"The farmers of this country do not need a great deal of pampering, but want the Government to help them in places where they cannot help themselves. What have the Government done for them during the past few cears? They established the Board of Agriculture, imported stock, created a stock farm, and travelled about the country with a couple of English delegates. The farmers don't ask In looking through the public accounts for 1883, we find that Mr. Henry R. Emmerson, Corner, has been paid $150 for professional J. The House last session understood the same proportion. Whether this would be a prudent expenditure or not he was not prepared to ray, but used it as an argument against the general policy of the government as outlined when they were in opposition. Last session their leader had promised to come back here and show a different state of affairs from those then existing. He charged that they came back here with unfulfilled promises and that the country was thousands of dollars worse of now their when they assumed power. One charge against the late administration was that the travelling expenses of its members were excessive. We find the Provincial Secretary now accounting for that item of expenditure during the past year, and excusing it on the ground that the travelling expenses of the present members of the Government bore about the same proportion as that of the last. Will the reform Qovernment shield itself behind the deeds of their predecessor? She came quickly up and knelt beside Olive, her rich velvet and furs trailing the ground, and put her arms round the trembling form, and laid the weary head upon her a word only kiesed the pale, tear-stained Olive. "He will come back, Mr. Fair-fax has gone to him, and will be here again very soon."

"In half an hour sir. That to three quarters. That to three quarters."

He looked at his watch.

"Eight o'clock," he said. "Then tell Granger to have the brougham round at half past nine."

"You won't sure go out again, sir?"

said the old woman, her anxiety mastering her usual awe of Mr. Fairfax. "You look hunted to death now, and my lady only said I was to let her know, and she would come to you."

"I cannot allow a lady to come to me when I can by any possibility go to her," said Mr. Fairfax, with a dreary attempt fax has gone to him, and will be here again. "And, Mrs. Grey — I are so hungry—pray let me have my dinner."

And the housekeer retired hastily with of far harsher, he put the thought from him except in loving pride; he would go away and hide his bitter shame somewhere—no matter where. And as some here and mother—he began to collect for the olden days of kindness And the housekeer retired bastily without further comment.
