POETRY.

Grandmother's Promises.
Grandmother sits in her chair at ease,
Her faded eyes have a dreamy look;
A Bible is open upon her knees,
But her hands are clasped on the sacred book.
Children have left her and scattered wide;
Some of them wander far over the sea,
And some of them sleep on the green hill-side.
In the sweet sad memory of a used to be.
Grandmother sees them in a hazy dream,
They are creeping back through the wastes of years!
"Still mine, thank God," and a rainbow's gleam
Lies banked in the mists of her silent tears.
There is Baby Margie, who died in her
When the snow lay white over hill and sea;
But grandmother reads she is safe from harm
In the bosom of Him who said, "Come unto Me."
There's Richard—will Richard—who ran away,
And sailed forever from earthly shore;
Mad, blue oceans may lose their spray—
Up there, and the sea shall be no more
And Walter, the wayward—has he been reclaimed?
She wonders if feet like his may stand;
She turns the pages—the doubt is shamed,
For "none shall ever pluck them out of My hand."
She closes the book with a sigh of rest,
She has banished doubting and banished care;
Her chin drops down on her heaving
breast,
And grandmother sits asleep in her chair.

SELECT STORY.

KIT GRALE.
BY JAMES T. MACKAY.

Pint, Kit," says Tass, and trims the sheet a little closer.
On, across the broad bay, breezily now along the shore of the point; then the neck drops behind; they are clear of the land. The boat rises and falls on the tumbling waves of the open sound.
"Luff, Kit, luff a little. There, stiddy, keep her so," says Marlin. "Run your eye along the line of the keel. Ye see that white spire on the north shore, east of the little village on the hill, with the woods behind it? Keep her nose to that meetin' house."
The wind veered steadily around through the southern quarter, blowing fresh and steady. On went the Bess before it, crowding ahead dancingly, making way swiftly, drawing the northern shore on nearer and plainer.
They ran in to within a couple of miles of the shore; the wind veered nearly west, the sky clear.
"Hard a-port!" called Marlin, then. "Let her go about."
"So, Kit—keep her there. Square afore the wind."
They ran down the coast a mile or so.
"Port again, Kit—hard a-port—there! Pint her up a little more—stiddy—so-o-o! You see Goose light, Kit? Keep her nose square for the tower. It's high onto dead low tide now. We keep the line 'tween the church' an' the light, as, if we're lucky we'll sight about four foot of yellow spar. There's ain't much of any drift, an' I think we'll hit it. There ain't no need to look out till that 'ere clump o' cedars on the rocky point there to the west, bears square abeam to wind'ard. Arter that, look sharp."
They held on half a mile or so, on the same course, sailing close on the wind. Then the cedars drew on gradually, until they stood off right abreast.
"Now then," Tass sung out, "hold her stiddy an' keep your eyes about ye."
On they foamed, straight for the light, four keen eyes watching intent ly. But they saw no spar. Only the tumbling waves, seething, sullen and tipped with foam. On they went, Kit's heart sank. No mast in sight on either hand. Presently Marlin turned.
"Luff, Kit," he said, "hard a lee! Put her about. We missed her that time. Guess she must 'a' fall off to leeward, sailin' so close to the wind. Now then, full for the spire, an' don't let her fall off, Kit—if anything, luff her a pint."
The boat jibbed round, and filled away before the wind on the port quarter. Again they searched keenly, anxiously, they saw no spar; on they foamed. Kit's heart weighed like lead, and full of fear. The clump of cedars drew on only too swiftly. Another quarter of a mile, and they will be abreast. She stood up in her excitement, strained her sharp eyes—oh, how eagerly! She forgot the helm one moment; the boat's head fell away to leeward. Tass did not notice. Suddenly he saw.

"Luff, Kit," he shouted—"hard a lee! Hard, I say! You're off the course three pints."
She seized the tiller, but she did not luff. Her face was radiant as an angel's. She laughed and pointed east.
"Hurrah!" she cried—"hurrah! hurrah! The mast! the mast!"
Sure enough, there it was, the tip of a mast two feet above the tide. Never was a sight more joyful to heart of man than those two feet of wave washed spar in Kit's glad eyes that day!
They ran alongside. The tide was rising now; the waves washed over it every time. It was somewhat out of the line between light and spire. It was deeper in the water, too. But for Kit's momentary forgetfulness they must have gone by and missed it. It was hit or miss, the simplest accident decided—chance, providence, fate, what you will. Marlin tore a shred of old muslin—tied it to the mast.
"I'll help us next time, Kit," he said. "Now for Rutherfordy!—fifteen mile to wind'ard. Wind veer, half no'the, an' pretty fresh. Put her about, Kit—hard a-lee—close on the wind—there! Head her fur Kessel Pint. A long leg an' a short un."
Away they went, bowing breezily bounding on the tumbling rollers. The sun sank behind the blue hills in the far northwest. Night drew on slowly. The light house lanterns flashed out one by one; the dusk deepened; the brightness died out of the west; it grew chilly. Old Tass got out the shawl which he had brought for Kit. She wrapped it about her and sat silent—steering on, on. Old Tass sat a little forward on the weather side, his eyes wandering, his gray locks straggling from under his cap. He was a shrewd, kindly old fellow. Frank and free as the sea he loved without its deceitful wiles. If he looked you, you had a friend through thick and thin. If you wronged him, you made an enemy for life—not treacherous, but fearless, and almost unforgetting. He sat idle and let Kit steer; he knew she was harassed by anxious thoughts of her father, alone at home, and that it was charity to let her have this task, that necessitated continual watchfulness, and might partially dissipate her gloomy meditations. He felt, as he watched her assiduous, a strange mingling of pity and admiration. So they sped on. The full moon swung up out of the east, and silvered the crested waves. The island shore approached nearer and nearer. They opened Hilbury bay after a while, and far in could see the gleam of the low light on the bar. Then Kessel Point drew on abeam, and hid it from sight. Their course was straight for gull reef. They ran close in; the white line of the waves washed ledge stretched shoreward before them. Then Marlin said: "Luff, Kit;—Pat her about! Luff a-lee!"
The wind had veered meanwhile more to the north of west. The boat played off again on the starboard tack. Kit looked back at the long, low neck. Beyond that ridge, only two miles away as the crow flies, was her home. How she longed to know what was going on there—how she fretted herself with anxious fears! Would she have gone on then had she known what a day would bring forth upon that spray white reef! She did not know; and the Bess went foaming on, northward, close to the wind.
The clocks in the town were striking the hour as they ran up Rutherfordy harbor through the anchored vessels, lying quietly head to wind, their red and green lanterns swinging in the shrouds. It was 2 o'clock.
The boat to the pier was tied to the pier, and went away up the shrouds. "Ye're quite clear," asked Marlin, "as to w what he read:

ROTHBERTY, July 20th, 1858.
I hereby freely promise that, if I shall be shown, by Catharine Grale, of Kessel Point, the present position of the school on O'ward, and shall refuse or delay to pay immediately after to Catharine Grale, on showing the advertised reward, I will pay to her an additional sum of equal amount ten days from date.
"I won't sign it," he said. "Dye thing I'm a robber, miss?"
"Then I've nothing more to say," she said. She walked out.
"Come, Cap'n Tass," she said. He doesn't want the schooner."
They started down the street. Ingram came running out. "What's the good o' bein' so sharp? I'll sign the course paper 'f ye'll gimme a chance."
Two hours later they were in the Bess, in line with Goose Neck light and the white spire. They found the mast without much trouble. They then ran into the nearest harbor, went all three to a tavern. Ingram counted out the money, grudging every cent. Kit gave him the paper he had signed, and he went away. Kit and old Tass were together again alone. It was past 8. He made her eat some breakfast, and saw her safely off in the 8:30 express.
CHAPTER V.
Arriving in the city, she went directly to a shop in Holly street, where she knew a young man from Hilbury was clerk. Tom Denham was very glad to see Kit, as most who knew her were. He was homesick—poor boy!—in that great Babel, and the sight of a home face did him good. Kit told him she would like to have him go with her as witness to a little matter of business; and trade being dull, he easily obtained leave of absence.
"I'm going to Ballion lane, D. n. ham," she said—"No. 209. I don't know the way. You'll show me."
Tom was only too proud. They found the place easily enough. Mr Wyckel was in. He rose politely to receive them, made them sit down, but he had not the honor of their acquaintance, could be serve them any way?
"My name is Catharine Grale," Kit said, "You hold a some property of my father's."
His manner was cold.
"Ab,

tears. It's all in the story books. But I tell you beforehand it's no use trying it on me. I'm too old a bird. I tell you I want my money, and I'm going to have it. The court will grant a decree of foreclosure in a few days. Then you'd better look out for other lodgings. That's all, I believe."
"Not quite," said Kit. Her face flushed hot with pride and scorn. Her lips were white, her teeth firm set. "Not quite all, Abraham Wyckel. I despise your base imputations. Do your worst. I wouldn't take a penny from your hand if I died. Only a coward would strike a man that's down already. Only a brute would trample on him. But I defy you. You will not sell us out!"
"By heaven, I will!" he swore, rising in wrath. "Who'll hinder me?"
"I will," she answered quiet and firm.
"You will? Ha, ha! that's good," he laughed. "How'll you do it, my lady?"
"Here and now," she said. I offer you payment in full of all debts, interest and costs. Here is the money. Make out the bill."
She took out the gold and laid it on the table. The lawyer was utterly abashed—shamed, humbled. He turned away to hide his face—sat apart and wrote the bill. He handed it to her without a word. Debt, interest, costs, disbursements, it read, six hundred and odd. She counted out the money, pushed it across the table with the bill.
"Receipt it," she said.
She put the receipt and the rest of the money into her pocket. Without a word she went out with Denham.
"By George, Kit!" says Tom, "didn't you cut up rough, though?"
The angry flush went from her face. She laughed; she could have danced in the street. She had been thirty hours already in constant action in the open air. She felt no weariness; indeed she was rested more than she had been these months. She felt fresh and light as a bird. The debt paid off, principal and interest—three hundred and odd in hand to start afresh! The thought made her bound and laugh. What would he think? What would he say? How he would laugh when she told him the story! She bade Tom good-by. Now for home! She longed to fly—home, home! She ran along, threading her way through the press and through—down Bullion, up Ship. She forgot that the boat did not leave for hours. She went aboard and waited. She could not read or sit. She walked about—wore away the time as she might. At last they got off. At the second landing—the water was low—the steamer stuck fast on the bar. There was no help for it; they must wait till the tide went down and rose again. The delay was annoying enough to anyone. It fretted Kit sorely. But she gave passed, though very wearily.
It was eight o'clock when the gang-way was thrown out at Wilbury dock. Kit hurried ashore and ran away up the road. It was high tide, the calm waters rippled and gleamed in the moonlight through the trees that fringed the road. Her heart was full of anxiety. She longed, yet feared to know how things got on at home. She ran along quickly. Turning a bend, she could see the poplars before the house, she white beach below them. But the foam was nowhere to be seen. A vague dread strikes to her heart. Where could it be? Where could it be? (Old Cracker could not have brought her home. Kit hoped so, but feared. She ran up to the house, looked in at the living room. She went one in the kitchen. Bridget was there. Her eyes were

"It's no good, Bridget," he says. "There's no help—no help." I was 'fared he'd be doin' somethin' afore ye'd get home. But he samed more cheerfuller like to night, he's expected ye. But when ye didn't come he got gloomy again. He came in for nist the door after a bit, an' says he, brighter than he'd been, 'Bridget,' says he, 'I'm goin' to bed. If Miss Kit comes in, till her I was tired and couldn't wait. Good night, Bridget,' he says, 'ye've been a faithful girl to us, an' God'll reward ye.'"
There was a welcome home for you, friend. Pray heaven you may never come home to the like.
Kit ran up stairs, listened at the door, heard no sound. She opened it ajar, listened again. That was still sleep—no breath, no sigh. She pushed the door open, went in. The bed was smooth—no one had lain there that night. She wrung her hands one moment. "Too late!" she cried. "Too late, too late! Gone—gone!"

A BRIGHT, HEALTHY BOY whose life was Saved by GRODER'S SYRUP.
A Mother Speaks to Mothers.

THE GRODER DYSPEPSIA CURE CO. GENTLEBLEN—My child is the picture of health to-day because of the active use of Groder's Syrup.
My child was born with a weak stomach, and was very nervous and irritable. He would not eat, and he would not sleep. I was very anxious for him, and I had heard of Groder's Syrup, so I bought a bottle. I gave him a few drops, and he began to eat and sleep. I gave him more, and he became a healthy, happy child. I can truly say that Groder's Syrup has saved my child's life, and I can recommend it to all mothers who have children with weak stomachs and nervous habits.

Local and Provincial.

Wolfville Division is expecting a visit from the Division at Avonport on Monday evening.

A ledge of the Independent Order of Oddfellows is to be instituted at Kings-ton Station this evening.

Rev. Mr. Martell occupied the Baptist pulpit last Sunday morning and Rev. A. Coburn in the evening.

A 10 per cent. and 15 per cent. Discount Sale at the Glasgow House. Now is the time to secure bargains. See adv.

Miss Gliska did not hold a reception on Thursday evening as announced last week, but will give due notice of a gathering to be held early in March.

The Division at Greenfield are to hold a social in the church at that place on Thursday, March 21. The object is to raise funds to carry on their work. A good time will no doubt be had, and a liberal patronage is asked for.

Mr. and Mrs. Chase wish to thank all the friends who have shown so much kindness to them in their late affliction, especially would they express their appreciation of the kindness of the Lodge and others in sending flowers and other tokens of sympathy.

A horse attached to one of the meat wagons of the Perian Station and left the post in front of his shop on Thursday morning became startled and in some way got astride the post. In trying to free himself the horse badly kicked the pump, but otherwise no serious damage was done.

We are requested to state that the retail to be given this evening by the young ladies of the Perian Station in Atlantic Hall will begin at 8 o'clock; doors open at 7.30. Tickets are on sale at the drug and book stores. Those who wish to attend should secure them early as the number issued is limited. A pleasant evening will no doubt be spent.

Our Vegetable Worm Syrup is warranted by us to be effective, safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Drug stores. As most of our readers are aware by this time there is to be another carnival in this town this evening. This time it is to be a masquerade, with a half-mile race thrown in. The carnival will thus be especially interesting and no doubt will be very largely attended. The usual as usual has a good programme prepared.

The late Mark Curry of Windsor left an estate valued at one hundred thousand dollars. After providing for religious and benevolent purposes. He gives $20,000 to Acadia college; $20,000 to Baptist home missions; $10,000 to Baptist ministers' annuity fund. The balance goes to charitable purposes.

The British American Book and Tract Society has appointed Mr. E. W. Morton of Wolfville, collector for King's and Annapolis counties, thus filling the vacancy caused by the death of the late James Elder, of Wolfville. Mr. Morton worked for the Society in Westmoreland and Albert counties, N. B. during the summer of 1890 with much acceptance, hence his re-appointment for this field of labor.—Beverly Register.

TEA!

Thomas Garway, merchant, London, wrote of Tea, 1687:—"It maketh the body active and lusty, helpeth the headache, causeth good appetite and digestion, strengtheneth the memory, overcometh superfluous sleep, etc."

To MAKE A PERFECT CUP OF TEA. Boiling water is the secret of good tea making.

Put fresh water in the kettle every time you start to make tea. Don't use water that has been some time in the kettle.

Of all teapots, the little Brown Earthenware one is the very best for the purpose. Heating the pot is a great essential in making good tea.

Use about a teaspoon to each person. Allow the infusion to stand only from five to seven minutes before pouring out first cups; after pouring these out, add enough hot water for second cups. Very long infusion spoils good tea, bringing out the tannin which imparts a bitter flavor. The finer the tea, the more it suffers from long drawing.

If tea must be kept some time drawn, it is always best to pour off the infusion at the proper time into a second teapot, leaving the tea leaves out. All that portion of the tea that can be dissolved is extracted before the expiration of ten minutes; the infusion is then at its best; from that time, if allowed to stand, it loses its flavor and becomes dull and bitter.

The above directions apply to Tea of Good Quality and Strength such as,

"Empire No. 1," "Union Blend," and other choice brands sold by us.

We sell a cheap black Tea (good value), $3 lbs. for 50 cents.

Choice Tea in handsome 3 & 5 lb. canisters.

Berwick Notes.

I. E. Bill, "the boy preacher," occupied Rev. E. E. Daley's pulpit last Sunday morning, and in the evening gave a lecture on "Spurgeon." There were large congregations at both services. The sermon and lecture were highly appreciated. The "boy" gives promise of becoming a man.

Mr. Owen N. Chipman preached his first sermon at Weston, in the afternoon, to a full house, and was well received. Pastor Daley was present and assisted at each service. Mr. Chipman is the fifth licentiate Baptist from Berwick during the past three years.

L. K. Bennett died of paralysis at Windsor, on Saturday last, where he had gone on business. On account of failing health, Mr. Bennett secured the services of C. E. Sanford, Esq., to take charge of his furniture business for the winter, with the hope that with rest, health would be regained. But finding his hope not likely to be realized, made his will and disposed of his business and household goods. During his short sojourn here, Mr. Bennett won the esteem and confidence of all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, and in his demise Berwick has sustained a great loss.

The Greatest Cure of the Age for Indigestion is K. D. C. Have you tried it?

Weston Items.

Messrs. A. Woodworth and T. Selfridge, each sold last week a pair of fine beef cattle to an east Cornwallis man, to finish for "Easter."

Mr. Woodworth still holds one of the largest pair of oxen in the county—one of which girls over eight feet.

D. Bent, Esq., sold a pair of fat cattle on Tuesday, for the Halifax market.

Considerable beef is still being fattened and held for Easter.

The fine harvest of hay and oats, the past season, has been conducive to extra beef-making this winter.

There are 100 tons more hay in Weston and Somerset than will be fed this winter.

"Advice" to a Boy.

In one of the large railroad offices in this country is a comparatively young man, who is at the head of a large department. When he entered the service of the company, five years ago, he was green and awkward. He was given the poorest paid work in the department.

What a Little Oil will Do.

A drop of oil and a feather may make the difference between misery and comparative comfort. Where have I heard the delightful story of the feather that cured the nervous family? How the doctor weaked and cracked, and the delicate wife shivered and was miserable and the tired, overworked husband fidgeted and then growled and then snarled, and finally swore, while the children whined and fretted and quarreled; and all the while no one knew what was the matter.

An Objection.

Railway corporations are often considered heartless and soulless, but the farmer of the following tale evidently considered them senseless as well—perhaps with as much real reason.

A crude old farmer, living on the line of a recent railway survey, and who is owner of a barn of large dimensions with huge swinging doors on both sides, observed a posse of surveyors busily driving a row of stakes through the premises that extended to the very centre of his big barn.

The elder Baron Rothschild had the walls of his bank placarded with the following curious maxims:—Carefully examine every detail of your business. Be prompt in everything. Take time to consider and then decide quickly. Dare to go forward. Bear troubles patiently. Be brave in the struggle of life. Maintain your integrity as a sacred thing. Never tell business lies. Make no useless acquaintances. Never try to appear something more than you are. Pay your debts promptly. Learn how to risk your money at the right moment. Shun strong liquor. Employ your time well. Do not reckon upon chance. Be polite to everybody. Never be discouraged. Then work hard and you will be certain to succeed.

A Seasonable Warning.

Do not allow yourself to feel "chilly." It may indicate a circumstance or physical condition either of which can be modified by prompt attention. If you are chilly from a draught, move away from it, stop it off or put on more clothes. If the coldness arises from a physical condition, you are probably taking cold. Heat a brick and sit with your feet upon it until you are heated through. This will do much to prevent a cold taking hold of you.

I know of nothing that needs watching so much as a lie: it is worse than a sore thumb, or a kittle of biting soap.—John Billings.

The Need for Work to promote Social Purity.

The presentation of this theme finds a suggestive text in these lines of the poet: "Remain not folded in thy pleasant joys, Within the narrow circle of thy ways, Content if thine are blessed. Cold is thy fire, If on thy heartbeats only; and thy bread, Bitter, which feeds alone thy selfish blood; Thy house a prison, if it holds thy world; Thy heaven a fiction."

It is true that the "pleasant joys" of our own social relations, our home in which husband and wife, parent and child, brother and sister find mutual support and happiness, our school which opens to us every intellectual light, our religious association which calls the soul away from the domination of the flesh to the exalted emotion and peaceful heights of spiritual illumination,—all these things hold us within a "narrow circle" of personal ease and satisfaction. But there is a sense of relationship—the bond of human brotherhood—the very literal fact that we are all members of one great family—that will not let us rest within the narrow circle of our own beloved walls.

The work of the White Cross societies has already enlisted thousands of young men, and we need not doubt that its levelling truth has found disciples in time to save the race. This saving work for mankind is matched by influences that directly promote the well being and safety of young womanhood. The higher education of women, along with the efforts of reformers to change the political status of women, is bringing about quite a new order of things. Educated women are more and more entering upon independent, self-supporting work, hence the need of her purity and protection. It is a privilege to contribute in however humble a way to this result. Let the sons and daughters alike be held to the highest standard of purity, and delicacy, and strength as attributes of human nature. Not in our own strength or wisdom, but keeping close to the Divine source of all strength and wisdom, may we hold ourselves ready to spend and be spent in our Father's service.

Moderate Drinking—The Devil's Road with a steep downward grade to the Debt of Destruction.

The First Glass—Satan knocks at your door, and you say, Please sir, walk in.

Legal Sausage and Moral Sausage—The curry-comb and brush, both useful in different ways.

Hard Cider—Hard every way, but hardest for those who drink it.

Alcohol and Tobacco—The pipe to drink and the pipe to smoke, make it pretty dear paying the Piper.

We do not hear people say that mad dogs are all right—its only their executive lites that do injury. Yet that would be as sensible as to say the liquor traffic is all right—it is only the excessive use of liquor that does harm.

The more others are untrue the more God needs loyalty in us.

Dock Blood Purifier.

Victory after victory is the record of Dock Blood Purifier, which never fails to do good. Read what Mrs Outhouse says about it: "From MRS HENRY OUTHOUSE, TIVERTON, N. S.

About three years ago I was sick with consumption, which was brought on by a heavy cold. I employed a doctor who advised me to use emulsions. I did so but they did me no good. I was growing weaker fast—my cough was very bad with night sweats. In fact my parents had given me up as I belong to a consumptive family. Two of my sisters and one brother had already died with that dread disease. As my appetite was very poor a friend advised me to use Dr. Norton's Dock Blood Purifier. I got six bottles, the use of which soon gave me a craving for food. Soon my cough was better and I began to gain in strength. I used twelve bottles of the medicine and by that time had gained forty-four pounds in flesh with good health. Have had no symptoms of any lung trouble since and believe that Dr. Norton's Dock Blood Purifier saved my life.
