A CHAPTER FROM A FORTHCOMING NOVEL

ILDLY beamed the sunlight on the morning that party at Mrs. Highflight's, and Amelia Ann looked bewitchingly pallid after rising at half-past eleven, and breakfasting at twelve. her head surmounted by a rep sofa in the parlor of their residence, in the west-ade, and she had not yet come to a conclusion. On the "What Not," in the corner, were some pieces of music, several copies of Beadle's Dime Novels, and certain odd milk, as looked for all the world like wot Mister Perkins, our copies of Harpers' Bazar that appeared during the course of the past winter. But thoughts of a higher considera- of chalk and water. tion claimed her now.

At the same time, Charles Choker was on his way to the mansion. He traversed the macadamized road mounted on his high-spirited velocipede, and his kid-gloved hand Amelia Ann. Besides the conchoidal pieces of recalcitrant limestone rendered his journey somewhat difficult.

He arrived at the paternal mansion, and was ushered into the parlor, where the chignon of Amelia Ann received him with a graceful inclination.

After a few ordinary salutations, the young man thus opened his heart through the portals of his lips, partly hidden by his superb black moustache:-

"Once more, dearest Amelia Ann, must I declare the sentiments I have long cherished towards you, and askask you again—to be mine forever; for really the suspense that I endure is insufferable."

"I must say, Mr. Choker, that you are not indifferent to me; but it is such a great sacrifice to make, to get married at my time of life; besides I never could think of marrying one whose business does not yield him more than a hundred and dress money.

"Business will increase, dearest, and then your gratifications will be supplied. In the meantime, we would try to economize.

"Economize! I could not possibly find time for such efforts. There's Kate Jones married a gentleman with five hundred a-year, and she tells me they have hard work to live and keep up appearances."

" A fig for appearances. With you, dearest, I could live in a hovel, and breakfast off a crust!

No, no-the party I "O, what a horrible prospect! select must have sufficient money for all my requirements; so at present, Mr. Chokey, I cannot hold out to you any encouragement."

" Enough, proud girl! If money will win you, you will yet be mine; for from this moment I am determined to make money or perish in the attempt!" and, seeing his hopes crushed for the present, the young man rushed from the house, bounded on his velocipede, and dashed through the open gate in a spirit of desperation!

MISTER DYOGENYS .- My last letter ended at Highland followed the night of the Pond (as is a deceivin' name as there ain't no pond wisible there) where we got the wurst kind of a tea I ever did see; the table was covered with lots of sassingers, as is a cheep bisness as no folks likes to heat 'em, thro' bein' made of pork as is 'ighly dangerus thro' them beasts as they do say breeds in 'em, as Brown and me went to see at the Polertecknick shown by the magick lanturn, as a 'ole familee of magnificent chiguon, as six died thro' them eer hanima's a catin' up their hinsides. she reclined on the green I wish I never 'ad tasted that beefstake, as cost me thurty shillin a l along of me leavin' my false tooth (set in gold, as I'ad put in to please Brown), in a sinue of it, and a swallerin ern suburbs of the city. of it for a bit of bone. Then the bread was that un'olesome Her face wore a pensive thro' bein' stuffed full of soder and them Yankey Bakin' look; for she was deeply powders,—Saleratus, I believes they calls 'em,—as I could meditating on the style of not heat it. One of them waitin gurls says to me, "Will dress she would wear for ye'r 'ave a cup of tea, and does ye'r take cream and sugar?" that afternoon's promen- "Thankee," says I, "I will;" thinkin' as ow I was to 'ave some good cream such as we gets at ome in the strorberry time in them Tea Gardens, when the young 'oman brought me milkman, was taken up for sellin' thro' avin' used a mixtur

Well, I got in to the train after 'avin paid fifty sents in he for heatin', and another fifty sents for a bottle of what wos libelled "Scotch Ale" (but was no more like the raal thing than chalk's like cheese), clutched convulsively the gilt cross-head of the bicycle; for and settled myself down for the journey, when the gard he had determined on knowing his fate at the hands of said to me, "Would you like to go in the sleepin' car?" "Young man," says I "what are you a-talkin about? Give me none of your himperence, as I comes from respectible parents, and 'opes to die so." 'Owsumd'ever, a lady alongside of me hexplained as 'ow 'ce meant no 'arm; but it was a kind attention of the railway derecturs to let you get a little sleep, thro' not knowin' 'ow long you might be a-goin'. So I went into the sleepin car, and wished myself out before many minits, as I never was accustom'd to see strange men pullin hof their boots and coats, etsetiree, and a-gettin' reddy for bed, a-thinkin no more of it than a-combin' their air. Says a 'oman follerin' behind me, "Don't be shie; yer'll soon get accustum'd to it, as 'ow all folks in this country do." Well, the young man of the car made up a bed for me; and thinks I to myself, "When in Meriker, do as the Merikans do." And what with all the trouble and annoiance I came thro' I were soon asleep, and dollars a month; I would require the half of it for pocket never woke up till I found mys of thrown that wiolent into the arms of a strange man the other side of the carridge, and my spectikles as was in my pocket smashed to fifty bits. I picked myself hup, and ran to the door, and says to the gard. Goodness gracious! what 'as 'append?" "Nothink," says 'ee: "we 've only run orf the track and down a small embankment." "Lor!" says I, "do you call that nothink? mind, if I'm 'urt afore I gets to Montreeal, Brown'll sue the Company for damidges." Says 'ee to me, "Take it easy, old gurl, and get into the other car, for we're a-g in to detach this one," as was a-smasted up like matchis, and not much damidge done to any person, tho' I seed many lafable scenes all along of the passengurs bein' all asleep tumblin on to each other. Well, I quieted myself down, and didn't rest till we got to Montreeal, as was late in the arternoon, all along of the haccident. When we got across the river, as is a mity one, and were a-runnin' tremendjus 'ard with floatin ice on it, we found as 'ow the train could'nt get no further than Point Saint Charles, thro' a flood from the river, as they said, ad nearly drownded hout the poor people. Well, I 'ad my baggidge hexamind there by a most purlite to me; as I 'ad painted on my boxes "Captain Jinks," thro' 'avin' bought 'em cheap at a hauction in Totinham Court Road, and is name a painted in white a top as was grand like. Says I to 'im, "I ham." "Then," says 'ce to me, "We wont trubble about a hexaminashun," and with that ee let me 'ave my things free as was werry satisfactury all along of Brown 'avin' larfed at me for buyin' 'em. Well, so soon as my things was passed, I was started by them men as is hagents, who 'owld out several names of 'otels, as is a noosance, and should be made to stand by their 'busses. Well, as I wur a goin to stay at a friend's 'ouse, I asked a cabby what he would take me 'ome for. "Five dollars,' says 'ee; as was that hexpensive, I got angry, and the fellurs was werry imperent, a-larfin at me; so I seed a man as said 'ee'd take me for a dollar, so I went orf with 'im a-seated on my boxes in a one 'orse cart, a 'oldin' on the sides, and the man a standin. Of all the queer sights as ever I seed. this wur the queerest a comin' into town, and I was that nervous, as 'ow I've 'ardly recovered yet. We 'adn't gone far afore we comes to water; says I to the man, "Is this the river you're a-takin' me into?" "No," says 'ee, "it's the street,"-as reminded me of a place I'ad 'eard of in furrin parts where they go about in boats all along of the town bein built in the water. The water was up to the 'orse's chest, and sometimes nearly it came into the cart, and boats and rafts a goin about just like on the Tems. Well, at last the water got so deep the cart couldn't go no further, and we 'ailed a man at a winder who went into a backyard, as was a lake, and came for me and my boxes on a raft with a thing a top he culled a cutter, as frighted me thro' not understandin' these names, and I got in, and was roed to dry land again, and mity thankful to get there, 'avin' seen such sights,—bread a bein' anded in at winders to the poor creeturs as was 'arf starved; 'ouses chained like ships to keep 'em steady; pigs sittin' on first-floor stairs; people standin' on ladders to get in 'ome, and rafts, and boys on planks a runnin' into you as is 'ighly dangerus, thro' the water bein deep; and the imperent fellurs sayin, "Golly 'eer's a sight! 'eer's Mother Noah out for a row!" "aint seen such a hold gurl down South," and such like. "Drat 'em," says I; "a parcel of imperent boys as 'as no respecks now-a-days for their betters."

And now, Sir. I am rested, and intend in a day or two lookin at the sights of the town as seems werry andsome, includin' Nelson's Monument, and the Snow Mountain in a place as is called the 'Aymarket, as is werry creditable to the Corporashun for finding useful employ for the poor workmen in winter, and the doctors and hundertakers in summer. I ham 'onnerd Sir,

Your obedient Servant to Command. MRS. BROWN.

HINTS TO YOUNG LADIES ABOUT TO BE MARRIED.

The past ball season having been fruitful of "tender attachments," which are to be followed to their legitimate issue, Diogenes, ever the friend of youth, beauty and innocence, has determined to give his dear young friends a few hints, which may be useful to them during that interregnum when beauty is, as it were, between the two stools of flirtation and marriage. There are so many little points which those who find themselves in this stage of "Love's Triumph" for the first time, must be unacquainted with, that Diogenes feels sure his darlings will appreciate any advice he may have to offer them.

In the first place, then, he would warn them that while provided it with a Coffin.

custom 'ouse hofficer. "Is you a hofficer's lady?" said 'ee avoiding any appearance of shame at that which their mothers have all done before them, they should not rush into the opposite extreme, by telling all their acquaintances that they are "going to hitch up with one of the fellows." Neither should they speak of their bridal dress as their weddin fixins." When the object—(let us call him " weddin fixins." Edward)-proposes a walk, you (that is each individual darling) should cheerfully accept; but in your rambles beware of sitting down on "grassy banks," &c. By so doing you are liable to sit on a wasp or ant's nest, when your cries of agony will necessitate inconvenient explanations. Do not address the object as " Neddy ;" there are other neddies in the world, and the name might not be thought complimentary. If your small brother exercises his wit at the expense of yourself and Edward, box the young urchin's ears. Avoid looking in at silversmith's windows; it affords an opening to the small brother to talk about "spoons," and this might make Edward blush. When asked how you are, never reply "Bully;" and when congratulated by your friends on the coming event, do not giggle and poke Edward in the ribs. You will be accompanied to the altar, when the proper time arrives, by your mother, or other relative, and will merely have to say the responses in their proper key. When asked "Will you have this man," &c., &c., repeat the answer given in the prayer book, but do not say "Yes, sirree," or "I guess I will;" both are at variance with the accepted form, though correct in meaning. When Edward places the ring upon your finger, you must on no account test it by biting it. The honesty of the maker is your only safeguard. You need not offer the officiating clergyman a dollar when the ceremony is over-Edward will attend to that-and avoid speaking of the former gentleman as the one that "fixed" you. At the breakfast, your health will be proposed, but it is not essential that you respond; if you do so, avoid standing on your chair. There are other directions which DIOGENES may give in a future number. In the meantime careful application of the foregoing will serve to keep you from perpetrating any flagrant gaucherie.

NOT ON THE PAPER.

In the last session, it will be remembered, the Contingent Committee of the House of Commons made a report-afterwards adopted by a large majority of the House,-recommending various reductions, abridgements, curtailments, and loppings-off. There was one particular affecting honorable members themselves. Their limitless forays on the stationery department were declared to be at an end. and the disinterested gentlemen voted themselves a fixed and moderate quantity of pens, ink, paper, and pen-knives. But scarcely had they entered on their duties in the present session then they made an attempt to kick off the shoes that pinched their own feet, and to return to their former practices. But the Speaker declined to be hot-pressed, and resolutely refused to don the foolscap. He told them other people had corns as well as themselves, and that on some they had trodden pretty hard. He had no objection to a general alleviation; but he could not consent to a removal of their very slight-almost imaginary-self-inflicted pains, while some of their fellow-sufferers were in grievous trouble, and one, here and there, cripples for life. They growled, but sank abashed.

ORDER THE HEARSE.

There can be very little doubt as to the early dissolution of the Railway Commission. The government has already

"TRICHINA SPIRALIS."

AIR:-" TRAMP, TRAMP, TRAMP."

There has lately been a fuss o'er a spiral little cuss
Which inhabits ill-bred perkers, we are told,
And keen science now affirms that tricking were the worms
That cooked King Herod's goose in days of old.
Chorus.—Tramp, tramp! the worms are marching,
Eating muscle as they go;
And although they there encyst,
They will freely still exist
In the human frame,—believe me, it is so!

Dr. Edwards, who is sound on the microscope, has found That their structure is as perfect as can be;
But a Doctor came to spy, with an unbelieving eye,
And he couldn't, wouldn't, shouldn't, didn't see.

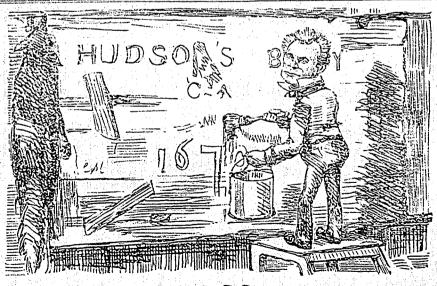

Chorus,-Meanwhile-still the worms are marching, &c., &c.

Then a Howard and a Drake did a new discovery make
In some ham of that afflicted family—
Though a Trenholme failed to find, and went almost out of mind,
'Cause he couldn't, wouldn't, shouldn't, didn't see.
Chorus.—Meanwhile—still the worms are marching, &c., &c.

Now, the other Doctors too, who the fatal ham did view,
That the pig had Irichiniasis agree;
So the worms were photographed, and the Cynic gaily chaffed
All the learned men who couldn't, wouldn't see.
Chorus.—Meanwhile, still the worms are marching, &c., &c.

And the Board of Health, I see, has at length commissioned three Skilful Doctors, with their microscopes, so rare,
To examine bacon-rind, and to try if they can find
Any worms, or germs, or sperms, or "critters" there.

Chorus,—Meanwhile—still the worms are marching,
Ilere, and there, and everywhere;
In our biscuit, in our cheese,
In our sugar, if you please.
As to water! you may drink it, if you dare!

THE DAY AFTER.

SHARPS AND FLATS.

Diogenes, who is ever ready to commend where his approbation has been merited, has seldom an opportunity of bestowing his approval on the official acts of his American neighbors; but the police of Albany have recently carned his unqualified admiration. Two young men were, last week, removed from a church, for singing out of tune, by some constables of Albany. This unmusical annoyance which is so common amongst ourselves, is evidently one which the artistic "peelers" of Albany are unable to support; and Diogenes can thoroughly appreciate the agony which a properly-constituted policeman must endure on hearing "A flat," when the expected sound is "B sharp." It was urged against the offenders that they were seceders from the choir, and had adopted this plan to harrass their late brethren; but Diogenes looks upon this charge as an unworthy attempt to detract from the critical acumen of those who are always accustomed to be sharp in pouncing upon a flat.

(By Telegram.)

The Privy Council met this afternoon. The Red River country occupied their attention. Dr. Quackenboss, the celebrated American entomologist, was introduced. The Doctor laid before the Council a statement showing that he had successfully defended the Abyssinian Expedition against the onslaughts of the Tsetse fly, which, it was predicted, would make mincemeat of rank and file, gnaw up the staff, and even honeycomb the artillery. He proposed to free the Red River country from its pests, the grasshoppers. He offered to keep the entire territory free from the rayagers at 20 cents per square mile per annum, and to hop the race out of existence in three years. The proposal was favorably entertained but the Government appeared inclined to purchase the patent, rather than make annual payments,the more especially as they were convinced by the Professor that his system would be effective should another pest appear at home, in the shape of a formidable Opposition.

After Leblanc's hands was shook, the mayre & i presented the folloin' speech on thee part of our kuntrymen. (The mayre spoke & i prompted) :-

"Georgy," says we, "yu air welkum bak to thee land of your fathers. We ain't fully postid up on what yu hev been doin' to ingland, but we 'spose it's awl rite. Sence yu hev bin away menny things hey transpired. The drill shed is neerly finished, & the swifty velossypeed is performin' its airy gambols within its hollow presinks. Kounsellor Jordan hez giv hisself a dinner, & Alderman David expex to bee mayre next yeer if thee Irish vote will let him. MacNamee, your old frend & buzzum kompanion, is elected to the presidensy of the St. Patrix Society. Sum say that thee uther presidens her resolved not to invite him to thare nashunul dinners on akount of his appectite, but ireland's rongs are too grate to submit to such a slite. Sum of our brokers & merchants and Denis, thee lawyer-your old frend.-hev gone to the Staits. Denis is tendin' bar too Shikago, & our yung men are skeedadlin' bi thousands. They luv their kuntry so much these infants du saul. Wee air awl as loyal as ever, purhaps more so, konsiderin' thee dull times. We hev hed thee small pox bad, & the doctors hev diskovered a hog wich hes had trikynosis. & a thunderin' bad time hee must hev had of it be he died. It is thee same hog wich has been figgerin' in thee Daily Noos for thee last munth. Sumthin' must bee done to restour publik konfidens in pork. Wee fondly hope that now yu hev got home things will move on agane, & we will have good krops. Shovo & Dun kin hev bin pretty good boys while yu were away, but we air sure thay missed you.

"In konklusion, we wish you a merry crismas and a happy nu yeer, et settery. No more at present frum yoors trooly,

> THE MAYRE & ZEKE, AS REPRESENTIN THEE PEEPLOF KANADY."

Georgy stept forrad & in his yusual graceful manner addres'd thee Krowd. Sez he, "We hev hed a good time, to ingland; those fellos no how to live: thee best port & sherry in thee world is to bee hed thare, but, gentlemen, if yu think we did nuthing there but eat & drink, yu are mis taken. We saw thee elyphant, & konkered hur. We bot thee Hudson's Bay doeminions fur a song. We air monarks photogra-phist of all we survey,—that is to say of awl that thee Hudson's Bay don't kare about surveyin'-in the hostile belt. We had sum injuns into our kuntry before, but thee red men of Kocknawagy are bekummin' bleached out. & the Aboriginny wich lived up at thee Lake of a Mountanes onto thare fathers' huntin' grounds, hez bin kicked out by the Seminary folks, -our becloved fathers. Therefore we must hev more injuns. Now our glorious kuntry extends frum Novy Zembly to thee coldest part of thee British Kolumby, & we are goin' to git out awl thee Dutch emygrants that kin stand thee kold, & we will give Uncle Sam 'Hale Kolumby.'" (Heer sum inquisitive kuss into the krowd sed, 'Who's to pay the fiddler?') "I was a-waitin' fur this question," Sir George replide; "thare is no money reequired. The muther kuntry advanses awl thee kash with a impeeriul garantee, & thee grate kapitalists in ingland air all takin stok, & awl we will hav to pa is 3 per cent. interest annually, & let the interest go on ontil it pays up the prinsiple. Bi this time the kustums revenu will bee such that munny will bee a drug into thee m irket."

At this pint the hole knowd began to holler & hooray, & George spoke a little French to the infant, & i got time to look around & see who was thare. There was Bethune who kame neer bekummin a judge when thee last batch wos kooked; Beaudry, who is always round when anything Blu is goin on ; Pomonville & Karter, who should be judges; Reekie, Bulmer, Brown, & Co.; & Perry, who never misses a fire whare there is enny smoke. There was Mosso Bellyvo, Chaplo (who hez just won a $1200 case,), & Dansyro, & Clarko. These wer all on thee stand. Thee kustomary krowd wos down belo in the mud. I stuk to thee kumpany to thee last, & and when the mursenary crew hed gone, went home with Georgy. When we got into his peesful abode, & sot down to our sherry, sez he: "Zeke, i'm surrounded with plais-hunters and inteerested frends. Tell me yure honist opinion of mee." Sez i: "George, thee truth aint always plesent. Yu hev done konsiderable good to our kuntry. & with awl yure faults yure not a bad fello. Yure appintments of judges & offishuls into Lower Kanidy aint always bin thee best; but i allus attribewted this to yure hevin exosted vure pack. Yu don't allus recognise merit & kapasity; ef yu had, i wuldu't bee now only a milishy ensign of 36 yeers standing,—i wood bee a kurnel at least. But a troos to these melankoly diskushuns on politix. You hed better stay to home now; i shood think yoo hed travil'd enuff. Shovo & Dunkin, & Wemet & the uther fellos doun to Queebek hev been at a dead lok while you were away. Thare hes bin some talk of aboloshin those lokal kusses intirely, bekos thay are too expensive. Our kuntry kant furnish so menny parliaments. When yu kum to sift out enuff to send to Ottywa, whot's left for thee little go down to Queebek aint of much akount. & there only objec is to spred the munny amongst numeries & hospitals. Thay ar fiddlin while our yung men ar emygratin bi sholes to a furrin kuntry-makin kolonisashun rodes out to Labrador, & wharves on dreary koasts where nary steambote goes; & in the meantime, munny is gettin titer & titer, & Kochon is in the loonatic asylum bizness a-makin munny like stix."

But i notisd thet George was yawnin, & biddin him a fond adieu, I retired to my peesful abode in the West End.

Yours trooly,

ZEKE TRIMBLE.

CLEAR AS LIGHT.

The best hand at taking a likeness is, certainly, a

"FOOLS RUSH IN WHERE ANGELS FEAR TO TREAD.

IOGENES blushes for the character of the journalism of the present day, and holds firm to the pure teachings of

" Dotes upon a jest " Within the limits of becoming mirth," but he protests in the name of outraged decency against the following, from a Montreal journal of the 24th ult. :-

"A Swede—member of a sect called "Seconeiez"—whose belief is that any child murdered before it is six years old, will go directly to Heaven, was caught in the act of sending a youngster to Kingdom Come, in Hobben, on Monday. He ought to come to Montreal, and help us to polish off the large yearly instalment we send to the same quarter."

A norther viewer of the come.

Another paper of the same date had the following :-"A correspondent writes :— Can you tell me who was the shoemaker of the late. Hon, D'Arey McGe? — and thinks the sales of his bests must be good, because there is, after the lapse of a year, a service held overthem. Horrible."

Horrible indeed.—but if any correspondent was brute.

enough to pen such idiotic, fiendish rubbish, in the name of humanity, why publish it? Diogenes besmears his paper with such defilement, as a warning to evil scribes, even as a farmer nails a kite to his barn-door.

Do such journals know of the writings of one Alexander

Pope, who proclaimed that "Want of decency is want of sense?"
Diogenes knows how true was Douglas Jerrold's saying: " Some men are so wicked as to write a Comic Sermon on the Mount"-but he predicts that the world will grow tired of reading such trash, and that its influence will be as ephemeral as he hopes will be the pruriency which evokes it.

MORE ABOUT GLASS EYES.

A manufacturer in New York advertises these useful substitutes in the Herald, and informs the public that eyes of his manufacture are "endorsed by the Faculty." Fancy a man writing his name on the back of an eye! Are these eves ever discounted for cash, and what is the percentage exacted by eye-shavers?

ESSAYS ON SOCIAL SUBJECTS.

No. 9.

"CATTS AND DOGGS."

It is said that catts don't like doggs, no more nor doggs don't like catts. Fitin like catt & dogg is a proverb, but aint so bad as fitin like man & wife. Catts is like doggs in some particklers—both has got tayles. & sumtimes bolts their vittells without chewin of 'em. Doggs is more intellectooal anymiles than catts, bein bully ratt killers, tho' catts is best at mise. Doggs is used for huntin. The Rumuns reprycented DiAnneHurr, the Godes of Huntin, with a dogg usooaly standin on too leggs, not bein depickted with enny more. She was also called LoonHurr, or Godes of the Moone, which is proberbly the reesun that Shaikspeer makes Armlet say, "I'd rather be a dogg, and obey the moone." "You dogg," is konsidared a term of reproche; and a "doggs life" aint considured a plesent wun. But guess I wont entur on the subject case sum "jolly dogg," or "happy dogg," or "sly dogg" should be down on to me. A "dogg in the manger" is an unplesent anymile, but I'd sooner have him than a dogg as was mangier. "Every dogg has his day," but cutts prefer nite-time. Catts was first introdooced into Ingland by Dick Witington, who got wan from the Lumproar of WestMoorland, and made it into a weskut, Tom Beckett havin first made mittens out of doggs hide. Cats is sposed to be indigenus to Ameriky, becos if you riles them, they spits at you. If you rub a catt's in the rong way, you will git a lectrick shok, & posserble sum flees on to you. Shootin the dogg mayn't be a plesent opyrashun; but shootin the catt is was. "Rainin like catts dear Tom Hood, no line of whose writings needs defence. With Hood the Cvnic writings needs defence. With Hood the Cvnic writings needs defence with them; but we, on acount of our tender constytooshuns, is obliged to take 'em in pyes or sossidges.

PELEG PLUG.

ERRATIBUS.—MancksCatts has no tayles, but an Irish perlitercal ecconymist—a friend of mine—propages to supply to them at modrate prise, those of "the Kikenny catts," who chawed each other up, all excep wat the French calls thier "coos." This, he says, will be mearly wun of the axe of Justice to Ireland, as proberbul wun half the prise of the tayles will go in to the pockit of this patereot.

DOUBLE ACROSTIC.

By numbers defeated, his standard o'erthrown, Disappointment may reign for a while, Till time with its light shall compel him to own That his loss was the gain of his isle.

The war cry of many, the hope of but few E'en now 'tis a thing of the past. It dies with the first, who its strength to renew Fought hopefully on to the last,

- 1. A tyrant who a youthful life did risk, And sought to make the father take it,
- 2. She for whose love great Hercules did doff His lion's skin to wear a woman's gear,
- 3. That which those do, whose envious grasp would hold The sceptre that another claims.
- 4. A maid of whom the poet Ovid sings, Whose lovely form to verdant foliage changed.
- 5. The place in which men wrought that fearful crime. By means of which mankind was saved.
- 6. The name is old as is our mother land, Borne by her favoured sons for centuries.

ODE TO SPRING.

Come strike my lyre, Thou god, whose fire The poet's fancy heats, And help me sing The approach of spring, With all its halmy sweets, And dirty streets!

The worm has heard The early bird On its nest among the trees, And soon we'll dine-Ah, dish divine !-On ducks and young green pens And sometimes geese!

Soon every field Will verdure yield, Released from winter's snows; And every man, That is, who can, Buys bran-new summer clothes,

Unless he owes-his tailor-as I do (The sad train of thought which this fact awakens prevents my continuing the theme.)
