THE OLD MAN'S DARLING.

Margery Hilton's fortune was made.

So she congratulated herself, as she gazed exultingly upon the diamond solitaire, which but an hour before Colonel Leslie had placed upon her finger. His words of love still vibrated in her ear; but strange to say, there was no responsive melody in her heart, although her lips had promised that she would become his wife. She was a young girl, not yet out of her teens, poor, beautiful, and ambitious. Col. Leslie was fifty, hale, gentlemanly, and rich. He had gone to the little manufacturing village of S— upon business, had accidentally met Margery, and having been captivated by her beauty, addressed her after a short acquaintance. And so, while he was being rapidly borne to his city home, thinking of the loveliness of the young bride he had won, and his abundant means of making her happy, Margery sat in her little chamber, dreaming bright dreams to be realized in the future. Her fortune was made! What did it matter now if there had been poverty and privation in the past; was not the future bright with wealth and splendor?

"I shall have diamonds, and lace, and society to my heart's content," she mused, gazing from her window into the cloudless east, where the round, rising moon looked softly into her glittering eyes. "I shall purchase them cheaply, perhaps, but I shall be an old man's darling." Col. Leslie said so to-night, as he placed the seal of our betrothal upon her finger. It is true that there is a great disparity of years between us, but an affianced wife with the contrary I have made. "I shall be clothed with purple and fine linen every day, and if I am not happy, there is no one to blame but myself. I shall no longer depend upon those who grudge me even a little morsel of cat's paw, and the wedding was a quiet one. The village had never seen a lovelier bride nor a happier groom, and when the minister's travel the couple took possession of their luxurious home, Margery again congratulated herself upon the brilliancy of her fortune. Her brightest days were meeting with fulfillment. She entered into her new life with the zest of her fresh young spirit, glorying in the beauty that had purchased her pleasures, and leaving nothing undone that could enhance her loveliness.

Col. Leslie accompanied her everywhere she wished to go, by word or look, earnestly.

"She will doubtless tire of this frivolity after a while, and then we will settle down in that happy home I have so often pictured to myself."

But time wore on, and not even a shadow of such weariness appeared to cloud the young wife's spirits. No gayer was produced which did not bring her to her feet, and no temptation met with impotence. But friends interposed, declaring that the lovely Mrs. Leslie should not make a recluse of herself, but that she should accompany her wherever she wished to go. He transferred her, as it were, to their protection, and day after day and night after night he was left alone as mere idly as though he had been but a hired attendant on the household.

Devoted as he had once been to his wife, the strength of his affection began to wane, and beginning to believe she had married him for his wealth, he determined to resist her gayer life in measure. He would make overtures to her reason and judgment, and if they failed, he would assert the authority which conferred in himself, and which she had so seemingly ignored.

He was in the library awaiting Margery's return, as usual, upon the evening of the most brilliant entertainment of the season. An hour after midnight she entered, radiant in velvet and diamonds. He rose and offered to remove her wrappings.

"Thank you," she returned lightly, still standing, "but I shall not undress here, and there is no need of unwrapping here."

"What say you please," he answered haughtily, resuming his seat, and gazing for a moment into the beautiful face before him; "but I am something tired, and to you which must be heard here and now."

"Margery gathered her cloak more closely about her shoulders, and resting both hands upon the back of the chair by which she was standing, said almost defiantly:

"If you have anything to say, please say it as quickly as possible. I am tired, and have need of rest; my demands for to-morrow are pressing."

"And mine, Margery, you will find, are more so. I have been trifled with, and my expressed desire neglected long that I stand first in this household, and that my wishes are entitled to some consideration."

"Perhaps you had better explain," she said, contemptuously; "I do not know that I have the honor of comprehending your remark."

"I shall certainly be more explicit," he answered, mildly, still determined not to appear irritated by her indifference. "We have been married almost three years, Margery, and in all that time I have been a slave to your bidding. It is true that I am more than twice your age, but I became your husband, fondly believing that in your love my heart would regain its youthfulness, and that you would find comfort and happiness in being an old man's darling." That I have been disappointed I do not deny; that you have been in can but infer. I realize now the vanity of the hope which led me to you, however, is this: that I desire you to relinquish, in a measure these frivolities, which are separating us so surely and so utterly."

Margery looked up for a moment into his face and said:

"Suppose I do not desire to renounce those pleasures which you seem to count so dearly?"

"Then I shall resort to that authority which, as your husband, is vested in me."

"And if I do not choose to submit to that authority?"

"That is not a question to be discussed between us," he exclaimed, emphatically, now thoroughly roused and irate. "I am master of this house, as you will find to your cost. That you have never cared for me except as the representative of the wealth which purchases your pleasures is too plain a case to admit of argument. But there is one thing of which you are ignorant; while you bear my name it must remain as unsullied as when you received it. I do not wish you to regret me a day, and yet as a tyrant, but this continued disposition must cease. I am too old to be dragged from one scene of dissipation to another—dead, as it were, to the wheels of your triumphal chariot, and since I cannot attend you, you must content yourself more at home. You can retire now, if you please, but remember that I expect your compliance with my wishes."

"Thank you, for the privilege," she returned, sarcastically; "I shall not readily accept it." Her eyes glowed like midnight stars, and upon her white forehead a gleam of perspiration sparkled.

"I do not love you, Col. Leslie, you seem to be well aware. I married you because I was dazzled by your money and your splendor which you placed before my eyes, and I sighed for them as those who travel in the sandy deserts of the East for water. Fashion and society are my idols, and disconnected from them I would not turn my hand to live another hour. I shall not give them up without a struggle, you may rest assured, but the victory will be yours, and I will live in your house, as I have lived in yours, as long as I can. I shall not give them up without a struggle, you may rest assured, but the victory will be yours, and I will live in your house, as I have lived in yours, as long as I can."

Col. Leslie, stunned and mortified by her confession, turned his face in his hand. This was the bitter ending of his pleasant dream; this cold, calculating woman the wife who preceded over his heart.

"She shall have her own way," he said, stolidly, resolved. "By word or look, I will follow her, for my wealth, she shall not be cheated in the bargain. She shall have her own way, as long as I can. I shall not give them up without a struggle, you may rest assured, but the victory will be yours, and I will live in your house, as I have lived in yours, as long as I can."

Two—four years passed away, and then the end of it came. Margery was sitting alone in her elegant drawing room, and when she heard the bell ring, she departed, when Col. Leslie entered, and drew a chair to her side. She looked at her husband with a cold, calculating eye, and said, as if she were speaking to a stranger:

"I have not seen you for some time, and I am glad to see you. I have been thinking of you, and wondering how you were getting on. I have been thinking of you, and wondering how you were getting on. I have been thinking of you, and wondering how you were getting on."

Of the Track.

FALMOUTH, Feb. 13. The Riviere Deloup train, excepting the engine, ran on the track about fifteen miles above St. Mary's, this morning.

No one was hurt, but considerable damage was done to rolling stock.

(Special Telegram to the Tribune.)

OTTAWA, Feb. 13.

Coffin has arrived.

Communication with British Columbia has been resumed.

A despatch which was received on Monday from the Dominion Government, reached Parliament Buildings as before.

Perfect order prevailed.

Dr. Heinycken presented a petition from the people, the substance of which is that he deems it unsafe to enter into any negotiation to alter the terms of the Dry Dock agreement until the Mackenzie Policy for revision of union terms are known; and that we are opposed to the Local Government agreeing to any change of terms proposed by the Dominion Government until such terms are submitted to us.

The first resolution was also sent to the city members supporting the Government, asking them to resign.

The Government sent to the Commander of the fleet asking him to station a gunboat near the Parliament Building.

The Commander refused, as there was no disturbance, and the civil authorities had not asked assistance.

DeCombes resigned his seat, leaving at night. He is supposed to be seeking a country constituency for the House of Commons.

Walker, Attorney General, is called on to form a Government, and it is considered that people's petition will be considered when House meets to-day.

Morton, one of the popular leaders, is a candidate for the House of Commons.

The Opposition press says nothing but disunion will ensue in the country, and charges that attempts to get British Columbia to change the terms of union is done that Dominion Government may have an excuse for violating the Pacific Railway clause.

Shimogus.

Mr. C. Sparrow has just received a fine lot of Shimogus oysters, which he will serve up in his best style at the Victoria Dining Saloon.

Last.

To-day, a lady's purse, marked L. P. with cards inside, "Mrs. J. A. Caldwell." If the finder will leave the same at Victoria Hotel will greatly oblige the owner, who will send a reward of $100.

The First Civil Case.

The card of John Melick, Esq., to the electors of King's Ward, as he will postively be a candidate for Mayor.

Slough Drive.

A very pleasant company of gentlemen, numbering twenty-six, drove out to the Clairmont House last evening. John McGowan had provided an excellent hot supper for them. After supper speeches and music were indulged in for some time, when the party returned to the city. All were delighted with the entertainment, and unanimously passed a vote of thanks to the efficient committee who had arranged and carried out the affair so successfully.

Caring.

The eight of the Ran and File that heat the Ships the other day were challenged by eight other members, and the match came off this morning with the following result:

Skip W. Snider, 81

Skip G. Jones, 14

Skip A. Brown, 11

Borrowed Feathers.

It is dangerous to wear borrowed plumes, or clothes that don't belong to you, but it is sometimes worse for the owner than the wearer. A young man from the country was visiting his brother in the city. Now, the latter one is a policeman, and a very efficient one. The young man saw hanging in the hall a nice warm looking overcoat, with brass buttons on it, and when going out, thought he would borrow it. He did so, and going up town, met some friends with whom he imbibed a little too freely, and, sad to say, disgraced the coat, by getting by getting quite balm. Mr. "Morality" saw him while drunk, knew he was a policeman by his coat, and at once penned a letter to a newspaper, reflecting on the force, and, though the Chief of Police says he did not, as stated in a morning paper, make this explanation, it is the correct one. It is very wrong to use the name of the Chief of Police without first consulting him.

City Police Court.

"Blessed are the peacemakers," was the pious remark of the judge in attendance at the police court this morning. They had expected to have had a case of assault and battery to engage their attention, but some friend had stepped in between the complaining parties and poured oil upon the troubled waters with such effect that the charge was withdrawn. On account of, and out of respect for, the peacemaker, the names of the parties shall not be published in this Tribune.

Yesterday afternoon Michael Cook and Thomas Murphy indulged in a free fight at Reed's Point. The police came along, captured Murphy, and afterwards secured Cook. They were fined $10 each for fighting in the public street.

The only person arrested for drunken-
