Canadian Enemies of Canada. In the United States freedom of speech and a free press have, we believe, gone to about the utmost verge. And party violence, too, has gone as far there as in any other country we know of. Short of actual war, no more bitterness of party strife than what prevails there a great part of the time need be looked for anywhere, Political glove fights are not the rule over the border; it is mostly hard hitting.

One thing to be remarked, however, no democrat ever says that his country is good is still needed. for nothing because the republicans are in power; nor does any republican say the same thing for the opposite reason. What American, either democrat or republican can be got to say that the Northern Pacific railway goes through a howling wilderness, and will never pay? Yet there are Canadian enemics of Canada who would do their little best to wreck the Canadian Pacific, though it may not amount to very much after all.

Mayor Manning's Message. During the recent mayoralty contest, the supporters of Mr. Manning laid great stress upon the fact that their candidate was pre eminently fitted for the position owing to his large business experience; exacative ability; sound judgment; intimate knowled a of municipal law; his acquaintance and familiarity with every-. thing pertaining to our civic affairs; and - although we did not share in the high opinions expressed and the eulogiums showered upon Mr. Manning, yet, after making due allowance for the enthusiasm o his supporters, we confess to having looked forward with some degree of interest to his message on assuming the civic chair. As we have already stated Mr. Manning was not our choice, but having attained the position of chief magistrate, he is entitled to our respectful consideration and though we may not agree with every thing he may say or do, we sha endeavor to criticize him fairly.

press our disappointment, not only at the one, but the matter, of his inaugural The former is so lugubrious that a stranger to our affairs would imagine that we had just called halt in a career of careless management and reckless extravagance. Attention is directed to the increase in the city debt, viz, from $2,600,000 in 1873 to $7,000,000 in 1884; not one word as to the necessity for the increase, or the nature of waterworks, which Mr. Manning admits is self-supporting, alone represents nearly. half the increase. Comparisons are made between the appropriations of the two periods, and yet notwithstanding the annual assessment has increas and the population nearly /30,000 within the period mentioned, not a syllable is used in justification or explanation of the increase. Again, "carefully prepared statements" are submitted of the debt, and population of about twenty American cities, but for what purpose does not ap pear. We presume, however, that it is intended to harmonise with the other portions of his worship's deliverance, and that the inference is to be unfavorable to Toronto. As regards the financial portion of the message, we regret having to characterize it as lacking in lucidity and completeness, crude, and calculated to convey an unfavorable impression of the past administration and present position of the city, and fully justified the remark of Ald. Walker that further information should have been given by his worship We heartily endorse the mayor's

A. B. C. against it-we predict that the time is not ar distant when the whole of the public works will be made on that principle. On the whole the mayor's remarks are weak, misleading and disappointing. We say this in no unkind spirit. We believe Mr. Manning is prompted by an earmest desire to assist—he cannot do more—in securing honest-and with due regard to efficiency — economical administration; but we think he has entirely failed in presenting such an exhibit of our municipal progress, present position and future policy as we were led to expect, and which

About Pauper Immigration With regard to what our correspondent Workingman" said in yesterday's paper on assisted immigration of paupers into Canada, we have only a few remarks to make at present.

who would rather not see them. Mr. Laidlaw would make an excellent ommissioner to the Antwerp exposition His knowledge of such affairs, his intimate acquaintance with our products of both soil and factory, his urbane manner, his fluency, well fit him for the post. The government ought to recognize his long services in the cause of the country. Moreover, he is not a strong party man; in matters of fiscal policy he has always taken the fair-trade position; and throughout all his life he has been on the side of law and order. The city council might pass a resolution asking Sir John to honor Toronto by appointing one of her old pionsers to Antwerp. It is only fair to Mr. Laidlaw that he should know the decision of the government as early as possible, so that, if it be favorable, he may begin to brush up his German and get his letters of introduction to Bismarck ready. It is in this spirit therefore that we ex

It is aggravating to hear that the pumps sent from England, for use over the desert route up the Nile, turned out to be of no use at all. Also, that the meat cans when pened where found filled with sand. Honesty and capacity in obtaining army supplies seem to be every bit as necessary as good generalship. In furnishing these supplies England cught to beat the world, owing to her immense capacity of purchase, manufacture and transportation. And yet she is sometimes woefully behind in these very particulars.

It is possible that a bridge of gold may turn out to be England's way of escape rom some part of the Egyptian difficulty. When Ismail Pasha some years ago wanted money very much, Disraeli borrowed four millions from the Rothschilds and bought out his interest in the Sues canal. It proved a good investment, and pays wonderfully well. Now, the sultan is always to be the best blood purifier in the market. derfully well. Now, the sultan is always in want of money, chiefly for his own personal extravagancies, and he may be willing to sell out his interest in Egypt, as the late khedive sold his in the Suez canal. It would probably be cheaper to buy the sultan out than to fight him.

The Egyptian question is evidently the nost pressing one of all that the Gladstone overnment has to deal with at present. And we may surmise that the cabinet coun-

Editor World: I notice in your paper tleman particularly wishing me to under-this morning an account of a supposed plot stand "that it was Arab custom to drink to blow up the American legation at London. Whether there is anything in it or not is, of course, a matter of conjecture. There is, however, considerable food for reflection in view of the mere possibilities of such an occurrence.

That the American government has neg-

Was it the dominion government that brought the Conway street paupers to Toront? We think not.

The solid truth of the matter is that both governments have gone wrong in this business, and that both are now trying to get right. But things that have gone wrong cannot always be righted in a day, and the evil continues for some time affer it has been determined to put a stop to the migration business of next season will be conducted in a manner very different from that of former years.

Catarrh-A New Treatment. Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon treatment for catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent, have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the ess startling when it is remembered that not five per cent, of the patients prosenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefited, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished, the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. Dr. Alexander Andover threw himself into the big leather covered chair before his office fire with a weary sigh. He was a fine looking man of 30; not handsome, but noble and manly looking-one to be trusted forever, with his broad, white brow and grave, clear grey eyes. His lips too, under the full brown beard, were as fine as a woman's, without lacking in strength and firmness. Dr. Andover's patients-especially the poorer class and children-turned to him instinctively for advice and sympathy. He was one of those grand, kingly natures which seem made for leaders and comforters. Poor old Betty Cary, a bed ridden paralytic, could not speak of him without shedding tears of gratitude. Little Jane Ellis, suffering with an incurable hip-iace down to his own. was one of those grand, kingly nature Ellis, suffering with an incurable hipdisease, looked upon him as a sort of good on earth. But fate had lately frowned upon him. In the first place, the bank in which the greater part of his snug little fortune was deposited had failed, and directly upon this came the news that some mining stock in which had been deposited by the stock of the same below to the same below to the same mining stock in which had been deposited to the same mining stock in which had been deposited to the same mining stock in which had been deposited to the same mining stock in which had been deposited to the same mining stock in which had been deposited to the same mining stock in which had been deposited to the same mining stock in which had been deposited to the same mining stock in which had been deposited to the same mining stock in which the same mining stock in which the same mining stock in the same stock in the sam this came the news that some initing stock in which he had invested was worthless, or nearly so. The doctor did not fear poverty himself—his practice brought him a comfortable income, for the rich appreciated him as well as the poor—but miles away in a distant city there was a lovely girl whom he had hoped to call wife by Christmas time. A girl who, though not wealthy herself, had been extravagantly educated by her uncle, in whose luxurious home she lived. He knew that not the slightest privation had ever come to her; was a petted darling with hands like a baby's. He had never questioned if the knew anything about work—the idea in connection with Maud Everleth was absurd. He had been able to take her to a but that was gone now.

Lovely, dainty, useless, as she seemed,
Dr. Andover had poured the whole passion of his great heart upon her; and you are not to think him weak because just at first, when the news of his ill-fortune came to him, he shrank and trembled under it, thinking of the girl he loved; for he must give her up. There was no doubt in his give her up. There was no doubt in his mind about that. He could not ask her to share the fate of a poor physician who de-pended upon his fees tor a living. He even pended upon his ices for a hying. He even smiled grimly in the midst of his sufferings at the thought of Mand in a calico dress, mixing up bread or washing dishes with her white, slender fingers, which he had only seen toying with her fan, working at embroidery or dashing over the keys

So Dr. Andover had written her a brave farewell letter just a month before the of his altered fortunes and releasing her from her engagement to him, and he had eived no answer, although it was now

Christmas week. The doctor was worn out with exposure to rough weather and many sleepless nights.
The demand upon his time and strength had been greater than usual, yet he had replied to them all, never failing in kindly courtesy beside the couch of Betty Cary

It was Christmas week, and Maud was to have been his own next Friday night. This thought tortured him unceasingly, together with some words in a letter which ter from an acquaintance who was visiting in the city where Maud lived.

"I met your 'fiancee' at a party last evening," he had written, "I admire your choice. She was the brightest, loveliest there, and the most graceful dancer."

Dr. Andover experienced a cruel sense of desolation as he turned that sentence over and over in his mind. Maud had not loved him after all. She could be gay and bright when they were forever separated!

The office fire smouldered to asnes, and still he sat there, still and sad, until from The office fire smouldered to as nes, and still he sat there, still and sad, until from sheer exhaustion he fell into an easy slumber. About midnight he awoke, alternately burning and shivering, while a dull pain throbbed in his temples.

The doctor's apartments were commodious and comfortable. A large chamber opened from his private office, which latter pened from a large receiving room. He was his own patient now, so he hastened to bed; and when his landlady came half delirious.

Christmas morning came bright and frosty—a day after St. Nicholas's own heart—and the doctor, a trifle better, although weak and languid, opened his eyes to close them again immediately with a little pang. This was to be his wedding day! He could hear the merry sain in the morning to call him, she found him tations on the street, the clash of sleigh bells, and the pealing organ from St. Paul's church over the way, and the sunlight and mirth and gladness made his own pain seem the keener—just for a moment, until his generous heart could gather strength to reassert itself and be glad because others

Many of his grateful patients had remembered him with some little Christmas token, and Mrs. Derby had placed them upon a stand at his bedside, but now she held in her hands a small packet addressed to him in a familiar lady's hand and registory.

"Joseph Marmaduke Mullally, how dare you sir!" exclaimed the indignant

"I thought you would be pleased, doctor. I've come to knew Miss Everleth's handwriting, you see, and I supposed she had sent you a Christmas present. This package came two days ago when you were delirious, and I signed the registry card and made bold to send the lady a telegram more common blood humors. notifying her of your illness. And, Dr. Andover, can you bear some pleasant news? I received a telegram in return stating that Miss Everleth would start at once to come to you. Now that is the nort of girl to make a man a good wife. She will probably be here to day."

To day! Dr. Andover listened to kind Mrs. Derby in bewilderment. What did

With trembling fingers he tore the wrapper of the tiny packages and opened a jeweler's case. There upon its bed of purple lay a gold finger-ring, extraordinary wide, the inside of which was completely cowered with fine lettering. And Dr. Andover read slowly through blind, rapturous tears the words which had arise in the heart of the girl who proved herself worthy of him, when his letter had come to her after many weary days of delay:

Mrs. Derby slipped out of the room, crying herself, at the sight of Dr. Andover, usually so calm and strong and self-possessed, crying like a 2-year-old baby over Maud's Christmas token.

It was nearly noon when Maud herself came. She had removed her wraps in Mrs. Derby's room, and, after a light tap on the sick man's door, she entered.

Alexander Andover had thought her lovely in her exquisite party and carriage and home toilets; but never had she seemed so sweet and gracious and womanly as now, when, in her plain gray traveling costume, her lovely face a little pale with weariness and excitement, her mouth tremulous and her dark eyes glowing with a solemn light,

"Your letter was delayed in some way. I did not get it until a week ago. You remember the great piece of gold you sent me from California two years ago? Well, when I got your letter, I took that gold to a jeweler and had it made into a ring. And then after I received Mrs. Derby's telegram I made uncle promise to bring me to you at once. I would have come alone if he had not come with me, horrible and unconventionable. unconventionable as my fashionable friends would have called me. friends would have called me.

I assure you, sir,"—and here she doubled one small white hand in, a threatening manner under his very nose—"this hand which you consider so weak and use-less can make the most delicious bread and cakes; can even make beds and sweep an wash dishes. Aunt Alice never negl the most important part of my education, and I am sure I shall make a most excellent wife for a poor man. That is, Alexander"—and here she flushed up gloriously nome as fine as the one she would leave, _''if you will have me.' Dr. Andover smothered the last words against his shoulder, and as soon as she ould free herself from his anceremoniou embrace she began anew to coax and wheedle him into some new plan of her own, to which he at first objected, but finally yielded. The result was that at 5 o'clock that afternoon Mand Everleth was made Dr. Alexander Andover's wife and at once asserted her authority by taking upon her the duties of a nurse. Of course, under such treatment, he recovered rapidly, and every day grew to appreciate more and more the loyalty and worth of the sweet little woman who had not failed him in his dark hour. * * * Delicate diseases radically cured. Consultation free. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, Fred Archer as a Pugilist. From the New Orleans Times-Democrat.

It remained for New Orleans to furnish Archer with an exciting incident which served to divert his thoughts from himself for several hours. In arranging with the baggagemen about their luggage, they were talked to in that style, more forcible than elegant, which is peculiar to trunk the charge of aggravated assault against than elegant. served to divert his thoughts from himself the baggagemen about their luggage, they were talked to in that style, more foreible than elegant, which is peculiar to trunk handlers. Archer and party objected, and in the twinkling of an eye there was a lively amount of sparring, bare knuckles, go as you please rules. One round was fought, in which the jockey and his friends, so it is said, had the best of it, but found that while they were busy their train had left. The party have, therefore decided left. The party have, therefore, decided not to go to Floride, but leave, probably to day, for Denver and other points out west for a big hunt.

B. ampbell, who made a confession implicating himself in three robberies of mail pouches on the Canadian Pacific road between Emerson and Winnipeg. Campbell was last seen in Chicago on Friday, on which day he left his boarding house on Wabash avenue, Capt. Dewey regretted that the treaty did not permit Campbell's extradition, and thought it vidiculous for an officer to be compelled tridiculous for an officer to be compelled to wait for a mail robber to come and see him. He discredited the report that Campbell had departed for Canada and had been seen in Winnipeg, and thought that Campbell, being aware of his immunity from arrest in the United States, would never cross the border. Capt. Dewey said he was satisfied that $3200 would cover the total amount istolen in the three robberies, and a portion of that amount was in canceled bills of the bank of Montreal. Campbell's presence in Chicago was ascertained by letters sent to him by Canadian friends, which were directed to different hotels in this city.
