[From Chambers Miscellany.] BRUNTFIELD. A SCOTTISH TRADITIONARY STORY.

Among the many family quarrels which arose out of the civil contentions in Scotland during the reign of Queen Mary, there was one of a melancholy and remarkable nature, which sprung up between Stephen Brunt-field of Craighouse, and Robert Moubray of Barnbougle. Bruntfield was an adherent of the Queen; Moubray attached himself to Murray, who rewarded him with the gift of his deceased elder Lyother's estate, to the ex. clusion of his niece, Catherine Monbray.having succeeded (December 1536) in tak-ing Craighouse for the Regent, after a seige of two mouths, he harbarously slew its un lortunate proprietor while conducting him, under a promise of protection, to Edinburgh. The scene of this bloody deed is still pointed out at the upper part of a common in the southern environs of the city, called, from the circumstance, Bruntfield Links.

Bruntfield left a widow and three infant sons. His widow, the lady of Craighouse,
