

Musical and Dramatic

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES.

The "Floral Concert" at Mechanics Institute, in the early part of the week (Tuesday evening), under the auspices of the King's daughters, was such an emphatic success that it was repeated at the Opera house on Thursday evening last. The reason of the change of place was due presumably to the fact that the Institute was already engaged for the repeat date. The attendance was very generous on the first occasion and naturally so, because the concert was very entertaining though the voices were all children's voices, and the patronage was merited because of the educational and refining tendencies and influences of such work. Much praise is due to Morley McLaughlin who was the originator teacher and director of the idea.

Another concert during the week was that given at Zion's church which has been dedicated. The programme was comprehensive, so to speak. Although I was not enabled to be present at the concert, yet, the fact that Prof. L. W. Titus and Mr. A. Chip. Ritchie had numbers in it, to my mind, not a little justification for the assumption that it was a musical success.

Musical people generally will be much interested in learning that Mr. Athos, who has been filling the position of organist of St. Andrew's church has resigned that position and has been appointed organist of the Mission church. Mr. Athos I understand, will assume his new duties on the 24th inst.

Mr. Jaroslav De Yielinski who has acquired distinction as a pianist and a composer of a number of vocal and instrumental pieces, has arrived in this city during the week. This gentleman, I have heard, will stay here several weeks. Possibly an opportunity may be had during his visit for hearing him in a concert.

Tunes and Under-tones.

The Royal Opera at Berlin has purchased Kroll's theatre in that city. The price was $600,000. Performances by singers of the Royal opera are to be given annually from May to September.

It is said that Wagner is getting ahead of Verdi even in Italy. During the opera season at Turin, Wagner's "Gottterdammerung" was given twenty one times and Verdi's "Falstaff" five times. "La Boheme" by Puccini, had twenty three performances.

Jules Jouy, the writer of "La Soularde" and many other of Yvette Guilbert's songs, has gone mad. It is possible many who have listened to Yvette are not surprised at this. Jouy was a very commonplace looking, fat little man, very particular about his dress and umbrellas. He now imagines he has a handkerchief worth 70,000,000 francs.

Michot, the original Romeo in Gounod's "Romeo et Juliette" when that opera was produced at the Theatre Lyrique in 1867, is dead at the age of 66. He was a waiter in a Lyons cafe when a young man, when the beauty of his voice attracted the attention of Adolphe Adam, the composer. Mr. Adam subsequently caused his own opera "Richard Coeur de Lion" to be the medium of Michot's debut in May 1826.

An absolutely unknown overture by Schubert has recently been discovered and Sir George Grove has had revived thereby his hope to yet find Schubert's missing Symphony. When Schubert died however the Viennese had no idea he was a musical genius, and it is possible the manuscript was sold to some grocer for wrapping paper. Schumann on a visit to Vienna found stacks of Schubert's immortal manuscripts dust-covered in his brother's garret.

Attempts are being made in Lisbon to establish a national Portuguese opera.

"Falke" was put on at the Castle square theatre, Boston last Monday evening and was continued through the week. Mr. Ferree and his wife Miss Edith Mason, are in the cast. A feature of the operatic productions at this house consists in the giving of promenade concerts before and between the acts of the opera. They are given by the Boston Ideal Banjo and Mandolin and Guitar club.

Offenbach's opera "Marriage by Lantern" and Leoncavallo's "I Pagliacci" were given in Boston last week by the Castle square company. The former opera while, not a stranger to the opera lover, is seldom given and is an unknown quantity to a great number. "It is of a light delicate comedy order, with no chorus, and little variety in the music, but there are one or two arias running through it, which are so ringing, and so delightful, that one is glad at the many opportunities when they are picked up as a solo by the principals, or as a quartette, duet or trio."

In the recent beauty contest in Paris, where, as announced last week Sibyl Sanderson the prima donna won second prize. The first prize was awarded to Mlle. Cleo de Merode, a dancer at the opera. There were 7000 votes.

Mr. Ivan Morawski is said to have had a highly successful season.

Fred Miller's new opera, "The Yankee Cruisers" was produced at the Boston Museum last week. The libretto is condensed ed, one critic, saying "There is no coherency, connection or sense to it."

The "Pops" are now giving special nights at Music Hall, Boston and special programmes are prepared. Last Monday evening was Harvard Night and the following programme was given:

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|------------|
| Manhattan Beach March, | Sousa |
| Overture, "Jolly Students" | Suppe |
| Waltz, "Scherzino" | Waldteufel |
| Selection, "Coppelia" | Knight |
| Overture, "Sphinx" | Thompson |
| Overture, "Granada" | Barry |
| Selection, "Proserpine" | Mason |
| Two Parts from "Strange Briar" | Carpenter |
| Overture, "Aloxyde" | Barry |
| Waltz, "Grubenlichter" | Zeller |
| Fair Harvard March, "Up the Street" | Morse |

Henry Bach, great grandson of the great Sebastian Bach, has made his debut as a pianist and composer at Hamburg.

The mother of Minnie Hank, the prima donna, died recently at Bellagio, Lake Como. She was 64 years of age.

TALK OF THE THEATRE.

On Thursday next the 25th inst. W. S. Harkins will begin a return engagement in the Opera house. Of course it is unnecessary in this city to say anything in praise of Harkins and the earnest effort he always makes to give his patrons every thing he promises: St. John people know he usually keeps his word, and therefore there is little left for special notice, usually beyond a reference to the material and talent of his company of each season. Some of them even are the same each year. They are expected to be here almost as certainly as Harkins himself. Take Tom Wise for instance, it now seems a necessity that he shall be here each season. He must come. Harkins' Company of this season has as yet been seen here so far only as one play is concerned "In Old Kentucky," but in his repertoire he has a number of strong plays such as "The war of wealth," a melodrama by the author of "In old Kentucky," and a play that gives opportunity for other members of the company, while in comedy he has "The new boy," "Too much Johnson" and other laugh-provoking creations. These pieces besides their emotional or mirth-provoking qualities have another merit in the fact that they are quite new to St. John. "The war of wealth" I have heard is the play selected for the opening of the return engagement.

There is a dramatic company playing at the Mechanics' Institute since Wednesday evening of this week. They opened with a piece entitled "The ladder of fame." The company is known as Harry Markham's summer company. A member of the organization is Mr. Bennett who was leading man with H. Price Webber a few years ago.

The California theatre in San Francisco has a stock company of selected talent. Among them is a young lady of western birth (an Oakland girl, she is called) who since she graduated in June 1880, has gained not a little distinction in the Eastern Circuits. She is Miss Olive Oliver who was born in Carson City, Nevada. Her stage debut was made in the important role of Queen Gertrude to the Hamlet of Daniel Bandmann, and, remaining with him till 1890, played all the heavy roles in his repertoire, the same line of work she did with Frederick Ward, the tragedian and created the role of Sarah Gooch, in "The House on the March."

Miss Oliver is described as "a tall, willowy girl with an olive complexion and burnished brown hair. She has a face which once seen is not to be forgotten. She is an expert fencer, being, in fact, one of the most accomplished women with the foils in the United States." Oakland, California, is her home.

"The Captives" one of the plays of Plautus was recently played by the Boston University students. It was rendered in the Latin text and the tickets were printed in Latin. The play is only 2200 years old.

It has been stated that "The Girl I Left Behind Me" has made more money in England than any other American play ever put on there.

The "Rivals" company, of which Joe Jefferson was manager, has disbanded for this season. They were only organized to appear in a few cities.

Tyrone Power who introduced himself and his company here a few seasons ago in a play of his own writing called "The Texan," is now in San Francisco a member of T. D. Frawley's Stock company which has been recently re-organized and has opened at the Columbia theatre. Their opening piece at this house was "The Two Escutcheons" or Chicago in Berlin," a four act comedy adapted from the German by Sydney Rosenfeld.

There is a report current in theatrical and business circles in Boston that the Tremont theatre in that city will have other management next season.

The Howard Atheneum, Boston, is closed until some time in August.

The beautiful Maxine Elliott has joined Frawley's company in "Frisco" and so has her pretty and promising sister Gertrude.

A portrait of this latter young lady appears in the last Mummy. She has a sweet face.

Sarah Bernhardt claims that wearing diamonds destroys the best expression of the face, dims the fire of the eyes and makes the teeth look chalky. Her tad is for costly gowns, the latest being trimmed with turquoises and the train lined with the skins of 200 ermines.

The recent death of Henry Howes the actor, says an American paper, leaves only two survivors of the original cast of "Money." The survivors are Walter Lacy who was the Sir Frederick Blount on that occasion and Lady Martin (Helen Faucit) who was the Clara Douglas.

"The best part of the record of every man's life is what he has done for others" is the only inscription, besides the name, upon the memorial monument to the late Harry McGlehan, which was unveiled in Mount Hope cemetery, Boston, last week. Every theatrical man remembers with the kindest feelings, the name "Harry McGlehan."

Ida Fuller, a sister of "L. Loie," will have a company of her own next season. She uses her sister's dances.

A DEATH TRAP FOR ANIMALS.

A Gulch in the Yellowstone Park Where Sulphur Fumes Collected.

F. H. Knowlton tells in Recreation about a natural bear trap in the northeastern portion of the Yellowstone National Park, on a small stream called Cache Creek, about 20 miles above its junction with the Lamas River. Knowlton and a friend were going up through a gulch Cache Creek had made, when near the head of it, about fifty feet distant, they saw a huge grizzly bear curled up as if asleep. Considering it to be impolite to awake it, with nothing to offer but prospectors' picks, they climbed up the side of the gulch at once, quietly and expeditiously.

Out of reach of the bear they stopped and fired and an instant later, but as the bear continued in the same position they finally made up their minds that it was dead. It was dead and had been dead about five hours. There was no wound on its body, but a little blood had dripped from its nostrils. Then they began to be conscious of a sense of suffocation from strong sulphur fumes arising from mineral springs thereabouts. The bear had wandered in there, tempted, perhaps, by the skeletons of four other bears, an elk, squirrels, rock hairs, and butterflies and other insects, and had been asphyxiated by the noxious gases. The head of the gulch made a sort of basin in which the gas settled. This gas is not very deep, a man's head being about on the surface of it, since the scoop's rim allows the gas to flow down stream with the creek, in a sort of a gas river on the water creek.

Diminutive Aztecs.

The feminine direct descendants of the famous Aztecs are tiny creatures, exquisitely formed and refined in feature. They carry the heads with the upbearing grace of the full-blooded Indian; their skins are not red, but a clear, smooth copper color that shines like gold in the sun; their hair is coarse and black as ebony and they are decorated with bright feathers and gay ornaments. These women make the most wonderful pottery that comes to us from Mexico, for they have kept the old Aztec forms and decorations in their art, and they also weave wonderful baskets and do exquisite embroidery.

Why She Pleaded Guilty.

"I might as well plead guilty, your honor," owned up the penitent prisoner at the bar. "If it had been lace or diamonds you might have called it kleptomania and let me go, but I don't s'pose that would work in this case. I stole the hog, your honor."

LOVE ON THE ROAD.

CHAPTER I.

Many persons maintained that Madam Gould's front kitchen was prettier than her drawing-room, though her drawing-room was as pretty as any in the county. There was something so comfortable about the red-tiled pavement of the kitchen, and the polished rows of brass pans and copper moulds gilded with such mellow radiance, and the order which reigned everywhere, was so soothing, that it was certain no man could enter that room without feeling how happy his lot would be could he but hang up his hat in the hall, and call himself home.

raised her eyes from the cream, but it was obstinately present and Madam Gould feared that the girl's heart was not in what she was doing. Madam Gould had no precise accusation to bring against her, but felt that everything was going wrong. 'Work as if your heart were in it, child!' she said impatiently. 'It angers me to see you look as if you were in a dream.'

himself with the thought that he would see her in the evening. He would see her again at the gipsy-party next day, and after that—after that heaven alone knew what would happen. Madam Gould conducted Margery back to the house. 'Child,' she said, after examining her face narrowly, 'tell me the truth. Has that young man said anything of a particular nature to you or not?'

one came. No human being but those who already stood by her side came within range of her vision. It was a heavenly June morning; never had Marton looked more lovely than now she was leaving it. 'The coach is late!' said Madam Gould, who rarely lost sight of the matter in hand. To Margery, whenever it came, it would come too soon.

The Little Ones at Home. ARE THEY FRAIL, RESTLESS AND NERVOUS? Paine's Celery Compound Will Make Them Bright and Happy as Larks.

As a rule, parents are to blame if their children are puny, weak, nervous and irritable. The little ones may be well clothed and amply fed, and yet sadly neglected. It should be remembered that the children inherit many of the troubles that parents suffer from. Thousands of little ones suffer from weakened nerves—a legacy from father or mother. This nervous condition begets irritableness, bad temper, headache, indigestion, stomach troubles and impure blood.

in a very short time; it will give natural appetite, sweet sleep, and will make the little ones as happy as larks. A mighty chorus of gratitude has gone up all over the Dominion from glad fathers and mothers who have had their dear ones perfectly restored to health by Paine's Celery Compound. Mrs. Powell, of Palace Street, Montreal, writes: 'I have used Paine's Celery Compound with most gratifying results at different times when I found myself run-down to a nervous condition. I have also found the Compound to be an excellent preparation for my children.'

and him alone. Stanmore and Lady Stanmore had gone over to Hurst to call on Lady Probyn, but Belle had made no offer to accompany them. Indeed, Stanmore had given her to understand that it was better that she should not go.

The slightest excitement was strictly forbidden to poor Sir Dick, whose condition was still more than great. She had anxiety still more than great. She had watched him day and night since that terrible day when she believed her agonized prayer had been heard, and that some Holy voice had sent her to his aid.

And other prayers, too, were offered up daily, for the young man struck down in his prime. When Amy Trelawney had first heard from her father that Dick Probyn had shot himself, the violent emotion that she could not hide, first told the Vicar the secret which his daughter had so long hidden in her heart. She grew deadly pale, she tottered back; her breath came in gasps, and all words failed her.

"We hope he will live," said the Vicar, trying to speak composure, when he saw Amy's terrible agitation. Not a word did he inebriate of what was his own belief, that Dick's wound was self-inflicted; this idea was always spared to her.

It was an accident, Mr. Trelawney told her, and an accident Amy ever believed it to be. But she, too, soon knew that Dick Probyn was disgraced for life, and that the face she had loved to look on, the face that she had pictured in her heart, was spoiled and marred.

Daily she went up to the Hall, and Lady Probyn marked the signs of great anxiety written on her face. It grew pale and thin, and beneath her pathetic grey eyes were shadows that had never been there before. On the breath of one beloved life these two women seemed to live. He was their one thought, and yet the idea of Amy Trelawney never once crossed Dick Probyn's mind.

But the memory of another woman only too often did. His mad action, his days and nights of love and pain, had not driven the love of Belle from his heart. It was the utter hopelessness of this that started his recovery. It seemed to him, as he lay on his sick-bed, that he had nothing to live for. And yet he felt sorry for his mother, and would sometimes steal his wasted hand into hers, and look at her with his blue, sunken eyes.

He had been a little brighter the day when Stanmore and Lady Stanmore had driven over to Hurst, to see Lady Probyn and had left Belle at home. It was a languorous day early in August, and at the Count. Belle was sitting at an open window, looking dreamily out on the park.

AMONG THE PINES.

Bessie Graham wondered what was to become of the farm if something was not done to mend matters. She had grown from babyhood to girlhood in her country home, and had there been content. Childhood is sometimes insensible to the touch of poverty. Now that she was entering young womanhood, she could no longer deceive herself. Her father had never been an able manager; for years he had suffered affairs to become more complicated, and debts to accumulate, so that the farm which had once yielded a good income did not now support its owners. The only abundance upon the farm was its number of pine trees. Loftily they lifted their heads, each one trying to outstrip the other, while they looked at them and sigh. If cotton would only thrive like them, she thought, things would be different. No body cared whether or not they grew, and that fact seemed to fill them with a determination to show what they could do. The cotton was worked and watched; then, suddenly heavy rains would fall until a second deluge seemed at hand; the crop would thus often result in a failure. The more rain the pines drank the brighter would gladden their green needles, and the sweeter would be their aroma.

The negroes, tired of working for wages which were slow in coming, had mostly left the farm. The deserted little cabins, which he decayed and broken sheds, added to the thrifting appearance of the whole scene. For several years Bessie had racked her brain in search of a remedy for the want that was visible on all sides. The problem still remained unsolved. Never had she spent a night of her nineteen years outside the rough walls of her home. Her parents were by no means ignorant people; though for many years they had been almost cut off from the outer world in their quiet home, still they did not undervalue the advantages of an education. Their attempts to instruct their only child, however, were made in such a desultory manner that the poor girl only knew enough to cause her to wish to know more. Friends she had none, outside of her home. Occasionally her father allowed her to drive with him to the nearest village, ten miles away. She knew some of the storekeepers and their families there, but her visits were so few that the acquaintances remained slight. Only one event of any particular interest to her had ever varied the monotony of her life; that had happened just four months before.

Their home was in the extreme southern portion of Georgia, so close to the borders of the Land of Flowers that one could almost catch a whiff of the perfume of the orange blossoms. One day Mr. Graham had paid his usual visit to the village for his scanty weekly supplies. Bessie, her tasks finished, watched for him from the rude steps of the porch, so that she might call to her mother at his approach. Then supper would be placed upon the table while the horse was being taken from the shafts.

Soon she heard the wagon wheels as they crushed over the heavy sand. To her surprise her father was not alone. In the bottom of the wagon reclined a young man, whose style of dress proclaimed that he was not a native of those parts. By Mr. Graham's side sat an elderly lady, whose face was thin and worn, as if from weary months of suffering. Upon her cheeks was a glow which health had no longer in giving, the sign of a fatal disease. The gentleman, a moment before going forward, glanced with disconcerted expression at her shabby, patched gown; then her innate politeness asserted itself, and she descended the steps and met the wagon.

"Bessie, I have brought you some visitors," said her father. "Let me make you acquainted with Mrs. Marshall and her son." The introduction was acknowledged, and the strong young arms were lifted to help the elderly lady from the high seat. While Bessie was making the invalid comfortable in a spare bedroom, Mr. Graham was telling his wife, in the kitchen about the strangers.

Mr. Marshall and his mother were en route from Philadelphia to Florida for the benefit of the latter's health. Finding that she was very much fatigued at the village of J., they had decided to stop over at them at the station. Mr. Graham saw them at the station, and they had inquired concerning her in a quiet place. He was so touched by the worn-out expression of the invalid that he had proposed taking them to his home among the pines. The offer had been gladly accepted.

The Marshall family enjoyed their sojourn longer than at first they had expected. For a few days the invalid had been quite comfortable from the effects of her journey; then she rallied for a while, and was able to walk about as usual. The days developed into weeks, and still they tarried.

Meanwhile Bessie was enjoying the break in the monotony of her life. She delighted in waiting on Mrs. Marshall, and her comfort herself quite indispensable to her comfort. She learned much from the old lady and her son about the outside world; but this knowledge, instead of bringing happiness,

A MOTHER'S THANKS.

SHE TELLS WHAT PINK PILLS DID FOR HER CHILD. Suffered From St. Vitus' Dance—Lost the Use of Her Right Side and Almost Lost the Power of Speech—Cured in a Few Weeks. Aymer, Que., Gazette.

Of all the discoveries made in medicine in this great age of progress none have done more to alleviate human suffering than Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. We suppose there is not a hamlet in this broad land in which the remarkable healing power of this favorite medicine has not been put to the test and proved triumphant. It is a great medicine and the good it has accomplished can only be faintly estimated. There are many in Aymer, who speak of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in terms of praise, and among them is the family of Mr. John Smith, the well-known blacksmith and wheelwright. Having heard that his daughter, Miss Minnie, had been cured of St. Vitus' dance by the use of Pink Pills, the Gazette called upon Mr. Smith to learn the particulars. Upon mentioning the matter to him he expressed pleasure in making the facts public, if it was thought that they would benefit any one else, and remarked that he thought the particulars better than himself.

Mrs. Smith could probably give the particulars of the case of her year old Minnie was attacked with St. Vitus' dance, of a rather severe nature, and a number of medicines were tried, but without any effect upon the trouble. An electric battery was also used, but this was getting more severe, and finally Minnie was obliged to discontinue going to school, having lost the power of her right side. Her speech was also so much affected it was with difficulty she could be understood. She was out of school for about six months and all this time she was undergoing treatment, but however, proved ineffective. One day Mrs. Smith saw in the Gazette, the particulars of a case of St. Vitus' dance cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and determined to try them with Minnie. By the time two boxes were used Mrs. Smith was sensible of a great improvement in her daughter's condition, and after the use of four more boxes was satisfied that Minnie was completely cured. As no symptoms of the trouble remained, this was about the end of June last, and since that time there has not been the slightest recurrence of the dreaded disease. While Minnie was taking the pills her weight increased, and her general health was much improved. Mrs. Smith also said that her younger daughter showed symptoms of the same trouble, but the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily dispelled it.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are offered with a confidence that they are the only perfect and unfailing blood builder and nerve restorer and when given a fair trial disease and suffering must vanish. They make rich, red blood and cure when other medicines fail. Sold by all dealers or sent by mail on receipt of 50 cents a box or $2.50 for six boxes, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Y. Beware of imitations and refuse trashy substitutes alleged to be "just as good."
