Premier Ferguson Definitely Announces No Concessions to "Wet" Cities.

LATEST SUMMARY.

6,591 subdivisions out of 7,332 show:

For the O. T. A.	542,196
For government control	501,828
O. T. A. majority	40,368

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Oct. 25. — Very little change in the standing of the vote on the Ontario temperance act was apparent this morning. The majority for prohibition hovered around 40,000, with several hundred polls still to be heard from. It is not likely that any close estimate of the majority can be formed until the chief election officer announces the official count.

The result of the vote will be that the Ontario temperance act will remain on the statute books. This was made clear by Premier G Howard Ferguson last night, when he announced that the government would accept the verdict of the majority and inforce the act to the best of its ability.

The provincial prime minister was asked if the government would bring in a local option bill, in view of the fact that most of the bigger centers of population had voted against prohibition. "The government cannot give any concessions to 'wet' cities," replied Mr. Ferguson. "The result of the vote is apparent and the issue was one clearly defined and agreed upon by both parties beforehand."

Two dry votes were gained in Nissouri township, while in Westminster the O. T. A. gained 48 votes, and the wets 6. Government control gained one vote in Dorchester township.

Figures for the other townships and the annex were the same as published in Friday's edition of The Advertiser.

PETER SMITH.

Former provincial treasurer, who yesterday was sentenced to three years in Portsmouth penitentiary, and with Amelius Jarvis, Sr., Toronto broker, was fined $600,000, when they were found guilty by a jury of conspiracy against the province of Ontario. Chief Justice Meredith imposed the sentence. Appeals have been entered.

Efforts Are Being Made by Friends of Convicted Men to Secure Freedom of Former Provincial Treasurer and Aemilius Jarvis, Sen., on Bail.

HEAVY SENTENCE IS IMPOSED ON EACH

Special to The Advertiser.

Toronto, Oct. 25.—Chief Justice Latchford this morning fixed Tuesday next at 11 a.m. as the day and time for hearing an application for the release on bail of Peter Smith, former provincial treasurer, and Aemilius Jarvis Sen., head of the bond brokerage house, pending the appeal of their cases to the appellate court.

Smith and Jarvis were yesterday sentenced to three years and six months, respectively, with a collective fine of $600,000, on conviction of conspiracy in connection with government bonds. The prisoners will remain in the county jail till Tuesday.

It is understood that the counsel for the defendants, in addition to the argument that the presiding justice misdirected the jury, will say hat the court had no power to impose the fine under the statutes.

HOMES FOR MENTALLY DEFICIENT ARE URGED

Rev. Dr. Shearer, Toronto, Addresses Winnipeg Social Welfare Congress.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Winnipeg, Oct. 25.—In advocating homes for the care of mentally deficient persons, Rev. Dr. Shearer of Toronto, speaking at the final meeting of the provincial social welfare congress here last night, said it was Canada's great duty to look after these unfortunates.

The government, he said, seemed to look upon the care of the mentally deficient as a more or less useless expense. He pointed out the great danger in not controlling such people, and said that about one-tenth of one per cent of the population belonged to this class, either in an extreme or in a more modified degree.

BAPTISTS WORK BEST IN 30 YEARS

Membership in Two Provinces Now Stands at 60,103.

The Baptist church in Ontario and Quebec has experienced the most successful year for 30 years, according to the report on the states of religion rendered this morning to the annual Baptist convention of Ontario and Qubec now in session in the Talbot street Baptist church.

This report, which was the subject of wide discussion in the convention, shows that 1,450 new members have been added to the church, which now has a membership of 60,103 in the two provinces.

It especially commends the growth of the church in Toronto where in ten years the membership has increased from 1,017 to 13,746 and the per capita collections from $1.94 to $9.66 per year.

The Jarvis street church in Toronto proves the banner church of the district with 250 baptisms in the year.

A feature of the report upon which a great deal of the following discussion was concentrated was to the effect that of all increased membership in the church 50 per cent was lost through erasure.

Several delegates stated that this loss was one of the most serious facing the church today, while Dr. Bates voiced the opinion of a large part of the convention when he urged greater care in the examination of candidates for admission to the church. Another suggestion which received some measure of popular support was that the committees appointed to conduct examinations of prospective candidates be selected with greater discernment and that they be adequately fitted to conduct such a searching and important investigation.

Plan Not Favored.

It was observed that in the Baptist church in the Southern States entrance to the church by baptism was stressed very much following every evangelical campaign, and several delegates thought this was not a plan to be commended as far as the church in Ontario and Quebec was concerned. They thought it would lead to a greater number of erasures than was the case at present.

Personal evangelism was a point recommended in this report on the stage of religion, as being the essential need of the church. It was advocated as representing the greatest field for work and expansion in the church at large, and as offering the most attractive opportunities for increasing the influence of the church.

Lack of interest in the church's work, lack of church attendance, and an inordinate love of gain and pleasure were cited as the main obstacles to the progress of the church today.

The financial side of the year has been one of improvement. Last year's contributions amounted to $1,580,000, and the contributions this year to date are $1,516,000.

B. Y. P. U. Increases.

The B. Y. P. U. increased its membership by 1,635 in the last year. In the matter of education it was announced that the circulation of the Canadian Baptist was 9,000, the largest in the history of the church. At McMaster university there are eighty more students than at any previous time, and there are thirty-three more students for the ministry than in 1923.

The report shows a revival in evangelism and prayer throughout the church, and it was declared that an evangelical pulpit was the general demand of all churches. In material things, such as the building of churches and repairs to churches, the year shows a large gain. Dr. Smith, in concluding the report, pleaded for members of the church to show by a life consistent with the teaching of the New Testament that they were ready to put the practice of their faith in every day usage and carry out the letter of their gospel and belief.

Morgan Steps From Train And In Pulpit In 9 Minutes

At 11:04 o'clock this morning, just exactly nine minutes after he had stepped off the C. N. R. train from Chatham, Rev. Campbell Morgan, D.D., the famous English divine, entered the pulpit of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church for a brief one-hour service.

The spacious auditorium of St. Andrew's church was comfortably filled to greet Dr. Morgan, who so enthused and inspired London congregations while conducting one of his celebrated ten-day missions here last fall.

The opening hymn was "O Worship the King" and the large congregation sang it with enthusiasm, having in mind the address to follow.

As Dr. Morgan stepped jauntily from the train he looked the picture of health and not at all tired after just concluding a mission at Chatham.

In answer to a query as to the subject of the address in St. Andrew's, then scheduled within the ensuing 15 minutes, and in answer to some faint suggestion as to manuscript, Dr. Morgan replied that he had not decided what his message would be to those so eagerly awaiting it at St. Andrew's.

president of the Ontario-Quebec Baptist association, which is holding its 36th annual meeting in the Talbot street Baptist church.

TARIFF TO FAVOR DOMINIONS URGED

Lord Derby Would Support Reductions If Empire Trade Is Aided.

Associated Press Despatch.

London, Oct. 25.—Lord Derby, a Lancastrian Conservative free trader, says he would not be a party to any trick for the introduction of tariff reform, but would be willing to support a reduction of the existing tariffs in favor of the dominions.

Winston Spencer Churchill says he is still a free trader and is opposed to protection, taxation of food, and a general tariff, and says the safeguarding of the industries act against German competition does not violate the principles of free trade.

A definite lead on the question, however, probably will be given by Stanley Baldwin in a few days.

The Daily Express pleads for the clarification of the tariff situation and regretfully asserts that there is no chance in this election of obtaining any kind of imperial preference which the dominions would value and which would form the basis of a great imperial policy in trade development. The Express, therefore, advises the Conservative candidates to pledge themselves against food taxes and concentrate on social reform and thus defeat the Labor party.

A visit to the house of refuge at Strathroy yesterday afternoon by five women of the county interested in Middlesex affairs and County Clerk John Stuart proved to the satisfaction of all that the institution was functioning in the best possible manner.

The county clerk, who was one of the most successful farmers in the county before moving to London, was delighted with the thoroughbred Holstein herd and their surroundings.

Miss Mary Grant, clerk of London township; Mrs. John Stuart, Mrs. Joseph Marshall and Mrs. Robert Graham of the mothers' pension board, were all high in their praise of the manner in which the inmates of the house of refuge were being looked after.

MEXICO CUTS OFF TRADE IN BRITAIN

All Consulates of Mexican Government in London, Liverpool and Glasgow Closed.

CLAIMS ADVANCED

Decision Will Remain in Effect Until Present Strained Relations Are Improved.

Associated Press Despatch.

Mexico City, Oct. 25.—The most transcendental step in Mexican diplomacy was taken yesterday when the foreign affairs department ordered the closing of the Mexican consulates in London, Liverpool and Glasgow, as well as all the honorary consular offices throughout Great Britain.

This step means the complete suppression of commercial relations with Great Britain.

This drastic step was decided upon in the words of Foreign Minister Saenz, not to show hostility to Great Britain, but because the Mexicans believe it "unworthy" of themselves "to maintain consular representatives under a government which does not concede Mexico the honor of maintaining official relations, thus implying that it does not consider Mexico has the moral and legal capacity inherent to sovereign countries."

The foreign minister added that the decision would remain effective while the present "abnormal relations between the two nations endure, but that Britsh consuls would continue to have the same guarantees as before in the event the London government did not see fit to recall them."

CATHOLIC CHURCH FIRE CAUSES $300,000 LOSS

Stately Stone Edifice at Hawkesbury Falls Prey in Mysterious Blaze.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Hawkesbury, Oct. 25.—Fire of unknown origin completely destroyed the Roman Catholic church at Hawkesbury early this morning, and for some time threatened the existence of the whole town. The loss is set at $300,000, only $150 000 being covered by insurance. The entire church with all furnishings was a total loss, only the walls remaining.

When discovered the blaze was so far advanced as to make entry into the church for the purpose of rescuing altars or sacred vessels impossible.

The fire, which is believed to have been smoldering from early last night, was not discovered until 1 o'clock this morning, when the great stone building was a mass of flames, and the interior a roaring furnace, with flames leaping high into the sky.

DE VALERA DEFIES ULSTER THREATS

Republican Leader Arrested, Released, But Will Return North.

Associated Press Despatch.

Belfast, Oct. 25.—Eamon de Valera, the republican leader, who was taken into custody at Newry yesterday when he attempted to address a meeting, was sent across the Ulster border this morning, having promised to leave quietly.

There was no demonstration when de Valera departed. He was warned that he would incur two years' imprisonment if he returned.

The authorities took the precaution of stationing armed police outside the bedroom in the head constable's quarters in the Newry barracks, where the republican leader slept. He refused to eat breakfast when it was brought to his room, but a fellow prisoner disposed of the meal.

De Valera arrived in Dublin at 11 o'clock this morning, and immediately visited republican headquarters, where he made arrangements for visits to Sligo, Sunday; Derry, Monday, and Tyrone and Armagh Tuesday. He declared that he intended to keep these engagements notwithstanding the threats of arrest by the Ulster government.

This is the second misfortune of this nature that Mr. Ryan has experienced, the first being some twelve years ago. A small amount of insurance was carried.

Publication of Moscow Plot by Labor Government Creates Sensation.

RUSSIANS DENY

M. Rakovsky Declares Document Is Nothing But a Cunning Forgery.

Associated Press Despatch.

London, Oct. 25.—Publication of a foreign office document supposedly revealing a red Moscow plot against Great Britain startled the public today. The document includes the text of an alleged letter marked "very secret" from M. Zinovieff, president of the executive of the communist internationale, to the central committee of the British communist party, containing, in the words of the foreign office, "instructions to British subjects to work for the violent overthrow of existing institutions in this country and for the subversion of his majesty's armed forces as a means to that end."

A communication from the foreign office to the Russian charge d'affaires, M. Rakovsky, calls attention to the alleged Zinovieff letter and protests against this "violation of the specific and solemn undertakings repeatedly given to his majesty's government."

The foreign office letter was signed by J. D. Gregory, one of the permanent officials, in the absence of Premier MacDonald, who is also foreign minister.

Made Haste to Protest.

Publication of the letters has aroused some curiosity as to why the critical moment of an election campaign was chosen for their issuance. The opponents of the government, whether Conservative or Liberal, contend that the reason for the dramatic appearance of the correspondence was that the government became aware that the "very secret" letter was in the hands of the press and was to be printed today in any case; accordingly that it made haste to rush its protest.

The hostile newspapers taking this view comment in the severest terms. They connect the incident with the suppression of the prosecution in the case of the communist editor, Campbell, and find therein proof of their contention that the Labor party is under the sway of the communists. They profess to be shocked at the government keeping the matter dark so long.

They also argue that Premier MacDonald, being "forced" to publish the documents, has shattered his Russian policy, and has shown the country that it cannot again intrust its international relations to the hands of a man "who on his own confession allowed himself to be cajoled and outwitted by the country's worst enemies."

On the other hand, there is a suggestion that the government may have intended publication of the documents as demonstration of its independence and as proof that it is not, as its enemies allege, under Moscow's heel.

Russians Claim It Forgery.

There is a disposition in some quarters to make something out of the fact that the protest was signed by Gregory instead of Mr. MacDonald, and this disposition is aided by the statement in some of the papers that the premier and foreign minister, who is conducting his electoral campaign in Wales "was in touch with the foreign office in connection with the publication of the Russian documents last evening."

Meanwhile, it is stated in behalf of the accused Russians that the offending document is a manifest forgery, and that M. Rakovsky was so amused by its absurdity that he burst into laughter upon reading it. The charge is quoted as saying that forgery was evident from the heading of the letter: "Third Communist Internationale," as such a title had never been made use of.

One of the signatories of the letter as published, "Arthur McManus," British representative in the internationale, also has just returned from Russia. McManus says he never signed such a document, and that it is a clumsy forgery. Albert Impkin, secretary of the British Communist party, also claims forgery, and says the party never received such a letter.

PETER MACARTHUR NOW IN SERIOUS CONDITION

Little improvement has been shown in the condition of Peter MacArthur of Ekfrid, who underwent a serious operation at Victoria hospital several days ago. Although the first day following the operation, Mr. MacArthur showed signs of a successful and rapid recovery, improvement has been slow and disappointing.

At Victoria hospital his condition is reported to be "quite serious" and "not very good."

Mr. MacArthur is well known in Canada through his writings, especially in this district, where he has been termed the "Bard of Ekfrid." He has gained wide distinction through his novels and poetical works.

Promised Visit in 1926 Is Declared To Be a Self-Educating Mission.

Associated Press Despatch.

New York, Oct. 25.—Plowing her way across the Atlantic this morning, the White Star liner Olympic is bearing the Prince of Wales back to England with souvenirs and memories of his visit to Canada and the United States.

Before sailing, he promised to return in 1926. Next year he is going to South Africa. Friends of the prince said that when he returns to the United States, it will not be on a pleasure jaunt, but rather on a self-educating mission. He wants to study the great industrial plants, the people and the politics of the United States, they say.

A score of reporters boarded the vessel at her pier soon after the prince and his staff had hurried up the gangplank. He bantered with them and posed for photographers willingly, though he still showed a little embarrassment.

On the ship he was greeted by the British ambassador, Sir Esme Howard, and Captain Howarth, commander of the Olympic. He was led through lines of sailors to the suite that had been reserved for him. He thought the mahogany and gold finish "too pretty" for him and turned it over to General Trotter and took another done in white and gold for himself.

HALLOWEEN CONCERT GIVEN BY CHOIR BOYS

St. James Paris Hall Is Scene of Merry Program Put On Last Evening.

St. James' church, South London, choir boys gave a very much enjoyed concert in the parish hall yesterday evening. Humor was the keynote of the proceeding—the opening chorus and kazoo band, under the direction of William Stuart, being particularly amusing and well rendered. To add to the effect of the evening the boys all appeared in halloween costumes. The following boys all undertook solo parts in the form of songs or recitations: Tom Willis,t Donald Stuart, Leonard Wood, Tom Gregory, Robert Stephens, John Dawson and John Prosser, all of which numbers were very well received by the audience.

Miss Minnie Dobbyn added greatly to the enjoyment of the program by two readings, and Ralph Morrison displayed some fine work as the solo violinist. The humor of the evening was brought to its climax in a comic song by William Stuart, who showed himself to be a past master in the "art." The evening was brought to a conclusion by a grande finale, entitled "Boyest Pranks," which had been rehearsed under the direction of T. Graham, and in which every boy excelled himself.

Mr. Anderson, the organist, is to be congratulated on the success of the concert. The proceeds will be devoted towards the expenses of next year's camp.

BAPTIST REPORT BEST OF CHURCH IN 30 YEARS

ment committee, read this morning, states that there are more pastors requiring the help of the committee than there are churches needing the services of pastors. The difficulty experienced by the committee in placing the men who are now without churches was emphasized, and it is expected that a committee of inquiry into the possibility of dealing satisfactorily with the whole question will be appointed during this convention, to bring in a definite recommendation next year.

URGES FRATERNAL SPIRIT.

Urgently appealing to Baptist ministers for a greater spirit of fraternity towards men, a union of baptist churches from coast to coast, and their aid in the advancement of education, Albert Matthews of Toronto opened the twenty-sixth annual Baptist convention for Ontario and Quebec at Talbot Street Baptist church last night with a stirring presidential address.

Mr. Matthews exhorted members of the convention to focus and concentrate their efforts on the development of the colleges and universities. He appealed for their support in a broader consideration of the educational problem.

Mr. Matthews declared that the Baptist church this year had achieved the greatest spiritual results of any year in its history, but had failed to grasp an opportunity.

"There is cause for rejoicing when you contemplate the reports which are to be laid before us at this convention," Mr. Matthews said. "The pulpits are ably filled with consecrated ministers of the gospel of grace, and the churches are filled with God-fearing men and women, and yet we have failed to grasp an opportunity."

"We must deal with conditions as we find them. There is time for frank discussion of disturbing conditions which surround us. Spiritual forces are as varied as the powers of nature, and they don't always make for truth. Of all evil spirits, suspicion is the most dangerous in the world."

Destroy Suspicion.

"If we would destroy suspicion, we must come into close contact with our fellowmen. We must refuse to invent fears. Men of different temper must seek the opportunity of friendly intercourse. We need to rule our own lives by a watchful self-discipline, and to get the best out of people we must believe the best that is in them."

"Therefore let us come together in fraternal spirit to discuss those problems. It seems vitally important now that the Baptist people should have a large vision of their work here. We should join hands with our western brothers in a united body from coast to coast, making a united constitution.

"Although there is a crying need for reasonable superannuation and Sunday school matters and young people's work clamor for our attention, I must confine my remarks to one single phase."

Mr. Matthews stated that as chairman of the board of governors he spoke on educational conditions which confronted the church as a problem with which he was familiar.

"If ever there was a time in the history of the world when education is a real necessity, it is now," he declared. "Where educational institutions flourish most the Baptist cause prospers most. There is no task so fundamental to our success as education.

"The Baptist cause is undereducated. If you would have able men in editorial offices and theological schools, how would you without education? At a time when the nation is calling for statesmen, how would you have us furnish such men? Now is the time for us to make the universities and colleges sufficient and worthy of the time in which we live.

"In Baptist colleges we have come to the time when funds from endowments fail to sustain the work. Universities and colleges belong to churches and conventions, and it is right you should know the position in which these institutions now stand."

$25,000 Deficit.

Mr. Matthews pointed out that a deficit of $25,000 had been suffered. From this amount $21,000 might be deducted, this year being the fourth year of the forward movement. The net deficit would then be $3,500. "We shall be under the necessity of providing $25,000 additional annual income," Mr. Matthews said.

Mr. Matthews stated that in the question of finance of the universities he would entirely trust the churches and provision for the young people would be made. He pointed out now the colleges and universities had performed a precious service, "yet they cannot live upon the past," he said.

"I plea to the churches to support the university from outside pressure from any cause in order that the strength of the administration of educational institutions in face of assaults might be maintained," he said.

"I appeal to the churches to support tions, who are doing a great missionary work, but are making no effort or contribution as an organization to sustain the work of the colleges.

"Let us not seek outside help or look to non-Baptists to pay for educating our ministers, but rather let us have the opportunity of continuing our work so well begun. Let us think of the results to be realized; the greater efficiency that can be sent out."

WORKERS' EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM IS PLANNED

Facilities for Extra Mural Study in University Subjects Extended.

A meeting of the executive of the Workers' educational association will be held on Thursday to organize the winter program. It is expected that a considerable number of classes will be commenced. This has been made possible through the increased teaching staff at the University of Western Ontario.

Extra mural work can now be handled more readily than heretofore, and extension work is rapidly becoming a recognized part of the university field. Oxford and Cambridge universities have placed their services at the disposal of adults who desire a general education.

The Workers' educational association seeks to place a university education within reach of those who cannot take a full course. To give the greatest amount of instruction with a minimum of inconvenience on the part of the students, the lectures are brought to their doors. The lectures this winter will be given in the county as well as the city.

Several subjects are being prepared for those who wish to pursue a definite course of reading.

COLLEGIATE WILL SECURE MUSIC HALL LICENSE

The collegiate committee of the board of education has decided to take out a music hall license for the auditorium of the central collegiate, the same as last year. The license cost $10 per annum.

The committee only arrived at this decision after hearing the report of Principal E. A. Miller regarding a conference he had with the amusement tax officials in Toronto recently.

The auditorium will be rented at the rate of $15 and $20 a night depending upon whether the organization conducting the entertainment has secured from the tax department exemption from the customary amusement tax for such concerts.

In cases where exemption cannot be secured by the organization the fee will be $20 a night to cover additional costs in connection with having a man at the door to tear up the tax tickets instead of operation a "chopper."

Principal Miller was able to secure from the department a concession in this regard whereby the board will not have to purchase one of the chopping machines, which cost in the neighborhood of $150.

CAR OF CLIMBING AGE PAYS VISIT TO MARKET

With a huge load of apples and three people as an additional encumbrance, a little car, which, according to the owner, was purchased by his father in 1898, arrived on the market this morning.

The present owner explained that everything was the same as when purchased, except a new pair of tires and a more modern horn.

The headlights on the car were quite awkward, being nearly twice the size of a latest model, and the old-fashioned crank was a novel sight.

"Despite all these hindrances," explained the owner, "she is the best all-round car I have seen ,hardly ever needing repairs, and in spite of her advanced age can travel thirty miles an hour easily.

"Watch her speed now," he said, as he opened the throttle to demonstrate his statement.

The Fall Weather Hard on Little Ones

Canadian fall weather is extremely hard on little ones. One day it is warm and bright and the next wet and cold. These sudden changes bring on colds, cramps and colic, and unless baby's little stomach is kept right the result may be serious. There is nothing to equal Baby's Own Tablets in keeping the little ones well. They sweeten the stomach, regulate the bowels, break up colds and make baby thrive. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.—Advt.

MONUMENTS UNVEILED BY HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Burwell's Corners and Paynes Mills Scenes of Latest Activity.

Special to The Advertiser.

St. Thomas, Oct. 24.—The Elgin historical and scientific institute visited Burwell's Corners and Paynes Mills this afternoon, where they completed their program of the year in marking points of historic interest.

Four monuments have been unveiled this year by the local society, the first being a stone cairn commemorating the 100th anniversary of the old English church on Walnut street, the second being a cairn on the site of the first high school, the Talbot seminary, which was built 100 years ago on the Griffin property.

Today's program was the unveiling of a cairn at Burwell's Corners, a side road two miles north of Fingal on Talbot street on the town line of Dunwich. It was on this site that Col. Mahlon Burwell, in 1814, erected the registry office of Middlesex county, and for a period of 29 years Col. Burwell kept the records of the county, which at that time included Elgin and other counties.

Col. Burwell, who was one of the pioneer settlers of the district, as was Col. Talbot, was taken a prisoner in the war of 1812 to 1814 and was carried off to Kentucky, where he was held a prisoner, being released on the cessation of hostilities and was appointed to the position of registrar in recognition of his services. The cairn was unveiled by Dr. Coyne, president of the Historical society, and bears the inscription "Registry Office of Middlesex, 1943."

APPLE OFFERINGS LARGE, THOUGH CROP IS POOR

On account of the poor crop of winter apples, comparatively few have been noticed on the local market lately.

But this morning all varieties were offered, snows, russets, pippins, kings, and many others. The quality was excellent, the average in every way.

Early apples are nearly finished, numerous dealers explained, and recent frosts will kill those that have withstood the cold weather up to the present.

LUCKY TWELVE.

Mrs. William Prust, Tecumseh avenue, entertained the members of the Lucky Twelve euchre club yesterday afternoon at her home, Mrs. S. C. Chambers getting the high score and Mrs. T. Moore the lone hand. The hostess was assisted by Miss Laura Prust, and after tea was served Mrs. Prust was presented with a beautiful tablecloth in honor of her birthday. The house was very attractively decorated with yellow 'mums.

Mrs. C. H. Brown, 19 Regina street, will entertain the club, with their husbands, next Tuesday night, when she will be assisted by Mrs. S. C. Chambers, Mrs. James Eggett, Mrs. C. H. Spencer and Mrs. A. E. Bailey.

COUNTY COURT WRIT.

Harry Upfold, Lambeth, through his father, Ambrose Upfold, has issued a county court writ against Ernest H. Pierce, Wallacetown, for damages as a result of injuries sustained in a motor accident. The writ was entered by McEvoy & Henderson.

BICYCLE STOLEN.

Pearce Baker reported to the police this morning that his bicycle, a Perfect, had been stolen last night from the front of Ross McKay's jewelery. The bicycle bore serial number 801961, and was painted blue.

BOYS' CONFERENCE OFFICERS ELECTED

Two Counties Represented in Convention Opened Last Night.

WORKERS SPEAK

Special to The Advertiser.

Stratford, Oct. 24.—A conference of older boys and leaders of Huron and Perth opened here tonight for a three-day session. Meetings are held in Knox Presbyterian church with about 125 delegates in attendance. Dr. Robert Martin, pastor of the church, extended an official welcome.

Officers elected tonight are: Howe Martyn, Stratford, grand pretor; J. Purves, Goderich, deputy; W. Elliott, Listowel, grand scriptor; J. Norman, Dundalk, comptor.

Addresses were given by C. F. Plewman of Toronto, secretary of the Ontario boys' work board, and Rev. Frank Langford, Toronto, secretary of the board of religious education of the Methodist church. Howe Martyn spoke on behalf of the older boys' parliament.

Saturday will be entirely given over to conference discussion, and on Sunday there will be special recognition of the organization in various churches in the city.

Thomas L. Wilson, C.N.R. brakeman, 37 West Gore street, suffered a severe shaking up as well as bad bruises to his left side and hip as a result of an accident at Shakespeare this morning. He will be kept from his work for about three weeks.

County Constable John Kirby met with a serious accident last night, in which, while he escaped without injury, his automobile was badly damaged. He was going to St. Marys, when a car he was about to pass turned squarely across in front of him, apparently going into a laneway. Mr. Kirby shot his car into the ditch, smashing the front fenders, radiator and headlights in the crash. The driver of the other car backed out of the lane and drove away before Mr. Kirby could get the number of the car.

The most interesting feature of the regular meeting of the public utilities commission was the receipt of a letter from the hydro-electric power commission administering a scolding to the local commission for alleged laxity in collecting accounts in arrears and failure to cut off service to customers delinquent in payment. The Ontario body further threatens that unless service to such customers is discontinued by November 1, "steps will be taken to appoint some person or persons to carry out such order."

Several birds belonging to Phil. Schmidt, 194 Dufferin street, won top prizes at the Woodstock poultry show. They were S. C Black Minorcas, and the prizes won were: 2nd cock, 1st hen, 1st and 2nd cockerel and 1st and 2nd pullet.

The Catholic social club elected as officers: President, Miss Rhea Kneitl; first vice, Miss Nellie Barton; second vice, Miss Marie Schneider; third vice, Mrs. Bart; secretary, Miss A. Casselton; treasurer, Mrs. E. McCardle.

Following an illness of two years, the death occurred in the city on Thursday of John Watkinson, aged 73 years.

CANADIAN SHOE COMPANY CLAIMS OUTPUT DECREASED

Canadian Press Despatch.

Montreal, Oct. 24.—The Canadian shoe manufacturers have given an emphatic and positive denial to the report from Ottawa that more shoes were made in Canada last year than in 1922. They declare that, on the contrary, the 1923 production was less than that of the preceding year by at least 600,000 pairs.

PRINCIPAL SEES BRIGHT OUTLOOK

William Prendergast, of Normal School, Addresses Teachers' Institute.

'There is a demand for education, and the outlook of the teaching profession is good. If we teachers really 'deliver the goods,' the public will compensate us in a material way as well as by appreciation."

Such was the confident declaration of William Prendergast, principal of the London normal school in the midst of an address on "The Relation of the Teaching Profession to the Public," before the London teachers' institute at its concluding session yesterday afternoon.

Principal Prendergast quoted figures to show that the attendance at the London normal school had grown steadily during the past three years. In 1922 it was 282; in 1923 it was 362, and this year it had increased to 396. He drew attention to the fact that 50 per cent more students entered normal school this year with first-class certificates, meaning that these students had spent one year more in high school.

He also pointed out that last June the normal schools of the province had passed out 1,700 teachers, representing about 12 per cent of the total of 14,650 elementary school teachers in the province. If that number of teachers were absorbed each year into the schools of the province it would mean that the entire personnel of the teaching staff would change every eight years.

"This plentiful supply of teachers," pursued Principal Prendergast, "will, in my opinion, result in the remote parts of the province securing better qualified teachers, and will lead to the abandonment of the summer school in New Ontario to provide teachers with a 'district certificate.'

"A second result may be that the department of education will make a more careful selection of those offering themselves as public school teachers in order to pick out those naturally endowed for the profession."

In this connection, Principal Prendergast criticized the women teachers' federation for seeking "to stem the stream of those entering the profession," expressing the opinion that such tactics savored of similar action taken by other professions.

Touching upon the training students received at normal school, the speaker expressed the opinion that the training proved profitable whether or not the students actually made use of the certificates they secured.

"Normal school," he said, "is the transition stage between going to school and learning to do for oneself.

"I often think that I would like to have the opportunity of teaching only the best students and letting the rest 'go to pot,'" concluded Principal Prendergast, "just to see what could be done with the smart boys and girls. In a graded school this cannot be done, but in an ungraded school it is different, and teachers there have a real opportunity of developing some of the brighter pupils into future leaders in the life of the community."

Martin, Sydenham street, Aylmer, at 6 o'clock, on Thursday, Oct. 23, when their eldest daughter, Vivian Leone, became the bride of Frank E. Leeson, eldest son of Mrs. Wm. Leeson of Aylmer, and the late Wm. Leeson.

The bride, who was given away by her father, was charming in a gown of white crepe meteor, trimmed with lace and pearls, and wore a flowing tulle veil, caught back with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of Sunset roses and lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaid, Miss Mary Martin, of Detroit, sister of the bride, was also charmingly gowned in gold canton, with trimmings of crystal beads, and wore a corsage boquet of Sunburst roses and violets. The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. Lawrence Leeson of Aylmer. Little Miss Mary Miller and Miss Marion Cheesman were quaint ribbon bearers, forming an aisle with white satin ribbons from the winding stair to a bank of beautiful autumn flowers in the drawing-room, where the ceremony was performed.

Dr. Jesse Arnup of Toronto, uncle of the groom, officiated, assisted by Rev. H. T. Ferguson, pastor of St. Paul's church. "The Bridal Chorus," from "Lohengrin," was played by Miss Olive Wilson of Detroit, cousin of the bride. During the signing of the register, Miss Marie Mabee of Tillsonburg sang "Until."

A buffet dinner was served by four college chums of the bride. Guests were present from Detroit, Toronto, Chatham, Ingersoll, Tillsonburg, Springfield and Aylmer. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and valuable presents. Amid showers of confetti and best wishes the young couple left for Detroit, Chicago and points west.

CROSS WORD PUZZLE NO. 11

This looks like the plan of a fortress. Like a fortress of the true medieval type, it has four massive ramparts, towers, battlements. The enemy might be tempted to pierce those thin side indentations, but remember the military strategy about the danger of getting into pockets and being trapped. Proceed with caution.

"One cross word leads to another" is the slogan of this game, and the key to its solution. All the words in these puzzles, across and up and down, horizontal and vertical, interlock. When you find a word crossways, it helps you at the same time to determine the other, up-and-down, word.

Cross-word puzzles form ingenious patterns. You will be fascinated in working them out.

The directions for working out the puzzle are printed below.

Each number in the puzzle indicates the position of the first letter of a word.

Each number in the white squares also refers to a definition in the accompanying table.

Each definition suggests a word possessing the exact number of letters to fit the white spaces allotted to it.

Each white space is to receive one letter only. Words start only in numbered squares.

DRYDOCK BEING PREPARED TO ADMIT DOVER TUG

The drydock at Port Stanley is being lowered today for the purpose of repairing a large tug from Port Dover.

Extensive work will be carried out on the boat and it is not thought that she will be completed until the end of this month or the second week of November.

Workmen were busy this morning pumping water into the tank and taking all the heavy articles out of the boat. Work on the tug will commence on Monday, it is said.

As the drydock at Port Stanley is the only one on the Canadian side of the lake, many tugs come to the port in place of going to Erie, Pa., the one on the American side.

WARD ABOLITION RAPPED BY LABOR

London Labor Party Will Make Question an Issue in Coming Election.

Retention of the present ward system of municipal election will be one of the platforms in the policy of the London Labor party for the coming election. Another plank in the party's platform is a recommendation that no money grants be made by the city council to any cause or institution which is not in accordance with the procedure bylaws of the city council.

A special meeting of every organized Labor body in the city is called for the night of Thursday, Nov. 6, to be held in the Labor temple at which nominations for the municipal election will be discussed and the remainder of the platform outlined and adopted.

At the special meeting of the London Labor party last night, Alderman Frank McKay stated that possibly three things would be presented to the electorate this year on which to vote. These were: the abolition of the ward system of election; the reduction of the city council from twelve to eight members, and a bylaw now in preparation for the city council which would allow the council to make a grant to the University of Western Ontario up to the amount allowed by the present municipal act, which is $75,000, without appealing to the people for a vote.

Both he and President Arthur Mould opposed the abolition of the ward system on the ground that it would tend to destroy the intimate touch between the council and the localities of the city and spell lost efficiency to the city management.

J. F. Thompson, reporting on the investigation of the juvenile court undertaken by the Labor party, spoke in the highest terms of the work being done. His resolution approving of the present administration of the court and objecting to any change being made, was passed unanimously by the party and will be sent to the attorney-general of the province and to the city council.

IMAGINARY COIN PUTS END TO VOTE

"Couldn't Tell Wet Side of Chip From Dry Side," One Voter Explains.

"MISPLAYS" SMALL

On Thursday, eighteen s voter walked to the polls, were identified, sworn and given blank ballots. Then they hesitated, a few moments ticked away, and they handed the nmarked ballots back to the deputies. They had tossed imaginary coins within their minds and the tokens came down before the voter could decide which side heads would represent and which tails.

"It's like the old way we used to choose sides for the ball game on the sandlots," declared one voter. 'None of us had any money. So we'd get a chip of wood, spit on one side, and then toss it up. 'Wet or dry,' one boy would shout. So it was with a few of us on Thursday. When the chip came down we couldn't tell the wet side from the dry."

Only Three Declined Ballots.

In ward one, one of the wards to roll up a majority for the O. T. A., there were only three declined ballots. One of these was at the Stanley street poll, where subdivisions 4, 5 and 6 were segregated, and two were at subdivision 13.

There were declined ballots at subdivisions 37, 39 and 40, eight in all, and the remainder were scattered throughout the east and north sections of the city.

"I don't think the number of declined ballots is a serious matter," Returning Officer W. C. Fitzgerald said today. "There is no great number of declined ballots at any one station. If we find any irregularity at any poll we shall certainly investigate it, but no complaint of this sort has been proven. The two lost ballots have not been accounted for."

Soft Pencil Spoils Few.

A few ballots in the north end of the city were spoiled through the use of a soft pencil. A cross was placed after one or other of the questions, but the lead was so soft that when the ballot was folded an "X" was imprinted opposite the other question. No voters marked the word "Yes" instead of an "X" on their ballots, according to Mr. Fitzgerald's information.

"A complaint was made against Mrs. Rose Savill, the deputy at polling station 69. We investigated this and found no irregularity. It was said that she had refused a vote to one applicant. I don't believe this is so. Mrs. Savill's returns showed a clean sheet, without a spoiled or rejected ballot of any sort.

"On the whole, I think voters showed much intelligence in voting, as the number of ballots that cannot be counted for one side or the other is a very low percentage.

Nearly 24,000 Votes Cast.

Nearly 24,000 votes were cast in London. The official figures for all the city are 23,891, of which 199 could not be counted. Time will be allowed for application t obe made for a recount. If no such application is made, Mr. Fitzgerald will forward his official return to Toronto at the end of six days.

London's majority for government sale is officially placed at 614. Following the official count yesterday of votes cast in the city to sustain the O. T. A., Returning Officer W. C. Fitzgerald last night announced the government sale majority to be a matter of 55 votes more than the first figures given out.

Casting a record vote, 11,539 ballots were marked in favor of sustaining the O. T. A. and 12,153 in favor of government sale.

Two Corrections.

Figures first published in The Advertiser showed the government sale majority in London to be 559. Corrections in two subdivisions, 14 and 6, brought additions to the totals and added 55 more votes to the government control majority. These slight errors were caused by incomplete returns being sent out by polling stations which were divided into two sections.

Quick work on the part of the returning officer and his staff was noted, once the official count was started yesterday, and the final official figures were available the same day as the count was started.

NORMAL SCHOOL 'LIT' HEARS REVIEW OF "IL TROVATORE"

The literary society of the Normal school held their meeting yesterday afternoon, with the president, Mr. McDowell, presiding. Mr. McDowell gave the inaugural speech, after which the program was opened by Miss Eleanor Stanbury, who led a sing-song.

The main feature of the program was a review of the opera "Il Trovatore," given by Mr. Jack Sterling. His talk proved very interesting, and was made attactive by Sister Mary Theresa, who played piano selections from the opera during Mr. Sterling's speech.

Other features of the program were readings by Miss Ena Mansfield, Miss Murray and Miss U. Logan, who gave a musical reading, and Miss Marjorie Maine, who delighted the Lit. with a vocal solo.

ALL ABOARD FOR PARIS.

Here is the giant aeroplane which carried a Londoner from London, England, to Paris. His story of his trip, with its sensations, appears below.

LONDONER ENJOYS AIR TRIP FROM ENGLAND TO FRANCE

Glorious Run From London to Paris Thrills the Passengers.

FEARS DISAPPEAR

The following is an interesting account of a Londoner's trip by aeroplane from London to Paris during an extensive trip through the British Isles and the continent.

By JAMES P. MILLAR.

The tourist in the old land, desiring to visit France, has the choice of two modes of travel. By train on the English side, then across that nightmare of water, the English channel, then by train to Paris. The other course is by aeroplane.

The writer, never having been up in a plane, and seeking a new thrill in life, decided on the latter.

There are two companies operating aeroplanes between London and Paris, the Imperial Aircraft, Limited, a British corporation, and the Air Union, a French company assisted by the French government. The writer travelled by the Air Union. It is there is also a plane flying in the necessary to insure accommodation to book passage at least two days previous to the date of travel.

Passengers travelling by Air Union are met at the head office of the company on Haymarket street, London, and conveyed by private limousines to the aerodrome at Croydon.

At Croydon the baggage is weighed, as each passenger is only allowed to have 30 pounds of baggage in the passenger plane. Excess baggage is transported by freight aeroplane, and of course, a charge is made for this extra service.

Following the weighing of baggage tickets are collected and passports examined. The passengers are then permitted to take their seats in the giant aeroplane.

The pilot and passengers being aboard, and the baggage stowed in the rear of the plane, the mechanician locks the door from the outside and clambers over the wings into the cockpit.

When all are seated the pilot, a dapper little Frenchman, cranks the magneto, sets the controls and the ground mechanics swing the propellors, starting the aeroplane's two engines.

The pilot now tests his engines by running each up to its maximum number of revolutions.

Finding "all's well" with the engines the pilot orders the blocks removed from the wheels. These blocks, or chocks as they are called, are contrivances to prevent the machine from starting while the engines are being tested.

The pilot now taxies the plane to a position on the field where he can get the longest run against the wind. The object of this is to get the maximum lift under the planes while taking off.

Reaching a favorable pasition on the field the pilot awaits the taking off signals from the air ministry control tower. The signal is given by the waving of a red flag.

The purpose of the air ministry control tower is to prevent two machines taking off or landing at the same time.

Plug Cars.

While "taxi-ing" to position the passengers stuff cotton batten into their ears, as the noise from the engines is terrific. Even with the cotton in the ears the noise is considerable.

The taking-off signal having been given, the pilot opens the throttles wide, and the engines respond with a crack like thunder. The plane bounds forward, and we slither across the field at a terrible rate. We're off!

To the uninitiated this mad rush across the field is an awesome performance, as one is sure that the pilot at the speed cannot miss the high board fence at which he is rushing. It lasts but a minute, and peeping out the window, not having heard the expected crash of wood, you find the earth disappearing.

One must be careful when travelling by aeroplane to use the proper word, "flight," instead of trip or journey.

Feeling much better, the new passenger peers out the window and finds that the ground is slipping quickly away from him. Peculiarly, the sensation is that the earth is dropping away from under one and not that the plane is rising.

For the first few hundred yards the pilot keeps near the earth, as the wind resistance is much less there than at higher altitudes, and by doing this he can obtain his maximum speed and lifting power much earlier.

The plane then circles the aerodrome in one large spiral to gain sufficient height to clear adjoining hills.

This is when the new passenger holds his breath and feels like asking to be allowed to get out to walk. As the plane is banked at an angle it is a trifle terrifying to the inexperienced.

Feeling that the plane is now on an even keel, we begin the perusal of the guide book furnished gratis by the company.

Looking backward, we see a wonderful panorama of London which swiftly recedes from view. One is able to pick out such familiar objects as Nelson's monument and St. Paul's cathedral.

We now feel that we want to see the works. The mechanician is busy. What's he doing? It transpires that he is unwinding a radio- telephone aerial which hangs under the plane during the flight. He then dons a helmet fitted with telephone receivers, after which he plugs in his transmitter and we are in touch with Motner Earth.

Gives Condition.

The mechanician, being in constant touch with the aerodrome, tells what conditions we are experiencing. As opposite direction, and also equipped with a telephone, we know exactly what weather we shall encounter.

Suddenly we are deluged in a heavy rainstorm, but the pilot, sitting outside, grins his pleasing smile, moves his controls and the plane mounts higher and we are in the clouds.

Being in the clouds for the first time makes the new passenger again wish for his "old chair at home." It is like being in dense, curling, white smoke. Nothing but white smoke below, above and all around.

Flying for a few minutes in the clouds, the plane mounts to a higher altitude and bursts through into glorious, bewildering sunshine.

Winging steadily on at the rate of 100 miles an hour, we again obtain a clear view of the earth.

There's water! What is it? The guidebook tells us it is the English channel.

Looking down the water appears as if it were frozen with the white-caps as little hummocks of snow. The ships, with a splash of white at their bows appear not to be moving.

Crossing the channel the machine is flown at a height of about 6,500 feet so that in the remote event of both engines going wrong, the pilot can glide a distance of seven miles to a landing field on either side of the water.

Judging to be about the center of the channel, we look forward to catch a glimpse of France, then looking backward we see England. England and France seen at the same time. We now begin to pity the earthbound traveller.

Over the French coast we see on one side Boulogne with its harbors filled with shipping and its long breakwater poking its nose out into the channel. On the other side we discern Paris-Plage.

Soaring on we near Abbeville, then Beauvais, with its wonderful old cathedral rearing its lofty head to the sky, sitting amongst the smaller buildings like a mother hen with her brood.

What's happened? One begins to tremble. For without warning the plane suddenly dropped like a stone, then as suddenly jumped up again, leaving one with the feeling of being nowhere at all.

Jumping Repeated.

This jumping business was repeated several times and the writer was just about to implore the mechanician to tell him the worst. However, this worthy gentleman turned round, and I must have been wearing that "throw out the lifeline look," because he laughed. I therefore figured somebody was having some fun.

On questioning I found that this "bumping" as it is called, is caused by pockets in the air. The sensation is similar to that of going down and up the steep grades of a switchback.

Passing Beauvais we spy the great forest of De Hey. Then over the valley of the Oise, soon we see the forest of Chantilly and the famous castle formerly owned by the Duc d'Aumale.

The flight now resolves itself into a wonderful adventure. Peering down, the traveller wonders if the earth is real, as it looks like a wonderful tapestry spread beneath him. Superb, immense, glorious.

The drab somber of the forests is enhanced by the vivid green of the fields and the red roofs of the houses. All bisected by the various rivers.

Crossing the river Oise, near Beaumont, we pass close to the forest of Montmorency and soon, and now all too soon, the traveller catches a glimpse of that gay city of Paris.

One now feels that he must be nearing his destination, and sure enough one begins to see objects on the earth: come closer, cows scampering in the fields, people straining faces heavenward to see us pass, autos rushing along the roads.

The engines slow down. We are at Le Bourget. We see the aerodrome. The plane begins to circle the field. Now the new passenger feels he is sure to be sick, expecting the machine to go rushing down at a steep angle.

Closing his eyes the writer hung on to his seat and awaited the crash. In a moment a voice said, "Time to get out." We were down. Down without the suspicion of a jolt or jar. Surely man has conquered the art of flying.

On looking at the clock we find we have flown 245 miles in 2 hours and 30 minutes.

Following customs and immigration formalities we are driven in a motor bus right into the heart of Paris.

On the return trip, one having become accustomed to the motion of the plane and knowing what to expect, feels quite at home. In fact, the writer slept for 30 minutes on the return and ate lunch.

The London-Paris-London air service is excellent. Pilots are most skillful. All officials generally are courteous and every precaution is taken for safety. In fact, one agrees with the gentleman who wrote, "I am not afraid of the air, but I fear the earth."

Structural Men Suspect Hoodoo

Special to The Advertiser.

Forest, Oct. 24.—The Quebec workmen constructing the big steel elevated waterworks tank are beginning to believe that the real dry spot of Ontario is centred in Forest, and that their efforts to construct a system of liquid refreshment are being attended by a hoodoo of bad luck. Last week the foreman went to hospital, following an accident that nearly resulted in his death, while yesterday another worker received three fractured ribs, when he slipped on the elevated framework of the structure.

Official London Vote Defeats the O.T.A. By 614

Slight increase from first reports—23,692 good ballots and only 199 which were rejected for various reasons.

London gave a majority of 614 votes in favor of government sale, according to the official statement of Returning Officer W. C. Fitzgerald, secured by The Advertiser last night.

The official returns for the riding of London are:

O.T.A.	G.C.	G.C. Maj.
11,539	12,153	614

The Advertiser's first total of 559 and the Canadian Press report of 476 majority occurred chiefly through an error in subdivision 86, where only half of the vote was reported. The corrected figures for subdivision 86 were: O. T. A. 218 and G. C. 171, instead of O. T. A. 171 and G. C. 47.

In the whole city vote of over 23,000 there were 136 ballots rejected, 43 cancelled, 2 lost, and 18 declined, the latter being people who changed their minds after entering the polling booth.

APPEAL FOR SMITH WILL BE STRONGLY OPPOSED

HEAVY SENTENCES IMPOSED.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Oct. 24. — Peter Smith, former treasurer of the province in the late U. F. O. government, and Aemilius Jarvis, Sen., who was head of the former long-established and widely-known bond and brokerage house of Aemilius Jarvis & Company, Limited, were late this afternoon found guilty of conspiracy to defraud the province. Smith was sentenced to serve three years in Portsmouth penitentiary, and Jarvis was sentenced to serve six months in the county jail. In addition, both men must remain in prison until fines of $600,000 are paid.

Aemilius Jarvis, Jun., son of the convicted broker, and Harry G. Pepall, vice-president and general manager respectively of the bond firm, were both found not guilty of conspiracy to defraud the province. The theft charges against all four were dismissed.

Enter Appeals.

An appeal will be entered both on behalf of Peter Smith and Aemilius Jarvis, Sr., against both the conviction and the sentence of the court.

The four men were tried before Chief Justice R. M. Meredith and a jury in the criminal assize court at the city hall commencing last Monday and terminating with the verdict of the jury at 5:42 o'clock this afternoon.

Following passing of the sentence, the convicted men were taken into custody and transferred to the county jail, where they will remain until the case has been argued before the appeal court or they have been admitted to bail pending the decision. An application for bail will be made to the attorney-general tomorrow.

More than five hours were spent by the jury in reaching their verdict. After they had been out four hours and called back into court they reported that they had not, up to that time, been able to come to an agreement. It was suggested by their foreman that they be given another hour, and the following verdict resulted:

"We, the jury, find Aemilius Jarvis, Sr., and Peter Smith guilty of conspiracy.

Others Are Freed.

"We also find Aemilius Jarvis, Jr., and Harry G. Pepall not guilty of conspiracy.

"We also find the four accused not guilty on the theft charges."

Jarvis the elder and Jarvis the younger clasped hands as the verdict was being given.

Peter Smith was seen to slump forward in his chair.

Harry G. Peppall remained with tense expression on his face.

Turning to the jury, Chief Justice Meredith said: "I desire to express my appreciation of the care you have given to this case. It has been a prolonged trial. It has been very trying upon your comfort and very inconvenient for you in many ways. You are doing a very high duty. You are representing the people of this city and this country. You are doing justice for the people of this great community."

His lordship then turned to W. H. Tilley, K.C., crown counsel, and asked: "Have you any motion to make?"

"I move for sentence," replieed Mr. Tilley.

"Aemilius Jarvis, Jun., and Harry G. Pepall, stand up," ordered the court.

"The jury have found that you are not guilty of any of the charges laid against you," said his lordship. "My duty is to discharge you. I am glad to say that you are discharged."

Peter Smith was next asked to stand up.

"Have you anything to say against the judgment of the court being now pronounced upon you for the indictable offence of which you have been found guilty?" asked the chief justice.

Pleads Innocent.

"I have only this to say, "replied Mr. Smith, "which is not very much. As I said when I came into this court and was asked to plead I pleaded not guilty. I still adhere to that statement."

Aemilius Jarvis, Sr., was asked to stand up.

"Have you anything to say against the judgment of the court now being pronounced upon you for the indictable offence of which you have been found guilty?" he was asked.

"Yes," said Mr. Jarvis, in a tone of strong indignation. "I never knew Peter Smith and never had any connection with him directly or indirectly. I never gave him one dollar or sanctioned one dollar being given to him."

"Nor had I any conspiracy or intercourse with Andrew Pepall to distort or mislead the cabinet of Ontario.

"I never discussed this thing with Peter Smith—only with Mr. Drury to begin with and with him with the cabinet."

Chief Justice Meredith: "May I ask why you took the half million dollars or more for the petty services you performed?"

Staked Fortune.

"I do not call them petty services. When a man stakes his whole fortune signing a hypothecation in London, which you do not put any credence in. When you have become liable for $8,000,000 and stake your life's fortune.

"As Sir John Ferguson said, I was the first person to repay him if the province failed to take up this note within thirty days. I was the borrower. As the bonds came in they were paid for at Lloyds, and I had to borrow the money. You say that is a petty thing."

"You know, Aemilius Jarvis, that you did not run the risk of one dollar."

"I ran the risk of everything."

"You knew that the province was behind you and was to pay everything."

"Of course the province was behind me. If the British government have to borrow, when they borrow in the United States they put up collateral. When I borrowed from Lloyd's I put up collateral. It is done in every transaction."

His lordship turned to Mr. Tilley: "When was this money received by Mr. Jarvis?"

"The 28th of April, 1920," stated Mr. Tilley.

"That was four years ago," remarked the judge, who then directed his attention to the former provincial treasurer.

The Difference.

"Peter Smith," said his lordship, "it is neither my right nor my duty to recount your misdeeds, or to say one word that will add to your punishment. But in order that you may not think there is any distortion between the penalty to be passed upon you and passed upon your co-conspirator, I may say that you were chosen by the people of the municipality in which you lived to serve them and to serve this province faithfully. Aemilius Jarvis was not so chosen. You were made a minister of the crown and were what is commonly called 'a watchdog of the treasury.' Aemilius Jarvis was not. You made an oath which you violated, a solemn oath of office. Aemilius Jarvis did not.

"The judgment of the court upon you, Peter Smith, is that you be imprisoned in the penitentiary for three years."

Addressing Mr. Jarvis, the chief justice said:

"The judgment of the court upon you, Aemilius Jarvis, is that you be imprisoned in the county jail of this county for six months."

Then addressing both prisoners:

"And, futher the judgment of the court upon you, Peter Smith, and upon you, Aemilius Jarvis, is that you and each of you pay a fine of $600,000 and that you remain in jail until it is paid."

There was a dead silence in the courtroom in which every bit of space available to the public was occupied by intensely interested spectators.

Son Defies Officer.

Aemilius Jarvis, the younger, who, after his aquittal had at once made his way back to his father's side, was far more visibly affected than Aemilius Jarvis, the elder. He put his arms around his father and with tears streaming down his face trembled with grief. As court officers commenced to lead Peter Smith and Aemilius Jarvis, Sr., from the courtroom the son had to be torn from his father's side. But before allowing himself to be drawn to one side he again threw his arms about his father and kissed him.

Before Chief Justice Meredith left the court he requested the jury to return at ten o'clock this morning, when it was fully expected they would be discharged.

A short time after the two prisoners were taken from the court in the custody of the sheriff, they were seen leaving the city hall in a motor car with police officials bound for Toronto jail, where for the first time in their lives they tonight slept behind bars.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—"I am not guilty of any conspiracy."

Thus did Peter Smith reply when Chief Justice Meredith asked him if there was any reason why sentence should not be passed upon him.

"I only saw Aemilius Jarvis once or twice in my life, and only once in connection with this deal. At the time the cabinet made the arrangements I was sick at home in bed with the 'flu.'" he continued, his voice shaking.

"The jury have found me guilty of conspiracy. I am content to abide by their decision.

"But I will say this, I will take it to a higher court than this, where I will get forgiveness."

At this point the former treasurer of the province completely broke down. Tears came to his eyes and he could hardly control his voice. Making a desperate effort to control his feelings, he then pleaded:

"I would like to have time enough to arrange my affairs at home. I have a wife and family at home. I have not made any provision for their future.

"That is all I have to say."

Chief Justice Meredith: Do you care to tell me how you got $130,000 from Aemilius Jarvis? Do not answer if you do not want to."

"I never got that amount," replied Peter Smith.

"It does not matter how much but a very large sum, over $100,000," said his lordship.

"I did not get that money."

"Nobody said you did. I am asking about the securities. Where did you get the coupons?"

"I got them from Andrew Pepall," replied Smith.

"What for?"

"Because he owed me some money and he asked me to get them cashed. They were not due at the time he gave them. He was going away."

"Your counsel said you got them in trade. But you need not answer any more questions."

PREMIER STATES O.T.A. TO BE RIGIDLY APPLIED;

Provincial Cabinet Decides To Maintain Temperance Law As Majority For the Act Increases Every Hour—O. T. A. Must Stay Until Defeated by People.

GOVERNMENT ASKS HELP FROM PUBLIC

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—Premier G. Howard Ferguson, in a statement issued this afternoon, declared in effect that the Ontario temperance act would be rigidly enforced in view of the returns from the plebiscite taken yesterday to determine public sentiment on prohibition legislation.

The premier issued his statement after a protracted meeting of the Ontario cabinet, which lasted from 11:45 a.m. until 2 p.m. He declared that as he had intimated in his pre-plebiscite speeches, he would enforce the O. T. A. to the fullest extent. He added that there would be more difficulty in enforcing the act in view of the increase in "wet" sentiment.

PREMIER FERGUSON.

who has made a definite promise that the Ontario temperance act will be rigidly inforced now that the people of the province have voted for the retention of the measure.

The Statement.

The premier's statement follows:

"The position of the government with reference to the Ontario temperance act was clearly set forth in the speech delivered by me at Spencerville on May 30, 1923, in the following words:

"'The Conservative party has steadily pursued a consistent course on the temperance question. It has contributed more to the cause of temperance than any other party ever did. If again entrusted with the reins of government the Conservative party will maintain the same consistent attitude and policy upon this question. The people of Ontario by their votes declared for prohibition.

"'Prohibition must prevail and be observed until the people by their votes pronounce against it. The people must accept the situation which they themselves created, and the government of the day must see that the law is actively and rigidly enforced. If at any time there should be a sufficiently manifested desire for a change in the law to win the government in believing that there is a real public demand for such a change, it will be the duty of the government to ask the people by their votes to pronounce upon the subject.'

Will Trust People.

"To ignore or refuse such a request would be autocratic and in direct violation of the spirit of our institutions. 'Trust the people' has always been the democratic policy of the Liberal-Conservative party. Such a course should commend itself to every reasonable citizen of the province whether he be for or against prohibition.

"Public sympathy is essential to the stability and observance of any law. To secure that support it is the duty of a government to remove as far as possible dissatisfaction and irritation. Upon the question of law enforcement there can be no two opinions. Ontario wants her laws enforced, and the government that is remiss in its duty in that respect will not long be tolerated.

"In pursuance of its policy the government at the last session of the house introduced legislation to permit of the submission of the question to popular vote should the government be of the opinion that there was any substantial demand for such a vote. The vote of yesterday demonstrates that the course of the government in this respect was fully justified.

No Misunderstanding.

"The form of the questions, which met with the general approval, was simple, and left no room for misunderstanding or confusion. Furthermore, the government made it clear that there would be no doubt as to the course to be followed if the majority voted in favor of the Ontario temperance act. Yesterday's pronouncement shows that the majority of those voting favored the continuance of the Ontario temperance act. The government is determined to pursue a consistent course.

"The basis upon which government rests under our institutions is that the majority must prevail. Disregard of this principle breeds discontent, which must inevitably develop into serious disorder. The popular will be recognized and accepted and the act will remain upon the statute books.

"The government will use its best efforts to give it efficient enforcement. The fact that the majority, as compared with the vote of 1919, has been much reduced, may make it more difficult to properly enforce the act, as public opinion is an essential factor in law enforcement. But as an opportunity was given to those opposed to the legislation to express their view, and as a majority has pronounced against that view, the government expects that the verdict will be accepted and all efforts made towards the better enforcement of the act will have the support of the people irrespective of their personal views."

Beland Says It Meets Every Test

Insurance Man Gives Tanlac Credit for Restoring Health.

"In my case Tanlac has accomplished what seemed impossible," recently declared Ernest Beland, a well-known insurance man, 523 Chambly St., Montreal, P.Q., Canada. "Last winter I was taken down with grippe and at the end of two months, in spite of all that could be done, I was so completely wrecked that my friends nor myself thought I would ever get well. For weeks I could not sleep except by the use of opiates and the pains combined with shortness of breath, choking sensation and a nagging cough, made life almost unbearable.

"Two bottles of Tanlac improved me so I was able to get up and move about the house, and by the time I finished my seventh bottle my recovery was complete, and I was able to return to my work. My appetite has come back in full force, I sleep good, have put on 11 pounds, and feel fine in every way. Tanlac is priceless."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Trouble Denied.

Miss Josephine Ellis, customs officer at the Sarnia ferry, today flatly contradicted reports of trouble with local women returning from Port Huron. It was stated that a number of heated altercations with passengers had taken place, but it developed that the rumors were hearsay. No complaints have been heard, Inspector of Customs Arthur S. Cole said, nor was he aware of trouble in any form. Miss Ellis' duty is to prevent petty smuggling from Port Huron on the part of Canadian women.

Halloween—With Its Fun—Comes Soon. Are You Ready?

Children Most Delighted On Arrival of Halloween

Games Suited For Occasion Deserve Attention Also of Older Members of the Family—Fantastic Decorations Add to Merriment of Evening's Fun For All.

LITTLE SUGGESTIONS OFFERED FOR NIGHT

On October 31, those who enjoy the occasion of Halloween most of all are the young people—that is the child from five years of age to perhaps twelve or thirteen. The children, therefore, should have games suited to their age, and should also have every consideration for the older folk.

Invitations for the Halloween frolic should be quaint and unique. A sheet of rough butcher's paper, with a black cat or pumpkin sticker placed in the corner, fastened with coarse twine around wooden skewers, may hold an invitation requesting the presence of the child at the party. Ink-sketches of owls, witches flying on broomsticks across the moon, a black cat or "Br'er Rabbit" on a pumpkin might decorate the sheet.

Decorations can be of the simplest nature. Corn-stalks, pumpkins, uncanny-looking bats of more than natural size, constructed of brown cheesecloth, whalebone and cotton batting, soaring among brooms, black cats made from old stockings, and many other devices may be placed in any nook or corner of the room. Old cellars with lots of recesses and dark corners make an ideal place for the young folks to play.

Attractive Foundation.

A table constructed of boards placed on sawhorses, covered with a white cloth, and ornamented with pumpkins, cats, owls and witches cut from stiff art paper or cardboard, makes an attractive foundation for the feast. Cookies baked in pumpkin shapes, with eyes of raisins and mouth and nose of citron, make tempting refreshments for the party. Yellow apples to represent pumpkins also delight the child. These can be hollowed out and candles can be inserted in them. With mothers and aunts present to see that no accidents happen, marshmallows can be passed around, and each child, being provided with a wire, the candles can be lighted and the marshmallows toasted over them.

A black cat party should cause much amusement among the children. Instead of the time-honored traditional party program, efforts must be confined solely to black cats, and Mr. Black Puss in every size and posture may be used for decoration. He can be cut from a traced pattern laid on black cardboard or blotting paper. This cat pattern may be found in any kindergarten book of outline drawings, or he may be procured from cats ready to cut out of Halloween paper.

Verses For Occasion.

Tiny black kittens can romp over the margins of the cardboard invitations, and for one gifted in rhyme, verses can be composed to suit the occasion. Every guest must wear a black cat, and one lively youngster may be rigged up in a costume of black cotton crepon, padded out with cotton batting at the proper places, with a comical long tail stiffly wired and a Japanese cat-mask, and he may walk on all fours among the guests. Or a Puss-in-Boots costume may be worn. Any cat character known in history may be represented.

As part of the evening's entertainment, the cat may be dissected and when properly done so by the best surgeon present, the following astonishing assortment of things are to be found:

1. A kind of tree—fur (fir).
2. A silent delay—paws (pause).
3. A group of words making complete sense—claws (clause).
4. A story—tail (tale).
5. Parts of a line of poetry—feet.
6. What mice do when they hear the cat—hide.
7. Frequently heard in the talk of an egotist—eyes (I's).

Mystic Night of the Year Enfolds Interest of All

Pumpkin and Broom, Chestnut and Marshmallow Come In For Their Proper Recognition by Humans, Young and Old —Great Old Kitchen Comes Into Use for Night.

HOST AND HOSTESS BUSY PREPARING

The mystic night of the year draws nigh and it is also the "spooky" time. It is the night when black cats, witches, brooms, corn and pumpkins have a very significant meaning, and when apples, nuts and flapjacks prove pleasing to the pallet.

And then the question arises in many a mind, "How am I to arrange a night of fun for the young people, or other friends?" More easily said than done, but suggestions always help.

The crispy autumn weather sets the blood atingling, making everyone feel just in the humor for a lark, so how about a rosy grate-fire for warmth when the larkers return? What about the marshmallows that can be roasted while they sit around on the floor, their cheeks coaxed into flame by the heat of the fire? How about that pop-corn that you have had in the house, and wondering when it will be used up?

For the host or hostess who is so fortunate as to have a home with a large, old-fashioned kitchen, there is no better room in the house-sport. The long-used toffey-pull is an ever-popular entertainment, and for the guests of strong sex a tub filled with water, and apples placed therein, wherein are written the names of the fair sex of the party, and when the gentlemen has managed to capture, without assistance of his hands, one of the rosy circles, he finds therein the name of the fair maiden who will some day be his bride.

Always Lanterns.

Of course, there are always the jack-o'-lanterns to light the porch and rooms where fun is going on, and there are always the ghosts who walk solemnly along. There are the clowns, the gypsys, the Spaniards, the pirates, the nigger and so many other characters who parade the streets.

A real ghost party might be a suggestion for the hostess who lacks an idea. Each guest must represent some famous ghost.

At a party some years ago, festivities began with a "ghost cake walk." As the ghosts arrived they found the halls and parlors dimly lighted with ghostly lanterns and the "Witch of Endor," assisted by the "Three Weird Sisters," waiting to receive them. Among the guests stalked Hamlet's father's ghost, Lady Macbeth, in her sleep-walking scene; the Ancient Mariner, Ichabod Crane, and the Headless Horseman, the Witches of Salem, riding on broomsticks, and Mephistopheles, while the "ghost of a chance," sheeted and covered with playing cards, brought up the rear.

Stage Performance.

After a protracted march upstairs, downstairs and through my lady's chamber, to the slow, sad strains of a funeral march, the guests broke at last into a well-known gallop familiar to "Tam o' Shanter," when all the sheeted things rushed madly into the dining-room, where preparations had been made for a stage performance. Here each ghost gave a short stunt in accordance with his costume and the character he has chosen. For instance, Lady Macbeth gave her sleep-walking scene, while Hamlet's father's ghost told his tale of woe, and the others followed suit.

Dancing and games suitable for the occasion add much pleasure to the evening. A dance by the witches if the plan of the ghost party were followed, might add much merriment, but it must be very grotesque.

The barrel hoop test often proves of much interest to a mixed party. To this end, hang a barrel hoop horizontally from the ceiling and suspend from it by means of strings, stick candies, slices of bread, red peppers and candle-ends. Whirl the hoop around sideways and let each in turn grasp at these objects with the teeth. If the first bite gives you candy, sweet, indeed, is the future opening before you. If bread, you will always be sure of a living but life will be rather prosaic. The red pepper portends trouble and a hot time generally, while the candle-ends point to the briefest kind of a honeymoon.

LONDON LEADERS OF O.T.A. PLEASED

E. E. Reid Praises Co-operation Given in Support of Temperance in London.

E. E. Reid, president of the London temperance committee, gave out the following statement yesterday to The Advertiser concerning Thursday's plebiscite vote:

"That the great province of Ontario should have decided to remain dry is cause for the utmost gratification. I believe those opposed to the O. T. A., as well as those in favor of it, will come to see that in due time.

"So far as London is concerned, we had hoped for a small majority, but, considering the way the other larger cities voted, we are satisfied. There would undoubtedly have been a dry majority had the men's organization been as complete as that of the women.

"No praise is too great to bestow upon Mrs. Calder and her co-workers for their unremitting toil and buoyant enthusiasm. It proved very difficult to get men to match them and I feel that we have an adverse majority in London simply because of that fact.

"The accusation that the bootleggers were with us is answered most emphatically by the location of the government control vote. No one who knew the facts believed this report, but many were misled up to the last minute, and voted against the act, sincerely believing that government control would help to do away with bootlegging, in spite of all the proof adduced from the other provinces to the contrary.

"The close vote was due probably to the fact that the relatively poor man thought he was entitled to his liquor as well as the rich, and only by making it impossible for the rich to have liquor will we establish a satisfactory state of affairs and take away the reproach of being the barroom for our neighbors to the south.

Impartial and Fair.

"There were a good many irregularities at the local polls, which we naturally feel favored the other side, but on, the whole, the returning officers were exceedingly impartial and fair.

"No words can adequately express the appreciation of the temperance forces for the magnificent work done by The Advertiser throughout the campaign. From the very start the articles and editorials were, in my humble opinion, the best that we have ever had.

"The effect of The Advertiser's work can be seen throughout Western Ontario, and everyone interested in the maintenance of the O. T. A. is supremely grateful for the ability displayed by The Advertiser in the handling of the campaign, the tremendous space devoted to its interests and the sacrifice which in many ways the paper made for the cause of temperance.

"The charge that the articles which appeared in The Advertiser were misrepresentations cannot be supported by those who know the real situation in the other provinces.

"Again I say we are most humbly grateful for the decision rendered at the polls yesterday. We dare any government, in view of such a decision, to introduce any act legalizing the sale of liquor in any form in any part of the province.

"It is the intention of the temperance forces to maintain their organization more compactly than has been the case for many years and fight to the point wherefrom the manufacture, importation or sale of liquor in any form will be prohibited in this country."

C. E. German: "It is very gratifying to know that the province of Ontario has supported the Ontario temperance act. The temperance forces will be inspired to greater activity to press on for greater victories."

James Gray: "I am satisfied."

T. W. McFarland: "I am delighted that Ontario stands out above the other provinces and leads the vanguard of temperance."

Rowland Hill: "The vote has placed in the hands of the government a mandate to enforce the act. If the electors had had the alternative of absolute prohibition I believe there would have been a larger dry majority."

George F. Copeland: "I feel that the tide has turned towards a dry country. The overwhelming opinion prior to voting seemed to be that Ontario would follow the suit of the other government control provinces, but instead it would seem that Ontario is to become the stamping ground for complete and absolute prohibition."

William A. Tanner: "The majority accorded the O. T. A. is a very fair one, in my estimation, taking everything into consideration. It should strengthen the hands of Premier Ferguson to improve conditions under which the act is enforced. The temperance forces are indebted to The Advertiser for its splendid campaign on behalf of the O. T. A."

Dean Sherwood Fox: "Yesterday's vote plainly indicates that the people of Ontario are not opposed to the principles of the O. T. A. The lesson to be taken from the balloting is that the manner of its enforcement be improved."

Absolutely Dry.

D. C. McNaughton: "In my opinion the residents of Ontario are absolutely dry. The voting power of the incoming population from European and other countries accounts in a large measure for the decreased temperance majority, but nevertheless I am much pleased with the result. The Advertiser deserves great credit for the strong stand it took in favor of the O. T. A. throughout the campaign."

Oliver G. Keene: "They carried the O. T. A. It stayed the way I wanted it to stay and I am perfectly satisfied."

Col. W. M. Gartshore: "The province has gone dry and I am perfectly satisfied. I hope that the majority for the O. T. A. will run up as large as possible to strengthen the government in enforcing the act."

Archie McPherson: "I believe that the majority for the O. T. A. is very satisfactory, considering the wet vote piled up in centers where the bootlegger was strongest. I think The Advertiser is to be heartily commended for the stand it took during the whole campaign."

SPLENDID PROGRAM BY OPERA COMPANY

"Rigoletto" and "Aida" Given by De Foe Company at Grand.

Opening with special arrangements of Verdi's masterpieces "Rigoletto" and "Aida," George De Feo's company of talented grand opera artists last evening scored a brilliant triumph at the Grand opera house. M. De Feo, known throughout America and on the continent as a successful producer and whose leadership has developed the merits of many a noted dramatic vocalist, has a notable assemblage of new stars.

London's reception to Verdi's operas last evening was warm and appreciative, but a far greater audience was justified by the program of two famed operas. The opening night patronage was far below the numbers which De Foe's company warrants. Two years ago he was accorded a truly wonderful welcome when he brought "Madame Butterfly," "Aida" and other operas here.

This year he comes without an unwieldy cast. In each of the five operas which will be heard in London a distinct cast is heard. The essentials, the most popular of the solo and quartet numbers, are offered in really splendid voice, with a uniformity of merit throughout. Choruses have been eliminated, but this does not detract. There is strength and volume in the music of the dialogue. One does not hear a stodgy, lagging company; one does not listen to vocalists who have passed their day, but to a company which has the zeal, fire and passion to interpret the dramatic essentials of the operatic stage.

In Miss Grace White, Mr. DeFeo has a dramatic soprano of unusual ability. As Aida she gave a beautiful interpretation of the slave girl of Ethiopia. Oppressed, heartbroken and crushed, she wept her suffering with infinite sadness. Her voice now bore the harshness of the defeated, then fell to warm tones of grief for lost love. It was a brilliant interpretation alive with the spirit of the role.

Philip Culdasi as Radmes brings a voice that is rich and powerful. To hear him is to wish that London could be blesed with opera more often. The tenor and soprano were so well rendered that they brought repeated applause.

A. Martini, in the role of Amonasro, king of Ethiopia, has a powerful voice that commands attention. This with a strong personality and regal bearing place him in a position to do full justice to the part.

Miss Elhan, who Amneris, daughter of the king of Egypt takes the mezzo soprano part possesses a charming force, subdued for the most part, always restrained. She posseses the beauty and a queenly dignity demanded by the role.

ASSISTANT TAX COLLECTOR AT HAMILTON COLLAPSES

Canadian Press Despatch.

Hamilton, Oct. 24.—Yet another sensation occurred today in connection with the civic tax scandal, when Robert Griffith, assistant tax collector, whose evidence during the inquiry a day or so ago was startling admission of tax department irregularities, has suffered a complete nervous breakdown, and his condition is as serious as that of Ernest Dempster, city auditor, who was the first civic official to crack under the strain of recent revelations.

FOR JOY OF GOOD HEALTH

Manitoba Woman Thanks Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Crandall, Manitoba.—"When I was a young girl at home and working I had terrible pains, almost more than I could bear, and I was not regular. These troubles kept me so tired all the time that I had no strength and no ambition to join in with my friends and have a good time. I was just tired and miserable always and life just seemed as if it wasn't worth living. I saw so much in the papers about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and then I had a friend who had taken it and told me about it, so I got some. Every month after taking it I got stronger and I soon did not suffer every month. It stopped the pains and helped me in other ways. Then when my babies were coming I was tired and worn out the first three months and ached badly. I took the Vegetable Compound right along and must say it made a new woman of me and able to do my work, and it helped me through confinement. You see I am a farmer's wife with a big house to look after, and three babies now. I have told ever so many women about your medicine. Just last week I got a letter from my old chum in the East. Her baby was born fifteen days before mine, and she told me she was not feeling very well, her back aches so much, and that she is going to take the same medicine I took. You can use my letter if you wish."—Mrs. Jos. H. Kidd, Box 56, Crandall, Manitoba. C

CHURCHES OF CHIRST MEET AT ST. THOMAS

29th Annual Convention in Flower City Is Well Attended.

The 29th annual convention of the Christian church met in St. Thomas on Wednesday. Over 150 delegates were present from Windsor, Rodney, West Lorne, Mosa, London, Aylmer and Dorchester.

The morning session was opened by Dr. T. L. Fowler, after which the president, A. McVicar of London, took charge. G. A. Stewart of Winnipeg and C. L. Burton of Toronto, president of the Ontario co-operation, made speeches. The former gave a very optimistic review of the workings of the "all-Canadian" movement. An excellent paper on "Christian Endeavor Work" was given by Miss Versey of London. Mrs. Person of Rodney gave the reports of the various societies. The appointment of committees brought the morning session to a close.

The afternoon session was opened by L. C. Hammond. The women's missionary rally was conducted by Miss H. McDougall. In proportion to membership the Rodney society had given more than any other toward missionary work. Ten societies reported, one new one at Mosa having been organized this year. "Echoes from the Cleveland convention" were given by Mrs. Royce, Mrs. King, Mrs. Legg, Mrs. J. A. McKillop and Mrs. Swaby Smith. J. B. Ferguson gave the report of the Sunday schools. He commented on the increase in the number added to the church from outlined the work of the schools and the Sunday schools. A solo, "The Garden of Prayer," was sung by Mrs. H. C. McKillop.

The evening session was opened by a fifteen-minute song service, led by the local Christian Endeavors. An excellent address was given by Rev. J. D. Stephens of Dorchester. Rev. Smith of West Lorne and Rodney churches preached the convention sermon.

STORING VITAMINS

The average healthy person stores up within the body several days' supply of essential vitamins. This explains why a well-nourished person of any age is less susceptible to germ-infection than those who are malnourished.

Scott's Emulsion

is a safety-factor that helps keep you well-nourished. A very little used daily to complement the regular diet, activates with essential vitamins and helps build resistance.

Analyzing the Vote.

An analysis of the vote on October 23rd shows that it settled down to the old struggle of large centers of population against what can be termed the rural communities, and in the end the far-flung vote was greater than the voice of those who are huddled together on avenues and streets.

The reason for this is not difficult to find. The cities attract new population; there are always more people there ready to start an agitation for a change from present conditions; they are closer together and it is not difficult for them to draw into one group a large number who have kindred ideas. Then, too, in the present case, there is a large foreign vote in some of the larger cities, made up of those who have come from countries that have not legislated abruptly against the free use of liquor.

The rural vote of Ontario is made up differently. It is either on the land or not far from it. It represents homes that are more or less removed from the crowd, where people are inclined to observe things for themselves, and as a result are not easily stampeded one way or the other. Rural Ontario has always been the backbone of temperance sentiment in Ontario, and it has demonstrated that it still occupies that position. There were fears expressed that the rural vote would not respond, but it did. It saved the situation.

The voice of Western Ontario was one of the big factors in the election, and it was placed plainly for a continuance of the O. T. A. Favorable majorities were registered in Brant, North Bruce, West Bruce, East and West Elgin, East Kent, the Oxfords and Norfolks; the three Hurons, Center, North and South, gave an O. T. A. verdict of 11,998; West and North Middlesex were outspoken in their support; the three Wellingtons placed themselves in the O. T. A. column by substantial majorities. The majorities for the O. T. A. in the rural ridings of Western Ontario were sufficient to offset the adverse vote in Toronto, which totaled 49,437.

Even before the belated returns of some outlying divisions have determined the final majority for the O. T. A. the question is being asked: Will the government have regard for the large vote for government selling in some of the cities and give them a form of local option? The answer to such a suggestion is this: Ontario voted on October 23 on two questions, (1) the continuance of the O. T. A., or (2) the adoption of government selling as the policy of the province. There was no other question on the ballot. The people have said that they want the present law to remain. Had they voted otherwise it would have been dismantled with the least possible delay.

The government has no mandate from the people to depart one step from the verdict which they recorded on Thursday. They did not vote as residents of cities and residents of the country —they voted as the people of Ontario. The O. T. A. remains the law of the province, and it is unthinkable that there should be any other course attempted. Being the law of the province, ratified again by popular vote, it becomes the plain duty of the Ontario authorities to enforce it as they would any other law. There is nothing to justify even the suggestion of changing the basis on which the people registered their decision.

Premier Ferguson has quickly met this situation, and he shows no inclination to evade the issue. On the other hand he had definitely stated:

"Prohibition must prevail and be observed until the people by their votes pronounce against it. The people must accept the situation which they themselves created, and the government of the day must see that the law is actively and rigidly enforced."

The premier has spoken plainly, and he is to be commended for his attitude. It is one that challenges the fair-mindedness of the whole community to see that the law is made effectively operative.

The Case of Peter Smith.

The sentence handed to Hon. Peter Smith of three years in penitentiary and a fine of $600,000 marks the beginning of sentences for those who have been implicated in trafficking for private gain while holding public office.

It must mean that it is the intention of the authorities to go back prior to the regime of Peter Smith, and deal with those who left the same manner of footprints as the ex-provincial treasurer. It will not do that Peter Smith alone be singled out for punishment.

The most unhappy feature of the case is the fact that the former treasurer did not regard the implicit trust placed in him by his chief, Hon. E. C. Drury, and other members of his cabinet whose records are clean.

The prosecution must go on, because there is evidence to suggest that Peter Smith started in where some other man left off.

A $30,000,000 Election.

It is going to cost $30,000,000 to elect a president in United States. Not that one party is putting up that amount, but the long-drawn-out affair eats up money every day. United States campaigns have been in the million dollar class for years. In 1920 the Republican national committee spent $5,319,000, and had a deficit of $1,600,000. Democrats spent $1,318,000 and had a deficit of $300,000. These figures, compared to the Buchanan campaign for the Democrats in 1885 at $250,000 show that election costs have gone crazy.

"Where does the money go?" becomes almost as important a question as where it comes from. It may be that there are some barnacles clinging to the treasury chest, but more money is wasted than the grafters ever get their hands on.

"Literature" is sent out in thousands of tons. It has to be carefully prepared and edited before it ever goes to the printer. Add the cost of mechanical work and mailing to reach 50,000,000 voters, and it is seen that money must flow like grain from a thresher working in a 50-bushel per acre field.

The whole business of a presidential election in United States is painfully overdone. From the premeditated insanity of the national conventions away back in June up to the first week in November the performance must be maintained, and a slackening in any one ring is taken to mean that the show is on the skids and the tent likely to collapse.

United States could very well take a cleaver and cut its election tomfoolery in ten parts, and with one of them proceed to elect a president.

Rough On the Chief.

Newly-elected council of the Six Nations Indians near Brantford lost no time in taking the wind out of Chief Deskaheh's sails. This erstwhile chief has been parading his feathers and paint in United States and Europe, and for a couple of moons pitched his tent across from the League of Nations in the hope of getting an audience there.

He has made his stock in trade out of representing the unjust way in which the Indians were being treated, and apparently his sob story has brought him a more pleasant existence than growing blisters on his hand with a hay fork on the reserve.

When he returns to his old stamping ground he will find that there has arisen a Pharaoh who knew not Joseph.

Note and Comment.

October weather has put a good ton of coal in each cellar.

The political candidate who says he is willing to trust the people never runs a grocery store.

It looks as though the rest of the province had its life work cut out for it in making Toronto behave.

We expected him, and he came in this morning—the chap who knew all along just how the vote was going to go.

When a man wants to sell his car he suddenly makes the discovery that he always got about 26 miles to the gallon.

Division 6, Enniskillen, Lambton, holds a unique position in voting 100 per cent O. T. A. The record was: O. T. A., 56; government sale, 0.

The old registry office is to be torn down, and it contains 200,000 bricks. Coming just at this time, it ought to insure a good lively civic election.

Two thousand school children indulged in an O. T. A. procession at Ottawa, and such a demstration is said to be illegal. An offence like this should be dealt with at once. Why not put the 2,000 children in jail?

The Moderationists of London had a little song sheet printed, to be used in their celebration. Had they been able to peer a little farther into the future they would have included that famous selection, "How Dry I Am."

Hamilton Herald says that city, like London, has a street railway question to face, and should leave it alone for the present. Hamilton also has a railway station like that of London and we agree that the leave it alone policy has been applied to these buildings.

Prince of Wales was presented with a book containing all the references made in papers to his New York visit. The little volume contains 61,000 references, and weighs 325 pounds. And now Wales will have to use a derrick when he wants to show it to the folks at home.

Some men there be who go along and mind their business day by day, not lookin' for a scrap at all, nor itchin' for a kickin' fray.

I'm thinkin' of Ed. Reid just now, that's how he goes about his job, that's how he's travelled on so far and pilin' business rod on rod.

But when this plebiscite come around, he sees John Barleycorn therein, and says as how he wouldn't mind a-sparring fifteen rounds with him.

So he put on his boxin' suit, he wore the thing for four weeks through, he canned all other jobs he had to pep up folks like me and you. P'raps at times he rlied 'em too, he stamped his feet and slammed the doors, until he had the whole caboose a-hittin' solid on all fours.

McPherson, decked in golfin' suit, he gathered in the scads galore, and when the funds was runnin' short he'd go and gather in some more. There was no word like quit in them, they worked most twenty hours a day, a-shootin' holes in Barleycorn and jabbin' at this crippled jay.

And fifty-seven folks at once would be a-standin' in a row, a-waitin' for Ed. Reid to come and hand 'em out a spade and hoe. And after they'd seen him a spell and gripped him firmly by the paw, they'd take their tools and go to work, with smiles a-sproutin' on their jaw.

I saw Ed. Reid on Thursday night when midnight camped upon his head, when decent folks should ought to be a-snorin' in their trundle bed. And at that hour the change she come, control it looked as she had died, and Barleycorn was on the skids a-slippin' down the other side.

Says I to him at this late hour ain't it high time for such as you to be a-sleepin' on your cot, a-waitin' for the mornin' dew? But he just laughed and says to me a-seein' how the figures fall, and O. T. A. he's comin' up, I ain't goin' home to bed at all.

Now that this thing's got off his hands, I reckon he'll be diggin' in, there must be jobs at London Life what's piled up high around his chin. We'll pin a sunflower on your coat, we'll crown you as the native son, it's good to know a man like you when there's a job what must be done.—ARK.

THE LESSER EVILS.

Though given once to scoring slapstick movies and deploring
That we should applaud a plumber in a dumb—or dumber—show,
Though throwing custard pastry and pursuits by persons hasty
Are certainly appealing to a taste and feeling low,
Yet those plays impressionistic which producers call "artistic"
Are such undiluted bluff,
Such infernal rot and guff
That the movies with their slapstick are by far the better stuff.

And the music syncopated which we once vituperated, Always claiming it was fearful and an earful of mere noise—
Though each girl that shakes a shoulder might expect that we would scold her,
'Cause by tunes of jazzy choosing she is losing all her poise,
Though we can't say we revere it we would ten times rather hear it
Than that awful form of razz
Every U. S. leader has Which he labels "Classical interpretations of the jazz."

Now that the province is dry, Heeza Dumb, noted wet, has decided to take a holiday. "I was thinking of touring Ontario," he said, "but I believe I will tour the Sahara desert instead."

I admit it was rather humorous when the wet majority was cut down to nothing. But I never did care for dry humor.

In fact, now that the country has deliberately voted against my wishes I've made a resolution never to touch anything dry again. This includes dry-cleaned clothes, dry batteries, dryads and dry ginger ale.

The temperance people can lead us moderationists to water, but they cannot make us drink the stuff.

When alcohol was easy to get I used to break the neighbors' windows, knock down policemen and drive my car on sidewalks. But there is no such thing as personal liberty in the land any more.

In the olden days the poor workingman was allowed to drink himself to death and starve his children. Now even this privilege has been taken away from him.

The only thing left for us workingmen to spend our wages on is our families. I ask you, is this fair?

Of course we laborers can always squander our Saturday pay on chewing gum, but who was ever able to beat up his wife on chewing gum?

I tell you it isn't fair. I don't mind being restricted on my cocaine because I never touch it, but when they start taking away the things I enjoy it gets to be more than a joke.

I claim more people are ruined by water than by whiskey. If you don't believe it, look up the list of people drowned at Salt Lake City every summer.

PAINFUL PATHOS.

"Me only regret about the prince leavin' Canada, Maisie, is dat he didn't see me in this new voile dress."

One feature of the election which should not be overlooked is that it will dry up conversation about it.

Dr. Frank Crane

The Fashion Dictator.

There ought to be somebody or other appointed as the fashion dictator. There is entirely too much mixed advice and confusion in regard to fashions.

You read on one page that no self-respecting girl will be seen out in anything but brown, and on the next page you read that black silk stockings are to oust all others in public favor. Now it is impossible for anyone to obey both of these dicta. One would have to refuse to be seen walking with a sister, wife or mother, or for that matter anybody's relative, who elects to wear black stockings with a brown coat or skirt.

It seems that a sole arbitratress should be appointed to take control of fashions and to tell women how they should dress. She should dictate whether hair should be bobbed, long or shingled, the shape of the head, the position of the waistline, the slimness or plumpness of the figure, color scheme and so on, so that when the finished product was turned loose she would have the authority behind her of her producer.

As it is, a lady, in the language of the gentleman from Texas, does not know where she is at. In other words, she is compelled to do her own thinking and to adapt her styles to her own personality.

It would be much simpler if she could have some arbitratress to do this for her and to tell her exactly what to wear. It is much simpler with men's clothes. A man goes to his tailor and orders two or three suits of clothes, and leaves the entire matter of style to the expert. He does not discuss it, for he recognizes that the tailor is the authority upon such matters. On the contrary, a woman has to use her brain, and she has got so much on her brain nowadays that she ought to be spared matters of personal appearance.

Why Trotsky Wants An Army.

The board of estimate of New York city sat in regular session, and at the conclusion the announcement was made that they had decided to add 1,000 men to the police force.

There are some of the outlying "wards" where more police protection is considered necessary, but the great call is for more men to direct automobile traffic. The number of cars is increasing rapidly, and there are all manner of street intersections where an officer is needed to keep drivers from tearing off fenders and making more work for the service stations.

One would think that New York, with such a great system of towers as it has planted along Fifth avenue, had the last word in directing street traffic. But there's the civic authorities putting on 1,000 more police at a single session —one thousand more uniforms, one thousand more salaries, and largely because some other thousands have been added to the great list of car owners. The auto business is helping to solve unemployment in New York, as far as policemen are concerned.

To the Editor

From the Spirit World.

Scrutineers Rather Amazed To Find One from Great Beyond Asking For the Ballot.

Editor of The Advertiser:

Sir,—The widespread interest taken in the plebiscite vote was manifested in one of the polling booths of London West on Thursday, when a man who had been in the spirit world for a length of time presented himself and asked for his ballot. Unfortunately, after his long journey, he learned that a resident of another country was not entitled to a ballot. It was a great shock to the O. T. A. lady scrutineer when she heard him give his name, and to make sure he was real, she asked that he swear.

This, of course, was a mistake, as citizens of that land do not swear, and so with an expression of horror on his face, he turned away and made no further request for a ballot.

Should any of the spiritualists doubt this appearance in broad daylight it can be vouched for by those who were in the booth—the man's own son-in-law being present. The man had greatly changed since he left London, but anyone could see how like his son-in-law he looked.

Incidentally, the temperance people are making inquiry as to whether asking for a ballot in the name of another constitutes "personation." If it does, it is possible more may be heard of this case—and this is not the only case to which this will apply.

CAPITAL LEVY CERTAIN LABORITE DECLARES

Would Be Introduced If Labor Party Returned To Power.

Associated Press Despatch.

London, Oct. 24.—The first that has been heard of capital levy in the present election contest was heard today, when Fred Hall, the miner member of the House of Commons for Normanton, Yorkshire, caused something of a sensation in speaking in his constituency, by declaring that if the Labor party came into power as the result of the vote next Wednesday the Labor government most certainly would introduce the capital levy.

Fred Hall's statement is taken all the more seriously by reason of his occupying the position of junior lord of the treasury in the MacDonald government. The capital levy proposal was much to the fore prior to the last general election, but in the 1923 campaign it was kept in the background, and had not been heard of in public since then until today at Normanton.

The headquarters of the Labor party professes to have no knowledge of Hall's speech with reference to the capital levy.

"Cap" Sullivan, Mystery Man of the Great Lakes

Not Dead, as Colonel Currie Thought, Ontario's Most Famous Old-Time Politician and Sailor Relates the Gilt-Edged Anecdotes of His Career — Had Nothing to Do With the Minnie M., He Declares

By GREGORY CLARK

"I OFFER a thousand dollars," says Captain John Sullivan, "to anybody who can prove that I had anything whatever to do with the Minnie M."

Cap Sullivan—Cap'n Jack Sullivan—is not, as Colonel Currie, of letter-opening fame, believed, dead, but living. "Let them bring back Cap Sullivan from the grave," said Colonel Currie in a rousing political speech, "to take another Minnie M. . . ."

"I'm not in the grave," said Cap Sullivan. "Not yet. If Colonel Currie is no more right in other respects than he is in this, little heed should be paid him. I am not in the grave, nor had I anything to do with the Minnie M."

What Cap Sullivan had to do with, however, he does not mention. He is now in his mid-seventies. He has been retired from active command on the Great Lakes for forty years. He has been out of politics for twenty years. Between the romance of the days of sail on the Great Lakes and the days of fast and loose politics in Ontario, Cap Sullivan contains more drama per cubic inch than any Ontario man left living out of the conflict and carnage of the eighteen eighties and nineties.

"I had nothing whatever to do with the Minnie M.", says Cap Sullivan.

The Minnie M., with a gang of twenty "pluggers" from the American Soo, went up the Algoma shore, in the election of 1903, and cast thirty-six personated votes—for dead men and imaginary voters—at polling stations along that sparsely settled shore.

The Minnie M. was only one feature of a sensational investigation in the Soo, in which the buying of votes with whiskey, money, free board and "loans," the swearing of voters on bogus Bibles and the conducting of parties of "pluggers" about the polling stations, were proven.

The voyage of the Minnie M. was announced by the Tories on the eve of its departure at a big political meeting in the Soo. The Tories promptly chartered another vessel and loaded it with volunteer scrutineers to follow the Minnie M. and prevent the false voting. But the Minnie M. gang protested to the harbor master of the Soo that the rival vessel had no license to carry passengers, and so she was forbidden to set sail. The Minnie M. went up the shore unattended.

Cap Sullivan was in the Soo during this primitive and cut-throat election. But he was not involved in the scandal which ensued.

Wouldn't Take Money on Sunday

"TELL us," we said, "some tales of those elections. This generation has no conception of what politics used to be."

"It's a funny thing," replied Cap Sullivan, "but I have been more pumped, I guess, than any other man living, for stories of that period in Ontario politics. But I have by now got the habit of being a dry cistern, and you'll get no tales out of me.

"I can tell you stories of the Great Lakes when steamers were as rare a sight as sailing vessels are now, when St. Catharines was a great port, of storms and wrecks and adventure. But politics—"

Cap Sullivan finally agreed to tell his best and favorite and gilt-edged anecdote out of all his experiences.

"It will give this generation an idea of how things were done forty years ago, of the kind of people there were in the world.

"And don't think I was the only sinner on the fair face of the earth."

Being an active and skilful election worker for the Grits, Cap Sullivan was brought down to a county, east of Toronto, where a by-election was to be staged. It was the eve of the election. Cap'n Jack was being driven about the county, visiting the touchy cases.

"About eleven o'clock on a Sunday night," says he, "I arrived at the farm of a young fellow who had been recently married and set up on a farm. It was to be his first vote. He came of a Tory family, and if we could get him to vote with us, it would be a gain in a touch-and-go situation.

"He had gone to bed when I arrived, and came down with his wife and a lighted lamp in his hand. I asked him to come out on the verandah to speak to me.

"We stood there in the dark discussing the election, and he was undecided. So I urged him to vote with us, and then assured him that we didn't expect him to lose his day. . . ."

("Lose his day!" They pointed out, you see, that factory workers and so forth were given two or three hours off, without loss of pay, to vote. So why should a farmer be expected to go to all the trouble of spending a day driving in to vote, and the wear and tear on horses and so on, driving in?)

"I reached into my pocket, to recompense him for his loss of time, when the young fellow stayed me and asked:

"'What's the time?'

"'Eleven-twenty,' I told him.

"'We can't go on with this,' stated the young fellow. 'It is still the Sabbath day.'

Winning Conscientious Voter

"AS I would be in another part of the county the next day, I was most anxious to bring the matter to a close. So I said:

"'But nobody will know of this but you and I.'

"'God is a witness,' replied the young man.

"I seized his hand. 'Young man,' I cried, 'it is a great pleasure to meet a man of your character. If there were more of your sort in the world, it would be a better place. I will respect your wishes in this matter.'

"'Then you will come back in the morning?' he asked.

"'No,' I said. 'To-morrow, I will be in another part of the county. But you see this hole here in the window screen? I will just put this bit of money in there, and you can get it in the morning.'

"We parted, again with protestations on my part of the honor I felt at shaking hands with so high a type of young man.

"As soon as I got down the lane, and he had gone in the house, I jumped the hedge and slipped back to where I could see the lighted window and the money in the corner. I had only a moment to wait until I saw that the young man and God were alone together."

Cap Sullivan figured more in politics than in the sailing of the Great Lakes. He was the Mysterious Man of the Sea, in politics. A stranger to the constituency but a born reader of men.

But he had his first command of a ship at the age of 20. He was born in St. Catharines, when that city was a busy port and a ship-building centre. He has seen eight ships on the stocks at one time in St. Kitts, where his father was employed in the shipyards.

"I knew every plank and bolt and every string and stick of rigging before I ever went aboard a ship," he said.

This helped him to rise in four years from cabin boy to master. He went on his first trip at sixteen. At twenty, he was master of a two-masted schooner carrying grain from Chicago to Kingston, and loading timber off the shores of Lake Erie and Lake Huron, and carrying it to Kingston, where it was rafted to Quebec.

They carried a team of horses aboard each schooner, forward. This team turned the capstan which hauled the huge sticks of timber aboard the ship. The crews stowed the gigantic logs, and the trips from Chicago to Kingston and back took twenty-three days.

"You can imagine sailing the lakes was a tricky and uncertain system of transportation. We made the round trips as regularly as steamers now do, but not so swiftly. Steamers were as little seen as schooners are to-day."

BEFORE he was twenty-one, Cap'n Jack had command of as big a schooner as sailed the lakes — a twenty-thousand bushel freighter. He obtained a great reputation, along with his elder brother Captain Pat, as a navigator, a weatherer of storms, and a master that could get his jobs done.

But the two biggest adventures in the life of Cap'n Jack came to him long after he had quit the ships, and was manager of the floating plant of Haney and Miller, predecessors of the Roger Miller and Sons firm with which he still belongs.

Captain Pat was still a master on the lakes, commanding a big steam barge, the Erin. With the Irish love of his own, Cap'n Jack was down in St. Catharines over the week end of November 20, 1904, visiting Captain Pat's family. Pat had wired that he was leaving Fort William, loaded with grain and towing a barge also grain laden. It was the perilous season of the year, the close of navigation, and the Saturday that Cap'n Jack was with them, the brother's family were anxiously awaiting the telegram which would announce Captain Pat's safe arrival at the Soo.

But no word came. Sunday passed. No telegram awaited Monday.

Then Cap'n Jack quietly slipped away for Toronto.

He had a peculiar hunch, which filled him like a tangible thing, that something was wrong with his loved brother Pat. On the steamer which he took to Toronto, he chatted with the master who was a great friend and admirer of Captain Pat's, and he confided his fears that all was not well up on the Superior sea. The steamer captain scoffed at those fears and said nothing could happen to Pat, the greatest mariner on the lakes.

On his arrival in Toronto, Cap'n Jack felt a new surge of foreboding. He got news of heavy weather on the upper lakes, and he quietly packed his grip in the Walker House, preparing to catch the evening train for the Soo. He went down to the station, placed his bag on the platform and walked up and down, struggling with reason against this great dark hunch which filled him like a fog.

At the moment the train pulled out, he was undecided, and he let the train go, picked up his bag and went back to the hotel.

But the minute that train went out he felt, as if a voice had told him, that something was amiss with brother Pat. And all night, he lay awake, never closing his eyes while he pictured the things that could have happened.

"I'm going up," he declared.

He took the noon train to Winnipeg. It would get him to the Soo no sooner than if he had waited for the evening train, but he felt he must be on his way to Pat's help.

Dramatic Rescue of Brother

HE landed into the Soo Wednesday evening. He phoned at once to the canal office and asked if the steam barge Erin, Captain Pat Sullivan, had passed down.

"She has passed down for the last time in this world," replied the man on duty. "Haven't you heard? The Erin is lost with all hands."

Cap'n Jack went out from his hotel and caught a street car for the canal office.

"As I sat in that car, I had no more feeling that Pat was dead than if he were sitting beside me. I slapped my knee and said he wasn't dead, until the other passengers must have thought I was full."

"I got to the canal office where the head official, an old friend of both Pat and me, told me the story. An American steamer had passed the Erin, disabled, in a heavy sea. The American skipper had run as close as he dared to get a line to the Erin, but a snow storm came down, and in the storm, he lost touch with the Erin. When the storm cleared three hours later, there was no sign of the Erin.

"Her tow barge was reported drifting to anchor up the shore. But there was no news of the Erin. She had sunk, they all believed.

"So I went over to the American Soo and chartered a big tug, loaded her with a week's provisions and set out, Wednesday night, to hunt for Pat.

"Everybody tried to dissuade me. They told me it was a sad and forlorn hope. Winter had come, and the shores were covered with snow.

"But away we went. We found the tow barge, and from the officer of it I learned the direction of the wind, the night of the storm, when the tow barge had been cut loose from the Erin to fare as it might with its sails. And then we began a systematic hunt for the Erin. I was as confident of finding Pat as though I knew precisely where he lay.

"We went along till eleven o'clock in the morning. Then the tug captain called my attention to a smudge on the skyline, about ten miles away, which he could just make out with his glasses. I looked with naked eyes, and saw the Erin. I slapped the tug captain on the back and shouted—"We've got him!"

"'It's the Erin, and she's flying her table cloth at the masthead," I told him. He could not see her even with the glasses and thought I had gone crazy.

"Half an hour later, we hove alongside the Erin. She was riding to her small anchor, having parted the chain on her big anchor two days before. Pat had given her up and had transported the crew ashore in the boats. The anchor would not have held out the day.

"And the strange part of the thing is, that Pat, who knew I was nowhere in the north country, had a feeling, just as strong and mysterious as my feeling that he was in trouble, that I would come and save him.

A Thrilling Toronto Wreck

"WE took the Erin in tow and the folks back in St. Catharines, who didn't know where I was, received a wire from Pat Friday morning, which put an end to mourning. For the report of the loss was in all the papers."

In 1906, Cap'n Jack, in charge of the floating plant of the Haney and Miller interests, came, not as master but as manager, aboard the steam barge Resolute, with two barges in tow, to Toronto harbor to lie up for the winter.

There was no western gap in 1906. The eastern gap was the channel. A gale from the east was blowing. It was the end of the season, November. And a rough sea forbade the Resolute, with her awkward tow, entering the gap, lest the sea would strike her on the sand.

So they took the Resolute around to the west side of the Island, opposite Bathurst street, to lie up for a day or two until the sea should fall. Cap'n Jack went ashore in the boat to find out the the lay of the land. And he was told the wind was expected to veer to the southwest. So he went back aboard the Resolute to await the change in the wind, expecting a calm to follow the change which would permit him to make the gap.

But no calm followed. The sea off the eastern gap only leaped higher in the cross wind and swell, the Resolute returned to the only anchorage, west of the Island. And there a terrific gale blew up, the Resolute parted her anchor chain, and foundered in the November tempest along about three o'clock in the morning.

Captain Jack went forward to see what could be done, tripped in the dark over the water pipes, and pitched off the deck of the foundering vessel into the November sea.

When the Resolute sank, one of the boats, which was standing on the deck, floated safely off, with six of the engine room and below-decks crew in her. The captain of the Resolute was in the other boat. The engine room crew's boat passed alongside Cap'n Jack in the sea, where he was making a hopeless struggle against the tremendous sea which Ontario can throw up, and he was pulled aboard. But this crew knew nothing of handling a boat, and before Cap'n Jack could take charge, she was heaved up on a mighty swell, abeam, and over she went. At that instant, the roof of the deck house, blown off the sinking ship, came down on the swell, and the six, with Cap'n Jack, took hold of this poor support in a boiling sea.

Each swell took its grip on the frail structure of slats and canvas. Cap'n Jack cut slits in the canvas to keep a hand hold. The water instead of freezing them to death, warmed them out of the wintry wind, at each surge.

Cap'n Jack's Narrowest Escape

BUT one by one, those young men, to every one of whom Cap'n Jack might have been a father in age—he was in the fifties— perished in that fearful sea, let go, were washed away, or succumbed to the bitter cold.

He could see the lights of Toronto, as the raft rose to the swell. He encouraged them to hang on. But some believed the raft was floating out instead of ashore.

Before two hours, Cap'n Jack, this side of sixty, was all alone on the splintering and disintegrating roof of the wheel house.

By the grace of God, the sea swept him not on to the deserted island shore, where he would simply have frozen to death before he could have found help, but into the shallow eastern gap, fair as a pilot, and numbed and near to death, he recognized the Queen's wharf. There were lights in the watchman's cabin on the wharf—where, as a matter of fact, the captain and crew that had taken to the other boat were actually sheltering. Cap'n Jack shouted. Someone came to the door and answered, but the gale drowned the Cap'n's halloo, and in calm water, he floated inside the shelter of the wharves.

But here he was more likely to die than in the terrible sea, for the waves had warmed him, and now, clinging to the raft, as much of him as he could get, his supporting arms began to grow numb. He would presently have to let go.

He kicked the raft towards the wharf. It was nine feet high, on tall, bare piles. Could he ever take hold of the wharf? Could he climb, even if he got there? And then his raft would be gone from under him.

While he dumbly pondered this problem, a lantern came bobbing along the wharf in the distance. The watchman was making his rounds. Cap'n Jack shouted. The watchman came running.

He was hauled up, and carried to the watchman's cabin.

"I have had many and strange drinks in my time," says Cap'n Jack. "But the drink I had that night in the watchman's cabin was the most wonderful sensation of my life. It was a mug of hot coffee."

Wonderful old man of the sea, with his mysterious good fortune clinging to him! For three weeks, the famous Gamey trial dragged out, the name of Cap Sullivan was repeated over and over, every witness named him: "but they never put me in the witness box," said Cap'n Jack. "The one side was afraid, the other side dursn't!"

Played his game as he saw it, braved the elements, played high hand in strange businesses ashore.

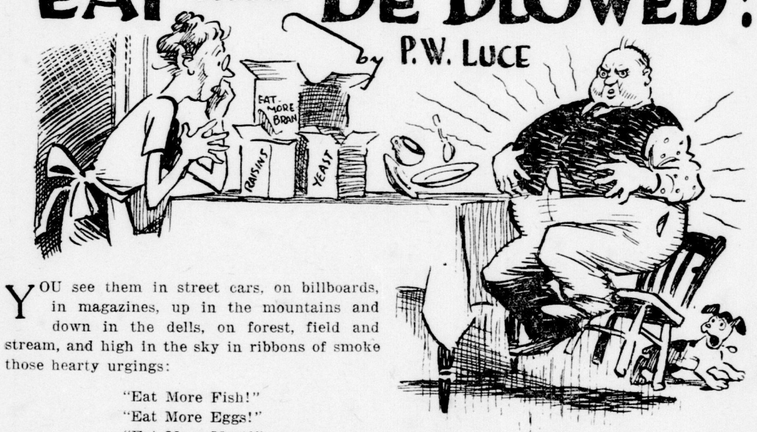

A sailor's luck.

HIS LAST CHANCE

EVEN the man who admits that he caught only one fish may lie about its weight.

EAT and BE BLOWED!

by P.W. LUCE

YOU see them in street cars, on billboards, in magazines, up in the mountains and down in the dells, on forest, field and stream, and high in the sky in ribbons of smoke those hearty urgings:

"Eat More Fish!"
"Eat More Eggs!"
"Eat More Meat!"
"Eat More Corn!"

You smack your lips and lick your chops. You say: "Good idea! I must do that!" But pause, brother, pause, and hist to this tragic tale of Joseph Addepose.

Joe was dazzled by those "Eat More——" signs. At first his reaction was spasmodic, but soon discretion yielded to vain ambition.

Joe tried to obey every advertiser!

For breakfast each morning he ate more Malaga grapes, Moonstruck oranges, Squirtless grapefruit, Native Son peaches, Peculiar porridge, Homely hominy, Bluffed rice, Little Piggy sausages ("Come from Runts without Grunts"), Speed's Brisk bacon, Tipwheat bread spread with Pretty Peanut butter ("Gets Mellow in a Fellow"), Aunt Jezebel pancakes, with Golden Rule syrup, etc., etc., etc.

All this he washed down with Kaffir coffee to stimulate his nerves, and Bust 'em to steady the same, both flavored with Carnation milk from Contented tins.

For lunch he enjoyed fifty-seven varieties of canned soup, Sanctified sauerkraut, Bawston baked beans ("They Lie Flat on Your Knife!"), Appetizing asparagus, Jiggs' Own Brand of corned beef and cabbage, Bill's onions ("There's a Tickle in Every Pickle"), Cunning cheese—oh, that's not the half of it!

Obviously, Joe Addepose grew in girth right merrily. When he could no longer indulge in physical exercise, he swallowed "Clever Little Pills to Cure Dinner Ills" between meals, though there was mighty small space left for 'em.

Unfortunately, as the "Eat More——" campaigns increased Joe's between-meals period decreased, dwindled and finally vanished.

He commenced eating an apple a day to keep the doctor away.

All went well until the "Eat More Bran," "Eat More Raisins," and "Eat More Yeast" instructions were obeyed in sudden sequence, right on top of the apple insurance.

At first Joe imagined he had the vulgar stomach ache.

Then he got groggy, and realized that the yeast and the bran and the apple and the raisins were defying the Eighteenth Amendment.

He had become a human still!

Joe was in a great ferment, but it didn't last long. His boiler could stand a pressure of only 118 pounds to the square inch, and when a big raisin turned over and sputtered at a yeast cake . . .

"Thunder!" folks blocks away told each other.

They were wrong. The explosion that so startled them was the natural finish of Joseph Addepose.

COIN WORTH A FORTUNE

SEARCH is to be made again for the long-lost five-franc piece which was minted with others by Napoleon, and which to-day is said to be worth 1,000,000 francs.

In order to popularize five-franc pieces, which were first issued by his order, Napoleon caused to be enclosed in one of them at the mint a tiny note, signed by himself and promising the sum of 5,000,000 francs to the finder of the coin. For years these coins were in great demand, and many were mutilated and even melted down by would-be finders of the note.

It is thought that the real coin found its way, when its particular issue was withdrawn, into some collection of Napoleonic relics. But wherever it is, it is said that the French government would honor the offer then made, if it were found.

ACTING HAPPY HOOLIGAN GAVE TURPIN CROSS-EYES

Leading Slap-Stick Comedian Played One Role for Seventeen Years—Was Once Actual Hobo

IMAGINE looking into the glass some morning to discover your eyes crossed.

That was how Ben Turpin's affliction came upon him. At first glance, he didn't think it was going to be so valuable. Desperately, he tried to put the right eye back in place again, but it flicked back into its new position again.

In seeking for the cause of the catastrophe, Ben Turpin has gone back seventeen years to the time when, in his amateur attempts at comedy, he began to imitate Happy Hooligan.

The story of this extraordinary man, who today must be reckoned one of the three or four leading slap-stick comedians of the motion picture screen, is one of the most curious and interesting that could be imagined. He was nearly fifty years old before many of us ever heard of him, and he was actually fifty before he ever had enough money to be sure of his food for a month in advance.

This is the story of his eyes, as told to Neil M. Clark, in an interview.

"One night I happened to see a fellow doing Happy Hooligan on the stage. It was a new act.

"'I could do that,' I said to myself. 'I'm a long-necked guy, and kind of funny-lookin.'

"So I got me a wig—bald you know—down to the fringe around the edges. I fixed up a tin can on my head and began to practise making Happy Hooligan faces, crossing my eyes and all the rest of the business. I was a knockout! I was Happy Hooligan!

"I went on with it, getting better and better, always practising the fine points. That's the way I was, trying to do it just right. I'd practise off the stage sometimes for hours at a stretch.

Yours truly—Ben Turpin

"Well, sir, once I started I kept playing that fool part for seventeen years. Can you imagine it. Happy Hooligan for seventeen years!

"My eyes were straight when I started, perfectly straight. I wasn't such a bad-looking fellow. But all this practising and acting Happy Hooligan, crossing my eyes to look the part, strained them pretty bad. One morning I woke up and looked in the glass. My right eye was crossed, and I hadn't crossed it!

"I rubbed it with my fingers—this way. I thought I could push it back. But it wouldn't go."

"Aw, what's the difference," I said. "Now I look more like Happy Hooligan than ever!"

DEAN OF CHESTER TELLS STORY IN FEWEST WORDS

MANY people, probably, are familiar with the story of the serial fiction-writer who, being asked by his editor to conclude a certain story in the fewest possible words, owing to exigences of space, wrote as follows:

The hero thereupon took his hat, his revolver, his departure, and, finally, his life.

This story has been capped by the Dean of Chester with an anecdote which illustrates strikingly the advantages of compression in speech.

A little friend of his had been asked to tell the story of Elisha, and her reply was: "Elisha had a bear and the children mocked him, and he said: 'If you mock me I will set my bear on you, and it will eat you up.' And they did, and he did, and it did."

MONEY WENT FURTHER IN WASHINGTON'S TIME

ALTHOUGH so often spoken of as "gloomy," Dean Inge can be genuinely funny upon occasion.

For instance, he recently made a party of Americans at a luncheon laugh very heartily by a reference to George Washington.

He recalled that the founder of the United States never told a lie, but had declared that he once threw a dollar across the estuary of the Potomac.

"I have seen the river," said the dean, "but," he added, "of course, we must remember that money went much further in those days."

BERNARD SHAW NEVER CRIES OVER SPILLED MILK

BERNARD SHAW, as everyone knows, is self-possessed to the verge of being inhuman. In a letter to a friend he once illustrated the fact that he never cried over spilt milk by likening himself to an Indian prince whose favorite wife, when banqueting with him, caught fire and was burnt to ashes before she could be extinguished. The Indian prince took in the situation at once and faced it in a thoroughly Shavian manner. "Sweep up your missus," he said to his weeping staff, "and bring in the roast pheasant!"

MAN WHO BROKE MONTE CARLO BANK NOW BROKEN AND DESTITUTE HIMSELF

Cleaned Out Monte Carlo Bank Three Times in One Day—Worth Seven Million Dollars at One Time—Fined For Drunkenness and Disorderly Conduct.

"People Surged Round Us"

ONCE he broke the bank at Monte Carlo. Finally he broke himself.

Captain Arthur William Frederick de Courcy Bower's significant little drama could be summed up in a few words like that. Sixty-eight years old, he stood in the dock at Bow street police station, London, England, a few days ago, charged with being drunk and disorderly. While intoxicated he had thrown a bottle of ink over a woman's dress. On all charges, he was found guilty, was fined and also ordered to pay the price of the dress.

It was during the trial that it became known that Bowers during the last twenty years has won many fortunes. At one time, it is estimated, he was worth more than $7,000,000. Repeatedly he broke the banks at Monte Carlo and other gambling casinos. But, seemingly, he also lost and spent great sums, and, at last, took to drink.

The dramatic story of how this great gambler waged war against the bank at Monte Carlo is told in the London Sunday Express!

"Once again I find myself in the limelight. However, the man who never makes mistakes never makes anything, and as I made a quarter of a million sterling on the tables at Monte Carlo I must be content, I suppose, to abide by mistakes, both my own and, unfortunately, those of others," he says.

"My gambling career began with an overmastering determination to wage war on the 'bank' at Monte Carlo, and for that matter against fate herself whenever she came into the arena of life prepared for a straight fight.

My first "fight" was out in Buenos Aires in 1881, where I came across a new hotel where all manner of gambling games were played—truce, baccarat, poker, and roulette. Here I played so often that I became the most familiar figure at the tables.

"But I was far from earning then my subsequent title 'Lucky Bower,' for I consistently lost.

"In the end I evolved a system which became known as 'Bower's Binomial,' which I put into practise as daringly as my depleted resources would allow.

"I went to Monte Carlo, unknown then, and won a comfortable sum. But I was not satisfied. I needed an assistant, and after much trouble found the very man. During the summer and autumn I initiated him into my system.

"That winter I returned to Monte Carlo with trebled assurance. This time I was known as 'Bower was back.' As I mingled with the crowds I heard myself being discussed and heard myself made into a millionaire one minute and plunged into the depths of ruin the next. I smiled. Not for nothing had I spent all those months working at 'Bower's Binomial.'

"I shall never forget the beginning of my play on that memorable return to the tables. My assistant sat some few yards away from me, and we were soon the centre of attraction. The news of any serious attempt to break the bank at Monte Carlo spreads among the visitors with rapidity. I began by losing, and I could hear sceptical remarks and derisive laughter from behind me. My assistant, who so far had had every faith in me, looked at me with frightened eyes. What, he was wondering, had he become entangled with? It was really amusing to watch his face when he staked the large sums as I had instructed him. He thought I was mad.

"But at that time I was very sane, and I might say very cool. I waited. Then at last I saw my chance. I looked across at my assistant and he understood. The croupier spun the wheel. Our heavy stakes were on. All remarks had ceased and an absolute silence reigned in the room. Above all one could hear the heavy breathing of my assistant who, however, was standing the strain with great fortitude.

"We won. We repeated the process again and again. By this time it seemed as though the news had spread not only around the casino, but around all Monte Carlo itself. Crowds surged around us. 'Lucky Bower' was bringing it off. For a time there was great amazement owing to the fact of my assistant winning as heavily as myself; for so far it was not known we were acting in conjunction. It seemed as though two men had found a system simultaneously. Before each of us was a great mass of money. "Les trois derniers," the croupier cried eventually, which meant that there were to be only three more spins that night. We staked heavily on each one, and each time we were winners.

"When we reached the Villa Constanti we poured out gold and notes in tumbled confusion on our beds. It was a wonderful sight.

"But it was not enough for me. Such is the gambling craze. Like Alexander, I longed for more worlds to conquer—a little matter to which I meant to attend in the near future. I had seen by this time that I must have more assistants, and, casting much of my previous care aside, I enlisted the services of five more. Then came the day when I opened the battle. I had supplied my "army," as someone afterwards called my assistants, with ammunition to the tune of a hundred thousand francs apiece, and all promised well.

"As usual, we lost at first, and I saw my friends' lengthening jaws as the piles of money dwindled. To me, however, it was a sign of good luck. I went out and had a drink at Ciro's, and came back ready for the greatest stroke of all. I took my seat and played as I had never played before. We won every time: we could not lose. The piles of money at our sides became an encumbrance. Few men could keep cool in such circumstances!

"Suddenly there was a cry. People surged round us with increasing pressure. My last win had 'cleaned out the bank.' More money must be brought. I had broken the bank at Monte Carlo!

"I think I shall never forget the thrilling moment when, after a short delay, a stately procession was seen advancing across the room in the direction of our table. It was composed of several gorgeous flunkeys, all glorious in silk stockings, handsome uniforms, and gold braid, carrying trays on which reposed bags of money—gold and notes—escorted by grave-looking officials in immaculate dress. I had brought about the rare spectacle of a temporary stoppage of play in the most famous casino in the world.

"I changed my assistants. Myself, I dared not leave. I was in the position of the captain on the bridge of the ship. I was weary and my nerves were strained to the breaking point. But I was out to do what no other man had yet done—break the bank twice in one day.

"We began again suddenly, and I knew that the "moment" was approaching. Again it happened. The bank was broken again. I will not describe it, except to say that the excitement of my first coup was trebled. Again the bank replenished its resources, and then, by the same process as before, I did what had never been done before—I broke the bank of Monte Carlo for the third time in one day!

"I staggered out of the Casino followed by my assistants, who had felt the strain more than I, and eventually reached my villa. Crowds were outside, but I wanted to be alone. I wanted peace. My nerves had to be soothed lest they snapped."

'TWAS LADIES HELD UP SIR HENRY'S SPECIAL

THE six business cars and baggage car of Sir Henry Thornton's special train was scheduled to leave Pembroke at 3.30 p.m. recently. All the officers were on the train, ready for the signal to go, but it did not come. The ladies of the party, including Lady Thornton, were away on a motor trip to the Country Club and military camp at Petawawa. They had understood the time of departure was 4 o'clock. The gentlemen of the party were there, but the ladies were not. They were holding up the special. The remark was passed by someone that Sir Henry Thornton may be nominally the head of the C. N. R., but his wife can say when trains may leave.

Went to Look for Cows Forgot to Bring Them In

Editor of Winnipeg Free Press Showed Signs of Smoldering Genius When a Boy

MR. JOHN DAFOE, editor of the Winnipeg Free Press and one of the leaders of thought in the west, showed signs of smoldering genius when, as a boy, he attended school in a small eastern town where he lived with an uncle and aunt.

One of these signs was an utter disregard for appearance in his dress. His favorite headgear, summer or winter, was an old woolen tam such as is worn by the Scotch shepherds on the hills.

Mr. John Dafoe

He was an omnivorous book worm and carried a book with him everywhere he went, reading it often as he walked along. His absent - mindedness on such occasions was quite equal to that of the eminent old country divine who, as he walked and read, collided with a cow and forthwith politely doffed his hat and apologized.

One of the stories told of the editor also concerns a cow. His aunt kept a cow, and among other things it was "Jack's" duty to fetch the animal to and from the pasture at milking time. One evening he was gone for hours, and finally came meandering back, his nose buried in one of his beloved books, and minus the cow!

On being questioned by his irate aunt as to the whereabouts of the missing bovine he had to confess that he had walked all the way to and from the pasture so absorbed in his book that he had never given the cow a thought. When he went back for the cow his aunt saw to it that the book was left at home.

KIPLING RUBS HIS EYES AT STRANGE VISITOR

American Walked Right In, Turned Around and Walked Right Out Again

ONE of the funniest Kipling stories, which came to light during the Kipling week in the United States book stores recently, is supposed to have been told by the author himself.

One day when Kipling was busy in his study at Rottingdean, near Brighton, there burst in upon him a man, obviously an American, followed by two lads. Without tendering a word of apology or explanation, the elder man said: "Are you Rudyard Kipling?"

Receiving an answer in the affirmative, he turned to the lads and said: "Boys, this is Rudyard Kipling."

Then to Mr. Kipling: "This is where you write?"

"Boys, this is where he writes."

"And," concluded Mr. Kipling, "before I could so much as ask his name they were gone."

"TRUTH IN ADVERTISING" TALE OF A BAY HORSE

A GOOD story was told by Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, the American newspaper magnate, when in London recently.

Addressing the convention on the subject of "Truth in Advertising," he remarked that "ads." should be truthful in spirit as well as in letter, not "white lies" such as a Boston physician once put in the newspapers.

He had bought a horse which balked badly at a bridge, and could never be got to cross one. Consequently, as the Charles River practically surrounds Boston, the doctor found, too late, that the animal was useless to him, he only having bought it with a view to visiting his patients in the outlying suburbs on the other side of the river.

So, after profound cogitation, he drew up and inserted the following advertisement:

For Sale—A bay horse, warranted sound and kind. The only reason for selling him is that the owner is obliged to leave Boston.

AN AWKWARD QUESTION

FEW men have a bigger fund of Fleet street stories than Robert Blatchford, the veteran author and journalist.

One that he is fond of telling concerns a brother newspaper man who was holding forth to a mixed company of literary men amongst whom was a well-known novelist.

The journalist was saying that he had recently been engaged in revising the obituaries held in readiness by his paper. Turning to the novelist, he added: "I've just been writing you up."

The novelist, who apparently had not been following very closely, woke up with a start, and said, eagerly: "When is it going to be published?"

Wealthy Missing Man Found Working for $15 a Week in Store

LEAVING behind him a fortune he had amassed through years of hard work and a family, he asserts, he could stand no longer, Edward W. Washburn of Brocton, Mass., disappeared from home some weeks ago and was found working as a grocery clerk in a Brooklyn store, earning a salary of fifteen dollars a week. Following his disappearance, the police sought for his body, thinking he had committed suicide. Washburn, 57 years old, is making his home at the Salvation Army Hotel on the Bowery.

Edward W. Washburn owned seven ice houses in Brockton, Mass., an d was considered to be the town's wealthiest citizen.

"My children treated me like a dog," he said. "I stood it as long as I could and then I left them. I'll never go back, no matter what happens."

After arranging a suitable income for his family, Washburn left for New York. Why there had been a police search for him, he could not understand. According to his story, his youngest son accompanied him to the train, and agreed with him that "he was doing the right thing."

In New York, the former leading citizen of Brockton lived in a Salvation Army Hotel in the Bowery at 40c a night. It was here that he happened to be recognized by a man who had formerly lived in the same town.

Washburn satisfied the police that he was able to take care of himself. He had some ready cash and a job and meant to break no law. He stated that he did not want to make another fortune, but simply enough to live on and be left in peace.

Washburn said his two older sons, Leroy, thirty-five, and Alfred, thirty-four, not only mistreated him, but did not speak to each other. He complained that in his own home he was not permitted to eat with the family, but sat at a small table by himself. An invalid daughter, Anne, thirty-three, and his wife, complete the family.

DOUGLAS FIRED TENANT FOR ABUSING EMPLOYE

Canadian Who Owns Heart of Seattle Would Not Allow Window-Washer to Be Treated Unjustly

TENANTS, as well as employes, must be decent and polite in the buildings of John Francis Douglas, the Canadian who transformed ten acres of pasture land into Seattle's office-building centre. He plays no favorites. "We insist on the employes in our buildings being respectful to tenants," he explained to John Monk Saunders, who interviewed him for the American Magazine. "But we also insist on tenants being courteous to employes.

John F. Douglas

"Some time ago, for instance, a window cleaner, while on his usual rounds, entered a tenant's private office and happened to interrupt a business conference. The tenant got mad and ordered the man out. Not content with that, he sent for the cleaner the next day and abused him roundly.

"We heard about it and called the tenant in. He had a large suite of offices and was a rent payer of long standing. But we told him that we could not permit him to maltreat an employe.

"'But surely,' he said, 'you wouldn't put a good tenant out for calling down a window washer!'

"'That window cleaner,' we replied, 'has been with us for many years and has given honest service. But he will become useless if we allow him to be badgered about by tenants. He couldn't keep his self-respect under such conditions. So you will have to give up your offices.'

"The tenant moved, and then showed his sporting blood by writing us a letter apologizing for his action and saying that we were right. He isn't the only man we have turned out for mistreating employes."

Douglas takes an interest in his tenants. If one, for instance, gets into financial difficulties, Douglas sits in with him to figure out the cause of the difficulty. "In most cases," he says, "we can do it.

"For instance, there was a man who was about to go under. We talked over his predicament with him, made a survey of his income and his expenses, and found that he was lugging too much space. His overhead was eating him up.

"That was his sole mistake. He had been working hard to build up his business, and had over-extended himself. His creditors were about to close in on him. We called them all in for a meeting in my office, told them of his struggle to make a go of his shop, and pointed out that he could win his fight with a little help. We told them that we could carry him for the rent if they would give him time to get back on his feet. This started a friendly move towards him which carried him back to prosperity."

The story of Douglas' success in Seattle reads like a fairy story. Born near Toronto, Ontario, he went as a boy with his father to North Dakota. He was school teacher and lawyer. Not wanted by any of the legal firms in Seattle seventeen years ago, he put out his own shingle, specialized as secretary of four lodges where he "circulated." With the first money he earned, he bought a set of tools, cleared about two acres of land in a suburb, and put up the shell of a two-roomed house with his own hands with the help of his wife, who held the boards and nailed some of them, too. Now, at forty-nine years of age, there are twenty of the finest buildings in Seattle under his direction.

Sally of Mr. Meighen's Saved Bad Position

Audience Ready to "Boo" Cheered Witty Repartee Instead at Regina Election Meeting

DURING the political campaign waged during the general election of 1922, the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen was addressing a political gathering in the large Auditorium Rink in Regina in support of the candidature of Major Macpherson, the Conservative nominee. In the course of his address he had to refer to some remarks made by the Right Hon. Mr. Crerar in connection with the platform of the Farmers' party. To reinforce his point he told his audience that he would read a letter sent by Mr. Crerar to the Farmers' party; and, suiting his words to his action, he at once began to look for this particular letter in his portfolio, but a diligent search failed to bring to light the missive in question.

Hon. Arthur Meighen

The tension on the large audience was beginning to be felt, when a voice from the rear said: "Mr. Meighen, why don't you look in Eaton's catalog?"

Like a flash came back: "Sir, I believe that in Eaton's catalog I would find more common sense and facts than in this letter I was going to read you." This sally brought down the house.

A REAL "PLATER"

WELL known as a breeder and owner of thoroughbreds Baroness Wentworth tells the story of a Londoner who emerged from a local railway station and hired a fly to drive him to the racecourse five miles away

As the vehicle made rather slow progress, the traveler asked the driver if he thought they would arrive at the course in time for the two o'clock race.

"I hope so, sir," replied the jarvey. "I want to give him (indicating the horse) a bit of a rest. He's running in the two-thirty."

Life's Little Comedies

THE ROSEMARY HUNT CLUB MEET THEIR FIRST CHECK JUST OUTSIDE BIRDSEYE CENTER.

The Roistering Blade — by G.C.

SUPPOSE we put the last act first?

In that case, we have Andy Gallere standing in the prisoner's cage, his solemn pale grey eyes fixed on Magistrate Jones, while he absorbs the shock of the sentence.

"Two years in Kingston penitentiary."

Andy and a gentleman friend, it appeared from the evidence, had quietly swooped down, in a taxi, upon a Chestnut street gay house that had been raided only an hour before by the police; and all the tenants being in the jug, the two swift thinkers, Andy and his red-headed friend, had proceeded to loot the house of clothing, silks and satins, rugs, a club bag and sundry other goods and chattels.

Andy had two defenses:

"We were going to sell the stuff to raise bail for the woman."

"I was drunk—didn't know what I was doing."

The latter excuse I believe.

The magistrate, however, viewing the long records of the two, sentenced them to Kingston for two years, on the charge of housebreaking.

That's the last act.

THE regiment will ever remember Enquin les Mines.

We were there in May. And May in France will make lovely even war. But Enquin les Mines was twenty miles from the war. It is situated on a hill and a valley and consists of just enough farm houses and barns to accommodate nicely a regiment at battle strength.

In the valley runs the River Laquette, a creek about the size of the Credit at Caledon, though I never wet a line in it, a thing I regret to this day.

The colonel's mess was in the mayor's house, and the stone wall of the garden damped its feet in the little river. Elms and willows filled the valley. A wooded lane ran up the hillside from the mayor's house, to the village on the hill.

Being in rest, we put on a little dog in Enquin les Mines. We had the band play for officers' mess. The band stood in a circle on the grass beside the lane, just outside the mess room windows, and a couple of hundred of the troops would gather around to listen.

The night I first laid eyes on Andy, the band had not yet begun to play. Dinner was not quite ready to be served, and the colonel and his officers were grouped beltless about the door of the mayor's house, to listen to the music until dinner was ready. The bandmaster had got his men in a circle, their music sheets set and ready, and instruments poised, the gathering of a couple of hundred of the men were quietly waiting, when down the wooded lane, alone, came Andy.

He was swaying from side to side, and weaving from the one edge of the path to the other. He was mumbling and singing softly to himself. He approached the assembled band and audience in a great hush.

Before anybody could take action, Andy suddenly perceived the silent throng, and he halted abruptly, staggering backward with dignified gestures of delight.

Then he steadied himself, drew up in a soldierly manner, as befitted the two stripes on his arms—he was a corporal—and in his stentorian voice, bawled out—

"Fall in, the band, for your sham and your sheese!"

Out of the silence which followed his command, as all eyes turned upon the colonel and his group of officers, came the sudden bark of the regimental sergeant major who was standing in the crowd.

"Fall in, two men!"

When Andy heard this stern voice and gathered the import of the command, he grinned sheepishly, and with great care, slowly sat himself down on the ground. It was alike a scene on the stage.

"Fall in, two more men!" barked the sergeant major.

Andy lay right down on his back.

The four men, led by the sergeant major, walked over and picked Andy up by arms and heels and marched with him gravely up the road towards the guard room.

And the band, pulling itself together, started to play.

BUMPSTEAD was probably the stiffest and most soldierly company commander we had.

"What's a soldier's cap for?" he would suddenly demand of one of his men in passing.

The startled soldier would look fuddled.

"To protect his head, sir?" he would venture.

"Not at all!" Captain Bumpstead would declare grimly. "Bring the right hand smartly, with a circular motion, to the head, palm to the front, fingers extended and close together, point of the forefinger touching edge of peak of cap just above right eyebrow....That's what a soldier's cap is for! Understand? Don't salute me as if I were the postman!"

And it was Bumpstead who had Andy in his ranks.

I took an immediate interest in the case of Andy after that ridiculous scene at band concert. On parade the following day, I asked Bumpstead what had been done with Gallere.

"Reduced to the ranks," said Bumpstead.

"It was the funniest scene you ever saw," I told him. "He seems to be a great card."

"He's a card, all right," said Bumpstead. "I promote him when we go into the line, because we need him. And within twenty-four hours of coming out of the line, he is reduced to the ranks, drunk."

"Good in the line?"

"One of the best; never takes a snort, keen as mustard and reliable."

Later, I encountered Andy in the Hill 70 trenches one afternoon. Once again he was a corporal. His seamed and scarred face was long with the dignity of his rank, and his large, hard eyes, of a peculiar goat-like grey, were the straight-gleaming eyes of a smart soldier devoted to his job.

"So Captain Bumpstead restored your rank?" I observed.

"Yes, sir. Corporal on the instalment plan. I much prefer being a private out of the line, sir, anyway. A freer life."

"Still, it can't last, corporal. They will get tired of it. You ought to try and cut ou the booze."

"Been boozing all my life," replied Andy. "Captain Bumpstead is a very understanding officer, sir."

I took the rebuke in silence.

Andy and I became friends. He continued to disgrace his company each time we were in billets and to bring honor on his platoon when there was war to be done. He won no decorations, he was wounded, and he came out of the army—there were a few months of peace before demobilization—a private soldier.

"THERE was a pretty hard-boiled looking drunk in here to see you," said the boys in the office, about a month after the regiment came home.

It was Andy. He came in to see me frequently, usually when he was drunk. He was engaged in operating games of chance at country fairs. Then he would come into the city to visit his family of three, and to spend his earnings in certain holes and corners he was bound to know.

Twice, since the war, he got foul of the law. His war record saved him, despite the fact that his pre-war record dated from 1900.

The last I saw of him, I staked him his train fare to Barrie to attend the fall fair.

Then I read in the paper of his housebreaking.

"LIFE," said Andy, "is like one of them jigsaw puzzles you give to the kids for Christmas. Only, half the pieces aren't there, and there's a few extra pieces that ain't meant to fit anyway thrown in. And all the time you're trying to fit it together and get the picture they promised you—the picture of happiness. That's life."

Andy sober is a credit to his country, his country's valiant defender. Andy drunk is a menace to himself and his little fatherless family, and a public nuisance. I often think of him as belonging in the seventeenth century, riding with the troopers about the world, a roistering blade, a figure of romance and deviltry, a typical soldier of fortune.

But the nineteenth century has dried up. There is no room for Andy. Yet he doubtless comes by his nature honestly enough. It is not his fault.

The law makes no provision for looking after Andy as Bumpstead looked after him.

"A very bad record," said the bench. "Two years in Kingston."

SPIDERS EAT BIRDS AND MAKE TRAP-DOORS

A TRAVELER who has recently returned from an expedition into the forests of the Amazon says that he was much more frightened of the huge spiders he encountered than of the jaguars. There is certainly something awe-inspiring in his description of a species of Amazon spiders as creatures with long legs, fat black bodies, about the size of a young rat, and the wickedest, most fiendish eyes imaginable!

These spiders make "trap-doors" on the ground, beautifully camouflaged, and so perfectly balanced that they shut by their own weight. Beneath them are tunnels, or pits, in which the monster spiders watch for their prey.

Another spider is spotted "like the pard," and spins a web quite a yard across. The strands of this huge web, suspended between two trees, are so strong and tough that if a small bird flies into them it is unable to escape before the arrival of the spider, which makes short work of it.

The Fish That Fishes With a Living Fishpole—"Sea Devil" Weirdest Freak of Canadian Waters

Pursuing This Fantastic, Horrid Angler Off the Nova Scotia Coast—And Some Adventures On the Fog-Shrouded Baiting Grounds

By BONNYCASTLE DALE

"DID you hear the conch blow?" Peter called. "H-OO-T!" it went. "I'll bet that matey's got good lungs," laughed Peter, as we slopped down to the little white punt that was drawn up on the Fiddle. Into it I scrambled, in leaped Peter with the wide tops of his rubber boots flapping about his knees the way the pirates of Captain Kidd's time wore their long leather boots. I guess they made this punt just big enough to hold Peter and myself and the camera. The fog was so thick and the night so dark that we steered for the "lap on her bow," as Peter said. Up I scrambled. Up came Peter. Matey gave the motor wheel pin a kick. "Put Put," sang the engine—and we were off.

I lay on the cabin top of the motor boat, staring into the gloom. These men always kick off and run down the long narrow harbor without much of a lookout, and we were in one collision—no more for me, thank you, kindly—so I watch. And it wasn't much I was able to see. Ahead would rise a great black, swelling, sluicing roller. Up, up, it we would go. Down, down, it we would coast. "BLAH!" sang the automatic on the reef, then I faintly saw its red light in a scurry of the fog. If Peter's wrist had not been strong I would not be here writing this, for the "Turn-over," as Laddie calls the Terra-Nova, was headed right on the reef. We spun so fast up that swell to escape the black, hissing rocks that I was almost thrown clear out into the sea, so I slid down into the cockpit instead.

We were headed for Roseway Bank, out some thirty miles dead off land, in about 50 fathoms of water. We had baited up with squid the day before. I pictured Laddie holding eleven of them up. It was moonlight when we got the best jiggling. The squid came to the top of the water, phosphorescent when the moon went behind the big clouds, and we dropped out our jiggers and pulled up through the wriggling, splashing mass. I really think these strange wee squid are mating at this season.

"Squish!" went the bow into a big dark comber, and I took a mouthful of salt water as it flew rearward.

When I got my eyes cleaned out a bit I saw the red light away up the tall black side of a passing freighter and heard her raucous whistle blowing out on the wind—two blows—telling us she had a tow. Yes! indeed—we had gone ahead and had to come about and get out of that. Along came the dark form of the tow.

"Main'st gone!" (mainmast gone) bellowed Peter in my ear.

"Yes! And we were almost gone—where were you steering?" I yelled back. We boiled and bubbled on the confused sea kicked up by the passing steamer and schooner. I again sat down and pondered on the way these partly educated fishermen read aright the paths of the sea in fog and darkness. Peter had steered south, a few points east, through it all. Aiming at an unseen bank fifty fathoms down, 30 miles away, and he struck the right place while we were "muggin' up" for the second time. He had a cold "blueberry grunt" in a big earthenware basin (dumplings boiled in blue-berries), and he heated it up on the tiny coal range in the wee cabin. It made us three grunt before we tucked it all away, I tell you.

British Museum Has One

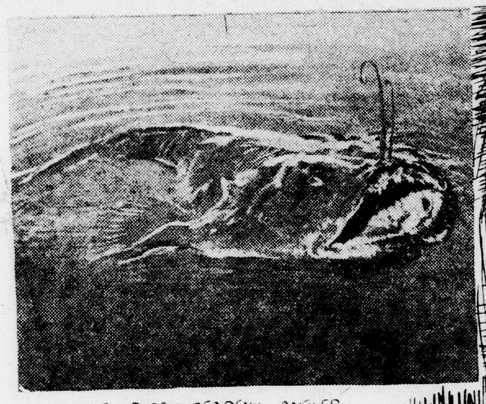

THERE, in the fog, amid the steadily rolling sea, Peter hauled her about and let down his mudhook. How he ever knew this was Roseway Bank gets me. It was a dead swell with a bit of wind chop on top—that is what I called it.

"Try a bot of squid!" Peter laughed out as he passed me a handline and I baited it. The fifty-foot motor boat was riding the swells in great shape and the tide was almost slack. Peter had three cod before I started and Matey had several. Then I got a bite away down there and hauled up—"a blamed dog," as Peter said (a dog fish). "What will I do with it?" I asked him. "Give un a clout on t' head and throw it back!" howled Peter.. I did—but after that I let the wee sharks go uninjured even though both fishermen abused me for it.

"Now what you got?" called Peter, as some huge thing tried to take line and hooks and all. "Hang on to it!" he yelled, as he ran over to me. Then matey came and we three tugged, hauled and pulled, and, slowly, up came a big, dark object. "A sea devil!" squealed Peter. "Haul 'im in!" and we hauled while Peter ran for the "lily iron" (a spear on the end of a pole). "Whar's that sea devil?" he yelled as he ran back. The huge thing had taken twenty fathoms of line out of our very hands. Peter dropped the pole and grabbed the line, and we hauled and hauled. Then I saw it. The greatest gaping mouth I had ever seen at sea. A huge pinkish grey thing, with mighty stub teeth and hanging, swaying flaps to cover them, and, held back on its head, a bony fishpole that had on its end a bit of gristle for a bait.

"Let me!" yelled Matey. He seized the pole and darted it down at the great, horrid-looking thing. He struck that cod line with the spear as fair as could be and cut it in twain, and the sea devil was free again. It lay there on top of the sea looking at us. Its bleary, blotchy eyes seemed bloodshot with rage. Once! Twice! it opened and closed that huge trap, and then slowly sank down in the clear green sea.

I was dumbfounded that I had lost so rare a specimen. I told Matey that one was taken the other day in England and sent to the British Museum as a great rarity. That it was called the "angler" or "sea goose," and that it lay on bottom and dangled that semi-transparent long pole that we had seen up over its head, out, down over its opened jaws, and that the fish, seeing the gristle waving, swam in and "slap" went the jaws, and that was the end of that wee school of fish. "Yes! I knows them fish. Why, onct when dad an' me was on the banks, we haulds one in and I was goin' to cut line, but dad says, 'Let's cut 'im up,' and we did and thar was four sea ducks in him as fresh as fresh."

I knew all about this, as I had been studying. One big goose fish, taken on the Grand Banks (lophius pisctarius) had a whole wild goose in his stomach. Again, a fisherman saw a loon come to the surface of the sea struggling violently. Its head never came to the surface; it had been sucked down the maw of one of these huge sea devils, or "fishing frog," "monk fish," or "angler," as they are called along this coast, and slowly but surely that loon was sucked down under the sea.

Fish, Pole and Bait in One

THESE strange creatures go to a weight of fifty pounds. They swim flat as does a flat fish, and each closed jaw holds a double set of stub teeth that are set in backwards. They call the fishing pole, that lies back over the head, one spine of the dorsal fin, the other five are amidships. They run to four feet long and about as wide, and its shape makes some men call it the "bellows fish," for it will rise in a flock of wild ducks, or swim into a cove where small fish are crowded, and suck them in until it expands like a bellows. I wonder why? It does not need all this food to live. It is all head and stomach. Peter said he knew of other names—all good ones, too, "molli-gut," "all-mouth," and "wide-gap" seemed appropriate.

"Look out for your feet if youse catches one," Matey said. "They snap down on a rubber boot and good-bye, toes."

"Yes, an' dad says they try to swallow one another," added Matey.

I grieved all that day, smothered by that blanket of fog. Every tug I got I hoped it was another big, evil-looking sea devil, but although we caught many big cod and haddock and once took in a two-hundred-pound halibut, we never got another bite at the fish I wanted.

Just then the blare of a passenger came to us in the fog. Peter had all the fish he could get on that tide. He said: "We were in the lane (passenger lane), so he guessed we'd better haul our hook up," and we did. We had just got power on when we heard that blare again. It seemed behind us now, down wind, then it sounded ahead. And just then a huge black mass, pushing the water ahead, passed us on the port so near I could have tossed a squid up against it. They would never have known had they struck us. I could not see up to her rail for fog. That night, in the wee, fish smelling "fish store" in the point, Peter said: "You come wi' us to Port Maitland and we'll get you a 'greedi-gut'" (another name for sea devil).

We had done a hundred miles, past lighthouses and wrecks and reefs and bars before we saw the long fence like "weirs" standing out from the shore. As we slowed up near a trap tender Peter asked him if he had a good haul.

"Few herrin', some mackerel and a slew of 'kettle-maws.'"

"He means sea devils," Peter told us. So we danced off in the wake of the tender, sloping up over the swells. He ran right ashore and two men seized forks and began to throw herring in buckets full out into a cart that half floated, half rested, on the bottom. Then "splash" into the sea went a huge body, a forty-pound sea devil. Another and another followed until I counted a dozen of these big things flopping in the lessening tide.

"They're too wet for manure and no good to eat, so we flops 'em over," said the trap man. Ladd'e had seized a camera and was busily snapping these rare things. The water was full of them about him, but the big, ungainly fish were too slow and inert to be dangerous, even though he could see the big, discolored stubs of teeth sticking up. One great sea devil swam right at Laddie and opened its big gap of a jaw as if it would like to swallow him, camera and all.

How Can It Eat So Much?

I GOT a good snap for my readers of one of the fish with one of its bony fishing rods erect over its jaw. One rod was broken off.

"I knows of one of them fish which was hauled in to t' deck slippin' off and t' boys seized a lot of clams which was spilled and hits him smack as he lay on t' water. Hurt him? Never a bit! Say! He just nabs each clam before it could sink and swallers 'em every one. We threw two buckets of 'em an' then dad comes along an' says, 'Yes, an' you could throw all the clams, an' all the squid, an' all the cod wees got and that sea devil would swaller 'em every one."

The sea along here was full of rare things. We made another trip and took lumpsuckers. A two foot long, grisly thing, and once we got so close to a porpoise that Laddie jumped back swiftly after he snapped it off the stern of the

A COUPLE OF SEA DEVILS

I. McCorker. We were still after that sea devil we could not catch. We tried herring and squid, cod and pollock, haddock and cusk and even lobsters. Then in a moment of mockery (we had just lately pictured the tail of a huge tuna, a six hundred pounder, and wished we had it for bait) Laddie said: "I wonder if they would eat a lumpsucker?"

Down went the hook into the clear green sea, baited with this other horrid looking thing. We admire it because its spawn is so exquisitely colored, strawberry red, lilac and purple, this rare spawn settles along the sea coast bottom. That was near shore. Away out here where we were fishing this day we had seen long, jelly-like masses, as long as the motor boat and a couple of feet wide. "Sea devil eggs," bawled Peter. So we sent the lumpsucker down with our best compliments. There he lay while the evening fogs stole along like wisps of vapor over the sea. The tide was slack but changing as we were now bobbing at the other end of the anchor line pointing a different direction.

"Got a bite!" yells Laddie.

"Haul 'im up," says Peter.

"Can't," cries Laddie. Then we all crowded along the rail and grabbed the line and, hand over hand, the big open-mouthed thing came up. Yes! It was a sea devil and a dandy. While we manhandled it one chap got the lily iron and stood ready to kill it as mercifully as he could, for one specimen we must have for our dissection. It is remarkable how swiftly a bounding, snapping mass of gristle like an angler will make a group of fishermen explode. We moved as it struck the deck. You see, I was not afraid, but it was getting dark, and I had not been introduced to the fish, and he was all mouth and teeth there in the dim light behind the rail.

"Kill it," I said to Peter. And he did.

Next day, when I dissected the now flat, dull mass, I found in its stomach starfish, eels, cunner, herring, shorebirds, sand dollars, sea urchins, crabs, hard shell clams, squid, a dog fish, a skate, a lobster, and much seaweed and eel-grass—over twenty pounds weight. Why does the sea devil need so much food?

The Ghost in the Hollow

By Edith G Bayne

IT is the last picnic of the year. The old, familar hollow is filled with drifted gold and stark along the hill-slopes rise the poplars and elms, wraiths of a vanished loveliness. The dreaming peace of the woods lies over the hushed group like a spell and is only broken by the intermittent chatter of two squirrels busy storing away the winter's supply of acorns. The merest whisper of a breeze sends a soundless shower of leaves down. Summer is dead.

They say there's a ghost in the hollow—

There are the usual number of skeptics and somebody suggests that they all stay and watch for it. In the meantime, on with the feast!

The last picnic is always a corn-roast. Summer's hamper contained dainty, cool, thirst-quenching delights, but October's bulging basket is filled with viands of a more staying quality and the vacuum bottles hold coffee instead of lemonade. There's a decided disposition on the part of the merrymakers to remain in the sun. Sweater-coats aren't thrown over the balsam-limbs but kept snugly on and buttoned up. And the pleasantest sound in all the world just now is the hissing of the wieners as they bubble in the pot.

On a neighboring slope an artist is sketching a ragged rift of scarlet maples partly denuded of their leaves. From time to time a little grey man who may be a botanist or a seeker of insects or just an aimless wanderer moves shadow-like in the distance from shrub or tree-bole, bent over in a stooping position as he pokes about with a stick. He looks like a grotesque faun that the departing spirits of summer have inadvertently left behind. An Airedale dog belonging to the picnickers goes racing through the rustling drifts of brown leaves in eager pursuit of a squirrel, but the bushy-tailed little rascal seeks sanctuary on a high beech-limb, from which vantage-point he scolds and drops acorns down at his tormentor. A rabbit diverts the dog's attention, and he whisks away on the trail of this new quarry.

Where are the birds? Only now and again on the still air a soft, fluted call like a wistful farewell. Summer has gone.

The party continues to make merry. Some play games on the sun-warmed carpet of beech leaves, others go rambling afar among the rocks and yellow woods calling out to one another at sight of a blood-red creeper or an old oak that autumn has bronzed to a startling beauty. From every hillside voices and laughter ring.

Remote clouds, leaden grey but touched with amber along their under edges, lie sleeping in the west, and when the sun drops behind them a swift chill descends on the old hollow.

And those around the fire speak again of the ghost—

More corn-cobs are thrown on the coals. The ramblers come drifting back to gather round the blaze in comfortable companionship. There are songs. And stories. And little sudden silences. Before they know again the long days and the green leaves the year must pass through its carnival of seasons—autumn's later bleakness, the hushed sleep of snow, the stirring sap of spring and April's budding. It seems a long time to wait. On a brief October afternoon, with the grey evening closing in, the dead summer is like a treasure irretrievably lost. Even the two lovers—who are to be married very soon—feel a little sad. They have known a hundred picnics in the old hollow, but it will never be quite the same again.

The baskets are being packed now and somebody is trying to stamp the fire out. A deeper stillness has wrapped itself like a heavy cloak about the hills and the woods. The artist has folded up his easel and departed this hour or more. The botanist is nowhere to be seen. The dog has chased the last denizen to its hiding-place and rejoined the human tribe, panting from his exertions and wearing a rakish air of satisfaction, the sense of duty done.

The picnickers straggle up the slope and at the top pause to look back and down. Ghost? Why, there's no such thing as a ghost! Of course not. And anyway they can't linger another minute. They must be getting home. Already a chill mist is gathering, and above the naked birches stands a cold silver moon. The scene has swiftly changed. Nature has set the stage for evening. The late merrymakers shiver, draw coats and wraps closer about them, and hurry away.

But two remain, loath to leave, and beside them the dog.

The dog betrays restlessness. He whines faintly. The lovers, who are very young and very sentimental, cling to one another, their eyes turning to the old hollow down below where summer has so lately died.

That wraith-like thing is, of course, only a wisp of smoke rising from the late fire. But they aren't looking for the rumored ghost—they've forgotten all about it. They are seeking a ghost of their very own.

Perhaps the dog sees the spectre—dogs are so unfathomably knowing. But if he does he gives it a wide berth.

There is a sighing in the pines, where they stand on eternal guard, dark and unbending and forever untouched by the passing of seasons—the pines that are sign and symbol that summer will come again.

The lovers echo the sigh. A long while they continue to gaze before them in silent unity of spirit and then they turn to one another with slow smiles and an unspoken question. It is as though each said to the other: "Do you see?"

There are ghosts in the old hollow. Ask the lovers, who will answer that they are the ghosts of happy memories.

"It's Your Move"

THEY were the only two occupants of the railway compartment, and one of them, a particularly surly-looking man, had opened the window, despite the protests of his companion. At length the aggrieved one removed himself to the other side of the carriage and threw open the window. The surly man shivered in the blast. "Here," he said, truculently, "what's the game?" "This is draughts," replied the other sweetly, "and it's your move."

AT Kingston: He carries dangerous things about with him, and he has threatened to make a hole in my breathing apparatus."

WOMEN'S CLOTHES TO-DAY LEAVE NO ILLUSIONS

In Thirteenth Century They Simplified Their Minds Before Their Dresses—No Comparison

BUT IMMORALITY FUSS ALL ROT, SAYS PARSONS

Exposure of Blemishes Only Bad Salesmanship, Says Art Professor—Men Don't Like Paint Pots

WHO shall decide when renowned professors of art and history disagree about women's clothes?

Prof. Frank Alvah Parsons, head of the New York School of Fine and Applied Art, lecturer at the Metroplitan Museum, etc., emphatically differs from the recently expressed opinion of Prof. W. Hughes Jones, Edinburgh University historian, that feminine fashions are going back to the styles of the thirteenth century, "the best-dressed age in the world."

Prof. Jones was quoted in recent cables from Scotland as saying that styles to-day are neither outrageous nor startling, as commonly alleged, but that there is instead a grace of form and simplicity similar to that of the fashionable 1200's.

"All the best-dressed women of the twentieth century," asserted Prof. Jones, according to the reports, approximate more to the style of the thirteenth century in their costume than any other women in history."

Prof. Parsons says the difference between thirteenth and twentieth century gowns is radical and fundamental. Also, he believes that while Prof. Jones may be right in calling modern styles simple, in one sense, the Scotch professor is way, way off when he calls them graceful, on the average 1924 figure.

By historical coincidence, he explained, the catchword of the thirteenth and twentieth centuries is the same—"simplicity."

"In the thirteenth century," he said, "the church was the absolute dictator in matters spiritual and material. The popes one after another issued edicts which forbade women to come to communion wearing certain styles and forbade priests to give them absolution if they did so—just as the bishop of Paris did last year.

Upholds the One-Piece

PROF. PARSONS acknowledged the points of resemblance—the one-piece dresses, beltless or loosely belted, the long capes, the wads of hair over the ears—though the latter were not visible, but were used as cushions to which to pin the "gorget" that hid the neck.

"A one-piece dress gives proportion," he said, "because it is a unit. A woman in a blouse of one color and a skirt of another, terminating below the knees, with another skirt showing below that, stockings of one color and shoes of another, looks like an accordeon."

"But the one-piece dresses of the thirteenth and twentieth centuries are not alike. Then, too, in the thirteenth century they simplified their minds before they simplified their dresses. It was a question of point of view.

"It began with religion—simplicity because it was right to be simple. Since there is no religion any longer, that does not apply now. Instead of adopting simplicity as part of a code of chivalry, we adopt it to-day for another reason. The idea now is to make the sex appeal, and practice simplicity by leaving off everything but your shirt and leaving that off, too, if you want to.

"On the boat on which I came home from Europe last week I saw women dancing with less on, I will guarantee, than any person ever goes to bed in. They believed they were dressed simply—and so they were. My judgment—and this was my twenty-seventh trip to Europe, and I have studied this subject for years—is that women do not cut their hair, leave off their clothes and expose themselves because it is simple or because they are after grace and beauty. Therefore, our dress is fundamentally different from that of the thirteenth century.

"Immorality, All Rot"

"I WANT to say, however, that I think most of the fuss about the immorality of the present fashions is rot. I spent three weeks at the Lido in Venice very recently. One sees there the most extreme fashions in the whole world. People go about all day long, both men and women, in pyjamas—the most gorgeous fashions in pyjamas that can be imagined, varying according to the ideas of the individuals and what they dare to do; but I see it, not immorality, but a total lack of taste.

"The clothes of the present time that seek to attract, simply do not attract, except to people who have no discrimination whatever. Clothes exist to create an illusion about the human figure and to make it appear as nearly perfect as possible. If we expose the ugliest feature we have, it is—well, bad salesmanship.

"This is not an immoral age. People are not thinking any worse thoughts than they were in 1860—perhaps not as bad; but I do think it is cruder than new-mown hay. Women are making the mistake of their lives. Bobbed hair, for instance, is becoming to certain individuals. But on the average woman it is ugly. She is missing a trick. Hair is a decorative thing if it is handled properly. If women want to be decorative, let them use what they have that is decorative.

"As to girls that paint their lips vermilion, I asked 2,200 young men between 18 and 23 years old, last year, what they thought of it. A boy raised his hand—he turned out to be president of the senior class in the institution—and said: 'Professor, I don't think there is a boy here who cares to put his face in a paint-pot!'

"What this generation has not got is sufficient taste to know that it is displaying things that are not attractive. In the former period the body was concealed except where it formed with the dress a decorative whole. Now it is not concealed and they show what is not decorative. A naked body is beautiful—if it is beautiful; but very few people have bodies beautiful enough to stand nakedness. Twenty-five years' experience in an art school with models has taught me that."

INTERESTING NEWS OF STAGE and SCREEN

What the Advance Man Has To Say

"STEP ALONG" SHOW IS FILLED WITH LAUGHTER

Morris and Bernard Will Present First Girlesque at Majestic Monday.

Morris and Bernard's "Step Along," always one of the best, and this year said to be better than ever, will open an engagement of three days at the Majestic theatre Monday, presenting a new two-act and ten-scene girlesque revue entitled "From One Thing to Another." As usual, there will be the daily ladies' matinees at 2:15, in addition to the evening performances, which begin at 8:15.

"Step Along" was designed solely to create laughter, and it is said to do this from the beginning to the end. The bright and rapid moving comedy is interrupted at frequent intervals by the introduction of spirited musical numbers and novel vaudeville specialties.

The scenery, costumes and electrical effects are said to be unusually and exceedingly beautiful. Among the well-known people in the cast is that prize-winning beauty, Mlle. Germaine, who was selected as the most attractive and best-formed girl in a recent New York beauty contest.

Max Coleman, a funny comedian, assisted by Bennie Moore, the Italian character comedian, keeps the audience in a constant roar of laughter with funny pranks, squibs and actions. Claire Stone, the beautiful syncopated singer, with a brand of new songs that will make her a favorite with the most skeptical critics.

The dancing contingent is ably taken care of by stately Virginia Greene and Peter Wells, the Beau Brummel juvenile of burlesque. Chester Griffin plays the handsome straight in the show, and the entire cast of principals is backed up by the fastest and prettiest selected chorus in burlesque.

At the Grand

Today, matinee at 2:15, evening at 8:15—A rare musical treat for London in an engagement of the De Feo grand opera company, in popular repertoire. Matinee, "Faust"; evening, "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Trovatore," opera that everybody knows.

Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, with bargain matinee Wednesday at 2:15—"Bringing Up Father in Ireland," a brand new production of the famous cartoon characters by George McManus, with Irish scenes and settings and a colleen beauty chorus that will charm the most blase. There is more fun in "Bringing Up Father in Ireland" than in all of Jiggs and Maggie predecessors put together. Evening performances begin at 8:15. Box office seat sale now open. Be wise and get yours in advance.

"BROKEN BARRIERS" HAS BIG STAR CAST

James Kirkwood and Other Screen Notables to Appear in Loew's Feature.

"Broken Barriers," Reginald Barker's new special production for Metro is to play at Loew's Theatre for a run of three days, beginning on Thursday of next week. This picture, a screen version of Meredith Nicholson's novel, has what appears to be the biggest all-star cast of the year; fans will find a continual parade of their favorites across the shadow stage.

James Kirkwood appears as Ward Trenton, estranged from his wife (Winifred Bryson), who will not allow him a divorce to marry the girl he loves (Norma Shearer). The story hinges on the efforts of this pair to smash the barricades of convention that stand in the way of their happiness, and shows the effect on a wide number of people of their efforts to change old morals for new.

Mae Busch appears as a girl infatuated, with a lively man-about-town, played by Adolphe Menjou, who was recently so successful in Chaplin's "Woman of Paris" and Lubitsch's "The Marriage Circle," Robert Frazer, remembered as the hero of Barker's "Women Who Give," and who played opposite Pola Negri in "Men," is the third member of this secondary triangle in the picture.

George Fawcett appears as the father of the heroine, whose sister in the picture is played by Ruth Stonehouse, a favorite star some years ago, who, in this picture, makes her return to the screen after a long absence.

There is still another angle to the story that requires expert acting, dealing, as it does with the younger generation. Robert Agnew and Vera Reynolds appear as two jazz-crazed young people, recklessly skidding down the primrose path with twice the pace and zest of their elders. Others in the cast are Edythe Chapman, Margaret McWade and George Kuwa.

"Broken Barriers" is a Louis B. Mayer presentation through Metro. It was adapted to the screen by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin.

BENNIE MOORE,

who appears at the Majestic theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week with the "Step Along" Mutual burlesque attraction, which includes in its lengthy list of principals, Mlle. Germaine, the modern Venus. "Step Along" is gorgeously mounted and has many new features designed to create gossip during its stay here and for some time afterward.

The Colleen Chorus with "Bringing Up Father in Ireland," at the Grand Opera House for three days, commencing Monday, with bargain Wednesday matinee.

At Loew's

Today—Mae Murray in "Circe, the Enchantress," written by the author of "The Four Horsemen" and "Blood and Sand," especially for Mae Murray. Three acts of Loew's supreme vaudeville.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 30, 31 and Nov. 1—"Broken Barriers," with a cast of ten of the most popular screen stars of today, including Miss Mae Busch, Adolphe Menjou, Robert Frazer, Norma Shearer, James Kirkwood, etc. It's a story of new morals—and old. In vaudeville—the Four Rubini Sisters will offer a "Recital of Song and Music." You have heard Jan Rubini, the famous violinist; now hear his famous sisters.

Bebe Daniels and Tom Moore are at Loew's Theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in their latest production, "Dangerous Money."

"THE YANKEE CONSUL" AT MAJESTIC THURSDAY

Douglas MacLean, Favorite Film Star, Scores in His Latest Success.

In a new atmosphere of fun and entertainment, Douglas Maclean, the favorite film star, who has been seen in London on many previous occasions in pictures which created more than ordinary interest, will score again at the Majestic theatre when he will be seen on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week in "The Yankee Consul." The picture will be shown three times daily, the matinee showings commencing at 2:15 and the evenings at 7 and 9 o'clock.

"The Yankee Consul" is a film adaptation of the great musical comedy success of the same name by Henry Blossom, Jun., and Alfred G. Robya, which toured the continent for years before it fell into the discard as a legitimate stage attraction. Douglas Maclean, to whom the lot has fallen of presenting the chief character role in the screen version, is fortunate in the fact that the popularity the comedy enjoyed while on the stage will assist him in furthering the acquaintanceship of movie fans with him.

The picture is just as replete, or probably more so, with humorous and amusing situations as was the comedy when it appeared on the stage. To miss it would be little less than a calamity and the large audiences the picture has attracted wherever it has been shown betokens full houses for the Majestic theatre when the time comes for the opening of the engagement here.

In addition, there will be the usual added attractions, including a big bill of vaudeville and a comedy presentation. The program in its entirety cannot but help to attract considerable attention, and much favorable comment toward the Majestic.

At the Majestic

Today, matinee at 2:30, evening at 8:15—The most sensational story ever filmed, "The Man They Could Not Hang," based on the most astounding case in criminal annals and the life story of John Lee. The story is graphically described by W. Leonard Howe at each showing and there is not a gruesome moment in the picture. Miss Doreen Thompson sings the musical accompaniment.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, evenings at 8:15, daily ladies' matinees at 2:15—The girlesque revue, "Step Along," with longest list of principals ever assembled in a burlesque show, and that modern Venus, Mlle. Germaine, "the girl with the million-dollar form." "Step Along" has the fastest stepping chorus of beauties in burlesque, and the show is elaborately mounted with many novel features. Seats now on sale.

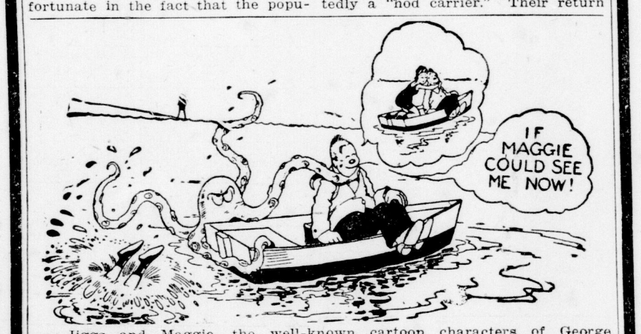

Thursday, Friday and Saturday with three shows daily, matinees at 2:15, evenings 7 and 9 o'clock—Douglas MacLean in his latest and greatest success, "The Yankee Consul," a screen adaptation of the musical comedy success of the same name which toured America season after season enjoying much popularity. Also a comedy presentation and a big bill of vaudeville.

JIGGS AND MAGGIE ARE COMING AGAIN

"Bringing Up Father in Ireland" Will Open at Grand on Monday.

"Bringing Up Father In Ireland" is the title of the latest George McManus "laughfest" and the musical comedy that will play at the Grand for the first three days of next week, commencing Monday evening at 8:15, with a bargain matinee Wednesday at 2:15 when the first ten ladies to present themselves at the box office will be admitted free.

"Jiggs and Maggie" pay a visit to their native soil. They left "the old sod" while quite small, and it is confidentially said that Maggie was then what is termed an ordinary "kitchen mechanic" and "Jiggs" was admittedly a "hod carrier." Their return

Jiggs and Maggie, the well-known cartoon characters of George McManus, are to appear again at the Grand Opera House for three days, commencing Monday, with bargain Wednesday matinee at 2:15, under the title of "Bringing Up Father in Ireland."

as scions of polite society naturally incites much national interest in the land of St. Patrick. Maggie will naturally assume charge of the tour, and will be backed by an entire new stock of "rolling pins" for emergencies.

Jiggs has acquired an acute sense of feminine beauty, and it is up to Maggie to see that he is not ensnared by some Irish beauty. Though Jiggs source of unlimited wealth has not been definitely determined, it is generally understood that the accumulated considerable as a contractor in the early days of Tammany Hall.

However, "Bringing Up Father In Ireland" is going to furnish some rare comedy for the theatregoers of the entire country. It is an event that is looked forward to by the masses, who go to the theatre to laugh. Ireland furnishes ample opportunities for beautiful scenic vesture, which will be taken advantage of to the fullest extent. As usual, girls will be the predominating feature, together with entrancing music and the newest and best dances.

FOUR RUBINI SISTERS AT LOEW'S ON THURSDAY NEXT.

Not very long ago a famous violinist played at Loew's theatre and gave to the music lovers of London a real treat. That man was Jan Rubini. Today word was announced that his four sisters would appear also at Loew's theatre on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week and offer a "Recital in Song and Music."

Pleasant memories of the wonderful performance of Jan Rubini remain with us, and will remain for many days, and now the coming of his four sisters is indeed being looked forward to with the keenest anticipation.

GRAIN MARKET GOSSIP

Houses with foreign connections have sold a fair quantity of wheat, and are still offering it.

Rallies in wheat and corn are feeble. Bromhall reports further rains in Argentine, and all cables say weather conditions are unsettled.

A Buenos Aires cable says a large part of their western crop has been destroyed by drought and frost.

Edge is off the bull market in all grains for the present. Market seems to run into selling of the right sort on all little bulges.

Thursday's estimates of export wheat business about 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 bushels. Bulk of trade for forward shipment.

COARSE GRAINS LOSE HEAVILY

All Futures at Winnipeg Suffer Large Setbacks—Heavy Liquidation.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Winnipeg, Oct. 4.—Heavy liquidation and only a moderate demand created extreme weakness on the wheat market here today, and all futures suffered heavy losses, October closing 4⅛c lower, November 4c, December 3⅝c and May 3⅛c. The coarse grains were also weaker, rye closing as much as 8c. After the opening, which was unchanged to a little lower, selling pressure immediately developed, with the finish being at the low point of the day. Commission-houses were heavy sellers of "long" wheat all through the session, but on the scale down some good buying came out, mostly from exporters and millers, but this was not sufficient to hold up prices, any reaction being only temporary. Liverpool cables were ¼c to ¾c lower on the opening, and closed 3⅜c up to ½c off. Lack of export demand and favorable conditions in Argentine were the main bearish factors. There were a few hedging sales, while private wire houses bought Winnipeg May wheat against sales of Chicago May. Local spreaders were taking the nearby months against sales in the deferred futures.

The coarse grains were heavily liquidated, and prices broke sharply. oats losing 2¼c to 3c, barley 4¾c to 5½c and rye 7c to 8c. Flax also was weak, losing from 3c. to 4¾c.

There was but little demand for the top grades of cash wheat, but a fair demand came out for the lower grades, and spreads improved 1c to 5c.

There was nothing much doing in the cash coarse grains or flax.

Cash prices:

Wheat—No. 1 northern, $1.54⅜; No. 2 northern, $1.50½; No. 3 northern, $1.45½; No. 4, $1.33⅜; No. 5, $1.18⅝; No. 6, $1.07⅜; feed, 94⅜c; track, $1.51½. Oats—No. 2 C. W., 57⅝c; No. 3 C. W., 54⅜c; extra No. 1 feed, 54⅜c; No. 1 feed, 52⅜c; No. 2 feed, 47⅝c; rejected, 42⅜c; track, 57⅜c.

Barley—No. 2 C. W., 87c; No. 4 C W., 83¼c; rejected, 79c; feed, 69c; track, 85½c.

Flax—No. 1 N. W. C., $2.24⅞; No. 2 C. W., $2.20⅞; No. 3 C. W., $1.80; rejected, $1.88; track, $2.17.

CHICAGO

Associated Press Despatch.

Chicago, Oct. 24.—All grain prices underwent a sharp setback here today, owing more or less to the closing out of big spread trades in wheat between Liverpool and Chicago, and to announcement of the first arrival of new corn here this season. The wheat market here closed heavy, ½c to ¾c net lower, December $1.41⅜ to $1.41½ and May $1.46 to $1.46⅜, with corn 3¼c to 3⅝c down, and oats 2⅞c to 3¼c off.

Persistent selling here by a house with foreign connections was a notable feature of the day in the wheat pit. This selling came mostly at times when the buying power was thin, and did a good deal to bring about liquidating sales of weakly-held lines of wheat. Many standing orders to stop losses at various definite limits were forced into operation, and the market dropped about 11c under the recent high point for the December delivery.

Virtually the day's lowest prices were ruling when business ended. Bearish sentiment which prevailed was partly due to further rains in Argentina, tending to improve the crop outlook there. Reports were also at hand telling of beneficial rains in Australia. A break of about 5c in the rye market here had an additional depressing influence on wheat values. It was estimated that export buying of wheat today, largely for deferred shipment, amounted to more than 1,000,000 bushels. Corn and oats weakness was chiefly the result of sympathy with wheat. Fine weather for conditioning the new corn crop was likewise an evident bearish factor. Export sales of 500,000 bushels of corn made little or no impression.

Cash prices:

Wheat—No. 2 red, $1.47¾; No. 2 hard, $1.41½ to $1.42½.

Corn—No. 2 mixed, $1.04¼ to $1.05½; No. 2 yellow, $1.04¾ to $1.06.

Rye—No. 2, $1.25 to $1.26½.

FLOUR

Canadian Press Despatch.

Montreal, Oct. 24.—Prices for winter wheat grades of flour were reduced 20c per barrel, owing to the continued downward tendency of the market for raw material. The spring wheat situation was without any new feature to note, prices being steady.

There continues to be a fairly good inquiry from foreign buyers for millfeed, but, as millers seem to be fairly sold up of their surplus supplies for the time being, business in this direction was quieter than it had been of late. The price trend was steady. There was no further change in rolled oats.

Johns-Manville Canadian factory now makes it possible to buy Asbestos Roofing at the same price as ordinary roofing!

Re-roof for the last time

Lay Johns-Manville Asbestos Shingles right over the old roof

CANADIAN ASBESTOS is now mined, manufactured, and sold in Canada by Johns-Manville. This means the elimination of expensive haulage costs on raw materials. We are passing this saving on to home owners all over Canada. So that you can now get Asbestos Roofing at the same price as ordinary roofing materials. And you know that there is no roofing material with all the advantages of asbestos. It is fire-safe. It is weather-tight. It is permanent. It is the most economical you can buy because it is not only low in price but it seldom, if ever, requires any maintenance expense.

Right over the old roof

Lay Johns-Manville Asbestos Shingles right over the old wooden shingles. You save the cost and time of ripping off the old roof. No litter. No dirt. No confusion.

The job is quickly finished and you have a fire-safe housetop, a permanent shelter, and one of the best looking roofs you will find anywhere.

Double roof protection

By leaving the old roof on you actually have a better shelter. The old roof underneath the new becomes a protecting, insulating blanket. This double-thickness roof helps to keep outside temperatures outside.

Johns-Manville Asbestos Shingles are made in several artistic shapes, and you have your choice of several soft, rich colorings.

Fire-safe

Johns-Manville Asbestos Shingles have all the traditional fire-safety of asbestos. This means that your home is always protected from the danger of flying embers from a nearby fire.

Asbestos for every building

Besides Asbestos Shingles our line include Asbestos Built-Up Roofings for flat roofed buildings; Asbestos Ready Roll Roofings, both slate surfaced and plain, for all types of sloping roofs, industrial buildings, sheds, garages, farm buildings, etc.

* * * *

Other Johns-Manville products include: Asbesto-Sponge Felted Insulation for high pressure steam lines in industrial plants, a material which is less liable to breakage, has longer life and higher efficiency than any other insulation: also Asbestos Wood, Corrugated Roofing and Siding, Industrial Flooring, Architectural Acoustics, Asbestos Textiles, Asbestos Brake Lining and other Automotive Equipment, Improved Asbestocel Pipe Covering, Boiler Insulation, Refractory Cements, Packings, Housline, etc.

THE SEA HAWK

By RAFAEL SABATINI.

Lest the punishment should be repeated, he had thrown all his weight into the next strokes of the oar, until by the time the Penon was reached the sweat was running down his body and his heart was thudding against his ribs. It was not possible that it could have lasted, and his main agony lay in that he realized it, and saw himself face to face with horrors inconceivable that must await the exhaustion of his strength. He was not naturally robust, and he had led a soft and pampered life that was very far from equipping him for such a test as this.

But as they reached the Penon and felt the full vigor of that warm breeze, Sakr-el-Bahr, who by Asad's command remained in charge of the navigation, ordered the unfurling of the enormous lateen sails on main and foremasts. They ballooned out, swelling to the wind, and the galeasse surged forward at a speed that was more than doubled. The order to cease rowing followed, and the slaves were left to return thanks to heaven for their respite and to rest in their chains until such time as their sinews should be required again.

The vessel's vast prow, which ended in a steel ram and was armed with a culverin on either quarter, was crowded with lounging corsairs, who took their ease there until the time to engage should be upon them. They leaned on the high bulwarks or squatted in groups talking, laughing, some of them tailoring and repairing garments, others burnishing their weapons or their armor, and one swarthy youth there was who thrummed a gimri and sang a melancholy Shilha love song to the delight of a score or so of bloodthirsty ruffians squatting about him in a ring of variegated color.

The gorgeous poop was fitted with a spacious cabin, to which admission was gained by two archways curtained with stout silken tapestries upon whose deep red ground the crescent was wrought in brilliant green. Above the cabin stood the three crescents or stern lamps, great structures of gilded iron surmounted each by the orb and crescent. As if to continue the cabin forward and increase its size, a green awning was erected from it to shade almost half the poop-deck. Here cushions were thrown, and upon these squatted now Asad-ed-Din with Marzak., whilst Biskaine and some three or four other officers who had escorted him aboard and whom he had retained beside him for that voyage, were lounging upon the gilded balustrade at the poop's forward end, immediately above the rower's benches.

Sakr-el-Bahr alone, a solitary figure resplendent in caftan and turban that were of cloth of silver, leaned upon the bulwarks of the larboard quarter of the poop-deck, and looked moodily back upon the receding city of Algiers which by now was no more than an agglomeration of white cubes piled up the hillside in the morning sunshine.

Asad watched him silently a while from under his beetling brows, then summoned him. He came at once, and stood respectfully before his prince.

Asad considered him a moment solemnly, whilst a furtive, malicious smile played over the beautiful countenance of his son.

"Think not, Sakr-el-Bahr," he said at length, "that I bear thee resentment for what befell last night or that that happening is the sole cause of my present determination. I had a duty—a long neglected duty — to Marzak, which at last I have undertaken to perform.

He seemed to excuse himself almost, and Marzak misliked both words and tone. Why, he wondered, must this fierce old man who had made his name a terror throughout Christendom be ever so soft and yielding where that stalwart and arrogant infidel was concerned?

Sakr-el-Bahr bowed solemnly.

"My lord," he said, "it is not for me to question thy resolves or the thoughts that may have led to them. It suffices me to know thy wishes; they are my law."

"Are they so?" said Asad tartly. "Thy deeds will scarce bear out thy protestations."

He sighed.

"Sorely was I wounded yesternight when thy marriage thwarted me and placed that Frankish maid beyond my reach. Yet I respect this marriage of thine, as all Moslems must—for all that in itself it was unlawful. But there!" He ended with a shrug. "We sail together once again to crush the Spaniard. Let no ill-will on either side o'ercloud the splendor of our task."

"Amen to that, my lord," said Sakr-el-Bahr devoutly. "I almost feared—"

"No more!" the Basha interrupted him. "Thou wert never a man to fear anything, which is why I have loved thee as a son."

But it suited Marzak not at all that the matter should be thus dismissed, that it should conclude upon a note of weakening from his father, upon what indeed amounted to a speech of reconciliation. Before Sakr-el-Bahr could make answer he had cut in to set him a question laden with wicked intent.

"How will thy bride beguile the season of thine absence, O Sakr-el-Bahr?"

"I have lived too little with women to be able to give thee an answer," said the corsair.

Marzak winced before a reply that seemed to reflect upon himself. But he returned to the attack.

"I compassionate thee that art the slave of duty, driven so soon to abandon the delight of her soft arms. Where hast thou bestowed her, O captain?"

"Where should a Moslem bestow his wife but according to the biddings of the Prophet—in the house?"

Marzak sneered.

"Verily, I marvel at thy fortitude in quitting her so soon!"

But Asad caught the sneer, and stared at his son.

"What cause is there to marvel in that a true Moslem should sacrifice his inclinations to the service of the Faith?"

His tone was a rebuke; but it left Marzak undismayed. The youth sprawled gracefully upon his cushions, one leg tucked under him.

"Place no excess of faith in appearances, O my father!" he said.

"No more!" growled the Basha. "Peace to thy tongue, Marzak, and may Allah the All-knowing smile upon our expedition, lending strength to our arms to smite the infidel to whom the fragrance of the garden is forbidden."

To this again Sakr-el-Bahr replied "Amen," but an uneasiness abode in his heart summoned thither by the questions Marzak had set him. Were they idle words calculated to do no more than plague him, and to keep fresh in Asad's mind the memory of Rosamund, or were they based upon some actual knowledge?

His fears were to be quickened soon on that score. He was leaning that afternoon upon the rail idly observing the doling out of the rations to the slaves, when Marzak came to join him.

For some moments he stood silently beside Sakr-el-Bahr watching Vigitello and his men as they passed from bench to bench serving out biscuits and dried dates to the rowers—but sparingly, for oars move sluggishly when stomachs are too well nourished —and giving each to drink a cup of vinegar and water in which floated a few drops of added oil.

Then he pointed to a largemetto bale that stood on the waist-deck near the main mast about which the powder barrels were stacked.

"That pannier," he said, "seems to me oddly in the way yonder. Were it not better to bestow it in the hold, where it will cease to be an encumbrance in case of action!"

Sakr-el-Bahr experienced a slight tightening at the heart. He knew that Marzak had heard him command that bale to be borne into the poop-cabin, and that anon he had ordered it to be fetched thence when Asad had announced his intention of sailing with him. He realized that this in itself might be a suspicious circumstance; or, rather, knowing what the bale contained he was too ready to fear suspicion. Nevertheless he turned to Marzak with a smile of some disdain.

"I understood, Marzak, that thou art sailing with us as an apprentice."

"What then?" quoth Marzak.

"Why merely that it might become thee better to be content to observe and learn. Thou'lt soon be telling me how grapnels should be slung, and how an action should be fought."

Then he pointed ahead to what seemed to be no more than a low cloud-bank toward which they were rapidly skimming before that friendly wind.

"Yonder," he said, "are the Balearics. We are making good speed."

Although he said it without any object other than that of turning the conversation, yet the fact itself was sufficiently remarkable to be worth a comment. Whether rowed by her two hundred and fifty slaves or sailed under her enormous spread of canvas there was no swifter vessel upon the Mediterranean than the galeasse of Sakr-el-Bahr. Onward she leaped now with bellying lateens, her well-greased keel slipping through the wind-whipped water at a rate which perhaps could not have been bettered by any ship that sailed.

"If this wind holds we shall be under the Point of Aguila before sunset, which will be something to boast of hereafter," he promised.

New Strength For Weak Stomachs

Indigestion Disappears When the Blood Is Enriched.

The urgent need of all who suffer from indigestion is a tonic to enrich the blood. Pain and distress after eating is the way the stomach shows that it is too weak to perform the work of digesting the food taken. In this condition some people foolishly resort to purgatives, but these only further aggravate the trouble.

New strength is given weak stomachs by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills because these pills enrich and purify the blood. This is the natural process of giving strength and tone to the stomach, and it accounts for the speedy relief in stomach disorders that follow the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The appetite revives, food can be taken without discomfort and the burden and pains of indigestion are dispelled. Miss Mollie Averill, Clanwilliam, Man., proves the value of these pills in cases of this kind. She says: "Some years ago I had a terrible attack of stomach trouble. My stomach rejected all food and I could not even keep down a light custard. I tried some tablets recommended for dyspepsia, but they did not do me a particle of good. Then I got medicine from a doctor, but with no better results. By this time I had changed from a robust, healthy girl to a complete skeleton, losing flesh daily. Then my parents asked me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I began their use. After taking them for a short time I began to feel better and continued the treatment until I was completely restored to health. Since, on rare occasions when I have felt the need of a tonic, I turn to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and they never disappoint me. Most members of our family have at some time taken the pills with good results, so I now always recommend them to all in need of a reliable tonic."

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.—Advt.

Irregularities In Spine Cause Adenoids, Is Chiropractic Claim

The word "adenoids" has been so commonly used that the average person feels that they know exactly what is meant by it. As soon as one hears the expression they immediately associate it with a small school boy or school girl backward in their studies, and with more or less of an impaired intellect. This is largely because of the campaign of education which has been carried forward unceasingly to impress the public with the danger of this condition.

What Do Adenoids Produce?

There is no question but that adenoid growths occurring in the nose or in the throat very often give rise to a train of symptoms which are serious enough without adding to them a supposed deficient mentality. As a growth in the nasal passages, they give rise to a mechanical obstruction of the air, which should pass, by this channel, into and out from the lungs. Because of this obstruction, the child is often forced to breathe through the mouth, and this passage is supposed in some mysterious way to affect the mind.

It has been said repeatedly that adenoids are productive of catarrh. In so far as the adenoid is usually congested, it gives off an exudate slightly in excess of that which would otherwise be produced. However, it is not reasonable to assume that an excessive growth in the nose or in the pharynx produces a congestion and a catarrhal condition in mucous membrane removed from direct contact with them. Indeed, it is not reasonable to assume that even those mucous membranes which are in contact with the adenoids are congested, because of that contact.

Cases without number have had the adenoids removed, and the mentality of the child has changed not one particle, all of which leads us to the conclusion that adenoids are not as serious a condition as we have been led to believe.

As a mechanical obstruction it is harmful, and every effort should be made to effect its removal, but not to subject a child to surgery, expecting results that cannot be obtained, and then to find that within a few months the growth has returned as large or larger than ever.

What Causes Adenoids?

The chiropractor can give you a logical reason why the adenoid has grown. Logically, if the cause of the adenoid can be removed, and is removed, not only will the adenoid disappear, but it will not recur.

The cause of an adenoid growing either in the nasal passages or in the throat can be reasonably explained chiropractically.

The Root of the Trouble.

There is only one place, namely, the point at which the nerve is given off from the spinal cord and passes between the bony segments of the spinal column. If these bony segments are not in their normal positions, they produce a pressure upon the nerve fibres; consequently the carrying capacity of these nerve fibres is impaired, and as a result of that, some abnormal condition manifests itself in the tissues supplied. Whether this abnormality is in the form of catarrh, or whether it is in he form of adenoids, depends entirely on what class of fibres is under pressure. If the secretory fibres are involved, catarrh exists; while if expansion fibres are affected adenoids are the result.

What To Do

The chiropractor is especially trained to locate these abnormalities of the bony segments, and to restore them to the normal condition. When this is done, the catarrh or adenoids must disappear, because the cause of their production has been removed.

LIQUIDATORS GET $800,000 FOR BANK

Payment For Interests in New Orleans Light and Traction Companies.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—The liquidators of the Home Bank of Canada today received a check for $800,000 from E. W. Burgis, New Orleans, representing the cash price paid by Mr. Burgis for the Home Bank's interests in the West and South New Orleans Light and Traction companies.

The sale was made with the approval of the court and of the inspectors who were appointed to represent the creditors. The price received is considered to be a very satisfactory one, based upon an independent appraisal obtained by the liquidators with the sanction of the inspectors.

The outlays of the Home Bank of Canada in connection with railway and light enterprises in New Orleans amounted, with unpaid interest, to approximately $1,150,000 at the date of suspension of the bank. The Home Bank contends that it has claims against the Prudential Trust of Montreal for a large sum in connection with such outays. The liquidators of the bank intend to take action to enforce these claims.

Here are Jiggs and Maggie in a familiar pose. They appear in person at the Grand Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, with Wednesday matinee, in "Bringing Up Father in Ireland," on their tenth annual tour.

HIGHER AGE LIMIT IS BAPTIST PLEA

Rev. J. D. MacLachlan Asserts Experience Most Beneficial in Ministry.

Declaring that the average age of Baptist ministers in Ontario and Quebec was forty-five years, Rev. J. D. MacLachlan, addressing the pastors' conference yesterday in the Talbot street Baptist church, made an eloquent plea for a higher age limit.

He cited two reasons for the low age limit in operation in the Baptist church today, the form of church government which makes the minister stand unsupported in his church without the backing of any central body of ministers as in other churches, and a general lack of "recognized educational training" among the clergy.

The pastor's conference is the prelude each year to the Baptist convention of Ontario and Quebec, and lasts one day.

Dr. MacLachlan was fortunate in speaking to a large audience.

"Nowhere should a ripe experience count for as much as in the ministry," he said, "and yet our people as a whole do not seem to appreciate it. In the Methodist and Presbyterian churches in Canada, 90 per cent of the ministry are graduates of arts and theology, and when the toll of years falls on a minister, it is always the thoroughly trained man who withstands it best. The condition of the effect of a low age limit in the church is not improving. I consider the question of education in this connection to be one of the most serious now facing the church.

In this connection the report of the special pastoral settlement committee, read in the afternoon, recommended the disbanding of the committee, "as there is no opportunity for it to do the work required of it." This report stated that while many ministers made requests for settlement, no churches had done so in the last year, and that it was accordingly impossible to place the men out of a pastorate

Sustentation Fund.

Rev. J. Hals said that in Great Britain's sustentation fund $1,250,000 had been raised to take care of men in this position, and recommended a similar scheme in Canada to remove the hardships under which some ministers had to suffer under present conditions.

Professor A. L. McCrimmon, exchancellor of McMaster university, delivered a length address, on "The Spiritual Birth Status of the Child" which was so much appreciated by the conference that it was ordered to be embodied in a special leaflet and circulated to the various churches.

Professor McCrimmon, who prefaced his address by stating that he had no hesitation in speaking to the conference whatever might have been his attitude toward the convention, said.

"I know that you men will stand by the character and life work of the men in your educational institutions."

Child Regeneration.

From every source which was important Professor McCrimmon declared regeneration of the child of supreme importance. From the experience of philosophy, biology and psychology, he said the answer was in the affirmative. Each of these sciences held that the child must of necessity inherit something from its parents, and it was impossible that something of sin should not be included in the list of these inheritances.

Religion in general indorsed the principle of infant baptism showing that it did not acknowledge that a child was born into the kingdom of God directly. The Baptist church held that infant baptism was merely an external symbol of a spiritual experience, and denied that any infant could have had that spiritual experience, which alone should justify the external symbol.

In the report of the ministers' pension scheme board which was read only, and will be discussed in the convention, it was stated that a system would be advocated, which would permit of the men over fifty taking part in it and getting an annuity when they reached the age of sixty-five. The scheme had been based on the actuarial basis of the dominion government in its annuity system. The board proposed to pay a third of the premiums, the congregation would pay a third, and the minister a third.

Slayer's Money Frees Stranger

Special to The Advertiser.

Detroit, Oct. 24.—George Davis, 30, a negro murderer, about to begin a life sentence, gave his last quarter today to save a white man from a three-day sentence in the house of correction.

Judge John Faust had sentenced Charles N. Elliott, 22, of 2,232 St. Antoine street, to pay a $10 fine or spend three days in the house of correction. When Elliott discovered he had only $9.75 he was told he would have to serve the three days.

Elliott was placed in a cell next to the murderer.

"Here's a quarter, mister," said Davis. "I don't need it."

"I'll bring this right down to you," said the gratified Elliott.

"Oh, never mind, I won't need it," said Davis. "I'm going to Jackson or some other place for the rest of my life."

LEAGUE PLANNED TO ENFORCE LAW

Temperance Forces Will Help Officers Get Results With O. T. A.

Special to The Advertiser.

St. Thomas, Oct. 24.—According to reports the next move of the temperance forces in this city will be the formation of a law enforcement league, which will make it a business to assist the officers of the law in enforcing the O. T. A. Mr. Heard and Sperrin Chant, who headed the temperance forces in the city, declare that they are well satisfied with the majority vote polled in this city. Ex-Mayor Geddes, chief returning officer for this district, states that only slightly over a 50 per cent possible vote was polled yesterday. He says the small vote polled was entirely due to indifference on the part of male voters.

D. E. Mains, a well-known farmer on the Edgeware road, concession 9, Yarmouth, was severely hurt when he was struck by a car operated by Miss I. B. Lewis, a teacher at Manitoba street school. He was brought to Dr. T. L. Gray's office, where an X-ray examination showed a double fracture of his right leg and a fracture of a bone in his hand. He was also cut about the body and face.

Miss Helen Sharon, granddaughter of City Assessor J. P. Greek, had the misfortune to injure her leg on Thursday evening. An X-ray will have to be taken before the nature of the injury can be definitely learned.

St. Thomas had some distinguished visitors this afternoon, when Senator Robert M. La Follette, Progressive candidate for the United States presidency, was delayed for 25 minutes at the M. C. R. depot. With Senator La Follette were his son, Robert, Jr., his private secretary and joint chairman of the present campaign, Basil M. Manly, chairman of the people's legislative committee and joint chairman of the war board, Frederick C. Howe, a campaign representative, and a score of representatives of the metropolitan press. Senator LaFollette was returning from addressing a meeting at Jackson, Mich., and will make a tour of the eastern states.

C. OF C. FAVORS COUNCIL OF EIGHT

Recommends Dropping of Ward System and Four Aldermen.

Special committees of the city council and chamber of commerce, in session at the chamber of commerce board room yesterday afternoon, agreed that there should be a reduction in the size of the council to eight and that the ward system should be abolished. The meeting was also in favor of electing aldermen for two years and the mayor for one.

After some discussion, two motions by Mayor Wenige and seconded by Major Gordon Ingram, past president of the chamber of commerce, were passed with but the dissenting voice of Alderman McKay.

The motions, if looked upon with favor by No. 1 committee and the city council, will likely be put to the citizens at the coming elections for an expression of opinion.

The first motion is: "Are you in favor of reducing the city council to eight members and a two-year term, the mayor to be elected each year?"

The second motion is: "Are you in favor of abolishing the ward system?"

Minor Affairs.

President Dowler was of the opinion that the councillors were called on regarding minor affairs that should be settled by heads of departments.

Gordon Ingram declared that in 15 years he had found no necessity of calling on aldermen in his ward for information or with complaints. In a good many cases, he thought that the complaints must be trivial. Alderman Smith said that they most certainly were.

Mr. Dowler stated that he had always received excellent service from the city departments. He had always taken up matters with them and not the aldermen.

Alderman McKay saw no objection to the ward system, but thought the two-year term for aldermen was all right.

"In a general aldermanic vote over the city, better men will come forward as candidates," declared Alderman Smith.

Eliminate Committees.

Mayor Wenige declared that with a small council committees could be eliminated. At the present time the committees were the real delay in council work.

Mr. Ingram did not think it would be feasible to do without committees with a council of 12. Alderman Smith said this would be eliminated with a council of eight.

"I'm in favor of a council of eight to be elected each year for a two-year term and a mayor elected each year," declared Mayor Wenige, putting his statements in the form of motions at the request of the meeting.

Those present at the gathering were Mayor Wenige, Aldermen Walsh, Smith, McKay, and City Clerk Sam Baker representing the city, while President Dowler, past president Gordon Ingram, Col. W. J. Brown and Gordon Philip represented the C. of C.

Ald. Smith opened the discussion by stating that when the city went back to the ward system a few years ago it stepped back 50 years.

President Dowler stated that a reduction in size of the city council had been discussed by C. of C. members, the opinion being that a mayor and four aldermen, two to be elected each year, were enough to run the city's business. All large businesses were run with a small executive, Mr. Dowler declared.

City Clerk Baker did not agree with Col. Brown that most civic experts thought a small council would work with greater efficiency. The council was both legislative and executive, Mr. Baker declared. The council was executive through the committees.

Dog Hunts Coon Gets Porcupine

Special to The Advertiser.

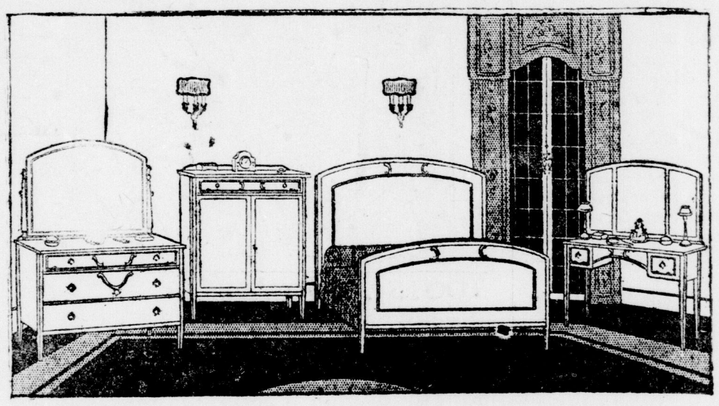

Walkerton, Oct. 24. — A fine thoroughbred Scotch collie, owned by J. S. Armstrong, attacked a porcupine in a bush in Greenock township, while Mr. Tolton, Mr. Armstrong and others were on a coon hunt. The dog's mouth, nose and throat were completely filled with the quills from the animal.

The men endeavored to relieve the dog by holding him to the ground with a pitchfork while they tried to pull out the quills. The dog's struggles were too much for the men, and they were forced to bring it to town, where a doctor, after chloroforming the dog, pulled out several hundred quills. It was at first feared the dog would not survive the ordeal. However, his condition is now much improved.

An ensemble suit of silk astrakan of the russet shade which exactly duplicates the coloring of the autumn woods. The skirt, slim and straight and about 11 inches from the ground. Above an overblouse of printed silk resembling a short mandarin coat and with its designs, as clear cut and slim as an etching on copper, reproducing the rust and wood tones. A long, snug-fitting redingote of the same silk astrakan as the skirt, quite snug-fitting and perfectly straight, the bottom coming to within a foot of the skirt hem. This is fastened with large chased copper buttons and embellished with tight broad cuffs and a choker collar of sable. Stockings of the bois de rose tint, black patent leather pumps with a single broad strap, ivory kid gloves (not white) with the cuffs lined with the same material as the blouse, and a wide copper-colored panne velvet hat, trimmed with sable fur.

Over this ermine tunic with the fur worked in chevrons following the neck line to the hips and from there to the hem in straight bands. A fringe of crystal beads finishes this royal whiteness, which is held at the shoulders by strings of pearls and crystal beads. Slippers of tarnished silver and white hose show below the skirt line. A little cape of ermine worked in the same design as the tunic, which is as supple as the silk beneath it, completes the costume except for the bandeau of pearls and crystal beads worn about the brow.

Chorus of fashionable men: "She must be a dressmaker."

Chorus of fashionable women: "Prepare for another Dot King murder."

EXCELLENT MALE CHOIR ORGANIZED IN LONDON

London is to have a male choir. At a recent organization meeting of members whose voices had been tested, officers and executive of the London male choir were chosen. The choir numbers at the present time about forty voices, with vacancies in each part for a few more voices. Anyone desiring to become a member may call George Lethbridge, the conductor; the secretary, C. F. Christian, or the president, E. S. Crawford. Rehearsals are being held every Tuesday evening at the First Presbyterian church school at 8 o'clock. The music being taken up is of a high standard and the work of the choir very promising.

SUNDAY HOME HOUR AT "Y."

Sunday will see the Y. W. C. A. residence, King street, open again for the regular weekly "home hour." A very fine musical program has been promised, and Miss Morten, general secretary, will act as chief hostess. These home hours have been begun again at the urgent request of the girls, who find in Lenmore a city home. Many are strangers in the city and appreciate the cosy atmosphere and the brightly glowing grate fires, not to mention the friendly company of a Sunday afternoon at Lenmore.

"Y." HALLOWEEN PARTIES.

On Thursday night the Y. W. C. A. is holding a Halloween party at Lenmore. Chief among the guests will be the members of the different Y. W. C. A. clubs. Last year the Lenmore Halloween party was so great a success that the walls of the building could hardly accommodate the 200 who attended. The whole lower floor of the residence was cleared out to make way for the mystic decorations of the season and for the swarms of guests who arrived.

On Tuesday night the physical education department of the Y. W. C. A. will hold a Halloween party for the senior classes in the Oxford street gymnasium.

Bowser Trails Bobby Coon To a Brush Pile and Tries To Reach Him

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

Just about daybreak Bobby Coon went to sleep under the big pile of brush where he had hidden. Even those who are in great pain sometimes can sleep. Bobby was so used up that, in spite of his aching leg, he went to sleep. Not far away Peter Rabbit also was taking a nap. Peter had hidden in a hollow log. It was a log that was open at both ends. Peter learned long ago that it isn't safe to hide in a hollow log unless it is open at both ends. He hadn't intended to go to sleep. He had hidden there so as to watch that pile of brush. Some one had given him a dreadful fright there and he wanted to know who it was.

Peter was awakened by a familiar sound. His eyes flew open. It was broad daylight. It was a beautiful October morning. He pricked up his long ears. He heard that sound again.

"Bowser the Hound!" exclaimed Peter. "I wonder what he is doing over here. I wonder who he is following. They are not my tracks he is following. I can tell by the way he barks. I guess the wisest thing for me to do is to stay right here. Even if he should find me in this old log he couldn't get at me."

Now at just about this same time Bobby Coon under the brush awoke. He had heard Bowser's voice. He listened anxiously. There it was again, a little nearer and a little louder. Bobby knew whose trail Bowser was following with that wonderful nose of his.

"Bowser the Hound!" exclaimed Peter.

"It is my trail," thought Bobby and fear once more filled his heart. "It is my trail. He'll find me under this pile of brush. I can't run. I've got to stay here. I can't climb a tree with this dreadful trap on my foot. And I can't reason with it. I can't even fight very well. Perhaps he won't try to get in under here. Oh, dear! Oh, dear! If he does get under here he will make an end of me. Ouch!" Bobby had moved that paw on which the little can held fast, and it had hurt.

Nearer and nearer sounded Bowser's great voice. There was no doubt about it now, he was following Bobby Coon's trail. "Bow, wow, wow, wow!" rang Bowser's great voice through the Green Forest. Now and then he would lose the trail, and have to hunt and hunt for it. But always he found it again and drew nearer and nearer to Bobby Coon's hiding place.

At last he reached the little opening where Bobby had crawled in under the brush. His nose told him that Bobby was under there. My, how excited Bowser became! His voice changed. When he had been following the trail he had barked in a way that is called baying. Those barks were long, deep, rather musical barks. Now his barks were short, sharp and fast. He was greatly excited. He began to dig at that little opening under the brush to make it bigger. He would try to crawl in, then he would back out and dig a little more. All the time he kept barking as if he were trying to bark his head off. Poor Bobby Coon! He felt that the end was very near now. And then he heard another voice. It was the voice of one of those two-legged creatures, whom Bobby feared more than all others. He was sure now that there was no hope. You see he didn't recognize that voice. But Peter did. Peter knew that it was the voice of Farmer Brown's Boy.

Tired of Baby-Tending?—Take a Night Off Every Week—Is There a Chance for an "Old-Fashioned" Young Bachelor Among the Cake-Eaters?—Will She Fall in Love After Marriage?

Dear Miss Dix—I am a married woman about twenty-seven years old and I have a little girl of two. Everywhere that I go I have to take the child with me, and, as she is heavy and gets sleepy and cross, she destroys my pleasure I might have in going to places. Now, understand please, that I am devoted to my child and love to take care of her, but I am human and young, and I would occasionally like a little care-free diversion. My husband, however, holds that a mother should always lug her baby about with her wherever she goes. Don't you think that a young mother needs a night out without her child once a week, and that her husband should be willing to mind the baby while she takes a night off? L. M.

Answer:

I certainly do, Mrs. L. M., and I think there should be organized an Amalgamated Order of Wives that would demand at least the privileges of a nursery maid's Thursday evening off, and who would go on strike and a lockout until they got it.

Six days a week it is but fair that the mother should toil and take care of the children and relieve her husband of the burden of them as much as possible, for that is her end of the domestic partnership. But on the seventh day she should have some respite from her labors. Furthermore, it is up to her husband to remember that he is just as much a father as she is a mother, and that his turn comes to rid her of the kids.

The plan of giving a mother an evening off every week presents many admirable features. For one thing it gives the father a chance to get acquainted with his children as he never would in any other way. There is a lot in a howling infant besides the pain in its little tummy, and the man who has walked the colic while mother was off at her club or the play finds out much valuable psychological information about his offspring that later stands him in good stead when he has to deal with an obstreperous hobbledehoy boy or flapper.

Taking care of the children on mother's night off would also give a man a lot of sympathy for his wife, and forever keep him from saying to her, as so many men do, "I wish I could take things easy as you do, and had nothing to do but just to stay at home with the children." He would know that no other labor on earth is so continuous, so monotonous and so nerve-racking as baby-tending.

Above all, for a woman to have a night off every week would break the strain under which she lives and prevent thousands of cases of nervous prostration. It would give her something to look forward to, something to enjoy remembering. It would freshen and rest her in every way and make her a better mother and wife because much of woman's unreason and irritability is nothing but sheer nerves.

I honestly and truly believe that half of the domestic misery in the world could be cured by the simple expedient of husbands and wives freely and graciously granting to each other the right of a night off once a week. DOROTHY DIX.

* * * *

Dear Dorothy Dix—Do either men or women appreciate intelligence, industry and modesty in the opposite sex, or do they prefer flippancy, forwardness and flapperism generally?

I am an example of the former class, and for that reason see a life of bachelorhood ahead of me, although I am not old, nor cold, nor ugly, nor ignorant. I just cannot make myself a silly, fawning creature with no other aim than to chase butterflies. A. A.

Answer:

I think, A. A., that both men and women really appreciate intelligence, industry and modesty, and certainly these are the qualities that they expect their wives and husbands to possess.

But the trouble is they are lured by flippancy and flapperism. Their eyes are snared by the outside glitter, and they never stop to inquire whether what they are getting in marriage is pinchbeck or solid gold.

All of us know men, who possess every good quality, whom girls pass up for varnished-haired youths whose brains are all in their heels instead of their heads. And we all know highly educated, domestic women, tender, loving and sympathetic, who would make the most wonderful wives in the world if they had a chance, but who never even have a beau to bless themselves with.

And every day we see little foolish morons of girls carrying off the matrimonial prizes.

Yet, for all of this, it isn't that we prefer the flippant to the serious. It is only that somehow foolishness seems more enticing than wisdom, and perhaps the remedy for this is for the stiff-backed to unbend a little and learn how to jazz and for the highbrows to comb down a few curls over their bumps of intelligence. "The graven flower upon the sword makes not the blade less strong," and even virtue is all the better for being wreathed with the charms of suavity and social graces. DOROTHY DIX.

* * * *

Dear Miss Dix—I am sixteen and am to be married very soon to a man nearly ten years older than I am. Mother and father both love him as a son, but I only love him as I would a big brother.

Now here is the point of my letter: Do we not find, and keep happiness, in bringing happiness to others? Will not I, in seeing how wonderfully full I make the life of the man I marry, find contentment and peace? As I grow older will not I learn to love him? E. P.

Answer:

A woman who marries a man she does not love may possibly fall in love with him after marriage, but there's not one chance in a hundred that she will. The disillusions of matrimony, the conflict of wills and clashing personalities, the restraints and sacrifices demanded by marriage all tend to make a woman or a man fall out of love instead of falling into it.

When a girl of sixteen marries without being in love, the odds are that when she falls in love it will be with some other than her husband.

The idea of finding happiness in making your husband happy is high-faluting nonsense. You cannot play a part and pretend an affection you cannot feel.

Nor can any normal young girl satisfy herself with pale self-abnegation. She wants something red-blooded and vital, the joy of life for herself—love, romance, passion, and these you do not get out of living for others.

Believe me, my child, you do the man you are going to marry without love a great injustice and you wreck your own life. Don't do it. DOROTHY DIX.

HONOR BRIDE-ELECT.

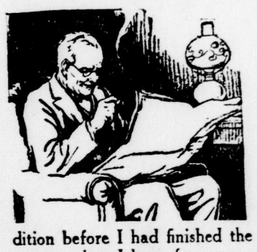

Mrs. F. H. Fitzgerald of Ballymote entertained at a miscellaneous shower recently in honor of Miss Stella Harding, a popular bride-elect of October.

A wagon decorated with white streamers and well laden with gifts, was drawn into the room by Master Hadley Fitzgerald. In a few appropriate words Miss Harding expressed her thanks to her friends for the many useful and beautiful gifts which she received.

A dainty lunch was served by the hostess to guests numbering about forty. Mrs. R. H. Harding poured tea. The table spread beneath a large white bell, was artistically decorated with golden California poppies and candles of the same shade.

"I was Greatly Distressed With Pains in the Back"

Mr. Alfred McNeill, Chapel Rock, Alta., writes:

"During the winter of 1920-21, I was greatly distressed with pains in my back and felt tired and depressed most of the time. Particularly during the night I was troubled with frequent urination, some nights having to rise almost every hour. I tried several different treatments without success, until finally I began using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and they relieved my condition before I had finished the first box. I am feeling better this summer than I have for years, and although in my 67th year, can work all day without any undue fatigue."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

WHERE ARE RING STARS OF 1920?

Lynch, Sharkey, Herman, Smith and Buff All in Oblivion.

JACKSON RETIRED

New York, Oct. 24.—Three or four years do not represent a great span of time in the lives of ordinary individuals. Two years do not create any great changes unless a man is well advanced in years. In a community, yes, three or four years see many changes. Buildings shoot up overnight, others are demolished, and the entire complexion of a neighborhood can change rapidly.

Perhaps the fight game hardly can be classed as a community or the fighters as buildings, but just the same isn't boxing a little world in itself and aren't the men of the ring merely blocks, which placed together form the structure of the fight game? Surely the simile can be made when it is realized what a change three or four years make in the boxing sphere. Not in the fundamentals and conduct of the sport, but certainly in the personalities which draw the customers into the arenas.

Just glance back two or three, even four years. Recall the men who were big cards at that time and then look around for them today. With few exceptions they are either out of the picture entirely or are performing in the smaller clubs which they would have scorned when they were at their zenith. Look back to 1920. Very few of us feel any different today than we did then, but consider the changes made in the fight game in these few years. Joe Lynch, Jack Sharkey, Pete Herman, Midget Smith, Johnny Buff all were good cards four years ago, yet today they have dropped out of sight or pushed perilously near the end of their ropes and are cowering in the dusk far from the limelight which once was theirs.

On Retired List.

Buff, Sand and Herman are on the retired list. The former tried a comeback early this year, but after a good start found the pace too strenuous and settled down to the peace and quiet of his home. Herman will fight no more. Serious eye trouble has rendered him practically sightless and he never will enter the ring again. It will be refreshing to know that Herman is well to do and owns numerous pieces of property in New Orleans, so he will not want for the rest of his days, although there is little likelihood that he will regain full possession of his sight.

Lynch, Sharkey and Smith are far on the lane which leads to retirement. Lynch is still wending his way about the country, fighting for one-tenth the sum he once demanded, and not having a great deal of success in his bouts. Joe's days are numbered, and if he is wise he will hasten the end of his career, for his circumstances are such that he may enjoy a life of ease for many years to come.

Smith is in the act of making a comeback, as is Sharkey, but so far neither has made much progress. The Midget is playing the out-of-town clubs, and although he is surprising the most optimistic, there is little chance that he ever will reach his former heights, although he has the well wishes of all those connected with boxing.

Sharkey, after growing fat in retirement, has started training again and will make his return to the ring at the Broadway on October 27. It will be watched with interest and everyone will be pulling for Jack to make good, but the chances are that he will find the going too rough and will follow the example of Johnny Buff and settle down to another life.

Rose Rapidly.

Another peculiar angle about this quintet of fighters is the fact that they came up overnight, but the slide down the other side of the mountain has been almost as rapid as the ascent.

Then there are countless others. Willie Jackson, an idol four years ago and one of the leading contenders for the lightweight crown, is permanently on the retired list and is now acting as salesman for a twine concern. Three years ago Jackson had everything in front of him; now he has nothing, that is, in a pugilistic way.

Andy Chaney loomed up as the coming featherweight champion three or four years ago, but today he is found making a desperate effort to coax a few more fights out of his tired body. Andy, it must be said to his credit, is one of those wise individuals who banked his money when it was coming in fast, so that he has nothing to worry about the future in a financial way.

Eddie Fitzsimmons, another lightweight contender four years ago, is out of the boxing game for good, unable to carry on after a brilliant start. Then there is Charley White, out minding his real estate in Chicago. A short time ago he was one of the biggest cards in the fight game; this year he is wondering whether he'd better try one more bout or call all bets off for good.

These are but a few. There are others almost too numerous to mention. But isn't it really startling how radical a change can take place in the short space of three or four years?

Prodger Signs As Tiger S.O.S. Man

Special to The Advertiser.

Hamilton, Oct. 24.—Although Goldie Prodger, the London boy, and one of the most popular hockey players that ever wore the yellow and black, will not play regularly with the Hamilton N. H. L. club this year, he will be signed to a contract and used in cases of emergency. Percy Thompson, business manager of the club, made this announcement today.

London's one and only professional hockey product stated yesterday that the above dispatch was substantially true, but that it would only be in case of loud cries for help from Jungleland that he would be called on. "Ole Lightnin'" and "Ginger-Top," as he was affectionately dubbed by the hockey-mad fans of this city some years ago, apparently intends to keep his hand in anyway by practicing with the seniors once in a while this season.

COMPETITORS IN WESTERN FIELD MEET.

ENTRY LIST IS LARGE FOR COMING DOG SHOW

American and Canadian Fanciers Attracted To Royal Winter Fair.

The committee in charge of the dog show to be conducted under the auspices of the National Kennel club in conjunction with the Royal winter fair, scheduled for Nov. 18-26 inclusive in the Royal coliseum, Toronto, is meeting with much encouragement, and indications point to a record entry. American dog fanciers and breeders are coming in large numbers and the U. S. promises over a hundred entries.

The prize list is attracting wide attention. About $4,000 will be distributed, the largest amount ever given at a Canadian dog show, besides 75 silver cups and trophies, 25 of which have been donated by the National Kennel club, for competition for the best dogs of different breeds, also many special pieces of silver contributed by prominent citizens of Toronto and Montreal, and individual Canadian and American dog clubs.

The entry lists close Nov. 4, but a few days' grace will be allowed for entries from distant points. The judges chosen are nationally known in Canada and the U. S. The judging list is the strongest ever assembled at a Canadian show, and includes such well-known officials as Henry A. Higginson, South Lincoln, Mass.; Nathaniel F. Emmons, Hingham, Mass.; Dr. Henry Jarrett, Chestnut Hill, Pa.; H. B. Hungerford, Belleville, Ont.; John Sinnett, Philadelphia, Pa.; Charles A. Stone, Toronto, and J. Macy Willetts, New York.

The National Kennel club show is being held at a time when it does not conflict with any shows in Canada or the United States, and is under the management of G. F. Foley of the American Kennel club.

COMING EVENTS.

Art Ross, manager of the new Boston pro. club, who has been scouring Canada for hockey players, is expected to conduct a one-man raid on Western Ontario senior teams next week. He is to talk over the tearing up of George Redding's contract in Hamilton Sunday, and then it's a case of Western Ontario senior towns and cities watching all trains, both coming and going.

London is fortunately situated in that everyone of the senior prospects here are on jobs that offer them a little more stable future than even the fancy prospects held out by the Bostonese. If the senior ranks hold out well against the raids of the pros., the fact will go a long way to bolstering up amateurism, which is tottering in a lot of directions.

THE DESTRUCTIVE MALE.

Mrs. Carrie Smallman, president of the L. O. B. A., in an open letter to the Toronto press attacks London gentlemen associated with the Shamrocks and blames them directly for the way in which the season ended last year. Mrs. Smallman claims to have detected a distinctly masculine Italian hand in the increasing tendency of girl basketballers toward sophistication in the matter of intrigue, and sharp council-table practice, and is sounding a warning that the government of this game in the future will be by, of and for girls.

The move is probably most timely.

Girls' basketball had reached such a stage that another season might easily witness the substitution of emery powder for face powder. And things were plenty rough enough.

IF.

If Western University wins the intercollegiate and London intermediates the O. R. F. U. title, Coach Fickley and Jo Jo Stirrett have chosen Montreal for the playoffs. The team will travel by the Erie canal—in bond.

WESTERN TEAM'S SUPPORT GROWING

Local Collegians Can See But One Result in Game Today.

TWO TITLES COMING?

Nothing but a miracle or a few freak breaks can stop Western from beating Aggies a second time within the week at Tecumseh park this afternoon, and nothing less than a blizzard and a cloudburst combined will stop the biggest crowd that ever witnessed an intercollegiate game in London from gathering to see the Purple and White in what the fans believe will merely be another step toward the title for Coach Fickley's men.

Western's sudden rise to some measure of football greatness has made this season's crew the subject of street corner discussions, and they share the interest of the fans with the intermediate O. R. F. U. team, which is somewhat unusual. It would be one of the unusual tricks of fate if London should get very close to two titles all in one year, after so many seasons of acute drought.

Well-Drilled Machine.

Western's play is no flash in the pan. From their record to date they size up as a steady and well-drilled machine that can go out and consistently play football. Had Coach Fickley, considering the inexperience of the team to start with, worked them up to one great game, all would have been forgiven. But Western has surpassed all expectations in every department, and they've won the town fans solid behind them.

Rugby fans are loyal providing a team will show plenty of fighting-back qualities, even in defeat, and whatever next week holds in store for the Purple and White, they've already won a big following.

Western players know they should beat Aggies today, but they are not going to leave anything to chance, and will be in there battling just as hard as if it were the deciding game, which it might be, the way things often break in football.

Reid to Referee.

Col. (Buster) Reid will referee today's game, and Guelph will bring the umpire.

The cheer gang will be more numerous, louder and better than ever under the leadership of Richard Augustus Bowen. He's had his shoes fitted with cleats, and is expected to cover much more ground and a wider vocal range this afternoon.

The lineups will likely be as follows:

Western — Quarter, Simpson; halves, Warren, Maxwell, Johnston; flying wing, Howell; snap, Priddle; insides, Hungerford, Russell; middles, Calder, Comfort; outsides, Mowrey, savage; spares, Rose, Simmons, Auden, Hoppins, Garland, Morton, Hunter, Wiley.

Guelph O.A.C.—Quarter, Demaray; halves, Roxborough, Thompson, Donald; flying wing, Conboy; snap, Jackson; insides, Whally, Knox; middles, Stanton, Bamford; outsides, Campbell, Dempsey; spares, McDiarmid, Schenck, Fisher, McEwan, Cox Lemaistre, Richardson.

KRUPP BOWLING TROPHY REMAINS IN WOODSTOCK

Special to The Advertiser.

Woodstock, Oct. 24.—Despite the repeated attempts of Tillsonburg bowlers to remove the Dr. Krupp Trophy, the local club has managed to maintain it since the annual Labor Day tourney here this year. Mayor Rennie and W. S. McDonald, skipping two Tillsonburg rinks, were defeated by Woodstock trundlers in challenge games here this afternoon.

Tillsonburg	Woodstock

IS GOING GOOD.

Ernie Dennis may play on the half line or go to one of the wings in today's game at Sarnia. He is doing some fine booting and will be a big factor today wherever he plays.

LOOK TO SCHOOLS FOR HOCKEY TALENT

Move Put On Foot To Allow Youngsters To Use Arena.

There seems little doubt that London is in senior hockey to stay, and it is believed that as the first step toward the future development of players, that the public school league will be offered the use of the arena this winter, probably on Saturday mornings, to stage their games.

The youngsters have had a public school hockey league going for four years now, but one season was a washout owing to lack of ice on the public open air rinks.

Kitchener's Strength.

The reason Kitchener, probably more than any other hockey center in the Dominion, has consistently produced mobs of hockey players year after year is because school hockey has always been given every encouragement, not only in the way of facilities, but interest on the part of the fans.

There is no reason why London cannot develop as good hockey players as any other city, but it will never be done, enthusiasts claim, unless the public school youngsters are made to feel that the fans are interested in their play.

Several of the directors of the arena, it is understood, are strongly favoring the move to stage public school hockey there, and unless it develops that it would be inconvenient to find any open hours for the league games, there seems to be fairly reasonable assurance that the invitation will be extended to the youngsters.

In Hamilton and Toronto the number of teams of all ages playing on the public rinks is increasing by leaps and bounds each season. Hamilton is making specially strong efforts to promote public school hockey, but with many more schools than London has, the arena could not begin to accommodate them.

The results began to show here in the few years public school hockey has been organized. A survey of the youngsters from season to season gave the hockey officials a good line on possible junior material, and many of these have graduated into O. H. A. ranks.

The inspiration the youngsters would get from playing in the arena is incalculable. With a central place to go to, there is little doubt that a big following for school hockey would be built up, and support is after all probably the biggest inspiration the youngsters could have.

PRO BALL CLUB WILL MOVE EAST

Indications Point To Tecumsehs Using New Queen's Park Diamond.

GEHRINGER GONE

President Heard of the London Tecumseh Baseball and Athletic Association, Limited, has announced a general meeting of the shareholders for Wednesday night of next week in the chamber of commerce room at 7:30 o'clock.

The meeting should be an interesting one in that a survey of last season's operations will be made, and the grounds for the London owners' willingness under certain conditions to carry on another year with the same league makeup explained.

Without any recourse to the figures, it was quite obvious last year to the casual observer that there was a revival of interest in professional baseball in London, and if the clubs do stick to the salary limit there seems no reason why London cannot hold up its end as in the past.

Next year also there is the certainty of the club going to the new Queen's park diamond and of twilight ball. The combination of these two features alone would seem to insure more patronage, and if a daylight saving measure were added a good deal of the speculative side of owning a ball club in London would pass out of the picture.

The experiment of using Queen's park for professional baseball has been practically decided by the directorate. It is believed that moving the club to the heart of the industrial section is only following the city's growth.

It will likely be cheaper quarters for the club also, and increased patronage and cheaper rent must mean cheaper admissions.

The latest bulletin from the office of Secretary J. H. Farrell of the National Association carries an unusually heavy volume of business, much of which is of interest to Mint fans.

Guy "Chief" Froman, first baseman, and Dick Bonnely, right-handed pitcher of the Hams' 1924 team, will be back next season, providing the Hamilton club enters again. Both are in need of more experience and the Kansas City club is willing to allow both men to go to them if they are wanted.

There is hardly any chance of Frank "Maggie" McGee returning, however. The St. Paul club, which owns this chap, has recognized that he is too valuable a man to be away from the club, and he will undoubtedly get a chance next season to make the regular lineup of the Saints.

The Chicago Americans have taken Ray Morehart and Spencer Harris, the latter star outfielder of the Bay City Wolves. Morehart went up to the Sox last season. "Bub" Clancy, brilliant first-sacker of the Muskegon Anglers, will also stick with the White Sox.

Ted Pritchard, or Jackson, of the Flint club, goes to St. Paul, and Joe Eddleman, left-hander of the same club, is sent to Milwaukee. "Buck" Winters, former star pitcher of the Saginaw Aces, has reached the majors, going from San Antonio to the Boston Americans. Karl Adams, the big right-hander of the Hamilton club, has been recalled by the San Antonio club. Frank Luce, heavy hitter of the Flint club, goes to Milwaukee also, and both Messenger and Wayneburg, Saginaw pitchers, were sold to the Cleveland Americans, have been returned.

Tony Welzer, pitcher of the Muskegon Anglers, is shifted from the Mint League to Mobile, of the Southern Association, while George Ormes has been allowed to go by Springfield, of the Eastern League. He will remain with Saginaw. Ray O'Brien, or Obrinski, has been recalled from Muskegon by the Boston Red Sox, while Cortazzo and McCauley, infielder and pitcher of the Muskegon club, both go to the White Sox. Turner, of Grand Rapids, and Gehringer, of London, move on to Detroit, as does Bill Ludolph, former leading hurler of the Mint League, who has been at Vernon in the Pacific Coast League.

St. Louis taks Elmore from Muskegon, and Bill Mizeur, a former Bay City star, from Terre Haute. Lefty Hallahan, who was a sensation with Kalamazoo last season, has been recalled by the St. Louis Cardinals.

SPORT SNAPSHOTS

Among the thousands who witnessed Chilhowee's gallop to glory in the championship at Latonia one week ago was a man who, in days gone by, was famed as the greatest natural jockey the American running turf had then developed. His name was Willie Martin, who, though now 56 years of age, seems almost as chipper as the kids now galloping horses on the blue grass tracks.

Martin is best remembered by oldtimers for the great performance in piloting Lazarone to victory in the Latonia derby of 1894, when he defeated such good horses as Pearl Song and Selika. He first started riding for Greene B. Morris in 1884. Later he rode Favor to a victory in the St. Louis derby and Pink Coat in the Washington park derby, besides winning some of America's biggest races, including the famous Suburban. Martin was up on Clifford in the Memphis derby. He was one of the successful riders on Fandangle, and his work in the saddle compared favorably with the best of the American riders of years ago. He also rode Miss Archiback, when that mare defeated Minnie Meter in the great match race at Brighton beach.

Martin could ride at 70 pounds, and when he grew too big to accept mounts he turned his attentions to the training end of the business, where he is at present engaged.

He declares that Jockey Earl Sande, is the peer of American riders of the past ten years, but also has a good word for several of the midgets now performing on the "big line" tracks, especially Steve O'Donnell, the sensational apprentice uncovered last winter in Tia Juana; the Lang boys, who come from Hamilton, Canada, and Harry Stutts, whose riding was one of the outstanding features of the recent Latonia meeting.

NINTH-INNING RALLY WINS FOR GIANTS 3--2

Duke of York Greets American Major League Players.

Associated Press Despatch.

London, Oct. 24.—The New York Giants and the Chicago White Sox, in their second exhibition game in England, today gave several thousand British "fans" a demonstration of big league baseball. The Giants won a most thrilling game by the score of 3 to 2 with a ninth inning rally.

Among the interested spectators were the Duke and Duchess of York. The son of King George was received by Ambassador Kellogg and introduced to John McGraw, the Giants' manager. In addition the duke met the players and insisted on shaking hands with each of them.

Now and then many of the British spectators were moved to an expression of their feelings. Occasionally some of the natives even clapped their hands and a few followed the example of the Americans present by using their vocal chords somewhat strenuously, but they were exceptions.

There were no home runs as it had been decided before the game that a hit into the stands would be good only for a two-bagger. But Bancroft in the eighth laced a triple to right field, his ball bounding over Meusel's head. His drive scored Mostil and he himself, came in on a single by Rice. Stengel twice got doubles into the bleachers and thus drove in all three Giant runs.

M'TIGUE-BERLENBACH BOUT NOW UNLIKELY

Light Heavyweight Champion Is Refused License For One Year.

Associated Press Despatch.

New York, Oct. 24.—The state athletic commission today recommended to its license commission that Mike McTigue, world's light heavyweight champion, be refused a license to box in New York for a year because of his failure to accept a challenge to defend his title against Gene Tunney, holder of the American 175 pound crown.

The commission's action definitely ends prospects between McTigue and Paul Berlenbach, of New York, which Tex Rickard was seeking with the intention of matching the winner with Tunney.

The commission announced that while McTigue would not be deprived of his title, recognition as the ranking light heavyweight while he was under ban would be extended to Tunney.

INTERMEDIATES CONFIDENT CREW

"Cranium Cram" Tops Off Week of Strenuous Drilling.

SARNIA UNITED

A light "cranium cram" last night topped off the most strenuous week of drill the intermediate squad has put in, and Doug Huestis' men will invade the tunnel town today confident of holding the blue and white, and even hopeful of a close win.

There is no blinking the fact that London will be slightly weaker on paper than the last game here, but certainly not weaker in spirit. There is the very possible chance that some of the substitutes will prove their mettle in today's struggle, and even if they don't the fact that injuries have bitten into the reserves has merely stiffened the determination of the team as a whole to make up the deficiency, if any. The addition of Art Gillies to the half line is going to be a big offset to the casualties sustained, and Ernie Dennis has jumped into the campaign in earnest now.

Confident Crew.

The squad itself is full of confidence in the result today. Team spirit has been developed to perhaps a greater degree than any London team in years hae possessed that very necessary attribute, and though there are several outstanding stars who would be that in almost any Canadian football company, the chief strength of the squad lies in its team play.

Indications were yesterday that a big continegent of fans would accompany the team. Most of the players have been placed in care of the fleet which move out from here in the direction of the tunnel city about 11 o'clock this morning, but Chairman Joe Isaacs of the transportation committee, said late last night that any offers by car owners of lifts for the players would be gladly accepted.

For all the intense rivalry between London and Sarnia revived this year today's game should be clean. London will probably play a defensive game, unless Huestis is a believer in the axiom that a strong offensive is a good defence. So far the Londoners' play has been marked by its aggressiveness, and the style may not be changed much this afternoon.

Ronny MacPherson of Hamilton and D'Arcy Smith of Toronto will in all probability be the officials for the game.

Red Wilson, Sarnia's plunging star in the Canadian Observer, writes:

With the minor differences between the players and the management of the intermediates all ironed out and the whole squad working toward the common goal of tripping up the London steam roller attack, Sarnia is awaiting the invasion of the red, white and black striped horde from the Thames at the athletic park Saturday.

Given good weather, a new record attendance for an athletic event in this city will likely be reached. London promises to send down a crowd of at least 300 fans if the roads are in good motoring shape, and if that many people ever turn out from London for a 60-mile trip they must consider that they have the goods.

It should be a great battle between the London team, which does not do so much shining individually, but which gives forth a strong glow when they are all together, and the Sarnia team, which shines so much and in so many places that the star gleams interfere, and the result is not so bright.

If the local attack and defence is harnessed up so that the full benefit of the individual strength can be guided into one center, the locals should carry back to London with them a lead that will insure a victory on the round. But even if the teamwork of the locals does not approach that of London, they should be able to come out ahead. They trimmed them once, and it was only bad breaks that lost them the second game in the Forest City.

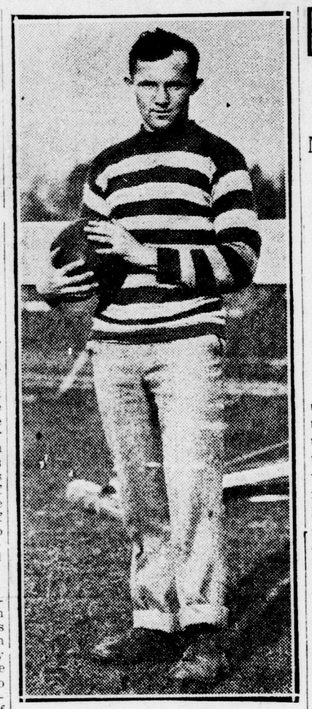

Added to the intense rivalry between the two clubs is the importance of the contest, which outshines anything that has been pulled off here in a long time, and the upshot of the muss should be a game that will give those fortunate enough to witness it something to talk about for the winter months.

PERRY OUT OF GAME.

Special to The Advertiser.

Sarnia, Oct. 24.—A record-breaking attendance is expected at the athletic grounds Saturday when Sarnia intermediates will try their mettle with London for the third time this season, for the word has been passed around that the blues and whites are in fine fighting trim, and they expect to set London back.

There is only one cloud in the local sky. Perry, the spectacular Sarnia defence man, is suffering from boils, and will probably not be in shape for the game. Otherwise Sarnia won't change the line that lost at London two weeks ago. Team work has been perfected in the last two weeks and it was from this angle rather than individual inefficiency that Sarnia lost the London game. The game is called for 3 o'clock.

"DROP KICK KING.

Howell of Western University has set a mark for all toe artists this season to shoot at by successfully booting four drop kicks in two successive games. If he should kick even one more today it will constitute one of the rare feats of the fall pastime. Elaborate records of rugby are not kept, but Howell's performances in two games stamp him a star in this department.

Two Normal Fives Take Exhibitions

Aylmer Girls and Boys Lose Cage Tilts.

London normal school emerged victors in two thrilling games of basketball played at the Normal school against Aylmer high school. The girls' game was even more exciting than the boys, in which the local students defeated Aylmer. Helen Moody starred for Normal and M. Millard for Aylmer, while in the boys' game honors were about even.

The teams:

Girls—London Normal (29)—H. Moody (25), M. Brown (2), forwards; M. Calder and L. Lumby (2), centre; I. Waddle and G. Tanner, guard; M. Andrews, spare.

Aylmer High School—(10)—E. C. Black and I. Johnson (2), forwards; M. Blanchard and R. Miller, center; G. Riddell and J. Irwin, guards; M. Millard (8), sub.

Boys—London—(12)—Lang (2), Smith (4), forwards; Brown (2), center; White (2), Bondy, guard; Whiting, Fillmore (2), subs.

Aylmer—(11)—Hamilton (3), Swackhammer, forward; Kayser (4), centre; Johnson (2), Bodkin, guards; Hollands, Martin, Richardson, (2), subs.

AS CHAMPIONS PLAY IT.

ON MASHIE OR IRON SHOT FROM TEE—

When the tee shot is made with an iron or mashie should the ball be teed up or merely placed on the turf? Why or why not?

Answered By
western Canadian open and professional champion.

When a short one-shot hole is played with an iron or a mashie very little sand should be used for the tee. A high tee increases the difficulty of the shot and lessens the chance of success. The player, in constructing his tee, should use barely enough sand to raise the ball above the level of the ground. The shot is much simplier from either a turf or a mat tee when a small amount of sand is used. The average golfer doesn't use proper care in building tees. His tees are never the same height for any two shots. This forces him to employ a slightly altered swing for each shot and makes it harder for him to "groove" his swing. The conditions for all shots from the tee (with the same club) should be made as nearly uniform as possible. Selecting level stances and teeing the ball at the same height each time are the chief means to this end.

EXPECT QUEENS TO WIN AT M'GILL

TIGERS WEAKENED

SENIOR GAMES.
Intercollegiate.
Queens at McGill.
Big Four.
Montreal A. A. A. at Tigers.
O. R. F. U.
Hamilton R. C. vs. Varsity.

Special to The Advertiser.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—Queens is looked upon generally as the outstanding team of the season, as they have been the last two years, and it will be a tremendous surprise if they do not win from McGill at Montreal tomorrow by a decisive margin. The Red and White will have the backing of the home crowd, but that will avail them little unless they can stop the elusive extension runs of Leadley and Batstone. The return game between McGill and Queens will be played in Kingston a week from Saturday, and on Nov. 8 the champions come to Toronto for the return game with Varsity, which will be the event of the season in local football circles.

Tigers Entertain M. A. A. A.

Hamilton Tigers entertain the Montreal A. A. A. team tomorrow at Hamilton, and expect to show the form expected of them in the preseason dope. The Tigers are out to demonstrate to the home town folk that they have a powerful team. It is Montreal's last chance to stay in the running, and the M. A. A. A. team can be depended upon to fight it out to the last ounce. Montreal was only beaten at home by Tigers by a solitary point, and if they tighten up on their defence work may hand the Mountaineers a surprise. The big game in the Big Four is a week from Saturday at Varsity, when Tigers come down to play the Argonauts for the first time this season. The Argos will have the benefit of two weeks' rest, and, with Joe O'Brien to strengthen their back division, expect to score a victory over the Tigers. Should Tigers win, it would practically give them the championship, while if Argos win the race would likely result in a tie and a play-off.

The Local Attraction.

The local attraction tomorrow at Varsity stadium is the O. R. F. U. game between Hamilton rowing club and Varsity's second senior team. The Oarsmen will have to show some smart football to beat the local collegians, as the latter have been going strong since their 2—1 defeat by Balmy Beach several weeks ago. Balmy Beach team do not play again until Thanksgiving Day, when they play the Varsity team here at the stadium.

Preceding the O. R. F. U. game there will be a game of English rugby between Varsity and McGill, beginning at 1:30. It will be interesting to compare the two games.

EXPECT 11,000 AT GAME.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Montreal, Oct. 24.—On the ability of the McGill wings to check the extended runs and running-back of the Batstone-Leadley combination of Queens will depend largely how the red and white will fare in the contest with the champion Queens here tomorrow. Attention though will also have to be paid to "Red" McKelvey and his middle wing partner, Roy Reynolds, who have been hitting the line heavily this season.

Naturally there are those at McGill who are looking for a win, but the more cautious concede that Queens is headed for a victory and with them it is just a question as to how much fight and pluck the local squad can show to make it a battle of the thrilling type that is expected in the intercollegiate.

Present indications are that the attendance Saturday will reach the eleven thousand mark, a record for local games, providing there is good weather.

Joe Cameron, an Ottawa youth, who is taking Gordie Hughes' place on the half line, will probably do the booting for the red and white. Cameron has been performing well in practice, getting good height and a fair distance to his punts.

ST. THOMAS Y. M. C. A. TO HAVE THREE TEAMS

Railroad Quintets Preparing For Big Season On Courts.

Special to The Advertiser.

St. Thomas, Oct. 24.—The St. Thomas Y.M.C.A. will be represented in the intermediate, junior and juvenile O.A.B.A. series this year, according to an announcement made by Physical Director Gordon Butler today.

The intermediates will stage their first workout Tuesday at 8 o'clock, while the juveniles will practice Friday at 8 o'clock. Mr. Butler states that the prospects for the intermediate and junior teams are exceedingly bright.

All "Y" classes are forging right ahead. Of the four senior classes meeting twice a week, Mr. Butler has only the most enthusiastic reports to make. The classes are taking hold of the work the senior business class showing up especially strong. Five junior classes are running regular schedules now with three meetings a week.

Wrestling is being given special attention this year. Pete Laing is in charge as last year, but special accommodation is being provided for the class which enables them to meet by themselves at any time of the day.

A city basketball league is being planned with teams from all branches of industrial houses, the bankers, M.C.R., metal signs, S.T.C.I., teachers and the Y.M.C.A.

BARNEY DREYFUSS STARTS OWN PROBE

Pittsburg Owner Begins Individual Investigation of Bribery Case.

CLEANUP SEEN

By E. G. BRANDS.

Baseball's biggest probe began this week. A flock of investigators were let loose by the president of the American league. Barney Dreyfuss, of the Pittsburg Pirates, made preparations for some investigating on his own hook, and Commissioner Landis, stung by taunts that he was doing nothing but interviewing men who naturally denied everything, also began following a few new leads.

It is understood that the result of all this investigating is to be laid on the table at the joint meeting of the two major leagues in December, and that rival factions will invite the other fellow to look over their evidence with the pertinent query: "What are you going to do about it?"

Hints have been thrown out that the disclosures will force several individuals —both baseball men and gamblers— into a limelight from which they have been shrinking for years, and the result is expected to be a complete cleanup of the game, or the eventual demise of baseball. Sensational exposes are promised on all sides, and if half of the revelations expected are realized, the sport is due for a thorough housecleaning.

The activity now is in marked contrast to that of 1915, it was revealed this week. Charges were heard then that a clique of gamblers—said to be the same who operated on such a large scale in baseball this year—were attempting to prostitute the game. Allan Pinkerton was asked if he would undertake to secure the necessary evidence and replied that he would, provided he received the co-operation of the two leagues. The complete resources of the American league were promised him, but the National league, through President Heydler, refused to take cognizance of the necessity of cleaning up the game.

This inaction is held directly responsible for the boldness of the gamblers in 1919 and the lack of co-operation in the investigation of that series encouraged them so that they have been coming back on an increased scale until their activities extended from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic.

STILL IN HARNESS.

Goldie Prodger has signed a Hamilton contract on the understanding that he will be available for Percy Thompson's Tigers in case of great emergency. Thompson asked this as a favor from the former Hamilton idol and to prove that there is some sentiment in pro hockey even, Prodger obliged his former boss. However, it is clearly understood that the local man would only be available in the case of the Tigers being badly crippled. Prodger still has a good many years of active hockey before him, and he would be wise in any case to keep his hand in. The way the Tigers are sizing up it is hardly likely that the sorrel-top's services would be requested this year.

Profit-Taking Fails To Retard Prices On Wall Street.

Associated Press Despatch.

New York, Oct. 24.—Stock prices made further progress on the up side today, despite some rather heavy profit-taking in recent favorites and the uncovering of a few more weak spots by bear traders. Buying was encouraged by the optimistic predictions of leaders of the steel industry gathered here for the semi-annual meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute, the surplus of money revealed in the bank statements, and the gradual lessenging of apprehension concerning the outcome of the national election.

Considerable irregularity developed just before the close. A bullish demonstration in the coalers, with Jersey Central jumping 14 points and Lackawanna climbing 3½, was followed by the heavy selling of the rubbers, United States Rubber common and first preferred and Fisk Rubber first preferred dropping 1¼ to 2 points.

Chief speculative interest in the rails was confined largely to the second-grade carriers. New 1924 highs in the rail group were established by Kansas City Southern, Colorado and Southern, Gulf, Mobile and Northern preferred and Rutland preferred.

Lehigh Valley touched 64⅜, the highest price since the segregation of the coal properties, and Reading closed more than 2 points higher at 62⅛. Other strong spots in this group included Chicago and Eastern Illinois preferred, Norfolk and Western and Southern Pacific.

Fresh buying developed in the copper shares. American Smelting led that group by moving up to a new peak price for the year at 79⅝. Subsequent profit-taking forced it back about a point from the top. New peak prices also were established by St. Joseph's Lead and International Nickel. Sugars made a partial recovery from recent heaviness, American Sugar Refining, Cuba Cane preferred and Punta Alegre each closing more than a point higher. American Beet Sugar preferred broke through its previous year's low to 68½. Merchandising issues continued to display a firm tone. Manhattan Shirt being one of the new favorites. Other individual strong spots included Fleischmann, Famous Players, United Fruit, American Waterworks 6 per cent preferred and general American Tank Car, up 1 point to 3 points.

Call money ruled unchanged at 2 per cent. Time money and commercial paper rates held steady, with business quiet.

Foreign exchange rates were slightly reactionary, due to the pressure for grain and cotton bills. Wheat export during the past week totalled 17,700,000 bushels, a ne whigh record. Demand sterling ruled about ½c lower at $4.49, and French francs were quoted around 5.21c.

BOND PRICES NARROW ON N. Y. MARKET

$30,000,000 Swedish Loan Will Be Placed On Exchange Monday.

Associated Press Despatch.

New York, Oct. 24.—With bond prices fluctuating within extremely narrow limits, new financing absorbed most of the interest in investment circles.

Negotiations were completed for a $30,000,000 Swedish loan and the bonds, maturing in thirty years and bearing 6½ per cent interest, will be offered for public subscription early next week at a price expected to be slightly below par. The National City Company heads the underwriting syndicate. Private sale of $20,000,000 Marland Oil Company two-year five per cent notes was made through a syndicate headed by J. P. Morgan and Company. Proceeds will be used to refund outstanding indebtedness and provide additional working capital.

Arrangements were also completed today for one-year extension of the $10,000,000 Danish stabilization credit granted by the National City Bank last year.

Price movements of bonds in stock exchange trading provided few features of interest. Low and medium priced railroad issues attracted the best buying support, with activity centering in "Katy" adjustment 5's, Frisco liens, Minneapolis and St. Louis consolidated 5's, Denver and Rio Grande 4's and Chicago and Eastern Illinois 5's. Recent activity in Illinois Central bonds was linked with reports that the road soon would market a $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 issue of equipment notes.

Weakness in the sugar bonds persisted today, with Sugar Estate of Oriente 7's dropping two points. Other heavy spots were Brooklyn Union Gas 7's of 1929, which lost over three points and Wickwire Spencer Steel 7's.

BRITISH STOCKS EXPERIENCE BOOM

Success of German Loan Adds to Buoyancy of Market Tone.

Associated Press Despatch.

London, Oct. 24.—The stock exchange here enjoyed an experience almost of boom conditions the earlier part of this week, but whether this was due to influences in connection with the pending general election or not is at least highly conjectural. Financial circles, without the least doubt, from the first have taken an optimistic view of what the polls next Wednesday will produce, which, however, does not mean that everybody around Throgmorton street is anticipating an absolute Conservative victory.

City magnates hesitate to say definitely what they think the result of the election will be, but the impression seems to be general that the Labor party at least cannot hope to secure a decisive majority. The avoidance of triangular contests in several districts is regarded as tending towards diminishing the Labor party's strength.

German Loan Well Taken.

One well-known financial writer of Conservative sympathies admits that the city is perfectly conscious of certain defects in Stanley Baldwin's leadership of the party, but he is quick to note that throughout Mr. Baldwin's career he has never indulged in invectives against the Labor party, though careful to distinguish between the extremists and the loyal section of the Labor party. This is felt to be the only real attitude which can ultimately secure co-operation between capital and labor.

Apart from these sentiments, the underlying conditions of the markets for months past, as indicated in previous cables has been the healthy condition that money, which would have gone normally into speculative stocks, has been put into gilt-edged securities.

Colonial Stocks.

The greatest factor making for cheerful conditions this week undoubtedly has been the proved success of the German loan, an operation which at one time seemed an entirely doubtful achievement. This has led to a general quickening of activity in the leading industrial securities and certain other speculative holdings. Prophecies of a 3 per cent premium on the loan have been unduly conservative, for the issue today, despite a setback, calls for over 4 per cent, and the common talk here is that when the professional operator has been eliminated this 7 per cent German issue will be worth the attention of any ordinary investor at round about parity price.

The South African loan of $40,000,000 in 5 per cent at 99½, is being underwritten.

The market for colonial stocks generally is showing extreme steadiness, the latest Queensland £4,000,000 loan, 5½ per cent, at 97½, is now at a premium of 3 per cent.

HURON COUNTY LEADS IN O. T. A. MAJORITY

Every Municipality Voted in Favor of Continuance of Act.

Special to The Advertiser.

Clinton, Oct. 24.—It would seem from published reports that Huron county gave the largest O. T. A. majority of all the counties in the province. The total O. T. A. vote was 17,090, and the total government sale vote 4,981, giving an O. T. A. majority of 12,109.

One polling subdivision in Wawanosh reports 92 O. T. A. votes and only one G. S., another in Tuckersmith 138 O. T. A. and 7 G. S., still another one in Stanley 90 O. T. A. and 5 G. S. Not one municipality gave a government sale majority.

NORTH OXFORD.

Special to The Advertiser.

Woodstock, Oct. 24.—Complete returns in North Oxford showed a vote of 7,225 for the O. T. A. and 3,884 for government sale, an O. T. A. majority of 3,341. Blenheim township rolled up a majority of nearly 1,000.

SOUTH WELLINGTON

Special to The Advertiser.

Guelph, Oct. 24.—According to official figures the O. T. A. majority on the plebiscite in South Wellington was 1,694, the figures being, O. T. A., 6,734, and government sale 5,040. In the city of Guelph the government sale majority was 47, the vote being 4,035 for government sale and 3,988 for the O. T. A.

INGERSOLL.

Special to The Advertiser.

Ingersoll, Oct. 24.—Official figures today showed that the O. T. A. vote as 1,367, and the government control vote 1,091, an O. T. A. majority of 276. Two subdivisions gave a majority for government sale.

STILL INCOMPLETE.

Special to The Advertiser.

Sarnia, Oct. 24.—With polling returns from East and West Lambton still incomplete this evening, big majorities for the O. T. A. are conceded in both ridings. With 12 polls to report, East Lambton gives a majority of 3,16 to the O. T. A., and West Lambton, with 18 divisions not reported gives the O. T. A. 1,289 majority. Sarnia city vote, which gave a government sale majority, included the Lambtons, which have upheld their reputations as banner dry ridings.

Border O. T. A.

Robert Stirrett, president of the county organization, said the result in the border townships indicated that the people in these districts had disassociated the bootlegger from the O. T. A. The villages of Point Edward and Port Lambton voted for sale. Other St. Clair river villages all voted O. T. A. There was a striking return in division six of Enniskillen, the figures showing 56 for O. T. A. and ofr government sale nil.

TORONTO RAILWAY GIVEN IMPETUS

Privy Council Ruling Aids Value of Traction Shares.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—Toronto Railway shares responded to the favorable decision of the privy council today by advancing 5 points overnight, and, after a downward fluctuation, turned firmer at 109 in heavier dealings than have been experienced in any single stock for many months on the Toronto exchange. By virtue of the award, Toronto Railway shares become practically a municipal stock. The ultimate realization of price is estimated at between 118 and 122 a share, including interest of $8 a share, which, it is felt, cannot fail to be awarded. It appears, therefore, that today's closing price is within 2 or 3 points of the realization price, minus the interest.

Otherwise the market was comparatively narrow, and price changes were not of especial consequence. Brazilian Traction flictuated within a narrow range, and closed for a net loss of ⅝ at 50½. Steamships preferred had a partial comeback after its decline on Thursday, finishing at 56⅜ in a quiet market. There was some buying of both Twin City and Duluth-Superior, and the former stock moved up to 44½. Buying was evidently premised on the fact that the quarterly earnings are being made public, and that any change in the company's position must necessarily be in the way of improvement.

The most pronounced weakness was in the pulp and paper group, where Abitibi gafe way another 2 points to 52¾ and Spanish River common receded 3½ to 99. Laurentide was off 1¾ to 80¾, and Brompton was weaker at 27½ to 28.

Prices were mostly firm in the bank shares group. Commerce recovered 1 point to 197½, and Dominion was firmer at 188, while Standard receded ¾ to 167½.

Sales of the day totalled 5,797 listed shares, 3,194 unlisted and $2,000 government bonds

TRACTIONS FEATURE MONTREAL EXCHANGE

Large Turnover Takes Place On Stock Board—Gains Are Substantial.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Montreal, Oct. 24.—A strong tone prevailed in today's session of the Montreal stock exchange, gains being more numerous and far more substantial than losses. There was a slight expansion in the volume of business, although trading was carried on in a narrow range of issues. The feature of the day was the strength displayed by several of the stocks in the traction group, Toronto Railway and Twin City being the most prominent in regard to firmness, while Detroit was an exception to the general trend. Today's turnover amounted to 15,552, as compared with 15,333 the previous session and 4,262 shares on the same day last year.

Detroit Railway suffered the greatest loss, the stocks dropping 2¾ points to the new low of 22. Twin City moved up 3½ points to 44.

SUGAR

New York, Oct. 24.—Raw sugar was firm today, but there was no change in the spot price, which continued at $6.02 for Cuban, duty paid. Sales amounted to 25,000 bags of Cuban at $6.03 and 15,000 bags at $6.09 for prompt shipment, also 7,000 bags Philippines at $5.53 for late December arrival, all to out-port refiners. No sales to local refiners were reported.

Raw sugar futures were firmer for the near positions and steady on late. Demand from Cuban interests caused advances of 4 to 10 points, but reactions followed later on liquidation, with final prices 1 to 5 points net higher. December closed at $3.93, March $3.17, May $3.24, July $3.33

Transactions in refined sugar again were fairly active, with prices unchanged, at $7.15 to $7.50 for fine granulated.

OTHER MARKETS ON PAGE 19.

Local Market

The mild weather and the bright sunshine helped to make the market this morning a decided success, all varieties being offered in large quantities.

Grapes and apples were the main attractions in the fruit offerings, the former bringing 30c to 40c a 6-quart basket, and 70c to 75c for the 11-quart size. Apples were plentiful at $1 to $1.50, the latter price being for Snows.

Few loads of hay were noticed today, an occasional load selling at $12 to $15 a ton. The demand was poor.

There was an excellent demand for first-class poultry, the offerings bringing 25c to 30c per lb.

Butter was abundant at unchanged prices, and a large quantity was offered. Pumpkins and squashes experienced a steady sale at firm quotations.

Few eggs were offered, and it is rumored the supply will not be very large.

Financial Review

Associated Press Despatch.

New York, Oct. 25.—Stock prices generally displayed marked improvement this week in reflection of favorable trade news and an easier money market. Buying, however, was of a highly selective character, with weak spots developing in several sections of the list, due largely to unfavorable individual influences.

Railroad shares picked up on the publication of September earnings statements, showing increased net income due to the sharp reduction in operating expenses by some of the principal systems, and to a continuation of record-breaking car-loading statistics. While the principal activity took place in low-priced issues with favorable dividend or merger possibilities, there was a steady demand for the high-grade investment carriers.

Oils again pointed to higher levels with the petroleum institute showing the fifth consecutive decline in crude oil production and by the hardening of gasoline prices in certain sections of the country.

Merchandising issues displayed consistent strength in reflection of high current earnings. Good buying was also noted in certain automobile issues. Coppers began to discount the possibility of a heavy increase in the foreign demand for the red metal due to the economic rehabilitation of Germany.

Buying of the steels was restricted somewhat by the heavy selling of Bethlehem, which crashed to a new low for the year in anticipation of the poor quarterly report published Thursday, which showed net income of only $102,167 after fixed charges, depreciation and depletion reserves, as against $1,278,277 in the second quarter and $4,519,875 in the first quarter.

EXPERTS REPAIR ALL VACUUM CLEANERS

Stewart & Morkin Shop Restores Damaged Electrical Machinery.

"Every year we are having more and more vacuum cleaners sent to us to be repaired," said W. J. Stewart of the electrical repair firm of Stewart & Morkin, Fullarton street, yesterday. "People realize that here they can have anything electrical made as good as new again at a small cost. However, if a machine is so far gone that the repair bill may amount to as much as a new article would cost, we delay beginning repair work until we have informed the owner to this effect."

As well as repairing electrical machines of all descriptions, Stewart & Morkin carry on an extensive trade in the motor repairing field.

Motors are likely to burn out at any time, necessitating the work of experts to restore them. The firm of Stewart & Morkin has every facility for doing this work, as well as every other phase of electrical repairing.

This business since its beginning about eleven years ago has maintained a policy of efficiency and service, and it is the boast of the management that not a customer has been lost in this time. Every man employed in the plant is an expert in electrical work, and absolute satisfaction is guaranteed in repairing motors or generators of any type.

REAL SERVICE IS AIM OF GRIGG HOTEL CAFE

Popular Richmond Street Restaurant Adheres To High Standard.

Confidence of the patrons of the Grigg Hotel Cafe at 334 Richmond street, that this restaurant can be depended upon to serve nothing but the best in food and beverages, is perhaps the main reason why this establishment has attained widespread fame as one of the London's leading restaurants.

"It is our aim at all times to instil confidence in our customers by providing equipment and service that are the best possible," said Stephen Dimson, co-proprietor. "We know that in doing this we are giving the public something it appreciates. When a person comes in here, whether it is for a pot of tea or for a complete dinner, he knows from past experience that he will be given the very best there is. That means that he will tell his friends about our place, and that he will come back again himself. The reason is that he has confidence in us."

The Grigg Hotel Cafe is furnished throughout with the latest improved restaurant equipment. Snow white counters and walls, sanitary airtight cases for pastry, and all other units in ship-shape condition, at all times are the most noticeable features of this establishment.

PIONEER OF STRATFORD DIES AT NEW HAMBURG

Special to The Advertiser.

New Hamburg, Oct. 24.—The death took place on Wednesday afternoon of Henry Kalbfleisch, highly-respected and well-known businessman of New Hamburg. He had been in failing health for the past two years. For many years he conducted a carriage and blacksmith business on Ontario street, Stratford, prior to moving to New Hamburg about 10 years ago. Survivors are the widow, one daughter, Mrs. Percy Weicker of Haysville, and four sons, Alvin of Walkerville, Ernest of Stratford, Fred and Kenneth at home, also his aged mother of Tavistock, two brothers and two sisters.

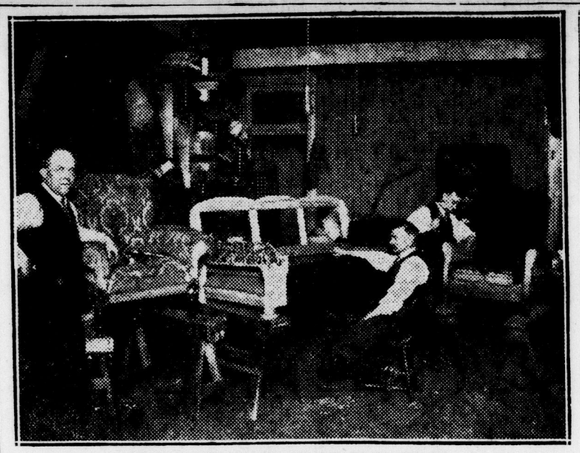

Funeral on Saturday to the Baptist church and Riverside cemetery.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY FORMED AT TILLSONBURG

Special to The Advertiser.

Tillsonburg, Oct. 24. — Some 60 young people assembled in the Sunday school room of Avondale Presbyterian church last evening, when a new organization was formed, known as the young people's society of Avondale Presbyterian church. Rev. G. C. Mitchell, B.A., occupied the chair, and following are the officers: President, W. W. Davis; vice-president, Mrs. Vinton Hewer; secretary, Miss Mildred Weeks; treasurer, Miss Nancy Stilwell; pianist, Miss Elva Fick; editor, Miss Edith Cuthbertson; musical convener, Jack Darrow; literary, Miss Nerta Davis; social, Miss Eleanor Brooks; religious, Miss McDonald; look-out, Mrs. W. W. Davis.

A solo by Mrs. (Rev.) G. C. Mitchell, piano solo by Miss Elva Fick and ukelele duet by Miss Evelyn Berry and Jean Williams composed the program.

MAKING CUSTOM-BUILT FURNITURE.

Above is shown the workshop of Charles M. Quick at 523 Richmond street, where chesterfield suites and upholstered furniture are made by craftsmen with long experience in this particular field. If you are contemplating purchasing a chesterfield suite, consider these facts. You can go into a store and purchase a factory suite and take whatever style and pattern of goods that is made up, or you can go to Quick, the upholsterer, select your goods and have it made up in any style that suits your fancy. Factory-made suites are put together by machinery, while the ones built by Quick are built piece by piece, by hand and by expert upholsterers. The Quick suites are reinforced here and there where the wear comes most. Which will you have? They cost almost the same. Quick, the upholsterer, at 523 Richmond street, awaits your phone call to visit your home with samples and prices.

OLD CARPETS MADE INTO FINE NEW RUGS

"Why, Mrs. Smith, what lovely rugs! You know I have been wanting two or three myself for so long, but I felt that with the house needing so many other things right now I would have to let the rugs go for a while."

Mrs. Smith smiled. "Why, Mrs. Jones," she said, "they weren't bought new, you know. I had them made out of that old carpet that I was thinking of throwing away. I sent it to the Canada Rug Company down on Carling street, and when I received these rugs back I was more than surprised that those old carpets could be turned into such fine articles And do you know they didn't charge me half as much as I expected they would."

Conversations such as this are becoming more frequent as the housewives of London and the surrounding district are coming to realize what remarkable results the Canada Rug plant achieves in turning old carpets, considered worthless, into high grade rugs.

This firm has branches in Windsor and Toronto. For customers outside these districts the Canada Rug Company pays express charges both ways on all carpets sent in to be made into rugs.

This concern points with pride to the fact that 60 per cent of the new business it secures comes through recommendations made to friends by persons to whom its service has given satisfaction.

CHAPMAN LOOSELEAF SYSTEM RENOWNED

Local Concern Has Trade Extending From Coast to Coast.

The Chas. Chapman Company of 91 Dundas street was started here in 1855—69 years ago—by the late Chas. Chapman, one of the earliest bookbinders in Western Ontario. At that time London was not the important business and commercial center it is today. It was just a town with the demand for the services of a bookbinder commensurately small.

Since then, however, the city has grown far beyond the dreams of the citizens of 1855, and the call for work such as the Chapman shop turns out, has grown greatly in that time. This concern has kept pace with the general progress, nevertheless, and today has a trade which extends from coast to coast in the Dominion.

The staff of 25 persons is kept busy every day in the year attending to the vast volume of work handled.

This firm makes all classes of special ruled and printed blank books for manufacturing houses and offices, as well as the widely known system of Chapman loose-leaf note books which for many years past have been used in practically every educational institution in Canada, from Vancouver to Halifax.

CHANTLER BROS. FIRM IN LONDON 33 YEARS

Has Grown to One of Largest Yards in Western Ontario.

The coal and wood business of Chantler Bros., of 263 Bathurst street, was founded 33 years ago by George J. Chantler, who still remains the active head of the firm. This concern which had a small beginning is today one of the largest retail coal and wood yards in Western Ontario.

Chantler Bros. handle only the very best grade of Scranton screened anthracite coal, and insure absolute satisfaction in every ton of fuel sold.

Mr. Chantler says: "We have always made service our motto, and the majority of our customers are ones who have used our coal and wood for many years back, and everyone of them is strong for this company, as they all appreciate the fact that we have always tried to give them the best service possible."

WORRIES ATTENDING BANQUETS REMOVED

E. Willis & Son, 609 Dundas Street, Attend to All Details.

Persons arranging marriage festivities are often dismayed with the prospects of taking care of perhaps scores of guests and having all the details run off in such a manner as to make the occasion one to be long remembered. However, this worry is eliminated by the service provided by E. Willis & Son, confectioners, 609 Dundas street, who make a specialty of supplying everything needed at nuptial banquets.

For more than twenty-five years this shop has been supplying the people of London with daily domestic needs in the way of bread, cakes and other confections, and it is its constant aim to always maintain the highest quality in its products.

SPEEDOMETER NEEDS SAME CARE AS WATCH

Tichbourne Shop Has Complete Equipment For Testing and Calibrating.

Speedometers will get out of order the same as a watch or clock.

"Have you ever considered how differently these things are treated?" asks William Tichbourne of the Ontario Speedometer Service Shop, at 91 York street.

"Watches and clocks are handled with ahe utmost respect and are protected in every way, kept from dust and jars and are considered objects that need every attention. With all this care you are never certain that they are right.

"On the other hand speedometers are driven through dust, storms, sand, mud, over bumps, ruts, rocks, everything and anything and yet the suspicion that they are not registering accurately never enters the driver's head. Why is this so? We give it up, but this we do know. It is as important to have your speedometer right as it is to have your timepiece telling you the correct time.

"We have the only complete equipment in Western Ontario for testing and calibrating (making speedometer register correctly) all makes of speedometers. The cost of testing and calibrating is much less than the cost of speeding. As one of our customers forcefully said: 'I beat the judge to it and fined myself $1.50 and had my speedometer put right.'"

The assurance resulting from knowing exactly how slow or how fast you are traveling is worth many times the cost of having a faulty speedometer repaired.

$1,000 Cash Prizes

Twenty words or less!— and you get $500. That means $25 or more a word. Even the most famous authors can't command that price! But someone in Canada is going to get it!

A title writing contest is now announced in the newspapers. The first prize is $500, the second prize $200 and the third $100. In addition, there are eight consolation prizes of $25 each. A picture is run in Congoleum advertising without a title and the best titles submitted win the money.

The picture tells an interesting story. One can imagine dozens of things that one of the three persons might be saying. There is the young man who has evidently come to call. His raincoat and umbrella are dripping water all over the hall rug. In fact, the older woman in the picture is holding his umbrella without seeming to care where the water runs. The young lady of the house is descending the stairway.

Which one of the people is doing the talking? What is being said? Or can you think up a phrase or sentence that sums up the situation? It is clear as can be that the rug on the floor is waterproof. That gives one lead for a title.

All you have to do to enter this contest with its thousand dollars for prizes is to get an entry blank at the nearest Congoleum dealer's. It might be well to have a short talk with him about the features of this kind of floor covering so that you will have your selling points in line. Watch the Congoleum advertisements in The Advertiser.

Titles must be submitted between the dates of Oct. 20 and Nov. 3. Wide-awake dealers in Congoleum are taking advantage of the interest this title writing contest is sure to arouse, and are having special sales during the weeks of Oct. 20 and Nov. 1.

The title must not be longer than twenty words. It may be as much shorter as you can make it.

FREED OF RHEUMATISM BY FRUIT TREATMENT.

"Be good enough to publish for the information of Rheumatism sufferers how 'Fruit-a-tives' relieved my Rheumatism which had at least five years' standing.

"The trouble was in my right hip and shoulder; the pain almost unendurable. This kept up until I started to take 'Fruit-a-tives.' After a continuous treatment for about six months, I am now in first-class condition. This I attribute to my persistent use of 'Fruit-a-tives.'"

This is the letter which Mr. James Dobson of Bronte, Ont., wrote after trying the wonderful Fruit Treatment—"Fruit-a-tives"—which consists of intensified fruit juices combined with tonics.

If you suffer with Rheumatism, "Fruit-a-tives" will make you well and keep you well.

ACTION OF SOVIET BRINGS PROTESTS

Government Objects As Efforts Are Again Made To Spread Propaganda.

BREAK AGREEMENT

Associated Press Despatch.

London, Oct. 24.—The British government is again in conflict with the Russian Soviet government on the question of propaganda, according to correspondence issued by the foreign office tonight for publication in tomorrow's newspapers.

In a letter dated today, signed, "in the absence of the secretary of state," by one of the permanent officials of the office, J. T. Gregory, and addressed to Christian Rakovsky, the Russian charg d'affaires in London, attention is drawn to an accompanying copy of a letter received by the central committee of the British Communist party from M. Zinovieff, president of the committee of the Communist internationale, dated August 15.

"This letter," says the communication of Mr. Gregory, "contains instructions to British subjects to work for the overthrow of existing institutions in this country and for the subversion of his majesty's armed forces as a means to that end. It is my duty to inform you that his majesty's government cannot allow this propaganda and must regard it as direct interference from the outside in British democratic affairs.

"Such conduct," the letter of Mr. Gregory continues, "is not only a grave departure from the rules of international comity, but a violation of the specific and solemn undertakings repeatedly given to his majesty's government."

Mr. Gregory then at length alludes to the recently concluded treaty of agreement with the Soviet government, and declares that the British government intends that the undertakings in the agreement shall be carried out both in letter and spirit.

"I should be obliged," says Mr. Gregory's letter in conclusion, "if you would be good enough to let me have the observation of your government on this subject without delay."

Accompanying the letter of Mr. Gregory is a copy of M. Zinovieff's letter, which is indorsed "very secret." This communication urges British Communists to continue to apply pressure so as to insure that the bourgoisie campaign to prevent ratification of the recently concluded Anglo-Russian treaty shall not succeed.

DE VALERA NOW IN ULSTER PRISON

Leader Is Arrested When He Goes To Newry To Speak.

Associated Press Despatch.

Newry, Ireland, Oct. 24.—Eamon DeValera, the Irish republican leader, today kept his word that he would accept the challenge of the Ulster government, which sometime ago forbade him entering certain Ulster areas under pain of arrest.

Today, De Valera came to Newry to address a political gathering, but was arrested on reaching the entrance to the town hall where the meeting was held.

Up to this time no civilians had been permitted to enter the hall, which was entirely in possession of the police, but after De Valera was taken into custody the people were permitted to go inside and the meeting proceeded somewhat noisily.

Scenes of confusion followed when Mary MacSwinie, with other speakers entered the hall and began to speak. Their speeches were frequently interrupted by Orange songs, catcalls and groans.

De Valera probably will be taken to the Belfast jail tomorrow. The technical charge against him is understood to be that he refused to obey a police order to quit the territory of Northern Ireland.

JUSTICE TO HURRY TRIAL OF BANKER

More Witnesses Are Asked by Counsel of Director Smith.

Associated Press Despatch.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—In the trial of Clarence F. Smith, Montreal, Home bank director, in the county criminal court today on charges of making false statements of the affairs of the bank Gordon Waldron, defense counsel, asked his honor Judge Coatsworth that A. E. Calvert, J. C. Whittaker and Miss Love of the Home bank staff be called as witnesses, although they are not now on the list.

Judge Coatsworth said that he would consider the matter after the conclusion of the evidence of Major A. E. Nash, the last crown witness, who is now on the stand under cross-examinatino. The request was made just before adjournment today when Judge Coatsworth said that the defence would have to get along a little faster with its case.

He said he had allowed wide latitude in cross-examination, and that it was ridiculous that Mr. Waldron should go into such detail in irrevelant matters. His honor said that today's cross-examination had simply gone to complete the correctness of the crown's case as it affected statements, etc., to the bank. Mr. Waldron also wanted Mr. Clarkson of the firm of Clarkson, Gordon & Dilworth, called, as his name appeared on the indictment. Judge Coatsworth informed Mr. Waldron that there was no indictment, but that the accused were being charged on a charge sheet only.

Major Nash was on the stand all day, and for the most part under cross-examination by Mr. Waldron.

PRINCE OF WALES SAILS FOR HOME

Had An Interesting Time and Looks Forward To Another Visit.

Associated Press Despatch.

New York, Oct. 24.—After his travels through Canada and the United States, the Prince of Wales was tonight aboard the steamer Olympic waiting for her to pull away from her pier and carry him home to England.

The prince's departure from New York, like his arrival, created a stir, but many persons desirous of catching a glimpse of the heir to the British throne were disappointed, so smoothly were arrangements for the embarkation late this afternoon carried out.

In a brief formal statement given to newspapermen who had followed him aboard the ship, the prince said:

"My stay on the North American continent has been a very interesting and happy one. I am sorry it is over and look forward to returning."

Before going to his suite the prince posed for a number of newspaper photographers.

It was announced that the prince would have dinner aboard the Olympic, and that he would remain aboard until she sailed, but members of his party thought it possible that he might leave the ship for a few hours after he had dined.

He will play some more squash and will do some boxing en route to England, it was said by members of his staff. He will have his meals in the dining saloon with the rest of the passengers and indulge in the social life of the liner if he feels like it.

EXCISE OFFICIALS GET INCREASE IN SALARIES

Upward Revision in Schedules Is Made Following Months of Negotiations.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—Lengthy negotiations covering a period of months have resulted in the upward revision of the salary schedules of the dominion government customs and excise officers here and elsewhere.

Lower paid men receive an increase of $180 a year, with a lesser increase as salaries move up to $2,400. Their request was for $240 increase for the lower paid employees.

The revision was carried out by the civil service commission, working with a sub-committee of deputy ministers and departmental representatives. The new salaries announced today here are retroactive to April 1 last, so that the men will receive substantial notice of their raises almost immediately.

AN OPEN LETTER OF APPRECIATION

Two Years of Conscientious Public Service ---and a Willingness To Carry On

The first thought that comes to me as the second year of my term of office as mayor draws to a close is one of thankfulness to the citizens of London for the honors conferred and the trusts imposed.

These are but mere words, however, and so, to prove genuine appreciation, I again offer my services as mayor.

It would be an easy matter for me to retire now, after having enjoyed the highest honors in the gift of the citizens, and then pay constant attention to my own financial upbuilding, but when I realize the vast amount of important unfinished civic business to be transacted in 1925, I cannot desert the job at any sacrifice.

And, being the kind of mayor I have been, spells sacrifice, long hours of arduous work daily in and away from the city hall.

Again, however, I am willing to give unsparingly of my time and unstintingly of my services to the end that London, my London, your London, our London, may march on to a greater prosperity, in the atmosphere of a cleaner, finer fellowship of all the people.

Do not think of me as a conceited individual, who presumes that no one else can attend to the unfinished business forced over until 1925, but rather regard me as one familiar enough with trade, commerce and finance to realize that this is not the time for a change.

The man, who for two years has been in most intimate relationship with the municipal affairs of the city, is the one to carry on in the fullness of that knowledge during 1925.

A newcomer, no matter how versatile and brilliant, would be lost for months in a multiplicity of details before becoming competent to exercise a sound judgment.

Ask yourself these questions:

The proven executive for 1925, or an untried aspirant?

The mayor, who has done things, or a man who might look on the job as a dress suit ceremony, free from responsibility?

The fellow with his coat off and his sleeves rolled up, or the tired businessman?

IT'S ALL UP TO YOU!

J. A. Wenige MAYOR.

A LOWER TAX RATE in 1923, and a still further reduction in 1924, without any increase in assessment.

THE HIGH STREET SEWER. A work that assisted many unemployed for nearly a year. A job that had been promised for 20 years.

THE WELLINGTON STREET PAVEMENT. Laid despite strenuous opposition.

THE EMPRESS AVENUE SCHOOL. The original idea was encouraged and eventually carried out.

THE EAST END ATHLETIC GROUNDS was asked for during a decade, but never accomplished until this year.

THE WESTERN FAIR—Co-operating with it that made possible the new Manufacturers' Building and general admission reduced to 25 cents.

THE EGERTON STREET PAVEMENT, which supplied a long-felt want and gave a useful connection to two main arteries of traffic.

THE REGISTRY OFFICE—Every obstacle overcome and the building completed.

STANLEY STREET PAVEMENT. The wise ones who said that it could not be done now see it finished.

QUEBEC STREET SEWER completed despite the cries of the pessimistic and the groans of the antagonistic.

THE SYSTEMATIC ARRANGEMENT OF THE PARKING SYSTEM for the city, and the street markings that spell "Safety." Those who laughed at them now praise them.

THE OPENING OF THE SOUTH LONDON LIBRARY despite threats of illegality.

DUNDAS STREET LIGHTING.—Petitions asking for this have been filed for years, but never did the petitioners get satisfaction until 1924.

NEW STREET SIGNS.—Now you can tell where you are at in the City of London. It is no longer necessary to shovel off the snow and ice to find your direction.

MOTORIZATION OF THE ENTIRE FIRE DEPARTMENT.—The faithful Dobbins have been sent to the pasture, but there is still a surplus in the treasury. No overdraft as was predicted.

THE POLICE DEPARTMENT has become the "Department of Public Safety," devoted to the highest ideals in the protection of life and property. Co-operation did this.

MARKET IMPROVEMENTS.—More covered shed room and more encouragement of agriculture.

THE YORK STREET HILL made safe for traffic by the elimination of poles and the flattening of curbs. It is no longer necessary to wait for, or dodge street cars.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ASSESSMENT DEPARTMENT.—After years of unfilled promises, you now get courtesy, business acumen, and a sane system of assessment that is fair to everyone.

ENGINEER'S DEPARTMENT REORGANIZED.—Your business is attended to today by competent employees, who know they are faithful servants and do not pretend to be the proud masters of the people. Better wages have been given to the outside workmen—you remember the famous 10 per cent reduction that was cancelled, and the result is better work at less cost per unit.

RELIEF DEPARTMENT.—Real assistance when and where deserved. Compare this policy with the one pursued in years gone by.

TAX COLLECTION DEPARTMENT is now an assistance rather than a nuisance to the taxpayer. You get the information you want and it comes in a hurry.

VICTORIA HOSPITAL placed on a new and better basis in the general interests of many, but at some sacrifice to a few.

THE HOSPITALITY of the city has become famous in this and other countries. London is known favorably far and wide for the recognition given the Old Boys' Reunion, the Labor Conference, Thebes Sanctorum, Orientals, visiting Rotarians, Typographical Union, Insurance Congress, Commercial Travellers' Association and many other conventions. No local organization has ever been refused my eager, earnest co-operation in a practical way. Perhaps the plug hat and the frock coat have been missing at receptions, but an honest heart and the happy hand have ever been present. The spirit of co-operation has been given out without favor, to people of all creeds, races, color and politics.

At all times I have been a mayor for all the people. Through my efforts became possible a roof over the heads of the G. W. V. A., and upon many occasions has assistance been rendered in order that the funds of the organization might be sufficient to meet its very worthy needs. And I have not only assisted the soldiers in their different associations, but have stood behind and backed up in a practical way every effort to encourage and solidify a real sporting spirit and practice amongst the old as well as the young of the City of London.
