ST. JOHN, N. B., JANUARY 27, 1872.

The Throne and the People.

Loyalty to that Throne whose prerogatives are wisely and benevolently exercised, amid peace and prosperity, is but a synonym for true patriotism, and is the surest token of the corporate health of the nation. "The patriot Tell, the Bruce of Banockburn" were patriots indeed who, with their country's good alone at heart, righted acknowledged and clamant wrongs; not less they, who uphold that constitution under which a nation has flourished beyond precedent, are animated by the same spirit which has given to them undying fame: but to those who causelessly strive to subvert that constitution, History, if she notice them at all, will give a fitting niche in the temple—not of Fame. It is a fashion to talk of England having lost her former rank among the nations, and, with some, to attribute such decline to the evil influences of her Sovereignty and form of Government. The truth is, we suspect, that having taken the lead in civilization and enterprise under that very constitution, she has shown to others the way in which, advancing, they may attain to equal greatness; for in these days, more than ever, "knowledge is power." There has existed for years in England a discontented and subversive faction led by a few master-minds, with the useful adjunct of "the gift of gab," whose honest callings have been too narrow sphere for their greatness of soul. Their pioneer—a briefless barrister—suddenly became a mighty engine—a sort of axes against the Constitution walls; and, it must be admitted wrought great advantage to himself, for the Prime Minister of that day, and of this, in order to get rid of a troublesome assailant and to stop his mouth, found a remunerative vacancy in which the lion has become a lamb.

The recent vagaries of Sir Charles Dilke, M. P., have attracted general attention. Following in the wake of Bradlaugh, Odger & Co., now household words as disturbers of the peace, he has given to their doctrine and tenets his weight and authority as a member of the House of Commons, and has by some inexplicable process come out a full-fledged Republican. Now against Republicans, where misgovernment and well-founded dissatisfaction render a Republi- cian expedient, we have not a word to say. History and observation attest that the change to this form of government may be a good thing. Each individual case, however, must be viewed by the light of its own circumstances, and surely the state of England is not now so desperate as to call for, or even to warrant the suggestion of the overthrow of the ancient constitution and the establishment in its stead of a form of government totally unsuited to the nation generally. That this is the opinion of the vast majority of Her Majesty's immediate home-subjects is sufficiently evident from the manner in which the respectable Press of every shade of politics, and in some cases those whom he regarded as partisans, have treated Sir Charles and his unseemly rhommonade. We can profess no sympathy for him in the humilia- tion of defeat and his retreat to France. He and his mates are having a bad time—and are now sadly down in their luck. Let us hope they will learn wisdom and abandon vicious courses for good—their own and everybody else's.

The decided expression of national opinion, which has thus been made, is mainly attributable to the recent illness of the Prince of Wales. Never has loyalty, in its true spirit of affection, been more nobly evinced than during the past few weeks. But one feeling has been expressed, and we gladly believe, felt—that of sympathy with the Royal sufferer and his anxious relatives, coupled with the heartfelt prayer for his recovery. We may not do evil, that good may come of it, but a seeming evil, not our own creation, oftentimes works out our good, and proves a blessing. Bulletin flashed hourly through the land, and from land to land—now gloomy, then lightening, and again gloomier than before, until, under Providence, the disease has succumbed to medical skill, aided by a constitution naturally strong, and the life tenacity of youth. No stronger proof could have been given that the Queen and all her interests live in the hearts of her people; and if evidence were wanting of her interest in and affection for it, it is amply supplied by that queenly, yet simple, and above all womanly Letter, than which no love-token could be more welcome to the overwhelming majority which gratefully owns the benefice of the sway. Gracious and well-timed, this letter has done more to cement the union between the Throne and the people, and strike a blow at the self-seeking machinations of political firebrands than could any other agent, moral or physical. We trust the effect will be enduring, and that shallow pretences, put forth by would-be demagogues, as bait to catch the ignorant and unwary on the hook of self-interest, indifferently veiled in the guise of patriotism, will be vain and futile.

"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." Yes, and the head, too, which seems likely to wear it. Her sex and virtues have not shielded even the Queen herself from the attacks of unmanly and unprincipled assailants, and of all her subjects the best abused for some years past has been her son, the heir to the Throne. For ourselves, having heard all the current stories, we are content to believe a small fraction of them, knowing that there are thousands of his fellow-subjects, high and low, but all less open to public criticism, whose lives can less easily bear the test of honest analysis than can the life of the Prince of Wales; and we should not forget that his position, exposed to every sort of temptation, demands for him a margin and leniency in criticism. Let us not be too eager to condemn, and even when acts of dereliction are alleged against him, if proved, would justly provoke the indignation and pity of all right-minded men and women, let such feelings be smothered until certainty shall warrant their expression. Her Majesty's Colonial subjects heartily join in the general congratulation and thanksgiving for the Queen's apparent recovery from dangerous illness. England neither needs nor desires a Republic, nor does she look to replacing her ancient Constitution by a Dictator and Tribunes of the People in the persons of Bradlaugh, Odger and Dilke. The epithet "good" is applied to some sovereigns whose history seems hardly to warrant it; it will be the just epithet of Victoria in time.

MATTERS IN GENERAL.

Founding New Religions.

(From the New York Post.)

American clergymen have adopted, with in the last ten years, an entirely novel procedure when disconcerned with the tenets of their own sects. Instead of joining some existing denomination, as formerly, they go off by themselves, carry on their own church, and establish an independent religion. In the history of the world we have many instances in which great leaders have arisen and established new sects, whose opinions and services were founded upon new principles of religious thought. I am attempting to avoid the alleged formalism and spiritual coldness of an established church, the followers of Wesley founded one of the most powerful sects in Christendom. Still greater were the changes in America, when the Unitarians, and especially of Boston, so largely contended. George Fox founded a peculiar sect, whose influence, in this country, has been very important. But the frequent establishment of "new religions," which seems to have become a "fashion," has nothing in common with these great religious convulsions of history. Insignificant novelties, such as the "New Thought," novelties are either the result of differences in men of taste, or else they are such as cannot be traced to any definite cause. The following incident of the Albion Division is a little better than the old one. Mr. Hepworth, a Unitarian minister, was asked whether he intended to renounce or start a church "on his own hook," decided on the latter, and with which side which may finally be carried. Mr. Cheney objected to the word "regional," and proposed instead of an independent Episcopal Church, which he had so recently obtained the authority of his Bishop. Mr. Ewer insisted on vestments, candles, and the like, and the two parties agreed to meet at the Bishop's residence. The Unitarians gathered his little flock, and with the toleration of the Bishop, he conducted a church to his own taste. Mr. Threlkeld, for instance, was asked if he intended to meet at the same place as the Albionites, he said, "I am not so far from the right one. Mr. Smalley, for instance, very clearly said that the British reply to our statement of the case, which will come under arbitration, will probably be paraded, and that we have good right to parade it. That the 'Yankee document' is all Buncombe is another common expression. That it is meant to influence the President and Congress, we are not sure, but I think my American act was never done or uttered which was not really explainable to the British mind on this theory."

It appears, according to the statements of a great number of intelligent American witnesses in England, that the popular understanding of the treaty was that the formalities of the treaty were to be left to the arbiters, and that the British reply to our statement of the case, which will come under arbitration, will doubtless prove great surprise in America.

"The American case, he says, "has started the British public, and, for ought I know, the British Government, by the extent of its severity, not less than by its apparent statesmanship, in all our grounds of complaint. The British reply will, perhaps, create equal surprise in America, and, I am sure, will be far from the right one. Mr. Smalley, for instance, very clearly said that the British reply to our statement of the case, which will come under arbitration, will probably be paraded, and that we have good right to parade it. That the 'Yankee document' is all Buncombe is another common expression. That it is meant to influence the President and Congress, we are not sure, but I think my American act was never done or uttered which was not really explainable to the British mind on this theory."

Now that the Court of Arbitration has adjourned, he thinks that there will be plenty of time to consider the attitudes which the two countries actually hold toward each other. Mr. Smalley says that "so long as we have no reason to distrust the fairness of the arbitrators, we can afford to tolerate one more display of British infidelity." We may be sorry for it, but it will be the best epithet of Victoria in time.

A Good Story, though an Old One.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN CAT.

Jim Stewart, sometimes called the "Commodore," is the most noted darky in Erie. He is a good natured, shrewd old fellow, somewhat adduced to doing business, and carries a cane. And that Bangor, did remain in quiet and blissful oblivion of the passionate appeals of the numerous speakers, till at last one here, becoming unusually denunciatory, he opened his eyes, gazed around with a satisfied expression, and cooed a sigh in his mouth, which shortly after rolled down his shiny bosom to the floor, his head rested in his former attitude. He sat the meeting out.

Property at Auction.

At noon to day, at Chubb's Corner, Mr. Hobday sold at auction the property of the late Mr. Edward Barlow, Esq., consisting of a lot, on the corner of Duke and Duke streets, 260 ft. front, and another building facing on Duke street, 40x100. The property was offered for sale by order of the Court of Equity for the benefit of the children of the deceased, the widow waiving her right of dower. The highest bid was $6,000, the upce price being $8,00. It was bid in by H. W. Fitch, Esq. The property brings in a rental of $500.

Sleighting Party.

Yesterday evening a pleasant sleighing party, marshalled by the courtly Common Clerk, left the "Victoria" at 6:30, arriving at the "Clarendon" at 8:30. Mr. Nase, of the Street Railway, furnished transportation, consisting of four-horse sleighs, three double and two teams, and a coach for the Mayor and Corporation. The Mayor engaged all expenses, gave the interest of the Intercolonial Railway and the purchase of the North West Territory, was five and a half millions of dollars. In another year the prospect is good for six and a half millions, and in a very few years seven and a half millions.

ANDREW CUSHING, ESQ.,

who is lately taking a great deal of interest in temperance matters, spoke to the point on the advancement of temperance. His remarks were brief, but he did not wonder why any other subjects, an example which was not generally followed.

W. ELDER, ESQ.,

of the Telegram, in his excellent speech, not exclusively a temperance one but on public affairs in general. The progress of the city required a third member, and probably he thought he would answer as well if not better than any one else he knew. He didn't say so exactly, but such could be gathered from his remarks.
