildings there. I guess it is inconvenient in some ways, but there is Henry Moore's "Archer" as the centrepiece. I think it is one of the best civic centres in North America. One only has to go to Paris, France, to see a beautifully planned city. It would be a shame if a lot of it were torn down. The central idea should persist even if some of the buildings are modernized.

We all have to do a little bedside reading to try to get away from this contentious place. I have been reading Bernard Berensen. Maybe all members have read his "Passionate Observer." He takes you to countries in Europe such as Italy. He shows you how ancient, medieval and modern buildings all blend in together. I think we can all be too taken up with the idea of demolishing and tearing down the old. It is important we keep the good things from the past among the modern buildings. And I should like to make a plea that we do not simply go about with a big ball knocking down buildings to replace them, maybe, with modern buildings which are not so artistic. I think the quality of artistic beauty is extremely important.

There is, of course, room in city planning for innovation. Trial communities must be established. Our cities should contain the best possible modern conveniences and we should make the best possible use of open spaces bearing in mind traffic flow, public transport and, of course, inspirational architecture. I hope hon. members will forgive me if I refer to my home town of Welland. There is a peculiar situation there; part of it is caused by the canal. Again, I hope hon. members will pardon that reference. We must do something about this canal which we abandoned. This will call for not a three-level but a four-level effort involving the federal government, the provincial government, the region and the municipality.

I make a plea to the minister. We all know that the big cities are overgrown. Nobody in Toronto or Montreal wants to see their city grow much more. In fact, concerned citizens are worried about their continuing growth. What does this mean? It means that satellite cities are needed, cities which are well built and well planned. There are many cities around Toronto, such as Kitchener, Galt, Brantford, and Hamilton is a big city on its own. Then there are St. Catharines, Welland and Niagara Falls. There is plenty of room in these cities for continued growth until they double or triple their present size. I feel that a great deal of the situation in Toronto could be improved very easily by programs of the nature that the minister has brought forward; certainly they could be implemented on a trial basis.

The dilemma we have in Welland is that we have a waterway that is bothering us. Either we should fill it in or use it for recreational purposes. In addition, we have traffic problems. The traffic situation in Welland has not improved one bit since we stopped raising and lowering bridges. Traffic is increasing each year. People are still trying to cross these bridges in automobiles, and there is only one traffic lane in each direction. What is required is a one-way system as well as another bridge near the Green Street bridge. We need an arterial bridge further to the north. In fact, we need about another six crossings.

The province of Ontario has suggested that a highway be put through the centre of Welland. This may or may not be practicable. Studies have been made of the official plan of the city of Welland and a lot of money has been spent by the city. I do not think we need to spend more money on research and planning. The present committee which was set up to study this matter has been meeting about twice a month. Two of the meetings have been successful and we are now defining our positions. We know pretty well what the public wants. We also know the federal government is not trying to push either the province or the city around but is trying to co-operate, which in my opinion is a fine exhibition of what can be done when the three levels of government get together. I may be an optimist, but I think we will be able to talk this matter over and settle it by mid-summer.

As far as the solution is concerned, I hope that the present plan uses Welland as an experimental area. I am not at all afraid of a little experimentation and innovation. I should also like to see some urban renewal in the form of a beautiful city centre built over this polluted ditch that we have. There is no motion in the waters of the canal. A big causeway has been built to carry both road and rail traffic across it just south of the city, but nevertheless we have a big problem that must be faced by the several levels of government. I hope that even a small amount of the $100 million is used to help solve our problem. I do not want to go into the frustrations we have had over the actual plan, but it is at least gratifying that some work has been started on the project.

I think the impression that this is just a sort of research program is correct. I think all the research on building construction, sewage disposal, water mains, transportation and energy has been done and it is a case of putting all the ideas together. In this regard I am not just talking about my own community.

If I may digress for a moment, we have a large steel plant in Welland and they requested some help in putting in an experimental furnace using pelletized iron ore instead of expensive scrap steel. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources research branch constructed a model, the idea has been brought to the attention of the departments concerned and it is now being put into practice. It is costing $250,000, in addition to a $100,000 developmental grant put up by the private company itself, to put this furnace into operation. In other words, private developers and builders should work with the government in the building of model communities and in experimenting in civic planning.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) on presenting this motion to the House today. It demonstrates on his part a very deep concern for the welfare of the average Canadian and the conviction that it is possible, as well as desirable, that we work together somehow to achieve the situation where clean, warm shelter is made available to all Canadians.

I think he had a right to be indignant at the latest proposal of the minister, which is the subject of the motion. It is a $100 million fluff fund. It will not meet the needs of the Canadian people so far as housing is concerned. It will not help to bring down prices at a time when prices have risen to the point where housing is beyond the means of the average Canadian. It will not help meet the immediate need which has reached in many parts of the country crisis proportions. The proposal is in many ways subject to the charges that have been levelled against it. Somehow the minister seems incapable of understanding and coping with the real housing problems of this country.

It is true, as we have been told, that a great many units have been built during the last three or four years. In my opinion, about 50,000 more units have been built each year as a result of the technical amendments that were made to the act in 1969 based on the task force report. Yesterday I heard it said from the NDP corner of the House that this was not so, or there were intimations to this effect. Nevertheless, I will try to make the case—which I shall not elaborate on tonight in view of the short time allotted to me—that it is in fact due to these technical amendments that we have managed in this country during the last three or four years to increase the volume of new housing construction.

Incidentally, I am sure that the objections of the NDP are well motivated. They are well meaning individuals, but unfortunately very few of them have any practical experience and consequently cannot be expected to fully comprehend just how these highly technical operations work. They do not have the practical knowledge to understand.

So far as the floating interest rate is concerned, may I say it has seldom been higher than it would have been had the statutory limitation been maintained. As a matter of fact, usually it has been lower. The advantage, however, is that funds have been available, and because there was a flexible and quickly adjusting floating interest rate, money was continuously available. This meant that housing projects could go forward and could be completed. The floating interest rate has been a great blessing to the industry and, equally important I would say, it has not cost the Canadian people more.

The other objection raised yesterday during the debate was in respect of the five-year roll-over. This, too, was absolutely essential. Had it not been for the introduction of the five-year roll-over many of the financial institutions would not have invested in housing mortgages and certainly they would have invested less than they actually did. This is particularly true of trust and loan companies which borrow much of their money on the basis of five-year certificates. Without the five-year roll-over provision, much of the money which has gone into the housing market these last few years would not have been available, and consequently the production of housing would have been less by the tune of several tens of thousands of units each year.

I think probably the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) in raising this argument did not realize what he was suggesting. He was suggesting, in effect, that we should lock people into high interest rates for 25 years. Surely the hon. member would not want to do that. Where is that party of the little people? Where is that party of the workingman? Since when did the NDP want to lock the average small home owner in this country into high interest rates for the rest of his natural life? Is that the best they can do to help the housing situation in this country?

I am surprised, because surely they do not expect present high interest rates to continue. Surely they expect a government to be elected in this House which is going to get interest rates down. Surely under these circumstances they would be the first to say that the average small home owner in this country should be entitled at the first roll-over opportunity to the benefits of these lower, declining interest rates. I should hope they would do better than that and I can assure hon. members that the next government of Canada will get these interest rates down, and then we will hear a different tune from our friends in the far corner. What they are proposing is a real tragedy, namely, a burden which could be crushing to small home owners in Canada. I will return to the question of interest rates later, Mr. Speaker. In the meanwhile, I should like to talk about land banking.

The time to have acted was five years ago when the task force made its report. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) was a member of that task force and he made a very real and very considerable contribution to the writing of that report. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) was an unofficial member of that task force. He travelled with us from coast to coast. He often rode with us and he listened to our deliberations. Interestingly enough—I think this is important—he came very largely to the same conclusions as did the members of the task force and he was very much in sympathy and in harmony with the recommendations made and published in the task force report.

An hon. Member: Did you say that at the time?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, as a matter of fact I did. Although land was expensive five years ago, it was not outrageously expensive. Perhaps it was a little bit outrageous, but certainly not as outrageous as it is at the present time. I should like to give an example in Toronto. Not only is it the city, part of which I represent in the House of Commons, but it probably represents the extreme case. In Toronto, in the spring of 1969, you could buy a standard serviced lot for about $10,000; in some cases a little more and in some cases a little less, but approximately $10,000 for a fully serviced lot 50 feet by 120 feet. What is the price today? The same standard lot 50 feet by 120 feet in metropolitan Toronto costs today $35,000. In only five years the price of the standard minimum lot in metropolitan Toronto has escalated from $10,000 to $35,000, and every house purchaser in metropolitan Toronto is today paying $25,000 more for his or her house because of the failure of this government to act five years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: The task force could see what was going to happen and I could see what was going to happen; and of the recommendations to cabinet on February 14, 1969, the most important was the one which would make available to the municipalities 100 per cent financing for the acquisition of land and—and this is important, Mr. Speaker—for the installation of sewers, water and roads so they would have available an inventory, not just a moose pasture, of lots which could be easily converted to suit the housing requirements of the people of Canada. The government, in its arrogant blindness and callousness, could not or would not act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: People ask why we have runaway inflation today. It is due to this kind of lack of foresight, because nothing could have had a greater impact on the cost of housing in the metropolitan area of Toronto than this escalation of $25,000 a lot in the period of five years. Of course, the extra cost with regard to other types of accommodation is more or less parallel, because whether it be for apartment buildings, for semi-detached or condominium type accommodations, the increase in cost is approximately proportional to that increase which is incredible in its magnitude.

The minister said this afternoon he has federal-provincial types of land banking arrangements and he is now entering into federal-municipal land banking arrangements. I wonder if this government will ever learn. I have reason to doubt it.

An hon. Member: Not this one.

Mr. Stanfield: Not these fellows.

Mr. Hellyer: Why does it have to meddle in the internal affairs of the provinces and the internal affairs of municipalities? Does CMHC have to have its fingers into every pie? Why cannot the government of Canada adopt a policy similar to that recommendation of 1969? It was a recommendation, the great feature of which was its simplicity, under which money would be made available instantly to the municipalities to do the job that is theirs under the constitution of Canada. The government of Canada would restrict its activity to its own responsibility, which under our constitution is the money and banking aspect.

If under our constitution the government of Canada would keep its nose out of other people's business and do properly its own business, living up to its own responsibilities, then we could make some progress in this country toward solving the problems that face us. The government has failed in its responsibility. Joint land banking is too slow, too complex and too expensive. It is all right to start now—better now than never, I would say, and better now, certainly, than leaving it for two, three or four years to expand land banking activity—but that does not meet the immediate need of this country, and that immediate need is serviced land. The municipalities of Canada need sewage and water systems and roads now.

An hon. Member: Not tomorrow.

Mr. Hellyer: It is not good enough to buy some swamp in the outskirts of Ottawa which can be developed in years to come, as the government has done. Although we are delighted to know that the government is going to finance a building in Toronto where the sewage will be recycled and the water will be used over and over again, by the time the system has been perfected to the point that it will have commercial application and use universally on a wider scale, precious years will have gone by. I repeat, to solve the supply problem the minister must make sure that the municipalities of Canada have the funds necessary to provide sewer and water systems and roads now.

● (2130)

The government of Canada should make more money available now to the municipalities in order that they can meet their financial requirements. The government of Canada should consider the possibility of writing off part of their costs. If on the other hand they find that the municipalities are still strapped, they should consider writing off the total cost until the situation is under control and until the price rise has stopped and the people of Canada have an opportunity to live, breathe, be decently housed and look after themselves and their families.

Where would the money come from? Some could come from unemployment insurance or from the LIP program or the Opportunities for Youth program. Surely some of these people are capable of participating in the manufacture of concrete pipe. Surely some of them have the capability to drive a bulldozer or a truck. Surely some of these people are capable of operating backhoes. Surely some of these people are not only capable but would welcome the opportunity to use their creative talents for something worth while in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: There are many places the money could be found if the government only had the will to get on with the job.

Mr. Stanfield: Productive expenditure: they do not understand that.

Mr. Hellyer: Some municipalities need help in respect of their transportation systems. Certainly research is necessary. I am one of the first to say that research should be done in the field of public works. but much can be done without any great new breakthroughs in technology. Toronto must have an extension of its public transportation system out into the open land as a way of solving the housing problem. Some would say the same thing about Vancouver if it had a public transportation system.

Perhaps the minister should start working right away to see what can be done about meeting the need to provide the funds for necessary transportation systems. Many things could be done. The minister should talk the government into adopting the incomes policy recommended by the Conservative Party. There is no way interest rates will come down until inflation is brought under control. There is no way inflation will be brought under control so long as the minister goes along with his laissez-faire, status quo type of policy which has been proven not to work. Consequently, the accent in respect of housing and urban development should be by putting pressure on his colleagues to adopt the Conservative policy in so far as incomes are concerned to bring inflation under control and to bring interest rates down.

The minister should use some of his persuasive powers to get the provinces to adopt a standard building code. He could persuade the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to reconsider his intransigent attitude in respect of the 11 per cent tax on building materials. He could persuade the government once again to establish a program—not just talk about it—to finance urban transportation systems. There are many things the minister could do, but he seems incapable of learning.

Recently, for example, we drew to the attention of the minister the problem in respect of the co-operative colleges in Toronto and some of the things that went wrong there. We understand that the minister had a secret report prepared which he refuses to let us look at. We also understand that some charges will be laid in that regard. Now we see another example of co-operative housing which is not really co-operative housing because it does not involve any participation by individuals in a real, tangible way. It involves no sweat labour as was the case in those noble Nova Scotia experiments. Consequently, it is another case of middle-class rip-off by individuals who take no risk and enjoy playing with other people's money.

We are adopting projects in Toronto described as co-operative housing which in fact represent high-cost housing. The rents will be higher than the market cost, in spite of the many subsidies. All that is happening is that the minister is fooling the people with these programs and the notion that non-profit housing can be equated with low cost housing, which it cannot. It would be far better if the minister would take 80 per cent of this money right away and put it into the things necessary to get the situation under control, namely, the sewer, water, road and other facilities across the country necessary to increase the supply of serviced land and get the cost of housing down so that Canadians once again will have a chance to look after their own needs.

The minister complains about the market not providing houses except for middle-class people, the middle area. Well, this has a certain ring of truth to it because of the impediments put in the way of industry by various levels of government. The minister should spend his time removing the impediments instead of trying to hoodwink the people into believing he is doing something. The minister should be tackling the real problem before him. This $100 million program is nothing more than another attempt to hoodwink the people. It is diversionary action. The minister has funds available to him; they have been in his budget all along. This $100 million has more the flavour of an election fund in the sense that some monuments which will be built will do more to facilitate his re-election than to solve the housing problems. It makes a farce of the Election Expenses Act. The minister should get on with the important task. Better still, the House should demonstrate its lack of confidence in this government so the people can elect a government that will take action.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to say a few words on the motion before us. Mr. Speaker, this motion asks that the House repudiate, and I quote:

> ... the $100 million Urban Demonstration Program as a diversionary tactic and clearly ineffective to assist in solving the existing housing crisis and accordingly has no confidence in the government.

That does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that we have no confidence in this government, but we know that this amount of $100 million will not solve the present housing problems.

Mr. Speaker, $100 million are to be invested in Canada for research so as to determine the needs in the building field. Mr. Speaker, we have known those needs for a long time. We have known for a long time that the Canadian people are unable to find decent housing and that they are being exploited on account of the usurious rates of interest of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and other financial institutions. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the CMHC is in collusion with all other financial institutions to exploit people in need of a home. Housing is a basic necessity like food and clothing. The human being needs a shelter. It is an essential need. The state has never been concerned about the basic needs of the citizens. They are exploited out and out. It is a shameful abuse for a government to have a Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in collusion with other institutions so as to exploit Canadian citizens without restraint, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, every man must have his own house, furniture, his personal belongings and all his own work tools. It is the personal ownership of his property which enables a man to settle on a piece of land and organize his life and the life of his family around it. It is because of this property that he may realize that he has something in common with the physical universe.

The aim of society, Mr. Speaker, is not to make projects to gouge citizens in collusion once again with all other institutions.

Mr. Speaker, if life is a trip man must be able to come into port as often as his activities allow him to do so. That port must belong to him and not to somebody else. I will say, Mr. Speaker, and everybody knows that, about 10 per cent of our citizens are really the owners of their housing units or homes; the other 90 per cent depend on Central Mortgage and Housing and other financial institutions charging usurious interest rates.

Central Mortgage and Housing now lends at 10 or 12 per cent. But at 10 per cent, Mr. Speaker, interests double the amount of the loan every seven years. A $10,000 loan produces $20,000 over 14 years, $40,000 over 21 years, $80,000 over 28 years, $160,000 over 35 years.

So any claim that Canadians are being helped through similar institutions and their protection boils down to outrageous and shameful gouging. Mr. Speaker, every citizen is entitled to his little home, his little piece of land, but the way things are going now very few are homeowners. They are all mortgaged for the rest of their lives. They are all people who will never pay for their houses before they die. It would take two or three generations to pay for a house which should cost about $10,000 and now costs $20,000, $25,000, $30,000 or $40,000.

Mr. Speaker, if we want research to be done, if we have money to spend on research, we should use it to grant compensated discounts on building materials. The 11 per cent tax on building materials, which gouges the people of Canada, should be abolished.

We are also subject to provincial taxes, which are added to the mortgages and contribute towards increasing the price of houses. Yet, the government maintains that through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and all the projects that are suggested today, and even through this $100 million that the government wants to use for research—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but as it is 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to the provisions of the Standing Order 58(10), to put forthwith successively every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings, supplementary estimates (B), interim supply and the passage of any bill or bills based thereon.

[English]

Accordingly, the question is on the motion. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Woolliams) which was negatived on the following division:

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, laid before the House March 7, 1974, be concurred in.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order with respect to this motion to concur in supplementary estimates (B). I might say at the outset that there are several items in the estimates that could be seriously questioned, but it is not my intention to take up the time of the House to deal with the procedural arguments tonight. However, one of the irregularities is so blatant that the item cannot be allowed to pass and my contention will be that the motion to concur in this particular estimate cannot be put tonight.

The item in question is vote 25b of supplementary estimates (B) concerning the Food Prices Review Board, under the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This item relates to almost $1 million of public funds which are to be appropriated if the motion is passed. The sole description of the purpose of this vote appears on page 16 of the supplementary estimates. Under the heading "Budgetary" we see "vote 25b—Food Prices Review Board—program expenditures", and then a further subheading which reads "Activity to be supplemented". Then follow particulars of the administrative objects on which this money is to be spent and the amounts in which the money is to be apportioned.

However, I point out to Your Honour that there is no further description of the purpose of this vote. Despite the phrase "activity to be supplemented", there is no vote 25 in the main estimates for 1973-74 to which reference can be made for a fuller description. There is no reference to any other source by which the purpose of this vote can be identified. There is no statute or previous vote in any past Appropriation Act. Indeed—I stand to be corrected on this—because of the fact that there is no reference in any past Appropriation Act, it can be concluded that this is the first time this estimate has appeared before the House.

The vote stands alone and of itself. It is listed under the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. However, a scrutiny of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act, which is chapter 27 of the Revised Statutes of 1970, reveals that the act does not appear to authorize the minister to set up a board, unless it be a departmental board. Section 3 of the act gives the minister the management and direction of the department.

I suggest that this question must then be asked: Does this include the management and direction of the board here referred to? I suggest that it does not. Certainly we have not seen the management and direction of the board by either the minister responsible for the department or by the government. Section 5 and 6 of the act set out the jurisdiction, the powers and duties of the minister. There is no power there to set up a board, certainly not a board that can function independently of the minister's powers to manage and direct. If this vote is intended to enhance the minister's powers to include the setting up of a board, whether a board over which he has management and direction or an independent board—although the vote does not designate the board's independence—then this vote is legislation by an Appropriation Act, legislation which, unless there is an emergency, should be enacted in a seperate bill as an amendment to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act.

I would refer Your Honour to the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, issue No. 17 covering the proceedings for Tuesday, March 27 of last year, Thursday, March 29 of last year and Friday, March 30 of last year. At page 17:7 we find that the first recommendation of that report to the House, passed by the committee, was:

That the government give consideration to the advisability of introducing the necessary legislation to establish an independent Food Prices Review Board equipped with such powers as are necessary to review prices, and that it report to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—

That was the recommendation of the committee, one of the reasons for which I presume was the lack of power in the report. I therefore submit that if the vote refers to that board set up under the Inquiries Act, chapters 1 to 13 of the revised Statutes, 1970, then again, in my submission, it is legislation. Section 11(1) of that act authorizes any commission constituted under the act to hire staff. That is the only expenditure a commission is authorized to make. Yet this vote details operating expenditures for transportation and communications, rentals and capital expenditures for machinery and equipment—and God knows it needs some machinery and equipment. This vote can only be legislation to amend the act to do something which the governor in council could not authorize the board to do by order in council under the act, that is, to authorize the board to expend public moneys beyond the hiring of staff.

Whichever way this vote is looked at, it is attempted legislation by an Appropriation Act. The principle is set out in May's eighteenth edition at page 731. On that principle the vote must be ruled invalid. I will be referring very shortly to a precedent by the Chair. Before I leave that particular aspect I ought to point out to you, sir, and make the submission that the proper way to fund a body such as a food prices review board is as has been done in the main estimates of the Privy Council to be found in the main estimates for this year at page 20-6. I read from "A—Privy Council" estimates; It is the last subparagraph at the bottom of the page under "Program description" and it reads:

Commissions of Inquiry and Task Forces—The provision of funds for Commissions of Inquiry and Task Forces appointed to make recommendations on specific issues.

That is the way it was done with the setting up of the Indian Land Claims Commission; it was not done under the Department of Indian Affairs, and the powers are similar to this. The appropriation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was sought by the estimates under the appropriation bill following that, and in that case it is a vote under the Privy Council estimates and not under the department which has no powers.

I said, sir, I was going to refer the Chair to a ruling which was made on December 10, 1973, in which Your Honour quoted the same citation from May's which I now advance in support of the submission that the vote is an attempt to legislate by an Appropriation Act. I refer to May's eighteenth edition at page 731, commencing at page 730 under the heading "Authorization of expenditure by the Appropriation Act without specific legal sanction," as follows:

Expenditure by a department for purposes not covered by its existing legal powers normally requires to be specifically authorized by a financial resolution associated with a bill according to the procedure described in the next chapter.

On that day Your Honour went on to quote at length, commencing as follows:

The question has repeatedly arisen in the past whether, in a particular case, the authority given by the Appropriation Act is an adequate substitute for authorization by a specific bill.

On the one hand, there is, so far as this question is concerned, no legal restraint on the discretion of the Crown in presenting an estimate, or on that of Parliament in authorizing the expenditure provided by such an estimate by the Appropriation Act. On the other hand, the Appropriation Act is a general measure, containing a great many items, and is not adapted to defining the conditions, etc., of expenditure. Also, this act only gives authority for a single year, and is therefore not appropriate for expenditure which is meant to continue for a period or indefinitely. There have been cases, too, in which the Appropriation Act has been used, not merely as a substitute for specific legislation, but to override the limits imposed by existing legislation.

The Public Accounts Committee have repeatedly drawn attention in their reports to cases of what they considered the misuse of the Appropriation Act in either of the above-mentioned ways, and the Treasury, in answer to such comments, have justified the practice on grounds of emergency rather than of principle.

Your comment at that time, Mr. Speaker, was this:

I suggest that if such justification were put forward, it would have to be based on an emergency rather than a principle.

But, Mr. Speaker, there can be no emergency in this case because if there were an emergency with respect to vote 16b the government would have proceeded under Standing Order 58(18). That order reads:

In the event of urgency in relation to any estimate or estimates, the proceedings of the House on a motion to concur therein and on the subsequent bill are to be taken under Government Orders and not on days allotted in this order.

So I submit to you, sir, that this is an attempt to legislate by an estimate, and that it should be done in a normal fashion by bringing in the necessary amendment to existing legislation and not by an attempt to legislate through an appropriation bill. That being the case, in my submission the estimate cannot be put forward at this time on a motion to concur.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. member, I shall be brief. I think it is important to realize that the Food Prices Review Board was set up under the Inquiries Act, the act designated, and the responsible minister having set up the board, the government was under some obligation to provide funds for it to operate. That is what this estimate does. How else is money to be provided for a function of the government if not through the Appropriation Act or estimates? It seems to me that the hon. member, in his typical fashion, has dragged one of his red herrings across the path of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would be pleased to hear further representations if hon. members have views to express. The evening is early and the Chair is quite prepared to listen to further argument if that is the wish of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Disposition of Supply Motions

Mr. Speaker: If there is no further argument either for or against the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I am prepared to make a ruling. The hon. member for Yukon proposed a similar argument last year at the time of consideration of supply items. On that occasion it related to dollar items. The hon. member will remember, since he quoted part of the decision, that I agreed with him that the dollar items to which he referred then were to my mind, in the way I interpreted them, legislative items and therefore could not be put to the House.

I have to say to the hon. member that the situation is not as clear to me now as it was the last time, or as it appeared to be to the hon. member. I agree with him that parliament cannot legislate by estimates, but on looking at this particular item I do not see what act it claims to amend or in what way it seeks to establish a legislative principle, or to legislate, to put it simply.

I hoped other hon. members might have made additional argument in support of the hon. member's contention that this is a legislative item. But I would find it very difficult to agree with him that prima facie this is anything other than an item of estimates. Perhaps the hon. member might have another point, namely, that rather than a supplementary estimate this might be a main estimate. It may be that this would be an improper way to proceed if it is a main estimate rather than a supplementary estimate, but I cannot conclude that this is a legislative item and therefore that it cannot be put to the House.

I wish I could have come to another conclusion if the hon. member could have convinced me that he was right, but in all fairness to the House I do not think I can agree with the hon. member's contention.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-15, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service for the financial year ending March 31, 1974, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury moved that Bill C-15, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1974, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On clause 2—$724,337,761 granted for 1973-74.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a very brief point of order. I think the committee should take a moment or two to reflect upon the subject matter raised by my colleague from Scarborough West on two occasions in the past. He objected to legislative items in the estimates and the bill founded upon those estimates appearing in alphabetical order in the English language but not in alphabetical order in the French language. The hon. member has obviously won his point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: I thank the hon. member for Skeena for his intervention on a point of order. Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, I have an objection to the remarks just made by the hon. member for Skeena. I have not won my point; this House has won its point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, since some hon. members perhaps do not consider this matter as very important, I wish to say that bilingualism is a sum of many small things. A minor reform has been brought about in this House which adds, in my opinion, to our national identity.

On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, since the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) brought down these documents in an appropriate form, would it not be possible to request now of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) that the Revised Statutes of Canada be reviewed so that the tables of contents be set up in the same way?

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That this House do concur in interim supply as follows:

That a sum not exceeding $3,138,241,654.50 being the aggregate of:

(a) Three-twelfths of the total of all the items set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending 31 March, 1975, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament $2,938,230,154.50.

(b) An additional eight-twelfths of the total amount of Finance item 25 and Industry, Trade and Commerce item L20 (schedule A) $19,731,333.33.

(c) An additional six-twelfths of the total amount of Transport item 40 and Treasury Board item 10 (schedule B) $29,287,000.00.

(d) An additional five-twelfths of the total amount of Transport item L105 (schedule C) $5,625,000.00.

(e) An additional four-twelfths of the total amount of External Affairs item 20 and Urban Affairs item 10 (schedule D) $47,880,000.00

(f) An additional three-twelfths of the total amount of Energy, Mines and Resources item 25, Environment item 15 and Transport items 35, 45 and 80 (schedule E) $31,388,500.00.

(g) An additional two-twelfths of the total amount of Finance item 10, Secretary of State item 50 and Treasury Board item 5 (schedule F) $36,462,000.00.

(h) An additional one-twelfth of the total amount of Consumer and Corporate Affairs item 30, Indian Affairs and Northern Development items L75 and 90, Manpower and Immigration item 10, National Health and Welfare Item 65, Secretary of State item 65, Supply and Services items 1 and 10 and Transport items 60, 85 and 110 (schedule G) $29,637,666.67.

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31 March, 1975.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Barnett: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Not having seen anyone else rise, I should like to ask whether the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) is prepared to give the House what sometimes is referred to as the usual assurance on interim supply.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to give the usual assurance.

Mr. Speaker: The usual assurance having been given by the President of the Treasury Board—

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, could we have the usual assurance? We feel that it should be on the record. I know that the minister is tired, and he looks as though he should be in bed, but let us complete this as properly as possible.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply bills. The passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when they come up for consideration in committee. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill No. C-16, for the granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1975, be read the first time and printed.

BILINGUALISM

EDUCATION—ANNOUNCEMENT OF RENEWAL OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAM

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that arrangements have been completed with provincial ministers of education for renewal of the federal-provincial program on bilingualism in education. Under this program, the federal government will provide funds to assist the provinces with the supplementary costs of providing minority language education and second language instruction for a five-year period, starting April 1, 1974.

You may recall a letter dated January 13 to members of parliament in which I mentioned how impressed and encouraged I was following a series of meetings last fall with ministers of education during which I discussed renewal of this program. In that letter I also mentioned the renewed determination of French-speaking minorities outside Quebec to preserve their language and culture and of a related desire on the part of many English-speaking Canadians to establish bonds of co-operation and understanding between the two language communities of this country.

[Translation]

Since 1970, the federal government has financially assisted the provinces to maintain and improve the educational facilities available in the minority official language, and to improve the teaching of the second official language in the educational systems of Canada.

The objectives of the program, as agreed to by the federal and provincial governments, are twofold; to ensure that, insofar as it is feasible, Canadians of either official language have the opportunity to educate their children in their own language, and that Canadian students have the opportunity to learn, as a second language, the other official language of Canada.

[English]

It was gratifying to note that the Commissioner of Official Languages shares my optimism over our progress toward these objectives. In his report tabled on March 21, the commissioner speaks of some important trends, including a desire among English-speaking parents to extend and improve the teaching of French.

The commissioner has also spoken of the commendable leadership demonstrated by the federal government and sees it as playing the role of an increasingly effective catalyst in the field of language programs. The commissioner stated his conviction that the contributions made by the Department of the Secretary of State constitute a program deserving renewal and expansion.

As under the existing program, the bulk of federal financial support after April 1, 1974, will take the form of payments made to the provinces based on the number of students enrolled in second language programs and the time spent on these activities. In addition, a federal contribution of 1.5 per cent of the annual per student cost will be paid to the provincial governments for administrative purposes and will be based on the total number of school children in each province belonging to the minority language group.

The importance of supporting innovative and experimental measures in minority language education and second language instruction continues to be recognized by the federal and provincial governments and the new agreement makes provision for continuing shared-cost projects designed to meet such needs at any level of the educational system.

I expect federal funding to continue at much the same annual level as at present for most elements of the program. Cost of the over-all program during the past four years has averaged some $70 million annually.

As I mentioned in my letter to members of parliament in January, I feel that the real answer to recognizing the bilingual reality of Canada is through the school system. If bilingualism is to work, the base must be established within our schools.

I am extremely gratified by the level of co-operation I have encountered in discussions with the provinces about the renewal of this program and I look forward to continuing collaboration for the forthcoming five-year period.

● (1410)

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House welcome most assuredly the minister's announcement. This is a program which in our view merits the support of each and every member of parliament in this House of Commons.

It has always been my view that our educational system as such has a primary role to play in emphasizing the positive benefits of bilingualism, and this the minister certainly emphasized in his announcement.

We on this side of the House have displayed concern and are still concerned that moneys voted by Ottawa to the provinces for second language instruction are not in fact used in all cases for this purpose. Nothing the minister has said in the past or today has assured us that this situation has been entirely rectified. Of course, if second languages are to be properly taught, we need more good teachers and professors and better teaching methods. At the present time there is a serious lack in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as an English-speaking Quebecer, I can state that my language rights have always been protected and respected. I am sure that this will continue to be the case. For instance, as an English-speaking Quebecer, I have always been able to communicate with the federal government in my mother tongue. Unfortunately, in the past and even recently, the same situation has not always existed for French-speaking people throughout Canada, even if there has surely been some progress.

[English]

The minister's announcement should be greeted with a high degree of what I would call bipartisan spirit. Journalists and other individuals often ask me about our party's stand on bilingualism. Under the leadership of our leader we recognize, and we have said this time and time again, the positive benefits of the bilingual and multicultural nature of Canada. It has always been my view, and I have said this in both official languages, that when individuals or politicians play with the question of bilingualism or language rights for what they feel to be short-term advantage or political gain they in fact hurt this institution and Canada as a whole.

To reiterate, and I have spoken to many members on both sides of the House in this regard, there should be no specific Liberal, NDP, Social Credit or Progressive Conservative position on bilingualism. There should only be one united House of Commons bipartisan position. In this spirit of bipartisanship, I welcome the minister's announcement.

[Translation]

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Anyone listening to my pronunciation of those words will be convinced that I suffer as one of the victims of the lack of a bilingual program in our country in earlier years. My party and I have traditionally supported the bilingual program. We welcome the minister's announcement along with his courtesy, extended to the spokesmen for the various parties, in making certain that his statement was available at least an hour and a half before the House opened. Having said that, I have to ask myself: what was his hurry? I can see nothing in the new program that is not really in fact a continuation of the existing program, and he implies in the statement that funds appropriated some three or four years ago for that program have not been used.

The old program supported minority language instruction and second language instruction. What we cannot ascertain from the minister's statement is what proportion, within the broad parameters of the program, is assigned to each. It seems to me that phrases such as "the bulk" and vague language of that kind do not help parliamentarians or the spokesman for any party very much in judging whether this program is designed as a tokenistic approach or whether the government is serious in its stated objective of attempting to increase the degree of bilingualism and the number of people capable of bilingual communication in Canada. We really do not know how much is allocated for each program in each province.

We are concerned as well about the contribution of 1.5 per cent of the annual per pupil cost to each provincial government for administration. In British Columbia this amount may be relatively minor because of the approach of the former government of the province. I am happy to report there is a new approach now, but the former provincial government either did not take advantage of the program or, if it did, the money was used to finance the status quo across the province and very seldom if ever passed on to the school districts.

Last year the Commissioner of Official Languages called second language instruction in Canada a national disaster. I notice that in his new report he has backed off somewhat from that statement. Perhaps he has been speaking to affluent English-speaking Canadians at cocktail parties, because I think there exists among the affluent and better educated Canadians a keen desire that second language instruction and bilingualism be enhanced. This is not true. What is actually happening in our country is that bilingualism and second language instruction are not increasing at all. In spite of the government's programs and policies the bilingual program is actually on the decline. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I should like to cite briefly a few figures.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that at this point I should perhaps interrupt him just for a moment. I realize he has not completed his statement, but I think I have to remind the hon. member for Fraser Valley West and all hon. members that under the Standing Order comments should be brief. I have said before and I repeat that it is difficult for the Chair to determine the extent of brevity. I would think the guideline should be the length of the original statement by the minister, and when the statement takes five minutes and the comments ten minutes perhaps the hon. member who makes the longer statement is not respecting the spirit of the Standing Order. I mention this for the guidance of the hon. member and all hon. members who offer comments within the terms of the Standing Order.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for your advice and will be guided by your suggestion. I did not realize I had exceeded or was likely to exceed the time taken by the minister in making his statement. It seemed to me that he spoke for a lengthy period. I will skip the documentation of my argument that second language training is on the decline.

● (1420)

I suggest that a much larger program in the schools would accomplish our bilingual objectives much more expeditiously than the kind of programs that are embarked upon at the adult level. In my view it is much better to spend the available language instructions funds on school children than on 50 year old members of parliament, civil servants and about to be retired brigadiers.

I should like to observe in closing that universities across Canada by and large no longer require a second language. What we are doing about bilingualism through the program the minister has just announced today is a mere drop in the bucket compared with the $500 million we are spending on post-secondary education. I should like to ask the minister, parenthetically and rhetorically, what he intends to do and how he is going to use his influence to increase second language instruction in universities. It does not necessarily have to be French, but I suggest it is the mark of an educated person to be able to converse in more than one language and I think that we in North America are unique in the world in being limited in our ability to communicate in a language other than our mother tongue.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I am not as satisfied as the hon. minister, and I should like to make a few comments to prove it to the House.

We have often heard fine statements about the intentions of the government, and I think this is mostly what this is, since we would have to know exactly how these programs will be applied for the simple reason that we agree with the suggested assistance for the teaching of a second language. However, as concerns the teaching of the language of the minority, Quebec has had experience in this field with Bill 63, which was introduced with the best of intentions and allowed everyone to choose the teaching language he preferred. This experience was a catastrophe and all Quebecers now want to have this bill amended.

We are faced with a somewhat similar situation. Mr. Speaker, when it is a matter of teaching the language of the minority, we must distinguish between the French- and English-speaking groups. I find the reason in the first page of the minister's statement where he says that he sent a letter to his colleagues in which:

> . . . I mentioned also the renewed determination of the French-speaking minorities outside Quebec to preserve their language and culture and I spoke of a related desire on the part of many English-speaking Canadians to establish bonds of co-operation and understanding between the two language . . .

Mr. Speaker, there is the difference. For one group, the French-speaking minority, it is a matter of survival while for the other group it is a matter of understanding. Now, considering that distinction, the special assistance granted to the English-speaking minority in Quebec is unjustified. There is in Quebec an important English-speaking minority which as a result of historic circumstances or others, is richer and has better structures than French-speaking Quebecers. Therefore, helping this linguistic minority would only serve to worsen even more an already quite disastrous situation.

Mr. Speaker, there is a way to solve this problem. The money would be used wisely if it helped create in the province of Quebec an education system where, at the elementary level, French only were taught in French schools. English-speaking Canadians would benefit from that. I am sure, as the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) himself indicated, that if he had had the opportunity to attend a French school at the elementary level up to Grade 7, and then move on to an English school at the secondary level, he would be a lot more fluent in the language spoken by Molière and could represent more effectively the 80 per cent of his constituents who speak French.

These are facts, Mr. Speaker, and they certainly deserve being emphasized. We agree with the assistance given to the teaching of the other language, but as far as the minority in Quebec is concerned, we must discriminate, for there is no linguistic problem for the English-speaking population in Canada. There is only one such problem in Canada, and it is the one with which French-speaking Canadians are faced and which affects the French-speaking minorities in all Canadian provinces, except Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I felt it was necessary for me to make these remarks, and I hope these programs will be directed along these lines.

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity arising out of the chaotic condition that prevails in the beef industry, aggravated by the government's subsidy program which has caused panic selling, the accumulation of large numbers of unsold cattle at yards, markets and feedlots, together with a serious depression of prices to the extent that the subsidy of 7 cents per pound has now been nullified. Reports today indicate that a number of major markets have suspended their operations in Alberta. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Hollands):

> That the deadlines of April 13 and April 6 on A3 and A4 grades of beef, respectively, be removed and that eligibility for subsidy on these grades be extended until the market returns to orderly and profitable levels.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On page vi of the notice paper attached to today's order paper there appears an indication of the introduction of a bill entitled "An Act to Amend the Veterans Land Act." According to the notice paper it is to be introduced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). Mr. Speaker, there are a number of instances of ministers intruding into portfolios other than their own, but I hope that in this case this bill can be presented to the House by the distinguished Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Railway Car Shortage

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the hon. member is well taken. Although the notice was signed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, possibly in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister, it was a faulty entry, and the bill will appear in tomorrow's order paper as being sponsored by the honourable and gallant Minister of Veterans Affairs.

FISHERIES

PROTECTION OF NEWFOUNDLAND INSHORE FISHERMEN AGAINST GILL-NET OPERATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency. Representation by concerned western Newfoundland fishermen, supported by the provincial government, urges protection for inshore fishermen against gill-net operators on the west coast of Newfoundland who tend to destroy our marine resources. Since the situation can reach emergency proportions I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House urges an immediate investigation by the Minister of Fisheries and that the matter be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

TRANSPORT

RETURN OF CANADIAN RAILWAY CARS FROM UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the continuing shortage of railway cars in Canada for a variety of commodities and the absolute, thorough and complete inability of the Minister of Transport to rectify the situation. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That this House request the Secretary of State for External Affairs to raise with Dr. Kissinger of the United States the question of the more than 24,000 Canadian railway cars that were as of the end of February in the United States, with a view to having them returned to Canada for use in the Canadian interest.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

INDUSTRY

PACKAGING—SHORTAGE OF SUPPLIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas it has been reliably reported that up to 65 employees have been laid off at two packaging plants in the Richmond area of British Columbia, namely, Belkin Packaging and Capital Bag, and whereas the reason for these lay-offs is that major suppliers are exporting so much of the liner board and bag craft paper needed for processing of finished products that lay-offs are occurring for lack of supplies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Neale):

That the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce be instructed to co-operate with the B.C. provincial government in taking immediate action to ensure that domestic needs are given priority.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

2. (a) Repairs and improvements were carried out during 1947, 1952, 1953, 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1964, 1965, 1969, 1971. (b) $52,740.

RESOLUTION REGARDING WATER LEVELS OF LAKE ONTARIO AND LAKE ERIE

Question No. 41—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the Department of the Environment received a resolution from the city of St. Catharines dated November 19, 1973 requesting the government to provide municipalities bordering Lake Ontario and Lake Erie with regular up-to-date information on water levels of these lakes?

2. What action has the government taken on this matter and, specifically, has it agreed to this request and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what date will municipalities start receiving the information?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes.

2. The Minister of the Environment wrote to the City Clerk of St. Catharines on December 21 stating that his department already publishes a Monthly Water Levels Bulletin for the Great Lakes and Montreal Harbour, which includes a forecast of probable future levels for the ensuing six months. The Director of Parks and Recreation for the City of St. Catharines is now on the distribution list. Daily information on water levels and their trends can be obtained by phone from the Canada Centre for Inland Waters, Burlington, Ontario, telephone 416-637-4268. (a) Not applicable. (b) As soon as they write to the Hydrographic Chart Distribution Office, Department of the Environment, Ottawa K1A 0E6 and ask to be put on the distribution list.

Order Paper Questions

NEGOTIATION RELATING TO SUPERTANKER TRANSPORT OF OIL

Question No. 111—Mr. Mather:

Are negotiations between Canada and the United States relative to supertanker transport of oil through the Strait of Juan de Fuca confined to an oil-spill clean-up agreement?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canada-United States Oil Spill Contingency Plan which will soon be in effect will apply to the east coast and Great Lakes as well as the west coast. While important in itself, the plan is only one component of a comprehensive package the government is proposing to the United States as part of extensive bilateral negotiations to deal with whatever increase of tanker traffic may develop in the Straits of Juan de Fuca and Rosario Strait.

COST OF EN42-173 PAMPHLET

Question No. 137—Mr. Laprise:

What was the cost of publication of the pamphlet number EN42-173 published by Environment Canada and how much did Workshop Inc. receive for the numerous drawings printed in the pamphlet?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): The total cost of publication of the pamphlet EN42-173, "Air Pollution in Canada", was $11,500. Design Workshop Inc. received $5,340 for their services.

ESTABLISHMENT OF NEWSPRINT DISTRIBUTION RESEARCH GROUP

Question No. 216—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce established a marketing and distribution group known as the "Newsprint Distribution Research" and, if so, on what date was it established, what companies are involved and what were the terms of reference?

2. Will such study be broadened to include the shipment of newsprint from regions other than Quebec including the Atlantic Provinces?

3. What are the names of the principal personnel involved in such study and what were the criteria for their selection?

4. Has any computer work been allocated to companies based in the United States and, if so, for what reason was such work not given to Canadian-based firms?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. As part of the government's strategy to improve the international competitiveness of Canada's pulp and paper industry, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is contributing to the costs of a feasibility investigation on possible methods of reducing distribution costs for newsprint. Under the Trade-Industrial Program separate contributions are being made to the Canadian National Railways and to Newsprint Distribution Research, who are conducting separate parts of the investigation at arms length. Newsprint Distribution Research was established May 1, 1973, and is an association, formed for the purpose by a group of five newsprint producers based in Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. The companies involved are: Anglo-Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills Limited; The Price Company Limited; Domtar Limited; Abitibi Paper Company Limited; Consolidated-Bathurst Limited. The purpose of the investigation is to determine the most economical and feasible distribution channel or channels for the transportation, warehousing and delivery of newsprint from eastern Canadian mills to the United States.

2. Before the investigation was undertaken, other Canadian newsprint producers were approached but only five were in a position at that time to contribute manpower and financial support. If intensive studies now under way indicate that there are significant transportation and warehousing cost savings to be achieved, other Canadian newsprint manufacturers will be urged to join in the formation of a non-profit distribution company. All Canadian rail carriers will be eligible to compete for the tonnage to be shipped by the distribution company.

3. The Chairman of Newsprint Distribution Research is Mr. J. P. Lunderville, the Project Director is Mr. S. French. Both have had many years experience in the manufacturing and distribution of forest products with Canadian companies.

4. No computer time has been purchased to date.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED DEPARTMENTAL MALADMINISTRATION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 26 to request leave to make a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the government's administrative responsibilities with respect to immigration, manpower and unemployment insurance. It specifically relates to maladministration of these responsibilities which has already resulted in the laying of criminal charges against certain aliens and immigration officials, poor morale among immigration employees, and further suspected criminal activities arising out of the improper possession of unemployment insurance certificates. If you decide, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is proper to be discussed, I shall move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain has provided the Chair with the notice required by Standing Order 26. The hon. member proposes that the House set aside the business proposed for today, that is, the consideration of Bill C-7, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act, to debate instead, and I quote the hon. member's words, "the government's administrative responsibilities with respect to immigration, manpower and unemployment insurance".

The Chair cannot agree that there is in the matter proposed for debate by the hon. member the aspect of sudden emergency which is essential to justify the adjournment of the day's business under the terms of Standing Order 26. With respect, I suggest to the hon. member that a debate alleging, generally, maladministration in a department should be considered in other ways provided by the Standing Orders, perhaps on a motion under Standing Order 58 or in the course of the examination of departmental estimates before the responsible standing committee of the House. I suggest to the hon. member and to the House that the requirements of Standing Order 26 preclude the Chair from putting the hon. member's motion today.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Oral Questions.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Trinity rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) could advise the House, through you, when notices of motions Nos. 3 to 6 inclusive will be dealt with? The fact that these notices of motions for the production of papers, which were originally put on the order paper on October 16, 1973, have not yet been dealt with is as inexplicable as it is unconscionable.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I anticipate being able to deal with 10 or 15 notices of motions for the production of papers next Wednesday.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—BASIS OF ALLOCATION OF GRANTS TO CONSTITUENCIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It arises as a result of the very discouraging revelation that there is an unsavoury practice going on in the minister's department which resulted in 1972-73 LIP distributions amounting to $106 million going to Liberals and about $59 million going to Conservatives. In the first instance, this is blatant partisanship and, second, it indicates that there is no unemployment in the Conservative ridings. In order to clear up the answer of the minister indicating that moneys were sent to ridings but not necessarily spent in those ridings, in order to clear up this matter of some concern to all members of the House, can he tell us whether the cheques for the jobs involved in the LIP program go to the constituencies with high unemployment?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the grants are paid to the sponsors and of course the grants are paid in the form of a cheque. Those cheques are mailed to the sponsor's mailing address in one constituency or another. That is the location and that is the basis on which the calculation of actual distribution between regions and between constituencies is identified.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, the explanation given by the minister certainly is not satisfactory by a long shot. In view of the minister's November 8 statement in the House that the allocation of LIP funds would be based on so-called "pockets of unemployment", and in light of his recent statement that "the prime factor" in the allocation of grants is the "assessment of unemployment rates", would the minister explain why the moneys granted were not granted to persons living in areas of high unemployment as exhibited by the ridings of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and the President of the Treasury Board? Money went into those ridings but for some reason or other disappeared into other areas. What is the answer?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out the other day, the hon. member is continuing to confuse two fiscal periods. He is talking about a statement I made in November which would apply to 1973-74 local initiatives project allocation, whereas his prior reference was to the period 1972-73, the details of which were tabled the other day.

Mr. Alexander: In view of the fact the government is having an over-all review of social security programs which will probably result in a permanent job creation program, and in order to get away from this unsavoury practice and questionable methods of the minister, will he assure the House that any such program will be implemented by legislation so that members of the House can keep their eyes on it?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, if and when the details of the community employment program are decided upon, of course they will be presented to the House for consideration in one form or another.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION TO CUT PROFIT MARGINS OF MAJOR FOOD RETAILERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the recent high profits of the major food retailers, and as a means of reducing food prices, will the government consider following the example of the British prices commission by ordering the major food retailers to cut their profit margins by 10 per cent?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we do not have a general system of price controls as they have in the United Kingdom, which they have carried over from the previous Conservative government, the failure of which has led to that government being out of office.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: My hon. friend refers to the adoption of such a policy. All alternatives, obviously, will continue to be available for consideration by the government.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I was not talking about a general system of price controls. I was talking about a selective measure ordering the major food chains to cut back their profit margins by 10 per cent. Would the minister please attempt to answer that question?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the measure the hon. lady refers to was taken within the context of a general system of controls put into effect by the previous Conservative government in the United Kingdom. As I said, this is something that can be taken under consideration.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED EXCESS PROFITS TAX ON MAJOR FOOD RETAILERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs lacks the flexibility to consider the question in a selective way, I shall direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Alternatively, because of the apparent unwillingness of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to consider the possibility of the measure I suggested, will the government consider the imposition of an excess profits tax on the major food chains?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government is reviewing a number of possible measures. Whether or not we will consider the hon. lady's suggestion I can neither confirm nor deny. The hon. lady's suggestion is a matter which would be budgetary in nature.

PREDICTED FIFTY PER CENT LOSS IN BUYING POWER OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that I already put the question to the right hon. Prime Minister who was to refer it to the Minister of Finance, and that I have yet not received an answer, I believe it necessary to reiterate my question.

Economists of the Royal Bank of Canada indicated recently that within 10 years the Canadian dollar would depreciate by 50 per cent, which would reduce by the same rate the buying power of Canadians, has the minister studied this report and, if so, what does he intend to do to limit this loss in buying power for Canadians?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had difficulty hearing the question because of the enthusiasm shown in certain parts of this House. In any case, I considered the report. The hon. member's question is based on an assumption and I have no other comment to make.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Although the minister considers it to be an assumption, I would point out that serious people undertook this study. Is the minister prepared to examine it more seriously and accept its conclusion that one of the major means of increasing the revenues of Canadians is to reduce taxes?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would study and read again the report. The question as to whether I agree or will agree with the conclusions of the report will depend eventually on my opinion of it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STORAGE OF NUCLEAR OR ATOMIC WARHEADS IN CANADA—CONTROL THEREOF

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Are nuclear or atomic warheads for missiles or weapons held at Comox, B.C., or at any other site or sites in Canada?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, none of our aircraft are equipped with nuclear missiles, but we do have in storage, and this has been public knowledge for several years—nuclear missiles at Comox and at the other bases from which our interceptor squadrons take off.

Mr. McKinnon: Are such warheads solely under Canadian control and, among the aspects of such control, could a decision to return the warheads to the United States be taken unilaterally by Canada, or are we bound by the NORAD agreement to accept NORAD combined directions?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the missiles are under the joint control of Canadian and American authorities. They could be sent back by Canadian direction.

SOCIAL SECURITY

STOLEN SOCIAL INSURANCE CARD—ALLEGED REQUEST TO PERSON TO CHANGE NAME

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the answer given to me last Friday by the Acting Prime Minister that it was not government policy to have a Canadian citizen change his legal name in order to secure a new social insurance number when it is known that the original number is being used illegally, what immediate, specific action will the minister undertake to secure for my constituent a new social insurance number?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's concern about the ridiculous nature of the situation as he described it. I am checking all the facts to see that it is exactly as it was presented. If that is the case, we will simply have to find some better way to handle such cases.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister advise why, when a request was made by one of my constituents on January 12, 1973, for an investigation of the fraudulent use of a social insurance number, no such investigation was made? Further, will the minister advise if an investigation is now in progress?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is not the function of my department to investigate the fraudulent use of social insurance numbers. However, I have asked my department to do everything possible within its jurisdiction to assist the hon. member's constituent, and I hope we can help to resolve his difficulty.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED RAILWAY FROM ARCTIC TO HAUL GAS AND OIL—CONSIDERATION BEFORE DECISION MADE ON GAS PIPELINE APPLICATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Some months ago, after studies by the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transit at Queen's University had shown that a railway from the Arctic to haul oil and gas was feasible, I suggested that the government should look into this. The Department of Transport then set up a CP-CN study which has now declared such a railway to be, to use its words, "totally feasible". Will the minister say whether or not this latest recommendation made by this task force is being considered and is going to be accepted with one change only, I suggest, that the terminus be in Saskatchewan rather than in Alberta?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, to be more precise, I understand that the terminus would be in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, if it is to be anywhere in that province.

I have received the first volume of the combined CN-CP study with regard to the rail shipment of oil in particular. I have not yet had a report on it. We would regard this study as being an important factor to be considered by the National Energy Board and, ultimately, by the government with regard to the proposal for a Mackenzie Valley pipeline.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister assure the House that no decision will be made by the National Energy Board until the several reports provided by the CN-CP task force have been considered?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think I can give that assurance. It is anticipated that the hearings on the Arctic gas proposal will not be finally determined by the board for more than a year. Without knowing exactly the final termination date of the rail study, I think it is obviously important that the full effects of the rail study should be up for consideration before any final decision is taken on a pipeline route.

WELFARE

AMOUNT OF INCOME PAID BY FAMILIES FOR RENT—REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACT TO OBTAIN INCREASED SHELTER ALLOWANCES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of reports that in urban centres welfare families are paying half of their incomes in rent, and in light of the uncontrolled and ever rising rentals, with disastrous consequences for people on low and fixed incomes, will the minister convene, on a basis of urgency, a federal-provincial meeting to discuss joint action by way of increased shelter allowances to which the federal government might contribute under the Canada Assistance Plan and by encouraging flexible rental controls and other means to deal with this grievous problem?

● (1450)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is no need for a special meeting for this purpose. The Canada Assistance Plan at the present time provides for all the flexibility to which the hon. member has referred. It is up to the provincial governments concerned to set Canada Assistance Plan payments at the levels they wish. As the hon. member knows, the federal government contributes to the extent of 50 per cent of such costs. Those costs are determined by the provincial governments concerned.

Mr. Brewin: Will the minister encourage the provinces, in light of the emergency, by suggesting that they consult with him about this question of shelter allowances?

Mr. Lalonde: I am reasonably satisfied that the officials of the provincial government and the members of the Ontario government also read the Globe and Mail and that this fact has been drawn to their attention. Obviously, if consultation is required I shall certainly be pleased to hold discussions with them on this subject. Again, the initiative is theirs. The Prime Minister said as early as last fall that he was encouraging the provinces to take the necessary steps to adjust social assistance payments so as to take into account the increase in the cost of living.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister now tell the House at least the approximate date when he will be introducing the budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the meeting of provincial finance ministers and treasurers that I was considering bringing down the budget some time in April or May after we had had an opportunity to stabilize the benefits and burdens of a uniform energy pricing system in Canada.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Will it be before or after Easter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As to the precise date, I still wish to consult further with the Prime Minister and the leader of the House. I can assure the hon. member for Crowfoot that it will not be before Easter.

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHEN DECISION ON DOW-DOME APPLICATION WILL BE MADE PUBLIC BY BOARD

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of recent press speculation concerning the decision of the National Energy Board with regard to the Dow-Dome application, can the minister advise when this decision will be made public?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): It had been the intention to make the board's decision public next week when it was hoped it would be available in both official languages. However, because of the speculation in the press we have decided it would be desirable to make the English portion available, very probably tomorrow, so that an end can be put to the speculation as to what the board has recommended.

Mr. Cullen: Since this decision by the Board requires either amendment or ratification by the cabinet, can the minister tell us how soon the companies may expect cabinet action on the report?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): At a very early date, we would hope.

SPORTS

ACTION TO FORCE WORLD HOCKEY ASSOCIATION TO DONATE MONEY FOR PROMOTION OF AMATEUR HOCKEY IN CANADA

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's recent and sudden interest in professional sport, and keeping in mind the fact that the National Hockey League donates over $1 million a year to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association as well as to clubs responsible for the promotion of amateur hockey in this country, as a result of its universal draft system, can the minister advise the House whether he is prepared to force the World Hockey Association to do likewise?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to tell the hon. member that an agreement has been signed between the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and the World Hockey League, as one was signed between the National Hockey League and the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association. Those agreements will provide for the payment, to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, of comparable compensation in both cases. This is the result of the pressures I exerted upon and the representations I made to both leagues last year.

[English]

WORLD HOCKEY ASSOCIATION—AGE OF PLAYERS DRAFTED

Mr. Otto Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to hear these views expressed. Since the minister apparently has secret ways of ousting the World Football League team from Toronto, can he assure the House that he will take similar measures to make the World Hockey Association limit its draft age to 20-year-olds, as does the NHL, so as not to jeopardize amateur junior hockey in this country any further?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to welcome the hon. member to the House after his extended absence. I can assure him that the arrangements made with the World Hockey League are similar to those already made with the National Hockey League but that they meet with the approval of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association.

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am happy that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has welcomed me back to the House although I was here more than ten days ago—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: May I add that because of the fact I had an opportunity to visit Munich, Germany, at my own expense—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: —where I was able to study the results of the aftermath of the Olympics which were held there two years ago, especially Olympic housing and other problems arising from the construction of the Olympic Stadium and other facilities, I can represent this party on Olympic matters better than some of the people on that side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SIGNING OF CANADIAN LACROSSE PLAYERS BY AMERICAN INTERESTS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, this question, too, is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the minister's determination to exclude the World Football League from Canada in spite of the agreement by Metro Toronto to permit the Toronto Norsemen to play in the CNE stadium, and in view of reports that American interests have signed more than 50 Canadian lacrosse players to play in the United States, is the minister considering any intervention in this area and, if so, what specific action does he plan to take?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member took the trouble to read my statement on that, he would realize that the situation is completely different. I have no intention to take measures regarding lacrosse. He would also realize that the present developments have the complete support of the Canadian Amateur Lacrosse Association. I suggest he read the statement made on this by the representatives of the association.

[English]

Mr. Stackhouse: Since this matter is of considerable concern to Canadians, would the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions regarding the government's policy toward what seems to be the policing of Canadian sport?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I will soon have the pleasure of tabling a bill in this House that will enable to government to take a position on this matter. I will then also have the pleasure of listening to all the points of view of this opposition members.

TRADE

PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO QUEBEC ON EXTERNAL TRADE

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could he tell this House if he is aware of a statement made by the Quebec delegate to the Annual Congress of International Relations Club, Mr. Jean Deschamps, who said that Quebec should have access to the economic records governing the Canadian external policy when decisions being taken have a direct incidence on the economic growth of Quebec and, if so, could he tell us if these records will be made available to Quebec at the request of the province?

● (1500)

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the report mentioned by the hon. member. We do co-operate with the provinces in providing them with information that would be useful in their industrial development, and we are always happy to co-operate.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBLE USE OF KOREANS TO CONSTRUCT TAR SANDS PLANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the statement made earlier this week by the Minister of Supply and Services that there is likely to be a massive immigration of some 30,000 Koreans to construct 20 tar sands plants in northern Alberta, will the minister say whether his department has been involved in this planning; and in view of the short time—1980—within which to complete these plants, will he say whether his department is now already involved in planning to move these people to Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that is not the correct interpretation of the minister's comments. I can assure the hon. member that there has been no such formal suggestion made to my department with regard to individuals from Korea. I would also add that we are, however, working very closely with the Alberta government through the Alberta manpower needs committee, which is a federal-provincial mechanism, in discussing the manpower requirements for development of the tar sands.

Mr. Bawden: In view of the fact that closer to 60,000 people with special skills may be required to meet this construction demand, will the minister undertake to advise the House very shortly where the government envisages these employees coming from, and when such a plan will commence?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, in consultation with the Alberta government through the manpower needs committee that kind of figure has not yet surfaced. However, we are in very close contact with them and the situation seems to be developing very satisfactorily as far as they are concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Supply and Services rises on a question of privilege.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put on record, so that hon. members will know, that I never said that in my project we were going to attract 30,000 Koreans to Canada. I am ready at any time to give hon. members on the opposite side a briefing, but the problem with the Conservatives is that they sit and think, but mostly sit.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INCREASE IN PASSENGER FARES—SUGGESTION MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS FILE APPLICATION FOR REVIEW

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, that is a hard act to follow. In the absence of the Minister of Transport may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Canadian National Railways has announced that it will increase passenger fares by up to 15 per cent on April 1, an increase that follows hard on another increase of the same dimension in November, is the government considering the possibility of approaching the CNR, however humbly, with a view to their not bringing this increase into effect?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question in regard to which I could not be expected to have an intimate knowledge, but I am sure that my friend the Minister of Transport or the acting minister will be happy to reply at an appropriate time.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that even the Canadian Transport Commission cannot bring about a review of railway passenger fares unless an aggrieved passenger makes an application and asks leave to have an increase in fares reviewed, would the minister undertake to act on behalf of that endangered species, the Canadian railway passenger, and file an application in his own name?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have already taken an initiative along these lines in providing a special grant of $100,000 to the Consumers Association of Canada to enable them to carry out a consumer advocacy program whereby they may make representations of this sort before regulatory bodies, both federal and provincial.

Oral Questions

HEALTH

SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL MANPOWER—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the critical shortage of medical manpower in many areas across Canada and the great dissatisfaction at the disparity in the delivery of medical services, and in view of the threatened cut-off, has the minister discussed this question with his provincial counterparts, and can he assure the House that this condition will be corrected?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice. As I have said before, this question was discussed at the last meeting of federal-provincial health ministers and is being reviewed at the present time. I have asked my officials for a report concerning whether medical schools are planning to increase their intake in the coming fall, and when I receive a report I will certainly be very happy to let the hon. member know.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the minister that I have some correspondence on this that will immediately enlighten him. Of 2,400 applicants, all qualified, 200 are being considered and only 40 will be chosen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INFORMATION

LEGISLATION TO GUARANTEE SECURITY OF INFORMATION STORED IN DATA BANKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and it relates to the problem of protecting the privacy of Canadians in light of the disclosure that dossiers exist in American data banks on literally hundreds of thousands of Canadians and that the government cannot even guarantee the security of its own data banks. Could I ask the minister whether the legislation that he will be presenting, and which he has indicated is not yet ready, is awaiting a report on this matter by the Minister of Communications, which was referred to by the Prime Minister last week when he said of the Minister of Communications: "He has not yet brought to me or to cabinet any specific recommendations, but we are anxiously awaiting his report"?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the legislation to make effective security measures within government in regard to our own information will be coming forward. It will incorporate work that is being done at the interdepartmental level involving the Departments of Communications and Justice, among others, which are devising the draft rules that will apply to all information within governmental control.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Is it correct to infer from the minister's answer that at the present time the government is concerned only with preparing legislation on the internal procedures within government and that the minister is preparing no legislation to deal with the problem of storage of data on Canadians in foreign data banks, though the government has been aware of this for two years now?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, that would not be a correct assumption. The most advanced work likely to lead to legislation at the earliest date is in the field I have just mentioned. A good deal of other work is going on, particularly in the Department of Communications, on the very serious technical questions that arise in connection with the control of computer information, whether in the hands of government or private sources. In addition, work is going on, in co-operation with the provinces, concerning the privacy of information or the right to privacy of individuals, the control of information in the hands of private institutions, and such other questions as what right a person ought to have to get access to information that is used against him. This very definitely involves provincial jurisdiction as well as federal jurisdiction and therefore this co-operation is essential.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will realize that there are only five minutes until the end of the question period and there are some 25 or 30 members still seeking to ask questions. Rather than supplementaries and extended questions and replies every time a question is asked, I would think in all fairness to those hon. members who are waiting that questions should be brief.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTION THAT CANADA ENTERING HYPER-INFLATION PHASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the rate of inflation in some western European countries is now over 10 per cent and that the rate in the United States and Canada is increasing, can the minister say whether the Canadian and world economies are now entering a hyper-inflation phase?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter of judgment and vocabulary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will not say that I necessarily agree with the answer by the minister, but I do take exception to the question from a procedural standpoint. The hon. member has asked for an expression of opinion and a question in those terms should not be asked.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS TO TURKEY TO CONTINUE BAN ON CULTIVATION OF OPIUM POPPY

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact the government of Turkey has lifted its three-year ban against opium poppy cultivation, contrary to the wishes of many western nations, and in view of the fact that up to 80 per cent of the heroin in Canada is said to originate in Turkey and is causing untold crime and human suffering here, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate whether he has made any representations to the Turkish government urging that it reimpose its ban on poppy cultivation? Is he considering reductions in our economic and military aid to Turkey as a means of making Canadian views felt on this subject?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the Turkish government has not yet taken a decision to renew cultivation of opium poppies, and at the meeting of the United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs in Geneva last month the Canadian representative commended the government of Turkey for its humanitarian effort up to the present in reducing production.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED EXEMPTION OF MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENTS FROM PAYMENTS TO CANADA PENSION PLAN ON BEHALF OF ELECTED OFFICIALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that many municipal councils pay a share of Canada Pension Plan contributions on behalf of their elected representatives, and in view of the fact that most councillors are otherwise employed and are therefore able to recover their portion of Canada Pension Plan contributions when they file their income tax returns, will the minister review the 1969 cabinet decision and give consideration to exempting municipal governments from making these contributions in cases where elected officials are otherwise employed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF IMPORTED CATTLE CONTAINING DES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture which has to do with the cattle situation at the present time and the possibility that United States cattle coming into Canada contain the growth stimulant DES. Can he very briefly explain the government's position on this matter and indicate more specifically whether there will be any move in the very near future to restrict United States cattle containing this growth stimulant from coming into Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of National Health and Welfare and myself have stated in the past that it is illegal to sell meat in Canada that comes from cattle that have been implanted with or fed the growth stimulant DES, and we are going to make sure that none of that meat is allowed into Canada.

Mr. Murta: Since cattle that have been implanted with DES could be coming into Canada in quantity as early as the first part of April, what methods will the minister use to stop these cattle from entering Canada?

Mr. Stanfield: He can recognize them.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, at the present time we are discussing several methods.

BEEF CATTLE—SUGGESTED ADJUSTMENT OF TIME LIMIT ON SUBSIDY ON GRADES A3 AND A4—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question asked of the Minister of Agriculture and relates to meat prices. In view of the fact that dressed meat in shopping centres and chain stores in Montreal fell three cents this morning, and in view of the fact that 2,500 head were held over in Toronto from yesterday because of the chaotic situation in the industry, is the minister prepared to adjust the time limit on his subsidy on grades A3 and A4, particularly because of the situation in the market right now?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this has been suggested by other hon. members of the House, and also by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. It is being looked at. I can only say that I would hope we do not build up any false hopes in the trade and that they will continue to go about marketing cattle like good corporations should.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): You are destroying confidence in the industry.

Oral Questions

BEEF CATTLE—SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF GRADES B AND C IN SUBSIDY PROGRAM

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, we are rapidly reaching the point where there is no hope at all, let alone false hope. I should like to ask the minister in respect of the question of subsidies on beef whether he will include grades B and C as well as A grades in that subsidy program so that the confusion which now exists in the stockyards can be straightened out, and so that the producer as well as the processor will have some confidence in this program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct any wrong impression I may have given in my answer to the hon. member for Crowfoot. I meant the packing firms. Some of them have been co-operating and if they all co-operate this program can be successful.

In answer to the last hon. member's question, we are considering these things, but I am not holding out any false hopes again because in the North American market, where the actions of one country complement those of another, the United States government is spending $45 million to take red brand meat off the market and they are just using the top brands.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Laval and then the hon. member for Vegreville.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM BETWEEN MONTREAL AND MIRABEL AIRPORT

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. Minister of Transport is absent, I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary.

This question is very important, Mr. Speaker, since it concerns the proposed construction of an electric train rapid transit system using the existing CP and CN rail lines between downtown Montreal and Mirabel Airport via the City of Laval. What will be the terms of the agreement between the various levels of government to deal successfully with the realization of such a project?

[English]

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer in French. If I give the answer in English I will probably be criticized once again, but I know we are in a bilingual country.

[Translation]

The recommendation respecting the utilization of an electric train transit system is the result of a joint study by the federal Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Quebec Department of Transport. The government wishes to continue its consultations with the other levels of government in this respect before fixing its choice on a particular transit system.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will not comment on the procedure we have just witnessed and about which I have serious reservations.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF CATTLE—POSSIBLE MANIPULATION OF SUBSIDY PROGRAM BY PACKERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the government has now become very deeply involved in the meat marketing process I should like to ask whether he is monitoring and examining the purchasing policies of the various packers throughout the country since evidence would indicate that packers have been taking undue advantage of producers through the manipulation of prices and by deliberately refusing to purchase cattle from a number of producers, thereby creating additional chaos and confusion in the marketing process?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are getting replies from our people and others in all parts of the country, and we are trying to put these together because we are to meet with officials of the cattle industry tomorrow.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. Perhaps the hon. member for Vegreville could be allowed to ask his supplementary question, after which the Chair will have to call orders of the day.

● (1520)

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether his department intends to take any specific action if the evidence indicates there is undue manipulation and deliberate withholding of purchases in this regard?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, if we find evidence, as the hon. member is suggesting, that this practice is taking place and is contrary to any law we certainly will recommend that action be taken under whatever legislation is on the books that would allow us to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Calgary South rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, the usually sensible and practical Minister of Supply and Services made a statement to the effect that the Conservatives sometime sit and do nothing. Earlier this week the Minister of Supply and Services made some impractical, irresponsible statements regarding a plan for the development of the tar sands in Alberta. No doubt he is able to do so because he expects in the near future he and his colleagues will be sitting in opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member indicate in what way he feels his parliamentary privilege has been infringed so that the Chair may determine whether debate should be pursued on the hon. member's point.

Mr. Bawden: I shall not pursue the point any further, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION, ADMINISTRATION AND OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-7 to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, when this subject was last debated I had barely touched the part of the bill dealing with sports, and amateur sports specifically. On that occasion I said that there used to be only six teams in the NHL. Hansard, as recorded at page 720, indicates I said there were only 16 teams in the NHL. Obviously, the Hansard people are not hockey fans of old time standing because it is a well known fact that in days gone by there were six teams and there are now 16 teams in the NHL.

I was leading up to the subject of hockey, amateur sports and the question of amateurs being signed to contracts. Basically, the situation we have in Canada is that the NHL pays a sum of money to the amateur teams for the development of capable hockey players, those who would be able to play in the NHL. Now, we have the World Hockey League which is grabbing off some of the players without making any payment to the local teams which developed the players. This, to me, is a weakness in the present situation. I believe competition will soon take care of this, but if it should not then we will see the development of professional junior hockey teams. The CAHA has failed to make any strong move in this regard when dealing with the World Hockey League. There are rumours in western Canada that there might be a senior-junior professional hockey league formed, and in that case the juniors would be signed and would be the property of the team for which they were playing.

Now, before everybody jumps on the bandwagon and says what a sinful thing that would be, let me point out that many juniors who now play in the NHL or the WHA previously spent plenty of time in perhaps three minor leagues. Someone suggests that those leagues are even semi-professional. The junior leagues in Canada today are semi-professional. Let us take a look at these young hockey players. Canada basically is the talent area for the professional teams on the North American continent.

There are 12 teams in the World Hockey League and 16 in the NHL.

It is necessary that we help keep alive and encourage the junior, juvenile and midget hockey teams, and the NHL and the WHL should pay something for the development of the talent these leagues provide. Today there are thousands of active people all across Canada who take their kids to hockey school and to hockey games. These people who are keeping the kids healthy, keeping them off the street and contributing to the pool of hockey talent, should be given some help. These thousands of citizens do this, of course, for the benefit of hockey but also for the benefit of young Canadians. I believe the CAHA has failed to ensure in some way that the local teams, as far down the line as even midget, receive some benefit for the development of this talent. If this is not done we will see a professional junior hockey league.

I read an interview with the owner and coach of the Calgary Centennials, one of the better western junior hockey teams. He advocated professional junior hockey teams. He said this is coming. Why did he say that? Because he was very annoyed that the World Hockey League and the NHL intend to grab off three of his stars this year. They intend to take three of his stars and give the Calgary Centennials very little in return. Sometimes these kids have spent five years in organized hockey in the city of Calgary. This has been possible because of the contribution made by volunteer workers. These volunteers are not prepared to continue to deliver the talent unless there is some compensation. If we had professional junior hockey teams these would sign up all those teenagers. This may be the way we will have to go in order to protect the volunteer work that has gone into the development of the athletes which Canada has proven to have such an ability to produce in the field of hockey. I do not think this would be all bad. I believe we must protect and maintain that community of interest and spirit which has developed so many good hockey players and good hockey teams in the past.

While speaking on this particular aspect, I should like to say a few words about the controversy which is taking place in the football field. At one time there were two national football leagues in the United States, the AFL and the NFL. These two leagues have now amalgamated and formed a conglomerate of something like 16 professional teams. Now, we hear about the starting up of the World Football League. It really does not matter whether the Toronto Northmen get off the ground. It is a fact that on the North American continent there will be 10 or 12 more professional football teams whether or not the Toronto Northmen are allowed by this government to operate. A fellow by the name of Davidson has substantially proven the fact that he has a hold on the World Football League which will have ten or 12 teams on the North American continent.

An hon. Member: Are you in favour of it?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I will get to that in a moment. Let us work from that premise. There are 26 teams in a conglomerate now playing professional football in the United States and nine in Canada. There will be an additional 10 or 12 teams on the North American continent playing professional football. As a young lad I never tried my hand at football and had no particular liking for it. I wanted to get into hockey. There were only six NHL teams and it was a pretty difficult test. Perhaps I could have done it, perhaps not. I chose ranching instead. But that is not the point. There are many young Canadians, among them my sons and my grandsons, who want to get into professional sports. It pays big money and it is an entertainment. They can get their names in the headlines. As my friend suggests, it is also an industry.

I remember playing shortstop in a ball team and a kid I played against was a good shortstop player. He was sixteen years old at that time. He could have been on my team. He ended up playing professional football. If somebody had come along at that time and said to me that kid will play professional football in Canada, I would have said that that kid does not know the shape of a football; he is sixteen and there is no hope for him at all. That was true then. But he made the Calgary football team and was named rookie of the year. He ended up playing football for the Toronto Argonauts. I would not have thought it possible. It may well be that there is a Canadian star in the NFL. It is an entertainment and Canadians have proven that they are good entertainers if nothing else.

I am thinking of the Toronto Argonauts right now. Years ago I played hockey with Jim Cahill's father. I remember those cold days when his father and I used to get up, light the stove and watch the smoke curl over the roofs of the town. Nobody could have convinced me that Pat Cahill's son could have been a star for the Toronto Argonauts. Toronto was a long way from northern Saskatchewan. I would not have believed that Jim Cahill would have made it, but he did.

Some day a Canadian will get into this conglomerate which operates in the United States. Some day there will be plenty of Canadians playing in the Canadian Football League. Why should the government restrict those Canadians and keep them at home? We did not keep Anne Murray at home. We are proud of her singing ability whenever the government gives her a chance to advertise Canada with a song or two. We said to her: "go forth, young girl, and conquer the entertainment field on the North American continent if you want". We did not keep Lorne Greene home. We sent him to Hollywood, or at least he went himself and he became a star and made "Bonanza" famous. He was one of the most well-liked newscasters in Canada. We did not say to him that he was limited and could not break into that field, that there was no future for him in the United States. We wished him well. We call him back every once in a while and we are proud to say he is Canadian.

Why should we say: a curse on the world football league; you will rob us of Toronto, you will rob us of Canadian talent? I look upon it completely differently. To me, it is a window on the world for a football player. Knowing how much money they are making in football, if I were younger I would take a whack at it. I would not look at the nine teams in Canada and hope to sit warming a bench for one of them. I would say: there are 26 teams in the conglomerate operating in the United States, ten more teams in the world football league, that makes 36 teams, nine teams in Canada, that makes 45 teams, and they all carry a roster of some 40 players.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Sherbrooke.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the hon. member for Crowfoot thinks of the fact that several Canadian athletes go to the United States to further their studies and that we are allowing American professional teams to enter Canada while in most of our universities where there is tremendous athletic potential, they received no help.

In my opinion, the federal government and most provinces have failed their duty. So, I would like to know the hon. member's opinion on that matter, because I think that is where the potential is.

[English]

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I do not disagree that there is a great potential in the universities in Canada. That was the very point I was making. But let us not act hastily against the world football league, the Toronto Northmen or any other team. By cutting off our nose to spite our face, we will limit the potential ability of some Canadian down the road. I am no friend of the Bassett family, none whatsoever. I disagreed with them a time or two. But what is the offer they have made? Mr. Bassett owns the franchise to the world football league in Canada. No other team can be formed to enter the world football league without the consent of Mr. Bassett. Whether or not he should have that privilege, I do not know.

However, I know that he is prepared to give that privilege to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) if the latter wants it. He is saying: "Let us operate the team in Toronto. I will not actively put another team in the world football league in Canada and I will give the Minister of National Health and Welfare the privilege of deciding whether there should be a world football league team in Montreal or one in Vancouver". He is also saying what I, as a westerner, fully appreciate, namely, that the Toronto Argonauts have paid into an equalization fund to help support some of the less fortunate teams in western Canada. He also said publicly—and I believe I heard a newscaster in Calgary state it—that he is prepared to make certain that the equalization payment paid last year by the Toronto Argonauts will be met for the next ten years. That is a pretty bold guarantee.

What he is saying really is that, since the Toronto Argonauts paid into the equalization fund $40,000 last year and if, because of reduced gate receipts as well as the world football league entry, their equalization payment is only $20,000, Mr. Bassett would personally make up the difference. Being a westerner and somewhat sceptical of some people in Toronto, I might want that guarantee in writing. I think that Mr. Bassett would probably put it in writing.

An hon. Member: It already is.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I am pleased to know that.

The only point I want to make abundantly clear is that he is not trying to deliberately destroy the CFL in Canada. A colleague of mine, Dick Beddoes, an old Albertan who studied agriculture at university with me—he probably does not remember me but I remember him, he ran the university paper—said in the Toronto Star that all 19 Albertans would support the CFL. You bet I will support the CFL. I will also support the potential opportunity for young Canadians to get into the entertainment field. Mr. Bassett stated publicly that he will not televise any of the world football league games in Canada. To me, that is proof that he is not trying to destroy the CFL. He is making three conditions: he is guaranteeing that the equalization payment will be met; he will not televise any of the world football league games in Canada; and he will not promote any other entries from Canada into the world football league. If he tried to promote another team in Calgary, one in Vancouver or one in some other city such as Montreal which has often been mentioned, that might have harmful effects. If Torontonians want to be entertained by football, that should be their privilege. If they do not like the American style game, I certainly hope they will register their feelings at the box office. That is where they should cast their ballot in that regard. If Bassett loses money, it won't hurt me at all. In fact I have been led to believe that he can afford to lose a little. And as someone behind me suggests, he is not going to ask for a grant.

Governments do not belong in business. They do not belong in the entertainment field, and really that is what football is. We can make a great case about flag waving, saying this World Football League entry will destroy the Regina Roughriders. Mr. Speaker, I have watched the Regina Roughriders play in Taylor Field. I watched them beat the pants off the Calgary Stampeders a couple of years ago. That was a very disheartening game. But we are only fooling ourselves if we think that a stadium the size of Taylor Field will pay as much as an 80,000 seat stadium in Detroit or Chicago. We must take a longer range look at this whole matter.

We are opening the door for Canadians. Canadians will be playing in the World Football League in Toronto. I am certain of that. The Jim Corrigills of Ontario will make it their business to make that league, and when they do, their performances will be televised all over the United States. Then, managers in the United States will say, "That is the place we have to go for our football players. They grow them tough, up in Canada. They have cowboys and Indians up there. We can get some good players in Canada." Mr. Speaker, we should be saying, "Thank you, Mr. Bassett, for allowing Canadians to play in the United States." An hon. member says that we should open up the States to our beef. It is open to beef already, and in fact I would like to sell a little more in the United States.

This silly Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) thinks he has a great issue. He thinks that westerners will back him, and that he will get votes in western Canada on this issue. He may get some votes in western Canada on this issue, but we must look at what is good for Canada. I remember a young Albertan saying that to him the Grey Cup meant more than the flag. I told him that was an awful thing. I was not one of those who promoted our flag, but it is Canada's flag. Some Liberals like to think it is Pearson's flag, but I say, it is Canada's flag. Grey Cup games and Canada's flag should not be compared with each other, but the minister has attempted to do that. He says that with the Grey Cup and waving the flag, Canada will march on to greater heights. That is not the issue.

The issue is potential opportunities for Canadians. Are we going to deny Canadians the chance to show their wares? It will be selfish to do that. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare is worrying about the city of Montreal breaking into the AFL, or whatever that conglomerate south of the border is now called, I say that is something for Montreal to decide. I am certain that if Mayor Drapeau said he wanted an American football team in Montreal he would get it. The mayor has that ability.

Many Canadians are very proud to have the Montreal Expos located in Montreal. That team is made up of a lot of Americans playing ball in Canada. It came along too late for me, or else I was born 30 years too soon, but I am certain, there are many young ball players in Montreal and throughout the Quebec area who now will have the chance to play baseball in the United States. They may not make the Montreal Expos, but they might make the Boston Red Socks, or for that matter the New York Yankees. I am certain that the Expos have opened the door for many Canadians to play professional baseball in the United States. The Expos have broadened opportunities for Canadians. The Expos have paved the way for Canadian ball players to reach highly paid jobs. As I say, we should be thanking Mr. Bassett for doing the same thing for football players, instead of placing stumbling blocks in his path. The proposed entry of the World Football League will not hurt the CFL, and I believe Mr. Bassett has gone to great lengths to prove his intentions are not to hurt the CFL.

With respect to competition and the robbing of players from the CFL, we must remember that there are 26 teams in the United States. If they want to outbid Canadian teams in the CFL for player talent, then with their huge gate receipts they can do that right now. No doubt they have done so on many occasions in the past. I suppose the World Football League will be no different, but just as our CFL professional football teams opened up opportunities for Americans to play in Canada, the World Football League will open the door for aggressive young Canadians who want to get into the big money in the football entertainment field. I for one will do my utmost to kill the bill that the Minister of National Health and Welfare threatens to introduce, because I think it would be wrong for Canadians, wrong for young athletes whom we admire so much and for whom we should be doing our best as legislators.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is some time since the House had an opportunity to deal with what might be called an over-haul of the combines law. I think that probably throughout the country there is a general feeling that we should look at the Combines Act and combines law as something sacred, as something that should not be questioned.

It has a good atmosphere about it. It is that type of legislation which, at least superficially, is designed, and is extolled as being of general value to the public because it seeks to protect the public from price fixers, from those who would agree to set up a cartel and carve the country up into distribution areas, so that one company will do business only in one area and will stay out of another fellow's territory. It is looked upon as protecting the public against predatory price cutting which drives companies out of business, just as the Eddy Match Company did a few years ago. It is looked upon as protecting the public against monopolies, oligopolies, unfair trading practices, and a variety of other bad features connected with the activities of corporations.

Probably this was a valid assessment at the time of the inception of the Combines Investigation Act just after the turn of the century, taking into account corporate structure and its relationship to the country 60 or 70 years ago. However, the corporate structure since that time has changed so dramatically, and become so large in many instances, that some corporations are more powerful and have a larger budget for expenditures than governments. In this situation, the combines investigation law, as an effective piece of legislation to protect the general public, has probably outlived its usefulness in its present form. It tends to cover a smaller and smaller segment of the corporate world, and a smaller and smaller segment of corporate activities. Multinational corporations have such a dominant position in the marketplace that they need not engage in any price fixing activities. They need not conspire with other companies to establish a fixed quality for their products. They need not engage in any of these activities because of their size and thus are aloof from the law, or above any feeling or idea that the Combines Investigation Act will protect the public from the rapacity of their operations.

● (1550)

Members of my party have very serious doubts, as I have, about the effectiveness of the Combines Investigation Act. We have very serious doubts about the effectiveness of the bill before us which seeks to amend the act, and we have very serious doubts about the attitude of government in enforcement of that act. I look upon this bill as a patchwork approach, despite the view expressed by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) the other day that it was a major and dramatic move—

Mr. Atkey: And dangerous.

Mr. Howard: —in certain areas so far as restrictive trade practices are concerned. He just reiterates what he said then. I did not hear him speak but I read what he said in Hansard, word for word, which is unusual for me I might say. I think this is a patchwork mechanism. It is like trying to repair an old inner tube; there might be some effect from the installation of one patch on the tube but it is so worn that it is a shorthrun measure. Like the tube, the effectiveness of this bill is extremely limited.

Mr. Atkey: Is that your party's position?

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Howard: I look upon the sanctions in the bill as something that can be easily circumvented. I would not be surprised if some corporations know a great deal more about the Combines Investigation Act and its operation than most of us, and have already found ways of circumventing it.

The hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier) very effectively dealt with the provisions of the bill and laid out this party's position with respect to it. We have no doubts whatever about the general lack of effectiveness of this type of approach in dealing with the market structure of this nation or the North American continent or, indeed, the world, and of the impact upon the economy of the multinational corporations. In this regard the bill is not worth looking at; it has no effect on these questions.

The hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore dealt with the matter of food prices in great detail. He spoke of the limited supply of specials that are advertised, the question of double ticketing and raising the price of food on the shelf. The latter will be prevented by this bill but already the food chains have circumvented the intent of the bill. They do not double ticket now; they do not raise the price of the product on the shelf by putting one sticker over another but take it into the warehouse or the backroom and do it. Now, they tear one sticker off and put another one on. That circumvents the intent and purpose of this bill, and to that extent it is meaningless legislation.

He spoke of marketing practices like the red light over the meat counters to make you think that the beef is almost alive—as if anybody would want to buy beef in that condition. This has been going on for years, Mr. Speaker, and the bill does not touch that practice. Food chains put up great posters in vivid colours that say "Special, regular 13 cents—today 3 for 39" or something like that. The thing that catches your eye is that word "special". You get three for 39 which is the same as 13 cents a piece. The bill does not prevent such practices and they are still being followed.

A number of years ago Vance Packard wrote a book called "The Hidden Persuaders" in which he dealt with the methods used by the chain stores to get people to buy things they do not want or need at exorbitant or misleading prices. This bill does not touch that problem at all. There has been, and I expect there will continue to be, an attempt on the part of the administrators of the combines investigation branch to assist companies in circumventing the law. This may be a harsh statement but I think that this practice has been upheld by the immediate past Director of Investigation and Research, Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the annual reports and the statements that he used to make. I should like to quote what he said in the annual report for the year ending March 31, 1973. Indeed these words were contained in previous annual reports, so there was no need to bother resetting the type but merely insert new figures. Here is what he said at page 10:

Businessmen have for many years come to Ottawa for advice respecting the application of the Combines Investigation Act.

I bet they have. When the Conservatives were in office businessmen were here seeking advice, too. He continues:

Consultation with businessmen about their problems has been encouraged as a positive program. It has been referred to in former annual reports as the program of compliance and it is intended to be a vigorous and sustained program involving education and explanation, discussion of business problems and the giving of opinions concerning the application of the act.

As part of the program, businessmen are encouraged to discuss their problems before they decide to introduce policies which might prove to be in conflict with the Combines Investigation Act.

You know what that is doing, Mr. Speaker. The explanation of how to comply with the act is, in fact, an enticement to the businessman to go right up to the borderline, to see how far he can go without getting caught. These explanations not only tell him how to comply with the act but how to do so in a minimal sense. We know that decisions about prosecutions under the act are made by the Department of Justice. I submit that the department's lawyers are ill-equipped to make decisions of that nature. It is beyond their scope, beyond their comprehension. They are solicitors, not barristers, lawyers who sit in their offices and make sure every comma is in place. What do they know of the market place, or what it is like for the housewife to run up against conditions which steal the dollars from her pocket every time she goes into the store to buy something? This situation, apparently, is to be continued.

● (1600)

That brings me to my point. It is suggested that, apart from its limited effectiveness in protecting the consuming public, the bill makes provision with regard to banks. I suggest that is not so. It is true the bill refers to banks, but the provision with respect to banks is not worth the paper on which it is printed. It is ineffective, meaningless. Why? Because of the way banks set their interest rates. Only two questions are involved: how much interest will banks charge for the money you have borrowed, and how much interest will they pay on deposits? Whether the smile of one manager is more attractive than the smile of another manager or whether you are served by a pretty, buxom girl, wearing a button which says, "Let's talk"—the implication being that she wants to talk about something other than lending you money—is not important. That is not the question. Really, we are considering interest rates.

Banks set their interest rates either according to the rate the Bank of Canada sets, in which case they are not free agents but follow the lead of the Government of Canada, or they set them according to the price leadership approach. Mr. Speaker, the price leadership approach is the most effective mechanism yet devised by which corporations can fix prices without being found guilty of contravening the act. The price leadership approach for fixing prices has been used effectively, for instance, in the pulp and paper industry. It works something like this: one day the president of a company will say, "Today we will announce that the price of pulp is to be increased by $4 per ton." He makes his announcement. Two days later the president of another company says, "Say, that is a good idea; we will go along with it." The same sort of thing happens with banks. That is how they establish interest rates.

Clearly, in this area the value of the bill is nil. It is nothing more than a conscious, deliberate attempt to deceive the public into thinking that something will be done to protect them against the banking interests of this nation, when the bill will not do anything. Does the bill imply that interest rates for home builders and homeowners will come down? No. Does it indicate that such people will get a better deal from the financial institutions of this country? No, sir. This is window dressing, designed to satisfy those who have complained in the past that the Combines Investigation Act deals with commodities, not with services. In the past, banks have been looked upon as providing a service. You could more appropriately call it a disservice to the public the banks serve, and to the country as a whole.

In 1960, when the Combines Investigation Act was amended, there was a conspiracy entered into right in this chamber involving the then minister of justice, Hon. Davie Fulton, and the then representative from Newfoundland, Jack Pickersgill. We referred to the amendment as the Pickersgill-Fulton amendment because the Tories and Liberals rushed so happily into each other's arms in putting through that amendment to the Combines Investigation Act which we felt to be offensive and designed for no other purpose than to permit corporations to circumvent the price fixing provisions of the act. The present minister is not only carrying forward the spirit of that provision; he is expanding it. I am talking about the provision which provides a defence in case you are charged with fixing prices, or restricting the quality or quantity of a product in the market place, and so on.

Mr. Leggatt: Which section?

Mr. Howard: I am referring to section 32(4) which provides that in a prosecution under subsection (1), which deals with limiting supplies, fixing price and so on, the court shall not convict the accused if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement relates only to the export of articles from Canada. Clearly, the term "articles" can be interpreted broadly and may have broad application. This, then, is a sanction for fixing price. It is an authorization to establish a combine. True, on the face of it, it is limited to the production, marketing, distribution, etc. for the export market. Nevertheless, this is authority to fix prices, and will apply to the domestic market by osmosis, if by no other means.

For example, consider the fish canning industry of British Columbia. It is dominated by two companies which are linked together at the top. Actually, there is one dominant fish canning company in British Columbia. Under our corporate laws these two companies are two corporate entities; if they enter into a combination, they are liable to prosecution under the act. Yet, they are completely at liberty to sit down together and work out a fixed price for canned salmon for the export market. You can bet your boots that once they have worked out a fixed price for the export market, that price will become the fixed price for the domestic market as well. It is all perfectly legal, perfectly legitimate. The minister seeks to carry that situation forward in this bill.

May I deal with another aspect of the bill? It is deficient in that it does not apply to the Crown. The government is exempt. The government can engage in conspiracies. It can do a number of things. It can enter into a conspiracy with private interests which wish to move towards a monopoly position. At the moment we are engaged in a controversy regarding oil. In particular, we are discussing the future development of what are loosely called the Alberta tar sands.

In this connection I wish to refer to the Hudson Institute, an organization which has been in existence in the United States for a number of years. Its activities have centered on the defence industry of the United States. It has become almost an agency of multinational corporations. Recently, I understand, it opened a branch or subsidiary office in Canada. I am told that Mr. Kahn, the Director of the Hudson Institute of New York, has met with the cabinet and discussed the tar sands. That is what I have been given to understand. If I am wrong, I will gladly withdraw anything my remarks may imply. As I say, I am told that he met with the cabinet, primarily on the question of developing the tar sands. His position was this: do it quickly; do it with borrowed foreign money; pay for that money with the oil production; sell out our resources to the highest bidder, for the quickest buck. That is exactly the same type of pitch the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) made a few days ago to the Chamber of Commerce meeting at Calgary. He said in so many words, "Let us find $20 billion of foreign money; let us get it any way we can; let us build distillation plants, refinery plants and what have you as quickly as possible. Let us sink $1 billion per year into them." Then he said, "Let us develop the tar sands and use every nickel we get from them for paying off as quickly as possible the $20 billion we borrowed in the first place, and let us defend the position of the oil producing monopolies of this world."

● (1610)

I submit it was not by coincidence that the Minister of Supply and Services made the same kind of pitch in Calgary as was made by the Hudson Institute. First, it had the full blessing of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In fact, he stood up in this House on one occasion in the last couple of days, turned with glowing features to the Minister of Supply and Services and said: Yes, he has continued this research; he is permitted to say whatever he wishes with my complete blessing. To hell with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and what he is trying to do. From now on, it is the Minister of Supply and Services. Why? I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the answer is simple, and it is based on the concept that blood is thicker than water. The Prime Minister, on this question is much closer to his friends in Quebec than he is to his friends who may be elsewhere in this country, including the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Prime Minister got to be leader of the Liberal Party through a kind of minor conspiracy,—I do not say that in any unfair sense—that is, through an involvement of power groups. He got his votes from the people and his money from the Power Corporation of Canada whose headquarters is in Quebec.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Nonsense!

Mr. Howard: Somebody said "Nonsense". I submit that the Power Corporation of Canada is now asking for repayment—and it will probably get it.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Don't be an idiot!

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Howard: The hon. member said "Don't be an idiot". I am convinced there is probably no greater expert on that subject in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Howard: Some of his own colleagues said "Right on!"

Let us examine the connection. There is a gentleman by the name of Claude Frenette who used to be executive assistant to the Mr. Sauvé when Mr. Sauvé was in the cabinet for a short-lived term as minister of forestry. Claude Frenette then moved from that position to become a senior executive in the Power Corporation of Canada. He is now, I gather, to be transferred, or to proceed, if he is not already there, to a position of some prominence in the Hudson Institute, the group which made the presentation about the tar sands.

In the fall of 1967, there was wonderment in this country as to who was going to be leader of the Liberal Party—who would be the candidates, and that sort of thing. Various people were holding meetings in the Province of Quebec, and quite rightly so; there was a contest going on to determine who would be the leader and it was a question of who they should support. That is all right. Of that group, one came into prominence, and if there was a leader it was this same Claude Frenette who met with a gentleman by the name of Marc Lalonde who later became principal secretary to the Prime Minister and is now the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Another of these gentlemen who engaged in these meetings with Mr. Frenette, Mr. Lalonde and the others is the gentleman who is now the Minister of Supply and Services. He was involved in these meetings in the fall of 1967. The group used to meet every Friday night in the boardroom of the Power Corporation of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that a group of ordinary citizens, even though one of them might be a member of parliament and the other a senior executive in the Power Corporation, would not have the authority or the sanction to use the boardroom of the Power Corporation as a place in which to meet every Friday night without the directors knowing about it and authorizing it. They had the consent of the Corporation.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Slimy insinuations!

Mr. Howard: These are no slimy insinuations. These are direct facts. I am not here, in any case, to engage in any exchanges with the hon. member about that sort of thing. I am here to lay on the line, as I see it, what is happening to the energy resources of this nation under this cabinet, which his party supports, and which is selling these resources down the river for the quickest buck it can get.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: Then, there is one Jean-Luc Pepin who is presently on the board of directors of the Power Corporation, having been elevated to that position since he was defeated on the hustings last October. There is a direct connection between the Liberal heirarchy and the Power Corporation of Canada. That is no insinuation. It is a statement I make here and I will make it outside, too, just in case it may be thought I am using my present position to say things I am afraid to say elsewhere.

Let me recapitulate. First, energy, particularly oil, has been the source of fantastic profits in this country. It has been the source of the growth of monopolies, of oligopolies. It has been the source of the intrusion of foreign money which has bought out this land. It has been the source of price fixing, of limiting production, of selling out for the quickest possible dollar to anybody regardless of the consequences for Canadians. This has been the story for some time, now. There are quite a few billion dollars of potential profit involved, so those who are interested, and those who have been on the gravy train and who have been the recipients of gifts from government over the years, are going to try to take advantage again of this situation.

I will recapitulate what I have said, and put it in some sequence. There is Claude Frenette, the gentleman who used to be executive assistant to Mr. Sauvé when he was in the cabinet, who then became a senior executive of the Power Corporation and who subsequently moved to the Hudson Institute. We have the group behind Trudeau prior to the 1968 election comprising the present Minister of Supply and Services, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the same Claude Frenette and the Power Corporation of Canada with its multimillion dollar investments all over the nation. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), one of the three wise men, is missing from all this in 1967 and 1968. He and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), had entered this House seeking a leader from Quebec, a man who was to save this country from itself but who has done more to damage it than any prime minister since confederation. They were excluded. It was the wise, young sharpies—though I cannot include the Minister of Supply and Services in that category. None-the-less, he was in that group.

The group met every Friday night in the boardroom of the Power Corporation in Montreal in the fall of 1967 and probably into 1968 seeking who they could get to become leader of the Liberal party. And who did they come up with, Mr. Speaker? The current Prime Minister. Jean-Luc Pépin, the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, as soon as the public found him out and defeated him, ended up on the board of directors of the Power Corporation of Canada. The Hudson Institute seeks a mechanism for grabbing the tar sands for whatever private interests with which they may be associated. Frenette has had connections in the Liberal cabinet, the Power Corporation of Canada and the Hudson Institute, so I am told.

Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Supply and Services conceived that speech all by himself? That is an impossibility. Someone wrote it for him, probably the same Claude Frenette. The Prime Minister stands up in this House and gives his sanction to the Minister of Supply and Services to say whatever he likes, wherever he likes, about energy policy, and cuts the feet out from under the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. We had a meeting today between the premiers of the provinces, the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet about energy and oil. But where was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at two o'clock? He was in his seat in this House when he should have been at the conference. Where was the Minister of Supply and Services? We do not know, but he was not here. Perhaps he was at that meeting.

When Claude Frenette won the presidency of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec prior to 1968, defeating whoever it was who ran against him, the Prime Minister is alleged to have rushed into the room, thrown his arms around Claude Frenette and said: "We beat the bastards; now we can get something done". That is a quotation; I do not know whether or not it is accurate. Peter Newman in his book "Distemper of our Times" says it is true; and if hon. members want the page reference, it is page 449.

My friend over here, whoever he is, keeps chatting away. I should like to present my remarks in some sort of sequence, but if he would like, at the conclusion of what I have to say, to ask me some questions and give me the opportunity to clear up some doubts in his mind, I will do my best to do that. Interjections from some distance are very hard to pick up, but I am sure my hon. friend will accept my apology when I tell him directly that I am not able to respond to everything that he has been muttering about up to now because I have not heard all that he has said.

That type of activity which I have just outlined, in which there is an undercurrent of activity to give domination and control over the tar sands to the person who can make the quickest buck out of it, is a conspiracy against the people of this land which this bill does not seek to deal with or handle. It is a conspiracy to sell out our resources and to deny completely any environmental protection. It is a pay-off for political support and is designed to seduce Canadians to do all those terrible and deleterious things that can be done when the gleam of gold overrides the sense of democracy.

In the moment or two I have left, Mr. Speaker, I should like to talk about how ineffective is the bill in regard to another aspect of the way in which the Canadian public have been gouged and stolen from every time they go into a grocery store, a chain store or food market. I want to refer to the profit position of food processors in this land. If there is thievery that has taken place, it has certainly taken place here. I am not talking now about the supermarket chains like Loblaws, IGA, Safeways out west or any of the others; I am talking about the food processor, the company that runs the raw material through a manufacturing or processing plant and delivers a packaged, canned, or encased product of some kind.

Let me very quickly recount the percentage profit increase of these companies in the year 1973 compared with 1972. J. M. Schneider increased its profits in that one year by 35 per cent. H. J. Heinz was a poor outfit, with only a 14 per cent increase; Dominion Dairies, probably one of the groups we have been subsidizing through the milk subsidy program, 32 per cent; Canada Packers, 36 per cent; Canadian Canners, 33 per cent; George Weston—you cannot buy a biscuit in Canada that George has not had a finger in—86 per cent; Burns Foods, 28 per cent; B.C. Sugar Refinery, 50 per cent; Maple Leaf Mills, another food processor to whom we have been paying a subsidy for flour, 150 per cent increase in profit; Silverwood Industries, 83 per cent.

Taking the 12 companies sampled in this Financial Post survey, the average increase in profits has been 59.6 per cent. No provision whatsoever is made, either in the Combines Investigation Act or by the Food Prices Review Board structure, or through any section of the minister's department, to protect the consuming public against that situation. Then, on top of all that—and this comes home to roost for both Liberals and Conservatives—these companies were the beneficiaries of the reduction in the corporation tax from 47 per cent to 40 per cent. Then, as an added bonus, consider this. Did these companies increase the number of their employees? Not from any look at the statistics. Did they build new plants? Not that anybody can find out. They stuck these profits in their pockets, a gift from the Canadian taxpayer. Not only did we give George Weston an 86 per cent increase in profits, but we said things were so bad that we would cut the percentage of income tax they would pay on top of that.

What this means also is that to the extent that these food processors are foreign-owned and pay dividends on their profits to their parent company outside the land, they are taking the money of Canadian taxpayers, as a result of the reduction to 40 per cent in the corporation tax rate, and stacking it into dividends that they pay. We the taxpayers of Canada are giving our hard earned tax money in the form of dividends to multinational corporations headquartered elsewhere. I say that is a shame and a disgrace.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) has now come into this House with a bill that has had a long period of pregnancy and is insipid, ineffective, and will become meaningless within a matter of just a few months. If there are good features in it in terms of preserving the position of the general public without further encroachment upon their pocket books, its provisions have been so well publicized that corporations have now found ways of getting around them. As for those who have not, they will continue the policy started by Mr. Henry when he was director of research and investigation of holding meetings with the director to ascertain how far they can go in instituting their policies and still stay within the law. I hope when the committee gets this bill it will be able to straighten it out because it is really not of much value the way it stands now.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I welcome in principle the amendments introduced to the Combines Investigation Act presently before this House, and in particular the fact that there appears to be some priority given to consumer protection aspects of a competition policy, an area which has in the past been the subject of our party's attack upon this government.

No doubt members will welcome the opportunity to discuss the many areas encompassed by these proposed amendments, inasmuch as there are many questions which still remain unanswered and many areas of this bill which must be enlarged upon, particularly proposed Section 32.3 which would bring amateur and professional sports under the jurisdiction of the Combines Investigation Act for the first time. I welcome the principle of protection in some semblance to athletes and teams as well, something that has for too long been lacking in this country. However, the proposed legislation, particularly in this part, represents only a start on what can and should be a comprehensive undertaking, not just a superficial scratching of the surface.

[Mr. Howard.]

What is of prime concern to me is the overpowering slanting of this bill, not toward the amateur who is really most in need of these kinds of guidelines, but toward the already established professional who has attained stability and financial security in the marketplace of athletes, and the teams themselves who have at their disposal vast legal and monetary resources. What is of prime concern to me, and should be of prime concern, to every member of this House is that the youth of this country be afforded every conceivable opportunity not only to participate in sports and become physically as well as mentally proficient, but be afforded as well the opportunity to participate in Canadian professional sports without taking a back seat to United States superiority in Canada. At the same time, they should be protected in their choice of team and league.

At the present time in our own Canadian Football League almost 50 per cent of every team is composed of United States players, not to mention the over 75 per cent United States content as far as staff and coaching is concerned. Allow me to quote from today's Toronto Daily Star, from a column by the sports editor of that paper, Jim Proudfoot:

> Next time there's a coaching or managerial vacancy, hire a Canuck. Edmonton Eskimos haven't done badly with a Canadian general manager, you know. And lots of Canadian coaches could do the job in the CFL if they just cultivate southern accents.
> The myth about Canadian inferiority has been kept alive by coaches mostly, who'd sooner bring in a ready-made halfback from Georgia Abnormal than tutor a talented kid from Wilfred Laurier.
>
> Canadians who got the opportunity have always been capable of stardom at the highest level; Tony Gabriel, Jim Corrigall, Tom Forzani, Bill Baker and Lorne Richardson were all-stars last fall in positions usually occupied by immigrants.
> If Mr. Lalonde hasn't extracted a pledge along the above lines, he's simply wasting his time with this whole exercise—simply deciding which American players Canadians can watch.

I agree 100 per cent with that sentiment. It is a strange paradox that, on the one hand, we have the government submitting a bill which it alleges will stimulate competition and, on the other hand, we have the same government threatening to introduce a bill to prevent competition. Of course, I am referring to the contradictions between the bill before us, submitted by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), and the widely publicized recent statements by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), in which he emphatically and repeatedly says that his government will do everything in its power to keep the Toronto Northmen of the newly formed World Football League out of Canada in order to protect the Canadian Football League. What could be more contradictory? How can a government possibly introduce two such conflicting philosophies? Has this government forgotten that this country was built on free enterprise, and has this government forgotten that this country was built on competition? Why did the Minister of National Health and Welfare then pick this particular time to frustrate the efforts of the Northern to establish their franchise in the city of Toronto, a city that is more than willing and capable of supporting two major league football teams? This is obvious in view of the fact that the Argonauts have sold all their tickets for all post season and pre-season games, as well as league games, and that the Toronto Northmen have already to this date, without any advertising whatsoever, sold over 3,000 season tickets to their games.

Since when does any government or any agency in this country have the right to dictate to the people of Canada what they can or what they cannot see in professional sports? This is purely censorship of the highest order. What would be the reaction of the people if the government arbitrarily decided that, in the best interests of Canadians, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would no longer be permitted to carry National Football League games from the United States which are in direct competition with the CFL schedule? What would be the reaction of Canadians if the United States did not allow our athletes, or for that matter writers, entertainers and other professionals into the United States?

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I hear some of the smart-aleck Liberals over there jeering at this statement, but I know from experience in my younger days, before I became overweight and started showing bald spots, and before I got into business and politics, when my sister and I were world champions representing Canada. We were allowed to go into the United States, although the United States had many world champions of its own.

An hon. Member: You were much better on the ice.

Mr. Jelinek: I suggest that the real reason for this move by the minister is to establish a precedent in order to prevent the much talked about possibility of the National Football League expanding into the new olympic stadium in Montreal, which would in all likelihood seriously affect the financial stability of the Montreal Alouettes, and thus endanger the entire makeup of the Canadian Football League. The reasoning behind this statement, of course, is that unfortunately the Alouettes have not been getting the response from the public they deserve. I certainly share the minister's concern if this in fact is the case, or in fact if the World Football League itself posed such a threat.

The same holds true for the cities of the western conference. However, this is not the case in respect of the Toronto franchise. I would be the last person wishing to see the demise of the Canadian Football League in any way whatsoever. On the contrary, it would be my wish to see greater opportunity afforded to the youth of this country by encouraging greater Canadian participation in the CFL. In fact, if the Minister of National Health and Welfare were truly concerned about Canadianization of sport in this country, he would take the suggestion I have made in this House and substantially increase Canadian content, not only in the Canadian Football League but in professional sport in this country in general.

In any event, the terms of the offer submitted by the Toronto Northmen organization to both the Canadian Football League and the federal government make it obvious that the CFL will not be endangered by the establishment of this one World Football League team, and I submit that the minister has obviously not even seriously considered the offer to safeguard the Canadian Football League.

Let us examine briefly the submission offered in writing to the minister by the Toronto Northmen Football Team Incorporated, which states in part:

> The Minister of Health has stated that the Government of Canada is prepared to legislate so as to prevent the affiliation of any Canadian football team with any U.S. league and thereby frustrate the lawful action of Toronto Northmen Football Team Inc. in bringing a World Football League Franchise to Toronto for the following reasons:
> 1. The Toronto Argonauts would have competition in the Toronto market and the amount of revenue they receive might therefore be reduced. If this revenue is reduced then the amount the Argonauts pay to the Canadian Football League by way of "equalisation payments" would be reduced and the balance of the Canadian Football League would suffer.

● (1640)

> The minister has even gone so far as to suggest that the result would be the destruction of the Canadian football League.

This is the Northmen's reply in writing to both the Canadian Football League and the federal government:

> We agree that the introduction of a new team in Toronto will provide competition for the Argonauts. We believe that competition is healthy, and that there is ample room in Toronto for two football teams operating in different professional football leagues. The brand of football each team has to offer would be different, and the style of football played would also not be the same. We would fully expect that the fans in Toronto would continue to support the Argonauts in the same excellent fashion as they have done in the past. The minister himself subsequently stated to us that the introduction of this one team would not destroy the CFL and Mr. Gaudaur has made a similar statement.
> However, in the event that we are wrong in our assessment we are prepared to guarantee to the Canadian Football League that the Argonaut 'equalization payments' for the next ten years, will be no less than the payment made in the year 1973, a year when the Argonauts sold out their stadium for every pre-season and regular season game. We are prepared that this guarantee take whatever reasonable form the government and the Canadian Football League require. This guarantee, which we believe is unnecessary, should nonetheless quiet the government's fears that the 'equalization payments' be reduced.

Now, Mr. Speaker, does this jeopardize in any way the financial stability of the CFL? Certainly not. Every member of this House would agree with that because once these guarantees are implemented the Canadian Football League will not be hurt by the franchise proposed for Toronto.

Then, we have the minister's second objection:

> The World Football League could come into Montreal and Vancouver and worsen the financial positions of the Montreal and Vancouver teams thus threatening the structure of the entire Canadian Football League.

This is the written reply of the Northmen to this objection:

> The Northmen have all of the Dominion of Canada as part of their territory. The Northmen are prepared to assign these rights to the Canadian Football League, its individual teams or indeed to the Government of Canada. In this fashion the Canadian Football League and the Government of Canada can ensure that no other World Football League team would be established in Canada without the approval of the Canadian Football League.

Mr. Speaker, quite obviously the Northmen are giving assurance to the Canadian Football League and to the federal government that it will be at the option of the Canadian Football League whether there is to be further expansion of the World Football League in Canada. Given the fact that the people of Toronto will support two football teams and want two different professional teams, I suggest that the federal government stay out of the matter because it is not even involved. This will not hurt either the Canadian Football league or the athletes of this country. I cannot understand why, all of a sudden, the Minister of National Health and Welfare should come up with this kind of ridiculous statement in respect of professional football in Canada in this one matter.

This is the minister's third concern:

The National Football League and perhaps even other leagues might introduce franchises into Canadian markets and thus weaken the position of the Canadian football league.

This is the reply of the Northmen:

It is true that other leagues might introduce franchises into Canadian markets. We believe that the Canadian fans should determine what football they wish to watch. However, in the event that the government is determined to limit the choice of Canadian fans, the government if it has legislative authority, could introduce legislation to prohibit these other leagues from entering Canada. In light of the guarantees we are prepared to give as stated, there would clearly be no need to make that legislation retroactive to include the Northmen.

We wish to make it clear that we do not recommend the introduction of this legislation. We feel that the Canadian football fan is the one who should make the choice as to what brand and type of football he wishes to watch. However, if the government is determined in its course, there would now appear to be no need to make the legislation retroactive by including the Northmen within the scope of that legislation, particularly since the Northmen started in business and expended large sums of money long before there was any announced government policy on the matter.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the minister's arguments simply do not stand up in light of these guarantees. Even the Commissioner of the CFL has been quoted publicly as admitting that the Canadian Football League can readily survive the introduction of the WFL in Toronto. Under the proposed section 32.3(b) of the Combines Investigation Act, the first charge under this section should be laid against the federal government itself. Let me quote section 32.3(b):

Every one who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with another person

(b) to limit unreasonably the opportunity for any other person to negotiate with and, if agreement is reached, to play for the team or club of his choice in a professional or amateur league is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable on conviction to imprisonment for two years.

Not even I wish the Minister of National Health and Welfare to be imprisoned for two years. Where for example, does this leave the federal government with regard to a player who has signed with the WFL, at this time a legal entity, and where does it leave a player who is subsequently unreasonably denied playing for the team or his choice. I wish the minister were in the House now. Perhaps he could answer that question but I doubt it because he answers very few.

Once again, what could be more ludicrous than the government itself being charged under the very bill it introduced? If the government is to be involved in professional sports, as seems to be the direction it is taking under this proposed legislation, this should be all-encompassing legislation and not merely a band-aid, patchwork approach such as this section of the bill is taking. I will do everything in my power to ensure, if the minister brings in legislation to try to stop the World Football League moving into Toronto, that the bill is defeated. I will try to get my colleagues and any other sensible members of this House to vote against such a ridiculous proposition. Somewhere along the line, what should have been the main objective of this type of legislation has been sidetracked. As I have repeatedly emphasized, it is the youth of this country who must be our primary concern.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

Apparently this section of the bill is aimed primarily at hockey, Canada's number one participation sport. But the record will show that the NHL has been a responsible organization contributing to the growth of amateur hockey in Canada. For example, financially the league has contributed to the development of hockey in Canada, from both United States and Canadian teams, over $1 million per year. This is based on payments to the CAHA of $10,000 per player if he plays in the NHL after he is drafted, $7,000 per player if he plays in one of the NHL farm clubs after he is drafted, and $3,000 if the player does not make the NHL or the minor league although he has been drafted by the league. Above and beyond this, the NHL pays a lump sum of several hundred thousand dollars to the CAHA, all of which is divised between the CAHA and the Canadian club responsible for the development of the individual players.

I mention this because the new hockey league, the WHA, which has entered Canada from the United States without any federal intervention whatsoever, provides no such benefits to Canadian youth. I wonder where the minister and other members of the government were when the World Hockey Association moved into Canada? Where was the minister when this new league started taking over the players who played for the NHL, a league which subsidizes amateur athletes. Not only that, but the WHA has bypassed the long established draft rules in the NHL by signing players under 20 years of age and thus jeopardizing not only amateur junior hockey in Canada, but also adversely affecting the one organization that has made a significant contribution to amateur hockey in this country. This statement, of course, removes any doubt that my interest centres around. John Bassett Jr. rather than sports in general.

● (1650)

Where was the federal government when the world hockey association entered the Canadian sports scene? Where was the concern for the advancement of opportunities for the youth of this country? Why did the government fail to provide safeguards and encouragement to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, and why are there no proposed changes by this government relating to hockey? Why has football been singled out as a target of intervention? Would it not be reasonable to expect the government to take a firm stand on the protection of this sport long before the world football league was even contemplated? Certainly, safeguards are needed there to keep our amateur junior teams viable.

While we are on this subject of the protection of other sports, may I ask whether the government should not consider obtaining revenue for amateur development from foreign organizations such as professional ice shows—and I am speaking specifically about American ice shows—which continue to drain off all our top talents without contributing to the Canadian amateur organizations which have invested their time and money in developing these athletes. I would now suggest that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare get together to decide which of their two diametrically opposing views are in fact party policy.

In closing, may I state that I will support this bill in principle for passage to the committee stage, but I can assure members of the House that I will insist in committee on having the presently ambiguous sections enlarged in such a way as to ensure that the competition act truly means fair competition and provides an opportunity for Canadian youth to continue the development of amateur sport in this country.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the introduction of this bill for second reading with a certain lack of enthusiasm. In fact, what this bill really does is to allow my friends on the right and my friends across the chamber to continue to indulge in the myth-making process that in fact we live in a free enterprise system. They will put on a little lipstick, comb their hair and say: the system is just a little out of joint now, so what we can do is to bring in a competition act and then we will have prices set by competition. I challenge any member of either the Tory or the Liberal party to find me a reputable economist who will say that prices in North America, and particularly Canada, are set by competition. In fact, prices have long been set in this country by administration. This is the term used by Galbraith. They are administered prices.

I welcome this cosmetic piece of legislation because in some areas there may be some abuses we can catch. But in fact most of the prices of the major products in this country are set by administration, either through government regulation or on the 18th hole of the golf course. Those are the facts of life and there is no way in which we can avoid them. So it is a wonderful theory that both the government and the Official Opposition operate under, but it does not bear any economic examination or evaluation.

I must say that in terms of what the minister is trying to accomplish with the bill, some of these provisions are good. I certainly welcome the effort in regard to controlling referred selling, bait and switch procedures, double ticketing, and selling above the advertised price. These are all provisions that can help the market cosmetically, but they will not help in a major way because, as I said, most of the major prices in this country are set either by government regulation or by administration. What we really need is a minister with will, energy, courage and determination to make the bill effective because, after all, we have had the Combines Investigation Act for some time.

Perhaps we should examine the record under the old legislation. The old act has long provided, for example, for jail terms of a maximum of two years for certain offences. How many people in this chamber can recall anyone who has ever gone to jail as a result of a conviction under the Combines Investigation Act? I cannot recall a single incident, and yet the board of directors of the General Electric Company in the United States some years ago faced a jail term. Why have we not had jail terms imposed in this country? Is the offence of conspiring to raise the price of a major product to any consumer in the market place any less serious than a first offence of breaking and entering, which sometimes carries with it a jail term, or a second offence for possession of marijuana? At one time we were jailing people for six months for a first offence for possession of marijuana.

We have a Restrictive Trade Practices Commission on which the minister has seen fit to have only one member, a person we can only call an acting chairman, not a full time chairman. On the basis of the old legislation, in 1970 and 1971 that branch only used 41 per cent of its budget. In 1971-72, it used 61 per cent of its budget, and in 1972-73 again it only used 61 per cent of the budget. That does not indicate to me that the government is really interested in controlling monopoly pricing or in truly attacking this problem. What we need is not just more legislation along this line. We need a minister and a government with the will, energy and dedication to make this competition legislation work, at least to the limited extent that it can.

Now, I should like to come back to the major theme of my remarks. The legislation can only work to a limited extent in the kind of economy in which we exist. Certainly, I welcome the clause dealing with the imposition of a foreign law on Canadian firms. I think this is something that has been long overdue, and it is particularly apropos in terms of the recent MLW Worthington case. But I have to point out that the only time such cases really come to our attention is when somebody on a board of directors decides: "To hell with this; I will blow the whistle". That is usually when we find out about it.

What I ask is: how many companies in this country which are dominated or are subsidiaries of foreign corporations have, in fact, refused to bid in foreign markets such as Cuba, or any other countries that are on the U.S. enemies list? There could be many indeed. This legislation will not solve that problem. The only way we will solve that kind of problem is to repatriate the economy, but that will be a long and tough struggle. We must promulgate the foreign takeover review legislation. Mr. Speaker, I have a list in front of me of 13 foreign takeovers that have taken place in the major industrial sectors since that legislation was passed by the House and received Royal Assent. If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) wishes to solve one of the problems that this bill seeks to solve, namely, the imposition of foreign law upon the Canadian economy which prevents us from dealing with certain nations, then let him promulgate the foreign takeover legislation and publish the guidelines. Ultimately, that is the only way in which we can tackle the problem.

● (1700)

As I say, the provision in this bill which attempts to deal with the imposition of foreign law on the Canadian economy is merely cosmetic. With the major part of our economy foreign owned, it is obvious that many foreign-controlled corporations are not seeking markets in certain other countries. I am convinced that many opportunities could be found in the Chinese market if our corporations made the effort. I am interested in the amendment which purports to provide a right of action to individuals who suffer as the result of conspiracy. This is in proposed new section 31.1. I welcome this, but again it is a minor relief. Again, it is a very cosmetic thing.

If consumers suffer from a conspiracy to fix bread prices, no one individual will start an action for the one cent a loaf that the conspiracy may have cost him over the previous five years. The sum involved would not amount to enough to get the case into the small debts court. What has long been needed in Canada has been provision for class actions so that an entire class of people who suffer as the result of conspiracy can take action, and an award made, based on the loss suffered by the entire class. Under the proposal in this bill the public injury cannot be fairly compensated.

Let me give an example of the type of class action that can work. A major cab company in Los Angeles had illegally raised its meter rates over a long period of time. As a result a class action was developed by a firm of lawyers and some other consumers of the taxi service. The defence raised by the taxi company was that the loss was impossible to determine, and thus there was no way for the court to make an award. The presiding judge ruled that the company must turn back its meters, not only to the legal rate but to a rate below that for a period equal to the time during which the conspiracy had taken place.

An hon. Member: What happened to the drivers?

Mr. Leggatt: The drivers did fine. The company was the one which was making the money. It is this kind of provision that I hope the minister will consider but, as I say, I do not see it in the bill. How many people are going to take action under proposed section 31.1 on an individual basis, where the actual individual loss is a matter of pennies but where the public loss is in millions of dollars? The only way to deal with such a situation is to make provision for a class action, so that a company which pulls these shennanigans will know it will be faced not only with a major fine but with paying compensation for the loss suffered by the public.

From time to time we tend to be quite critical of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), but I believe the investigation into the cement company scandal in British Columbia started when he was minister of consumer and corporate affairs. It was discovered that a conspiracy on the part of the major suppliers of cement in British Columbia had existed over an 11 year period. These companies controlled about 90 per cent of the market. The companies were fined about $430,000, which will probably mean a slight change in the dividend paid out of profits. But the interesting thing was that no hard evidence was produced in court to determine the economic loss suffered as a result of that 11 year conspiracy. We do not know whether this loss was nil, whether it was major, or whether it was minor. I contend that in this kind of legislation we must be sophisticated enough to come up with answers to that.

The public want to know how much this cement conspiracy cost it over those 11 years. Until then it will not know how just was the fine. I point out that the law also provides for two year jail terms, and it is time some sentences were imposed, particularly when evidence is produced that the public interest was severely affected. I repeat that no economic evidence was introduced in court with respect to that conspiracy. The public really does not know by how much house building costs were increased as a result of that conspiracy.

There is only one reason for these conspiracies, to increase the price, or to keep it artificially high. I think we can sum up this legislation as a wonderful approach to tinkering around with the market, but in the long run we must be pessimistic about the subject. The ease with which prices can be set is quite remarkable, and beyond the minister's capacity to investigate in most cases. This is not a criticism of the minister. It is just that price fixing is so easily done while walking aroung a golf course, particularly when those involved control 90 per cent of the market. If those involved in the conspiracy refuse to supply one of their competitors with a major component for the product he manufactures, this pretty well means that he has to engage in the conspiracy himself, or else go out of business. I welcome the provision inserted in the bill to deal with this situation as an improvement on the law as it presently exists.

In conclusion, I say this is a wonderful job of cosmetology, which will allow my hon. friends to my right and across the chamber to continue to indulge in their myth about free enterprise. I am, in a way, glad they have taken this opportunity at myth-making to support again what is really an untenable economic position.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my remarks today will be rather short. I would like to support this bill, not as a complete answer but as one of two steps which will help solve many of the problems affecting business in Canada. There is a great myth in the business community, a myth which runs through groups like chambers of commerce and others. The myth is that all members of the business community are as one; that the only difference between the small clothing retailer and General Motors is one of volume and that they are "all in it together". This myth must be examined very carefully for its implications in regard to this particular bill.

I was rather interested in a concept advanced by Galbraith in his last book called "Economics." He divides the business part of the economy into two segments, the planning economy and the market economy, and tries to explode the myth that all businesses are exactly the same except for volume. He talks about the planning economy as that portion of the economy which has real power—the multinational corporations, the larger corporations. These have the power to set prices within a certain range and to pass on the costs they incur. They have the power to accept substantial wage and salary increases and to pass these on. He describes this planning sector of the economy as being basically growth oriented.

I agree that the motive for the operation of a large portion of our economy and of government, is growth, not maximizing profits. In many large corporations, the shareholder or owner is quite separate from the people who operate the business. In such organizations growth is a far greater factor than is maximizing profits; profits are plowed back into growth and the only concern is a reasonable return to the shareholder who has very little control of the operation of the business.

Galbraith also indicates that because of the ability to control the market, and that is almost to create the market because of mass advertising and other things, companies in the planning sector are able to create continuing demand. Their ability to pass on increases in price through increasing costs and wages et cetera, means that this particular segment of the business community tends to be inflationary. Again it is that ability to increase the demand and pass on costs that creates inflation.

Another point that I should make about the planning sector of the economy is that a great deal of its growth is created by plowing back into the company the profit or revenue it has achieved. This means that corporations in the planning sector are not subject to the kind of monetary policies that governments use to limit inflation. In other words, 12 per cent, 13 per cent or 14 per cent interest rates are not particularly important to this section because they are able to generate their own capital. So this group is relatively immune to the vicissitudes that affect the smaller businesses in what Galbraith calls the market economy.

It is my feeling that we should be looking at the kind of competition bill that would tend to keep this segment of the economy, as Galbraith calls it, the planning economy, under control. On the other hand, the market economy—that is, the smaller people who are unable to control any large segment of the economy and who are fairly elastic in their operations—is not the section of the economy that is inflationary. Here is where market force comes into play. If smaller industries or businesses are not able to stay away from undue price increases, competition will put them out of business and so we have market forces operating in this segment of the economy. I think this distinction between the market economy and the planning economy is an important one and the bill begins to attack this distinction. Whether this is a conscious attack or whether it is done for other reasons, the fact is, it is there.

I should like to deal with one or two aspects of the bill that affect those companies that I have defined as being in the planning sector—the large corporations, the multinational corporations. These are the corporations where mergers, restrictions in trade and this kind of thing are more likely. I think there are definite areas where this bill has some notable effects and where the future bill will have even more effects. The future bill should be designed to have a great deal of effect in this particular sector. In the bill, there are items like refusing to deal, providing adequate supplies to certain individuals to force them out, consignment selling, market restriction—these kinds of things which are very pertinent to this more powerful section of the economy. The item in the bill which deals with foreign laws which are contrary to Canadian interests is one that has a great deal of effect on the larger corporations, particularly the multinational corporations.

There has been some criticism of the limitations of this act, some question of how we are to find out, for instance, if the government of Cuba or China is not able to purchase a particular piece of material, as in the case of Cuba and the MLW-Worthington company and the 20 locomotives. The criticism of the bill was that there was no way the government could find out what was happening. It seems to me that if the government of Cuba were particularly interested in making the purchase, all it would have to do would be quietly say to our Department of External Affairs that they needed help with the problem. I do not think this is a very great handicap under this act.

These are some of the things that are beginning to be examined in this act, Mr. Speaker. I hope that the second section will deal far more with this planning segment of the economy and its power. As to the market segment, I think the bill is positive when it attempts to remove from that section of our economy the involving smaller businessmen, the kind of leech or individual who is constantly involved in sharp practices. By reducing sharp practice we shall, in the long run, enable the small business community to acquire a better name.

● (1720)

Practices like bid rigging are also considered. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, some senior executives of General Electric in the United States were jailed a few years ago because it was alleged they engaged in such activities. Such practices will be dealt with under this bill. They affect the market economy as well as the planning economy.

Professional sport, in the sense that it is a business, also comes under the scope of the act. As well, double ticketing is brought under the act. The enforcement procedures under the act will make it possible for us to deal with such things. That, I think is desirable.

I said that I would only say a few words on the bill. I think the second legislative phase would be most important. The minister indicated certain important areas which would be dealt with in the second phase. He suggested that the government would develop legislation bringing forward additional criteria and methods against which we can judge mergers and amalgamations which, while restricting competition, may or may not be in the interest of the public. In other words, the government will examine the question of mergers.

While considering second phase legislation I think the minister should consider the matter of administrated pricing, and the idea of a company being able to pass prices on because there are no market forces which will counter the increased price. I think these are some of the things which we must be aware of and look at as we develop legislation in this field, with the idea of strengthening the market economy while controlling the planning economy.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin my contribution to this debate by examining the theory of competition and monopoly. The orthodox theory has been the standard fare in the universities for over 40 years. It permeates the thinking of the government and of many members variously situated in this House. It is the basis of much badly conceived legislation aimed at monopolies.

I wish to argue that the great virtue of Canadian anti-monopoly legislation over the years has been that, compared with the American system, it has done relatively little harm, direct harm, even though it has done the Canadian people no real good. Indirectly, however, Canadian anti-monopoly laws have done considerable harm by misdirecting public attention away from the very serious problem of monopoly in this country, that is to say, monopolies created by government. By spreading the false impression that businessmen can create monopolies for themselves without the assistance of the state, our anti-monopoly laws have tended to shield the state-created monopolies from public attention. These are the very monopolies which have done serious harm to the Canadian people and continue to do so. I want to explain how this bill would worsen, not improve our situation; finally, I want to say a little about the ways in which the federal government could be helpful to the Canadian people in this area of policy.

The orthodox theory of competition and monopoly has been the conventional wisdom of several decades. Adam Smith has been blamed for inventing it, although I am not sure that a careful reading of his work would support that accusation. The orthodox theory is basically a rather simple nose counting theory of competition. Under the orthodox theory we arbitrarily define first what constitutes an industry; then we count the number of businesses which fall within our arbitrarily defined boundaries. If there is only one, the industry is a monopoly; if there are several, it is an oligopoly, if there are many, it is a nearly purely competitive industry. The orthodox theory includes academically interesting models of the results, in equilibrium, of each of these three forms. Of course, equilibrium, a state of no further change, of no further competition, never occurs in the real world; so, the value in the real world of theories based on premises which are contrary to fact is indeed questionable. In spite of the inapplicability of that theory to the everyday world, the government supports legislation the effect of which is an attempt to force the real world to fit the theory.

This brings two undesirable effects. First, the operation of genuinely competitive markets in the real world is impaired; secondly, nothing is done about real monopolies.

At this point let me say something about an alternative theory of competition and monopoly, a theory which accurately describes the real world. After all, the purpose of theory is to help us to understand reality, not to indulge in idle dreaming about how we would like the world to be. When we see a theory which does not accurately describe the real world, we should not say something like, "That's nice in theory but it does not work in practice." My point is that if it does not work in practice, it is not nice in theory. It is a bad theory and we need a new one.

Some progressive economists of today, among them Rothbard, Kirzner and Armentano, are hard at work replacing the orthodox theory with a useful theory, which accurately describes reality. In contrast to the orthodox theory's preoccupation with the unrealistic state of equilibrium, in which all change, all competition, has ceased, Kirzner, in his 1973 book "Competition and Entrepreneurship" sees price theory

> ... in a way that is not related in any essential manner to the state of affairs at equilibrium. The efficiency of the price system, in this approach, does not depend upon the optimality (or absence of it) of the resource allocation pattern at equilibrium; rather, it depends on the degree of success with which market forces can be relied upon to generate spontaneous corrections in the allocation patterns prevailing at times of disequilibrium.

Times of disequilibrium are, of course, all the time. Later Kirzner continues:

[Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra).]

> The fact that at any given moment only one producer is making a particular product is not by itself an impairment of the competitive process. It may simply mean that at this moment only one entrepreneur had taken the step of presenting this particular opportunity to the market. If the step was a wise one, it will tend to attract others to do even better in this regard. If it proves to have been a mistake this entrepreneur himself will be under market pressure to abandon this line of production.

If, in contrast to the orthodox theory, a single producer of a product is not necessarily a monopolist, what makes a monopolist? Kirzner answers that "the crucial question concerns freedom of entry". We are reminded of what Lord Coke wrote over 300 years ago: "Monopoly is a grant of special privilege by the state, reserving a certain area of production to one particular individual or group."

In a speech in this House last April 17, I explained in detail that the concept of monopoly has nothing to do with the number of firms operating within an industry. It has to do with whether or not the government is restricting competition. For example, there are 363 licensed taxi cabs in the city of Vancouver. The supporters of the nose counting theory of competition and monopoly would no doubt say that the taxi cab business in Vancouver is nearly purely competitive. But they would be wrong. The Vancouver government restricts the supply of taxi cab licenses, so that consumers must pay monopoly prices for taxi cab services, monopoly prices so high that the market value of a taxi cab license is now over $30,000. A great deal of what I said in that speech during the food prices debate is relevant to the present debate.

● (1730)

About the nose counting theory, that I have been criticizing, Armentano wrote in his 1972 book "The Myths of Anti-Trust":

> "... the market structure described as being purely competitive and optimal must certainly appear strange to anyone acquainted with flesh and blood consumers or business organizations. In the real-world marketplace, business competition appears to be almost opposite to [that theory's] economic pure competition.

In his 1966 book, "Insider Trading and the Stock Market" Henry Manne quotes the Austrian economist Schumpeter as follows:

> In capitalist reality as distinguished from its textbook picture, it is not (price) competition which counts but the competition from the new commodity, the new technology, the new source of supply, the new type of organization (the largest-scale unit of control for instance)—competition which commands a decisive cost or quality advantage and which strikes not at the margins of the profits and the outputs of the existing firms but at their foundations and their very lives. This kind of competition is as much more effective than the other as a bombardment is in camparison with forcing a door, and so much more important that it becomes a matter of comparative indifference whether competition in the ordinary sense functions more or less promptly; the powerful lever that in the long run expands output and brings down prices is in any case made of other stuff.

He continues:

> It is hardly necessary to point out that competition of the kind we now have in mind acts not only when in being but also when it is merely an ever-present threat. It disciplines before it attacks. The businessman feels himself to be in a competitive situation even if he is alone in his field or if, though not alone, he holds a position such that investigating, government experts fail to see any effective competition between him and any other firms in the same or a neighbouring field and in consequence conclude that his talk, under examination, about his competitive sorrows is all make-believe. In many cases, though not in all, this will in the long run enforce behaviour very similar to the perfectly competitive pattern.

Part of the nose counting theory of competition is the notion of oligopoly. Oligopoly occurs if, within the boundaries of one arbitrarily defined industry only a few noses, fewer than about a dozen, I understand are counted. Of course, it is always possible to define an industry sufficiently narrowly as to ensure that nose counting yields oligopoly. For example, let us consider the market for all beverages, then for all wines, all white wines, all Sauternes, and, finally, all wine from the grapes grown from one particular hill. If we define the industry sufficiently narrowly we can find, from the standpoint of the orthodox nose counting theory, not only oligopoly but even monopoly wherever we want to look for it. The concept of oligopoly is nonsensical, and unfortunately it is confusing to many people. It completely misses the point that whether or not competition exists depends not on the number of noses counted but on whether or not the government is preventing entrepreneurs from competing. Businessmen themselves have no legal power to exclude competitors. Only government has that power.

One day I heard a story about a city in which four manufacturers were turning out a certain product. A fifth competitor entered and began production. According to the story, the four established firms, being wicked oligopolists, cut prices by 25 per cent and bankrupted the new firm. Then, they raised their prices to the previous level. This was supposed to prove that oligopolists can restrict entry to an industry. In fact, it proved nothing of the sort. It simply showed that the new competitor was pretty stupid to think he could add his production to what the others were already supplying to the market and not see a fall in price. He was ignorant of the laws of supply and demand, and he failed to weather the storm, having failed to supply his firm with adequate capital. Perhaps he deserved to go bankrupt, for his incompetence. In a free economy we say we are happy to see the efficient prosper. But then, we must also be happy to see the inefficient fail, and the sooner the better, so that the natural resources, labour, and capital controlled by the inefficient may be released for more productive use, by the efficient, to the general betterment of the people.

Advocates of the notion of oligopoly also tell stories about businessmen sitting around in their clubs, fixing prices and dividing markets. Perhaps some businessmen try to do just that, but is there any evidence that they are successful? I do not think so. Such agreements are not contractual. It is in the interest of each participant to secretly undercut his partners as soon as he is out of the door. And the evidence is that he does just that.

Again, I refer hon. members to Armentano's book, especially the parts dealing with the famous electrical equipment price-fixing conspiracy case, in which the conspiracies never worked, never succeeded in raising prices, because the conspirators undercut each other as soon as they had finished promising each other to fix prices.

On this subject, Hutt wrote in his 1973 book, "The Strike-Threat System":

> The truth seems to be that effective tacit collusion cannot be imagined as having more than a negligible effect. Collusive exploitation requires quotas, with sanctions for their enforcement; or else sufficiently attractive prospects of a certain share of the market will have to be assured for every voluntary participant. But can we conceive of any substitute for the quota or the prospective market share inducement under simple tacit abstention from competition? Just think of what we must postulate. The low-cost firms (probably the most efficient) must judge it to be profitable to sacrifice prospects of a growing share of the market and spontaneously protect the high-cost firms (probably the less efficient). While this is conceivable when the risk of misconceived anti-trust proceedings is the alternative, or under iron-clad cartel contracts, it is hardly conceivable in their absence. In general, the advantage to the low-cost entrepreneurs of passing on to consumers the economies of their relative efficiency will outweigh all other considerations.
> Experience seems to teach that the effectiveness of collusive restrictionism has required not only reliance on quotas but the ability to discipline participants; and a system of policing has often been felt to be essential for successful exploitation.

That is why the government had to equip the farm marketing board monopolies with strong policing power in order to maintain the monopolies; they could not have survived otherwise.

Some advocates of the theory of oligopoly produce great quantities of statistical evidence, including published price lists, to support their case. Everybody knows it is foolish to accept statistics as proof of anything, because statistics can be found to support practically any theory. A theory is right or wrong not on the basis of how many pounds of statistics can be accumulated for or against it but on the basis of its inherent logic or lack thereof. Anyway, it should be pointed out that statistics based on published price lists are no indication at all of the actual prices at which deals are made. Anyone who has ever bargained for a discount when buying a car knows that.

Perhaps what I have been saying appears to be quite new and radical to many hon. members. In the limited time available to me I have not been able to explain these new and radical ideas as fully as they are explained in the books I have mentioned, books I commend to all hon. members.

● (1740)

It seems that the government thinks highly of the American anti-trust system, especially the considerable arbitrary power in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission. It seems that this fondness for arbitrary power is the trademark of the present government. We have seen in the United States one result of the concentration of arbitrary power in a few hands—the Watergate affair. I do not want to see anything like that in Canada, but already we see arbitrary power in the hands of bureaucracies, such as the income tax department and now, thanks to this government and its Foreign Investment Review Act, in the hands of politicians.

It has been argued that anti-monopoly policy should be conducted not through the rule of law, the application of clearly written laws through the ordinary courts, but through the arbitrary power of a Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, a body very similar to the United States Federal Trade Commission. It is argued that the judges in the ordinary courts are not sufficiently expert in economics to be able to act as wisely as a commission of experts. This argument strikes at the very heart of what we have left of our liberty, the rule of law.

In his little book "The Road to Serfdom", Hayek writes:

> Nothing distinguishes more clearly conditions in a free country from those in a country under arbitrary government than the observance in the former of the great principles known as the Rule of Law. Stripped of all technicalities, this means that government in all its actions is bound by rules fixed and announced beforehand—rules which make it possible to foresee with fair certainty how the authority will use its coercive powers in given circumstances and to plan one's individual affairs on the basis of this knowledge.

More recently, a British statesman, our contemporary, the Right Honourable Enoch Powell, wrote:

> It is not only in this country that government shows an increasing tendency to try to regulate the nation's economic affairs not by law . . . [It] has an engaging appearance, but it conceals the germs of tyranny . . . On both sides of the Atlantic, for instance, we have recently seen government . . . behaviour . . . open to the gravest objections.
>
> First, if the citizen has a duty, he ought to be able to ascertain in precise terms what it is, so that he knows if he is fulfilling it or not . . .

He continues:

> Again, it is manifestly unfair not to place all concerned under the same degree of constraint . . . The main point, however, is that in a free society the citizen ought not to be constrained . . . except in accordance with the law and by due process of law. Certainty, generality, impartiality—these are the essential characteristics of the obligations which government can impose on its citizens wherever the rule of law prevails.

I fear that what I say about the rule of law falls on some deaf ears, ears that do not care to hear about the nationalization of our liberty, because those ears are connected to minds that were nationalized long ago.

I must vigorously oppose the plan to concentrate in the hands of a tribunal of experts legislative, executive and judicial power, all rolled into one arbitrary power. It is argued that a judge of an ordinary court is not able adequately to understand the anti-monopoly law. If he cannot, how can anyone expect a businessman or anyone else to understand a law that a judge supposedly cannot understand? What sort of law would that be? The answer is: no law at all, but arbitrary power.

Through this bill the government wants to give the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission the power to issue arbitrary, incomprehensible edicts to run every part of the economy that has not already fallen under some other type of government control. Even the Globe and Mail was moved this week to editorialize about the RTPC and its powers. It mentioned that the RTPC, for example, was to be enabled to make orders, that it was to be able to modify or prohibit certain trade practices, yet be independent of the government. The Globe and Mail mentioned the MLW-Worthington case and observed:

> It is possible that the government would have been very happy to have this case taken off its hands by a commission.

The editorial concludes:

> Governments should . . . not hide behind appointed bodies.

We have had examples of that. Just last year we found the government hiding behind the skirts of the Food Prices Review Board.

Mr. Atkey: What about the CTC?

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Yes. Questions have been raised about the rights that a person appearing before the RTPC would have, for example, whether the privilege of solicitor and client would be respected, and whether a person would have the right to cross-examine the RTPC's statisticians. But an even more important question arises: Would there be a right to cross-examine the RTPC's commissioners themselves about their theories of economics and other relevant matters? I am sure there would not be. Thus the whole concept of an impartial court is abandoned.

One of the great virtues of our ordinary courts is that the judges are not experts on engineering, or medicine, or economics. They are experts on one subject: the law. Because a judge is not an expert in economics, he can listen impartially to economists testifying as expert witnesses on both sides of a case. His attention to their testimony and his eventual decisions are not prejudiced by his own views on economics, because he has none. If a judge happens to be an economist as well, then he is qualified to appear as an expert witness, as an economist, and be cross-examined on his expert testimony. But then he should disqualify himself from presiding as a judge over a case in which his ideas as an economist, which would not be scrutinized under cross-examination, would affect the outcome. Let the experts appear as witnesses, but let the judges be impartial.

At present the RTPC is an advisory and investigatory body, a group of specialized policemen. Let them investigate, let them advise, let them bring charges in court in accordance with law; but do not let them usurp the powers that properly belong only to a court.

American anti-trust policy is a failure. It does not protect the market place from government interference. It often protects privileged competitors from the competition of more efficient competitors, and the consumers suffer. It makes a mockery of people's rights under the rule of law. Under the American anti-trust regime, if a man charges prices above his competitors', then there is evidence of monopoly power. If his prices are the same as his competitors', then there is evidence of price fixing. And if his prices are below his competitors', then there is evidence of predatory price cutting and intent to monopolize. Often this government reacts to imitate developments in the United States. I see no good reason to transplant American anti-trust policy into Canada.

Not every part of the bill before us is bad, but some of the parts would more properly appear in acts other than the Combines Investigation Act. Here I am thinking about the misleading advertising provisions, which probably should belong with the sections of the Criminal Code relating to fraud. Some clauses of the bill deal with refusal to supply, consignment selling, tied selling and resale price maintenance. None of these practices, if employed by businessmen, can create a monopoly because none of these practices has anything to do with having the power to stop a new competitor from manufacturing anything he chooses and from dealing with whomever chooses to deal with him. These clauses may well do a great deal of harm, by restricting people's ability to compete effectively.

Other problems may arise, too. If the federal government too effectively prohibits people from voluntarily agreeing to resale price maintenance by private contract, then we may see some groups of businessmen bringing political pressure to bear on provincial governments to compel resale price maintenance. I understand that some states in the United States have done this under the name of fair trade laws. I do not want to see resale price maintenance made compulsory or prohibited. People should be free to make their own arrangements. At times resale price maintenance may be the only effective means by which a manufacturer can induce a dealer to provide a certain amount of sales service to customers interested in his product. Surely, to prohibit resale price maintenance is as unwise as to compel it.

This bill makes some minor changes in the laws applicable to banks. I agree with those hon. members who have argued that the banks should not receive special treatment. Bankers are subject to the Criminal Code just like everyone else. Why should they receive special exemption from the anti-monopoly laws?

● (1750)

However, even if the banks were subject to the Combines Investigation Act, their real monopoly power would remain unaffected. The banks' real monopoly power does not lie in any agreements that the bankers make among themselves, it lies in the government's restricting entry into the banking industry. This monopoly of credit should be repealed, and I will have more to say on that subject when the government introduces its Bill C-13.

I am pleased to see some agreement on this subject. On March 14 during this debate the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) said:

> I would say that any chartered bank in Canada can restrict or open up competition more than any other force that we might consider.

During the same debate, on March 13, the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) said:

> —the banks are the basis of the existing monopoly which controls the others. According to its whim, the monopoly of money and credit can create a monopoly of production or destroy it.

Perhaps the hon. member for Shefford is more conservative than he realizes; maybe he is sitting on the wrong side of the House.

Let us see what the government could do to help the consumer. The government could do many things to facilitate competition, namely remove all the restraints it has placed on competition.

In his speech during this debate on March 14 the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) talked about the inefficient organization of the tariff-protected refrigerator industry in Canada, and he said:

> This is a clear example of where competition has worked to the tremendous detriment of our society and has contributed to a lower standard of living than we might have had.

In his reasoning, competition was blamed for the bad effects of tariffs. Very few students of even elementary economics would have made such a mistake. I would add parenthetically, though, that he partially redeemed himself a few minutes later when he said:

> —it is demand, and not the cost of production, which determines the price—

That is an insight that I tried very hard, though I fear unsuccessfully, to communicate to the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier) during the debate on March 15 on his motion calling for selective price controls. If the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore is deaf to me, perhaps he will listen to his colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge.

On previous occasions I have called on the government to repeal the Farm Marketing Board monopolies, but the government will not listen. With one hand the government creates monopolies and with the other it brings us so-called anti-combines legislation, in order to divert our attention from the monoplies it has created. What hypocrisy!

In an earlier speech I pointed out that whenever the government interferes, through marketing boards, so-called anti-combines laws, or whatever, with people's freedom to compete in a free market, it favours one group, inefficient producers, at the expense of two groups, consumers and efficient producers. As a consequence, productivity is restrained and consumers are compelled to pay unnecessarily high prices.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from Armentano's conclusion to his book, which I mentioned earlier. He said:

> Capitalism is a viable economic system or it is not. An active policy of government intervention in a free market business sytem is a contradiction in terms. Trades of private property are either voluntary or they are not; one cannot legislate the free market or create competition. To have a free market the government must leave the markets alone; to have the state make markets "free" is again a contradiction in terms. Critics of antitrust policy who pretend to be concerned with the free enterprise system have either not realized, or have refused to realize, this fundamental issue.
> Is there business monopoly in the present economic system? Of course there is. Government favours, privileges . . . tariffs . . . [etc.] . . . can and do allow certain corporations to hold and employ "monopoly power," i.e. governmental power for economic advantage. Such "plutocratic" devices (as William Graham Sumner termed them) are the essence of monopoly and they are absolutely improper in a free market system and should be ended. The "monopolies" that the FCC, CAB, and ICC maintain could not last a day without governmental support.
> But this kind of "monopoly" has nothing directly to do with the mission of antitrust. Antitrust, supposedly, was aimed at free market monopoly problems and the marginal competitive problems that would arise when business was left free to pursue its own self-interest. Yet, ironically, the essence of the monopoly in the market place is governmental. In this light, antitrust may be seen as a diversionary tactic to draw attention away from the real monopolistic problems—the developing plutocratic relationship between business and government. Certain elements of the business community have never desired "free competition" and the uncertainties and "irrationalities" often associated with it. They have sought and gained economic subsidy and protection through the political system. They have been anxious to use the government to "regulate competition" because it was, supposedly, tending toward monopoly. Antitrust, therefore, may be an even bigger hoax than anyone has imagined.

Perhaps this bill will pass in substantially its present form. If that happens, then the anti-combines mess in Canada will simply become that much messier; efficiency of production will be reduced, and consumers and efficient producers will suffer. And nothing will have been done about the real monopolies.

ENERGY

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE OIL

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in less than seven months, soaring international oil prices—that shock wave from the Persian Gulf—has spread its tide of extreme economic disruption to all continents and the majority of nations. Even in Canada, with important oil resources of its own, these world changes have threatened our economy. They have, in fact, created a major challenge in our experience as a nation.

Today, Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to report to the House the details of a national agreement to meet this challenge. An agreement reached yesterday which underlines the good will and national feeling that exist in all provinces and regions—which stands as a tribute to the vitality of our Canadian community. As I have said, yesterday was a great day for federalism.

The House will recall that when the world changes first became evident last fall, the federal government stepped in to freeze the price of Western crude oil and to assure that sufficient amounts of it would be available in Eastern Canada in case of reductions in imports. At the same time, the government's oil export tax ensured that the international price received for export crude did not become a windfall gain to the oil companies.

It was apparent, however, that Canadian oil resources were limited. It was apparent that if we wished to assure the huge investments necessary for adequate future supplies, somewhat higher domestic prices would be essential; that the oil-producing provinces—mainly Alberta and Saskatchewan—must be assured a fair return. And notwithstanding this, that at a time of worldwide inflation, Canadian consumers in every province must be carefully protected from any unwarranted price increases.

Despite the strongly held and differing views of all concerned, despite the endless complexities on almost every aspect of the problems involved, federal-provincial consultations took place through the fall—and led to the conference on energy held in Ottawa during January. That conference reached the key agreement that no further change would take place in crude oil prices for the interim period, which as you know, will end on Monday next.

I had said in my statement of December 6 that crude oil should become available at the same basic price across Canada, subject, of course, to the addition of transportation costs.

● (1410)

[English]

On that crucial principle of a "single Canadian price" we have been able to build the agreement reached yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The broader foundation of that agreement has been what I can only describe as a remarkable spirit of cooperation, of understanding and patience, for which I pay tribute to the spirit and generosity of our ten premiers.

It is a good thing, Mr. Speaker, to be living in a country where everyone shows a deep concern for the legitimate interests of all the people and of all parts of the country and, I should add, to have a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has worked so hard to reconcile these interests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is also good to have the House in such a happy mood following yesterday's conference. I am sure this will set the tone of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and of the leaders of the other parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: After the comedy part presented by you.

Mr. Trudeau: The gentleman over there talking about comedy will have to wait until his leader speaks.

We have all searched hard for solutions which would meet the reasonable aspirations of the producing provinces as well as the immediate and longer term energy needs of all Canadians. At our meeting yesterday the first ministers agreed, because the trend of world oil prices cannot be predicted with any accuracy, it was not possible to settle at this time on any permanent pricing arrangement for Canada. We recognized, however, that a period of stability in Canadian prices was absolutely essential and we all accepted the arrangements to come into effect on April 1. Those arrangements are as follows:

First, the pricing and other arrangements I will now outline will last for a period of 15 months, beginning on April 1 and therefore going to the end of June next year.

Second, the price level. When domestic oil prices were frozen last September 4, the average price of crude was $4 at Edmonton. Of course there are many different qualities and places of production for crude oil in western Canada, and that is why I talk of averages. The September 4 average price level will be taken as a base: the amount of $2.50 will be added to give a new average price in Canada for domestically-produced oil of $6.50 apart from transportation costs. These increases are substantial. But Canadian prices will remain far below international levels, and below the average level in the United States. The $6.50 will go entirely to the provinces, to divide with the companies as they see fit subject, of course, to our federal right to use the federal corporation tax responsibly.

Third, the federal government will continue to collect an oil export charge. First call on the resulting revenues will be for a "consumer cushion"—to bring down the price of imported oil from its international level of about $10.50 to the new Canadian level of $6.50.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Fourth, the effect of new provincial oil revenues on federal equalization payments to the provinces.

Mr. Korchinski: Check it as between Toronto and Ottawa in the meantime.

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid I did not understand that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Korchinski: Check it as between Toronto and Ottawa. Do that.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member may have an idea, Mr. Speaker. I think he should speak about it in his caucus and perhaps we will end up having some opinions on energy from the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Try some humility.

Mr. Trudeau: The House may wish to note that Saskatchewan intends to place most of its added oil revenues in a capital fund for energy development; Alberta proposes to handle a high proportion of its added revenues in the same manner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: We always have.

Mr. Trudeau: While the revenues taken into those capital funds would not be subject to equalization, the federal government will, of course, pay equalization respecting any oil revenues that go into general funds. We calculate our added equalization payments will likely be something over $100 million for the year.

These, then, are the principal features of the first ministers agreement, on which we now seek the views and the assent of parliament. The government will introduce required legislation forthwith concerning, among other things, first, the Canadian price at which crude oil will move interprovincially, second, the export charge and, third, the "consumer cushion" on imported oil.

The national oil agreement I have just described would surely not have been possible without the good will and deep commitment to Canada of the premiers of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Hence I think I could appropriately conclude this statement by noting the federal government's active commitment to these oil-producing provinces: to assuring they obtain a just and reasonable price for their depleting conventional oil resources; to assisting them on a national basis to develop unconventional new oil sources such as the Alberta oil sands; and to helping them ensure alternative economic development so that future growth can be sustained and diversified in western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: A fundamental belief of our government, made clear since 1968, is that balanced economic growth in every region is essential to Canadian unity, and essential to the well-being of every Canadian. And this is a paramount aspect of our over-riding duty amidst a troubled world oil situation: that is, our duty to equalize for all Canadians both the benefits and burdens of world change; to manage the national economy in a way that betters the lot of each Canadian, by narrowing the divisions among all Canadians. Such is the direction of yesterday's national oil agreement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to touch on three more or less related elements involved in this situation. One element, and one I have always held to be the most important, is the matter of the federal government and the provincial governments coming together, in a spirit of co-operation and good will, to determine how their relationships should be balanced in the interests of all Canadians. It has always been fundamental to any ongoing policy determinations related to price, security of supply, conservation, the environment, or the development of new supplies, to all these areas and more, that a basis for intergovernmental relationships should be sought and should be achieved. In the agreement the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has announced this basis seems to have been achieved.

I must also say I have always believed that you cannot really make an omelet without cracking some eggs. But I have to say again, and I hope this is the last time I have to say it, that the process of coming together was made much more difficult by the succession of unilateral federal actions which date back to last fall. I think there should be a lesson in this for all governments, present and future, that to go it alone, to proceed in a tone of confrontation, is akin to speeding up a deadend street. At some point you have to turn around. It takes longer to get out of that deadend street when you have sped up it too fast and have gone down it too far. If we are now back on the main road, as I hope we are, the entire country has reason to feel relieved, and I am sure all parties in this House will applaud.

Mr. Trudeau: They did not.

Mr. Stanfield: That is one element in this development, a coming together to set a framework for federal-provincial relationships.

The second element to be settled was the matter of prices, and the Prime Minister has described to us today what has been done. The price level and the duration of the price at that level are temporary, as he has described them. They comprise a stage in the ongoing process, and I believe that is the proper way to have proceeded.

However, it is not clear whether the other parts of the package are temporary as well or whether in fact they comprise an approach, a strategy or a policy that will carry on regardless of what new price level and duration may be negotiated at a future time. I would hope this could be clarified somewhat by the Prime Minister. I think this is a very significant point.

The revenue arrangements have made provision for the financing of the one price across the country, and have made provision for equalization payments amounting to $100 million or more. They do not provide money for the federal government to use in terms of new development. If they involve an agreement in principle with the provinces for the use of these moneys through capital funds, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has described, through these capital pools, if the provinces are to provide the major investment incentives for future development of petroleum resources in their provinces and if they are to assume this role on a long-term basis, then this in fact seems to represent a new strategy and a significant step in the evolving of a policy. If, on the other hand, it is simply intended to place them in a position to put some funds aside for this purpose in the short term, in that case we would be suspicious that the government has perhaps found a temporary way out for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who has been in a state of some confusion and concern about this matter as it relates to equalization payments. I hope we will get further clarification on this aspect from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) or the Minister of Finance—or possibly the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer).

The third element I wish to mention relates to the importance of this coming together or keeping together of the federal government and the provinces with regard to the further development of future supplies of petroleum. This matter is, of course, of the utmost importance. I want to stress the importance of constant consultation and constant participation in getting this job done, at least within the boundaries of the provinces. I emphasize the importance of participation and the importance of co-operation rather than the ministers talking off the tops of their heads about the rate at which provincial resources should be developed, and doing so without consultation.

With regard to the development of the tar sands, for example, which the Prime Minister touched on, the Minister of Supply and Services says that no policy has been affirmed by the government and so he is free to say whatever he likes, as long as the Prime Minister likes what he says. Some time ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said in Washington, I believe, seemingly without any consultation in advance with the government of Alberta, that the pace of the development of the tar sands would be moderate because this was in the best interests of Canadians. Obviously the minister believes this is the policy and he labours under the impression that it is his responsibility to propagate it at home and abroad. With no consultation, of course, the Minister of Supply and Services has taken off again and renewed his particular pitch. The Prime Minister apparently does not flinch from this. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, a person whose qualities of restraint are legend, has suffered all of this with the utmost dignity.

An hon. Member: When do you get to the oil agreement?

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps he believes that he who thumps last will last to thump again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that it is imperative that the lesson of the coming together in connection with pricing must also be applied to development. Considering what we have heard from different ministers in recent months, it is necessary to emphasize that this area of policy, so far as the federal government is concerned, remains palpably untidy. As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) would say, it constitutes a mess.

I want to make it very clear, in fairness to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that I do not lay the responsibility for the absurdities we have witnessed with regard to the rate of development of the tar sands at his doorstep. I think the Prime Minister must accept some responsibility in this area and do something about it. In short, sir, let us heed the lesson which was illustrated yesterday by the coming together in connection with prices and make certain that in the interests of the country we apply this lesson also with regard to the development of our natural resources, particularly the tar sands.

● (1430)

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in his statement the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) referred to the fact that the government last fall froze the price of oil and introduced the export tax, following, you will remember, demands made by my colleagues and myself for those policies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I understand that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) regretted the fact that the federal government took action along those lines. I am convinced that if the federal government had not acted last fall, the agreement reached yesterday might well not have been possible; certainly it would have been too late after prices had gone up.

It goes without saying that an agreement reached by the 11 governments of Canada is a desirable way of arriving at a policy. It serves our federal system better than unilateral action either by the federal or any provincial government.

I emphasize that I regret that the price has gone as high as $6.50 per barrel. It would have been much better for Canadians if the price had been lower and the producing provinces had received part of the export tax, because their revenues would have been the same and the Canadian consumer would not have to pay more. I cannot say what first minister was of one view and what first minister was of another, but simple arithmetic tells me that a price of $5 for a barrel of oil and a portion of the export tax would have produced as much for Saskatchewan as it will get for the $6.50, and perhaps a few cents more. I must therefore conclude that it is the other producing province which insisted on the higher price.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Who writes your speeches?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, simple arithmetic—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —and my knowledge that the Premier of Saskatchewan is a very logical person led me to that conclusion.

When we speak about petroleum prices we are not merely talking about an increase in the price of gasoline or heating oil. We are speaking about an increase in the cost of production to the farmer and to the fisherman, and about increased costs of production to other industries that use oil. We face, as a result of the increase of $2.50 a barrel, an increase of more than one per cent, direct and immediate, in the cost of living for the people of Canada. Therefore I would have preferred a substantially lower price, coupled with the producing provinces receiving part of the export tax revenues since they are not now getting a penny of them. What is happening is that consumers west of the Ottawa line are really paying for the subsidization east of the Ottawa line, which of course we support without any reservation. One oil policy for Canada is an objective which every Canadian ought to support.

Mr. Trudeau: But you don't want to approve it.

Mr. Lewis: My second point is that this increase in price will be an additional bonanza for the profits of the multinational oil corporations which already are making immense profits. Again I must point out that this is not true of corporations operating in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: If hon. members to my right in the Conservative Party did not feel so guilty, they would not be making all this noise, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder, since the hon. member has mentioned the companies in Saskatchewan, if he would permit—

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert seeks the floor, I assume for a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, to ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: If not, the hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: I said that these additional profits would not apply to multinational corporations in Saskatchewan. The legislature of Saskatchewan has already passed an act which takes all revenues above $3.38 per barrel into the public treasury. Every penny of the additional price in Saskatchewan will go into the public treasury for the use of the government and the people of Saskatchewan. But that is not the case in Alberta. Undoubtedly, a very large proportion of the additional price will go into the pockets of the multinational corporations to add to their already enormous profits. In our opinion there is not the slightest justification for adding hundreds of millions of dollars to the profits of multinational corporations already making immense gains out of the resources of Alberta and of the people of Canada. I say that this fact makes more urgent than ever reform of our tax system to eliminate all concessions to the multinational corporations and to tax much more of their profits than we now do.

The next point I want to make is that we now have in Canada a two-price system for both oil and wheat produced in the western provinces. I believe the time has come for us to look seriously at the possibility of a two-price system for steel, lumber and similar basic commodities which enter into the cost of production and the cost of living of all Canadians so that we can do something effective. Although we cannot remove inflationary pressures, we could do something effective about them.

The last point I want to make is this. When the Prime Minister had finished the last paragraph of his statement, I said not very loudly, "Amen". He emphasized that even since 1968 the government has been committed to removing regional disparities in Canada and to dealing with such problems as transportation and other matters which cause eastern, northern and western Canadians to suffer from the concentration of economic activity in central Canada. I say to the right hon. gentleman that as far as words are concerned he is right. His government has been committed in words to the removal of these disparities. But, almost exactly six years later, the steps in the direction of removing the disparities have been small, almost invisible. The time has come to replace words with legislation and action that will improve the life of people in the Atlantic provinces and in northern and in western Canada.

● (1440)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: As I said at the beginning of my remarks, as a Canadian I am glad the first ministers were able to reach, if not an agreement, at least a consensus which all of them were prepared to accept. I judge from the press conference of the Prime Minister yesterday that is a more accurate statement, that they were ready to accept this even though it was not in all cases acceptable. I regret, however, that the agreement could not have been one along the lines I have suggested.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that we must welcome the agreement concluded between the federal and provincial governments.

Now, an analysis of that agreement shows that it is necessary to make some reservations. We are wondering how can anyone fully justify the policy of an entirely artificial increase based exclusively on incidents which happened abroad. We can hardly admit it. If our country can produce a useful commodity essential to Canadian consumers, our first concern should be to enable our citizens to take advantage of our natural resources which are not costly. Therefore, we accept the principle of that purely artificial increase, but with many reservations.

There are other parts of the agreement about which it is important to mention a few facts. It is said that the price is set for all of Canada. I agree with that, but this does not take the transportation issue into consideration. However, since there are no details on how the government will organize transportation or subsidize it if need be, the price in some areas of Canada could depend totally upon transportation, about which we have insufficient data.

Moreover, this agreement, which basically seems to solve a problem, will benefit only the oil companies or the provincial governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta, if they wish. It remains that the Canadian consumer seems to have been forgotten, since throughout this whole energy pseudo-crisis, because it was a pseudo-crisis, the multinational companies were allowed to make windfall profits to such a point that we may wonder if we would not find in Canada scandals like those that happened in Italy, for instance, if we looked for them.

Mr. Speaker, if there is need to settle the basic price problem it is also imperative to think about a solution to the one regarding retail prices to consumers. It concerns everybody, fuel oil as well as gas consumers. Nothing has been done in that connection and we, at least in my constituency, can stop at a service station and buy regular gas at 57 cents. Twenty miles farther it can cost 70 cents and some place else 77 cents. Now, this is the consumption level, at the level therefore where the Canadian citizen is hardest hit. There is nothing definite to that effect in the agreement.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the government should, in consulting provinces, undertake a thorough investigation on this so as to be able to make it clear that at first price increases were completely unaccountable. We had rather concrete evidence of it when the government, becoming a little jittery, decided to buy fuel oil abroad at an excessive price, but did not know where to store it because warehouses were full. Mr. Speaker, this oil was paid at a very low price for that time. However, companies immediately increased the retail price, thus making huge profits.

In short, basic prices should be controlled and attempts made to set up a uniform price. Consideration should also be given to setting up, not controls maybe, but consumption standards.

It has been said that the export tax will limit consumption, although nobody knows quite how. If we want to bring the price of imported oil, which generally sells for $10.50 at the present time, down to the proposed level of $6.50, how are we going to share the $4 difference? Will it be refunded to consumers or returned to the provincial government? We must be very careful, especially in the province of Quebec, for this province is very much interested. We are all aware that the Quebec government is past master in accepting federal funds and using them as it sees fit.

The $4 difference might not even be passed on to consumers. We should need more detailed information to be in a better position to judge this agreement; nevertheless, we hope that it will benefit the whole of Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ORDER AMPLIFYING SERVICE REGULATIONS GOVERNING USE OF NAVAL RANKS

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that an order will be issued today within the Department of National Defence to amplify service regulations governing the use of naval ranks. Naval ranks are listed in column two of Section 21 of the National Defence Act and include all naval ranks from ordinary seaman to admiral.

Under the new order, all personnel will use and be referred to by their naval rank if they are in the naval operations branch, and employed in Maritime Command, in a ship or other vessel, or in a ship repair unit.

Provision is also made in the regulations for personnel to continue to use naval ranks upon leaving the naval operations branch if they wish to do so.

In addition, all personnel in the naval reserves as well as all sea cadet instructors will use naval ranks. Finally, Mr. Speaker, all officers and other ranks who were serving as members of the Royal Canadian Navy prior to unification of February 1, 1968, may elect to use their appropriate naval rank regardless of where they are now serving.

I would like to emphasize that it is our intention to achieve all possible advantages from unification, but I believe, as I have stated at other times, that it is important for members of the Canadian Armed Forces to identify themselves with the traditions and accomplishments of individual units of the service.

● (1450)

This order on the use of naval ranks will take effect today, March 28, 1974. It honours the commitment made to members of the Royal Canadian Navy at the time the three services were unified into the Canadian Armed Forces.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, we welcome this announcement on the part of the minister. It is, as he has suggested, consistent with the commitment made at the time the unification bill was approved by parliament. It will clarify the circumstances in which naval ranks may appropriately be used, and this clarification will, I am sure, be well received by armed forces personnel.

If the minister will now reverse his decision with respect to a replacement for the Centurion tank so that in that case too he will be consistent with earlier plans, he will earn enthusiastic applause from this side of the House.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely sure, as a serving officer in the naval reserve, that the new guidelines on conflict of interest do not disqualify me from speaking on this subject, but I am going to anyway.

First of all, the announcement that the government will be honouring the commitment it made to the Royal Canadian Navy at the time of unification is welcome. There are two important reasons for so doing. The first is the very practical reason that fleet units of the Canadian Armed Forces operate with naval elements of other countries where traditional ranks are used, and this kind of arrangement will avoid confusion. It is also very difficult to explain to someone not within the services how important something as symbolic as a rank can be to a person who is in the forces, but I assure hon. members that this is an extremely important consideration with respect to morale in any forces unit. For those two reasons especially I welcome the minister's announcement.

It is interesting to note that the last major occasion upon which a general was in command of a fleet involved the Spanish Armada. I do not know whether you can tie the results of that naval engagement to the fact that a general was commanding the Spanish fleet, but it is something worthy of consideration.

I hope that this evidence that the minister is devoting some consideration to the naval forces of this country will result in his continuing his consideration and re-examining his decision to cut back, in effect, on the amount of equipment made available to maritime command for the carrying out of its duties. It seems to me that the decision to reduce equipment, such as the number of Trackers by 50 per cent, is ridiculous at a time when Canada's maritime interests are expanding. I refer to our interest in the management of our ocean resources, both mineral and living, and our interest in controlling pollution of the sea lanes. With this kind of consideration going on in Canada and the expanded interest in maritime matters, this is certainly not the time to be cutting back on equipment at the disposal of maritime command of the Canadian Armed Forces. I hope the minister will reconsider that part of his decision relating to the modernization and re-equipping of the Canadian Armed Forces.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) has just made a very important statement though brief.

As for the Canadian troops, they are proud, and rightly so, of their ranks. The efforts they make, the risks they take, and especially their devotion to duty has won them respect throughout the world. To my mind, the decision just reached by the minister, which goes into effect today, is very important for our troops and will no doubt please them.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA INSHORE LOBSTER FISHERY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek unanimous consent to move a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the fact that the inshore lobster fishermen of Nova Scotia have seen the price that they receive for their lobsters drop from $2.70 per pound a year ago to $1.65 a pound today and their catch is 30 per cent lower than it was a year ago, all of which is the direct result of fishing pressures by two large companies, aided and abetted by the federal Department of the Environment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows the practice relating to the proposing of Standing Order 43 motions, namely, that there should be no argument advanced, only a brief statement of the facts, if even that is required. The hon. member should indicate as quickly as possible the terms of his motion.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I had coincidentally reached that point, but I thought it necessary to enlighten the government about the situation in the hope they would agree to the motion.

An hon. Member: Order!

Mr. Howard: And some Conservatives as well. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be asked immediately to commence a review of the lobster fishery in Nova Scotia.

I will leave out the rest of the motion since it has implications with regard to lack of action on the part of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEVEL OF SPENDING BY DEPARTMENTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of Canada's spiralling inflation rate, which is among the highest in the western world and is in large measure caused by excessive government spending, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House instruct the government to issue directives to all departments requiring that they reduce their budgets for the next fiscal year by 10 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

VETERANS LAND ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND DEADLINE FOR EXPIRY TO MARCH 31, 1975

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-17, to amend the Veterans Land Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions through the usual channels and an agreement has been reached which, as I understand it, is that we will take second reading of this bill as the first item under orders of the day. Speeches will be limited to one speaker for each party, and the bill will then be sent to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which would meet this evening to give consideration to the bill.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, we agree to that disposal.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marshall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we agree to the time for second reading, but beyond that we will decide.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a fact that the discussions that took place related only to the time of second reading and to one speaker per party at that stage. As to anything else, such as the possibility of changing the committee situation, this was to be left for later discussion. So at this point, without binding the future, I think all that the four parties have agreed to is that we take second reading today, and that the debate on second reading be limited to one speaker per party.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the comment by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It is the understanding of the Chair that the question on second reading of this bill will be put this afternoon at the time of calling of orders of the day and that there will be an order of the House limiting the contributions of hon. members to one speaker from each party. Is that agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EGGS—POSSIBLE RELEASE OF REPORT OF INVESTIGATION INTO CHARGES BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD ABOUT EGG MARKETING

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who has just stepped out behind the curtains. Perhaps in his absence I could direct it—

An hon. Member: He is coming back now.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, perhaps by the time I put my question the minister will be in his seat. I should like to ask whether he is now in a position to release the report on the investigation into charges raised by the Food Prices Review Board about egg marketing in Canada which were released on January 10? My question is prompted by the request from the Canadian egg producers for import controls on United States eggs.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the report has not been submitted to me yet so I am in no position to make it public.

EGGS—REQUEST FOR CONTROLS ON IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the request by certain Canadian egg producers for import controls on U.S. eggs coming into Canada, and in view of the specific recommendation of the Food Prices Review Board which called for an immediate reduction in the price of eggs to make it more realistic in relation to the cost of production, and also called for a system of price stabilization, I should like to ask the minister, after he has had time to consult with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, whether he is now in a position to enlighten the House and the country, especially having regard to the chaos that exists in the egg industry and the high prices to consumers in this country?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that there has been a decrease in the price of eggs since the Food Prices Review Board report was submitted. I am sure he could get a copy of the brief submitted to me the other day by CEMA, which shows that they are producing eggs at a loss in Canada and are therefore asking for some kind of a program that will stabilize the industry and take the chaos out of it which I am sure the hon. member recognizes is there at the present time.

Mr. McGrath: Will the minister now respond to that part of my question in respect of the request by Canadian egg producers for import controls on U.S. eggs presently coming into Canada?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we just received the brief from them one day this week and we have had short discussions. Several ministers have copies of the submission and are studying it and will be in the next few days—the next week.

ENERGY

OIL—REQUEST THAT PRICES OF PRODUCTS REFINED FROM FEEDSTOCKS NOW ON HAND NOT BE INCREASED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is my understanding that the refineries usually have about 45 days' supply or more of feedstocks for their refineries. I should, therefore, like to ask the minister whether he has been in consultation with the companies to make sure that the price freeze which has existed until now so far as the products coming out of the refineries are concerned will be maintained for the next 45 days so that refineries will not increase the price on stock which they had bought at the frozen $4 price?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a telex will be going out to the industry today, which I will be glad to lay on the table later, asking the various companies to restrain the price of refined products related to the feedstock costs alone for a further period of 45 days, that is, until May 15, so oil on hand inventories at the lower price can be worked through the system with the price increase coming after that on future products.

Mr. Lewis: I would gather from the minister's answer that he has not yet discussed this with the companies. Can he give the House any indication whether he expects that the request in his telex will be carried out by the companies concerned?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should say that I discussed the question with a number of major companies last week, indicating the government's intention with regard to inventories. I cannot, of course, be certain with regard to the industry until the request is formally communicated, but I have an expectation that it will be carried out.

OIL—SUGGESTED USE OF EXPORT TAX REVENUE TO AID EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question either for the minister or the right hon. Prime Minister. When the export tax was first introduced one of the objectives for which the revenues from the export tax were to be used was to assist in the development of new energy sources and resources in Canada. In view of the fact that the export tax about which the Prime Minister is now talking is to be used almost entirely for the purpose of subsidizing the eastern part of Canada east of the Ottawa line, may I ask one or the other of the two gentlemen whether it is the government's intention to set aside adequate funds to assist the provinces, where further oil may be found, in exploration and development, such as the tar sands, so there will be some Canadian ownership of the future development of these new sources of petroleum?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, our view would be that in view of the very substantial amounts by way of capital that the two producing provinces will be accruing from that portion of the increase they choose to take by way of royalties, it seems to us that no additional federal funds should be required for this purpose. We will, of course, in due course be bringing forward to the House the proposal with regard to a national petroleum corporation under federal jurisdiction which would be funded with federal funds.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of hon. members seeking to ask supplementary questions on this subject. Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to proceed with the first round of questions and then I will see the Leader of the Opposition and other hon. members on supplementary questions.

HOGS—INCREASE IN PRICE OF FEED IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

As the hog producers in eastern Canada, and more specifically in Quebec, are no longer making any profits on their production because of lower sales prices and increases in the cost of feed grains, more specifically from $94.93 in January 1973 to $152.20 in 1974, will the government take immediate steps to protect those producers adequately?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have received some representations from different hog producer organizations, but I am not prepared at this time to say what we intend to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Since the minister received representations in that regard, can he say whether he will announce his decision very soon so that we can advise the concerned producers who tell us their distress and ask us for positive action?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the same answer still holds. I am not prepared to say what action we are going to take or whether there will be a statement made.

ENERGY

OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN DEVELOPMENT OF TAR SANDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising from an answer given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources just a few minutes ago to the hon. member for York South in which he indicated that the government would be leaving it to the provinces to use their capital funds to encourage exploitation of their petroleum resources, which represents some change in policy. Do I take it from the minister's statement that it is not the intention of the government of Canada to participate with the provinces in the development of the tar sands except through such enterprises as the national petroleum corporation if it is set up?

● (1510)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we will, of course, be participating with the producing governments in relation to that portion of the export tax from its inception to the end of January, 1974, and we have for this purpose indicated that a fund of $40 million will be available for research into the oil sands. Further federal funds for participation either in the oil sands or other petroleum endeavours would be under the aegis of the national petroleum corporation. I should also say by way of parenthesis that further proposals with regard to the uranium field would be handled by Eldorado Nuclear Limited.

ELECTRICITY—SUGGESTED NEED FOR FORMULA TO EQUALIZE COST IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. With regard to some of the eastern provinces—I am thinking particularly of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia—and the increased cost of thermal generated electricity and the real problem there is in trying to maintain an equitable price for electricity in the provinces, I wonder whether any formula of assistance will be worked out whereby there could be some equalization of this important cost both in terms of industry as well as consumer utilization?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not as part of any discussion we had yesterday, which was purely on matters concerning all provinces. I would be fair to add, however, that I have had representations not only in the course of yesterday but previously. Indeed, I believe the representations the member refers to were made in January by the premier of Prince Edward Island. These things have been considered by the government, and discussed with the premier, and I am sure there will be further discussion. I would merely add that there is a desire on the part of consumers and, indeed, the provinces in many parts of the country to have greater subsidies for various purposes. The Leader of the New Democratic Party a moment ago suggested a form of subsidy to producing provinces out of the export tax. I just want to make the point to all hon. members opposite that funds are not unlimited.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the province of Prince Edward Island is 100 per cent dependent on thermal plants for generating electricity and has already experienced a 40 per cent increase in electricity costs in the last half dozen months and expects a further increase shortly, would the Prime Minister say whether serious consideration is being given to an equalization of the cost of electricity as well as the hoped for construction of a submarine cable which would allow Prince Edward Island to become part of the hydroelectric and perhaps of the nuclear-generated electricity system that is to come on stream within the maritimes or the Atlantic region.

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that both these subjects have been raised by the premier of Prince Edward Island. Very forceful representations have been made to myself by him and I am sure to other ministers equally. The hon. member may not understand that there are other provinces in the maritimes which have similar requests, and there are provinces in other parts of Canada which are also asking for subsidies. For that reason, I am not able to make any commitment at this time along the lines the hon. member is talking about. I told Premier Campbell we would be in further discussion with his office, and indeed, even today I asked that such discussions be pursued.

OIL—USE OF EXPORT TAX REVENUE IN DEVELOPMENT OF TAR SANDS—PARTICIPATION BY PROPOSED NATIONAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for York South. In view of the fact that the $2.50 increase in the price of oil to be received by the producing provinces will do little more than compensate them for the fact that they are losing 50 per cent of the export tax revenue and therefore they will not have any more funds than they had before, may I ask the minister, in view of the fact that originally 50 per cent of the export tax was set aside for development, whether the government is committing or earmarking any amount of money for development of the Athabasca oil sands and heavy oil in northern Saskatchewan to be spent through the national petroleum board or in any other way? Is there any amount set aside—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might allow the minister to reply, after which I will see the hon. member for Vegreville.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. member is asking the same question as that just raised by the Leader of the Opposition. My previous answer was, of course, that there is the federal share of the export tax at the early stage of its operation. There is the intention there to put $40 million into oil sands research in co-operation with the province, and there is in addition the expectation that the national petroleum corporation when authorized by parliament will apply funds in the same way. If the hon. member is asking for funds above and beyond that and above and beyond the rather substantial funds going to the provincial treasuries because of the $2.50 increase, the answer is we do not have in contemplation seeking additional funds from the general revenue beyond those I just mentioned.

TRANSPORT

JURISDICTION OF GOVERNMENT AND CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. May I welcome the minister back to the House. I hope he has fully recovered from the flu bug which has plagued him in recent times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Given the fact that the president of the Canadian Transport Commission today stated that the minister and the cabinet do have final authority over the actions of the Canadian Transport Commission in matters dealing with transportation in Canada, which statement is in direct conflict with that of the minister, may I ask the minister if at the earliest possible date he will make a statement on motions clarifying these conflicting views so that the people of Canada will be able to judge clearly just who is responsible for the mess in transportation in Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in light of the circumstances I think we are probably both right. This means that the CTC has the final decision over many things and we have also. I have never accused the CTC, as such, of being responsible for the troubles we have in the field of transportation. I think Mr. Benson is right and I am right, too.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer in which he indicated he may be right and the commission may be right, and his reference to exceptional circumstances dealt with by the minister, can the minister explain to the House just what those exceptional cases are, upon which the minister and the cabinet have power to overrule the CTC?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope the minister would not attempt to do this unless we return to motions.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO MENTION TRANSPORTATION PROBLEMS IN THRONE SPEECH

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister in respect of the mess in transportation. Was any consideration given, either at the instigation of the Minister of Transport or others, to include in the throne speech of a few days ago mention of the matter of the mess in transportation and what the government intended to do about it?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the member would have had the presence of mind to ask this question during the throne speech debate which lasted eight days.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a supplementary, after which the Chair will recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister how we were to know there was a mess in transportation when the former minister was going around saying everything was great?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should have assumed it would take us several years to clean up the mess left by the hon. member for Trinity.

INQUIRY AS TO DISPOSITION OF STUDY ON MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I might be allowed to ask the Prime Minister, under the circumstances, what disposition was made of the study which was under way at the time I left the department to determine how western grain, for example, could move expeditiously and cheaply to ports so that it would be available for our overseas customers, and what action the government has taken since then based on that report?

• (1520)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a large quantity of studies on the matter and they have all been made public. I think there are so many of them that they could hardly be contained in terminal 2 for which the hon. member is responsible.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Trinity for a supplementary, but it seems to me this is a rather unproductive exchange.

Mr. Hellyer: My supplementary is simply this: when the government, with its special kind of genius, has managed to fowl up nearly everything in the country in five years, why could they not have taken some action in the field of transportation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OIL—POSITION OF PREMIER OF SASKATCHEWAN ON NEW PRICE FOR CANADIAN CRUDE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the meeting yesterday of the several heads of governments across the country was a secret one, or whether information concerning what took place will be available? I ask that in view of the fact the hon. member for York South made the allegation that the $6.50 per barrel that was decided upon was apparently the result of making the premier of Saskatchewan putty in the hands of the premier of Alberta. I wanted to ask the hon. member for York South a question but he knew what the question was and therefore he refused to do the usual thing, accept it. Can the Prime Minister clarify the situation with respect to the premier of Saskatchewan and tell us whether or not he agreed wholeheartedly to the $6.50? Otherwise, we will hear about it politically from the hon. member for York South.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is familiar with the code of honour that prevails during these meetings, the essence of which is that each member should be allowed to speak for himself and give his point of view, which of course I did and which I understand the premier of Saskatchewan has done publicly in the press, and which certainly is a contradiction of what the leader of the NDP said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE INTO ACTIVITIES OF CERTAIN NEWSPAPER REPORTERS—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of either the Solicitor General or the Prime Minister, and I gave notice of it this morning. My question arises out of an investigation by the RCMP of alleged subversive activity by several newspaper writers or reporters, namely, Mr. Bob Parkins, Mr. Bill Boei, Mr. Bob Bragg and Mr. Warren Caragata, some of them employed by the Calgary Herald. Would the Prime Minister or the Solicitor General make a statement and also assure us that freedom of speech and civil rights will be protected in the case of these newspaper reporters?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there has been a long tradition in the House, and in consideration of the public interest, that we never reply in the affirmative or the negative to a question whether a police investigation is under way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: May I put this question to the Solicitor General. I do not think there is any question that an investigation has taken place, from the information I have and which the minister has, but in light of the situation will he assure the House that the civil rights of these reporters and freedom of the press in this country will be protected from this kind of investigation?

Mr. Allmand: This government and this party have always supported freedom of speech and freedom of the press.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I might say that one of the reporters who was mentioned in the article in the Calgary Herald had not even heard of any investigation against him until he read about it in the Calgary Herald.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I would think, in light of the number of articles that have appeared and the amount of information that is now available on this subject, that the minister would want to assure the House and the country that the civil rights of these reporters will be protected other than by the kind of investigation which the minister knows is going on.

Mr. Allmand: I can give that assurance to the extent of my responsibility. I might say that at the federal level we do what we can to protect the civil rights of all persons, but there is a certain responsibility at the provincial level as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: We have no intention of interfering with the civil rights of any individuals, whether they be reporters or otherwise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

LOBSTER—EFFECT OF OFFSHORE FISHING ON INSHORE FISHERMEN OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, who was here a moment ago. Perhaps I can put the question anyway and receive a response from someone else.

With respect to the decision made in 1970 by the department to encourage the development of two large companies in offshore lobster fishing, which had very injurious effects upon inshore lobster fishermen in Nova Scotia, and the commitment at that time by the Minister of Fisheries and, I understand, by the Prime Minister—that may not be accurate but if it is the Prime Minister might be able to reply—to examine and study the effects of this new mechanism and new procedure in fishing for lobster on inshore fishermen, was a study undertaken and completed by the end of 1971, as it was supposed to have been and, if so, what were the results of that study and what has been done to preserve the position of inshore fishermen?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, speaking in the name of the Minister of Fisheries, I cannot give details on whether or not there will be an investigation, but I will see to it that the hon. member gets an answer as soon as possible.

ATHABASCA TAR SANDS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES EXPLAIN HIS DEVELOPMENT PLAN TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. I wonder if the minister would be willing to appear before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works for the purpose of informing the committee of his plans for the development of the tar sands and, if not, why not?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what I said in Calgary. I think my speech did not leave anything out. If the hon. member would like to have a copy of my speech, I will gladly send him one.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie. The hon. member for Regina East has a supplementary question. Perhaps he should be recognized first.

Mr. Balfour: In light of the minister's comment that the public and members of parliament seem to have a closed mind on the subject of the development of the tar sands, would the minister appear before an open committee of members of the House of Commons for the purpose of explaining his plan for the development of this project?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts about this line of questioning. Perhaps we might give the hon. member for Mackenzie an opportunity to ask his question.

HEALTH

SUPPLY OF DOCTORS IN RURAL AREAS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister leave football alone for a while and indicate what plans he may have for supplying some of the outlying rural areas with doctors as well as retaining those who are there, since he has already given some indication that there are too many doctors in the country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say first that it is hon. members on the other side who seem to be much more concerned about football than we on this side. It is they who seem to be spending much more time wondering what is coming or not coming than we are.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As to the specific question asked by the hon. member, I am appearing this afternoon before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, as I have been on several occasions over the last few weeks. We have already discussed this particular point and will continue discussing it this afternoon. I only hope the hon. member will take the trouble to attend. If he does, he will get a very elaborate answer to his question.

Mr. Korchinski: I thank the minister for his invitation but I wonder whether he would inform the country and the House whether he has a specific policy. All he has given us is a lot of talk.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member will be pleased to read in the report of the standing committee, if he does not wish to attend, what the stand of the government is on this matter. He will then find that we have a very good and a very specific policy indeed in this respect.

POST OFFICE

SUBSTITUTION OF PICK-UP SERVICE FOR DELIVERY BY LETTER CARRIER FOR BUSINESS OFFICES IN HIGH RISE BUILDINGS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General, and may I say that there has been a little bit of difficulty in delivering it. Arising from the study released by the Letter Carriers' Union which reveals that over 80 per cent of business offices in high rise buildings prefer mail delivery by letter carrier rather than the pick-up service being introduced by the Postmaster General, without consultation, will the minister now meet with the letter carriers on this matter with a view to maintaining the best possible service to the Canadian public?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I refute the words said by the hon. member, and I want to assure him that there was consultation, that there is consultation now, and that I had many opportunities to speak with the union's president. I spoke to him just this morning. The hon. member can be assured that negotiations are going on in this regard. Thus, when he says that there is no consultation, he is completely wrong.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the fact the minister has given his assurance of meaningful consultations on this important issue, and the fact that the letter carriers in their release have stressed the importance of high quality of service, will the minister delay further implementation of this program until these consultations have been completed?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, if a decision has to be taken on this matter, I will announce it soon in the House.

LEAKING OF NAMES OF CERTAIN NEWSPAPER REPORTERS ALLEGEDLY BEING INVESTIGATED BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is somewhat supplementary to the one directed by the hon. member for Calgary North to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that the names of at least five or six individuals who are newspaper reporters have been leaked in respect of an RCMP investigation dealing with security, and in view of the minister's answer to the other hon. member, will he inform the House why that information concerning these individuals was leaked to the press and the general public, and what kind of action he will be taking to ensure that they will be defended against misleading statements affecting their civil liberties?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we do not know how the story originated that appeared in the paper in Calgary. We are checking that out. But, as I said in reply to the earlier question, there is a long tradition in this House neither to confirm nor deny when a police investigation is under way because it would be counter-productive to do so.

Mr. Knight: In view of the fact this issue is becoming very crucial for these five individuals, affecting their life style and their employment in a particular industry, will the minister make a statement on motions assuring that these individuals' civil rights will be protected, and explaining how this story was leaked to the press?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, if their rights have been interfered with so far, that they have been interfered with by the publication of the story in the Calgary paper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: We are going to try to find out how that story came about, and I hope to be ready to answer further questions on this matter. I will be appearing before the justice committee this afternoon on my estimates and I will try to provide further information. We have no intention of interfering with the civil liberties of these people.

Mr. Knight: You have already.

Mr. Allmand: No, we have not and, as I say, I cannot give any further information on the subject at this time.

INQUIRY AS TO EXISTENCE OF FILES ON CERTAIN NEWSPAPER REPORTERS ALLEGEDLY BEING INVESTIGATED BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the kind of answer we are getting on this subject in order to cover up, would the minister now either confirm or deny that files are kept on members of the press in the same way as there are files on members of parliament and other people? Is there a file on these people in reference to the matter I raised this afternoon?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there could be files on certain members of the press if they have been involved in criminal offences or subversive activities. Again, there is a long standing tradition in this House, which has been followed by the hon. member's party as well as by this party, not to reveal whether there are files on individuals. In the same way, there has been a longstanding tradition not to confirm or deny when an investigation is under way. If we were to confirm that there was an investigation under way against certain individuals it would alert those individuals to the fact that the police were doing that, and consequently this would be counter-productive.

CRIMINAL CODE

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH ABORTION CAN TAKE PLACE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Now that both the Minister of Health for Ontario and the president-elect of the Canadian Medical Association have accused the minister of passing the buck on abortion, and have called upon him to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code that would remove the ambiguity surrounding the present law, is the minister prepared to introduce an amendment to the law that will clearly specify the terms under which abortion can take place?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the law which parliament did pass clearly put a certain responsibility on hospital committees to determine when abortions might be performed. I think I very accurately stated the view of parliament in indicating that this responsibility should be carried out. It was parliament's hope in passing that law that only a medical judgment, responsibly made, could intervene to say when an abortion might indeed be legal. Therefore I deny completely that this is any passing of the buck. It is a passing of a responsibility which parliament itself imposed on the hospital committees in 1969.

ABORTION—SUGGESTED WITHHOLDING OF MEDICARE FUNDS TO CORRECT ABUSES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of statements published in last night's Toronto Star, made by doctors at Toronto area hospitals, including one doctor who had been a member of a hospital abortion committee, that rubberstamping of abortion requests takes place routinely, is the minister considering withholding money being provided under medicare to finance what are clearly non-therapeutic abortions, a practice that is contrary to the spirit and, according to the Minister of Justice, contrary to the letter of the present law passed by parliament?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will recognize that the method of financing hospital insurance and medical care in this country would not allow me to use such a bludgeon against provincial governments or hospitals in particular.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—REQUEST FOR EARLY APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS TO IMPROVE RECEPTION IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Communications. Possibly he and I can communicate somewhat. In view of the fact that applications dating back to June, 1973, have been made to improve cable television reception in Manitoba by locating antennae in southeastern Manitoba and then utilizing microwave signals to improve reception, in Winnipeg, and in view of the fact that two hearings of the CRTC have already been held without the CRTC either accepting or rejecting an application, would the minister indicate when a decision on this application can be expected so that already existing television cable reception can be improved in Manitoba?

● (1540)

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not make the decisions for the CRTC, and neither do I make up their schedule. Surely they are making all possible efforts to get the best reception for Manitoba. There is a decision pending, but unless the hon. member gives me a few days to inquire I cannot tell him when the decision will be issued.

Mr. Epp: In view of the fact that CRTC hearings are scheduled for Winnipeg on May 14, and in view of the fact that no application can be heard without the CRTC calling for applications from interested parties and that so far the CRTC has not done this, would the minister undertake to impress upon the CRTC that it should ask for applications to extend cable television reception in Manitoba in order that applications may be made on behalf of areas where cable television reception, even at best, practically is non-existent or does not exist at all?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member's supplementary is more in the form of a representation, and he has to assume that it has been noted.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OLD AGE PENSIONS—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING PAYMENT OF SAME AMOUNT TO ALL PERSONS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Does the minister intend to do away with inquiries, in abolishing the guaranteed income supplement for all needy older persons and is he considering some legislative amendment so that each pensioner would receive the same pension, thus removing some injustices?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have surely no intention of abolishing the guaranteed income supplement and of making monthly payments of $110 to all older persons. I will not therefore consider any such proposal.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Does the minister intend to amend the Old Age Security Act so that married couples will be entitled to maximum pension and supplement, just like married couples that separate to obtain those benefits?

Mr. Lalonde: Most plans in force throughout the world provide for married couples benefits which are slightly inferior to double those of single persons for the simple reason that their cost of living is less than double that of the single person. Once again, I do not foresee any such amendment in the near future.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC HAS MADE ITS POLICY KNOWN TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Has Quebec communicated to the federal government, officially or unofficially, its orientation and policy for immigration, and are there discussions or negotiations on the matter between Quebec and Ottawa?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been presented with the views of the government of Quebec through my counterpart, Mr. Bienvenue, on two occasions. They are not conclusive nor is the Quebec government seeking, in my opinion, immediate answers. They are, in my opinion, part of the ongoing process of examining immigration policies, but we will be responding to the minister in the future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period.

[Translation]

Perhaps the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe could ask his supplementary, and then I shall recognize the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

Mr. Wagner: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is he prepared to give the provinces, particularly Quebec which filed a request, the right to take part in the selection and recruiting of immigrants?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, this involves the degree to which that right is exercised. There are already co-operative arrangements with regard to these problems. We agree with Quebec and with the province of Ontario as to the participation of their representatives abroad, but in connection with the ultimate selection or rejection, that would have to be the subject of ongoing discussions and consultation.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

OCEANOGRAPHIC STUDIES—INCLUSION OF POSSIBILITY OF TUNNEL OR CAUSEWAY TO BRING ELECTRICITY TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Science and Technology. In a recent announcement the minister indicated that a study of the Gulf of St. Lawrence would be included in the larger oceanographic studies that are being done. I wonder if she could now indicate, in view of the interest of the northern part of Newfoundland, if the terms of reference indicate a study of a crossing between Labrador and Newfoundland with a view to bringing electrical power across through a tunnel or causeway?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I did not announce such a project because it is under review at the present time in the interdepartmental committee on oceans.

The project to which the hon. member referred to is a study of a rather fundamental nature. It would not deal with the practical matter he is interested in, namely the feasibility of laying an underwater cable under in the area he mentioned. However, this general review could be used as a reference in case it would be desirable to lay an underwater cable.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY AS TO FEASIBILITY STUDY OF CONSTRUCTION OF VEHICULAR TUNNEL BETWEEN LABRADOR AND NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the answer just received, and in view of the consultation that is taking place on an inter-ministerial basis on such subjects as the Quebec-Labrador highway, the development of the Lower Churchill and the need for installing a cable between Labrador and Newfoundland, are any discussions taking place that go beyond just laying a cable on the bottom of the sea and take into consideration the construction of a vehicular tunnel or some kind of crossing?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the government of Newfoundland some weeks ago submitted to my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and to me copies of a feasibility study with regard to the transmitting of power across the Strait of Belle Isle to Newfoundland. It was a very complex and technical document. It is my recollection that it contemplates a cable system rather than a tunnel but I would have to get some expert and technical advice before answering in detail.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair indicated a moment ago that we have reached the end of the question period but I gather that the hon. Leader of the Opposition would like to ask a supplementary question. Perhaps by consent he should be recognized, after which the Chair will call orders of the day.

ENERGY

ATHABASCA TAR SANDS—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO CONTROL OF RATE OF DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is not a supplementary but it is short and directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has indicated that the tar sands cannot be developed at the rate that some quarters in the United States have indicated they would like. Is it the position of the government of Canada and of the minister that the federal government intends to regulate the rate at which the tar sands in Alberta could be developed under the auspices of the government of Alberta?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, sir. My purpose in saying so was not to create false expectations on the part of the United States that there would be a fast rate of development. We have, on a number of occasions in meetings with the Alberta government, emphasized again the development of this resource for the purpose of the Canadian market. They have given undertakings that in due course they would have full scale consultation on the oil sands. I think it is fair to say, because of other questions, we have not dealt with this but we look forward to having an early response from the government of Alberta on this question so that we can formulate our own expectations about oil sands development so that we can be sure, in turn, of adequate supplies of oil for Canadians.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. In the last three weeks I have risen on eight days during the question period, to put a question to the Solicitor General, of which I have given him notice. I would appreciate it if you would consider giving recognition to this corner tomorrow. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

VETERANS LAND ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND DEADLINE FROM MARCH 31, 1974 TO MARCH 31, 1975

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs of Bill C-17, to amend the Veterans Land Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before we proceed with the second reading of Bill C-17 I think Your Honour would find that the proposal the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) was trying to make about an hour ago would now be agreed to by all parties, namely, that after second reading this bill be referred to a committee of the whole rather than to the Standing Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-17, to amend the Veterans Land Act be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my statement to the House last Tuesday, this measure to extend the new settlement operations of the Veterans Land Act for one year to March 31, 1975, is the result of the further consideration which, on March 12, I undertook to give to representations for an extension of the deadline. I have carefully studied all the relevant data and have come to the conclusion that a one-year extension would certainly be in the best interest of veterans.

As I mentioned in my remarks of March 12, this government and this Minister of Veterans Affairs will take second place to nobody in their interest in matters pertaining to veterans. We have always lived up to our commitments to veterans and we fully intend to continue doing so.

I should like to remind hon. members that the original purpose of the Veterans Land Act was to assist in the rehabilitation of veterans in the postwar period, following wartime active service, and to do so by helping them to settle on the land in rural or semi-rural areas as full or part-time farmers.

● (1550)

The intent of the legislation in these respects was clearly spelled out in the preamble to the act, and I think it is relevant to quote the following parts of the preamble:

'Whereas many men now serving in the active forces of Canada have recorded their desire to settle on land or engage in farming when hostilities cease, and it is desirable that suitably qualified veterans be encouraged to seek rehabilitation in the agricultural industry;

'And whereas part-time farming coupled with other employment is an increasingly important aspect of rural and semi-rural life in Canada;

'And whereas it is in the public interest as a measure of rehabilitation to assist in acquiring the ownership of farm homes by qualified veterans—'

[Mr. Speaker.]

In relation to the purpose of assisting to rehabilitate veterans in civilian life, hon. members know that every veteran has had at least 20 years to make his application, and most have had as long as 30 years. The other two alternative rehabilitation plans were concluded quite some time ago. I think it is clear that the orientation of the Veterans Land Act was directed principally to those veterans interested in agricultural utilization of farm land in rural and semi-rural areas. The financial provisions of the act were founded on this type of settlement, and I think we should not lose sight of those basic factors when we discuss the act.

When we look at some of the facts, we realize that in the eight fiscal years up to March, 1973, after the lending deadlines and revised loan ceilings were established in 1965, approximately 32,700 veterans were settled under the provisions of the act. In the majority of those eight years, the annual number of new establishments has been less than 5,000. In the current fiscal year, however, and more particularly in the last six months, there has been a significant increase in the number of loan applications. It is expected that the number of veterans who will have been settled this year will approximate 5,500—and there are a further 1,400 loan applications on hand awaiting appraisal.

It is in the light of this data as to comparative settlement activity and the increased interest which veterans have shown in the current fiscal year—due undoubtedly to recognition by them of the scheduled lending deadline—that I reached the conclusion an extension of one year would be appropriate. In our analysis of the facts, it became evident that some well-intentioned veterans would have been deprived of a right which they had so gallantly earned if the March '74 deadline had been final. It seems to me that when there is a reasonable doubt, we should not hesitate to decide in favour of the veterans. We must not forget that some years ago they did not hesitate when the survival of freedom was in doubt.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, this extension will provide many veterans with the opportunity to take advantage of a program which was designed for them. It should be made quite clear that we are not doing this as a favour to veterans but simply as a right which they have earned.

Mr. Paproski: It's about time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Who said that?

Mr. Paproski: I did.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, since this bill is now before us it need not take too long to pass it because it does what the minister, a couple of days ago in his statement on motions, said it would do, that is, extend the expiry date of March 31, 1974 to March 31, 1975. Since time is of the essence, and since we are willing to co-operate, we propose to expedite passage of the bill through all stages before the week is out. To that end, we have agreed to give it second reading today and, together with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others, I should like to see this bill considered in Committee of the Whole and passed through all stages today, if possible.

The bill introduced today, Mr. Speaker, as I expressed to the House when replying to the statement on motions by the minister, is a narrow concession. It is given to us, I suppose, so that the government can say that it has complied with the motion we introduced on March 12. To me, however, this concession tells another story. The minister in his speech indicated that this extension was given as of right, that the government had reviewed all relevant factors and has extended the legislation for one more year. But that is not what he said when replying to our motion on March 12. Then, he said the extension was not warranted. That tells me that this concession is given, not because the extension is what thousands of veteran citizens have been demanding individually and through their organizations, not because the government wants to serve veterans, as is its duty, but because by granting it the government is fulfilling its selfish aim to govern, regardless of circumstances. What bothers me, and I say this seriously, is that this type of thing is allowed to go on in the hallowed halls of parliament.

I suppose we have proved one thing, that there is still some hope left for the parliamentary process. Using rules and procedures laid down by those who came long before us and, as a result of representations from a large segment of Canadian citizens, parliament brought about changes in legislation passed by previous governments, brought them about because of changing conditions, and for the benefit of those who made the representations. To set right the far out versions of those who profess to know what efforts have been made in changing what are considered to be inequities in the veterans land charter, let me put on record the motion under Standing Order 58 which I moved on behalf of my party on May 18, 1973. It will be worth while looking at some of the representations which were made in the House, for the benefit of the supposed experts who saw this in a different light. The motion reads:

That this House urges the government to introduce priority measures to remedy present injustices to war veterans and, in particular, to remove those inequities arising out of basic rates of disability and other pensions, treatment services, allowances, and the Veterans' Land Act.

Since then, periodically and continuously, I have asked questions, brought in motions, either individually or in collaboration with my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and others of my party, in conformity with the rules and Standing Orders. My questions and motions had to do with action regarding the inequities in the Veterans Land Act. They are too numerous to repeat at this time. It is worth while mentioning that my party took every opportunity under the rules to bring up this matter. Since the minister kept evading the issue, and since we realized the extent of the emergency, we brought in a motion on January 11, just before the last recess, to adjourn the House.

On January 11 I said—and I shall read those words into the record, even though Your Honour made a ruling that day concerning my motion—as follows:

I ask leave to adjourn the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the proposed phasing out of the Veterans Land Act by March 31, 1974, which will result in denying to over 100,000 veterans benefits available to them under the act, instead of increasing the maximum loan ceiling and reducing the lot requirements.

If you will forgive me, Mr. Speaker, I will read into the record part of your ruling. Your Honour said:

The subject proposed for discussion must be a new one in the nature of an emergency.

I thank Your Honour for the advice. I continue:

In this particular instance it is relevant to note that the problem has been raised on a number of occasions over a long period of time by a number of members . . .

In particular, may I refer to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who has been an outstanding member of the Veterans Affairs Committee and is a former minister of veterans affairs. He, I and others have brought up this matter periodically. I continue:

The Standing Order also requires the Chair to take into account the possibility that the matter might be discussed on other occasions, or that there may be other opportunities for debate. As hon. members know, all of the seven days in the current supply period, which expires on March 31, are available now or would be available during March after a possible adjournment or prorogation. In addition, I think it is reasonable for the Chair to assume that other and additional opportunities for debate will be available in the month of March or before.

● (1600)

In view of the circumstances, the Chair has to rule that the proposed debate cannot take place today under the terms of Standing Order 26.

That was on January 11. I just want to emphasize that those who take the opportunity to twist the facts should follow what is going on before making far out proclamations. The first opportunity I had to make further representation was on March 12.

The other point I wish to make is to relate our efforts to our responsibility as members of parliament. The Progressive Conservative party has no exclusive channels of communication with veterans or veterans organizations. Every last member of this House of Commons knows that the vast majority of veterans want this date extended. They have received representations to this effect.

Every last veteran in this House knows that, while the extension of the March 1974 deadline fulfills part of the wishes of the veterans, the October 1968 deadline should be repealed. What is most important is that the loan ceilings must be raised, and the minimum lot requirements reduced, to allow the many thousands of veterans to take advantage of the deadline. This, every member also knows. The minister certainly knows because he is receiving many more letters than I, and I am receiving many. However, he was willing to agree to this narrow concession to his cabinet colleagues. I was going to call them the dirty dozen, but there must be more than that who make the decisions in cabinet.

When the minister appeared before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs last Wednesday, he indicated he was considering these factors. I wish to quote from the committee report. I asked, and I quote:

I want to ask the Minister, in his consideration of the extension of the March 1974 deadline, since it is consistent that the 1968 deadline be repealed, is consideration being given by his department to recommend through him to the government that this 1968 deadline be repealed?

MR. MACDONALD (CARDIGAN): We have considered this, Mr. Chairman.

MR. MARSHALL: With regard to the mortgage loan requirements, the maximum is $18,000, which everybody knows is not capable today of providing them with a lot and building a house. Is there any consideration being given to increasing the maximum loan ceiling?

MR. MACDONALD (CARDIGAN): This has also been under consideration.

MR. MARSHALL: Is there any consideration being given to reducing the lot requirements?

MR. MACDONALD (CARDIGAN): That is also under consideration.

The minister also told the committee that the whole matter was to be discussed the next day in cabinet. We all know the result. There was not one breath of concern or commitment to their responsibility, not one ounce of recognition of their colleagues, just a forelorn dedication to stay in power at all cost. This is a government without leadership or compassion and which disregards the needs of the people.

Watch what will happen when we pass this bill. Watch the next issue of The Carrillon which is produced by the Department of Veterans Affairs. I can see the headline now: Government agrees to extend Veterans Land Act deadline because of its concern for veterans. The people of Canada, will be told that, after considering all the factors, the minister did not mean it when he said an extension was not warranted and this is being done because of the government's sincere concern. The ridiculous thing about this whole matter is that the exercise does not accomplish anything other than deny the veteran something he wants, something for which he would commend the government, namely, an act that is consistent with Canada's housing policy. The continuance of this measure fills a needed service, that of looking after the housing needs of a wide segment of our population.

The staff administering the act will be in existence for many years to come. They are under-staffed and overworked because of the backlog of applications. Most important, they are frustrated because they have to give an explanation to veterans who do not have the difference between the $15,400 the act grants them and the cost of a lot or small holding, yet they get the blame. The annual report indicates the staff has been reduced from 535 to 494. The reason given is the phase-out. However, the real reason is that the staff is frustrated and discouraged because the restrictions on loan ceiling and lot requirements prevent them from helping the veterans.

In a newspaper the other day, the minister was quoted as saying he estimated that only 10,000 of the over 100,000 eligible would apply under the new extension and it would cost the government $50 million. Nothing could be further from the truth. He said the same thing last year, that only 10,000 would apply. We have reached the deadline and the minister says there will be another 10,000 applicants.

I do not blame the minister, but if his government were sincere, it would extend the deadline, increase the loan ceiling and many more veterans would be served. Where did the minister get the cost figure of $50 million? The annual report shows an administration cost of $11 million per year. It is reducing each year and $26 million is being collected each year in interest. Probably the $50 million he referred to is being charged against the $100 million demonstration program which the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) announced the other day. They can spend that amount, but they cannot lay out $50 million for housing for veterans. They want to cut that back.

There is no earthly reason for phasing out this act until every last veteran has been served. This should be the course of action for this government. They can do this because the administrative staff, to some degree, will be required for the next 25 years. However, I suppose we should be thankful for this small concession which will serve a good number of veterans. I am pleased that there is still some hope for the parliamentary process. The will of those we serve can be imposed upon the government even in spite of the greatest objections. I just want to repeat that after second reading, we agree to going into committee of the whole. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicated agreement to this procedure on a point of order. I am sure that can be done without introducing any amendments.

In conclusion, I wish to commend the minister on the job he is doing. I realize the difficulty in convincing the cabinet on the recommendations he places before them. I am sure if we could listen to what is said, we would hear the minister putting a good case for the veterans. Unfortunately, he is not with the right government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: We are pleased to get this small concession. We will support anything which will get this bill through as quickly as possible. We want it passed before Friday. I do not want to say what I feel in my heart might happen if it goes beyond Friday.

● (1610)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the minister concluded his speech this afternoon in which he called for the House to support this bill extending the deadline with respect to the Veterans' Land Act until March 31, 1975, he said this:

It should be made quite clear that we are not doing this as a favour to veterans but simply as a right which they have earned.

I am sure that all of us in this House appreciate the minister's putting it that way, and we underline and emphasize it just as strongly as we can. However, I am also sure the minister will not be surprised if some of us in all parties in this House feel that the right that the veterans have earned so far as the Veterans' Land Act is concerned includes more than that which is being granted in this bill.

Like the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), I say on behalf of this party that we do not want there to be any hiatus, any break at all. We want to see this legislation passed before tomorrow so that the March 31 deadline will be extended for one year. At the same time we regret that this bill, so simple and so narrow, fails to deal with a number of other issues that desperately require consideration so far as the Veterans' Land Act is concerned. Many of us have a great deal of correspondence with veterans, much of it regarding the Veterans' Land Act. My own has increased tremendously in the last few days. Much of it is with veterans who will not be covered by this change.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, they are not covered; many are still in the services.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Many of them are still in the services and will not be able to seek a small holding until some time after March 31, 1975. Many of them are veterans who did not obtain a qualification certificate prior to October 31, 1968. Their not doing so stems from a number of reasons. As a matter of fact, some of them—I think it is a particular shame that they are being denied this benefit—did not apply for a qualification certificate because they knew at that time that there was a March 31, 1974, deadline in the legislation, and so they thought there was no point in their applying for a qualification certificate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There was no pressure on housing then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As my hon. friend from Edmonton West says, the pressure on housing was not as great then as it is now. There are also many cases of veterans who understandably did not get the word that they had to get a certificate before October 31, 1968. I even have some cases of veterans who had written letters years before, which letters were not regarded as formal applications, and they are not now permitted to come under the provisions of this act.

There have been other instances. For example, there are a number of widows who have written to me. The ones I have in mind are widows who are themselves veterans and would normally have the rights of veterans, but somehow or other equality does not seem to exist in this area. Many widows who themselves are veterans are unable to take advantage of this legislation for one reason or another. It seems to me that that sort of thing ought to be cleared up.

As I said the other day when the minister announced that this legislation would come in, perhaps one of the main advantages of it is that it gives us another year in which to fight for these other improvements that are so important. If the granting of loans were to end as of this Sunday, our chances in the next few months of getting the act overhauled would not be very good. But since the Veterans' Land Act will still be an active piece of legislation for another year, perhaps in that year our efforts might be to some avail.

As the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has pointed out on a number of occasions, this legislation also ought to be amended in regard to the amount of money available by way of a loan. After all, costs have soared, particularly the cost of land and the cost of building homes. In view of this, the grant available by way of loan under the Veterans' Land Act should be increased. Likewise the minimum size of lot requirement should be lowered. As the minister knows, this is a matter about which many veterans feel very strongly.

This leads me to the point that almost every time we make our pitch about the Veterans' Land Act the minister says that we have forgotten its original purpose, that we are trying to twist the purpose from its being legislation simply enabling people to go on land as farmers, small or what-have-you, to legislation that will enable veterans to secure land on which to establish a home for retirement. I accept that criticism, Mr. Speaker; the minister is perfectly right. Indeed, that is the very change that we are trying to make.

In support of my position I suggest a couple of points for consideration. Firstly, a few decades have gone by since most of these veterans served overseas. When they came back, getting a small holding for some do-it-yourself agriculture was something in which they were interested. They are now 25 or 30 or more years older, and do-it-yourself agriculture—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is out of date now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is out of date now, says my "parliamentary secretary" from Edmonton West, who is giving me a great deal of help with this speech, and I appreciate it. The problem of these veterans today is the problem of finding a place to live during their years of retirement.

I remind the minister that this House of Commons expressed itself on this point unanimously on November 9, 1973. That was the day that I asked leave of the House under Standing Order 43 to move a motion which my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe seconded. These were the words of that motion, as reported at page 7693 of Hansard:

> That this House requests that the Minister of Veterans Affairs give urgent consideration to the amending of the Veterans' Land Act regulations to permit veterans to acquire small holdings, even if the main purpose of most of the older veterans now applying for loans under the Veterans' Land Act is to meet their housing requirements, it being the view of this House that entitlement to a piece of this land ought to be the right of any veteran.

I plead guilty, Mr. Speaker, and most of the hon. members of this House will have to plead guilty, to the charge that we are trying to get the government to adapt the Veterans' Land Act to the needs of veterans today. What they need today is not just the opportunity to raise a few carrots. What they need today is an opportunity to get themselves homes in which they can live the latter years of their lives. I plead very strongly that this kind of an adjustment in the Department of Veterans Affairs toward the Veterans' Land Act ought to be made, and I urge again that the view expressed unanimously by this House ought to be taken into consideration.

I believe that between the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) and myself we have spelled out the other things we ought to be doing at this time. We regret that the bill was drawn so narrowly that even the amendments we have in mind would probably be out of order if we tried to move them.

Certainly it is our view first that instead of an extension for only one year the extension ought to make it possible for any veteran who qualifies under the Veterans' Land Act to take advantage of that qualification as long as he lives and, in the second place, we think the amount of money available under the act should be increased and that the minimum lot requirements should be lowered.

I have already referred to the cases of widows who themselves are veterans and who are being denied the rights available to other veterans, and I also stress very strongly the point, and I think there will be others pressing this when we get into the Committee of the Whole on the bill, that the failure at this time to do anything about the cutoff date of October 31, 1968, works a real hardship and a real case of discrimination against many veterans. I can see the technical problems involved in re-opening the act on a wholesale basis, but I am sure a way could be found to cope with the cases of many veterans who have a very justifiable grievance in not now being allowed a qualification certificate. These are the points we think ought to be covered.

We regret that the procedures of the House, and the fact that we have a Governor General's recommendation that is so narrow, will deny us the opportunity of moving the kind of amendment we would like to move, but I trust the minister realizes that we are giving him notice today that during the year of grace now granted we will be pressing for these things.

Perhaps at this time I might indicate that when we do get into the Committee of the Whole I have an amendment I shall be seeking to move, and in spite of all that we have said about amendments that would be out of order because they involve the expenditure of money, I believe this amendment is one that will be in order. It is lengthy and the language is legalistic and convoluted so I will not read it now, but I should like to indicate its purpose.

The purpose of my amendment is something like the purpose of a section of Chapter 29 of the statutes of last year, which was Bill C-192, which amended the Income Tax Act and provided certain tax reductions to corporations. Just the mention of that makes some of my friends think I am going to digress and talk about corporate tax rip-offs, but I will not do that at this time.

The fact is that in that act there is a provision under which 60 members, by signing a motion, can get a debate on a certain proposal, and the amendment I am going to present in the Committee of the Whole would add to this a clause under which if 20 members, anytime after September 30 this year, that is six months from now, were to present a motion calling for the terminal date to be reviewed it would be possible to have a debate on that motion and, if it were carried, the minister would be required to undertake such a review and report thereon to the House.

I should like to have drawn that motion in such a way that 20 members could sign such a motion and, if the House passed it, the extension beyond March 31, 1975, would be automatic. I realize I could not get away with that because it would involve the expenditure of money, but the amendment the way I have drawn it will have the effect of guaranteeing, sometime after six months have gone by, a debate on this issue, thus giving the House a chance to say to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) that we want a further extension to be considered.

As I say, I have that amendment drawn and ready. Since it does not involve directly the expenditure of money, and since it is within the ambit of this bill, I believe this amendment will be in order and I dare to hope that all parties in the House will accept it.

Let no veteran be misled into thinking that the passing of my amendment in itself guarantees a further extension beyond a year from now, but the passing of my amendment will guarantee the raising of this matter in the House sometime after September 30, 1974, and it will guarantee a debate and, if I know the mood of the House, it will guarantee that the motion will carry and the Minister of Veterans Affairs will be required four or five months before the end of the period, not just on the eve of it, to reconsider the whole matter.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

As I say, I shall move that amendment when we get into the Committee of the Whole. I believe the House will approve it and give its guarantee that there will be further debate on this issue this fall. In the meantime, as all of us will say during the debate today, we are not satisfied with this measure as it does not go far enough, but at least it lets a number of veterans in during the coming year and it keeps the legislation alive enabling us to fight another day for what, as the minister said, are rights under the Veterans Land Act which we believe veterans have earned.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the debates that have taken place lately were really very interesting since they have enabled us to see that the opposition can force a government to act.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) introduced today a bill to amend the Veterans' Land Act, following pressures exerted by the opposition parties. Those pressures could have become serious for the government but until now they have been beneficial to them.

I was listening a while ago to the hon. member for Humber-St.George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who confessed the mistake they made when they asked for an extension of one year or more in the deadline concerning that legislation as they failed to require that extension to be beneficial first to the veterans. A few minutes ago, they almost accused themselves of that omission.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to extend for one year the deadline of this legislation, but its modes of application remain the same. The maximum loan that may be granted to a veteran to enable him to buy a small holding of half an acre and a house is still $18,000.

Mr. Speaker, very important changes took place since that legislation was passed. At the beginning, it was believed that many veterans would settle down on the land and become full time farmers. At the end of the war, in 1945 or 1946, it was still a usual thing to take up a career in agriculture, but since that time, we know at what pace farmers have left their farms. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that veterans are not more interested in becoming farmers than those who abandoned the land.

It has been noted that it was also possible to purchase a piece of land and become what is called a part time farmer. So the idea is to provide shelter for the veteran and his family. In my opinion, such was the objection of that legislation. We realize today, especially during the past few months and weeks, how quickly the cost of construction materials is increasing.

● (1630)

Recently, while visiting home builders, I was told that the price of some materials such as plastic pipes, for example, had doubled. Last week, the price of nails went up from 6 to 7 cents a pound and copper pipes and tubes are also very expensive. If the price of gold had not increased so quickly, it would perhaps be easier to have gold pipes. It has becomme as costly to use copper nowadays.

In such circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible to buy a lot and build a house for $18,000. Now, one thing or the other, the veteran must either deny himself the advantages of that legislation or do the utmost to find a second mortgage to make up the difference in order to get a satisfactory house which he urgently needs for himself and his family.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would have been much more important to introduce an amendment raising the ceiling of loans granted to veterans than to present one extending the expiry date of the legislation. If the time during which a veteran may avail himself of that act is extended even by another 12 months and the ceiling of the loan is not increased this act will remain almost inoperative for veterans.

In urban areas it is of course impossible to consider finding half acre or 17,424 square foot lots. So one must turn to rural areas, to towns, because it is almost unthinkable to find a lot of that size elsewhere. One must of course go to a rural area.

To develop a lot in a rural area costs more than in urban areas because in urban areas the development is done collectively whereas in rural areas the veteran or the owner himself must set up the facilities for his house, that is find sources of drinkable water that cost quite a lot and build sewers.

Mr. Speaker, even in rural areas building a house, buying a lot and setting up the required facilities has become an absolutely unthinkable project. A while ago I listened carefully to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre say by what feat of strength he would bring this government to increase the loan ceiling.

Mr. Speaker, when hon. members must make such pirouettes to be able to meet the needs of their constituents or veterans I think things have gone quite far. The minister is wise enough to convince this government not to wait for the steps announced earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He will show leadership by introducing the necessary amendments to the Veterans' Land Act to increase the loan ceiling for veterans so they may own a house and a piece of land.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I give my support and that of my party, so that we might proceed with all stages of this bill, that is second reading, study in committee of the House and even third reading, that it might be passed at the latest tomorrow.

We trust that, in the course of those discussions, the minister will allow himself to be convinced of introducing the amendments required to meet fully the needs of the veterans.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. The discussion is on clause one.

On Clause 1—Terminal dates for sale advance, loan or grant.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to traverse the very valid arguments put forward by hon. members on this side of the House and by the representative of the Social Credit Party. I do want to consider now, however, one or two matters within the legislation itself. First of all, may I say I think the minister has erred, perhaps on the side of caution, or has been directed to err on the side of caution in that the bill specifies that merely the period for receiving applications shall be extended one year. If such applications are accepted, they are still faced with the restrictions on the disbursements as applicable in section 31 (3) (b) of the act.

● (1640)

I would have thought the minister would have moved to give these people the same sort of extension for disbursement, the same privileges. It may be that I am under a misapprehension in this connection and, if so, I am quite willing to be corrected by the minister. However, I do want to make the particular point that I think the extension of the period for receiving the application should be accompanied by extension of the period at which the last disbursements can be made, as provided for under the act. At present, we know that under section 31(3) there are deadlines on the disbursements. The section reads:

> Where an agreement to make an advance, loan or grant has been entered into by the Director for the purpose of financing construction of a building or other improvement on land, no such advance, loan or grant shall be paid to or on behalf of the veteran unless, in the opinion of the Director, the construction or improvement has been commenced.
> (a) in the case of an advance, loan or grant an application for which could not be accepted after the 31st day of March 1974—

Which is now the 31st day of March 1975.

> —on or before the 31st day of March 1975,—

Which is now the 31st day of March 1976 since there has been an extension. But why has there not been an extension in the case of an advance loan or grant, an application for which could not be accepted after the 31st day of March 1977, on or before the 31st day of March, 1978? Why was there not a change made in that particular regard? The minister may be able to supply me with an answer. I would have thought that a parallel change should have been made in that clause.

The second point I would like to make, and this is one to which reference was made both by my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—and here I will alter my resolve not to traverse their arguments—is to deal with the argument that I seem to be receiving ad nauseum from the minister and his predecessors with regard to changes in the Veterans Land Act. I am on record, so far as my correspondence is concerned for three or four years, in regard to this particular point.

The point I wish to make is that this is not housing legislation; it is not legislation to provide housing for veterans who are now retiring but the legislation was for veterans on their retirement from the armed services or their release from the armed services and for their rehabilitation. Will the minister not agree with me that a member of the armed forces who has continued to this day in the armed forces and has not got a permanent home, has been subject to moves as his superiors saw fit, as he was during the war, and is now retiring from the armed services, has to be rehabilitated with regard to housing in the same way that I was when I got out of the armed services, albeit in 1945-46? His requirement for permanent housing, his entitlement to it, and that is the entitlement of a veteran, is fundamental to the undertaking given by this country to veterans under the veterans charter. That undertaking has not varied one iota and the veteran is entitled to housing for his rehabilitation.

I am not using the word "rehabilitation", in the pejorative sense, as though the veteran had been in a condition that was less than desirable in the sense of a man who has been undergoing punishment and is now being restored to civilian status. It is used in the sense of a veteran who is retiring from the defence forces and is to be habilitated. Surely, his need today is as great as it was from 1945 to 1950. Why was this done from 1945 to 1950? Because there was such a dearth of housing, such a demand for housing, and it was known that the veteran did not have too much cash, so could not meet the market prices of that day.

I invite the minister to cast his mind back to those days because he and I were going through pretty well the same sort of problems, I believe. Certainly, during that period I had this problem. I elected for another option that was open to me, not with regard to housing. Today, we see the veteran who wants to establish himself in civilian life with his family, and what has he got? Certainly not the so-called marginal come-potter-in-the-garden type of agricultural activity that might be carried on in what is known as the Veterans Land Act holding. Beside that, where can he get those lots today, where can they be found?

Since the advances under the Veterans Land Act have to come under some of the same regulations as under CMHC, and there are some very specific stipulations as to such utilities as water and sewers, one cannot go, as we did after world war II, to establish on these strip or ribbon developments in semi-rural areas. So, the veteran today is faced with fantastically escalated land prices. If we say that he has to take the minimum acreage specified under the act, less, in some specific cases, a percentage thereof, he must be almost a millionaire to be able to afford land at that value. I suggest to the minister that that land in an urban context is greater in value than the maximum mortgage allowed under the act. But leaving that aside, let the minister see if he can find a house which would meet all the other requirements.

There are some cases that I have seen where, on a real bargain purchase, the veteran would have been required to put in as cash equity more than he receives under the mortgage. It was a $35,000 property. I ask the minister to find out just what can be purchased for $35,000 today, with an effective maximum mortgage of $15,400 under the act. This means that close to $20,000 in financing has to be arranged elsewhere, usually in cash, because if the director of the VLA Act knows a veteran is going to secure a second mortgage that is usually the end of his application. Changes like this must be made. I know that my colleague would have wished to put forward an amendment, about which he will speak later, stipulating that all these matters be brought under review at a later date within the period of this extension.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

● (1650)

I have had an opportunity to examine the amendment announced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and am quite satisfied with it. I wholeheartedly endorse the nature of the amendment, and hope that the bill will receive passage today. I would not want it to go to committee where it could be held up until some time next week, causing further problems.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that the original attempt by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, which resulted in this bill, did not embrace the changes that have been outlined by hon. members in other parts of the House. I firmly believe that there has been a major change in the thinking of veterans, of members of the Veterans Affairs Committee, and of the general public in regard to this legislation since the time it was introduced in 1967. At that time we were all of the opinion that the VLA Act, as we knew it, would be phased out, and that this would not be opposed by veterans and their organizations. As a matter of fact it was not opposed by a former minister of veterans affairs who spoke just prior to me. Neither was it opposed by most of the rest of us who were on the standing committee.

As you may remember, Mr. Chairman, in those days changes were being made in the VLA Act which resulted in that act being used to test a system of rural financing that later developed into the Farm Credit Corporation. Up until that time we had the Farm Loan Board, a disgraceful organization, which became completely discredited in the farming community. When the Veterans Land Act was extended to provide assistance to veterans in becoming established farmers, its provisions were so much superior to our other farm legislation that it became the criterion against which all other legislation was measured. I am certain that in so far as its small holdings provisions are concerned it is a model that should be adopted for our national housing legislation.

The main criterion was that the veteran could be established on a piece of land that met his requirements, and in such a way that permanency was guaranteed. In return for permanency, the veteran was given a number of advantages. If we extended that principle to CMHC, the only people who would build houses with the assistance of government money would be those who actually wanted to live in them. Instead, CMHC has lent money all over the country to speculators, to building contractors, and to all sorts of people not interested in occupying the houses themselves. It has lent money to people interested in building houses solely for speculation and for resale.

Somewhat the same system existed in farm land mortgages before the Veterans Land Act came into being, and as a result of the experience gained with it we took most of the officials connected with VLA and put them into the Farm Credit Corporation which became patterned on the VLA. But we did not do this with CMHC. We should have learned our lesson. It is for this reason that I think the country in general should support the extension of the small holdings legislation, and that the provisions of that legislation should also be applied to housing in general, so that the person building a house in return for tenure of occupancy can benefit from a reduced interest rate. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: In order to permit the House to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before recognizing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in accordance with an agreement reached earlier today, may I advise the House, pursuant to Standing Order 40, that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Manpower—Opportunities for Youth Projects—Nature of consultation of priorities—Reason for discontinuance of constituency advisory groups; the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly)—Grain—Feed Grain—Policy respecting marketing; the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton)—Grain—Responsibility for allocation of railway cars—Declaration of certain branch lines as inoperative because of snow conditions.

Earlier today it was suggested that the House would revert to motions at this time.

WAYS AND MEANS

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY TO DEBATE WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I also, in accordance with section (1) of Standing Order 60, table notice of ways and means. Pursuant to section (2) of Standing Order 60, may I request you to designate an order of the day for consideration tomorrow of this notice of ways and means.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being after five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notice of motions (papers), private bills and public bills. As there are no motions for papers the House will proceed to private bills.

RURAL AIRPORT DEVELOPMENT ADVISORY COMMITTEE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH COMMITTEE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved that Bill C-102, respecting the establishment of Rural Airport Development Advisory Committees, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the action just taken with respect to the preceding bill probably should apply to this one as well, and if the House would extend that generosity I would be glad to sit down. However, I think that probably would not be the case.

A policy has existed within the Department of Transport for a long period of time to make grants in aid of airport development to municipalities which have airports or airstrips. The standard amount of annual allocation for a number of years has been $2 million, except for 1972 when it was increased to $3 million for that year only. Because the then minister of transport had his eye on an election in 1972 we thought that the extra million was to be applied in areas where it might do the most political good, but the amount has been cut back to $2 million and has remained there. At any given time the department has probably 60 or 70 applications for $2 million, but the amount does not go very far when spread over the multiplicity of municipally operated airports in Canada. As a matter of policy, the department tends to deal with this money in grant form on the basis of an individual airport or airstrip run by the municipality. It has no concept of policy in regional matters, or area or distribution of airport and airstrips that are linked because of the economics or the methods of communication and transport between those communities.

Since the first decision was made to establish such a grant system for municipally operated airports to get them over a hurdle in providing a modicum of facility of air transport to smaller communities, the whole area of transport has changed tremendously. There is a great deal of mobility and an increase in the number of aircraft serving smaller communities for a whole range of purposes, some of them economic such as flights into mining and prospecting areas, lumber areas, railway and road development areas, recreational flights for hunting, fishing and guiding, sight seeing and transport or social community purposes.

In my own province air transportation is common from one community to another, and most people do not think of using any other means of transport than aircraft which carry five or six passengers. Departmental policy has not kept pace with the change in air transport activity in rural areas and thinly populated areas. It is as if we were still relying on the horse and sled rather than on aircraft for transportation between communities. In the development that has taken place there has not been any great demonstration of friendliness by the Department of Transport toward air transportation. Most people think that the facilities available from the Department of Transport are a kind of accidental happening, and we in northern British Columbia do not feel that we get the type of consideration and friendliness from the department that we should.

The bill that I have drafted is not as complete as it would be if it had been introduced by the government. We all know the restrictions of the law and the rules of the House which say that a private member cannot introduce a bill which seeks to spend public funds, so within the bill there is no mechanism to pay expense allowances or to spend public money. To that extent it is not as full as it might have been as a government bill, but the essence is there and the feeling of what I think is needed is there.

The bill seeks to establish a Rural Airport Development Advisory Committee to which would be appointed members from municipalities and regional districts within which the committee is established. It is very loosely worded because, depending on the desire of the people, different things will be required. The purpose and intent of the advisory committee is to advise the minister, as is set out in clause 5 of the bill, on all aspects of airports that are or need to be established within the region for which the committee is established, including:

(a) improvements, maintenance, or extensions of runways,

(b) the location of new airports,

(c) the need for financial support for airports, and . . .

● (1710)

The committee may advise on such things as navigational aids, terminal building facilities and the like, and other facilities which are companion to an airport itself. The committee would have these powers in order that it, as the representative of the region concerned, shall have some input into the decision making process. In this way it might exercise influence before grants are made, as decisions with respect to grants are made on criteria which I have not had a chance to discover. In those cases, the decision is made probably by regional departmental officials of the Department of Transport, or the air section of it. They do not have enough money to operate with, but that is another story. Their decision is not made primarily on the basis of the needs of the community or area.

This bill is designed to counterbalance that lack. It will enable regions, communities and areas to choose people who are to sit on the committee and who can say to the Minister of Transport or his delegated officials, "Look, this is the way it is here; these are the needs, these are the requirements, and here are our recommendations." The committee can look ahead, and say that, in view of economic development that is likely to take place in a certain area or community in several years, we need to develop transport facilities for carrying people and goods in and out. It can say, "Here is a development plan for an airport." Such plans can be integrated with other federal plans.

To be more specific, in northern B.C. we have a vast number of rural airports, airstrips, many of them in farmers' fields. Once I landed at a facility provided by a fellow who ran a small farm. He erected some pilons or beacons; they were not mechanical or electrical, merely enough to guide the pilot and enable him to land in the farmer's field. We landed in the stubble. That was the airstrip available to us. There are many such airstrips in northern B.C. Generally, they are little more than gravel strips, small, short airstrips, and not the traditional level concrete or asphalt runways which most Canadians associate with airports, such as in Montreal or Vancouver. The airfield at Kamloops is a masterpiece of airport development compared with some of our airstrips in northern British Columbia.

These small, minimum facility type of airstrips are not satisfactory, as only a limited number of aircraft types can use them. For instance, an aircraft like the Convair, which can carry between 40 and 50 passengers and a considerable amount of freight, either with or without passengers, cannot use these primitive airstrips. The Convair, to a country boy like myself who is used to travelling in the Norseman, appears to be a pretty big and sophisticated aircraft. Department of Transport restrictions prevent aircraft of the Convair type from landing on these gravel strips, even though the use of that aircraft type would be justified in certain communities which need to move people and freight in and out of the area.

In the eastern portion of the riding of Skeena three communities, Fort St. James, Vanderhoof and Burns Lake thought that it would be advantageous if they could establish an air carrier service between that region and Vancouver. A service like that would allow the people of that community to fly directly to Vancouver without making a long trip by road or using, in some cases, jets operated by CP Air or PWA. On May 18 last year these three municipalities combined together and presented a trimunicipal brief to the minister. They talked about regional needs of the Fort St. James, Vanderhoof and Burns Lake area and said that the three communities of the region should be served by an air carrier who would connect the people of the region with Vancouver and other areas. They requested assistance under the municipal grants program, on the basis that one air field would serve three communities, because, although each community faced different problems, the over-all situation was the same.

That application—that is what it was—was rejected. I discovered, after phoning the regional air people in Vancouver today, that it was rejected because the department could not conceive of a grant for one airstrip to serve three communities. The wider concept of an airstrip to serve communities which want to co-operate was beyond the grasp of the department. They said, "No, sir, this is an abortive attempt, and out it goes. We are not going to accept it". The three municipalities which wanted to do something together for the region found themselves back, as the saying goes, on square one. They had to start all over again.

The area of which I am speaking encompasses in the neighbourhood of 25,000 square miles of British Columbia. The three municipalities concerned had wanted to put their heads together. They came up with the figure of $625,000 for building one airport. They felt that if the suggestion had been heeded, the opportunity for communicating directly with other communities, particularly Vancouver, would have been enhanced. It would have been easier to move goods and people in and out, particularly to Vancouver.

Let me take a few more moments, if they are available, to me, Mr. Speaker, to convince hon. members, many of whom I am sure do not need convincing, why it will be desirable to send this bill to committee, where it can be examined at greater leisure than is possible at this time. Fort St. James was simply interested in seeing that the economic needs of the people who live in and around the area year in and year out are met. For example, the request made in connection with the airport simply involved the removal of stumps, not from the runway but from the proposed extension; the grading of the proposed extension; the putting of gravel on the 5,000 foot by 150 foot wide runway; the installation of non-directional beacons, as well as weather and radio facilities. In addition the request was made for the completion of terminal facilities and for hard surfacing the 5,000 foot by 150 foot runway.

I wish to deal with the completion of terminal facilities for the benefit of those people who have only had the experience when travelling by aircraft of walking through air conditioned or heated terminals and companionways into a DC-8 or something of that nature. They will not fully appreciate the prospect of standing in zero weather with the wind blowing and no radio facilities to help you determine if and when the plane will arrive. I found from experience that standing in cold weather has quite an effect on the functioning of the kidneys. Many places in northern British Columbia do not have full terminal facilities and it is necessary to cope with this problem. All these communities are asking for are the normal, everyday facilities that are available everywhere except in small airports operated in conjunction with municipalities.

Vanderhoof is a distinct case in point. That municipality has been maintaining a military establishment for the past 28 years. The airport was developed during World War II. I do not know whether it was the Department of National Defence or the Department of Transport which prevailed upon the village of Vanderhoof to take over that airport. The runway is 5,600 feet. It needs hard surfacing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He can continue only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: I wish to thank hon. members. My timing was not as accurate as it should have been. I have mentioned the needs of Vanderhoof. Burns Lake has similar needs, but of a slightly different nature. You can put them all together and the package is the same. These communities are disadvantaged by the department's policy of making grants to municipalities. I hope my bill will be used as a mechanism to expand that concept and enlarge the vision of the department and this government regarding rural areas.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) on trying to introduce legislation to upgrade and enhance the aviation facilities of Canada, particularly in his own area in British Columbia. I must say he shows a great deal of knowledge of the air transport needs of that province and a great deal of knowledge about the needs of remote communities which would be fulfilled by the adoption of this very idea.

Although I said he is to be congratulated, I do not think this House should be worried about his good intentions. In my opinion, the bill is somewhat redundant. I believe we have adequate legislation and planning mechanisms to cover the concerns expressed in Bill C-102. There does not seem to be any need to unduly delay the urgent business of this House with this type of legislation.

The National Community Airports Assistance Program introduced by the government in 1971 is already paying handsome dividends. The budget for this program has been increased 100 per cent from a budget of $1 million to $2 million annually. The numerous airports which have received assistance through this dispensation have reaped dividends in many respects. For some communities, upgraded air facilities have acted as a boon to business and the tourist industry. For others, a new or resurfaced runway has encouraged settlement of a remote area and promoted social and economic exchanges with other settlements. In this fashion Canada overcomes the vastness of its geography and its peculiar demographic characteristics by uniting our remote or sparsely populated regions with our growing urban areas.

The criteria for assistance have been determined on two levels. Under the assistance policy program, airports are grouped into two categories, national and community. This distinction properly reflects the responsibility for their operation and development. Airports in the national category are classified as primary, secondary, Arctic or satellite airports. Community airports are classified as feeder, local industrial, intermediate local, small local or remote, depending upon their traffic index which is determined by a formula involving a whole panoply of factors which I will not elaborate upon at this time.

I wish to digress for a moment and speak about my district airport. It is called the Niagara District Airport. It is situated half way between St. Catharines and Niagara-on-the-Lake. It has triangular landing strips. The main strip is 5,000 feet in length. In addition, there is some hanger space. It is now operated by a private firm which keeps its planes there. There is a new control tower. If I am not mistaken, it is being considered by the Department of Transport for an instrument landing system. To make the proper use of this airport, the commission administering it wishes to have an additional 1,000 feet added to the runway. This would make the runway 6,000 feet long. Nowadays many types of jet planes require a runway of at least 5,000 to 6,000 feet in view of their rapid landing speeds of around 150 knots. In bad weather or with severe winds it is a little difficult to set a plane down with less than this length of runway.

● (1730)

The main reason for this local airport wanting the extra 1,000 feet is that just across the Niagara River lies Niagara Falls, New York, the centre of a large air charter business. A great many people from as far west as London, Ontario, from all over the Niagara peninsula, Brantford, Kitchener, Toronto and Hamilton are attracted to that city to take a charter flight, particularly to Florida or the Bahamas. The request of the Niagara Falls airport commission has already been forwarded to the Department of Transport, and I have endorsed it, as have two hon. members opposite whose ridings are in the neighbouring area. With the extra 1,000 feet of runway, charter flights using, say, 737s and that kind of aircraft could start at Toronto or Windsor and touch down at the Niagara district airport near St. Catharines to pick up people from the area; in other words, round off a beautiful flight. There is a great deal of business there for air charter companies.

Later, the commission hopes to take advantage of the interurban STOL program that is developing. It has not yet commenced to any extent in this country; I do not think the service between Ottawa and Montreal is yet in operation, but it is something for the future. In other words, there is a very great need in many communities such as those referred to by the hon. member for Skeena. They are forward-looking communities with airports and have a lot going for them. Eventually they will need a great deal of assistance.

The annual increase in the amount of money for this purpose from $1 to $2 million will make it possible to help a great number of airports deserving assistance, which previously was not the case. In the long run it will benefit municipalities and the aviation industry. I think the application made by the Niagara Falls airport commission outlines this very well.

The implementation of this policy of assistance has encouraged municipalities to continue the operation of national, secondary airports. It has also encouraged greater participation of others in the financing of airports. This has been in keeping with the government's objective that the cost of such facilities should be borne, to the greatest extent practicable, by the users and other direct beneficiaries of the facilities. The support that the government has received in response to its program of assistance for municipal airports has been most encouraging.

I cannot imagine, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-102 could possibly enhance the program within the specific context of the program as presently applied. A bill with such wide terms of reference would serve only to confuse priority planning which is already underway and would relegate to limbo, in my opinion, many worth-while and urgent requirements. While there can be no question that the transportation challenges that face us in Canada are very severe and require energy and imagination, there is no point in replacing existing structures indiscriminately until we have established our long-term objectives. Only then can we determine accurately the types of management mechanisms and legislative frameworks with which we can successfully and comfortably operate our sensitively balanced transportation system. It is very important to realize that these matters are under study, and how fast we develop various areas really depends upon traffic requirements. In the past we have impulsively leapt at short-term solutions and hoped that they would serve as long-term blessings; but much to our chagrin the one-day wonders turned into multi-year blunders. I am not here to dwell on the nightmares of the past. After all, the resiliency with which Canada has fought back from adversity with renewed vigour has made us the envy of industrialized nations. We have had outstanding achievements in many fields, not the least of which is transportation.

The question of airports has always been a sensitive though vital area of concern in Canada. Our dependence upon aviation may be greater, at least on a per capita basis, than that of any other country. There can be no doubt that, notwithstanding the prophets of doom and the exponents of the status quo, aviation planning in Canada has been remarkably responsive to our economic needs and has ensured that disparate points of view and life styles have not been entrenched due to isolation. Lines of communication and channels of commerce have remained open, due largely to the efficiency of our aviation planning, and have bound this nation together when skeptics felt that such efforts were futile, or at least unpromising—something like the national dream. One has only to look back to the days when Dorval and Malton airports were attached as being located too far from Montreal and Toronto, their respective city cores. However, today these same wailers are complaining about airport infringement on the seams of urban expansion.

It is an irony of our times that we cannot satisfy people even when presented with only two possible choices. The hue and cry over Mirabel and Pickering in our two largest cities will one day be replaced by another brand of criticism—hindsight bemoaning too little instead of too much. It would appear that many communities do not plan or foresee the aviation vacuum caused by relentless economic expansion and its concomitant transfusion of people from rural to urban communities.

Coupled with a healthy immigration figure and natural propagation—we still have some of that in Canada—Canada's transportation needs become all the more pressing. The sudden emergence of industrial or mining-oriented settlements at the source of natural mineral discoveries compels us to act quickly and decisively to accommodate manifold needs that can only be fulfilled by transportation. By the same token, we have smaller, more established communities anxiously waiting—I agree with the hon. member for Skeena that there are plenty of them—to attain levels of economic growth that can only be reached by the provision of greatly improved transportation facilities.

I hasten to add that, although myopia has characterized much community transportation planning in the past, it is no longer prevalent. In fact, one of the main factors contributing to the success of our community airports assistance program has been the initiative shown by the municipalities which have requested aid. Their enterprise has been all the more commendable because of the manner in which they have harnessed support from a broad spectrum of local interest groups. I would again refer hon. members to my example of the Niagara Falls airport commission: they are very anxious to do this for their community. This type of positive reaction adds impetus to assistance programs of this kind. Without the co-operation and enthusiasm of the public, transportation planning and development would operate in a calamitous cocoon of ineptitude which would negate all our past successes.

We are very fortunate in Canada to have been able to promote and foster economic growth in transportation networks without upsetting our traditional approach of giving private enterprise as much rein and scope for initiative as possible. Programs such as the one under discussion today are thriving, not only because of this blend in purpose between various levels of government but because of the collaboration and valuable contributions of our private sector.

Finally, I will reiterate the thrust of my remarks today as follows. Our aviation planning does not suffer from the miasma of some other areas of government concern. We would do well to devote our legislative expertise to far more serious problem which face us as a nation.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member resumes his seat would he permit a question?

Mr. Railton: Certainly.

Mr. Howard: The hon. gentleman made reference to an allocation of funds that has been increased from $1 million to $2 million. Would the hon. member mind telling me what he is referring to that was so increased, and when it was increased, because the contribution to assist the establishment of or to improve local airports and related facilities—which is what we are talking about—has remained static at $2 million for a long time, except in 1972 when it was $3 million. I am wondering if we are talking about different things.

Rural Airport Development Advisory Committee

Mr. Railton: I think the budget for 1974 contains reference to the national community airports assistance program.

Mr. Howard: Which has nothing to do with the bill under discussion.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to compliment the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) for his sincere interest in Canadian aviation. He went to great lengths to outline some of the problems in British Columbia and we who realize the vastness of that province and some of its transportation difficulties appreciate his point of view.

In my region of eastern Ontario we have made considerable strides in the field of aviation. In my own community the local municipalities co-operated in the purchase of what is today the Pembroke and area airport. Each municipality that contributed money toward the purchase of that airport has the right each year to appoint people to the Pembroke and area airport commission. I think this bears a very close relationship to what the hon. member was suggesting.

The Pembroke and area airport commission has been very effective in bringing forth views on the needs and requirements of air transportation and passenger service throughout our local region of eastern Ontario.

As I listened to the hon. member for Skeena list various communities in British Columbia, I could not help thinking that in eastern Ontario—Ottawa, of course, being the central point—we have considerable input in air services to all parts of Canada and throughout the world. We also have aviation facilities at Carp and Arnprior. There is a sod airstrip near the town of Renfrew and we have the Pembroke and area airport which, incidentally, has a daily flight from the region to the city of Toronto.

Mr. Baker: Run by an enterprising Conservative.

Mr. Hopkins: In reply to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the man who started that airline was more successful in running it than he was in running against me in the election campaign of 1968, and I say that with all humility, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, yes, and your humility stands out.

Mr. Baker: That is characteristic.

Mr. Hopkins: Pem-Air has been a very successful and useful transportation facility in our area. I was going to say that it replaced one that was not so successful. In that operation the company was operating a flight from Montreal to Ottawa, to Pembroke, Peterborough and Toronto, but the Montreal to Pembroke run proved to be a financial loss and as a result the company backed out of it. The new airline at the Pembroke and area airport is operating successfully and last year carried 10,000 passengers. Hon. members can understand that it is a very useful feeder line to other airlines operating from the city of Toronto, and at the same time it provides fast transportation service over the approximately 260 miles from that region of eastern Ontario to Toronto.

The world famous inventor Alexander Graham Bell cabled the London Times as follows:

First flight of a flying machine in Canada occurred here today when Mr. Douglas Mcurdy, native of Baddeck, Nova Scotia, flew a distance of about one-half mile at an elevation of about thirty feet above the ice of Baddeck Bay in an aeroplane of his own design named the Silver Dart.

Since that time Canadians have been interested in aviation. That cable was sent on February 23, 1909, and since then Canada has not only been a pioneer in the development of aviation; it has been a pioneer in the use of aviation. The upcoming STOL service which will operate between Montreal and Ottawa is a good illustration of our progress in both these areas. Incidentally, I am told that the STOL service will get under way early this June.

I should like to make one comment about the Silver Dart. The arena to which I take my son on Saturday mornings to play hockey, located on the Canadian forces base at Petawawa, is called the Silver Dart arena because shortly after the flight about which I spoke the Silver Dart was shipped to Petawawa. My father-in-law, who was working on the Canadian forces base at the time, transported the various parts of the Silver Dart from the railway station to the base and a flight of the airplane took place there. Anyone driving through Petawawa today will see a cairn on the right-hand side of Highway 17, just past the gate to the base, which outlines the history and activities of the Silver Dart.

So we in Renfrew county feel we have considerable relationship with the people of Nova Scotia where the first flight of the Silver Dart took place.

As I mentioned at the outset, the hon. member's bill is a good indication of his sincere interest in aviation. Unfortunately, the problems outlined in this bill have been superseded in many areas by changing attitudes. For example, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has said on a number of occasions that he sometimes felt there were only two kinds of people, those who want airports and those who do not want airports. Perhaps there is a third group, those persons who do not care one way or the other. I should like to speak more about this later.

This government has demonstrated in many areas that it recognizes the aviation needs of the country, ranging from the upgrading of international aviation facilities to the development of community and remote airports. For example, back in December, 1971, the government enunciated a new policy for national and community airports. At that time all members of this House were given a copy of a fact sheet so they could bring to the attention of interested municipalities and groups within their constituencies information on this revised program. I am happy to say, Mr. Speaker, that many members from both sides of the House have taken advantage of this program which has been increased from $1 million to $2 million annually, as mentioned by the previous speaker.

With regard to the aviation facilities we already have and those we are developing, I am sure all members agree that safety is of paramount importance and must be given top priority. As aviation traffic increases, more and more navigational systems are required, and the standards for aircraft operation and maintenance must be increased if we are to maintain the enviable aviation safety record which Canada has. For example, the government issued strict new standards for the operation of small commercial aircraft which came into effect on January 1 of this year. Last year the government embarked upon a program of well in excess of $70 million designed to upgrade air navigation facilities not only in the more densely populated regions of our country but throughout the north.

The development of new aviation facilities and the expansion of existing facilities, obviously requires public participation. Where land is required for the expansion of existing facilities or for the development of new facilities, only in a few instances have local levels of government had the foresight to take into consideration the future aviation needs of their communities. For example, in 1948 comments in the Montreal newspapers lambasted the government for locating Dorval so far from downtown Montreal. It was not too many years later that the pendulum swung the other way and we were equally lambasted in the Montreal region for locating the airport so close to the areas of population. This important point, was also brought out by the previous speaker. The airport did not expand: the people and their needs expanded.

Because we have learned this lesson, our plans call for the protection of large tracts of land on the periphery of new aviation facilities so that the land is developed in a manner acceptable for airport operations and the needs of surrounding communities. When it was obvious that Dorval could not be expanded and that new aviation facilities were required for the Montreal-centred region, everyone wanted the airport to be located in their area—north, south, east or west. On the other hand, when it became equally obvious that new aviation facilities were required for the Toronto-centred region, no one wanted the airport, no matter where it was to be located.

As there is more input into centres of larger population across the country from isolated regions, more feeder lines come into major airports. This will continue to put greater and greater emphasis on the needs of urban airports. We cannot therefore, speak about the development of regional and community airports across Canada unless in the same context we take into consideration the effect this will have on the major airports in large, urban areas.

In Calgary, the city fathers had the foresight to protect the land surrounding the airport so that when it became necessary to expand aviation facilities there, as the government is now doing, they would be compatible with surrounding communities. And this is the case in Calgary. At Vancouver, however, we have a major airport facility that has been in existence for more than 40 years and, while obvious expansion is necessary, it has raised the concern of many people. This is why, as at Pickering, we are carrying out active programs to involve the public in the decision-making process.

With regard to the public being involved in the development of aviation facilities and aviation regulations, public involvement is not new to the Ministry of Transport. When new aviation regulations are being developed, everyone from the private aircraft operator to the commercial airlines is invited to participate in the development of new aviation programs and policies.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-15, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1974, and Bill C-16, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31 March, 1975.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

• (1800)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa, March 28, 1974

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., Q.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, March 28, 1974, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

A message was delivered by Major Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

• (1810)

[English]

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-15, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31 March, 1974—Chapter 1.

Bill C-16, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1975—Chapter 2.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the House that before we rise for the six o'clock adjournment we resume in committee of the whole. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore leave the chair for the House to resume in committee of the whole.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

VETERANS LAND ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND DEADLINE FROM MARCH 31, 1974 TO MARCH 31, 1975

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-17—Mr. Boulanger in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6.14 p.m. the committee took recess.

———

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 1—Terminal dates for sale, advance, loan or grant.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, before the supper break I was pointing out that much of the good legislation that applies to the Farm Credit Corporation is the result of the excellent work that was done for veterans legislation in the area of agriculture. Prior to that, the legislation for farm credit was so bad and the Farm Loan Board had got into so much trouble that the ideas behind the Veterans Land Act were applied to new legislation for the Farm Credit Corporation. I was also pointing out that there was a lesson in the VLA and the small holding legislation that could be applied to the housing situation. There are a number of features in the legislation that would have done a great deal not only for veterans but for all Canadians. While there are some advantages for veterans, one of the major clauses provides that veterans must make Canada their full-time residence and they must be residents for a period of ten years. This of course, applies to other things as well.

One of the sad things about the legislation before us is that it probably covers the least that could be done. I know that is not what the minister intends and I am sure it is not what the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe intended. I think it is safe to say that it is not what any member of this House wants for veterans under the VLA. If the bill included three major things it would probably receive quick passage tonight.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, dates should be totally removed from the bill. As I pointed out before, I was one of those who agreed to establishing the dates. We agreed simply because very few people were taking advantage of the legislation at that time. That was for two reasons. One was that we seemed to have reached a lull because of the age of the veterans and they were re-established in some form, and also we were not aware that at retirement the veterans might be engaged in a totally different vocation.

The second reason was that as veterans changed from one job to another, sometimes coming out of the armed forces at a late date, they would want to settle somewhere and probably buy a house. We did not know that, Mr. Chairman, and therefore we made the mistake of putting in a closing date. Secondly, we did not know then that houses in Canada would be almost impossible to buy at this time. This suggests that perhaps we should raise the ceiling from $18,000 to between $25,000 and $30,000.

In this connection, I do not think we ought to be overly generous with the veteran; we should not increase his benefits under the legislation but should, instead, do three other things. I suggest that the veteran should not be required to obtain .4 of an acre. Instead, I suggest that we should accept a parcel of land which is ordinarily accepted as a municipal lot. I suggest that because, in Ontario as in other provinces, we are stopping strip development; in other words, we are not encouraging the development of smallholdings. We are stopping people going to the countryside and buying a few acres of land, and we are stopping them in two ways. First, of course, people cannot afford to buy two or three acres in the country: that is a luxury most people cannot afford.

Second, it is difficult in most municipalities, especially in Ontario, to obtain permits for sewerage and water for smallholdings. Municipalities want to draw some distinction between smallholdings and agricultural land. Municipal bylaws in Ontario make it mandatory in almost every instance for a person wanting to buy a smallholding to buy good serviced land on the edge of a municipality. In order not to be unfair to veterans but to make sure that veterans will not obtain an undue advantage from any increased amounts the government may lend them, I suggest that part I of the act should remain the same, but that under part III the contributions of the government should be increased from $10,000 to $14,000 and that the contributions of the veteran should be $1 for every $6 of government money, instead of the present $1 for every $5. This would mean the veteran's total contribution would remain at $2,600.

I know that many veterans did not know of the cut-off date. Many did not care about the cut-off date because they were not interested, and many were not in a position to concern themselves about the cut-off date because their future, at the time they contemplated such date, was unstable. It is unfortunate that this piece of legislation was introduced into the House in the way in which it was. It is unfortunate that we are not able to move amendments which would provide three basic things which all members recognize as being fundamental. I am talking, of course, of the removal of the qualifying date, the removal of the March 31 deadline, the removal of the ceiling and, lastly, removal of the provision respecting reduction in the size of property. These things we cannot do in the committee, and that is unfortunate. It is unfortunate, as I say, that the bill was introduced in its present form. Any suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to put it in a different form would have been ruled out of order.

Further, if the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, the member who brought this subject before the House, had made suggestions similar to those I have just made, he too would have been ruled out of order. If that is the way democracy works, if the rules prevent members from making the kinds of changes they want to make, it is obvious that democracy is stagnant and the system must be changed. For that reason I urge the minister when he closes this debate to indicate that he intends to refer the subject matter of this bill to committee. The veterans affairs committee is fairly representative of all parties in the House and it has always been reasonably non-political. It should determine what proposals ought to be brought forward to bring this legislation up to date and make it apply more to today's conditions.

Further, I would urge that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs take a good look at some of the provisions of this legislation and see how they relate to those which governed the old Canada loan board. I ask him to see what this veterans legislation will do in the field of housing. If veterans could apply this legislation to the buying of houses we might see less speculation in this area. Possibly in that case people would not be talking about having to pay $40,000 for a house.

It seems to me that the rules of the House will thwart members in their desire to do something further for veterans unless the minister, on behalf of the government, is prepared soon—certainly within the next few months—to refer the subject matter of this bill to committee. I know he has been deeply involved in this subject for a number of months. I know he is fully familiar with all the arguments being raised and I have reason to believe that he is sympathetic to most of them. I therefore hope that the bill will pass this evening, that we will not only give a small extension to the few veterans who were qualified and left over from 1968, but that we will open up this field so that this legislation will be available indefinitely for all veterans who can qualify under the normal conditions set out in the VLA.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I think I made all the points I wanted to make on second reading. I was interested in hearing the points raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming. He could not have put them better. He indicated that it is unfortunate this legislation was introduced in the manner in which it was. He mentioned what needs to be done if we are to remove the remaining inequities in the act. He indicated that all members of the House would support the government if it would agree to take steps of that type. By doing that we could produce a bill of which we could be proud.

I wish, without taking too much of the time of the committee, to propose an amendment. I therefore move:

That the bill be amended by adding thereto the following clause:

All matters within the meaning of "application for a sale, advance, loan or grant under part I, II or III" and of "veteran who has not a subsisting contract," as mentioned and referred to in this act and in the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General in relation thereto, are hereby referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for examination, inquiry and report.

● (2020)

This would give the committee an opportunity to investigate all factors, including the need for an increase in the loan ceiling, the need for a review of the minimum lot requirements and the October, 1968, deadline which is now hurting many veterans. They would be able to call as withnesses members of various veterans' organizations and eventually come up with a plan before the new deadline so that we can have an act of which we will be proud.

The Chairman: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I have had an opportunity to look at this amendment. I must confess, however, that I find some procedural difficulty with it. I point out that the amendment does not seem relative to the bill. It proposes to send the subject matter of parts of the bill, which are not amended, to a standing committee for examination and report. This is not the right stage for this proceeding, if indeed such a motion can be moved. It strikes me that the right time to move a motion for reference of a subject matter to committee is during consideration of the bill.

If the amendment were to be accepted, it would be part of the permanent law. That strikes me as being somewhat of an anomaly. I simply argue that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe is out of order at this time because it is not relevant to the bill. If it can be said to be in any way within the scope of the bill before us, it is certainly not relevant to what we are presently discussing.

The Chairman: Are there any further contributions to be made on the point of order that has arisen as to the admissibility of the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe? If not, the chair will proceed to make a ruling.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a procedural point. I think it should be noted that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre gave notice that he would introduce an amendment asking that the minister review the matter and report thereon to the House not later than the end of the fifteenth sitting day next after the day of the motion, with or without amendments as approved by the House. I am sure all members would agree to this amendment because it goes a little along the way that we want. My motion asks for consideration of the points to which 264 people evidently agree. This was referred to by the hon. member for Timiskaming. I am sure other members who contribute will agree. I offer that comment for Your Honour's careful and due consideration.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West on a point of order.

Mr. Rose: I do not wish to speak on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I thank the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council for the arguments they have made on the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

I would have to say that the course being suggested by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe is an unusual one in that he seeks to enshrine in legislation a reference to a standing committee of this House. To the best of my knowledge, and according to the advice of the Chair's advisers, there are no circumstances where such a clause or one similar has been successfully presented in committee.

I also draw the rule of relevancy to the attention of the hon. member, that we are proceeding, in effect, in this committee on the reference that has been made to us through second reading of this particular measure. It cannot be said that the proposal of the hon. member is really relevant to that to which the House has given its approval. It might be relevant at another stage, perhaps as a reasoned amendment on second reading or at a further stage of our proceedings, but I cannot find that it is relevant now.

I also have to make the point that this committee does not and should not have the power to refer a matter to any other committee of the House, because we have to regard ourselves and all other committees as equivalent and not possessing superior power. For these reasons I rule that the proposed amendment is out of order.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks because, as one hon. member observed, nearly every member of parliament has in his constituency veterans who served their country in a distinguished way over the years. We are therefore entitled to speak on behalf of their interest. I, like a number of other members, regret that the Governor General's recommendation is rather narrow. With the best will in the world, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe introduced an amendment a moment ago to expand the terms of reference. Your Honour, however, ruled that the amendents' thrust to broaden the Scope of Bill C-17 to better serve the needs of the veteran in today's changed world was out of order. I regret that.

I am extremely pleased that the minister is here with us tonight. The representations made on behalf of veterans by various members of parliament, I am certain will be listened to with a great deal of interest and respect by the minister who is a veteran and a man of distinguished service.

One thing we should recognize is that this bill merely seeks to extend the present legislation. That has caused a great deal of frustration for hon. members who feel that in order to meet the needs of veterans in today's changing conditions, much more than a mere extension is needed. There should be greater response on the part of the government than grudges by extending the present legislation. VLA has been extremely helpful over the years, but because we are living a generation or more removed from the original articulation in the form of legislation, VLA no longer serves increased and altered needs as well as it did when it was first passed by this House.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has drawn our attention to the fact that the legislation was perhaps drawn with the romantic myth of a continuing rural Canada and the idea of establishing veterans on farms or smallholdings where planting a few carrots was uppermost in the minds of our legislative predecessors. There were certain lot size limitations introduced which are out of date. The roughly half-acre lot size that was considered suitable in earlier years is no longer appropriate to the situation today. Many veterans cannot be or are not interested in smallholdings today, yet there continues a desperate need for shelter at a price a veteran can afford. In my riding and in other small towns around me, a suburban or rural lot can cost up to $18,000; that is a single 65 by 120-foot lot. The maximum loan under the present veterans' loan legislation is $18,000 per lot. In terms of today's needs and prices, $18,000 is insufficient in assisting veterans to acquire housing.

The maximum mortgage will scarcely buy a lot. We all know that this country has now reached the stage where but 20 per cent of the people earn sufficient money to be eligible for an NHA or a CMHC loan. This is simply because over the years CMHC, aside from helping developers with multiple housing deals, has been preoccupied primarily with providing for the housing of the middle-class or upper middle income groups rather than Canada's economically disadvantaged.

Many of our veterans are extremely needy and shelter is beyond their means. We all recall the statement made in the ill-fated task force report on housing known as the Hellyer report. The task force report observed that there were no farmers left around our large cities; there were only speculators in overalls. Most people in Canada live near or around large urban centres and cannot buy a lot for under $12,000, and most of the lots run as high as $20,000. So, as I say, the loan limitation of $18,000 must be raised to meet today's land prices.

I know, without having it pointed out to me, that my preceding remarks may not be to the point, but I think they reflect the fact that many MPs share my misgivings and frustrations with being allowed tonight to deal only with the mere extension of present legislation. We seek in addition, by way of amendments, to widen the scope of the legislation.

In addition to the suggestion that smaller parcels of land be considered by VLA, I should like to make another proposal. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has observed, perhaps the veteran who is 25 or 30 years beyond his army days might not be interested any longer in digging potatoes, planting carrots and that sort of thing, and now his family has grown up a smaller lot might suit his needs more admirably. I suggest that not only should we consider smaller sized lots, which incidentally are not so ravenous for scarce, developed land as are half-acre parcels, but a fact to be considered is that more and more people, especially older people, wish to live in apartments. Many of these apartments are not rental units but condominia which can be purchased. These condominia hold strata titles which are secured by a mortgage.

This new sort of property tenure has developed rapidly over the past five years. When I first came to Ottawa I owned one myself, and I sold it at a moderate profit when I no longer needed it. So I suggest to the minister that if there is to be any change in the thrust of VLA legislation, then in addition to smaller sized lots, provision for the older veteran to invest in a condominium apartment so that he is not constantly living in fear of the rent gouger would be an extremely sensible innovation and in keeping with today's trends.

May I make a couple of further points. Some of the veterans who need this legislation most in order to acquire homes for their families cannot take advantage of it because they are on war veterans allowance or on welfare. I submit to the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that he might look at the many veterans who are disadvantaged, not because they did not serve us well or because they are spendthrifts, but because they are sick, unemployed and on war veterans allowance. If any group needs help, it seems to me it should be those less affluent or the economically deprived veterans, those on welfare and war veterans allowance. I therefore urge the minister to look at this particular group of people and see how best he can assist them.

The final point I should like to make while I have the floor is that veterans legislation continues to be chauvinistic favouring the male veteran over his spouse; I am sorry, but I see I have offended the parliamentary secretary. I did not mean to shock him, but if I did that is the way the ball bounces. The title to property is held for the benefit of the veteran. We have all heard of Murdoch and the other cases and the Supreme Court's ruling in favour of the male.

Under our veterans legislation, a veteran, be he male or female, is solely entitled to the benefits of property and to the protection of the director, whether or not he or she has fulfilled his or her obligations to make payments over the years. A number of examples have come to me over the years as a member of parliament where veterans in whose name property exists, by courtesy of the director, have not been making the payments. On the contrary, the spouse has been working, has kept the home and family together and made the payments. The male spouse leaves the home for a variety of reasons and while away from the home sells it out from under his wife and family. The provision for joint tenancy in VLA holdings would overcome this problem.

These are examples of situations we should look into when we come to consider updating and broadening the legislation, in addition to extending the time limit, however welcome that is. I should like to thank the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for their efforts, as well as the minister, all of whom I know have fought for this extension, and to say that veterans are grateful. But the extension is only part of the picture, Mr. Chairman; there are a lot of other things we should do.

In closing, I should like to echo the statement of the hon. member for Timiskaming. As valuable as this veterans legislation is, why make it so exclusive? Why do we not have this kind of housing legislation for all Canadians who are economically disadvantaged, providing an interest rate of 3½ per cent on the first $6,000 and 7½ per cent thereafter? Our party has been calling for 6 per cent interest rates for housing for some time now. If we do have a shelter problem, and everybody knows we have, one of the best models that I can think of to assist most Canadians is this very legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to say a few words on the bill before us. I agree with the NDP members when they say that the current legislation does not render justice to the veterans.

We all know that the veterans have done much for their country although other citizens are doing the same without those advantages. But this bill should afford a few more advantages to the veterans.

A law must be just and made for everyone. I think the current law does not quite render justice to the veterans. Many members of the armed forces are still young and some day will be back in their country as many of them are still serving in Europe; they are not fighting there but they are maintaining peace. They will be considered as veterans when they come back and they will surely need housing. The law stipulates that for a veteran to be entitled to those payments or advantages, he must have half an acre of land to build a house and then he will be lent $18,000.

The interest rate is reasonable although rather high. As stated earlier by an NDP member, those interest rates should be available to all Canadians who want to build a house. We are now dealing with the veterans and I think we cannot argue about those interest rates because they are realistic and rather fair. However, the minister should amend his bill so as to increase the $18,000 because today it is almost impossible with $18,000 to buy half an acre of land in urban areas as most of them cost much more than $18,000 and no money will be left for the veteran to build his house.

Mr. Chairman, the law should be flexible enough to allow veterans to purchase existing properties in the cities providing they have a normal-size lot.

The veterans should have this right. Not all the veterans are prepared to move and settle outside urban centres so that they may receive half an acre of land on which to build a house. They have no municipal services, no sewers, and so on. They have to arrange for these services themselves.

Mr. Chairman, we note that the bill contains standards which do not quite meet the requirements of the veterans. I believe that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will introduce an amendment that we shall support, I think. I find it unfortunate that the amendment introduced a while ago by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) was rejected, because it certainly made a lot of sense.

We do not blame the Chair for deciding so. We cannot go back on that but, to my mind, the bill should be amended to do justice to the veterans and grant them benefits this one does not provide.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, does not meet the needs of the veterans. In this regard, I ask the minister to study and check again the contents of the bill; I ask him to reorganize it in such a way that we can come back to this subject. The new bill he will introduce will contain reasonable amendments designed to allow the veterans to benefit to a greater extent from the bounties of the government.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, when I had the floor during the debate on second reading I indicated that in the committee of the whole I should like to propose an amendment, and I rise now for the purpose of moving that amendment.

As just about every speaker today has said, there is a desire in all parts of the House to improve this legislation. We would all like to move amendments to reopen the right to apply for qualification certificates which was washed out on October 31, 1968, we would all like to move amendments to raise the amount of money that can be loaned under the act, and we would all like to be moving amendments to lower the minimum lot size requirements. Unfortunately, all these proposals involve the expenditure of money. Somehow or other the Governor General did not produce a recommendation wide enough to include such amendments. One of these days we must have a talk with the Governor General.

Mr. Marshall: You and I and Dan.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is right, and if the three of us could just have lunch with him we might put some ideas in his head. In any event, I feel satisfied that the amendment I wish to move is in order, and although it does not guarantee that there will be an extension of the act beyond March 31, 1975, it does guarantee that this matter will be debated again in the fall of 1974. With that kind of a guarantee I would hope the minister and his deputy, to whom I bow, the director of the Veterans Land Act administration and others as well will study this matter very carefully. As I say, if my amendment is passed it will give notice to all concerned that this issue is not dying with the passing of this bill tonight, extending the deadline as it does for one year.

My amendment, copies of which I have already passed around to hon. members and others who are interested, is in fact based on the language of a part of last session's Bill C-192 which is now chapter 29 of the statutes of 1973. Bill C-192 was a bill providing for reductions in corporate income taxation, and the Minister of Finance arranged for the inclusion in that statute of a section which makes it possible after March 31, 1974, for 60 members to sign a motion and have that motion debated in the House under certain conditions. As I say, I have drawn my amendment using, where appropriate, the precise language of the section to which I have referred, found on pages 5 and 6 of Bill C-192, or chapter 29 of the statutes of last session.

The purpose of my amendment is to make it possible any time after September 30 of this year—in other words, after six months have gone by—for 20 members to sign a motion and submit it to Mr. Speaker asking that the Minister of Veterans Affairs review the cut-off date set out in this bill. If my motion carries, the presenting of such a motion signed by 20 members would result in its having to be debated in the House within 15 sitting days after the filing of the motion. If the motion were passed, the Minister of Veterans Affairs would then be required to review the matter and report thereon to the House not later than another 15 sitting days. My amendment also provides that the debate on such a motion for review would be limited to two days and would thus come to a vote at the end of that time.

● (2050)

As you will see, Mr. Chairman—and I am mixing a few procedural comments in with the substance—my amendment does not involve the expenditure of money, neither does it go outside the ambit of Bill C-17. It is not an amendment to the statute behind Bill C-17. It calls for a device under which the March 31, 1975, date in this bill can be reviewed. Now, having given all that explanation of what my amendment does, perhaps I had better read the English copy although I have it in perfect French as well. I move:

That section 1 of Bill C-17 be amended by adding thereto, immediately after line 25 on page 1, the following subsection:

(3) Where, at any time after September 30, 1974, a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons, signed by not fewer than twenty members of the House, is filed with Mr. Speaker to the effect that the terminal date of the thirty-first day of March, 1975, as specified in this act, shall be reviewed by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the House of Commons shall, within the first fifteen days next after the motion is filed that the House is sitting, in accordance with the rules of the House, take up and consider the motion, and if the motion, with or without amendments, is approved by the House, the Minister of Veterans Affairs shall review the matter and report thereon to the House not later than the end of the fifteenth sitting day next after the day the motion, with or without amendments, is approved by the House. All questions in connection with any motion taken up and considered by the House of Commons pursuant to this subsection shall be debated without interruption and decided not later than the end of the first sitting day next after the day the motion is first so taken up and considered.

Mr. Chairman, I take responsibility for the wording although I must in my defence say that the long and convoluted phrases are copied from the language used by the Minister of Finance in the last session in Bill C-192. In case everyone does not have a copy, I have sufficient copies here and I can send them around. They are en anglais et en français.

At any rate, Mr. Chairman, that is the amendment. I hope it will be received by the Chair as being within the rules of the House. Not only have the three opposition parties already indicated their support, but I dare to hope that the Minister of Veterans Affairs who is interested in matters relating to the Veterans Land Act will indicate not only that he accepts this but that he does so with pleasure and delight. In fact, I see on his face that he does.

The Chairman: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, this motion strikes me as being of Maniwaki procedural origination. It is very cunningly drawn by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as is his habit. He has had the very good sense to draw it from a bill introduced in the House by the Minister of Finance. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said the Minister of Finance had arranged for the inclusion of this particular amendment in the bill. I would go further than that and point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Finance not only made arrangements for those words, or words similar to them, to appear in the bill but that they also appeared in the ways and means motion which was accepted by the House on June 6, 1973. They can be found as well in the first reading copy of the bill which I have here dated June 6, 1973.

I do not intend to read what the notice of ways and means motion said. It basically contained what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said it did. It was clause 16 of that motion. I think it is very important to recognize the fact that that procedure dealt with a taxation bill and was included in the notice of ways and means. In the bill itself it appeared in clause 1, subclause (3). I want to make the point that in this particular case the original idea appeared in the notice of ways and means and then was incorporated in the bill at first reading. I have spent the dinner hour doing research on this and I took it upon myself to look at Erskine May's eighteenth edition at page 508, where it reads:

(1) An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter (d) or beyond the scope of the bill (e), or if it is irrelevant to the subject matter (f) or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration (g).

Then in subsection (5) at page 509 May states:

An amendment which is equivalent to a negative of the bill, or which would reverse the principle of the bill as agreed to on the second reading, is not admissible (n).

He goes on to give the following example which I think is relevant at this time:

The scope of the Parliamentary Elections (No. 2) Bill, 1880, being restricted to the repeal of a section in a statute, an amendment which proposed the continuance and extension of that section was ruled out of order. The chairman stated that, though the committee had full power to amend, even to the extent of nullifying the provisions of a bill, they could not insert a clause reversing the principle which the bill, as read a second time, sought to affirm.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us, C-17, seeks to affirm that there shall be an extension for one year of the application of various parts of the Veterans Land Act—for one year and one year only. That point is clear, precise and exact. That is the only thing the bill seeks to do.

I would submit that the proposal which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has presented before the House in his carefully drawn amendment exceeds that principle and seeks to add something to it. It certainly adds to the principle we have examined at second reading. Further, Mr. Chairman, I would like to take you to page 510 of May's eighteenth edition where the author points out the following in item (10):

Amendments to a bill proposing that an address or a resolution of one House of Parliament should effect the repeal of the bill (f), or that the provisions of a bill should be subject to a referendum (g), have been ruled out of order as proposing changes in legislative procedure which would be contrary to constitutional practice.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has drawn his amendment from an income tax bill. The only other procedural example we have is when we dealt with the energy allocation bill last year and the House of Commons accepted a clause, which can be found in Votes and Proceedings for January 9, 1974, which provided a procedure in the case of the governor in council undertaking to do certain things. A review procedure was to be instituted as a condition to power granted to the governor in council. Observe that we were dealing here in that particular example with a bill that is of regulatory origin; that is, it sought to regulate the petroleum industry.

Now we are dealing with a bill which has a royal recommendation and seeks to extend the expenditure of money for a certain purpose for one year. I would suggest that a careful examination of the precedents we have before us today would show that an attempt to apply those precedents to Bill C-17 would be like trying to mix apples and oranges and come up with peanuts. I would argue that you cannot take an example from an income tax act or a regulatory bill and apply it to a bill with a royal recommendation.

The last point I would make is stated in May's eighteenth edition at page 511, which is that an amendment is outside the scope of the bill if it seeks to amend the provisions of the act proposed to be continued or to make permanent such act or to include in the bill a statute which has already ceased to have effect. What is important in this case is the first part. It is quite clear that what the hon. member is proposing to do by way of his amendment is to extend far beyond the scope of the bill the extensions that are available, in a way which I think goes against the main principle of the bill.

It seems to me the key point in this is that we have had two examples, one which is an income tax bill and the other which is a regulatory bill. We now have a third bill before us in respect of which the hon. member seeks to take an example from an income tax act and apply it to another type. I submit the distinctions are deep and wide and that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the bill for the reasons I have stated. I would argue that the authorities I have quoted are clear on that point and that Your Honour should declare the motion out of order.

● (2100)

Mr. Peters: May I ask the parliamentary secretary a question before he resumes his seat? I gather his argument is that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is trying to enlarge the scope of this bill and that therefore he is out of order. In light of the fact that he is the parliamentary secretary to the President of Privy Council, and because obviously no one in this House wants to disagree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is trying to do, has he any advice to offer the committee that will assist in doing just that, namely, extending the bill to satisfy the needs of the veterans in this country?

Mr. Reid: One argument which I could have used, but did not, is that there are other avenues available to hon. members. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that the use of a resolution on this topic on an opposition day caused the government to change its position, which has resulted in the bringing forward of this bill. I would also point out to him that the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs are still properly before the veterans affairs committee. I have been trying to make the argument from a procedural point of view that the hon. member's amendment violates our traditional rules and procedure. He is trying to do something which he is not permitted to do under the rules; he is trying to add something to a bill which is narrowly drawn, and he is attempting to impose conditions on what has been narrowly drawn. In my submission, Mr. Chairman, he cannot do that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, my good friend, the parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council, my almost—neighbour since he represents the first riding east of the Manitoba border, said that he spent the dinner hour doing research. He might as well have eaten!

Mr. Marshall: He spoke to the House leader. He had herring for supper.

Mr. Reid: It's good for the brain.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One of the first points he tried to make—he did not come down on it very heavily, but he tried to make it—was that when the Minister of Finance brought in a bill with a provision in it for review of a portion thereof by the House of Commons at the request of 60 members, that was included in the royal recommendation. That is quite right, because what the Minister of Finance was making possible was a procedure that could result in a change in tax—in other words, it could have a dollars and cents effect. That being the case, it had to be covered by the terms of the royal recommendation.

I point out that the procedure I am suggesting in my amendment does not involve the expenditure of money at all. In fact, it could not by itself involve such an expenditure. Therefore, there was no need for this procedure to be included in the royal recommendation.

As he went a little further in his argument, the parliamentary secretary trotted out May's eighteenth edition. I have a copy here as well.

Mr. Stackhouse: I thought you wrote it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May was produced long before I was thought of. I was interested in the parliamentary secretary's use of the example at the middle of page 509 when he read part of the paragraph which is as follows:

> The scope of the parliamentary elections (No. 2) Bill, 1880, being restricted to the repeal of a section of a statute, and amendment which proposed the continuance and extension of that section was ruled out of order.

That was the case of an amendment that tried to reverse the very thing that the bill was all about. I find it difficult to comprehend how that has any connection with this measure. At the moment, the Veterans Land Act provision that we are concerned about expires on March 31, 1974. The bill before us extends that date to March 31, 1975. By no stretch of the imagination am I trying to reverse that or to alter it in any way. My amendment does not touch that element of the bill, namely, the extension of the date to March 31, 1975. I suggest, therefore, that those portions of May at pages 508, 509 and 510 that the parliamentary secretary quoted have no relevance to this amendment.

As he reached the end of his argument, the parliamentary secretary seemed to gain confidence. He tried to argue that by my amendment I am trying to make a change in the original act. I wish I could. If I knew of any way to move such an amendment, I would do so. There would probably be three or four such amendments if we could do it. But if my amendment carries and becomes part of the law, it would not by itself produce any change in the original act; and even if the device proposed in my amendment is pursued, that would not by itself produce a change in the original act.

All the amendment does is to provide a means and a guarantee that this House of Commons, if 20 members so wish, will discuss a motion, some time after September 30, 1974, asking the Minister of Veterans Affairs to review the cut-off date that will be enacted by this bill.

My amendment does not go behind this bill at all. It does not deal with the other matters in the Veterans Land Act that need revision. I have no doubt that in the two-day debate that takes place next fall there will be reference to those other matters, but so far as the amendment is concerned it does not seek to amend the Veterans Land Act itself. It does not seek to go behind the amending bill to the main bill. It simply provides an opportunity for a two-day debate in the fall, and in that respect it is patterned after what this House did by way of a precedent last year when we provided for a debate under the Income Tax Act with respect to corporate tax reductions.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that none of the arguments advanced by the hon. member opposite touched this proposal at all. I submit that the amendment is neatly based on the precedent of the Minister of Finance, that it does not involve the expenditure of money, that it does not negate what the bill proposes, that it does not seek to go beyond the bill to amend the act, and that all it does is to make sure that there will be a two-day debate this fall on the question of the cut-off date. I believe that the amendment is in order.

The Chairman: If hon. members have completed their submissions, the Chair is prepared to make a ruling. First, I would like to thank those who took part in the discussion on the point of order. I would refer members of the committee to the explanatory note which accompanies Bill C-17, as follows:

> The purpose of this bill is to extend from March 31, 1974, to March 31, 1975, the final date for acceptance by the Director, the Veterans Land Act, of applications for sales, advances, loans and grants under parts I, II and III—

The recommendation accompanying the bill, which is to be found on page 3 of today's notice paper, reads:

> His Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons a measure to amend the Veterans Land Act to extend from March 31, 1974, to March 31, 1975, the final date for acceptance by the Director, the Veterans Land Act, of applications for sales, advances, loans and grants—

The question that the Chair must determine is whether the amendment presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is relevant to the principle that was determined on second reading, that is, whether his amendment is within the scope of the bill as determined by the House on second reading. I think, from the two quotations I have given, first from the explanatory note and secondly from the recommendation, that what we agreed to in principle was an extension of a particular section of the Veterans Land Act for one year. The amendment suggested does not extend the extension. It does provide a method of review by the minister. It does not order the minister to extend the deadline again. It does not tell him to take any specific action which would involve the expenditure of moneys, and indeed it could not, because if it did it would be clearly out of order on that particular ground.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

If the minister were to follow the direction in the amendment and decide to extend the act further, he would have to come to parliament, armed as he is today with the royal recommendation, and nobody can take that particular right away from him.

I have to find that the amendment as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is relevant. It is within the scope of what was determined by the House earlier today upon second reading. However, perhaps in the interests of parliamentary grammar I will make the following changes in the first three lines of the hon. member's amendment:

> That clause 1 of Bill C-17 be amended by adding thereto, immediately after line 25 on page 1, the following subclause—

This is simply a parliamentary nicety, using the word "clause" instead of "section." Apart from that, I find that the amendment is clearly in order.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak at great length. I do not intend to try to decipher some of the convolutions of the argument about the legality of the amendments. I would like to say a few words about the Veterans Land Act. It is a pleasure to speak on this legislation. I am thankful for the opportunity and I suppose all hon. members are thankful for it because we very nearly did not get it. This bill will give us all an opportunity to regroup our forces.

I have some doubt about the amendment that has just been accepted by the Chair in that it will cause the question of the extension of the VLA to be brought back to this House for debate if 20 members so signify their intention. I am no longer certain that this House is the best place to debate the matter. I think that our record over the last few months on this subject indicates the House is not able to express the wishes of the majority of its members.

I have yet to hear a voice raised in this House wishing the act to die on March 31, and yet it came within a few NDP votes of so doing. It seems to me a negation of democracy when the rank and file of the official opposition, of the other opposition parties, and particularly the rank and file of the government party—those who have nothing between themselves and the voters but their own records—were very much in favour of extending the act, yet someone on the government side did not want it extended.

I respect the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The impression I have formed of him is that he has the interests of veterans at heart. I believe that he left the veterans affairs committee several times to take ideas and proposals that were favourable to veterans to the cabinet, and was turned down. It is probably the least well kept secret of this House and of the government that he has had a very difficult time during the last three or four months, and only through being saved by a Conservative resolution was he able at the last minute to extend the act. I am glad this is now on record of Hansard in the words of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, who only a few minutes ago said that a resolution on an opposition day caused the government to change its mind. That was a Conservative resolution, Mr. Chairman.

This has been an unhappy affair from start to finish, where members of parliament have been placed in the position of voting against their conscience or of staying mute when they wished to speak, particularly those in the Liberal Party. I hope that whatever comes out of this can be settled in the standing committee composed of members who are interested in veterans affairs, who perhaps can present a united front to the government to show that not only must we have an extension of the act but we must have a better act.

This act was first written, I believe, back in 1919 to look after World War I veterans and to help them settle on the western plains. The amounts were geared to settlement on farms and extra sums of money were given for equipping farms. But times have changed and we are now in a position where the VLA is largely used to provide homes for veterans. This is the way it should be. There is such a small percentage of the population now living on farms, and the act has been changed to deal with veterans living in urban centres.

But some restrictions have been left in the bill. In 1965 the amount of money was increased, but land restrictions were left that make it almost impossible for a veteran to find accommodation through the VLA. Nothing in this bill is going to change that. In 1965 it was considered that $18,000 was needed to settle a veteran in a home. He needed $2,600 cash and could get a very reasonable mortgage for $15,400. That $15,400 represented 85 per cent of the value of the property that was envisaged for the veteran. That is what I think should be incorporated in the new act, Mr. Chairman; the mortgage portion should be around 85 per cent of the total cost of the holding. If we had such a ruling, then veterans could buy homes costing $40,000 or $50,000—and that is what an average home costs in certain urban centres, not excluding the one I represent.

Mr. Chairman, I find no difficulty in supporting the amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party. Really, it is stolen from the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe who proposed the same thing the other day. However, our party has had many ideas stolen in the last year and a half, as the Minister of Supply and Services said, that our role in this House is to sit and do the thinking. Indeed, somebody has to do the thinking. We can support the New Democratic Party's amendment and thank them too, because imitation is the sincerest form of flattery.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West had a good suggestion about condominiums. Many veterans are getting to the age when they are not eager to mow a half-acre lawn. Indeed, they do not have the money to buy a half acre and they will not get it under the VLA. Condominiums that sell in the $20,000 range could be an answer, but I suggest to the minister that he investigate the legal ramifications of this type of purchase. This is an area where the fine print should be scrutinized. I hope that this government, perhaps through the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, will investigate the matter and then perhaps veterans could buy condominiums. Certainly, if the amount available for mortgages is not raised, something like this may be the answer.

I should like to mention a particular group of people who have not been included in this legislation. I refer to the Korean veterans, particularly those who are still serving. The Korean war took place in the early fifties, and many of the young men who volunteered served in just as tough a war as any other. When they came home, some continued to serve. Most of them have been posted all over the country and have had no opportunity to pick up the acreage and comply with the regulations. Now they are getting near the end of their service and have had no opportunity to become certified—I wish they would change that word—as eligible for Veterans Land Act mortgages.

I am glad that we have had this opportunity to examine the bill. I hope that in the months ahead those of us who want the veterans to get a better break will be able to get together and the next time we discuss the subject it will be a bill that will cancel the October, 1968, date for applications. I see no reason why this bill should stop while there is a demand or need for this money. It should continue until the supply of veterans dries up, not until the government gets tired. I hope the October, 1968, deadline and the March, 1975, deadline will be done away with, that the amounts available will be realistic and that the act will be extended to cover condominiums and strata type homes.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, after listening to this discussion tonight I think the veterans who are members of the House of Commons will have to conclude that we are fighting a rearguard action. The bill before us provides the bare minimum of concessions from a government that is really not interested in the welfare of veterans but is more concerned with its own survival.

It is a bill, Mr. Chairman, that gives the very minimum consideration to the needs of the veterans, needs that were demonstrated and made crystal clear in the discussion that took place in this chamber on March 12. As hon. members have been saying during the course of this committee's discussion, what has been said has fallen upon deaf ears. There are none so deaf as those who will not hear, and this is the situation we are faced with tonight. I am sure my friends in the NDP now regret that they did not seize fate by the forelock when they had the opportunity on March 12. If they had supported the motion of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe then, I am sure the government would have had to swallow itself and vote for a new amendment. In that case, we would not be faced with this niggardly token presentation this evening.

I do not suppose there is much that extended discussion and debate can do to resolve the dilemma in which we find ourselves tonight. I want to take the opportunity to remind the minister of some facts; I am sure I do not have to remind him as he is a distinguished veteran, but obviously there is need to bring the message home to his colleagues. They do not seem very concerned with the fact that the veterans of Canada occupy a very special position in the concern of the government of Canada, the parliament of Canada and also in the affections of the people of Canada. The veterans of Canada make up a group which has earned special concessions. We would not be sitting here tonight, Canada would not have survived as a nation, if they had not been willing to make the supreme sacrifice in defence of their country, in defence of a way of life they thought was worthy of the ultimate sacrifice.

I make this point because this is the first time I have seen any government take a niggardly attitude to the veterans' charter. I have been a member of this House for a number of years and have seen many ministers of veterans affairs. The government is niggardly, not only in its present attitude to the extension of benefits to veterans under the Veterans Land Act but we face the same problems with veterans pensions. There is an enormous backlog of pension applications. Such applications require a year or more to process. Meanwhile, veterans are getting older and their problems are intensifying. Veterans' cases which come to my attention show that the veteran is becoming increasingly unhappy and dissatisfied with the service he is getting from the government. I know this because more individual veteran's cases are coming to my attention now than have come to my attention at any time during my service in the House of Commons. I am sure other members will bear witness to the same situation in their dealings with the problems of their constituents.

The need for extending the Veterans Land Act and all its benefits in their various manifestations has been demonstrated both in the debate today and in the earlier debate in a way that is crystal clear. There is a housing crisis in Canada. The cost of a lot, a mortgage and all the other things which are involved in putting a roof over one's head is prohibitive. It is much greater than anyone could have anticipated as recently as five years ago. It is obvious that the amendment placed before us this evening in the form of Bill C-17 will not begin to meet this problem.

I will not recite in detail what needs to be done. Obviously, the ceiling is inadequate. The size of holdings should be changed to make them compatible with the regulations of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Many veterans did not qualify for benefits because of the cut-off date in 1968; they did not benefit because of a chain of circumstances, including the inordinate rise in the cost of living in Canada which no one could anticipate. Many veterans will suffer by being cut off from their benefits, and this will happen in the declining years of their lives.

Unfortunately, because of the disastrous limitations of the bill veterans will be forced into panic buying, panic action which will confound their problems rather than ameliorate them. There is one slight ray of hope. I wish to devote a few minutes to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I know that the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe would like to present a similar motion, so there is no difficulty from the Conservative side of the House. I think the minister himself will be persuaded that in the circumstances, in light of the criticism which has been directed against him because he is responsible for administering the Department of Veterans Affairs, he ought to support the amendment. The amendment provides an option for the government in the dilemma in which it finds itself: it will give an opportunity to members of parliament, at a specified time in the future, to deal with the limitations encompassed in the actions of the government.

I trust that the minister will be able to persuade his colleagues to think along such lines, although it is obvious that he does not enjoy enthusiastic support in his endeavours on behalf of veterans. I hope he can persuade his colleagues to go this far, to at least keep the option open so that we can discuss the limitations of the government's proposals at a future time. I would go even further and say that in light of the government's attitude on this matter and many others, it is hardly likely that after the next election it will be charged with the responsibility of looking after the welfare of veterans. Making sure that veterans get their just desserts, which are being denied by this administration, would be made much easier if the government kept open the option which is provided by the amendment now before parliament.

My final point, Mr. Chairman—not to belabour the point—is that I hope the minister and his colleagues will support the amendment so that at least they can make some semblance of saving face in this situation.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Chairman, I have listened to some very worth-while suggestions. I should like to answer all the questions asked, but first may I deal with those raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He asked about the extension. My answer to him is that the extension from March 31, 1974, to March 31, 1975, applies to new establishment loan applications. The deadline for disbursing new loans is extended to March 31, 1976. As far as the extension from the March 31, 1977, deadline is concerned, the deadline relates to additional loan applications from veterans already settled or who will be settled by March 31, 1975. There seems no need to extend the deadline for veterans already established.

I wish to refer to a few other matters. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe elaborated quite freely on the disservice being afforded veterans because they are forgotten by the veterans' charter. I would not like to have that impression left in this House or in the country, because our veterans have some of the best legislation in the world.

● (2140)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I shall not take up too much time, but I want to mention a few of our achievements in the past year. The disability pension was increased last year by 24 per cent. In the past fiscal year this government gave, upon request, an additional $54 million. We were very happy to do that. The war veterans allowance was also increased in midstream. This amounted to another $17 million. I may be off by a few million dollars here or there because I am quoting from memory. Travelling allowances were also increased. To say that our veterans are forgotten and our charter does not recognize them any more is a very unreliable statement. The lodging allowance was increased for veterans who find it necessary to go from their area to be examined by doctors or specialists of one kind or another.

I work very closely with the veterans' organizations of this country. The additional $50 million that I said it would cost was also questioned very vigorously. That is a true statement. It may not be true to the exact dollar, but it will take approximately an additional $50 million to do this. And as long as I am Minister of Veterans Affairs, my door is open to any veteran in this country at any time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): It does not have to be eight o'clock or nine o'clock; it can be any hour of the day or night, in any part of this country. The veterans' organizations will tell the veterans that. We increased the number of pension commissioners by seven.

Mr. Marshall: Not according to the letters I am getting.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I think you write them yourself. I must also say that all aspects—

Mr. Dinsdale: It is your fault that—

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Didn't you have the floor before?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The minister has the floor. He has the right to express himself as does any other member who wishes to speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I want to say that as far as reviews are concerned, all aspects of our department are under constant review. We welcome the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Another question was posed this evening by a couple of members; I will not mention their constituencies. There has been a lot of talk about veterans in the armed services who were denied the privilege of becoming established under the Veterans Land Act. I want to inform this House that our department sent people to Lahr, Germany, to consult with veterans in the armed forces. Many of them took the opportunity of establishing themselves under this process. When I met them in England and France, they thanked me and my department for sending people over to give them the opportunity to become established.

These people know when they are going to build and when they are going to retire. This program has been available to them.

I see, Mr. Chairman, that the time is going by quite rapidly. We will be very glad to receive and support this motion.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) agreed to.

Clauses 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, one thing that has impressed many members in this debate and what came before it is the reluctance with which the government has accepted the principle of this bill. It brought in this legislation only after concerted pressure from the opposition. It accepted the amendment only after it was submitted by the opposition, supported by the opposition and when the government saw clearly it would be defeated if the amendment went to a vote. The government brought before the House what was really a specious point of order in an attempt to have the amendment ruled out of order. I suggest we ought to be mindful of the reluctant spirit with which the government addressed itself to this matter.

In his remarks the minister recited some of the achievements of his party, his government and his department for the veterans. He was right in what he said. The point I would make is why, then, be out of character now, if you can help the veterans? Why not, in the same spirit, be open-hearted and open-handed now with regard to these ex-servicemen who are seeking to meet their accommodation needs? One reason many have not been able to take advantage of the Veterans Land Act is simply unavailability of credit and lack of capital. They have hopes for the future, hopes of being able to borrow enough money and to acquire land on which they can build a home for their retirement years.

I wonder just what great good accrues to the people of Canada and the government of Canada by having the deadlines of 1974 and 1975. Why should we impose this limitation upon the commitment of the government and the nation to our veterans? They did not have a time limit on their service: they signed up for the duration. Why should the public not now honour the same kind of open-ended commitment?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: We have unanimously accepted the possibility of 20 members of parliament opening up this question in one year's time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six months.

Mr. Stackhouse: Yes, opening up the new deadline in six months. I hope whichever party is in power in six months—

An hon. Member: Not you.

Mr. Stackhouse: Maybe. The hon. member was wrong a few minutes ago, and he may also be wrong in the near future. One thing we do hope is that six months or a year from now there will be in office a government that is prepared to honour the public's commitment to the veterans of this country. The government has been forced into this extension and it is clear to the whole country that the legislation which this parliament is about to adopt is strictly because of the pressures put upon the government by the opposition.

● (2150)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate on third reading may I say I hope very few members of the House feel the same way as the previous speaker. It is a fact that this legislation has been handled very badly, and this because of the lack of initiative that has been taken and because the committee was not seized of the matter during the period when the committee had very important legislation before it arising out of the Woods commission report. Although this is no excuse, I think it would be unfair to members of parliament if the political discussion that has taken place is again introduced when further legislation is presented.

I am pleased that the minister, no doubt reluctantly—not because of personal reluctance but obviously because the decision had been made, minority government being what it is—has made this change to the legislation. However, I do not wish to echo the observation that the change has come about as a result of political expediency.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): What else?

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says, "What else?". That may be a good question but I think the fact is that this extension was brought about because of—

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Political expediency.

Mr. Peters: —manipulation and manoeuvering, and a lot of effort on the part of a number of hon. members. I do not consider the work done by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and a number of other members to have been motivated entirely by politics, but rather by the expediency of a situation that presented itself.

To ensure that this does not happen again and that veterans' legislation is not changed in this way from now on, I strongly urge the minister to give full consideration to how far the government can go in making the required changes to the act, and that he do it through the normal legislative process, namely, by introducing the changes, referring them to the committee and hearing representations from the various veterans' organizations. These changes should be dealt with before the legislation enters the political arena where 20 members or so discuss it in a partisan way. That has not been the practice in my experience over the years. It was not the way changes were brought about in the veterans' charter.

I hope we do not start projecting changes of this kind into the political arena. It seems to me that if this is the case, then in the end the veterans will be poorly done by. Rather, we should in full conscience, after discussion and deliberation, make such changes in the normal way. I have not consulted the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I hope that his amendment to the bill today does not have to be used, though I am sure it will be. The only way that it will not be used is if the government comes forward with an acceptable proposition which it puts before the veterans affairs committee and that proposition receives the sort of discussion it should receive in that committee.

[Mr. Stackhouse.]

There are other matters I could deal with, Mr. Speaker. Personnally, I do not want to see legislation relating to prisoners of war brought before the House in the manner of this piece of legislation. But with a minority government this can happen, and if it does I am sure the legislation will pass. However, this is not the way we have operated in this House in matters relating to veterans affairs, and I strongly hope it will not become the way in which we make changes in this field.

I hope the minister will seriously consider just how far he can go, and will weigh the merit of the various proposals put forward by hon. members during this debate. I trust he will refer these and several other subjects that he knows are important to veterans' organizations in the country to the standing committee, where they can be deliberated free from pressures that are applied in the political arena.

As a veteran, may I say I am proud of the legislation we have developed over the years. But it is never so good that it cannot be made better. I suggest that members of parliament who wish to do as much as possible on behalf of the nation to repay the veterans for the service they have given should make generous and effective provision for our veterans, and in a non-partisan way, as has been our custom. To bring this about we will have to depend on the minister bringing forth legislation that will eliminate some of the immediate problems veterans in Canada today are beginning to face.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, could I have confirmation of the business for tomorrow, since we have made such excellent progress tonight?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, we will be taking the competition bill tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And if we finish it?

Mr. Reid: If we finish it, we will have a choice between the CNR financing bill and the parks bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MANPOWER—OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROJECTS—NATURE OF CONSULTATION OF PRIORITIES—REASON FOR DISCONTINUANCE OF CONSTITUENCY ADVISORY GROUPS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the question I am raising again this evening is the original question raised on March 4 with respect to the notice given by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) to members of parliament on February 28 concerning the letter that had been circulated indicating both the nature of the selection process for Opportunities for Youth grants and the initial allocation of funds.

● (2200)

Hon. members may recall that on March 4 I raised with the minister the problem of the abandonment of the previous principle of constituency advisory groups. The minister indicated to me at that time that they were being abandoned for two reasons, which he indicated. First, he said there was some question about the time involved in terms of processing in order to approve these projects and notify the fortunate recipients, and the other question was a matter of the amount of money. In a later answer to me the minister said in the House that there was also a problem in respect of the selection of Opportunities for Youth groups, which would take place in what are known as 33 labour market areas rather than within precise constituency boundaries.

I must say at the outset that I find the minister's logic and argument fallacious and illusory. If he is talking about time to process these grants, I do not know for the life of me why there should be less time available this year than there was in any preceding year when this principle was adopted. As a matter of fact, it seems to me that the deadline of March 15, and more than a month to file before the projects would finally be approved and the individuals notified, is more than sufficient time for individual constituency advisory groups to meet. We have known for the past few days, for instance, the list of projects which have been submitted from the Egmont constituency. Tomorrow evening I plan to meet with a publicly-appointed representative group of citizens from the Egmont area who will advise me and, hopefully, the minister as to the projects they think merit funding, and some priority in respect of these projects. That does not seem to involve an inordinate amount of time and I think the minister's excuse that there is no time is really no excuse at all.

Secondly, the minister said there is the problem of distribution into the market areas. Since there is no further explanation of what this means, and since I assume that projects are being listed and sent to members item by item on a continuing basis, this is simply some kind of bureaucratic gobbledygook which has no real impact on the problem. Thirdly, when the minister suggested there is not much money being used, I am reminded of the minister's predecessor from the same riding who is reported to have said, and who will go down in history having had this attributed to him, "What's a million?" This minister is apparently prepared to say, "What's $25 million or $30 million?" It is still a great deal of money in this country and I think the government has the responsibility to be accountable to the public in this House.

There is an additional aspect to this matter. I think there is necessity for an effective accounting to the young people themselves. The young people who take the time and the trouble to submit projects have a right to know that they are selected on some other basis than the smile of lady fortune, the turn of a wheel or by some official who has the most peripheral kind of information and awareness about a constituency, with the result that decisions are not made on the basis of sound, rational judgment or comparison.

In addition to that, if that is not sufficient, we have had the ridiculous situation that in a great many areas there has been no project officer either to advise or to assist young people or, in later stages, to assist in processing or judging these projects. It is true that there is no project officer in a number of cases where there was none during the submission period of this program, but the thing that strikes me as a piece of irony is the response to my criticism about the lack of project officers—and Prince Edward Island must stand out as the classic case. The very day the minister announced the new Opportunities for Youth program, the number of project officers in Prince Edward Island, and I believe New Brunswick, ceased to exist, or at least the last ones had served their time and that was the end.

From the end of January until March 15, when the deadline closed for submissions, there were no project officers in Prince Edward Island. I think this can be verified quite easily. I do not think there were any in New Brunswick, and there was only a limited or skeleton staff operating from the regional office at Halifax. I do not have the facts and figures as to the rest of the country, but I presume the same situation pertained. And this is the situation which the minister says is rational and fair for the young people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I think the administration of OFY has gone full circle to the first year of its innovation. There is no excuse for this. It must seem to some people that this is an example of irresponsibility. I think the department is deliberately trying to torpedo this operation and make it so ineffectual and so insufficient that one would not consider funding it in successive years. I think this is a great loss to the young people who have submitted these programs over the years and who this year have submitted many worth-while proposals. I hope the minister will begin to take seriously a program which has been taken seriously by many young people in this country.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as my minister has stated in the House, members of parliament will not be put in the position of having to decide the priority of projects. The government agrees with the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) that that would be most improper. On the other hand, hon. members will be consulted in the assessment of project applications. We will also consult with the provinces and with local agencies, community groups, civic officials and persons of expertise in the fields which might be of interest to this year's OFY program. In the last analysis, however, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) is the only person who decides the approval or rejection of any project application.

The hon. member for Egmont has spoken of a reversal of policy in the decision-making process for OFY. There is no reversal of policy. In previous years, when that program was the responsibility of another department, the funds were not allocated on a constituency basis. They will not be this year either. As my minister stated in his letter to hon. members on February 28, "the allocation of funds for the Opportunities for Youth program will be made on the basis of the 33 labour market areas in Canada, which in most cases cover several constituencies."

Since the funds for OFY are not allocated on a constituency basis, it would be difficult to form constituency advisory groups. However, in the consultation process, when we ask the advice of hon. members we would hope that their views would reflect their own consultation with local agencies, community groups and civic officials. I want to reiterate that consultation will take place widely and that we depend on it for the success of the program. We appreciate the constant interest of the hon. member and the interest we hope all hon. members will show as projects are being considered.

With particular reference to Prince Edward Island, there was one project officer in Charlottetown until the end of January. Another has since been hired. In the meantime, a fully briefed secretary, experienced in the OFY program, was in charge of the office. She was able to personally assist almost all who requested her advice. In the rare cases where she was unable to help, she either contacted the regional office herself or encouraged the applicant to call Halifax collect where help and advice were given. Information on the program was sent to schools, libraries, Canada Manpower centres and student manpower centres at universities. Thus, I am able to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that prospective applicants in Prince Edward Island received no less aid than their counterparts in other provinces.

In view of the alarmist statements the hon. member has made about the program, it would seem to me that perhaps it is the hon. member himself who is trying to torpedo it.

GRAIN—FEED GRAIN—POLICY RESPECTING MARKETING

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, on March 21 I asked the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, in view of the fact of the government's intention to throw domestic western farm feed grains totally on the open market, whether the government intended to modify its policy in light of the expressed request of the majority of farm organizations that the Canadian Wheat Board remain the sole marketing agency for western feed grains. The minister answered that a great many organizations expressed views on both sides of this question. However, I am convinced that the majority of western Canadian farmers want to retain the marketing authority of the Canadian Wheat Board with perhaps the single exception of the Palliser Wheat Growers.

It is clear that if the federal government adopts an open market policy position on feed grain, it will lend itself not only to an open market but to contracting and vertical integration. It is the last step in the process which members of the Canadian Feed Manufacturing Association have been working toward since 1960 when the then minister of agriculture ordered the release of feed mills in western Canada from the control of the Canadian Wheat Board in respect of delivery quotas and therefore price.

One can expect all grain companies to become buyers and sellers of feed grains on a straight line contractual basis with different contracts covering different phases over the complete cycle of production to the consumer. The effect of this will be to bypass the so-called open market. Therefore, an open market is not the real target. Contracting and vertical integration is the real objective of the federal government's policy—the grain trade, feed manufacturers, integrators and the vested interests who understand and support those objectives. If the basis of these assumptions is correct, clearly the emerging process will have profound effects upon future production, the basis upon which production takes place and where it takes place in Canada.

As the integration process evolves, grain producers producing under contract will be integrated, livestock producers producing under a feed contract will be integrated, and livestock production will be integrated with the processor and retailer to complete the cycle. Those who in the short run function in the agricultural market economy will in the long run become part of the industrial planning system or perish.

For those farmers who are now producing grain and livestock or poultry on their own farms, it means as the industrial planning system extends its control over all sectors of production that those farmers will be forced to join the planning sector, subsidize the planning sector or lose money in production. It makes little difference how they are affected; they will become completely dominated by the planning sector or go bankrupt. In the long run they will be eliminated, for the planning sector, being dominant, will determine the allocation of resources within the system and therefore the location and nature of production.

Therefore, I urge that in the best interest of western and eastern farmers, the Canadian Wheat Board remain or become the sole marketing agency for western feed grains domestically, both intra-and interprovincially, and that the Canadian Livestock Feed Board become the sole purchasing and selling agency for feed grains domestically beyond the Canadian Wheat Board's designated area at points of transfer, Thunder Bay and Vancouver. This policy should include guaranteed minimum prices, a permanent storage program under Canadian Wheat Board jurisdiction, improved price monitoring information systems, freight rate equality in livestock and grain, and farmer consultation.

The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board had a plebiscite on rapeseed marketing and on acreage payments on two-price wheat. Why not a plebiscite for all feed grain growers to determine their wishes, or is the minister not calling one because he knows what the results will be? Is he not calling one because he knows that the Conservative Party is fully behind him on this issue?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the issue raised this evening enables me to repeat the answer already given by the minister and to add further comments: I quote

The fact is that a good number of organizations have expressed themselves on both sides of the feed grains questions, which is specifically the reason for the period of discussion we initiated with our announcement on August 3. It was significant that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture expressly avoided arriving at a conclusion on the issue because of the known division among farm organizations on the subject. It is our continued objective to ensure that there be equitable pricing and movement of feed grains across the country on a one market basis.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question refers to the so-called plebiscite or poll being conducted in Manitoba in connection with the domestic marketing of feed grains. Responsible people in the grain industry, including producers, recognize this so-called poll for what it really is, a patently obvious political ploy of little significant consequence. It makes no contribution to the solution of the difficult problems in the domestic marketing of feed grain.

The government has received a host of suggestions on the proposals put forward August 3, from farmers and farm organizations right across the country. Each of these is receiving close scrutiny in an effort to arrive at the best possible solution. Very few of the suggestions have at this stage been rejected. All alternatives are being looked at. We expect soon to complete this very thorough period of consultation and to come forward with our final proposals which we believe will be the best possible in the very difficult circumstances which apply to the domestic production and use of feed grains within Canada.

[Translation]

I thank the hon. member who dealt so efficiently and wisely with this question—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

GRAIN—RESPONSIBILITY FOR ALLOCATION OF RAILWAY CARS—DECLARATION OF CERTAIN BRANCH LINES AS INOPERATIVE BECAUSE OF SNOW CONDITIONS

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to pursue a question I put to the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board when I asked him on March 26 who was responsible for ordering grain trains into the snow-blocked areas of the prairies. On a subject with which I am familiar, I listened to the minister's long, convoluted answer and I was absolutely mystified. Then I waited until I had an opportunity to read his reply. I really think that the producers in western Canada deserve a better shake than the tricky answer given by him.

The transportation snarl-up started last fall. It was the same old story. The Canadian Wheat Board told the railways that certain areas would be short of grain and that it required all lines to be kept open all winter. The facts are that the Canadian Wheat Board has been ordering trains into the snow-blocked areas with the result that we have had some 16,000 cars tied up. The railways have been required to plow over a quarter million miles of track and we have ended up dissipating our whole transportation effort, moving snow rather than wheat and grain.

Grain accounts for over 50 per cent of the total railway traffic in western Canada. In effect, we have been hung-up on an old principle out there which holds that all parts of the prairies, all producers, all delivery points must have the same delivery opportunities every week of the year. This has resulted in the dissipation of our entire effort. We should have sent the trains into areas that were accessible, taken the grain out of them during the winter and levelled up the quotas when spring arrived.

Some ten days ago the railways took a very definite stand. They took some 20 subdivisions out of operation. Why it took them so long to do that, I can only guess. It is interesting to read the railways' statement, made yesterday in Winnipeg, as quoted in the Globe and Mail. Of course, the railways have been the favourite whipping-boy of the grain trade over the years. The new stance of the railways is as follows:

CP rail will start running four special grain trains from the prairies to Vancouver in an effort to accelerate Canada's export shipments, according to F. S. Burbidge, CP president.

● (2220)

This rail movement will be the second largest in the company's history, being exceeded only by the grain volume carried during the 1971-72 crop year.

The article ends with this significant paragraph:

Mr. Burbidge said the success of CP's plans depends not only on the weather, but also on obtaining the fullest co-operation from grain producers, elevator operators and the Wheat Board.

I wish the minister well, because I know the problems he will encounter in trying to get action from those segments of the industry. I think this is a wise decision. The railways are going to haul from selected lines. This will require trucking the grain to those lines, and I know the minister is very well acquainted with some of the problems involved. There are segments of our grain industry which would like to see the trucking experiment fail. Right now they are trucking to the interior terminals and this is costing the producer some 12½ cents per bushel just to deliver to the terminals. It costs 5.7 cents at the elevator and another 6.9 cents per bushel to haul it within a 30-mile radius.

I see nothing wrong with allowing producers to haul directly to those terminals, thus bypassing the additional 12½ cents charge. I think some incentive must be offered to producers to induce them to transport their grain to those open lines, however. I suggest to the Minister that he consider paying a 10-cent or 12-cent per bushel subsidy to encourage grain onto these main lines.

I should like to say a few words about the target figures set by the Canadian Wheat Board and the railways. The figures offered by the railway people and the Wheat Board do not agree. Today in committee Canadian Transport Commission officials appeared and they were not able to help. I suggest that the target figures set by the Canadian Wheat Board are not credible. At the end of the last crop year, when all the grain that was required to be moved had been moved, we were still some 30,000 boxcars short of the Canadian Wheat Board target. I would ask the minister to examine the targets being set by the Wheat Board.

Mr. Speaker, my final point is that the morale of the people operating the railways must be at rock bottom level now when they hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) say what a mess the system is in.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the problems raised by grain transport in western Canada have been existing for several months, as you all know, and were on the verge of causing a major crisis.

After the settlement of the national railway crisis last year, the railway companies have neglected to make available in the Prairies enough cars to relieve the congestion.

[English]

By the time the railways agreed to a realistic number of grain cars, severe winter conditions settled in on the prairies, compounding the problems. The federal government set up an emergency committee some time ago in an effort to get all segments of the industry working together in co-operation to move the maximum amount of grain. Following the work of this committee, all parts of the industry, including the railways, have now agreed to join action on several points. For now and for perhaps some weeks a number of branch rail lines which have been seriously affected by heavy snow and are all but inoperable will be closed to allow the full resources of the transportation system to move as much grain as possible on the main lines. The railways and the grain handling companies will co-operate in assembling unit trains. In addition, a special committee chaired by the Canadian Wheat Board is being struck to consider changes to give farmers at closed delivery points additional ways to get grain to lines that are accessible.

[Translation]

The government is aware of its responsibilities in this field and is firmly determined to keep on fulfilling them, but we hope to get the co-operation of the hon. member and his party, as it is in the interest of a great many Canadians. I shall read my hon. friend's statement again and if it contains acceptable suggestions, you may be sure that we will not fail to take them into consideration.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:28 p.m.

VETERANS LAND ACT

CONSIDERATION BY SENATE OF BILL EXTENDING EXPIRY DEADLINE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday members of all parties in this House gave unanimous consent wherever it was necessary and co-operated thoroughly so that Bill C-17 could be passed through all its stages. Bill C-17 is the bill that extends the Veterans Land Act which otherwise would expire, or at least certain of its provisions would expire, on March 31.

I think it is generally understood that one of the reasons for yesterday's co-operation was so that this bill could be dealt with in the other place, finally passed and given Royal Assent before March 31. I have discovered this morning, Sir, that the Senate adjourned yesterday afternoon until eight o'clock Tuesday evening.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Paproski: Abolish the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I realize, Sir, that this House has no control over the other place unless we take the suggestion of my good friend from Edmonton Centre. However, the leader of the Senate is a member of the cabinet and therefore I believe it would be the will of this House to call upon the government to suggest to the leader of the government in the other place that that House should meet today or on Monday to deal with this legislation. I realize that no veteran will lose a grant because of this delay of two or three days, but the Senate knew the Veterans Land Act was coming to it—it is on the record—and its action is an insult not only to the members of this House but to the veterans of Canada.

TABLING OF INTERIM REPORT OF TAX MEASURES REVIEW COMMITTEE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) and in accordance with my undertaking given to the House on February 19 and May 29, 1973, I wish to table the interim report of the Tax Measures Review Committee in both official languages.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA INSHORE LOBSTER FISHERY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek the consent of the House to move a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the revelation yesterday that in fact there had been a study by the government of the lobster fishery in Nova Scotia and a report presented to the Department of Fisheries about the middle of last year which has not yet seen the light of day. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House calls upon the government forthwith to table the report arising out of the study made, as a result of the commitment by the Prime Minister in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, in July, 1971, into the relationship between the deep sea and the inshore lobster fishery in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PARTICIPATION BY CANADIAN DELEGATION IN CEREMONIES COMMEMORATING THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF NORMANDY LANDINGS

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to announce that an official Canadian delegation will participate in the events in France this June commemorating the thirtieth anniversary of the Normandy landings. The ceremonies, organized by the Comité du Débarquement, have the approval and the support of the government of France.

The Canadian delegation will be headed by myself and the ambassador to France, the Hon. Léo Cadieux. It will include representatives of parliament, the armed forces, senior D-Day commanders, representatives of veterans organizations, and D-Day survivors from all the participating army units and from the Royal Canadian Navy and Royal Canadian Air Force.

Commemoration

The principal Canadian ceremony will take place on the afternoon of June 5 at the Canadian war cemetery at Bény-sur-Mer. The British and American ceremonies will be held on June 6.

I have arranged for the letters of invitation to the Canadians concerned to go out from my office today.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we in our party are pleased to hear the announcement by the minister that he and representatives of parliament will be attending the ceremonies commemorating the thirtieth anniversary of D-Day on June 5. I am sure it will be pleasing to those veterans who are members of parliament that parliament will be represented. I am pleased to note also that the ceremonies will take place at Bény-sur-Mer which is the landing place of Canadian forces on D-Day. I am sure that for those who attend the ceremonies it will bring back many memories after 30 years. We whole-heartedly agree with the announcement and look forward to participating with other members of parliament.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the announcement by the Minister of Veterans Affairs that an official Canadian delegation will participate in the events in France this June. It is hard to realize that the event being commemorated took place 30 years ago. On the particular date I was on a barge waiting to go into Bény-sur-Mer. I suppose there will be many stories told by veterans of that time, including those who drove right into Caen while it was still occupied by the enemy. For Canadians it will be a sentimental journey, a reminder of the idealism of those times and of the sacrifices that were made by men and women of this country in order to achieve greater freedom in Europe. In some ways I hope it will be a reminder to the Europeans that in many ways Canada is part of Europe and entitled to a voice in European councils. We in Canada would like to have that closer association with Europe. I think we in Canada have earned it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with the announcement of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) to organize a Canadian delegation to the thirtieth anniversary of the Normandy landing.

I think it is a way for French Canadians to be reminded of the province of Quebec motto: "Je me souviens". Thirty years ago, Quebecers went to Europe to help some countries win a military as well as an ideological victory. I wish to congratulate the minister for organizing this delegation, but specially those who, thirty years ago, took part in the landing. I associate myself with the remarks made by the minister about those who died there.

Again, I commend the minister for this action.

[Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan).]

DAIRYING—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT AND SUBSIDY PROGRAM FOR 1974-75

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the dairy situation in the world and in Canada has changed dramatically. Surpluses have melted away and prices have risen. Dairy farmers have faced rapidly rising input costs for everything from labour, to feed, to fuel. As a result it is now necessary to inject confidence into the industry.

In order to provide increasing confidence in the dairy industry and ensure adequate supplies, the government will put a program in position that will better relate producer costs and returns. To this end the Canadian Dairy Commission has been authorized to enter immediately into discussions with producers and other groups to develop, for consideration by the government, proposals that will best meet these objectives while keeping in mind the interests of all Canadians. Dairy farmers will at long last be able to enjoy that measure of security enjoyed by other areas of the economy. It is the firm aim of the government to make the dairy industry an attractive one for young farmers, and this long-term approach should do just that.

Turning now to the 1974-75 dairy year, the government proposes the following action:

The support price on butter will be raised by six cents to 77 cents per pound.

The support price for skim milk powder will be raised 12 cents per pound to 50 cents from 38 cents.

The subsidy to industrial milk shippers will be raised to $2.30 per hundred pounds of milk and to 65.71 cents per pound of butterfat to cream producers. In addition, the subsidy will be extended to include all qualifying industrial milk and cream within market share quota and not just milk within the subsidy eligibility quota.

The export levy will be increased from 10 to 15 cents per hundred pounds of milk.

This action will result in industrial milk shippers receiving a total of about $8.50 per hundred for their within market share quota production.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, as all members, we were looking forward to knowing the government's position on the dairy policy for the coming year.

I must admit that the minister's statement partly responds to the producers' requests. A few days ago we had the opportunity to discuss this urgent matter and last Friday we again requested that the government meet the initial requirements of the Dairy Farmers of Canada.

I recognize that today's statement by the minister partly meets those requirements. However, he concluded his statement by saying that the dairy producers and the processors will get about $8.50 a hundred pounds. We must admit that this amount is not high since the basic requirements to the producers were higher. Taking into account the minister's expertise in this area he is quite aware that the dairy producers' requests were minimal and while claiming at least $9 a hundred pounds of milk we were admitting that the dairy industry still made no profits but hoped that the production cost would decrease during the coming year. In committee the minister stated recently that he hoped those production costs would diminish; nothing is less sure and from this lack of assurance I must say that I am still concerned about this industry's future even though the statement of this morning leaves hope for an improved situation and is no warranty for the future of the dairy industry which had already outlined its absolutely basic requirements.

I hope that the hon. minister, when he says he wants to inject confidence into the dairy industry will be able to suggest long-term rather than short-term measures which will guarantee an absolute minimum for the survival of the Canadian dairy industry.

Our party did not hesitate to agree with the demands of the Dairy Farmers of Canada. We will wait and continue to demand at least the minimum which the dairy farmers absolutely need.

● (1120)

[English]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the most hopeful part of the minister's statement is the declared intention of the minister and the government to review dairy policy in Canada. I hope this means that they are prepared to review the basic objectives and approach to dairy policy in Canada because that is what we need.

At the time the Canadian Dairy Commission was created the dairy industry was facing depressed prices. The Canadian Dairy Commission at the beginning followed a policy of creating larger units and actually restricting production. What we need now is a policy to expand production because we are short of butter and short of cheese. We need expanded production. Perhaps the increased prices set out in this announcement, will bring this about in the short term, but in the long term we need to look at production for use as well as for profit.

One point that needs to be examined, I suggest, is the cost of quotas and the practice that has evolved that when a man wants to get into the business he has to buy his way in. We need to ensure that it is not going to be too expensive for a dairyman to get into the business or to get additional quotas. This practice should be abandoned or at least a ceiling should be established or some other means found to discourage it. It is a capital cost which has to be passed on to the consumer once it is built into the industry.

I hope that somewhere along the line we will introduce a school milk program as part of the over-all program in the dairy industry. We not only need to produce milk but we also need to ensure that everybody has access to milk, the best protein food that we produce in Canada, and also cheese. I hope the government will ensure that it is available to everybody, starting at the school level. That is the purpose of production.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the new government dairy policy had been expected for a very long time by farmers and farm workers across this country.

With the galloping inflation we now have farmers have ever-increasing costs to support. So I feel that even if it does not solve all the problems the new dairy policy will at least put a little balm over the wounds. Perhaps it might encourage farmers to stay on the farms provided however this government recognizes the principle of escalating grants on par with the increase in production and the cost of living.

The minister said producers of industrial milk will get in all $8.50 per hundredweight. We know it now costs even more to produce it, about $10.15 per hundredweight, while producers will get $8.50. So I find the profit margin is not very great. If the government wants to collect taxes from farmers it might consider allowing them to make a greater profit.

I now insist on escalation because I think that with the rapid increase in production costs it will be too late on April 1, 1975, to reassess the government dairy policy. The minister must absolutely stop introducing new policies once a year to provide for escalation with production costs as perhaps with old age security pensions. This way farmers would be less prompted to feel discouraged. I know that in the riding of Drummond in particular auctioneers are now booked up to the month of August because there are so many farmers who want to leave their farms. In concluding my remarks I would like to encourage farmers to continue their work.

RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION

FILLING OF VACANCIES IN MEMBERSHIP—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to seek the consent of the House under Standing Order 43 to move a motion to deal with the deplorable circumstances in the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, renewed evidence of which can be found in today's press. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That this House direct the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs immediately to make appointments to bring the membership of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission up to its full complement.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. It requires the unanimous consent of the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact the Sarnia to Montreal oil pipeline application is now before the National Energy Board, and in view of the fact there already exists an oil pipeline from Sarnia to Toronto with the capability of being upgraded and extended to Montreal, thereby resulting in a financial saving and the avoiding of environmental damage, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

ENERGY

GASOLINE—AMOUNT OF INCREASE IN PRICES EAST AND WEST OF OTTAWA VALLEY LINE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to clarify very briefly the basis of the statements he and his officials made yesterday indicating that consumers west of the Ottawa Valley line will pay perhaps eight to ten cents a gallon more for gasoline and those to the east may face an increase of four or five cents a gallon, whereas on Wednesday, following the conference with the provincial premiers, he indicated that the new arrangement would mean perhaps a seven cents a gallon increase in wholesale prices west of the Ottawa Valley line and that prices east of the Ottawa line should hold firm.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I did not indicate either the ten cent or five cent price increases with regard to feedstock. I think the calculation would be eight cents and three cents. Of course, there is a question outstanding as to the calculation of the gathering charge in Alberta. That is yet to be settled. However, those are the levels we anticipate, eight cents or perhaps half a cent more and three cents or perhaps half a cent more.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister speaks of three cents east of the Ottawa line. Would that be the figure for Nova Scotia and Newfoundland as well or would their increase be greater in view of the greater transportation costs from the producing provinces?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, of course, use offshore oil. The increase east of the Ottawa Valley line would be three cents. The rounded figure for oil landed up to December 31 is $6 rather than the $6.50 figure that was discussed in the past. Since the price of crude will be going up by the difference between $6 and perhaps $7.15, that will represent about three to three and a half cents at the gas pump.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister indicated in a telex to the oil industry that they will be permitted to increase their selling prices on Monday next for reasons other than the increase in the cost of crude. Have any guidelines been established with regard to this arrangement, and has the government any mechanism in place with regard to justification of any such price increase before the price increase is put into effect by the companies?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we will be seeking justification from the companies in due course for price increases of this kind. Proof will be required in relation to any price increases they make. We do not anticipate in effect scrutinizing them in advance. Any anticipated increase is estimated to be at the most about half a cent, if in fact the companies choose to take that.

GASOLINE AND HOME HEATING OIL—AMOUNT OF PRICE INCREASE GOVERNMENT WILL ALLOW

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact there are 35 gallons in a barrel of oil, which means an increase of slightly less than three cents per gallon for every $1 increase in the price of a barrel of oil, having in mind the minister's statement in answer to a question at the press conference on March 27, that the price increase for gasoline west of the Ottawa Valley would not be more than seven cents per gallon, and in view of the fact the oil industry is now talking about 10 cents per gallon west of the Ottawa Valley and five cents per gallon east of the Ottawa Valley, what price increases for gasoline in those two areas does the federal government propose to allow?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I just responded to a similar question from the Leader of the Opposition. In relation to feedstock, the price increase will be around eight cents west of the line and around three cents east of the line, depending, of course, on the calculation of the gathering cost in Alberta.

Mr. Douglas: Since the minister had already said seven cents, do I take it he is now prepared to allow the price of gasoline to rise by eight cents, giving the companies another cent per gallon? What price does he propose to fix for home heating fuel in the two areas after present feedstocks are depleted?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there are variations within the various oil products. This is an approximation of what the change should be. The actual costs with relation to a particular product will be determined after information is received from the companies. Therefore it is difficult at this point to give a precise figure for home heating oil or any other product of the oil barrel.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for one further supplementary and then the hon. member for Charlevoix to complete the first round of questioning. I will return to the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary and others who have supplementaries on this subject.

Mr. Douglas: Is the minister now saying the government is committing itself to keeping the price increases on gasoline and home heating fuel west of the Ottawa Valley down to seven or eight cents and east of the Ottawa Valley down to three cents? Also, what machinery does the minister propose to set up to enforce that decision and to monitor any increases that may take place above those figures?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that particular machinery will be in the bill which will be introduced to provide the new petroleum administration system.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—METHOD OF ALLOCATING FUNDS

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Has he divided, by riding, the funds allotted YOP projects and, if so, will this information be made public and when?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the allocation of funds for Opportunities for Youth will not be on the basis of a constituency breakdown. ENERGY

ACTION TO ENSURE DEVICES THAT WOULD INCREASE GASOLINE MILEAGE NOT BEING WITHHELD FROM MARKET

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by my leader. It is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the rise in gas prices in British Columbia by as much as 10 cents per gallon, have the minister and his department made an investigation to ensure there are no patents or devices that would increase the mileage of gasoline motors that are being withheld from production or held off the market?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, while my department is responsible for the law regarding the issuing of patents, I think such investigations really come more under the department of Science and Technology or the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North for one last supplementary on this subject and then the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

INVESTIGATION OF INCREASE IN PRICES OF MOTOR OIL AND OTHER LUBRICANTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he will look into claims of industrial users such as truckers that during the so-called price freeze on gasoline there were substantial increases by the oil companies in the prices of oil, grease and other lubricants?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable discussion on this point. Up until the first ministers conference, while we had exercised restraint with regard to the two principal products, motor fuels and home heating oil, we had not attempted to exercise restraint on all the other products that come from the petroleum barrel. As of that conference, we asked the industry both east and west to restrain their prices on all products, so it depends on whether the hon. member is referring to the period after the January 22 conference. If it is the latter, I would be glad to have details of any violation about which he may have knowledge.

AGRICULTURE

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON OPERATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the beef subsidy program. In view of the continuing confused and depressed cattle markets across Canada, and in view of the meeting just last night with the cattlemen, is the minister prepared to make a statement as to the beef subsidy after two weeks of operation?

In particular, will the minister tell us whether he is prepared to extend the deadline for A-3 and A-4 cattle to ease the very heavy deliveries now being made of these heavier cattle, resulting in still lower prices? Further, will the minister be including grades B and C in the subsidy program?

● (1140)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): All I can say at this time is that I held discussions, shortly before entering the House with people other than the Canadian Cattlemen's Association who feel they also represent beef producers. I feel I must make the statement that the present program will be continued or that a new program, if one is to be devised, will take its place. But a statement of this kind will be made later this day, Mr. Speaker.

DAIRYING—NEW SUPPORT PROGRAM—POSITION OF FLUID MILK SHIPPERS

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question relating to subsidies. Even though the minister's statement on the new milk policy for 1974-75 will be welcomed by the industrial shippers, may I ask what consideration the hon. gentleman is giving to the fluid milk shippers whose costs are also escalating and who will now be receiving only 40 cents more, in Ontario, than the industrial price?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure the hon. members knows that the fluid milk shippers come within the jurisdiction of their own provincial marketing boards and in general they are looked after pretty well. I think he should also recognize that industrial milk shippers are involved in a high quality type of production, practically the same as many fluid milk shippers, and many of their products are shipped in the same tank truck, though they are paid at different rates. A great deal of confusion exists even in that industry. The new policy we hope to establish for the future should place milk producers on a more equal basis.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that we have been sidetracked from beef to milk. Perhaps we should have tried to deal with supplementaries on the matter raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat before turning to this subject. But I will recognize the hon. member for Middlesex and then the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley. I assume he will be returning to beef.

Mr. Frank: I am well aware that provincial boards had the jurisdiction, as the minister stated, prior to his program last fall of subsidizing the consumers through the five-cent program. I am satisfied, though, that they are now controlled by this program and that individual provinces cannot raise their prices—

[Mr. Hargrave.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his supplementary. Without referring particularly to the hon. member's question, I am wondering whether an effort might not be made today by all hon. members asking questions, and all ministers replying, to limit the time taken for both questions and answers. I am sure this would be helpful.

Mr. Frank: My question is: does the program the minister introduced last year not prevent provincial boards from increasing the price?

Mr. Whelan: No, Mr. Speaker. Every agreement we have signed with the provinces has a provision in it whereby, if they can prove costs have increased by 7½ per cent to 10 per cent—each province operates under a different formula—we have an obligation. We have always met that obligation when they have presented proper facts and figures to us.

SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS—ALLEGED POOR ADVICE BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS AND LACK OF CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture. Because of the chaos created by the recently announced beef subsidy, and in view of the fact proper consultation was not held with people in the industry, is the minister prepared to deal with those members of his department who misdirected him or, failing this, is he prepared to tender his resignation from the cabinet?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): It is high time this government began to answer for its mistakes.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I could say that question was a lot of bio-mass material. Anyone who says that the trade was not consulted does not know the facts, and does not care to know the facts, either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DAIRYING—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO NEWFOUNDLAND MILK PRODUCERS BY LOWERING COST OF FEED GRAIN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. What steps is he prepared to take to assist Newfoundland producers? The price of milk in that province increased by 5 cents recently raising the price of a quart of milk to 55 cents. Is the minister prepared to assist Newfoundland producers by bringing down the cost of feed grain, thus enabling the cost of milk in Newfoundland to be reduced?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that Newfoundland producers are assisted with respect to feed grain supplies to a greater extent than any other feed grain users in Canada. The rest would be up to the province through whatever program it might wish to develop. We are also developing a program through the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to aid agriculture in Newfoundland to the extent of several million dollars so that the industry there can become more efficient.

ACTION TO ENSURE PACKING PLANTS PASS ON BEEF SUBSIDY TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, since the livestock market is still in an extremely precarious position, may I address a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising from the hon. gentleman's statement in the Standing Committee on Agriculture that some of the large packing firms were not co-operating in this program? Can the minister tell us what type of regulation and control he is considering imposing upon the packing plants to ensure that the subsidy is in fact passed on to producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I can only reassure the hon. member that our desire is to ensure that this beef premium does go back to the producers. That is where it is supposed to go, and if everyone in the industry—I mean everyone, the organizations representing the cattlemen, the packers, the Meat Packers' Council, the beef producers organizations—if they all co-operate they can make this plan work.

ALLEGED CATTLE MALNUTRITION IN SASKATCHEWAN BECAUSE OF BAD WEATHER AND FEED SHORTAGE

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that bad weather and extreme shortages of feed have left cattle starving or suffering from malnutrition, with the result that the situation has reached emergency proportions in parts of Saskatchewan? What action is the minister prepared to take in this regard?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): This has been suggested before, Mr. Speaker. I have asked the health of animals branch for a report. I am sure the hon. member knows that the first responsibility falls on the provincial authorities. As yet, I believe they have not made representations for aid. Our figures show that in fact there is not the amount of starvation and malnutrition that some people are suggesting. This situation occurs every winter to some extent. It is a very difficult job to police every person who has a cow.

REQUEST THAT VACANCIES IN MEMBERSHIP BE FILLED IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs arising from the statement by the acting chairman of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission that he is unable to carry out his responsibilities because of a lack of staff. Does the minister intend to fill the vacancies on the commission immediately and, if not, why not?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): It had been the intention of the government to make appointments to the commission when we have a better idea of the decision of parliament on the form of the new competition law. However, this matter is under consideration and it is likely the government will be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Grier: In view of the fact there have been continuous vacancies on this commission for four years, would the minister tell us why the government feels it was suitable or proper for those vacancies to continue for such a long period? How does he expect parliament or the country to give credence to his assertions that he intends to give the commission greater responsibilities when he will not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is argumentative and not a proper question.

BRUCELLOSIS—LEVEL OF COMPENSATION PAID FARMERS WHOSE HERDS DESTROYED

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. On March 6 the minister announced plans in the House to reconsider the level of compensations to be paid to farmers whose herds had to be destroyed because of brucellosis. He was going to make a submission to the government. Has that submission been made, and when does the minister plan to make an announcement?

● (1150)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the submission has been made and an announcement will be made soon.

Mr. Baker: Would the minister inform the House whether there was an element of retroactivity in respect of this matter in the submission made to his colleagues?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to be patient and wait for "soon".

ENERGY

AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES ON PRICE OF CANADIAN CRUDE OIL—AMOUNT OF ALBERTA AND SASKATCHEWAN REVENUES SUBJECT TO EQUALIZATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister in respect of the equalization aspect of the agreement reached with the provinces on Wednesday. The Prime Minister said there would be equalization payments of at least $100 million. Does this arise from some information that the provinces concerned, Alberta in particular, will be taking a certain proportion of the revenues into their general revenue and therefore this will be subject to equalization, or does it mean that if Alberta chooses to do so all this revenue can be put into capital projects and hence there would be no equalization payments? Was there at least some understanding that a certain proportion of the money Alberta gets will go into its general revenues?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. I can say it was discussed at length both at the general meeting and at the private meeting I had with the premier of Alberta. Indeed, the same question arose with the premier of Saskatchewan. The reason we gave the figure of $100 million is that it was based on an understanding we had as to what the premier of Alberta and the premier of Saskatchewan would do with their funds. I cannot, of course, speak for them with any authority, but both of them did give me enough facts that we were able to calculate this $100 million minimum. It is based, as the Leader of the Opposition suggested, on the knowledge we have of what Alberta intends to leave as a minimum in general revenues as opposed to a capital fund.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this matter. Does this mean that if the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan decided to put all their receipts into capital projects there would be no additional equalization payments arising from this agreement of last Wednesday?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, stated hypothetically, of course this is correct, but these are not the facts as they exist. If they did that, the Leader of the Opposition would be correct, but they have assured us they will not do that. I think that is the fairest and clearest way of stating it, but I could carry on the discussion if the Leader of the Opposition wishes.

Mr. Stanfield: What I am really asking is, is there an understanding that Alberta is going to put a certain proportion into general revenues, or is it simply left to Alberta to do whatever it chooses?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have Alberta's word that it will do as I state, leaving a certain—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I don't know why hon. members are laughing, Mr. Speaker. This was a gentlemen's meeting, and we do not propose to legislate any obligation on Alberta. We could, of course, if that is the course the Tories opposite want us to take.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Bell: It was the NDP that said that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Don't be nonsensical.

An hon. Member: No one here suggested that. That comment did not come from us.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the matter of oil and following the questions of the Leader of the Opposition, perhaps I could speak on a question of privilege in order to clarify a point. The answers the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources gave to the questions posed by the Leader of the Opposition have caused me to want to make a clarification, particularly when looking back at the statement I made yesterday in the House on the average price of crude. I realize this is pretty complicated and technical, but I want to make sure that the effect of it is understood.

Mr. Fairweather: The technical part is anybody's guess.

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, if the hon. member for Fundy-Royal is not interested I will give that directly to the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Go home and sulk, Pierre.

An hon. Member: Friday morning!

An hon. Member: Don't be insulted.

Mr. Trudeau: I was not insulted, I was trying to be helpful.

Mr. Fairweather: I have never seen a thinner skin in my life.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

AUDITING OF FUNDS ALLOCATED TO INDIANS FOR DEFENCE IN JAMES BAY CASE—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will he advise the House whether his department has already audited the books of the Indians of Quebec Association, and their lawyers, as is claimed by the president of that association and, if so, will the minister make any such data public immediately to clear up any possible misunderstanding that the $1 million allocated to their defence in the James Bay case has gone chiefly toward legal fees?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, civil servants of the department have been in contact with the Quebec Indians Association for months.

I understand that the assistant deputy minister wrote to the association on January 7, or thereabouts, requesting additional information but that he has had no reply. In any event, the matter is before the committee. To my mind, its members can really help clarify the matter. As for me, I have not intervened in the debate recently. This is the information I was given this morning.

ENERGY

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—REASON FOR REJECTION OF EXTENSION OF EXISTING SARNIA-TORONTO LINE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault St. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that half of the proposed Sarnia to Montreal pipeline will be built along an existing oil pipeline from Sarnia to Toronto which has enough space capacity to supply the Montreal region if extended, will the minister explain why the government rejected merely extending the Toronto pipeline, thereby resulting in a saving of time and money?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same as the one I gave the hon. gentleman in committee last night, namely, that the size of that pipeline would not be adequate to provide for additional throughput in the case of an emergency in the Montreal market. Whether or not it would be adequate for the first 250,000 barrels a day, it certainly would not be adequate to provide additional security to Montreal.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REASON THAT CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS NOT PROSECUTED FOR THEFT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General of which I have given him notice. It follows the question I asked on March 6 of this year. Is the Solicitor General now in a position to advise the House as to the reasons the RCMP did not lay charges against any of the six employees of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for borrowing government goods and taking them to their residences? Can he give the facts and the reasons charges were not laid?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP made a complete investigation of this case following which they consulted with the Crown prosecutor for the Ottawa area. After consultations the Crown prosecutor advised there was not enough evidence to support a charge and as a result they followed the advice of the Crown prosecutor and no charges were laid.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that under the British North America Act the provinces have control of the administration of the courts but cannot administer something until it is before the courts, or cannot administer something unless a charge is laid, the RCMP must have adopted as their own the reasons of the Crown prosecutor. Therefore I wonder whether we can now be informed what those reasons were? If there was insufficient evidence for the laying of charges, why were these people then subjected to dockage of salary for a certain number of days?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, when the evidence is clear the RCMP lay charges without consulting the Crown Attorney or the Crown prosecutor, but when the evidence in a case is not that clear they consult with the Crown Attorney. In this case, on the basis of the total evidence or set of facts put before him, the Crown Attorney advised that there was not enough evidence and the RCMP accepted that advice.

OLYMPIC COIN PROGRAM—ALLEGED IMPOSITION OF SALES TAX BY MANITOBA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Because of the many problems plaguing the Olympic coin program as far as production, the rise in cost of silver and other things are concerned, and keeping in mind the fact that the government has instructed some banks not to even accept coin orders, will the Prime Minister indicate what steps the government plans to take to clear up these problems of the coin program which is so vital to the success of the Olympics?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simple. The first Olympic coin issue was so successful that there are none left for sale in Canada. Our only problem lies with the packaging of the coins. Measures are taken to support the efforts of the Mint and that is the reason for the delay in the shipment of some of these cases. Further measures will be taken to prevent the same difficulties from arising during the issue of the second series.

● (1200)

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: Since the Postmaster General is answering the question, I wonder how coin sales are doing abroad because I noticed, for example, that in Japan there was an abundance of Olympic coins several months ago, but there was a delay in the first issue of coins in Canada. While I am up, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General what action the federal government is taking to prevent the NDP governments of Manitoba and British Columbia taking a rip-off on the sales of Olympic coins through the imposition of a sales tax which was not originally planned?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, I can say to the hon. member that we have completed the projected sales in Japan and the quotas set for the United States and Europe have been more than met. This means that we had no difficulty selling out the first series of coins. As to the second part of the hon. member's question, he said earlier this week that from now on he would have a thorough knowledge of the facts before asking questions on olympic matters. I suggest therefore that he follow his earlier remarks and get to the bottom of all his questions before putting them.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED ENTRY OF CRIMINALS FROM THE UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that known criminals are entering Canada through the Niagara Falls and Fort Erie ports of entry, and that the Hamilton and Burlington police run a shuttle service to the border returning known American criminals to the United States where they are able to re-enter Canada in a matter of hours, what immediate and specific action does the minister plan to take to alleviate this situation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I have had no such representations whatsoever from the Attorney General of the province of Ontario. So far as I am concerned, this allegation may have some substance but there are no facts available to me to indicate it is the case.

Second, the whole set of immigration procedures has been tightened up to the degree that, with the co-operation particularly of the Toronto police, the situation is very much in hand. Third, it has already been announced that with regard to people who have been deported and who come back into Canada there will be stiff penalties imposed by legislation that my colleague the Minister of Justice hopes to place before the House in this session.

Mr. Kempling: Can the minister explain the breakdown in border surveillance recently when a well known American criminal was admitted to Canada through Fort Erie and subsequently apprehended by the Ontario Provincial Police?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, there are 40 million visitors from foreign lands who come to this country every year. Generally speaking we applaud this because it is tremendously beneficial to the tourist industry. When there is free movement of 40 million people there is bound to be the odd one who gets through who should not, but we are doing our best to control it.

PENITENTIARIES

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE SHORTAGE OF PSYCHIATRISTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact there are only 14 full-time psychiatrists in the federal penitentiary service and in view of the fact that the Solicitor General has admitted it is very difficult to attract psychiatrists to the service, what measures is he taking to solve this critical problem?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have asked our penitentiary officials to do all they can to attract more psychiatrists. I have met with groups of psychiatrists, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What did they find out?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would recommend it to the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: However, the difficulty is that in the past many of our institutions were built in areas or small towns away from the large centres and it is difficult to attract psychiatrists to those areas. In addition, it is difficult to attract psychiatrists away from very large, lucrative practices in the private sector. We are doing all we can to get more psychiatrists. Very often we have to go abroad to get them.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO ALLOW HIGHER ROYALTY FOR OIL PRODUCED ON RESERVES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will the minister tell the House whether the proper regulation will be in place before April 1 so that oil-producing Indian bands can take advantage of the oil price increase by way of increased royalties?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker. An order in council was passed this week to that effect and starting the first of April the Indians of Alberta will receive a higher royalty for the oil that is produced on the reserves.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS BY WHEAT BOARD WITH GOVERNMENT OR RAILWAYS FOR PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Is the minister in a position to say whether the Canadian Wheat Board has entered into negotiations with the government or the railways for the purchase of hopper cars?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board has not entered into such negotiations. The government has been considering this whole matter and we are making progress in the direction of ensuring that there will be adequate facilities for the movement of grain in the future.

Mr. Towers: I wonder if the minister could tell us whether or not this will be in the form of purchasing more hopper cars?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it will in the sense that everyone has agreed for quite some time that new equipment is needed for the railways to replace cars which are deteriorating and that the kind of equipment we need is the kind that was purchased previously by the Canadian Wheat Board on behalf of the government, which are now fulfilling a very important function in the prairie region.

MANPOWER

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—METHOD OF ALLOCATING FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

If I understood correctly, the minister said a while ago that the sums allocated for the Opportunities for Youth program would be divided among 33 areas. Could the minister now tell us what basic criteria will be used to redistribute these in each constituency or is he letting each area decide arbitrarily to grant the amounts it wants to the constituencies it chooses so as to favour those constituencies which are represented by Liberal members, as is now being done?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will surely admit that a question asked in these terms is not acceptable. If the minister can reply to the first part of the question without reverting to motions, the Chair will allow him to do so. I remind hon. members that the end of the question period is approaching quickly and I hope that we shall be able to recognize rapidly some of the hon. members who wish to ask questions.

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to hon. members in the House, and I wrote to every hon. member on February 28 clearly setting forth the formula for the allocation of OFY funds to the 33 labour-management areas in Canada. There has not been in the past and there is not intended to be this year an allocation as such to each constituency because the statistical base of that procedure, applied to this program, does not seem to fit. So the selection of projects within the 33 management areas will be on the basis of merit and we will do our best to administer it in favour of hon. members.

ALLEGED SHORTENING OF OFFICE HOURS—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since the public service has been allowed to stagger its hours of work, why is it that the Manpower office seems to be contracting its hours rather than expanding them?

● (1210)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know of no area or location in which Manpower offices are in fact contracting their hours. We have had some beneficial experiments in the city of Toronto where we have been opening later and staying open later to meet the experimental project requirements at the mall—at the market. We think it has been very good but, unless the hon. member can give me specific information, I do not think the premise of his question is correct.

Mr. Korchinski: I will be very glad to give the minister specific information. The Ottawa office is open only until 4.30 p.m. and I wonder why in the world Manpower offices cannot stay open longer hours.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was hoping the hon. member would not try to convey to the minister the information he was seeking but would ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister asked for it.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TELEVISION SETS—HAZARDS CREATED BY DEFECTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that in the United States in the last 18 months 1,039 injuries and 14 deaths have been attributed to defective television sets, which has prompted the imposition of mandatory safety standards for television sets and resulted in the recall of more than 40,000 colour sets for the correction of shock and fire hazards, would the minister inform the House whether similar problems exist in Canada and, if so, what steps have been taken by his department to protect Canadians from similar tragedies?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this has been under investigation in the hazardous products branch of my department. My recollection is that the design of sets in Canada has not caused the same number of problems, but the branch is prepared to act under the Hazardous Products Act if the situation requires it.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF TOLLS AND DOCKAGE CHARGES

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the fact that shipping companies pay about $25 million in tolls and dockage fees, and that this amount, if released to the shipping companies, would enable them to make a fair settlement with the SIU now on strike, and having regard to the fact that if this strike continues wheat shipments will be greatly reduced, will the minister take under active consideration now the lifting of all tolls and dockage charges on the St. Lawrence Seaway system?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member does not know it but the Minister of Labour right now is in negotiations with the SIU. I would prefer at this stage, in the interests of the Canadian government, not to make any comment on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary followed by the hon. member for Meadow Lake and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, after which we will call orders of the day.

Mr. Morgan: I direct my question again to the Minister of Transport. My question was really aimed at the elimination of tolls, lockage and dockage fees throughout the St. Lawrence Seaway system. Will the minister take under active consideration their elimination?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the hon. gentleman knows that this is part of the law and that normally the seaway is supposed to finance itself. It has never happened in the past, but this is part of the law. It is not an easy question to answer at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ETHIOPIA—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO ALLEVIATE EFFECTS OF FAMINE

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of both personal and newspaper reports from Ethiopia that there is famine and widespread starvation there is the minister's department considering some emergency relief to the stricken areas in that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada, as I have indicated a number of times in response to questions in the House, is already engaged in a massive effort to help the situation in Ethiopia.

LAOS—REASON FOR SEEKING ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE OF INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION FOR SUPERVISION AND CONTROL

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it concerns the International Commission for Supervision and Control in Laos. Is the minister prepared to tell the House what prompted the government to announce recently its decision to seek an adjournment sine die of the commission. Is it that matters have improved so much there, is it because of frustration, or is it because the commission is no longer effective?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reason is the final one mentioned by the hon. member, namely, that the commission is not effective, and our concern that we might be asked to take on responsibilities under the new agreement that has been signed in Laos, an agreement which we do not think attracts the obligations that we have under the existing agreement.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to recognize the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra before calling orders of the day and the matter raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich might be pursued further during the next question period.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION, ADMINISTRATION AND OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-7 to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act and to repeal an act to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-7, which has been before us for a few days and which, I believe, has a great importance for Canadian consumers.

The bill before us has a bearing on many fields, of course, and its object seems to be to promote and encourage fair competition and above all to stem unfair competition. This bill will govern misleading and dishonest advertising, about which we often heard complaints. It seems that its object is to assure us and most especially the Canadian consumer that he will not to be taken in, not be abused by misleading advertising.

Mr. Speaker, considering my interest for a type of dealers, as I spent several years in the food and especially the confectionery business, I thought I would say a few words on this bill to invite the minister responsible for it to give special attention to what we call independent merchants.

We know very well that those merchants, those corner grocery store owners, are often a bit squeezed by competition from big food chain stores. To the extent that competition from major food chains is fair, they are beyond reproach.

However, we know very well that the minister was made aware of this situation through briefs from various associations concerning giveaway sales usually called "loss leaders". I think it is important to remind the responsible minister how significant it is for these various groups to be able to make representations to the committee; I would like to comment mostly on that, and I will remind the minister of a discussion I had with him on the matter of how the complaints presented by these groups are instrumental in making it possible for the independent merchants to compete against chain stores.

We are well aware of the fact that the consumer is very often impressed by the price of some product which at first may seem very low. Moreover, we know that these stores advertize "loss leaders" a lot, and that the consumer will have to pay, sooner or later, because all these stores cannot, anymore than any other, sell at a loss. The independent merchant, the "corner store grocer" has real difficulties with chain stores which can put up such competition. I think the minister is well aware of many remarks made by these groups, and I hope that when the bill is referred to the committee, their spokesmen will present grievances and will show proof of what they have been saying as we know for the past few months.

In my opinion, it is important to remind the minister to ask those agencies to give us a better understanding of the situation as well as all the pertinent data so that we, members of parliament, may submit the necessary modifications to protect the independant businessmen who have the right, as everybody, to live in today's society.

Mr. Speaker, I will therefore be brief. I would like to comment on the risk of exploiting young athletes. I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) mentioned last week that an agreement had been reached between the National Hockey League and the World Hockey Association to give reasonable compensation to those agencies and club managers who made it possible for the young people to develop their skills.

I was very pleased to hear the recent statement made by the minister, because I know he has a very special interest for those young athletes who want to make their dream come true and practice their sport in a professional way.

The government must be on the alert and prevent any exploitation of young athletes whose participation in sport activities it is our responsibility to promote as much as possible.

Recently I heard the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) talking about the extraordinary sports potential in our universities. I think it is the duty not solely of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) or of the minister responsible for amateur sport to advocate grants or legislation to encourage young people to participate in sport activities of all kinds. If at all possible, we must strive for full use of the potential of our university students.

I would also like to say now a few words on the position of the government regarding football, a question which seems to interest a great many people in Canada. The minister's opposition to the coming of an American club in Canada is questionable and is now being discussed on a national basis.

Canadian football stands up well at present as regards competition. It is perfectly normal that a new league be set up and should no one be surprised about it. We had the advantage of having the Expos in Montreal, surely not a Canadian team, but it did encourage thousands of young people to become professionals and a little more skillful in this sport.

Could the American Football League bring about the same motivation? This is a question which I cannot answer now. To what extent would American football be able to "kill" Canadian football?

Perhaps the minister did not provide us with the necessary information in this regard to enable us to come to a conclusion. I had the opportunity of discussing this with a few Montreal sport broadcasters and they seemed very surprised to see the present attitude of the minister.

If the minister wants to give us the assurance that the arrival of an American football club in Canada would "kill" Canadian football, I am prepared to consider the importance of the Canadian football survival, but not being convinced that the arrival of an American club would be prejudicial to Canadian football, I have many reservations and I surely cannot suscribe to the minister's comments as regards this matter.

I dare believe that within the next few days we will have furhter information. Perhaps the bill that will be put forward will indicate whether there is really an obvious danger as the minister assumes.

On the other hand, we have quite opposite views and I believe that amateur sport would seem to favour the advent of American football in this country.

As I said, I am quite willing to consider the risks which may result from such a team joining the Canadian Football League. However, if the coming of such a team could result in some motivation and compete with the existing teams, I think that it could serve as an incentive for the other teams. Canadian athletes who are in search of excellence would be very happy to see a team which offers—we must recognize this—a performance of very high caliber.

I shall be satisfied with these few remarks, Mr. Speaker. Personally, I am very eager to meet the committee of organisations who are willing to give evidence or submit grievances to the minister in connection with the exploitation they suffered at the hands of these independent merchants. I take this opportunity to ask the hon. minister to seek considerably more information on American football before advising us that the establishment of such a team would harm, let alone destroy, Canadian football.

I hope therefore that adequate information will be made available to allow us to make a better assessment of the bill to be presented by the government and to consider if it is dangerous or if it is of sufficient interest to the Canadian people.

I would believe that these few remarks will be taken under consideration by the minister and that when the bill is before the committee we will be provided with additional information enabling us to improve on this bill, which is very useful and desirable. However, I do think that there is room for improvement and believing that the minister will welcome the amendments brought forward, we all hope as members of parliament and as Canadians that we will be provided with an effective legislation capable of giving better protection to the Canadian consumer.

[English]

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the topic we are discussing today, involvement of the public sector of government in the area of competition, is of keen interest to me when viewed in relation to the development of the industrial base over the next several years.

I suggest that competition legislation in Canada, through the Combines Investigation Act, and in the United States through the commissions that have been established there in the last 100 years, has been responsible for the development of some of the largest conglomerates that exist in the private business world today. A corporation such as IT&T has been able to extend its tentacles in the last three decades under the pretence that legislation exists which calls for competition and the breakup of monopolies.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us today is crap; it is a coverup for collusion, for the development of oligopolies, of oligop—I will have to get the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to give me the proper word. The development of inter-related directorships in multinational corporations within our economy will continue and false advertising will continue under a government that will not establish a Combines Investigation Commission with enough employees to operate it in order to break up these monopolies.

An article in the "Report on Business" section of the Globe and Mail of March 28 deals with developments in agribusiness which affect the economy of western Canada. It states "Cargill Grain purchases feed farm operations". Note, Mr. Speaker, not just elevators, and not just some aspect of the industry in which Cargill has been involved since 1928; it extends its tentacles, as a multinational corporation, into all aspects of the farm and agriculture business. The article reads:

> More than 280 prairie grain elevators, a retail feed business and a hog breeding farm have changed ownership in a multimillion dollar deal between Canadian subsidiaries of two large U.S. agricultural companies.
> Cargill Grain Co. Ltd., of Winnipeg is purchasing the two principal operating subsidiaries of National Agri-Services Ltd., also of Winnipeg. Cargill is a unit of Cargill Inc. of Minneapolis and National Agri-Services is owned by Peavey Corp. of Minneapolis.

What we have, Mr. Speaker, is consolidation of agribusiness and the expressed purpose of that consolidation is to expand that agribusiness in the farming industry. In my view that would be to the detriment of every individual producer in the prairie region.

No government, Liberal or Conservative, has ever legislated or taken effective action to ensure that expansion of a corporate entity in our economy can be curtailed or even properly examined, to ensure that competition will exist and that the western producers and western economy will be well served. So Cargill Grain will expand and take over National. I recall that when farm-owned wheat pools bought out Federal Grain over a year ago, both Conservatives and Liberals in western Canada raised a hue and cry. I can be just as critical at times of the pool operation, but now we see the private speculators of the Grain Exchange in Winnipeg attempting to consolidate their position in order to be able to expand into the ordinary aspects of farming. We do not hear a word about that from the members of the Conservative or of the Liberal Party. Mr. Speaker, this kind of legislation will have no effect on the conglomerates, the monopolies and the large corporations which are operating in Canada today. The expansion of agribusiness will become an ever-increasing and serious problem.

It is an amazing thing about our modern economy that certain parts of it have become a planning system; that the multinational corporations and the very large corporations plan their operations on an internal basis from the time they get the raw resources out of the ground, through the processing and until they are sold on the market as finished goods. This takes in the development of General Motors and the automobile operations in this country as well as those in the United States; it takes in the steel conglomerates, it takes in rubber and tires and the operations in almost every major sector of the economy. There is no essential public control or demand that there be competition in the area of economic activity in which these corporations are engaged.

There is another sector of the economy in which some of my colleagues to my right and some members of my own party are involved. They run a small independent type of business which may have assets of a quarter million or a million or two million dollars. These businesses have to account to Statistics Canada and fill out the forms. Any action initiated by competition legislation will be directed toward them. They are operating in a market system of supply and demand where the rate of return is rather low and the profit marginal. In a modern economy such as ours they are constantly under pressure. One company may compete with another company with assets of between $1 million and $2 million, and the competition may continue until one company has its throat cut. Before they reach that point, they might make a deal and set prices. Companies like this are also under pressure from the public sector, in that they must observe certain minimum wage and salary levels. Such regulations may make their operations marginal.

Further, such companies can be under pressure because multinational conglomerates are always looking for new companies in which to invest money. They purchase small companies and absorb them. Thus, small companies often face frustration. They are hemmed in by regulations made by the public sector and frustrated in the market place, as they must often compete with multinational companies which plan their operation from the stage at which raw material is taken out of the ground until it is marketed in finished form. Further, these multinational conglomerates operate in the economy without being subject to public control, in that they do not compete. I submit that those who are concerned about the economy of North America or about the international economy should not waste their time, when dealing with multinational companies, in uttering pious hopes that the multinationals will compete. The suggestion, often put forward in this latter half of the twentieth century that any country by itself can force multinational conglomerates to compete, is preposterous. For over 150 years it has been proven that they do not compete that, indeed, they fix prices.

What alternative is open to us? I say that the democratically elected representatives of the Canadian people must make sure that there is a measure of public control over the activities of such corporations. I include the steel conglomerate in my remarks. We can no longer live in the dream world in which people believe that multinational conglomerates compete. The public sector, the representatives of the people of Canada, must have a voice in the operations of such conglomerates. It must have the right to involve itself in pricing policy; it must have the right to hold such companies publicly accountable with regard to taxes they pay. Operations which use our resources, many of them non-renewable, must come under public scrutiny.

We assume, as was assumed in the latter part of the nineteenth century and the earlier part of the twentieth century, that we can break up conglomerates and force them to compete. That thinking has been dominant in the philosophy of political parties in this country, including my own. The liberal theory has always been that you can induce competition if you break up the conglomerates. I suggest that such theories are outdated. They do not work, either in Canada or in the United States, as is evident from events. Therefore, any attempt to break up the conglomerates will be futile.

I suggested just now that these large corporations should be accountable to the public. It is our responsibility, as legislators, to make sure that smaller companies can operate and survive in the market. We must try to make them as flexible as possible so that they can survive and use what is called initiative in their operations. As for the large conglomerates, we cannot expect to break them up.

Let us see the extent to which directorships of Canadian corporations interlock. To that end, I want to direct the attention of the House to the board of directors of Canadian Pacific Limited. Directors of Canadian Pacific Limited also serve on the boards of many other companies. Consider, for instance, the directorships held by Mr. Sinclair, the President of Canadian Pacific Limited. He sits on the boards of Canadian Pacific Investments, Canadian Pacific Securities, Canadian Pacific Air Lines, Midland Simcoe Elevator Company, Cominco Limited, Pacific Logging, Marathon Realty, Canadian Pacific Steamships, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, Great Lakes Paper Company, Soo Line Railroad, Canadian Pacific (Bermuda), MacMillan Bloedell, Sun Life Assurance Company, Cascade Pipe Lines and Pan Canadian Petroleum.

The foregoing companies all belong to the CP family. In addition, Mr. Sinclair sits on the boards of Royal Bank of Canada, Union Carbide of Canada, the firm which is telling farmers in my area that they must pay more for anti-freeze because there is a shortage but which will not tell them how much anti-freeze it has on hand; on the boards of Hockey Canada and of Canadian Marconi, which is connected to the Power Corporation, which, in turn, has connections with the Liberal party and with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), who is present in this chamber. In addition, he sits on the boards of Canadian Investment Fund, Canadian Fund, Sun Alliance, London Insurance Group, the group which is supposed to be competing with Sun Life Assurance Company previously mentioned, Chase Manhattan Corporation, which is supposed to be in competition with Royal Bank of Canada, on the board of which Mr. Sinclair also sits, and, to show that he is interested in some public service, he also sits on the board of Royal Victoria Hospital.

What about other Canadian Pacific directors? Consider the case of Mr. William Arbuckle. He, too, sits on the board of Canadian Pacific Limited. As well, he sits on the boards of Canadian Pacific Investments and of Rio Algom Mines. Those companies are in the Canadian Pacific family. Turning our attention to companies outside the family, Mr. Arbuckle sits on the board of Investment Secretariat Limited. Actually, he is the president of the company. In addition, he sits on the boards of Owen, Owen Canada, of G.W. Robinson Company Limited, and Standard Life Assurance. He sits, with Mr. Sinclair, on the board of Sun Life, which, by these interlocking directorships, is connected to the Royal Bank. In addition, Mr. Arbuckle is on the boards of Dominion Equity Investments, Standard Life Assurance, Tioxide of Canada, Great Plains Development Company of Canada, Asbestos Corporation, and Dominion Dairies. He is involved with the food industry. I say this for the benefit of hon. members who, in common with the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier), are concerned about rising food prices. Mr. Arbuckle also sits on the boards of Burma Mines and Yukon Consolidated Gold Corporation, which may interest those who wonder why the price of gold has been rising on the international market.

Canadian Pacific, as an investment corporation, has connections throughout the entire economy in terms of their operations. I submit that neither the Combines Investigation Act nor all the legislation that has been produced to this time, have ever once tackled the question of the operations of the large multinational corporations within the economy with a view to doing a substantial job of trying to create real competition. Their pricing mechanisms, involvement in raw resource materials and getting funds for public investment goes on and on.

If Canadian Pacific cannot use the Royal Bank of Canada through Mr. Sinclair, they can go to Mr. Burbidge, a director of the Bank of Montreal. If they cannot get the money at the Royal Bank, they can go to the Bank of Montreal. If they cannot get it there, they can go to one of the insurance companies in which they have directors. If people are worried about the price of paper, they can go to another director of Canadian Pacific who is involved in the Great Lakes Paper Company and several other paper companies.

In terms of investment to take over more companies, they are involved in Royal Trust through Mr. Campbell who is a director of that company. He sits on the board of another railway, which is rather interesting.

If Canadian Pacific is interested in buying more and more raw resources to control the market, they have a Mr. William Bennett who is a director of such corporations as Iron Ore Co. of Canada, of which he is president, BNA Holdings Ltd., Quebec North Shore & Labrador Railway Co., Gulf Power Co., Canadian Reynolds Metals, Eldorado Nuclear Ltd., Philips Electronic Industries, Labrador Mining & Exploration, Eldorado Aviation, Canron Ltd. and Gleneagles Investments. That gives him connections in the business world.

I could go on and on about other members of the board who sit on large corporations, such as National American Wholesale Grocers Association and IGA Canada Limited. In that way, they are involved in the food industry.

There is one who will be of great interest to my friends to my right. He is not only a director of Canadian Pacific. I wish to name him because I do not want my friends in the Liberal party to think I am picking on them. This is the Hon. Duff Roblin, a former Progressive Conservative premier of Manitoba. He serves on the board of Canadian Pacific. For his service to the province of Manitoba, he was rewarded by Canadian Pacific. He is president of Canadian Pacific Investments. In order to make investments in Canada, he sits on the board of directors of the Montreal Trust Company so that funds and investment are readily available. He also sits on the boards of Canadian Pacific Securities Limited, CanPac Leasing Limited, CanPac Minerals Limited, Fording Coal Limited, Pacific Logging Company Limited, Cominco Limited, Pacific Coast Terminals Limited and Project 200 Properties Limited.

My point in referring to the operations in Canada of the Canadian Pacific conglomerate is to try to get across my central point to the government, other opposition parties and maybe some of my own colleagues. In spite of all the talk about breaking up conglomerates and causing competition, it is utterly preposterous to suggest in any way, shape or form that they will be broken up. Historically, it has been proven that quite the contrary is taking place. Power is becoming more and more concentrated in the hands of a very few select corporations which are spread throughout the Canadian economy. What we need from these corporations is public accountability and public control.

It is preposterous to talk about breaking up these kinds of operations. There is not a cabinet minister, including the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), or a potential minister in the Tory shadow cabinet, if there is one, who will move legislation in this House in my lifetime to bring about real competition within the business sector of our economy.

It is an outmoded theory to say that legislation can be brought in that will break up the conglomerates. There is only one direction in which we can move. That is to accept the reality of their existence and recognize their power and influence in our economy. Using that as a basis of action, we must move toward some public accountability on the part of these corporations, and indeed some public control, so there is not private planning by IT&T and other corporations such as Canadian Pacific, Power Corporation of Canada and others which is in their own self interest. The Canadian people, through their elected representatives, should have some say in the overall planning of the economy by having public control. That is the only way to handle the operations of conglomerates in this country, not by the outdated Combines Investigation Act. That is utterly preposterous.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to welcome such a large and distinguished audience to this public meeting this afternoon, including the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) who I am told will be making a great number of supplementary answers to questions which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his other colleagues found it difficult to deal with this morning. I understand that the minister in that good humoured way of his and with the knowledge which reaches out and encompasses so many things, is prepared to answer any questions at all which may be addressed to him.

Just before one o'clock we had the pleasure of listening to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) making one of those typical enthusiastic tub-thumping socialist speeches which he does very well with great resourcefulness and ingenuity. It was, of course, a replay of what we have been hearing from the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) with nauseating frequency for the last year or so, but at least it showed that his research department is able to produce the same names and the same figures.

To some extent I agree with the hon. member. There is a problem created in this country and in other countries by the in-breeding, the economic intermingling, of people in a certain walk of life, in a certain economic position, who have been elected to the boards of companies as the hon. member noted. I can say I do not regard this development with any pleasure, but while I agree with the hon. member to a limited extent, I would dislike even more what we would see under a socialist government—a particularly large complement of over-academic, over-educated, under-knowledgeable academics of a pink tinge in the form of bureaucrats who would proliferate on the hundreds and hundreds of boards which a socialist government would create to run the affairs of this country to such an extent that in due course you and I, Mr. Speaker, would require a private briefing before we would be allowed to go to the bathroom.

Mr. Baker: An order of the Privy Council.

Mr. Baldwin: We would need an order in council before we could make a motion in chambers.

The reasonably good case the hon. member for Assiniboia made is diminished by one significant fact. I should like to take hon. members back to the proceedings of the House last session. Hon. members then displayed the same intellectual and political dishonesty and fraud they have practised in this House since the last election. They talk to the left and they vote with the government. They say one thing and do another. At that time we were dealing indirectly with the question of combines. The government had seen fit, when it was confronted with a situation it was unable to handle, to act in its normal way. As in any situation in which this government gets involved, it panicked as a result of that confrontation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) panicked, as did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), and with incorrect statistics and wrong information they rushed into parliament and ultimately obtained the passage of a bill referred to as the allocations bill. Included in that bill were several clauses which provided that the severity of the combines legislation would be modified. In certain eventualities, the restrictive trade practices regulations would be inapplicable, and under a certain set of circumstances, they would be diminished entirely at the whim of the government.

I felt, as did the leader of this party and my colleagues, with that regard for the rights of the ordinary individual which has always prompted us in the positions we take inside and outside this House, that this was wrong; it was unjustified and unwarranted. There is no shadow of a doubt that it was the multinational corporations, and the evidence taken before the committee discloses this fact, who insisted on the energy allocations bill. Many of the provisions in it were brought forward at the assistance of the technical advisory committee which was dominated by people from multinational corporations. They were the ones who wanted this diminishing effect and, in some cases, the almost complete abolition, of parts of the combines legislation.

We did not believe this was necessary, and we proposed an amendment at the report stage which gave hon. members of this House, and I stress the word "honourable", the opportunity to agree with us that it was improper that large corporations should be entitled to evade the provisions of combines legislation. As might be expected, the government, which is very friendly with those corporations, went along with the corporations and opposed the amendment. I had thought that my friends to the left, the members of the NDP, whose principles I knew were dragging on the ground at that time, would at least recover sufficiently to vote with us and stop this monstrosity being perpetrated on the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: You are not half as sweet as your honey.

Mr. Baldwin: What did happen? Those hon. members pocketed their principles. They crept, they slid and they slithered into a position of reliance on our friends opposite in the government and voted against us. Now, they have the unmitigated gall and temerity to come into this House and, through their spokesmen, particularly the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight), who was speaking before lunch, and say they do not like these multinational corporations or the prospect that exists for this form of intellectual economic inbreeding. They say it is wrong and they say unctuously they are going to oppose this, even after giving us these figures and the names. I suggest that is fraud and hypocrisy. I would ask to what depths has this great national party fallen? I know it is no longer a new party, but ancient and probably one of the oldest in the country now. Perhaps we can forgive their sins of indiscretion on the grounds of the age of the party itself. However, I am certainly shocked and find it difficult to reconcile the stand of the New Democratic Party of that time with the speech the hon. member for Assiniboia made this morning.

I see my hon. friend, the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) looking at me. I do not know whether it is with admiration or what, but I do find it difficult to make that reconciliation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would permit me to satisfy his curiosity. I am looking at him with compassion as he must not be feeling well.

Mr. Baldwin: I thank the hon. member.

An hon. Member: You should eat some of that honey you sent around.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that I at least got compassion, because it was hon. members on the government side who got the support from the NDP.

Having disposed of the NDP, particularly the hon. member for Assiniboia, I should like to turn to another aspect of this bill. In the debate that has raged on about this bill and its predecessors in parliament, in the press, by labour and in the country generally, many people have professed to see different things in it. To me, it is just one more episode in the long story of the growth of authoritarianism, the demand by the government to be able to interfere further in the lives and activities of all people, and that is not just shown in the bill itself but in what it represents and the trend it indicates.

This drab mediocrity of officialdom, confronted with problems beyond its limited comprehension, has posed one answer, and that is to give it more power so it can fix things up. The minister and his officials have stumbled and blundered away over the last year or so; they have advanced and retreated, then finally brought in bills and withdrawn them. Now they have come up with this scissors-and-paste job in this new proposal as a formula for what? To truly and effectively help the inflation-ridden consumer, is that its design? I suggest there is only a miniscule of effort in this regard. To exercise any real constraints over those in industry who are large enough and unscrupulous enough to victimize the public, is that the intent? Well, I suggest there is a little bit of that here and a little bit there, but not very much in total.

Does this bill do anything about the growing capacity of big labour to squeeze the people of this country, sometimes just in the interests of those professional labour politicians whose concern is in staying on top of the pile? I suggest nothing of that sort appears in the bill at all.

The history of legislation dealing with combines and restrictive trade practices here in Canada, in the United States, in England and in Europe has all been of a pattern; a checkered story of failure to find a legislative form which can contend with the natural forces of the market place, where the vaguely defined public interest often gets lost in the millions of individual transactions involving goods and services.

The chronology has been to legislate, litigate and prosecute, followed by a long list of court failures. Anyone who is at all interested in reading the court records or the law reports will find a long series of judgments on the appeal side of the court level which shows that I am correct, and that the failures of litigation under the combines legislation have been considerable. After these failures, it has been the practice to legislate again, with ringing statements that the right formulae have now been found. Then we see more litigation and again the admission of failure. This process has gone on like that ad nauseam. If this minister and his supporters really believe that this bill will be any different, then I say to his face that the government is either negligent, stupid or deceitful, or a combination of all three.

Some of my colleagues have dealt with this aspect of the matter in more detail, but I leave it by telling you just as forcefully as I can that when this bill is passed, as I assume it will be passed, we will be opening up a Pandora's box of litigation in the courts and before the commission; a lawyer's paradise in which the arguments will run the gamut from lack of jurisdiction based on a constitutional position to technicalities as to the meaning of the fine print in this bill. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we should bring everything out into the light. We should make the corporations, the companies and the unions aware that this government is concerned and will take action; but this bill is just another example of government shirking. It is much easier to pass off consumer complaints to one commission or another than to take an active role in finding solutions to these complaints.

Many years ago, before I came to this place, I was involved closely in a study of the workings of the combines legislation during the course of my private practice, always on behalf of the consumers. Since coming here, I have been concerned with it in this House, from 1959 to 1960 when the then government attempted to deal with the question of resale price maintenance and other amendments, and I have watched the attempt from time to time to bring in new laws. I kept track of the jurisprudence and read some of the statutes, so that I am not unfamiliar with the combines law and the restrictive trade practices regulations. I say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the minister, that I see nothing in the present bill which suggests to me that it will be any different or will offer any real relief or assistance to the people of Canada, particularly the consumer who is so monstrously overwhelmed by existing conditions. The fact is that events are in the saddle and ride mankind. This bill does not go to the root of the trouble; it does not even scratch the surface.

I shall not go into any detail in connection with the few clauses which deal specifically with aid to the consumer. Others have dealt with them effectively. They are apparent, they are obvious and have some value. I suggest they will have a minor effect here and there, but on balance in my judgment not a great deal. The answers to the real complaints of consumers in these times of skyrocketing prices ultimately will be lost in the legislative jungle of this bill. Canadian families will still suffer from such practices as double-ticketing and the like, and the stores will only become more adept at changing stickers. This bill is not the answer.

When we, as members, come to make the assessment of whether or not we can conscientiously in our opinion support this bill—and speaking for myself I say I have not come to that decision—we will have to put on the scales the defects which are inherent in the legislation, in particular, the wide extension of powers which have been thrust into the hands of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. Man's seeking, probing mind creates many wonders, but also many problems and dangers, such as the Frankenstein of atomic and hydrogen nuclear weapons which might well have destroyed us and still pose threats, or the pollution-producing industrial activity of the large overcrowded centres of population. To me, it is the institutions of government which are most likely to do the worst damage. History shows that invariably the means we establish to control and order our affairs end up by going out of control and, too often, a society commits suicide like a skier starting an avalanche and riding it down to destruction. So it is with the government. It grows bigger and more powerful, more ominous and inherently more dangerous in its capacity to crush with its own weight.

Look at the power that it is proposed be vested in this commission. I shall not go into all the details but in effect it gives almost complete authority to the commission to order supplies for anyone who wants to get into a business and is prevented from doing so because he cannot obtain supplies. I suggest this opens up a very wide avenue of arbitrary authority. It gives the commission authority to cancel any arrangements which limit a dealer to selling one line of goods exclusively and so on. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) have gone into this in some detail. They have illustrated the extent of the authority given to the commission. The powers given are not really powers which a board of this kind with its experience, has the capacity or the knowledge to handle. It is a board which we learned as recently as this morning consists of only one acting chairman and no members experienced in these matters. I think it is outrageous to ask the House to pass legislation of this kind without giving the House some indication of the type of people likely to be appointed, having in mind the vast authority they will be allowed to exercise in interfering so intimately in every aspect of the lives of the Canadian people.

Even more important, these powers are to be vested in a board or a commission which is not really subject to parliamentary control. It is a board which would be quite definitely susceptible to government pressure. The bill will be passed and the minister and the government will then have to cast about to find personnel to fill the board. I do not suggest there is anything corrupt or improper about this, but the people who will be appointed to this board invariably will be subject to political persuasion by this government. I think that is completely wrong, and I shall make a proposal about it before I finish my remarks. It will be a board which, probably to a great extent, will operate in the darkness and secrecy of the closed rooms of the Ottawa bureaucracy. I know there are other provisions, but I wonder how extensively they will be used because, despite any suggestion that it will function on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis, there is nothing to compel it to act in that way.

Yet the board is authorized to make the most searching inquisitions, and to deal summarily with the affairs of people. My colleagues have demonstrated this in many good speeches. It needs no repetition. The contents of the bill speak eloquently on this score. So, I do not think there is any honest trade-off to persuade us to give up to a tribunal of this kind the arbitrary and impressive authority detailed in this bill in exchange for the very minimal proposals alleged to help the consumer. I am not prepared to collaborate in this unevenly balanced proposal by voting for this bill. I think this is a decision we have to make as we are frequently called upon to do. It seems to be the practice of this government to bring before us an omnibus bill, legislation containing a variety of proposals, some of which contain a few small measures of relief which are of some value. However, balanced against this always is the granting of excessive and arbitrary power.

We are compelled from day to day in this House to make this choice in respect on an omnibus bill of this kind. We must make a decision whether we will see that the people of Canada obtain the minimum benefits contained in the legislation or disapprove of things in which we do not believe. We must carry on this exercise of balancing the scales. The minister is asking us to approve things which in my opinion are defective and fall short of the standard we should follow. I shall find it difficult to say yes to this bill when the votes are being taken. When considering these powers, I think we should be entitled to a little survey to see to what extent governments make use of this authority, and how they use it, because I think that is the litmus paper we must use in this particular experiment.

● (1430)

For example, over the last few days we have been listening to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). I must say I admire the minister because he has probably found at long last the formula for which some hon. members opposite have been looking to find favour in the West. They have been criticizing the Liberal government and criticizing the CPR. By putting the two together, they hope to find the formula which will find favour in western Canada. But the minister has been complaining bitterly that he does not have enough authority and power to deal with the staggering problems of western Canada in particular, and of all Canada in general, which we face today with regard to transportation, particularly railroad transportation. I have to look at this in the light of the decision which we are being asked to make today. All one has to do is to examine the National Transportation Act, and having done that I say to you, to the House, to the minister opposite and to his friends, that the Minister of Transport has all the power he wants if he only had the guts to act on the legislation and to make something happen.

Under the National Transportation Act, for example—and I am not debating it but using it as an illustration—the railway company must—the word used is "shall" which has a mandatory implication—furnish adequate and suitable accommodation for carrying, loading and delivering of traffic and receive with due care and diligence. To me, the word "diligence" has one meaning, that is to do a thing diligently. It does not mean to come in here, as has the Minister of Transport, whimpering, whining, crying and saying: "I don't like this bill; it does not give me any authority. I must have a study and a new bill". The minister has all the authority he wants in this act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: As a matter of fact, one can go beyond that because, when we passed the national transportation bill—some hon. members here were present at that time—we debated this issue and the powers which were to be granted to the commission. At that time I challenged the then minister of transport, the very eloquent and astute Jack Pickersgill who piloted that legislation through, in respect of the powers which were being sought for the Transportation Commission. He said the bill contained all the power and authority which the commission wanted.

I think he was right, because if you look at section 46 of the National Transportation Act, you will find these words:

The Commission may make orders or regulations

(a) with respect to any matter, act or thing that by the Railway Act or the Special Act is sanctioned, required to be done, or prohibited;

(b) generally for carrying the Railway Act into effect;

So any time, at the request of the government or on its own initiative with the authority which was vested in the Transportation Commission, which is comparable to the authority that this government is asking be given to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the Transportation Commission could make an order. It would also go beyond that. We had a fascinating debate at that time as well with regard to the power which Mr. Pickersgill sought for that commission to exercise sanctions.

Section 46 (3) of the National Transportation Act reads:

The Commission may by regulation or order provide penalties, when not already provided in the Railway Act, to which every company or person who offends against any regulation or order made by the Commission shall be liable.

So if the Minister of Transport, who has the authority, wanted to exercise it, he could say to the Transportation Commission: "I want you to order the railway companies to provide the cars and facilities to carry the freight and to do so diligently and carefully". Having made that order, the commission could include in the order a provision that if they do not do what is ordered, a penalty will be imposed. I do not suppose that capital punishment could be imposed; it is outlawed anyway. They could not hang any official of the railway company. But if you read the clause carefully, it has a very wide and significant effect. The commission could make an order and say: these will be the sanctions, the penalties and the punishment imposed for non-compliance.

What more authority could the Minister of Transport hope to secure in any new legislation? Surely, when we come to assess whether we should now give effect to the pleas of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) and pass the bill giving these vast powers to the government or to a board created by the government, we are entitled to ask ourselves how they have acted, how they have used the powers which were given to them. When I think about it, I realize that all that the commission and the government did was to close down some branch lines and prevent some passenger trains from running. That was easy. They were hand in glove with the railway companies. But when they are asked to act on powers which they have been granted and they refuse to do so, using as an excuse that the transportation affairs in Canada are in a mess so we must have a new study and a new bill, that is transparent nonsense.

I have been talking about the National Transportation Act and I may have gone a little too far afield, but I was prompted by my enthusiasm. While I am dealing with the Act I want to talk about an amendment which I hope the minister, the government and the committee will consider when the bill receives second reading and goes to the committee for study. When the National Transportation Act was being passed, some of us in the House, I think the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), myself and the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), whose constituency at that time had another name, were considering the implications of this granting of powers to the commission and the government. We thought there should be some check, some method by which there could be at least a reasonable measure of parliamentary control. I believe that Your Honour was here at the time and participated actively. I know that you are now sitting in a very neutral and detached position, but if you cast your mind back to those days of glory in 1966 and 1967, you will remember that at that time I proposed an amendment. I will not read the whole amendment because it has different characteristics.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I proposed that a clause be added along these lines: as soon as practical after the commencement of the first session of each parliament, in any event not more than 15 days after the commencement of the said session, a committee of 12 members of the House of Commons, to be known as The National Transport Act Committee, shall be appointed for the duration of such parliament according to the practice of this House with reference to the appointment of members to serve on standing committees. Then I went on to lay down some of the details, making it quite plain, however, that the powers and duties of the committee were to examine the annual report of the commission made to the governor in council. I think that we might well apply that principle to the facts which we face today.

● (1440)

As I say, in spite of my opposition there is no doubt that this bill will pass. There is no doubt that in due course the government will get around to appointing a new commission, and that commission will start to function, again as I say subject to no parliamentary control. I would like to suggest that some consideration should be given to appointing a special committee or, if necessary, enlarging the terms of reference of the existing committee. The latter might be difficult because of its problems in dealing with legislation and with estimates. But we should not have this bill finally passed on third reading without inserting some provision in it for parliamentary control of the operations of the arbitrary and authoritative Restrictive Trade Practices Commission that will come into being when these powers are vested in it.

I keep harking back to the fact that this bill includes the two things, aid of limited value to the consumers and the granting of powers to the commission. I suggest to the minister that it would have been the better part of wisdom for him to bring in a bill dealing with consumer protection alone. But he has chosen to combine the two, as is invariably the policy of the government.

I hold no brief for big corporations or big unions. I say that I fear and worry far more about big government. It feeds on itself and grows. It hives-off. Small sections become large divisions, and some day may even emerge as departments. It does very well for itself financially by taking other people's money through the tax structure. It has now become so vast, so gigantic, so complex that there is not one single person in the country who can comprehend it or direct it, or certainly control it. To balance the puny values given in part of this bill against the monstrous grab of more government power does not appeal to me, and I have no intention of supporting the bill. As I say, it will likely pass, but not with my help.

I serve notice that in the future I intend to continue challenging bills of this character where the same type of authority is being vested in government, with the acquisition of new powers and the establishment of new governmental monsters which will have to be considered in comparison with the value and usefulness which otherwise appear in the legislation. And there will have to be some valid equivalent before such bills are acceptable to me. I would suggest that others in the House and outside it should do the same. I particularly direct my attention to many of those involved in big business and industry. I refer to them because many of them are opposed to this bill, but for different reasons than mine.

It is a common sight to see hundreds of leaders of industry and business hiking down here, briefcase in hand, to push and prod government into programs and policies which make them the beneficiaries of government hand-outs. It does not sit too well with me to hear these people, in face of this record, complain about aid being given to those who really need assistance. It weakens their complaint in respect of this legislation. You and I, Mr. Speaker, know the legal motto that he who comes into court must come with clean hands, and he who seeks equity must do equity.

Everywhere we detect cynicism and distrust of the processes of government. It is interesting that in the morning edition of one of our newspapers there are two articles dealing with this in both Europe and Canada. People note that the gap between promise and performance, in respect of the present government in particular, is wider than the Grand Canyon. The so-called remedies for our social and economic problems which are sought by men at the top level of government are always the same—power, authority and secrecy. This government has lost its credibility.

There is rot, and the sour stink of decay is apparent around the corridors of power in Ottawa, just as it is in other capitals. These are the facts uppermost in my mind when asked to support this bill which gives so little and demands so much, and which persuade me not to vote for the measure.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that this is a bill that will give some small degree of assistance, and allow this or any future government to take some action on behalf of the consumers. This competition bill, if it does anything, will provide some of the means whereby the interests of consumers can be protected, if the government so wishes. That is the assumption, but it may be that the assumption can be called into question even at this point in time. Perhaps we are in the same position as nations going to war. Historians point out that nations have often gone to war using the weapons of the last war, which very quickly were shown to be obsolete. Much money had been spent developing them while an enemy country was in the forefront of the development of more modern death dealing weapons.

A quite significant statement was made in this House recently by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), and made in a befuddled way. It was not surprising that he was befuddled because he had to admit he had a department over which he did not have control, that he was running a transportation system but did not know how it worked, and that the system had failed but he did not know why. One positive statement he made was that competition no longer existed in the transportation industry. That industry is pretty big in Canada, covering ground, air and water, and when the minister said competition does not exist in it he was merely stating the obvious.

At one point in time there was a controlling body governing rail rates. Then, the provinces gave franchises to truckers. Certain firms were given the exclusive right to go over certain highways and serve certain communities. The amount of load the trucks can carry on the highways may be different in each jurisdiction, and there is bargaining over rates within provinces. The air traveller, whether he uses Air Canada, CPA or Nordair also finds that competition just does not exist any more.

This morning the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said he had a new dairy policy. All it really amounts to is the provision of new rates of subsidy, different from existing rates. If the costs, and the price to consumers are set by government fiat, by government direction, we must ask ourselves how much competition exists in that industry. If you want to go further than that and consider the wholesale and retail level then, when one co-operative in the province controls 80 per cent of the sales of industrial milk and when one multinational corporation can control 60 per cent of the product, how much real competition exists in that part of the food industry? If this is the case in important sectors of the economy, then how are we going to control the price of certain foods or services to the consumer by pretending that competition exists or that by some device it can be forced to exist?

● (1450)

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board has been juggling the feed grains industry for years now. There is a secret document floating around that no one knows anything about—except all the major grain companies, the National Farmers Union, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, the Farmers Union in Quebec and many others. Apparently the document proposes to put the Canadian Livestock Feed Board in control of the forwarding of grain. It is going to have complete control of the movement of feed grains, but at the same time they are proposing to open the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange. I suggest they are labouring under a delusion because you cannot have controls and the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange or any other exchange dealing with the same product. You must do one thing or the other. If you do both you get the worst of both worlds, and it is mainly the producer who suffers.

It is not what this competition bill proposes to do that bothers me or the manner in which it is proposed. What bothers me is that we have the minister and the government trying to deal with competition without recognizing how the real world operates, while the ordinary consumer is getting gouged.

In an article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of January 15, 1974 under a Montreal dateline appears the following statement:

> Crown Prosecutor Bruno J. Pateras said Monday that three of eastern Canada's largest sugar refineries overcharged their customers an estimated $125 million between 1960 and 1973.

Even if this competition bill had been passed, this could easily have happened. Eventually, somebody might try to charge such companies with a breach of some law but they could easily have overcharged to this extent. They control the sugar market and so are not subject to competition; they are not going to support the type of bill that is being shoved through this House. The Canadian government could have done two things to control the price of sugar. It could have helped develop a sugar beet industry here, so that it was not held in bondage to the sugar companies and offshore suppliers. But even the sugar industry in Ontario was not protected. A British multinational corporation, part of a large sugar cartel, was allowed to close down the sugar beet industry in Ontario and the Conservative government of Ontario paid farmers to get out of the business.

The other thing that could have been done was to support the International Sugar Agreement. We did not do that because it did not suit the multinational corporations who now control the industry. Without that agreement they had freedom to rook the consumer and the producer, which is what the story in the Journal says they were doing very effectively from 1960 to 1973. I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) some time ago about this matter, and he said that we were not signatories to the sugar agreement but we were observers. The government is an observer while the people of Canada get robbed by the sugar companies! The government is an observer, not an actor, and I fear that they will not be actors in regard to this competition bill either.

I had a phone call from Regina from someone who complained that in Denver, Colorado, he paid $1.89 for ten pounds of sugar while a similar brand in Regina which came in from the United States, cost $2.69, and Alberta sugar, processed in Canada, cost $3.29 for ten pounds. Why is that happening to the Canadian consumer? It is at least in part caused by the failure of the government to develop and maintain a large sugar beet industry in this country, and its failure to sign the international agreement which would have stabilized the price worldwide to the producer and the consumer.

A headline in the Globe and Mail of March 14, 1974 reads: "Sugar Price Third Lower in Buffalo" and in the article appears the statement:

> The price of a 10-pound bag of granulated pure cane sugar at Loblaw stores in Buffalo yesterday was $1.89. In the chain's Toronto stores the price was $2.99.

Does the minister really expect this House to believe that this bill will correct that situation? I do not think so. I do not think he would stand in this House today and say that he believes it because no one in his right mind could believe that a simple competition bill will correct such a situation.

This government is not prepared to use the full weight of its power in the interests of the Canadian consumer, and so they will not give any real clout to the board which was set up to look after consumer prices. That is where the crux is. We must be tough. The government will not be tough with these people, as is evident if one reads this bill. If an economist or some agency were charged with the responsibility of investigating thoroughly the prices paid to beef producers in the past three weeks, and the results of such investigation became known, I believe the Minister of Agriculture would have to resign. His program for protecting the producer has failed. At the same time, the price to the consumer has been hardly reduced.

● (1500)

Why is the Food Prices Review Board not reporting daily or at least weekly on what is happening on the meat counters of Canadian stores? That is where action is required, Mr. Speaker, and it should be taken immediately. If you want to know what restrictive trade practices are being carried on, get a list of industries, go to the library and get a book from the shelf. There are books on the sugar industry and on the meat packing industry. If you read the 1961 report on the meat packing industry you will see that the industry is using exactly the same tactics today in its treatment of the producer and the consumer.

Consider production costs of the farmer. The price of fertilizer has increased by 50 per cent over what it was one year ago.

Mr. Whittaker: In some cases the increase has been 100 per cent.

Mr. Gleave: Yes, the hon. member is right; the increase in some cases has been 100 per cent. That is an extra cost the farmer must bear this spring when he plants his crops. Those engaged in horticulture or grain production have additional costs. What will the government do to meet this situation? Even if this bill passes will mean nothing to the farmer in April, May or June of this year. It will not make any significant difference to his situation. This legislation will not help the farmer unless it is changed. Unless somebody works on the bill, it will mean nothing to the farmer.

I see no evidence of the government's anxiety to do something to reduce the price of food and the cost of food production. Extra costs are being built into the food chain right at the production end. This is bound to do one of two things: increase prices to the consumer to levels he can ill afford, or force the food producer into bankruptcy. This is happening in the food industry. It has happened to people in the beef industry and to those in the hog industry. We are not engaged in an academic discussion; the situation we face is very real.

If by any chance, and I do not suppose there is much chance, we can impress upon the minister the urgency of the situation, this debate will have served some purpose. If we cannot, then I am sorry. I think we should take immediate action in the areas I have spoken about, namely, in the production and distribution of food. Let us dash the hopes of some of the monopolies which determine the cost of living for Canadians. Let us change the present situation in which Canadians feel they are helpless in face of conditions beyond their control and apparently beyond the control of governments upon which they depend to protect their interests.

● (1510)

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to discuss this bill today. Bill C-7 is very hard to understand for many Canadians. It provides for amendments which, to my mind, will not solve the problem.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to foreign ownership, I would say that at the end of 1970, out of $31.4 billion which represented the assets of the energy industry in Canada, $11 billion, that is 35.1 per cent, were in the hands of foreigners, and 9.8 per cent of those $11 billion were concentrated in the oil industry.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people do not own their natural resources. In view of present-day technology and our many universities, there is no reason why we should be so far behind, why we should own so little of our natural resources, and especially no reason why we cannot develop them.

It is all very well to restrict the powers of foreign companies, to impose conditions of all sorts, and to ask that Canadians buy 51 per cent of the company shares. But that poses a problem, Mr. Speaker, because Canadians cannot afford them. Only the large companies listed on the stock exchange can afford to buy them and do something. And to be listed on the stock exchange is another story: first of all, one has to be rich.

A great number of Canadians cannot enter the stock market and through this means develop our natural resources or develop some industries and finish some products in Canada.

In the oil industry, exploration, production, refining and distribution are controlled by foreign-owned companies which control 91 per cent of the assets and over 95 per cent of the sales. About four fifths of the assets controlled by non-residents belong to Americans. The Americans are not to blame if they own industries in Canada, but our governments or government should be blamed since they failed to make the necessary tools available to Canadians, they failed to make the required funds available to Canadians so that they may become owners or stockholders in those big companies.

We have failed to earmark the funds required for the development of our resources, while the Americans have been doing it for a long time. They are issuing credits on our resources, they are cashing in on our resources and are using them to issue credits, and with those credits, they develop natural resources at home or abroad. Canadians did not keep their eyes open. This is our mistake and the minister could not care less. It is all very well to say to the Canadian people: Become owners, buy shares and own 51 per cent of companies' stocks, when most of them are too poor to buy them. Canadians are too poor, industrialists are overtaxed by the federal, provincial, and municipal governments and overburdened with school taxes, municipal taxes, all kind of taxes, and exceedingly high interest rates. No profits are left to industries. They cannot develop. If we want to develop this country, we should make some improvements.

Foreign control over the coal industry, which presently amounts to approximately 73 percent, reflects recent developments in the extraction of metallurgical coal in Western Canada for export markets. The uranium industry is partly State-owned and partly privately-owned 20 percent of the assets being under foreign control. So, that is one industry belonging to Canadians, but it is state-owned and not privately-owned.

The most important source of investment in the oil industry is self-financing which, incidentally, constitutes an even larger share of the investment of foreign-controlled industrial corporations than that of the Canadian-controlled corporations.

Between 1961 and 1970, 66 percent of investments have been made that way, whereas 35 percent of external investments from Canadian sources, that is 23 percent of all capital invested in Canada, were from foreign sources.

Most regions where new supplies of oil and gas are expected to be found have already been allocated to exploration companies by way of permits. Canadian-controlled corporations hold only some 15 percent of permits and leases delivered to provinces the federal government.

Why, Mr. Speaker, Canadians do not invest anymore in these developments? It is one of the most predominant factors where there is a guaranteed market for years to come, and where considerable profits are to be realized. However, Canadians are unable to invest because they are too poor and because financial institutions do not lend to Canadians.

Canadian financial institutions want foreign capital. They promote the exportation of foreign capital and with $1 of this capital, $14 in capital is created.

Mr. Speaker, this is why large financial institutions recommend foreign capital exports. The market control achieved by many foreign companies makes it difficult for less important and newly created corporations to establish themselves.

Because of their vertical integration, the larger oil corporations have a flexibility with which the less integrated Canadian firms can hardly compete; they have also access to financial resources, thereby satisfying their considerable need for capital.

The national oil policy which divides Canada in two marketing zones has been detrimental to the competitive ability of the non-integrated independent firms.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from these reports that Canadians can hardly become holders of securities in view of the nonexistence of the profit margin, for the government went so far as imposing a capital gains tax, thereby depriving a number of corporations of the benefits they could make by investing. Whoever wants to invest, Mr. Speaker, must kneel before the higher financial institutions and borrow capital at rates as high as 10, 12, 13 or 15 per cent. The financiers are then those who are making profits. Industrialists and the people who work 24 hours a day do not make money; actually, it is those people who do not work who make money. Those who do nothing and use their pens to give credit are those who, because of their prerogatives, exercise their rights to take over the assets of the citizens and transfer them to their own accounts.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what we have. This is why our society has large financial institutions which have no deficits. Mr. Speaker, the assets of the banks were over $15 billion this year, and I think that another $15 billion were invested elsewhere, that is into some type of reserves which are not disclosed for income tax purposes.

Several billion dollars are thus invested in these reserves while other companies are not entitled to build up such reserves and to invest billions of dollars in them. These large financial institutions have all the powers and they use them at the expense of Canadians and for their own benefit.

The government itself earmarks hundreds of million dollars to assist various foreign companies, and when the Canadian people are in need, they have a very hard time getting small loans. One can apply to the Industrial Development bank, but it imposes all kinds of restrictions, which makes it extremely difficult to get credit. It provides funds only to large institutions without taking any notice of small ones, when it should help all institutions and at very low interest rates. And yet, the Industrial Development Bank is in collusion with all the large finance companies to maintain high interest rates across the board. In this way, they avoid competing with one another and exploit the Canadian people shamelessly. That is where we should concentrate our efforts, that is where the minister should do something, that is where the minister should intervene. However, he does not intervene in the field of finance, but he does intervene in other areas. As for the finance area he does not talk about it.

● (1520)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a speech reported in Hansard for Wednesday, March 13, 1974, by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). I congratulate him because I read over his speech that I find extraordinary and very appropriate. The hon. member said:

> So, in the proposals, recommendations, suggestions that we make on various bills introduced in the House, we advocate an economic system based on private enterprise and not on free enterprise or, in other words, monopolies.
> Through this bill, the minister meant to put teeth in the Combines Investigation Act. He has incorporated into this bill some positive political measures, but such measures without the adoption of positive economic measures at the same time does not solve anything at all.

That man has been supporting us for a long time and he understands what business means. He is a man who really knows what it is all about. I continue:

> If we pass positive political measures which are not supported by economic measures enabling individuals to compete against monopolies, we will remain in the clutches of monopolies, mergers and combines, which will have to pay fines, but according to the figures quoted today, less than 1 per cent of the profits made by monopolies have been subjected to a fine.
> The measures that the minister has included in this bill deal especially with the small businessmen who will be subject to this bill like anybody else, but they will have no effect on the multinational companies.
> How can this bill bring about a change? What can Bill C-7 do against multinational companies which are now increasing overnight all prices at the same time, invoking the false pretext of the oil and gas shortage? Under such a bill, the minister cannot act against the multinational companies which hold sway over our economy. The only thing he can do is to fine them $2,000 or $5,000, a ridiculous amount for them which is tax deductible.
> What shocked me about this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to note that the government is trying to punish and restrain everybody. However, at the same time, banks are given special privileges.

Mr. Speaker, I admire that man because he knows what business means, where the economic unrest is, where to go, where to knock to improve our economic system. I continue:

> Mr. Speaker, as we have always said, the banks are the basis of the existing monopoly which controls the others. According to its whim, the monopoly of money and credit can create a monopoly of production or destroy it. And when I hear people who strongly denounce monopolies, and rightly so, in such and such a sector of industry, and yet, refrain from attacking the very monopoly which creates all the others, I feel they fall short of the target. They go only after the small fry, overlooking the villain who will go on with his dirty work.

Mr. Speaker, that is what the hon. member for St. Paul's had to say in his speech. However, we have been talking about that for a long time and we never felt any support in this House. We are just starting to find support because generally speaking several members are beginning to open their eyes, to realize that we can no longer run this country in the situation in which we find ourselves today.

Reforms are a must, Mr. Speaker, but not in the industrial sector, in the research area or about citizens who do not want to work anymore. The reform must be made in the area of finance. Finance must be brought to the service of companies and citizens who want to do something. They will be allowed a certain profit margin so that they can go on growing, improving and developing. If all their profits are taken away from them, nothing will remain. Then nobody is encouraged and everybody is discouraged. They do not want to launch any more into institutions, developments which several people could do because they have the necessary expertise but knowing that they will not be able to succeed, they do not undertake them.

This is where the difficulty lies, Mr. Speaker. This is where the minister should step in. He should study this situation thoroughly and help us find the true solutions. These are easy to find because it is a matter of making credit available to those who need it at reasonable interest rates, in order to prevent price increases, because high interest rates push prices upwards.

With the present system, with inflation, with everything we are presently experiencing, the first cause and the first reason of the difficulty are interest rates which are too high and governments who have nothing to say on the matter. Nobody criticizes the increase in interest rates in general at least, not the ministers, not the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Nobody speaks up when financial companies increase their interest rates. It seems as if they were given a blessing. Not a word is uttered, Mr. Speaker.

This is the first cause of the economic unrest we are experiencing. The increase in the cost of living is due mainly to the increase in the exorbitant interest rates charged to Canadian citizens.

I would like to quote from a document:

> It is difficult to appraise the importance of foreign control on these international operations and on the balance of payments. In spite of the size of the operations concerned, the industry's adjustments relating to the balance of payments do not seem to depend much on the owners' nationality. In view of the role played by direct investments in this area, the general trend of the balance of payments, account being taken of the time factor, could have been quite different without these investments.
> The results of this foreign control are not limited to the economic sector and the industry; it is to be feared that the extent of this control might hinder the setting of priorities and the environmental action of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if the existing system had not allowed foreign companies to settle in Canada and develop our natural resources, our situation would be even worse.

Many Canadians were able to earn a living by working for these large monopolies, these large institutions. They were able to earn a living while giving away our resources. Our resources belong to us, but we do not take the necessary steps to develop them with our techniques. We have the same technical and financial tools as any other country. If the United States can issue credits to develop our resources, we should be able to do the same in Canada with all our institutions. We do not even need to create new institutions, we have all the institutions we need, and they are there to operate. Let us give them the power and the responsibilities, let us ask them to issue the required credits for all new developments at very low service fees and interest rates and we shall regain control over our own affairs. We shall regain control over our resources and we shall be able to create additional ones, develop new industries, and finish our raw products in Canada.

Generally speaking, companies have head offices in their own countries. They come here to get our raw materials, and they export them to their own countries. We produce only raw materials. We lack only the capital because we already have the required technology. We have all that we need. If we had the capital, we could finish in Canada most of our products, and we could export our finished products while providing employment for our workers of whom about 10 per cent are now unemployed.

This is not logical in a country such as Canada where we have all kinds of things to build and develop. Our natural resources are enormous but we have no funds to develop them. Our problem is to issue those funds and we will then be able to develop anything as far as this is physically feasible because we have all the necessary facilities.

Foreign investments are not the only ones nor perhaps the most significant at the root of the problem faced by Canada in getting maximum advantages from energy. However, they involve a whole series of expenses for the country. Therefore a single policy is not panacea in this field.

Probably many elements of a general policy in the field of energy will have some influence on the nature and amounts of profits which Canada will draw from these activities. Moreover, any further initiative should be compatible with Canadian objectives both in the industrial and international areas and in the federal-provincial relations field.

It is through wide ranging economic and industrial policies that we will be able to fill gaps which have prevented Canada from undertaking a number of projects, gaps which may be considered as having contributed to the inflow and nature of foreign investments.

Still it should be noted that changes in our energy and industrial policies in general are not likely to influence the factors which govern international investments and the way they flow into Canada; indeed many of those factors originate from foreign institutions and policies. Besides, it may well be that all our policies will not enable us to benefit from foreign investments while mitigating their drawbacks.

One may try to outline the advantages and drawbacks of certain political approaches suggested in public debates and which relate to foreign investments in the field of energy and among those one may mention Canadian participation in the social assets of all corporations, which means that 51 per cent of the capital stock of all new energy corporations or companies would come under Canadian control.

But it would have to be done, if we want this to happen. Then there should be agencies in the operations of which Canadians would participate—public or private organizations, the possibility for an official agency to reserve for itself the potential right of "participating" in the companies concerned, a nationalized corporation operating in that industrial sector, and more frequent control of investments in the energy sector.

There is no equivalent in other northern countries to our attitude towards energy. Forgoing austerity, we have chosen to use energy liberally and to have a style of living similar in many respects to that prevailing in industrialized countries having a warmer climate and a larger population. We wish to enjoy simultaneously both the comforts of city life and the pleasures of the countryside. We are used to living in big houses, surrounded with immense gardens. Our cities cover more land than cities with the same size of population in most other countries. It is all so normal for us to be able to move around as we please and to avail ourselves of local and intercity transit systems transportation, and there are a great many Canadians who, from time to time, enjoy the pleasures of a summer or winter cottage.

This way of living assumes the ready availability of large supplies of energy, because we also have to overcome the problems caused by our weather conditions, our wide-open spaces, and the relatively wide distribution of our population. Our energy policies must take this situation into account as well as its economic and social impact.

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, our problems are not due to a shortage of energy. We can develop energy. Neither is it a lack of resources that bothers us. We have more resources than we need, there are large quantities of them that are not yet developed. We will not have any problems for ages, Mr. Speaker, as regards the energy or natural resources we need for the growth of this country and to help other countries as well. We lack nothing.

We also have enough engineers. If our technology is not good enough, we can get some from abroad. We will be able to pay technocrats by voting the necessary funds.

To date, we have no problem in this regard. We often talk about it and we will never say it too often in order to convince hon. members and other Canadians: Let us use our financial institutions and put them at the Canadian people's disposal by making them charge reasonable interest rates on loans.

Besides, any new project, Mr. Speaker, should be developed with new credits and without interest. We should only pay for the administration costs. Then we could develop our resources, we could take over our own wealth.

Therefore, we will be able to urge Canadians to invest, to work, to develop and to control their own resources. When one is one's own master, when one owns something, when one has a small piece of land of one's own, it is possible to grow. That is the way to build a strong country, with energetic people ready to do anything. Men who have something to do, who own something, are not concerned about their own business only, but with social affairs and the business of others. Those men work in any field. They spend a lot of time and energy to help others and develop the economy of their province, their city, their country.

Mr. Speaker, we shall build a strong country with owners and not only with tenants. We do not need a stable government but strong industrialists to have a stable economy. We do not need a stable government that sits there on its hands, doing nothing. A stable economy is the work of prosperous industries and businesses, of men interested in developing them. Those were the remarks I wanted to make and which might help find some solutions. Our solutions are not miraculous, but reasonable and acceptable to all Canadians because they are logical and complete.

[English]

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, when you read a fairly lengthy bill like this you sometimes become a little discouraged about what it is attempting to do. You become a little lyrical at times.

The minister of corporate affairs,
Comes to this House and he dares,
To present us a bill,
Like a sugar-coated pill,
Like Trudeau—as nobody cares.

This is what gets to you, that no one in the government really cares what happens to the people of this country. The government thinks this bill is going to solve the problems facing the people of Canada. Let me deal with two specific features, one of which is procedural and I think is a disaster, and the other the substantive part of this bill. In respect of the procedural aspect, I say to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that for the first time in Canadian jurisprudence we are taking away the function of the criminal courts and giving it to the Federal Court. The government guaranteed the people of Canada some time ago that this would never happen. It said, in effect, not to worry; no criminal jurisdiction would ever be given to the Federal Court.

Look at what has happened in respect of sections 32, 35, 36, 38 and 46 of the act. I suggest that demonstrates criminal jurisdiction being implanted in the Federal Court. This is a serious incursion into the civil rights and liberties of the people of Canada, because the Federal Court has its own rules, regulations and procedures and, in addition, its own rules of evidence. I suggest this is the thin edge of the wedge. This government continues, in its arrogant way, to put more and more criminal jurisdiction and arrogant power into that court where so many of the fundamental rights contained in the British system of justice are denied. I suggest this must be stopped and it must be stopped now.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) was asked, apparently, for an opinion by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) on whether it was proper to do this. He was asked at the committee the other day whether he gave his sanction and he replied in the affirmative. He was asked for his reason and he said we should ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I have not heard during this debate any good reason why it should be done. If the minister is conscientious in his job, perhaps before the debate is concluded he will tell us why, for the first time in the jurisprudence of any Commonwealth country—certainly for the first time in Canada—a government has taken upon itself to set up its own court, transferring common law and criminal jurisdiction to the Federal Court. And, as I have said, the government promised last year, when this court was set up, that this would never happen.

● (1540)

What are we to expect? The government says one thing and does another. It is about time the people of Canada were alerted to the fact that what this government says one day does not mean a thing the next day. The government does just what it wants to do in its arrogance.

What does this bill really do? Does it deal with the problems of the multinational corporations? The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) gave many statistics in this regard. He made an excellent speech. His points were well taken and I shall not repeat what he said. However, what must we come to grips with? This is a negative bill: it does not attack the problems and tell us what we should do.

Let us look at the power of the multinational corporations. The minister knows as well as I do that most of them have more power than him. What does the bill do to improve that situation or to help the small businessman? It does nothing. What does it do in respect of the situation in some labour unions? They must also be considered multinational corporations. I speak for myself in this matter and perhaps not for my party. I think we must incorporate the labour unions because they can be as guilty of infringing fair bargaining practices as many national corporations. Why does the government not have the guts to incorporate the labour unions so that they will sit at the bargaining table as one incorporated company dealing with another incorporated company, so that both sides can sue or be sued and both will have responsible national officers who know what their type of business is all about.

Let us take the next logical step. We could set up a labour court composed of leaders and people who are sufficiently competent in the field to solve these problems. Our country is infested with strikes, fights and lock-outs; people say they do not care what the law says and they will do what they want in any event. What can we do while provincial legislatures and this parliament sit idly by and do nothing? I say that this government obviously is afraid to take a strong stand on this question. Surely some imagination exists in the minds of people on the other side, but so far we have not seen evidence of it.

This is a very lengthy bill. It is a negative bill. There are very few positive qualities to recommend it. If we gave the business community some economic incentive, we would not need this bill because the problem would solve itself. Consider what this government has done with regard to the extractive industries. The foreign-owned corporations receive a much better deal than Canadians from an income tax point of view. So why should they not get together and set prices? It makes sense—but only because the government lacks the courage to bring in proper legislation to solve the problem.

We would not need much combines legislation if we promoted a good, competitive enterprise economy for which we are supposedly noted. The laws and the income tax provisions which this government impose upon the economy make it impossible for that to happen. Rather than give the corporations 9 per cent off the top, why not tell them that if they increase employment by 5 per cent, for instance, we will reduce the corporate tax by 1 per cent. Is this not the way to stimulate employment? Or we could say to the corporations that if they increased their export sales by 5 per cent, for instance, we would reduce the corporate tax by 1 per cent. These are the economic incentives that are necessary.

My hon. friend from Compton said that Canadians do not have the money to invest. I am sure the minister knows that Canadians have more savings per capita than people in any other country. The money is here and we should encourage its investment. We need investment in the country, and we would have it if we did what is necessary. We would not need negative legislation such as this. It has no positive qualities to recommend it.

The hon. member for Compton also mentioned taxes. The average Canadian is forced to pay a great deal through double taxation and interest rates. The minister does not seem to give a darn about this. We have a mortgage interest rate of 9¾ per cent. Why should we not provide some incentive to home owners by telling them they can deduct "X" number of dollars from their income tax payments. Then there is municipal taxation. We might put a limit on the amount that could be deducted, but if we allowed people to deduct, say $500, for income tax purposes they would have more to invest in this country, and the more investment we have the less will be the need for legislation such as this.

When one reads a bill such as this it is discouraging to realize the time and effort that has been given to it by public servants to produce what essentially is negative legislation. I do not think it will accomplish what the minister has in mind. I am told he will present some amendments in a couple of years. I think we have all received letters from the tobacco and confectionery people pointing out that the minister has told them he contemplates introducing more legislation in two years' time. They were told that last year. Surely by now the minister has had an opportunity to think about this reintroduction of old legislation. If he is contemplating amendments, he has had sufficient time to introduce them.

Does the minister have to test the marketplace? It seems to be the practice of this government to have measures or programs tested without considering fully what they will achieve. I suggest that the government practices "Ad hockery night in Canada" day after day without applying any consistency or logic. I become annoyed about the way in which we handle the estimates. We can talk about combines, but let us consider what the government does. They wanted to take over the DeHavilland plant at a price of $38 million. This item was sneaked through the other night. What opportunity did we have to consider the estimate in interim supply and see what is involved? When we ask questions about this, we are not given answers. We are not told about debts or liabilities. But the government wants members of parliament who are trying to be conscientious in representing our constituents to sanction the expenditure of $38 million for the purchase of DeHavilland. The government had an option for two years. The option must be exercised by the end of June. Surely after two years the government should know what it wants to do.

● (1550)

But do we get the answers? No, they just want a blank cheque for $38 million. To heck with the people of Canada, they are going to do what they want. This is what I object to. How can I go back to my constituents and say, "I am here to represent you, but $38 million is going out the window; I do not know what for or what the benefit is to the people of Canada. This government refuses to tell me"? Talk about a combine investigation! It is this government that needs to be investigated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Morgan: All I am trying to indicate to the government is that surely by now they could do a better job than this bill indicates. Surely they cannot deny the right of the people to take their case to the court of their choice. It is up to the Attorney General of Canada to decide, in the case of an indictment being preferred, if it goes to the Federal Court or not. It is his decision alone. Surely that is denying some of the rights of the people of Canada, and it is something this government said it would never do. That is how good their word is. They just do what they willy-nilly see fit to do. They do not provide any incentives. They do not attack the things that cause combines to occur. Their taxation policy invites combines. Surely the government could employ proper methods to combat this situation. If we were to help the small businessmen who cry out for help there would not be so much trouble with the multinationals. We should support the little guy in this country. This is not being done now. If it were, the minister would not need to introduce this bill; it would not be necessary. We are a nation of people with initiative and imagination. The government should use these qualities.

I do not like negative legislation and this bill is nothing but a bunch of negatives—thou shalt not; thou shalt not. Why do we not turn the coin over and make this legislation unnecessary? Let us not knock down the small businessman. That is what the government's policy is doing now; it is knocking the little guy out the window. Give him the economic drive that he needs and this legislation will not be necessary. Let us have the guts to face the facts of our economic situation. Who is controlling our economy these days? The multinationals and the labour unions. Let us accept that as a fact and go on from there. Let us start solving those problems. Then legislation such as this would not be required.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, a short while ago I said in the House that what this government lacks is what we all crave, namely, a sense of unity and purpose. The people in the area I represent are looking for leadership. For example, we hear the minister saying transportation is a mess. We know that a new grains policy is to be announced at the start of the next crop year, but we see the minister in charge of the Wheat Board sneaking out press releases. There is a new, secret grains policy being circulated which is bound to cause nothing but anxiety and confusion in western Canada and, I suggest, in eastern Canada as well. Today we listened to the so-called new policy regarding a milk subsidy for the dairy industry. The new policy is nothing more than a small change in the subsidy.

In reading through this bill I found the definition of "business" in the all-encompassing language that is now popular. It is as follows:

"Business" includes the business of

(a) manufacturing, producing, transporting, acquiring, supplying, storing and otherwise dealing in articles and

(b) acquiring, supplying and otherwise dealing in services—

The provision goes on to deal with offences in relation to trade and marketing in Canada. I would like to deal for a short while with the question of government interference into some aspects of our marketing system and policies, particularly in the very important feed grain industry which affects Canadians from east to west.

May I call it four o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1600)

[Translation]

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' NOTICE OF MOTION

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED TAX REBATE IN RESPECT OF MORTGAGE INTERESTS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf) moves:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of granting an income tax rebate equal to the amount paid in mortgage interest on a family home and in municipal and educational taxes, the whole not to exceed $1,000 per year.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like first to thank the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) who was kind enough to support this motion. I consider it a privilege to have the opportunity of discussing this motion since its purpose is to help Canadians who have made some sacrifices in order to become home owners as well as all those who are contemplating such an opportunity.

Needless to say that I hope to get the House's support so that the people involved will benefit as soon as possible from the passing of this legislation. In my opinion, it is urgent that Parliament should authorize the deduction of municipal and school taxes for owners of family homes, as is the case with owners of apartment houses.

Evidently, large mortgages should also receive the same attention, if we really want to give Canadians a chance to become home owners.

With appropriate legislation, the government now help industrialists, tradesmen and various corporations. Businessmen can now contact the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for instance, and select the program they need, including those designed to increase productivity in the manufacture and use of equipment, accessories and building materials. There are also a number of other programs: the small businesses assistance program; the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, the machinery program, the program to increase productivity, the pharmaceutical industry development assistance program, the shipbuilding assistance program. When we examine other government programs, we find that several sectors are assisted.

The services offered to employers by the Department of Manpower and Immigration include a service for employers, the manpower adjustment program, the business management training program and the industrial manpower training program. There are even special treatments concerning exports. To date, all these programs have given concrete results and precisely because these programs provide for loans at preferential rates and grants, we have to welcome them.

But only certain social classes benefit from these programs and that is why I think the motion I propose can supplement the plan in force; its implementation would be easy since it does not call for any expenses.

Even if most Canadian home owners do not contribute to the electoral fund of the old parties, I think they are entitled to a minimum of protection. To this day and without any real opposition, Canadian home owners have accepted all tax charges: municipal, school, and urban community taxes, sales tax and the 11 per cent tax on building materials. The list grows longer each year, and we know that this has resulted in trebling tax costs.

In the Quebec City area, houses built ten years ago for $12,000 now have an estimated value of $19,000 to $20,000.

Mr. Speaker, what businessmen and big corporations do with tax is resort to the wear and tear clause.

Unfortunately, that is not the case for the single family homeowners, since not only can the homeowner not do a thing about the depreciation on his own house, but he is forced to accept the assessment increases. So we see that as a result of scientific assessments, the value of the house is increasing with time.

For science's sake, we see a further rise in the price of our properties. There follows interesting results in the financial respect, since all over the country homeowners have seen their municipal and school taxes increase threefold in 10 years. The mayors of our cities, who know how to calculate, and who even show some honesty, are warning us that the tax increases we had to pay up until now are only a beginning, since we should expect to see the taxes increase twofold within five years. In other words, the homeowner who had to pay $300 10 years ago, and who is paying $900 today, should expect to have to pay $1,800 bills in 1980.

Mr. Speaker, unless measures are taken to correct the indebtment system we know, a costly and inhuman system indeed, we will witness many individual bankruptcies.

Families unable to pay their insurance premiums, school and municipal taxes as well as high mortgage payments will have to give up their home. The balance sheet of our cities and municipalities show an increase in public service costs, it is true, but these same balance sheets also show that, in some cases, debt servicing eats up 40 and sometimes 50 per cent of the budget.

Under the present system, no one can expect a reduction of this portion absorbed by finance. Indeed, a table published by Statistics Canada shows that Quebec municipalities that had spent $234,530,000 on their debts in 1971 had to pay $273,166,000 for the same service in 1972.

As for the increased cost of municipal and school services, we cannot put all the blame on local or regional authorities because, unfortunately, they are also dependent on the system. It is common knowledge that in order to promote the development of municipalities, the Social Credit has been suggesting for a long time that loans be granted to provinces at low interest rates. Therefore, provinces could distribute these funds in proportion to the needs and under the terms determined by municipalities or school boards.

But until such time as those steps are taken, our administrators will be at grips with the many problems that are growing worse every year. They have nc recourse, to make ends meet, other than increasing taxes or else multiplying loans. But precisely because some cities are knee-deep in debt, we too often have tax increases. Until now, owners have managed to survive either by borrowing right and left, or because both the man or the woman have a source of income, or because the family head has had a recent increase in salary.

But how much longer, Mr. Speaker, will owners stand up under the burden of taxes over taxes? What about retired people on a fixed income, and the large number of low-income owners?

It is true that some workers get a small increase every year, but as salaries go up the staircase, taxes go up the elevator so you will agree that those increases, fall far short of what family heads need to meet their responsibilities. We recognize that the Canadian government has multiplied its housing activities. It has also multiplied the funds made available to the provinces for residential construction. We know that the loans granted for the construction of new houses can go up to 90 per cent of their loan value up to $20,000 and 80 per cent for the rest up to $25,000. But after the increase in interest rates, we note that a great many prospective owners have had to abandon their projects, especially in Quebec, where the housing crisis still exists. Moreover, it is important to remember that Quebec is also the province of tenants.

● (1610)

A Statistics Canada paper tabled in the House in the spring of 1971 told us for instance that in 1970 48 per cent of Quebecers were tenants and 52 per cent were owners. These significant figures are quite alarming. We wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the Canadian government does not aim in a small way at establishing a socialist system in Canada where everyone would be a tenant.

If that is the object of the government, Mr. Speaker, I think the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can rest assured and conclude that he is on the right track, by comparing some figures: he could even set the date of his victory. The documents I mentioned a while ago, which were tabled in this House at the time, at the request of the honourable Member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe), precisely reveal also that in 1966, there were in the province of Quebec 57.9 per cent of "propertied people" against 42.1 per cent of tenants, which means that owners are becoming tenants at the rate of 1 per cent per year. Therefore, the conclusion is rather simple. If there is no real improvement before long, in 25 years from now only one quarter of the people will be owners while three quarters of them will be tenants.

Therefore I repeat, Mr. Speaker, if that is what the government wishes, there is no problem, we only have to let things go their way.

On the other hand, if the Liberal government wishes to be the champion of capitalism, of private enterprise, I believe the time has come to show it by passing legislation to encourage first the head of family, owner of his house. If it has become a complicated thing for Canadians to own a house and to preserve what they acquired through their work, it is only, I think, because laws and regulations enacted by Parliament or the various departments do not reflect the opportunities that exist in this country. We have space and an abundance of materials and production could even be pressed on if necessary. And on a simple phone call, the manpower centre could send half a million unemployed people to work, since all they ask is work.

Therefore, considering that the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials contributed to the housing rising costs, there are not two ways of proceeding, but only one: let us abolish it. If the increase in mortgage rates contributed to increase the cost of housing, let us reduce them. Since, on March 31, 1967, by a simple vote, the Canadian Government abolished the ceiling on the rates of interest, I suppose that the honourable Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) could take the necessary steps so that this operation could be repeated in the opposite way. The Minister of Finance must know, I suppose, that we, members of parliament, have the power to set the rates of interest.

The housing problem is turning into a tragedy, the victims are many and apparently, no one feels responsible; even in private, the guilty ones, the members of the present government feel entirely innocent. Like some other members, I suggest that this little game has lasted long enough. Liberal members who are sitting here today should forget for a while about their campaign fund subscribers and care more about their constituents.

Today, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) that the owners of single family dwellings get an income tax rebate equal to the amount of the interest on their mortgage and the amount of their municipal and school taxes up to $1,000 a year. I hope to get the support of all the members of this House because this is what all the people want. Even the liberal supporters ask for it.

Last fall, every newspaper in this country reported that the liberal supporters at their meeting in the federal capital passed a resolution to exempt from base interest paid and even mortgage interests.

The Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste from la Chaudière, at their annual meeting last fall at ville Saint-Georges-de-Beauce, chaired by Mr. André Breton, a liberal organizer, passed a resolution to that effect. The members of the School Trustees Association from all Canadian provinces at their meeting in Quebec in May, 1973 asked for the same thing. The resolution reads as follows:

"That the Canadian School Trustees Association send a petition to the Minister of Finance of the Canadian government and Ministers of Finance of every Canadian province asking them to adopt financial measures allowing owners and tenants of family dwellings to deducts their school taxes from their taxable income"

This resolution was sent to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the provincial ministers of finance.

These school trustees coming from all over Canada and representing urban as well as rural communities, stated they were speaking on behalf of a majority of men and women who assume responsibilities in respect of Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the House also has responsibilities to assume in respect of Canadian taxpayers, and this is why the hon. members of the Social Credit Party of Canada are happy to join with the school trustees in an attempt to ask for a little justice for all Canadians who have made efforts and have showed a sense of responsibility.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this private member's notice of motion to grant an income tax rebate on mortgage interest paid on the family home. This measure is long overdue and it is one that I and other members of the Progressive Conservative Party have advocated for some time. This party supports the principle that a proportion of municipal property taxes and interest on mortgages should be deductible from the federal taxable income of home owners, and that a comparable tax benefit should be extended to tenants.

The Canadian family's dream of owning a single family dwelling is fast fading. Housing costs are soaring daily and mortgage interest rates are at the 10 per cent level. Whether the housing crisis is one of shortage or price is of little consequence to the average Canadian taxpayer who, at best, must be making about $17,000 annually simply to obtain a mortgage before he is able even to consider purchasing a home. Otherwise he is forced to live in an apartment or row housing.

Approximately 70 per cent of Canadians want to own a single family home on a decent sized lot. Today, in Toronto and other Canadian cities, only 5 per cent of the population can afford to buy a home and many of these must pay up to half of their income in mortgage payments. When one hears of such a situation it is very easy to understand why the bill of the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) must be accepted by the government and immediate tax concessions granted under the terms of the bill for home buyers and home owners.

Here are a few reasons why this bill should be passed. Every Canadian should, as a right, be able to obtain and live in suitable, reasonable-cost housing with the amenities of landscape. However, within the natural constraints of geography and necessary economic and social limitations, the aim of government policy should be to generate sufficient housing stock of various forms so that all Canadians may exercise their freedom of choice as to the style and tenure of housing in which they live.

The CMHC annual report for 1973 states that the thrust of housing in Canada under their administration and that of the Department of Urban Affairs is directed mainly at low or modest income groups. Undoubtedly, throughout 1973 more and more assistance was given to these groups, but there was no government action designed to alleviate the plight of the average Canadian who cannot afford to buy a home. The government has done nothing to ease the current situation of persistently increasing housing prices or excessively high interest rates, except to announce that more research will be undertaken and that it will be approximately five years before the study is completed and another five years before Canadians can expect relief.

This resolution would alleviate the plight not only of new home buyers but present home owners who are being taxed to death by all levels of government. The $100 million that the government is spending on its urban demonstration program would have been more wisely spent on assisting, taxwise, new home buyers and new home owners. I cannot express too strongly, Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this resolution to be accepted. The mechanics of it can be debated in committee. Many other countries have such a tax rebate system, and it is long overdue in Canada.

● (1620)

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I oppose the principle that we should pay a bonus to people who own homes. Such action would create class divisions in our society. We would divide people into those who rent homes and those who own homes. As it is, our present laws confer enormous benefits on home owners because home ownership is a non-taxable benefit. I will mention figures later to demonstrate how our present tax system distorts the entire housing market by giving a bonus to home owners. Any attempt to reward home ownership more can only backfire and make the housing situation worse than it is.

The idea in the hon. member's motion may look good. Home ownership is like motherhood. Historically, municipal and provincial laws in Canada have tended to favour property owners. Unless you owned property, you could not vote and you were considered a second-class citizen in this country. As far back as 100 years we tended to classify people on the basis of whether they were or were not property owners. Property qualifications were necessary if one wanted to vote. At one time one had to own property if one wanted to be a member of parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That still holds true for the Senate.

Mr. Saltsman: I suggest that although this qualification may have been valid in a frontier society—and I suspect it was not valid even then—it has no place in a modern society. The tax system, which undoubtedly confers a bonus on the home owner, is inequitable. This means that one group is more favourably treated than another. I do not think any member of this House would say that a person who owns a home or owns property is more worthy of consideration or is a better citizen than the person who rents or does not own property. Although we do not make such distinctions, our tax system makes them; and if we were to accept the hon. member's motion the situation would be even worse. As I said before, it would create serious distortions in the housing market and throw the burden on people who are not home owners.

Members of this House often suggest that the government should abolish the sales tax on building materials. Although getting rid of the sales tax may be highly desirable, I wish people who make that suggestion would say how the government is to make up the lost revenue. Compared with the losses which would be sustained if we paid this bonus to home owners, the loss occasioned by abolishing the sales tax on building materials would be modest. I notice that nobody has told us how much the proposal would cost. Figures have not been given. If you are to provide a bonus to home owners, you must obtain the lost taxes from some other source. If you suggest that we should get them, or part of them, from corporations I would listen sympathetically. Yet corporations are not a bottomless pit. So those who advocate changes in our tax system which confer benefits on one class of persons and not on another must tell us from where the money to make up lost taxes is to come and how we are to make up the difference.

I can understand why my friends in the Social Credit party support this proposal. According to Social Credit theory, the Bank of Canada should make interest-free loans available to our municipalities. Although I disagree with their theory, I at least understand why they are bringing forward this proposal. It looks good in theory. I am only surprised that the Conservative Party has backed it. I think it owes a debt of gratitude to the Social Credit party.

As I said earlier, this kind of bonus would create new class conflicts. At one time, virtually everyone who lived in the city was an actual or prospective home owner. Today that situation has changed markedly, 50 per cent of our people owning property and 50 per cent living in rented accommodation. For a variety of reasons, such as that some people cannot afford the price of a home or cannot afford to maintain a home, although that is not so important, housing today is beyond the reach of the majority of people. Many people in this country do not want to be home owners. Their life style is such that they prefer being free to change their accommodation. They do not want to be tied to a home. They do not think that living in a single family home is the preferred way of living.

That being so, why should parliament say, "We think that is the preferred way of living. We think there is some virtue in home ownership and we will confer extra benefits on the home owner"? If we said that, we would be grossly unfair to the poor and to newcomers who are trying to become established. In some ways we would be acting like the people who form neighbourhood groups because they want to preserve their areas. I can understand their thinking. Too often they are motivated by nothing but self-interest. They do not care about other people who want to come to the city. Their attitude is, "This is my place; I have a special preserve here and I intend to keep it". The fact that some people are coming to the city from Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Manitoba does not concern them in the least. They say, "If as a consequence of my actions house prices across the city rise, so be it. I don't care as long as my own property is preserved".

Looking back, I can recall that I wanted to become a socialist partly because of my distaste for people who place fantastic emphasis on property as opposed to people. Some think property is far more important than people. They do not care what happens to human beings so long as they preserve their property. It has been said that this great attachment to land, this great attachment to property is the root of virtually all human selfishness. Any law which increases selfishness is not a good law.

I want to illustrate how we subsidize home ownership, how we give benefits to those who own property. An investment in property will bring greater returns than almost any other investment in our society. I shall mention a hypothetical case, but it could well be true. Let us assume that an individual wants to invest $30,000. He can put it into Canada Savings Bonds, into a trust company, or buy a piece of property—assuming he can buy property for $30,000. I think $40,000 is nearer the mark. The figures really do not matter; they are merely used for illustrating my theme.

Let us assume that an individual buys a piece of property in a rural or small community. Its carrying charges would not exceed $100 a month. That is, $100 per month would cover his taxes, heating and some repairs. Therefore, he can live in that house for $100 per month. He can also expect, if present conditions continue—and I do not see why they will not—his home to appreciate by at least $1,200 per year. I know of few homes which have appreciated less. That appreciation is the equivalent of a capital gain on which the owner pays no tax. This means that the individual has invested $30,000 and has provided himself with rent-free accommodation. He pays absolutely nothing for rent in the time he lives in the house. I know there are complicating factors; He may not have the money to put down. The point is, whether he borrows the money or puts it all down he is in a position to obtain a capital appreciation. Home ownership is a non-taxable benefit; he therefore receives a considerable benefit.

I will now consider the other man. If he takes his $30,000 and invests it in Canada Savings Bonds at 8 per cent, or in a trust company, bank investment or even Bell Canada, he gets a return in interest of $2,400, every cent of which is taxable. If he is in the 30 per cent tax bracket, and you do not have to be earning a great deal of money to be in that bracket, he loses $800 in taxes. This leaves a net return of $1,600 on his $30,000 investment.

What can this man rent for $1,600 a year? That works out to about $125 a month. If he has children and wants comparable accommodation to the home which cost him $30,000, he has to pay between $275 and $300 a month. He is being disadvantaged to the tune of about $150 a month because of the distortions in the tax system. The tax system does not have a concept like an imputed benefit. There is no imputed tax in our society and there is no wealth tax.

What are the consequences? The consequences are that anyone with any kind of intelligence in the investment field puts his money into a house, whether he owns the house or not. There are many people who buy homes to increase their investment portfolio or as a hedge against inflation. This results in all kinds of homes being taken off the market. It raises the prices of homes because of the increased competition for the available supply of housing. It puts more pressure on the rest of the people in the housing market whether they are renters or owners. Today many apartments are being converted from rental units to condominiums. The owners can get a better price from buyers of condominium units because of the tax benefits which a condominium owner receives. In some cities serious shortages of rental accommodation have occurred as a result of this.

Rather than take a system which is now very unfair and make it more unfair, this House should try to find a way of levelling off the differences between owners of property and persons who rent. I have no illusions. I hope what I am saying will not be taken out of context or misunderstood. Those who wish to own their homes should do so. What I am suggesting is that we should be fair to everyone in our society. While there are many middle income people who own their own homes, they are still the better off in our society. They at least have the down payment; they at least have some capital as compared with those who rent.

If we want to help those who need help the most, we should to a far greater extent be making public housing available to persons who do not have the down payment for a home and cannot afford to maintain a home with the idea that one day they will benefit from capital appreciation.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, we are now studying the motion of the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) the adoption of which would mean that the personal income tax act would be amended. I intend to address myself to that particular point and explain the effects of such a measure, without dealing with the reasons invoked by the hon. member for Portneuf, to justify those amendments.

Now, in the course of my remarks, I shall discuss amendments to the income tax act. I believe the former speaker, the hon. member for Waterloo Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), spoke on this matter.

The mover proposes a rebate on municipal taxes and the mortgage interest the citizen pays on his house. He seems to indicate that the amount paid in municipal taxes, or mortgage interest, to the extent of $1,000, could be deducted from the individual's income tax.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

It is taken for granted that the hon. member for Portneuf does not suggest a direct payment to the taxpayer whose municipal taxes and mortgage interest exceed his total income tax.

Mr. Speaker, the present income tax act does give, even now, a tax rebate or, as is more commonly called, tax credits in one case only: when the income of the taxpayer has already been taxed.

For instance, when a taxpayer receives income from abroad where a tax has already been paid, the income tax act grants a tax credit to be used against Canadian taxes up to a maximum equal to the amount paid to the foreign government. That credit is known as the foreign tax credit.

● (1640)

The dividend exemption is granted because it is acknowledged that dividends paid to a taxpayer originate from incomes already taxed at the corporate level. Apart from those two exceptions, the Income Tax Act grants no further rebates. Moreover, this legislation is based on the principle that personal expenses cannot be deducted. Municipal taxes and mortgage interests for a family dwelling surely belong to the category of personal expenses.

I would like to make now a few general remarks. First, the proposal of the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) is contrary to both principles of the tax legislation previously mentioned. By suggesting a tax rebate when no taxed income has been received, he is in fact suggesting that the government should pay the first $1,000 in interest on the mortgage interest and municipal taxes of each taxpayer.

Second, the proposal goes beyond the area of tax deductions. The cost of deductible expenses is at least partly supported by the taxpayer whereas the proposal of the member for Portneuf shifts the whole cost to the Treasury. In this connection, it is more generous than the deduction and therefore even more contrary to the income tax principles which forbid deduction of personal expenses.

First, let us consider the deduction of mortgage interests and municipal taxes while taking into account that anything true of a deduction is also true of a tax rebate except that the proposed tax rebate is even more generous than a deduction.

In principle, the purchase of a house is no different from that of any other asset intended for personal use even though it is generally the most important expense incurred by a taxpayer during his lifetime.

When the Royal Commission on Taxation reviewed some years ago the income tax system, it recommended upholding the principle that personal and living expenses be not deductible. It did not recommend to government a deduction for municipal taxes and mortgage interest payments.

Mr. Speaker, at the introduction of the tax reform in 1971, it was recognized that an incentive to becoming a homeowner was desirable. On the other hand, it seemed preferable to stick to the fundamental rule mentioned above concerning personal expenses deductibility.

The Income Tax Act provides therefore two significant incentives to acquire a home. The first is to allow the taxpayer to realize a capital gain on the sale of his house without incurring any tax obligation. The second is to continue the practice of not including in the taxpayer's income the economic advantage of owning a house. This advantage, which is the value of the house, can be considered the return on the capital he invested. Incidentally, notice should be taken that other countries, including Great Britain have added in the past this "alleged income" to that of the tax-payer for income tax purposes.

A comparison between the owner and the tenant of a dwelling should illustrate this. For instance, let us say that Mr. Leblanc and Mr. Tremblay each have $20,000 to invest. Mr. Leblanc buys a house and Mr. Tremblay, securities bringing him $1,000 a year.

Every year, Mr. Tremblay must add $1,000 to his income while Mr. Leblanc is adding nothing. Furthermore, Mr. Tremblay must pay rent and, of course, rent is not a deductible expense. It is unlikely that the $1,000 a year, once the income tax is paid, could get him a dwelling like the one Mr. Leblanc got with a capital outlay of $20,000. The result is that Mr. Leblanc is in a better position than Mr. Tremblay from the income tax point of view.

For example, let us assume that, 15 years later, Mr. Leblanc's house is worth $40,000 and Mr. Tremblay's securities are worth $40,000; should both decide to sell, Mr. Leblanc would get all the proceeds of the sale tax free, but Mr. Tremblay would have to add to his income half his capital gain, that is $10,000.

So, Mr. Leblanc has again the advantage compared with Mr. Tremblay. At the present time, the Income Tax Act favours considerably the home owner.

If the government, Mr. Speaker, were to pass a proposal for the granting of a tax deduction or rebate for the interest paid on mortgages, Mr. Leblanc would be still more ahead of Mr. Tremblay because he could purchase a house at a higher price, get a mortgage and deduct the interest. Not only would he not be taxed but also his eventual capital gain would be higher.

Thus, we see that the acceptance of such a proposal would be unfair to the tenant. It would favour the higher income taxpayer in two ways. Firstly, those who are too poor to save the down payment on a house could not avail themselves of this provision. Secondly, the person who owns a dwelling but who has only a small amount of income tax to pay could not take advantage of the full rebate. The maximum rebate of $1,000 would be a very important relief.

Even if the proposal were changed so that the amount was deducted from the income rather than from the tax, it should be much more beneficial to the higher income taxpayer than to the lower income taxpayer.

Having studied in general the advantages the Income Tax Act gives now to home owners and the effect that the deduction of mortgage interest and municipal taxes would have from the point of view of fiscal equality, let us examine now some examples of what would happen if the proposal of the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) was adopted.

Let us say that a taxpayer named "A" has a yearly income of $5,000, claims deductions of $4,000 and a taxable income of $1,000; his federal income tax in 1973 would be $75 and his provincial income tax, if he lives in Ontario, would be about $24, which totals $99. If he paid municipal taxes of $200 and made interest payments of $800, it seems he has a right to the $1,000 rebate.

However, the proposal submitted by the hon. member for Portneuf refers to an income tax abatement. The federal government would grant a credit of $75 and his income tax account would become nil. Likewise, considering that provincial income taxes are assessed in a number of provinces as a percentage of the federal income tax, his tax rate would also be nil.

The total benefit to the taxpayer would only amount to $99, or a little over 10 per cent of his housing costs, and this amount of $24 would have been contributed by his province of residence.

I should like to compare this case with that of another taxpayer identified as Mr. B, whose income amounts to $9,000; because of his $4,000 deductions, his taxable income amounts to $5,000. In 1973, he would have paid $875 in federal income tax and approximately $300 in provincial income tax—as an Ontario resident—making a total of $1,175. He would pay $400 in municipal taxes and $600 of interest on his mortgage. According to the motion introduced by the hon. member for Portneuf, this taxpayer would be entitled to a $1,000 income tax abatement.

He would then be entitled to a $875 abatement; therefore, his federal income tax account would become nil, and so would become his provincial account. He would therefore receive a benefit, not of $1,000, but of $1,175, that is, $875 from the federal government and $300 from his province of residence.

Let us now consider the case of Mr. C, a rich man with no mortgage to pay. Because he occupies a very expensive accommodation his municipal taxes amount to $1,000 per yer. He is entitled to a $1,000 exemption from the federal government and a $305 one from the provincial government, if he resides in Ontario. In fact, he has made a tax-free benefit of $305, or 30.5 per cent, simply by paying his municipal taxes.

Mr. Speaker, those three examples illustrate some interesting suggestions. First, the abatement would favour high-income taxpayer at the expense of low-income taxpayers. Second, the overall effect of the abatement would yield an amount greater than the taxpayer's taxes and mortgage interest or the maximum amount of $1,000, because in several cases, provincial tax is related to federal tax. Third, any abatement of this kind would represent a major cost to the provinces.

It must also be noted, Mr. Speaker, that two provinces, Manitoba and Ontario, in cooperation with the federal government, adopted a plan designed to grant tax credits in order to ease the burden of municipal taxes. But those plans have four major imaginative characteristics. First, they are meant to bring as much relief as possible to low-income people. Then, they reduce provincial taxes rather than federal taxes, with the result that provinces subsidize their own municipalities. Furthermore, they help tenants as well as owners. Finally, they pay money directly to people when the credit exceeds the amount of income tax.

The suggestion made by the hon. member for Portneuf would change those provincial plans by giving equal or greater assistance to those who own their own homes and pay high income tax. However, his proposal would not help those who benefit now under those provincial plans.

In conclusion, I will say that the possibility still exists that municipalities could increase their taxes and interest rates on mortgages could go up if the proposal made by the hon. member for Portneuf was accepted. In each case the homeowner is relieved of a major part of his cost which is passed on to the federal government. The result of this is that higher interest rates and municipal taxes would become less burdensome for homeowners. However, the federal government would have to raise in some way or another the money required to finance those abatements.

In conclusion, as I said before, we must consider the matter of revenues, Mr. Speaker. It is impossible to assess what would be the cost to the federal and provincial governments of the tax rebate proposed by the hon. member for Portneuf, but a tax rebate of $500 for half the Canadian taxpayers, that is to say 4 million people, would already amount to $2 billion. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that consideration must be given to the fact that if the federal government revenues are reduced by $2 billion, new taxes would have to be imposed in order to meet the requirements of government spending.

I have often heard in the past some remarks to the effect that spending could be reduced. But between 1958 and 1963, for instance, the government of the time, which had promised during an election campaign to reduce government spending, increased it every year.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes available I would like to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) who, with all the warmth of an undertaker at a funeral, dealt with the social problem which this motion attempts at least to begin to deal with in terms of an accountant. Surely there is much more to this problem than the cold, stark statistics the hon. member gave us just a few moments ago. Whether we like it or not—and this is not the place to assess blame—there is a housing problem in Canada and housing represents a prime social, economic and physical requirement.

The unmistakable fact is that, whoever is to blame—the hon. member for Gatineau can accept the blame on behalf of his party and the government he supports, if he wishes, and he was among the government's apologists a few moments ago—there is still the housing need to be resolved. I would rather look to the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), who at least came up with some rationale as to the principle, and I do not agree with everything he said, than the hon. member for Gatineau. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge suggested there was a danger that in this proposal we would be considering persons who own property as more valuable citizens than those who do not. To that extent he is right. If the wording of this motion represents the limit of our imagination in respect of an attack on the problem, then certainly the shortcoming of the motion is that it does favour home owners. That is not to say that during the study a committee would make, if the matter were allowed to go there, its good principle could not be extended to those who rent.

The hon. member said that some 50 per cent of our people rent property, and I have no reason to doubt that. In any event, I think the principle is sound in terms of permitting a lower rate of cost in respect of renting premises, and a lower number of obstacles in respect of ownership of premises or encouraging ownership. Because this is merely a first step, the hon. member for Gatineau speaking for the Liberal Party, ought not to oppose it.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge asked where we would get the money and how much it would cost in terms of revenue. My researchers have indicated that it would require something in the order of $1 billion a year. I want to say in passing that the contribution the Liberal government made to the corporations when it embraced them in the last budget—

An hon. Member: You supported it.

Mr. Baker: This government made contributions to the corporations through the tax cuts, and if you read the reports you will see that this has not done them very well. Those tax cuts were worth $800 million to the corporations, and I suggest that would make a good start in finding the funds to make up any deficit which there would be under the program proposed in this motion. The point is that the matter of housing and accommodation is extremely important and ought not to be treated with the coldness of an accountant, particularly when you consider the burdens of renters and homeowners today because of difficulties largely created by the ineptness of the policies of this government.

I was surprised to hear the supporter and apologist for this government take the position he did. Our policy, and we make no apology for it, is to go further than the principle behind this motion, which unfortunately is limited to only those who own houses, in an effort to assist persons who are renting property.

I notice from the reaction of hon. members on the other side that they are somewhat uncomfortable about the housing situation which bears as its monument to ineptitude a 9.7 per cent increase in the consumer price index as it relates to housing. Another monument to the government's ineptitude in housing matters is the fact that in the one year, 1972-73, the average increase in the price of a home in Ontario was 26.2 per cent, in British Columbia it was 22.9 per cent and in Alberta 20.3 per cent. Those figures are a condemnation of this government.

The average selling price of a house in the cities of Canada is an indication of the failure of this government. We had an increase in one year in this city of Ottawa of 21.7 per cent. Let hon. members opposite not speak coldly, in terms of tax statistics, because housing in this country has become a social problem largely because of the ineptitude of the government which those apologists are prepared to support in denying the goodness and reasonableness of this motion which represents a first step.
