If Players Did Not Loaf So Long at the Plate They'd Get More Hits and Make Better Showing

How long do you think it requires a player to get in motion after hitting the ball? Seemingly not a fraction of a second is lost in getting under way, but some experts have been investigating this feature of the game, and have proved the contrary. A reporter and stop watch combination settled the doubt. For instance when a player sacrificed a fraction of a second elapsed between the time his bat struck the ball and his first step. The ball was handled perfectly and he was thrown out by one-fifth of a second. In another inning, when a hit to left field was made the player was slow in getting under way. He reached first easily, but had he started with the crack of the bat and raced at full speed, as he should have done, he would have had time to get to second. If every member of the team would practice the art of quick starting, as sprinters do, fewer would be thrown out at first and more singles would be stretched into doubles. The world's record for going to first is held by "Bullet" Thoney, of the Boston team, who hunted and reached first in 3-15 seconds, at Cincinnati in the field day games. And Thoney is not the only one who is in motion the instant his bat hits the ball. He has a getaway stride like a flector or a Walker. The number of men retired at first by one-fifth of a second during a season runs into the hundreds. This one-fifth would be gained if the players would learn to start faster. If the players realized the increase their batting averages would show as the result of quicker starting, it is needless to say that they would practice this feature of the modern game. When you figure that a couple of seconds elapse usually before an infielder gets hold of a batted ball, and that he requires a fraction of a second to straighten up and throw, the value of every particle of time gained in starting becomes more and more apparent.

PAIR OF BLUFFERS SAY MEN WHO KNOW

Negro Pugilist is Accused of Naming Impossible Terms. Jack Johnson has hurled another typewritten challenge at James J. Jeffries much to the renewed amusement of veteran sporting men, says the New York Sun. The big negro says he will fight Jeffries from one round to fifty within two months for a purse of not less than $30,000 "for his end" and a side bet of $20,000. He also declares that this proposition will remain open ten days, in which period Jeffries is at liberty to counter an alleged offer of $50,000 Johnson says he has already posted. Men who have followed pugilism for years say that both Johnson and Jeffries were bluffing and side-stepping. Johnson knows very well, they said, that Jeffries will not fight for at least six months, if then, and that a $30,000 guarantee, win, lose or draw, as the negro's end, is absurd on the face of it when it is considered that Jeffries in condition would be entitled to receive as much if not more money than the big colored champion. If a $50,000 purse should be hung up, they argued, nobody would believe for a moment that Jeffries would consent to let Johnson have three-fifths of the money.

MORE ABOUT FOODS.

The last issue of bulletins from the laboratory of the Inland Revenue Department indicates that the people of Canada are getting better food-stuffs than they were a few years ago and that the goods are, as a rule, more correctly described than formerly.

Four hundred and forty-nine samples of ground coffee were purchased by the department throughout the Dominion in October last and their analysis is treated in Bulletin No. 173. Sixty samples, or 21 per cent, were found genuine, 45 samples, or 16 per cent, were found adulterated, and 19 lots, or 6 per cent, were sold as compounds.

The adulteration consisted of roasted cereals, or chocolate, or both. It is interesting to note that of the 39 samples purchased in New Brunswick, none were found to be adulterated.

Concerning the adulteration of coffee the chief analyst says: "I think it fair to point out that while technical adulteration exists in both classes of cases, a very plausible defence, and one that carries a certain moral weight, may be set up for the unadulterated presence of small percentages of chicory, while none at all can be advanced for addition of roasted cereals. Many coffee consumers are accustomed to using coffee containing small percentage of chicory, and would be likely to complain if their grocer fail to add the chicory."

"The standard of purity for ground coffee does not seem to be so high. Of the 145 samples purchased, 1 were lost, 25 were found 'probably genuine,' and the remaining 63 were at least doubtful. This makes the quantity found genuine only 33 per cent of the total. Chicory was not only adulterated by the introduction of foreign matter, but in some cases the analysis revealed the removal, either partly or totally, of the volatile oil to which the spice owes its value. Of the ten New Brunswick samples, one-half were genuine, and the other half doubtful."

"As there is no general definition of chicory powder it is impossible to classify the samples of this product as genuine or adulterated, but they are shown as follows: Cream of tartar, 60, alum phosphate 84, alum 14, total 156.

In discussing mustard the analyst finds that in the analysis and urged the adoption of a standard of 30 per cent, dried oil for genuine mustard and 23 per cent for compounds. Reported from the standard level of the samples did not contain starch or tumeric. These, however, do not necessarily indicate fraud, as the starch is added to give a better keeping quality and the tumeric gives the mustard a more pleasing appearance.

This report does not include analysis of the 15 variations which were taken up separately in an earlier bulletin. Of the 15 samples purchased, 39 consist essentially of corn starch, glucose, but varying amounts usually from five to ten per cent, of cane sugar are present in these. Twenty-three samples are essentially cane sugar syrups, although several of them contain notable amounts of glucose. The remaining thirteen are mixtures containing usually about thirty per cent of cane sugar.

The bulletin says that as there is little difference in the taste and flavor between a true syrup and a glucose syrup, there is little ground for complaint here, but it recommends that they should be classified and sold under distinctive names.

THE JUVENILE MARATHONERS. Three famous English doctors, Sir Sandham, Sir Thomas Barrow and Sir Alfred Trippe, have recently addressed a joint letter to every English school, in which they say: "We consider school and cross-country races exceeding one mile in distance as wholly unsuitable for boys under the age of nineteen, as the continued strain involved is apt to cause permanent injury to the heart and other organs."

The warning is a much needed one and should be impressed on every boy in this country as well as in England. With the advent of warmer weather, Marathon racing has shown signs of sinking back to the oblivion from which the recent fad has raised it and no regret should be felt if it disappeared entirely. It is a sad commentary on the taste of the average spectator at athletic contests that an event is found attractive in proportion to the danger attached to it. The famous run from which the Marathon race has taken its name ended in the death of the runner and the spectators at the modern race feel that they may have the privilege of witnessing a similar tragic spectacle. It is one thing, however, for a man to kill himself from feelings of loftiest patriotism and quite another thing to do so for the sake of portion of the gate receipts or for the plaudits of an unthinking crowd.

Time and again doctors have issued warnings against these public ordeals in which men are urged to strain themselves to the limit of human endurance, but their protests have usually fallen on deaf ears. If a man is willing to take part in such a race there is nothing to prevent him, doing so and there are many willing to give him substantial encouragement.

One of the most serious features of the fad and one to which attention has been drawn by the letter quoted above, is its influence on growing boys. It is a pity that it should make a strong impression on all many boys who delight in athletics and that they should desire to emulate the example of the well known runners whom they regard with boyish feelings of hero worship. This is seen in St. John as well as in other places. A club of boys have measured off a small track on Canterbury street on which they may be seen running steadily until utterly exhausted. Another group of boys in the upper part of the town also take their almost daily practice at this arduous sport. The road races for boys which have been held lately and the junior distance events which have been featured in recent sports, are responsible for encouraging this practice. It is surprising that public encouragement should be given to such contests for boys. There are enough events in which the lads can compete without danger and the long distance race should be absolutely barred. No owner of horses would think for a moment of allowing a young horse to be entered in any except short races and the consideration which is given to the safety of a colt should at least be equalled in the case of our boys.

IN THE QUARTER.

There was a girl in Paris— She wore no Paris gown; Cochineal, I guess, Turned out that dress, All lines, straight up and down.

She lived there in an attic— Behind the bolted door Where her name was carved She painted and starved, And then she painted more.

Her eyes grew big with hunger, But how her pictures grew! She worked by street and gutter, For fear her name was lost, The big Salon took two.

And when her first check reached her From some grandee in Rome, She fell dead dead— A dantesque drove her home.

They fed her milk like a baby, And in a week, by gad, She went with a rush For colors and brush, And was painting again like mad.

Her neck's changing now—she hobbles With folks who hate as crows; She's painting kings, And singing Parisian songs, She wears Parisian gowns.

But 'way back home in Cochon The man who didn't speak For fear he'd queer Her art career

Was buried there last week— The little girl in Paris Was just about to say, She didn't win, Her face looks sort of gray.

Poor little girl in Paris! She's famous now, God knows! But at night she lies Awake and cries For a dead love in Cochon— Robert Gilbert Welsh in July Lippincott's.

SATURDAY SERMONETTE

It is wonderful what slaves we are to fear. Many of us are slaves from childhood to old age. Superstitious fears are the worst kind of fears when we are children. Who does not remember how shadows and strange and strange things were transformed, by too vivid imaginations, into ghosts that glided and groined until we were half dead with fear.

How many girls would get married on Friday if they could get married on any other day? How many people will sit at a table when there are thirteen guests without thinking about it? Or sleep well in room thirteen—if they know it?

Fear causes more accidents than steam cars, gun-powder and automobiles. If we only knew it our fear is more to be feared than any danger.

A nervous 'fraid' woman puts out her hand and grasps the reins when the horse shies, and puts him out of the road and there is an accident. If she had not been afraid there would have been no accident.

Many persons are always in fear of accidents. They are afraid the horse will run away, or the carriage will break down so they rob themselves of all driving pleasures.

Others are afraid of fire and water. The house will burn down, or the boat will capsize and drown them.

Still others shorten their unhappy lives by being afraid of disease. Every cough spells tuberculosis; every pain means sudden death. The children will die, she 'knows they will,' for diphtheria has broken out in the next township a hundred miles away.

A great many go through life afraid they will violate some conventional rule. If grammar came to them late in life they are afraid they will violate some rule, and so they talk as if they were parsing their sentences.

They are so afraid of doing, or saying something that will not be quite right, that they always seem stilted, self-conscious, and consequently, awkward.

I have known two or three girls who were so afraid of dying old maids that they married the poorest substitutes for men. They would have done better if they had gone to the cornfield and married a scarecrow.

PRUSSIA'S POPULATION.

Unsatisfactory Birth Rate Accompanied by Pleasing Mortality Figures.

BERLIN, June 25.—Although the official statistics of the public health for 1907, just issued by the Prussian Government, show an encouraging decrease in the death rate, the figures of the births are not so satisfactory.

The comparatively satisfactory total figures for the year show that the population of the state was 30,000,000, as compared with 27,283,224 in 1905. During that year the excess of births over deaths was 578,897.

The comparatively satisfactory total increase of population is due to a decline in the death rate to 17.36 per 1,000 of the population—the lowest rate ever recorded. As regards ages at which death occurred, the statistics show a considerable decrease in infant mortality, although deaths under the age of one year were 31.14 per cent, or nearly a third of the whole number of deaths.

In spite of the encouraging figures, the death rate for 1907 was the reverse. The total number of births was less by 10,621 in 1907 than in 1906. The rate per 1,000 inhabitants declined to 33.32 as compared with 34 in 1906. In Berlin the rate was 24.02 per 1,000 of the population. In all but the outlying provinces of Prussia the decline in the birth rate is pronounced. According to the present report, the assertion that the annual excess of births over deaths will soon be over 1,000,000, seems unwarranted.

On the other hand, the death rate is expected to remain low, and the preventive energy which is now displayed in all departments of public health.

PARIS, July 25.—The official statistics of the population of France for 1908, just published, are more satisfactory than the returns for the year before. There were last year 46,441 more births than in 1907, and the increase is shown by the fact that in 1908 exceeded deaths in forty-five departments, as compared with twenty-nine the year before. In the Paris district the excess was 2,907. More marriages were celebrated last year than in any year since 1873, the number being 315,928. The number of divorces increased from 10,938 in 1907 to 12,156 in 1908.

A programme of unusual excellence was rendered and the crowd of eager listeners loudly applauded their appreciation.

The committee of Seaside Park must be congratulated upon their successful programme of music for the benefit of the public. No small praise is due Bandmaster F. W. McNeil and his merry men. The following is the programme:

MANY HONOR AGED COUPLE

Capt. and Mrs. Worden 50 Years Married AT HOME LAST NIGHT

Many Valuable Gifts Are Received—Address Presented

Golden anniversaries seem almost as popular as weddings this month and last evening Capt. and Mrs. W. H. Worden of 33 Massey street, added another to the already large number.

Over fifty friends assembled last evening at Capt. Worden's home and helped the genial couple celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding.

The couple were the recipients of many handsome and valuable presents. Rev. B. H. Nobles on behalf of those present in a neat address, presented the couple with a purse of gold. Other presents included jewelry, gold, hand-painted china, etc., from relatives in California, the painted china being the work of Mrs. Worden's niece.

After the guests had done justice to a sumptuous supper, Captain Worden in a fitting manner responded to a toast of the bride. Other toasts followed. Miss Northrup played Mendelssohn's wedding march in a pleasing manner.

A feature of the occasion was the presentation of a bouquet of fifty carnations from the North End W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. Worden has been a member for many years. Capt. Worden also received a box of fifty cigars, each cigar being wrapped in tissue and tied with ribbon.

Captain and Mrs. Worden, who are enjoying the best of health, did fair to celebrate a diamond wedding anniversary. They have no family, or immediate relatives in the city, but the guests assembled did much toward filling this void.

WEAK, TIRED GIRLS Will Find Health and Strength Through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

There is a time in the life of every girl when the strain upon her blood becomes too great; when she grows weak; has headaches and backaches; when diseases set in, and she becomes extremely miserable. That is the time of life she needs a tonic—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. They have raised thousands of growing girls out of the depths of misery and weakness. COLLIER & CO.'S BIG SHOW. Costello's Charming Parade is one of the grandest animal numbers of the mammoth program of Collier & Co's Shows which will appear at the Grand Coliseum on June 28. This parade of feats introduced by Costello's troupe are stereotyped, but of an unusually novel character, and the grand finale that never fail to win rounds of applause from every spectator.

INQUEST WILL BE HELD. Coroner Ballentine will hold an inquest into the drowning of Frederick L. Robinson.

Many witnesses will be called in the effort to learn the true facts of the case. Geo. Jenkins, Alexander Law and Louis Cassidy, who witnessed the accident from the shore, will give evidence. Others called will be Messrs. Burley and Church, all of whom were eye witnesses also.

Many contradictory statements have been published and considerable difference of opinion is expressed regarding the affair. Coroner Ballentine anticipates voluminous evidence and expects to have Cyrus P. Inches to assist him.

This inquest will no doubt show the inability of amateur yachtsmen to handle boats which are strange to them. It is the hope of experienced yachting men that this inquest will be the means of some action being taken to safeguard the yachting public in future.

APPOINT DELEGATES TO THE CONVENTION. Enthusiastic meetings were held in all the parishes of the county last night, when delegates to the Liberal convention to be held on Monday night for the purpose of choosing a candidate to contest the constituency in the coming by-election were elected.

AMUSEMENTS. WANTED—A DONKEY AT THE PRINCESS.

The management of the Princess announce for next week the biggest and best vaudeville program ever offered in any house in the city.

Next comes Jordan and Gervaise, high class vocalists, who will render the following: Blue Features (Jones), Faded Rose (Roma), Evening Star (Wagner), Funnel Funnel (Dennis).

Marron and Marron are next on the bill. These gentlemen are real Irish comedians, bag pipers and dancers. In that order they will appear. This act, a pair of comedy stars, who will drive away all care.

The complete program of vaudeville will begin at the matinee on Monday. Every act will open at the matinee, together with the regular program. Don't fail to see this, the best show ever offered in this city.

CROWLEY WILL TELL WHO CROWLEY IS TONIGHT. The same old crowded house was present at the H. H. last evening, and a splendid show was given as usual. The Berlin still continues to make a hit, and no wonder, for such singing has never been heard here.

Crowley is just as big a mystery as he was last night at both shows. The solid wall of humanity which surrounded her chair to let the trades blow in enough oxygen to keep her from fainting. There was a man to swing every rib of her fan, with enough left over to chase every fly that lighted on her over the rail and into the Atlantic.

After breakfast, luncheon and dinner we regularly drove off the stage. We were not allowed to go on any more. I don't think that I ever did a good thing in my life. I was a member of the troupe and I was a member of the troupe.

WHEN ANY WOMAN IS A BEAUTY (By Lewis R. Freeman) While there may be found here and there among the native women of Africa one who has some claims to beauty, as beauty is understood by a European, the vast majority are ugly and even repulsive in appearance. It is not wholly surprising, therefore, though it is amusing, to hear a white man who has seen by other kind of woman but these for a year or two tell how his first meeting with a white woman affects him after his return to civilization.

A stewardess on an Elder-Dempster steamer—about the usual run of her class for looks and personality—assured me that she had averaged two proposals every home-ward voyage during all the three years of her service, nearly every one of which, as coming from a man far above her in station she had religiously made a point of accepting. Out of all these men I forgot how many dozen in all—not one had ever come back for her after he had crossed the Atlantic. Several of them had made return trips to Africa with her without so much as vouchsafing her a nod, but one who had made the London voyage from Africa for a second time in the form of a steamer had repeated his proposal. He never brought a breach of promise suit, but a stewardess on another of the Dempster lines had done so, one by her case on a ruling by the judge to the effect that a man who had not seen a white woman for two years was not responsible for what he said to the first one he met on his return.

Usually the stewardess is the only white woman one encounters on a London bound West African steamer, but occasionally there are two or three others, and conditions are proportionately aggravated. I always hear with increasing keen enjoyment the recital of a California friend of mine—a well known mining expert—of his experience when thus exposed. He was returning from an eighteen months trip in the back country of the Gold Coast, and on the steamer, inviolated homes was an English nurse, sole survivor of a party of four—who had attempted to take charge of a coastal hospital.

ALL WOODS OWN WOODS. "I thought I had seen a number of handsome women in one place and another," said B. in telling the story, "but from the moment I came aboard the Congo and saw her propped up in her deck chair under the after-awning trying to drink cup of beer tea the stewardess had brought, I told myself that all the others looked but as a clay-walled pocket to a true facade vein in comparison with her. Unluckily about two dozen other chaps back sister met me with a puzzled expression on her face. 'John,' she said, 'I'm afraid there has been a mistake. Are you sure that Miss Agnes R. whom we invited down here is your friend from Africa?' You said she was very beautiful. Isn't it possible that the wrong person got our note?"

"Absurd!" I scoffed brushing past her in my haste to gain the terrace, where an entrancing blend of white ivory beyond. "I'd know her handiwork among a million."

"I'm indeed the terrace yards in advance of my sister, to pause against the appearance of the grand, middle-aged stranger who was smiling weakly up at me from a seat by the brook—I had bought it for my sister the day I left Africa—her Mauntli Island skin handbag—and the mole on her forehead. Those were about the only familiar things I noticed. This probably had not changed at all in the week since she had left the steamer. I had been seeing other girls that was all."

"We made a brave effort to make her visit a pleasant one, but it was in vain. The same thing had probably happened at the other places she had tackled, and was no doubt, the reason for the sudden setting forward of our date. On the second day she began speaking of other pressing invitations she had received, and on the third day she went back to London. And it was not until the carriage had rattled out or sight down the driveway with her that my sister turned and asked me how it was that I had never mentioned that Miss R. was cross-eyed. And for the life of me I can't recollect now which it until that ghostly moment when I found her waiting on the terrace."

HIS MIND SETTLED. "By the time the Congo had been warped alongside Tilbury Docks I was entirely satisfied in my own mind that I wanted to marry what I firmly believed was the most beautiful, talented and winsome woman I had ever encountered; but determining to do the thing decently and in order, I took the address of the lodging to which she was going, and begged permission to call upon her with my sister. In due time the call was made. Miss B. was out, but at my urgent request sister left a note inviting her to spend a week with us at Maidenhead, where my brother-in-law had taken a home for the summer. A couple of days later she wrote us saying that she had engagements covering the next three or four weeks but at the end of that time it was possible that she would be able to give us a few days of her company. My latest rivals were getting ahead of me, I thought, and I was a good deal cast down until, at the end of three or four days, another letter came to say that she had cancelled her engagements, and was at liberty to come down at once. I got sister to write her to come the following afternoon, and spent the interim rehearsing a proposal.

THE BEST TEST OF COMPASSION. She came a couple of days earlier than we had expected, and I was out when she was driven up to the house. When, eager with anticipation, I came back sister met me with a puzzled expression on her face. 'John,' she said, 'I'm afraid there has been a mistake. Are you sure that Miss Agnes R. whom we invited down here is your friend from Africa?' You said she was very beautiful. Isn't it possible that the wrong person got our note?"

SIXTY YEARS IN WILDERNESS.

Some Passages in the Life of Henry W. Lucy, "Toby, M. P.," Parliamentary Reporter.

Mr. Lucy's life has been full of experiences, and it has been made additionally interesting by a wide acquaintance with famous politicians and men of letters, so that his self-deprecatory title is somewhat misleading. His wilderness was largely laid in the English House of Commons, where as a Parliamentary reporter for Punch he won fame under the pseudonym of "Toby, M. P." He has been painted by John Sargent. He has been down in a silver mine in Leadville and in a submarine. He has known Gladstone, Beaconsfield, Henry Irving, Mark Twain, Fred Burnaby, Du Maurier and John Tenniel.

It was on the occasion of his balloon ascent that he first met Fred Burnaby. Just on the point of starting a storm arose. The great globe of silk swayed and thither and thence. Burnaby had come down to town from Cambridge and early secured his seat fearlessly took it. I followed, making myself as scarce as possible at the bottom of the car. Then tumbled in a handsome fellow, six feet from height, broad chested to boot. I remember wondering when he would finish getting his full length in. This was Fred Burnaby, ranking at the time as Captain in the Horse Guards, but unknown to some outside of the barracks, with Khiva unapproached, the wilds of Asia Minor untrodden by his horse's hoofs. Like Mr. Lucy, he had secured a seat only because a lot of passengers had been scared by the expected storm. "As things turned out we had a delightful trip, rising to a flight of three thousand feet clear of the storm."

From a personal letter of Archibald Forbes, Mr. Lucy quotes an interesting description of Burnaby's death. "A foot spearman dashed at Burnaby, rushed out to the assistance of a detachment of skirmishers had pressed by the Arabs. His only arm was his sword—he had left his double barreled gun with his servant inside the quarrel, pointing at his throat, the broad, sharp blade of his eight foot long spear. Burnaby, parried, and wounded the Moslem. The duel between them continued for about a minute. Burnaby cutting, pointing and parrying, the supple Arab lunging violently at the British officer fast in the saddle. A second Arab, darting by in pursuit of a skirmisher, with a sudden turn ran his spear into Burnaby's right shoulder from behind. A soldier dashed out and bayoneted this man. Burnaby glanced over his shoulder for a second at the transaction, and in that second his first antagonist dashed, his spear full into Burnaby's throat. He fell from the saddle, the blood spurting from the gular; as he sank the Arab stabbed usually gave a dinner once a week through the Parliamentary session. They were all interesting, though saddened for some by the circumstance that Russell not only did not smoke himself, but resented smoking by others. It was poor consolation for men accustomed to regard a cigar as not the least delectable adjunct to a dinner to see the host spooning snuff into his gratified nostrils, and flourishing the witnesses, the dompter of jurist."

Mark Twain, likewise, has a chapter to himself. To Mr. Lucy he once made a baroque proposition that the two of them should join in the publication of a paper called "The Obituary," suggesting that unless two conspirators received down on the nail a sum ranging from 100 to 200 according to the estimated capacity of his purse, the article would appear in "The Obituary" contemporaneously with the announcement of his death.

"Another obituary scheme is outlined in a letter which Mark Twain forwarded to Mr. Lucy under pretence that it should be sent to several well known editors:

"Sir—I am approaching seventy; it is in my right; it is only three years away. Necessarily, I must go soon. It is but a matter-of-course wisdom, then, that I should begin to get my worldly house in order now, so that it may be done calmly and with thoroughness, in place of waiting until the last day, when, as we have often seen, the attempt to set both houses in order at the same time has been marred by the necessity for haste and by the confusion and waste of time arising from the inability of the notary and the ecclesiastic to work together harmoniously, taking turn about and giving each other friendly assistance, not, perhaps, in smiling, which could hardly be expected, but at least in the minor offices of keeping game and umpiring. By consequence of which conflict of interest and absence of harmonious action a draw has frequently resulted when this ill fortune could not set in before the houses had been set in order one at a time, and hurry avoided by beginning in season and giving each the amount of time fairly and justly proper to it.

"In setting my earthly house in order I find it of moment that I should attend in person to one or two matters which men in my position have long had the habit of leaving wholly to others, with consequences often most regrettable. I wish to speak of only one of these matters at this time. Obituaries, of necessity, an obituary is a thing which cannot be so judiciously edited by any hand as by that of the subject of it. In such a work it is in the facts that are of chief importance, but the light which the obituarist shall throw upon them, the meanings which he shall dress them in, the conclusions which he shall draw from them and the judgments which he shall deliver upon them. The verdicts, you understand, that is the danger line.

"In considering this matter, in view of my approaching change, it has

VICTORY FOR MRS. GOULD

NEW YORK, June 25.—Katherine, Chimes Gould obtained a legal separation with alimony from her husband, Howard Gould, third son of the late Jay Gould, by a decision of the late Justice Dowling in the Supreme Court today after a trial which had lasted nearly three weeks. With the exception of alimony, her victory was complete, but in this phase of the case the court decided that $35,000 a year was sufficient, though in her suit Mrs. Gould asked for $25,000. She has been receiving $25,000 a year from Mr. Gould, so that this amount fixed by the court is but a slight increase over what he had voluntarily allowed her and is but a small fraction of the amount named in her suit.

It was in the vindication of charges of intoxication and her alleged relation with Edwin Farnum, the actor, that Mrs. Gould secured most strongly, for notwithstanding the long array of witnesses for Mr. Gould who gave such testimony as to make Mrs. Gould appear as times as defendant rather than plaintiff, the court held that the intoxication charge was proved, and that the relation with Farnum, it was held that Mr. and Mrs. Gould were not guilty of adultery.

Immediately after the decision, DeLancy Gould, for Mrs. Gould, asked for a summary judgment, but Justice Dowling, after a judgment, Justice Dowling, compromised by making the stay thirty days. Mr. Shearn, then asked for the same allowance for counsel fees and the court gave him $2,000. This, together with the $10,000 allowed recently and the original allowance of $5,000, will bring his fees to $17,000, with an additional $3,000 for expenses.

Mrs. Gould had been left quite to herself during the trial, but after the verdict she was kept busy receiving congratulations. As the decision was read she kept her head cast down and seemed disappointed by the allowance. As soon as the case was closed, however, she shook hands with Mr. Shearn and thanked him for his conduct of her case. Then she beamed upon her friends and even smiled upon the downcast trio of lawyers who had fought for her husband's interests.

Howard Gould hurried from the room as soon as the decision was given and declined to discuss the case.

Mrs. Gould left the court with Mr. Shearn and drove away in an automobile.

Mr. Shearn said that either party in the suit could still bring action for absolute divorce, but that Mr. Gould could not base such an action on the charges involved in the suit just ended.

LEONARD P. AYRES.

About the hardest thing to measure is the efficiency of the public schools. Are our public schools any good? is a question that has a power, and a convincing way. Can they be made any better? is another serious question.

When is a school good? When is it bad? Leonard P. Ayres, expert of the Russell Sage foundation, at last finding a measure for public schools. He has studied the schools of 43 American cities, and a report will shortly be made to educators all over the country.

One of Ayres' tests is: How strongly do the schools draw the children and how long do they hold them?

The average American city carries all its children on the sixth grade, half of them through the eighth grade, and one-tenth through the high school.

This means that the average American school is not doing all that it is assumed to do.

The number of pupils who drop out before they finish the eighth grade, is a fair test of any school system. But

SOME FACTS ABOUT PUPILS WHO DO NOT PASS GRADES.

In 55 American cities there are 1,907,000 school children. Of these 215,000 didn't pass, in either 1927 or 1928, and are taking their grade over again.

It costs $18,719,000 to keep these repeaters in school.

Can these children who don't pass be blamed?

It looks as if the blame rested on the school system.

It costs $88,966,717 to run these 45 school systems.

Yet they spend 15 per cent. of this money to do over again work which they ought to have done in the first place.

Any business enterprise, run on this basis, would be wrong and a failure.

J. sends 30 per cent. of her children through her grade twice. This means that her school cost her 30 per cent. more than they ought to.

In the average city only 15 per cent. of the children are repeaters.

Attendance at school in another test. There are very few cities in which as many as three-fourths of the children go to school three-fourths of the time.

In fifty American cities, Mr. Ayres says, it was found that the schools of 25 cities were improving and of 15 cities were going backward.

Many schools were found that were crowded in the lower grades, and contained few pupils in the upper grades. In these schools many repeaters were found in the lower grades, which choked admission to the school.

Mr. Ayres says it is wrong to blame school inefficiency to foreigners. He says that his figures show that the presence of a large foreign element always goes with a high efficiency.

EXISTING CONDITIONS IN THE CANADIAN SILVER FIELDS

A special correspondent of the Standard at Cobalt says: The rush of prospectors into the mining districts of the Montreal River and the Ottawa River has been going on for some time, and it looks like the "early bird getting the worm," as the rush goes madly forward.

As far as the area is concerned, the Montreal River section, or at least the area included in the two mining districts of Montreal River and Gogawanda, as outlined or divided on the maps, it will be seen that the new mining areas are approximately seven townships square, or about fifty townships in extent.

While, of course, all of these townships, and in fact only a few of them, have been proven to have rich surface deposits, it is a fact that the surface deposits are being made from month to month, and from week to week, and also in view of the fact that such a limited time has elapsed since the discovery and locating of several of the newer belts, that the future of these newer belts.

ELK LAKE AND MAPLE MOUNTAIN SECTIONS.

Of the newer belts, the Elk Lake and Maple Mountain sections seem to be entitled to about equal credit as to the time of discovery, and also in results, according to the time and money spent in actual prospecting. Peculiarly enough, the belt around Maple Mountain at first appeared limited to a small area, and it also seemed apparent that the saying of far-off fields of green applied, and the Maple Mountain section was passed up for the far-away fields, while Maple Mountain is on a straight line west of Cobalt.

Maple Mountain has but one stock proposition, but from a comparatively small amount of work, the district has one real mine with high grade shipping ore; generally considered the equal of the Cobalt average mine. This is the Canadian Ores Limited, or the White Syndicate, as it is often called, on account of being a closed corporation. The Maple Mountain Mining Company is another property, which seems to have ample promise. The Le Roy properties are held by the owners for development, in spite of tempting offers to poor men. The Enright property has been sold for a price said to aggregate $100,000, and numerous others have attracted enough attention to command large cash offers. The Ogilvie properties, although receiving very little attention, are surely coming to the front and will produce some history for the Maple Mountain district.

WILLETTS, SMYTH, TUDHOPE AND JAMES TOWNSHIPS.

Down in the corner of Willett the Lucky Godfrey crowd has given an opportunity to its properties, six in number, at $750,000, and the payments are being made regularly, so that it looks like a sale in earnest. In Smyth Township several very promising properties have been opened up in the diabase belt, amongst the best of these being the Watts property, owned by eastern capitalists, who are developing it with very encouraging results. Starting on the surface with a meteoric track, at a depth of 25 feet a vein of solid metal from two to four inches running high in silver values, has been the latest development. In Tudhope township there are a number of very

What Rufus Harris Says of Dodd's Kidney Pills

AFTER TRYING FIVE DOCTORS FOR HIS KIDNEY DISEASE HE FOUND RELIEF IN THE GREAT CANADIAN KIDNEY REMEDY.

STEVENSVILLE, Ontario, June 25.—"After trying five doctors for kidney trouble, for which I had suffered for three years I find that Dodd's Kidney Pills relieve me best of all. I keep on taking as I have since. I began taking Dodd's Kidney Pills, I shall be well pleased and I am hoping they will cure me."

So says Rufus Harris, well known in this village. "I had stiffness in the joints," he continues, "cramps in the muscles, backache and was heavy and sleepy after meals. I was nervous and low spirited, perspired freely, was often dizzy and always thirsty, but since taking Dodd's Kidney Pills I am feeling very good."

If you have any of the symptoms, Mr. Harris tells of it is time for you to beware. They are the symptoms of Kidney Disease and may be the forerunners of Rheumatism, Dropsy, Lumbago, Heart Disease, or Dr. Earle's Bright's Disease itself. Take warning and guard against suffering or even death issue by putting the kidneys to work by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Blood Poison Set In Healed in One Place, Broke Out in Another—Cured by DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT

Truth is often stranger than fiction and many of the cures brought about by Dr. Chase's Ointment are more like miracles than anything else. It was blood poison. You know how dreadfully dangerous this is. You know how helpless doctors are in its treatment. Read about this cure brought about by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mrs. C. Hopkins, St. George, Ont., writes:—"I feel like shouting the praises of Dr. Chase's Ointment. While threshing grain, my son got badly hurt. One of the men who was picking sheaves, missed the sheaf and ran the point of the fork into my son's leg. He did not take much notice of it and in a day or two it got sore and very itchy and blood poison set in. We did everything for it but could not heal one place and break out at another and kept on this way for three months.

"Finally I thought of Dr. Chase's Ointment and in a week's time we noticed wonderful change. By the use of three boxes he was completely cured and the wounds healed up. There has not been a sign of a spot on him since."

"I might also state that my husband was cured of a very bad case of piles by the use of two boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment. It is a wonderful ointment."

Whenever there is itching or irritation of the skin or a sore that refuses to heal you can apply Dr. Chase's Ointment with every assurance that the results will be prompt and satisfactory.

When You Can't Sleep.

There is many a man and woman losing night after night upon a sleepless bed. Their eyes do not close in the sweet, refreshing repose that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right. Some constitutional disturbance, worry or disease has so debilitated and irritated the nervous system, that it cannot be quieted there again, you have, a sinking sensation, a feeling you are going to die; or perhaps you wake in your sleep feeling as though you were about to choke or smother, and rest leaves you for the night. If you allow these conditions to continue for a short period, you will begin to feel your health declining. It is the nerves and the brain that are affected, and they can only be set right by the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. They soon induce healthful, refreshing sleep, not by deadening the nerves, but by restoring them to healthy action.

Mrs. E. Nutt, St. Mary's, Ont., writes:—"I can gladly recommend your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills as I was greatly troubled with my nerves. I was so bad I could not sleep at night without the lamp burning, but after taking four boxes of the pills I became all right again."

CENSUS REPORT SHOWS IMMENSE GROWTH AND COLOSSAL EXTENT OF INDUSTRIAL ACTIVITIES IN THE UNITED STATES

Greatest Increase Shown in Districts Surrounding, But Not Within Limits of Incorporated Cities--District of Greater New York the Largest Centre--Its Products Valued at Over Two Billions--Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston Follow.

Bulletin 101, which has just been issued by the Bureau of Census, deals with the manufacture of the principal industrial districts in the United States. This report was prepared under the supervision of William M. Stewart, chief statistician for manufactures. It is illustrated with maps showing the cities and townships in the districts, with the steam and electric railways, rivers, and canals. Heretofore reports on statistics of manufactures have been presented by specialized industries only for establishments belonging to their location in cities of certain size, counties, states or groups of states. This method, however, does not indicate the importance of industries in the various contiguous localities, since industries are not limited by political divisions. An industrial district may include a number of important cities as well as the intervening and surrounding minor civil divisions, all being politically independent, but closely allied industrially. The statistics here presented on the question whether manufactures are leaving the larger cities for places immediately surrounding them.

INDUSTRIES CENTRE AROUND CITIES

The manufacture carried on in the sections immediately surrounding the principal cities which form the centres of the districts are largely controlled by capital owned by residents of the cities. A considerable proportion of the employees reside within the cities, and frequently the cities are the principal distributing points for the products. In other ways the industries are so closely allied to the cities that they should be credited to the urban rather than to the rural manufacture. Therefore, to convey a true idea of the industrial importance of a district, the data should include statistics for the central cities and those places closely surrounding them. This bulletin has been prepared to show such data for 13 industrial districts for the year 1919, and to compare the same with the figures for the year 1914.

The inclusion of the territory surrounding the central cities in these districts has added 2,834 square miles, or 21.3 per cent, to the area. In 1914 the incorporated limits of the central cities of the thirteen industrial districts contained 13,140 square miles, and employed 1,491,533 salaried persons and wage-earners and manufactured products valued at $1,762,022,110. The parts of these districts immediately outside of the central cities, around which they centre contained 2,834 square miles, and employed 428,397 salaried persons and wage-earners and manufactured products valued at $1,411,683,317. Therefore, the inclusion of these surrounding regions increased the number of employees by 29.9 per cent and the value of products by 23 per cent. In addition to these areas included in the industrial districts there are a number of surrounding places closely connected industrially and commercially with the central cities. The manufacturing plants in these places reported 506,424 employees and products valued at $1,321,422,928 for the year 1919. The industrial districts and these surrounding places together contained a population of 17,297,932 in 1919 and in 1914 had 76,816 factories employing 2,650,374 salaried persons and wage-earners and manufacturing products valued at $7,455,988,412.

DISTRICTS INCLUDED

The district of Greater New York is the most important industrial district in the United States. It embraces an area of 702 square miles and in 1919 had a population of 12,294,887. There is no district in the United States with which it can be grouped. The districts of Chicago, Philadelphia, and Boston, have been classed together, since their population in 1919 ranged between one and two millions and their areas were practically the same, being about 600 square miles. In a third class are the districts of St. Louis, Pittsburgh-Allegheny, Baltimore, Cincinnati, San Francisco, Cleveland, Buffalo, and Minneapolis-St. Paul. They had a population in 1919 ranging from 828,134 for St. Louis to 376,357 for Minneapolis-St. Paul, and areas ranging from 246 square miles for Baltimore to 181 square miles for Cincinnati. The Providence district, with a population of 844,421 in 1919 and an area of 156 square miles, can not be compared with any other district presented in the bulletin. The statistics show that in twelve of the districts the manufactures, increased more rapidly in the area immediately surrounding the central city than in the area within the corporate limits of the city. The only district in which the city had the greater increase was that of Minneapolis-St. Paul. A relative increase in the value of products in 1919 as compared with 1914 the Buffalo district ranked first, with a gain of 43.2 per cent. The increase for the city itself was 35.5 per cent, and that for the surrounding places, 156.7 per cent. The value of the products manufactured in Pittsburgh and Allegheny decreased 3.3 per cent, but the value for the outside places containing about these cities increased 41.4 per cent. Industries reporting fewer than these establishments cannot be shown separately. Thus it is that a number of important industries in various districts are not shown in the total for all industries. Disclosure of individual returns is thus avoided.

WORK IN GREAT BRITAIN

The other paper referred to work which is being carried on in Great Britain, and which like so many other social movements in the Old Country, was started, by private philanthropy and is still largely sustained by that means. The morning session of the art section dealt with the interesting subject of handicrafts and home industries in different countries. Lady Aberdeen was able from her great knowledge of the movement to give the old lace trade to give a most interesting account from the Irish Industries Association, and she old how efforts were being made to protect the handworker in linen from fraudulent misrepresentation by production of the machine-made article, who traded on reputation of hand-made goods. The Duchess of Sutherland has in many ways been a co-worker with Lady Aberdeen, although efforts have been concentrated on the preservation of Scotch handicrafts of spinning and weaving. Frøken Gad of Denmark gave an account of "How children from elementary schools in Denmark pass their holidays." Railways and steamers take children without charge to every part of the country. Most of them go to relatives, but great numbers are received for nothing as guests in the homes of strangers all over the country," said Frøken Gad. "Among the hosts you will find noblemen, farmers, cottagers, clergy-men, school masters, mechanics and fishermen. Our largest steamship company gave free passage to 1400 children last year."

PLAYGROUNDS

Mrs. Sadie American, of United States, gave an interesting address on Playgrounds. "I have been driven about your beautiful Toronto and I have seen rows and rows of serried houses in your new districts without a bit of space for your children to play in. Perhaps these houses have backyards, but I could not see them." Miss Mabel Peters, of St. John, followed Miss American on the topic of playgrounds. She traced the history of vacation schools and supervised playgrounds movement from the time it was adopted by the Canadian Council of Women in 1901. Boards of education, municipal councils, parks and school boards throughout Canada have been urgently petitioned by playground committees to provide and maintain playgrounds, said Miss Peters. "Through the efforts of these committees press notices and playground editorials are constantly appearing in the newspapers of the country. Results of this educational work have been already shown. Several cities have assumed the care and maintenance of their playgrounds, thus raising the playground to its proper place as a city institution." Architecture as a profession for women was advocated by Mrs. Beaton, of Halifax, at the morning session of the profession section.

CONGRATULATED CANADA

It was the same British delegate who congratulated Canada upon the policy of its government to exclude all but the best immigrants. At the same time it remained for two Ontario delegates to admit that the problem had already reached terrible proportions, and a third from Quebec to support their opinions with a similar statement as to her own province. "I will show you in fifty minutes fifty feeble minded children," said Dr. Helen McMurphy. "There are in the province of Ontario 700 feeble minded women

SHE'S ONLY 7, BUT EARNS $500 WEEKLY

Here is 7-year-old Elsie Craven, a dainty little fairy dancer whose 10 little pink toes are earning her $50 a week apiece at the big Coliseum Theatre, London. Five hundred a week--that's Elsie's salary. Pretty large money for so small a girl, but people are crowding the theatre every day to see her. She takes the audience way back to the days of boyhood and girlhood, and back of that to the mysterious days of fairyland. Elsie started out just as a dancer. Then someone saw her and wrote a play--"Pinky and the Fairies"--about her. And now she's famous. She'll probably come to America this season.

INTREPID CHINESE BRIGAND Types of Automatic Artillery

PARIS, June 25.—Private advice from the governor of Upper Tonquin, Mr. Bachelot, China, states that the Chinese brigands, who are unable to adopt the necessary means and ruthless measures against the bandits who ravage the native villages.

"The leader of the brigands is De-Tham, a veteran outlaw, whose system of foxy guerrilla warfare among the hills is unequalled. He and his followers know every spot of the country, the mountain hiding places as well as those of the forests. And he has been the terror of the upper hills for more than fifteen years, disappearing only to replenish his supplies after a series of forays against villages favoring French rule.

"While his men are provided with magazine rifles, the natives can defend themselves only with sharpened stakes. And the mere suspicion of disloyalty to the native cause will result in a village being raided in the night and alleged informers being tied to stakes in the recesses of the forests to die of starvation with mutilated tongues. For this reason, it is almost impossible for the French to get any information whatever from friendly natives.

"De-Tham's fanatical followers have now spread about the statement that he is the divinely appointed deliverer come to drive the French out of the land and free the native races from subjection. It seems that the outlaw really has a special providence watching over him, for he has never been caught, although at times he could almost touch the French soldiers as they passed his hiding places.

"Once he and his followers were hidden in a forest, and their pursuers passed quite close to De-Tham. He had his wife and infant son with him. The child cried out in the night. The soldiers, indistinctly catching the sound, prolonged their search, until the brigand was in dire peril. However, the chief managed to decamp. The next morning the French soldiers found at the foot of a big tree the bodies of the baby and its mother. The natives explained that De-Tham killed the child to ensure his own safety, and that the mother committed suicide from grief.

"Recently he was again in straits, for the French were pressing upon him in a ravine, and his supplies were giving out. He deliberately sacrificed two of his followers, sending them into the French camp to parley for surrender, while he and his men wormed their way out of the ravine to their stronghold in the hills.

Types of Automatic Artillery

An interesting description of the various kinds of machine-guns, with a comparison of the two best-known types—the Maxim and the Hotchkiss—is contributed to La Matura (Paris) by a writer signing himself "A. R."

The inventors of the United States have been particularly active in developing this kind of firearm. In fact, the writer tells us, the first really practical automatic gun for war service was the Gatling gun of 1860. We read:

"This arm was composed essentially of a bundle of somewhat powerful guns, (6, 8, or 10, according to the calibre), turning about a central axis by means of a handle, and thus passing successively before a needle that determined the explosion. The mechanism resembled that of a modern revolver, and the rapidity of fire reached 300 shots per minute. The American Government . . . used several of these Gatling guns successfully during the War of Secession.

THE MITRAILLEUSE.

"All those who remember the last Franco-German war will recall the enthusiasm aroused in France at the inception of the appearance of batteries of automatic guns (mitrailleuses) and the great hopes founded on them. The mitrailleuse (Reffye's system) of these batteries was formed of 26 steel tubes arranged in square section, soldered together and covered with a bronze envelope. The mechanism resembled somewhat that of a Chassepot rifle.

"It included 26 needles mounted on springs, and a release-plate pierced with 26 holes, which were brought successively before the needles, releasing them and discharging the gun-barrels in quick succession.

"Besides these two old types the best known, until recent times, were the Belgian mitrailleuse of Montigny, which . . . much resembled Reffye's, and those of Palmchamps and Winborg (Swedish), Hamann (Swiss), D'Albertini (Austrian), all having ten barrels arranged horizontally.

"In general all these types had two great inconveniences—they worked by hand, and therefore irregularly; and they had many barrels, increasing the weight and complicating the feed."

LESSON NUMBER OF BARRELS.

At present, the writer goes on to say, this kind of a gun is looked upon not so much as a piece of artillery as a portable arm for re-enforcing musketry. Inventors have therefore attempted to lighten it by decreasing the number of barrels, to make the fire more regular, by substituting a motor for hand-operation, and to make the aim better. There are now many models, but they may be divided into two classes, that in which the recoil operates the gun, as in the Maxim,

Nordenfelt and Bergmann types; and that in which part of the gases of explosion are used for this purpose, as in the Hotchkiss and Colt guns. The typical example may be said to be the Maxim and the Hotchkiss. These the writer describes as follows:

"The first Maxim gun was built in England in 1882, and has since been slightly modified. . . . It has but one barrel attached to a breech-box, and is operated by a cylinder for cooling by means of water.

"The mechanism works thus: At the discharge the gun and breech recoil together. The gun is stopped after a brief movement; the breech keeps on and operates the feeding and charging mechanism. A recuperative spring, compressed during this backward movement, produces when released a forward motion and determines the discharge. The cartridges are fed to the gun by means of a magazine, and the breech is pushed back by the action of the gas which they are plucked automatically one by one and put into place. The magazine of the Maxim gun holds 25 cartridges, and the former holds 30 cartridges, the latter 250.

"The fire may be either intermittent or continuous. For the former, the finger is pressed upon the release-mechanism and held there. . . . when the firing will be kept up automatically until the cartridges are used up.

"The Hotchkiss gun is operated by two men—a pointer and a loader; but when necessary one man can fill both positions. . . .

"Most of the military powers have adopted one of these two types of gun. Great Britain, Germany and Russia have preferred the Maxim type, while Spain and Japan have both kinds. In France the colonial troops are equipped with the Hotchkiss gun."

LOCKED OUT FROM HIS BABIES, FATHER COMMITS SUICIDE

Pola, Misunderstanding - Quarantine's Meaning, Dies by Bullet.

SCRANTON, Pa., June 25.—This is the story of Frank Marcheck, foreigner. He killed himself on the steps of the Home for the Friendless because he loved his children.

It was not so many years ago that Marcheck, living in Poland, grew ambitious and, after talking it over with his young wife, resolved to come to America. So he hoarded his savings and his wife made sacrifices and, by their passage across the Atlantic.

In the coal regions of Pennsylvania are many of the countrymen. Work was not hard to find there and wages were good; compared with the pay in Poland, his pay was very high. Marcheck and his wife settled in the vicinity of Scranton.

HAD AMBITIOUS PLANS.

One child came, another and still a third. The father was working steadily, his wife was educated and they were and the little family of five was happy.

"Some day soon," he would tell them, "I will save more money and we can go into business. The children can help, and we will no doubt own a home."

They planned, Marcheck and his wife; they talked of how the children would be educated and they saw in the future much joy.

It was a few months ago that the Polish wife fell ill. She grew worse and finally she died. The young husband was left with his three little ones. He could not care for them, and they were the men of his surroundings he did not look around for another woman.

COULDN'T SEE CHILDREN.

In Scranton there is an institution known as the Home for the Friendless. Marcheck heard of it, and breaking up his little home, he placed the children in the home, under the care of kindly people, but a people of another race, who spoke another tongue.

And, as will happen where there are children housed together, slight infection broke out. One of the man's children was stricken with the measles and the Home was quarantined.

This was the end of Marcheck, bent on a visit to his babies, went up the steps of the Home for the Friendless and knocked at the door. In his broken English he told what he wanted. The attendant tried to tell him that the place was under quarantine, but that he could not understand; all he knew was that he was barred from his children. The reply of the attendant was that he was permanently deprived of them. Perhaps he thought of his wife.

"The Marcheck family," says the reporter, "was a Polish family, and long rest cure was dressed in green and blue, and over this she wore a long cloak of apricot-colored embroidered cloth. By her side sat the Countess of Craven in a very plain blue muslin dress embroidered in silver."

Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin were close by the latter wearing a water-green dress with an enormous diamond brooch in the front of the bodice.

One of the most beautiful gowns seen on Tuesday was that worn by the Hon. Mrs. Henry Coventry. It was a sulphur yellow embroidered muslin with a large, low-waisted hat. She and her husband had several friends staying with them at Stonor Park and the party arrived in motor cars each day.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor who sat near the royal party, wore a gown of white silk muslin with slight touches of black on the bodice; her black hat was adorned with an immense white osprey.

KING'S LAVENDER GLOVES. Revises Old Style at Ascot Races and Harborsiders are Besieged—Brilliant Gowns.

LONDON, June 25.—The Royal Ascot has probably a much more under better conditions than this week, the weather being splendid, the attendance both large and brilliant, and the racing interesting. The King attended every day, and on two occasions, with the Queen, drove to the course in semi-state. On one occasion Edward VII. set those of his loyal subjects who consider it good form to copy his style a pretty difficult task.

So far as grey suits and white hats are concerned, it was easy enough to follow his example, but the lavender gloves proved a much more difficult matter. Lavender kids have been out of fashion for so many years that the few who had any lavender gloves had them and but few harborsiders had any in stock. One firm, to whom His Majesty possibly wished to do a good turn and which was prepared to meet the sudden demand reaped a golden harvest.

All the ladies declare that never has so brilliant a display of feminine toilets been seen at Ascot.

On the first day of the meeting Lady Grenard appeared in a novel white embroidered muslin gown with a large hat with one immense rose on the left-hand side.

The Duchess of Roxburgh who was standing just below the royal box when the canteen party appeared was also dressed in white embroidered muslin and a large hat trimmed with ospreys.

The Marchioness of Dufferin who made her first appearance since her long rest cure was dressed in green and blue, and over this she wore a long cloak of apricot-colored embroidered cloth. By her side sat the Countess of Craven in a very plain blue muslin dress embroidered in silver.

AFTER A THOUSAND YEARS

The English Diocese Celebrates a Notable Anniversary.

(London Standard.)

CREATION, June 25.—In his sermon today, at the eleventh Bishop, in the occasion of the millenary commemoration of the consecration of the first Bishop of Crediton, the Bishop of Bristol achieved what will be regarded, by most people, as a satisfactory settlement of the long-standing controversy regarding the origin of that ancient see. Today was chosen for the celebration as being the nearest convenient date to June 5, the anniversary of the death of Wulfstan (St. Boniface), who was born at Crediton 893.

It was in the year 908 that, in company with six other bishops, Edulf, the first Bishop of Crediton, was consecrated at Canterbury Cathedral by Archbishop Plegmund. There is no record of the consecration of the Bishop of Crediton, and the opinion of the keeper of manuscripts at the British Museum is that the actual day of the consecration is nowhere recorded. The sees concerned were those of Crediton, Winchester, Bath and Wells, Ramsbury, Selby, Dorchester, and Sherborne, which are represented by the existing sees of Exeter, Winchester, Bath and Wells, Salisbury, Chipstead, and Oxford.

The scene today was most impressive. The day did not begin until three o'clock, but long before two the church was crowded by ticket-holders. The principal dignitaries taking part in the service were the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishops of Salisbury, Bristol, St. Germans, Exeter, Bath, Winchester, and Marlborough. Most of the clergy from the surrounding parishes and the members of the cathedral choir, as was the Mayor of Exeter, Mr. J. G. Committ, attended by the sheriff and the members of the council. Countess Fortescue, wife of the Lord-Lieutenant of the county, was also in the congregation.

Bright sunshine was glinting through the windows when the long procession of bishops and clergy passed the aisle, while the organist played the National Anthem.

It was an afternoon of history, and there was a modern understanding of the past in a page that Crediton treasure with a feeling that only a Devonshire man could understand. The page, in reality, was a brass tablet on the wall immediately behind the Bishop's throne, as he presided at the altar, and recalled the great names associated with Crediton. The tablet runs: "To the glory of God and the dear memory of Reivers Butler, who died on June 5, 1908."

"We meet here today," the Bishop of Bristol began, "to mark the 1,000th anniversary of the beginning of the see of Crediton, the Bishopric of the West Saxons, which was first set up at Crediton, and set there in the year 908. This is also the 1,200th anniversary of the death of Althelm, of Malmesbury, who became the first Bishop of Sherborne, the mother see of Exeter, at the first subdivision of the Bishopric of the West Saxons. You are, of course, aware that in the year 908 Plegmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, consecrated on one and the same day at Canterbury no fewer than seven bishops. Five of them were Wessex bishops. How did this remarkable combination come about?"

The Bishop then entered at great length into historical details. He explained that the great Greek Archbishop of Canterbury, Theodoros of Tarnus, made the sub-division of dioceses a main feature of his policy, but, owing to the troubles which this had caused in the North, decided to make no change in Wessex during the lifetime of the reigning Bishop, Haelde, who, as a matter of fact, survived him. Theodoros, however, had made arrangements for the sub-division to take place at the next vacancy, and on Haelde's death, in 706, Wessex was split into two sees, an Eastern, with its seat at Winchester, and a Western, with its seat at Sherborne, an arrangement which lasted about 200 years.

It was in the early years of the tenth century a further sub-division took place, and the two sees were split into five. The circumstances attending this change are involved in considerable obscurity, for William of Malmesbury's account of it, written a couple of hundred years later, is full of inaccuracies and inconsistencies. Numerous lists of English bishops, written in Anglo-Saxon times, or copied from early Anglo-Saxon lists, which have perished, do not add to the confusion, but the true solution is probably to be found

PLEBISCITE ON THE QUESTION

MONTREAL, June 25.—By a vote of 14 to 4, the city council this afternoon decided to submit, by referendum, the question of the establishment of a civic electric plant. The contract with the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company expired on January 1st and since that time the city has been lighted by the company without a contract on the company's terms. The company offered to supply the lights for $75 per year, the last rate being $90. The council refused this rate and also declined an offer of the company to leave the rate to a commission, the latter to fix the rate after the expiration of the company's books. Today's vote is not taken seriously, only eighteen aldermen voting out of a membership of 44.

AMUSEMENTS

NICKEL TODAY AND MONDAY.

This afternoon and tonight the Nickel will furnish all the summer entertainment the half-holiday crowds will want; in fact it is one of the best programmes of the season at this large, popular theatre. Holmes and Buchanan are to render their two catchy duets—"I Won't Be Home to Dinner," "The Merry-Go-Round," and "Smile on Me." From "Miss Pochant" Miss Evans, the orchestra and three of the best of pictures, including the starting film, "Hunting Big Game in Africa," a la Teddy Roosevelt.

On Monday the Nickel has a programme par excellence. Here it is in outline: "The Redhead," a novelty from New York that is going to make a big hit. Its cute, its saucy, but comely withal. Mr. Buchanan is to render that delightful bit of classic musical literature, "Jocelyn's Lullaby," which will display his magnificent tenor quality to the best possible advantage. Miss Holmes will have a catchy song or two, and Miss Evans is to sing "Let's Go Back to Childhood Days," which is to be fluent and gorgeously illustrated. The Nickel's standard, as follows: "A Touché," a historical drama of Old France; "Woman's Intrigue," a drama and a howling comedy. "Mr. Physical Culture Gets a Surprise." The orchestra has some new numbers.

ANXIOUS MOMENTS FOR YOUNG MOTHERS

The hot weather months are an anxious time for all mothers, but particularly for young mothers. They are the most fatal time of the year for babies and young children, because of the great prevalence of stomach and bowel troubles. These come along without warning and often before the mother realizes that there is danger the little one may be beyond aid. No other medicine can equal Baby's Own Tablets in promptly curing bowel and stomach troubles and an occasional dose given the well child will keep the stomach and bowels free from offending matter and ensure good health to the child. Therefore the Tablets should always be kept in the house as they may be the means of saving a little life. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville.

A thousand and more interesting items for tonight and Monday shoppers at F. W. Daniel and Co.'s, Charlotte street. Every department has a counter full of bargains. Dainty muslins, gloves, belts, children's silk sun hats and infant's bonnets, lace collars—harpals in ladies' black lace net dresses, children's lustre suits, etc. See advertisement on page five.

THE CARELESSNESS OF THOSE WHO TRAVEL

"It is surprising," said a railway official to a Star reporter the other day, "how forgetful people are when they are travelling. Then to explain the reason for this outbreak he started to tell about the number of articles that are found in the passenger cars almost every day.

The things found in the ordinary day coaches include just about everything that a man, woman or child can wear on their person, carry with them or hold in a string. There is such a quantity of them that they cannot be allowed to accumulate and unless they are claimed promptly are usually sold for what they will bring.

The articles found in the sleeping cars are for some reason more best to the head officers, treated with a little more respect. The porters are expected to turn over to the proper officials everything found in the car when they are tidying it up after a run. Unless the goods are claimed promptly they are forwarded to the office of the superintendent of the sleeping car department, where they are kept for an almost indefinite period awaiting their owners.

In the stock of unclaimed articles personal apparel takes the largest and most frequent finds. Men are the worst offenders in this respect, but a fair number of ladies' garments are found also.

Regarding this the railway man said: "Women seem to be naturally more careful of their belongings than men are and leave fewer of them around. They are more afraid of losing their property, and so take better care of their clothes and baggage. Then some of them are always worrying about what would happen in case the train was wrecked in the middle of the night, and in order to be ready for the worst they turn in at night without undressing a garment. Lots of them do undress completely though and when they do they don't know how prevalent the habit of wearing pajamas is among women, but those who want to be comfortable when they are travelling in a sleeping car seem to like to wear them. We quite often get parts of suits that have been found in the berths occupied by ladies. When they get started in, however, we never take much trouble about keeping them, for they never seem to be called for again.

"Many valuables are left in the cars. A man will put his pocketbook under his pillow and then get up in a hurry and drop off the train without thinking of it. We always hear about that promptly enough. Other valuables which are not quite so essential are left for longer times. We get quite a number of gold watches in the racks and in the berths and although they are usually claimed some time it is often weeks and sometimes months later.

"People often make a fuss about articles of no intrinsic value on account of some sentimental interest connected with them but I have not yet been able to figure out why a man wasted thirty cents last week writing from Montreal to have his tooth brush sent on to him."

With another sigh over the difficulty of looking after the training public the official turned back to a batch of correspondence dealing with missing personal effects.

ST. MARTIN'S GIRLS SEEM TO ATTRACT THE CLERGY

Three Wedded to Ministers During This Month and Past Records Show Many More.

There is a tradition that members of the clergy are especially popular with the fair sex in St. Martin's, N. B. (St. Martin-by-the-Sea, as the tourist books like to call it.) Events which have taken place during the month of June which is now drawing to a close indicate that there is quite as much truth as poetry in the tradition. So far no theory to account for this peculiar phenomenon has been produced that has been adjudged perfectly good by the residents of the pretty little village. Some blame it on the climate. Others intimate that the presence of a Baptist seminary in their midst, even if it is only tenanted by a caretaker and some summer boarders, has had something to do with cultivating an ecclesiastical atmosphere in the place, and since Canadian girls are not allowed to enter the church as a regular vocation they take this as the next best course. There have been persons who have said that the lack of eligible young men of the home-grown variety has had something to do with the fate that has dogged the footsteps of almost every young person who has visited the place. Even nearer persons have said that girls would take even more desperate methods than marrying a minister to escape spending the rest of their lives in St. Martin's. These comments, however, cannot be taken to represent the real sentiments of anyone who is really acquainted with this pretty little corner of New Brunswick.

No matter what the explanation may be the fact remains that during the month of June no less than three young ladies belonging to St. Martin's have been united by marriage to clergymen—and that is going some for a place of its size. When a comparison is made of the population of Canada and the number of eligible persons within its limits it will be discovered that St. Martin's captured last seven and a half times the number of clergymen to which it is entitled on a population basis. When the history of the "place" reveals the fact that this is hardly an exceptional condition of affairs but that in almost every other year an almost similar record can be shown, it must be conceded that the young ladies of St. Martin's have an especial attraction for the representatives of the church.
