esteemed congregational minister will be read with regret, not only in Canada, but also in the United States. Mr. Ebbs was only taken ill on Saturday, and yesterday afternoon he paid the debt of nature, thereby ending a life that had been one unstained record of practical christianity. Mr. Ebbs for many years held a charge in Elgin, Ill., but finally returned to Canada to take charge of a church in East York. He was beloved by all who knew him, and of him it may well be said that he practiced as he preached.

The games Saturday both here and in Toronto were very bad, that one in Montreal especially, and we are very sorry to have to confess that the home team were lacking in that courtesy which should always be shown to the visiting club. The Ontarios were badly treated in every way. The field was in a horrible condition to begin with, and was not fit for any game of lacrosse, much less for a championship decision. The fouling was beyond belief and was indulged in by both teams, although commenced by the home men. We believe that the best interests of the game demand that fouls should be exposed, and as far as is in our power we will expose those lacrosse men deliberately fouling, showing favor to no team or man. The Ontarios are fit to be a first-class team, and show splendid material.

Will Mr. Nordheimer Explain?

The bottom has indeed fallen out of dence in the institution will be further shaken, and not only their interests, but dist judges for trying the cases of methothe interests of other banks and institutions will be placed in some jeopardy. It is Mr. Nordheimer's duty to tell the public just how much of the stock of the Federal bank is on margin, and how much is held by genuine investors. It is his duty to let the public know whether the bank's capital is, or is not impaired, whether in point of fact it has to-day three million of paid up capital or whether a good bit of this nominal capital is held by the bank itself. Even if a great portion of the capital is carried on margin, so long as it is carried by institutions entirely dista torate of the bank to come forward with their own means and put matters in the best possible shape; it is their place to buy up the floating attack, to wipe out the fictitious stock, to abundon the will practice of the persistency said:

In a fourth of July oration at Woodstock, the July oration at Woodstock, associated with the bank things are not in ized and public confidence has been shaken.

It is an old story, but it will bear constant reiteration, namely, that nine-tenths of all the trouble of banks arises through the violation of recognized rules on the part of the officials the bank. It has been pointed out time and again that banks ought to keep clear of stock-jobbing. but very few take the lesson. Once in a while a very clever deal is carried through, and the bank escapes, but for once that this happens twenty times the reverse is

The World has taken an outspoken stand in regard to this matter, and does not hesitate to state the case plainly and without dissimulation. People were surprised at the assurance, as they called it, of a public journal daring to criticise the management of a great bank; but what The World has done was to simply give expression from time to time of views, like ones to which were held by long-headed and conservative bankers. It may be true that stock jobbers have taken advantage of the decline in Federal stock, but that is no concern of ours. What we had to do was to point out the errors that were being made by the bank, and to eall on its officials to change their course. So far they have been too stubborn to take advice, no matter whence it came; if they are wise they will yet see the evil of their ways, they will yet reform their policy, they will take the public somewhat into their confidence and tel the real position of affairs, and they will yet with their means come to the rescue of course which is more in accord with the that they delay in making a statement will injure their position. Mr. Nordheimer has now the floor.

the means to build up a great university; they have enough to do in missionary work, enough to do in supporting their ministry in poorly settled parts, and every that is diverted from the legitimate objects of the church, and put into schemes that are unnecessary cannot be justified either by reason or by policy. The methodist church has enough to do to train its ministers in theology without attempting to teach them literature, to teach them science, to teach them philosophy, when it can have this work done gratis in much better shape at the previncial university. A church in this age, and in this country has no business to establish faculties in medicine and in law, when its resources to carry out its grand aim, the spread of the gospel, are weakened by the misapplication of its funds. If the methodist church was made up of wealthy men who would give freely of their means to this end, and if the church had all the money it wanted for missionary work and for the training of its ministers, little objection could be raised to such a policy; but when things are as they are, when their ministers are either by reason or by policy. The methraised to such a policy; but when things are as they are, when their ministers are only fairly trained and very poorly paid, it does seem utter foolishness to apply funds in the direction indicated. It is twenty years since Chief Justice Harrison said that by this time our disparity of numbers with the United States would have so lessened that United States would have so lessened that we could take care of ourselves. But it has not lessened—they have grown faster than we. Free nations grow. To obtain the strength necessary to maintain independence we must first become so. deeply, and write so piteously, concerning the immediate onslaught by the states,

Canada—have they more lives each to lose than have those who are prepared gladly to risk it? They are not likely to continue in the safety they profess to value so highly. There never was, in the history of nations, a country in more danger than is Canada to day. Two great races are on these men are and always are the very petrels who crest the storm edge. Did we not hear them before the Russian war, which was to be impossible—before that between Austria and Prussia, which was to be still more impossible—before that of France and Germany, equally impossible—before that of the north and south, most before that of the north and south, most impossible of all? Is it not in the blood?—when one throws a stone at another will he not return it lest he break his rose trees? When once the sound of conflict fills the air, then brotherhood, and commerce, and all impulses of friendship, and all feelings of kindness, are as nothing in the upspringing whirlwind of hate, and the fierce desire to overcome.

If Canada wish peace and prosperity, now is the time to secure it. She can secure

And, above all these, to us is now the opportunity of a more respected career than our past has given. Shall we grasp the opportunity, or shall we remain, burrowing in the colonial mud, till the rush of conflict none of ours trangled us for ever hereath the surface?

Toronto, June 23. PROVINCIAL. The Anti-Liquor Craze.

To the Editor of The World. SIR: The newspaper world (nothing personal) seems to be wholly engrossed by the arguments, pro and con, re stimulants, Many spend their energies on insisting that for the christian sacrament only unfermented wine should be used. Why should christian take exception to anything because of its composition? The whole structure and superstructure of christianity is faith. Ergo, a christian can take wine or whisky and—having the quantum sufficit of faith—it is to him the symbol of his salvation.

A recent editorial of the Globe suggested that it would be unwise to say that because some geniuses have drunk to excess that a prohibitionist or a teetotaler must be a dullard. Well, after analyzing the said editorial, I cannot class the writer with the former.

But when one refers to Christ turning water to wine, these goody-goody people say, Oh, there was no such thing as drunkenness in those days. No? as drunkenness in those days. No:
Well, there certainly was a large amount of pauperism and crime. And yet, brushing facts to one side, they say the crime, etc., of to-day is distinctly due to liquor.
They point to the Rechabites as a prohibitionist community. Well, what hibitionist community. Well, what mighty deeds are recorded of these people? None. They are extinct as a tribe.

The men who do the work of the age—a fast, progressive age—require all the stimulation nature can give them. These men are not the pleachers and pastors—the men of broadcloth, white ties, sleek faces and good salaries.

The Chinese Question in Canada.

To the Editor of The World. SIR: The advocacy of Chinese imm gration is no doubt often coupled in the mind of the reasoner with a penchant for the exploded doctrines of Laissez-faire or Laissey-aker, as they have been variously termed. The sufferings of christendom for an entire century from the trade prac-tices initiated by the sway of those non-human doctrines are only now beginning human doctrines are only now beginning to be understood. We may, I think, sus-pend our judgments of the Chinese ques-tion until we have ascertained whether those people could be put upon the land to cultivate it. If that is impossible, it seems reasonable that we should only allow to be imported so many of those heathen birds of passage as will really conduce to the prosperity of the youthful and growing settlements. Protection of the community

To the Editor of The World. SIR: Could you inform me whether or a right to act as in the following: A lady of this neighborhood whose little girl attends the public school in the vicinity, sent a note desiring that the girl might not be exercised for the street parade of the school children.

It would seem that the master, who doubtless wants to make as good show of his scholars as possible in the semi-centen-nial, is somewhat incensed against the girl alluded to, as well as some others who are alluded to, as well as some others who are not joining in, for to-day while the processionists were drilling the non-processionists were obliged to stand in the heat and watch their maneuvres. Afterwards they were dismissed just late enough to be caught in the storm and many were soaked through by the time they arrived home—while those who are going to parade were let off earlier and so escaped all the wet.

The Party Papers on the Loan.

To the Editor of The World. SIR: What a godsend it is to have paper like yours where men not insane, politically, can ask a question and make a remark without violence and without the stupidity of party passion! I wish to ask the Mail and the Globe to discuss the new the Mail and the Globe to discuss the new loan from a strictly financial point of view. So far their articles have been, to my thinking, absolutely silly, so destitute have they been of technical knowledge and of evidence of financial skill and experience. Wild screeds like from a bag pipe in the hands of a drunken piper, such have been the Mail and the Globe's articles. The Mail editor we know despises business and humors nothing beyond "satirical literature" and very little of that, but surely the Globe could get somebody to talk sense on the matter. the matter.

Certainly she did as she pleased, with an unobtrusive independence which hardly need to have troubled any one.

She had gone out that day after the storm to see the sea dash and roll in its strength. The sun shone brilliantly on its dancing white caps as they settled gradually into calm.

She had sat a long while on the reals.

ally into calm.

She had sat a long while on the rocks, her great dog at her feet. She was a long way from her hotel; but Juba waited down the beach with her carriage, and her aunt sat among the cushions and read.

There was no one but Peri to see how beautiful Laura Vale was as she sat against the ragged black rocks, her dress of steel gray kirtled from her slight feet, her graceful shoulders and arms huddled in a soft crimson shawl.

ful shoulders and arms huddled in a soft crimson shawl.

The sunshine struck her perfect profile under a black soft-plumed hat, warming her cheek, and bringing into relief the firm dimpled chin; and those who had called her cold would not have accused her thus then, so happy the smile of her red lips, so warm the light of her hrown eyes.

She loved the sea—thrived upon its breath—delighted to be quite alone with it. So she did not mind how the hours went, though Aunt Pardon turned her hundredth page and yawned among the purple cushions.

"Come here, Sinbad!"

"Come here, Sinbad!"

A mellow masculine voice came from among the rocks—too pleasant and manly a voice to whiten Miss Vale's cheek with fear, certainly; but with one swift silent motion, she rose to her feet, pale as if she had seen a ghost.

She glanced around. A little behind and just below her stood a gentleman—a blue-eyed man with a fair beard, a great tawny dog fawning at his feet.

He met her startled gaze with one equally startled—then instinctively lifted his hat. After an instant he came slowly up the rocks, almost reluctantly it seemed. He, too, was pale now.

"Laurel," he said gently.

You might have understood then why people called Miss Vale cold.

Her fair mobile countenance seemed to harden over her spirit like a mask. She had but one thought—that after five years' suffering she had come to be happy, when here, before her again, stood the destroyer of her peace.

She made a swift involuntary gesture, as I could not measure you, appreciate you as I have done since. I was a fool to be

"Baron! where are you?" called a querulous voice.

A dumpy figure in blue had paused at the foot of the rocks, and a pair of lacklustre blue eyes now looked up at them, the owner apparently not caring to ascend. It was a blonde, faded, sickly face, fretful and careworn, though Mrs. Alverton had evidently once been very pretty.

Lifting his hat to Laurel, Baron Alverton turned, went down the rocks and joined her. A few sharp words followed, which Laurel overheard.

The following winter develops a strange surprise at Nutwood, Miss Vale's home. Her aunt, Mrs. Pardon Ardley, the mostell-meaning of disagreeable persons, chose engage herself in marriage to Mr. Abel Craberee, the sourcest of bachelors and Baron Alverton's uncle. Laurel was speechless with surprise.

"Why do you marry him, Aunt Pardon?" she asked at last. "Are you not happy here?"

"Because he is rich," answered Mrs. Pardon, "and I want a home of my own. I've no doubt you mean well, Laurel, but I don't always approve of your ways."

Her niece was silent, and the preparations for the wedding commenced. If Aunt Pardon did not approve of Vour ways."

her carriage, her servants, for this momentum occasion.

With great patience Miss Vale allowed herself to be set on one side in her own house while the arrangements for her aunt's marriage went on.

"So vexatious!" cried Aunt Pardon.

"That disobliging Miss Trimmings absolutely refuses to come out here and make my dresses, but says she will undertake my dresses, but says she will undertake them if I will come to town for a few days. I suppose I must do it, and Mr. Crabtree proposed last night that we come to his

There were only a few people at the Dolphin house—it was late in the season. The maple woods made a low line of deep red against the autumn sky; the ladies, too, muffied scarlet shawls over their white dresses as they sat on the piazza of the hotel overlooking the surf, listening to the band which still played jubilantly in the sunny afternoons.

The heiress, Miss Vale, who had come late, remained later. She liked the cold breath which crisped the surf, turned the maples red and made her horses dance over the smooth floor of yellow sand which stretched for miles along the bay.

Her faultlessly beautiful face, and the more world-loving one of her aunt, daily met the view of the loungers as her sleek bays champed their silver bits down the shore road.

She was more often seen abroad in her carriage, but, being an old traveler, she was a good walker, and often came into tea with a dash of red in her smooth cheek, her brown hair, damp with spray, curling closely about her temple. She had been Laurel and her aunt were at Mr. Crab Laurel and her aunt were at Mr. Crabtree's boarding house—certainly a quiet and luxurious retreat enough.

Laurel had been loth enough to come; but here she was, and Mrs. Pardon, at least, was satisfied, for the mornings were endless rounds of shopping and the afternoons momentous periods of trying on the new dresses.

As for her niece, her greatest apprehension was that she should encounter Baron Alverton; but a little dissimilarity in meal

Alverton; but a little dissimilarity in meal hours warded off this event until the very last night of her stay in town.

She had been restless and could not sleep. At about 11 o'clock she thought she would go to her aunt's room, as that lady did not retire early, and get a certain book, which might divert her mind and quiet her nerves. As she passed along the rich halls in her velvet-shod feet, a door was flung open and a wild-eyed maid rushed out.

"Oh." she cried, at sight of Janual

"Call her husband—a doctor—quick!"
exclaimed Laurel.

With incredible strength, she lifted the nelpless woman in her arms and laid her upon the bed.

In the next moment of horror she saw that Mrs. Alverton had ceased to breathe.

white and shocked, he gazed at the pallid face upon the pillows.
"It has come as I feared," he cried, clinching his hand upon his harassed brow.
"She is dead from an overdose of arsenic." And in a few moments all the house was startled by the sad truth.

The 1st of March Mrs. Pardon Ardley became Mrs. Abel Crabtree.

It was a strange mockery of flowery symbols and lovers' vows to Laurel Vale. Indeed, so strange a shadow seemed upon all the world that she would clasp her hands over her eyes, sometimes, and pon-der as if in a nightmare that must break

"No excuse could be invented for me," he went on. "You were one of the sweetest, truest women that ever breathed, and my promised wife. Not a shadow stood between us when I met Nellie Dimpleton. But I knew less of women than I do now.

There Shall be no Alps.

I could not measure you, appreciate you as I have done since. I was a fool to be won from you by a pretty face, though that face had set the artists crazy. Ah well, you do not even care to listen to me!"

She had gathered up her gloves and parasol to depart, but paused.

"Laurel," he continued, "in the old days you were never revengeful or vindictive. If you were both now, you might glost over the misery of my married life. I am utterly wretched. Let this just decree repay you for my base desertion."

"Baron! where are you?" called a querulous voice.

Adumpy figure in blue had paused at the foot of the rocks, and a pak of lack-lustre blue eyes now looked up at them, the owner apparently not caring to ascend.

There Shall be no Alps.

To an ordinary man these would have seemed simply in surmountable, but Napoleon responded eagerly: "There shall be no Alps." So the famous Simplon pass was made. It seems to us that the government has dilly-dallyed too long with the question, and has displayed anything but back bone in carrying out a decision long ago arrived at, namely, that the time for erections and safer ing a new, more commodious and safer building had arrived. A reasonable expenditure on such a building would be endorsed by the province. The tinkering policy is on the penny-wise and pound-foolish principle. It should not be continued.

A WINTER AT BELLE ISLE.

The Light-house Keeper's Report, just brought in.

The first steamer to come in through the traits of Belle Isle this season was the "Titania," of the Donaldson Line, just arrived. She supplied the lighthouse keeper at that lonely point with provisions keeper at that lonely point with provisions, and brought away his report for the past winter. The report mentions that the last vessel seen was a schooner, bound for the South, on November 26th, the last steamer having passed out five days earlier. The various entries during December and January shows that there was a good deal of slab ice then floating in the straits, but on January 31st steamers could force their way through. On March 29th there is this eatry: "Straits full of large sheets of ice; would be difficult for any vessels to pass through," From that date to April 8th there was a strong east wind, with heavy rain; ice driving up the straits; thick weather on the 10th, there was an immense body of ice in all directions; no clear water to be seen; eighteen large ice-bergs in sight outside, one being a mile long and about two hundred feet high. For the rest of April the straits were long and about two hundred feet high. For the rest of April the straits were blocked with ice in all directions; one ice-berg that drifted out on the 20th was five miles long, and looked lie an island with a chain of hills through the centre. During May the straits were so badly blocked that no ship could force in in any direction. Of two hundred icebergs seen coming down from the north-east, one was ten or twelve miles long. From near Cape Bauld to White Island the icebergs were almost packed together. The first vessel seen was a small eraft off Quirpon, on May 22. From June 4th to 7th there were fresh west winds, and the straits were clear of ice for the first time in view months and e for the first time in viie months and

From the New York Times. It has been the habit of people addicted to false teeth to declare that in point of comfort they are vastly preferable to genuine teeth. It seems very improbable that these people speak the truth. No man with a cork leg discourses on its vast superiority to a congenital leg, or remarks that he never knew what comfort was until he had got rid of the original leg. No woman with a glass eye insists that it is better than a real eye, and that she would not exchange, if she could, for the best triple-combination rectilinear achromatic eye ever given by nature to a human being. ever given by nature to a human being.
The owners of glass eyes and wooden legs

The fashion is one that is reasonably sure to become popular. Teeth can be made as ornamental in their way as eyeglasses, and one Chicago lady already wears sixteen pearl teeth, beautifully set in chased gold, which excite universal admiration. It is however, to the moralist chased gold, which extree universal authorises that the fashion will be especially welcome, since it will put an end to the habitual and shameful mendacity which pretends that false teeth are better than real ones.

HOW HAPPY THESE PEOPLE ARE?
It is a hot summer night. The windows are wide open and there is a free circulation of nice, cool, refreshing air all through the room. The files and the mosquitoes and the pinching bugs and other "vile reptiles" who spoil our midsummer night dreams are buzzing and singing and growling away OUTSIDE, but they CAN'T GOME IN. Cause why? These people are wise and have had all the windows supplied with BARNIM'S WIRE SCREENS. Ready-made door and window screens on hand and competent men sent to measure and put them up at reasonable prices. After the Femi-Centennial there is going to be a rush. Whole legions of files are on their way thither to eat up the fragments of sandwich and Bologna sausage and pumpkin pies which our country cousins will leave be ind, and there may be a plague of files worse than that of Egypt—for all we know.
