Legal Decisions.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office—whether distributed to his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that referring to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, removing and leaving them uncollected for a period evidence of intentional fraud.

POETRY.

Plaint of the Editor.

Would you ask us why this dunning
Why the sad complaints and murmurs, Murmurs loud about delinquents,
Who have read the paper gladly, Read what they have never paid for,
Read with pleasure and with profit,
Read the essays and the poems,
Full of wisdom and instruction;
Read the notes of current topics,
Carefully compiled and written.
Should you ask us why this dunning,
We will answer, we will tell you.

From the printer, from the mailer,
From the kind old paper-maker,
From the landlady, from the "dovet,"
From them all there comes a message Message kind but firmly spoken—
"Please to pay the bill you owe us."

Sad it is to hear such message
When our funds are all exhausted;
When the last bank-note has left us;
When the red cents all have vanished;
Come to pay the paper bills,
Come to pay the printing bills,
Come to pay the landlady's tribute,
Come to pay the clerk and newsboy,
Come to pay the city taxes—
Come to pay for food and tatters
And for your faithful helpers.

Sad it is to turn our ledger,
Turn the leaves of this old ledger,
Turn to see what sums are due us,
Due for volumes long since ended,
Due for years of pleasant reading,
Due for years of anxious labor,
Due despite our patient waiting,
Due despite our constant dunning.

Would you lift a burden from us?
Would you give us a special from you?
Would you take a pleasant slumber?
Would you have a quiet conscience?
Would you read a paper paid for?
Send your overdue subscription,
Send the money that you owe us.

SELECT STORY.

Wolfe the Ranger.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.—Continued.

"Constance" murmured the marquis, nothing.

"Look—this paper!" she cried, breathlessly. "It is my father's!"

The marquis nodded.

"Yes, dearest. I found it in the hat the night I did not understand it—"

Constance rose, and her eyes darted toward the white face of Rawson Fenton.

"He knows!" she panted. "He—the thief!"

The marquis put up his hand to restrain her, but she would not be silenced even by him.

"Wolfe, that man—he has robbed my dead father—"

She could not continue for a moment, and the marquis and Lord Elliot exchanged glances. They neither of them understood in the slightest why the sight of this half sheet of paper should have roused such passionate indignation in her; but it seemed as if Rawson Fenton knew and comprehended, for a swift flash passed over his face, leaving it whiter than before, and his head dropped.

"What is it, Constance?" asked the marquis.

"I'll take my leave," said Rawson Fenton, in a hoarse voice. "You have not seen the last of me, Lord Brake-spare—"

"Not yet," said Lord Elliot. "You are in a great hurry to go all at once; you will wait and hear what Miss Grahame has to say;" and he motioned to him to stand still. "Now, Miss Grahame, if you can throw any light upon any villainy this fellow has been guilty of, pray do so."

ingly, but with a sidelong glance at Constance and the paper she still held.

"Read it," she said, in a low voice to Wolfe.

"I cannot," he said; and he handed it to Lord Elliot.

He scanned it gravely.

"It seems to be a scientific formula, a chemical receipt of some kind," he said.

"It is," said Constance. "It is the secret which my father discovered in the bush." Wolfe, Lord Elliot—she turned from one to the other eagerly—"the last—our land—was full of gems, opals and others, but they were locked in the hard rock, and could not be got out without breaking, and my father—the tears gathered in her eyes—
"he was a doctor, a great chemist; he worked and toiled day after day, trying to discover some means of separating the gems from the rock, and one night—her voice broke—"the night you came—she clung to Wolfe—"he came in from his laboratory to the room where I—and this man—were, and said that he had made the great discovery.
Wolfe, it drove him mad. But he was not mad when he told us that he had succeeded, though the man persuaded me that he was. My father had made the discovery; he said that he would be rich—why, Wolfe, I saw the opals fall from his hand—I remember now——she put her hand to her brow. "And —and then we started for Melbourne and this man was left behind. This paper—"

"I picked it up in the little inner room to light my pipe," said the marquis, in a low voice to Elliot.

"This paper tells the secret. This man must have seen it, or heard my father read it—"

"Or obtained a copy," suggested Lord Elliot, startled and amazed at this new phase of the mystery.

"Yes, but how we know how he became rich," said Constance, in a slow, distinct voice, her eyes fixed on Rawson Fenton, who stood with folded arms and sinister smile.

"What have you to say, Mr. Fenton?" demanded Lord Elliot.

Fenton shrugged his shoulders.

"Nothing," he responded, with a sneer. "It is a romance fit for publication in three volumes. I know nothing of this paper or its fabulous secret."

"He lies," said Lord Elliot to the marquis, as calmly as if he had said,
"It rains." "I can see it in his face, where is this place, Miss Grahame?"

"Permit me," said Rawson Fenton, before she could answer. "This land she speaks of belongs to me, my lord, and if you are at any time curious to see it, I shall be happy to—give you a warm welcome."

"You're?" said Lord Elliot.

The rest looked at him.

"Yes, Dr. Grahame told it to me some time before he died."

"It is not true! It is false!" exclaimed Constance. "Look at his face!"

They were looking even then, and they saw the evil eyes sink and droop.

"Mr. Fenton," said Lord Elliot, "you will be good enough to produce the deeds of this property for the inspection of Lord Brake-spare's solicitors the day after to-morrow at twelve. The marquis will, I have no doubt, permit me to act for Miss Grahame in the matter, and I will meet you there."

Rawson Fenton changed color, and his lips twitched as his eyes wandered from one to the other.

"There are no deeds—indeed, indeed, there are not," said Constance, "or if there are, they are—forgeries!"

The word fell like a thunder-bolt, and a deep silence followed it. Then Rawson Fenton moved toward the door, and with his hand upon it, turned and faced them, his eyes resting upon Constance's face—not pale now, but flushed—with a malignant intensity.

"My poor friend Doctor Grahame was mad," he said, "and I fear his daughter has inherited—"

He had got thus far in his soliloquy when Lord Elliot sprang upon him, and opening the door with his foot, thrust him outside.

Those within the room heard a sudden crash, as if a heavy body had been thrown down stairs; and when the next moment Lord Elliot came in, pulling down his wrist-bands, he was alone.

stance, he held out a hand to catch "I'll take myself off now, he said.

"Good-bye, for the present, Wolfe; good-bye, Miss Grahame. No, don't cry—for the tears were starting in Constance's eyes—"you will have no more cause for tears, please God!" And he wrung her hand. "I shall be close at hand if you want me. By the way, leave that fellow to me, Wolfe, will you?" he said at the door. "It will be a little amusement for me, and I shall enjoy it."

And he was gone, and the two were left alone.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Ten minutes afterward, Lord Elliot, who was sitting on a bunkhead on the pier smoking a cigar with the keen enjoyment that follows upon a virtuous action, brought to a successful conclusion, saw the marquis approaching him with a quick step.

He came and laid both his hands upon his friend's shoulders, and looked at him.

"Some day I'll try to thank you, Elliot," he said, in a low voice. "At present I can only think of—"

"Quite right," nodded Lord Elliot.
"I can wait."

"And I have come to tell you, Elliot," resumed the marquis, gravely, "we've been talking, and I have been trying to persuade her to consent to a proposal I have made; I want her to come with me and you to London, and—marry me there; I have the license."

"Well?"

"And she will not," said the marquis anxiously. "She says—God bless her sweet heart!—that it will seem as if she had done something she was ashamed of."

Lord Elliot sprang to his feet, and flung his cigar away.

"Will there?" said the duchess,
when I should like to see it; and I will!" she exclaimed, as if struck by a sudden idea. "No, she shall not come back alone, for I will go and meet her and come back with her."

Lord Elliot had not over-estimated her astuteness.

She rang the bell.

"The carriage, please, at once. Will you come with me, Ruth?" she asked, fixing her eyes keenly on the sharp-pale face.

Lady Ruth's color rose.

"I—I—no, I think not," she said.
"I should like to, above all things, but —but I have just heard from my father; he is worse."

"I am very sorry," said the duchess slowly, and in a tone that she did not often use. "As he is so much worse, we must not keep you from his bedside.
Pray go, and by the first train."

Rawson Fenton had been frowning down the stairs; his accomplice, Lady Ruth was politely ordered to leave the Towers. It is a question which suffered the more.

Without a word she bowed to the duchess, who inclined her head with a coldness which perhaps only a duchess can properly convey in a bow; and white to the lips, and trembling with fury and disappointment, Lady Ruth left the room.

That evening two carriages were heard coming up the drive of the Towers, and at the sound the marchioness, who had returned with Kitty and the duke, rose from her chair in the drawing-room and went into the hall.

"Leave her alone," said the duke as she went.

The duchess read it out, and for a moment was speechless, and stared back at the duke and Lady Kate, who eyed her as if they could not believe the evidence of their ears.

"I told you so!" at last exclaimed her grace, triumphantly. "I knew there was some mystery which would be cleared up by some one who had the wit to see through it; and it seems that Ernest Elliot had it. Wedding to-morrow! Good gracious! Well, it shall be done! Come, Kitty, don't look as if you wanted to cry again; you have cried quite enough. Duke, to the duke, as he stood open-eyed and open-mouthed, "you must go round to the castle and break the good news to the marchioness. I'd go, but I can't.
Now, mind, don't blurt it out suddenly."

"Oh, by George! you know," said the poor duke; then his face cleared.

"Here, I'll take Kitty with me. Come my dear; you shall do the breaking and I will back you up."

Lady Kate sprang to her feet with a joyful promptitude, and nearly ran against Lady Ruth, who was entering—"Ruth, listen to this!" exclaimed the duchess. "For once I was cleverer and more far sighted than you;" and she read the telegram.

Lady Ruth's face went white, and she put out her hand and steadied herself by a chair.

"Wolfe and she to be married tomorrow, at Brake-spere Church, after all that has happened! There, there must be some mistake," dropped from her lips.

"Exactly! Isn't that just what I have been saying all through the business?" exclaimed the duchess, exultingly.

"She cannot—she cannot be so brave!" muttered Lady Ruth.

The duchess looked at her.

"I mean that no woman could come back after all that has happened, all the scandal; to come back alone—"

"Alone!" echoed the duchess, "of course she is not alone. She has had the girl—her own maid—Mary with her all the time; and of course, Wolfe and Ernest are with her, too."

A faint sneer curled Lady Ruth's lip.

"They? Oh, yes," she assented, and she will drive through Brake-spere with them. There will be a mob at their heels."

"Will there?" said the duchess,
when I should like to see it; and I
will!" she exclaimed, as if struck by a sudden idea. "No, she shall not come back alone, for I will go and meet her

Kitty half rose, and the tender-hearted old lady went and stood by the open door.

There were traces of tears on her wrinkled cheeks, but they were trace only. Not even by tears would she reproach the girl whom she had learned to love as a daughter.

The carriages stopped, and from the first the duchess and Constance and Mary got out.

Her grace had got Constance's arm within hers, but she released her as they entered the hall, and in a moment Constance was sobbing on the marchioness's breast.

The two stalwart men followed, and the marquis bent and kissed his mother.

"Take her away, mother," he said.
"Let her tell you all, and then see that she rests."

Then he and Elliot went into the drawing-room, and amid a deep silence he told the story which Constance's faltering lips were unfolding to the marchioness upstairs.

The Prospects from Highland Lodge.

BY D. G. PARKER.

O what enchanting views are here! What mountain hills and vale! How beautiful is all around!

No earth-born pencil can portray The scenery from my door; Surpassing every picture made, This side the golden shore;

The Parrobo hills that skirt the shore, In airy dells of blue, Low bathing in the seething tide, Present a pleasing view;

Then Kingsport with her genial homes, And earth impregnated state, That guides the vessels into port;

There peaceful in the distant north, Colchester takes his rest, With calm upon his slumbering brow, And drowsy clouds upon his breast;

Long Island with misleading name; To us a neighbor near and close, Distinguished for its maiden beach, And waters crystal clear;

Just at present the roads throughout the province are in a bad condition, the continued rains of the past month having made them almost impassable in some sections of the country.

The N. S. Apple and Produce Shipping Company, Limited.

DEAR SIR,—You have heretofore published some of the doings of the fruit growers' meetings which have been held in the Counties of Kings and Annapolis concerning the formation of the "Nova Scotia Apple and Produce Shipping Co., Ltd." Meetings have been held in Middleton, Bridgetown, Annapolis and Hantsport with encouraging results.

The farmers and fruit growers of the Valley are giving expression to their opinions with no uncertain sound as to the necessity of ridding themselves of the incubus and monopoly which handicaps them in shipping and marketing their apples.

We also wish to say a few words about our new fall jackets. These are bought by us in Germany and are unsurpassed for good value. We have a special line of black jackets at $2.25, $3.25, $4.25 and $5.25.

The guests from abroad were Dr. and Mrs. Annie K. DeBlois, of Shurtleff College, P. O. G. S. Chalmers, and Miss Griggs, of the College Faculty, Miss Laura Baker, of Alton, Rev. and Mrs. Caleb Meek, of Colfax, Ind., the latter a sister of Mr. McMahon.

At high noon Miss Mollie Gray struck the cord of Lohengrin's wedding march. The first to enter the rear parlor and make their way to the front room were Mr. George Yates, Miss Ellen Bush, each bearing long white ribbons.

The friends of the bride remembered her with numerous gifts, all useful, and many of them very beautiful.

Wedding Chimes from Abroad.

The following from the Independent Press, of Griggville, Ill., will be read with interest by the many friends of the room in this vicinity. THE ACADIAN begs to tender congratulations:

A happy company gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. McMahon at noon, Wednesday, Oct. 23, 1896. The occasion was the celebration of the marriage of their youngest daughter, Alice, to Rev. Thomas William Todd, of New Berlin, Ill.

The guests from abroad were Dr. and Mrs. Annie K. DeBlois, of Shurtleff College, P. O. G. S. Chalmers, and Miss Griggs, of the College Faculty, Miss Laura Baker, of Alton, Rev. and Mrs. Caleb Meek, of Colfax, Ind., the latter a sister of Mr. McMahon.

The ring ceremony was used and was solemnly performed, concluding by pronouncing them husband and wife. The entire company united with Dr. DeBlois in repeating the Lord's prayer; and with uplifted hands he gave the Apostolic benediction.

Policeman Toye is erecting a very pretty cottage on Prospect street.

We understand that the inspector of "black knot" is soon to make his rounds again among the orchards.

Ask to see 50c Underwear at Borden's.

We had our first snow-storm for this season on Saturday last. There have, however, been several little flurries since.

We understand that the College students are making an effort to secure a lecture from Hon. G. E. Foster, about the first of the year.

Man's Boys' Youth's Ulsters, great value, at Borden's.

Mr. J. W. Beckwith and family have temporarily leased Mr. R. W. Storr's house and will attend to the wants of guests there until the rebuilding of the Royal is completed.

Chamois Fibre lined Men's Ulsters, at Borden's.

Rev. R. S. Stevens, of Kentville, occupied the Methodist pulpit of this town on Sunday evening last, and preached an excellent sermon which was greatly enjoyed by all present.

Largest range Men's and Boys' Caps at Borden's, 25c to 75c.

On Sunday last thirty candidates were baptised at the Baptist church at Canard by Rev. Mr. Martell, the pastor. It is understood that a number more will be baptised next Sunday.

Mr. Geo. Blenus, an aged resident of Church Street, was found dead last Saturday morning in the yard at her home. It is supposed that she had gone out the evening before to get firewood, and had been struck by a paralytic. Mr. Blenus was away from home at the time.

Men's Lace and Buckle Boots for $1.25 at Borden's.

A young man named Lockwood, of Port Williams, who is employed by Mr. C. H. Borden, carriage-builder, of this town, had his hand badly cut while operating the circular saw on Friday last. Dr. Borden dressed the wound, but it will be some time before he will be able to resume work.

Have you tried our Chocolate Creams? They are splendid, 40c. a pound. Borden's.

The social held in the vestry of the Baptist church on Friday evening last, under the auspices of the B. Y. F. U., was well attended, a very enjoyable affair. The bill of fare included vocal solos by Miss Estelle Masters and Miss Olive Burgess, a violin solo by Miss Mary Harding Kitch, and a combination banjo and harmonica solo by Mr. Andrew Cobb. Mr. Cobb's solo was so cleverly executed that he was recalled, responding with an equally pleasing selection.
