Legal Decisions

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office—whether directed to his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrearages, or the publisher may continue to send it until the payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and leaving them uncollected, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

POETRY.

A Hymn for Harvest.

Now, to Thee, gracious Lord of the Seasons, be honor and glory and praise, That again in the joy of the harvest our jubilant anthem we raise.

Though many the fears that beset us, though faith wax feeble and cold, Thy bow, with its promise unbroken, glitters still, as it glittered of old.

Though weary we grow in our watching the weeks of the drought as they pass, When the earth is as iron beneath us, and the heaven above us as brass,

Yet the showers come back in their season; once more in the land there is seen The brook bimming over with crystal, the grass as the emerald green.

Though troubled the spirit within us, when the mist upon valley and plain Lies thick, and the clouds in their armies return again after the rain;

Yet the sun cometh forth as a giant, and after the tempest the morn Is doubtless and fair, and the color grows golden and rich on the corn.

For seed time and harvest we thank thee, our fears as the shadows have fled; Thou hast given his seed to the sower; Thou hast given the eater his bread.

SELECT STORY.

HIS OPPORTUNITY.

BY HENRY CLEMENS PEARSON.

CHAPTER XIX.—Continued.

"Have you ever seen the crucibles?" asked Sam, suddenly.

"Yes."

"Well, you ken that they are made of black lead? After a few heats they become spoiled and are cast aside. You have seen the broken ones in the yard, mayhap?"

"I have," replied Chamberlain.

"It was always the custom to throw them away, after they had served their purpose, as unfit for further use. Lamson, however, head of a scheme that was employed in other mills for converting them into stove-pipe; so he fitted up a room in the old stone mill, and put a man at work there, grinding them to powder. Pretty soon he had another man, then another, till he had now twenty men at work there."

"I should think it would be found out," observed Chamberlain.

"Who is there to find it out? These twenty men are out-bound. They are supposed to be at the regular furnace-work all night. Instead, they only put in about one-third of the time for the company and the rest for Lamson. They get the highest wages, and far from wishing to divulge the secret, they guard it with jealous care. I don't know what they would have done, had you knocked as you thought of doing."

"Is this polish well so'd?"

"Have you never heard of the Three X Polish?"

"I have seen it advertised."

"Well, that is it. All over the country it is sold, and the profits are very large. Lamson is a wealthy man."

"How did you happen to know all this?" inquired Chamberlain.

"It's a weary tale, I worked in the mill, and Lamson got his eye on me as a man who could be trusted. One day he tried by flattering promises, to get me to go to work at it. I always doubted me to go to work at it. I was told it was to be kept secret, I charged him with fraud to Robert Flint his employer. Oh, man! How angered he was! I thought he would strike me. He waked up and down his office and looked as ugly as the Devil himself. He told me that he would be with me if I did not join with him, and I foolish man that I was, dared him on."

"Did he ever seek to harm you?"

"He did that, and accomplished it, too. After he divulged the secret, I tried, as I told him I should, to get the ear of Robert Flint and to tell him of the whole affair, but found it impossible. During work-hours I was kept out of the office, and all letters that were sent to Flint were first opened by Lamson, and wherever I went I was dogged. At length he had his revenge. Do you note the scars on my face? on my hands? They are the marks of Lamson's vengeance."

"We must get out of this. The men have their noses in a little while, and it won't do for you to be seen. If Lamson heard of it he would get even with me in some way," said Sam.

"Lamson did it?" said he in amazement.

"You will not harm the lad, Sam?"

POETRY.

A Hymn for Harvest.

"Aye, he did it. He was permitted to do it. I bear him no ill will. He can harm me no more, for the Lord has raised up friends for me."

"Talking to yourself Tam?" said a deep voice, and Sam Putnam put his head into the little room. On seeing Chamberlain he came in with a curious look in his deep-set eyes.

"What is this boy doing here?" he said.

"This lad? Oh, he is George Chamberlain's son. I dunna ken what he wants here, except it is to talk with me."

"I suppose you know, young feller, that no one is allowed in this yard after nightfall?" said Sam.

"Then what are you doing here?" replied Chamberlain.

"That is none of your business."

"I tell you it is his business. He is George Chamberlain's son," asserted Tam.

"Are you?" was the answer with a piercing look.

"Yes, I am," said Chamberlain.

Sam meditated for a few minutes. It was evident that he had first thought of him as merely a common workman, who, through love of adventure, or through mere curiosity, had scaled the fence to see Tam; but now he saw his mistake. Manifestly the news of Chamberlain's relationship to the chief owner of the works made him feel ill at ease.

"Are you at work here for the purpose of spying on the men?" he asked with a bitter grin in his voice.

"Putnam," said Chamberlain, "I came here to learn the business. My being in the yard to-night is to discover what kind of work is going on at night, when the villagers believe that the men are at the smoking furnaces."

"That is something you had better not find out. Let me warn you, it is dangerous."

"I have told him all. It is right that he should know. I am not out-bound," said Tam.

Sam knit his brows, perplexed and angry.

"There is another object in my being here in the factory," continued Chamberlain, "and that is to see if I cannot do some good. The terrible state that has brought about on Step Street is as plain to you as to me. There is a fearful daily misery, that calls to heaven for help. It is my honest belief that there are hearts on the street, that even now the Holy Spirit is striving with. It is my wish to point some of those souls to the Way."

Sam listened as if for life.

"Do you honestly believe that the story of the Cross is true,—that Jesus Christ was the Son of God?" he asked.

"I am sure of it. The manner in which he has answered my prayers, and the sweet peace that has filled my soul, assure me of it. There is room for no mistake. The very dignity of truth is in the story."

"You are right! You are right," said Tam. "Those who come to the Lord with earnest hearts do not doubt. Their lives are filled so full of His presence that their is no chance for it. They know His voice and He calleth them by name."

"Why did he not keep Temple from falling?" inquired Sam.

"That is more than I can tell. I believe that John Temple will yet be saved. I know he was in earnest. Perhaps it was that the North Church might have a lesson."

"Mighty little they have profited by it," sneered Sam, the hard tone coming back.

"I am not so sure of that. The church has voted to banish all wine containing alcohol from the communion table. I believe that Mr. Snow is fervently praying for the Step-street people, and I also believe that his prayers will yet be answered."

Sam was struggling with a deep doubt of it. His whole bearing showed that the Spirit of Truth might triumph. As he glanced at Tam he saw his lips move and felt that he also prayed. Just then the clock struck eleven.

"We must get out of this. The men have their noses in a little while, and it won't do for you to be seen. If Lamson heard of it he would get even with me in some way," said Sam.

"Lamson did it?" said he in amazement.

"You will not harm the lad, Sam?"

said Tam, a ring of anxiety in his voice.

"No, of course not. His pious talk has made me chicken-hearted."

Following the giant, Chamberlain passed through the length of the yard, through the secret gate, and stood with him on the narrow foot path.

"I should like to ask you a question," said Sam, as they were about to part.

"Do you believe that a man whose whole life had been steeped in rioting and sin, who had done scores of things that he could never undo, who loved liquor more than anything else in the world,—do you believe that such a man could receive what you Christians call a new heart?"

"The Lord said, 'Whoever will, let him come.' That means just such a man as you describe, as well as any other. Repent and believe, ask for forgiveness, and turn from sin, and help is certain."

"I have believed ever since my wife died, years ago, but the turning from sin was what troubled me. I can't bear to expose others."

"A man cannot serve the Lord and the devil at the same time," said Chamberlain.

"Well, good-night. I think that you mean what you say, anyhow."

"Good-night, and God bless you," was the reply, and they parted.

Chamberlain had gone but a little way, when he heard his name called, and Sam came hurrying after him.

"There is one thing I forgot to say. You have made a discovery to-night that will change things here without doubt. I am glad of it, but I want it distinctly understood that if any penalty falls on the night gang, it falls on me as well. And, another thing, the little bit that I have talked about religion, to night, was not to do any of my misdoings. I am willing to face the music. Good night."

CHAPTER XX.

Those who are familiar with manufacturing, notice that the afternoon jar and roar of machinery has a deeper, heavier sound than in the morning. Possibly the cogs, that shoulder one another in ceaseless rotation, the whirling pulleys, the sweeping belt, weary with the day's labor, take this means of expressing a wish for relaxation. Whether or not this be true, it is certain that the men grow tired, and their work moves more slowly. About four o'clock comes the maximum of this afternoon lull, which, as soon as it is appreciated, is followed by a "purge" that carries things along till six o'clock brings relief. It was in the midst of this portion of the working-day that Sam Putnam stepped into the outer office, and knocked at the door of Lamson's private room.

"What is it?" was the curt query from within.

"Can I see you for a few minutes?"

"Who is it?"

"Sam Putnam."

"I'm busy. Can't you come again?"

"Yes," was the reply.

So astonished was the agent at the quiet answer, that he pushed open the door and looked, a trifle anxiously, at his caller, who was already turning to depart.

"Anything wrong?" he asked.

"I guess not; but any time that you are at liberty I have several things of some importance to tell you."

"Come in now," said Lamson.

Putnam entered and seated himself, waiting for the other to open the conversation.

"Well?" remarked the agent, impatiently.

"I wished to tell you that I am about to enter the service of another master."

"Who?" asked Lamson, in amazement.

The agent flushed scarlet, then turned white, and seemed, for the moment, completely confounded.

"You astonished me, Sam; I didn't know you cared for such things. You frightened me, too. Then it won't be necessary for you to leave me. You know I couldn't stand that," he said, finally.

"I am not sure of that. My profession is to be an honest one."

"Undoubtedly. You have my heart est sympathy. It is a wise and commendable step. How is that last flock? There has been complaint that it is flabby," replied Lamson, attempting to turn the subject.

"For some weeks I have thought of this, and am now determined to carry it through. My belief in the saving power of the blood of Christ is genuine. It can save me, and has done so. It can save you," said Sam, keeping to the point with quiet calmness.

"Are you trying to preach to me, Sam? You forget that I am a member of the church."

"I remember it, but being a church-member is not being a Christian. That you know as well as I. Do you believe that you are saved from your sins?"

"Aren't you rather too young a convert to be questioning me? How long have you been in the service of this Master?" asked the lawyer, with a forced smile.

"Three days."

"And what has become of the polish-works?" asked Lamson, involuntarily acknowledging that Sam could not consistently continue to defraud the company.

"I dismissed all the men Saturday night."

The agent's face became livid with rage.

"How dare you?" he said, leaping to his feet. "What right have you to discharge any men waiting to be filled?"

"I hired the men, and therefore I am responsible for them. You recognize the fact that I cannot do that work any more, and I am glad of it. I would give anything if I had never consented to it."

"You remember your oath!"

"I do, but it is my belief that all of this will be found out before long, even if I hold my tongue, as I shall under the circumstances."

The agent sat for some minutes in deep thought. Resting his face on his hand, he appeared to study the opposite wall, but when unobserved he was slyly examining Sam's face. The shallowest physiognomist would have ascertained, with confidence, that the giant was in earnest. His open face was not a mask behind which lurked any kind of guile. On the contrary, it bore the impress of truth, honesty, and determination. Lamson, with keen eyes, saw all this, and wondered how he should again get the upper hand of this most valuable man. He had little time to decide, for Sam was even then waiting for him to speak.

"Did it ever occur to you that I might possess a conscience?" enquired the agent.

"I suppose every one has something of the kind," replied the other.

"Well, I most certainly have one, and, Sam, this crucible business has troubled me a great deal. I believe from the first a curse hung over it. There has been a quantity of polish sold, but almost no money has come from it. We sell at so small a profit that the bad debts eat up everything. I am sick of the whole affair, and am glad you dismissed the men. I shall inform our New York agents that after this they must get some other firm to manufacture for them."

"You really mean to give it up?" asked Sam, in surprise.

"I do. It was a temptation to me at first, and I yielded, which was very wrong, but now that you have started to do right, I am going to bear you company. Only, one thing for the sake of my mother, this must be kept a profound secret."

Sam, with genuine fervor, promised that he would breathe no word of the affair. To tell the truth, he had gone into the office with a prayer on his lips that the former partner in guilt might be influenced to turn away from his sin. And now it appeared as if the prayer was answered.

Accustomed, as he was, to manipulating all kinds of men, Lamson perceived that he had again gained Sam's confidence, and it occurred that here was a good opportunity to learn more of his plans. Putnam, when feeling well, was apt to be off his guard, and, on matters of minor importance, could be easily drained of information.

"Where are you going Sundays? It won't do for you to spend them in the engine-house, as formerly."

POETRY.

A Hymn for Harvest.

"I shall go to Chamberlain's mission, I expect," was the reply.

"Chamberlain's?" repeated his listener, having heard nothing definite of the scheme.

"Yes," was the reply.

"That is a grand idea of his, but it will cost something."

"Only for the settees, lamp, desk, and books," replied Sam.

"Ah!" thought the agent, "Chamberlain is going to fix his store over into a mission-chapel. That was why he refused to throw up the lease." Aloud he said,—

"Young Chamberlain is a fine fellow. I like him better the more I see of him. His efforts at doing good are most commendable. I wish I could assist him."

"Do you mean that?" enquired Sam.

"Certainly."

"Then give us a ten dollar bill to get some mottoes for the walls," said Sam.

With a look in his steely eyes that boded ill, Lamson wrote a check for the amount, and Sam went off highly delighted. As for Lamson, he looked the door and indulged in a long, silent temper-fit, from which he came out pale, smiling as ever, and several degrees more crafty and unscrupulous.

The confession that Sam had made to Lamson was hard, yet it was nothing compared with one he was already preparing to make. For so many years the leader of the Tigges, and so thoroughly identified with them in their various escapades, he knew that only a manly confession of faith could give the impression he was anxious to give,—could keep out the suspicion that he had been 'bought up' by the church in the upper town. With great anxiety he waited for the next meeting of the engine-company, determined fully to state his new faith, and trust in the Lord to impress the honesty of his repentance upon the hearts of his comrades. At the hour of gathering he was on hand, and, as usual, was at once surrounded by a circle of admirers.

"Pass the elixer to the foreman," suggested one, and the deaconer was in an instant proffered to him.

"No, not any for me," he said.

"Aren't you ashamed of yourself, to ask the president of our 'reform club' to drink, after he has been laboring so many years to 'put down liquor'?" shouted a jolly voice, and at the remembrance of Parson Snow's mistake, there was a general shout.

"Take a hand at our table?" pressed a couple of the younger men, who were playing cards.

How hard it was to break in on all this real heartiness, and do as he had resolved. No man there suspected the change that had come over him. He almost wished that they were able to recognize the difference there. The liquor, the profanity, were so loathsome to him now; yet the hearty admiration of the men, and their friendliness, was more than ever grateful.

"You fellows shut up," said Joselyn, with a shake of his fist at the card-players, in simulated wrath. "What we all want, and what we intend to have, is a yarn,—one of Sam's stories. Such as no one else can tell. Hey, boys?"

"That's the talk; a yarn! a story."

"Will you listen to any story that I may read or tell?"

"Yes, yes; go ahead! The first man that interrupts will be fired down stairs."

The Harvest Home of the W. C. T. U.

Oh, ye children, great and small, Glad ones, sad ones, each and all, Children good and children bad, Blue-eyed girl or brown-eyed lad; We ones with your shining eyes, Shy ones with your swift smiles, Brave ones with your courage bold, True ones with your hearts of gold; From all lands where you hold sway In your wretched, winnowing way, Lift to-day triumphant voice; Shout aloud, be glad, rejoice.

Children, on this glad some morn' Years ago a child was born; Just a little girl like you, Hair of gold and eyes of blue; Full of fun, of romp and play, Happy all the livelong day; In a home where love bore rule, In great nature's kindly school, God's wise purpose placed her life Far from city's meddling strife; In the country's bush and rest, There He wrought this age's best.

Children, on that prairie home All good fairies used to come; Gifts they brought of rarest worth, Thoughts of friends, heavenly birth, Purpose both deep and vast, Hopes that must through ages last; Glimpses all of things ideal, Visions swift to know their rest; Courage brave and insight rare; Faith in God and faith in man, Head to toil and heart to plan.

Children, when this deed was wrought In the depths of God's great thought; When this child a woman grew God gave her a gift to you; Gave her mind with riches rare, Gave her love and gave her life; Heart and brain and hand and will, All her powers are for you still; Aye, a lowly strong she stands For all children in all lands. Do you wonder that I say "Shout aloud for joy today?"

Children, do you ask me how You your gratitude may show? Listen, God would have each life Like here, lived above earth's strife; He would have each home a place Where may shine His radiant grace; Bad gave wrongs are in each land; Men are fettered brain and hand; God calls you the wrong to right, Darkness dreads to turn to light; Thus you best can use His gift As with her the world you lift.

Children, hark, I hear glad feet Marching down the ages fleet. Look, I see a glorious band, Boys and girls march hand in hand. Brave they are and pure and true, Pledged God's holy will to do. Oh, the future grows all bright, As they turn glad eyes to light; With the love that cannot fail Upon this sick earth's soil, Children do I need to tell This band is our L. T. L.

Oh, ye children great and small, Glad ones, sad ones, each and all, This brave band has need of you; Will you join with purpose true? Will you help us in the strife? 'Gainst all wrongs which wreck man's life.

By God's gift of leader true, By His Gift of gifts for you; By your hopes for years to come, By your love of friends and home; As "Thy kingdom come" you pray Join our ranks this "Harvest Day." —Union Signal.

"Here I Am." There was a deacon in a certain church, says an exchange, in whose pew, one Sunday, a drunken man staggered and sat down. The preacher was discomfited on the prevalent popular vice. Soon he exclaimed, "Where is the drunkard?" The drunkard man was just far enough gone to think the call personal, so, rising heavily, he replied, "Here I am," and remained standing while the drunkard's character and fate were eloquently portrayed.

A few minutes later the preacher reached another head of his discourse and asked, "Where is the hypocrite?" Gently nudging his neighbor, the drunkard said in an audible whisper, "Stand up deacon. He means you this time. Stand up and take it like a man; just as I did! It will do you good!" The deacon was feebly doubled up. He'd have given twelve months' takings of hard drink to have been a clear mile down the gulch just then.

Temperance people will feel the strongest interest in the success of Dr. Nansen, the intrepid young explorer, who has recently set sail from Christiania on his long talked of expedition to the North Pole. Dr. Nansen has already made a famous exploration in Greenland and has learned to sleep in the snow in a bag of skins. In all of his expeditions, neither he nor his comrades have allowed a drop of alcohol to pass their lips.

Scraps for Odd Moments

Minard's Liniment is the best Seeing is not always believing. For instance, we see liars frequently.

Garfield Tea cures sick-headache This is the season of the year in which you can get what you do not want real cheap.

Minard's Liniment cures La Grippe You can count the times on your fingers when you have heard another talk to your satisfaction about himself.

Garfield Tea is sold by all druggists "Is she well married?"

"I should say so. She's been trying for years to get a divorce and can't."

Minard's Liniment, for Rheumatism What did you say when he kicked you down stairs?"

"Say? Why, we are not on speaking terms!"

The fashionable woman does not reflect much herself, perhaps, but she keeps her mirror reflecting pretty much all the time.

Dr. Arthur F. Abbott, 50 Main St., Waterville, Me., U. S. A., says: "I have received great benefit on several occasions from the use of Hawker's Nerve and Stomach Tonic, and can heartily recommend its use to any one requiring a bracing and Invigorating Tonic."

Dinner—Isn't this meat rather tough? Walter—There's no denying that, sir, but then we serve extra strong toothpick, with it.

Aluminum plates are used in Germany to engrave and etch upon, and is spoken of as a probable substitute for zinc and lithographic stones.

A Graduate of Toronto University says: "My children have been treated with Scott's Emulsion from their earliest years! Our physician first recommended it and now whenever a child takes cold my wife immediately resorts to this remedy, which always effects a cure."

There's nothing like discipline, but it don't do a buy any good to make him hoe potatoes in the back garden while a brass band is passing the house.

Several of our exchanges have been recently discussing, "The Best Way to keep Girls on the Farm." How would it do to tie them up matrimonyally?

A Trying Season. The winter weather of October is an almost certain forerunner of cold in the head and catarrh, but in Nasal Balm the sufferer has a remedy that speedily relieves and permanently cures the worst cases. A bottle of Nasal Balm should be kept in every household. Sold by all dealers or sent, postage paid, on receipt of 50c. for small or $1 for large size bottles, by addressing G. T. Mr. R. S. Hall, of the well known firm of Hall and Fairweather, St. John, N. B., writes: "The Hawker Medicine Co. (Ld.), St. John, N. B."

Gentlemen:—I have found most excellent results on several occasions from the use of Hawker's Nerve and Stomach Tonic, and heartily recommend it as most valuable restorative tonic and appetizer.

S. S. Hall. He—Don't you think it wrong for people to marry their intellectual inferiors? She—Yes, always wrong; and in some cases quite impossible.

Sleepy citizen—What do you want in my house? Burglar (presenting gun)—I want money. Sleepy citizen—Good Lord! Give us your hand—so do I.

C. C. RICHARDS & Co. Gent.—My daughter was suffering terribly with neuralgia. I purchased a bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT and rubbed her face thoroughly. The pain left her and she slept well till morning. Next night another attack, another application resulted as previously, with no return since. Grateful feelings determined me to express myself publicly. I would not be without MINARD'S LINIMENT in the house at any cost.

J. H. BAILEY. Parkdale, Ont. Wife—Did you notice, dear, at the party last evening how grandly our daughter, Clara, swept into the room? Husband (with a grin)—Oh, yes! Clara can sweep into the room grandly enough but when it comes to sweeping out of the room she isn't there.

Housewives in Florida scrub their floors with oranges. In almost any town in the orange-growing districts women may be seen using the fruit exactly as we do soap. They cut the oranges in halves, and rub the flat exposed pulp upon the floor. The acid in the orange does the cleansing, and does it well, for the boards are as white as snow after the application.

SKODA'S LITTLE TABLETS Cure Headache and Dyspepsia.

A LAKEPORT MIRACLE.

An Experience few Could Pass Through and Survive.

Broken down by Congestion of the Lungs and La Grippe—Weary Months of Sleepless Suffering—A Narrow Escape. From the Colborne Enterprise.

The village of Lakeport in the county of Northumberland is beautifully situated on the shore of Lake Ontario, two and a half miles from the town of Colborne. The location of the village is picturesque and healthy, and as a rule the inhabitants of Lakeport are a vigorous people, with very little troubled sickness. But there are exceptions, and even in this healthy locality occasional cases of suffering and long months of weary sickness are found. Among those thus unfortunate was Mrs. Mido Haight, who for nearly two years was a great sufferer, sickness having made such inroads in her constitution that she was almost a complete wreck physically. Although a young woman her system had run down until life had become almost a burden. She had consulted physicians and tried many remedies, but no relief was found. Her attention was finally directed to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and having read of the many wonderful cures accomplished through the use of this great life-saving remedy, was induced to give them a trial. The result exceeded her fondest expectations, and before long she was restored to her former health and strength. Having heard of this case the Enterprise reporter called on Mrs. Haight, and enquired into the facts, which are given almost verbatim in the following statement: "I was ill for about twelve weeks in the latter part of the 1891, while at home with my father in Trenton. I came to Lakeport, but was here only a few weeks when I was taken with inflammation of the bowels. After insufficiently recovered I returned to Trenton. I had not been at home long when I was attacked with la grippe, which nearly brought me to death's door. A physician was called who said my system was badly run down. This was in February, 1892, and I was under his care for some twelve weeks before I was able to get out of doors. When I was taken down congestion of the lungs and spine set in and then the trouble went to my throat, and ledly to my ears, causing me to sneeze which gathered and broke three times, leaving me quite deaf. I suffered the most excruciating pains, sleep left me and I could not rest. I suffered continually with cold chills and cold hands and severe headaches. The doctor gave no hope of recovery. As soon as I was able I returned to Lakeport, but did not improve in health and I felt that death would be a relief. In June, 1892, I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and had not been taking them long when the chills left me, my appetite improved, and I slowly regained my strength. I had not enjoyed for many long months. After using the Pink Pills for some weeks I began to feel as though I could stand almost anything. In the month of June, 1892, I weighed 114 pounds, and in April, 1893, I weighed 151 pounds, my greatest weight. I took the Pink Pills for about four months, but I now resort to them for any trouble, even a slight headache. I truly believe that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are worth their weight in gold, and I owe my health and strength, if not my life to them. My eyes were weak at the time I was sick, but I have had no such experience since I began the use of Pink Pills. I take great pleasure in thus making known my case, hoping that some fellow creature may be benefited thereby. I allow no opportunity to pass without speaking well of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I know of several persons who began their use on my recommendation and were greatly benefited by them. My father, who is some seventy years of age, is receiving great help from their use. I can truthfully say I cannot speak too highly of Pink Pills, and I would not be without them in the house under any circumstances."

Mrs. Haight's husband is also taking Pink Pills for rheumatism, and being present during the interview gave his testimony to their benefit to him. Mrs. Haight's present appearance indicates the best of health, and no one who did not know of her long suffering would imagine from her present appearance that she had ever been sick. Her case is one that cannot, but give the strongest hope to other sufferers that they too may be cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, whose action upon the human system seems almost magical.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., of Brockville, Ont., and Schenectady, N. Y. Pink Pills are not a patent medicine but a prescription. An analysis of their properties show that these pills are an unfailing specific for all diseases arising from an impoverished condition of the blood, or from an impairment of the nervous system such as loss of appetite, depression of spirit, anæmia, chlorosis or green sickness, general muscular weakness, dizziness, loss of memory, locomotor ataxia, paralysis, sciatica, rheumatism, St. Vitus' dance, the after effect of la grippe, scrofula, chronic cystitis, etc. They are also a specific for the troubles peculiar to the female system, correcting irregularities, suppressing and all forms of female weakness, building anew the blood and restoring the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excess of any nature. These pills are not a purgative medicine. They contain only life-giving properties, and nothing that could injure the most delicate system.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold only

The Groder Dyspepsia Cure Co.

GENTLEMEN.—I am 71 years of age. Have been afflicted with sick headache most all my life, which developed into Dyspepsia of a mild type about twenty years ago, and has continued to grow worse until during the past seven or eight years I have not been able to take a drink of cold water or milk, as they would produce severe pains and sometimes vomiting. I have been subject to severe pains in the chest, with dizziness, which have been more and more frequent during the past three or four years. My mouth was furrowed up in the mornings, accompanied with bad breath. My case was yearly growing worse.

During this long period I have tried many popular medicines, as well as prescriptions from the regular medical practitioners, but without producing any improvement.

In the fall of 1921 I concluded to try a bottle or two of your medicine and such were its effects that I continued it until now I can drink cold water of milk without any inconvenience. These dizzy pains are all gone and my mouth is as sweet as a baby's. In short your medicine has cured me and I am sure that all Dyspepsias can be cured by its use.

(Signed) W. H. ROGERS, Late Director of Fisheries for Nova Scotia.
