

Blackville Fair

Annual fair of Blackville Rural Society No 75 was a Thursday October 8th inst. The fair was an unqualified success and the exhibits of an exceptionally fine quality.

The show of vegetables was perhaps the most notable feature and spoke very highly of the carefulness and industry of the farmers in this section.

Several varieties of Potatoes were shown including, delawares, carmel, early rose. Wheat was well shown and all good samples. Oats were not so much in evidence, but turnips, cabbage, mangels, carrots, beets etc. were largely exhibited and of an unusually fine quality, not surpassed by the other lines shown at the fair or Chatham if people who were at

Miss Agnes Miller, of Chicago, speaks to young women about dangers of the Menstrual Period—how they can avoid pain, suffering and remove the cause.

I suffered for six years with dysmenorrhea (painful periods), so much so that I dreaded every month, as I knew it meant three or four days of intense pain. The doctor said this was due to an inflamed condition of the uterine muscles caused by repeated and neglected colds and feet wetting. If young girls only realized how dangerous it is to take cold at this critical time, much suffering would be spared them. Thank God for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, that was the only medicine which helped me any. Within three weeks after I started to take it, I noticed a marked improvement in my general health, and at the time of my next monthly period the pain had diminished considerably. I kept up the treatment and was cured a month later. I am like another person since I am in perfect health. The monthly sickness reflects the condition of woman's health. Fifty thousand letters from women prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound regulates menstruation, and makes those periods painless.

Wonderful Rifle.

New Army Weapon—Can Send Bullet Through Fifty Five Men

A Mail and Express correspondent writes that work is progressing rapidly on the manufacture of the new Springfield magazine rifle in the United States army in Springfield, Mass., to fill the special order for a small number received from the War department. A great deal is claimed for the new weapon, and it is believed that it will be the most powerful arm ever designed for the foot soldier or cavalry. Its most notable feature is its range, which is five miles. It is a foregone conclusion that after a trial of the new arm by the troops first equipped a general order will be received to continue the manufacture and equip the entire army, as the special board appointed by the ordnance department has made a favorable report on the weapon.

In recent tests the target used consisted of about twenty squares of white pine, one inch thick, which were mounted vertically one inch apart. Bullets shot from the improved cartridges of the new rifle at a distance of fifty-three feet from the nearest square showed a penetration of 54.7 of the boards, and at 1500 yards the penetration was 6.3. According to a law deduced by ordnance experts the fleshy part of a man's body from front to back, offers the same resistance to a bullet as does a plank of white pine one inch thick. On this theory it is claimed that the new rifle will shoot a bullet through the bodies of fifty-five men formed in a straight column, all facing its muzzle, the nearest man being fifty-three feet away; at a distance of 500 yards it will mow down twenty-three men. At 1,000 yards thirteen men, and at 1,500 yards, six men. The Krag-Jorgensen rifle now in use will mow down forty-six men, as against the fifty-five of the new arm.

Although the new rifle will carry five miles, soldiers will not attempt to use it at that range, 2,000 yards being considered the greatest distance at which a soldier with sharp eyes, even when aided by a telescope, can see a human target with sufficient accuracy to aim.

The new bullet will have 43.3 grains of powder, as against 36.7 in the bullet now in use. The muzzle velocity of the weapon is 2,300 feet per second, or 300 feet faster than the muzzle velocity of the Krag. The bullet of the new arm is equal to the old in diameter as well as in weight, but its greater charge of powder increases the weight of the entire cartridge grains. Still, the total weight of the new rifle with bayonet, scabbard and 100 cartridges is one pound less than that of the old. This is the result of a clever arrangement of the new arm. It is six inches shorter over all than the old. With its new substitute for a bayonet and scabbard it weighs 9.47 pounds, against the 10.64 pounds of the Krag-Jorgensen with the present bayonet and scabbard.

In a Run Down Nervous Condition

Subject to backache, headache and dizziness for years—cured by Dr. Chase.

Mrs. Andrew Hewey, St. John, N. B., writes: "Last spring I had a sickness which left me in a very run down, nervous state. In fact, for a number of years I have suffered to a great extent with nervousness, and frequently had attacks of headache and dizziness. I also seemed to be very weak and was distressed with pains in the small of the back. 'I have spent a great deal of money for medicine but obtained little or no relief until I began taking Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, Kidney-Liver Pills, and can say that the combined treatment have been most remarkable. I never had any medicine build me up like the Nerve Food, and I give the credit for curing the pains in my back to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I cannot speak too well of these remedies since they have done me so much good.'"

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Interesting addresses were also given by Rev. H. E. Thomas, Rev. H. Arnott and W. C. Pearce.

The seventh and last session was held this evening, devotional exercises being led by Rev. A. Lucas. A report of the normal department was read by Rev. Mr. Hamilton, after which W. C. Pearce gave an interesting normal lesson.

The usual resolutions and votes of thanks were passed, and the convention, which was most enthusiastic and profitable, closed.

To Leave Ontonagon

Rev. DeLacy Will Preach His Farewell Sermon Sunday Evening.

The following is from the Ontonagon Herald on Saturday last, and is of local interest, as Mr. DeLacy was pastor of the M. E. church in Baraga for three years previous to locating in Ontonagon:

"Rev. and Mrs. J. H. DeLacy will leave on Saturday of next week to be present at the annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church pastors to be held in Flint, Mich., the following week. Rev. DeLacy expects to be assigned to a Chicago church the coming year, in order to take a course in the Northwestern University.

For the past two years Rev. DeLacy has been pastor of the Ontonagon church, and the members of the congregation, as well as many others, regret that he is going to bid farewell to the old town. During his stay here he has labored diligently, and his efforts are being crowned with success. He succeeded in having the church edifice remodeled until it is now a very attractive place of worship. He enthused new life in the members and added many names to the church register.

Mr. DeLacy will go to Chicago to prepare himself for still more useful work, and he and his estimable wife will take with them the best wishes of the community. Mrs. DeLacy was formerly Miss Loud of Newcastle, N. B.

CALIFORNIA TRAGEDY.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 15 Josephine Meade, a student of the University of California, was shot and killed today by Paul Schmidt, aged 25 years, who afterwards committed suicide.

Miss Meade was formerly a resident of Los Angeles where she was employed as a teacher in the public school. Schmidt was also a resident of Los Angeles, where he is said to have been prominently connected.

The tragedy occurred at 1819 Laguna street, where Miss Meade lodged. On leaving the house Miss Meade was met by Schmidt who has been waiting in the neighborhood for some time. Miss Meade and Schmidt adjourned to a nearby doorway where the shooting took place.

talking earnestly and with angry gestures. Miss Meade stepped away from him and approached a passer-by to whom she said: "I beg pardon, but this man—". At that moment Schmidt began shooting. He sent four bullets into the girl's body. When she fell dead, he calmly looked at her a few moments and walked down the street, removing the empty shells from his revolver. He then reloaded the pistol and after firing in the air to test the cartridge, placed the pistol against his forehead and fired. He died instantly.

Schmidt and Miss Meade have been acquainted several years and were once engaged to be married. His attentions became distasteful to her, however, and she becoming alarmed at his threats against her life, gave up her position in Los Angeles and went to Boston to escape him, afterwards returning to this city, where Schmidt followed.

Miss Meade was a niece of Vicar General Iartnott, of the Southern California Diocese, and bore an excellent reputation.

The Soo Industries.

English Capitalists Interested.

TORONTO, Ont., 14.—The Mail and Empire claims to have been informed by a gentleman closely identified with the Consolidated Lake Superior Company that the English capitalists back of Senator Dandurand are associated with the Furness, Maxam and Armstrong companies. Each of these companies, it is declared, recently despatched experts to look over the field, and from what could be gathered the reports returned were of a highly favorable character. The Mail and Empire adds that its informant had no hesitation in saying that if a short delay was secured more than sufficient capital would forthcoming from Great Britain to warrant the resumption of operations at the Soo.

Temperance and Politics.

Dominion Alliance Preparing for Elections

TORONTO, Oct. 14.—The executive officers of the Dominion Alliance have set vigorously to work within the past week to organize the province for active work in the approaching elections. The campaign is being carried out in accordance with the programme laid down at the convention of May last, the formation of a voters' league among the electors in each constituency being the object aimed at, the aim being to secure nomination and election of men who will pledge themselves to work for effective temperance legislation.

Far Eastern Trouble.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 15.—A despatch received here from Port Arthur says the advices from Tokio show the feeling in Japan to be more tranquil and that the reports of extensive preparations for war are denied. The Japanese war minister has requested the newspapers to be more circumspect in their utterances. The Port Arthur official newspapers reiterate the impossibility of Russia evacuating Manchuria while the rebellion continues in China, and emphasizes the belief that the Minado and the Marquis Ito are both opposed to war.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—A despatch from Tokio dated yesterday says: "Important cabinet meetings were held yesterday and to-day, and the impression in well informed circles is that Japan will insist on Russia's fulfilment of her promise."

The newspaper comment is quiet but insistent.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The Koko correspondent of the Daily Mail telegraphs under date of Oct. 15 that it is reported that Russia has offered to relinquish her claims in Corea, but insists upon retaining Manchuria. It is stated that Japan has refused to accede to this proposition.

appointment in this country, but only a few extremists will contend that Canada's rights have been sacrificed deliberately as a peace offering to our powerful neighbors. As Dr. Goldwin Smith puts it Canada at least gets more by the tribunal's decision than she could have returned had she played her hand alone. He, at least, does not hesitate to affirm that Great Britain was determined to do what could be done for us in the circumstances. The matter was one of great difficulty because of the nature of the evidence, involving as it did the interpretation of the intentions of treaty makers long dead, and who could not in their time foresee the intricate and important questions which might hang upon their phrases in the years to come.

In advance of the fall term of the decision, at least, it appears that the good Canadians to deprecate the shout that Canada has been betrayed and that Britain has sold us out for a song. That cry, we believe, will not be justified when the matter comes to be fully discussed in the pages of the facts hereafter. Yet all must keenly regret the verdict, if the facts can be correct, since it will raise a feeling of uneasiness in the country and arm with fresh ammunition certain troubled spirits in this Dominion who are forever finding some pretext for anti-British oratory.

Turning for a moment from the sentimental to the practical results of the decision as reported, it is found that by the ruling Canada retains Wales and Pearce Islands which are of great importance since they guard the harbor of Port Simpson, destined as the Western terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific, to become one of the most important of our national seaports. It had been hoped that Canada would have gained free access to the by sea the Lynn Canal. Looking this, as apparently she does, our national route to the mining districts of the Yukon will still lie through foreign territory. Had the Canadian contention in regard to Lynn Canal carried a route by water from Vancouver to Skaguay and thence across country to Dawson would have been open to us within our own territory, but now it appears, to avoid the American boundary it will be necessary—in Hon. Mr. Sifton's opinion at least—to build an expensive railway, through very difficult country, from the southern shore of Portland Channel through to the most valuable of our mining territory in the North.

The decision appears to set a thin strip of territory between a considerable portion of British Columbia and the Yukon and the sea, and by which they believed Canada was guaranteed them under treaty with Russia. The extent of the territory through the tribunal's decision is not clear, but it is a matter of great addition to the first made the proposition that the assertion.

TWO AND A GUIDEBOOK

By M. MACLEAN HELLWEEL

Published by T. C. McLeod

How it did rain! Barbara pressed her forehead against the window pane and strained her eyes in a vain endeavor to catch a glimpse of the gleaming white of the distant mountains. She had been in the beautiful capital of her country nearly twenty hours, and she had seen nothing—absolutely nothing—of it. Nearly twenty hours of the few precious days of her visit gone in impatient, heart-breaking waiting for Jupiter Pluvius to exhaust himself and retire in favor of old Sol.

As a fresh gust of wind drove a volley of raindrops in a jet down her forehead against the glass and dashed them in scurrying streams down the dripping asphalt the girl's head drooped despondently and she sighed.

The young man who for some time had been watching her sympathetically over his book now threw it aside and stepped to the open window.

"What a day!" he said as the tapping continued despondently to the wall, wailed louder and thicker by the boisterous wind.

The girl's face brightened, and she turned to him impetuously.

"Oh, thank goodness you have spoken at last! I was going to start the conversation all myself. I simply couldn't stand the silence any longer. Do you know I have not uttered one word this morning since I ordered my breakfast. It's an unprecedented record, but the strain has been awful."

She dimpled roguishly, and a faint flush rose in her cheek. He might think her very bold, this handsome young stranger, but she really could not help it. The limit of her silent endurance had been reached. She must speak or perish.

But the idea of boldness never entered the young man's head. He was thinking how very pretty she was, how soft and curly her hair, how piquant her dimpled smile and how becoming the little tinge of pink in her round cheek. He laughed in comprehending sympathy.

"Why, I wanted to speak to you long ago, but didn't like to venture. Isn't it the very dickens of a day? Who could go sightseeing in this?" as a fresh fury rattled the windows.

The girl's face fell again.

"Who, indeed?" she echoed disconsolately. "Think of coaxing all winter for just three days of Washington and having the whole of one of them like this!"

"It is rather rough," said the young man. "I'm in precisely the same box myself—that is, for coaxing, read manag-ing. But it only increases one's agony to look at it. Won't you sit down?"

He turned a rocking chair with its back to the window, and as Barbara dropped into it he threw himself into the sofa corner opposite.

"Is this your first visit to Washington?" he asked.

"My very first. Father comes here business every spring, but he hates being bothered, and I could never persuade him to bring me before. He has his head into my room before I this morning to say that he probably not see me again to-day had oceans of business to attend to."

"No, dear, we're not crazy; just engaged, and we've seen the outside of everything, and—" tains, the most delicious. When it was over and they adjourned to the stately drawing room her companion left her for a minute. When he returned he brought with him a couple of books and a huge bunch of violets.

"These," he explained, when Barbara had arranged the flowers upon her person to her satisfaction, "are guide-books—one to Washington in general, the other to the Congressional library in particular. As the rain god is still in command of affairs, suppose we just off the capital and library right here where we are. It's really, when you think of it, much the more satisfactory way. If we went to the actual buildings we'd have to walk our feet off on the hard floors. We'd have to lose our breath climbing impenetrable stairs or else have our brains addled by being jerked up and down in elevators. We'd dislocate our necks tilting our heads back to see the pictures on the ceilings. And at the end of the day we'd probably come back to the hotel cross, tired and dissatisfied, having done less for-gotten to look at the one thing above all others we particularly wanted to see. Now, with these valuable little books we can defy the elements and enjoy at our ease every detail of the buildings—exteriorly and interiorly—but we can about as well know size about them that the making in the originals could never tell us. What do you say, shall we begin with the library?"

Barbara's eyes sparkled. "It's the inspiration of genius," she cried, "to sit here, with the rain pattering by all means, and you can read his history aloud before we look at the pictures."

By dinner time they knew more about the capital and the wonderful Congressional library than many a native Washingtonian, and they had also read the whole of a volume of the history of the city of Washington and all the details in connection with its construction.

After they had closed their eyes to the palm trees, where the magnificent of sweet and delicious, and the other various characters of personal history, which she was to say, they found even a certain something in the history of the city.

Barbara's sympathy, the attention and undivided interest encouraged her companion to discourse at length upon his occupation, prospects, hopes and ambitions, a conversation that returned in full, being inspired to confidence by the delightful discovery that her new acquaintance was actually the Arthur Howard of whom "Gossip Tom" was always talking, who had been his Fidelis Achilles at Yale and his comrade in arms in Cuba.

The precious hours flew only too quickly now. When at last Barbara felt compelled to say good night she tripped blithely to bed, happy in the knowledge that she had another whole day in Washington and that, no matter how busy her father might be, she would not have to spend it alone.

Not even the undeniable fact that it was still raining when Barbara pulled up her window blinds the next morning could dampen her buoyant spirits.

By a strange chance Mr. Howard reached the dining room door just as Barbara and her father appeared, and, popping having cordially greeted "the Mr. Howard who nursed Cousin Tom through that dreadful fever in Cuba," the three went in to breakfast together.

"I'm sorry, little girl, to have your visit run out so dull," said Barbara's father, as they were leaving the dining room, "but there's a glooming of directors this morning, and I'll have to be with Lucie up to train time this afternoon, so I'm afraid I can't show you around today any more than I did yesterday."

"If you and Miss Warren will permit me," cried Howard eagerly, "I shall be only too delighted to be her escort. Mine is purely a sightseeing visit."

"Capital," answered Mr. Warren. "I have a great respect for Tom's judgment, and I leave my daughter in your care with perfect confidence. Only don't take her out if it rains hard." And, accepting a hasty kiss from Barbara, the busy man hurried away.

"Suppose," suggested Howard as they wandered into the drawing room, "that we read up the Smithsonian institution and the Corcoran Art gallery this morning. Then if it clears we can go out right after luncheon and drive round the city. By that means we can at least see the outside of all the places of interest, which will be better than vainly attempting to see the inside of only one."

Mr. Warren reached the door of his hotel that evening in a heavy down-pour just as a closed carriage drove up, from which he was amazed to see his daughter and her escort emerge.

In spite of the rain and the thick, gloomy fog that enveloped everything Barbara's cheeks were flushed with happiness, her eyes gloriously bright.

"You've never been sightseeing in this weather!" cried Mr. Warren as they followed him in. "Are you both crazy? Where have you been?"

The young man stepped forward eagerly, but Barbara forestalled him, laying her hand on her father's arm, she said coaxingly:

"No, dear, we're not crazy; just engaged, and we've seen the outside of everything, and—"

"And next year, sir, with your permission," broke in Howard, "we'll come back together, Barbara and I, and see the inside of them all."

"Engaged! Seen everything?" gasped the astonished old gentleman. "All inside of twenty-four hours?"

Barbara laughed.

"Two people and a guidebook can do a good deal in two days—if they understand how to study the guidebook!" she declared. And her father was forced to believe that they could.

ANTHONY

By TEMPLE BAILEY

Copyright, 1903, by E. C. McClure

The Misses Hildreth never spoke of Anthony's pedigree. There was a certain flavor of the stables about the word which offended their nice taste.

"His ancestor was Antonio L., Miss Anne would say proudly. 'The blue ribbon winner at the bench shows.'"

Anthony had never won a blue ribbon. In fact, he had not been entered. Charles, the butler, had advised against it.

"He'd never stand it, ma'am, his nerves are that shaky," he had said to Miss Angeline.

But when he took Anthony for a walk he met Tam the trainer. "What could he get with that nose?" he had asked disdainfully, and Tam had nodded.

"There, I wouldn't tell the old man there wasn't any chance," said.

One of the Misses Hildreth had said to Anthony, and they looked at their gray devotion to the banded hair.

went hungry, and his round sides became more hollow, but in his eyes was the sparkle of a care-free spirit. Back of him was the dim room with its condoning white covered table, ahead of him sunshine and freedom. But dark days came when he was driven, lame and thirsty, from place to place, and one morning the light went out of his eyes, and he lay on a path in the park, his ears alert for the sound of mending footsteps.

"All at once there came down the road a victrola. In it was the lady with the red face, who motioned the driver to stop.

"There's that darlin' dog."

She held out an open box of biscuits, "Come, doggie," she pleaded. And the victrola, tired at last of the busks, trotted forward. The footman lifted him in, and he sat with his dirty paws on the fawn cushions and ate of the fattest calf.

When the carriage reached the familiar street the footman was ordered to hold Anthony tightly.

"It would kill them sweet old darlins' to see him so dirty," said the kind hearted person. So the small dog was carried into the gorgeous apartment, and scrubbed and perfumed and decorated with a distracting pink bow.

Then the red faced lady hid herself to the brownstone front.

Charles took her card up.

"The person from over there," he said discreetly.

The backs of the two little ladies stiffened.

Charles hesitated. "She said she had some news."

The eyes of the old ladies centered with one accord on a black draped basket on a white draped table.

"Anthony?" they exclaimed and fluttered downstairs.

When they reached the drawing room, however, and the vulgar awfulness of the person was revealed, they stiffened again.

But the red faced lady swept forward and put both of her fat hands on Miss Anne's protesting, patrician shoulders.

"I've found your darlin' dog," she said.

What was a thumb ring or distinction of caste at such a moment? The frail blue veined hands of the little women clasped the pudgy digits of the red faced lady, and their well bred voices were almost shrill as they asked their breathless questions. Presently Charles was sent across the street to meet half-way the cockaded footman, and between them they brought in a perfumed and prodigious canine who barked excitedly and licked the face of the old ladies as they bled over him.

At last Miss Anne sank down on a sofa, her cheeks flushed, her eyes bright, her gray hair flying about her ears.

"Get him a chop, Charles," she commanded.

The red faced lady interposed. "He's stuffed already," she said inelegantly. The little ladies shuddered.

"He ought to get out more," advised the person. "You let me take him. I'm that lonesome sometimes that it seems as if I couldn't stand it." In her voice was all the wistful longing of the once busy woman to whom wealth has brought unwelcome leisure.

Before the eyes of the little ladies flashed a vision of Anthony in the victrola beside the vulgar, red faced lady. But with their other fine qualities they possessed the gentle one of gratitude, and without apparent hesitation Miss Anne responded:

"We shall be glad if you will take him."

Then Miss Angeline made another effort.

"My sister and I will give ourselves pleasure of calling on you soon," she said.

The face of the person shone with delight for a calling acquaintance with the Hildreths was a consummation to be desired.

That night when Anthony was in his basket Miss Anne bent and sniffed:

"Aink bow," quavered Miss Angeline.

PLUCKING SHEEP.

Shearing Process Not Used in Shetland on Pure Bred Animals.

The pure bred sheep in Shetland are not shorn, but plucked. The process takes place generally in June, when the fleece is "ripe" and the silky wool can be pulled off without pain.

This is called "roeing" and is much less damaging to the young fiber than clipping with shears. The wool when thus handled retains its peculiar softness, so that any one of experience can tell whether the material of a limited article has been plucked or shorn. It ripens first upon the neck and shoulders, so that sheep half plucked resemble in some sort a poodle that is clipped.

We must suppose that harsh handling prevailed at one time, for we read that in 1639 the Scottish privy council spoke of the custom as still kept up "in some remote and uncivil places," and James I. wrote to tell them that it had been put down in Ireland under penalty of a fine. Upon this they passed an act on March 17, 1649, deploring the destruction of sheep by this custom and imposing similar fines on those who should persist in the practice.

The Tropic Home.

White men's homes in India, the West Indies, west Africa and other parts of the tropics to which civilization has penetrated are usually run on the principle of having as much air and as little furniture as possible.

Carpets, rugs, cushions, hangings and portieres are banished. Tables and chairs are made of light wickerwork, bamboo or cane. The floors are polished with coconut husks until they become as slippery as a good dancing floor. Indeed, they are used for that purpose nearly every evening in any settlement where there is society. A ball in the tropics requires no preparation. After dinner it is only necessary to move the light furniture to one corner of the spacious room, send somebody to the piano and start dancing.

The ballroom is practically in the open air, for wooden "jalousies" form most of the wall space and are opened like Venetian blinds to let in the cool night breezes.

The "Just Alike."

Few people perhaps notice that all omnibus wheels are painted yellow, says the London Chronicle, so that any wheel may be worn with any bus color.

Exactly about the same in the world is or precisely the same diameter, whatever the size of the auditorium, so that the rider knows the angle at which he must lean in San Francisco is the angle of safety in St. Petersburg. Even the ladder is "standardized." Every bodman in England knows what he has to step when toiling up the builder's ladder, though he may not know it is seven inches. The sailor who runs up the ratlines has twelve inches as a step, and that makes a run possible, and the fireman's ladder is crossed with exact equivalence to the ratlines.

Death From Electric Shock.

The ultimate cause of death, when due primarily to electric shock, is generally considered to be stoppage of the action of the heart or of the respiratory organs. That the latter may be affected is shown by the fact that victims of electric shock are sometimes brought to by practice of some of the well known methods of artificial respiration. The cessation of the heart's action may be due to stimulation of the nerves which control the beating of the heart. These, when stimulated to excess, may cause the heart to stop altogether.—Archibald Wilson in Cassell's Magazine.

The Consulting Caddie.

There is one personage who of late years has rather disappeared from the golfing world, but used to be greatly in evidence in it—the advisory caddie. Many of the caddies of the old Scotch school used to treat their masters (as called) much in the manner that a good old nurse treats a baby when she is beginning to teach it how to walk. In those days there was not a stroke played without the most careful consultation with these sapient mentors.—Westminster Gazette.

Placing the Blame.

Caller—So the doctor brought you a little sister the other night, eh? Tommy—Yeh; I guess it was the doctor done it. Anyway I heard him tellin' pa some time ago 'at if pa didn't pay his old bill he'd make trouble for him.

Protruding and Bleeding Piles

Are positively and permanently cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

It is popularly believed that nothing short of a surgical operation will cure protruding piles. This is not so; has been proven again and again where Dr. Chase's Ointment has been tested.

Mr. Geo. Baker, painter, 103 Fuller St., Parkdale, Toronto, states:—"When one has received great benefit from a remedy after being disappointed many times, it becomes a pleasure and a duty to recommend it to others. Such is my experience with Dr. Chase's Ointment. For the last eight years I have been a continual sufferer from protruding and bleeding piles, which seemed worse when walking or working. In fact I was in agony with them most of the time."

"I tried every remedy I could learn of without any success whatever, until I obtained Dr. Chase's Ointment. From the first application of this preparation I felt an improvement, and on each application I experienced wonderful relief from suffering. I feel sure of a permanent cure, and shall be delighted to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment at all times."

THE FIRST STOVES.

They superseded the Roman Stuba in the Eighteenth Century.

A heating apparatus called a "stuba" (stove) was widely used among the higher class of Romans before the beginning of the Christian era. This class of heaters was fixed and immovable, besides being in several other respects wholly different from the modern stove. In Germany and Scandinavia they were used in bath rooms and bathhouses during the middle ages. They were usually constructed of brick, stone or tile and were of immense size. They sometimes covered the whole side of a twenty or thirty foot room and often extended out into the room as much as ten feet, in which case the smooth, flat top was used for a bedstead, the heated surface imparting an agreeable feeling of warmth during those cold nights of long ago when such things as covers were quite rare.

Cardinal Polignac of France was perhaps the first to attempt the construction of a stove wholly of iron, this at about the beginning of the eighteenth century. The first real improvement over the old Roman "stuba" was brought about by Franklin in the year 1745. One of his efforts produced a typical base burner, almost perfect and a model of workmanship. Stoves were not used in private houses to any great extent prior to the year 1850.

A Piscatorial Gunner.

The jaculator fish, the piscatorial gunner of the Javan lakes, uses his mouth as a squirt gun and is a marksman of no mean ability. Go to a small lake or pond filled with specimens of jaculators, place a stake or pole in the water with the end projecting from one to three feet above the surface, place a beetle or fly on top of the pole and await developments. Soon the water will be swarming with dainty gunners, each anxious for a shot at the tender morsel which the experimenter has placed in full view. Presently one comes to the surface, steadily observes his prey and measures the distance. Instantly he screws his mouth into the funniest shapes imaginable, discharges a stream of water with precision equal to any sharpshooter, knocks the fly or beetle into the water, where he is instantly devoured by the successful Nimrod or some of his hungry horde. This sport may be kept up as long as the supply of beetles and flies holds out.

Why will our correspondents neglect to send us their names when sending in their notes? This week we have Douglastown notes and a week or two ago Blackville notes. We must have your name.

The Newcastle and Chatham foot ball teams played two games last week, one here on Thanksgiving Day and one at Chatham. The game here resulted 8-3 in favour of Newcastle and in Chatham 9-0 in favor of Chatham.

Chester Stothart, son of Jas. Stothart of Douglastown met with a peculiar and serious accident recently. He was at work in the barn when he stooped to pick up a fork. In doing so his foot caught in a rope and he fell. The prongs of the fork being towards him he fell on them, one of them entering below the abdomen and coming out through the back. The injured young man is in a precarious condition.

Word was received here yesterday of the death of Mrs. Wm. Jardine at Winchester, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Jardine and family removed from Newcastle a few years ago and have since resided in Winchester. Many friends here will be grieved to learn of Mrs. Jardine's death. The remains will be brought to Newcastle and from here will go to Blackville for interment. Deceased was fifty-two years of age and leaves a husband and eight children to mourn the loss of a kind wife and mother.

Mr. Dudley Perley, who died at his residence, Rockheads, Saturday morning, was one of our oldest and most highly esteemed citizens. He was a genial, kindly man, one of nature's born gentlemen, and retained his native courtesy and sweetness of disposition to the close of his life. He lived here at the time of the Great Fire, and was a mine of information respecting men and matters in the old days on the Miramichi. He leaves children and grand children, and a large circle of warm friends, to mourn for him.—World.
