An extraordinary letter appears in The Freeman's Journal. It is on a serious subject, although there may be a suggestion of something different. The writer signs himself "A Peer not a Butler."

The O'Connor Don has been lecturing before the Royal Society of Antiquaries, and in advocating the protection of ancient monuments he has taken occasion to allude to the healing of creed stripes. In this he said persons of all classes and creeds and races can cordially join and joining in it a fellow-feeling grows up amongst them.

In the course of a lengthy address, Cardinal Logue said: "We, the Bishops of Ireland and the clergy of Ireland generally, are looked upon by persons who are unfit to be entrusted with the educational work of the country."

The most Rev. Dr. Carr, Archbishop of Melbourne, who was received with ringing cheers, again and again renewed, said—My lord Cardinal, my lord, and dear friends, his Eminence stated that he came long and with loving affection to revisit the College of Maynooth each year.

The significance to Canadians of the conquest of Cuba by the Americans hardly needs to be pointed out. But the following extract from "Seward's Ideas of Territorial Expansion," by Fredrick Bancroft, in "North American Review" for July may interest some of our slow-thinking Canadians:

"Purely sectional or political interests were in control when the acquisition of Cuba and of Canada was discussed at different times during the fifteen years prior to the civil war. It was mainly a struggle for the balance of power in the United States Senate. Some of the wisest public men since the early part of this century had believed that Cuba should be annexed at the first opportunity.

Horrible War.

There has been slaughter upon sea and land in the vicinity of Santiago, and the seventy millions of "pure democracy," from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian boundary have celebrated a Fourth of July that must have excited the diabolical envy of the Un-speakable Turk.

On Friday last the American army began the assault upon El Caney and other villages close to Santiago, meeting a stubborn resistance at all points. These outposts were carried on Sunday, after continuous fighting, and the enemy's lines drawn around the city of Santiago itself, with the estimated loss on the American side of over 1,000 killed and wounded.

The carnage was stopped on both sides on Sunday afternoon, in consequence of the request of the foreign consuls in Santiago that the American cease shelling the city until the foreign residents, the women and children could depart.

What a "present" for the "pure democracy" celebrating the anniversary of its liberty. In grim truth it smacks of the savage joy of the Indian bringing a scalp-look into camp, and bidding his fellow cannibals prepare for a feast upon the carcass of their foe.

Out spoke the victor then As he hailed them o'er the wave "Ye are brothers! ye are men! And we conquer but to save; So peace instead of death let us bring."

like a partridge" a wife or a mother will suffer heart-break, as crushing as if the victim were an American. Nor can it be otherwise when we remember that the American state is at war for greed and conquest, while the people, with the cry of "Remember the Maine" on their lips are thirsting for revenge more than victory.

The eighteenth century closed amid scenes which drew from Burke an awful cry, that all the devils of hate in hell seemed to have been unloosed for the occasion to stir the human race to bloodshed.

True it is that the real victors of Cuba to-day are the vultures and fowl things of the air, the crabs and unclean creeping things of the earth. They are gathering for the banquet, and they don't have to pay the piper either when the American musicians play "A Hot Time in the Old Town."

The Canadian Baptist.

After three weeks of reflection The Canadian Baptist replies to our challenge by declining to accept it. We are accordingly to understand that neither the editors of The Baptist, nor the professors of the Baptist College, all of whom received "marked copies" of THE REGISTER, will dare to say that in any Catholic school or college, or in any book used in any such school or college, in any part of the world, is the justification or excuse in any light or form whatever of lying taught.

But The Baptist says our challenge is really no challenge, for the reason that it simply evades the charge made by an English Congregational minister, named Dr. Horton, who has been saying that it is the Jesuits who teach all the immorality of disguised lying.

It will be seen, on a moment's reflection, (1) that Dr. Horton made no statement, pro or con, about text-books in Catholic schools; (2) that it would be almost inconceivable that any text-book teaching lying direct should be used in any school in a so-called Christian country.

It would be impossible to write greater nonsense than the foregoing extract from our contemporary's latest issue. All the world knows that the Jesuits are a teaching order, and that their text-books are all public property and easily available to students and scholars.

But as far as the moral teaching of the good old saint is concerned it is a great pity that gentlemen like the editor of The Baptist do not study a little in his school. He was the ideal teacher of caution and moderation in speech. Indeed in the discussion of the subject of "Probabilism" he was so safe and canny that he might without disrespect have been styled "Proba." This is his own description of his position: "I do not belong to a Jesuit after the type of those Jesuits that hardly needs to be stated that the only place and way, after the declarations of Popes and Councils, in which the Catholic Church can teach anything is the school. And here we have The Baptist declaring, in one and the same breath, that this thing is both conceivable and inconceivable. It would be inconceivable to us that the editor of The Baptist is anything else than an inconceivably stupid fellow, but that we have charitably assumed his entire ignorance of what he is talking about. He is sheltering behind, and perhaps ignorantly relying upon, the statements of Dr. Horton, whose standing and scholarship he blandly assumes, by the same instinct that prompts him to assume our insincerity.

Very good. Did it never occur to the Doctor at all that the fictitious Jeanie is the creation of a good Catholic novelist, Sir Walter Scott? and that the author in making the girl regard truth as above her sister's life was only putting forth an example of Catholic teaching, that no end can be gained more sacred than truth, and that it is not permissible to tell a lie to save one's own life or another's?

The "Provincial Letters" have been the delight of every aggressive atheist and every anti-Catholic fanatic from Voltaire down to Dr. Horton; and when we find Dr. Horton quoting them against the Church, we have no room to regard him otherwise than as a mountebank, working upon the ignorance of simple people, who have yet to learn after receiving Dr. Horton's cheap instructions that casuistry, whether Catholic or Protestant be its teachers, is only another word for moral philosophy, morality, ethics, etc., in truth one of the noblest of all sciences.

Dr. Horton, by an extraordinary confidence in the success of humbug attacks the Catholic Church on St. Alphonsus' account. We have seen the Church also attacked on account of St. Thomas Aquinas. "Lignori" says Dr. Horton—and The Baptist after the fashion of a parrot repeats the dire accusation—"is a canonized Casuist"; a Probabilist, a friend of the Jesuits. We are challenged to deny it if we can. We do not intend to do so. There was once an old body in Billingsgate, who, when she heard herself called "an old parallel-gram," was too dumfounded and confused to speak. Let us be thankful at least that St. Alphonsus has been called nothing so monstrous as that by Dr. Horton. He might have called him not only a "Casuist" but a "Doctor of the Church," a "Redemptorist" and other strange things, the meaning whereof must be mysterious and awful to the untutored Baptist mind.

But as far as the moral teaching of the good old saint is concerned it is a great pity that gentlemen like the editor of The Baptist do not study a little in his school. He was the ideal teacher of caution and moderation in speech. Indeed in the discussion of the subject of "Probabilism" he was so safe and canny that he might without disrespect have been styled "Proba." This is his own description of his position: "I do not belong to a Jesuit after the type of those Jesuits who have been too mild." [Aesthetic Works, vol. xxi. p. 405].

There is no need to enter into any defence or explanation of casuistry. All the great teachers of the world in ancient and modern times were proud to be styled casuists. Plato was a great casuist; and Protestantism boasts a few of the class, like Jeremy Taylor, Addison, Johnston, Paley, etc., etc., who are not however to be commended, being somewhat too lax.

There is one good joke in Dr. Horton's lecture which has so much exercised our friend The Baptist. He might have quoted columns from Protestant ethical works and text-books of moral philosophy, but he did not as a matter of fact refer to any of those authorities. He was forced to go to the realm of fiction for an instance of the strict Quaker-like regard for bald fact which he would have his hearers believe is the true spirit of Protestantism. He cited "Jeanie Deans," the heroine of "The Heart of Midlothian," who could have saved her sister from a shameful execution according to the law of the time if she would only take an oath that her sister had communicated her secret to her. "But," said Dr. Horton "it never occurred to the girl, brought up in the austere faith of a Biblical Protestantism that it was ever possible to tell such a lie."

Very good. Did it never occur to the Doctor at all that the fictitious Jeanie is the creation of a good Catholic novelist, Sir Walter Scott? and that the author in making the girl regard truth as above her sister's life was only putting forth an example of Catholic teaching, that no end can be gained more sacred than truth, and that it is not permissible to tell a lie to save one's own life or another's?

Orange Rioters Curse the Queen.

We are sorry for the Queen. Her Most Gracious Majesty, through no fault of her own, has once again merited the displeasure of their loyal highnesses the lawless Orangemen of Ulster. This is not the first time she has been so unfortunate. They would have prevented her accession to their throne sixty-two years ago, if they could have managed it by plotting; and in more recent years they declared their readiness to kick the crown into the Bog. The fault, if fault there be, at the bottom of these recurring unpleasantnesses cannot be laid at Her Majesty's door, because she has never shown any particular love for Ireland—and the Orange patriots could ask no safer guarantee that the Protestant religion was reasonably safe as far as she was concerned. This sign of security might inspire them to sing "God Save the Queen" with a light heart; but strange to say they have consented to swell the National Anthem only conditionally, as appears from the burden of their favorite hymn, 'The Loyal Orangemen,' a few lines of which we quote from memory and subject to correction:

I am a loyal Orangeman From Portadown, under the Ban; My loyalty I will maintain Was ever and always without stain. And though you may profess to call My loyalty conditional I never did insist upon, 'Or ask, condition beyond the one: The crown of the causeway in road or street And the "Papishes" put under my feet.

Although Her Majesty never became a consenting party to this modest condition of her conditionally loyal and essentially lawless Ulster subjects, they have been in the enjoyment of very many privileges which they have guarded with violent jealousy. For instance, on the 6th of last month the anniversary of the Battle of Antrim came around, and an Irish-United Irish—procession was formed in Belfast to march out to Hannahstown and back again in honor of the occasion. Their loyal highnesses, the Orangemen wished Her Majesty's Government to proclaim the procession; and because their wishes were not accorded to they proceeded to show their displeasure after the proceedings were over and done with. The procession was a most peaceful and successful affair, and when those who had joined in it got back from Hannahstown they went to their homes and thought no more about the Orangemen, who, several hours after, marching home from their work in the shippards and workshops uprolled the cobble-stone pavements on the Shankill-road and Sandy-row, and hurled the paving stones at the windows of police barracks and the "Catholic" public houses as they went along. The police were beaten to cover after a hot engagement on Carriek Hill, in which over two hundred of the force suffered injuries of a more or less serious nature. Having disposed of the guardians of the peace, the sons of King William turned their earnest attention and highest energies to the "Catholic" public houses. They tapped the whiskey barrels, drank the liquor, captured all the "case goods" and money obtainable from short raids, and by the time a squadron of Iniskilling Dragoons appeared in the street, those warriors who were not too drunk to run away were captured in a state of rapid-fire intoxication by the police. But they were not too hilarious to forget their indignation against Her Most Gracious Majesty, because of the neglect of her government to proclaim the Han-nabstow procession. It is characteristic of the lawless Ulster Orangeman to show his displeasure by cursing. He has been cursing the Pope for over 100 years without getting tired of it; and on the anniversary of the battle of Antrim, when not engaged in helping himself to looted "Catholic" whiskey, he was cursing the Queen with as much heartiness as he has been in the habit of lavishing upon the Pope. The following is a sample of the evidence as reported in the daily press, given on June 16 at the magisterial investigation into the riot.

Constable Trimble gave evidence as to having seen John Skilton throw stones several times at the police at M'Tior street. After the constable charged the crowd the prisoner got behind the police, and was in the act of throwing a half brick when witness caught him. On being searched he found four paving stones in his pockets. At Crown street, running off the Shankill road, he heard the crowd curse the Queen, and immediately afterwards the police were stoned. He saw a prisoner there, left arm, and was firing away at the police. When witness got within fifteen yards of him the prisoner cursed the Queen, and said "Come on and go for the Queen." He then ran away.

Constable Trimble, recalled, said that at 8.30 o'clock he was on the Shankill road, opposite Crown street. The crowd cursed the Queen and attacked the police with stones. The crowd was charged into Mansfield street, where stone throwing was continued. In Malvern street he saw the prisoner throw a paving stone at the police with his left arm and firing with his right. He was about five yards distant, and cursed the Queen and abused the police. Witness afterwards saw him in the dock in the Custody Court and recognized him.

It is satisfactory to know that fifty disgruntled loyalists of Mr. Skilton's type have been returned for trial as the result of the magisterial investigation and others have been sent to jail. It is true they have the sympathy of other "loyal" Orangemen in Belfast who ought to know better including Rev. R. E. Kane, the Grand Master. Dr. Kane has taken occasion to make a speech upon the negligence of the official guardians of the throne. In his speech he declared:

I look upon the whole disturbance in the city as exclusively due to the fact that at no time was the procession permitted and patronized and insisted upon by the Executive Government of the country.

An English correspondent after reading the Grand Master's speech sent it to Mr. Gerald Balfour, chief secretary for Ireland, to know what he thought of Dr. Kane's view of the riot. The inquisitive Englishman received the following reply:

Irish Office, Old Queen street, S.W. 15th June, 1898.

DEAR SIR.—The Chief Secretary desires me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th inst., and to state in reply that the observation attributed to the Rev. Dr. Kane with regard to the disturbances at Belfast and the action of the Government was absurd to require comment.—Yours faithfully,

(Signed) L. C. DOWDALL.

"Too absurd to require comment." Perhaps Mr. Balfour also thinks the cursing of Her Majesty "too absurd to require comment." But the correspondent was not satisfied. He sent the newspaper report of the Grand Master's speech to Dr. Kane himself; and here is the answer he received:

Christchurch Rectory, Belfast, June 18, 1898.

DEAR SIR.—I am in receipt of your letter and am bound to admit that the quotation you sent me is a correct report of what I said. I should be sorry, however, to think that the Government are acting in collusion with the forces of disorder in Ireland, though it seems to me that since they assigned the responsibility of proclaiming the procession they are responsible for the consequences of this failure. Of those riots they were amply forewarned, as I am informed, by all the persons in chief authority in the city. I may say that we feel very much relieved and very thankful that the riots were not tenfold more serious, and that property and life have not been in a much larger measure sacrificed to the inevitable moloch of sedition and Dillonite passion for rapid speech-making at any cost. Our escape we attribute very largely to the avertance of our local authorities to the counsels of peace given by men of influence amongst us, and to the great forbearance of the masses of the people to whom such provocation was allowed to be offered.—I am yours faithfully, (Signed), R. R. KANE.

Dr. Kane may be credited with an intimate knowledge of the peculiarities of Orange loyalty. And the only surprise he feels is that the brave fellows did not loot more public houses, would more constables and get more gloriously full in resentment of the official allowance of an historical procession. He thinks under all the circumstances that they showed "great forbearance" in face of such provocation.

We have seen no comments upon these events from the pen of the "historian" of the Orange order in Toronto. Surely such a serious rupture between the Queen and her cursing ex-loyalist subjects in Ulster is a subject worthy of the pen of historian or poet. Even the parodist might be excused for rising to the occasion. How would it do for the disgraced sons of King William to adapt a well-known song to their grievances?

We'll keep old Vic's birthday no more Or sing "God Save the Queen." For we need to have a law against The wearing of the green.

—but the Chief Secretary, Gerald Balfour has gone back on the good old law of ascendancy and tells our Grand Master "it is too absurd for comment."

The Church of England.

The war between the Ritualists in the Church of England who call themselves "Catholics," and the Low Church party, or "Evangelicals," is daily growing more bitter and widespread. No opportunity for open warfare that offers itself is neglected. The Westminster Gazette, which leans somewhat to the "Evangelical" cause, describes the situation as "chaos," produced by a party among the laity and clergy who are forcing the "sacerdotal" movement to a point which will inevitably cause the strongest antilegal reaction all over the country. The Westminster Gazette is a political journal, and it begins to look as if the political parties in England would soon find themselves drawn into the "chaos" of the church war. The discussion of the Benefices Bill last week in the House of Commons brought forth more than one warning to this effect. The measure has been introduced with the object of defining the grounds upon which Anglican bishops may refuse institutions to benefices in the Established Church. Certain Scotch and Irish Orange representatives imagine, or affect to imagine, that benefices may be another name for crucifixes, or processions, or—as one of them said—"asperges." And they cannot be convinced that if benefices mean those or kindred things, England and the Established Church are bound to wind up some bright morning alongside of Spain. Some of the speeches heard in Parliament of late have resembled editorials in our contemporary, The Baptist, more than anything else in the realm of oratory or literature. And it is truly amazing how level-headed men have worked themselves into strong excitement over these delusions. Mr. Arnold Foster for instance was so wrought by the wraith of Ritualism that he declared his belief in and preference for immorality in the clergy of the Church of England before Ritualism. A theological genius of the name of Smith brought on a motion for the deca-pitation of all clergymen who have been known within a period of five years to have been steeped in "Romish sacerdotal practices." The debate was not without a little of the leaven of merriment however until Sir William Harcourt, leader of the Opposition, rose and made a speech that has not been equalled for aggressive bigotry in the mouth of a responsible statesman since the days of Lord John Russell. Sir William thinks, or says he thinks, that the Ritualist party in the Established Church has deliberately planned the destruction of the Church of England for the greater glory of the Church of Rome. He speaks no words of derision and contempt for the ceremonies alike of Catholics and Ritualists. Such language from the leader of a great political party is surely an insult to the intelligence of the nation. If Sir William Harcourt has the honesty of his "Evangelical" convictions why does he not come out like a man and advocate Disestablishment? He knows that to do that would be bad politics; and he also knows how the bigots will swell with sympathy when he thunders against the "disgraceful lives" of men whose ministry is "a lie and a danger to the Church."

It appears that Catholics throughout England have taken offence to themselves from Sir William Harcourt's words, although they were meant of course for Anglican clergymen exclusively. But, as far as we can see, the wound given to Catholic feelings cannot be more than sentimental. It is no Catholic funeral if the two factions in the Established Church clutch at each others' throats and pull their house down upon their heads. They are bound to succeed in doing so some day. It may stir the charity of English Catholics to see the persecutions of the 19th century against the Catholic Church revived against the Protestant Established Church in the 20th century. But after all is said and done what else is to be expected?

A Hope for Peace.

With Santiago and Manila both at the mercy of American guns, it is to be hoped that Spain will be forced to pay the inevitable penalty of national poverty. It is the greatest of modern crimes to be poor. It is a crime in the individual; and it robs the nation of the smallest spark of sympathy, Humanity (of the world), religion (of human nature), and justice (as administered by nations) all hold up their skirts to avoid contact with the beggar and the pauper. You may have been rich yesterday; but you are sure of the glassy stare of derision the moment your bankruptcy becomes known. Turks may butcher Christians by the thousand; but when a poor beggar of a Greek feels his gorge rise against it, the respectable community of nations know how to behave becomingly towards the wealthy Turkish gentleman. And what right has Spain to defend her possessions when Uncle Samuet has coveted them for the last fifty years and at length finds himself in a position to take all he wants by force? When Spain knew better days she generously worked with England to break the power of Napoleon. Her weakness today is another story.

It is Spain's duty to get out of this mess as speedily as possible, to see how far her physical condition can stand reconstruction, and to begin a new life, after she has taken all the medicine that is good for her. She has learned enough to know that friendship is deceit. Her ancient friendships have profited her nothing in her hour of need. Her ancient friendships have been as useless as her ancient guns, and ships. For years her sailors and soldiers have had neither modern guns nor ammunition for practising gunnery. They knew this when they went into battle to pit Castilian honor against American shells. There has been blood enough and to spare spent for honor's sake.

The spoil of Spain's colonies is within the grasp of the great American eagle; but the bird cannot fly off with it. There is bound to be a dispute, and perhaps a scuffle with the groundings of Europe, in a little while it may be Spain's turn to stand by and witness another phase of the game.

Future of the Philippines.

The discussion of the future of the Philippines has gone on apace and has brought out a great variety of opinions, says that typical American, Dr. Shaw, in the July number of The Review of Reviews. The surprising thing in the discussion has been the remarkable vigor and extent of the American sentiment in favor of the permanent possession of the islands as an American possession. It is coming to be understood throughout the country that annexation of Hawaii or the Philippines or Porto Rico does not by any means imply, either now or at any time in the future, admission into the sisterhood of Federal States whose government is provided for under the Constitution. It is as precisely as reasonable and possible that the United States should exercise general sovereignty over a distant island without bringing that island into the Federal Union as for Holland to exercise dominion in Java without bringing the people of that remote realm into domestic relations with the Netherlands. The question is not, after all, a theoretical one. Nobody need trouble his mind about its constitutional aspects. It is a strictly practical question, and one that should be considered boldly and fairly in the light of the interests of everybody really concerned. The people primarily affected are (1) the native inhabitants of the Philippines, (2) the Spanish whom we are disposing of, and (3) ourselves. We need not hesitate for a moment about the rights of the Spaniards. They have brought this war upon themselves, and the sun is setting upon their colonial empire. We shall put ourselves in their place in the Philippines, and we must then consider our own interests and the interests of the native population. We shall have to maintain a military occupation for a good while, no matter how eager we may be to rid ourselves of the whole business. It may be possible that under the friendly auspices of our military government there may be nursed into life some tolerable sort of native republican system.

Knights of St. John Convention.

DETROIT, June 29.—Yesterday was a busy one for the Knights of St. John, with church services in the early forenoon, a convention session lasting till nearly 2 o'clock, a parade in the afternoon and a reception in the evening. Of the day's events the parade was the picturesque feature and attracted the biggest crowd. The city hall clock was tolling the hour of five as the squad of mounted police rode in sight, emerging from the rendezvous at Grand Circus park. Behind them came a line of dignified and substantial looking men on foot and on horseback, the main part showing the colors of black and white. It took the line moving at a moderately rapid pace, 35 minutes to pass the municipal building, where the colors of the nation, wrought into half a hundred devices, smiled down upon them. The line of march was down Woodward, around on Jefferson, covering two or three east side streets, and finally back to Michigan avenue, where a turn was made to Washington. On this avenue, after a review of the line by Bishop Foley, supreme spiritual director of the organization, the line broke up.

There was a big crowd in front of the residence, but the bishop did not appear until the marchers began to arrive. He then appeared on the south porch, clad in the purple robe of his office, and at his side the venerable G. Hank, chancellor of the Cleveland diocese.

The ceremonies at St. Mary's church in the morning were impressive and unique. Bishop Foley presided. The sermon was preached by Rev. Joseph Halliwell, of St. Peter and Paul cathedral.

"I look upon you, Knights of St. John," said the preacher, as a manifestation of the Catholic laymen. Your flag is emblazoned with the cross, the insignia of noble ambitions and lofty purposes. You can do even more than the priests of the church. In the shop, the store, the busy thoroughfare, even in the home you can stand for the cause of christianity. Infidelity with its thousand stings is raining lead. On you knights falls some of the responsibility. You must study the doctrines of the church. You must teach your children—all them of the glories of the church in the olden days. One of the greatest evils of our modern educational system is that it begins with indifference to religion and consequently ends with infidelity. Religion must be the foundation of education.

The first session of the convention was a sort of prelude to the real business that is to follow. Mayor Maybury, Bishop Foley and Capt. John B. Toebener, chairman of the executive committee in charge of affairs, made welcoming speeches.

The election of officers was the most important business transacted by the convention, through the claims of the ladies for consideration. The election and the proposition to unite with the Knights Hospitaliers of Europe was voted upon and lost. Gen. West was nominated by Delegate Kenney for reelection as supreme commander, and after some speech-making, the secretary was instructed to cast the ballot of the convention for the nominee.

Gen. West in his speech of acceptance set forth his course during the pendency of the election, and demonstrated that he had not sought the office.

W. P. Horan of Colorado, was elected first vice-supreme commander by acclamation. Mr. Geiger, the incumbent in the office, who was also a candidate, withdrawing in favor of the Colorado man.

For second vice-supreme commander J. J. Noon of Rochester, N.Y., was elected by acclamation.

Louis N. Werner, of Sandusky, O., was elected supreme treasurer.

J. A. Todabender of Detroit was elected one supreme trustee, and H. J. Fries of Erie, Pa., the other.

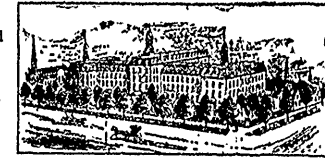

The fight for supreme secretary resulted in the re-election of M. J. Kane, of Buffalo.

The next place for the convention will be Cleveland. The Cleveland delegates to the convention insisted that that city did not really want the convention, but the convention wanted it in Cleveland; and had its way.

Brookville, Ont., June 27th '98. DEAR COUSIN FLO.—I received the prize to-day and I assure you it was much better than I expected as I thought I was only going to receive a card.

I fancy a good many of the cousins think I am an imaginary person. Some of them address their letters to the editor, some to the Catholic Register, Pub. Co., and some simply put Catholic Register.

I'm very fond of giving the cousins surprises; it is so much more agreeable to be surprised than to get only just what you expected isn't it?

By the way, Cousin Martina McGoe has not yet acknowledged the receipt of her prize; I hope she got it safely.

THE CELEBRATED RUSSIAN NOVELIST, TURGENIEFF.

The celebrated Russian novelist Turgeneff, tells a touching incident from his own life, which awakened in him sentiments that have colored all his writings.

When Turgeneff was a boy of ten his father took him out one day bird-shooting. As they tramped across the brown stubble a golden pheasant rose with a low whistle from the ground at his feet, and, with the joy of a sportsman, he raised his gun and fired.

Life was ebullient, but the instinct of the mother was stronger than death itself, and with a feeble flutter of her wings the mother bird reached the nest where her young brood were huddled, unconscious of danger.

"FATHER, FATHER!" he cried, "what have I done?" as he turned his horror-stricken face to his father.

"Well done, my son; that was well done for your first shot. You will soon be a fine sportsman."

"Never, father; never again shall I destroy any living creature. If that is sport I will have none of it.

Farm and Garden

Scab of potatoes is caused by a fungus plant working in the surface of the potato. The germs of it are very abundant and live for many years in the soil and also over winter on the potatoes.

Perfectly clean seed potatoes planted on land which is free from the scab fungus will always, and in many seasons, produce a crop of smooth, clean potatoes, no matter what may be the character of the soil; but apparently clean seed potatoes may have the germs of the scab fungus on their surface.

Scabby potatoes should be dug as soon as mature, since the scab fungus continues to grow on the potatoes as long as they are in the ground.

On the location of the poultry plant and the surroundings of the flock, more than anything else, depends the food which should be given during the summer.

When for any reason it is necessary to confine fowls in runs during the summer, some sort of shade should be furnished them.

BY MUTUAL CONSENT.

"I like to have young people around me," remarked Mrs. Kenyon. "I take a great interest in them."
"Quite agree with her. I had once met a man who said she was a born modder. I did not go so far as that; I thought that she possessed a natural gift for managing."
It was a bright morning in May, and she had strolled with me to the garden gate, against which three bicycles were propped.

As you know, when Mrs. Kenyon thinks, there is generally a result. And what is more, she has discovered a house which an architect unconsciously designed to meet Irene's requirements.
"How lucky?" said Dora.
"Yea— isn't it jolly? I have to settle within three days. This is the surprise in store for Irene."
Dora looked ahead at the others; they were about 200 yards in front.
"Where are you going to break the news to her?"
"Same time or other. It does not look as if she would welcome an interruption just now. Grierson, who is also studious, can always provide a subject of interest to her. That is why I encourage the acquaintance."

"Yea—quick work isn't it? She proposes that I shall leave it all in her hands."
"Then it's settled!" she exclaimed, gleefully.
"I am afraid it is."
"What is the name of this wonderful place?"
"I think it is called Hatton House." She broke into a laugh.
"Hatton House!" she cried. "I am afraid auntie will be disappointed."
"Why?" I asked, hopefully.
"Mr. Grierson just told me that last night he completed the purchase of the house."
"By Jove!" I cried. "How fortunate!"
Grierson and Dora Paget were some distance ahead by now.

Irene and myself are at present fulfilling our expressed intention of admiring one another at a distance—she from that desirable residence, Hatton House, where she is known as Mrs. Grierson, and I from a remote part of New Zealand, where Dora and myself are wandering on a prolonged honeymoon trip.—Black and White.

The Colonies of the Empire.
LONDON, June 18. In the House of Commons yesterday:
Mr. Arnold Forster asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether in view of the greatly extended naval and military requirements of the Empire on the Pacific involved by the acquisition of Wei-Hai-Wei and the extension of the colony of Hong Kong, the Government had given to the Dominion of Canada and the Australian Colonies, the opportunity of making some material contribution to the protection of Imperial interests in the Pacific, and of giving effect to the desire which their Governments have so frequently expressed to be allowed to share the honors as well as the burdens of the Imperial connection. Was it intended to invite them to contribute in some way most convenient to themselves to the naval or military defence of Wei-Hai-Wei or Hong Kong?
General Laurier—Before the right hon. gentleman answers that question I would like to ask whether he is aware that the Dominion of Canada has expended upwards of 120 million dollars in the construction of a railway, thereby making a great Imperial highway, and enabling the British Government to place reinforcements on the shores of the Pacific in a fortnight, and whether Canadians both individually and through the Canadian Government have not repeatedly placed their services at the disposal of the Imperial Government, and in case of emergencies have thereby enabled the reinforcements of British forces in three or four days.
Mr. Mr. Neil—And they are good Home Rulers too.
Up to this time Mr. Balfour had not been in the House, and he arrived just as General Laurier sat down.
Mr. A. J. Balfour—I should like the hon. and gallant member to repeat the question (laughter).
Mr. Speaker—Order, order. In view of its length it would be better to place it on the table (renewed laughter).
Mr. A. J. Balfour, in reply to Mr. Arnold Forster's question, said it touched matters of great and exceeding importance, not only to Hong Kong and Wei-Hai-Wei but to all Colonial Governments, and the subject would have to be examined as a whole, and could not be confined to one or two localities.
Cremation and an Alleged Crime.
An extraordinary affair has happened at the Columbarium or Cremation Chamber of Pere la Chaise Cemetery, Paris. The body of Madame Follon, Pierre, the chief defender of women's rights in France for many years, was to be conveyed to the Columbarium for incineration according to the wishes of the deceased, who was of the free-thinking school together with her husband. Friends were all awaiting the arrival of the remains when an employe of the Columbarium arrived and stated that the family of the deceased had delayed the funeral. This was done, it is said, at the instance of Madame Roger, a lady doctor, who is the deceased's sister, and as a devout Catholic is opposed to cremation. The body is now to be subjected to a post mortem examination, for allegations as to poisoning have been made by the family.
THE DEAR.—Mr. J. F. Kellook, Druggist, Perth, writes: "A customer of mine having been cured of deafness by the use of Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, I wish to Ireland, telling his friends there of the cure. In consequence I received an order to send half a dozen by express to Wexford, Ireland this week."

EXPOSURE OF THE INFAMOUS PARISIAN COMMISSION.

It has been fully decided not to allow the outrageous treatment of Catholic employes of the Government by the political party now in power at Ottawa to pass.

The Solicitor General forgot to mention that owing to the criticisms in this House last session, and owing to the reiterated demands of the engineer Mr. Devlin, another commission was appointed to investigate the commissioners on whose report the deputy-warden, storekeeper and engineer were dismissed.

Mr. Devlin, the late engineer, asked for this commission and it was appointed. Any hon. gentleman who refers to the report of the commissioners will find that some three pages of it were covered with charges against Mr. Devlin.

Should the case come under our attention any matter reflecting upon your official conduct notice will be given you, and ample opportunity offered to call witnesses if necessary to make clear your relation to them.

Mr. McGregor. Do you not know anything about it. Mr. Quinn. I do know about it, because having taken the interest in this matter last session, and knowing the manner in which these commissioners conducted the inquiry, I took the trouble of going to Kingston to be present at the investigation, and I heard the evidence adduced before the commissioner, and I know what I am speaking about.

Mr. Quinn. I do not think you do. Mr. Quinn. I am not responsible for the hon. gentleman's calumny or his power of thinking, but I leave the House to judge whether his thinking is right or not.

Mr. Quinn. I do not think you do. Mr. Quinn. I am not responsible for the hon. gentleman's calumny or his power of thinking, but I leave the House to judge whether his thinking is right or not.

I must also respectfully state that having no legal training, I am unable by myself without a counsel to conduct my defence in a way to do justice to myself and properly bring before your commission the facts upon which your commission shall have to report.

I therefore beg to request your commission to allow me the assistance of the legal counsel to properly defend not only my honour and position, but also to protect and defend the honour of this institution and of those of my co-officers who might be affected by the investigation.

St. Vincent de Paul, 20th April, 1897. The answer given by Mr. Noxon, the chairman of the commissioners, to this letter:

St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal 24th April, 1897. Sir.—The commissioners having considered your request to be represented by counsel during the investigation into the arrangement of the institution under your charge, we have to advise that no one is employed to prosecute the investigation to your prejudice, and it is not essential to an intelligent pursuit of our inquiries that counsel be employed by you to direct us in respect to them.

Should the case come under our attention any matter reflecting upon your official conduct notice will be given you, and ample opportunity offered to call witnesses if necessary to make clear your relation to them.

I am, sir, your obedient servant. (Sgd.) Jas. Noxon. Chairman.

Telephone Outmet, Warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. This is dated the 24th of April, 1897; yet my honorable friend made this statement:

The commissioners commenced their investigation into the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in the month of April, 1897. They proceeded with the investigation, and towards the month of August they had practically completed their labours.

So that these commissioners did not, in accordance with the letter which they sent to Mr. Ouimet, give him any notice of the charges brought against him, or the witnesses who gave evidence before him; but, contrary to their letter, they sent to the Department of Justice in August, 1897, a report, as a result of which Mr. Ouimet was dismissed from his position as warden.

My hon. friends will find by the report that whereas these specific charges were communicated to Mr. Ouimet about the 15th September, yet because of the absence of his counsel and witnesses, there were numerous delays, all resulting from the action of the warden, and I concurred in these delays asked for by him.

Now, my hon. friend, I am sure, stated then what he believed to be accurate in every particular. I do not charge him with lack of information on this question, and I charge the commissioners with having made these representations to the Department of Justice in order to cover up their own neglect of duty; because I am informed by Mr. Ouimet—leading counsel of Montreal, whom I am sure my hon. friend would believe even against the commissioners—that only on one occasion was the commission prevented from sitting as usual on account of the absence of Mr. Ouimet's counsel.

There was one occasion on which Mr. Greenshield was obliged to be absent from Montreal, and could not attend the sitting of the commission. On every other occasion when the commissioners could not proceed with their investigations, it was due to the absence of one of the commissioners. I think three adjournments occurred, either on account of the absence of one of the commissioners or on account of the inability of the commissioners to proceed, due solely to themselves.

no sitting at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary then; there was no chance given to him to cross-examine the witnesses who had given evidence against him, there was no chance given to call witnesses in his defence. They were poor men, and he was obliged to bring them to Montreal to the St. Lawrence Hall, and pay their expenses. He could not, of course, get one of the convicts of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary out of the prison to give evidence in his favor, and it was impossible to cross-examine them on any evidence they had given against him.

It was impossible for him to have reference to the documents and other articles in the penitentiary which were necessary to find evidence either against him or in his favor. He was put at enormous expense to engage counsel, and when this counsel attempted to cross-examine witnesses on questions that did not bear immediately on the particular charge against him, all reference to them was ruled out by the commissioners.

These are matters which the hon. gentleman could not know, but which the commissioners used as a piece of petty tyranny for the purpose of carrying out what they thought they had been appointed for, that was, the dismissal of Mr. Ouimet as warden.

What was the fact? I will not state this as a matter proven before the commission: I state it as a matter reported through the city of Montreal and through the village of St. Vincent de Paul; that, for example, when the commission first set to investigate the charges against Mr. Ouimet, commissioners were known to go to convicts in the penitentiary and put their arms over their shoulders, pat them on the back, and promise them rewards, that their terms would be shortened, and that they would give them privileges such as the wearing of moustaches if they would give information against the officers of the penitentiary.

For instance, a man named Viau, one of the most notorious criminals, possibly the most notorious criminal in Canada, a man who has spent the greatest part of his life in the penitentiary, was allowed by the commissioners to grow a beard and moustache and to wear civilian's clothes, and was promised as a reward for the information he would give against the officers, his release from the penitentiary.
