Mr. WALLACE. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken, for I made no such statement. I said Parliament has provided no salary for an assistant commissioner. That was the statement I made.

Mr. LAURIER. Does the hon, gentleman provide a salary for the collector of customs at Montreal?

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, on Monday next, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide, that instead of the deduction provided for by section six of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, a deduction shall be made from the salary of every person to whom the said Act applies, at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum on such salary if it is $600 or upwards, and of 3 per cent per annum thereon if it is less than $600.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS-INDEMNITY OF MEMBERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, on Monday next. the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that for the present session of Parliament the deduction of eight dollars per day mentioned in section 26 of the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be made for twelve days in the case of a member who has been absent from a sitting of the House of which he is a member, or of some committee thereof, during such number of days, but that this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section 25 of the said Act, and that in the case of a member elected since the commencement of the present session it shall not apply to days prior to his election.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. LAURIER. I remind the leader of the House that he promised to make the statement to-day which we have been expecting for some time past.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not make a definite promise that I would make a statement today: I said I might probably make a statement. I have, however, to say to the hongentleman and to the House that the deliberations of Council in the matter we have under discussion have so far advanced that on Monday, when the House assembles, I will make a definite and positive statement in regard to the matter.

Mr. LAURIER. That is the last?

Mr. FOSTER. That is positively the last.

ELECTORAL BALLOT PAPERS.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Two months ago I introduced a short Bill of very great im-Mr. WALLACE. portance, because it may affect the election of every member of the House. It is quite apparent that there is no possible chance of carrying that Bill in the hands of a private member during the present session. The Bill was submitted in consequence of a decision rendered by Judge Andrews, of Quebec, regarding the ballot papers. Bill is of sufficient importance, in my opinion, for the Government to take it in charge. Its object is to provide that the ballot papers we have adopted shall be marked in one place, where it was intended, and in no other place, as Judge Andrews has given a construction to the existing statute different from what the House intended. Bill would soon pass the House if the Government would take charge of it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know the Bill to which the hon. gentleman refers. I am only able to say at present that I will see that the Government consider the proposition.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved third reading of Bill (No. 127) further to amend the Act respecting judges of provincial courts.

Mr. MULOCK moved, in amendment:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend the same by striking out the clause increasing the salary of the local judge for British Columbia.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Government are proposing to inaugurate a most unsound practice by appointing a gentleman to office and then increasing his salary above the statutory allowance which existed at the time he accepted office. No argument whatever has been advanced for the carrying of the proposition of the Government. The statute fixes the salary of the chief justice and of the judge of the maritime court in question. He has only been appointed within a few months, and now it is proposed to select him out of the army of 200 judges in Canada and to extend to him this special favour. The proposition has not been sustained by any argument that justifies it. It is an exercise of the arbitrary will of the Government. No valid reason has been given for it, and the only possible explanation I can see is, that there must have been some understanding between the Government and the judge at the time of his appointment. I shall not take up much further time discussing this question, but I would submit to the Government and to the House whether the present is an opportune time to inaugurate a programme of increasing salaries. We have six or seven thousand office-holders in Canada, and if you select one for special favour, it is an invitation to all the others to apply to the represenat the request of the Government.

of the hon, member for North York (MI. Mulock). It is nothing short of an outrage was not in favour of increasing the salaries that in the present condition of the treasury we should be asked to increase the salary of a man who has only been installed a couple of months in office. When a judicial position becomes vacant in any part of the Dominon, we find there are any number of men urging their claims for it. The great object first is to get the appointment, and after they get it they come here seeking for an increase of salary if they can discover any trifling little increase in their duties. This man has hardly had time to warm his seat in office than he immediately asks that $600 be added to his salary in . order that he may have a round sum of $6,000 a year. The Minister of Finance further increase. In the present state of announced a short time ago, that he could not grant to the Auditor General, an official who is discharging important and onerous duties, an official who sits in judgment upon the expenditure of this country; he could not give that official an increase of $500 cr $600 to enable him to efficiently discharge his duties. But now, without the slightest hesitation, he consents to giving this judge very well stop it. The House ought therein British Columbia $600 a year extra. There are any number of able men prepared? to creditably and efficiently discharge the duties of judges when a vacancy takes place. We should make the judges understand that if they are called upon to perform some triffing routine service in addition to what their predecessor did, they must three months, I think it is bad taste for not expect additional pay for it. As no satisfactory explanation has been given to the House, I shall certainly vote for the motion of the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock).

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is a bad precedent to establish. I do not think there is any class of men in the Dominion who are better paid than the judges, but here you are singling out a man who gets $5,600 a year for a the finances of the country this is an outrage on the people and one that the House ought not to permit. Bill (No. 130) further to amend the Civil Service Act.—(Mr. Montague.)

Bill (No. 69) respecting the voters' lists of 1895.—(Mr. Montague.)

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 116) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act (Mr. Daly), read the first time.

Mr. DALY moved second reading of the amendments.

Mr. LAURIER. What are they?

Mr. DALY. The first amendment is to permit the sale of two school sections—section 11 and section 29 in township 3-to the Cochrane Rauch Co. The sale has been made to that company of 10 per cent of its leasehold, and within the territory sold are these two school sections, which are so surrounded by the property of the Cochrane Company as to be perfectly useless to any-body else. The other amendment provides that certain transfers of assignments of homestead rights made by homesteaders prior to the issue of their patents shall not ipso facto be void. The explanation of the legislation is this: In the North-west Territories some people who purchased agricultural implements have made an agreement with implement owners, in which they declared that they had made a homestead entry, and gave them a lien on the same; and the implement owners put an affidavit of execution on the back of this agreement, and registered it in the registry office. By the Dominion Lands Act any transfer of assignment made prior to the issue of the patent is void, and does not permit a man to get his patent; and it is to remove this difficulty that this amendment is made. The occasion for it arises from an Act passed by the local legislature of Manitoba, in 1893, providing that none of these agreements should in future be received by the registiar. After this the same difficulty cannot arise, as these liens cannot be registered.

Mr. LAURIER. The last amendment is unobjectionable, so far as I can see. The first one may lead to difficulty, but it is impossible to take exception to it with the scanty information we have, and therefore the Government must take the responsibility of it.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved second reading of Bill (No. 68) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: As the House knows, by the general Act the elections in all the constituencies are held simultaneously, that is, on the same day, with certain exceptions, which are made on account of the geographical situation, the sparseness of population, the want of travelling and printing facilities, and other peculiarities. of the constituencies excepted. Among these exceptions is the old district of Cariboo in the province of British Columbia. By the Redistribution Act of 1892, the district of Cariboo is attached to the district of Yale. and the two become the electoral district of Yale and Cariboo. The Government were, therefore, under the necessity either of including the old constituency of Yale in the exceptions or removing Cariboo from the list. After having made careful inquiry know what the who facilities for travelling, for the posting of proclamations, and for the printing necessary for the helding of a poll in the new district, the Government have come to the conclusion that it would serve the purposes of the people of that district thoroughly to remove Cariboo from the list of exceptions, and bring the new district of Yale and Cariboo under the general provisions of the Act; and all the clauses of the Bill have that effect.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to add a new clause to meet a contingency which is not likely to arise, but against which it is well to provide. The Redistrbution Act does not come into force until proclaimed, and though not at all probable, there might possibly be a by-election in these particular constituencies before the general election. I therefore propose:

That the provisions of this Act should come into force only upon the day to be named by the proclamation of the Governor General, and not before.

Mr. LAURIER. It would be much simpler to say that this Act would come into force at the next general election.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I simply use the words used in the Redistribution Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to call the attention of the Secretary of State to an amendment which I suggested some time ago. In the year 1894 we passed an amendment to the Dominion Elections Act, and adopted a ballot of four discs, and our idea was that the voter should mark his cross in the disc opposite the name of the candidate for whom he wished to vote. The Act reads as follows:—

The elector, on receiving his ballot paper, shall forthwith proceed into one of the compartments of the polling station, and there mark his ballot paper, making a cross with a pencil on the white portion of the ballot paper opposite to or within the division containing the name of the candidate for whom he intends to vote.

The words "opposite to, or within" were interpreted by Judge Andrews to mean below, or in any part of the white paper surrounding the name, and not in the disc. The intention of this House was that the voter should mark his name within the disc and nowhere else. After Judge Andrews decided that was not the meaning of the clause. I introduced a Bill in order to make it perfectly plain that the voter should mark his cross inside this disc, and nowhere else. I would move, therefore, that the following section be added to this Bill:—

1. The section substituted by section four of chapter thirteen of the Statutes of 1894 for section forty-six of The Dominion Elections Act, chapter eight of the Revisea Statutes, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

46. The elector, on receiving the ballot paper, shall forthwith proceed into one of the compartments of the polling station and there mark his ballot paper, making a cross or crosses with a pencil on the white circular space or spaces opposite to the name or names of the candidate or candidates for whom he intends to vote, and shall then fold up such ballot paper so that the initials on the back can be seen without opening it, and hand it to the deputy returning officer, who shall, without unfolding it, ascertain by examining his initials and the number upon the counterfoil that it is the same which he furnished to the elector, and shall first detach and destroy the counterfoil, and shall then immediately, and in the presence of the elector, place the ballot paper in the ballot box.'

The old Act says "making a cross with a pencil on the white portion of the ballot paper opposite to, or within, the division." If the voter is to make his cross within the white disc, there would be no question as to what that means, because there is only one disc; but if he is to make his mark on the white portion of the ballot paper, he will be within the technical wording of the section if he makes his cross underneath the name, and not in the disc at all. would encourage bribery, because the briber might say to the elector, I will give you $5 if you will make your cross undernath the letter "J" in my name, and not in the disc at all. In this way might be defeated our object in adopting this ballot paper, which was to ensure that the ballots should be marked on the white disc, and nowhere else. so that the voter should not indicate by his mark to an outsider, in any sense or way, if he wishes to do so, how he was voting.

Mr. FOSTER. How can he do that in one case more than in the other?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If he marks in the white disc, no third party can tell who made that mark; but if he made an agreement with me beforehand that he would mark, say under the letter "a" in "Davies." within the division for the name, I should know that he voted straight. The whole object of adopting this paper was that the marks should be put upon the disc, and nowhere else. Otherwise, we might as well have the old paper. In that case, what was the sense of adopting this ballot, and paying $2,500 for it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think the hon, gentleman's suggestion is probably a very good one. But I hope he will be satisfied with this. We are all in accord as to what we mean by this provision of the Act. Some hon, gentlemen think it already clear and unmistakable, and that the hon, gentleman's amendment does not much improve it. Others, and on this side, too, think that the hon, gentleman's amendment is clearer, and I have just asked my colleague who has charge of the Bill to allow it to stand for its third reading, and we will consider that matter carefully. may come to the conclusion that it is better to adopt the hon, gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course, everything will depend upon whether these words are directory or mandatory. If they are directory, they will still remain directory under the amendment of my hon, friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies). Now, there are two views taken of this matter. If these words are directory, that circular white disc with the black ground was intended to aid the party in the marking of his ballot properly. It was not for the purpose of compelling him to put his cross in a particular place, but for the purpose of aiding him in marking it opposite the name of the party for whom he intended to vote, and not elsewhere. That is as I understand it. I confess I do not exactly take the view of my hon. friend. Of course, I think we ought to construe every law in the interests of the voter, and with the view of upholding the vote. If the voter wishes to have an understanding with the party, he can mark under a particular letter, as my hon. friend says, and indicate in that way that he has voted according to the compact, but he may show that also inside the disc by making his cross in a particular form agreed The question of form is just as important as the question of place. I do not think there is any difference in that re-

Are you, by this arrangement, going to deprive an illiterate man, a man who is not in the habit of marking his ballot, or doing anything else of a literary character, of the vote which he wishes to record. In my opinion, his right to vote is of more consequence than anything else, and, that being the case, I would not want to put any other construction than the directory construc-tion which the judges have put upon this in the interpretation of this provision.

e partir a la composition de la composition dell

Mr. SPEAKER. There is a great deal of force in the statement made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). if the intention of the voter is to vote for a certain candidate, and he indicates this by marking within the square set apart for the name, he ought not to be deprived of having his vote counted. The argument of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) might apply in various ways. Under any circumstances, the candidate might arrange with the elector that he should mark his cross, say, at the lower side of the disc, or at the upper side, or in some other way make an identifying mark in such a way that the ballot could not be rejected by the deputy returning officer. It seems to me, as the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says, that it is much more important that the vote of the elector given clearly and unmistakably for a candidate, should be counted, than that the objection that the hon, member for Queen's should be given effect to.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is perfectly evident now, after the expressions of opinion by Mr. Speaker, and the hon, member for Bothwell, that the Act must be amended. I was speaking as to the legal construction of the Bill. I put one legal construction upon it; my hon, friend puts another; and, if we differ, it is perfectly clear that the returning officers throughout the Dominion will differ, and when you come to the next general election, one-tenth of the ballots will be thrown out. We must have this thing put beyond a possibility of doubt, one way or the other. I am not very much concerned if the majority take the view of the hon, member for Bothwell, so long as it is made clear. I have no strong feeling, one way or the other. The reason why I introduced the motion was that last year the House were of opinion that this ballot, making it compulsory to mark on the disc, should be adopted. But if members, legal members on the same side have different opinions about this matter, what may we expect when the law comes to be interpreted in a general election throughout the I am mainly anxious that it country. should be put in such form that there can be no doubt in the minds of returning officers. If the law is to be left in its prethink there is any difference in that respect, and the question, to my mind, is this: sult? It will be lamentable.

On section 4.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My attention has just been called to the fact that the wording of the Registration Act is this, that the Act shall come into force on the dissolution of the present Parliament. This is shorter and more satisfactory. I therefore move. as an amendment:

METERS OF THE PROPERTY OF THE

solve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to provide for the payment of a sum not to exceed $150,000 in five years to encourage silver-lead smelting in Canada, the payment for each ton of ore smelted not to exceed fifty cents.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. This resolution pretty well explains its object. The proposition is to encourage and extend the industry of silver-lead smelting in Canada, the principal region in which the industry bids fair to be developed being in British Columbia. The proposition is smply this, that the sum of $150,000 shall be appropriated, to extend over a period of five years; that for the first year, for instance, not more than onefifth of the sum shall be paid out; that the payments shall be made upon each ton of ore which is smelted; that the maximum paid for each ton of ore which is smelted shall be 50 cents; that if more than sufficient is smelted at the rate of 50 cents per ton to make the $30,000, the maximum that can be paid out, then the rate per ton will be made by dividing the number of tons that are smelted into the $30,000, or the amount that can be made for the first year. If, during the first year, the $30,000 is not absorbed, any surplus which is left goes on to the second and succeeding year; but at no time can more than 50 cents per ton be paid for the smelting of these ores. The ores are found in more or less abundance through all parts of the mountain ranges of British Columbia. In the districts along the rivers from the southern boundary north of the line of railway, these ores have been prospected to a certain extent, and have been mined to a certain extent. But, up to the present time, they have all been exported for smelting, consequently, in the first place, the increase in the development of the industry must be retarded transported in order to get them to the smelting furnaces which are in the United States. But a greater disadvantage than that is, that only a certain class of ores will bear by the distance that these ores have to be the transportation and pay the expense, that is, the higher grade ores. higher grade ores form a small proportion, necessarily, of all the ores available, it leaves the low grade ores practically un-used, although they are of considerable value, and pay largely for smelting, if the transportation to the smelting furnaces for separating the ores does not cost too much. In the smelting of these ores, I am told that it is necessary to have two kinds; besides the common ores, they also need, in order to make up a composition for successful smelting, the dry silicious ores. These are not found in great abund-Mr. FOSTER moved that the House re- ance in British Columbia at the present olve itself into committee to consider the time, although the prospectors have an idea that they exist, and any stimulus given to the smelting industry will, of course, provoke a search for, and it is hoped, a discovery of, those silicious ores in sufficient abundance to make what is so very requisite in the composition for successful smelt-The object the Government have in view is to give an impetus to the mining and smelting industry of that country, particularly, and wherever ores of that kind are found in Canada, for a limited period. It is not proposed, and it is not thought that it will be necessary, to give aid for any lengthy period. The main idea is to get the industry started, to set the prospectors at work, especially for these dry silicious ores, and so to stimulate the search for, and, consequently, the development of, the mining of those ores. It is believed that a very great benefit will result. labour employed, and the expenses of smelting are large. A certain amount of labour, of course, is employed in mining the ores, and taking away that high grade portion of them which stands transportation, but that is not at all to be compared with the labour which is expended, on all the adjuncts to the smelting which are necessary, and the expenditures that are made, if the ores, both high and low grade, are smelted in the country. For instance, in smelting 150 tons of ore, it is calculated that 500 tons of coal are used, that about 1,200 tons of coke are used, and about 500 tons of limestone. Now, all these industries will be stimulated by the smelting of the The coke will be made, probably, at Nanaimo, and, perhaps, in the Mountains, and an industry will be developed there which does not, at the present time, exist, giving employment and making large expenditure as well. And so, with reference to the limestone and the coal. Then again, as is well known, the development of the mining industry has a particularly good effect on the consumption of agricultural pro-A mining population is particducts. ularly a consuming population. The effect has been seen in the history of this kind of mining in the western and north-western states, where lead smelting has been very greatly developed, and where the combined products of the smelting ores and of agriculture, largely for the sustenance of the miners, have run up very largely, and now to a very large sum. amounts amount that Parliament is asked to vote will be but small, the time will be limited, and it is not thought that a period longer than five years will be necessary in order to put the industry upon that basis of development upon which it can go on and ex-Certain conditions will be put tend itself. All this, of course, will be under regulations of the Governor in Council, as to conditions, supervision, and the like of I think these are the main features of the Bill which it is proposed to found on the resolution. I may also state that the amount of 50 cents per ton, of course, is but a small percentage of the value. Probably the average value of product would be $50 or $60 per ton, and the aid would be somewhere in the region of 10 cents.

Mr. LAURIER. Everybody, I think, including the Minister himself, may have some doubts as to the wisdom of the proposition he now introduces.

Mr. FOSTER. I have none.

Mr. LAURIER. I have. But for all that, I am not disposed to criticise or oppose the motion submitted by the hon. gentleman. I take it that this is to be an experiment, and I should be glad to find that the results which the hon, gentleman anticipates materializes in the glowing figures which he has presented. I have my doubts as to that; the hon, gentleman has not. But he should have some, because he knows that at the present time silver all over the world is very much depressed, in fact, silver has ceased to become a commodity, and it is now an article to be avoided. The silver market of the United States was never so low as it is now, and I doubt if the aid which the hon, gentleman intends to give the mining and smelting industry of silver will have the results he looks for. However, for my part I would be very glad to know, whether in one year or in five years, that the market has im-hon, gentleman predicts have been realized. If the amount asked from Parliament were a very large figure, in the present condition of the finances, I would, perhaps, be disposed to take a different view from that which I entertain at the present time; but as the amount is not large, as it is an experiment, and as mining in British Columbia is the principal industry of that province, and is one which we shall all be glad to see developed, I do not intend to offer any opposition to the proposition of the hon. gentleman. The Kootenay district, I suppose, will be that principally affected, and this industry is progressing and developing there, and from that consideration, I will allow the motion to pass without offering any opposition.

Resolution reported.

MARKLAND MORTGAGE.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 136) respecting the discharge of a mortgage to Her Majesty known as the Markland mortgage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. the subject was before the House some time ago the Minister of Finance promised to produce a copy of the mortgage. It should have been laid on the Table before this.

Mr. FOSTER. The mortgage cannot be got, but here is the memorial which is registered.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. should be allowed to examine into this document.

Mr. FOSTER. This matter has a long history. It has been before the Government for thirty or forty years. It has been be-fore the Public Accounts Committee, and in 1888 that committee investigated the whole subject and reported to the House that these accounts should be wiped out utterly. thereby giving assent to the view that they were perfectly worthless, as so many years That recommendation was had elapsed. assented to by the House. This proposition is different from that. I believe, from what my officers tell me as a result of their investigation, that we can get 50 per cent of the price for which the property was sold if we were in a position to give a title. That is a distinct advance on the position of 1888, when the Public Accounts Committee recommended that these accounts should be wiped out completely. After inquiry, the officers of my department and my deputy very strongly recommend that this is the very best course to pursue. The properties are depreciating, the house on one lot has gone to pieces, and no rent has been received for five or ten years. If we carry out this proposition we will get a proved, and therefore the results which the title to the property and allow it to be utilized, and I think we are getting as good value as it is possible under the circumstances.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am by no means so sure of that. I observe that one of these properties is a water lot, and it should be a valuable property.

Mr. FOSTER. We have only part of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But half of a water lot in that particular locality in the immediate vicinity of the Tete du Point barracks is worth a considerable sum.

Mr. FOSTER. We can take the second reading now, and allow the hon, gentleman to look at the papers before the third reading.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the facts are correct, I have no desire to prevent the adoption of this proposal. The real question at issue is whether the several properties are or are not of the value of that mortgage. Has any interest been paid?

Mr. FOSTER. No interest has been paid. The aggregate amount for which the property was sold was $7,480, subject to a mortgage of £600, and on account of which $1,245 has been received.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When was it sold?

Mr. FOSTER. In 1862.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then there remains due about $6,000 and interest, or about $12,000 in all?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not mean we will obtain 50 per cent on the arrearages.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the proposition is to take $3,000 for these properties.

Mr. FOSTER. A property was sold in 1862 to W. M. Minguay for $4,200, subject to this mortgage; Augustus Thibaudeau, $1,600, and Thomas Baker, $480, making $7,480. That was the sale in 1862. The sale to Mr. Minguay for $4,200 was subject to a mortgage on a portion bought by him from Mr. David Ruthbridge; the amount of which, $2,200, should be deducted from the $4,200. The amount I have mentioned is all the Government has received from the proceeds of the sale.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon, gentleman will agree not to proceed with the third reading until I have a little time to investigate it, I will raise no objection now. We had better fix the third readising for Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When the hon. gentleman proposed this before, I called his attention to the fact that I thought it was the university funds that were about to be secured, and on further investigation I am inclined to think that they are funds belonging to the Indian Department, and that the university section of this indebtedness was written off a few years ago by the Government on the recommendation of a committee. I suppose the Government will consider its liability to the university for the investment which was made, and for the amount of money which was written off.

Mr. FOSTER. We will not raise that question now.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the Government expect to get now?

Mr. FOSTER. Fifty per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it be 50 per cent it is quite clear that it will amount at the outside to only $1,000 if the Minguay claim be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not struck out.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is the contention of Mr. Minguay that it should be struck out, on the two-fold ground that there was a prior mortgage for $3,400 which, of course, he did not expect to pay, and secondly, that he did not get all the property that he thought he had purchased.

Mr. FOSTER. These are some caveats that he has put in.

Bill reported.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

Mr. DALY moved second reading of Bill (No. 135) further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west Territories. He said: The first clause of this Bill is to provide that the North-west assembly may have power to create irrigation districts, and the next clause is to amend the Act as it now stands which provides that the assembly have not power to incorporate railway companies (not including street railway companies, transportation and steamboat and canal companies). What we do is to strike out "transportation," which it has been held includes baggage transfer companies and omnibus lines doing business between hotels and railway stations. The next clause is to provide that when a member of the local legislature resigns, he shall do so in a certain manner. At present there is no provision permitting a member of the legislative assembly to resign between the close of one session and the meeting of another. It appears that there are some candidates in the field for the Dominion Parliament who are members of the legislative assembly, and they cannot resign their seats in that body, while if they continue to be members of it their candidature may be attacked on that ground. This is to relieve them from that difficulty. The final clause is to give authority to the Lieutenant-Governor to appoint commissioners to inquire into certain matters affecting the legislative assembly-matters within the jurisdiction of the legislative assembly. It appears that some trouble has arisen in reference to the expenditure of certain moneys on roads and bridges, and the question has arisen whether there is authority under the present law to appoint a commission to make an inquiry into matters of that kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the expenditure is authorized by the legislature, surely the inquiry ought to be by a committee of the legislature, and not by a commission.

Mr. DALY. What the legislature wants is power to appoint a commission to make an investigation.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

On section 4,

Mr. McMULLEN. If this clause giving the Lieutenant-Governor power to appoint commissions is adopted, it will unquestionably lead to the expenditure of a great deal of money. Would it not be better to utilize the judges of that district to hold investigations?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The objection to the commission is not only to the cost; it altogether an objectionable principle. What would be thought of our giving the Governor General power to inquire into the expenditure of moneys voted by this House? Every legislative body is responsible for the expenditure of the money voted by itself. and inquiries into that expenditure should be made by itself. Commissions relate to the administration of public affairs under the jurisdiction of the executive Government. If any of the hon, gentlemen on the treasury benches think that any of their subordinate officers do not discharge their duties properly, or expend improperly any moneys entrusted to their care, they appoint a commission. That commission is for the purpose of collecting information for the Government or for the particular Minister who is responsible for the conduct of the officer in question. An expenditure by order of Parliament stands upon an entirely The Government are different footing. themselves responsible to Parliament; they are subordinate to the authority of Parliament; and every inquiry that takes place with regard to the expenditure of money under the direction of those whom it is immediately entrusted by the House must be by Parliament itself. There is no other body which, under our system, without doing violence to that system, has a right to inquire into that expenditure. So, in the Territories, the Lieutenant-North-west Governor has no right to cause inquiry to be made concerning any matter in the jurisdiction of the legislative assembly. If the assembly were to recommend such action on his part, he might do it, although that would be \mathbf{a} most unusual Now, in England, on one occasion, so carefully have these principles been watched and followed, when certain charges were made against the conduct of parties in the Island of Ceylon, and it was suggested that a commission might issue for the purpose of inquiring into that matter, Parliament said no, we must appoint a parliamentary committee. We will appoint parties or a commission may be appointed for the purpose of inquiry, for our information—not for the purpose of dealing with the subject at all. If the place be so distant that a committee cannot actually inquire or bring witnesses before it, then the committee may suggest or, upon its recommendation, a commission may be issued for the purpose of obtaining information, not for the use of the Government, but for the use of the parliamentary committee appointed to inquire

Mr. DALY. It should have been "the legislative assembly" instead of "the Lieutenant-Governor." I did not notice the mistake until the hon. gentleman began his speech.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is a rational proposition, but you will have to recast the whole section.

Mr. DALY. I do not understand how the thing got mixed up in this way, and I move that the clause be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved second reading of Bill (No. 109) further to amend the Civil Service Act (from the Senate). He said:

There is authority under the Civil Service Act to proceed against those who may commit any offence against the examinations, and under the wording of the Act that has to be done under the Summary Convictions Act, which is superseded by the Criminal Code, and this substitutes the Criminal Code for the Summary Convictions Act.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. We give power to subpoena, but you do not make any provision to pay the expenses of those witnesses who have come from a distance.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The rules that regulate the ordinary courts will govern in this matter.

Committee reported; Bill read the third time and passed.

THE INDIAN ACT.

Mr. DALY moved second reading of Bill (No. 109) (from the Senate) further to amend the Indian Act. He said: The first clause repeals the law, as it now stands, with reference to the power of dealing with the leasing or selling of lands on a reserve. As the law stands, no reserve or portion of reserve can be sold or alienated unless surrendered to the Crown. That portion still remains, but under the law, as at present:

The Superintendent General may lease, for the benefit of Indians engaged in occupations which interfere with their cultivating land not on the reserve, and of sick, infirm or aged Indians, and of widows and orphans, or neglected children, lands to which they are entitled, without the same being re-leased or surrendered.

What we do now is to make the terms of the law general and to provide that the Superintendent General may lease for the benefit of any Indian the land to which he is entitled without the same being re-leased or surrendered. In a number of cases, particularly in Ontario, Indians have engaged in other occupations and are fairly well off, and left the reserve, and under the law. as it at present stands, we are not in a position to lease these lands without the consent of the band. In a number of cases, the neighbours, through spite or pique, have used sufficient influence to prevent that being done. This Bill provides that the Superintendent General may lease these lands for the benefit of these Indians. This gives us no further power to alienate, but simply provides for the leasing of them.

tended to extend to land that has not been subdivided, and for which location tickets have not been issued?

Mr. DALY. No; nothing of that kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Under this the Government would not undertake to deal with timber limits or anything of that sort?

Mr. DALY. No; it has no relation whatever to that. The next is an amendment to section 70. Now, section 70 provides that moneys received from the sale of Indian lands or other property held in trust for the Indians, or from any timber on Indian land or reserves, or from any other source for the benefit of the Indians (with the exception of 10 per cent) shall be invested from time to time, and the money may be disposed of by the Governor General in Council in laying it out to cover the cost incidental to the management of the reserve, lands, property and moneys under the provisions of the Act, and for the construction and repair of roads passing through such reserves or lands, and by way of contribution to schools attended by such Indians. And what we seek to do by the amendment is to authorize the expenditure of the money for the construction or repair of roads, bridges, ditches and watercourses on such reserves and for the construction of schools, as well as by way of contribution to schools attended by such Indians. The present law, it will be seen, provides only for the contribution to schools and not for the building of them, and provides only for the making of roads and not for the making of bridges, ditches and watercourses.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be better to make it read "school-houses," rather than "schools."

Mr. DALY. In this we followed the language of the original Act. Perhaps the hon. gentleman's suggestion is a good one. When we get into committee, I will change that. The next clause provides for the amendment of the law in relation to the selection of chiefs. As the law now stands, no band may have more than six head chiefs and twelve second chiefs, but any band composed of 30 Indians may have one chief. What we propose is that any band containing 30 or more Indians shall be entitled to elect chiefs or headmen in the proportion of one for each 30 members; but no band shall have more than 15 chiefs or headmen. In addition to that the present law provides that the Governor General, in Council may depose any chief for dishonesty, intemperance, immorality or incompetency, and that Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to cil may be declared ineligible to hold the office of chief for three years. The present law relates only to chiefs appointed by the band. We want to take the power to depose hereditary chiefs who are guilty of the offences mentioned here.

The second section of the second section of the second section section section sections and the second section sections are sections as the second section sec

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where you have made a treaty with the Indians, and in the treaty you have provided that the chiefs shall receive a certain sum that amounts to a trifle more than is given to an ordinary Indian, if you undertake to carry out this Act, you may seriously interfere with existing rights.

Mr. DALY. All these original chiefs are dead now. This applies to Ontario and Quebec. There is no trouble of this kind in the North-west. I now come to the next amendment. As the law at present stands there is no provision under which an Indian who becomes enfranchised can be paid his share of the moneys of the band, unless the band takes action to enfranchise the whole The Indians who desire and are band. found qualified to be enfranchised, it is thought, should be given their share of the capital as well as the land of the band, and thus be removed from the guardianship of the department, and the law is being amended in this particular. We propose to strike out a portion of section 93 of the Act, so that the law shall read as follows:-

1. Whenever any member of a band, who, for three years immediately succeeding the date on which he was granted letters patent, or for any longer period that the Superintendent General deems necessary, by his exemplary good conduct and management of property proves that he is qualified to receive his share of the moneys of such band, the Governor in Council may, on the report of the Superintendent General to that effect, order that the said Indian be paid his share of the capital funds at the credit of the band, or his share of the principal of the annuities of the band, estimated as yielding five per cent, out of such moneys as are provided for the purpose by Parliament:
2. If such Indian is a married man he shall also be paid his wife's and minor unmarried children's shares of such funds and principal moneys, and if such Indian is a widow, she shall also be paid her minor unmarried children's shares:

3. The unmarried children of such married Indians who become of age during the probationary period, for payment of such moneys, if qualified by the character for integrity, morality and sobriety which they bear, shall receive their own share of such moneys, when their parents are paid; and if not so qualified, before they receive payment of such moneys, they must themselves pass through the probationary period:

4. All such Indians and their unmarried minor children, who are paid their shares of the principal moneys of their band, as aforesaid, shill thenceforth cease, in every respect, to be Indians of any class within the meaning of this Act, or Indians within the meaning of any other Act or

In conjunction with that we must read section 93, which reads as follows:-

If any band, at a council summoned for the purpose according to their rules, and held in the have power to deal with Indians under 13 Mr. DALY.

presence of the Superintendent General, or an agent duly authorized by him to attend such council, decides to allow every member of the band who chooses, and who is found qualified, to become enfranchised and to receive his or her share of the principal moneys of the band, and sets apart for such member a suitable allotment of land for the purpose, any applicant belonging to such band, after such a decision, may be dealt with as provided in the foregoing provisions respecting enfranchisement, until his or her enfranchisement is attained.

And similar provisions as in the present Bill, are made regarding married men and widows. The effect of this is that the band may deal under clause 93 with Indians who come within the meaning of the clause I have read.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As I understand the clause, as the hon, gentleman explains it, it provides in effect that the Indian shall in every case receive a lump sum. But the Indian might wish to become enfranchised and still retain his portion of the reservation. For instance, take the Moravian reservation. That is divided up, I think, into lots of about 40 acres in extent, each head of a family being in possession of one of these 40-acre lots. If he becomes enfranchised, why not permit him to retain his lands? In many cases, I think, it would be to their advantage if they were all put upon the emancipated lists under some restrictions.

Mr. DALY. This legislation is exactly in the line of the request made by several bands throughout Ontario. They seem quite satisfied.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose you emancipate a whole band.

Mr. DALY. If we did that, we hand them over all their money and their lands. The next amendment is in reference to the prohibition of the encouragement, either directly or indirectly, of the festivals or dances that are held, particularly by the Indians on the British Columbia coast-what they call potlatch. As the law now stands, it simply provides that any Indian or person who engages in, or assists in, celebrating the festival known as the potlatch, or Indian dance, is guilty of a misdemeanour, and liable to imprisonment. Now, we go so far as to provide that any person who engages in, or assists in, celebrating or encouraging, either directly or indirectly, another person to celebrate such festival or dance. shall be guilty. We are enlarging the law so as to meet several cases that have arisen where it appears that the Indians themselves were not responsible for getting up these dances, but outsiders encouraged them to do it. The last clause is in order to give Indian agents who are magistrates, power to try Indians for vagrancy, under part 15 of the code. As the law now stands, they only of the code. What is done here is to in- going on dealing with them for a number sert after the word 13, in numerals, the words, "and 15 of the code"; and also to extend it to non-treaty Indians. As the law now stands, we can only deal with treaty give us the power, when it was established Indians, and we propose to give authority to the satisfaction of the Government that to magistrates to deal with non-treaty In- a reason exists, to remit certain of the purdians under clauses 13 and 15 of the code, chase money so as to reduce the price.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You cannot have agents for non-treaty Indians.

No, but in the immediate: Mr. DALY. neighbourhood. For instance, where Indian agents are appointed by Order in Council. we give them a magisterial jurisdiction over certain territory, which does not necessarily include the territory within their agency. but extends it beyond. The words that are inserted, and which differ from the present law, are put in after the word "Indian." down about the fourth line from the bottom of the clause: "Non-treaty Indians, or non-treaty Indians which were in any way concerned in, or affected by, the offence." As to the next clause, it appears that certain transfers have been made from one band to another in Ontario. Complaints have been made by the Indians that the band from which an Indian withdrew has gained by his withdrawal, and that the band which he entered has lost their share of the interest money. What we provide for

When by a majority vote of a band, or the council of a band, an Indian of one band is admitted into membership in another band, and his admission thereinto is assented to by the Superintendent General, such Indian shall cease to have any interest in the lands or moneys of the band of which he was formerly a member. and shall be entitled to share in the lands and moneys of the band to which he is so admitted; but the Superintendent General may cause to be deducted from the capital of the band of which such Indian was formerly a member his per capita share of such capital, and place the same to the credit of the capital of the band into membership in which he had been admitted in the manner aforesaid.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is right enough.

Mr. DALY. The last and final clause of the Bill is to provide that the Governor in Council may reduce the purchase money due. or to become due, on sales of Indian lands, or reduce or remit the interest on such purchase money. The reason of that is that some years ago sales were made of Indian lands, as high as $5 or $6 an acre, that were covered with bush at the time, and probably were not inspected by the purchasers, as we find has occurred in a number of instances that we have on record through the reports of our officers. These lands were nothing but rocks, or covered with timber of no value, and the pur-chasers have applied for aid in the way of reducing the price that they originally contracted to pay. The department has been upon the resolution. I do not think it is of years, and the question was raised by the Department of Justice whether we had power to do it, and we seek legislation to Mr. MULOCK. At present what steps have you to take in order to sell Indian lands?

Mr. DALY. We take the valuation of the agent, and sell by private sale, the Indian lands on the reserves. So far as timber is concerned, we advertise. But in the reserves the lands are for sale at the upset price fixed by the valuation of the agent, and are sold on certain terms of payment. We are following the same rule that has obtained ever since confederation.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How far do you obtain the sanction of the Indian himself to this proceeding?

Mr. DALY. It is only on his application we do it. We would not attempt to do it otherwise.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

INTERNATIONAL RADIAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 96) to incorporate the National Radial Railway Company.—(Mr. Masson.)

Mr. MASSON. When this Bill was under discussion before, we were discussing an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Monck (Mr. Boyle) requiring the company to commence the construction of all three of the roads within two years and to finish within five years, or otherwise the powers granted by the Act and by the Railway Act would be null and void. I understand from the hon, gentleman that that was not his intention, but that if any of the lines would commence within the two years that the powers with reference to that line would still remain in force. I understand that some members of this committee argue that that is the proper construction to be put necessary to occupy any time in discussing reducing the time-limit for finishing from what the real meaning of the amendment is, but to my mind it is clear that if we do not commence each of the three lines within the two years, no matter if we had commenced and built quite a large proportion of the other two, notwithstanding the work done on one or more of the other lines, there would be room at least to argue, that there was a forfeiture of all. To accept a Bill in that shape would be to invite litigation at a very critical stage in the existence of any road; that is within the first three years of its obtaining a charter. The constituency of my hon, friend (Mr. Boyle) is reached by one of these three lines, and I quite appreciate his contention that it is not desirable to have a large tract of country tied up, and that with the construction of a line commenced within two years, it might be five years before work was commenced on the other line. I propose to make clear that there shall be no forfeiture of work actually done on any one of the lines, and with that view. I move the following sub-amendment:-

If the construction of any of the lines mentioned in paragraphs a, b, and c, of section 3 of this Act, is not commenced and an amount equivalent to 5 per cent of the amount of the capital stock is not expended on each of the said lines, within three years after the passing of this Act then the powers granted by the Railway Act, and by this Act, shall cease and be null and void, in respect to any of said lines not commenced, or on which an amount equivalent to 5 per cent of the capital stock has not been expended within the time limited; or if any of the said lines, or any portion thereof, is not finished and put in operation in five years from the passage of this Act; then the powers granted by the Railway Act, or by this Act, shall cease and be null and void in respect to so much of said railway as then remains uncompleted.

This amendment, I think, meets the view of the hon, gentleman (Mr. Boyle). The only alteration from his view, as expressed to the committee, is that we take three years instead of two. Now, two years to begin and seven years to finish, is the usual timelimit in charters granted by this Parliament. On account of the divergences of these lines they are spoken of as three railways, but it is not three railways. It is one railway, radiating, as its name implies, in three different directions from a common centre. Each of these lines are part and parcel of the whole scheme. They are not separate and distinct railways but they are different lines of the same railway. In asking us to commence each one of these different branches within the limited time, I think that we are entitled to at least one year more than the usual limit, especially when it is taken into consideration when we accept two years shortening of the time limited As I stated the other evencompletion. was surprised at the mentleman who moved the amendment, seven to five years, was what I then accepted. I think it is only fair to meet him as regards the time for the commencement of the three lines; but I would ask for three years instead of two, and that it should be made clear that the forfeiture will not extend to any portions of the work done, if 15 per cent of the whole capital stock is expended within the three years.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not at all agree with the hon, gentleman who moved this amendment, that it does not materially vary the amendment of the hon, member for Monck. The hon, member for Monck is unexpectedly called away, and he asked me to take charge of his amendment, if I concurred in it, as I do, and to press it. I do not think my hon, friend from North Grey has quite seized the objection of the hon, member for Monck, nor that of the committee, without the explanation I am about to make. There are virtually three charters, and the provision is that when the comapny starts one of the railroads, they shall have subscribed $200,000 of its capital stock, or such larger sum as is equal to $2,500 per mile of such section, and pay 10 per cent thereof into one of the chartered banks. Before commencing the construction of a second section of twenty miles, they shall do the same thing over again; and so in regard to each twenty miles. So that if my hon, friend gets the change he wishes to-night, it will lessen instead of strengthening the evidence of the company's good faith, as was the intention of the hon, member for Monck. If we allow the amendment of the hon, member for Monck to be so changed that if the company commence any one of the sections and pay 5 per cent instead of 15 per cent, as the Railway Act provides, that would be quite sufficient. The intention of the hon, member for Monck was that they should commence each of the three sections, that they should pay in 5 per cent on each instead of 15 per cent on one; so that the projectors would not have to pay in more in the two years than they would have to pay on any one section if they confined themselves to one, but to commence the whole three; because, as he puts it, they have three charters in one. The effect of the change proposed by the hon, member for North Grey would be that if the company commenced one section, and paid 5 per cent on one, and failed in regard to the others, either in commencing or otherwise, the forfeiture would only apply to those sections which they had not commenced upon at all; so that they could commence one section and spend 5 per cent upon it, not touch the others, and get the time extended for three years; and then the forfeiture would only apply to those sections which were not commenced at all. Instead of the company subscribing the capital stock for the construction as his amendment carried in the committee, of the whole line and branches, the committee allowed them to divide it into three branches. If they subscribed the whole amount of $600.000, and paid in 10 per cent of that, then they would have to expend, in three years, 15 per cent of the whole amount; so that the amendment of my hon, friend is actually lessening, instead of extending, as was the intention of the motion of the hon, member for Monck.

As to the intention of the Mr. MASSON. hon, member for Monck, I prefer taking his own statement made to me. When I pointed out to him the effects of his amendment, that if we built twenty miles on each of two roads, or forty miles on one, and none on the third. the fact that we had not started on the third would forfeit the whole thing. The hon, member for Monck was very emphatic in stating that he did not intend anything of the kind, and he was informed by the hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat that that construction could not be put upon it. However, the hon, member for South Norfolk understands the object of the motion of the hon, member for Monck far better than that hon, gentleman understood it himself. He understands it as I understood it, that it means a forfeiture. Now, we want to avoid the forfeiture. is true, the privilege has been given to build in twenty-mile sections; but that is cumulative. We start with twenty miles. and with a proportionate amount of stock We have to have 15 per subscribed. cent of the whole, or 5 per cent $2,500per each—not on the mile. on whole capital stock. on the the whole capital stock, 10 per cent must be paid in and 15 per cent expended within the time-limit on the $2,500 a mile, but, in That would not addition, it is cumulative. be sufficient, if it did not amount to 5 per Therefore, we cent on all other branches. have to have 5 per cent expended on each of the branches; we have to have $2,500 per mile on each twenty-mile section we build, whether on one, two or three of the branches. and, independent of that, we have to spend 5 per cent of the whole capital stock; so that, instead of lessening the expenditure, this amendment may largely increase this necessary expenditure. While it certainly differs from the resolution of the hon. member for Monck, it is within his meaning, and it enforces the commencement of each line within three years, or otherwise the lapsing of the line not commenced. That is all the hon, member for Monck asks for, that there should be a guarantee of a bona fide commencement of each of the lines within the time-limit, and the only difference between us is the question of three years or two years.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson) would show a wise discretion in accepting the suggestion of the hon. member for Monck. This is really a street railway, and such railways all over the country are limited to one year to complete the roads for which they ask a franchise. Here this company are asking five years for a scheme which runs all over, and the hon, member for Monck does not want his section of country tied up for five years. Another thing to which I would call the attention of the Minister of Railways is clause We have had an example in the Railway Committee of giving power in charters to convey, and here is a street railway getting power to convey itself to a steam railway, namely, the Canada Southern or This House should the Canadian Pacific. not give power to enable steam railways to absorb the street railways.

Mr. MASSON. Hon, gentlemen cannot make this a street or electric railway by simply calling it so. It is a steam railway in every sense of the word. It has branches 65 miles long, and there is no electric railway of that length.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the hon, member for East York is quite mistaken. We struck out the objectionable part, and the only power that is left in the Bill is under section 14. The company may enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Canada Southern Railway Company, or the New York Central. It was clause 15 which was objectionable.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Why should the big steam railways be allowed to absorb the street railways of this country?

Mr. TISDALE. They are not compelled to be electric railways. It was clause 15 which gave the immense power objected to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would like to ask the promoters, whether they have not power to build an electric railway?

Mr. MASSON. Any steam railway, under the Railway Act, has the some power.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is a good deal of play on words as to the meaning of the different amendments. But there cannot be any doubt about the amendment of the hon. member for Monck (Mr. Boyle), which is simply that this company shall commence work, to some little extent, within two years. I must say that the members of this committee must agree that that is a very reason-This is not an ordinary able proposition. It is a charter granted to build charter. three railways starting from Hamilton, either electric or steam. What I want to impress on this committee is the fact that there are charters already granted covering the same ground, and the people holding these charters are making financial arrangements to go on with the work. provincial charters. I do not know any reason why this company should come here for This is incorporation, but as the committee has seen to take into consideration the fact that, in amended his amendment to the amendment addition to these railways now covering this by substituting two years for three years. ground, there are other charters for electric railways granted by the provinical legisla-There can be no injustice or hardship two objects that they have in view in get-They either propose to! ting the charter. go on and do this work bona fide, or they propose to secure this charter for the purpose of selling it or making arrangements with the other companies now: We ought to take covering the ground. into consideration the fact that almost every part of the country over which this, charter runs is already covered by steam; railways, and also the fact that there are the hands of the hon, member for Lennox, charters granted by the provincial legislature to other companies covering the same ground. If this company intend to go on, it is but reasonable to insist that they should commence work within two years. This will, at any rate, give them two years to do what they expect to do under this charter. It would be unfair to the people of these districts, and to the companies which have already got charters, to give this company more than two years.

Mr. TISDALE. Just read the two clauses, and the committee can decide to take which they please.

At the suggestion of the Mr. MASSON. Minister of Railways, I will make my amendment read, two years.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). That does not meet the case; I prefer the hon, member for Monck's clause.

Mr. WILSON. The hon, member for Monck asked me to see that this matter was pressed. The only change he asked was to add after the words "so much," in the last line of the amendment, the words "to each."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In order to make it clear that if they start on one, they would not forfeit on the one they started, but only on the one they did not commence.

Mr. HAGGART. The Railway Act requires 15 per cent capital to be expended The hon, gentleman, in within two years. his amendment, as first proposed, wanted time extended to three years, and only 5 per cent expended on each of the lines. effect of that might be that he might abandon two of the lines and only expend 5 per cent capital on one of them. He ought, if he intends to keep within the meaning of the Railway Act, and if two of the lines are abandoned, to expend 15 per cent capital on the third line, but he is not bound to do that by his amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment. The Amendment to the amendment negatived.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The proposal of the to this company in imposing this amendment, hon, member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) makes upon them, because there can only be one of it very clear the committee will be willing to have it apply to each branch.

> Mr. HAGGART. The object of the amendment of the hon, member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is to make it obligatory upon the promoters of the Bill to build these three sections. If they choose to build one and expend the whole of their capital upon it, their charter is forfeited.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The amendment in I think, makes it clear that it is only upon these branches on which they do no work that they forfeit their rights. These three sections are wholly different lines. Under the Bill as at present, the company may build to Waterloo, and then hold their charter against the others and prevent others from building the other line.

Mr. MASSON. There is no doubt that the amendment referred to by the hon, member for Lennox--adding after the words "so much" the words "to each "-would meet my objection so far as completion is concerned. But I never pressed the objection as to completion; it is as to commencing the work. If we built forty miles on one line and twenty miles on the other, and nothing on the third, notwithstanding the amendment, our charter would be forfeited for not commencing. It is not the intention of the committee to put that penalty upon us.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Put in the words that will make it clear.

Mr. MASSON. I have, and you have voted them down. If such a forfeiture is insisted upon, I will withdraw the Bill.

Mr. TISDALE. If they took three charters instead of one, they would have been compelled to commence the whole three roads. But if they see fit they have only one charter, they should take as a penalty same responsibilities as we usually impose. If they had three charters they would have to spend not only 5 per cent but 15 cent within three years. Under this Bill they have the privilege of building one, two or three roads.

Mr. EDGAR. It is reasonable enough, if there are practically three charters, that they should be obliged to build or forfeit their charter for those lines that they do But I do not think that the not build. amendment would have that effect. It seems to me we all mean the same thing, and the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Masson) ought to be able to draft a form of words which would meet the views of the committee.

Mr. HAGGART. But the difficulty is that the views of the two gentlemen are distinctly opposite. The hon, member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) insists that the forfeiture for not building shall be the whole charter, while the hon, member for North Grey (Mr. Masson) insists that the forfeiture shall be only as regards those parts of the road not built.

Mr. TISDALE. I am willing to agree to this: There are, as I contend, virtually three charters in one, so instead of subscribing $200,000 and paying up 10 per cent, let them subscribe $600,000 and pay up 10 per cent. My objection now is the same as in the Committee on Railways, though, as chairman, I said very little. The usual way is to grant a charter for so many miles, branches and main line, and to make it conditional that a capital stock shall be subscribed commensurate with the size of the undertaking, a certain percentage to be paid up. Let the same be done in this case, and my objection would be met. He could then commence within three years and build within five years. If he will insist upon having three little subscriptions, let it not be done in this unusual way, but let him take the responsibility of the three charters. If he is bona fide in earnest in desiring to build the three roads, let him commence the three. This is only a way to get over the ordinary rules of our committee, so as to allow the company to subscribe a little capital build one small piece, and then a little more to build a little more. while holding the territory so that nobody else can build. I say this is a most objectionable thing, and a particularly objectionable precedent-for there is no precedent for it in any railway charter ever passed by this House so far as I can discover. That it is that gave me the opinion that this is a speculative charter, and that it is only a way of covering a portion of the country for railway building by a puny subscription, and a still more puny payment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It has seemed to me from the very first that the promoters of this Bill should have gone to the local legislature instead of coming to this Parliament. All I can say is that if this company comes to this Parliament and asks for this coucession and have had it granted to them, they ought not to object if Parliament inserts such conditions as shall ensure the bona fide carrying out of the work. It is all nonsense to give these concessions and treat them as speculative charters which they can sell, or dispose of, or alter, or operate in any way to the detriment of the general public. I suppose this Parliament grants these concessions because they are convinced that the parties are actually going to build the road. If they do not intend to build the road, why do they come here and ask for this concession? If they do intend to build the road, I take it that they have made arrangements which will ensure the carrying out of the undertaking. If they only get the charters in order that they may sell them afterwards, this Parliament ought not to be a party to the speculation. I do not think the amendment has anything objectionable in it. We have to look to the interests of the public. There is too much of a desire to look to what the I do not care what the promoters wish. hon, members intention was in promoting the Bill; I look at this resolution, and it commends itself to my mind. I think it is in the interest of the public, and it is a fair one. If these gentlemen who are promoting the road do intend to build it, then they ought not to object to the condition which is in the amendment.

Mr. EDGAR. I think it is a pity there should be a misunderstanding about this matter, as there evidently is. The committee propose to give this railway company, rightly or wrongly, a right to build this road in three sections, and it has been proposed that 5 per cent of their capital should be expended on each section within two years, or else the powers as to that section, I take it, shall be forfeited. Supposing the company had gone on and half finished two of these sections, and had not commenced the other, and chose to abandon it, that surely ought not to take away their powers as to the completion of the remainder of those sections on which they had spent perhaps half their money. I think that would be the effect, as I understand it, of the amendment of the hon. member for Monck, as it is worded. I do not think they intend that should be the effect. But I admit it is almost impossible to criticise and correctly draw amendments to a Bill in Committee of the Whole. I think if the hon, member will allow it to rest, that we may try and get a clause into proper shape se that we will know what we are doing, it would save much trouble.

Mr. MASSON. I will not say I was surprised of the result of the other motion. because I am clear that the forfeiture was understood to apply to the only That was voted down, and the distinction between these two moline. only tions now is that the forfeiture shall orly be on the uncommenced portions. krow that the hon. member for Monck personally disavows such an intention, but whether such is the interpretation or not, the clause is open to that interpretation. It would be very unsafe to take a charter with such a doubt. If the hon, member will change the word "each" to "any" in the first line of his amendment, I will consent to make it 15 per cent of the amount of the capital stock, that is, $10,500; and provided also he strikes out the word "each" in the fourth line. The amendment will then read as follows:—

If the construction of any of the lines mentioned in paragraphs a, b and c, section 3 of this Act, is not commenced, and an amount equivalent to 15 per cent of the capital stock is not expended within two years after the passing of this Act, or if each of the said railways is not finished and put in operation in five years from the passing of this Act, then the powers granted by this Act shall cease and be null and void, as respects so much of each of said railways as then remains uncompleted.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not think we can make a patchwork of these intricate resolutions with any satisfaction. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to let the committee rise, and, I think, we are pretty well agreed now what we want to do, and a few of us could get together and do it.

Mr. MASSON. I think I have now arrived at what will meet the case, and it is this:

If the construction of any of the lines mentioned in paragraphs a, b and c, of section 3 of this Act is not commenced, and an amount equivalent to 15 per cent of the amount of the capital stock is not expended within two years after the passing of this Act, then the powers granted by the Railway Act, and by this Act, shall cease and be null and void, in respect to any of the said lines not commenced.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In other words, we take no guarantee that they are going bonafide to construct these lines at all.

Mr. MASSON. We are taking the whole 15 per cent. The amendment will conclude:

Or if any of the said lines, or any portion thereof, is not finished and put in operation in five years from the passing of this Act, then the powers granted by the Railway Act, or by this Act, shall cease and be null and void, in respect to so much of the said railway as then remains uncompleted.

Mr. EDGAR. Is the Minister of Railways satisfied with that?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not understand whether that means 15 per cent of the whole capital of the road, or only 15 per cent of the particular line.

Mr. MASSON. Fifteen per cent of the whole.

Mr. TISDALE. Put in "of the whole capital stock." That would make it clear.

Mr. MASSON. It will now read "15 per cent of the whole amount of the capital stock."

Mr. TAYLOR moved second reading of Bill (No. 139) for the relief of Julia Ethel Chute.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). In voting for the second reading of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity of giving notice that if I am in the House next session, I intend to introduce a Bill giving the Dominion Court of Exchequer jurisdiction in divorce cases, on the lines, and for the same causes as obtain in the English Courts of Divorce.

Bill read the second time on a division.

SUPPLY—THE FISHERIES OF THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ALLAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer to the fishery interests of the Great Lakes, and to say a few words respecting the fishery policy of the Government. You will recollect, Mr. Speaker, that I brought this question before the House at the last session of Parliament. On that occasion my time before six o'clock was very limited, and, being unable to be present after recess, I was prevented from entering into the discussion of the subject as fully as I in-The then Minister of Marine and tended. Fisheries followed in a very lengthy speech, giving an elaborate review and defence of his so-called fishery policy. The hon, gentleman was evidently very proud of that great effort, for his speech was put in pamphlet form and widely distributed throughout the fishery districts. I am very glad that he did so, because his defence was simply no defence at all, and the people were enabled to see that there is practically no justification whatever for the extraordinary and ruinous fishery policy of this Government.

The hon. gentleman's speech was a very characteristic one—slightly tinged with extravagance in tone and a trifle reckless in statement. In fact, all the important statements made by the hon. gentleman

The were utterly without foundation. most important statement he made was that our fisheries had been depleted, which he ascribed to overfishing in Canadian If that statement were true, it would remove, to a very great extent, the ground of complaint against this fishery policy, made not only to-day, but for years past. The charge has been that Canadians were not permitted to fish-that they were not permitted to enjoy the profits of the vast trade that has been carried on for many years in the Lake Erie Why, Sir, the Overfishing! fisheries. statement is absurd. An examination of the statistics bearing on this subject will conclusively prove that. When we look at the comparative catch on both sides of the lake, what do we find? That in twenty years the American fishermen have caught, on the American side of Lake Erie, not less than 800,000,000 pounds of fish more than have been caught on the Canadian side. Hou. gentlemen from Nova Scotia can comprehend the magnitude of these figures. Why, Sir, it would take the entire catch of the 24,000 fishermen of Nova Scotia for eight years to make up this excess. The annual catch in Lake Erie on the American side has been double the entire Canadian catch of fish in the whole chain of lakes-Lake Superior, Lake St. Clair, Lake Huron, Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. The American fishermen have caught eight fish to our one, and this has been going on continuously ever since 1870, and in fact in all the past years of which we have any record. people have protested against this policy Year by year they have been pointing to the fact that, owing to the policy of the Department of Fisheries, a vast and profitable trade has been thrown almost entirely into the hands of the American people. And yet the Minister of Justice could have the assurance to get up in this House and state that our fisheries in Lake Erie have been depleted from overfishing. He declared that no member from the Lake Erie district would rise in his place in this House and state that the Lake Erie fisheries on both sides have withstood successfully the onslaught made year by year upon them. There have been no onslaughts. there has been no overfishing, on the Canadian side of Lake Erie. The very fact that the Americans have caught this great quartity in excess of the Canadian catch, and are continuing to the present day to caten yearly from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 pounds in excess of the Canadian catch, amply proves the statement I have made. Now, Sir, if the Americans did not take a single fish out of Lake Erie, they are ahead of us one hundred years in the catch of the last twenty years; that is, it would take the Canadian fishermen 100 years to make good the excess of the fish caught on the American side in the last 20 years. yet the Minister of Justice tell And tells

House and the country that there has been overfishing on our side. Our fisheries are as good as theirs; they are said to be better. In the great waters that divide the two countries we have an equal interest; but if we examine the statistics bearing on the subject—and it is necessary to do so in order to obtain an intelligent view of the whole matter—the figures will show that in the production of the fisheries, Canada has had a very unequal share.

This is very apparent from an examination of the figures in relation to the different lakes. Take Lake Erie. The catch on both sides of Lake Erie in the years 1880, 1885, and 1889, which are years for which we can compare our figures with those furnished by the United States census, are as follows:—

		Canada.	U.S.
•		Lbs.	Lbs.
1880		2,008,600	29,087,300
1885		7,654,727	51,456,517
1889		9,625,754	63,557,332
	Totals	19,289,081	144,101,149

The average catch in these three years was In Canada, 6,429,694 pounds; and in the United States, 48,033,716 pounds; or nearly eight times greater than the average catch in Canada. Taking the average catch for these three years as a basis, the total catch for the ten years from 1880 to 1889, inclusive, was as follows:—

	Lbs.
Canada	64,296,940
United States	480,033,716

The excess in value, according to the values used by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, would be about $20,000,000. The Americans caught more fish in Lake Erie in ten years than Canada will catch in seventy years under this one-sided policy of the Government. And, Sir, in the presence of such figures as these, which are taken from the blue-books, we have the hon. Minister of Justice making this statement in the House last year:

All this talk about the fishery statistics of United States ports on Lake Erie is nothing but talk, because I have given evidence to show that fisheries in Lake Erie, where people have been allowed to fish ab libitum, unrestricted by Government interference, are already a thing of the past; and when the hon, gentleman reads these statistics, I will tell him how they are made, and I will give him good authority. These statistics are made up of Canadian fish. These fisheries have assumed enormous importance since the passage of the McKinley Bill, and with what re-The hon, gentleman has told us in part. sult? He has told us that our fisheries are largely in the hands of the United States fish-dealers in Buffalo and elsewhere, owing largely to circumstances over which we have had practically no control.

the Now, this is a remarkable statement. The actual figures show that the excess in ten years is over 400,000,000 pounds, and the figures I gave the House on that occasion were figures existing before the passage and operation of the McKinley Bill; and if we allowed every pound of fish to be entered, as the hon, gentleman said some tons of fish were shipped to the United States and entered, it would have very slight effect upon the figures I have given. Our catch is only 7,000,000 cr 8,000,000 pounds: their eatch is 60. 8,000,000 pounds; their eatch is 60.-000,000 pounds, and the hon. gentleman gets up in this House and coolly tells the Parliament and people of Canada that the statistics relating to the exports of fish are made up now by our fish entered under the McKinley Bill. Why, the extravagance of the statement of the hon, gentleman is really surprising. It is difficult to understand how a Minister of the Crown can get up and make such statements.

But there is a more serious aspect still in the statements of the blue-books of the country. Year after year we have found similar statements made with reference to our fisheries, and made, no doubt, under the authority of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In the blue-books of this country, in the face of these figures which are actual figures, an attempt is made to show that the contention that the Americans are getting an advantage in respect of the lake fisheries is simply a contention without basis. I notice in the bluebooks of 1890, 1891 and 1893 these false comparisons are made. I would like to ask the hon. Minister how he can justify statements made up by comparisons such as the following. He will put down American herrings at about 1 cent a pound and herrings caught upon the Canadian side at 3 cents a pound. Canadian whitefish he enters at 8 cents a pound, and American whitefish, which is caught in the same waters and is really worth more, because it is right in the market where the fish are sold, he deliberately puts down at one-third of the value, and in this way statistics relative to our fisheries have been made up from year to year. That there may be no misrepresentation in reference to this matter, I will just read what appears in the bluebooks, and I find that similar statements have appeared in the different blue-books for three or four successive years.

* According to report of De artment of Marine and Fisheries for 1891.

I wish to direct the attention of the House to the manner in which these statistics are made up. In 1880 the entire catch on the Canadian side of the lakes was 11,473.009 pounds of fish, the value of which, according to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, was $416,791. The entire catch on the American side of the lake was 45,600.000 pounds, and the value, according to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, was $984,500. In the Canadian catch was 27,378,150 1885. pounds, valued at $1,268,551, and the United 76,423,728 States catch was pounds, valued at $1,813,078. In 1889, the Canadian catch was 29,198,359 pounds, valued $1,816,462, and the United States catch was 91,076,624 pounds, valued at $1,827,214. Sir, Now. in 1880, 000,000 pounds of Canadian fish was valued at about half as much as 45,000,000 pounds of the same kind of fish caught on the other side of the lake. In 1885, 27,000,000 pounds of Canadian fish was valued at two-thirds as much as 76,000,000 pounds of American fish; and in 1889, 29,000,000 pounds of Canadian fish were valued at nearly the same figures as 91,000.000 pounds of American fish, or within $10,000 of the amount.

These are extraordinary figures. I called the attention of hon. gentlemen to them at the last session of Parliament. The hon. gentleman may make any sort of statement to the House, I suppose, but there is no way of preventing him doing that sort of thing, but here are the blue-books of Canada cooked for a special purpose, and designedly cooked, because these misrepresentations appear in one bluebook after another. I would like to know how the hon, gentleman will explain putting down herrings at 3 cents a pound, when they are valued in the United States at 1 cent a pound, and whitefish at 8 cents, when the wholesale price in the market is $4, or not more than 4½ cents; trout at 10 cents, when the wholesale price is $4. Evidently the statistics bearing upon the fisheries question are made up in this way in order to make a favourable showing, and American fish are valued at one-third less than Canadian fish.

Now, I have alluded to the Lake Erie fisheries. Fully one-half of this enormous business in the fisheries is carried on almost opposite the county of Essex. But the hon. gentleman alluded to that as a trifling matter and a mere bagatelle. He said:

In order to put the matter in its strongest light, as I have said, the hon. gentleman dwelt upon a comparatively small strip of water, where a very few men have been engaged in the fishing business. The amount is a mere bagatelle. That is their strong point, and they bring that up as an evidence of the hardship of the case. I meet them by saying, that although the subject came up earlier in the session and we are now in June, yet I have to learn the name of one solitary individual who has been ruined or injured by the enforcement of a necessary and wholesome regulation.

This is another of the hon, gentleman's very extravagant statements. He has yet to learn that one solitary person has been injured by the wholesome and necessary regulations. Well, the statement is somewhat involved. If the regulations were wholesome and necessary, perhaps no fishermen would be injured, but as a matter of fact every single regulation in connection with our fisheries has hampered and injured our fishermen. The hon, gentleman has reduced the gill-net. It will take about as many men to fish with the one pound-net as with ten pound-nets, yet his policy is only to allow one pound-net to our fishermen. The result is that they are handicapped and cannot fish to advantage. Four men can fish ten pound-nets. Here is one of the regulations by which the fishermen are injured. Then again in reference to gill-nets. The department has reduced the allowance of gill-net to one boat to 6,000 yards. The hon. Minister must know that this regulation is violated. It is violated, I suppose, in 75 per cent of cases. The fishermen do not pretend to live up to it. The allowance of gill-netting for tugs was cut down to 12,-000 yards; and, Sir, it is well known that the tugs are using two or three times that quantity. I suppose the hon. Minister knows that. Here, then, is a regulation that is being violated all over the lakes. Recently a challenge was issued to the department to deny this. I refer to an article published in the Toronto "News" on the subject of "Fishery Frauds," which I will read:

Editor "News."—Having long been a supporter of the Conservative party, and occupying a somewhat prominent position in the councils of the party, I feel it my duty to warn the Fisheries Department that the carrying out of the present scheme to secure support for that party during the coming elections will compel all lovers of liberty, of whatever political persuasion, to unite in burling from power a Government that seems determined to eradicate from this country the last vestige of British liberty and fair-play, and reduce an important class of our people to a position of political servitude unknown in any other portion of the British Empire.

Now, Mr. Editor, I will lay before your readers as briefly as possible an outline of the scheme referred to, and challenge the Minister of Fisheries to deny its correctness. Should he deny it, my object will be accomplished, as it will tend to show that the present programme will be abandoned. According to the present law, all holders of gill-net licenses are allowed to use for sailing boats 6,000 yards of net, and for tugs 12,000 yards. This amount is admitted by all parties to be absurdly small and insufficient to pay running expenses, and yet the department has steadily refused to alter or amend the law, though repeatedly urged to do so.

And for why? Simply because they are determined to keep the fishermen at their mercy, subject to their dictation. Now, it is a fact that cannot be denied, that there is not a fisherman on Lake Huron, or Georgian Bay, but what is using more than four times the amount of net allowed by law. Will the Fisheries Department dare deny this? I presume not, nor dare they deny that fishery overseers and Conservative politicians have advised fishermen to ignore the law and use all the nets they please, urging them to show their gratitude in return in supporting the rule of the present Dominion Government.

And so on. But what I wanted to show is that it is a matter of notoriety that considerably more netting is used than is allowed by the regulations of the department. I have talked with many practical fishermen and they tell me that it is simply impossible to carry on their business with the amount of netting now allowed by the department; they would simply have to quit the gill-net fishing business if they are to be compelled to fish in that way.

I have already referred to the injurious effects of the regulation respecting poundnets. Right opposite the county of Essex, where our men are refused more than one net except in a few privileged cases, there are as many as 33 pound-nets in a string. This involves a great hardship. I brought one special case to the notice of the Minister myself, the Black case. A poor fisherman had prepared for a second pound-net upon some promise of the fishery overseer, and had gone to an expense, I think he said, of $300 or $400, which is a considerable amount for a fisherman-but afterwards was refused the additional license. I visited the department several times, and presented this matter to the hon. Minister, and it was a long time before he would grant the second pound-net even under these circumstances. It was only after affidavits had been produced to show that the promise had been made that the second pound-net was granted to this man Black, and that in the waters immediately opposite the county of Essex, there are as many as from 20 to 33 nets in a string, that the application was granted.

The lake opposite. I may say, is completely encompassed with nets. It is said there is as much as 700 miles of netting on the American side of Lake Erie, and this practically in the same waters as our own, because if a fish is not caught on one side it will be caught on the other. And yet even under these circumstances, we find the Minister hesitating and haggling with this poor fisherman and throwing him out of nearly a summer's work before granting him a second pound-net.

Speaker, is in Another grievance, Mr. reference to the licenses. A fee of $50 is charged for a single pound-net. Thirty-two men could fish 80 pound-nets, and on the present basis, thirty-two men would be paying more license fee than is paid by the 24,000 fishermen of Nova Scotia. I would not go so far as to say that we should do away with all license fees. would not go so far as to take the fisheries entirely out of Government control, yet the present system of patrolling the lakes, costing, as it does, over $20,000 annually, is a very expensive system.

Another favourite theory of the hon. gentlemen and his professors is that fish remain in Canadian waters, and that this policy of restriction is in the interest of Canadian fishermen and of the people of Canada. If that was so, if the fish was here for Canadians, there would be some justification for the policy. But I would ask the hon, gentleman, where this 800 million pounds of fish is to be found to equal the excess of the catch of American fishermen in the last 20 years. Why, Sir, if that theory was correct that Canadian tish remained in Canadian waters, and that the 800 million pounds of fish ren ained here, the Canadian waters would teem with fish, would be fairly alive with fish, there would be no depletion of our fisheries. That is a complete answer to the statement and argument of the hon.

Now, another point is in reference to the whitefishery. The hon, gentleman said in his speech:

What was the staple fishery of Lake Erie only a few years ago? It was the whitefish fishery. It was the whitefish that was turned over in the American market, it was the whitefish that brought gold to the fishermen on both sides of That is a superior fish, and a fish of the lake. great value. But there is no whitefish fishery on Lake Erie to-day.

That statement is confirmed by the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for this year, containing a report by the captain of the "Petrel" that there is practically no whitefish in Lake Erie to-day. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman where our whitefish have gone? It is said that they breed in our waters, that they are to be found in greater quantities on the Canadian side, and yet we are told there is no whitefish in Lake Erie to-day. The hon. gentleman was oblivious of the fact that this was an answer to his own contention that Canadian fish remained in Canadian waters. I will tell him where the whitefish have gone. I will show by figures that the American people have been catching an excess in whitefish quite as great as that in the other fish. As will be seen by the following table:-

Quantity of whitefish caught on both sides of Lake Erie in the following years :-

		Canada. Lbs.	U.S. Lbs.
1880 1885 1889		205,600 186,080 306,213	3,233,800 3,531,855 3,323,772
	Totals	697 893	10 189 427

These figures show that the American catch on Lake Erie alone, in the single article of whitefish, is about 13 times greater than that taken by our own fishermen. In 10 years, from 1880 to 1889, taking the years mentioned as a basis of calculation. the figures would be: Canada, 2,326,310 pounds; United States, 30,631,420 pounds. Value: Canada, $189,104; United States, $2,450,530. If the Americans did not take another whitefish out of Lake Erie at the rate our fishermen have been permitted to operate, it would require 130 years' fishing on our part to catch up with the fishing on the other side of the Lake for the ten years 1880 to 1890. Now, I would like to ask where the whitefish are, if they do not cross the lake? It is quite evident from these figures that the whitefish in Lake Erie have been caught by the American fishermen, and that there has not been any overfishing on our side of the lake. The hon, gentleman, speaking of the fisheries on the other side, says:

Ruin all round meets them and stares them in the face. I have the official evidence that their capital is moving west, that six or seven hundred thousand dollars in cold cash had been lost in the fishery up to the last season, and that those remaining in the business were endeavouring to save themselves from absolute ruin by moving on to Lake Superior, and even further west, to the Lake of the Woods.

Why, Sir, there is no doubt that American fishermen are moving on to Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods; and if we go into the figures relating to those lakes, we will find, relatively, perhaps, not as great a difference, yet a very great difference in every one of those lakes as against the Canadian catch. Now, Sir, as against this opinion of the depletion of the Lake Erie fisheries on the other side, I will just read a short extract from the New York "Sun":

In none of the other great lakes do the conditions for fish seem to be so favourable as in Lake Erie. This is due in a great measure, fish culturists think, to the variations in the depth which are peculiar to that lake. The western end is shallow, and thus provides vast areas for The deep water at the eastspawning grounds. ern end is an almost boundless retreat for the half-grown young. The line between deep and shallow water seems to be drawn at Cleveland, for west of that city the water is not more than 60 feet deep anywhere, and the average depth will, perhaps, fall below 40.

Sir, we have only to turn up the reports bearing upon the fisheries of Lake Erie, to find that the fisheries, even on that side of the lake where this enormous fishing has been going on, are not in the frightful state depicted by the hon. gentlemen themselves. In 1893, an Amercian fisheries commission reported as follows on the condition of the Lake Erie fisheries:—

Although ranking fourth in area, this lake contains a fishing industry of vast extent and of much greater importance than that of all the other lakes combined, omitting Lake Michigan, which it surpasses by 36 per cent in fishing population, 49 per cent in invested capital, 60 per cent in the quantity of fish taken, and 17 per cent in the value of the catch. The fisheries of Lake Erie are thought to be more important than these of any other body of fresh water in the world, and there are few, if any, lakes which have afforded such a history of prolificness of fish life in proportion to their size. To illustrate the relative productiveness of the American waters of this lake, it may be noticed that the average value of the catch per square mile of lake surface is only $200, while in no other lake of this system is the average more than $50, and in three of them is much less.

The hon. gentleman says again:

Our American neighbours, both official and unofficial, have met to deplore the rapid depletion of this great fishery and the decadence of this They have met in both on their great industry. own side of the line and on this side to take counsel with their Canadian neighbours, having in view the great and to some extent the common It is a notorious, and it is an exceedingly sad fact, that that is the condition of the Lake Erie fishery to-day. But there is more than this, Mr. Speaker, and it is to this point that I call the particular attention, and upon this I ask for the support of the House. The policy that, in spite of many difficulties, difficulties that it would be impossible for me to exaggerate, I have endeavoured to uphold, is that of insisting on a rigid observance of the regulations-which I believe to be necessary regulations-found in the Canadian Orders in Council governing Canadian waters of that lake and region. While there has been a diminution in the fishery, while the fish have fallen off on our side, we have not yet reached anything like the condition of our neighhours.

Let us now see how the American people feel on this question, and whether they are alarmed to the extent stated by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries? We find a report from Lansing in the Evening "News," of 1895, as follows:—

The hopes of the state fish commission, and many others, who believe that the great lakes are being depleted of whitefish, that the present legislature would enact some protective laws, have gone glimmering. A Bill to make November a closed season was discussed for an hour and a half in committee of the whole yesterday afternoon, and then killed. The chief argument against it was, that no other state bordering on the lakes has a closed season, and until they do make one it is unfair to stop the business of Michigan fishermen at any season of the year.

That is the position they take in Michigan.

They take a similar position in the state These are the states that are alof Ohio. most in proximity to our own border, and where there is not the slightest doubt that if fish are not caught on the one side they are caught on the other. I would ask the Minister, if he still holds the same view on this question, to send Professor Prince to the shore of the county of Essex, and he will find in large quantities, German carpe, a fish placed in American waters some years This is a deep-water fish. They have been coming on the shores of Essex for the purpose of spawning, and so thick are they that people have come down to the lake at night, and the press of the county has called attention to the wholesale slaughter and destruction of these fish. This is positive proof that the fish go from one side to the Here is an additional proof, that our whitefish are caught by the Americans on the other side of the lake. The same remark applies to the depletion of our fisheries if they are in the condition the Minister alleges, because, during the last thirty years, probably not less than 100,000,000 pounds, approximately, of fish have been taken by the Americans out of Lake Erle more than have been caught by the Cana-It would take the fishermen of dians. Nova Scotia twelve years, that is, employing the whole 24,000 fishermen of that province, to make up a quantity equal to that to which I have alluded as having been taken by the Americans out of Lake Erie during the last 30 years in excess of the Canadian catch.

The hon. Minister mentioned that we took narrow ground, that we confine our arguments and remarks to the shore of Lake The effects of this policy can be seen The American fisheralmost everywhere. men are no doubt moving west to Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods. I venture to say that from Lake Champlain to the Lake of the Woods, in all international waters, the Americans, through the stupid policy of our Government, are securing a great advantage over the Canadian fishermen. While our people are prevented from fishing, or only allowed to fish to a very limited extent, the Americans are reaping vast profits from an enormous trade. The figures relating to Lake Superior will bear out this statement. No doubt that great inland sea the regulations of the Fishery Department are less damaging, and probably far fewer fish cross lake than in some \mathbf{of} the the referred. to which I have lakes we find that the Amerinevertheless, that lake are สิกโทช people \mathbf{on} nearly all the business and are catching the greater part of the fish. Loss to Canadians in ten years 50,000,000 pounds whitefish and trout and over $4,000,000. Mr. Allan.

Using the figures furnished by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, there was in this one lake alone, a loss of $4,000,000 in ten years. According to that one-sided fishery arrangement, it would take 48 years fishing on the Canadian side, to equal ten years fishing on the United States side of Lake Superior. Wherever you go, if you go further west to the Lake of the Woods, the American people are permitted to fish as the Minister says ad libitum. They are catching the fish while our Canadian people there and along the shores of the county of Essex, in the fishery districts of Lake Erie, have been prevented from taking their fair share of fish.

The hon gentleman has stated that there is no man from the Lake Erie district in this House who can rise in his place, and say that he really believes that the Lake Erie fisheries are now in as good condition as they were on account of the onslaught made on them from year to year by the fisher-men on either side of the lake. I have given the figures which conclusively prove there has been no extraordinary onslaught. I would like the hon, gentleman when he makes a statement of that kind to support it by statistics. Why, Sir, if the proper figures could be got at, they would show that we should have no less than 100.000.000 pounds of fish on our side of the lake to equal the excess of American catch since 1870, and it would take the entire catch of Nova Scotia ten or twelve years to make up the excess that the American fishermen have taken out of Lake Erie in the last thirty years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. ALLAN. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," but these are figures that he can get from the Canadian blue-books, and from the census returns of the United States.

We have heard a good deal about some sort of reciprocal arrangement for a great many years. The hon, gentleman told us that it was the policy of the Government in 1870, twenty-five years ago, and that it was also the policy of Mr. Mackenzie's Government. There might be some justification for a Government in power 20 or 25 years ago to try and preserve our fisheries by making certain regulations-although I believe the regulations we have in force are entirely too severe—and to keep these regulations in force expecting to make some arrangement with the American people. But every year this Government has utterly failed to do that, and the American people believe that the policy pursued by the Canadian Government is an erroneous and expensive policy. So long ago as 21st March, 1873, I find the following in the American Commissioner's Report :-

The Canadian laws are sweeping and stringent in character. By exacting license fees from the fishermen, they control the extent of fishing in all localities, and limit the number of nets to each mile of the shore in accordance with the judgment of the fishery officers. Their system of laws and policing the whole extent of shores is an expensive and cumbersome method of protecting the fishes, and it is altogether probable that the large amount of money, $20,195 in the year 1871, used for this purpose, would increase the products of their fisheries adapted to artificial culture.

Again:

Prohibiting fishing at certain seasons of the year has been an ordinary method of legislation in protecting the fish, and has proved to be of great advantage in streams and inland waters. The great lakes, in the particular of fishing, assume very much the character of the sea, and the same class of legislation, benefiting streams and inland waters, is not required for them.

The American people are pursuing their own policy from year to year and they refuse to enter into reciprocal regulation arrangements with Canada in reference to the lake fisheries. Every year they have been prosecuting the fisheries without limit, and in Lake Erie catching eight fish to our one. Notwithstanding what the Minister says the catch is still maintained.

The hon, gentleman talks about failures, but I have never heard of them. I knew of the failure of a large fishing firm in the section of the country of which he spoke, but it was owing to their connection with the building of a large summer hotel at Put-In-Bay Island. The examination of the United States census returns relating to the profits of the American fishermen is a complete answer to the hon. gentleman's statement. It is shown there that the American fishermen are all making money, and that it has been a prosperous business. It is no argument to say that these fishermen are over crowded in Lake Erie. They have 700 miles of netting as the New York "Sun" recently stated, on the American side of Lake Erie, while on our side in the county of Essex, our fishermen there with equal advantages and equal facilities could catch the same quantity of fish, have only about sixty pound-nets.

We catch in the neighbourhood of $100,000 worth of fish annually, according to the values given by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, while on the American side the fishermen catch the enormous amount of $2,000,000 worth. Right opposite the county of Essex, the city of Sandusky, which is the largest fresh water fish market in the world, is carrying on an enormous business. This has been going on not merely for twenty or thirty years, but has been carried on since 1855, which was about the time pound-nets were introduced. trade was then commenced on a pretty extensive scale, and has been carried on by the Americans from year to year until they have so much fishing apparatus that it would probably be impossible for them to extend their business, while we on our side of the lake have been looking quietly on.

Now, Sir, the hon, gentleman has been very much disturbed at times about the attacks that have been made by the fishermen and by the people of the country upon the policy of the department, and he has sent his professors to the Detroit River and to the western end of Lake Erie to make special reports upon this subject. A year ago, Professor Prince, who had arrived in this country, I believe, in April, visited the Detroit River, and when he returned to Ottawa he wrote a special report justifying the position the department had taken. Speaking of close seasons, Professor Prince says:

That the enforcement of close seasons and other protective regulations for whitefish on the Canadian side of the great lakes and border waters should have caused some discontent amongst Canadian fishermen is not surprising. When the dividing waters are so narrow as in the Detroit River, St. Clair Lake and river, such dissatisfaction is accentuated. The United States fishermen carry on their operations under no restrictions, and at all available seasons. To our own fishermen, under whose eyes the American fishermen pursue the industry, the rigid enforcement of a close season and other regulations is But any supposed advanpeculiarly irritating. tages enjoyed by the United States fishermen are found, on strict inquiry, to be baseless, and on the other hand, the alleged grievances on the Canadian side in these waters have no better As a matter of fact, the United States policy has proved most injurious to their own fishermen's interests and is wholly and emphatically disapproved by the leading men engaged in the fishing industry in Detroit and other important centres.

Detroit, it may be mentioned, has one of the greatest fish-markets on the continent, and the view that prevails there is entirely in favour of the Canadian policy. It is not the case that the absence of restrictions on the American side has been detrimental to our fishermen, or that United States fishermen are reaping benefits of which Canadian fishermen are deprived. Careful inquiries on the spot have abundantly shown that.

Any alteration in the existing close season would indeed be an injury to the Canadian fishermen and would bring serious results, leading rapidly to the total destruction of the whitefish fishery.

This is demonstrated by the following facts:— The Canadian side is, and always has been, the chief resort for the whitefish. The great fishmarkets of Detroit and elsewhere look to the Canadian side for their main supplies of whitefish, which breed and are hatched and reared in our waters.

And yet the hon. Minister, in the face of this important statement, and after limiting the operations of Canadian fishermen in the way he has done, now tells this House and the country that the whitefisheries of Lake Erie are a thing of the past, This gentleman continues:

The November schools of whitefish, which pass up the Canadian side, are all spawners, just about to deposit their eggs. It is of the highest importance to protect them just at that time—a time which the present close season covers.

Parent fish in rivers and lacustrine waters,

Parent fish in rivers and lacustrine waters, sent up another professor, or rather when ascending to the spawning grounds, always take the most direct course, and are not easily ference to the fish in the Detroit River.

turned aside, as experienced fishermen are well aware. No more erroneous idea could be entertained than the supposition that whitefish wander aimlessly hither and thither from one side of a river or lake to the other. In these waters, as in other waters, it is certainly not the case that the schools of breeding fish deviate from their usual course, and cross from side to side so that fish caught by American fishermen during our close season would be caught by Canadians were they permitted to fish at that time.

Not only has our side been the chief resort for the spawners, but the pollutions of Detroit city and numerous factories on the American side, as well as sewage and other deleterious matters, have tended to drive the whitefish to the purer waters on the Canadian side, and thus increased the school of spawners in our own waters.

-The numberless nets, traps and pounds set in American waters and extending far from shore, intercept the migrating fish, break up the spawning schools, and drive them to our side. Our close season affords them freedom from these disturbances, and encourages them to come to our side.

Here we have the statement that Canadian fish will remain in Canadian waters, while American fish will cross over to Canadian waters. Prof. Prince goes on:

Perhaps the best testimony to the wisdom and utility of the department's regulations is furnished by the attempts to establish in the state of Michigan similar close seasons. Were the present policy on the opposite shores so highly satisfactory as many Canadian fishermen at times imagine, such attempts would never be made. So beneficial to all interested has the Canadian policy proved to be, in the opinion of many leading men in the state of Michigan, that, in order to save their fisheries from destruction in these waters, earnest efforts have been, and, no doubt, will be made again to imitate our restrictions and regulations and enforce them on the United States Were such uniform regulations enacted and enforced, the alleged grievances of Canadian fishermen would disappear, the planting and artificial propagation of whitefish on both sides would have fair-play, and the future welfare of these fisheries in these waters would be assured.

Here is Prof. Prince, a gentleman who had only recently arrived in this country, and who perhaps had never seen a whitefish before, alleging that the whitefish naturally resort to the Canadian side; but, in view of the confession of the hon. gentleman and the reports we have that our whitefish are absolutely gone, that Canadians have been prevented from taking their fair share, this is in my opinion a sweeping condemnation of the policy that has been pursued.

I would like to know on what ground such a policy can be justified unless for the good of Canada. If the hon, gentleman could show that his policy had developed the fisheries and that the fish were in Canadian waters for Canadians, although I believe his policy is severe in many respects, that would be almost a complete answer to the complaint that has been made against the Government policy. The hon, gentleman sent up another professor, or rather commander, who made a report in reference to the fish in the Detroit River.

"Catch of whitefish and salmon-trout on the Detroit River by Prof. Wakeham." and the beauty of this thing is that not 50 trout have been caught in the Detroit River for the past 50 years. Yet one of these professors, a man with scientific knowledge, a man who understands the movements of the fish and all about them, goes to the Detroit River under the instructions of the hon. Minister and writes a report, no doubt, with the view of supporting his peculiar views and policy, giving an essay on trout in the Detroit River when no trout can be found there:

Whitefish and trout do not remain long on the spawning grounds; they come in slowly, but directly they have spawned they return to deeper water. It is not the case that what are called Canadian fish are taken to any great extent in United States waters. A few may straggle from the schools, but the great mass of fish that spawn in our waters never get within reach of seines or pounds fished on the other side.

Here is another certificate from another professor who professes to understand the movements of the fish and to have great knowledge of the subject. He says that the Canadian fish do not cross from side to side. Then I would like the hon. Minister to explain where the 800,000,000 pounds of fish, which is the excess caught by the Americans in the last 20 years on Lake Erie have gone. It seems to me they must have gone somewhere or other. fish do not cross from side to side, the Canadian fish must be on the Canadian side, and we should have an increase. fact the fish should be so thick in Lake Erie that they would almost be in the way of the vessels. I believe, however, that the fish have gone into the American nets and market. Take the statistics supplied by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and you will find that the loss to Canada in ten years is $20,000,000 on Lake Erie alone. Yet the hon, gentleman will get up and say the statement that our fishermen are idle is an extravagant one. Why, the very fact that in the county of Essex, including Pelce Island, there are only some 60 poundnets on one side and on the other side of the lake about 2,000 pound-nets, over onehalf of which is almost immediately opposite, shows that our people are comparatively idle and have not been permitted to participate in the advantage of the vast and profitable trade which has been carried on many years by the American people.

Now, this is an important question. gentlemen look would hon. the figures in connection with our fisheries. I am satisfied-although, of course, we cannot get back what have lost-that this stringent and ruinous policy would not be continued. The same thing will happen in Lake Superior which has happened in Lake Erie, if this policy prevails. The Americans will go and fish out Lake Superior. I ask what argument there can be for a policy of this kind, unless it can be shown that it develops the fisheries on the Canadian side. The very statements of the hon. gentleman, in the speech which he distributed among the fishermen of the west, answer themselves. The fish are not there. He admits that; but he talks of great onslaughts on the fisheries! There have been no such onslaughts. The fish have been taken by the American fishermen because the Department of Marine and Fisheries have prevented our fishermen from using the amount of netting and the amount of pound-nets which they could use to advantage. There is just one other mat-ter to which I wish to refer before concluding. I allude to the state of disorganization that existed in the fishery district of Essex and Kent, comprising about half of Lake Erie. I read some papers in connection with this matter last session, in a hurried manner, because it was six o'clock, The hon. Minister said he had not gone fully into the subject; he had not made au exhaustive review, but that my statements were meagre and all that sort of thing. There is nothing very profound about this subject, nothing that requires, as the hon. gentleman intimates, scientific knowledge. The fact simply is that the American people have been getting, through the connivance and sanction of the department, an immense advantage over our Canadian people. The statistics prove that; and when the hon, gentleman talks about people requiring scientific knowledge in order to discuss this policy, and the presumption of people who have not looked into authorities and relying on a little horse sense doing so, it is enough to make the angels weep. Th hon, gentleman alluded to papers that were brought down in relation to the dismissal of Mr. Prosser, and he said in reference to that matter:

I greatly regret, owing to the importance of the subject, and notwithstanding the time at which it has been brought to the attention of the House, that it will be necessary for me to ask the indulgence of the House for some time while I refer to the points that have been raised by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Allen), and particularly to the question upon which he only briefly touched. I know that it is contrary to the rules of the House, and very properly so, to impute motives to hon, gentlemen who ask the attention of this body to any public question; but I was considerably surprised, knowing, as I have reason to know, the very great importance of the preservation of the fisheries of the great lakes of this country, to observe this afternoon the extravagant language which that hon. gentleman indulged in, accompanied, as it was, by the most superficial statements that could possibly be made on such a question. Time and again I heard the hon. gentleman, when speaking of the policy that I am carrying out, refer to it as, policy of oppression and tyranny"; he spoke of "great outrages"; he stated that our Canadian fishermen on those lakes were practically idle today; and declared that there was no explanation or defence in reply to an attack of great moment, which, apparently, had already been made this session, and which the hon, gentleman deemed it necessary on his part to follow up with his fusi-lade of this afternoon. These were extraordinary expressions, Mr. Speaker, and expressions which, if they had really a true support, would have excited a great deal more attention than the hon, gentleman was able to command on either side of the House, which would have attracted a great deal of attention this evening, and would have demanded the most serious consideration that we could give to them. But, instead of the hon, gentleman supporting those statements by arguments, or by an exhaustive review of what the policy of the department really was, I discovered a little later on in his remarks that his real object was to attack, not a policy, but a man; not to criticise a minister of the department or the Government of the day, but to attack, in what I consider a most unfair manner, a Mr. Prosser, who, apparently, lives in the district from which the hon, member for South Essex comes; and, although I have no knowledge of Mr. Prosser, apart from the fact that he was once an officer of my department and was dismissed, and that some years ago, yet, from what the hon. gentleman said, I have no doubt whatever that he is, whether rightly or wrongly, a strong man in that district, and a man who is politically opposed to the hon, gentleman. I can conceive of no other reason why the hon, gentleman should have spent the greater part of his time in driving home and repeating again and again the charges against this man, which were investigated as far back as 1891, and which brought about his ultimate dismissal. What does the hon gentleman mate dismissal. want to do with Mr. Prosser? Why does he drag him up before this House in this year of want to do with Mr. Prosser? Our Lord 1894, and insist at a rather late period of the session in pounding him in the fashion he did?

It seems to me that I brought important papers before the House relating to the management of the Fisheries Department, It happened that Mr. Prosser was the fishery overseer in that district and was dismissed, and the hon. gentleman tried in this way to draw a line across the scent. He hoped by talking about Mr. Prosser to escape any other responsibility for this whole affair. Why, the return brought down was simply a disgraceful exhibition of the way the business of the Fisheries Department has been carried that section for You take years. these two districts from Rondeau, westward, they comprise by far, the most important fisheries on the lake. And yet. for many years, a state of lawlessness and disorganization existed, which was simply a disgrace to the Fishery Department, and to the Government of Canada. The hon. gentleman may think that he can escape on the ground that he did not know that these things existed. It seems a queer idea of ministerial responsibility to think that the hon. Minister can escape in that way. Why, Sir, although I have shown that the fisheries are practically in the hands of Americans from over-fishing on their side of the lakes, yet, on our own side of the lake, comprising half of Lake Erie, the better half of it as regards the extent of the catch, the fishing was pracmen were for years mere serfs of these men, they dare not sell their fish except to Post & Co., a license could not be given except with the permission of Post & Co., of Sandusky. Though our fishermen were acting under the most rigid rules and regulations, a state of disorganization existed, which the Minister of Marine is, to a very great extent responsible. I will just read part of the report of the special officer sent to investigate the state of affairs in this district. Mr. Kerr says:

I experienced a great many difficulties in fathoming the above irregularities.—

That is people fishing without a license, licenses being given to dead men, that kind of irregularities.—

All sorts of obstacles were thrown in my way, especially from such of the fishermen as were under Post & Co.'s control. This made it sometimes utterly impossible for me to get accurate, or even reliable, information in a great many cases, and I must come, therefore, to the conclusion, that either Post & Co. own and control the whole fishery from Rondeau westward, or else that overseers McMichael and Prosser are in their favour, doing their bidding in every respect, instead of taking the interests of the department, whose paid servants they are. In addition to a most serious charge of mismanagement in recommending for licenses parties who do not exist, thereby helping to place the pound-net fisheries of Lake Erie in the hands of Yankee firms, I am also credibly informed that Mr. Prosser has been in the habit of granting permits for extra nets during the fall of the year, especially to such of the fishermen who dispose of their fish to Post & Co.

And again:

I also found many fishermen afraid to give me the necessary information that I was seeking, on accounts of threats, &c., made by Prosser and Post of taking away their licenses, &c. One old gentleman remarked, after I had taken his sworn statement, that, if Prosser knew it, it would settle his license for this year. There is no doubt this lawless sort of work has been carried on for years. If a fisherman makes a kick as to the price of his fish, &c., the next year his outside pound is taken away from him. This particularly has caused much trouble, you can readily perceive—some enjoying the privilege of fishing double-headers, while other's applications are not entertained at all by overseer Prosser, who contended to some that the thing was not allowed.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman wanted to know why I brought up these papers which These papers were only relate to 1891. brought down to the House in 1893. And the hon. gentleman was not present during that session, and I did not have the opportunity therefore of bringing the matter to his attention. I brought the subject up at the earliest possible moment, and I say it as a most singular thing that the Minister of the Crown can escape all responsibility for the disorder that existed for years in relation to one of our most important lake fisheries. What sort of system can obtain in a Department of Marine and Fisheries, tically in the hands of one American firm, I should like to know, that it is possible Post & Co., of Sandusky, and our fisher- for one American firm to control the fisheries of half Lake Erie for many years, as shown by the report of the hon. gentleman's own special officer. Prosser has been dismissed, the hon. gentleman says; and he thinks that that relieves him of responsibil-Why, Sir, here is a scandal which, while, of course, not in the line of the Curran bridge, yet involves a loss to this country quite as great as that involved in the practically bridge—our fisheries handed over to one American firm for years; our fishermen not allowed to sell their fish to any one but Post & Co., except in the case of one or two who positively refused. shows that the Department of Marine and Fisheries under the hon, gentleman was not the model department that he would have the people of this country believe. It seems almost impossible that, under a well-regulated department such a state of affairs could exist, and be continued year after year.

We had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that some change for the better would take place in reference to the fisheries of the county of Essex. It was heralded by the local particularly by the Conservative press, of that county that there was to be an important change of policy, that our people were no longer to be deprived of the right to fish in the Detroit River, and these other narrow waters, they were not to be compelled to remain idle, while their American neighbours were gathering the fish, but that the same freedom in fishing would be allowed on our side as was allowed on the American side. Well, Sir, what change has taken place? In these narrow waters, the Detroit River and Lake St. Clair, Canadians are allowed to fish on paying $50 license fee—on the other side it is entirely free—and, in November, the only month when it is possible to catch whitefish, they are prevented from fishing, while within a stone's throw, the Americans are gathering in the fish. I was in hopes that there would be a change in the policy of the department, but the hon, gentleman seems to think that it is for the good of Canada that the old policy should remain in force. In order to show that, he must prove that the fish remain in Canadian waters, and remain there to be taken by Canadian not and American fishermen. If cannot do that, it evident is quite that his policy has been a failure, and that there has been a very serious loss to the people of this country, a loss to Lake Erie alone, according to the figures of the hon. gentleman, in twenty years, of about $40,000,000, the excess of the American catch would be that much in value greater than That is the point, the Canadian catch. whether Canadian fish is here for the Canadians, or whether they have been caught by the Americans. There is no profound knowledge required in this matter. If the fish are not here, it is quite evident that his policy is a failure.

I think it is due to this House and to this country that the hon, gentleman should give a little better explanation than he gave in his speech last year, and more reliable, leaving out such statements that these were very little; vo difference in the really catch in Lake Erie, that the figures were all talk, when the actual figures, figures the compiled \mathbf{from} blue-books Canada, show that in the short period of twenty years, there is a difference of over 400 million pounds in that Lake alone. If we go on and extend our inquiry, we shall tind a very great difference also in Lake Superior. In the Lake of the Woods the same policy is being pursued, preventing Canadians from taking their share, and throwing the trade into the hands Now, I think it is the American people. about time that hon, members should look into this matter, and that the people who are behind the Minister should compel a change of policy. It is about time that the reign of common sense should be ushered in. The idea of handing this enormous trade over to the American people, and year by year talking about some arrangement by which the fisheries can be preserved, while the American people continue catching as many fish as they possibly can, with all the appliances of nets and boats that they bring into service. This is an important matter, it is not a fish-hook and line busi-Hon. members from the maritime ness. provinces must understand that this is no ordinary matter. If they compare the quantity of fish caught in Lake Erie alone, with the catch of New Brunswick, they will find that the catch of the Canadian and American side of Lake Erie is greater than that of New Brunswick, and it is not very much behind that of Nova Scotia. Yet the Minister and the Government have thought that it is a wise policy to stand and look calmly on and prevent our people from fishing, and see the Americans enjoy this vast trade, a trade of 63,000,000 pounds. Sandusky is the greatest fish market in the world, handling twenty million pounds of fish annually. I have not been guilty of using extravagant statements, as charged by the hon. gentleman; I have no desire to infringe upon his domain in that respect. I am sure that his statements, attributing to the McKinley Bill the results of the figures which have been presented, I have shown to be extravagant. As a matter of fact, the catch on the Canadian side is only seven or eight million pounds, and he can put that on, and it makes very little difference. Yet he will get up in this House and state that this difference is made up by the operation of the McKinley Bill, when I have shown that the figures were made up before the McKinley Bill came into operation. I think the hon. gentleman propounded a question in his speech that I have forgotten to notice. He evidently thinks it is a clincher, and is an answer to the whole attack that has been herring; made upon his department:

I would ask the hon. gentleman, how he will explain this to me, that, while the United States are spending millions to our thousands in fish culture, yet it was my experience to find a request from the hatchery at Detroit, on the United States side of that narrow sheet of water, for permission to come into Canadian waters, in sight of the so-called United States fishermen, to obtain the necessary quota of eggs for their hatchery, stating that they could not obtain them on the United States side? The reason is clear, and it is consistent with all the reports that I have been able to find-that our side of Lake Erie and our side of that river are peculiar.

Now, that is a great question. He wants to know why it was that Americans ask for permission to fish upon the Canadian side of the Detroit River, and if he establishes that there are a few more fish on the Canadian side of the river, he thinks his whole argument is established. Now, Professor Prince, in his report, speaks of this very subject, and says that it is owing to the pollutions of the Detroit side, and I find that confirmed in the American report:

In earlier years there was a great abundance of whitefish in this river, and the annual yield was very large. Mr. James Craig, of Detroit, who has for many years engaged in the fish business of that city, informs us that near Fort Wayne, within the city limits of Detroit, the average catch of whitefish in haul-seines was from 18,000 to 21,000 fish, weighing on an average from 21/2 to 2% pounds. On 12th November, 1871, at one haul of a seine, 3,100 whitefish were caught. With the growth of the city and the increase of the amount of sewage entering the river, the fisheries have declined to their present condition. The number of whitefish taken in the vicinity of Fort Wayne in 1890 was only 3,000, and the output of the entire river was only 35,000 pounds.

That is the answer to that statement. But here the hon, gentleman makes another, which shows that after all he does not understand every thing in connection with his own department. The hon. gentleman says: "The great fish market for Detroit, especially regard to in whitefish, waters." The hon. our gentleman stated that were requests made American hatcheries on Lake Superior for eggs, and he wanted to know how it occurred that if their fisheries were not depleted they came to the Canadian side for their fish eggs. In the waters of Lake Superior it is not possible to keep fish in pens, which would necessarily be broken up, as can be done at Sandwich, and that is the reason and the only reason why they come and make requisition on our department for fish eggs. There is no scarcity of fish eggs in the United States. Here is a statement bearing on this subject:

Put-In-Bay, 15th May.—The hatch at the fish hatchery at this place beats the world's record in the number of eggs taken in one season at one station. During the year which will end with June, there have been taken at this station 115,-000,000 whitefish eggs, 11,000,000 ciscoes, or lake herring; 404,000,000 pike-perch, or wall-eyed pike, besides lake trout, grass pike, yellow perch and other varieties. Besides the eggs and fry shipped away, 30,400,000 whitefish, 17,000,000 ciscoes and 200,000,000 pike-perch fry have been turned into the waters of Lake Erie.

There is no scarcity of fish eggs on the other side, as the hon, gentleman imagines. They have enormous quantities of them, and instead of the fisheries being depleted, as the hon. Minister endeavoured to show from extracts he read, I can read other extracts to show the reverse, and that in some sections of the American waters there has been a great increase in the fisheries generally, and in the whitefish particularly. I read from the commissioners' report of the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries for 1892, as follows:

Whitefish is the second important fish in Lake Huron. It is especially prominent in the poundnet fishery of that part of the lake north of Saginaw Bay and in the gill-net fishery from Alpena. The average weight of the whitefish is about 2 pounds.

Everywhere in this lake the effects of whitefish propagation are manifested and appreciated by the fishermen and fish-dealers. While the output in the year covered by this inquiry was somewhat less than in 1885, the increase in the past few years has been marked. A prominent feature of the fishery for this fish was the unprecedentedly large run in many places of small fish of a size that had not been observed in abundance for many years.

Again:

Along the shore, between St. Ignace and Detour, an increase in the abundance of whitefish, as compared with a number of preceeding years, was reported, the increase being especially marked in Les Cheneaux and Pretence Bay. Trout and some other fish appear to be diminishing in One reason assigned by Mr. Isaac Goudreau, Mr. Charles Goudreau and other prominent fishermen for the increase of whitefish in the inshore waters and among the islands is, that the fish have been driven from their regular resorts in the lake by the large accumulations on the favourite grounds of saw-dust and other refuse from a mill at St. Ignace.

The principal fishermen of this section think there will be no difficulty in keeping up the supply of whitefish, if liberal consignments of fry are planted annually, and the size of the mesh in the cribs of the pound-net is regulated so as to permit the escape of immature fish. In the vicinity of St. Ignace, the fishermen want also a law to prohibit the pollution of the lake, either by saw-dust or other refuse, and some favour a close season on all kinds of fishing after 1st November for a period of years, in order to give trout and other fish whose abundance has decreased, a better opportunity to multiply.

In the fisheries of the southern side of the Strait of Mackinac, and the adjacent western shore of Lake Huron, whitefish constitute fully nine-tenths of the catch, the remaining species consisting of trout, pike, perch, herring and stur-geon. During the last two years the number of whitefish in the fisheries could be carried to Mackinac city have been steadily increasing.

The only dealer at Mackinac city who has bought and handled fish caught in that vicinity during the past six years, says that it has been no uncommon thing in the last two years to take 2,500 pounds of whitefish from one small poundnet in one night's fishing, while in previous years, if half that quantity was taken under similar circumstances, it was considered a big catch; he is satisfied that the fish now being caught were planted in that vicinity by the United States and Michigan Fish Commission.

In the vicinity of Cheboygan, while a great many trout are caught, whitefish is the principal specie. Every fisherman in this region has commented on the very large increase in the number of whitefish caught during the past two years. Mr. Maynard Corbitt, of the fishing firm of Corbitt & Duffy, stated that he had fished in that vicinity for twenty-five years, and up to two or three years ago the whitefish were becoming scarcer each season, but during the past three years they have undergone a marked increase in abundance.

I could read many other extracts. It is very easy for the hon. Minister to read statements regarding the depletion of fisheries in certain sections; I could read about the depletion in other sections. That is not the question. The question is simply this: has the policy of the department in preventing our people from taking a reasonable share of fish in Lake Erie, in preventing them prosecuting the fishery industry in that and other lakes, been a good policy? I say the only answer that can be given to the question is to show that the Canadian fisheries have increased, and that we in Canada have a quantity equal to the great excess caught by the American fishermen. I regret that I have been compelled to detain the House so long, but this is a question of very great importance, one involving a very large sum of money, one that gives employment to a vast number of American people, and if a proper policy had been pursued in Canada our fisheries would have contributed very largely to increasing the wealth of the province of Ontario.

Mr. McGREGOR. I do not intend to take up the time of the House very long in speaking on this subject. The hon, member for South Essex (Mr. Allan) has gone over the points very clearly and has shown the House the exact position we occupy as compared with our American neighbours. In the county of Essex we are very peculiarly situated. We have a shore line of about 150 miles. Along these shores we have our American neighbours, in some places not more than 2,700 feet distant from us. What we feel to be a great grievance is that our American neighbours are allowed to fish from January to January, whereas our people are compelled to quit at the very time the fish are running. We have been fishing along these shores for 75 or 100 years. In a very large number of cases the fishermen have purchased the along the shore for the purpose land front from which of getting the The Government under its present policy, and under the policy that has been in vogue for many years, are depriving our fishermen of that privilege. While our shores are well adapted for the propagation of fish, we find that while the fish are small they remain there, but when they attain to that size to be of use to our people then the Americans are allowed to take them instead of our own people. The Minister stated that the fish do not go from one side of the lake to the other. But it will be found that according as the winds are the fish go for the deep and smooth water. So that if the Canadians are not allowed to fish, our American neighbours surely get them. It is stated also by the Minister that we are on the eve of having an arrangement made with our American neighbours, under which they will have a close season, the same as ours. For 20 or 25 years same as the same story has been going the rounds. Twenty years ago at a meeting in Detroit a proposition was made that the Americans should have a close season, but during the whole of those 20 years we find no arrangements have yet been made. The Americans have taken our fish and our fishermen are becoming poor. We know that in the United States each state has a fishery law of its own, and Lake Erie, the Detroit River, the St. Clair River, and Lake St. Clair, are under the jurisdiction of four separate states, namely, Michigan. Ohio. Pennsylvania and New York. It would be almost impossible for Canada to make arrangements with the whole of these four states at one and the same time. We are asking only for fair play. We are asking that we be treated the same our American neighbours who as the shores of the same waters as on We ask that when they fish we can also fish. If they are determined to deplete the waters let us have our share. If our fishermen are allowed to fish all through the year, observing no close season. our neighbours may become alarmed and be led to proclaim a close season. But if they will not, and are determined to take the last fish, let us have our share of it. Why is it that the Americans can take fish by the thousands, and as my hon. friend (Mr. Allan) has said by the million, while we are de-prived of that privilege. We have petition-We have shown the ed the Government. Government the necessity of a change in their policy. We have petitioned Parliament and the Government through the county councils of the counties in which we reside; we have petitioned through the town councils of the different towns along the borders; and we have petitioned this House through the townships. We have also had individual petitions asking for a change of policy in reference to the fishing regulations, but, Sir, we have had no answer to any one of them. We feel that this is a great grievance. We feel that our people having invested a very large amount of money in the purchase of land for fishing purposes and then being deprived of the fish, are obliged to suffer a great loss. They have not only invested in the lands, but they have cleared the rivers for the purpose of fishing, and the fact that they have not been able to utilize their means of livelihood has left many of them in debt. They have lost many of them in debt. They have lost their boats and their docks and many other investments they have made, all on account of the extraordinary and ruinous policy of this Government. Sir Charles Tupper said: Canada for the Canadians, but, Sir, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said: Canadian fish for the Americans. It is against the laws of Canada for a Canadian to have whitefish in his possession during The Government themthe close season. selves come along and take large quantities of whitefish for the ova, and the fish being killed in the process, are sold to the Americans. The Canadians who have lived there so long, and who have enjoyed the fishing formerly, are not permitted to buy these fish even from our Canadian Government. The Americans have that privilege and honour. We feel that to be a great grievance. Talk about the Czar of Russia and his severity to Russian Jews. Sir, no Czar of Russia ever treated the Russian Jews as the people of Essex have been treated by these fishery laws. The Czar of Russia has been severe, but not so severe as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Not only does he keep the fish for the Americans, but when his officers find that a Canadian has made a mistake by fishing with a mesh a little small, or fishing outside of the close season, they seize his boat and break it up, they burn his nets, and the fisherman is taken prisoner. All this is done to him when he can stand at his own door and look across the river, which at many points is not broader than twice the distance from this House to Sparks street, and see his American neighbours take in fish by the thousands. We say that this is unfair and that it is ill treatment to Canadians. Now, Sir, we have no close season for herring in our fresh waters, and we find that in 1891, there were more herring in Lake Erie than there had been in any previous season. That shows that the policy of the Administration has not been in the best interests of Canadians. It is all the greater grievance, because it is we who grow the fish that the Americans catch. My friend from South Essex (Mr. Allan) has shown the very large amount of fish taken by the American people and sold at Sandusky and other American towns. If this enormous quantity of fish is taken on the American side, it is largely because the people of Canada have been forced to protect the fish for the benefit of the American people. When we have the spawning grounds, and the feeding grounds and all the advantages, why should we not have our fair proportion of the fish. May I read, and that is all I will say on the subject, the following petition:-

terests of the people; that in this province the most valuable fisheries are contained in the international waters which are common to the fisher-men of Ontario and the United States; that in international waters the American fishermen have free fishing, are not restricted in the number or description of nets, and have practically no close season, while in Ontario our fishermen must ob-tain a license to fish, which places them under the control of the department, when applications may be discriminated against; when granted, a high license is exacted; they are restricted in the number and description of nets, locations for fishing, a weekly close season impossible to observe by lake fishermen, various close seasons for different kinds of fish, and a general close season for the month of November; to such an extent is over-protection carried that in Canada we have close seasons for mullets, suckers, sturgeon and herring, which live largely upon the eggs of other kinds of fishes. Results—the American catch in the great lakes in three years, 1880-85 and 1889 the only years in which we have official reportsthe American catch is: 1880, 68,742,000 pounds; 1885, 99,842,076 pounds; 1889, 117,085,568 pounds; total in three years, 285,669,644 pounds. dian catch in all the great lakes and in lakes in Ontario, same years, was: 1880. 11,473,000 pounds; 1885, 27,378,180 pounds; 1889, 32,169,032 pounds; total in three years, 71,020,212 pounds. The Americans employed in 1889 fishing in the great lakes 6,896 men, whose average catch was 16,977 pounds of fish. The Canadians employed in the great lakes in the same year were 3,523 men, whose average catch was 9,118 pounds of fish. A comparison of the catch of fish in Lake Erie for the years 1880, 1885, 1889.—The American catch was 144,217,149 pounds, of which 10,189,427 were whitefish. The Canadian catch in Lake Erie during the same years was 18,928,252 pounds. of which 697,893 pounds were whitefish. Americans employed 2,181 fishermen on Lake Erie in 1889, whose average catch was 29,134 pounds. The Canadian employed 465 men in Lake Erie fisheries during the same year, whose average catch was 20,700 pounds. The value of the American catch in the great lakes in 1889 was $6,743,-359.19; the value of the Canadian catch in the great lakes in the same year was $1,963,122.80; difference in favour of the Americans of $4,780,-236.39. The value of the American catch in Lake Erie in 1889 was $3,248,361.66; the value of the Canadian catch in Lake Erie in the same year was $487,604.47; in favour of the Americans, $2,-760,757.19.

The prices of the various kinds of fish have been reckoned at the prices used by the Minister of Fisheries of Canada in valuing the fish caught in Ontario in 1889.

Under similar regulations there is no apparent reason why as many Canadians should not be engaged in the fishing industry as Americans, or that the catch on their side should not be as large as by American fishermen.

Your petitioners, therefore, pray that Canadian fishermen be placed under the same system of free fishing as the American fishermen fishing in waters that are common to both, and that the fishermen of Lake St. Clair and Detroit River be granted permission to fish for whitefish in the month of November, the only month of the year that they are to be found in said waters.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

That is the case, so far as we can lay it before you in a condensed form. I thank the House for the hearing they have given me.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, after the exhaustive remarks which we have had on this subject from the gentlemen who have just sat down, and for which I feel inclined to thank them, I do not intend to detain the House at any length. But this subject is one which deeply concerns not only the counties represented by those hon. gentlemen, but my own constituency; and I feel bound to call the Minister's attention through the pages of "Hansard," I hope, since he is not here, and I cannot do so personally, to one or two points.

I think the speech of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Allan) has fully demonstrated the fact that fishing on the American shore depletes the whole lake. There seems to be no room, on theoretical grounds, to argue further in opposition to that contention. It is, therefore, in the interest of Canadians in general that we should be allowed to take our share of the fish which swim in that lake. The question of a close season is, of course, one of a different nature. In regard to that, even though it be admitted that the United States fishing depletes the whole lake, it is a question whether it would pay us to put up with less than our share of fish in the spawning season for the purpose of making the fish last a little longer. It is clear it would not make them permanent so long as the United States fishermen deplete the lake without restriction. For my own part, I doubt whether it is worth while to preserve even the close season until and unless arrangements for uniform regulations can be made with the United States authorities.

But that is not the point to which I wish particularly to call attenion. derstand that the regulations hitherto complained of, and enforced by the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, have been relaxed by the present Minister in regard to the Lake and River St. Clair, the Detroit River, and the extreme western end of Lake To that extent, the department has recognized the force of the arguments presented so ably on more than one occasion by my hon. friend from South Essex. But I think this recognition involves something more. If it be proper to relax the restrictions on the number of licenses, on the number and kinds of nets employed, and so forth, in the districts to which I have referred, it is proper to relax them also on the north shore of Lake Erie generally. they are relaxed in the districts to which I refer, it can only be on the ground of giving fishermen a fair share with the Yankees in the total catch of the lake; on the ground of admitting that Yankee fishdepletes the entire lake. Ιf that ing the case, the privileges should be extended along the north shore. We ought to be allowed to fish with gill-nets as well as with pound-nets, and, perhaps, also, under certain restrictions, with seines, although that is a matter of less importance.

But when we remember that American fishermen are allowed to fish with gill-nets up to the middle of the lake, so far as that can be ascertained, while we are not allowed to use them at all, it is clear that we are not put upon an equal footing with I think the use the American fishermen. of gill-nets should be allowed, a large number of nets should be allowed to each licensee, and perhaps, a larger number of licenses should be issued. The question of granting licenses is a very difficult one. It has been hitherto a matter of favour altogether, either on the part of the fishery inspector of the district, or of the head of the department. The shore has been mapped out into fishing berths, and a monopoly of each of these berths has been given to one or more persons at the option of the officials of the department. It has been a matter of favour who should be allowed to fish, and a lot of small monopolies have been created. I do not know how far that system is capable of amendment, but I think it should not be a matter of political favour, or of the favour of a local official, who gets the right to fish.

The necessity of relaxation having been admitted in the west, that relaxation should be extended along the north shore where the arguments in its favour are equally strong. I regret that the hon. Minister is not in his place to have his attention called to this point, but I hope that he will notice what I have said in the "Hansard" and I have will take it into consideration. every reason to believe that the hon. gentleman is turning his attention to this subject with a view of making some more practical and businesslike regulations than those that have been enforced hitherto. With regard to international uniformity of regulations, that is a goal at which we should aim. It is very difficult, no doubt, to know with whom Lake Erie is bounded on to negotiate. the south by three states, each of which claims the right to regulate its own fishing I believe there is also a claim interests. on the part of the Federal Government to regulate the fisheries in those navigable waters which form the boundary between the United States and other countries. would be the perfection of fishery regulations if some uniform system could be agreed upon between whomsoever is found to have the necessary authority on the other side and our department. I trust the Minister will devote his best attentions and energy to securing such uniformity. The value that could be created in Lake Erie alone by the development of our fisheries, under an international system of that sort, with breeding establishments and so forth, is incalculable. Lake Erie would practically become a preserved fish-pond on a large scale. whence tremendous supplies of fish could be drawn; but until such arrangement be made, our fishermen all along the north shore of Lake Erie should have much greater latitude than they have been allowed hitherto.

Mr. PRIOR. Before the House goes into supply, I wish to make an explanation with regard to a statement I made last night when the discussion was taking place on the boundary commission. I then said that the Deputy Minister of the Interior was in favour of the American contention with regard to the Portland Canal. I made that statement on information given me by a gentleman, on whose veracity I thought I could rely, and who told me that the Deputy Minister had, in conversation with him. made that remark. Since then I have been informed by the Deputy Minister that the gentleman in question must have been entirely mistaken, because in no way has the deputy ever said anything that could be so construed, and that the only gentlemen to whom he could have given an opinion were his own chief, the Minister of the Interior, and the late Sir John Thompson. Any one who knows the Deputy Minister of the Interior knows that he is man thoroughly to be relied upon and trusted, and, therefore, I must take his word and believe that the gentleman who gave me the information was entirely mistaken. I think, in justice to the Deputy Minister, that I should be allowed to retract what I said last night, my statement not being founded on fact.

Motion agreed to; and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Civil Government-Department of the Secretary of State.....

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to reduce that item to $37,062.57. I propose to strike off two of the first-class clerks at $1,800 each, one second-class clerk at $1,400, one secondclass at $1,287.50, and one third-class at $1,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the parties, and are they superannuated?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The first-class clerks struck off are H. J. Morgan, 53 years of age, and E. Brousseau, 60 years of age. Morgan is superannuated at $1,260, and Mr. The second-class Brousseau at $1,116. clerks are H. G. Lamothe and C. Medlow. Mr. Lamothe's salary was $1,400 and his retiring allowance is $420. He was in charge of the franchise work in the department, which I have removed into the hands of the Queen's Printer, where it is done without extra cost. Mr. Medlow was an engrosser receiving $877, and his retiring allowance is $300. George Collins, whose salary was $1,000, is retired at $420. work of Mr. Morgan and Mr. Brousseau is being done by Mr. Colson, Mr. Storr and others by redistribution of the work. Mr. Lamothe was in the service some years ago. but unfortunately he had to leave on account of his health, and on the recommendation abolition of the office.

of the Minister of Inland Revenue he was given a gratuity. He again entered the service, and has been allowed the full number of years he has been in the service. I have made the rule to add no years in any case. The superannuation allowances are just what the parties can claim under the

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Lamothe, some years ago, was compelled to ask for superannuation on account of his failing eyesight, but after a few years' rest he was taken again into the service, and the hon. gentleman says he has done very good service since.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I said nothing about the work; I made no comment.

Mr. LAURIER. I believe that testimony could be given by the hon. gentleman's predecessors that Mr. Lamothe was a very meritorious officer. At all events, he was trusted with work of a most important character. In fact for some years he had the management of the branch which concerns the Franchise Act, and I believe had more to do with the branch than any other I have reason to believe he disofficer. charged his duty faithfully and well. He is yet a young man, not more than forty or forty-one and in good health, and I am afraid the Government are dispensing with the services of a valuable officer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not now saying anything with regard to Mr. Lamothe. I am not called upon to do so, but the department are treating him just as fairly as any employee. There is no work for him to do. I am getting the work done by the Queen's Printer, and I assure the House it will be done just as well.

Mr. CASEY. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that in every case where he has superannuated an officer he has abolished the office?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In every case. That appears in the Order in Council, and the salary is dropped out of the Estimates. There can be no new appointment.

Mr. CASEY. I suppose that in that case notice was given to these gentlemen of the approaching abolition of their office, so that they might make arrangements for their future.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is generally understood that reductions were to be made, though I do not think that individual notices were sent. You must remember that I had but little time to consider the matter. and you cannot notify a man that he is to be superannuated until the Council gives the order.

Mr. CASEY. I think it would be only fair, even after that, to give these individuals notice that they were to be superannuated, not for any incapacity, but because of the Mr. MONTAGUE. There is no vote out of which I could give them any pay for services after that.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we might deal with the items in agriculture now.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. Minister will allow some latitude of discussion of this item on concurrence, I would not object to letting it go now.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that would be fair.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You can get as many promises of that kind as you like.

Mr. CASEY. My hon, friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan) may want to discuss these items. And if discussion is permitted on concurrence, there is no objection to their going through committee.

To enable Dairy Commissioner to promote dairying interests by advances for making cheese and butter within the provinces, the proceeds of sales of products from such advances to be replaced to the credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.....

Mr. CASEY. When this item was discussed previously, it was distinctly stated on one of the supplementary Estimates for the butter shop that was conducted during the winter, that nothing more was to be done in the way of making advances on butter for export. But this item is to promote the dairying interest by advances for making cheese and butter in the different provinces.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is not for the butter advances you speak of. This is to begin the dairying industry in parts of the country where they have not yet been engaged in it by paying to the farmers an advance of 50 cents a hundred pounds on milk to enable them to run on until the product of the factory is disposed of. The experience is that it is recouped to the public treasury.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be recouped.

Mr. CASEY. Where is this to be distributed?

Mr. MONTAGUE. A considerable amount in Prince Edward Island, in Nova Scotia and in the North-west Territories: also, but not so large an amount, in New Brunswick.

Mr. CASEY. It is important to know where it is to be distributed, because it puts into the hands of the Government a large fund, which will undoubtedly promote dairying interests, but which may be used to promote political interests at the same time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is not the idea at all. Incidentally it may do us some good.

Mr. CASEY. The hon, gentleman says that no such idea would enter his mind. But it might be suggested by a candidate, and I do not know that we could trust the hon. gentleman to be proof against temptation. To put the vote in this form without stating distinctly what it is for, is simply to put $40,000 into the hands of the Government to be distributed amongst the patrons of cheese and butter factories so as to make the most political capital for the friends of the Government in the various constituencies. We have no objection to appropriating $40,-000, or even a much larger sum, to promote the dairying industry, but we do object to voting this item without providing exactly what is to be done with it. To leave it open is to establish a fund which I must call a bribery fund, in the hands of the Government to be used as they please during the elections; for there is no doubt that the application of it will be based upon political reasons rather than upon the needs of the locality. I might put the hon. gentle-man's sincerity to the test by informing him that there are several districts in my own county where cheese-making has fallen back during the past few years for various reasons. I would suggest that it would be highly proper to make some grants in the constituency of West Elgin.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not know any cows were left there.

Mr. CASEY. There is a pretty good breed of calves there, at all events. If I were to suggest to the Minister the advisability of making some grants of this sort in West Elgin, I am afraid I would be met with a candid smile, and a statement that the funds were all appropriated somewhere else, where they were more needed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have established a creamery in Oxford, and took the money out of the treasury.

Mr. CASEY. A Government creamery is a place where people can go and sell their cream at ordinary rates, and get butter made out of it is a different thing. But this is a proposal to advance money to the patrons of creameries all over the Dominion. Creameries can only be put in a few places, but this could be used in a dozen different constituencies to the greatest advantage. I think the Secretary of State, or the Minister whom he represents, should present a scheme showing where this is to be spent, before we give the vote.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I understand that this vote is to assist in the establishment of creameries throughout the country. The creamery industry is in its infancy in the North-west at present. Every one who wishes to see the country prosper, must take a great interest in the good work being done by the Government at the experimental farm in teaching the farmers this new industry. I think the money spent in this direction is most wisely spent; and while I do not for a moment believe that my hon. friend who has just taken his seat would oppose the spending of money so wisely as this is proposed to be spent, at the same time I would like to see him seconding it with all his influence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think, as a rule, the expenditure of public moneys for these objects is objectionable, and my hon. friend near me has no doubt good reasons for taking objection to this vote. But I must frankly say that I cannot join him in condemnation of the vote. I took some pains last year to examine into the expenditure of this money in Prince Edward Island, and although it is capable of being used for political purposes. I am bound to say that, under the present management of Prof. Robertson, it is not so used. The system of farming there is undergoing a gradual transformation, and the little assistance which is given by the Government in this way, which is actually no loss to themselves, is a great incentive to the people to adopt the changed method which it is desirable they should adopt. I think myself that, under proper checks, and for a little time only, the expenditure may be justified. While I consent to the vote, and concur in it cordially, I do not propose to commit myself to a continuance of the expenditure be-So far as I have inyond a short time. vestigated the expenditure in Prince Edward Island. I have seen no evidence that any political use has been made of it. am proud to see that our Liberal farmers as well as others take advantage of the opportunities offered them to improve their system of farming in this direction, and I think that no charge can reasonably be made that any distinction is made with respect to politics in this expenditure. great deal of good has been done, and I look forward to good being done in the future, but it being a tentative measure, and for a little time only, and, knowing the good that has accrued from the expenditure, it has my cordial approval and support.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that we gave $36,000 last year. How much was spent, and what were the actual receipts?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The year before the whole sum was returned; for the current year, up to the 30th June, it is not all returned, but will be. There are about $15,000 yet uncollected, but it is all in good hands.

Mr. CASEY. Who is responsible for returning it, individuals or the factories?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is only done to the patrons of Government factories, and it is done for the purpose of starting an industry where it has not existed, and I am glad to see that my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island testifies as to its value. In 1892, I think there were no dairies or creameries in Prince Edward Island. The Government loaned the machinery and started a creamery there, and the result was that in 1893 they had eleven dairy stations and 1.187 farmers were using them, and were making $48,000 worth of cheese. 1894, there were sixteen cheese factories and two creameries, and others are being established this year. With regard to the North-west, the same policy is being pur-sued. The Government have one creamery at Moose Jaw, and they are sending three men to the North-west for the purpose of developing that industry at other points, in the same way it is developed in Prince Edward Island. Ontario is not being forgotten, but the point in which Ontario is behind at present is not in cheese factories, nor summer dairying, but in winter dairying, and the experiments which are being made in Ontario are for the purpose of establishing winter dairying in that pro-

Mr. CASEY. If the hon, gentleman's explanations had been given in the first place so as to make it clear that this money is applied entirely to Government dairies, a great many of my remarks would not have been made. But the item is open to the construction, and the hon, gentleman's first explanation did not remove it, that this fund would be available to make advances to the patrons of struggling cheese factories throughout the Dominion, and it was to that I objected when I referred to the use of the money.

Mr. BORDEN. I desire to ask the Minister whether his attention has been called to a petition forwarded by the fruit-growers of the Annapolis valley, asking for a grant for the purpose of establishing an experimental fruit station there. I have been requested by the president of the Fruit Growers' Association of Nova Scotia to ask the Government what its policy is to be with reference to this matter. I hold in my hand a copy of a petition which I understand is signed by over 1,000 representative inhabitants of every county in Nova Scotia, asking the federal Government for an annual grant to aid the Fruit Growers' Association in establishing and maintaining an experimental fruit station in the Annapolis valley. The hon, gentle-man knows that during the past twenty years, fruit growing in the Annapolis valley has become an enormous industry. Twenty-five or thirty years ago we were actually importing into that valley fruit from the United States, but, during the past year we exported 300,000 or 400,000 barrels of apples to England and to the United States. The hon, gentleman can see at the importance of this industry. There is an experimental farm in Nova Scotia. It is established at a point where on account of its location, fruit growing cannot be followed advantageously, and the president, and S. C. Parker, secretary. fact is that the Annapolis valley is the place. The only way in which this Governabove all others where fruit growing in Novament can possibly promote the fruit-Scotia can be carried on most profitably. It growing industry is in some such way is proposed, in connection with the school as this. Government might very properly encourage engaged in the fruit-growing industry contrat institution and the fruit-growing industed that so long as the present system try of the province by establishing an exprevails, they have a right to assistance that institution and the fruit-glowing income try of the province by establishing an experimental fruit station there. I will not from the Government, as they are very heavily taxed in many other respects, and heavily taxed in many other respects, and extracts from the petition, but I desire to that they should receive some return by refer to one or two points. It is stated in way of direct assistance to their industry. the petition as follows:-

- 1. (a). Value of fruit exported to England, United States, West Indies, Prince Edward Island of fruit exported to England, and Newfoundland amounts to about one million dollars.
- (b). Orchards in full bearing at present, 7,500 acres.
- (c). Orchards less than twelve years old, probably 5,000 acres.
- (d). Average annual increase of trees planted, 20 per cent.
- (e). Value of vegetables (principally potatoes) exported in 1894, over $600,000.
- (f). Average price per barrel for apples last year, delivered f.o.b., $1.75; plums, $2.25; pota-
- toes, 40 cents per bushel.
 (g). Average number of labourers employed during the season, picking, packing and shipping
- of fruit, from eight to ten thousand men, over six thousand men being constantly employed in fruit culture.
- (h). Small fruits grown in 1894, $50,000.

 O. Value of small fruits grown in 1894, $50,000. 2. Other industries assisted directly by the - fruit trade: (a). Railroads, steamboats, sailing craft and About $50,000 was paid the Dominion truckmen. Atlantic Railway in 1894 for freight; and over $200,000 was paid to steamships for freight and loading for London alone for the crop of 1894. We respectfully submit, that in the interests of Canada adequate means should be taken by the Government to develop these natural resources.

- (a). The fact that the United States, with whom our fruit-growers come into competition in foreign markets, have an established system of experimental stations, numbering from one to four in every state, making in the aggregate fifty-six. besides numerous substations, makes the importance of a fruit station more evident, if we hope to contend with them in the open markets of the world.
- (b). The association, aided by a subsidy of two thousand dollars from the Nova Scotia Government, has succeeded in establishing a horticul-tural school located at Wolfville. The school is not connected with any other institution, but is controlled by the association. It is the only horticultural school in the maritime provinces, and, we believe, in the Dominion, in which the tuition It has begun its second year with sixty is free. It is a great benefit to farmers and farpupils. mers' sons.

In view of the large opportunities for increased growth of fruit; in view of the necessity of an experimental station in this part of the country to successfully use these opportunities, and in view of the intelligent and financial interest in this enterprise of the Fruit Growers' Association, we believe our petition will be found worthy of the most favourable consideration and action of Her Majesty's Government for Canada.

The petition is signed by J. W. Bigelow, I

Mr. FOSTER. The petition has been received, I am informed. We have had petitions before for the establishment of experimental fruit farms in other parts of the Dominion. All of these matters have to be taken up gradually. We cannot devote more money for experimental farm work and the dairying business at the present, and it is impossible to take up several other branches, which are very laudiable and praiseworthy in themselves and which would be generally beneficial to the people. We have taken up what seemed to be the most pressing, and those which most had need of guidance and actual help, and in doing that we spend $200,000 annually. The matter of fruit-growing stations, although it has had the attention of the department, and has been experimented with by the department on all the experimental farms in the different parts of the Dominion, and is being carried on in connection with farm work, has not been taken up as a specialty. That industry must wait its turn. My hon. friend knows that if any industry in Canada is strong enough to wait its turn it fruit-growing the industry is valley of the Annapolis, where grows almost indigenous to the fertile fruit I am told that at Nappan, where the experimental farm is, and where it had been supposed it was of no use to attempt to grow fruit, experiments are being made and with great success, and it has been demonstrated that fruit can be grown in that section of the country, and this has stimulated other portions of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia not so well situated as is the Annapolis valley to raise fruit, and the system is thus working in the direction of extending fruit culture. So that generally good results in that respect are flowing from the experimental farms. By and by, when the exchequer is flush of money, when the dairy and butter business are established, no doubt the Government will take up fruit culture in different parts of the Dominion.

Mr. BORDEN. I am glad to know it is the intention of the Government to take these matters up gradually, and I hope the Finance Minister will begin with the Annapolis valley, as these fruit growers are first on the ground with their petition, and he will find it convenient at an early date to answer favourably the prayer of the petition to which I have referred.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You might strike out the Haras National vote.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is passed; this is its last year.

Mr. GRIEVE. Is the record of work done at all the different dairying stations embodied in the dairying report?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. GRIEVE. What is the number of dairying reports that have been issued the last year?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Government does not control the issue.

Mr. GRIEVE. Reports for 1892-93 were only placed in the hands of members of this House a few weeks ago. Farmers not very fond of studying ancient history, and if these reports are to be of any to farmers they should be placed in their hands as soon as possible. We are paying $75,000 per year for the maintenance of expermiental farms, and from $30,000 to $40,000 for dairy purposes. There is no possible way how that expenditure can benefit the farmers of the country generally, other than by their receiving a copy of these reports. If the reports are not ready in proper season and in sufficient numbers to distribute amongst the bulk of the farmers of the country, then they might as well not be published at all. It is all very well for farmers residing within 30, or 40, or 50 miles of the experimental farms to visit the farm as they do in large numbers; but it is impossible for the farmers throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion to come here. The only benefit these farmers living at a long distance can receive, is from reading the Experimental Farm and Dairy Reports. A return I moved for a month ago, shows that there were something like 35,000 Experimental Farm Reports published all told in English and French last year. What is that number amongst 800,000 farmers in this country? I believe this is a valuable report, but to make it of any practical value at all, it should be published in large numbers and sent out among the farmers. I hope the Secretary of State will see in the future that those reports are generously distributed and sent out in proper season.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I trust my hon. friend (Mr. Grieve) will suggest to the Agricultural Committee to make the recommendations he has referred to.

Mr. GRIEVE. A recommendation was made by the Agricultural Committee to publish 150,000 copies of the report, but that number was cut down after it left the committee.

Mr. Borden.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The report is brought up to the 30th June, and it is impossible to get it down for the session, unless the sessions should extend over the half year.

Mr. GRIEVE. Speaking for myself it is only since last New Year that I received some 500 of the Dairy Reports. It is no easy matter for many of the members of this House to have to cart these reports home from the post office and have them addressed and carted back to the post office again. They should be placed in the hands of members while the House is in session. It is since January, 1895, that I have received the Dairy Report of 1892-93. Surely the Minister will see that that will not be repeated again.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend's point is that we do not get the report for the current year, but that we do not get the report of the year before. The reports for 1892 were distributed in the winter of 1895. That reflects very little credit on the department. The Agricultural Committee recommends that a certain number of the reports be printed, and if the department accepts that recommendation they print them two years too late.

Mr. FLINT. The Dairy and Experimental Farm Reports are not like the ordinary financial reports of the Government which must necessarily be brought down to the 30th June in each year. I would suggest for the Minister's consideration that these reports be brought up to the end of the calendar year. The time of their publication and preparation could be varied without any injury to their value, and perhaps with a great deal of advantage to the members of the House and to the farmers of the country. It seems to me that the time the farmers would like to have these reports would be at any time after the 30th December, and before their early spring operations commence.

Distributing Fishing Bounty $5,000

Mr. BOWERS. I wish to call the attention of the Government to the unfair distribution of the fishing bounty. The principal fishing counties in the Dominion do not receive the amount of bounty to which they are entitled. For instance, Digby County, being, I think, the third or fourth county in the province of Nova Scotia or in the Dominion of Canada, in regard to its catch of fish, does not receive within $1.70 of the general average that is paid in the Dominion to each man who fishes in a vessel. $78.653.29 is paid to vessels and crews, and I contend that while half of that money should be paid to the vessels per tonnage, as it is at present, the other half should be divided among the fishermen, according to the number of men who fish in the vessel. giving each of them $6.63, which was last year's average. Instead of that, the following statement, giving the bounty of each piled, will show how unfair the distribution county for 1893, which I have carefully com- has been:

to be $6.63. The highest bounty paid per head to vessel fishermen was $21.75 in 1893, the lowest 83c., although, according to the Marine and Fisheries report, I find that in Antigonish only the vessel drew bounty, while the crew drew nothing-something peculiar in itself. You will notice, Chairman, that Northumberland drew $14.32, or $7.69 more than the average; Inverness drew $11.60, or, $4.79 more than the average; and Guysboro' drew $8.33, or $1.70 more than Cumberland, Prince (P.E.I.), the average. King's (N.S.), Saguenay, Lunenburg, Inverness, Queen's and Charlotte drew from 30c. to $1.59 more than the average paid, while the rest of the counties, with one or two exceptions, received amounts far below the average amount they were justly entitled to, Digby receiving only $4.79, or $1.66 per man below the average, or an amount for the county of $668.98 less than it was entitled to. I called the attention of the late Minister to this matter two or three years ago. He told me this policy was for the encouragement of the building of larger vessels. But you see that this of itself does not necessarily encourage the building of larger vessels. If you divided the $78,625 and gave half that amount to the vessels, you would encourage the building of larger vessels just

The average in the whole Dominion we find, as well. Then the other half should be divided pro rata among the fishermen of the whole Dominion. That would be the fair way to distribute the fishing bounty. Why should three or four men who have a vessel of fifty tons receive more per man than six or eight men who fish in a vessel of twenty tons? The men fishing in the larger should not receive any more money, because they probably work no harder than the men in the smaller one. At the same I would also call the attention time, of the hon. I would also call attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that Gloucester, with only one vessel of twenty-five tons, one of eighteen tons, one of seventeen tons, three of fifteen, five of fourteen, fifteen of thirteen, and the balance of ten to twelve tons, drew more bounty than Digby County with its large tonnage of vessels and the number of men fishing fleet, because these boats that have inextricably mixed up and confused, thus been turned into vessels only carry about placing the men at a disadvantage. two men, and all ten-ton vessels get $14.50 or $7.25 for each man. This thing is very unfair. Gloucester County is one where the late Minister of Marine had to throw out at one time, over 500 claims on account of fraud. Now, they have turned these large boats into vessels in order to get more bounty than they are rightfully entitled They measure these boats on the outside, while our vessels are all measured under decks, on the inside, so that the Gloucester boats measure more tons than they should rightly, and are drawing more bounty than they are entitled to. I would ask the hon. Minister to examine into matter and see whether he candivide the bounty more fairly \mathbf{SO} not that the vessel fishermen will get an average per man all over the Dominion. Do not give one man $21.75, who perhaps may have fished barely three months, and barely caught the 2,000 pounds required, while some other man, who fished seven or eight months in a vessel with eight men, only gets a couple of dollars. If this money were divided pro rata to each man, the clerks in the Fishery Department could make up the cheques very much quicker, because they would have a regular amount to give each man. I hope the Minister will give his early attention to this matter, so that before another year we may have a more equal distribution of this money.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I shall be very glad to give every consideration to the statement made by the hon, gentleman. It is very difficult to divide that bounty, and all that I can say is that I feel confidence in the existing system. There may be some improvement possible, but my predecessor gave his most earnest attention to that subject, and his most earnest endeavours to prevent fraud.

Has the hon, gentleman received any petition from Prince Edward Island with regard to the oyster fisheries there? I notice that the fishermen have been holding meetings in different parts of the county, and have made representations. I hope that when their petition reaches the hon, gentleman he will give it every consideration.

Mr. FLINT. I would like to express my gratification at the promise of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to look carefully into the statement made by the non. member for Digby. The House is certainly in-debted to my hon. friend for having so persistently called attention to this matter during two or three successive sessions, and for having so forcibly and clearly expressed his views. It is apparent that the present basis of distributing the fishing bounty is unscientific and illogical.

hon. member for Digby has evidently given this question a great deal of thought and calculation, and his figures are certainly very convincing. It does appear rather extraordinary that the average fisherman in Digby County should only receive $4.97, while each fisherman in the county of Northumberland receives $14.32. This disparity runs through the various counties. the county of Yarmouth. In the county of Yarmouth the average fisherman receives $5.56 from this fund set aside the fishermen, while the average fisherman in the county of Victoria receives $11.60 or 100 per cent more. It is evident there is something wrong in the method by which these results are arrived at, and I believe that the hon, member for Digby (Mr. Bowers) has the clew to the difficulty when he shows that tonnage and number of men are confused in the distribution and that the money is divided upon the basis that is entirely unscientific. The number of men engaged in the fishing industry in any district is one thing, and the tonnage devoted to fishing is another thing; and the money devoted by the state to encouraging tonnage should be distinguished from the money devoted by the state for the encouragement of men in the industry. would press with earnestness the most careful consideration of this matter upon the Department of Marine and Fisheries; and, if we are spared to come here another session I hope hon, members representing districts largely interested in this industry will devote attention to this matter with a view to devising a more equitable method of distributing this fund.

PRAYERS.

JOHN CONNOR, ST. JOHN, N.B.

Mr. GRIEVE asked, Is John Connor, of St. John, N.B., employed by the Government in handling the twine manufactured at the Kingston Penitentiary? Has he a stated salary, or is he selling on commission? If the latter, what commission does he receive?

HIBBERT CHARLES TUPPER. Sir John Connor is so employed on commission, and receives 10 per cent of the sales, and guarantees the payment.

CHAS. BEDARD, REVISING OFFICER.

Mr. MONET asked, At whose request was Mr. Chas. Bedard, notary, appointed revising officer for part of the county of Laprairie and Napierville?

The records of the de-Mr. MONTAGUE. partment only give the official appointment, and I will lay that on the Table.

Mr. MONET. I hold in my hand the Order in Council making the appointment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is all the record I have in the department.

REVISING OFFICERS, COUNTY OF NAPIERVILLE.

Mr. MONET asked, For what reason were two revising officers appointed for the county of Napierville, when there is but one for the volume.

Mr. FOSTER. We will talk about it on united counties of St. John and Iberville, and but one in Chambly-Verchères?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. J. A. Roberge was first appointed for the whole district of Laprairie and Napierville. But after his refusal to accept the commission, the Government appointed Bedard for Napierville and Roberge for Laprairie. In the two other electoral districts the revising officers have accepted their commissions.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION FRAUDS.

Mr. BRODEUR asked, Has the Government still in its employ any of the persons found guilty of fraud at the time of the Civil Service examinations at Montreal in 1893? If so, who are those persons?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No.

PATRICK McDONALD, LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. BRODEUR asked, Is Patrick Mc-Donald employed by the Government in the office of the collector on the Lachine Canal? If so, what is his salary? Did he undergo an examination before the Board of Civil Service examiners entitling him to be appointed to the position he occupies?

Mr. HAGGART. A. P. McDonald is employed in the office of the collector of the Lachine Canal, at a salary of $58.33 per month. He has not passed an examination. as he is only temporarily employed.

SUPERANNUATIONS SINCE 1st JAN-UARY, 1895.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, What are the names of the several parties superannuated since 1st January, 1895, to date? The date and their superannuation, and the amount of retiring allowance granted, and the department to which they belonged?

Mr. FOSTER. I must ask my hon. friend, in accordance with our usual custom, to put that in the shape of a motion for a return.

AGRICULTURE IN THE CENSUS.

Mr. GUAY (for Mr. Bruneau) asked, 1. Is the publication of the last census now complete? If not, why? 2. Is it the intention of the Government to have that part of the census relating to the agricultural class printed and distributed soon?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The compilation of the last census is now completed, and the publication will be made as soon as the printing will be completed. The part relating to agriculture is included in this forthcoming

INTERNATIONAL ASSURANCE COM-PANY.

Mr. GUAY (for Mr. Bruneau) asked. Is the International Fraternal Alliance Assurance Company registered at Ottawa? Has it made the deposit with the Government required by the law relating to foreign assurance societies?

Mr. FOSTER. The International Fraternal Alliance Assurance Company has not made any deposit with the Government, and is not licensed or registered under the Insurance Act.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR.

Mr. I.ANGELIER asked. What has been the total cost up to 30th June, 1895, of the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners' operations? Are there any claims outstanding for work performed or for properties purchased? If so, what are those claims? What is the annual revenue of the Three Rivers Harbour Commission? What are the annual expenses of the said commission, for salaries and all other expenditure? Is the Three Rivers Harbour Commission in debt to the Government? If so, the details of such indebtedness?

Mr. FOSTER. The Three Rivers Harbour Commission, on the 30th June last, owed the Government for loan, $81,760.97; arrears of interest, $30,479.24; arrears and interest thereon on account of sinking fund, $8.751.82. There is a sum of $900.52 at credit of the sinking fund. I think that is as far as my department goes. The other parts of the question belong to the Public Works Department.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. RIDER asked, Is it the intention of the Government to continue in the service of any department, any or all persons now employed therein, whether as temporary clerks or otherwise, notwithstanding the passing of Bill (No. 130) intituled: "An Act further to amend the Civil Service Act"? If so, in what department? 2. Has an Order in Council to that effect been passed? If so, when passed, and what is the object of such Order in Council?

Mr. FOSTER. It has been the custom of the Government to make these appointments from time to time, generally for six months, in case of what may be called permanent temporary clerks. There is provision in the Act just passed by which those temporary clerks in the employment of the Government can remain on under that Act. No general Order in Council has been passed.

Mr. Montague.

THE DOMINION BANK.

Mr. DAWSON asked, 1. Have the Government received declarations made by Peter Vanluven, and others, respecting certain transactions of the Dominion Bank, relating to the purchase of grain, coal, and lands during the last eight or ten years? 2. Did the said Peter Vanluven, and others, petition the Government to make inquiry into the said trasnactions? 3. Have the Government made any, and what inquiry into the said transactions, and are they satisfied the bank had acted in accordance with the provisions of the Bank Act? If not, will the Government grant permission to the said petitioners to bring an action at law against the bank for violation of the Act?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government has received declarations by Mr. Peter Vanluven, and others, respecting certain transactions of the Dominion Bank, alleging that the bank had violated the Bank Act, and asking leave to proceed against the bank under The bank deny that there the Bank Act. has been any violation of the Act, and express their determination to contest any action that may be brought. The matter has been put in the hands of the Department of Justice with instructions to give the parties who have made the charges a chance to proceed against the bank, on their giving satisfactory guarantee to indemnify the Crown, and also the bank, against all costs, &c., in case the action should not succeed.

DAM AT WEST RIDEAU LAKE.

Mr. DAWSON asked, 1. Have the Government examined into the claims for lands in the township of Bedford, alleged to have been damaged by water held back in the spring of 1893 by the new dam at the foot of West Rideau Lake? 2. If so, by whom, and when was the examination made? 3. Is it the intention of the Government to compensate the persons whose lands are damaged? If not, why not? 4. If so, when will the claims be adjusted?

Mr. HAGGART. 1. The Government have examined into the claims for lands in the township of Bedford, alleged to have been damaged by water. 2. By Acting Superintending Engineer Phillips, in August, 1894. 3. No; it is not the intention of the Government to compensate persons whose lands are alleged to have been damaged, because the Government dam, it is reported, has caused no damage.

MANITOBA SCHOOLS-MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose the hon. gentleman leading the House will now make to the House the statement he promised on Friday last.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to Mr. FOSTER. state, that the Government has had under its consideration the reply of the Manitoba legislature to the remedial order of the 21st March, 1895, and, after careful deliberation has arrived at the following conclusion:-Though there may be differences of opinion as to the exact meaning of the reply in question, the Government be-lieves that it may be interpreted as holding out some hope of an amicable settlement of the Manitoba School Question on the basis of possible action by the Manitoba Government and legislature; and the Dominion Government is most unwilling to take any action which can be interpreted as forestalling or precluding such a desirable The Government has also consummation. considered the difficulties to be met with in preparing and perfecting legislation on so important and intricate a question during the last hours of the session. The Government has, therefore, decided not to ask Parliament to deal with remedial legislation during the present session. A communication will be sent immediately to the Manitoba Government on the subject, with a view to ascertaining whether that Government is disposed to make a settlement of the question, which will be reasonably satisfactory to the minority of that province, without making it necessary to call into requisition the powers of the Dominion Parliament. A session of the present Parliament will be called together to meet not later than the first Thursday of January next. If by that time the Manitoba Government fails to make a satisfactory arrangement to remedy the grievance of the minority, the Dominion Government will be prepared, at the next session of Parliament, to be called, as above stated, to introduce and press to a conclusion such legislation as will afford an adequate measure of relief to the said minority, based upon the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council, and the remedial order of the 21st March, 1895.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I regret to have to state that the present attitude of the Government—

THE THOUSAND ISLANDS.

Mr. TAYLOR moved:

That in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that a few of the large islands in the River St. Lawrence which are yet undisposed of, should be reserved for the use of the public as a Dominion park.

He said: In making this motion, I beg to offer a few remarks respecting the 'Thousand Islands, and the action of this Government and the Government preceding it in respect to their mode of dealing with rental system, and the contracts carried out, and subsequently those who purchase absolutely by paying a sum equivalent to the rental, capitalized at 4 those islands. Opposite the constituency that I have the honour to represent are known as the Thousand Islands group. On the American side of the boundary line and in the same neighbourhood, are situated from two to three hundred of the same group of islands. Many years ago, twenty or twenty-five years ago, the American Government disposed to a syndicate of a number of the islands situated on that side of the line. Many capitalists invested in those islands, and some of them built palatial residences, and to-day within a distance of ten or twelve miles from the village of Clayton to Alexanderia Bay, there have been expended some ten million dollars on residences for people who make there a watering-place at which to spend their vacation. The Americans reserved several of the larger islands or portions of them for pub-During some months, eight or lic parks. ten thousand, or more, citizens from the United States, and many from Canada, I am sorry to say, resort to those islands and parks for the purpose of spending their In 1882, when I was first electholidays. ed a member of this House, I pressed on the Government the desirability of placing those islands on the market, from the fact that the Americans, having settled there and built up those watering-places, the travel on the St. Lawrence had been diverted from the Canadian channel to the American channel, and I thought, and I thought wisely, that if the Government disposed of our islands, watering-places would be established, and many people would come to the Canadian side of the river, thus making a market and furnishing labour to our However, the Govern-Canadian people. ment claimed that those islands belonged to the Indians, that they had them in trust, and they thought the time was inopportune for disposing of them. In 1887, the Government decided that they would select twenty or thirty of those islands, and dispose of them at public auction, under the leasehold plan, and that the parties purchasing should receive a lease for twenty-one years, at an The islands thus selected annual rental. were put up and sold, and sold at high rentals; but many of those who purchased and paid one year's rent in advance, declined when they saw the form of lease presented, to carry out the contract, from the fact that the Government reserved the right, at the end of twenty-one years, to terminate the lease, and any improvement the lessor made he would be compelled to remove, unless he agreed to pay a higher rental, if the Government saw fit to enforce Therefore, there were very few of it. the islands thus disposed of under the rental system, and the contracts carried out, and subsequently those who purchased on the rental plan were allowed to and the effective parameters of the control of the per cent. A few availed themselves of this opportunity, and secured islands, and a few buildings have been erected under that plan. In 1891, the Government again having found out that the selling under lease plan was unsatisfactory, decided to call another sale and to sell subject to the conditions that the purchasing party should be compelled within three years to erect a house and make other improvements of not less value than $1,000. Some thirty or forty of the islands thus selected were sold and at a good price. The Government then decided to dispose of the entire group by public competition, but protests were made through the press claiming that the islands should be reserved as a national park. I might say that the majority of the small islands are at present so overgrown with small brush that it is nearly impossible for a person to find a place to sit down on them, and they have nothing but a scenic value. I presented petitions from the township councils and from the county council, asking the Government to adopt some system, and the suggestion was made that a revaluation be made of the islands. There were many islands not found on the map and persons were applying to purchase these islands, and it was decided, and decided wisely by the Government, to have a resurvey and a revaluation of the whole group of all the unsold islands. This was done, and in my opinion the values placed upon them were very high. However, it was decided that the Government would sell at the upset price of the valuation, every island on the river. Representations were also made asking the Not an island has been disposed of by the Government to reserve a few of the larger islands for the purpose of a public park. A catalogue was gotten up by the Government giving a description of every island in the river, and it was prefaced by the following statement :-

The Government of the Dominion, which is the trustee of this property, has determined to sell immediately all the undisposed of portion of it which lies opposite the townships of Leeds, Lansdowne, Escott and Yonge, as shown in the descriptive list herein. scriptive list herein. This will place upon the market between 600 and 700 of the most beautiful and picturesquely situated islands on the continent, and offer unprecedented opportunities for obtaining lovely and salubrious summer homes.

The map at the end of the pamphlet gives the surroundings and location of each island. designation (by name or number) on the map enables reference to be made to the descriptive list. The latter contains the area, brief description and upset price of each island.

The small map herewith gives a general or geographical view of the district, and information as to distances, &c., from United States and Canadian cities.

I might here refer to the prices placed on these islands by the valuators. One called "Surveyors Island," containing four and one-fifth acres, partly timbered and well located on inside channel, was fixed at a price of $450, or $100 per acre. The Two Sisters Island, containing two-fifths of an acre was valued at $100, and so it goes on, the values ranging from one to two hundred dollars per acre, being the upset price as fixed by the valuators. A day was set for the sale to commence and any person applying up to that date was to have the island he applied for. But if two or more persons applied for the same island, then they would be asked to tender and the highest tenderer got the choice. Notwithstanding this, the Opposition press charged the Government with having parcelled out these islands to their friends. Now, I have a return in my hand which I myself moved for showing the action taken by the Liberal Administration in dealing with this same group islands. During the time, from 1874 to 1878 that my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Mills) had charge of the Department of Indian Affairs, the Government of which he was a member, sold 2,642 acres of these islands, for $6,007, or an average of $2.07 per acre. From 1879 to 1885, the Government of that period, being obliged to carry out contracts of sale which had been entered into by the Mackenzie Government, sold 723 acres for $3,697, or an average of $5.06 per acre. I may say that all the sales during the time of the Mackenzie Government were made privately. The sales which had been made by the present Administration since that time have been by public competition, and since that date they have sold 488 acres for $42,097, or an average value of $86.06 per acre, as compared with an average value of $2.37 per acre obtained by the previous Government. present Government except by public competition and at prices ranging from $100 to $200 per acre, while the Mackenzie Government sold the islands at prices ranging from $2 to $5 per acre. These are the facts as proved by the returns which I have in my hand. Here is an island called the Little John Island, sold on the 5th April, 1875, to a gentleman by the name of A. G. Payne. It contains seven and eight-tenths acres, and it was sold for $84. I see one place on the list here that was purchased by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways from private individuals. It contains 7 acres, and was sold at $1,000. $900 was the upset price by the Government, and he purchased at private sale for $1,000. Here is an island sold in 1877 to Mr. Henry Campbell of Gananoque, a good Reformer at the time, and it contains eight and seven-tenths acres, the price paid for it being $100. That island is now owned by Mr. Finlay of Montreal, who has erected a palatial residence upon it and occupies it every summer with his family. That island is situated close to one that I occupy. I purchased it on the rental system of $12 a year. It contains one and one-fifth acres, and I paid $300 for the island under the plan of paying the equivalent of 4 per cent capitalized, while a seven acre island alongside of it was sold for $84 by the Mackenzie Government. Suffice it to say, that hon, gentlemen opposite disposed of 2,600 acres of these islands to their friends at an average price of $2.07 per acre, while this Government have in every case sold at public competition, and have realized on the average $86 per acre. At the time of the survey of the islands, several of the larger islands were selected and a special upset price put upon them. Up to the present time these islands have been reserved from sale; and the object of the present motion is to have a number of islands, containing each twenty or twenty-five acres and every two or three miles apart, reserved as a national preserve or national park. At a very small expendi-ture the Government might clean up these islands, so that they would become inviting places for tourists from Canada or the United States, or elsewhere, to come and camp, and spend the summer under canvas if they wished. They would make beautiful pic-nic grounds, where steamers from the east or west could call, and where people could spend a day pleasantly. I hope a majority of the members of this House will approve of my proposition to authorize the Government to set apart some of these islands for a national park or preserve, as I am satisfied that it will meet with the approval of every person who has ever visited these islands.

Mr. SPROULE. In seconding this motion, I do so because these islands are situated in one of the important international highways lying between Canada and the United States. over which thousands, and even millions, of people have passed and will continue to pass in their travels, either for pleasure or for business. The St. Lawrence, from its situation and its picturesque nature, has attracted a great many foreigners to pass that way for the purpose of seeing the beautiful islands which are scattered there in such large numbers. I was very much surprised, in passing over the St. Lawrence a year or two ago, to find that some very important and very beautiful islands, containing valuable agricultural land and good timber, and very conveniently situated with reference to the towns on both sides, had been sold for a trifle. It appeared to me that they were as good as given away, the price obtained for them was so low. I am quite sure that had it been known that they were to be sold, had they been offered at public competition and well advertised, as they shou'd have been, they would have commanded ten times or perhaps twenty times what was obtained for them; and yet they were sold absolutely. These islands might have been leased for a term of years, so that the property would have continued to belong to the Government. Then, from time to time, the leases might have been renewed, or, it the islands were wanted for some other purpose, the Government could have taken them you have seen the Falls, you have seen over. But, to make an absolute sale of these islands for the trifle for which they were sold, was, in my opinion, entirely unjustifiable and indefensible. I think the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said, during the Mackenzie Government's time, that there were sold within a few years 2,600 acres, a great deal of which was good agricultural land, and that not more than $2.26 per acre was realized. If they had been sold simply as sites for summer cottages, and had been properly advertised, I am sure they would have brought ten times or twenty times that price. The present Government have followed the same course, and during the past year have sold a good many of the islands. It is true, they realized a great deal more money for them. They put upon them an upset price, which the public considered exorbitant, and at which not make an offer. would For those which have been sold during the last fair amount money year of been realized by the Indian Department. Many of them were, to my mind, of little or no value, in some cases being only a rock projecting out of the water, and the upset price was such as hardly to give the purchaser a chance to get any return for his money. Yet, from time to time, some of the best islands are being gradually picked up. Therefore, I think it is importthat the Government should, the earliest possible date, take into consideration the advisability of having an in-spection of the islands made, and having some of the best of them selected and reserved for a park-if not an international park in conjunction with such islands as might be appropriated by the United States for the same purpose, at least for a national park which would be available to tourists and sight-seers, and all who travel up and down the waters of the beautiful St. Lawrence. This cannot be done too early, because if the sale of the islands continues, the most beautiful of them, and those best fitted for this purpose, will be bought up from time to time. At Niagara Falls there is a park on the American side and one on the Canadian side, the one reserved by the American Government and the other by the Government of Ontario-practically a joint park, because those who visit the one generally visit the other. So I believe it would be, but to a much greater extent, in the case of the Thousand Islands. Then, there is the additional advantage that the waters of the St. Lawrence can be navigated by the tourist and sight-seer. This resort is also of great value, not merely to pleasure-seekers, but to invalids seeking for the restoration of their health. It also contains excel-lent fishing grounds. These and many other reasons make the Thousand Islands much more attractive than the park at Niagara Falls, where there is, comparatively speaking, nothing but the Falls themselves; after attraction that nature has protourist and sight-seer. vided for the But down on the St. Lawrence there is a great deal more than that. You can combine pleasure with your other pursuits during the time you spend there, and also derive great profit in regard to your health. One can be stationed there for a time with great benefit to his physical and mental constitution, from the recuperative forces of nature, whereas at Niagara such benefit cannot be had. The islands on the St. Lawrence are said to number over a thousand, and hence it is called the waters of the Thousand Islands. Very many of those islands, however, have been sold, and if we continue to sell them in the future, some of those most important ones may be parted with. I think we should not sell them at all. If we dispose of them in any way, we should dispose of them by lease to parties who will hold them for a time, the country still retaining the ownership. The suggestion that the Government should set apart a number for the purpose of a national park is one which should meet the approval of the House, and therefore I hope the Government will see their way clear to let this motion pass.

Mr. DALY. In reply to the hon, gentleman who has just sat down, and the mover of the motion. I may say that when the Government undertook to sell these islands last year, under the valuation that had been made the year previous, a reservation was made of eleven islands. For instance, the Government reserved Aubrey, Mermaid, Beau Rivage, Camelots, Endymion, Gordon, Ninette, Georgine, Constance, St. Catherines, Adelaide, and others. These islands are all of a good size and are scattered along through the group, in order to give people living on the mainland, an opportunity of going on these islands in close proximity to their homes and enjoying camping upon them, but I understand the hon. gentleman goes further and asks that the Government should reserve these islands for the purpose of a national park. understood him to say that the Government, in addition to reserving them, should erect landing places and clean them up; but he overlooks the fact that they are the pro-perty of the Indians, held in trust by the Government, which consequently could not undertake to pay any expenditure for the purpose of erecting buildings and constructing wharfs on the islands out of the Indian funds. The Government can only leave them in a state of nature. Anything done would have to be done by a vote of Parliament. It is a question whether the House thicks this is a matter of such importance as to grant a sufficient vote to make landing places and clean up these islands.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is very punch more than that.

Mr. Sproule.

Mr. DALY. Yes, the Government in reserving the islands in question had another object in view. These islands are valuable and we do not think it right to dispose of them at once, as we could realize a larger sum for the Indians eventually than we could at present. No harm can be done by reserving the islands in the meantime, and the object of the hon. gentleman, namely, that the people should have the right to go and camp on them is reserved to the people so that, so far as the public is concerned, they will have the privilege the hon. gentleman desires they should have, and the Indians will not be deprived at present of the proceeds of the sale of the islands. It would be a matter of serious consideration whether the Government should undertake to meet the views of the hon, gentleman,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the proposition is very extraordinary after what was done last year. The provincial government offered to purchase these islands for a fair consideration from the Government of the Dominion and to convert them into a provincial park. The Government last year refused to entertain that proposition, but went on and sold the best of these islands.

Mr. DALY. Not at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They have simply the culls of the islands of the St. Lawrence left on their hands.

Mr. DALY. Not at all; the hon, gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Now there is a proposition made to convert the remaining islands into a national park. Well, in the first place, the Government must make an appropriation for them out of the public funds and hand over to the Indians the value of the islands. We cannot take the property of the Indians in these islands for nothing and use the islands as a national park. The hon, gentleman should have gone much further and proposed to acquire these islands from the Indians at a fair valuation.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the circumstances of the debate, I move that it be now adjourned as some others may wish to speak.

Mr. CASEY moved for:

Copies of all petitions, correspondence, documents, or other papers from the electors of the riding of South Renfrew, or any one or more of them, or any other persons, addressed to the Governor General or the Minister of Railways, in reference to the closing of the railway station at Barry's Bay, a station on the Ottawa, Arprior and Parry Sound Railway, in the county of Renfrew, and for papers or correspondence, as above, containing complaints of any persons against the said railway company, for inconvenience and business losses occasioned by the closing of said railway station, and for papers or correspondence, as above, complaining against the action of said railway company, so largely assisted by Government moneys, for inconveniencing and injuring public business, in attempting to coerce an individual into giving the company land or privileges which the company could not obtain by action at law.

He said: In moving this resolution, I am asking for the information in the interests of the public in the district concerned, I am informed that the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway made an arrangement with a Mr. Stafford and another party—the name is immaterial—to get a free grant of land for the purpose of building a station at a point agreed upon by both The railway made and registered a survey of their route, locating the line and the station, as agreed upon between them and Mr. Stafford. They afterwards built both track and station in such a way that the station incommoded Stafford's private residence. I believe the water tank was built right up against his door, and this being in violation of the original agreement between the parties, Mr. Stafford declined to give them a deed of the Thereupon the railway land. ceased to stop their trains at the station, as they had undertaken to do, and carried passengers and freight a couple of miles further, to a stopping place in a swamp, as I am informed, where there are no conveniences for the landing of passengers or By this course they greatly discommoded the people using the line, and interfered very much with the trade of the adjacant country, and broke faith with Mr. Stafford and those associated with him. But, notwithstanding this fact, they continue to persecute Mr. Stafford for the deed of the property. Now, I am informed that some arrangement has been come to between the railway company and Mr. Stafford; but, as I have brought this motion forward in the public interest, and not in the interests of Mr. Stafford personally, I think I am still justified in calling for the information mentioned. I am informed that petitions were put in from municipalities and from private individuals in the neighbourhood, as well as from private parties and companies in Montreal, pointing out the damage to trade resulting from the course pursued by the railway company. And the people in the vicinity are very anxious to know, and insist upon knowing, whether the Government have taken any notice of these petitions, whether they have done anything to induce the company to abate their pretensions and come to an agreement with Mr. Stafford, and whether the Government and the member for the riding have used their influence to bring about an adjustment that would be in the public interest. It is for these reasons, Sir, notwithstanding the arrangement between the private owner and the railway company, that I persist in asking for this information. But, as we are not likely to have the return this session, perhaps the Minister will make some statement with regard to the matter.

Mr. HAGGART. I have no information in the department except a petition to the Governor General asking for the reopening of Bary's Bay station. Immediately upon the reception of the petition, I sent a copy of it to the Ottawa, Amprior and Parry Sound Railway Company, asking them to give me some reasons in answer to the petition. I have not received any answer There is no objection to furnishing the petition, and also the answer to it when I receive it. I believe the whole matter has been settled.

Mr. CASEY. I understand it has been settled; but I am not asking this return in the interest of private parties. I suppose the return will be ready by the first Thursday in January.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, yes.

Motion agreed to.

SEIZURES OF SMUGGLED GOODS.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for:

Return showing the number of seizures of goods or wares of any kind smuggled into Canada in violation of the Customs Act, the country whence brought in, the value of the goods seized in each case, the name or names of the claimants, and where seized, for each of the years commencing the 1st day of July, 1890, to the 30th day of June, 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish my hon. friend would not press that motion. The return will involve a great deal of labour; and I doubt very much that it would be wise to bring down the names of parties in all cases. The seizures of goods precede the investigation-necessarily, because the goods are seized in transit and must be taken in charge by an officer-and until the investigation takes place, it is impossible to say whether the charge is well founded or not. To bring down this return would be to publish the names of many thoroughly honest and reputable merchants, giving them a publicity which I am sure my hon. friend does not wish to bring about.

Mr. McMULLEN. If I thought there was any injustice to any person involved in this return, I would not press the resolution. I think that the information would be useful in the public interest. Of course, if there is any point in the resolution the propriety of the adoption of which the hon. Minister doubts, I would not press that unfairly. I cannot see the force of the hon. Minister's objection. There is no discredit in the publication of a merchant's name in such a connection unless he has been found guilty of bringing in smuggled goods.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend sees that his return, as now asked for, would make no distinction between the guilty and the innocent; it would be unfair to give, indiscriminately, the names of all those from whom seizures had been made. I think if my hon, friend will allow it to drop, that when the Controller of Customs comes in, he will talk it over with him, and there will be a disposition to grant all the information which can fairly be given.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the Minister will allow it to stand, I have no objection to talk it over. But I want to be assured that I will have an opportunity of moving it again.

Mr. FOSTER. I meant that the hon. gentleman should not ask formally for the information. We will give the hon. gentleman what information he requires, and which could fairly be brought down without a motion. We will treat my hon. friend fairly.

Mr. McMULLEN. At the Minister's suggestion, I will consent to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS

Mr. McMULLEN moved for:

1. Return showing the names of the zeveral railways in the Dominion to which a cash subsidy was paid. 2. The province in which said railway is located. 3. The number of miles subsidized. 4. The number built. 5. The amount per mile granted, and the gross amount paid. 6. The number of acres of land granted per mile, and the gross number of acres given or now due to each company. 7. The gross amount of cash subsidy given to railways in each province. 8. The gross number of acres of land granted in each province, and the grand total of money and land given to railways in the Dominion.

He said: If the hon. Minister would kindly supplement the Railway report by adding what is here asked for, it would answer all purposes.

Mr. HAGGART. I will do that. Most of the information is furnished in the annual report, and I will supplement it with what is lacking that the hon. gentleman now asks for.

Motion agreed to.

INDIANS ON ST. PETER'S RESERVE.

Mr. LAURIER moved for:

Copy of all memorials, petitions and other documents from the Indians of St. Peter's Reserve, Manitoba, and of all correspondence in relation thereto.

He said: I would like to call particularly the attention of the Minister of Interior to this motion. I imagine that he has had several communications from the Indians on that reserve, because, if they have applied to me several times, who can do nothing for them but to bring their grievances before the House, I imagine they must have applied to him several times already. grievances of which the Indians on that reserve complain are of three kinds. In the first place, there are two tribes, I understand, who are settled upon the reserve, the Saulteaux and the Crees; and, as sometimes happens with political parties, there is not the best of union among the Indians of the same reserve. They often quarrel, and, as I understand, have petitioned the Government more than once to be separated That is the first complaint altogether. they urge. As to the merits of that complaint, I do not pretend to speak with knowledge. It may be well or ill-founded; I have not the information at my disposal to enable me to pronounce judgment upon it; but I simply bring it to the notice of the Minister. Probably he has sufficient information on the subject, and could deal with it in a manner which I could not pretend to do. Their next complaint is of a more practical character. As I understand it, the Indians ask that they should not be subjected to the close season for fishing, but that they should be allowed to fish all the year round, without any reference to the close season. They allege that as they do not fish for the purpose of selling, but simply for food, they should be allowed to fish at all seasons, even during the close season for the whites, and they claim that this privilege would not prejudically affect the increase of fish in the river. There may be something in their contention, and, so far as I am informed, I believe the Indians do fish for trade, but not entirely own sustenance, and consequently their may there bе sometimes a hardship in depriving them of the privilege they The matter, no doubt, ask for. has received the attention of the hon, gentleman already, and if it can be done without any serious prejudice to the propagation of fish in the reserves, it seems to me that the complaint of the Indians on the subject ought to be favourably considered. Then their third subject of complaint, as represented to me, is concerning the agent. When I was in Winnipeg last September, they complained to me in very severe language, of the conduct of their agent. Now, I beg to say at once, that whilst I repeat their complaint in the House, I would be sorry indeed to say anything detrimental to this agent. I do not know him, I do not know whether he is a good or a bad officer. I should rather presume he is a good officer; therefore, in bringing this complaint before the House, I want it to be particularly understood that I am not saying, personally, anything prejudicial to his character as an officer in the department. If the complaint the Indians make to me is well founded, it seems to be a very serious matter. They complain that the agent, instead of handing over to them the treaty money to which they are entitled under the treaty.

employs that money in making roads, and for other objects, as he states, for the purpose of improving the reserves. Well, that may be true or not, as to that I have no information. But if it be true, it seems to me that it is a practice that ought not to be tolerated. The treaty money is intended for the Indians, personally, and whether the money might be better employed or not. is not a question for the agent nor even for the Government. The treaty money must be paid directy to the Indians in the manner stipulated in the treaty. The hon, gentleman, I am sure, will agree with me that it would be a most unwise policy on the part of the Government to follow even what night be, in the judgment of the department, a better course than to pay over the money directly to the Indians. The policy which we have always maintained towards the Indians, and which ought to be maintained at all hazards, and under all circumstances, is most rigidly to keep faith with them, and whatever has been promised to them, we must rigidly adhere to. Now, I suggest to the hon, gentleman that he should ascertain at once whether that complaint is well founded, and if it be true that the treaty money is diverted from its object, as the Indians complain, there should be at once a change in this respect, and the agent should be dealt with in a manner which the wisdom of the Government might deem advisable. At all events, this practice should be put a stop to at once.

Mr. DALY. I presume that all the hon. gentleman desires to accomplish is to bring this matter before the attention of the House, because it will take a long time to prepare such a return as he asks for. I think sixty-five different petitions or memorials have come from the different chiefs on the St. Peter's reserve since 1876 or 1878. In every instance, the complaints made by the Indians have been inquired into and sifted to the bottom, and I believe the hon, gentleman is sufficiently aware of the character of the Indian to know that a great deal of trouble arises owing to the Indians consisting of different tribes, the Swampees and Saulteaux. The chiefs have become acquainted with the English language and have learned to write, and besides they live near Winnipeg or Selkirk, and are influenced by outside people to send forward grievances. Whatever those grievances have been, they have been sifted on every occasion when made. The chiefs have been satisfied for the time being, but they change their views very rapidly, and in dealing with them the department has sought to lay down a certain line of conduct as regards the Indians on the St. Peter's reserve as a whole. As to the fishing privilege, we have had considerable correspondence with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, not only as to the Indians on St. Peter's reserve, but also as regards the Indians in the North-west generally, we urging on the department that some other place, and when the department although they might require the Indians to take out licenses to which the Indians did not object, they should not charge them The experience of the departany fees. ment has been that wherever the fishing laws have been reasonably enforced on Indian reserves they have acted beneficially to the Indians. Although we at first protested against enforcing the law, although it was stated that the lakes were being depleted, especially as regards whitefish, and it being alleged that while a great many of the Indians were fishing for themselves, some were also fishing for commerce, the enforcement of the fishery regulations have proved to be in the interest of the Indians themselves, and the better class and influential Indians have come to that conclusion, and we do not hear so many complaints now as formerly in regard to the enforcement of the laws, especially when it has been pressed upon the Department of Marine and Fisheries that they should not charge the Indians any fees for licenses. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has also made some concessions in relation to the close season, so that the Indians may not be deprived altogether of food resources in that particular. As to the other statement made by the hon, gentleman, and which is a serious one, namely, that the agent has employed treaty money in making roads and bridges, and in ways other than those prescribed by the Act, I never heard of that charge before, and I cannot conceive it to be true. The agent receives the treaty money for one purpose only, and that is to pay it over to the Indians, and it cannot be diverted to other uses at his discretion. He would not dare to undertake to do so unless he received instructions from the department, and no such instructions have ever been given or could be given. There must be some mistake as regards this allegation, as the statement made by the hon, gentleman cannot be founded on facts. I will, however, make the strictest inquiry into the allegations made by the hon. gentleman, and ascertain whether there is any truth in them, but I am satisfied there is none. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the money to be paid as treaty money should be paid to the Indians, and not disposed of in any other way, and that is the line of policy pursued by various gov-ernments from the time they made any treaties whatever with the Indians, and under this head, so far, I have not heard any complaint. The hon gentleman will understand, from the interviews he had in the North-west, that the Indians are very hard to satisfy, and the fact that we have received sixty-five communications from the chiefs on this reserve alone shows that it is a pretty difficult matter to satisfy them. At one time they called upon the department not to pay the treaty money at a certain place, but at agreed to this request and sent instructions to the agent, they in the meantime sent another request to have the money paid at the old place. We have also had some difficulty by doing away with the distribution of food and luxuries in the shape of tea and tobacco at the time of payment of the treaty money. The Indians are now satisfied that the Government did right under the circumstances. We have also had some difficulty at the time of treaty money payments with the tradespeople, who assembled and ready to take away from the Indians their money in exchange for goods. So we have kept them at as great a distance as possible. As to the agent who has been there for a great many years, Mr. Muckle, I never heard any complaint in regard to him; but, on the contrary, we have had several communications from the Indian chiefs thanking the department for his services, and expressing approbation of his administration. will, however, have full inquiry made in regard to all the matters referred to in the hon. gentleman's speech.

Mr. LAURIER. In view of the statements made by the hon. gentleman, I desire to amend my motion by inserting the words, "or complaints since 1st January, 1892."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

DAIRYING IN THE NORTH-WEST TER-RITORIES.

Mr. DAVIN moved:

That in the opinion of this House, it would be expedient to apply $20,000 to aid in establishing creameries and cheese factories in the Northwest Territories, and that this sum should be considered as an addition to the immigration grant; that, further, the Government should at once take into consideration the propriety of giving a bonus on butter exported to the London markets, as is done by some of the Australian colonies, and also of raising the customs duty from 4 cents per pound to 6 cents, in order to enable the North-west farmers to compete with the Australian exporters in the British Columbia markets.

He said: I will not detain the House at any great length in bringing the subject of this motion before it, because we have in the Agriculture Committee, as well as on a former occasion in this House, discussed the subject, and the importance of encouraging our farmers to go into dairying is recognized by the Government. I may refer to the fact that in Denmark, Sweden, Bavaria, and all through Germany, in fact, Government encouragement is given to dairying. And what I ask in this motion is simply that a special form of the same kind of help which the Government has given already to dairying should be given to us in the North-west. I am a member of the Agricultural Committee, and when Prof. Robertson was before that committee lately he made a statement, every word of which I can endorse. He saidMr. SPEAKER. Has the report been brought down?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, the report has been brought down. In his evidence of 14th May, Prof. Robertson said:

For myself, I believe in the widest possible application, within legitimate bounds, of co-operative methods for the promotion of the public good; and government in the highest exercise of its functions, is one way whereby the people co-operate for their own benefit. The protection of life and property is perhaps only the primary function of government, and the making of one's country a desirable land to live in, is a responsibility inseparable from the carrying on of government in the highest order of civilization. The clearest illustration of this is found in the existence of schools maintained by the taxes of the people and kept in a measure under the control of the Government.

He points out further what great advance had been made in the cheese industry in consequence of the help given by the Government:

But for the organization of dairymen's associations, the employment of travelling instructors, the holding of conventions and the issuing of reports, the cheese trade could not have been established as it now exists. That trade has grown so much, that while in 1886 the exports reached only a value of $6,754,626, last year the exports reached a splendid total of $15,488,191.

He dwells with regret on the fact that the output of butter in Denmark is 54,000 tons, whereas the output of Canada is only 3,000. and he quotes evidence from London and elsewhere to which we shipped butter to show that we can ship as good butter as Australia, aye, and as good butter as Denmark. Why, Sir, it is only a few years ago that the Holstein system was introduced into Denmark. It is only a few years ago that the true way of making butter was understood in Denmark, a country which to-day takes the first place as a maker and exporter of butter to the United Kingdom. The system that they have adopted with such success has been introduced into Canada, but there are portions of the Northwest where people cannot afford to establish dairies. We have a dairy established under the guidance of a dairy inspector at Moose Jaw, and it is doing well and has been a great benefit to the farmers around there. But there are parts of the country where the people, for reasons it is not necessary to enter into, cannot themselves establish these dairies. Maple Creek is one of those. Now, $1,000 spent by the Government at one of those points would enable the people to establish a dairy, and the Government need not be out of pocket. The Government could arrange for the slow payment back of that amount, and the result, of course, would be the development of the dairy interest in those localities and a great help to the farmers. Every one who has been studying those questions, recognizes that we must divert the attention of the people of the North-west from relying on any one staple. We must—as they were advised by the Minister of Agriculture train them to go in for mixed farming, and one of the ways to do that is by encouraging the dairy industry. Now, the form that my motion takes is this:

That in the opinion of this House, it would be expedient to apply $20,000 to aid in establishing creameries and cheese factories in the Northwest Territories, and that this sum should be considered as an addition to the immigration grant; that, further, the Government should at once take into consideration the propriety of giving a bonus on butter exported to the London market, as is done by some of the Australian colonies.

Victoria, for instance, is giving a bonus and has aided the butter industry in other ways, and the result is that an immense trade is being developed between Australia and the United Kingdom. The motion goes on to say:

And also of raising the customs duty from 4 to 6 cents per pound, in order to enable the Northwest farmers to compete with the Australian exporters in the British Columbia market.

The reason why I put the motion in that form is this: There cannot be the least doubt whatever that the policy I advocated would not only be the means of developing the dairy industry, but it would be one of the most potent means of impelling immigrants to come to the North-west. I would therefore be quite willing to have $20,000 taken from the immigration fund for that purpose. Then with the line of steamers across the Pacific, butter is being imported into Canada, as I learned from the Customs Department myself. It is not imported in large quantities, but some butter is coming from Australia and enters into competition with North-west butter in the British Columbia market. We used to have a ready and profitable market for our butter in British Columbia, and I think that this Government, which is a protectionist Government, ought to consider whether an additional protection ought to be given to butter in order to enable us to compete with the Australian exporters for the British Columbia market. This question is so well understood, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think it will be necessary to enforce it at any great length, but I cannot too highly impress upon the Government that it should give its active attention to this matter. One reason is, as I have explained again and again to the Government, we do not receive, by something like $150,000, the amount we are entitled to as subsidy, on calculating it on the same basis as the other provinces. Under the circumstances this Government would be perfectly justified in coming to our ald and giving us this help. I do hope that we shall not have this deferred until next session. I do not expect that the Minister of Finance would bring down further supplementary estimates in order to suit my motion, but if I can persuade the Government to adopt the policy we advocate, there will be no difficulty in getting a Governor General's warrant for this sum, and so the dairies could be established this summer.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the following amendment to the motion of the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin):

That this House cannot find any special reason for granting at the public expense a protection for creameries and butter factories in the Northwest which is not granted to the same factories existing in the other provinces of the Dominion.

The reason why I propose this amendment is because a vast quantity of cheese is now being manufactured throughout the Dominion of Canada, and it is easily understood how the glutting of the English market will result injuriously to the cheese industry in the future. A few years ago, the Government undertook to send Professor Robertson, to Manitoba and to the North-west in order to establish creameries and cheese factories; at the time, this policy did not receive a strong opposition from the House; but to-day, I think it would be a great mistake to promote the establishment within the Dominion of Canada of a further number of creameries. I am speaking more particularly of cheese factories, not of creameries. At all events, I cannot find any reason for granting a subsidy of $20,000 to that province, when the state of our finances does not warrant us in giving the same gratification to the other provinces.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I want to say a word or so, as to the motion of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and incidentally with reference to the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rinfret). I suppose we must all agree, Sir, that any motion or any proposal which has for its purpose the legitimate encouragment of dairying in the Dominion of Canada, ought to receive a good deal of favour at the hands of this House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) supporting, as he always does support loyally the interests of the North-west Territories, has brought to the attention of the House a most important subject and one with regard to his views upon which, the House, to a very great ex-The House is not tent must sympathise. able to accept the proposition in toto, especially with regard to the voting of such a large amount for the purpose which he here afterroon. has described this Those of us who have visited the great North-west, and who have seen its splendid pastures and its great herds of cattle, and who know its great dairy capabilities, know full well that this House would be justified in lending to that industry every possible encouragement. The hon, gentleman has called attention to the fact that we have assisted dairying in other parts of the Dominion. It is true, as regards many of the provinces, particularly those in which the dairy industry is new, the aid given in so practical a manner as it has been given by the Department of Agriculture, with the concurrence of this House in the matter of funds for the purpose, has had a splendid effect. The House will remember the case of Prince Edward Island already referred to, where only a few years ago no creamery or cheese factory existed, but where to-day no less than $90,000 worth of dairy products are annually shipped; and it is calculated by those who have thought on the subject and who are conservative in their estimates, that that amount is fully $50,000 more than would have been received from the same investment in cattle had the old methods been followed and had the creameries and cheese factories not been established as they have been by the aid of the Department of Agriculture. That system has been to a certain extent adopted elsewhere. It has been adopted to some extent in the province of Nova Scotia; and, as the House knows, at Nappan, in the province of Quebec, there is an experimental dairy which is doing good work. In the province of New Brunswick experiments have been made in the dairy school, and the people are receiving instruction in that. In the province of Ontario we have had experiments and instruction in winter dairying under the auspices of the Dominion Government. The same thing has been done in the province of Manitoba. where aid has also been granted by the local government. As regards the Northwest Territories, I promise to my hon. friend that we propose to follow the same liberal policy of assisting that industry in a country so well fitted by nature to make it a great industry, as we have in the various provinces of the Dominion. Already we have at Moose Jaw, as my hon, friend is well aware, a creamery; and I am informed by the dairy commissioner that during the will year dairy instructors through the North-west Territories for the purpose of holding meetings and giving instruction wherever that instruction will be received; and I am sure it will be received gladly everywhere by the settlers. While I am on my feet I may remark that the same work is being done this year in the province of British Columbia, though, owing to the limited areas in which population is settled, the work there will perhaps refer more particularly to the betterment of the people individually than in connection with big concerns. So that, so far as the first proposition of my hon. friend is concerned, though the Government cannot pledge themselves, especially at this time, with the finances such as they are, to expend any such large sum as my hon. friend asks, I have the authority of the Government to say to him that we are most sympathetic with regard to that industry in the Territories, and that we will not fail to use every legitimate method of promoting that industry, whether by means of sending instructors or by means of spending a certain sum of money each year for that purpose. As regards the bonus which my hon, friend asks this Government to grant, I think that is a proposition on which Parliament might very largely hesitate if it were intended to make it continual. It is true, in Denmark, Sweden, the German principalities, and other countries of Europe to which my hon. friend has referred, the great dairying industry has been largely aided by money taken from the public treasury; and there can be no doubt that to-day those countries are being amply repaid by the return in wealth which is going every year into the pockets of their people as a result of their success in this industry. The same thing has been done in Australia, and, as my hon. friend knows, it was done to a limited extent last year by the Government of Canada. It is true, some $3,000 or $4,000 was lost in that experiment, but that is a very small sum if we have established, to the very smallest extent the character of our butter on the British market. Though the Government do not pursue that policy this year, my hon. friend knows that they are pursuing what is perhaps a still more important policy, namely, that of making arrangements with the railway companies of Canada, and with the trans-Atlantic steamship companies, and also making arrangements for providing cold storage facilities both on this side of the Atlantic and on the other side; and I am sure that in making these arrangements we shall be endorsed by every man who has the betterment of the people of all our provinces at heart. As regards the question of the increase of duty, I do not intend to speak upon that now, as it may perhaps be much more fittingly discussed when the general question of the tariff is before us. Just one word in passing, and it this, that the Government still very firmly by their policy of protecting, by their tariff and by other means, the agricultural industries, including the dairying industry, in the Dominion of Canada. I have only to add, in conclusion, that the people of the North-west are indebted to my hon. friend for pressing this matter upon the attention of the House, and the House is indebted to him for the very valuable information he has given to it this afternoon.

Mr. MULOCK. I am sure the House must have been deeply impressed with the remarks of the Minister, who has told the country that in consequence of the state of the public finances the Government are able to extend nothing but sympathy towards the agricultural interests of the North-west.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not say that.

Mr. MULOCK. He stated that he deeply smypathized with the farmers, but that owing to the state of the finances, he could give them nothing but sympathy. Fancy feeding cattle with sympathy! What a flow of milk would come from sympathy, and Government sympathy! Fancy establishing dairies and creameries with sympathy! You are to pay bills, purchase machinery, and buy cold storage with the cold sympathy of the Administration. And so we have the Government claiming credit for whatever development has occurred in the dairying industry, in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Ontario, because of the few dollars of aid which they have at times granted from the public treasury, but denying credit to the industry of the Canadian farmers themselves. Sir, I thought the success that has attended the dairy industry of Ontario at least was attributed wholly and solely to the enterprise of the Ontario farmers; but we now have it for the first time from the hon. Secretary of State the farmers are entirely mistaken that. and that their success tributable to the action of the Government. I shall not further detain the House, except to allude to the other branch of the motion, the proposed bonus for cheese and butter. The hon. Minister said that there is a great deal in that, too, but all he has to bonus them with is sympathy and cold storage. Does it not occur to the Government that they are bonussing butter from Australasia with the money of Canadian farmers? They have established a line of steamers, at the expense of the Canadian people, seven-tenths of whom are farmers, to bring into Canada the bonussed butter and the other bonussed argicultural products of Australasia to compete with the butter and the other dairy products of the Canadian farmer; and to-day we have Australasian butter finding its way down from the Pacific Ocean to the province of Ontario and meeting in competition the butter manufactured by the Canadian farmers. No wonder that under these circumstances, a Government supporter finds it his duty to stand up here and beg the Canadian Government to relieve our farmers of the consequence of a glut in our market, produced partly by the extraordinary policy of the Government, and ask them to sweep away the surplus by shipping it to a foreign land. When our farmers ask for bread, all the answer they get is a store, and when they ask for money, they get sympathy. No wonder the Secretary of State congratulated the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) upon his deep interest in the people of the North-west, because all he could give to the people of the North-west in reply was a few words of congratulation to the hon, member for Assiniboia for advocating their interests better than the Government of Canada has guarded them.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend who has to be expended in Ontario alone or in Quebec just sat down has stated the case in rather alone, but in the maritime provinces, in the an extravagant manner from his own point of view; and it is in order to put the case a sum of money of $40,000 has been voted as it stands, I venture to say a few words. The hon. gentleman twitted the Secretary of State with having nothing but sympathy upon which to feed the farmers, and asked how far cattle could go upon sympathy as an article of food. He said that although great claims were made by this Government as regards their aid to farmers in various ways, yet when we came to look at that aid from a hard money point of view, all that the farmers got was simply sympathy and not money. Well, my hon. friend has had something to do with the Estimates this and previous sessions, and we will see whether the facts tally with his presentation of them. Everybody knows that, about six years ago, this Government undertook the policy of establishing experimental farms in different parts of the country for the purpose of making experiments in every branch in which our farmers are interested and distributing accurate information as to the results of these experiments broadcast throughout the Dominion. That policy has been carried on at a very heavy expense from that time to the present. For the maintenance of this experimental work on the scale upon which it has been conducted the past seven years, Parliament has voted this session $70,000, and voted an equal amount each previous session. That is not sympathy but hard cash voted out of our consolidated revenue. Again, take the dairy branch, which has made great strides in the past few years and with reference to which this Government has a definite policy as well -having at the head of this branch one of the best experts that can be found, not in Canada alone, but on this continent, who, wherever he has gone, has earned the great-est commendation for the manner in which he is carrying on the work and the good results that flow from it—this House has voted, at the instance of the Government, $25,000 this year, for the purpose of carrying on this work for the benefit of our dairy interests. This, again, is not sympathy but hard cash. More than that, in order to give an opportunity for establishing winter and other creameries in portions of this Dominion, where the farmers have not taken up this branch of work, there has been for three years a sum of money voted for the purpose of starting and carrying on these creameries, by advancing to the farmers, in hard cash, a certain percentage of the value of the milk which they brought in, and by marketing these products in the British markets, and then rendering to each farmer at these factories the exact return his butter brought to him after deducting the cost of marketing. Not in cold sympathy, not even what he denominates Government sympathy has the Government shown its appreciation of that industry and its desire to carry it on. Not to be expended in Ontario alone or in Quebec alone, but in the maritime provinces, in the North-west, Manitoba and British Columbia, in the main Estimates for that purpose. More than that, to aid agricultural societies in the North-west, where the farmers are scattered and where it is of great moment to them that a little aid be given these companies, should enable them to carry on their societies, there has been a vote of $7,000 given. More than that, again with the idea of sending out butter to the British market in its fresh state in the summer season, when the weather is hot, and when the butter will command a fair price in the British market, if laid on the market fresh, the Government has shown its practical sympathy with our farmers by a vote of $20,000 to provide cold storage, so that the butter may be taken from the creameries in different parts of Canada, put on refrigerator cars, arranged by the steam railway companies, and then put on board vessels with refrigerating apartments and machinery, at Montreal and other seaports and landed in Great Britain in as cool and fresh a state as butter can come from Denmark or the other countries of the continent of Europe. This new vote indicates a new policy, the object of the Government being to do two things, first, to demonstrate that there is an advantage to the farming community in having their butter sent from the factories under cold storage arrangements, shipped at Montreal on board steamers, with refrigerating apartments and sent into the British market; and, in the second place, to direct the attention of the farming interests and the butter factories especially, to the advantages of that market and draw greater trade to the steamship companies, so that this appropriation of $20,000, made this year as a gift, will have the effect, not simply of a transitory arrangement, but of so developing the trade and increasing its volume that hereafter the butter will itself bear the cost of its storage, having established its name and qualities in the markets of Great Britain. That is not mere sympathy, that is cash voted on wise lines of policy; and this action of the Government in this respect, when contrasted with the rather ludicrous presentation from my hon. friend's point of view, will appeal, I think, to the hard-headed farming com-My hon. friend munity of this country. thought he had a wonderful argument with which to reproach this Government, when he said that we had actually bonussed steam-Pacific from to run across the and Australasia to this country butter comto bring in Australian with the butter of this country. Sir, is it possible that in this country, at this time, we have men who occupy the places of statesmen and leaders of a great party who will bring up an argument of that kind—that you must not have steamcommunication between two great countries, because, forsooth, there will be some competition in the articles that are produced in those countries? And, Sir, let House remember, that whatever comes into this country from Australia or anywhere else has to meet the protection which this Government gives to the farmer of this country who makes the butter in this country and finds his market here. How can a reproach come from my hop. friend and his party, whose platform is not only to have Australian butter come into competition with ours, but to adopt a system of free trade which would wipe out every vestige of customs duty on the farmer's products and thus have all products, as well as butter, coming into competition with native products.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the hon, the Finance Minister has availed himself of this debate, and tried to improve the occasion, in order to bestow encoulums on his policy of protection to the agricultural This is hardly a favourable mointerests. ment to indulge in such boasting. Butter now sells at from 14 to 15 cents per pound. costs the farmer about four cents to make one pound of butter, so that he only makes a profit of 10 cents per pound. Such is to-day the position of the farmer, whose lot, according to my hon. friend, is so enviable. To-day, in the province of Quebec, cheese sells at seven cents and one-fourth to seven cents and a half a pound, so that one hundred pounds of milk fetch to the farmer but forty-five cents, or, let us say, fifty cents At all events, such is in round numbers. the position of the farmers in our province. This is the time selected by the hon, the Minister of Finance to expatiate upon the beneficial results of his policy. The interest I have always taken in the betterment of the farming community and in the prosperity of agriculture, prompts me to give them new proofs of sympathy upon all occasions. As often as we are called upon to vote new appropriations for the promotion of this important industry, every time I feel disposed to yield to the demand. But to-day, I doubt very much whether voting in favour of the appropriation mentioned in the motion would be warrantable on my part. First, we have no information as to the uses this money is going to be applied to. The crisis the Government is now going through is not calculated to allay our suspicions in that regard. Should no marked improvement occur in the political atmosphere, well may the Government lavish extravagant promises on the farming community. I am not satisfied that the appropriation of $20,000 we are called upon to vote for, would receive the proper application, so as to promote the best interests of the farming community. At all events, there is one sure thing: it is that we have already done a great deal in favour of the North-west. The farmers in the west have already been so largely aided by money granted from the public treasury, that I am at a loss to see how we should deem ourmy hon. friend remember, and let this selves justifiable in extending to them any such preference. How comes it that the farmers in the North-west, and those so-called great capitalists imported from abroad to develop the North-west prairies, cannot afford to establish for themselves a few The cost creameries and cheese factories? of a cheese factory, fully equipped, aggregates about from $700 to $800, and a creamery, from $1,500 to $2,000. I wonder how these great farmers cannot be self-supporting, without hankering after Government aid. There are many other ways in which the Government may promote the interests of the farming community. They might aid them more substantially than they have done in the past by cutting down the tariff. They might give the farmers lower rates on many articles which are of primary necessity to them. The machinery used in the manufacture of cheese and butter ought to come in free of duty, rather than granting the farthe public treasury, mers money from which is already depleted. The hon. Minister could have enlarged the free list and let in free of duty many other articles necessary for the farming community, and altogether indispensable to the creameries and cheese factories. On these several grounds. I think, Sir, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière should pass. He is one of the men in this House who have the largest experience of the requirements of the farming community, and I fully concur in his views on the matter. On the other hand, as the arguments alleged are not cogent enough to warrant our voting in favour of the main motion, I think the amendment should pass.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, as this is a very important question, and as I would like to say something upon it, I move that the debate be adjourned.

FREIGHT RATES IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. DAVIN moved:

That the commissioners appointed to inquire into Canadian Pacific Railway freight rates have reported that Canadian Pacific Railway existing rates for grain are from ½ to 1 cent per 100 pounds less that the Dakota schedule from all points west of Regina, which last, however, applied to Edmonton and Prince Albert, would be 6 and 7 cents lower than the Canadian Pacific tariff; that, as regards live stock, the Canadian Pacific Railway rate runs at $1.35 to $1.84 per car to Montreal, while the Northern Pacific and Great Northern charge from $1.63 to $1.91 for the same distance; that, as regards coal and lumber, the comparisons show still more favourable rates to the Canadian public. That this House would tc the Canadian public. suggest to the Government that it would be well to open negotiations with the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with the view of coming to an arrangement with that company to carry for the next twenty years produce from the North-west to the sea-board 10 per cent cheaper than at present, on condition of the Government guaranteeing bonds to a certain amount for twenty years, and should the railways of the United States lower their rate, the Canadian Pacific Railway shall lower theirs proportionately.

He said: This, Sir, having in view the vast interests involved is a most important motion. There cannot be the least doubt of this, that we must adopt measures to give the people of the North-west Territories lower freight rates to the sea-board. So far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, we have had an inquiry; and, although I have not seen the official report. yet I believe that I am correctly informed as to what that report is, and that the figures I have given in this motion are correct. If so, where is the lever which the Government can use with the Canadian Pacific Railway to lower the present freight rates? For the Canadian Pacific Railway can show, as I have declared, and as in fact they did show to a committee—a self-constituted committee—of this House which met some years ago, that when the figures for all the railways on the continent were compared, it was clear that the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway were lower than those of any other line. Again, Sir, suppose that were not so. There is a clause in the Canadian Pacific Railway charter that takes this matter completely out of the control of the Governor General in Council until a certain percentage upon the capital has been earned. Under these circumstances it is perfectly useless to move for an inquiry. These inquiries can accom-plish nothing, for the simple reason that until a percentage has been earned which it is very unlikely any Canadian railway directors will ever report that they are earning, the Governor General in Council is perfectly helpless to interfere. What, then, are we to do? The people of the North-west are placed in a peculiar position. They are opening up that vast territory which is bound to be the greatest source of strength and wealth to Canada. They have gone in there under difficulties and are engaged in a task of the greatest possible value to the country. One of the greatest difficulties they have to contend with is the long haul. When the Minister of Finance visited the North-west Territories in company with the Minister of Agriculture, he saw at once that one of the difficulties that the North-west farmers had to contend with was the distance from the sea-board. And, Sir, after we have preached to the farmer the necessity of going into mixed farming, after we shall have taught the farmer that he must raise everything he needs, as far as possible, upon his own homestead-still, if he is to make the reasonable amount of money that he may fairly look for and aim at, he must do it in the face of great difficulties on account of heavy freight rates to the sea-board. Therefore, the only way that I can see to meet the difficulty and solve the problem is that suggested in the motion—that the Government should not attempt to do the impossible, because we have no power to coerce the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that the Minister of Railways should open negotiations with the company. As suggested in this motion the Minister of Railways might say to the company: I find that the commissioners appointed to take evidence as to the rates charged, have reported that your rates were not only reasonable but lower than the rates of any other line on the continent. However, it is important for us that the farmers of the North-west should be able to get their products to the sea-board at a reasonable rate. You are a great national line and you may or you may not need money. We will guarantee bonds for you to the amount of a certain number of millions, on condition that for the next twenty years while, so to speak, we are laying the foundation of our farming in the Northwest, you shall carry the produce of the North-west to the sea-board at rates 10 per cent cheaper than at present, and at the same percentage cheaper than the United States lines, even if at any time they should lower their rates. Now, Sir, what will that cost the Government or the people of Canada? It will cost the Government of Canada just nothing at all; it will cost the people of Canada nothing. All that the people of Canada are asked to do is to loan their credit to the Canadian Pacific Railway in order that the Canadian Pacific Railway may strengthen itself financially. I want to guard against a possible, though very improbable, misconception. I have no authority to speak for the Canadian Pacific Railway; not one word has passed between me and anybody connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway on this subject. I de not know whether the company would entertain the proposal, but I know that a great company of this kind at all times desire to strengthen themselves in the money markets of the world, and they are generally forward as borrowers; and I am inclined to think that, if I could persuade the Minister of Railways and the Government to take this course—which, as I say, will not cost a cent—we shall be able to effect great things, the greatest thing at present needed for the farmers of the North-west—the lowering of the freight rates on their products to the sea-board. But let me say that something in this way must be done. Our farmers in the Northwest cannot progress, nay, some of them cannot make a comfortable living unless some course is taken that will enable them to carry their produce to the seaboard at a reasonable rate. I urge, with all the earnestness I am capable of, that the Government should take some such course as I have indicated in my motion. I have not had the means of knowing what view the Minister of Railways will take in regard to this; but I would say that in the Northwest we all look with the greatest interest on his career as Minister of Railways. We were glad to see what he had done with the Intercolonial Railway, by his originality and force of will, and we hope that he will apply those same qualities of mind and of character to deal with the problem of freight rates in the North-west Terri-If he will do this, I am confident that he will solve the problem, which I believe is one of the most important problems with which the Government can concern itself.

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I have to state that I have not had the good fortune to read the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the freight rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Only a few days after receiving the report, I sent it to be printed, and it has not yet been printed. I would like to have an opportunity of carefully perusing that report in order that I may inquire into this question of freight rates, and make a comparison between those in force on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and those prevailing on the Northern Pacific Railway. have no doubt that the statement made by the hon, gentleman as to the rate of freights on the Canadian Pacific Railway, on the various articles mentioned, and those pre-vailing on the Northern Pacific and other railways, is strictly correct. But even his statement makes a favourable showing towards the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I think his comparison shows that the settlers in our own North-west Territories and in Manitoba are in better condition as regards freight rates than the settlers in any other part of America; and that the produce of our own North-west is carried to the sea-board much cheaper than it is carried over the more southern lines. The hon, gentleman wishes to supplement the present rates by some arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway by which freight shall be carried at a still lesser rate. not know whether there is a prospect of the Canadian Pacific Railway entertaining such a proposition. I do not know that the Canadian Pacific Railway are offering any bonds which they wish to be guaranteed by the Government. The hon, gentleman states that it would not affect the people of Canada at all, that they would not be required to pay one copper more than they otherwise would pay, because the Canadian Pacific Railway are perfectly able to provide for the interest upon their bonds; and that the people of this country, although guaranteeing their bonds, would not be required to pay anything for that purpose. hon. gentleman must remember that the indebtedness of the country would be increased by exactly the amount of the guarantee of the bonds; that the inevitable effect would be to increase the charge upon the credit of the country by what we would have to pay in the way of interest, and our borrowing powers would be affected to the extent that we guaranteed the bonds of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right in trying to suggest some scheme by which freights country which he represents and the sea-board; but I do not see that the Government could, in any way, guarantee bonds of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and place the whole country under an indebtedness for the benefit of a particular portion of it, in order that they may get freights cheaper than they do at present, especially when, according to the showing of the hon. gentleman himself, those rates are now cheaper than they are in any other similar part of I do not know that I can add further to what I have said. It is true that I have read in the newspapers of a portion of the report, but I have not read it all. The report is being printed, and when it is printed, I shall give it as fair a consideration as the time at my disposal will permit.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman must surely have made a mistake in his figures when he says that the rate on live stock runs from 1.35 to 1.84 per car to Montreal.

Mr. HAGGART. He means per cwt.

Mr. MARTIN. Then the hon. gentleman goes on to say that as regards coal and lumber, the comparison shows still more favourable rates to the Canadian public, and then he winds up with the suggestion that there should be some arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway by which produce from the North-west should be taken 10 per cent cheaper. I suppose the hon, gentleman intends to include coal and lumber along with grain?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Surely, then, the hon. gentleman does not expect that the North-west Territories will be able to send their coal down to the sea-board. They are now trying, ineffectually, to send it to Winnipeg; but the idea of sending coal or lumber, either, from the North-west to the sea-board, is perfectly absurd.

Mr. DAVIN. They sent coal to the Pacific notwithstanding that they have plenty of coal on the Pacific. I am told that some anthracite coal goes to the Pacific.

Mr. MARTIN. That is not what is meant by the sea-board in discussing freight rates from Manitoba. There has been no commission to inquire into freight rates from the North-west Territories to the Pacific sea-board.

Mr. HAGGART. I think they inquired in reference to British Columbia, also.

Mr. MARTIN. There is anthracite coal that might be sent away, and no doubt a reduction of freight might be desirable. But where is there any lumber to send? The freight rates do not particularly affect coal or lumber, but they specially affect live stock and wheat. Last session the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Macdonald) proposed to the Government the advisability could be lowered between the section of the of having a freight rate commission to inquire into this question. The hon. gentleman made that suggestion, no doubt, in view of the strong agitation prevailing in his constituency with respect to what were considered the high freight rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I believed at the time, I have no doubt of it now, that the freight rates commission was simply a farce, simply put forward for the purpose of giving the people there an idea that the Government had some thought of doing something for them in connection with freight rates, and the declaration of the Minister of Railways that while that report has been in his hands nearly three months he has not yet found time to read it, shows clearly it was merely done for the purpose suggested. There was considerable dis-satisfaction in Manitoba in regard to the action of that commission. First, the members of the commission were of a kind not calculated to inspire a very great degree of confidence in the people there. I have nothing personally to allege against any of the three gentlemen who composed that commission, but the fact that each was a civil servant in the employ of the Government was sufficient in itself to condemn them as proper persons to make inquiry as between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway with respect to freight rates. fact I would not at all be surprised if the Canadian Pacific Railway did not look upon the appointment of that commission as one very much in their own interest, because it gave them an opportunity of making elaborate comparisons with the railway freight rates on American railways running into a country somewhat similar to the North-west. They were able to show by taking certain roads that their rates were cheaper than those of certain other American railways; but it is not correct, as the Minister of Railways suggested, that the people of Manitoba and the North-west enjoy railway rates much lower than any other part of the continent similarly situated. I can show by comparison with other portions of the United States different from those selected by the Canadian Pacific Railway officials, that the railway freight rates enjoyed by communities in the North-west, active competitors with the North-west for immigrants, are very much less than ours. What we complain of with respect to this question is this, that in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway it may be fairly said that that road was practically constructed by Canada. No less than one hundred millions of dollars of Canadian money and property have gone into the road, and what settlers find fault with is that notwithstanding that enormous bonus having been given, they are told when they cry out about heavy freight rates, and the member for West Assinibola correctly voices the opinion of the people there that something must be done in this matter, and that say, why should this be so when Canada gave a hundred millions to the Canadian Pacific Railway to build the railway and yet we find ourselves absolutely at their mercy when discussing the question of freight rates. We are told that there is no use in appealing to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or the Governor in Council, because the Government allowed to be inserted in the contract, which is binding between the Government of Canada and this company, a provision that until 10 per cent had been earned and paid upon the capital invested the Governor in Council was to have no authority or right to interfere in connection with that matter. Even with respect to that point, I am not sure that this answer of the Government is a complete one. Can it be said that this railway under that provision is to be allowed to carry freight in competition with the American railways at prices only one-twentieth, or perhaps one-fortieth, or one-fiftieth as much as they get from the Canadian people for hauling freight over the same line? It has been said and proved that the Canadian Pacific Railway enters into competition with the American transcontinental lines in carrying freight from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast, and they carry that freight at prices low beyond the expectation of the settlers of Manitoba and the North-west. Can they do that under this contract? Is it allowable to them to make their rates anything they please, and use the money probably earned from the high charges on Canadian freight for the purpose of competing, for the purposes of their own, with other transcontinental lines carrying American sugar, wheat and other products at prices very much below what similar articles are carried for the Canadian people? That is a matter which it is the bounden duty of the Government to investigate, and to consider whether under the unfortunate contract made, and which is binding between the two parties, there may not be some redress given to the people of the North-west. I have pointed out whenever this matter has come up that it is the Conservative party of this Dominion which is entirely responsible for the present condition of affairs in Manitoba and the Territories, because when the contract was going through this House, an amendment was moved by the hon, member for Iberville (Mr. Bechard) to the effect that it was advisable to add a section to the contract by which the Governor in Council should have absolute control of the freight and passenger rates. One would have thought that when the country was giving the enormous borus it was giving to this company, consisting of money, lands and work done, and when we consider also what they have done in addition for this company since the date of its original contract, aiding them ir, their dire distress, giving the company the rates are most burdensome. The settlers all kinds of encouragement, when we consider all these things, the suggestion of the Liberal party when the contract was being discussed in this House was a most reasonable one, and if that suggestion had been adopted and carried out we would not have to-day the hon. member for West Assiniboia suggesting a proposition which the Minister of Railways very properly tells us is impracticable. The hon. gentleman knows it himself. He comes forward here on the eve of an election, knowing perfectly well—

Mr. DAVIN. No.

Mr. MARTIN—knowing perfectly well I say, that his constituents feel keenly with respect to railway rates and they are inclined to blame, not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but the Conservative Government for the predicament in which they now find themselves. And the hon. gentleman comes forward with a proposition so absurd and ridiculous that the Minister of Railways simply rises and teils him that he cannot consider it.

Mr. DAVIN. He said he would consider it.

Mr. MARTIN. No; he said it was quite out of the question.

Mr. DAVIN. He said he would consider it.

Mr. MARTIN. I understood him to say that to expect other provinces of Canada to devote public funds to the Canadian Pacific Railway in order that the company might reduce its rates in favour of a small portion of the Dominion was a proposition—the Minister did not use the words, but I use them—so absurd and ridiculous that it did not require any consideration. He practically said that it was out of the question. The hon, gentleman says, to guarantee bonds to a certain amount for twenty years. What kind of bonds and to what amount? Bonds!

Mr. DAVIN. Will the hon, gentleman suggest some means.

Mr. MARTIN. I have suggested the means. I have pointed out, how the Liberal party at the proper time and place and before this bargain was entered into, did suggest a means.

Mr. DAVIN. That is all past now.

Mr. MARTIN. Well, I cannot help it. That is one of the unfortunate things. We are not a party of repudiation. When a thing is done in this House, and when Canada has once pledged her name and credit to a contract, we propose as Canadians to carry out these pledges.

Mr. DAVIN. Then you are opposing what is suggested.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not opposing it. does not require any opposition. I am stating what the Minister of Railways has said with regard to it. I have expressed opinion myself. The hon, gentleman tells us that Canada is not to be obligated for one cent in this matter, and that without costing us a dollar we are to get from the Canadian Pacific Railway a reduction of 10 per cent in their freight rates in the Northwest. Well, that is rather a strange proposition, and the hon, gentleman has pointed out in no way how Canada would not be obligated in connection with this matter. Of course it depends entirely upon what kind of bonds are guaranteed as the Minister of Railways has pointed out. Bonds-

TORONTO, HAMILTON AND BUFFALO RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the order for third reading of Bill (No. 34) respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company,

Mr. COATSWORTH moved:

That the order for third reading be discharged, and that the Bill be recommitted, with instructions to amend the same by striking out the words "and all others," in the sixth line of clause "9 c," and by adding as new clauses "9 d" and "9 e":

9 d. The debts to be paid under the foregoing provisions of this Act, shall include only the following unpaid claims :--

(2). The claims of sub-contractors of Bracey Brothers & Co. against them for work done and material supplied in the said construction.

(3). The claims for advances by the Bank of Hamilton and the Bank of Commerce to or for Bracey Brothers & Co., amounting to about $11,-000 and $2,000 respectively.

(4). Claims for labour actually done upon or in connection with said construction.

(5). Claims for board of men and teams employed upon said construction.

(6). Claims for material actually used in said construction.

(7). Claims for goods supplied to employees of Bracey Brothers & Co., or their sub-contractors, engaged on said construction, and supplied 'protanto' in reduction of wages claims.

9 e. That payment by the railway company of the said debts, or any of them, in respect of which the Dominion Construction Company is now under liability to Bracey Bros. & Co., or their assignee or others, shall, to the extent of such payment by the railway company, operate as and be a release and discharge of the Dominion Construction Company as against said Bracey Brothers & Co., their assignee and others, but nothing herein contained shall in any way prejudice any existing right of any creditor of said firm or their sub-contractors, or any of them.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this clause has been agreed to by all who are interested in the Bill either for or against.

Bill again considered in committee and reported.

COAST AND SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANIES, NOVA SCOTIA.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Flint for:

Copies of all petitions and correspondence between the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, or any of its promoters or directors, and the Government, in relation to the company's undertaking. Also, for copies of all correspondence between E. Franklin Clements, J. D. Rolston, Frederick Bard, or other promoters of the South Shore Railway Company of Nova Scotia, or any of the directors of the said company, and the Government, up to date of proceedings in the courts of Nova Scotia to wind up the said company. Also, copies of all petitions, agreements, and correspondence between the said company and the Government, with reference to the obtaining of a charter for a new company from the Dominion Parliament, and relating to the undertaking of the said company or the undertaking of the company proposed to be incorporated.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, just a remark before you put the motion to the House. It is a motion bringing to the attention of the Government and the House the case of two rival railway companies, both likely, perhaps, sooner or later, to appeal to Parliament for financial aid. As the Government have probably never heard anything whatever of the organization of the South Shore Railway Company, or even that it had an existence, I venture, for a few moments, to call their attention to the present position of that company, if company it be; and I more particularly feel in duty bound to do so, as the Minister of Justice, a short time ago, said he considered that this company had a meritorious claim upon the resources of the people. was greatly surprised when I heard that statement.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What statement does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Mr. MULOCK. I cannot give the answer in detail, because it might be said I was out of order in discussing a Bill which As I unmight come before the House. derstand the facts which are likely to become known to the Government should the South Shore Company make an application to them for aid, I will briefly state them. It appears that the people in the vicinity of Yarmouth very properly desired to obtain railway facilities with other parts of the province. Accordingly, a railway company was incorporated, known as the South Shore Railway Company, for the construction of a railway to connect Yarmouth, That company ultimately, with Halifax. received its charter on the 30th April, 1892.

There was a provision in the charter that the company should build the line and complete its works within four years after its incorporation, or should commence and make such progress within two years as to meet with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, or, in default its charter should absolutely cease. I am told that after the expiration of over a year, nothing whatever having been done by the company, some of the promoters themselves, having become dissatisfied, withdrew from the company as a swarm of bees would leave the parent hive, and applied to the legislature of Nova Scotia for another charter, which the legislature granted, incorporating a new company, known as the Coast Line Company, to build a railway between the same points, intended, in fact, to supersede the other company, should it not avail itself of the corporate powers given to it, and thus to render the other wholly However, the Coast Line unnecessary. Company did not organize, but very properly waited to see whether the South Shore Company would take advantage of its privileges. The two years elapsed; the South Shore Company did not organize; and thereupon after the expiry of the charter of the South Shore Company, the Coast Line Company organized under began operations, attracted forstatute. eign capital, and, with considerable activity, and at great outlay of capital, proceeded with the construction of the road. At this stage we have these two railways appearing before this Parliament. It appears that the South Shore Railway, after its charter had expired. made an effort to reorganize. They some little surveying, done I believe, prior to that time, but the surveying was not by the company, because the provisional directors had no power whatever to do anything in the way of construction at all. They had not elected their directors, the capital had not been subscribed, and they had not complied with the conditions of their charter until the expiry of these two years. After the expiry of the two years, they went through a sham of pretending to organize and proceed with their work. The courts were then invoked, and an action is now pending in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia to declare their charter vold. Well, I will not say that the Shore line is applying to Parliament to defeat that action by asking Parliament to declare their charter alive, notwithstanding the fact that it is dead, because I could not, on a motion like this, refer to a matter of that kind, but I only rise to call the attention of the Government to the condition of the Shore linean expired company, having no corporate existence, but which is seeking to thrust itself upon the attention of Parliament in order to make a raid upon the treasury and get authority to build its line at the expense of the country, and of those persons who have put honest capital into the coast line. It is bringing itself before the attention of Parliament for the purpose of paralyzing the parallel line and for illegiti-mate purposes. Now, I am prepared to favour, in a business-like way, all railway enterprises calculated to be of public service, but I am not prepared to give my voice or vote towards the encouragement of enterprises which come here, not in the public interest, but for private advantage—not for the development of the country, but to ruin a rival railway, unless, perhaps, they may be successful in levying an illegitimate tax, commonly called blackmail, on the other company. And I will tell the Government that, in view of what has taken place, they should now make a fatal mistake if they encourage the other line by aiding them to that extent and thus retarding the construction of the coast line. But if they should go further and pay a dollar of public money towards that enterprise, they will make a very improper use of the public treasury. What this particular motion may ask for is immaterial. The papers are all well enough, but in this case there is a distinct object in view, and I trust that the Government, being in possession of these facts, will take them into their serious consideration. I trust, with this due notice, that they will decline to give any encouragement to an enterprise which is hardly now entitled to be dignified as such, but which is intruding itself upon the public notice without sufficient grounds.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). I beg to make the following amendment to the mo-

Also for copies of all correspondence between the promoters of the South Shore Railway Company of Nova Scotia, or any of the directors of the company, and the Government, from the date of the proceedings in the court of Nova Scotia to wind up the said company, up to the present.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). The hon. gentleman from King's the other evening complained that I had occupied the time of the House with ancient literature; and at the risk of wearying the House with this subject, I propose to-night to give him something a little more recent, and which perhaps will be quite as interesting. The hon. gentleman from King's opposes this Bill on two grounds. First, he says that the Coast Line Railway Company commenced their surveys and work after the South Shore Company's charter lapsed. Of course, in taking that ground, he assumes-which I think is an incorrect assumption—that it was absolutely necessary for the South Shore Company to commence work within two years after the granting of their charter. I do not think that anybody who reads the clause will come to that conclusion. They will rather come to the conclusion that if we adopt that assumption of the hon. member for King's and the hon, gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Mulock), that it is absolutely necessary for the company to commence work within two years, let them look at the report of the chief engineer, who is a person not at all prejudiced in favour of the South Shore Company, and they will be convinced that the South Shore Railway Company did commence work within two years. The company not only in two years. commenced their surveys with a very strong staff, as the chief engineer said in his report, on the 2nd January, 1894, but they filed their plans for twenty miles on the 5th and 7th April, and they have since tiled plans for forty miles of the road. These plans have been approved by the provincial government and certified correct, which shows beyond doubt that the provincial government felt, at all events, that the company were making reasonable progress with their work. I may say that never to this day has the provincial government intimated that the reasonable progress required by the charter was not complied with. The hon, member for King's also said that the Coast Line Company were quite aware that this charter had lapsed before they began operations. But surely that is not the case. The surveys commenced simultaneously, the work progressed simultaneously, and these companies worked side by side until the whole sum of money was expended, until all the work which has been done on the road was completed, and it was not until March last that any proceedings were taken to set aside their charter. Another ground of opposition is that the rights of way had been granted by the municipal council, and that petitions had been sent by the municipal councils at £. verv various recent date, asking that line of railway should be the existing built in opto the South Shore Company. position The documents that were produced here as the petitions from the municipal, councils turned out to be not official petitions from the municipal councils at all. Take the petition from Shelburne for instance, that is a petition signed only by a portion of the council. The warden, it is true, appended the word "warden" to his signature; but that was a mere matter of description. warden and the councillors who signed were all of one political party. They were all Liberals; not a Conservative signed it. It did not contain a resolution passed at a meeting of the municipal council; there was no certificate of the clerk; it was not under seal; and, while it purported to be a petition from the municipal council, it vas really nothing more than the petition of certain individuals. I take also the petition from Queen's. It was stated that this was from the municipal council of But if the hon, member will Queen's. the company had four years in which to look at it, he will see that not all the cour-commence and complete the work; but even cillors of Queen's have signed the petition, but only a portion of them. And perhaps it would be well to let the House know how some of the signatures that were attached to the petitions from Queen's were obtained. I read a letter dated 30th of May, sent to me from Caledonia, a place in Queen's County which the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes) knows all about. This is a letter from Mr. W. H. Banks, editor of the "Gold Hunter," addressed to myself:

Dear Sir,—James Collie, clerk of the municipal council, came into this section on Tuesday for the purpose of getting our three councillors (Crocker, Harlow and Freeman) to sign a petition praying Parliament not to aid the standard gauge in any way. If those councillors' names are on that petition, they were not signed by the parties themselves, as all three were away. Mr. Charles Harlow was at Keejamcoogie, fishing, but I hear his wife was prevailed upon to sign the document

Mr. FRASER. He "hears" that his wife was prevailed upon to sign.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Mr. Harlow was away anyhow. There is a very good reason too why the municipal council of Shelburne were not asked to sign that petition. refer you to one of the leiters I read the other night from Mr. Robertson, in which he states that it will be utterly impossible for him to obtain another vote from the municipal council after all that had transpired; it would be utterly impossible for him to obtain again what he had already obtained-a resolution for the rights of way. Therefore, you see, there is good reason why no application was made to the municipal council of Stelburne et this time, and you see why it was they contented themselves with getting the Grit councillors to sign it and send it here as if it was the petition of the whole council. Now, it has been said that these rights of way were granted to the narrow gauge railway by the various municipalities. As I stated previously, that is not correct. The municipality of Argyle gave their right of way on condition that the road should be completed to Lockeport before they would pay anything, and then they would only pay $5,000. But the Coast Line Railway, notwithstanding that they entered upon the land over a portion of their railway have not paid a single cent to the individuals over whose lands they passed, while the standard gauge road, the South Shore Company, purchased their right of way and have paid for it. I hold in my hand a list of the various persons from whom they purchased the right of way. It is a long list and I will not trouble the House with the reading of Mr. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman say how many miles of right of way that covers.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I think about 12 or 15 miles. It may be more, but that is within the limit.

Mr. FORBES. That is the length of the line.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Now, with regard to the legal proceedings that have been taken, I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that no legal proceedings were taken to set aside this charter until March last, and not until after all the money had been expended, and all the rights of way had been acquired. In fact, it was not until the South Shore Railway Company gave notice of their intention to apply to this Parliament for the passing of an Act relating to the company that proceedings were taken to set aside this charter. As I stated before when this matter was discussed a few evenings ago, an actual agreement was made between the Coast Line Railway Company and the South Shore Company for the sale of the narrow gauge road to the standard gauge company, on Sth December last. Now, I have two other letters here which I will read to the House; and they are not ancient literature, as the hon, member for King's (Mr. Borden) remarked the other night, but they are very recent literature. Here is one dated 25th January, 1895, addressed to G. A. Fletcher, Esq., care Mitchell, Fletcher & Co., Philadelphia. He is the first gentleman who put a sum of money into the narrow gauge railway:

Dear Sir,-Your letter of 24th inst. duly received. We were not aware that the delay complained of in closing the arrangement that was contemplated by our mutual agreements-

That was the arrangement for the sale of 8th December:

-was due to the fact that you and your associates were waiting upon our convenience; indeed, we had received a distinct impression from you, that there were certain features connected with your performance of the agreements that required should become amalgamated, and that there some further attention by you. We also beg to call your attention to the fact that though you agreed to stop all legal proceedings then pending or contemplated against us or our company

These are the very proceedings taken by the Attorney General to set aside this charter:

--in Nova Scotia, in your interest, that has not been done, as we are informed and believe. Will you advise us on this point.

Very truly, H. E. ALEXANDER. President South Shore Railway Co.

Now, here is the reply:

Philadelphia, 28th January, 1895.

Mr. H. E. Alexander.

Care Latham, Alexander & Co., New York. Dear Sir,—Your letter of 26th January, instant received. I regret that you have been under is received. the impression that you were waiting upon our convenience to comply with the terms of our Such is not the case, however, and agreement. we desire you to fix an early date for its settlement. The Messrs. Brill and myself control everything we agreed to deliver to you. As to the legal proceedings pending in Nova Scotia, we have not instigated them, and desired them stopped; but we think politics and politicians have become mixed with them, and have stood in the way of their withdrawal, but we think and believe that as soon as you have settled with us, and have possession of our property, and occupy our legal position, all proceedings will cease, as the local factions will have nothing to fight for. Yours truly,

GEORGE A. FLETCHER.

Now, here is a letter from Mr. Fletcher, the man above all others who is interested in this narraw gauge road, who put his money into it, and agreed to the sale of it on the 8th December. He positively states in this letter that the legal proceedings that were taken, and were contemplated by the government of Nova Scotia, arose from political partisanship altogether, that he did not wish them, and that as soon as this sale took place all these proceedings would stop. Now, after that, this telegram was sent to Mr. Fletcher:

7th January, 1895.

To G. A. Fletcher, Philadelphia.

To convince Fielding of sincerity, you should wire him early to inform him that contract made with us is binding and you wish it carried out. Duplicate to Bard. Answer.

H. E. ALEXANDER.

This is Mr. Fletcher's answer:

8th January, 1895.

To H. E. Alexander,

Care Latham, Alexander & Co.

Mr. Fielding will not listen to the proposition, and writes me he is astonished we should make Expect to see Williamson to-morrow.

So that it appears that the obstacle in the way of the sale, the obstacle in the way of the transferance of the Coast Line Railway to the South Shore Company, a thing most desirable in order that these two roads should be no further difficulty between them, was Mr. Fielding himself, who stood in the way of the desirable end. That it was a desirable proceeding, we have the testimony of the provincial engineer himself, in his report dated 1st January, 1895, from which I will read this extract:

Even now, at the present stage, if the two companies could only come to some agreement whereby the interests of both could be mutually and agreeably arranged, a good adjustment might be For although a large sum must be lest to both parties, expended on unproductive work, still, if an amicable understanding could be now arranged, the loss would not be so much as In some sections, such as might be apparent. that between Yarmouth and Acadia, where but one line, the narrow-gauge one in this instance, has been graded, the work might, with some alterations of curvature, be utilized for the adoption of the standard gauge, and so on. Of course, when the lines run counter, and the work has been perfermed on both of them, such saving could not be effected.

Now, the agreement for the sale was actually made and dated on the 8th December. The provincial engineer, in his report, expresses his views on the situation, and he says as strongly as he can put it, that it is very desirable these two roads should be amalgamated, that the result should be a standard gauge road, and that the narrow gauge road should be changed and its curvatures should be altered for that purpose. And we find that the arrangement was absolutely made, we find that Mr. Fletcher, the man who really owns the narrow gauge road, lock, barrel, was anxious that stock and arrangement should take place, and it appears from Mr. Fletcher's telegram that the only man who stood in the way of this arrangement being consummated, was the provincial secretary of Nova Scotia, and that these legal proceedings were adopted at that time by the Attorney General of Nova Scotia to prevent this charter from being granted by this House.

Mr. FORBES. The hon, member for Shelburne (Mr. White) has taken advantage of the amendment which was moved, to make a few remarks, and I will do him the justice of saying that he necessarily did so by way of explanation of some pre-vious remarks that were made by himself. I beg the indulgence of the House for a few moments while I submit some evidence to show that the hon, gentleman is still in default as regards the facts relating to the South Shore Railway, as well as to the Coast Line Railway of Nova Scotia. The hon, gentleman has seen fit to quote from the report of Mr. Martin Murphy, pro-vincial engineer of Nova Scotia, well known as a gentleman engaged in railway enterprises throughout Canada, and a member of the Institute of Canadian Engineers, also of a similar society in the United Kingdom, and also in the United States. Now, in his report published on the 1st January, 1895, on page 3, he says:

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne).

The Coast Railway Company submitted, according to section 8, chapter 53, of the Revised Statutes, maps, profiles and books of reference for the first 8½ miles, Yarmouth to Salmon River, on the 21st day of March, 1894, which, after due examination, was formally certified by the Commissioner of Public Works. Work of construction commenced near Yarmouth in May following. Both surveys and works of construction were steadily prosecuted up to December (ultimo), when field work was suspended, the cause of which is alleged, by the company, to be owing to the extreme cost of performing such work as grading in the winter months.

If we turn to page 7 of that report, we find he says as follows, referring to the South Shore Railway Company:—

About 1st October, 1894, work of construction commenced, and since that time has been proceeded with on the line of the South Shore.

One was commenced in May, 1894, and the other in October, 1894, or six months afterwards.

Mr. CAMERON. What about the surveys?

Mr. FORBES. I thought you would jump at the ditch before you reached it. At page 7, this engineer, speaking of the south shore line, says:

During the session of 1892, a charter was applied for by the South Shore Railway Company, which was granted under the conditions already named, and passed on the 30th day of April, 1892. It will be seen by the preceding remarks that from April, 1892, to February, 1894, a period of one year and nine months, no work was begun or active steps taken towards construction, so far as could be noticed.

On the same page, further on, he says:

The Coast Railway Company, during 1893 and until February, 1894, had the field to itself, and had a party making a location survey on the first 6 miles from Yarmouth during the fall of 1893.

In the meantime the South Shore Railway Company seemed to awake from its lethargy, new hands took the helm and placed strong survey parties in the field in February, 1894.

Is not this substantial evidence as to which company had the right of way by reason of actual occupancy and commencing of work? We have the provincial engineer, who has been so freely quoted by my hon. friend opposite, saying that in the fall of 1893 the coast line commenced surveys, and in May, 1894, commenced grading and employed hundreds of men, and proceeded to build the railway; and it was not till the spring of 1894 that the South Shore Company started surveys, and not until 5th Ootober, 1894, they did any actual work of construction. Here we have the Coast Line Company from the fall of 1893 to the beginning of 1894 ahead of the South Shore Company on the work on surveys, and from May, 1894 to 5th October. 1894, ahead of them, by over six months, in actual work of construction. I trust that will be a sufficient answer to any contention made that the South Shore Company had the right of occupancy by being first on the line. The Coast Line Company got its charter because the people along the shore wanted a road, and, knowing that the railway now known as the South Shore Company had collapsed, was insolvent, and had done nothing, and was out of the field, they applied to the legislature, and asked permission to build this line of railway. Further than that, it appears that on 19th May, 1893, nearly four weeks after the Coast Line Railway had got their charter, in the province of Nova Scotia, Mr. E. Franklin Clements, one of the promoters of the South Shore Company, wrote a letter in which he used this language:

He (Atwood) has said he can get all the money he wants. Well, he may possibly get it. I cannot get any banker to listen to any new railway venture of mine.

This was the gentleman who was promoting the South Shore Company who had control of the charter, who was trying to sell it and float the scheme. Here we have this statement made four weeks after the Coast Line Company had got its charter, that he, as promoter of the South Shore enterprise, was unable to get any banker to take hold of the scheme or lend any money on it. therefore, do not want to hear any more remarks from the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) to the effect that the South Shore Company has the right of preemption over the South Shore route by reason of the fact that they were first on the ground and willing and ready to carry out the enterprise. I have submitted the very best evidence to the contrary. The hon. member for Shelburne also stated that the petitions presented did not appear to have been submitted from the various municipalities along the South Shore of Nova Scotia opposed to the South Shore Company's Bill. The hon, gentleman undertook to refer, in a jocular way, but to some extent offensive, to the petition from the municipality of the county of Shelburne. He said it was only signed by a few Grits, that it was not regular in form, that it was not a petition from the council, but was a petition only from some individuals. I hold in my hand the original petition, which is signed by seven members of the municipal council: J. E. Lloyd, warden; W. A. Mc-Donald, Alexander F. Harlow, James Bowen, Phillip E. C. Bowers, James A. McKay and Ed. Greenwood, councillors. I do not know how many members of the council there are for that municipality. Perhaps the hon. member for Shelburne can tell me. But that is a majority, if not the whole of the council. Shelburne is divided into two municipalities, one called Barrington, the council of which does the business for the western half of the county, and the other is Shelburne, the council of which does the business for the eastern half. This is a petition from the eastern half. have not the petition from the municipality of Barrington, but I believe it was present-

These gentlemen are well known as ed. most respectable and reputable men, whose word can be accepted equally as well as that of the hon. member, if not better, and it ill-becomes that hon, gentleman to make game of those who signed the petition, and claim they did not sign it in good faith, but merely as a temporary benefit for some political wire-pullers of that county. I deny that allegation entirely. It was signed honestly, with the intention of influencing members of the Railway Committee of this House and inducing them to support those members who might oppose the passage of the South Shore Company's Bill before committee, and in the House. That petition has been presented to the Railway Committee, and will be presented to the House at a later stage. The hon, gentleman also made sport of the petition from the municipality of Queen's, and he undertook to read a letter from Mr. Banks, editor of the "Gold Hunter" in Caledonia, and I do not believe he had obtained Mr. Bank's per-I know Mr. Banks mission to read it. would not have made the statement he did unless he felt he was sure of the facts, and he would not have made it had he thought the hon, gentleman would have used it in this House. The statements I do not think made in it in Queen's verified. No one County venture, without authority would place the names of three councillors The charge against some on a petition. person of having signed the names of Crocker, Harlow, and Freeman, as made by the hon, member for Shelburne, is unsupported by any evidence beyond the mere statement of the hon. member himself. The hon, gentleman took occasion to say that this was another petition signed by individuals only. This petition is signed by every one of the municipal councillors—it is not an individual petition by any means. It is headed "The petition of the council and municipality," and it is signed by all the councillors, and by the municipal clerk, and also bears the seal of the municipal council.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). How many signed it?

Mr. FORBES. Every one in the council.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). How many?

Mr. FORBES. Twelve.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). That is not every one.

Mr. FORBES. Yes, I think it is the full council. Here are the names: Allen Tupper, warden; A. W. Moren, vicewarden; Chas. Harlow, W. S. Crooker, H. G. Freeman, I. Leslie, W. H. Farquhar, I. N. Mack, John E. Freeman. Jas. McLeod, T. A. Hemeon, J. N. Wylde. Four of these are the names of four of the most prominent Conservatives or Tories in the county of Queen's.

One of these gentlemen from the north district Mr. W. S. Crooker, is one of the most estimable and upright men in the county of Queen's, and that gentleman's name is signed to it.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). It is said he was away.

Mr. FORBES. He might have been out when Mr. Banks was there, but I thoroughly believe that Mr. Crooker signed that petition, or that it was signed by his authority, and notwithstanding the charge of the hon. gentleman from Shelburne (Mr. White), I say that nobody in the county would undertake to sign his name without his authority. Mr. Freeman and some of the other gentlemen have not been out of that county for several years except temporarily. I know they have been there for the last three months, and I know, because I have had communications, that they have been there within a few days of the date given here. I venture to say that the statement made by Mr. Banks that the names of the three northern councillors were forged is an unwarranted statement. Mr. Banks who signs that is the editor of a strong Tory newspaper. He is a party man from the word "go." He is of the strongest Tory predilections, and in every respect he is known to oppose anything and everything I might do for the county of Queen's. He has shown his hands, in more ways than one, as being deadly opposed to any move the Liberal party might make in that county. He is known from his newspaper as being directly antagonistic to the Coast railway. He is no supporter of Mr. Fielding or the local government. He is not a supporter of the local Liberal members for Queen's. He is a strong Conservative partisan who sometimes for the benefit of party or personal advantage to himself will pose as an independent. These are the most dangerous kind of men to have in a community. As regards that petition from the county of Queen's, I believe it to be a most authentic petition, and it is one which the House ought to give all possible attention to. It is worthy of the greatest amount of credence. There are a few other things mentioned by the hon, gentleman from Shelburne (Mr. White) to which I will refer. He said the South Shore Railway Company have paid for their right of way. It is a most curious state of affairs if they have done so. Nobody will believe it because it is impossible to imagine that they ever had money enough to pay for the right of way. The member for Shelburne, took the advantage this evening of reading a list of names of those who hold property which he alleged had been purchased and paid for by the promoters of the South Shore Railway Company. Well, I have in my hand a declaration under the statute, made by one Edwin S. Fraser, of the county of Yarmouth, N.S., civil engineer who solemnly declares as foliows:-

Dominion of Canada, Province of Nova Scotia, County of Yarmouth, S.S.

I, Edwin S. Fraser, of Yarmouth, in the county of Yarmouth, province of Nova Scotia and Dominion of Canada, civil engineer, do solemnly declare as follows, viz.:—

1. Herewith marked "A" is a list of the owners of lands intended to be passed over and taken for the railway of the South Shore Railway Company (limited), from the proposed termius of said railway in the town of Yarmouth to the line between the counties of Yarmouth and Shelburne, taken from the books of reference of "The South Shore Railway Company (limited)," filed in the offices of the clerks of the municipalities of Yarmouth and Argyle, respectively, under the provisions of chapter 33, of the revised statutes of Nova Scotia, fifth series.

2. There are no books of reference or plans of said company certified to or filed in the offices of the clerks of the municipalities of Barring-Shelburne, as I am credibly informed ton or and believe.

3. Said list, herewith marked "A," also shows the numbers of each lot, its acreage and its stations as marked on the plans of said South Shore Railway Company (limited), also filed in the offices of said clerks of the said muni-cipalities of Yarmouth and Argyle, all being taken from said books of reference and corresponding therewith, as I verily believe.

4. I have personally prosecuted inquiries from some of the owners of said lands and other credible persons having knowledge of the facts, and have also had inquiries prosecuted, and as a result of said inquiries I believe and am satisfied that only those of said owners marked paid in said list, herewith marked "A," have been paid for their said lands, and that those of said owners marked unpaid in said list have not been paid for their said lands in whole or in part.

5. I am also credibly informed and believe that the properties Nos. 31, 90 and 92 on said list have been partly paid for.

6. Out of a total of 366 owners of lands, shown by said books of reference, I find and believe from said inquiries, that seventy have been paid in full for their respective lands, three have been partly paid, and 293 have not been paid in whole or in part.

7. From personal knowledge and from inquiries made and prosecuted, I believe and am satisfied that not more than twelve and one-satisfied that not more than twelve and onequarter miles of said line of said railway, for which plans and books of reference have been filed as aforesaid, have been graded, and that at least twenty-three miles of said line remains ungraded, that not more than eleven miles of the right of way of said line has been paid for, and that at least twenty-four miles is not paid for in whole or in part.

8. The line of railway of the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia (limited) has been located and approved of from its proposed terminus in the town of Yarmouth to Port Clyde in the county of Shelburne, and plans and books of reference thereof have been duly certified and flied in the offices of the clerks of the town of Yarmouth, the municipality of Yarmouth, the municipality of Argyle, the municipality of Barrington, and the municipality of Shelburne.

9. From personal knowledge, I can say that at lesst eighteen miles of the said line of railway of said Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia (limited) has been graded, and this almost continuously from the end of Water Street, in the town of Yarmouth, to Argyle, in the county of Yarmouth, and that seventeen and three-quarter miles of said line in the county of Yarmouth remains ungraded. No part of the said line has been graded in Shelburne County.

10. The town of Yarmouth have agreed to pay for the right of way for the line of said Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia (limited), within the limits of said town. The municipality of Yarmouth have agreed to pay for the right of way for the line of said Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia (limited) within the municipality of Yarmouth and have paid for all of the same, except in two or three cases where titles were defective, and in these the moneys have been provided to be paid over as soon as the titles can be perfected. And the municipality of Argyle have agreed to pay $5,000 tewards payment of the right of way for the line of said Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia (limited), in the municipality of Argyle, provided it costs this amount; if not, then the amount of the cost. The municipalities of Barrington and Shelburne, through which the line or said Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia (limited) is also to run, have also agreed to pay for the right of way through these municipalities respectively.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

EDWIN S. FRASER.

Declared before me at Yarmouth, in the county of Yarmouth, province of Nova Scotia, and Dominion of Canada, this eleventh day of June, A.D., 1895.

G. JUDSON BURRILL,
A Justice of the Peace in and for the County of Yarmouth.

And yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. White) pretends to tell the House that the right of way of the South Shore Railway Company has been paid for. As a matter of fact every municipality along the route of the proposed Coast Railway have either paid for the right of way for the Coast Railway Company or have agreed to do so, whereas as regards the South Shore Railway Company, the fake company, who propose to get their charter revived they have not paid for any but a few unimportant ones. This says that eleven miles have affidavit The hon, gentleman said been paid for. No municipality has ever fifteen miles. agreed to pay for any right of way for the South Shore Railway. I have in my hand the list of those rights of way, setting them out by name and giving those unpaid for. They embrace a large number of pages. which I will not weary the House by reading, but I offer them to the hon. member for Shelburne for his perusal. This list is the very best evidence to submit to any This list committee of this House to prove that the statements I have made are absolutely in accord with the facts. I have another affidavit of Mr. Farrar with respect to the same matter. It has reference to a map, showing the pertions that have been built, the portions graded, the portions not graded, and the amount of work done in the different localities; but as I have not the map with me, I wil not weary the House by reading the affidavit. The hon. gentleman also read a letter from one, Mr. Fletcher, known to be the chief promoter of the Coast Railway Company, and I believe, at one time, if not now, its president. This letter was dated January, 1895, and purports to express Mr. Fletcher's opposition to a law suit which is brought against the South Shore Railway Company to void its charter. In that letter there purports to be a statement that a proposed amalgamation of the two companies would likely take place; that in this way all litigation would cease; and that the gentleman from Philadelphia deprecated the introduction of politics into railway matters affecting the south shore of Nova Scotia. With this portion of the letter I most distinctly con-cur; and if it were not for the actions of some politicians, headed by the present hon. member for Shelburne, there would have been no politics introduced affecting either of these railway schemes. Were it not that Mr. Charles Cahan, the former leader of the Liberal-Conservative party in the legislature of Nova Scotia, took it upor himself to carry through the south shore scheme in order to make votes by the agitation he started, backed up as he was by the efforts of the present hon. member for Shelburne in this House, there would have been no politics whatever affecting the railway enterprises of the south shore of the province of Nova Scotia. The statement of claim in the suit against the South Shore Company, is dated the 13th March, 1895. The House will therefore see that the letter written by Mr. Fletcher could in no way The suit was have referred to that suit. the writ was not then in esse; issued; the statement of claim was not drawn; that letter could not have deprecated the stoppage of a law suit attacking the charter of the South Shore Railway Company, because that suit had not been That action was entered in the courts. brought after mature deliberation upon the part of all concerned, including the Government of Nova Scotia. Several months of hearing and arguments of counsel for both parties were had before the Lieuin Council; the memtenant-Governor bers of the Nova Scotia Cabinet, I am informed, were divided upon the matter; the Attorney General was very averse to granting his fiat; and he only did so when he was convinced, either by the arguments of ccunsel on behalf of the Coast Railway Company, or by his own colleagues in the Cabinet, that it would be wiser and better all round to attack this charter, which was being used to attack and vitiate an honest enterprise then in operation along the south shore of Nova Scotia. This statement of claim, among other things, says:

That no directors of the South Shore Railway Company have ever been elected under the provisions of sections 9 and 11 and other provisions of the said Act of Incorporation, and no directors or officers of said company have ever been appointed, and the said company has no directors or officers except the provisional directors constituted by section 6 of the said Act of Incorporation.

That in July, 1892, although no stock of said Scuth Shore Railway Company had been subscribed, E. Franklin Clements, one of the incorporators of said company, proceeded with a pretended organization of said company. The said pretended organization was entered into without any stock of the said company being subscribed or paid in and without the time and place of the first meeting of the company being determined in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of said Act of Incorporation, or notice thereof having been given in accordance with the provisions of said section. And such organization was not in accordance with said Act of Incorporation and was not a valid or effectual organization of said company, but was wholly unauthorized and contrary to law. If any capital stock of said company had been subscribed, or any subscribed capital paid in, such subscription and payment were not bona fide, but were fictitious and fraudulent.

Particulars are as follows:

Defendants, E. Franklin Clements, Albert M. Perrin, William V. Brown, Edgar N. Clements and one Dean F. Currie subscribed for ten shares in all, amounting to one thousand dollars, but none of them paid anything thereon. The defendant E. Franklin Clements further subscribed for 500 shares, either in his own name or as the pretended agent of pretended and fictitious undisclosed principals, but the said defendant, E. Franklin Clements, was, and is, a person wholly without means and wholly unable to contribute such proportion of the capital stock, and was not a person who was, or is, even apparently able to pay the assessments which might be made upon said shares; and said E. Franklin Clements paid nothing whatever upon said stock, and never intended to pay anything thereon, and the said subscriptions to said capital stock by said E. Franklin Clements were fictitious and fraudulent. There were no other or further subscriptions to said capital stock, nor was anything paid in on the capital stock, but, in order to make a colourable or simulated payment, said defendant, E. Franklin Olements, discounted his own note for $12,600. or thereabouts, at a bank in Yarmouth, and had the proceeds placed to the credit of the said South Shore Railway Company in said bank under an agreement or arrangement that the same should remain there as security for said note, and said proceeds were very soon thereafter applied to the payment of said note, and the said proceeds of said note were not, nor was any part thereof, ever the property of said South Shore Railway Company, or under its control. In the alternative, the said colourable or simulated payment was made by means of the deposit in a bank at Yarmouth for a short time of a cheque not the property of said company.

That the said defendant, E. Franklin Clements, in or about the month of December, 1893, without the authority of other the incorporators or other the provisional directors named in the said Act of Incorporation of the said South Shore Railway Company, or any or either of them, or any other legal authority, undertook to sell to the defendants, Tunis G. Bergen, Frederick B. Bard, Frederick A. Farrar, Henry E. Alexander, Jacob Bingay, Edgar K. Spinney, William C. Clark, and others, the charter of the said company; and the said defendants, Tunis G. Bergen, Frederick B.

Bard, Frederick A. Farrar, Henry E. Alexander, Jacob Bingay, Edgar E. Spinney, William C. Clark, and others, purposed to purchase the said charter.

Under said pretended organization and said pretended sale, the defendants, Tunis G. Bergen, Cyrus E. Staples, Frederick B. Bard, Frederick A. Farrar. Henry Eugene Alexander, Jacob Bingay and Edgar K. Spinney have assumed to be and act as shareholders and as directors and officers of said company, and the defendant William C. Clark has assumed to be and act as general manager thereof.

Under the said pretended organization and said pretended sale, the said defendants, Tunis G. Bergen, Cyrus E. Staples, Frederick B. Bard, Frederick A. Farrar, Henry E. Alexander, Jacob Bingay, Edgar K. Spinney and William C. Clark, assuming to act on behalf of said company, have in the name of said company assumed to go into operation as said company and to proceed with its works and to exercise its corporate functions, although one-half of the capital stock of said company was not, and has not been, subscribed, and 25 per cent of the subscribed capital stock was not, and has not been, paid in.

That the defendants, Tunis G. Bergen, Cyrus E. Staples, Frederick B. Bard, Frederick A. Farrar, Henry E. Alexander, Jacob Bingay, Edgar K. Spinney and William C. Clark, under said pretended organization and the said pretended sale of said charter, which were, and are, illegal and wholly null and void, have assumed, and are assuming and pretending, to be officers of said company. And the said defendants, Tunis G. Bergen, Cyrus E. Staples, Frederick B. Bard, Frederick A. Farrar, Henry E. Alexander, Jacob Bingay, Edgar K. Spinney and William C. Clark, in the name of said company, but wholly without the authority thereof, are exercising the corporate functions of the said company, and constructing in the name of said company the line of railway authorized by the said Act of Incorporation, and are entering into, and have entered into, contracts and obligations in the name of said company.

That within two years from the passing of the Act of Incorporation of said company, nothing was done upon the portion of said company's railway lying between the town of Yarmouth and the town of Barrington. and reasonable progress towards the completion of said portion of said company's railway, satisfactory to the Governor in Council, to insure the completion of said portion of said company's railway within four years after the passing of said Act of Incorporation, was not made; and no steps were taken within said period of two years to obtain the approval of the Governor in Council of the progress made by the said company towards the completion of said portion of the company's railway, and no such approval was ever obtained. And the plaintiffs say that, by reason of the matters aforesaid, the said Act of Incorporation of the said company has ceased and determined, and said company has ceased to be a body corporate; except for the terms and purposes mentioned in section 10 of chapter 73 of the Revised Statutes; and in the alternative the plaintiffs say that the charter of said company never went into operation, and that the Act of Incorporation of said company and its charter have wholly ceased and determined, and the said company has ceased to be a body corporate for any purposes whatsoever.

This section is drawn in the words of section 28 of chapter 130 of the Acts of 1892, being the Act of incorporation of the South

Shore Railway Company. In the alternative the plaintiffs say that the charter of the said company never went into operation and that the Act of the incorporation of the company and its charter have also ceased, and the said company has ceased to be a body corporate for any purpose whatever. Now, with this statement of claim before us, can it be otherwise held but that there is an attack upon the charter of the South Shore Railway Company in the courts of the province of Nova Scotia. A direct attack is made, and the suit is pending in the courts of that province today. Yet, in spite of that, efforts are being made by legislation in this House to override what may be the issue of this suit in the courts of that province, to trample on provincial rights, and to take out of the jurisdiction of the provincial courts that which belongs to them. This action was This action was In February a prevbrought in March. ious action was brought by some of the landholders, through whose land the proposed South Shore Railway Company were It was held. going to extend their line. after consultation with counsel, that such an action would not lie in the name of the Therefore, that action was landowners. dropped, and subsequently this action in the name of the Attorney General, on the relation of a gentleman of the name of Alfred W. Potter, for and on behalf of 298 others, landholders along the South Shore line. It has been asserted that this suit was brought by this gentleman to protect his individual rights. I deny that. It is simply a test suit, one of 290 odd which are standing in identically the same position, although the writs have not been yet issued. Politics were imported in the spring of 1894 into railway matters affecting the South Shore Railway Company as well as the Coast Railway Company, and they were imported by political agitators out of the camp of hon. gentle-men opposite. Up to that time there were no politics in the matter, and the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) himself was until then the exponent or advocate of the Coast Railway Company. He had put himself on record in more ways than one, as far back as March, 1893, in support of the Coast Railway. He sent a letter dated the 2nd March, 1893, to the Right Hon. Sir John Thompson, asking for a subsidy to that company. That letter reads as follows:—

Adverting to the personal application recently made to you by Mr. Leonard Atwood, of Philadelphia, for a subsidy of fifteen hundred per mile for a line of narrow-gauge railway, 91 miles, from Yarmouth to Lockeport, in the county of Shelburne, I beg leave to recommend this application to your most favourable consideration.

The contemplated road will pass through almost a continuous settlement, connect with the Western Counties Railway, now happily joined with the railway system of the province by the completion of the missing link, and at last, after vantage of railway facilities for travel and traffic. A careful survey has been made of the contemplated line by the provincial engineer of Nova Scotia, who has given the proposed system his unqualified endorsement as suitable for this section of the country, and the councils of the several municipalities through which the road will run, after having fully inspected the working of similar lines in the United States, have unanimously agreed to assess the ratepayers for land damages and right of way.

Mr. Atwood and other gentlemen associated with him have taken the necessary steps to obtain a provincial Act of Incorporation, and desire to commence work as soon as the spring opens; and, considering the utter want of railway facilities in the district and the necessity for the immediate encouragement of this work, I trust this application will receive your prompt and favourable consideration, and that, in case no railway subsidies are granted at this session, some assurance will be given that the road, if proceeded with, will be subsidized next year.

Your obedient servant, N. W. WHITE.

This letter is dated 2nd March, 1893, nearly a year after the Coast Railway had got their old and now defunct charter from Nova Scotia. The hon. Minister replied on 6th March, 1893:

My dear Mr. White,-I have received your favour, confirming your verbal application for a subsidy for a line of railway between Yarmouth and Lockeport. I shall submit your application to the Minister of Railways without delay, and request for it as favourable consideration as possible.

Yours always,

JOHN S. D. THOMPSON.

That is the application and the reply, and it shows that there were no politics in this railway matter up to the middle of March. On the 30th April, 1894, there were no politics in it, for the hon, member for Shelburne would surely be an exponent of his party in railway matters in Nova Scotia, especially affecting this enterprise, and I hold a letter from that gentleman dated 30th April, 1894, advocating the granting by the Dominion Government of the subsidy and all possible assistance to the Coast Railway of Nova Scotia. Here is the letter:

Ottawa, 30th April, 1894.

L. Atwood, Esq.

Dear Sir,-Your favour of 4th would have been replied to earlier, but I was absent at Montreal some days. The Government and several Minsome days. isters are so much occupied with the new tariff just now that it is difficult to get a discussion on other subjects, and indeed, until that is over, no announcement will be made as to their policy on railway subsidies this year. Under any circumstances, these subsidies are always given and Under any circumvoted for a line of railway between certain points and not to any particular company; and, in view of the changed condition of affairs, it will, I think, be necessary for you to satisfy the Government on the financial ability of your company to complete your proposed line.

Yours truly, N. W. WHITE.

Matters progressed in that line for several the people of the county of Shelburne have agi. Matters progressed in that line for several tated for some years, they will be afforded the admonths. From April to July we find that the Coast Railway received the support and approval of the Government of Canada. We find it receiving the unqualified support of the hon. member for Shelburne. We find that hon, gentleman openly advocating the granting of aid to what was then known to be a three-foot gauge railway. We find him, as late again as the 11th July, 1894, drafting a letter to the Right Hon. Sir John Thompson, again advocating assistance and the granting of a subsidy to the Coast Railway. The original draft letter in the handwriting of the hon, member for Shelburne I now hold in my hand, this letter as copied is signed by the vice-president of that company, which reads as follows:-

Ottawa, 11th July, 1894.

Right Hon. Sir John Thompson.

Dear Sir,-Finding that your time is, and has been, fully occupied, and not wishing to trespass on your good nature, I have thought it best to write very shortly what I would like to submit for your consideration respecting the railway I have under construction between Yarmouth and Lockeport, by the way of Barrington and Shelburne.

A preliminary survey has been made the entire length of the line. Actual surveys have been made for 22 miles east from Yarmouth, and the location of same has been approved by the local The necessary rights of way have government. been secured, and active work was commenced in The number of men April upon the grading. employed has been steadily increased each month The financial resources up to the present time. cf my company are such that work will be prosecuted with all possible despatch to an early completion.

As I had the pleasure of an interview with you last year, and have also explained to-day to Sir C. H. Tupper, this matter more in detail, and have put Mr. White, the member for Shelburne, in possession of all the facts and circumstances connected with this enterprise, I feel I need not trouble you further, but trust that the importance of this road will be favourably considered by your Government in the way of substantial aid to the undertaking.

Yours very respectfully, LEONARD ATWOOD.

Now, we have a curious state of affairs. Within two weeks after that we have the Government of Canada bringing down a series of resolutions to Parliament asking Parliament to vote money to railroad enterprises in the Dominion; and, among others we find them voting $3,200 a mile not, as the hon. member for Shelburne says, to aid in the construction of a road from one point to another, but we have the Government deliberately coming down to Parliament and asking Parliament to give them power to grant $3,200 a mile to the South Shore Railway Company for 35 miles of railway from Yarmouth toward Barrington. Why this sudden change on the part of the hon. member for Shelburne and the members of the Government, I cannot understand. Surely it cannot be that they did it in order to gain last session had passed an Act giving the political advantage to the detriment of the shore of the south Nova Scotia. Can it be that they intended to strangle the enterprise, the coast roads, upon which so much money has been spent? had $100,000 cash actually spent upon the road; and yet ten days after they had expressed approval of it they lend their ear to a proposal that they should Their position give aid to a rival road. may possibly be explained when we learn that the Nova Scotia Government, finding that the people of the south shore were most anxious to have some kind of a complete, and knowing railroad that the Coast Railway Company was backed United capitalists in the made a bargain and received bonds signed by men known to be worth several millions of dollars agreeing to build the road within a specified time according to the terms of a strict contract. That line was under construction with the consent and approval of the municipalities along the south shore. Surely it could not be for political reasons that the hon. member for Shelburne backed by the Government of Canada desired to baulk and destroy this enterprise. But, Sir, I can give no other reason for the extraordinary course that the hon. gentleman has taken. The hon, senior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) sought to lend his countenance and aid to the hon, member for Shelburne by saying that the board of trade of the city of Halifax advocated the building of the south shore railway and the giving aid to that road. And he drew a long bow when he said that the board of trade of the great city of Halifax desired to kill the coast road by so doing. Far be it from me, Mr. Speaker, to say that the hon. gentleman stated what he knew to be different from the facts as related by the members of the board of trade of Halifax. But I do say that the hon. gentleman has not stated them as I believe them to be; and the subjective matter of his mind did not agree with objective nature of the phenomena as stated by certain members of the board of trade. The advocacy of the south shore railway was based upon one thing only. The merchants of Halifax hoped to trade along that and they wanted to transfer orders given to them by the merchants of the south shore to the wholesale and manufacturing establishments in Ontario and western Canada generally, and therefore they advocated a standard gauge as being preferable to the three foot gauge which the Coast Railway Company were going to build at that time. Now, the hon, member for Shelburne said that, for like reasons he, forsooth, would advocate the building of the south shore railway. What, Sir, has he to say for his action in Parliament to-day when he knows, as he ought to have known, that the Nova Scotia legislature at its Coast Railway Company power to enlarge coast railway and to the injury of the people its gauge from three feet to the standard width of 4 feet 8½ inches. This was asked for by the company, I may say, upon the statements of the hon. member for Shelburne, and other distinguished politicians of the Conservative stripe, that if the company should build a standard gauge road, they would receive the assistance of that distinguished gentleman and the members of this Government. They applied to the legislature to have their charter amended. I hold in my hand a copy of the last amendment, passed on 20th March, 1895. Section 2 says:

The lines of railway authorized by the Act of Incorporation of the company, and the Act in amendment thereof, and any lines of railway acquired by the company under the provisions of section 1 of the Act, may be of such gauge as the company may determine; and the company are hereby authorized to lay out, build, own, equip, construct and operate the lines of railway authorized by the Act of Incorporation of the company, and the Act in amendment thereof, and any line or lines of railway acquired by the company under the provisions of section 1 of this Act, of such gauge as the company may determine; provided, that, in the event of any change being made in the gauge of any line of railway from the gauge upon which the same was laid out or constructed, the same must be approved by the Governor in Council.

In plain English that meant that the company was given an authority to build a standard gauge railway. Now, Sir, on the 5th June, 1895, the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia passed an Order in Council proclaiming, in terms of this Act, that the same should come in force. This was published in the "Royal Gazette" of Nova Scotia, a copy of which I hold in my hand. It says:

The following sections of an Act of the legislature of Nova Scotia, passed on the twentieth day of March, 1895, entitled "An Act to amend chapter 154 of the Acts of 1893, entitled 'An Act to incorporate the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, Limited,' and the Acts in amendment thereof," are now published by order of the Governor in Council, as provided in the 9th section of said Act.

H. CROSSKILL, Clerk of Executive Council.

That gave the company power to go on and build a road of standard gauge. The first step taken to carry that out was the calling together of the company and the passing of a resolution. This meeting was held on the 6th May, 1895, and the resolution reads as follows:—

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, held at Yarmouth, 6th May, 1895, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—-

"Resolved that the president and board of directors be hereby authorized to immediately bring into effect the amendment to the charter of the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, Limited, enacted at the last session of the local legislature, empowering the company to change its gauge from 3 feet to 4 feet 8½ inches, for the regular standard gauge, and the president is hereby further authorized to have such changes made in the plans and in the work now under construction as may be necessary to conform with specifications of the local government for standard-gauge railways, and that the gauge of the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, Limited, be changed from 3 feet to 4 feet 8½ inches.

Passed by unanimous vote.

Attest (signed) S. D. Pettit, Secretary Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, Limited.

Then the next step in the regular course of business was to apply to the Government for power to amend the contract made with the Government, and by the company. The Hon. Mr. Fielding, at that time, had been taken seriously ill, and had been ordered south to a warmer climate for the benefit of his health, and had gone away.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the hon, gentleman if he is fairly launched in his subject. It is very hot in the Chamber, and I think hon, members on both sides would like to get away. If there is a great deal more to be said, the hon, gentleman might move an adjournment.

Mr. FORBES. Very well, at the request of the leader of the House, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

REPORT.

Report of Trade and Commerce, for the year ending June 30th, 1895.—(Mr. Foster).

ADJOURNMENT-RUMOURED RE-SIGNATION OF MINISTERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I take advantage of this motion to ask the leader of the House if he can give any information in regard to a rumour which is now current, that three members of the Cabinet have resigned this afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. I can give no information to my hon. friend, but I advise him not to put his trust in rumours.

Mr. LAURIER. Then I inform my hon. friend that I shall renew this question tomorrow, and I will then take the opportunity of drawing the attention of the House to it.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would like to ask the leader of the House whether there is the authority of His Excellency the Governor General for the announcement made this afternoon as to the meeting of Parliament in January next. The hon, gentleman did not say whether he had such authority, and it seems to me that an announcement that Parliament would be convened by a certain day, and another session would be called, is rather usurping the prerogative of His Excellency, unless the Government had such authority.

My hon. friend will be Mr. FOSTER. pleased to hear that we have not usurped the prerogative of His Excellency in this regard.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 9th July, 1895.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RUMOURED RESIGNATION OF MIN-ISTERS.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I would renew the question I put last evening to my hon, friend leading the House, with respect to the resignation of certain members of the Administration.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can say to my hon. friend and to the House is this: I have not any authority from His Excellency the Governor General to make a statement to the House other than this, that no resignation has as yet been received by him.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I hardly believe that the statement just made by my hon, friend can be satisfactory to the House. Whether certain members of this Administration have placed their resignations in the hands of His Excellency or not, I must accept the hon, gentleman's statement that it is not so. But whether that fact is official or is not official, there can be no doubt that we are in the midst of a ministerial crisis. His Excellency is here. His Excellency has cancelled a trip which had been arranged for him weeks in advance, which he had looked forward to with great pleasure, it being to a part of the country which His Excellency has not yet visited, and this fact is sufficient to show that there is a crisis. Moreover. here are two seats vacant, vacant since yesterday, and although the hon. gentlemen who occupy these seats may not yet have tendered officially their resignations to His Excellency It is quite evident that they are no longer in harmony with their colleagues, otherwise they would be in their places to discharge their share of the business of the country. There is another fact: another hon. gentleman who occupies a place in the Administration, and who sits in the other House. was not in his seat yesterday, and I am led to believe is not in his seat to-day. Under such circumstances, again I say, that it is his seat, if he did not start out with, closely simply trifling with the House for the hon. followed his opening remarks with the state-gentleman to say that we are not in the presence of a grave crisis. I do not know, I do not care at the present time what stage it has reached, but there is the fact: under our system of government, under the Federal system of government, we have it as an unwritten law of all Administrations, that all the provinces, as far as practicable, should be represented in the Cabinet. No Administration would dare to sit and discharge the public business of the country unless the different provinces, or at all events the great provinces, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, were properly represented in the Cabinet; and when it is known at the present time that three Ministers, representing one province, that three of those gentlemen who represent a great portion of the population of the country, are out of the Cabinet at the present time, whether officially or not, they are practically out of the Cabinet. I say that we are not only in the midst of a great political crisis, but that we have reached a position unprecedented in the history of Canada, where the Government would undertake to carry on the business of the country, one great province, the second in the Dominion, being altogether unrepresented in the Cabinet. I do say to my hon, friend that the situation is altogether unprecedented. Now, Sir, if the hon. gentleman were to form an Administration-if any Administration were to be formed by himself or by anybody else to-morrow, no Prime Minister would dare to come to this House and ask Parliament to transact the business of the country with one great province altogether unrepresented in the Cabinet of the nation. So, Mr. Speaker, I say that at the present time we are in this position: That the Government is not in the condition in which it ought to be in order to ask Parliament to transact the business of the country. The Government. I submit, has no right to ask Parliament to vote a single penny under the circumstances, and I conceive that there is nothing else to do but for this House to adjourn and give to the Government an opportunity of either making up the vacancies that exist, or being prepared to advise His Excellency of the condition of things which does exist. I do not conceive, Sir, that the hon, gentleman can allow the Chief Magistrate of the nation, the representa-tive of the Queen, not to be properly advised that there is a political crisis. His Excellency has not yet received the resignation of three of his Ministers. But three of his Ministers, at all events, are not here to discharge the business which His Excellency has entrusted to them, and for this reason, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier), who has just taken ment, that to-day witnessed a proceeding unprecedented, or a state of things unprecedented in the history of Government in this country. I am quite willing to admit with him that his phrase was well chosen, although I would apply it in a different way from the application which he evidently meant should be made. I say, that it is a thing unprecedented in the parliamentary history of this country, that an hon. gentleleading Her Majesty's Opposition, should on the strength of mere rumour, and newspaper rumour, or common rumour, come to the conclusion, that in the first place, any part of this country, any one of its provinces, was not represented in the Government; and, that even if it were unrepresented, that so long as there was a Government which held the confidence of the House and had its majority here, it could not therefore carry on the affairs of the country. Sir, my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier), as I stated, has nothing better than rumour upon which to go. He asked me for authentic information. He received the whole modicum of authentic information that I could give, and he should have rested satisfied with that, and have restrained his ardent impetuosity in the course which he has pursued. He should have waited in a statesmanlike and calm manner until the truth, from an authoritative source, was carefully and fully stated to the House and then have taken whatever action seemed to him best in the premises. But, Sir, he chooses another position. And in doing that, and in making a grave charge and following it by a serious and grave motion based on mere rumour, he has put himself in the position of taking a stand which is certainly unprecedented in the parliamentary history of Canada. Sir, he leaped to the conclusion from rumour, from newspaper rumour, that because there are vacancies on the ministerial benches, that, therefore, the members who were in these seats—and whom he would like to see there now-were no longer members of the Government in union or in harmony with the Government. And he leaped from that conclusion to the still broader conclusion, that one of the great provinces of the Dominion was totally unrepresented, and that therefore the Government should not proceed with its business. He is wrong in both. He has not the slightest foundation of authority for taking the position that he did, and he could only take that position upon an authoritative statement made with the consent of His Excellency the Governor And, Sir, the General before this House. hon, gentleman (Mr. Laurier) is curiously inaccurate in his assumption, even though his assumption were warranted by facts to the extent to which his inquiry went. He must remember that the province of Quebec has several representatives and that even if he were correct in basing upon fact (which he has not) that which he had based upon rumour, he must still recollect that the moneys asked for, and for the purposes to province of Quebec had members in the Government with whose names even rumour has not been busy, and with reference to whom he has no right, even on the basis of rumour, to make the assertion or to make the statement which he has made before this House. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman went on to state the doctrine: that if it ever happened in the Government of this country, that any one of its provinces was for the time being unrepresented in the Cabinet, that, therefore, there was no constitutional right, or at least by unwritten law, there was no right, and by custom there was no right—no right for the Government to pass a single governmental measure if it were in that position that it was a Government in which one, even of the smallest of the provinces of the Dominion was unrepresented. It merely needs that I state this to show its untenable character, and I imagine that in cooler moments, and when not acting under the excitement which is evidently pressing upon my hon, friend just now, he would not attempt to maintain that, either as constitutional or as practical good statesmanship or good doctrine in this matter. Sir, I have no intention of carrying on this discussion further. intention of following my hon. friend on his devious pathway of rumour and of what he may hear, and of what may be told to him and whispered to him. In due course of time I shall be able to make an authoritative statement to this House. And when I make that, it will be open for my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier), possessing his soul in patience for the meantime—it will be open to him to accept the situation in this case, as he has so often had to do in previous cases.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The statement of the hon, the leader of the House is rather an extraordinary one under the circumstances. The hon, the leader has informed the House that it is only newspaper rumour that three of his colleagues are no longer members of the Administration. That, Sir, is rather an extraordinary statement in face of the fact, that here at the closing hours of the session, when Parliament is called upon to consider the appropriations for the support of the various departments which these hon. gentlemen, until the present moment represented, they are not in their places to explain these appropriations, to defend the sums of money for which they ask, or to show for what purposes these sums of money are to be applied. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) thinks it a most unreasonable thing that my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) should press upon the attention of the Government the impropriety of proceeding with the Estimates, and with the important business that the House has yet to discharge, in the absence of those of his colleagues who are responsible for the

hon. Minister of Finance, it is pretty clear, has not a very high estimation of the accuracy of newspaper statements. In this respect his views correspond with those of his honoured colleague beside him. The hon. Minister of Justice not long ago assured us that not the slightest reliance could be placed upon the statements which from to time appear in the newspapers with regard to his colleagues in office; and now, although three of his colleagues are reported to have resigned, although this statement is published abroad in newspapers of every shade of political opinion, and although the vacant seats hitherto occupied by those hon, gentlemen bear testimony to the accuracy of that state-ment, the hon. Minister of Finance says we have no right to attach the slightest importance to it. Yet the hon, gentleman concluded the observations he addressed to the House with the statement that, after advising with His Excellency upon the subject, he will be able at an early period to announce to the House what the facts really are. Here is the statement in the newspapers which the hon, gentleman scouts the idea of attaching any importance to; here are the vacant seats which until two days ago his colleagues occupied throughout the session. But the hon. gentleman says we are not to heed any of these things; we are to go on in the face of the inconvenience of dealing with the public estimates in the absence of those who are specially responsible for submitting those estimates to the House; and we are to attach no importance to this matter-it is all a myth; there have been no resignations; there have been no differences in the Cabinet; but the hon, gentleman will come down at an early day and explain to us fully what is the real situation. Well, Sir, I do not think the hon. gentleman's conclusion very well accords with his statement of the real situation. Then, the hon, gentleman thinks this is rather an unprecedented proceeding. Well, Sir, I think it is one in which the usual precedents applicable to such cases are followed. What is the practice where an Administration is being formed? Is the business of the House proceeded with? If the Administration is well nigh filled up, does the House proceed with the public business in the absence of a number of gentlemen who hold important folios in the Cabinet? think the hon, gentleman will find some difficulty in showing that it is usual for the Government to proceed under conditions like those which exist at this moment. I think the motion of my hon, friend is a very proper motion under the circumstances; and when the hon. gentleman—if the rumours are wholly unfounded—is able to induce his colleagues to come into this House and occupy their seats and assume the responsibility of Ministers of the Crown, then my hon. friend will withdraw his motion; and I dare say he would give the hon. gentleman a few minutes to see how far he can succeed in per- hon, member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector

> Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the statement made just now by the hon. leader of the Opposition about the composition of a Government in Canada. I agree that the large provinces such as Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, should be represented properly in the Government; and that is what we have seen for the last twenty years and more. At this moment we see two seats on the treasury benches vacant. The question has been put to the leader of the House, what is the reason of those seats not being occupied? leader of the House says he is not in a position to give an answer to that question now. Those seats have been vacant since yesterday; this is the second sitting; and the leader of the Opposition says that under these circumstances the Government have no right to proceed with the business of the House, because the province of Quebec, so far as two seats are concerned, is not Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not represented. think there is a member of this House who would more, than I ask that my province should be represented in the Government. I hope that province is now represented in the Government; and if it is not now re-presented, I have no doubt that the leader of the House and the First Minister will see that it shall be represented immediately.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know what the hon, gentlemen would wish if the word immediately is not sufficient for them. I am not disposed, for my part, on a motion to adjourn the House, to vote non-confidence in the Government which I have supported from the beginning of the session. If the leader of the House comes down with a statement about these vacant seats and gives a reason why they are vacant which is not acceptable, I am not the man to say yes to the Government under such circum-If a vote of non-confidence is then required, of course I shall give it; but now I shall certainly not support the motion made by the hon, leader of the Opposi-

For the present, Mr. Speaker, I share the opinion of the hon. member for Three Rivers. I will give my confidence to the Government till we have clear and definite explanations with respect to the fact that two seats on the treasury benches have been unoccupied for over two days. As soon as we have these explanations, should we deem them insufficient. I do not pledge myself to continue my confidence in the Government now in power. As soon as we have the Ministerial explanations, if they should be satisfactory, then I will continue my confidence in the Government. After these few remarks. Mr. Speaker, I intend voting against the motion for adjournment moved by the hon, leader of the Opposition.

INDEMNITY TO MEMBERS.

House resolved itself into committee on resolution (p. 3915) respecting the indemnity of members of the Senate and House of Commons.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MULOCK. A number of the members of this House, who are officers of the Canadian volunteers, have been called from their duties here to serve their country in the field. This particular resolution will, of course, afford relief to those members who, for private reasons, have absented themselves, but those members who have absented themselves for public reasons will not receive any benefit. They will not receive any indemnity during the time that they have spent in the field. The leader of the Horse will remember that in 1885 we went a great deal further and allowed full pay for three months to all the members of this House who were engaged in active service in the North-west.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is altogether unfortunate that this matter should be brought up in the shape of a resolution every year. If the House is of opinion—and that I am not sure has been fairly challenged yet that the twelve days should be allowed to members who, for private reasons, choose to absent themselves, well and good. think it should be placed beyond the reach of a catch division on a resolution. If the Government come to the resolution that this should be the settled policy of Parliament, let it be embodied in the statutes and not brought up from year to year at the whim of the leader of the Government for the time being. It is altogether undignified that members should sit here and vote themselves by resolution every year $96 or $100 as the case may be.

Mr. HAZEN. ¿I simply rise for the pu:pose of saying that I agree in the remarks of the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock). It seems to me only a matter of common fairness that if a member of this House is an officer of the militia force, and, as such, attends the camp of instruction held during the session, he should not be made to suffer by having his sessional indemnity reduced by the amount of $8 per day. Militia officers should be allowed the full time they are absent attending to their duties in the camp and in addition should be allowed the twelve days granted other members for the purpose of attending to their private business.

Resolution reported.

THE MARKLAND MORTGAGE.

Mr. FOSTER moved third reading of Bill (No. 136) respecting the discharge of a mortgage to Her Majesty known as the Markland mortgage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From inquiries I have made on the matter, I am afraid that the hon, gentleman is proposing to give away a portion of the public property for a quite inadequate consideration, and I doubt extremely the policy of passing any Act whereby we reduce an asset of the Dominion unless we take proper legal formalities to ascertain its value. I think the duty of the Government in this matter is plain enough. They ought to deal with this portion of the public property just as an ordinary mortgagee would deal with it. Let the property be put up to public auction and disposed of, and then no censure can attach to the Government if it does not fetch the full sum; but it is not wise for the Government to take upon themselves the responsibility of practically giving away to certain parties, whoever they may be,-I have not taken the trouble to inquire into that matter-a certain percentage of the money which appears to be legally due. am bound to say that I believe the great bulk, at any rate, if not all, of the sum which is now due the Government would be received if that course were pursued.

Mr. FOSTER. The only object of the department was to close this thing out from our books. It has been there since 1862, and was dealt with by a committee of this House who recommended that it be got rid of entirely. We must have power to give a title, and the Bill which is introduced simply empowers the Government to do that. mentioned that we were proceeding on the basis of giving the properties for 50 per cent of the principle due, and the question came up whether that held or not with reference to the Minguay property. I inquired of my officers and I found that they are negotiating in the same way with the holders of that property at present, and that the holders will come in on the same basis. The amount of money is not very large and no prospect of its being paid. It is fairly large if you take the principal and accrued interest from the time interest began to run. It would be as well to let the Bill pass, as it gives power to dispose of the property on the best terms possible, and I will take care that precautions are taken to get the values and dispose of it for as large a sum as possible. The only object is to realize what we can from the property and clear the same from our books. The amount we shall take is not fixed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the hon, gentleman said that about 50 per cent of the principal, without the interest, was the amount the Government calculated upon getting. I am bound to tell him that I believe that, if the properties were put up to auction, they would yield all that is due, according to the information I have received. It would be satisfactory to know if the Government have obtained the assessed values of the properties. That is a piece of information they should have before them.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That, I think, they ought to have and ought to have mentioned to the House. One of these lots is a water lot of very considerable value. The others are of less value, but collectively amount to a very considerable sum.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure no offer has been made absolutely binding us. I do not hold myself bound to take 50 per cent of the valuation, if, after the most minute inquiries, I think more can be obtained. With reference to the special property, which is the most valuable one, I shall take care to have a valuation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The practical way is to put it up to auction.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid we would not get much that way.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SILVER-LEAD SMELTING.

Resolution (p. 3925) reported from committee re providing for the encouragement of silver-lead smelting in Canada, was read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduco Bill (No. 142) to encourage silver-lead smelting.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved third reading of Bill (No. 68) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We were to hear from the Minister of Justice with respect to my proposition to amend the section relating to the marking of the ballots. I understood the hon. gentleman was to consider whether he would incorporate, with this Bill, the provisions of the Bill I introduced.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. undertake to have the amendments proposed by a member of the Government in the Senate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, no.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is imwill have to come back here. material to me how it is done; I propose this merely as a matter of convenience.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But that commits us to making that provision of the law mandatory instead of directory, as now.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Sir Well?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is an arguable question whether that should be done. You restrict the freedom of the voter in the marking of his ballot, and I am inclined to think that it is not in the public interest that we should take that course. If the hon, gentleman proposes to make an amendment to the law governing the election of members to this House in the Sen-tunity it should have of fully considering the matter.

The second of th

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, the hon. gentleman can move his amendment now. My suggestion was made merely as a matter of convenience. House would not be debarred in the slightest respect from full discussion by the amendment being made in the Senate, as the amendment would have to come under consideration in this House in any case. I do not object at all to the hon. gentleman moving that the Bill be recommitted to be amended in this respect.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That being the case, I will move:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by adding the following clause:-

1. The section substituted by section four of chapter thirteen of the Statutes of 1894 for section forty-six of The Dominion Elections Act, chapter eight of the Revised Statutes, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

46. The elector, on receiving the ballot paper, shall forthwith proceed into one of the compartments of the polling station and there mark his ballot paper, making a cross or crosses with a pencil on the white circular space or spaces opposite to the name or names of the candidate or candidates for whom he intends to vote, and shall then fold up such ballot paper so that the initials on the back can be seen without opening it, and hand it to the deputy returning officer, who shall, without unfolding it, ascertain by examining his initials and the number upon the counterfoil that it is the same which he furnished to the elector, and shall first detach and destroy the counterfoil, and shall then immediately, and in the presence of the elector, place the ballot paper in the ballot box.'

This is in the words of the Bill I introduced, and the object is that the elector shall mark his ballot in the disc, and not elsewhere.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Chairman, I submit the section to the committee in the form in which I introduced it as a Bill. think hon. members of the committee are pretty well aware of the object of it. Last session we adopted the ballot paper having a disc opposite the name of the candidate, the object of Parliament being that the ballot should be marked in the disc, and not elsewhere. Judge Andrews has decided that, under the present law, the ballot may be marked in the disc, or it may be marked in the division where the name is. This decision gives rise to so much doubt as to what the law really is that it is apparent to everybody that the question ought to be settled one way or the other. Now, my idea is that it should be settled by making ate, he is depriving this House of the oppor- it mandatory that the elector should mark in the disc, and not elsewhere. But if the majority of the committee hold a different opinion, I still think that some amendment should be made declaring that Judge Andrews was right, and that this portion of the Act is directory, and not mandatory. I move this amendment to test the opinion of the committee.

Mr. BERGIN. I object to that amendment. I think that instead of restricting the voter in his efforts to mark the voting paper properly, we ought to facilitate him. I would like to ask my hon. friend, when the directions for voting are posted up at different places throughout the counties where they are directed by law to be posted, how many of the voters will understand what is meant by the word "disc"? A great many of them will think probably that it is outside of the disc that the vote should be made, and I think where we have so many illiterate people, we ought to avoid confusing the minds of the voters.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It says "circular space."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman forgets that last year we determined to adopt a peculiar form of ballot, which has the name of the candidate on the left hand side of the ballot, and the side of the ballot that formerly was white paper is now made black with a circular white space in the centre. Now, it is apparent that the object of Parliament in adopting that ballot was that the mark should be put in the circular space, and there was no sense in adopting the ballot if you were going to allow the mark to be placed anywhere else. The object of adopting a new ballot paper where it is all black except the space within the circle, was to compel or direct the voter to mark his ballot in that circular space. Any man, whether he is educated or uneducated, will see at once, on looking at the ballot that this is the object. The only result, an unfortunate result, I think, of allowing him to make it elsewhere than in that circular space, would be to render more easy than at present the object of the briber. If the voter is compelled to put it in that space, you minimize the opportunities which are open to those who bribe to ascertain that the bribe has been paid for by the vote, because if the ballot is marked in the circular space, it is impossible for peo-ple who mark it there to be identified; whereas, if you allow it to be marked outside, around the name or on top, or underneath one of the letters, as long as it is not in the space, then you increase the possibility of ascertaining whether the bribe has been paid for. I suppose that was the object of Parliament in adopting this ballot paper last year.

Mr. BERGIN. I quite understand what my hon. friend wishes to convey to the House, but at the same time I must say that his proposition is not in the interest of the honest voter. I am not prepared at this moment to admit that it was a proper ballot for the House to have adopted last year; on the contrary, I quite agree with the judgment of the judge who thinks that the illiterate voter, if he marks within the square, is complying with the law, and I think we ought to support that judgment.

Mr. SPEAKER. The law as it stands at present furnishes, not a white disc with a black border around it, but it furnishes a ballot with a square space in which the voter is directed to place his mark, and it has been held, I think, by the courts that if the ballot is marked so as to clearly indicate the intention of the voter, that is, to indicate that he intended to vote for a certain candidate, that ballot must be counted. Now, is it proposed by the hon. member for Queen's that that privilege and advantage should be taken away from the elector altogether, and upon what grounds is it proposed? It is contended, as I understand, by the hon. member for Queen's that unless the ballot is marked in this white disc that appears with a black ground surrounding it, the vote should not be counted, and the voter will lose his vote. Now, the ground upon which the hon. member for Queen's makes that contention is that if the ballot is marked in any other way than within that disc, it may be a mark of identification, that is to say, a mark that will identify the voter by reason of some understanding that may have taken place prior to his going into the compartment to mark his ballot; in other words, that an elector may be bribed and that the fact of marking his ballot in a certain way within the clear space instead of within the round disc, will enable the briber to ascertain whether the bribee has carried out his part of the contract. But if the hon, member wants to carry that out to its legitimate conclusion, he should specify that the mark shall cover the whole, that it should be made on one side or the other of the white disc, or that it should be placed in a particular part of the white disc, because an elector might be identified by marking within the white space if he marked within a particular part of it, at the bottom or at the top, at the right-hand or at the left-hand side, he could then be identified just as effectually as if he marked within the square space that is shown outside the white disc. It seems to me it would be going a great length to say that if the intention of a voter was clearly defined by the manner in which he marked his ballot, he should be deprived of his vote simply because he failed to put it within the white disc. The law at present reads as follows: portion of the ballot paper, opposite to or within the division containing the name or names of the candidate or candidates for whom he intends to vote, and shall then fold up the ballot paper.

The elector, on receiving the ballot paper, shall forthwith proceed into one of the compartments of the polling station, and shall mark his ballot paper, making a cross with pencil on the white

It seems to me the object of the Bill is simply to give to the elector a more clear indication than the old ballot gave him of the place in which he ought to mark his ballot, and I do not think the elector ought to be deprived of his vote if his intention is clearly indicated by his having marked within the space containing the name of one of the candidates.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think the hon, gentleman's amendment lies in the style of the ballot that we have adopted, and a great deal of the argument is directed against that form of the ballot altogether. I understand the hon. gentleman's position to be that so long as you have that form of ballot, more certainty is needed about the place in which this mark is to go, and his argument carries great weight in my mind, though I appreciate the views of other gentlemen, and could understand them better if we were discussing the style of the ballot that is in the statute. I think there is a great deal of force in the remarks in reference to the ease of identifying the voter and destroying the secrecy of the ballot paper, which is possible where much space is afforded to roam about in. The circular space, as it is called in the amendment, is a very large portion of that paper or ballot, in which to make a simple cross, and I think there is no undue circumscription of the space for the making of that mark. In this case, there is a very ample space, which is distinctly marked on that ballot, and I think an amendment of this kind would go well in hand with it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think we are bound to consider what the object of Parliament was in ordering that specific kind of ballot. My own opinion is that it has been rightly interpreted in the decision referred to, and that the instruction has been regarded as directory and not as mandatory. What was the object of Parliament? Was it to prevent fraud or the placing of marks on ballots so that they might be identified? The true object is to enable the voter to mark his ballot in such a way that it will be clear as to the candidate for whom he intended to vote. The object of the white disc is not to compel the voter to place his mark there, but to enable him to mark the ballot very distinctly for one candidate or another. It is to aid the illiterate man in marking the ballot in such a way that his vote shall not be thrown We do not help him if we say that away. he shall place his mark within a certain circle and in a particular way, and if it is not placed within the disc it shall not be counted. The English law requires a simple mark, cur law requires a cross, and in that way we have already a greater restriction than prevails in England. have adopted a special ballot, not for the purpose of restricting the voter, but for the purpose of aiding him so that his vote may be counted. If any hon, member thinks the law has been improperly interpreted, that would be a good reason for amending the section so as to make it perfectly clear. While I agree that it is important to amend the section, I do not agree with the view that because we have adopted this form of ballot every mark must be made within the disc. In my opinion, it would be a mistake to impose such a restriction, and it would lead to many ballots being thrown out which in other respects should be counted. It is important to interpret the law in such a manner as to count every vote if possible in accordance with the intention of the voter. No doubt ballots could be marked so as to show the intention of the voter, such as by marking in certain positions on the disc or outside, or by using a coloured pencil, or in other ways; but to determine that if the mark is between the lines the vote shall not be counted and that such a vote has been improperly or corruptly made, is going too far.

Mr. CURRAN. It is very important we should take the law as it is and amend it so as to determine exactly what it means, because other judges may differ from the judgment rendered by Judge Andrews. They may take it for granted that this clause means or was intended to mean this clause means of was made that the mark should be placed within the disc, because the only object particular had accepting this in we form of ballot and paying for it was that the mark should be put there. It would never do to have a certain number of members of Parliament elected on judgments that were contradictory, to have members elected although the cross on certain ballots happened to be without the bull's eye and other candidates defeated by having votes thrown out although marked in the same While it is manner. very important deprive any should not man we should indicate vote. We clearly his what intention is. I agree a voter can mark his ballot inside the disc so as to identify his vote; still it is absolutely necessary to come to a conclusion as to what we do mean and to make our intention clear, so that the judges in deciding election cases may agree in their judgments. That is the first thing to be done, and I think the hon. gentleman's amendment is in the right direction. The people will come to understand that they have to mark the ballots within the disc, and when that is known to be the case there will be very few spoiled ballots.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Since we have gone so far in adopting the ballot we are not going much further by adopting the proposition of the hon. member for Queen's; but I agree with the hon, member that any one who wishes to give evidence as to the particular way in which he votes can do so by marking it at a certain place within the disc or in other ways, which I need not enumerate.

Mr. CASEY. This is purely a matter of opinion, and I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). It seems to me that the proposal would certainly limit the chance of error on the part of the man who is marking the ballot, and the chance also of indications being given which were intended for the scrutineers. It might be that such indications could be made by placing the mark somewhere else than in the bull's-eye; the mere fact that it was not marked in the bull's-eye might have been previously agreed upon. Different positions around the name of the candidate might be used as a means of indicating the voter, by it being below or above, and so on. If this ballot is to be retained, as to the usefulness of which I confess I have grave doubts, the logical conclusion is to make the bull's-eye the only place for marking the ballot. I cannot agree that there would be any great danger of the voter losing his vote owing to a mistake in placing his mark in some position where he should not place it. The bull's-eye is so evident, apart from the instructions placed on the door of each polling place, that I can hardly imagine a man placing his mark elsewhere, except intentionally, and if he places it elsewhere through stupidity, he is scarcely qualified to exercise the franchise. I, therefore, support the proposition of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) to make the disc the only place for the mark.

Mr. McCARTHY. It does not appear to me that the clause as drawn would carry out the intention of the hon. mover. I do not exactly see the distinction between the clause as it is in the statute and the clause as proposed. There is a direction in either case as to where the cross is to be placed, and the construction the judges have placed upon it is that in one case it is declaratory and the hon. gentleman wants to make it mandatory. If so, the clause should not stop there, but there should be some words added that unless the ballot was placed within the white space it would not be counted.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In one sense it is declaratory, though in another sense it is mandatory. The language in regard to placing the mark within the circular space reads in the statute: "Opposite to, or within the division." This language means that the voter must put his mark within the space.

Mr. McCARTHY. So the proposed amend- resolved itself into committee. Mr. Montague.

ment makes it more mandatory than the present section. The statute is rather indefinite and misleading, and the language should be made clear and positive. But the judges in counting these ballots would, no doubt, follow the English decision as in the case of Sarsons. That is clearly intention of the voter to vote for that particular man and ought to be counted. If we are desirous of limiting the place on the ballot we ought to say so distinctly and clearly. For my part I do not think it makes much difference. I think the decisions that we have been following for many years are purely arbitrary. I do not think the public understand them in the least and I do not think many lawyers understand them. I think they are devoid of sense. Nothing could more clearly indicate an arrangement, than a man making two crosses; and yet they hold that two crosses being made do not vitiate a vote. In view of the decisions, without our going a good deal further, I do not think we will gain anything. For my part I think we better leave it "space," adopting the wise change proposed by my hon. friend saying it shall be marked in the circular space. I do not think it would be wise to go further and say that a man shall be disfranchised if he makes it elsewhere.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have seen in my experience, scores of cases in which the cross was made at the top of the name, the voter thinking that was the most certain way he could adopt to indicate the party for whom he intended to vote. There are many old people who are voters, who do not attend the public meetings, who know nothing about the form of a ballot, who do not hear a discussion on a public topic during the canvass. They belong to one party or the other. They are decided in their opinions and when the election day comes, they make their mark on the name of their candidate. They would do so even if the mark was made mandatory in the particular disc. these parties would be disfranchised, if they did not happen to mark their ballot in a particular place.

Mr. CASEY. The argument of my hon. friend is very strong against this form of ballot paper; and as strong in favour of leaving the ballot paper in the old-fashioned way. The arguments are against this form of ballot, and not against the provision proposed.

Bill reported, as amended, and read the third time and passed.

ROAD AND ROAD ALLOWANCES, MANITOBA.

Bill (No. 114) to amend the Act respecting roads and road allowances in Manitoba (Mr. Daly) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. MULOCK. What is the change here?

Mr. DALY. We want to vest these in the province irrespective of any proof required by section 2; and to bring the old section No. 1 down to the present time.

Mr. McCARTHY. Should not the section read: "Shall be vested in the Crown in right of the province?"

Mr. DALY. We are simply following the words used in the Revised Statutes. but I have no objection to the amendment suggested.

On section 3,

Mr. CHARLTON. Are municipal councils in Manitoba given no authority to close up roads? Must this matter be submitted to the Governor in Council?

Mr. DALY. The municipal councils have all the authority necessary. The change we make is this: Under the provincial law, any municipality that desires to close up a road and open another must, in the first place, appoint a surveyor to have a survey and plan made of the proposed change. Then a by-law is passed providing that the road shall be changed in accordance with A copy of the by-law and the the plan. plan is sent to the provincial secretary, and if the provincial government approve of the proposed change of road, an order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council is passed to that effect. The present law requires, in addition, that the Lieutenant-Governor shall send the by-law and the plan down to Ottawa, and obtain the assent of the Governor General in Council. We are doing away with that, so far as the organized municipalities are concerned. With reference to the unorganized parts of the province, the law will stand as it is.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why not leave the unorganized districts to be also dealt with by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council? Surely that might be trusted to the provincial government.

Mr. DALY. The provincial government does not desire us to do anything further than we are doing. The unorganized districts are at the extreme northern limit of the province, and until they are organized into municipalities, it is not likely that any occasion will ever arise for road allowances to be closed up; and the Government desires to retain in its hand the authority it has at present in reference to road allowances in unorganized districts.

Mr. CHARLTON. It seems to me that it is unnecessary to load on the department here any matters pertaining to roads in the vince, both as to organized municipalities and unorganized localities, as the local authorities are better judges of the circumstances and are more competent to deal with such matters than the authorities of the department here can be.

Mr. DALY. In view of the fact that the possibility of any roads being closed or opened in any unorganized locality is so remote, the provincial government and the Government here prefer that the law should remain as it is at present.

Bill reported, as amended, and read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES REPRE-SENTATION ACT.

Bill (No. 121) further to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act (Mr. Daly) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. LAURIER. This is the same qualification as for the local legislature, is it not?

Mr. DALY. Exactly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose we may congratulate the Government, then, upon so far adopting the principle of local representation. When we had the present franchise law under consideration, the doctrine of uniformity was preached to us as a sacred doctrine. We were told that we were to be one people, and that to be properly united we must have the same qualifications for elections in every constituency throughout the Dominion. Now the hon. gentleman finds it convenient to adopt in the Northwest Territories the qualifications fixed by the local legislature.

Mr. DALY. Not at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Fixed by the Dominion for electors in the local elections. And the hon, gentleman has so far departed from the rule formerly laid down. He is establishing in the North-west Territories a qualification for election to this House different from that established for the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec. So the sacred doctrine of uniformity is not adhered to. We pointed out to the Government at the time that the measure was under discussion, that there were such differences in the circumstances of the people of different provinces, that what was found a convenient qualification for the election of members for the local legislature would also be found a convenient province of Manitoba. Jurisdiction over one for the election of members of the these matters should be vested in the pro- House of Commons. The hon. gentleman has adopted that view, and has made a qualification different from that which exists in the other provinces.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman is a little late in his congratulations, for he has overlooked the fact that the franchise in local elections in the North-west Territories was given by this House; so that we are simply gave for elections to the local assembly. The principle underlying the contention of gentlemen on this side is that we claim the right to fix the franchise for Dominion elections. And in this case we are not departing from that rule. If you will allow us to fix the franchise in the other provinces, we shall be glad to do so. We are by no means departing from the principle for which we have contended.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The hon, gentleman's predecessors in office and his late leader preached the doctrine that the qualification for election of members of the House of Commons should be the same in every province in the Dominion. Now, is the qualification which the hon, gentleman proposes to fix the same as that established in Ontario or New Brunswick or Nova Scotia?

Mr. DALY. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows that it is not. And therefore the rule laid down as the justification for the interference of this Parliament, the necessity for a uniform qualification, is departed from. The hon, gentleman is adopting for the North-west the principle of manhood and residential suffrage. It does not matter that it has been made a qualification for election to the local legislature, it is not the less a departure from the rule of uniformity.

Mr. DALY. The object is not only to make the qualification the same as in elections for the local legislature, but to remove the disabilities that existed in connection with the old franchise. Citizens to be qualified had to become householders and to reside twelve We provide months in the constituency. that they are qualified to vote after they have resided twelve months in the Territories and three months in the electoral district. The hon, gentleman has referred to the opinions expressed by the late leader of the Government last session. I understood that our late leader said he would adopt the franchise as it existed in each of the provinces. We are following on those

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not speaking of what the leader said last session, but of what was said by Sir John Macdonald in 1885 in connection with the Franchise Act.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

On section 2.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see that the Government in this has adopted a system which is practically the system of registration in use in the United States. This is so widely at variance with the system adopted for the other provinces, that I desire to call attention to it. Not that I condemn the faciproviding for the elections to this House littles provided for placing voters on the list the exact qualifications that this Parliament at the latest possible moment; but I desire to draw the contrast between this system and the system under the Dominion franchise law, under which cases have often been known of citizens fully qualified and twenty-four years of age, not allowed to vote because there had been no revision of the list for three years after they became of age. Under this system a man can make application to have his name put on the list up to two days before polling day. Under the system in force in the other provinces, no name can be put upon the list after the final revision. We had a revision of the lists last winter, and we have just made provision, so far as this House is coucerned, that no revision shall be held this year. We may have an election when the lists are a year old probably, and a citizen who comes of age between the time of the last revision and the holding of the elections will have no vote. In all the American states there is a system of registration. The details differ in different states, but as a rule, the last registration is held within one week of polling day. The registration is managed by the municipal authorities of the cities, towns and townships. The adoption of this principle in the North-west Territories is an indication of progress. But it is scarcely to be defended that much needed reform should be applied to that small population and denied to the millions of inhabitants of the older provinces of this Dominion. I think no commentary upon the unwise and improper policy of the Government could be stronger than this practical admission on the part of the Government itself that the principle applying to the elective franchise and the placing of names upon the voters' lists in the old provinces is one that is to be repudiated in the North-west Territories in favour of a system more in accordance with the rights of citizens to have their names added to the voters' lists at the latest possible day. I know of cases in 1891 where individuals almost twenty-four years of age were unable to vote, their names not being on the list, because the last revision had taken place before they came of age. This is one among many illustrations of the absurdity of the Dominion election law.

> Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman forgets that this has been the law for a great many years, and we are not applying any new principles at all. The method of making up the voters' lists has obtained since 1886, when they were given representation. Enumerators were appointed, and these enumerators make up the lists, and all we do here is to make an alteration, which should have been made last session, in the form which is provided for in the Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do you think it is wise, the franchise having been made as broad as possible, to give greater facilities for putting parties on the lists than there are in other parts of Canada? Are there any special reasons that apply to the Northwest that do not apply elsewhere?

Mr. DALY. Yes; the sparseness of settlement, for one.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Supposing a man has been twelve months in the district, and has not got his name on, either by his own negligence or otherwise; in the other provinces he cannot vote, then why should he have a right to vote in the North-west Territories?

Mr. DALY. They have not the voters' lists there in the same sense that they have in Ontario.

Mr. CHARLTON. What are the duties of the enumerator?

Mr. DALY. The enumerator has to make the list of voters in the district for which he is appointed.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there an appeal from the enumerator?

Mr. DALY. Yes; to the district judge.

Mr. MULOCK. In this particular case, what good will an appeal do unless you keep this appeal separate from the others?

Mr. DALY. What I mean is that an appeal lies in the event of any person on the list having been omitted. By the provision we make here, if any person finds his name is not on the list, he simply applies to the enumerator. The enumerator is not a judicial officer. But there is also an appeal to a judicial officer, as in the older provinces.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) An appeal would be no good as regards any names put on in this section.

Mr. MULOCK. Can you not put in a clause providing that in the case of men who have their names put on under this clause, the appeals shall be kept separate? Under our present Act we have a provision that if, pending the final revision of the voters' lists, an election takes place, all votes that are subject to appeal are put in a separate envelope, which is opened, and the ballots are examined in case of appeal. Now, you must have something like that here, or else you open the door to the enumerators stuffing the lists.

Mr. DALY. It has never been thought necessary.

Mr. MULOCK. It is part of our general system. This clause stands alone, and I do not think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. DALY. We are simply, by this legislation, changing a form that existed amongst the schedules to the Act.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Under this section 4 that we have passed, women would have the right to register: "Every person shall be qualified to vote who has resided in the North-west Territories for at least six months." Under that clause, women can register as well as men.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman is right. It should be every male person, and that must be changed.

Mr. CHARLTON. The enumerator in this case is an appointee of the Government, one of his functions is to put voters on the voters' list, and I think it is necessary to have some check upon the exercise of that authority. I think this clause had better stand until this very important point can be considered further. Suppose the enumerator stuffs the list of voters, and puts on persons who are not qualified, the result of the election may be varied materially by the action of that enumerator.

Mr. DALY. If the hon, gentleman wants it to stand, I have no objection. But there is nothing new about it, it has been the law for years.

Committee rose and reported progress.

THE RAILWAY BELT, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. DALY moved second reading of Bill (No. 141) for the settlement of certain questions between the Governments of Canada and British Columbia, relating to lands in the railway belt, British Columbia. He said: At the time British Columbia entered confederation the Dominion Government had undertaken the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway and had obtained from the British Columbia Government a promise to grant land for a distance of 20 miles on each side of the line of railway. The object of this Bill is to enable the Government to out an arrangement with British Columbia for delimiting the lands to the limit of 20 miles on each side of the road. Negotiations have been in progress for a number of years and they have almost been consummated, but the authority of the Dominion Parliament is required to make the final arrangement. An Act was passed by the British Columbia legislature during its last session permitting the government of the province to enter into negotiations with the Dominion Government in order to fix the boundary. Two modes of making the boundary have been suggested. One, is to take the centre of the line of railway and follow the sinuosities of the road; the other is—and this is the more feasible plan and it is the one more agreeable to both parties now—that we should take the nearest township boundary within 20 miles of the line as the boundary in question. By the latter plan we make sometimes and lose sometimes, but it seems to be the only feasible arrangement that can be carried out. All the land grant along the line of railway from the western boundary of the Northwest Territories through to the coast has been surveyed. We are in a position now to make the boundaries upon that plan.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the territory all been surveyed?

Mr. DALY. It has all been surveyed: it has not been laid out in townships, but the 20-mile line has been surveyed. clause of the Bill it is provided that when this arrangement is concluded the British Columbia Government will provide for the registration of the patents. Considerable trouble has arisen as to the registration of patents issued by this Government for lands within the 20-mile belt. Hon. gentlemen will remember that at about the time of the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway several patents had been issued by the British Columbia Government to certain persons for land along the line of the railway, and they registered those patents in the provincial office. Hon, members will remember the suit of the Queen vs. Farwell. This action was brought to set aside patents for certain lands at or near Revelstoke. The decision of the Exchequer Court, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court, was that the patents were improperly issued by the British Columbia Government as regards conveying land from the Crown to Farwell.

Mr. LAURIER. What was the reason of the decision?

Mr. DALY. It was that the Canadian Pacific Railway had been located before the patent had been issued, and in view of that fact the British Columbia Government had no right to issue the patent. The court having so decided, an arrangement has been come to between Br sh Columbia and the Dominion Government that Mr. Farwell shall convey to this Government the interest in lands given to him by the local government and that in turn we will convey such interests back to Mr. Farwell for the same consideration, $1 per acre, which the local government charged him. By the Act passed last session, which came into force by proclamation, the provincial government undertook to provide for all patents we issued for lands within the railway belt.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. In the case of Mr. Farment and this Government to delin well, which has been cited by the Minister, the boundaries of the twenty miles.

may I ask who claimed possession against Mr. Farwell?

Mr. DALY. The Dominion Government.

Mr. LAURIER. Is there not a possibility that this Act will interfere with vested rights? At the present time the land twenty miles on each side of the railway belongs to Canada.

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Then patents have been issued under that law. Now you make an agreement between the Government of British Columbia and the Government of Canada to change the conditions.

Mr. DALY. They have to be settled by law.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon, gentleman said a moment ago they did not know how to proceed. He said there are two ways in which it could be done. He could start a line from the centre of the railway and extend it on each side. Suppose there were twenty miles of fencing, he could follow that, but the hon, gentleman does not propose to do so, although that is the law, as I understand it.

Mr. DALY. That is not the law. That is a suggestion. There is no law at the present time.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes. The law is that you have twenty miles on each side of the railway.

Mr. DALY. We want to delimitate that.

Mr. LAURIER. You are changing the law. I do not say it is wrong, but what I am afraid of is that a man who has got his patent from the Dominion Government may find himself denied of his property as a result of this agreement, and he may find that the patent from the Government of Canada conveyed lands which, by this agreement belongs to British Columbia.

Mr. MARA. There have been no disputes as to the boundary. The only disputes that have arisen are in cases where the provincial government issued patents that the Dominion Government would not recognize, and the provincial government, on the other hand, issued Crown grants that were not recognized by the Dominion Government. There have been no disputes as to the boundaries of the delimitations.

Mr. DALY. Where there has been any controversy at all, it is in connection with the lands that immediately adjoin the railway, and the question of boundary cannot affect them in the slightest. There was a desire on the part of some enterprising people to get hold of town sites. Our action to-day is to permit of an agreement being arrived at between the British Columbia Government and this Government to delimitate the boundaries of the twenty miles. According to the original agreement between British Columbia and Canada they simply gave twenty miles on each side of the railway. I think we have arrived at a basis of agreement.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon, gentleman referred a moment ago to the case of a Mr. Farwell who had obtained a concession of land at Revelstoke from the British Columbia Government. Revelstoke is certainly within the twenty miles, and does the Government claim that land from him?

Yes. The contention was that the line of railway had not been located at the time, and that, consequently, the twenty miles on each side had not been vested in Canada, and the contention of Canada was that when the line was located ipso facto, Canada was entitled to twenty miles on each side.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that, but this Bill does not affect that at all.

It does. In the Farwell case Mr. DALY. they refused to register our patents, and that is the reason we are asking for this legislation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The claim of the British Columbia Government to the minerals has been decided in their favour. there any modus vivendi agreed upon between the Dominion Government and the provincial government as to that?

Mr. DALY. We have a tentative arrangement by which if they grant licenses to prospect on the lands, we give a license to go on the land.

Bill reported, as amended, and read the third time and passed.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE COPYRIGHT ACT.

Bill (No. 103) to amend the Copyright Act (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The amendment in the Bill is simply to provide for a copy being deposited in the British Museum, in compliance with the desire of the Imperial authorities.

On section 2.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. have had submitted to me two or three formal amendments to the Act, chap. 29 of the statutes of 1889. They are mere matters of form, but they supply what apparently has been an obvious omission in the drafting of the Act; they involve no substantial change. The law provides for the case where no copyright is taken out, and also for the case of importation from foreign countries; but certain contingencies have been overlooked, and the officers of my department have pointed out that this is an opportune time to correct these omissions. The hon, member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), who has taken considerable interest in this subject, has been good enough to look over these amendments, and has intimated to me that he thinks they should be made. Therefore, I beg to move that the following clauses be added to the Bill:-

3. Subsection 1 of section 3 of the said Act is hereby amended by substituting therefor the following:-" If any person, entitled to copyright under the said Act, as hereby amended, neglects or fails to take advantage of its provisions, or, if having obtained copyright thereunder, at any time, after the first publication in Canada of the work for which copyright has been so obtained, fails to publish in Canada the work for which copyright might have been, or has been, so obtained as aforesaid, in sufficient numbers, printed in Canada and in such manner as to meet the demand in Canada for such work, any person or persons domiciled in Canada may obtain from the Minister of Agriculture a license or licenses to print and publish or to reproduce such work in Canada, but no license shall convey exclusive right to print and publish or produce any work.

Section 5 of the said Act is hereby amended by adding after the word "force," in the ninth line thereof, the words: "or would have been in force had copyright for the work been obtained in Canada under the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of the Act as hereby amended."

And by adding the following proviso to the said section 5:—" Provided, however, that as to any work for which copyright shall have been obtained in Canada, the Governor in Council may, upon its being established to his satisfaction that the holder of such copyright is prepared and bona fide intends during the remaining period of his term of copyright to publish such work in Canada in sufficient numbers printed in Canada in such manner as to supply the demand for such work in Canada, revoke all licenses for the printing and publication of such work then in force, but such revocation shall not render unlawful the subsequent sale and disposal in Canada of all or any of the copies of such work then printed under the authority of the license so revoked."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The amendments are the principal parts of the Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No. they simply carry out the objects of these clauses, which are insufficient without them.

CRIMINAL CODE, 1892.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 51) further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 133,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before you put that, I would ask the permission of the committee to let that section stand. That, I may say, is a section from a introduced by the hon, member South Ontario (Mr. Edgar) with regard to contributions to elections by subsidized contractors, and it involves an important question. The hon, gentleman has taken considerable interest in it. I do not see him in his seat at present. There is considerable difference of opinion upon the question, and I do not propose to ask the House to deal with it now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In what respect is there difference of opinion?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In various respects—whether the principle of the clause should be adopted at all, and if so, whether we have gone too far or not far enough.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that is part of the law now.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Part of it is; the hon, gentleman is quite right. I ventured to say, when the Bill was under consideration in the committee, that we had gone to a great length in the direction of the hon, gentleman's Bill. The question then which suggested itself was whether we had gone far enough or should carry this to the conclusion the hon, gentleman desired. No doubt there will be considerable discussion and I prefer to take what I really believe to be the non-contentious portions and through with them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. gentleman does not intend to repeal the law?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No. Sir; this is an additional section. I move that the clause be allowed to stand.

Motion agreed to.

Section 173A.—By adding the following section at the end of Part XII., respecting offences against religion:

"173A. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and costs for the first offence, and not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs for each subsequent offence and in default of payment to one month's imprisonment, who-

"(a.) Being the proprietor, publisher or manager of any newspaper, publishes or issues, or prepares for publication or issue, any copy or number of such newspaper for sale on Sunday, or with the intent that such copy or number shall be sold on Sunday; or

"(b.) Sells or employs or procures any person to sell any newspaper on Sunday:

"Provided, that the publishing or issuing, or preparing for publication or issue of any copy or number of a religious newspaper, for distribution on Sunday, or with the intent that it shall be distributed on Sunday, shall not be an offence under this section.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

"2. The word 'newspaper' in this section has the same meaning as it has, under paragraph (p-1) of section 3, in the sections relating to detamatory libel.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is the much talked of Sunday legislation. I have already explained my own position with regard to that. Perhaps, as Minister of Justice, it would be well to state under what circumstances I ventured to attach this clause to the Criminal Code Bill. The hon. gentleman who is in charge of a similar measure on the Order paper, will recollect that when the House had reached committee stage on the principle of Sunday legislation, it was agreed that I should take that Bill as adopted in committee, put it in such shape as I thought proper, as an amendment to the Criminal Code, and not as a separate and substantive law, that then that should be considered again by the special committee afterwards appointed by the House to look into all these amendments and that, when that clause carefully. came up, the House would understand it was not exactly in the same position as it was in when the section left the House. stated then frankly, as I do now, that whilst strongly sympathetic with the motives which actuate those who favour that legislation, I infinitely prefer that the local legislature should deal with that subject, and that we should not attempt to incorporate this into the criminal laws of this country. I am one of those who believe that we should hesitate and carefully consider before we drag subjects which are properly within the scope of the local legislation, into this Parliament simply by making them crimes. For instance, this House is well aware that in that procedure there is involved this difficulty, that a question which was properly within our jurisdiction and which would be dealt with by us, not as a crime, but on a different principle altogether, becomes a crime here simply because we cannot deal with it on any other ground. I think that is a very dangerous system of legislation, and my views have been strengthened by the opinions of many hon, gentlemen on both sides of the House, particularly those hon, gentlemen who are acquainted with the importance of criminal legislation and also with the administration of the criminal laws. Holding those views, I was careful, when I said that the Government to that extent would take the clause under its consideration, to say that no one was and that bound action, to own freedom my \mathbf{of} And I propose in the committee to-night. to give my vote against this clause which stands here as section 173. I recognize that the House last year adopted the principle of that section. This House may be said to have adopted it, though only by carrying a second reading, and so on. But we know the Bill disappeared from the Order paper and was restored. However, I need not take up time by calling attention—as that is all I wish to do-to the fact that practically when we considered this last we agreed that when the clause reappeared, it would reappear for full and fair consideration by the House. The hon. gentleman who promotes the Bill may think that ir this form his measure in some respects, has been mutilated. The principle, however, is there. It is only fair for me to sayand I think I can say this with the authority of the Government-that according to that understanding, should this House and should Parliament adopt that legislation, should it be passed into law without any reference of the clause of the hon. gentleman's Bill, the Government would undertake, under the Revised Statutes where they have ample power, to make a regulation concerning the closing of the canals on Sunday. But that depends upon the action that Parliament takes. I have had a friendly understanding, I think, with the hon, gentleman that, so far as the question of canals is concerned, we could not incorporate that in the Criminal Code. But if this Parliament sees fit to adopt legislation contrary to the views I have expressed, the Government would feel bound to follow the legislation in that line, and, by regulations under Order in Council, provide what the hon, gentleman desires to provide, that is the closing of the traffic on the canals.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Have you defined "newspaper"?

HIBBERT TUPPER. Sir CHARLES defined " newspaper." have have left the definition the same as that in the general definition clauses of the Act. The word "newspaper" has the same meaning as under paragraph P-1 of section 3, under the sections relating to defamatory libel.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That only covers the terms "newspaper."

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Sir Yes; we have not grappled with the word " religious."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It seems to me that the proviso is calculated to defeat the section. It is provided here that it shall be a penal offence to issue or prepare for issue any newspaper for sale, and a substantive offence to sell. Then you go on with the proviso that it shall be lawful, notwithstanding your prohibition, to publish, issue and distribute a religious newspaper. Well, everybody knows that if this passes in the present form, any person who wishes to distribute a newspaper will put religious matter on one page and call it a religious newspaper. Besides, what does "distribution" mean? Does it mean sale or gratuition. tous distribution? If you mean gratuitous distribution you should say so. The Bill of the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. of the determination arrived at by this Charlton) contained a proviso that the gratuitous distribution of newspapers under certain circumstances is not a violation of the Act. But you leave that out.

HIBBERT TUPPER. CHARLES Perhaps I may be pardoned if I refer to what took place in the special committee. I am satisfied that this clause would not have appeared if the committee had not felt that the House desired that it should be brought back for its consideration. There were amendments made there, and perhaps, not altogether for the best purpose. Nevertheless, the clause as it stands is sent back with that feeling on the committee's part that the House expected to have this clause back, even it were to be killed in the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. The statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice with regard to the understanding between himself and the promoter of the Bill, pursuant to which understanding this first section of the Bill has been incorporated in the Criminal Code, is correct. The understanding was that the first section should be incorporated in this Bill and should be submitted to the House. But the Minister of Justice refrains from giving any promise that he would support it and says in fact that he merely granted its being inserted in the Criminal Code as a courtesy and for the purpose of securing its consideration in connection with the amendments of the Criminal Code. I am unable to refrain from expressing regret that the Minister of Justice has seen fit to inform the House that he is opposed to the principle of this provision, and while permitting it to appear with the Criminal Code, will throw his influence, as Minister of Justice, against it.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Individually only-I speak for myself, and not for the Government.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am sorry to contrast the position taken by my hon, friend in this matter with the position taken by his predecessor, the late Sir John Thompson, who gave this provision his hearty assent and support. The criticism made by the Minister of Justice, with regard to the propriety of leaving this matter to be dealt with by the local government, is one that was fully considered by the special committee to which this Bill was originally referred. The Bill was introduced in this House with provisions covering nearly all the grounds of infraction of the Sabbath. That Bill contained some thirteen or foursections dealing with infractions teen The ground taken by of Sunday rest. that committee was that everything contained in the Bill coming under provincial jurisdiction should be eliminated; and some ten of the fourteen sections contained in the Bill were dropped in pursuance special committee. The committee dealing with the question of Sunday newspapers, spent a good deal of time upon it; the matter was fully discussed. The ground was taken in that committee that been taken by the Minister Justice to-night, that this was a matter that pertained properly to provincial legisla-Those opposed to this view of the case held that the regulation of the issuing of newspapers was actually a matter of Dominion concern, and properly a matter coming within Dominion control. It was pointed out that the Dominion Government had jurisdiction in the matter of copyright, that it had jurisdiction in the matter of prohibiting the importation of certain classes of literature, that it had power to define what classes of literature should be prohibited, that it had power to regulate the transmission of literature within the country, that it controlled the mails of the country, that, in fact, it exercised general supervision in all matters relating to the distri-bution of literature; and it was held that this clause would come more properly within the province of the Dominion Government than within the jurisdiction of the provinces. I hold that position was a correct one, and the House has, upon several occasions, held that that position was a correct one. My hon. friend's predecessor in office held that that position was a correct one, and the public sentiment of the country unmistakably asks from this House that this provision shall be made the law of Canada. The Bill, as my hon. friend says, has received the assent of this House. This feature of the Bill received the assent of the House last session, and it received the support of the Minister of Justice. has received the assent of the House this session, and, having received the assent of the House, it was then taken from the Committee of the Whole, where it has received the sanction of that committee, and was placed in my hon. friend's Bill. Now, my hon, friend presents the Bill to the House, and although this section has received the sanction of the House on more than one occasion, although the committee has placed it in this Bill that it might be made a part of the Criminal Code, where it properly belongs, yet the hon. gentleman now informs us that he will throw his influence against the measure. I am sorry to hear it. However, that was a privilege that he expressly reserved to himself when the section was placed in this Bill, where we find it to-night. I am sorry, moreover, to find that this section does not appear here in the form that it passed this House. special committee have taken liberties with the Bill. I do not know whether the provision made with regard to the distribution of religious newspapers, will vitiate, and render nugatory and worthless, the provision of the Bill; I am afraid it will have a tendency to do that. I see that it meets a tendency to do that. I see that it meets gentleman as a lawyer, if he is prepared with the approval of a gentleman who is a to vote for the clause as it is now, without publisher of a Sunday newspaper, as well as of other members of this House, and that approval leads me to suspect that the character of the provision is one favourable to the actual carrying out of the intention of this Bill. However, we will consider that when we come to the consideration of the details of the measure.

Mr. TISDALE. I see that the clause I object to principally is still there, that rendering newsboys liable to punishment for selling newspapers on Sunday. I protested against it before, and I protest against it again; because I think it is not consistent with the feeling of the majority of this House that we should render a newsboy liable to a month's imprisonment if he sells a paper on Sunday, when there is no provincial law against it. I think this legislation should all be relegated to the provinces. I do not propose to enter into any argument about it, because I think the House is seized with the nature and extent of that objection. In the first place, I object entirely to the principle of our taking from the provinces matters of this sort, and forcing this legislation upon them if they have a different view. I know they have jurisdiction in my own province, and there is a very full and extensive measure in regard to Sabbath observance upon the provincial statute-book. I think it is quite as strong as the majority of the people of Ontario believe in otherwise the provincial legislature would have taken cognizance of it. I think a good deal of the agitation that my hon. friend has stirred up in Ontario has been based upon a misunderstanding of this fact. They think that this is legislation over which the province has not control, and I think that the petitions that have been sent here in favour of this legislation, have been procured under that mistaken view.

Mr. MASSON. I'do not think it is at all necessary to discuss the principle of this clause. We have already spent a good deal of time discussing it in the House and in committee, when the original Bill was be-fore us. I will only say a few words upon the measure in its present form. Objection has been taken that the proviso will interfere with the working of the Bill. That I admit, and I have no doubt that it was the intention of those who pared the proviso down to its present shape, that it should have that effect. However, I would be disposed to accept it in its present form, proviso and all; and if, in the operation of the Act, it is found that the proviso interferes with the practical working out of the clause, then at some future time an amendment will perhaps be better received by the House than it would be a definition of what a religious newspaper all on the Sabbath day, but shall be given is.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I put it to the hon.

Mr. MASSON. I should prefer to have the definition that was placed in the Bill in committee, only allowing the distribution at public meetings, at religious meetings, and in churches and Sunday schools.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The gratuitous distribution, that is left out here.

Mr. MASSON. I would prefer seeing it in that way. But I do not propose asking for that amendment now. I would prefer taking it in its present form, trusting to experience in the operation of the measure to enlighten the House and the country on its With respect to the punishment of newsboys, the hon, gentleman who has taken that objection must recollect that that was the only portion of the Bill that passed the House a year ago. That clause was sanctioned by this House one year ago, and it certainly is no objection to say that it provides for the punishment of newsboys who sell papers on the streets. That is one of the principal offences aimed at, the hawking and selling of these papers on the streets and other public places upon the Lord's day. That is one of the principal grievances that it is sought by this Act to In doing so, we have not conput down. fined it to the newsboy, but we extend the provision to the party who employs the newsboy to sell. I trust that after the long discussion we have had upon this clause, and after it has received the repeated sanction of the House and of the committee, it will again be favourably received.

Mr. FLINT. I think the objection taken by my hon, friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) is one that should be seriously considered by this committee. We have here a proviso that pro tanto knocks out that which is the strength of the offence, that is, the selling or trafficking in newspapers on the Sabbath day. I think that before we exclude from the penalty of that offence, we should make that exclusion so clear and definite that there can be no doubt as to what class of papers are excluded. a religious paper here may mean anything or nothing at all. I know papers that are called religious, and which, to ninety-nine one-hundredths of the community, would be most offensive, and would even be considered as blasphemous papers, while to the few who take those papers and believe them, they are religious. But I can conceive of the selling upon the streets of the city upon the Lord's day of a paper which, by ninety-nine one-hundredths of the community, would be considered an offence against morals, and yet, under the vague term, "religious," that paper would be pro-tected. I think that unless this committee comes to the conclusion to define the meaning of the term, "religious," and also to in-sist that these papers shall not be sold at Sabbath from a different standpoint entirely away, this proviso should be struck out. I therefore move that the proviso be struck

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The adoption of the whole clause has been moved, and that carries the proviso with it.

Mr. LANGELIER. I agree with the Minister of Justice that this subject should be left entirely to the local legislatures. I will not go at length into the question, but I will simply mention one fact to show the impropriety of this House taking up this subject at all. In the province of Quebec we have a law on Sunday observance, which has been in existence for over sixty years, and there has never been any complaint against it. Now, if this Bill is passed in its present shape, it would punish a newsboy for selling a paper on Sunday in the province of Quebec, but it will not punish a man for selling a horse or an ox in that province. Our law on Sunday observance, I think, is much more sensible than this Bill; it forbids the selling goods, or merchandise, or cattle, on Sunday, while this Bill punishes a poor fellow who sells a newspaper for a cent, and sends him to jail for a month. Under this Bill, he may sell a horse, or he may sell $1,000 worth of goods without being punished, but he cannot sell a newspaper. He may even sell whisky on Sunday, as my hon. friend We have always says, under this Bill. in the province of Quebec strictly pro-hibited the sale of liquor on Sunday. Moreover, the sale of goods and merchandise is strictly forbidden. In this Bill we are going to punish as a crime the selling of a newspaper for one or two cents, and we are not going to treat as crime the sale of a horse or cattle or a parcel of goods for any amount. This shows the absurdity of the Bill. I shall vote for the amendment to strike out this clause.

Mr. HAZEN. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee at any length, but I rise for the purpose of saying that I entirely fail to see what good purpose will be accomplished by passing this provision of the Bill. I entirely agree with the position taken by the hon. member for South Norfolk, who has pointed out on several occasions when this subject has been up for consideration, that this is a matter which should be fairly met by the legislatures of the different provinces of the Dominion, and that it is not wise legislation for this Federal Parliament to pass an Act regarding Sunday observance over the country at large, for the reason that the different provinces which form the confederacy are made up of different elements. In different provinces one religion largely predominates and in another another religion; the people of

from the people of another province, and it is not wise legislation for this Parliament to attempt to pass a law regarding these matters which shall apply to all the provinces of the Dominion alike. I do not think it is necessary for another reason, and that is that the different provinces of Canada have jurisdiction in matters pertaining to the Sabbath day and the observance of the Sabbath day. They have on the statute-book laws regarding Sabbath observance, and if in any one province there is a feeling generally prevailing among the people that the Sabbath day is not properly observed and that a class of work is being done on that day which should not be performed, then in that province itself the legislature will have such pressure brought to bear on it that laws will be passed that will, though I think those at present in existence are sufficient for the purpose, ensure in any province the proper and right observance of the Sabbath day. In making these observations I do not wish to be misunderstcod. I do not think there is a single member who desires to see license, or who wishes to see anything but the proper observance of the Sabbath day, but at the same time I think it is a matter that should be left absolutely to the people of the differprovinces themselves to determine. Coming to the Bill under discussion, apart altogether from the principle governing the question, I fail to see how the passing of this particular Bill can secure the object which those hon, gentlemen have in view who honestly desire to have a law unfairly enforced throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. In the first place, subsection A provides:

Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and costs for the first offence, and not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs for each subsequent offence, and in default of payment to one month's imprisonment, who—one month's imprisonment, who—

(a.) Being the proprietor, publisher or manager of any newspaper, publishes or issues, or prepares for publication or issue, any copy or number of such newspaper for sale on Sunday, or with the intent that such copy or number shall be sold on Sunday.

I respectfully submit for the consideration of this committee that it will be utterly impossible to convict any one under this section. How is it possible under this section to prove intent? Yet in order to convict any one, it will have to be proved that the work on that paper is done and that the paper is published with intent that a copy or a number of copies of the paper shall be sold on Sunday. The very moment any information is laid against any one under that provision and efforts are made to enforce it the prosecution will be met with the necessity of proving intention on the part of the paper for sale on Sunday, and it will be absolutely impossible to do so, and so it will be the easiest matter possible to evade the law under the section as drawn. In the second place, as has been pointed out, under subsection B there is no explanation as to what is a religious newspaper. It seems to me that it is a matter of the utmost difficulty to define what a religious newspaper is. Suppose a newspaper, calling itself a religious newspaper, publishes a sermon of some distinguished preacher, as very many of the newspapers do on Saturday, and the rest of the paper is made up of the ordinary news such as is found in an ordinary newspaper, is that a religious newspaper? Unless there is some clear definition as to what constitutes a religious newspaper it will be most difficult. if complaint is made against such a newspaper, to prove it is not a religious newspaper within the meaning of that paragraph, as the newspaper contains a certain amount of matter which might be fairly These consideracalled religious matter. tions are worthy of the careful attention of this committee, because there is no object to be served, there is no good purpose to be gained by this committee considering and Parliament passing a law that will be in effective, for the effect of such a course is rather to bring into contempt the legislation of this Parliament, and that result is one which every hon, member in this House wishes to avoid.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I should like to ask the Minister of Justice as to the precise meaning of this proviso. It says:

Provided that the publishing or issuing, or preparing for publication or issue of any copy or number of a religious newspaper, for distribution on Sunday, or with the intent that it shall be distributed on Sunday, shall not be an offence under this section.

It is not the distribution or the delivery of the paper as a Sunday paper that is exempted; it is the publishing, issuing or preparing for publication or issue. The type-setting for a religious newspaper on Sunday is exempted, but there is no exemption as regards the publication or issuing of a newspaper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman is bringing out clearly the answer to the hon, member who pointed out that we had dropped the word "gratuitous." From the argument of the hon, member for Bothwell the hon, gentleman will see that this proviso only applies to the case of religious papers gratuitously distributed. There is no sale of religious newspapers allowed on Sunday.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The printing and publishing will be allowed on Sunday.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, of Sunday religious papers; but not for sale. Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is a very extraordinary proposition.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am not going to defend that clause; I am not responsible for it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). So a man may go on and set up type and print the newspaper without creating an offence.

Mr. HAZEN. If the printing and publishing of a religious newspaper is allowed on the Sabbath, then, so far as my province is concerned, this House in adopting this provision will be taking a step which those in favour of Sabbath observance will not thank Parliament for adopting, because under our local laws in force every sort of servile labour is prohibited on the Sabbath day. Under that statute there is every now and tl.en some prosecution against servile labour on Sunday being carried on. So if this proposition were passed, and it was construed according to the construction placed upon it by the hon, member for Bothwell, and the Minister of Justice did not differ from him entirely, then printing and publishing would be allowed on the Sabbath day. If that is done it is a blow aimed at one of the principles of this Bill, because I understood the hon. mover who has taken so much interest from session to session in pressing action in the direction of the Pill, to say that one of the great objects to be gained by a Sabbath observance Bill was that every labouring man and mechanic would have secured to him by law the right to enjoy repose and quiet on the Sabbath day. What is the sense in this committee passing a clause setting forth that a newspaper can be printed and published on the Sabbath day when the securing of a quiet Sabbath to the working people was one of the reasens given by the hon, member for North Norfolk for bringing this subject before Parliament.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. want to correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hazen) in ascribing to me certain views. do not admit that this Bill interferes in the slightest respect with what is prohibited in New Brunswick or elsewhere, nor do I think it can fairly be read in that direction. The promoter (Mr. Charlton) of the Bill, himself understood that. Neither his Bill as introduced nor any argument of his attacks the printing en Sunday. That always struck me as part of the weakness of his If I understood him aright he does not object to the printing on Sunday for the Monday distribution. The evil that he wishes to get at and make a crime, is the printing, the publication and the selling of papers on Sunday or for Sunday. So far as that is concerned, and notwithstanding the criticisms that have been made, I think this clause fairly meets the case. It does not legalize anything.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would remind the hon. authorities as anybody in this House, and member for St. John (Mr. Hazen), that if a by persons quite as anxious to see the Sabso-called religious paper were printed and published on Sunday it would hardly be a religious newspaper, and as a matter of fact no religious newspaper in the country is published or printed on Sunday, or is likely to be published or printed on that day. The hon, member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) said that if a secular newspaper contained a paragraph or two of religious matter it would be a religious paper. That is not the case. I think the definition of a religious paper is well understood in the country, and it would not be the fact that if a paragraph or two of religious matter were in a newspaper it could be called or would be called a religious newspaper, or would be considered as such in the eve of the law. I desire to say a word or two in reply to what the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier) said, as to the absurdity, as he called it, of constituting it a crime for a boy to sell a newspaper for a cent; while a man might sell a cow, or an ox, or a horse for a large sum of money and it would not be a crime. I would remind the hon, gentleman that there is this distinction: that in the one case the boy is selling an article which is supposed to do great injury to the community, whereas in the other case it is not so.

Mr. LANGELIER. There is no distinction made between a bad newspaper and a good newspaper. If it is a bad newspaper I contend that it is just as wrong to sell it on week days as on Sundays, and that the sale of a bad newspaper should be prohibited every day in the year. I say any one can see the absurdity of this Bill prosecuting a little boy who sells a good paper for a cent, while a man can sell other articles for large sums of money without committing an offence.

Mr. CASEY. I have not taken up much of the time of the House in discussing this measure, from the time of its initial stage in the hands of the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), to its higher development now as a Government measure.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not a Government measure.

Mr. CASEY. Well, a quasi Government measure. I have waited to see what form it would take and it seems to me to be rather amorphous, and instead of developing from the pollywog stage I find it is a very amorphous production still.

I quite agree with my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale)—who I am happy to see is a convert to the doctrine of provincial rights—that this is a matter of civil rights which should be within the control of the different provinces. It is a matter also which in the province of Ontario has already been fully and efficiently dealt with, by quite as good constitutional authorities as anybody in this House, and by persons quite as anxious to see the Sabbath duty observed as any member of this It has been dealt with in House could be. Ontario in sympathy with the feelings of that province. I am not familiar with the law in the province of Quebec, but from what my hon. friend (Mr. Langelier) has stated, the question appears to have been dealt with in harmony with the feelings of that province.

My first objection to this measure is, that this Parliament should not attempt to deal with the question of Sunday observance at But it seems that the member for North Norfolk while admitting that we should not go into the whole question of Sunday observance, thinks we have a special reason for meddling with the sale of newspapers on Sunday. I cannot see that he has shown any reason for that contention. says that we have to deal with copyright, and with the distribution of literature through the mails, and for this reason he infers that we have a general supervision over the distribution of literature. 1 The fact do not see the connection there. that we carry the mails and regulate imports and so forth, does not give us anything like a general censorship over what kind of literature should be published in Canada.

I will lay down my opinion clearly, and it is, that we have no more right to deal with the sale of newspapers on Sunday than we have to deal with the sale of whisky on Sunday. It has been clearly held by the Privy Council, against a former decision of this House, that we have no right to deal with the sale of whisky on Sundays, and I think my hon, friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) will admit that whisky is perhaps a more deleterious article to sell on Sunday than even the Sunday newspaper. My hon, friend from North Norfolk is one of those who, in the first place voted in this House, that we had no right to prohibit the selling of whisky on Sundays, and voted against the assumption of the then Government that we had the right. Notwithstanding that he now thinks that we have the right to prevent the sale of newspapers on Sunday.

But apart from the question as to whether newspapers should be sold on Sunday or not -which I am not discussing at the present time—it is quite clear now that the jurisdiction in regard to the sale does not rest with this House. I think also it is proper that it should not rest with this House. This is a matter that should be settled according to the conscience of each community, and what will suit the conscience of Quebec may not suit the conscience of Ontario, and vice versa.

Then, if the interpretation put upon the present measure by the hon. Minister of Justice, and which was not disowned by the hou. member for North Norfolk, is correct, namely, that it is to prohibit, not Sunday work, but merely the Sunday sale of papers or the preparation of papers for Sunday sale, this Act, looked at as an Act for the enforcement of the higher morality, is a farce. If its object is merely to prevent the sale of a special edition of a paper on Sunday. and if it does not prevent and is not meant to prevent the doing of work on Sunday for the publication of a paper on Monday, for example, there is no moral reform in it at all.

The hon, member for North Norfolk says that public opinion demands this reform. I think that if public opinion understood that the hon, gentleman was willing to let compositors and editors work all Sunday night to secure the publication of Monday's edition, but would not let them work on Saturday night in order that an edition of their paper should be distributed on Sunday, they would have a different opinion of the morality of this Act from that which the hon, gentleman appears to entertain. If we have any right to meddle with this matter at all, it should be for the purpose, and the purpose alone, of preventing people from being forced their work on Sunday against will to secure them their day's rest-to prescandal of the public sale vent the and hawking of papers about the streets, if that be considered a scandal. But that we should interfere simply to catch the newsboy and let off the publisher who works his men on Sunday afternoons and evenings for the purpose of getting out the Monday edition would be absurd.

Then, with regard to the question of the religious newspapers, this Act as it stands pretends to establish a censorship—to say that only newspapers which are religious can be distributed on Sunday, even gratuitously. I do not think there are many papers of any kind distributed gratuitously. What I suppose is meant by this is that regular subscribers of these papers, who have subscribed for them by the year, may receive them on Sunday. If papers are distributed on Sunday, whether gratuitously or otherwise, the distribution involves work for somebody. It is as much Sunday work to distribute one paper as another.

Some of my hon. friends wish to have the word "religious" defined in this case. I do not wish to have it defined; I do not think the word religious should be here at all. We should not presume to discriminate between different classes of papers. What has my opinion or your opinion as to what constitutes a religious paper to do with the making of a newsboy punishable for distributing a paper on Sunday? The character of the paper has nothing whatever to do with the sin of compelling somebody to work on Sunday to distribute that paper to the subscribers. It is as much a sin to send a newsboy out with a so-called religious paper as with any other.

I do not see what definition of religious paper we could make which could not be evaded. If you make it a church paper, I would like to tell the hon. member for North Norfolk that there is in Ontario a sect of considerable size already, and constantly increasing, called the Seventh Day Adventists, who do not believe that the day we celebrate as the Sabbath should be observed as such at all; who believe that it is a sin to work on Saturday, and a rather creditable thing than otherwise to work on the day we call Sun-This sect in Ontario has churches, preachers and an organization. It has also an official organ, I do not know whether printed in Canada or not; and the object of that paper is to prove that we should not observe Sunday at all. Under my hon. friend's Bill it would be perfectly legal to it suits them. The hon, member for South distribute that paper on Sunday throughout Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) was very loud in dethe length and breadth of Canada—a paper fending provincial rights to-night; but I intended to prove that Sunday, as a holy day, is a human invention, a humbug and with charters granted by this Parliament a farce, and that we should not keep that for railways, and these railways six or day at all. I do not know any definition of a religious newspaper we could invent which would not allow that church organ to be distributed on Sunday.

My position, therefore, is that this is a subject which we cannot constitutionally deal with, and that if we could constitutionally deal with it, the provisions in this proposed law were not in the interest of morality nor in the interest of the good keeping of the Sabbath or Sunday in the sense in which I, as well as most of the hon. gentlemen around me, understand it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I do not know whether to sympathize with the hon. Minister of Justice in having failed to earn, as he has by his declaration to-night, those various resolutions of thanks which were passed to him and the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) for the stand they have taken on this question, or to congratulate him on having escaped so questionable an alliance; but if the hon. member for North Norfolk is anxious to undertake the moral supervision of the people of this country, I think he might begin with his own province, and if he finds the Sunday law in Ontario not equal to what is required of it, then I think he is bound to go to his great friend, Sir Oliver Mowat, and have But, as a matter of that law improved. fact, we have a substantial Sunday law in Ontario, and it meets the case. They have a substantial Sunday law in the maritime provinces, we have been told tonight, and it meets the case. In province of British Columbia they somewhat differently situated; they publish newspapers there on Sunday the are Sunday publish newspapers and avoid publishing them on Monday; and surely there are sufficient judges whether they wish them or not, and the matter ought to be left to them. The people of the province of Quebec take a different view of many religious questions from what we do in the province of Ontario. put, I presume I may be permitted to spend Surely a man who has taken the stand the hon, member for North Norfolk has taken on behalf of provincial rights, and who is allied with the party who have always upheld the doctrine of provincial rights-which doctrine I hope they will uphold at the present time-ought to content himself with trying to introduce any measure he wishes for the moral improvement of the people, in his own province. Therefore, I hope the committee will drop the whole proposal contained in this Bill with regard to Sunday observance.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is very singular how anxious hon, gentlemen opposite are to make a political football of provincial rights when The hon. member for South fending provincial rights to-night; but I notice that very often when we are dealing seven miles long, are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, gentleman is ready to over-rule cial rights. I confess that it is a hon. provincial rights. pity that in the Confederation Act a clear and distinct line was not drawn between those measures which come properly under the jurisdiction of the provinces and those which come properly under the jurisdiction of the Dominion. However, I think my esteemed friend the hon. member for North Norfolk deserves credit for having pressed the consideration of this Bill on the House so often as he has. I believe he has a very large portion of the moral sense of this country at his back in this movement to stop the use and sale of newspapers on the Lord's day. I am quite satisfied that the majority of the provinces, the better classes of our people, are prepared to support the movement he has made in that direction. However, it appears that there are in this House, as well as in the country, a great many people who may be called cranks as regards the observance of the Lord's day. Some people think it perfeetly right to buy papers and periodicals of a secular character and read them; a great, and I am glad to know, many people think it is not right. I be-lieve, and I hope the majority of the people believe, that it is not right. I am strongly in favour of the Bill, and am prepared to support it, believing that in so doing I am backing up a movement in the right direction, and confident that it is supported by the better classes of our people who are strongly opposed to discourage the introduction of a system into this country which prevails to such an enormous extent on the American side, and which sets an example that does not tend to improve the morals of the people, and their respect for the Lord's Day.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the question is a few minutes in reviewing some of the points made by hon. gentlemen upon my own side of the House and the opposite side, who are opposed to this Bill, and the principle contained in it. I was sorry to see that opposition in some quarters, and have seen it with some degree of surprise. The hon. Minister of Justice informs the committee that I have been guilty of inconsistency in advocating the passage of a Bill with regard to the publication and sale of Sunday newspapers, and have not dealt with the evil of setting type on Sunday, and preparing for the publication of a paper on Monday morning. Well, I have not attempted to deal with all branches infractions of the fourth commandment. I was necessarily obliged to confine my attention to certain leading features of Sabbath desecration, which came properly within the jurisdiction of this Parliament, and have followed the advice given by various members with regard to provincial jurisdicton, leaving matters pertaining exclusively to the jurisdiction of the provinces to be dealt with by them. The hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier) says he would have no objection to the prohibition of the sale of bad papers. I would ask my hon. friend what constitutes a bad paper. Is it not the influence produced by a paper which settles the question whether it is a bad paper or not? If it can be shown that the influence of a Sunday newspaper is detrimental to the morals of the public, if it can be shown that it is a great social and public evil, that it gradually drags down society from a higher to a lower plane and imperils the continuance of good morals and high Christian sentiment, that newspaper is a bad paper. There is not a Sunday newspaper in the United States which is not a bad paper-bad in the influence it exercises upon the public; and it is because this is a great question, because this Dominion Parliament is charged with the duty of laying the foundations of a nation here and of laying down rules and regulations and laws conducive to the welfare of the people, that we are justified in taking the course I ask this House to take with regard to that great evil—the publication of the Sunday newspaper. have seen nothing in Canada yet of the evils produced by the Sunday newspaper. That evil is here in embryo. We have but two or three paltry little Sunday newspaper sheets as yet, but they are an indication of the evil to come. If we take the United States, however, where the evil had once the same insignificant beginning, and see to what proportion that evil has grown, if we look at this question candidly and dispassionately, we must realize that the future of this country largely depends upon the course we shall take in laying down laws for the future guidance of the people with regard to this matter. It is not an with regard to this matter. It is not an infringement of provincial rights for the Dominion to lay down laws and regulations likely to be conducive to public health, and to promote public morality. This is not a light question. It is a question whether we shall strangle, in its infancy, a system which will become a menace to the public life of the country, if we allow it to obtain foothold here. When hon, gentlemen talk about provincial rights, and human liberty, and all that being interfered with by the laying down of rules and regulations. which we know, in the light of the experience of other countries, to be an essential to our future well-being, these men are losing sight of their duty to their constituents and country. The hon, member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) told us that the Dominion Parliament has no more power to deal with this question than it has with the question of the sale of whisky. I would ask him if this House has no power to prohibit the sale of whisky?

Mr. CASEY. Not on Sunday.

Mr. CHARLTON. The importation of whisky on Saturday, Sunday, and all other days—we have the power to put an end to anything of that character which threatens the welfare of the people. This House has the power, under its duty to supervise public morals, and to do whatever is in the interests of the people of Canada, to deal with the liquor question, to put an end to the sale of liquor, to put an end to Sunday newspapers or any other evils which may be deemed evils that should be dealt with by the Parliament of this country. am told in a sneering way by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) that I am assuming the moral supervision of this country. I have sat in the Opposition, and have not had much influence to promote laws that I thought would be beneficial to Canada, but I desire to see this country grow up a great nation, to see its foundations laid solidly in the principle of eternal justice, laid in such a way as to promote the social, moral and religious well-being of the people. I can appreciate, and every hon. member can, the importance of good homes, the importance of good citizens, the importance of good principles, and anything which can conduce to the securing of these things is a matter of more importance than half the question we deal with to-day. I repudiate the idea that I am a meddlesome man, or that, in the demand I have made to secure moral legislation I have done that which I had no right to do. I believe the measure is highly important. I believe that it comes within the purview of this Parliament. I believe that this Sunday newspaper prohibition law, to be efficient, must be a national law, and that we can deal with it just as thoroughly as other ques-I do not wish to detain the committee. I may say, with regard to the provisions of this Bill, that I disclaim responsibility for the exact manner in which they appear here, just as the hon. Minister of Justice did. I will accept this cheerfully rather than take nothing. I do not know but that it will work; and, at all events, if had it on the statute-book, would the light of experience have another session show 118 before to the defects of the measure. I would prefer if the committee would permit the substitution of this proviso of the following words:-"Provided that the gratuitous distribution of religious newspapers shall not be an offence under this section."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the meaning of the section as it stands.

Mr. CHARLTON. But it is made clearer here and the words are fewer. If my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will accept this form, I would prefer it. But if not I would be glad to get the Bill as it stands.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If that is the hon, gentleman's only object, I think he would do better to leave it as it stands.

Mr. CHARLTON. I leave myself in the hands of the Minister.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that the introduction of the word "gratuitous" will prevent the distribution of a class of papers that are sought to be distributed on Sunday—papers which are not sold on Sunday but are paid for by yearly subscriptions by congregations or Sunday schools. This could not be called a gratuitous distribution; and if you prohibit the sale or distribution of these papers on Sunday, you interfere with something that this House, I believe, has no desire to interfere with. If I remember rightly that word "gratuitous" was struck out when we had this Bill before the committee on a former occasion. I think it a pity to bring it in again when it was found to be objectionable.

Mr. CASEY. My hon, friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) appeals to me and asks if the House has not the right to prohibit the sale and importation of whisky. Of course it has. But there is no proposition here to prohibit the importation or sale of anything. But I will tell the hon. gentleman what the House has not the right to do, what the hon. member himself has voted we have not the right to do, and that is to regulate the sale of whisky or prevent its sale on Sunday. We have the highest authority in the Empire for saying that we have no right to do this, that it is a matter of police regulation and belongs to the provinces. So the Privy Council would say with this Bill if it were sent there. There is not the slightest reason to doubt that if this Bill were appealed in the same way the Privy Council would decide that the hon. member for North Norfolk has been meddling with matters that do not concern this House.

But my hon. friend thinks it quite given the matter consideration as a legal right to make the sale of newspapers question will for a moment dispute the jurison Sunday a Dominion matter. And then he goes off into generalities about morality and protecting the people of the country from the sale of the Sunday newspaper and gives a lot of material—I was going to call it by another name—that has nothing to do with the question. The hon, gentleman completely begs the question, and in a way that shows little respect for this House if he assumes that those who are opposed to this section are opposed to the observance of the Sabbath in a Christian way. The hon, gentleman cannot be allowed to assume that he alone is the judge of what is sound Christian doctrine, as regards keeping the Sabbath.

If he did not mean that he did not mean anything, because he has attacked those who oppose this Bill as if they were unchristian in their views and unchristian in their practice. He says he is sorry to notice opposition to his Bill from friends on his own side of the House as well as from the other side, and he holds that he has the moral sentiment of the country at his back, in relation to the principle of the Bill. There is no question of morality in the Bill before us. The question is whether we have the right to deal with this question or not. My belief—and I have the opinion of the Privy Council in support of it—is that we have not that right. But even if we have, I think this Bill is a most lame and impotent attempt in the direction of the morality of the question. This Bill does not prevent Sunday work even in regard to Sunday newspapers. It appears to prevent no Sunday work at all, but only to prevent the distribution and reading of Sunday newspapers.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I heartily approve of the principle of the Bill. It is quite true it does not go so far as I could wish; but still it is a step in the right direction. If anything can be done to prevent the printing and publishing of newspapers on the Lord's day, it certainly would be a very great boon. We all know that the issue of Sunday newspapers in the United States has had a most demoralizing effect. The best men in the United States have long been struggling to get rid of that evil. But they have not yet succeeded. If anything can be done to prevent that state of things here it is certainly most desirable that it should be done.

Mr. MASSON. I do not think it necessary to attempt to change any vote in this question now. But I do wish to ask those who are about to vote to consider the Bill upon its merits and not upon what it does not contain and what it does not pretend to deal with. As to the objection that this may be covered by provincial legislation that is no objection to the Bill. That does not interfere with our jurisdiction. No person who has given the matter consideration as a legal question will for a moment dispute the jurisdiction of this House to pass the Bill. Local legislatures might deal with the subject in a partial manner; but that is no reason why we should not deal with it in a more perfect and complete manner. Now, the scope of this section is very narrow. It purports to deal with one evil and with one evil only. It is no objection to the Bill to say that it allows certain other evils to continue. is no objection to a Bill intended to prevent the sale of Sunday newspapers to say that bad newspapers should not be allowed to be published at all. The hon, gentleman who took that objection, knows full well that, under section 179, these bad newspapers he speaks of are prohibited not only on Sunday but on every day of the week. But even that were not so it would be no objection to this Bill to show that it did not deal with every crime in the calender. I ask, therefore, those who believe that Sunday newspapers are an evil, who believe that desirable that Sunday newspapers should be put down in this country, to vote for the best measure we can get for that purpose. It is imperfect, I admit. A great many of the changes made when the Criminal Code was under consideration in committee were open to objection. But such as they were they were the best we could hope to pass in this House. The same is true of this Bill, and for that reason I ask those who believe in the object to support it. And I ask those who are favourable to the principle not to be led away by any question as to what a province has done or will have the power to do. As to the question that this Parliament has no power to deal with this subject because the Privy Council has decided that we have not the power to deal with the Sunday sale liquor, what kind of interpretation is this put upon the Hodge case. which, I suppose, the hon, member refers? No person giving this section a thought, will say but that this House certainly has power to make it a crime to see whisky or anything else, for that matter, on Sunday. I ask, therefore, that this section be considered upon its merits, as dealing with what it contains, and not with what it does not contain.

Section 173 negatived on division: yeas, 26; nays, 55.

On section 196.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to amend subsection B by substituting the following instead of what appears:—

"Or (d) opened, kept or used for the purpose of facilitating or encouraging or assisting in the making of bets upon any contingency or event, horse race or other race, fight, game or sport, by announcing the betting upon, or announcing or displaying the results of, horse races or other races, fights, games or sports, or in any other manner whatsoever, whether such contingency or event, horse race or other race, fight, game or sport, occurs or takes place in Canada or elsewhere.

Mr. Masson.

On section 205,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This section in the printing has been changed a little from the report of the committee. At the end of paragraph "C." I want to add after the words "as aforesaid," as was added by the committee, "for determining the winner in any such lottery."

On section 362.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. propose to ask the committee to drop this section for reasons which I will state. The sub-committee reported this section with an amendment including the words street railway. Since then at the request of the Electric Railway Company of Toronto, I have received a deputation from the city council of Toronto, and to my mind they made out such a case that I think it unwise to proceed with this amendment. In the first place, it is very questionable whether the amendment has any effect whatever. It is not an amendment that the electric railway asks for, but it is the addition of the words "street railway" to the words which are in the code already, and those words include tramways. Now, the object that the Electric Railway Company had in view was in connection with the transfer of tickets. They complain that a great deal of fraud is practiced on their company, and they wished to have this section made so plain that it could be used, as undoubtedly it was the intention, as a sort of advertisement to hold over the public for the purpose of deterring from the commission of those offences. But it has been argued with considerable force by the city council that when it is considered that an enormous number of women and children and others who have transfer tickets given to them in times of confusion and in crowds, on which occasion it is almost impossible for the conductors to punch them correctly, it is wrong that innocent women and children should be punished for improperly using tickets that have been incorrectly punched. It has been argued that when electric railway companies have so much business they should appoint more officers and see that this transfer work is properly done, and not quickly resort to Parliament for special legislation. Under these circumstances, and particularly in view of the fact that the addition of the words "street railway" may have no other effect than to assist the companies in their advertising, I propose to drop this section.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The argument of the Minister of Justice goes the length of urging the repeal of section 362 of the code altogether, and with his general argument I largely agree. The only safeguard in the section is the word "fradulent." The punishment provided by this section is six months' imprisonment. The idea of sending a person to prison for six months for travelling on a street railway ticket without any desire to act fradulently is dreadful.

Mr. EDGAR. If this clause of the Bill is struck out it will still leave the original clause 362 in the code, which applies to railways and steam vessels.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As there has been no injustice shown to have taken place under that section, it might be as well to leave it. It was law even before 1892.

Mr. EDGAR. If there is any force in the arguments of the Minister of Justice, and I think there is, against allowing street railway companies to have this power for the purpose of advertising or alarming the people, or perhaps prosecuting women and children, we certainly should rescind the clause under consideration, and I would be even willing to leave out the whole section.

Mr. COCKBURN. The word "railway" covers street railway. We have a street railway going from Toronto to Mimico, nearly half way to Hamilton. If we retain the word railway, as suggested, it will cover the case of street railways, and women and children may be made the victims of carelessness on the part of conductors. The only safe course to pursue is to omit the whole section.

Mr. McCARTHY. The committee should take advantage of the fact that it has now this clause before it for consideration to make the necessary amendments. I think we should change the punishment from six months to one month. It is a most preposterous penalty for travelling, say, on a street railway from Toronto to Mimico, for which the fare is 5 or 10 cents, that an offender should be sent to prison for six months. I move that the clause be amended by substituting one month for six months and by omitting the words "street railway."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I prefer to leave the law as it at present stands on the statute-book, which has been there for years and may have served a good purpose. At all events, we have not heard of any cases of injustice under it. I move to drop section 362.

Mr. EDGAR. I venture to suggest that this will be an akward way of arriving at the conclusion at which we desire. But if they amend this clause by changing "six months" into "one month" and by striking out "tramway" and "street railway," then we get at it in a shorter way than by striking out this amendment and introducing another. I think most hon, members in this House would object as much to an imprisonment of one month as six months for using a mistaken ticket on a street railway. When the very trivial offence is taken into consideration, the length of the imprisonment is not so very material.

Mr. McCARTHY. My idea is to reduce the "six months" to "one month" on any railway.

Mr. DICKEY. I think there is a good deal more to be said for the original clause than has yet been said. It comes under the section for obtaining property under false pretenses, but the stealing of a ride in a railway train is not a species of property under the common law. This section was introduced a good many years ago to prevent people from criminally stealing rides upon the railway. One branch of the offence is using a false ticket, and everyone will admit that is a very serious offence. It means, of course, fraudulently and unlawfully using a ticket to which a person is not entitled. Suppose one man steals a ticket from another, he would be punished for that, and why should he not be punished for obtaining wrongfully the value of that ticket from a railway com-It is a very difficult offence to prove that a person illegally and fraudulently intended to obtain the ride, and it does not seem to me that six months is an undue maximum.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) May it not be fraudulent without being wilful?

Mr. DICKEY. I do not think so. Extreme cases may be conceived for which six months would not be too severe a punishment.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The punishment should have some relevancy to the value of the ticket taken. You would not send a man to jail for six months for stealing a ten-cent piece, nor should you send him to jail for six months for stealing a ten-cent ride.

Mr. DICKEY. Suppose he steals a ticket across the continent, worth one hundred dollars?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the punishment should be relevant to the value of the ticket.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. have a very strong objection to interfering with the law on the statute-book. If we get into theories as to what is adequate punishment for these offences, we will have a very difficult, though interesting field, because one hundred offences of this character can be picked out of the statute-book in which the punishment is equally severe. The law was put there for some good pur-It has been in force for years, and there has not been a case mentioned to-night to show that that law has not had a salutory effect. If one change is made, there would have to be several others. Under these circumstances I would ask the House to consent, for the present, to leave the law as it stands.

Mr. McCARTHY. Will you promise to consider it?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh, most carefully.

Mr. EDGAR. A few moments ago, the Minister of Justice told us in very touching terms, the evils which would arise from applying this clause to a street railway, and he said a deputation had come all the way from Toronto and had convinced him that it was improper to use the word "street railway" in this clause. Therefore, in agreeing with the Minister of Justice, I would move that the present clause be amended by striking out the words, "carriage, tramway, and street railways." That would prevent a law remaining upon our statute-book which would render a person who used a 4-cent ticket, wrongly punched, from being liable to six months' imprison-If there is anything whatever in the arguments urged by the deputation from Toronto about a street railway, I think it applies to tramways, also.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a sub-amendment to my amendment.

Sub-amendment (Mr. Edgar) negatived.

Amendment (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) agreed to.

On section 512.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The words added are suggested by the Montreal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals: "Or any wild animal or bird in captivity."

Mr. EDGAR. What does that particularly apply to?

Mr. CURRAN. There were a couple of cases tried in Montreal in which birds or wild animals were cruelly treated, and the magistrate held that being wild animals they did not come under the law.

On section 552,

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This has been carefully examined by the committee. The object of it is to supply what was obviously an omission in the passage of the Act. A number of offences of the nature of theft or resembling theft, and as to which it was deemed proper that the persons committing them should be liable to arrest without warrant were left out of the list enumerated in the original section. Subsection 2 of the section provides for arrest by peace officers without warrant of persons found committing certain offences. Under subsection 1 it is only persons found committing the offences mentioned who could be arrested without a warrant by a peace officer or any one else. A doubt was expressed whether subsection 2 would apply so as to justify a constable in arresting a person whom, on reasonable and probable grounds, he believed to be guilty of any of those offences; and this change is to remove this doubt. Subsection 3 at present is confined to offences against the code. There are offences against the common law not covered by the code, and the provisions of this subsection it was deemed necessary to apply to these as well as to the others. The amendment of subsection 5 is for a similar purpose. It is at present confined to offences against the code. These are purely technical, and have been carefully examined.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

On section 557a,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is an amendment suggested by the Attorney General of Quebec. It is a local matter; it is proposed on account of the large amount of criminal business arising in the city of Montreal, and is for the purpose of preventing the congestion of business there. It follows other sections dealing with the same subject.

On section 575.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is in connection with prosecutions that have arisen under the gambling sections of the code, for which the Bill was primarily and mainly introduced. This provides for more effective search than could be carried on before. Under the Act as it stood, in the case of gaming and betting houses and lotteries, the only authority for searching was in cities and towns. Consequently, in the case I have referred to, at Fort Erie. the officers of the law were greatly handicapped, and were unable effectively to put the law in force. This extends these powers of search, and with cities and towns includes incorporated villages or other municipalities or districts organized or unorganized-practically everywhere in the countrv.

On section 673,

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The object of this amendment is to remove a doubt in connection with the power of a court to adjourn a criminal trial. It was shown to the committee that a similar question had arisen in England, and a Bill nad been introduced there to make this power clear. So in this case the section in regard to the adjournment of trials is made more definite, and it is now put beyond a doubt that the court may adjourn a criminal trial after it has been once given to the jury otherwise than from day to day or over Sunday. This section gives power of adjournment to any other day in the same sitting, if the court is of the opinion that the ends of justice require it.

On section 683.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A question whether evidence taken in preliminary investigations or before the grand jury could be used on the trial came up in one case in Nova Scotia and in another case in Ontario. In Ontario the court was divided upon the question. It is assumed that the intention was that these questions could be used as evidence, and the amendment here is to make that clear.

Section 763.—By repealing sub-paragraph (i) of paragraph (a) thereof, and substituting the following therefor:—

"(i.) In the province of Ontario any judge of a county or district court, junior judge or deputy judge authorized to act as chairman of the general sessions of the place."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is necessary to provide for the case of the divisional district of Nipissing, which was created by the legislature of Ontario last year, and as there may be new districts created from time to time, the provision is made general:

Section 782.—By adding the following sub-paragraph after sub-paragraph (iv.) of paragraph (a):
"(v.) In all the provinces, where the defendant is charged with any of the offences mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (f) of section 783, any two justices of the peace sitting together; provided, that when any offence is tried by virtue of this sub-paragraph, an appeal shall lie from a conviction in the same manner as from summary convictions under Part LVIII., and that sections 879 and the following sections relating to appeals from such summary convictions shall apply to such appeal."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is a suggestion from the judge of the county court of York, in Ontario. It gives jurisdiction, under the Summary Trials Act, subject to the consent of the accused, and an appeal as well as in summary conviction cases, in certain petty cases. It is to relieve the court there, and in case of consent to enable certain petty cases to be disposed of by two justices of the peace. For instance, that obtaining money or property by false pretenses or receiving stolen goods. to an extent not exceeding $10; being the inmate or habitual frequenter of disorderly houses; also attempting to commit theftthe last case the special committee did not include, but the other cases they have included in the section, and this will enable, if the accused consents, these matters to be disposed of without waiting for the next term of the court:

Section 784.—By repealing subsection three thereof, and substituting the following therefor:—
"3. The jurisdiction of the magistrate in the previnces of Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, and in the district of Keewatin, under this part, is absolute, without the consent of the person charged."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This subject was brought up by the Government of British Columbia in connection with the code as it stood. Before the enactment of this code, the jurisdiction of the magistrate, under the Summary Trials Act in British Columbia, was absolute, without the consent of the person charged, and in the original Bill, as introduced in 1891, it was not proposed to make any change in this respect. During the recess, however, between the sessions of 1891 and 1892, the late chief justice of the province objected that the ordinary justices of the peace of British Columbia were not fit, in some cases, to exercise this Consequently in the Bill of jurisdiction. 1882 the section was amended so as to make the consent of the accused necessary to a The provincial government subsequently called attention to the matter, and suggested the restoring of the law to what it was before the enactment of the code. have the minute of council passed by the government of British Columbia, and the consideration in it I can give the committee, if it think necessary, but the special committee examined the report and made this change.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not see any change.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It restores British Columbia as it was before the code.

Mr. CASEY. Before this Bill is reported, I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to what I consider a very important matter, with regard to the procedure before coroners in criminal cases. Section 642 of the Criminal Code provides that no one shall be tried on any coroners' inquisition. provision, it consequence of that has, since the enactment of the Code, been necessary to hold a double preliminary inquiry in every case of alleged murder or manslaughter. My attention has been specially called to this by events occurring in my own neighbourhood with which the hon. Minister is familiar, and I have since noticed it in the case of several trials and investigations in connecton with alleged murders which have taken place elsewhere in Ontario. The result of this provision is that whenever a suspicious death occurs and an inquest is held, everybody who is supposed to know anything about the case is called in and a general inquiry instituted. If the coroner's jury bring a verdict against some person or persons, this whole business has to be gone over again before two justices of the peace, and the witnesses are bound over, in case of commitment, to appear again at the trial, so that all possible witnesses-and a great many are included in the list who are never examined—are put to the trouble and expense of appearing three times before the case is concluded.

I am not aware why that proviso was put in the Criminal Code and why the old practice of indicting on the verdict of the coroner's jury was done away with, but I want to call the attention of the Minister to the extreme inconvenience to every one concerned of this double investigation. In the case to which I refer, the result of it was to keep a whole neighbourhood, consisting of several townships and a considerable city, in a perfect ferment of excitement for several weeks, and to keep people's thoughts dwelling on nothing but possibilities of crime during that period. I am not going to make a motion in committee with regard to this matter; but I wish to ask the Minister just to take it into his very serious consideration, before this Bill comes up for third reading, whether he should not introduce something corresponding to the English practice. As the House may not know what this is, I will read the clause of the British Coroner's Act of 1887 bearing upon this point. Section 5, subsection 1. reads as follows:-

Where a corner's inquisition charges a person with the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory before the fact to a murder (which latter offence is in this Act included in the expression "murder"), the coroner shall issue his warrant for arresting or detaining such person (if such warrant has not previously been issued), and shall bind by recognizance all such persons examined before him as know or declare anything material touching the said offence, to appear at the next court of oyer and terminer or jail delivery at which the trial is to be, then and there to prosecute or give evidence against the person so charged.

It goes on to provide that if the offence is manslaughter, the person may be bailed by recognizances with sufficient securities and so on. Now, Sir, I do not think the ends of justice would be frustrated or the protection of the accused lessened in any degree by the adoption of this practice here. I believe that the protection given by the coroner's jury would be sufficient on the case of a man who was so innocent that a prima facie case could not be made out before a magistrate. I hardly know how to express this in legal language, but what I mean is that if the coroner's jury finds a man guilty, he will be almost surely committed by the magistrate on the hearing of the case. The British practice is such as I have stated, and we all know that the British law and practice is sufficiently favourable to the accused.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Three clauses remain, so I will now move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I would ask the Minister just to consider section 785, which gives to certain magistrates in the province of Ontario the same jurisdiction as is given to a judge of a court of general sessions of the peace. I have been asked by several magistrates and judges that this should be extended to the province of Quebec. It would be a great advantage and would in several instances avoid jury trials, and consequently greatly reduce the expense in many cases. It is true we have in the province of Quebec a court of general sessions of the peace, at 10.35 p.m.

which is to be presided over by a judge of the superior court or two justices of the peace; but, as a matter of fact, we never have sittings of that court in our rural districts. If our district magistrates and our police magistrates had the same power to try certain offences which come under the jurisdiction of the court of general sessions of the peace, as well as in summary matters, it would be a great advantage. I do not see any good reason why this clause has not been applied to the province of Quebec as well as the province of Ontario.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No doubt there will be an opportunity of discussing that subject again. The committee threw it out, if I remember well, on the ground that the only reason why the Ontario practice had obtained was in connection with some special qualification of the officer to whom the power was given. And as the officers had authority at the time the code was adopted, it was deemed well to continue the practice as regards Ontario. But the committee took strong ground as to extending such jurisdiction outside Ontario.

Mr. CURRAN. My hon, friend will remember, also, that the suggestion was made in the special committee with regard to the province of Quebec, that county court judges should have this jurisdiction. county court judges we have not got. Neither would the term "circuit court "circuit court judge" apply, because, in the country districts the circuit court judge is also a judge of the Superior Court, and, consequently, the application of the term there would mean more than the circuit court judges we have in the city of Montreal, whose duties are confined to small cases. I think that, on that account, the application would be improperly made to the officers mentioned.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I would suggest to the hon, gentleman to strike out these officers, the county court judge and the circuit judge, leaving it to the district magistrate and the police magistrate, which would be quite sufficient.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Let us know to-morrow whether the fatted calf is to be killed, or otherwise.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Justice that it would be very convenient if the answer to the remedial order were brought down. I think it has not yet been brought down.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will bring that to the attention of the Government to-morrow.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

Mr. Casey.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE RAILWAY COMMITTEE.

Mr. TISDALE. I move, seconded by Mr. Hazen:

That leave be granted the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines to sit during the time the House is in session, according to the recommendation contained in the twelfth report of the said committee.

Motion agreed to.

LAKE MANITOBA RAILWAY AND CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. MARTIN moved:

That so much of the twelfth report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines as relates to Bill No. 75, to revive and amend the Act respecting the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, be re-ferred back to the said committee for further consideration.

He said: This Bill is to revive certain Acts which have from time to time been passed by this House, chartering a railway to run from Portage la Prairie up into what is known as the Lake Dauphin district. These Acts have expired and this is a short Bill to revive the charter. It also takes power to change the terminus of the road from Portage la Prairie to Arden on the Manitoba North-western line, which sixty miles west of Portage Oľ. The Lake Dauphin country Piairie. one of the finest parts in the Northwest. In natural fertility of soil it is not excelled by any portion of Manitoba, except, perhaps, the Portage district. The correcruess of that statement is shown by the fact that although that country is at present from 80 to 100 miles away from any line of railway, a large number of people have gone there, have taken up nearly all the available honesteads, and it has become quite a large and prosperous settlement. There is a range of lills called the Riding Mountains, which separates that country from the country to the south, through which the Manitoba and North-western Railway line runs. Now, this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is opposed by the Hudson 3ay Railway Company. They claim that this line interferes with their charter, because it runs for some distance parallel to their line; but, Sir, the two railways have nothing whatever in common. The Hudson Bay Inilway Company's line runs from Winnipeg to the Hudson Bay, the portion of it as to which negotiations have been carried neglectful indeed of the interests of those on at present, being from Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan River. The Lake Manitoba and Canal Company's line is intended to open up and develop the Lake Dauphin settlement. The Hudson Bay Company have located a line, which does not run to the Lake Dauphin district, which is of no benefit whatever in any possible way to the set-tlers there, which runs through a country lying east of Lake Dauphin, and with which the settlers of Lake Dauphin have no connection. The House will understand that Lake Dauphin is a smaller lake lying west of Lake Manitoba, that the settlement to which I referred lies entirely west of Lake Dauphin, that the country lying to the east between Lake Manitoba and Lake Dauphin, is of a very different character indeed, from the country to which I refer, and has no population whatever in it. When you get 25 or 30 miles north of Gladstone, at which it is now proposed to commence the Hudson Bay Railway, the country is low and swampy and is unpopulated. I cannot understand how the House can be justified, at the instance of the Hudson Bay Railway, in preventing this railway from being built. The only suggestion made is that because for a certain distance, thirty or forty or fifty miles, the two roads are somewhat parallel to each other, and that the floating of the bonds of the Hudson Bay Railway Company might be affected by a line being chartered to some extent parallel to it. Is that any reason whatever why the settlers to whom I have referred should be deprived of a railway, and should be compelled to carry their produce from 80 to 100 miles to market? The fact that one railway company should be able for purposes of its own to block the construction of another railway promoted for an entirely different purpose and run-ning into an entirely different country, would be an outrage upon this large number of settlers who have at great hardship to themselves gone into this choice section of country and established their nomes. would like the House to understand thoroughly the responsibility they are taking in this matter. It is suggested that there are some difficulties of construction connected with the route laid out for this Lake Dauphin Railway. Surely it is no objection to a railway charter that the country over which the railway is proposed to be built is one of some difficulty. But I do not believe that is true. From the information I have been able to obtain, a railway running from Arden, the place selected as terminus of the Lake Dauphin Railway, and going northward into the Lake Dauphin country, would be easy of construction, because there are natural gravel ridges running northerly across the Riding Mountain which seem almost to have been placed there for the purposes of a railway line. Under these circumstances, I think I should be very hardy settlers in the Lake Dauphin district who have gone there knowing the value of the country, who are attempting to make a home for themselves, and to whom a railway is an absolute necessity, if I did not make this motion.

Mr. CASEY. I have only two words to say on this subject. I am quite in accord with the motion of my hon, friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin). I believe this road will not cause any unfair competition with the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway; and it would be my interest as well as my duty to defend that railway from any unfair competition. But, considering the distance of the two roads apart, as Lam informed, and the short hauls that are possible in a prairie country, I believe no unfair competition will be caused by the construction of this road. I may be allowed also to urge that at the time the vote was taken in the committee, it was about the lunch hour when many members were absent, and it was impossible to obtain a fair decision of the question, and the Bill was rejected by a very close majority.

Motion agreed to.

THE CHENIER MONUMENT.

Mr. BRODEUR asked. Were the monuments erected to Maisonneuve and Sir John A. Macdonald, at Montreal, entered at the customs; or were they delivered to the committees of management before an Order in Council admitting them free of duty was passed? In the latter case, did the Government take security from any persons for the payment of customs duty, in case the same shall be required? What is the nature of such security, and who are the persons? Do the Government intend to allow the Chenier Monument Committee to take possession in the same manner and on the same conditions, as in the case of the Maisonneuve and Macdonald monuments?

WALLACE. The monuments of Maisonneuve and Sir John A. Macdonald were delivered after arrangements had been made for passing Orders in Council authorizing free admission. In this case, which is different from the others, so far no decision has been arrived at, and therefore the department has no power to authorize free entry.

SEIZURES OF STILL AT L'ISLET.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Has the Government found out who is the owner of the still seized some time ago at L'Islet station on the Intercolonial Railway? If so, what is his name, and is he to be prosecuted?

The Govern-Mr. WOOD (Brockville). ment have been informed that one Napoléon | a little while longer. To-morrow when the Dussault is the owner of the still seized some time ago at L'Islet station on the Intercolonial Railway. He is to be prosecuted, a case now being in the hands of the agent of the Department of Justice.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION.

Mr. BRUNEAU asked, Is it true that a large number of Civil Service employees have been superannuated? If so, what are their names? In what departments were they employed? What was the salary in each case? How many years had they been in the service of the Government? What is the age of each of the said employees? How much did each of them contribute to the superannuation fund? What is the amount of the yearly allowance to be received by each of the said retired employees? What are the reasons which caused the superannuation of the said employees?

Mr. MONTAGUE. This question asks for an amount of information which it would take a very great deal of time to prepare, as the Superannuation Act has been in force for a number of years. The information asked for, I think, might very properly be made the subject of a motion for a return, but not the subject of a question.

SOUTHAMPTON CUSTOMS OFFICER.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Who is the customs officer at Southampton? When was he appointed? What was his salary when first appointed? What is it now? Who was his predecessor in office, and what was his salary?

Mr. WALLACE. We have no collector there; the acting officer at present is Mr. William Johnston. He has not been appointed to that position, but was placed temporarily in charge on the 1st of March, 1894, after the death of the late sub-collector. His salary at that time was $1.50 per day. It is $50 per month now. Mr. James Fleming was his predecessor in office; salary, $400 per annum. I may add that the name of Mr. George Smith is now before the Council for permanent appointment, and I understand has passed the Treasury Board, at the same salary as the forner occupant of the office, namely, $400 per annum.

RUMOURED RESIGNATION OF MIN-ISTERS.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the Orders of the day are called, I would ask the Miniser of Finance whether he can give any information to the House with regard to the resignation of three prominent members d the Administration.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have to ask my hon. friend to cultivate the virtue of patience for

Mr. MARTIN.

House meets we shall make a positive statement with regard to that matter.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend has asked me so often this session to cultivate that virtue that I think I have it in perfection now. As an evidence of it, I will wait until to-morrow.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES REPRE-SENTATION ACT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 121) further to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act.-(Mr. Daly.)

(In the Committee.)

2. The second paragraph of the form substituted for form L of the said Act by section thirteen of chapter fifteen of the Statutes of 1894, is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:—

"If any elector finds that his name is not on the voters' list of the polling division to which he belongs, he may apply to the enumerator, not later than two days from the polling day, to have his name added to the said list."

(2.) The words "Here insert oath No. 1. See form P," which follow the said second paragraph, are hereby struck out.

Mr. CHARLTON. Hon. gentlemen on this side asked, when we were last in committee on this Bill, that consideration of this clause should be deferred in order to provide against the consequence that might result from the stuffing of the lists by an enumerator who is, in a sense, an irresponsible officer. The ground was taken that a provision should be made to provide for keeping separate the ballots cast by voters placed upon the lists by the enumerators within two days of an election. If an appeal were taken against the decision of the enumerator in putting certain names upon the lists, and if the court of appeal held that he had put them wrongly on the lists, there should be some way of tracing these ballots in order to prevent their deciding an election. The enumerator is here clothed with more arbitrary power than the revising barrister, because he may put on names of his own motion, and without any restriction, and it might be found out afterwards, on appeal, that the persons whose names he had added had no right to vote at all.

Mr. DALY. The law is exactly as it has stood ever since 1886 when representation was given the North-west Territories, with the exception that a change was made in the law providing that the enumerator should not put names on the list the day before the election, but only two days before the election. The clause reads as follows:-

If any enumerator, at any time after posting up any voters' list, and two days before the polling day, is fully satisfied, from representations made to him by any credible persons, that the name of any qualified voter has been omitted from the voters' lists of the polling division to which such that we should provide for an appeal from voter belongs, he shall add such name to the copy of the list in his possession, below his own signature, and shall attest such addition by his initials; if the enumerator, in like manner, is fully satisfied that there is on the list the name of any person who is not qualified as a voter in such polling division, he may draw erasing lines through such names, and write his own initials opposite thereto in the column for remarks; and, if the enumerator finds the occupation, addition or residence of any voter to be inaccurately stated in the list, he may make the necessary alterations and affix his initials thereto in like manner.

The next clause provides:—

Every enumerator, having revised and corrected such retained copy of each voters' list compiled by him, if he deems such correction necessary, as provided in the next preceding section, shall write at the foot of such copy and close to the last name thereon, two days immediately preceding the polling day, a certificate in the form of the second certificate contained in form K of the schedules of this Act.

Form K simply cites the number, name, occupation or addition, residence and remarks, certified to by the enumerator as a true copy of the voters' lists in polling division No. - of the electoral district of as prepared by me for use in the election of the member of the House of Commons for the said electoral district. Then there is the following note: "Here the enumerator shall make any addition to the list which he finds necessary," after which he certifies as follows:-

I certify that the foregoing is a correct list of the voters in polling district No. in the dis-, as revised or as finally aptrict of proved by me.

The enumerator takes an oath to act faithfully as such without partiality, fear, favour or affection; and up to the present we have never heard the fairness of the enumerators being called into question. Under the old law the enumerator was permitted to add names on the list on the very polling day, but now we provide that he can only do so two days before the polling day. We are surrounding it with a safeguard it had not before and are prejudicing no class of elec-

Mr. CHARLTON. In my opinion it is a matter of very little importance whether the names are put on the list one or two days before the polling day. The point I make is that if, on appeal, the action of the enumerator is not upheld-

Mr. DALY. There is no appeal. under the impression that there was one, but I find there is not.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is there no appellant jurisdiction? Is the enumerator master of the situation?

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think it is high time the decision of the enumerator in placing names upon the list. We have a condition of things in the North-west that is most extraordinary. The enumerator has free license to put names upon the lists, and there is no provision whatever for an appeal. The elections in the North-west are placed in the hands of a single man, who is the appointee of the Government and who may work any mischief he pleases without any remedy against his conduct.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to say that these enumerators provided for in the Territories are simply a farce and their voters' lists worth nothing. It is simply an expenditure of Government money for no purpose whatever. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is not aware that a man can vote there, whether he is on the list or not? Any person can come up on election day and vote, and the only way to prevent his voting is to offer him the oath. But bad and crude as are the arrangements there, so much do they excel the outrageous Franchise Act in force in the rest of the Dominion that I have offered heretofore no objections to them.

Mr. DAVIN. We have found in the Northwest that our plan works well, and have had no complaint from any quarter. I am very glad my hon, friend thinks it better than any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. McCARTHY. It appears to me very extraordinary that, without notice of any kind a man can go to the enumerator and have his name put upon the list; and also, if I understood the section as read by the hon. Minister, that if the enumerator thinks the name ought not to be there he can, without notice, strike it off. It does appear to me that that is a most outrageous state of affairs.

Mr. MARTIN. The list is no good. What is the use of it?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not know as to that; I have not had an opportunity of looking at the law.

Mr. MACDOWALL. The object is to make the franchise in the North-west as wide as possible.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You are making it wider than the country.

Mr. MACDOWALL. A great many people are constantly coming into the Northwest, and the object is to provide that if they have been there three months and are British subjects, they may be entitled to vote. The enumerator prepares the list, and there are very few additions to it. This establishes practically manhood suffrage, and almost everybody of 21 years and upwards has the right to vote.

Mr. MARTIN. He does not even need to be on the list.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. MULOCK. I observe that the amendment speaks of an "elector," not a "person." It would appear from this that this clause is intended to authorize the transfer of names from one list to another. Is that the object, or is it to put names on that have not been on before?

Mr. DALY. It is intended to put names on that were not on before. If the hon, gentleman will look at the clause he will see that it is really not an amendment at all. Last session we amended clause 31, which I read to the House, by requiring any enumerator, after posting up the voters' list, to add to the list the name of any elector who applied within two days before the date of polling. All the clause does is to include this change in form L, of the Bill.

Mr. MULOCK. What legal penalties are there if the enumerator does not discharge his duties properly?

Mr. DALY. I do not know that there are any legal penalties except such as attach to a breach of his oath.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not see that there is any adequate provision for checking of the addition to the list of the names of parties who are not residents of the country, and even of parties who are not British subjects. It seems to me that where you have so loose a method of preparing the voters' list, it should be provided that affidavits may be put to the parties upon presenting themselves to vote which would cover all the requisite qualifications; so that you could test their right to vote even after the vote has been recorded. The list ought to be conclusive where it is prepared so loosely as it is in the North-west Territories.

Bill reported.

Mr. DALY moved third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the hon. gentleman had better not press the third reading to-day. We would like to have an opportunity of comparing this Bill with the original, and see how it gives protection in the preparation of the lists, or in the qualifications that are set out. My impression is, speaking only from my recollection of the original Bill, that there is no adequate provision for excluding from the list the names of those who are not British subjects, or those who have not resided the requisite time in the Territories. With the lists prepared in such a loose way, it seems to me that the oath which may be put to the elector when he presents himself for the purpose of voting should be one under which he would affirm that he possesses the qualifications which the law requires. The list ought not to be a finality where special legislation of this kind is necessary. For this reason, I would like the hon. gentleman not to press the third reading to-day.

Mr. DALY. I will read, for the information of the hon. gentleman, the law as it stands. This matter was before the House last session, and no objection was raised at that time. All that this Bill does is to correct the error in last year's legislation, by changing the form "L" in the schedule. The duties of the enumerator are as follows:—

Each such enumerator, upon his appointment, and having first taken the oath of office, shall immediately thereafter compile a list of the persons qualified as electors to vote at the election then pending, for the polling division or each of the polling divisions for which he has been appointed; and he shall make three plainly-written copies of the same, with the names of the voters alphabetically arranged, giving the occupation and residence of each voter, in the form K, in the schedule to this Act.

The oath taken by the voter is to the effect that he is of the full age of twenty-one years, is not an alien or an Indian, and has resided three months in the electoral district, and twelve months in the Territories.

Mr. McCARTHY. I understand that no man is deprived of his vote by not being on the list. That being so, no one would care to take the trouble of having his name put on the list, unless there was some reason why he could not take the oath before the returning officer. It seems to me, that this provision is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. MACDOWALL. If there are voters in the district and their names are not on the list, the only protection you can have is to make them take the oath. But if the oath is provided and there are no lists, it would take more than a day to get through, for the oath would have to be put to all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It will not delay the Bill five minutes to postpone the third reading.

Mr. DALY. I have no objections.

Mr. LAURIER moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

SENATE AND THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Resolution (p. 3915) reported from committee respecting the indemnity of members of the Senate and House of Commons, was read the first time.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of the resolution.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not object to the provisions of the resolution, but I would ask the leader of the House why the Government should adopt the policy of coming to the House yearly for the last three sessions to have this principle, already admitted, allowed by the House? If this is a proper provision, why not make it permanent by statute?

Mr. McCARTHY. I was going to draw attention to the fact that there are a few gentlemen in the House who are connected with the militia service who have been obliged to attend during the session, and also to attend to their militia duties. It appears to me that an exception should be made in their case. If, in order to attend to a public duty, they are necessarily obliged to absent themselves, they should not have been penalized like the rest of us who, perhaps, sometimes absent themselves for other purposes than attending to public duties.

Mr. FOSTER. The question was mooted yesterday as to whether it would not be better to make this a permanent Act. think the first occasion of the addition was on account of a long session, and for that there was a particular reason, although the addition was in a different manner from this. It was special legislation, and for that year alone. Afterwards the very question that my hon. friend has just now mentioned came up, and certain gentlemen who were attached to the militia, and who, while the House was in session, were absent for some ten or twelve days, thought it is somewhat unfair that they should lose their sessional allowance by so much for those days of absence when they were on militia service. If mistake not, this arrangement was assented to at the time, and a special Bill was put through, granting this number of days in addition, so as to cover the time spent at drill. In that respect, gentlemen who go away do not lose anything for that reason. Of course, it may be argued that other members who do not attend drill, may have a similar advantage, as they have twelve days to come and go upon with reference to their private business; whereas the twelve days are entirely taken out with respect to those gentlemen who attend drill on account of the public service which they are engaged upon. That is true so far as it goes, but I think it was pretty well understood that the twelve days should be considered as an arrangement which would at least not mulct these gentlemen in any penalty in the way of loss for the time that they were engaged in militia service. As this Bill has now passed the House for three successive sessions, I think there is a good deal to be said in favour of its being made part of a permanent Bill, and next year-

Mr. McCARTHY. Next January.

Mr. CHARLTON. "Deo volente."

Mr. FOSTER—or the session thereafter; I shall move in that direction.

Mr. O'BRIEN. As one of the persons interested, I do not care to say very much upon this question; but I may say this, however, that I certainly did understand from the gentleman at the head of the department with which I was concerned, that an exception would be made for those officers who attend drill-since this session the order for the drill was not issued until some time after the session had been in progressand there was an understanding certainly among the members of the House that the usual allowance would be made to such I think the members in their absence. House will admit that it is manifestly unfair that gentlemen who, for twelve days, attend to their private business should be in a much better position than those who are necessarily absent in the discharge of a public duty; and I would put it to the House whether it is not exceedingly unfair With rethat they should be so dealt with. gard to the general question, I think it may fairly be argued that the system which has been in vogue for several sessions, operates very fairly to gentlemen who are at a distance from the capital. It is well known that many members of this House can go home every week and attend to their business without loss, whereas gentlemen who live at a greater distance are unable to do the same thing without loss. Therefore, I think the allowance of twelve days has the effect of placing gentlemen in this House who live at a distance from the capital on the same footing as those who live near it, and who can more easily absent themselves from their private business.

Mr. LAURIER. I would suggest to my hon. friend, as there appears to be a universal expression of sentiment in this House in that direction, that this resolution should extend also to officers of the militia.

Mr. FOSTER. It does extend to officers of the militia.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As I understand it, some of those who are officers of the militia and members of this House, may have taken a few days from their private business before they were aware that they would be called out for drill; so that they are in a disadvantageous position in that respect as compared with other members of the House.

Resolution read the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 143) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SILVER-LEAD SMELTING.

Bill (No. 142) to encouring exilver-lead smelting (Mr. Foster) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. O'BRIEN.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. MARA. I am afraid that the words used here, "silver-lead," will exclude some of the ores that it is desired to assist as well as silver-lead. For instance, in the Toad Mountain district, in Kootenay, the ores are silver and copper. Then, again, in the Trail Creek district, the ores are gold and iron. With the clause as it now reads, I am afraid that these ores would be excluded, whereas I think it is not the intention of the Government to exclude any ores that are smelted within the Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to that, I have taken what information I could get from experts, and according to that information, the signification put on the word "smelting" would take in all the classes of ores that ought really to be included under the encouragement given to this industry. They will not take in any ores which are not fit for smelting, such as those which are produced by other processes outside of the real smelting process; but this will take in the very ores in that district of which the hon. gentleman has spoken.

Mr. MARA. The leader of the House is correct, if these ores were all smelted together. The Slocan ores are argentiferous galena, the Toad Mountain ores carry silver and copper, and the Trail Creek carry gold and iron. If all were smelted they would come within the clause under the head of silver-lead ores; but if treated separately at each different mining camp, I am afraid that the clause as it now stands will not cover them. That is the point I want to be distinctly understood. It will take a little time to frame an amendment to cover the point.

Mr. FOSTER. This will take in the ores that we want to take in, those for which the bounty is to be given, namely, silverlead smelting ores. It includes all the lead ores, all that class of dry siliceous ores of which I spoke the other day, it will also take in the sulphides which are found in the district referred to. The ores there I am told carry a small proportion of copper, but the copper in the smelting is recovered as a side product. What we particularly want to do is to encourage the industry of lead smelting, the production of lead bullion, and the information I have is that this term will include these ores.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The usual galena ores.

Mr. FCSTER. Yes. We can pass the Bill through committee and defer the third reading.

Mr. MASSON. Is this ton to be weighed as the ore goes in or comes out?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a ton of ore.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it a long ton or two thousand pounds?

Mr. FOSTER. Two thousand pounds.

On section 7.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I do not object to this Bill, but I desire to know if the Government intend to give a bounty in favour of glass works which it is intended to establish in Rivière du Loup, in Temiscouata? A petition has been sent to the Government from Capt. Prince and Mr. Pender asking for a bounty. I should like to know what the Government propose to do with respect to this petition.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government has received a petition as stated with respect to making glass. It has also received a petition for a bounty for that and for other different industries. The Government is not in a position to go any further this year than it is going with respect to silver-lead smelting. As I said the other night with respect to experiments and granting aid in different departments of horticulture, when speaking on the subject of fruit farms, all we can do is to take the most important branches of industry and aid them to the extent we can do so, having in view the condition of the revenue at the time.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. May I hope that next year something may be done for this industry?

Mr. FOSTER. We do not know. Bill reported.

THE CUSTOMS ACT.

Mr. WALLACE moved second reading of Bill (No. 140) further to amend the Customs Act.

Mr. LAURIER. Please explain.

Mr. WALLACE. I think I explained the nature of the Bill when it was introduced the other day. The first important object of the Bill is to provide that meetings of the Board of Customs shall be legal without the presence of an assistant commissioner, the law at present providing that the board shall consist of the commissioner, and assistant commissioner and certain other officers. We have no assistant commissioner, and this Bill is to make the meetings of the board legal whether an assistant commissioner is present or not. Another object of the Bill is to declare what shall constitute a quorum of the board. The third object is to explain the class of men who may be appointed on the Board of Customs, so that we may have advantage of the services of men of wide experience in the Customs Department on the board. These are the objects sought to be attained by the proposed amendments contained in the Bill.

Mr. LAURIER. When this Bill was introduced the other day, I called the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact-indeed, I did not call his attention, but he himself told the House—that the Bill was, as he said, to constitute a board without the presence of the assistant commissioner. hon, gentleman told us at that time that he had made no provision this year for the salary of the assistant commissioner, but the hon, gentleman was reminded by my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that the law provides for an assistant commissioner, and that it was altogether illegal on the part of the hon. gentleman not to provide for his salary. The office is wanted, or not wanted. If the office is wanted, there should be an appointment, and a salary voted. If the office is not wanted, it should be dispensed with by law. But so long as the law exists, it is the duty of the hon. gentleman to have an assistant commissioner appointed, and to have a salary provided for. As I understand from the action of the Controller, he considers that the office is not wanted, and if that is the case, his clear duty is, not to evade the law in this way, but rather to have the law amended.

Mr. WALLACE. Where does the hon. gentleman get his authority that the law provides for an assistant commissioner?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The words are these:

There shall be a Commissioner of Customs, who shall be the Deputy of the Minister of Customs, and an Assistant Commissioner, appointed by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the date of that Act?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). 1886.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Act constituting the Controllership repealed that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The statutes were revised in 1886, and that Act was passed in 1887.

Mr. McCARTHY. If that is so, the language of this clause is not right. It refers to the "Assistant Commissioner of Customs, if there is one appointed."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think the Controller objects to striking that out.

Mr. McCARTHY. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not at all in compliance with the desire of those interested in trade. The Board of Trade of Montreal—and I think their action has been approved of by most of the boards of trade, if not all of them—are desirous that not custom-house officers, but experts—and they name the class—should be appointed to constitute this board. That is a question that ought to be determined on the second reading of the Bill. It is quite clear that a very great deal of dissatisfaction exists amongst the importers throughout the whole country, with regard to the way the customs law is interpreted, and the Montreal Board of Trade, which is by no means unfavourable to the Government, has taken the matter up and sent a petition which we have all received, and in that they set out very clearly the grievances under which the importing trade has been labouring. I, for my part, until I hear something to the conclusions of the board of trade, and to say that this Act should not be passed in its present shape.

Bill read the second time and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have before me the statute creating this department in 1887, and I do not find any alteration whatever in the constitution of the Customs branch, nor do I find any provision by which the Assistant Commissioner of Customs is dispensed with. If the Controller of Customs has the statute before him, perhaps he will point out the provision which he thinks gives him the right to dispense with the appointment of an officer whose duties and salaries are provided for by law. The statute of 1886 clearly provides for an Assistant Commissioner of Customs. Where the law provides for the appointment of an officer, and where Parliament assumes that such an officer is necessary, and entrusted the Governor in Council with the duty of defining what the duties of that officer shall be, it seems to me that there is no discretionary power left to them in the matter. On the contrary, Parliament having provided for that officer, the discretion of the Governor in Council extends only to a definition of what the duties and functions of that officer shall be. That he shall exist. and that he shall have functions is decided by Parliament. That being so, I think there has been a dereliction of duty. in the opinion of the Ministers. is necessity for such there no office and the salary for the office can be saved to the public, they should come down to the House and propose to amend the law so as to dispense with the office in a regular and constitutional way. The hon. Controller proposes here that there shall be a Board of Customs, which shall consist of the Commissioner of Customs, or any officer for the time being acting as such, the Assistant Commissioner of Customs, if there is one appointed, and so forth. I think that assumption of the dispensing power would be a monstrous power for the Government to take. There should either be or not be an Assistant Commissioner of Customs; the law as it stands provides for one, and here the hon. member proposes incidentally to dispense with that officer if the Government think proper. I do not think that is a proper mode ed, and there is no provision in the Estimates of procedure at all. It is giving to the Government a very much wider discretion than any Government ought to have. Where a government is making a new departure and constituting a new set of offices, where their proceedings are altogether tentative, because there has not been adequate experience to guide them, there may be some reason for giving them for a limited time a discretionary power on which legislation trary, am quite willing to accept the con- may ultimately be based. But that is not the position of the Government, surely, after the existence of a Customs Department ever since the union-to come down to the House and ask for power which they bave not possessed up to this moment. Their experience is surely sufficiently wide to enable them to determine how the department should be constituted, and that being so they ought to state definitely in the law what offices they think necessary in the public interest. Then, there is the further considerationthe appointment of appraisers, which the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. Mc-Carthy) has referred to. It is obvious that the commercial classes of this country are appraised by the Customs Department. The circulars which I suppose have been addressed to every member of this House are a sufficient indication of that fact. persons called upon to discharge these duties ought to be persons of high standing, in whom the commercial classes of the country have the utmost confidence. It is well known that at one time all the consular service of England was in the hands of the mercantile classes of London; and, although the Government have taken charge of that service, they have appointed men whom the commercial classes of the country regard as eminently well fitted for the discharge of the duties. It seems to me that is the rule that ought to be adopted in the appointment of appraisers in Canada, so that the commercial classes will not be dealt with unequally or unsatisfactorily, and will not be put in a worse position than Parliament intended to put them in by the imposition of the duties provided for in our tariff.

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think the difficulty as to the Assistant Commissioner of Customs might be understood if I were to mention the sequence of the legislation. The hon, gentleman refers to the provision in the statutes of 1886, relating to the office of assistant commissioner. section was repealed by the statute of 1888. Then, the Controller of Customs has this Bill with these words in it. If I understood the hon. Controller, he has no objection to dropping the words, "the Assistant Commissioner of Customs if there is one appointed." and I think that will cause this point in the discussion to disappear.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No. There is no Assistant Commissioner at the present time, although the law requires one to be appointfor the salary of such officer, and my point is that that is a discretion not entrusted to the Government.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I apprehended the hon, gentleman correctly. I say the discussion as to what the state of things should be will disappear if that office disappears, and this Bill amends the statute of 1888 in that direction.

Mr. McCARTHY. It still leaves the part relating to the Assistant Commissioner unaffected.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the words, "the Assistant Commissioner of Customs, if there is one appointed," are dropped in this Bill, you will have a Board of Customs consisting of the Commissioner of Customs or any officer for the time being acting as such, and the other officers named other than the Assistant Commissioner of Customs.

Mr. LAURIER. You have a Board of Customs without the Assistant Commissioner of Customs, but you have still an Assistant Commissioner of Customs according to the law.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It only requires another clause and that office can be abolished.

Mr. LAURIER. The Controller of Customs told us the other day, when his Bili was introduced, that there was no such office as the Commissioner of Customs existing by law.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know the difficulty and I simply said that we would avoid all discussion because the Controller was willing, as I understood him, that the office of Assistant Commissioner should be abolished, and I propose by amendment to abolish it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not understand that we do it in that way. My point is this, that the law requires that an Assistant Commissioner shall exist to be a member of this board. The hon, gentleman has no Assistant Commissioner and he is taking no appropriation for the office; yet in the Bill before us he proposes to continue the office with the discretionary power of the Government to dispense with the appointment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He does not propose to do that, though the Bill does.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman will see the point I am taking. I am calling attention to the actual condition of things, under the law as it stands, and to the fact that the hon, gentleman is exercising a discretion above the law in dispensing with the office and the salary.

Mr. WALLACE. The leader of the Opposition must have quite misunderstood what I said, because I expressed no opinion whatever as to whether the office had been abolished or not. I simply said that no salary had been voted for the Assistant Commissioner, and that, because men are not likely to work for nothing, no Assistant Commissioner was appointed.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me that the Commissioner of Customs had been virtually ignorant of the Act under which he is called upon to take action. The Act of itself is mandatory in character. "There shall be an Assistant Commissioner." I do not think, therefore, that the mere neglect of the Government to provide for the salary has the effect of abolishing the office. If the Government do not want an Assistant Commissioner, let them ask to have the Act amended.

Mr. McCARTHY. I understand the Minister of Justice proposes to abolish the office, and that ought to be satisfactory. It is, at all events, to me. I do not know that the Controller should be so much blamed when the Ministers of Justice and Finance are equally ignorant.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We take it altogether.

Mr. LAURIER. Better to have a general execution.

Mr. McCARTHY. With regard to the other matter, which I desire to press now in committee, I would like to have some answer given by a member of the Government. Before we went into committee I pointed out that the mercantile community of the country are very much dissatisfied with the present law and are equally dissatisfied, as far as we can judge by their petitions, with this proposed amendment. Montreal is certainly an important city. I have here a copy of a petition from the Board of Trade, signed by all the leading merchants apparently of this city. The members of the city do not seem to be here to say a word in its behalf, and I look round for the members from Toronto.

Mr. COCKBURN. We are all here.

Mr. McCARTHY. I hope the hon. gentleman will say something on behalf of the merchants of his city.

Mr. FOSTER. They are often here when you are not.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is so, but I am here now.

Mr. FOSTER. How long will you stay?

Mr. McCARTHY. Until the session is over, and I daresay the hon. gentleman would be very glad if I were away. Petitions largely signed have been presented to the House from nearly all the boards of trade of the Dominion, and it is hardly possible the Government can ignore the weight of public opinion shown by these petitions. What has been the habit of the customs authorities of this country? They have practically treated all the importers as smugglers; they have treated them prima facie as trying to evade the customs laws. These laws are, no doubt, difficult to interpret. Some of these difficulties are indicated in a correspondence published in the "Pharmaceutical Journal," which shows that most extraordinary decisions have been arrived at by the customs authorities. Take, for instance, this provision of the tariff:

Surgical instruments of all kinds, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Now splints used by surgeons for setting broken bones might surely be considered as covered by "instruments of all kinds." Yet, what does the department say?

		Pe	r cent.
Splints	made of	wood	2 5
-	do	iron and steel	271/2
•	cb	copper or plate	30
	do	paper	35

So we have the department interpreting this statute as applying to splints no less than four different qualifications, and there are certainly some equally ridiculous classifications or rulings of the department given in other portions of the correspondence. Now, the proposition seems to me an eminently fair one which the petitioners submit, namely, that a board of experts be established to consist of five members, being one for each of the principal branches of trade drugs and chemicals, fancy goods, staticnery, jewellery, groceries, provisions, leather and shoe bindings. The appointments to be made on the basis of competence for the office, and sufficient remuneration to be given in order to secure men technically competent, and with business experience. so that the board may enjoy the confidence of the merchants. The board to have power to administer the oath and subpoena witnesses. Its decisions to be sent to the collectors of customs and boards of trade throughout the country, so as to promote uniformity in the classification of duties. And the right of appeal to the Exchequer Court to be given. That scheme seems to me eminently right and fair, and I would like to know why the Government has not adopted it.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon, member for North Simcoe has told the House that the Department of Customs has treated the importers as a body of smugglers. Sir, I deny the statement, and I challenge him to produce any reputable merchant who will endorse it. I can show the hon, gentleman numerous letters from the leading importers in Canada expressing satisfaction with the course of the Customs Department in fairly and impartially carrying out the law. These gentlemen are not treated as smugglers; they are treated as honest, reputable citizens of Canada by the Department of Customs. With reference to the classification according to the material of certain articles, which the hon, gentleman assumes to call absurd and ridiculous, our officers have simply been carrying out the law enacted many years ago and re-enacted at different times by the Parliament of Canada. Section 13 of the Customs Act says:

On each and every non-enumerated article which bears a similitude, either in material or quality, or the use to which it may be applied, to any enumerated article chargeable with duty, the same rate of duty shall be payable which is charged on the enumerated article which it most resembles in any of the particulars before-mentioned.

That is, articles of wood come under the classification of manufactures of wood, articles of iron come under the classification of manufactures of iron, in accordance with the customs law. As to this cry that has been raised by the Montreal Board of Trade, asking for the appointment of a number of appraisers, which the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) would lead the House to infer was the universal wish of the boards of trade and of commercial men throughout Canada, I deny the inference altogether. It is quite true that that letter was sent to all the boards of trade in Canada, and that that private circular was sent to the leading merchants—I have copies of them here—asking them to do their utmost to promote the change, particularly in the city of Toronto. Those boards of trade that have taken the trouble to investigate these matters have declined to concur in the proposal of the Montreal Board of Trade. Sir, what does the Ottawa Board of Trade say? They have passed a resolution, which I have here—and I may say that it was passed without my knowledge and was proposed by a leading member of the Liberal party, a gentleman who is also one of the leading business men of the city of Ottawa-Mr. C. Ross, of Messrs. C. Ross & Co. The resolution is as follows:-

Resolved, that in relation to the subject-matter of a petition of the Montreal Board of Trade, this council is of opinion that, while some action toward improving the present system may be necessary, that the proposal to appoint a permanent board of five experts for the whole Dominion for the principal branches of trade is not advisable, and would not fully meet the requirements, for the following reasons:—

It would add $25,000 or $30,000 to the expense of the administration of customs for a doubtful benefit.

The department has already officers in almost every port of entry, also an organization which has at its disposal the best expert opinion of the Dominion.

There is an exchequer court of appeal, which would still be a resort from expert decisions.

Decisions would be those of a single expert, and could not gain satisfaction at all times.

It would not bring uniformity of appraisement, as, unless classification is appealed against, differences might not be known to the Board of Experts, and if appeals are made from local decisions and classifications, the present organization has every facility for correct decisions.

It would not render more expeditious service; the single expert in each or any branch might be simultaneously called upon to act in cases at many different ports, e.g., at Halifax, at Winnipeg or Vancouver.

This council is, therefore, of the opinion that the remedy lies in the improvement of the present organization, i.e., by the appointment only of efficient officers in each port of entry, or the principal ports of entry in each district, who should be required to qualify by examination for the office.

Copies of this resolution were forwarded to the Montreal and Toronto Boards of Trade, and will be brought up at the next full meeting of the board.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the date?

I have not the date. Mr. WALLACE. This was taken from one of the Ottawa papers. And what does the Toronto Board of Trade say? They have looked into this proposition made by the Montreal Board of Trade, and have refused to acquiesce in it. So far as I have seen, they have passed no resolution on the subject. But I was informed by the secretary of the Toronto Board of Trade that they were making exhaustive examination into the whole question, and had decided that the proposals of the Montreal Board of Trade are most unwise and most unsatisfactory, and they could not agree with them. That is the opinion, so far as I have learned, though not yet adopted by formal resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade. Now, Sir, these gentlemen tell us to adopt the system prevailing in the United States? What is that system? They have a board of nine experts in the city of New York. I myself had several long interviews with these gen-Some gentlemen in the city of Montreal appear to have a clearer knowledge and a higher appreciation of the system in use in the United States than the Americans themselves. I have the resolution passed by the Merchants' Association of the city of Boston on 10th May, 1895, concerning this United States board of experts:

Whereas, the question of undervaluation of imported merchandise at the chief ports of this country has become so alarming to the mercantile community,

Resolved, that the directors of the Boston Merchants' Association support the Treasury officials in their efforts to prosecute undervaluation, to the end that whatever the rates of duty may be, and the penalties following, violations of the law shall be impartially and effectually prosecuted; and we recommend to the State Department at Washington that a circular letter of instructions be sent to the consuls at the different ports of exportation, setting forth the magnitude of this evil of undervaluation, requesting them to inform themselves as to the question of market value, to the end that honest importers and homest American manufacturers may be protected and that the treesury of the United States receive its just due,

Also, that the corps of special agents of the Treasury stationed abroad be placed upon such a basis of efficiency as will insure reliable investigation in regard to the conditions of cost of manufacture and sale in all foreign exporting centres as will assist the local appraisers and United States Board of General Appraisers in the performance of their important duties.

That is the way this matter is viewed by those who have had actual experience of the state of affairs in the United States. We are told: Follow the American plan, and appoint an appraiser for every branch. But that is not the American plan. They have appointed nine appraisers. Of these, six were lawyers before their appointment. Of the other three, one was a hotel-keeper, one was in some other business, and the third was engaged in the United States service, in the Treasury Board at Washington. The Montreal Board of Trade propose to appoint a dry goods man, a grocer, a hardware man, a druggist, and so on. I know where the inspiration in the Montreal Board of Trade in this matter came from. What would be the effect of adopting that course, Mr. Chairman? Suppose we had these men sitting here at the city of Ottawa, and a question came up. What does the hardware man know about dry goods; what does the grocery man know about drugs and medicine? In the end, the decision would be left to the one having knowledge of the trade in question. And so, in the opinion of only reality, be given upon one I say that proposal of the Montreal Board of Trade, which the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has endorsed, without examination, would be a total failure. What is the plan to-day? When a question comes up before us, suppose it is a question of dry goods appraisement or classification, it is referred immediately, with the samples, to the dry goods appraisers in Toronto, Hamilton. Montreal, Halifax, Quebec or St. John, to the appraisers in four or five ports, and in that way I have the opinions, as to the classification and appraisement of the most competent and experienced appraisers we have in the Dominion. I have the opinions of these five or six gentlemen in a few days, and then we are in the best position. with the evidence of these experts before us, to form a just conclusion, and these conclusions are generally found to be satisfactory. Then we have an advantage over the American method, which these gentlemen want us to copy, in this fact, that the decisions in the United States are scarcely ever final. There is a decision of the board of appraisers, which can be appealed against to a circuit court, the decision of the circuit court can be carried to another court, and thence to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there is no final decision until it has run the gauntlet of all these courts. Here we have the decision of the department, which can be appealed against as to the value. If a merchant says: You have put a value of $100 upon that article, and we appeal from your decision because we think the article should only be valued at $75-the matter may immediately go to a board of arbitration under sections 70 and 72 of the Customs Act with only the smallest cost and trouble, and a decision is arrived at after evidence has been heard from both sides, and the decision of the board of arbitration is final. Then, with reference to all other questions coming before the department, the decisions are prompt, and they are final, except appeal may be made to the Governor in Council. In the United States, as I have been informed, in one case alone, a case of caps and hat linings, which has been appealed from one court to another, a decision was given against the United States involving seven or eight million dollars. In the first place, the importers were not entitled to any benefit because they sold the goods on the basis of the duties they had paid, and received their profits on that basis. Then the lawyers took the case up and carried it from court to court, and the judgment stands to-day against the United States for seven and a half million dollars. I say that our system here which we are proposing to amend, and the amendment to which gives more extensive powers, and gives getting opportunity of evidence and more experienced men our department, will render impossible all the evils that exist to-day in the Department of Customs, and will make it more efficient than the proposal made by the Montreal Board of Trade, and which proposal, as I have before stated, was repudiated by the Ottawa Board of Trade, and failed to be endorsed by any board of trade which took the trouble to examine thoroughly into the matter.

The hon, gentleman at-Mr. LISTER. tempts to show how very advantageous the system in Canada is compared with that He tries to show of the United States. the House and the country that the Customs Act has worked, and is working with perfect smoothness and satisfaction to the people of the country. He denies the statement made by an hon. member of this House, that the department treats the importers of the country as a band of scoundrels. Now, Sir, whether the hon, gentleman is correct or not in his statement, it is very unfortunate indeed that the importers, the business people, the private citizens of Canada, from one end of it to the other, should be irritated beyond expression at the administration of the Customs Department in this country. It is a monstrous thing to place in the hands of one man the power to appoint his spies to visit places of business in the various towns, and without showing any authority, simply to demand from the people who may be in business, their invoices, not only for one year, but for years back, and threatening these persons that unless they submit to their demands, their places will be closed up. It is all very well for my hon, friend to talk of the administration of his department when these same spies knock at doors when the men of the house are not at home, and terrify the women on a charge of having smuggled goods, and demanding, in many cases, large sums of money for settling these cases, and always, I believe, putting at least half of that money into their own pockets, and probably a much larger proportion. It is, Sir, unfortunate indeed for the position of the hon, gentleman when we find that all over the country, from Montreal and every other city except Ottawa. complaints are made against the department on account of inefficient administration.

Mr. WALLACE. Where are these complaints made?

Mr. LISTER. I will tell you presently. I cannot better express the feeling of the country than by quoting a few words from a journal which I hold in my hand, dated June, 1895:

Who has not had some grievance with the present system of customs administration? The current mismanagement in this department affords the strongest possible invitation for general attack, and a change must take place or the Government itself will fall under a weight it cannot carry. The governing of Canada cannot be estimated as an easy task. It requires the best men of the country to conduct the ordinary business features of administration, and, while we will not attempt to criticise the ability or efficiency in any of the other departments of the Government, and while we might go so far as to admit the existence of every requirement in all other directions, we voice the feelings and convictions of the business men of the Dominion in saying that the Department of Customs is mismanaged, and that incompetency is current from the head down.

Further down, he goes on to say:

The system, as well as the detail, of administration is wrong, and no government can thrive and stand, bearing upon its back, as it were, the load involved in a maladministered customs department. Rulings are issued—one at variance with another. No fixed principle is current in the issuance of decisions—one decision contradicts another. The expression "at sixes and sevens" covers the position within the walls of the department, and business men cannot get replies for weeks and months in hundreds of cases from the officers of the department.

Sir, that article thoroughly voices the feeling of the people of this country who have to do with the Customs Department, and I do not believe that in any other country can be found where cases involving thousands and thousands of dollars are left to a single Minister to decide, without precedent, as he does probably. Perhaps influences are brought to bear; perhaps in some cases the head of that department may feel that it is a case that should not be strictly dealt with; in other cases, perhaps, he thinks that, by reason of the want of influence with the department, that person should be severely dealt with. Now, the hon. gentleman talks about the way the department is administered. I challenge him to show me any country to-day, where the head of a department would employ a man engaged in a particular business to go into the United States and find out the prices there, and come back here and find his report accepted by the Government. What do we find? A man in the trade is chosen for that purpose, a man whose whole interest is to prevent imports, a man whose interest it is to fix such a price upon the articles which he produces as to prevent importations, and thus allow him to have the full benefit of the Canadian market at the expense of the Canadian consumers. challenge my hon. friend to produce such a case in any other country. I say, moreover, that there is no Government that sends its spies throughout the country, who go into the retailers' establishments, who go into the wholesale dealers' establishments, who go into private residences throughout the country in the way I have attempted to describe, and who are paid in the way that officers in this department are paid. It is insolent, it is invading every private right, every privilege, when a man can walk into your house and make a charge against you or some member of your family, and extort from some person, it may be, who may have bought a shilling's worth of stuff from over the river without paying duty, any such sum that he is able to pay. The law which permits such a system is monstrous in the extreme, and the sooner it is done away with the better. My hon. friend has talked about the board of experts in the United States, and he has told us that six of them are lawyers, one is a hotel-keeper, and two follow some other occupation. My hon, friend knows that the board, as constituted in Canada is thoroughly reliable, reputable, and competent. The hon, gentleman would not follow the United States in that regard, but our people would feet that, having an independent board, one competent to deal with these questions, after a decision had been given by that board the matter had been fairly dealt with, and they would be satisfied. There is anything but satisfaction in the country to-day. In the words of the article quoted, the decisions are at variance, they are not in harmony with each other, they consist of the ipse dixit of the head of the department, and the importers have to submit or to appeal to the courts of the land, involving very heavy costs indeed. department managed properly? Is the statement made in this pamphlet correct? Let us see. No doubt my hon. friend will remember, when I mention it, that there have been very great frauds committed on The public has never the department.

He and his assistants sit in judgment; they hear evidence, it may be by affidavit, or it may be some word is whispered in the ear of the head of the department, which may, or may not, be true. As a matter of fact, they imported no goods from J. Stuart & Co., but they forged the invoices of J. Stuart & Co., in their office in Montreal. Boyd, Ryrie & Co.'s affidavits, I am told, were sworn to by Boyd, the head of the firm. The invoices were in the pigeon-holes of the department, the affidavits were also in those pigeon-holes, the invoices were fictitious, the Government or country have been defrauded out of thousands of dollars. The parties have gone on with their operations for a long time. There were many forged invoices, there were many false affidavits; there were many cases in which Boyd swore to what was not true. The Controller of Customs knew it. Sir, Montreal is a large city, the largest in this Dominion; but it was necessary for Boyd, Ryrie & Co. to go, not to a lawyer in the city of Montreal to defend them before the Customs Department, but they had to go to Toronto and get Mr. Fullerton, my hon. friend's lawyer. Mr. Fullerton defended the case before my hon. friend. Mr. Fullerton is his lawyer, Mr. Fullerton is his friend, and he acted for Boyd, Ryrie & Co. in the little office at the block. Were those men ever prosecuted, were they ever tried for perjury, were they ever tried for forg-ery? No. Were all the moneys they had defrauded this country out of extracted from them? I venture to say, no.

Did the world at large know that this supposed to be reputable firm of Montreal had been the department. The public has never heard anything about the matter. Perjury No. And why? Because it was tried in the little office on the hill. The door was shut. My hon. friend's friend was the counsel for Boyd, Ryrie & Co., and the case was argued and decision given. How was it decided? It would not do for the hon. gentleman to say that no punishment had been inflicted. Let my hon. friend answer; let my hon, friend demand a commission if he will. Sir, is that the only case? Ogilvie of Montreal, miller, politician, rich man generally, what do we find about him? Why, Sir, he imported corn into this country free of duty. He represented, or his man Friday did for him, that the corn had been exported; that it was imported for export, and in that way he paid no duty upon it. The duty that would have been payable to this country runs up into thousands of dollars. Affidavits were on file in the department that this corn had been imported and exported. The statement that it was exported is false. The corn had not been exported, and the revenue of this country had been defrauded. What did my hon. friend the Controller do with him? Did he put him into jail as he did poor McGreevy and Arnoldi, and where some others ought to be placed.

An hon. MEMBER. And Watters.

Mr. LISTER. And Watters, the poor fellow, who for four or five hundred dollars is punished and sent to jail for a year or two and is there now. What was done with Ogilvie? Did he pay any fine? I know not, but I believe it was very little, if anything. He walked into the little office on the hill. I do not know whether he had a lawyer or not, or if he had who his lawyer was. But I ask my hon. friend the Controller of Mr. FOSTER. Better bring them out, if you have them.

Mr. LISTER. I will bring them out at the proper time. I think that is enough for the present moment. Now, Sir, I say here in the presence of this House: The statements I have made are grave statements. I appreciate my responsibility in making them, and if my hon. friend thinks proper to demand a committee J undertake to give evidence in my possession establishing the statements I have made. These bethe administration of the Customs Depart-Entrusted with the tremendous ment. powers which Parliament has given to the Controller or to the head of that department; is it any wonder, I say, that influences may be brought to bear which may cause a partial judgment to be rendered? The Controller may have punished them. He may have inflicted fines, but I say that under the circumstances he had a say that under the circumstances he had no right to inflict fines. In the face of the fact that wilful and corrupt perjury had been committed his duty was to have prosecuted them before the courts of this country. I say that in taking a fine he compounded the offence. He made himself a party to the crime, because compounding a felony is a felony, and compounding a misdemeanour is a misdemeanour. And if the hon. gentleman knew that these affidavits were false, and if he knew that these invoices were forged, he should have retained possession of the documents and he should have prosecuted Sir. this the offenders before the courts. country is not satisfied with the administration of that department. It is not right that the powers which the law gives to one man should be invested in the head of the department. I care not what the expense is to the country, justice should be done, and our people should feel that they are being dealt with justly in open court where all can see and all can hear. I deprecate as strongly as any man can do, the Star Chamber business which characterizes the judgments of the head of the department and the administration of that department in connection with offences committed against the law. Mr. Chairman, this Bill does not go far enough. There should be a radical reform. The power given to the head of that department should not be continued, either in fairness to him or in justice to the community at

Mr. FOSTER. Before the reply which I know my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) is ready Customs this: Did he give back the affi-davits? Was the proof of the terrible per-man (Mr. Lister) if he is kind enough, to

Mr. LISTER. I should have thought that the Controller of Customs would have been the proper person to have taken any objection on account of the want of notice. may say to the leader of the House that the information has lately come into my possession. Moreover, I did not think it was such a case as justified a charge in Parliament against the Controller of Customs, because it cannot be said that the Controller of Customs acted corruptly, and it could only be for corrupt conduct that he could be arraigned by Parliament. In inflicting fines, according to his judgment he may have been perfectly honest in doing that, and yet it may have been not adequate punishment at all for the offences that have been committed. I did not know until a few moments before I came into the House that this matter was before the House. I intended to have brought it up in Committee of Supply. but as it was so close to the end of the session, I thought there might be no further opportunity of doing it, and I made up my mind to make the statement I did to-day.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) has made statements which he has The hon, gentleman said that we let them attempted in his later remarks to minimize, and which if true would unfit me for being a member of this House, or associating with honest men. He got that information, and he has got it, from a man who is to-day a convict in the public institutions of this country. It bears every evidence of that, and I think I shall demonstrate it to the satisfaction of this House before I sit down. I shall demonstrate also that so far as those remarks apply to me, or to any alleged corrupt or improper act on my part, that there is not a particle of foundation for them, and that every statement the hon. gentlein (Mr. Lister) has made that slander respect is a against me. Sir, what are the facts? Information was communicated to the department that some wrong-doing had been going on in connection with the firm of Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell. stationers, of Montreal, and an investigation was made. The hon, gentleman fortunately, committed suicide just at the

Mr. LISTER. Then it was done without authority?

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon, gentleman can tell of a single case-

Mr. LISTER. I can tell of twenty cases.

Mr. WALLACE. Then he would be only too glad, as a lawyer, to criminally prose-What is the law? cute them.

Whenever information has been given under oath to any officer of customs that goods or other things have been unlawfully imported or entered, or whenever any goods have been seized or detained, under any of the provisions of this Act, or of any law relating to customs, the importer or exporter thereof, or the owner or claimant thereof, shall immediately, upon being required so to do by a collector or other proper officer of customs, produce and hand over all invoices, bills, accounts and statements of the goods so imported, entered, seized or detained, and of all other goods imported into Canada by him at any time within six years.

A writ is given only to responsible officers, and they must have the oath of a reputable citizen of Canada that such has been done.

Mr. LISTER. That is not done.

Mr. WALLACE. Then the hon. gentleman, as a lawyer, should know what the law is, and should secure the punishment of those who break the law. After a most diligent investigation, we found that Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell had been committing frauds upon the revenue for a series of years-as the hon. gentleman stated, both by fictitious invoices, and by false affidavits. go scot free.

Mr. LISTER. I did not.

Mr. WALLACE. That statement is false. Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman said in one place that we let them go scot free, and, in another place, he said: "Were they punished? No." I say, yes, and the man who says no does not know what he is talking about. We went into a full and most exhaustive investigation, occupying days and weeks, carried on by competent and responsible men, and we found that that firm had been extensively defrauding the revenue. We are satisfied that the whole responsibility of the wrong-doing was with Boyd. Ryrle was a traveller in the west, and Campbell a traveller in Montreal. I do not believe that Campbell-who, untime the investigation was made—had any knowledge whatever of the wrongs perpetrated by Boyd; neither had Ryrie; and I think the evidence will justify that statement. We were not able to place our hand upon a line that would indicate that either of these men had personal knowledge of the wrong-doing. In every step of the investigation I was guided by the advice of the late Premier and Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson. Every step was taken under his direct advice. We ascertained that the Government had been defrauded to the amount of $4,844.

Mr. LISTER. As far as you could find out?

Mr. WALLACE. As far as we could find out, and as far as any one could find out; for we made a most exhaustive investiga-The men trying to get at the facts were men who were to have a share of the proceeds-but not as great a share as they would like—and who were auxious to find out every dollar of which the Government had been defrauded. And what was the penalty? The hon. gentleman said: "How much did the Government get? Was all the money of which these men defrauded the Government returned? No." I say yes; and the penalty I imposed—a penalty equal to three times the amount of unpaid dutywas $14,448 : and every dollar of that money was collected and paid to the Government. Therefore, I say it is a slander to say that we were acting in collusion with any one, or doing anything improper. l was told that the penalty bankrupted the firm; but we did not care for that. The hon, gentleman said this firm defrauded the Government, made false invoices, and false affidavits; and I believe they did. He said they had lawyers in Montreal, but the lawyers in Montreal were not consulted—they went to my friend, Mr. Fullerton, of Toronto. Well, Sir. Mr. Fullerton is a friend of mine, both politically and personally, and there is no lawyer in this country who has a cleaner or straighter record; and if the hon, member for West Lambton has as good a record as Mr. Fullerton, he may consider himself a happy and fortunate Mr. Fullerton was recently appointed solicitor of the corporation of Toronto. and he is a gentleman who stands high in the estimation of the men who know him. I invite the hon, gentleman to go over the correspondence, private and public-I will not keep back a line-and if he finds a word there which an honourable should not have written, or a single thing done by me which a man, acting judicially, as I was, should not have done, I will step out, not only from my position as Controller of Customs but from my seat in the House of Commons. A report was made by my commissioner, pointing out the wrong-doing of this firm; and what was my action:

Ottawa, 30th January, 1894.

Right Hon. Sir John S. D. Thompson,

Premier, Minister of Justice, &c., Ottawa.

Dear Sir John,—I inclose you customs file No. 4386 of 1893, covering the documents submitted in connection with the seizure made from Messrs. Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell, of Montreal. Attached to the same is the report of my Acting Commissioner, Mr. Watters. I submit the whole matter for whatever action you may consider advisable to take.

That is in regard to a criminal prosecution, for here is the report of Mr. Watters, in which he sets out all the information which the hon. gentleman has been so well able to give.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman read shortly the substance of that report?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is impossible to try the case here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In order to understand the hon. gentleman's statement, we ought to know just what the frauds of this firm were, as stated by the commissioner.

Mr. WALLACE. The report was the charge stated by the hon. member for West Lambton—forgeries, fictitious invoices, and false affidavits. I submitted the whole matter to the Department of Justice for whatever action they may consider it advisable to take. In this letter it is further stated:

It seems to be clear that Andrew Boyd, the senior partner of the firm, has been guilty of defrauding the revenue by writing out false invoices, making false declarations, and possibly of forgery. I might add that, in my opinion, these acts were not known to the junior members of the firm, Messrs. Ryrie and Campbell. From the evidence, it appears that Mr. Ryrie was travelling through the country, and Mr. Campbell was apparently doing the travelling for the city of Montreal. Therefore, no blame would attach to them personally for the various illegal acts committed.

Poes that bear out the statement of the hon. gentleman that I let that man go off scot free or that I did not retain possession of some documents which would have proved the guilt of those men? Well, Sir, every document that I received, every document that had reference to this matter, so far as I know, is in the possession of the Customs Department to-day. I challenge the hon. gentleman to make a single document that ever was returned, with my knowledge, or sent to anybody not entitled to receive it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the date of the letter from the hon. gentleman to the Minister of Justice?

Mr. WALLACE. 30th January, 1894.

Mr. MULOCK. Was Boyd prosecuted?

Mr. WALLACE. Not that I know.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was anybody prosecuted?

4145

Mr. WALLACE. Not that I know of. So far as I am concerned, my duty began and ended there. I submitted to the Department of Justice this letter and all the documents, I submitted this report made by the Commissioner of Customs, and gave all the reasons why I thought criminal prosecution should be made in this case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was there any report of the Justice Department?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not see any.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman know of any? It is inconceivable that a matter of this importance should be dropped.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must remember that this charge has been brought up without any notice at all to my hon. friend, and he cannot be expected to have everything.

Mr. CASEY. He seems to have pretty nearly everything.

Mr. WALLACE. No thanks to the hon. gentleman on the other side.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman did not object to my question, and the documents are under his hands.

Mr. WALLACE. I have not had the opportunity of looking through every document.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman had said he could not say whether there was a report or not, that would have been quite satisfactory.

Mr. WALLACE. I stated that I had not seen anything. I repeat, first, that a penalty was imposed of three times the amount of the unpaid duty; secondly, that I placed the full facts before the Department of Justice for whatever action the department might think proper to take on the premises; and thirdly, that there is not one word of truth in the statement with reference to Mr. Fullerton. Mr. Fullerton was here yesterday, and I asked him about that case, as a notice was given on the Order paper. And the hon, gentleman, when his motion came up, was not man enough to move it and have it discussed in proper time.

Mr. LISTER. I never had the opportunity.

Mr. WALLACE. It was called in my notice, and the Speaker ordered it to be dropped, but the hon. gentleman had it again put on the paper, and then was not man enough to take it up.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman knows that I was not in the House or in the city.

Mr. WALLACE. I was authorized by Mr. Fullerton yesterday to say that he never saw Mr. Boyd, that he never knew Mr. Boyd, that he never had been communicated with by Mr. Boyd in any legal capacity whatever, that he had nothing to do with Mr. Boyd, and, so far as this matter is concerned, he never had any transaction with Mr. Boyd.

Mr. McCARTHY. Who was Mr. Fullerton acting for?

Mr. WALLACE. For Mr. Ryrie, who was a Toronto man, whose centre of business is in Toronto, and whose legal business Mr. Fullerton had been doing for years. notwithstanding all that, hon. gentlemen opposite can repeat their slanders in this House, and without giving notice attempt to defame men's characters. Mr. Fullerton told me yesterday that he never saw Boyd, never knew him, never acted for him legally. but was acting for Mr. Ryrie, an old friend of his living in Toronto, which is the centre of his business. These are the facts of the case and the correspondence with Mr. Fullerton is there. He never referred to Mr. Boyd, never asked that anything should be settled or done for or against Mr. Boyd that I know of, but wrote certain facts to the department, which he had a perfect right to do on behalf of his client; but notwithstanding that, the penalty imposed was not changed, but a penalty amounting to three times the amount of unpaid duties was imposed. I think I have disposed of all the statements made by Mr. Campbell with reference to the case of Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I asked a question a moment ago, and the leader of the House suggested it was hardly fair to expect the Controller to answer, as he had not been given notice, but I find that my hon, friend from Lambton has had his notice on the Order paper since the 11th of June, asking for copies of all the papers. The hon. Controller therefore cannot complain that he has not had ample notice, and I would ask him again whether after he communicated the facts to Sir John Thompson, in January, 1894, the hon. gentleman or his department took any steps to ascertain whether prosecutions were instituted against anybody for these frauds?

Mr. WALLACE. I can recollect conversations with the department, but I do not think there is anything here with reference to that. So far as my department is concerned, we gave a full representation of the criminal side of the question to the Department of Justice, in order that the Department of Justice might take any action they thought proper. Now, the hon. gentleman was not satisfied with this case, but brought up another one in which he cays Mr. Ogilvie, a miller, defrauded the Government of thousands of dollars. He says that affidavits were made that certain flour was im- ness men cannot get replies to their letters ported and exported in order that drawback for weeks and months. might be paid. No such affidavits were received, and none such were required. The hon, gentleman has not read the law. The law is that when corn is manufactured into cornmeal for human use, there shall be a rebate of 90 per cent of the duty.

Mr. LISTER. What about cattle feed for export?

Mr. WALLACE. The affidavits required are that this corn was used for human food. I must say that this rebate given is: not a very satisfactory one, and recently I appointed a corn inspector, a portion of whose duties it is to go round to those cornmeal mills and make investigations into their operations. That inspector is to-day investigating in this locality. That is done in order to prevent public money being improperly paid out. I have taken every precaution possible to secure the revenue of this country against improper payments, and the statement that I have given any concessions to Messrs. Ogilvie & Co. is not true. No concessions have been given at all.

Mr. LISTER. What are the facts?

Mr. WALLACE. I would not give the facts in a case upon which I have not come to a conclusion, but the hon, gentleman is quite willing to make statements concerning: matters of which he knows nothing. Ogilvie, so far as I can remember, has never been in my office since I came into it.

When was the charge Mr. LISTER. made?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know. This afternoon is the first time I have heard of Mr. CASEY. You say you are investigating it. When was it made?

Mr. WALLACE. How can I tell? I have not a single paper here with reference to it.

Mr. CASEY. You have plenty of papers there.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; and it is a good thing I have, or those slanders might have gone unanswered. The hon, gentleman says that we have the power to appoint spies; to go into business houses. We do not appoint spies; we do not send men into business houses, but with proper authority to go into those houses-with the oath of a reputable citizen of Canada detailing some wrong against the customs Canada, some wrong against the revenue of the country. Then, and then only can we go into a business house and demand an in-And we only give that work vestigation. into the hands of men who are competent to make an investigation, men who will do their duty as gentlemen—do their duty to Mr. LISTER. That is what the papers say.

Mr. WALLACE. What paper?

Mr. LISTER. The Montreal "Pharmaceutical Journal."

Mr. WALLACE. There is not one word of truth in that statement, so far as I know, We have a staff there to attend to the business of the department; and as I have said, I have scores of letters from the leading business men of this country expressing satisfaction with the prompt way in which the business of the Department of Customs is conducted. The hon, gentleman says further that we sent men to the United States to harass and oppress these poor innocent American manufacturers.

Mr. LISTER. No; I said you sent men to the United States in order to be able to harass the Canadian dealer.

Mr. WALLACE. Not a bit of it. These men selling American goods deliver them in Canada duty free; so it makes no difference to the Canadian dealer whether the duty is 20 or 30 per cent, or, as far as the duty is concerned, whether the price is $4 or $6 a dozen. These gentlemen are very solicitous about this matter. I do not say that they have fees from the American manufacturers in their pockets, because I have not full evidence on that point. But when you see men earning a fee from American manufacturers, you may pretty safely come to some conclusion in the matter. These men come here and say the American manufacturers are harassed.

Mr. LISTER. I did not say so.

Mr. WALLACE. We say that these American manufacturers have come to Canada with invoices showing a less prize than the goods are selling for in the open market in the United States, prices. therefore, that should not and cannot be the prices fixed for customs duty. We object to these prices. We have taken every proper means to ascertain the correct prices. 'The hon. gentleman says we employ men in the same line of business. That is the only way we can get men for this service.

Mr. MULOCK. Are there no experts who are not in business?

Mr. WALLACE. No; not that I know of. If a man has made his fortune and retired from business. he has ceased to be an expert, because he has got out of touch with the business. I do not know of any man who is an expert in these matter who is not in the business. I repeat what I said at the beginning, that the Department of the men accused and their duty to their Customs will challenge investigation into all country. The hon. gentleman says that busicustoms business of the country. Upon any charge that has been made or any charge that these hon, gentlemen can make, I am ready at any time to meet them.

Mr. HUGHES. I have one word to say in connection with this matter, in justice to my friend Mr. Fullerton. A statement was made by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) which impugns the honour of Mr. Fullerton and of the Controller of Customs. The statement was made by the hon. member for West Lambton that he had no knowledge of these transactions of Boyd, Ryrie and Campbell until recently. It is almost two months—

Mr. LISTER. No.

Mr. HUGHES—it is at least several weeks since, in my presence, the hon. member for West Lambton was told by Mr. Fullerton that he had been Mr. Ryrie's solicitor long anterior to this case coming up. Mr. Fullerton not only told the hon. gentleman that, but he informed him what fee he had received. I am satisfied that the hon. member for West Lambton, standing in his place to-day, has not conducted himself as he should as a member of this Parliament.

Mr. LISTER. So far as the Controller of Customs is concerned, he does not seem to have been taken very much at a disadvantage on account of want of notice, for he evidently has the full file of papers connected with the Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell matter.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon, gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LISTER. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. These papers were in my office until the hon, gentleman brought this matter up in the House; and I did not look at them until I rose to speak.

Mr. LISTER. Mr. Fullerton told me at the time of the conversation in Osgoode Hall to which my hon, friend refers, that he had received a letter from the Controller of Customs in regard to this very matter. it appears that, so far back as that, notice was given to the hon. gentleman. Is it true that Mr. Fullerton had this letter? If it is, the hon, gentleman could hardly say that he has not had notice that some sort of investigation would take place in connection with this matter. Now, my hon. friend talks about Mr. Fullerton. I have said nothing against Mr. Fullerton. He is an acquaintance and, I hope, a friend of mine. He is a lawyer in practice in Toronto; and if Boyd, Ryrie & Co. like to go to Toronto and employ Mr. Fullerton, or Mr. McCarthy or anybody else, they have a perfect right to do so. And Mr. Fullerton is justified in taking their money, and if he can win his case, he is doing what his clients want him to do. But here is an extraordinary thing: My hon, friend says that Boyd is the guilty party; that he is satisfied that Ryrie and Campbell were innocent men. But Ryrie and Campbell profited by the transaction, and Ryrie was the man who employed the counsel. Were they made to suffer any penalty? The hon, gentleman may say, as he has said, that he imposed a fine to the amount of three times the estimated loss to the revenue. But does he think he has got to the bottom of it? The hon. gentleman says that I asserted that these men went scot free. Does he intend to say that I said no penalty was inflicted by the Customs Department? What I said was that they went scot free of criminal prosecution; and so they did. The hon. Controller states that he does not know that these affidavits were returned.

Mr. WALLACE. What affidavits?

Mr. LISTER. The false affidavits sworn to by Boyd. Will he pledge himself to this House that those affidavits were not returned—

Mr. WALLACE. I will.

Mr. LISTER-by somebody in his department?

Mr. WALLACE. I will. Unless they were stolen from the department.

Mr. LISTER. Are they now in the department?

Mr. WALLACE. I think so. They are in the department unless they have been stolen.

An hon, MEMBER. Who would steal them?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman's friends most likely.

Mr. LISTER. These affidavits, these forged invoices, were in the department.

Mr. WALLACE. And are there yet. Does the hon, gentleman say they are not there yet?

Mr. LISTER. Ah, the hon. gentleman does not know.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the hon. member (Mr. Lister) know?

Mr. LISTER. I know nothing about it, except from the information I have received.

Mr. WALLACE. Those which have not been stolen by the hon. gentleman's friends are there yet.

Mr. LISTER. It is only from the information I have received that I know anything about it at all, and my information, I think, is reasonably correct. These men have defrauded the Government of this country, and my hon. friend himself says that three times the amount of revenue which they found had been lost to the country. But he did not prosecute the man who had committed perjury over and over again for years. Why is it, if he had stolen, according to the story of my hon. friend, over $4,000, and had sworn to false affidavits, and had committed perjury, and forgery, and fraud-how is it that he has allowed this man to go on for all these years without any prosecution? He says the matter was handed over to the Department of It is very strange. Usually Justice. the dealings between the Department of Justice and the other departments, there is a correspondence about the cases which have been transferred from one department to the other; but remarkable as it may appear, there is no correspondence here except the one letter transferring it to the department. What took place after that was in the way of conversation and not by correspondence. My hon, friend says that this Government do not appoint spies. I say they do. I say that in my own town they went into nearly every store and demanded the invoices; I say that in Windsor they went into nearly every store and demanded the invoices; and yet, according to the story of my hon. friend, it was necessary that these officers should have a warrant from the department for every one of the places they visited.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you call a spy?

Mr. LISTER. I say they went to private houses without number, and demanded from the women of the house, large and small, sums of money for alleged infractions of the customs law-in Windsor and other Now, my hon. places along the border. friend tells us that so far as Mr. Ogilvie was concerned, his case was under investigation. How long has it been under investigation? How long is it since my hon. friend commenced to investigate the alleged fraud committed by Ogilvie upon the coun-Was it a year ago? Was it two Was it three years ago? years ago? would like to know, because I am somewhat curious to find out how far this investigation has gone. Has the hon. gentleman yet satisfied himself that W. W. Ogilvie has defrauded the revenue to any extent at all? Has he yet satisfied himself that false affidavits were put into his department on file? Is he satisfied that these affidavits are false? These are all questions which my hon, friend ought to be prepared to answer.

Mr. WALLACE. So far as the Ogilvies are concerned, it was a case where they made application for a refund, that the law allows in certain cases.

Mr. LISTER. Had they to make an affidavit?

Mr. WALLACE. They had applied for that money, and I presume they made affidavits. He refused to pay the money, and the Government is protected by having the money in the hands of the Receiver General?

Mr. LISTER. Are the affidavits on file?
Mr. Lister.

Mr. WALLACE. Why, of course. Does the hon. gentleman, in asking me if the affidavits are on file, mean to say that there is a parcel of thieves around the Customs Department stealing everything they can find? Since his friend went away, I think there is no danger of anything of that kind.

Mr. LISTER. If these men are entitled to a refund, how is it that my hon. friend puts it into the hands of the Receiver General? Why does he not pay it back to the Ogilvies?

Mr. FOSTER. Does he have the money in his pocket?

Mr. LISTER. Who?

Mr. FOSTER. One of your friends, as you call him?

Mr. LISTER. What do you mean?

Mr. FOSTER. And he paid it over to the Receiver General.

Mr. LISTER. The Controller of Customs can take care of himself. My hon. friend stated that the charge against Mr. Ogilvie was being investigated. I asked him how far that investigation had proceeded, and whether any affidavits were put into his department from Mr. Ogilvie, or from any man in his employ, which he has reason to think were not true. These are questions in regard to which the hon. gentleman ought to inform the House. If he does not, of course he is at liberty to refuse.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask my hon. friend a question? If he made any charge at all, or implied any charge with reference to the second case, it was that Mr. Ogilvie was guilty of fraud.

Mr. LISTER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, that he stole what he should not have got from the public revenue. When the hon, gentleman comes to rawl out at the small end of the horn, toward which he has been diligently moving during the last half hour, he now bases a charge on a matter of rebate for which application has been made by Mr. Ogilvie. The money. which, if it be proved to be payable, will be paid, has never been in the Controller's hands, has never been in Mr. Ogilvie's hands, has never been proved due Mr. Ogilvie, but is money that belongs to the consolidated revenue fund, and stays there until Mr. Ogilvie's claim is substantiated, and the order is made for its payment. That is fraud! that is perjury! and my hon. friend is guilty of everything else than what is becoming of a public officer because, for instance, he has abetted alleged fraud in the case of Mr. Ogilvie. My hon. friend's (Mr. Lister) position needs no comment other than his own actions and his own words here this afternoon.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. friend from Lamb- Lambton (Mr. Lister) seemed to make a on (Mr. Lister), during the course of the strong point of the fact that there had not ton (Mr. Lister), during the course of the very violent attack which he has made upon the Controller of Customs, had to admit that the Controller of Customs was very well able to take care of himself. I think we have had ample evidence this afternoon that the Controller of Customs is very well able to take care of the revenue of Canada. Those amongst us who have any experience in business matters, and who live in commercial communities, know that the relations between importers and the Department of Customs are not always of a satisfactory character; and I think that the embarrassment is largely due to the fact that the rulings of the appraisers at the different ports conflict sometimes with the facts of the case. That fact must have come under the notice of every man who represents a commercial community—I mean that the appraisers at these different ports sometimes impose a rate of duty which would seem to me to be indicative of their want of knowledge of the business in which they are engaged. But I must say this, that to my knowledge, when appeals have been made from the local appraisers to the Department of Customs, the decision has been, I won't say always, but generally, a fair and just decision, which has met the approval of the During the course of the attack which the hon, member for Lambton made upon the Controller of Customs, he says that importers, in their visit to the little office on the hill, whispered to the hon. Controller of Customs, and that certain extraordinary results were thereby obtained. I must say that I myself have had to visit the little office on the hill, and I never went there but that I was very courteously received, and that immediate attention was not given to any public business which I had to place before the Controller of Customs. Considering the onerous duties which he has to discharge in administering Customs Department whose business stretches from one side of this great country to the other, I have been surprised at the amount of information which the Controller possessed of the different cases, which was absolute proof of the great attention and the great industry and vigilance with which he discharges the duties of his office. I must say that if I had ever had any political ambition, I think the last position I would care to occupy would be that of Controller of Customs of the Dominion of Canada, because that hon, gentleman is necessarily, from the faithful discharge of his duties, brought into unpleasant relations frequently with importers. That is not his individual fault, but it is due to the fact that over a country of this vast extent he has a number of officers all of whom are not always au fait with their duties, and the whole responsibility and blame fall upon the Minister for the administration of the department. The hon, member for lines in the state of New York have a two-been more correspondence between Department of Customs and the Department of Justice. That hon, gentleman has heard no doubt that in the case of Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell, a penalty amounting to three times the amount of which the customs were defrauded had been collected from that firm. So far the Department of Customs, no doubt, thought they discharged their duty when they secured the payment of this large penalty, and further proceedings were left to be initiated by the Department of Justice. The Controller of Customs is known throughout Canada as a most useful and efficient officer.

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 139) for the relief of Julia Ethel Chute (on a division).—(Mr. Taylor.)

TORONTO, HAMILTON AND BUFFALO RAILWAY.

Mr. COATSWORTH moved second reading of amendments made to Bill (No. 34) respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved that the amendments be not now read a second time, but that the Bill be referred back to Committee with instructions to strike out clause 12 of the last section of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill re-committed. amended, and reported.

Mr. COATSWORTH moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move:

That the Bill be not now read the third time. but that it be referred back to Committee for the purpose of adding the following clause:-

That nothing in this Act contained, or in the Railway Act or amendments thereof, shall allow any rate of fare for way passengers greater than 2 cents a mile to be charged over the track or tracks of the said Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.

He said: I propose to divide the House tonight on this question, and I hope the discussion will not be long, so that the Bill may get through, and at the same time that we may have an expression of opinion with regard to the issue which I have read. My reason for proposing to insert this clause in the Bill, is in the first place, because this is a New York Central line, or in other words a Vanderbilt line, and the Vanderbilt cent a mile clause governing them. The clause regulating traffic on the New York Central lines in the state of New York, reads as follows:—

But nothing in this Act shall allow any rate of fare for way passengers greater than 2 cents per mile to be charged over the track or tracks of that railroad now known as the New York Central Railway Company. And the rate of fare for way passengers, over the track or tracks now operated by the New York Central Railway Company, shall be 2 cents per mile, and no more whatever.

In proof of the fact that this railway to which we are now giving this franchise is a Vanderbilt line, I purpose reading an extract from an interview with Mr. Beckley, who is one of the promoters of this Bill. Mr. Beckley informed the Hamilton "Spectator" on 26th May, as follows:—

Mr. Beckley corroborated the rumour that an agreement had been made whereby the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway becomes part of the Vanderbilt system. "When the by-law was before the people, said Mr. Beckley to the reporter, I could tell them that the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo, when completed, would be a part of the Vanderbilt system."

If the Vanderbilt system can give the people of the state of New York a two-cent a mile railway fare, why can they not give it to the people of Ontario when they come over to that province, and ask to share the business. The proposition that I make is a fair one, and I believe that Canadians are justified in demanding from the Vanderbilt line equal treatment to that which they give their patrons in New York State. There is no reason why the Vanderbilt people should discriminate against Ontario, but there is every reason why this Parliament should see that a great corporation, such as that, should at least do equal justice to our people. Another reason why this railway should give the people a cheaper rate than has been given heretofore, is the fact that this road runs through the most populous portion of Ontario, and that there is little or no competition against it. Not only does it run through a flourishing part of the country, but it is between the two great cities of Toronto and Buffalo, and passes the flourishing city of Hamilton and along the Niagara Falls, which is the greatest tourist centre in America. Then, it runs through a country where railroad construction can be very cheaply carried out. The company got for nothing an entrance into the city of Toronto, which otherwise would have cost them several millions of dollars perhaps. They have a bonus given them by the city of Hamilton, and they have free right of way all around the Falls, and free right of way into the city of Buffalo. The road, therefore, will cost them comparatively a very small amount. Again, railway construction is very much less expensive than it was forty years ago when Railroads can be built for half, perhaps, onethird of what they cost thirty years ago or twenty years ago, and if the cost of railway construction has come down, why should not the tolls that the railways take from passengers be correspondingly reduced. proof of the value of this franchise is the fact that the Grand Trunk Railway Company have double tracked their road between Hamilton and Toronto. They have found it profitable, and there are more trains running en that piece of road than on any other portion of the system in Canada. The Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo realize that this is a very valuable franchise, because they have already stated that they propose to double track the entire road between Torento and Buffalo. The best instance of the success of a two-cent a mile rate is in the case of the New York Central road itself. It has now four tracks. It has any amount of competition, but it is able to overcome that competition. It is the best railroad in America, perhaps in the world. It is a railroad that pays its dividends with the greatest regularity, a railroad that has the best future before it, and a railroad that is earning more and more every year and getting in better condition.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) the statistics for two or three cents before the introduction of a two-cent a mile rate, and the statistics of passenger traffic since the rate?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I have already read it to the House, and it shows that the New York Central people are eminently satisfied with the two-cent rate. They have never sought to have it reduced, and they have forced all other railways to adopt that rate.

Mr. COCKBURN. On what part of the New York Central does the two-cent a mile rate obtain?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). On all that portion of the road in the State of New York.

Mr. COCKBURN. I beg your pardon-

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I have already read the clause of their Act which provides for that. I will now read a telegram from a prominent official of the New York Central Railway, which says:

Answering your telegram of this date (26th June), New York State law fixes local rate on New York Central main line, 2 cents per mile. No other trunk line in New York State has this rate locally, but, of course, they make the same rate to competing points.

have free right of way all around the Falls, and free right of way into the city of Buffalo. The road, therefore, will cost them comparatively a very small amount. Again, railway construction is very much less expensive than it was forty years ago when the three-cent per mile rate came into force.

I wish to read another extract which proves the success of cheap railway travel and which was published in one of the leading railroad papers the other day. It concerns a railway system which I have cited before this House, viz.: the State Railways of Austria. The extract is short and I hope the House will listen to me while I read it:

The Austrian state railroads comprise 5.238 miles, which is a little more than one-half the total railway mileage of that country. years ago the government introduced a so-called zone system for governing passenger rates. Under this system the rate to any place within a given district is the same, whether the distance travelled be 5 miles or 20. The rate advances according to the number of zones through which the passenger travels. The average rate charged per passenger per mile in 1894 was 997 cent, a fraction less than 1 cent. In spite of this low rate. the business of the government railways continues to increase. The gross earnings for 1894 were 9.3 per cent greater than 1893, and the net earnings 15.7 per cent greater. The profits were at the rate of 2.7 per cent on the capital invested, The profits were at against 2.52 per cent in 1893. It should also be mentioned that the freight rate that prevailed in 1894 was the lowest on record in the history of the country, being nearly 6 per cent below that of Here we have pretty strong evidence that low passenger rates do not necessarily mean diminished income for the railway. On the contrary, the evidence of the Austrian lines goes to prove that the receipts have increased in proportion to the reduction of the rate.

Now, this franchise which these gentlemen seek in this Act of incorporation, is the most valuable franchise which we have granted to any railway company for a long time, and if it is, it is our duty to impose such conditions in that franchise as will be for the benefit of the people who use the railroad. Why should we give away so valuable a franchise without getting something for it? In the various cities of this continent, very valuable franchises exist in connection with street railway traffic, and the municipal corporations which control these franchises regulate them. The corporation fixes the rates of fare to be charged on the railway, and then puts up the franchise at public competition. The result is that the municipal corporation not only receives money for the franchise, but insists upon the company which obtains it giving the people reduced rates of travel. People ask, why should the Government interfere to compel the companies to reduce their rates? The answer is that the companies, if left to themselves would never We would never have reduce the rates. had the benefit of low street railway fares, which we have in Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, and other cities, if we had not insisted on the conditions we have. The people have been able to get the benefits they enjoy only by legislation—not by cencessions on the part of the companies. The companies have never made any concessions to the people without being forced to do it. In proof of that, I wish to read, for the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite a short extract from the Toronto "Globe," which, discussing this question the other day, said:

If an unbroken succession of failures can prove anything, it has already proved that the natural force of competition, though potent to maintain the even balance of prices and charges in ordinary commerce and industry, cannot be made to operate in railway transportation. The estimate of a railway manager is, that there would be an annual saving of $200,000,600 if the railways of the United States were managed as a unit. Combination, absorption, or mutual understanding, invariably restores the monopoly, and the people are made to pay the full cost of their experiment. Competition is obviously impossible, and there is no safeguard for the public interest except effective governmental supervision.

That is the opinion of the "Globe," the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, and it is a sound opinion—that you will never get a reduction of railway rates unless by legislation regulating the railway corporations. The "Globe" goes on to say:

The cost of railway construction has been greatly reduced since the present 3-cent rate was established. Mechanical inventions have doubtless lessened the expense of operation; while freight charges have been reduced steadily, passenger rates have remained unchanged. Has the reduction in cost been absorbed by free passes and reductions to favoured passengers? a question in which the public are interested. On the nation's highways all should be on an equal-If some secure favours, it must be at the expense of others More than half of the Canadian passenger traffic is at specially favourable This is obviously unfair to those who pay rates. what may be called specially high rates, and the injustice calls for legislative reform.

New, it has been urged that, in proposing this reduction I am dealing with one company, whereas I ought to bring in a general law dealing with all companies. My answer to that is that I attempted to do that in this House two or three years ago, and I was then told: "Your proposal is unfair to those railways which run through unsettled portions of the country, to new railroads, and to railroads built at a very high cost." I now take at their word those who urged that objection, and I say, here is a corporation owned by people who give the 2-cent rate in the state of New York, who have found that rate a profitable one, and who are proposing to build a line through the most populous portion of Ontario, which is today without railway competition. That being the case, now is the time to take this matter in hand and place such a condition in this charter as will secure for the public the same benefit or this company's Canadian line, and do the company no harm whatever. The company will make money, because it will command the travel. It will be backed up, as we are told, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the New York Central, and the Canada Southern; it has plenty of money; and there is no reason why it cannot take this franchise and make money out of it, and, at the same time, confer a great and lasting benefit on the people. We ought, by our example, to-night to show that we believe these railroads can be compelled to do justice to the people; but that can only be done by legislative interference.

Could the hon, gentle-Mr. MULOCK. man inform the House when the law was passed limiting the New York Central to 2 cents a mile?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Fifteen or more years ago.

Mr. COATSWORTH. If the arguments of the hon, gentleman who has moved this resolution are at all sound, it is somewhat surprising that this road has had so much difficulty in making its way. The charter was granted first about ten or twelve years ago, and if the financial success of the road was so sure as the hon. gentleman would lead us to suppose, the company surely would not have had the difficulties they have had to get even a portion of the road built. As a matter of fact, the road is chartered for 120 miles, and up to the present time, the company have been able to build only thirty-four miles. I must say, from my knowledge and experience of the road, that the enterprise would be entirely paralyzed if this resolution should be carried to-night. It is all very well to speak of the satisfactory arrangements the company have made, but these arrangements are merely in contemplation. They are not yet arrangements, in fact; and one of the first results of the passage of a resolution such as my hon. friend has moved would be that none of the companies which have made traffic arrangements with this road be prepared to carry out, but would at once give them up. So that it would be one of the best methods we could adopt to paralyze the building of this road. Now, we have imposed a heavy liability on the road already this sessiona liability which I understand amounts to $50,000 and for which the company were not responsible, but we thought, in the interests of the people who have been taking part of the construction of the road, that the liability ought to be imposed upon them and that was done. It would be unfair to hamper an enterprise which has the support and sympathy, apart from actual financial support, of the people in the neighbourhood through which it is going to run, and I feel quite sure that if we were to attach this clause to its charter, the company would not be able to carry out the enterprise at all. It is all very well for the hon, gentle-man to compare this part of the country with certain parts of New York State. It may be that the facts and circumstances justify, between New York and Albany, the imposition of only a 2-cent rate, which do not exist in Ontario; and it would be exceedingly unfair to single out one road, as the hon, gentleman does, and impose on it the obligation of carrying passengers at 2 cents per mile, when all the other roads are charging 3 cents or more. We know very well, from our own experience, the difficulties these companies have in constructing their lines, and it would be im- tatives of Toronto, I am naturally interested possible for this company to carry out the enterprise at all if we were to attach this condition to the building of the road. hon, gentleman says that this is the part of the Vanderbilt system and a part of the New York Central. I wish to correct that statement. It is only in a small measure accurate, because it is not really the fact that this road is part of the Vanderbilt system or of the New York Central; but the fact is that over this road, which will be 120 miles in length, the New York Central will, for a short distance, have traffic arrangements with the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway. Unless we can have the charter put through without this condition, I am satisfied that no such arrangewill be carried out. I do not wish to take up the time of the House. as I am exceedingly anxious to have the matter disposed of to-night, and I will just close by saying that I think the hon. gentleman had better cease attacking individual roads; and if he wishes to bring about this reform in the railway system of Canada, ne ought to bring in a Bill to amend the Railway Act. Let him tackle the Government and the Department of Railways and Canals, and then he will perhaps be able to have at least a fair discussion; and I feel sure the hon, gentleman knows it is impossible for him to get a fair discussion of this question when he is attacking one particular road.

Mr. FRASER. I have a good deal of sympathy with the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), but in this particular case, notwithstanding my sympathy with the general principle, I am bound to oppose the hon, gentleman for two reasons. First, I do not think it is fair we should attach a condition of that kind to any single company seeking incorporation here; and secondly. I raised in this House the question of the unpaid labourers, and the company have accepted, in the Bill now before us, the obligation to secure payment to these labourers and the furnishers of material already used in the construction of the railway. I think therefore, it would be ungenerous to impose this further condition upon this company. I think that if we apply a condition such as the hon, gentleman proposes on any company, it should be on a company which we do not compel, in the first place, to pay $50,-000; and, as growing out of this, I do not wish to impose a condition of this which would so harass the company as to prevent the unpaid labourers from getting paid for the work they have already done. That is the primary matter I think we should have in view. The company is going to pay out $50,000 or $60,000 to the labourers. When we are asked to deal with the general question, I will then assist the hon. member, but as regards this special case I am opposed to his motion.

Mr. COCKBURN. As one of the represen-

York (Mr. Maclean) bases his argument figures:mainly on the assertion that there is a 2-cent rate on the New York Central Railway. He will allow me perhaps to read to him a quotation from a speech delivered before the assembled railway managers of the United States. The quotation is as follows :

While the question of the enactment of a law fixing a 2-cent rate per mile as the maximum charge for the carrying of a passenger, has for several years and in several states been the subject of discussion, no such law has been passed by any state. I am aware that the impression exists that such a law is effective in New York and Michigan, and I desire briefly to explain the foundation for this impression.

It is the same false impression under which my hon, friend labours:

The statutes of New York permit generally the rate of 3 cents per mile, but on many roads through the more-sparsely settled portions of the state a much higher rate is authorized. only exception to the rate of 3 cents or higher is the New York Central and Hudson River Road, and this rate applies only to passengers on one part of the road, viz., that part of the road between Buffalo and Albany. The statutes limit the fare from any intermediate station to Albany. or from any intermediate station to Buffalo, or from any intermediate station to any other intermediate station between Buffalo and Albany, to 2 cents per mile. This rule does not apply from Buffalo station to Albany or to any station on the same road in the state of New York beyond Al-This rate was fixed something more than forty years ago.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKBURN. Yes, forty years ago, and it has been so tested that they have never repeated it anywhere else:

And was in consideration of the fact that the consolidated road paralleled the Erie Canal, then a favourite state institution, from which the state received tolls on all freight traffic.

In addition, he states also that they required the road should pay to the state the same tolls on freight that were paid on freight carried on the canals. It is true that in some of the crowded eastern cities, especially in the suburbs, they are able to run short trains at 2 cents per mile. But there is no railroad in the whole United States which really receives a clear 3 cents per mile even as it is. I find, in looking over the returns from the Interstate Commerce report,-the returns of seventeen railwaysthat the only railway the rates on which approach at all to the prices charged in Canada, or rather received in Canada, is the

in the success of the Toronto, Hamilton Railway which receives 1.70. Then as to our and Buffalo railway, which will connect the own reads: The Canadian Pacific, I believe, cities of Toronto and Hamilton and open has received an average of only 1.70 per a new avenue of trade to the Queen city mile and the Grand Trunk has received 1.73 of the west. It is true that in the state of Michigan there is a rule, and I commend this rule to the consideration of my hon, friend when he brings up a Bill to deal with the whole question. The rule in Michigan is this: When a road earns $3,000 per mile, the company is entitled to charge a rate of not more than 2 cents per mile; if a road earns less than $3,000 and more than $2,000 per mile. the maximum rate is 21/2 cents; and if it earns less than $2,000 the maximum rate is 3 cents per mile. And this is only applicable to roads in the lower peninsular of Michigan. Now, as to Austria, which has been referred to, if my hon, friend had been there

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Have you?

Mr. COCKBURN. Yes; I have been in Austria; I have studied and lived in Austria; and I know Austria. And I can tell my hon, friend that he is not the man with his tastes, to get on board any one of the cheap trains in that country. The passengers have to pay extra for every parcel of baggage he takes. There is a quarrel if you take a hand satchel. There is no heating, no closets, no water-opportunity of appointing a commission under a properly appointed president and vice-president to investigate the question of boot-blacking-a question with which perhaps they are intimately familiar from their early days. It is important that this railway charter should be granted, on the grounds I have stated, and the ground that the company also on have come forward and offered to pay wages that are due to the workingmen engaged in the construction of the road. And I feel persuaded that one effect of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), although I know he does not contemplate it, and if he did he would not bring it forward—must be greatly to decrease the comforts on these roads. And a second result, considering that the railways are now unable to earn dividends for the bondholders or stockholders, must be to reduce still further the wages of the workingmen on the roads. If the hon. gentleman is prepared to rise in this House and try to stop the passage Bill which, in effect, provides $50,000 for paying the overdue wages of workingmen engaged in the construction of this road, and is, at the same time prepared to force an amendment which will have the effect of reducing the wages of the workingmen on our roads, I think he will find that he has made a mistake. What we want is not to reduce our fares by 33 per cent as the hon. gentleman proposes, but to have increased accommodation, swifter trains and more of them. There is no use trying to take the ground that the workingman is a pauper and is unable to pay his 3 cents a mile like any other man.

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE CUSTOMS ACT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 140) further to amend the Customs Act.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address a word or two to the Minister of Justice. I think it would be as well that the attention of the House should be recalled to the really important question that was before us. When my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) was speaking before recess on this subject, he made certain statements of a very grave character, compromising the Department of Justice, as well as the Department of Customs, and that in no ordinary degree. Now, so far as I can recollect, and so far as I understood the Controller of Customs, no attempt whatever was made to explain the very extraordinary circumstances related by my hon. friend from West Lambton. It appeared, Sir, from the statement made by my hon. friend as well as from the statement made in reply to him by the hon. Controller of Customs, that a series of the grossest possible frauds had been committed, and these frauds had extended over a period of several years, that these frauds had been repeated again and again, that they involved a great variety of forgeries and a number of separate and disfinct perjuries, all committed for the purpose of defrauding the customs and the revenue of Canada. Under these circumstances, it appears to me, a very much better explanation ought to be given by the Controller of Customs and by the Government, and also by the Minister of Justice although I am aware that he is in no sense personally responsible—why it was that so gross a miscarriage of justice could have occurred as appears to have taken place. I can conceive of no circumstances prima facie, under which the Department of Justice would be called upon to see that proper punishment was inflicted upon the offender if not under the circumstances detailed by my hon. friend, and apparently confirmed by the Controller of Customs. And if it has come to this pass-that forgeries and perjuries and deliberate frauds are to be permitted, to the great detriment of our revenue, and that department in which they are committed is to hold that it has discharged its whole duty in the matter by simply referring it to the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice have apparently allowed at least a year and a half to elapse without being moved to take any other action in the matter-then, all I can say that a very bad example appears to me to be set to all other departments of the Government. I am very far indeed from desiring to see any vindictive measures taken against ordinary offenders against the customs, knowing, as I do, the extraordinary hardship which is inflicted upon a great many deserving citizens by the operation of the protective tariff, and having my own opinion, and a very strong one, as to the moral merits of a protective tariff. But, waiving that point, I must say I cannot understand how it is possible that such circumstances as were narrated to us could have taken place and could have been reported to the Department of Justice and yet no them. action be taken upon The thing appears to me to require, from both the Department of Justice and from the Department of Customs, very full explanation, because otherwise it would seem to us that these departments, for reasons mitting what, in less distinguished individuals, would almost mean compounding a felony. Apparently, in the mind of the Controller of Customs, and from the circumstances stated by him, there can be no shadow of doubt of the guilt of this party. The Controller of Customs stated again and again that the forged invoices were in the handwriting of the party named; he stated again and again that perjury had been committed in addition; and undoubtedly, unless there had been very clear proof of that, it is not to be supposed that he would have inflicted the maximum penalty which the law gives him power to inflict. As to the other questions, I do not propose to enter upon it at this moment, that is, the desirability of amending and reforming the practice in the Department of Customs, and of lessening the extraordinary power which might possibly be given with safety in the case of revenue collected for revenue purposes, but which are very unsafe and very liable to be abused in the case of a protective tariff. But I desire to recall the attention of the committee to the major portion of the charge of my hon. friend, which was that, with full knowledge of fraud, perjury, and forgery having been committed, no step what-ever appears to have been taken by the Government to inflict punishment upon the offender.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. must be very gratifying to the Controller of Customs, as it is, I know, to the majority of the members of this House, to find in what an extraordinary fashion these charges have petered out, so far, at any rate, as his department is concerned; because, while the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) opened his guns directly upon the Department of Customs, and made severe strictures upon the Controller of Customs, it was not until his statements had been riddled, and his guns absolutely spiked, that he now attempts a mild assault upon another department, not referred to in the outset at all; and I think if that department is given ordinarily fair treatment at the hands of this House, the result of the consideration of that charge will be somewhat the same as in the first case. I must tell the hon. member for South Oxford that I am not able, and I do not think any predecessor of mine, no matter how distinguished, was ever able, to come to so strong a conclusion upor a matter of the character discussed this afternoon, as that hon. gentleman seems to have done. It is one thing for the hon. member in the midst of a discussion, to be struck by ugly words, such as fraud, perjury, and forgery.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Used by your own clerk.

planation, because otherwise it would seem sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. to us that these departments, for reasons best known to themselves, had been combined those words read out of documents, official, or otherwise, and it is an entirely different thing to have those charges and statements examined by counsel and dealt with subsequently. It may be that the Department of Justice has been derelict, but nothing that has occurred to-day, and nothing thrown across the floor of the House, would lead any reasonable lawyer to the conclusion that that department has not acted properly, and as it should have done. The hon, gentleman says that the Controller of Customs simply referred the case to the Department of Justice, and had attempted in that way to get rid of the responsibility. But that is hardly doing justice to the Controller, because, if my ears caught aright the language of the letter he read, it was a positive instruction to the Department of Justice to take such action in the premises as those papers and facts might warrant. It was not then merely a reference of the subject to that department, but it was a complete and an absolute reference, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, of the whole particulars; and, under that state of affairs, undoubtedly the Department of Justice must give an account of its conduct to this House when properly required so to do, and the circumstances that arose after those papers reached that department, explanatory of the course taken. But I think I can ask the hon, member for South Oxford—I would not like to depend upon the hon. member for Lambton, after what I have heard to-day—ordinary courtesy. I do not think he will charge either my predecessor or myself with any dereliction of duty, until an opportunity has been given to inquire into the facts. I have never heard of the subject, I know nothing of the particulars; I have merely heard the facts stated in debate this afternoon; and I think the hon. gentleman, and the House in general will rest satisfied that the Department of Justice will not take very long to ascertain how the matter stands in that department, and to give a frank explanation to this House of the course of events since the reference from the Department of Customs.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will recollect that when the hon. member for South Oxford was asking his questions, he was careful to state that he did not charge against the present Minister any personal dereliction of duty, but he asked, as it was his right and his duty alike, that an explanation should be given to show what that department had done with reference to the very important matter which had been transmitted to it for action. myself regret very much that any language should be used by the Minister which would seem to minimize, in his opinion, the gravity of the charges which were made from this side of the House this afternoon, and fully endorsed by the Controller of Cus-toms. If my ears did not deceive me, the statement made by the Controller of Customs was that it had been proved clearly to him in the course of investigation that a certain party or parties had been guilty of fraud upon the revenue, of perjury and forgery, that he had satisfied himself personally that these crimes had been committed, and he had transmitted the papers to the Department of Justice so long ago, I think, as January, 1894, in order that proper action might be taken upon them. Now. there is no dispute about this. The charges made by the hon. member for Lambton have been reported upon by the Controller of Customs as absolutely true, proved up to the hilt. I think it was right that the Minister of Justice should not lose an hour in acquainting this House with the steps that have been taken by his department, as he himself is not personally responsible, to prosecute the parties who are alleged so to be guilty. If the hon, gentleman has examined the papers, or if his predecessor or the deputy head has examined them, and finds there is not sufficient evidence to justify these charges, it will be his duty to rebuke the Controller for having made them in this House. If, on the contrary, the Controller has reached a correct conclusion, or, if a prima facie case has been made out, the duty of that department is clear, those who defraud the revenue, and those who commit perjury in the act, must not go unwhipped of justice. This House would be recreant to its duty if it did not enforce in the strongest way, as my hon. friend to my left has done, a demand that the proper department should either discharge its duties, or receive a reprimand from this House for failing to do so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Controller of Customs with respect to this matter, whether the papers evidencing forgery, perjury and fraud upon the Government, to which he has referred this afternoon, were transmitted to the Depart. ment of Justice along with his report? I did not so understand the hon. gentleman. I understood the Minister to say that he had written a letter to the Minister of Justice, but I did not understand him to say that any of the papers which evidenced forgery, perjury and fraud were transmitted from his department to the Department of Justice. It is important we should know precisely what the facts are in this matter before we undertake to discuss the extent of the responsibility of the Department of Justice for dereliction of duty. Perhaps the Controller of Customs can tell us?

Mr. WALLACE. I altogether object to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) putting words into my mouth which I did not use. I read the letter sent to Sir John Thompson, Minister of Justice, as follows:—

Dear Sir,—I inclose you customs file 4856 of 1893, covering the documents submitted in connection with the seizure made of Boyd, Ryrie &

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Campbell, of Montreal. Attached to the same is the report of my Acting Commissioner, Watters. I submit the whole matter for whatever action you may consider it advisable to take.

Accompanying the documents is a report of Mr. Watters, dated 14th of the same month, which refers in detail to the cases in which he claimed that forged invoices were used.

I am not going to discuss the legal question, but I desire to call attention to this fact, that the invoices were evidently written by Mr. Boyd, in Montreal, but the invoices themselves while forged invoices did not involve criminal forgery. It was similar to saying Johr Smith sold to William Brown certain goods. It was a case of fictitious invoices rather than forged invoices. The report went on to refer to other matters in which Watters claimed that forgeries had been committed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). These papers are all in the Department of Justice, I suppose?

Mr. WALLACE. I presume this is the file.

Mr. MULOCK. Has the hon, gentleman got the alleged forged papers in his possession now?

Mr. WALLACE. This is a copy of the letter sent to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that the file of the original papers?

Mr. WALLACE. I have here a statement showing the copies of invoices of goods purchased and imported for the last three years by Boyd, Ryrie and Campbell, which for the reasons herein stated have been seized wholly or in part.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the file of original papers in the Department of Justice now, or is it in the hon. gentleman's hands?

Mr. WALLACE. This is a copy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the file which the hon, gentleman holds in his hand the original file which he transmitted at one time to the Department of Justice and which came back to his hands, or is it merely a copy?

Mr. WALLACE. The letters written to the Department of Justice are originalsthe letter to Sir John Thompson is a copy.

Mr. MULOCK. Where are the original papers alleged to have been forged?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And sent to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. WALLACE. Here is a list of them.

Mr. MULOCK. Where are the originals?

Mr. WALLACE. They are in the department, unless they have been stolen out of it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What are those papers in your hands—are they originals or copies?

Mr. WALLACE. Everything went to the Department of Justice, the whole file and all the papers we could find.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What I want to know is, whether those papers which the Minister said were forgeries and evidence of fraud and perjury are in the hon. gentleman's hands, in his department, or in the Department of Justice?

Mr. WALLACE. They were sent to the Department of Justice.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Did they remain there, or did they come back to the hon. gentleman's department?

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot tell.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A great deal of time might have been saved if the committee had waited till the Department of Justice had something to say. We are very careful of papers, and I heard some hon, gentleman talking about papers being lost. I was unable, however, to break into the department after six o'clock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And you tried?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I failed in the attempt, but I expect to have these papers in the morning.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentlenian knows what the practice is. Where papers are sent to the Department of Justice for the action of the department, are they not retained in the hands of the department until action is completed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the ordinary course.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the ordinary course would be that if the papers were sent to the Department of Justice—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They would be there now, unless a report had been sent back explaining the action taken or the reason for not taking action.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I do not think I would have occupied the time of the committee except for the fact that I very much disapprove of the charges made by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) against the Controller of Customs. I think I may safely say that the charges made, as it was made by him in a most careful and studied manner in his speech, was one that was very unfair, and I think I am justified in saying unwarranted in itself. I he more we reflect on the language used by that hon, gentleman the more this committee will conclude that his language and his charges were unjustifiable. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), before he took his seat, made the remark, referring to the charges made by the hon. member for West Lambton, that the charges nade by the hon. member for Lambton have all been established.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No, I did not say so. I said the charges made by the hon. member for Lambton with respect to crimes of fraud, perjury and forgery having been committed to which he had referred, had been confirmed by the Controller. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I am perfectly willing to accept the hon. gentleman's statement or explanation, and to assume that that is what he intended to say. I am perfectly willing to accept the hon. gentleman's explanation. The hon, member for Lambton, as well as every other hon. member in this House, would be derelict in his duty if he thought and felt that blame attached to any department of the Government and did not bring it before the House, and any such charges should receive the careful consideration of the House and impress themselves on the department attacked. But these are not the circumstances which that hon. gentleman has detailed to the House. He has made general charges and specific charges. I do not object to the general charges he has made, for he has a perfect right to make them. He has complained that the department has been negligent, that the department has not been conducted in a manner satisfactory to the mercantile community, and that various judgments have been given by the Controller different from each other. Eut the hon. gentleman has not given the committee any instance whatever of improper conduct or of any neglect in answering correspondence. The hon, gentleman has not complained himself that he has been coolly treated in the department. What evidence does he adduce to bear out the statement that he has made? Nothing but an article spitefully written in a newspaper which I think he called the "Pharmaceutical Journal." That is all the evidence the hon, gentleman has brought forward to condemn the Customs Department. hon, gentleman has promised he will do more than that, that he will show particular instances in which the Department of Customs has been corrupt, not as I understood the hon. member for Queen's to say that The these charges have been all established. charge made by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) was not at all against Boyd, Ryrie & Co., but it was a direct charge against the Controller of Customs that he had been guilty of corrupt conduct in the matter. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) described in dramatic language the office of the Controller as a star chamber, the doors of which were shut when the examination took place. His language would lead us to understand that decisions were made by the Controller and judgments rendered by him in consideration of the influence and wealth of the parties charged. That is a very grave charge. It is a charge namely, to administer the law. Would the that no gentleman should make against auother in this House without being prepared to substantiate. It was distinctly charged by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) that Boyd, Ryrie & Co. were allowed to escape, while men such as Watters were put in jail. The tenor of his whole speech was to lead the House to believe that the Controller of Customs was corrupt in connection with this case. The circumstances that the hon. gentleman detailed, were detailed for the purpose of influencing the House against the Controller of Customs. For instance. the hon. member (Mr. Lister) asked, why did not Boyd, Ryrie & Co. select a solicitor in Montreal, where they resided, and why did they go to a distant city in western Ontario for their counsel. He stated that this counsel was a friend politically and otherwise of the Controller, and the insinuation clearly was that this company went to Toronto for that counsel in order to bring corrupt influence to bear upon the Controller of Customs. If it were not done for that purpose then why did the hon, gentleman breathe the name of that solicitor in Toronto, and why did he breathe that the firm went 500 miles west to get that solicitor. It was done simply for the purpose of insinuating that corrupt influence could be brought to bear upon the Controller who was to decide the case. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) further than that used language, which on reflection, and when he reads it in "Hansard," I believe he would wish he had not used. When the Controller stated that the firm had been fined the enormous sum of $14,000, what language did the hon. member use? He referred to the star chamber of the Controller, and he said to him: Sir, then you have been guilty of a felony as well as they. In his own words, he charged the Controller with compounding a felony and with taking money to cover up evidence of crime. That language is surely going further than is necessary for the purpose of instigating an investigation. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) has read the Customs Act.—and I am sure he has—he must know that it provides that the unpleasant duty is cast upon the Controller of hearing the evidence and investigating cases which come before him. It further gives the Controller the right to impose such fines as the merits of the case warrants. The hon. Controller told us that when this case came before him, he spent days and weeks investigating it, and then he imposed the fine of $14,800. What folly it is for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) to talk, of the Controller compounding a felony, when he did his whole duty under the law, and imposed the penalty which went into the Exchequer of Canada. Such a charge against the Controller is absurd. Every day of the week my hon. (Mr. Lister) is prosecuting some person before a judge, and the judge does what the Controller is compelled to do, hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) say that because the judge fixed the legal penalty of a fine, that the judge was guilty of compounding a felony. Surely he would not. The hon. gentleman could not have considered the effect of the language he used. Surely he ought to be ashamed of it.

Mr. LISTER. I think if you read my speech to-morrow, you will be ashamed of your speech to-night.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. If the hon. gentleman says he did not use that language then he will withdraw it. Surely the hon. gentleman used the language "compounding a felony" in reference to the Controller. What did the Controller of Customs do in the matter? He held an open investigation lasting weeks upon weeks and heard witness after witness, and inflicted a fine. After that the hon. the Controller transmitted the papers to the Department of Justice. That is exactly what he should have done. When the hon. member for West Lambton commenced charge there was no reflection whatever against the Department of Justice. It was a purely personal attack against the Controller, and it was only incidentally it came out that the papers had been transmitted to the Department of Justice. Sir, the duty of the Controller of Customs ended when he transferred the papers to the Department of Justice, and I am perfectly sure that the Department of Justice will be able to give as clear an account of what became of these papers since they received them, as the Controller has given of them before they left his hands. I am sorry that the hon, gentleman (Mr. Lister) has put himself in the position that he is in to-night. In all fairness he ought now to withdraw the charge he has made against the Controller of Customs. He has not made one single observation against that hon, gentleman that has not been wiped out and disproved. There is, of course, the fact, that these men were guilty and robbed the department. But that is not what we are dealing with. The charge made was that the Controller had dealt with them in a corrupt manner for robbing the department, and that charge has completely fallen to the ground. Surely the hon, gentleman (Mr. Lister) ought to be prepared to withdraw the statement he has made. The Controller of Customs fined the guilty parties in a very large sum, and after he fined them he could not have done more than to transmit the papers to the Department of Justice. Then, Sir, passing from that we have the Ogilvie charge. That charge is one that we are justified in saying nothing about just now, because it is so to speak, subjudice, not having been disposed of by the department itself. I think it would be improper and injudicious to make any remarks in regard to that when the Controller's information to us is that the matter is still before him, and undecided, and I do think, when the hon.

he has made against the Controller, and the circumstances which have been developed here to-day, he would not be doing a very ungraceful act if he were to withdraw any personal reflections he has made against the Controller.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) deserves the thanks of this House and this country for bringing forward the question which he has done to-day. I have sat in this House with the hon, member for West Lambton for many years, and I have never known him, nor has any other member of this House known him to make a reckless statement which he is forced to withdraw. He generally studies very carefully the questions he brings before the House, and when he brings forward a question such as he brought forward this afternoon, he does it after mature consideration. Now, I think the circumstances surrounding this case are such as to justify my hon. friend in presenting these charges in the clear, definite and straightforward manner he has done; and although the hon, member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) demands their retraction, it is my opinion that he does so because he does not clearly understand the points which he has been attempting to make. The hon, member for West Lambton says he has the facts in his possession, and he is prepared to go into an exhaustive inquiry before a commission of this House as to the manner in which the whole affair was conducted by the Controller of Customs. That ought to satisfy the hon, member for East Lambton that he has no ground for demanding a retraction at this juncture. It is quite clear that the manner in which the Customs Department has been handled in the past has caused a feeling of discontent and dissatisfaction throughout the entire Do-The Controller of Customs this minion. afternoon attempted to show that this discontent was largely confined to the Board of Trade and the merchants of Montreal, and he referred to the fact that the Board of Trade of the city of Ottawa had expressed its satisfaction with the manner in which the Customs Department had been handled. Allow me to quote from an article which appeared in the Montreal "Witness," a journal of high standing:

he could not have done more than to transmit the papers to the Department of Justice. Then, Sir, passing from that we have the Ogilvie charge. That charge is one that we are justified in saying nothing about just now, because it is so to speak, subjudice, not having been disposed of by the department itself. I think it would be improper and injudicious to make any remarks in regard to that when the Controller's information to us is that the matter is still before him, and undecided, and I do think, when the hongentleman considers the effect of the charges from Vanceuver to Halifax, whose petitions have already been presented. So far as we have heard, only one board of trade did not join, that of Ottawa, which is still too near the presence of the Government of the day to dare to do more than squeal, though it declares that "something" should be done, and is understood to be secretly in favour of the petition.

This shows that all the principal merchants in the different boards of trade throughout the Dominion, including even that of the city of Toronto, save and except that of the city of Ottawa, have petitioned in favour of the change which the Montreal Board of Trade asked. The petition of that board, of which I have a copy, is signed by no less than 593 merchants and business men of that city.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto adopted that resolution?

Mr. McMULLEN. I say that, according to this article, the boards of trade throughout the country have joined in expressing their approval of the change petitioned for by the Montreal Board of Trade, save and except Ottawa.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon, gentleman has just said that the Board of Trade of Toronto has done so. Has he any proof of that?

Mr. McMULLEN. I have taken the authority of the Montreal "Witness," which says that every board of trade, except the Ottawa board has done so.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman said the Board of Trade of Toronto did so. That is not correct.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have corrected my statement; I have told the hon. gentleman what I quoted from. It is quite clear that business men generally throughout Dominion are dissatisfied with the manner in which the Customs Department has been administered. I know that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) this afternoon gave the Controller of Customs a kind of certificate of character. No doubt it will be valuable to him the day after to-morrow —he may possibly be able to use it. But perhaps my hon. friend from Halifax has cause for doing this. I am not going to say that the Controller gave him a hint a short time ago as to the probable change in the duty on sugar. I do not know whether he gave him a hint or not; but if he did not, my hon. friend struck the speculation in sugar at a very important and conven-ient time, and happened to get into port a large amount of sugar on which he saved the payment of the increased duty. I am not charging the Controller of Customs with having given him the wink; he may or may not have done so. But there is one thing certain—there is a great deal of personal good feeling between the two hon, gentlemen, and the hon. member for Halifax was quite willing to-night to be the first to jump up and, in a very valiant way, come to the relief and defence of the Controller of Customs. We do not know what may have been the moving cause of his valiant effort. if Controller contend that the is himself anxious to relieve from in which awkward position the hon. member for Halifax says he is placed in relation to the business men throughout the country, he ought to consent to the appointment of this board of experts. To-night the hon. Controller said something with regard to the character of the experts appointed in the United States. He said some of them were men engaged in the liquor business, and who had no commercial knowledge at all. Well, it is not very prudent for those who live in glass houses to throw stones at their neighbours. My hon, friend, once on a time-it may be a long way back-used to sell liquor by the glass across the counter, perhaps like some of those American experts, and besides ran a one-horse retail store for a number of years, which may perhaps have helped him to get some little knowledge for the discharge of his important duties as Controller of Customs. Then, again, his predecessor in office occupied the dignified position of running a one-horse country paper in a small town in western Canada before he became Minister of Customs, and that surely could not have given him any very extensive knowledge to fit him particularly for the office of Minister of Customs. My hon. friend has not had any very extensive experience personally in commercial matters which would give him peculiar aptitude for discharging the important duties of Controller of Customs, and I should advise him, if he wants to command the confidence of the commercial men of this country, and if he wants to have the Customs Department enjoy the credit and confidence which it now lacks among the mercantile community, to have a board of experts appointed who would regulate give the value and consistency whole system of solidity to the customs tariff. In this manner he might win that respect for the management of the Customs Department of which it now is sadly in need. The boards of trade of Toronto and Montreal and other important centres, have expressed their desire for the appointment of such a board of experts. The hon. Controller of Customs cited the city of Ottawa as being content with the present condition of things. On looking over the Trade and Navigation Returns, I find that Ottawa has only paid $263,000 of customs dues altogether, while Montreal pays $7,-000,000, and to set off a city like Montreal, which pays such an enormous amount of customs duties by a city which pays such a small amount as Ottawa, is like comparing the report of a shot-gun with that of a five hundred pound cannon. It is unfair to treat

Montreal in this manner. Take the petition, and I find that 595 of Montreal's foremost business men have signed it, praying that this change be made in the customs laws. Are the views of these men to be set at naught? I would draw attention to the contents of the petition, but that has been done so ably by the hon. member for North Simcoe, that it is unnecessary that I should do so; but I must repeat that when the Controller of Customs is now asking the House to consent to a change in the customs tariff, he should pay some heed to the memorial of the Montreal and other boards of trade, and thus allay in some measure the discontent which now exists.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the hon, member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) has scarcely been fair to the hon, member for West He has assumed, Lumbton (Mr. Lister). from what has occurred in this House, that the statements of the hon. member for West Lambton are wholly erroneous. I would rejoice if it were that the information on which those statements were made should incorrect, and I know nothing circumstances, of the except what have gathered here to-night; but enough has been said to call for a fuller explanation than can take place on the floor of this House. First, let me ask for what good purpose hon, gentlemen opposite endeavour to assume that the hon, member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) made an improper charge against a stranger to the House, Mr. Fullerton, of Toronto. I fail to discover anything in the language of the hon, member for West Lambton that was intended in the slightest degree to reflect on the character of Mr. Fullerton. If he said anything it must have been complimentary to that gentleman, because he said that Mr. Fullerton had pleaded the cause of his client with success. Now, it does not require the statement of any member of this House to vindicate the character of Mr. Fullerton. He is a worthy citizen of Toronto, a prominent member of the bar, who has lived a lifetime in that city, and who deservedly enjoys the respect of the community. is a prominent man, filling a high position in the city of Toronto to-day, with credit to himself and undoubted satisfaction to the public, and we all know that he would not do anything that could, in the slightest them to investigate? degree reflect on his good reputation, and I am sure that my hon, friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) had not the slightest intention of implying that Mr. Fullerton had done so. To come back to the question, the Controller of Customs had an opportunity of entirely disposing of any charges made against him by adopting the course suggested. It is, at all events, a matter of doubt at this moment whether justice has been done. It is conceded that crime has been committed, and that the knowledge of its commission came to the Government nearly two years ago. Yet up to this moment no member of the Government can tell us what steps have been taken to vindicate the majesty of the law. Now, if nothing more than this has come out of the discussion, the discussion has been most profitable, and I would therefore again call the attention of the hon member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) to the unfair position in which he has sought to place his colleague in this House when he asked the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) to assume that he was entirely mistaken in his statement, simply because a partial denial was made on the floor of this House. Members of Parliament are compelled, in the public interest, to proceed upon such evidence as from time to time they may be furnished with, and their responsibility depends upon whether they exercise good judgment and good faith in accepting the information as correct, and taking proper steps to have the matter sifted in the public interest. Any man may make a charge on the floor of Parliament, which might not be true in fact, and yet make it in a perfectly honourable way, and in the best of good faith. With regard to this particular charge, until the Government accept the challenge of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) and appoint a committee with power to examine witnesses under oath, the charge must remain in the unfortunate position of neither being proved nor disproved. That is not the position in which it should be, and if I were the Controller of Customs I should be the first to ask the House to appoint a committee. I trust that he will adopt that course, and I trust that the finding of that committee will be to uphold everything that could be said in vindication of the Controller of Customs and of every member of the Government. I say that in all sincerity, for I do not think that any member of this House should rejoice in discovering that a fellow member-

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What charge would the committee have to investigate?

Mr. MULOCK. The evidence taken before the Controller should be produced.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but what charge would they have before them to investigate?

Mr. MULOCK. What became of the papers—that was one thing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was not the hon. member for West Lambton's charge.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, member for West Lambton suggested that the papers, the alleged forgeries, had been parted with. And, of course, if papers that are said to have been forged have been parted with, we know that no criminal prosecution for forgery can be successful. Now, if these papers upon which a criminal prosecution would have to rest are not in existence to-day, the question naturally arises how have they disappeared?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MULOCK. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman is going on to deal with the further procedure in this case. From what has been said in the debate, it appears that my department ought to be heard from before any intelligent action could be taken by the House. Even if the hon. gentleman wants to suggest an inquiry, I think that every one will say that, in view of what has been stated, some information should be given the House in respect of the position of the Department of Justice. And I have undertaken to do that. So far as this Bill is concerned, could not the hon, gentleman agree to let us consider this Bill now, and leave the further discussion of the topic the hon, gentleman is referring to until the statement is given-which will be prompt.

Mr. MULOCK. I have no objections to defer anything further I have to say. But when the hon, gentleman laughed at the idea of a committee ascertaining what had become of the public records—

Mr. WALLACE. Who said that public records have been mislaid?

Mr. MULOCK. I think what the hon. member for Lambton has said—

Mr. WALLACE. He did not say so, and he will not say so now.

Mr. FOSTER. He said he knew nothing about it.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon, gentleman dare not say they are gone or we will have to find out where they have taken them to.

Mr. LISTER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows where they are?

Mr. WALLACE. I say there are no papers gone that I know of. Are there any papers gone that the hon. gentleman knows of?

Mr. LISTER. There are a great many papers gone that I know of. I do not know where the hon. gentleman's papers are.

Mr. WALLACE. Because if the hon. gentleman says they are gone, we may have to make him swear where he has put them.

Mr. LISTER. The hon, gentleman had better be careful not to make that charge outside; he might be liable for action.

Mr. WALLACE. I will make the charge here or any time.

Mr. LISTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that I abstracted his papers?

Mr. Mulock.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon, gentleman has made charges in this House—

Mr. LISTER. That is not the question. I have made no charge in this House that I would not make anywhere else.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon, gentleman does not dare to make the charge outside that he has made in this House.

Mr. LISTER. I have made no charge in this House that I would not make to the hon. gentleman or to anybody else outside of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. We will see if the hon. gentleman is able to do it.

Mr. LISTER. The hon, gentleman must not think that he can bully members of this House. He must remember that he is not now in an Orange Lodge.

Mr. WALLACE. And we won't allow the hon. member to do any bullying either.

Mr. LISTER. The hon, gentleman has not forgotten his old ways. I have a word or two to say in reference to the speech of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) in defence of the Controller of Customs, championing his cause against the so-called charges made against him. the hon. member thought proper to say that the charges made by me were unfair, unwarranted and unjustifiable. Sir, what were the charges made by me? One charge I made was that the system of carrying on the customs under its present administration, is, to use the language of the public press of this country, iniquitous; it is distasteful to the whole business community of Canada, except perhaps to the board of trade of the city of Ottawa under the eaves of the public buildings. And when I say that, I echo the feeling, I believe, of every business man in Canada. I made the charge that no man, the political head of a department of Government should be called upon to discharge the duties of a judge in matters involving oftentimes enormous sums of money and, oftentimes, the reputation and character of business men throughout the country. What I said was that these charges should be investigated by a court; a court that would deal fairly between the parties, a court that could not be influenced by political motives Everybody knows what inor otherwise. fluences are brought to bear upon public And I then stated, and I now repeat men. that no public man occupying the position of my hon. friend should have cast upon him the duty of discharging judicial functions such as he is called upon often to discharge as head of that department. What I said was that there was a feeling in the country among certain people that they had not been fairly dealt with, and a feeling on the part of others that they had been favoured. Whether that feeling is wellfounded or not is another question. It is an Montreal had defrauded the revenue of this country, and that an investigation had taken place before the Controller of Customs in his little office on the hill. That is true. Is that the place to hear a case of this kind? Is that the manner in which a suit of that kind involving many thousands of dollars should be decided? Is it in the interests of the community at large that a lawyer should plead his case before the Controller Customs in his office in the city Ottawa, without evidence and without the protections offered by a regular court. And what do we find? The Controller of Customs is pleaded with, because the plea slould plead his case before the Controller of Customs, a gentleman standing very high in his profession, and a man in every sense worthy. In doing that he was simply discharging a duty which he had to discharge in the interests of his client. If he had succeeded in getting them off for $4,000, he would have been doing his duty, because he was acting for them. At all events, the fact is plain according to statement of the Controller of Customs, that Mr. Ryrie, one of those partners, the gentleman who appeared before the Controller of Customs. Now, he appears, my hon. friend hears the case, it is decided, and the papers, my hon. friend says, are sent over to the Department of Justice. The case is decided to be as flagrant as it is possible to imagine. A man has committed perjury, not once, but a dozen \mathbf{He} more times. has made these invoices, he has defrauded the revenue. and the papers are sent to the Minister of Justice, who talks about spiking his guns, and all that kind of nonsense. He ought to be a soldier instead of a politician, evidently. They are sent over to the office of the Minister of Justice, there they stay for two long years, and no step is taken to prosecute the man who has committed the crime. Nothing has been done. One letter is written by the Controller, but with the exception of that one letter, there appears to have been no inquiry.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Do you make that charge now, that nothing was done in the Department of Justice?

Mr. LISTER. Nothing more appears to have been done, and I will venture to say that no information was ever laid.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. One charge was that the office of the Controller of Customs was small. I understand the hon. gentleman has explained that the charges against the Controller of Customs was that he conducted his business in a little office on the hill.

Mr. LISTER. Yes.

evil if that feeling exists, whether it be Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. justified by the facts or not. I charged here And his charge now is that the Minister of to-night that a prominent firm in the city of Justice conducts his business in a little Montreal had defrauded the revenue of this office on the hill, too.

Mr. LISTER. I think it is pretty close to the office of the Controller of Customs, and there is a little man in that little office, too, who is ready to crawl in and crawl out whenever he gets a chance. So the papers are sent over by the Controller of Customs more than a year ago, or possibly two years ago, there they remained in the office of the Minister of Justice, and there they remain, so far as we know, up to the present time, and so far as the public knows, no steps have ever been taken by that department to bring the offender to justice. Why, Sir, my hon. friend, in answering what was stated, was very particular to say very little about the Ogilivie case. As a matter of fact, Mr. W. W. Ogilvie made a claim upon the department for $3,000 or $4,000, or perhaps more. The claim was to have duty returned to him that had been paid to the department, upon the ground that the corn upon which this duty had been paid, had been kiln dried for human food, when, as a matter of fact, I believe it can be established that instead of being kiln dried for human food, it was ground up, or crushed, and used for feeding cattle, and other purposes. Under these circumstances, Mr. Ogilvie would not be entitled to have his money back, the corn would have to pay duty, and the duty paid upon it would belong to the country. An investigation was made, my hon. friend says. He does not undertake to say when that investigation was commenced, he does not undertake to say whether it was a year ago or not, or whether that investigation has been completed, or what has been done, further than that the sum of money claimed by Mr. Ogilvie is still in the hands of the Receiver General and under the control of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it has not been paid to Mr. Ogilvie.

Mr. LISTER. I do not know whether it has been paid to Mr. Ogilvie or not, but what you say is that the money has not been paid to Mr. Ogilvie. Very well, that would answer every purpose so far as it goes. But has the Controller gone back to the time when he first discovered there were irregularities, when he first discovered there was an attempt to defraud the Government? How does he know that $4,000 is all that Mr. Ogilvie would be entitled to, or what he would be entitled to collect from Mr. Ogilvie? All that we have is the fact that $3,000, or $4,000, or of $5,000, is held by the Government which Mr. Ogilvie claims to have returned to him, and which the department has found out he was not entitled to, because the statement made by Mr. Ogilvie's man under oath, that this grain had been ground in such a way as to free it from duty, was not correct, and it was therefore an attempt on the part of Mr. Ogilvie to get back from the country, money which he was not entitled to. I think the House has a right to know what steps have been taken against Mr. Ogilvie in respect of this claim, what investigation has taken place, what the charge is, whether affidavits were made; and if affidavits were made, which were, in fact, false, then it is the duty of the Controller of Customs to take such proceedings at law as will bring the offender to justice. This is the whole sum and substance of the charges made here to-day. The Minister of Justice may say that the have been spiked. he may what he likes, but these are grave charges against the administration of the Customs Department, and the House and the country have a right to know how that department is administered. If, as a matter of tact, Mr. Ogilvie, or his man, have committed a fraud upon the Government, or attempted to do it, then Mr. Ogilvie should be prosecuted the same as the commonest offender in the country; if he is entirely clear he should, of course, not be prosecuted. But I say it is such things as these that make the people of this country feel that the administration of the Customs Department is not what it ought to be, in fact, that the law ought to be changed so that all questions between a subject and the Crown involving the payment of taxes, or any matter of that kind, should be determined by a tribunal specially appointed for that purpose.

Professional and the control of the

Mr. CURRAN. I have listened attentively to the several speeches of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, and I have heard the name of Mr. Ogilvie bandied about in a manner which I think is altogether unjustifiable. If the hon, gentleman has any charge to make against Mr. Ogilvie of having committed a fraud, he should specify that fraud, and say what his charge is, and let this House know, why the name of a gentleman of the high standing of Mr. W. W. Ogilvie should be dragged into this debate and heralded throughout the country. Mr. Ogilvie's position in the city of Montreal is well known. He is a gentleman who was born there, who grew up there, and has established one of the largest commercial enterprises on the whole continent. He has conducted his business in such a way as to earn for him the position of President of the Montreal Board of Trade. and many other positions of trust. I think it is utterly unfair and unjustifiable that his name should be dragged into a discussion of this kind unless the hon. gentleman has some foundation for it, unless he has received information from a reliable source. Certainly we have had more than one intimation here to-day that the hon. gentleman's informant in these matters is a such was the case he would be entitled to man who is not now enjoying his liberty. and who is far from having earned the respect of the community, nor acted in such a manner as to show that he was worthy of the office he until lately filled. Now, Sir, if, upon such information, the character, the integrity and the commercial honour, as well as the truthfulness, of such a man as Mr. Ogilvie, are to be put in question before this country, the character of the information upon which such charges are based should be made known to this House. But so far, no charge at all has been made against Mr. Ogilvie further than this, that he has made an application to the Department of Customs to have certain moneys refunded, and that there is a dispute between him and the department as to the refunding of these moneys. What charge is there against Mr. Ogilvie in that circumstance? charge is there that the Controller of Customs can prosecute against Mr. Ogilvie? What is there before this House to show that Mr. Ogilvie, upon any occasion, has ever laid himself liable to the imputations that have been made against him? I say it is too bad that, for political purposes, the names and reputations of some of our most respectable citizens should be traduced; and I hope that my hon. friend will state here and now whether he has any charge to bring against Mr. Ogilvie, or else apologize to that gentleman for having brought his name before this House and the country in such an unwarrantable manner.

Mr. LISTER. There has been a good deal of fury indulged in by the hon, gentleman. If he had listened to the Controller this afternoon-

Mr. CURRAN. I was listening.

Mr. LISTER-he would have heard the Controller say that he was investigating the matter as regards Mr. Ogilvie, and also that the money, instead of being paid back to Mr. Ogilvie, was in the hands of the Receiver General.

Mr. CURRAN. That is a disputed account.

Mr. LISTER. The charge against Mr. Ogilvie, and I have made it over and over again, is that of having corn kiln-dried and ground for human food, and instead of that being done, the corn was crushed and used for animal food, and a refund claimed.

Mr. WALLACE. That was not the charge. The charge was made in plain terms that application had been made for a refund under certain circumstances. There was nothing in it, because the law did not permit a refund under such circumstances.

Mr. LISTER. That is a mere evasion. The hon, gentleman knew I was wrong in regard to that statement. The statement I made was that corn ground and kiln-dried was manufactured for human food, and it a refund of duties. The charge was that. the corn was crushed and used for animal food, and was liable for duty. I ask the Controller if there is not a question pending between the department and Mr. Ogilvie; whether the department has not been informed that Mr. Ogilvie's claim to a refund is not just, for the reason I have stated; and whether the matter is not being investigated by him now as Controller. The hon. gentleman. I observe, will not answer. The truth of the matter is that such information has been given to the department as disentitles Mr. Ogilvie to a refund of the duties, and I believe an affidavit is in the department supporting that claim, or if it is not, it was; and that affidavit, according to my information, is not true, and on account of the information which the department possesses this money has not been paid back to Mr. Ogilvie, but all these matters are being investigated by the department at the present time. The hon. gentleman will not say when he commenced To-day it is under the the investigation. consideration of the department, and it has been so for over a year, and is not deter-So there is this question bemined yet. tween Mr. Ogilvie and the department as to the amount, and also the right of Mr. Ogilvie to obtain a refund of the duties. say again that so far as these matters are concerned they are proper subjects for the consideration of the House, and it is the duty of hon. members to bring them before the attention of Parliament and the country, and it is no part of the duty of the Controller of Customs or any member of the Government to treat one citizen of this country different from any other citizen. If this be true, then as regards the gentleman who made the affidavit, be he Mr. Ogilvie or anybody else, it is not only the duty of the Government to retain the money, but it is the duty of the Government to prosecute the man who made the affidavit, if such were made, for having committed perjury.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the committee will now pass to the consideration of the Bill itself, I will suggest that, in view of the discussion which has taken place, the words "assistant-commissioner of customs" be omitted from subsection 2, and the following words added to section 3:—"The office of assistant commissioner of customs is hereby abolished."

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:-

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, the memorial of the legislative assembly of the province of Manitoba in answer to the remedial order of the 21st of March, 1895. Government House.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the order for the second reading of Bill (No. 21) to amend the Dairy Products Act of 1893 be placed on Government Orders.

Motion agreed to.

MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Mr. GIROUARD. I wish to put the following question to the leader of the Government:-Will the negotiations to be entered into with Manitoba, relating to the schools, unless they bring an acceptable arrangement on the lines of the remedial order and the terms of the judgment of the Privy Council of the 29th January, 1895, preclude or postpone the introduction of the remedial legislation announced in your statement of Monday last?

Mr. FOSTER. My answer simply is, they will not.

RUMOURED RESIGNATIONS OF MIN-ISTERS.

Mr. LAURIER. I see that everything is serene once more in the atmosphere of the Cabinet. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be able to give us information as to the nonexisting crisis which was supposed to exist.

I am glad that my hon. Mr. FOSTER. friend shows such skill in reading political weather predictions, if I may so denominate them. I have but very few remarks to make in reply to the question which has been put by my hon. friend on previous occasions, and repeated to-day. Some differences arose between members of the Cabinet with reference to the question of remedial legislation. The statement which I made the other day to the House gave the position of the Government on that matter. The differences in the Cabinet arose chiefly on two lines. Some of our colleagues were of the opinion that it was useless, and consequently unnecessary, to prolong negotiation or to enter into further negotiations with the Manitoba Government with a view to the settlement by that government of the question—by that govwith the powers ernment themselves The have. other question they of difference arose consequentially from that. They believed that remedial legislation should be introduced at once, starting from the premise that there was nothing to be hoped for from the action of the Manitoba Government and legislature itself. I need not reiterate the position of the Government. That was shown in the statement I made the other day in this House. Both these positions were taken in that statement. one that we would yet grant to Mani- themselves have deeply at heart, to work in toba a certain amount of time, in the hope that negotiations would be entered into and an amicable settlement of this question arrived at. The other was, that in so intricate and important a question, the greatest deliberation was necessary in the perfecting of legislation in the matter, and that no remedial legislation should be introduced this session. These differences of opinion were canvassed by the different members of the Government. I regret to say that one of our colleagues, who has not a seat in this House, finds it impossible to accede to the view of the majority of the Government. He stills holds very firmly and strongly to his view that remedial legislation should be undertaken and pressed to a conclusion at once; and as he finds it impossible to accede to the view of the majority in that respect, his resignation has not only been sent in but accepted, and he is now no longer a member of this Government, I regret to say. With reference to our two colleagues from the province of Quebec, who have seats in this House, I must say that they showed a disposition to canvass and discuss and look thoroughly into the grounds of difference between their own views and the views of the majority of their colleagues, as expressed in the statement I made the other day to this House, and in the end these differences proved to be rather a misunderstanding as to details than real divergence of opinion s the principles that were involv-At the most it was simply a quesgards tion of disagreement as to detail. As to the question of principle that remedial legislation was necessary and that it would be introduced by this Government at the next session of Parliament, to be called before the 3rd of January, in the event of the province of Manitoba not making a reasonable and satisfactory settlement of the questionwith reference to that matter, I say it was a matter of divergence upon details and not upon principles. On the principle all were agreed, all members of the Cabinet stood side by side with my two hon. friends upon my left, and my hon. friends have been enabled-and wisely and patriotically, I believe, acted in that line—to see that it was a misunderstanding or a disagreement simply upon details, and they have been able to come to the conclusion that in the statement which was made on Monday last by me, the remedial legislation was actually and positively promised, and that there is no intention at all of going one sinjot jot outside that statement, our intention is to carry out gle that the perfect good faith statement the Government on Monday last. Having come to that conclusion, my two hon. friends, the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works, have believed it to be their The their country, and to the cause which they harmony with their former and present colleagues, and that we should stand together and carry out the policy of the Government in this way. I do not know that it is necessary for me to make any further remarks at present.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Speaker, I have very little indeed to add to what has just been said by the leader of the House. The question, as I view it, is one of the gravest that Parliament has been called upon to consider since confederation. Believing, es I do, that minorities must be protected under the constitution, and being anxious for the settlement of the school questionafter repeated interviews, and, to my mind. satisfactory assurances from the Premier and from my colleagues, I consider that in view of these assurances, by refusing to help the Government in carrying out remedial legislation upon the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and of the remedial order in Council, I would have been sacrificing the interests of the minority and jeopardizing the settlement of the question. This induces me to continue to act with the Government to secure, as I believe, remedial legislation in accordance with the pledges given by the Premier and by the leader of the House.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) I do not think I need add much to what has been said by my colleagues. I must say, nevertheless, that if I am at this moment occupying the seat which I formerly held, it is sclely due to my sense of the duty which I owe to my country, to my party, and especially to the cause, the success of which I have so much at heart. If I am here, it is because I have become convinced, after the repeated assurances which my colleagues have given us and the warm sympathies which has been shown us by all our friends, that, in delaying the settlement of this question we are thereby rendering the more sure, its settlement in a definitive manner, and in a manner perfectly satisfactory to the country and to all those who desire to see justice done, who love peace, and who are devoted to the well-being of their compatriots. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if I have ever had a duty to fulfil, the importance of which, and also the painful character of which I felt and understood, it is that which I am fulfilling to-day, and in which I may appear, perhaps, in the eyes of the public, as sacrificing for my own personal interests something of the interests of my country. However, Mr. Speaker, I am above all that. I am above the accusations which will be levelled against me in the province of Quebec and elsewhere, I am prepared to endure those attacks in the hope that we will have our reply in six monthsin the session which will be held on the 3rd January next. If in the course of those six months I should be covered with opprobrium and insult instead of being covered with flowers and greeted as a hero, I console myself with the hope that this question will then be settled, and that I will then have not only the consolation but the happiness of being able to say to my compatriots: that, to-day, by yielding somewhat in what regards my personal dignity, I have done so in the interests of my country and of those I represent in this House.

Mr. LAURIER. Once upon a time, Mr. Speaker, long in not very ago. which name. country need not prevalent there was \mathbf{a} rumour that the cat came back to the cream. Feline nature will assert itself, and to-day, we have a small family of kittens coming back to the Premier. Only a few days ago they started upon what they represented to be a crusade for a holy cause. But after three days' experience in the cold, far from the kitchen, exposed to the inclemency of the season, they have come back to the cream. And at once I must tender my apologies to my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean). That gentleman, in his paper. the Toronto "World," two days ago, had a paragraph which I read as follows:-

The French Ministers are said to have resigned, but the resignations are not confirmed, and may be a bluff.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, that having French blood and only French blood in my veins. when I saw that statement made concerning my French fellow-members who represented the majority of this House in the Cabinet that their game was only a game of bluff, I could not help feeling indignant against the hon. member for East York. I must offer my apologies for that feeling of indignation. If this was not a game of bluff, what was it? It was simply a misunder-standing, my hon. friend says. There was only a misunderstanding during these three days in which the country has been kept in suspense. We had supposed there was a grave crisis. We had supposed that a deep chasm existed between the hon. gentlemen who had thrown up their portfolios and the majority of the Cabinet. But it was simply a misunderstanding. The members of the Cabinet had been sitting together and discussing the questions before them, not for days only but for weeks, and I may say for months. And the more they discussed with a view to a settlement, the less they understood one another. But one section, it so happened, remained inside, and the other section remained outside in the cold. That cleared their understanding and convinced them that there was nothing between them but a very little matter which was not worth resigning over. What was the mis-understanding? I understood that the policy of the Government had been laid down on Monday last by the Minister of Finance. Here in an announcement, if I was able to understand plain English plainly spoken, it was stated that, at the next session of Parliament, to be called not later than the 4th January, if, in the meantime, Manitoba had not been brought to terms, there would be some legislation introduced to give satisfaction to the minority. I understood that this was binding upon the Government, and, if I had been a member of the Administration, I would have been disposed to take this as a pledge binding upon the Administration. But, Sir, if I am to accept an interview which was published in the Montreal "Star" yesterday, my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works for one, and, I suppose my hon. friend, the Postmaster General also, were not satisfied with the pledge given upon the honour of the Crown, by the gentlemen who were the representatives of the Crown. This is what appears in the Montreal "Star" of yesterday, in the form of a solemn interview with the Minister of Public Works. The Finance Minister told me the other day-and in that only repeated what had been said before-that not much dependence was to be placed upon the utterances of ministerial newspapers. But this is an independent newspaper, and, moreover, the interview has such an air of authenticity, that it is difficult to believe that it is not perfectly The correspondent goes on to genuine. say:

--seated in his library with Hon. Joseph Royal, ex-Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, and Mr. Joncas, M.P., who had just finished breakfast with him.

These details give an additional character of veracity to the narrative. He said:

You may announce through the "Star" that, unless the Government, at three o'clock this afternoon, brings in a written pledge signed by every member agreeing to remedial legislation next session, I will take my seat as an independent member, and move a want-of-confidence motion.

This language referred to yesterday, but yesterday my hon. friend did not appear in his seat; to-day, however, he appears in his seat, apparently satisfied. Who has signed the pledge? It was only a misunderstanding, after all, as we have been told by the Minister of Finance. The pledge had been given on the faith of the Crown; but that was not satisfactory to the Minister of Public Works, and he wanted the written signature of every member of the Cabinet. Well, to me the honour of the Crown would have been sufficient, not so to my hou friend the Minister of Public Works. He wanted to have the individual signatures of my hon, friends the Minister of Finance and his colleagues. Has my hon, friend the Minister of Finance taken a new pledge? Has he signed the pledge? If he has signed the pledge, who knows but, at some future time, he may say that he did so in a moment of weakness? Has my hon. friend the Minister of Justice signed the pledge also? Has my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, the Rupert of this Dominion Parliament, signed the pledge also? Has my hon. friend the Secretary of State, who has just come through an election in Haldimand, signed the pledge also?

Mr MONTAGUE. Before the people of my constituency I expressed my opinion on this subject, but the hon. leader of the Opposition, in a hundred speeches, has failed to express his opinion.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, Mr. Speaker, if my hon, friend spoke so clearly in a hundred different speeches, the Minister of Public Works is hard to satisfy if, after listening to all those speeches, he has to have the written signature of the Secretary of State. I have read those speeches of the Secretary of State, and the more I have read of them the stronger become my conviction that he had learned Tallyrand's famous saying, that speech has been given to mankind to disguise thoughts. And my hon. friend the member for Huron (Mr. Patterson), fresh from a milder climate, has he also signed the pledge? And what about the Minister of Militia, has he also signed the pledge? And my hon, friend the Controller of Customs? I apologize to my hon. friend; he is saved by his position from the necessity of giving his signature. Now, Sir, I imagine we have seen the last of this misunderstanding There is a grave lesson, however, in all these proceedings, and the lesson is this, that these gentlemen who sit together, statesmen, the Government of Canada, why, they have so little confidence in each other that unless they are bocked in writing, one of their own colleagues will not take their word. This is the Government of Canada, Sir, this is the Government of Canada that we have You may search in vain in this House. the annals of any British country, nay, of any civilized country, to find the like of There is one thing, however, which that. binds hon. gentlemen together, and that is, not the signature of the hon. gentlemen which was demanded by the Minister of Public Works, but the cement of office; I now beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was not that ring of triumph in the motion which was faintly heard to-day from the lips of the leader of the Opposition, as he moved that this House do now adjourn, we noticed which the previous occasion; and, perhaps, experience of his previous motion, and of the debate which followed, may, to some extent, account for the feebler tones of the hon, gentleman on this occasion. The lead- I believe, Mr. Speaker, that both members er of the Opposition has endeavoured to on this side of the House and the country at which he took up the other day, in as graceful a manner as was possible for him to do. He has dwelt upon a misunderstanding on this side. Undoubtedly, there has been a misunderstanding, and we are generous enough to rejoice that, considering the small comfort the Opposition have had during this session of Parliament, this misunderstanding, on your right, Sir, has somewhat tended to alleviate the sad disappointment that has existed on that side of the House since first we met in this session down to the present moment. Did the leader of the Opposition, as, with forced humour he referred to newspaper skits and newspaper cartoons, forget the humiliating position in which those comments leave his own party and himself? If the Conservative party in Canada deserves all the ridicule that has been heaped upon it by those paid cartoonists in the organs of the Liberal party-

STREET, THE PROPERTY OF THE PR

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Tory organs.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, in any organs. If they have dillydallied with public affairs, as has been charged, if they have shown a lamentable want of cohesion, if they cannot trust each other on your right, how is it that these brilliant gentlemen who, from the remarks of the leader of the Opposition to-day, are supposed to be a compact force-how is it that they are unable to come up and take possession of the treasury benches? What is it that leaves them in a pitiable minority, whether they divide the House on a supposed crisis, or whether they divide the House when affairs are running smoothly? I leave the leader of the Opposition to consider how it is that, if his opponents are so weak, if his opponents are troubled with misunderstanding, his own party grows weaker and weaker as the days roll by. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, why, on the occasion that is now under consideration, his party is only able to conjure up a few gibes and jeers; I will tell you why the leader of the Opposition, though on an admittedly great occasion he can be humorous, can be nothing else; it is because, though he has spoken at a crisis in Canada's history, though he has spoken, not for the second time only on this subject, but dozens of times, neither the House of Commons nor the people of Canada know where he stands upon the Manitoba school question to-day. Challenged on this eventful day, challenged at a moment when he fancied that he was about to achieve a party triumph, challenged in terms by the Secretary of State, the hon. leader of the Opposition did not dare to take up the challenge, but quickly concluded one of the weakest declarations that was ever made by the leader of a party, either on a supposed crisis, or on any important occasion in a House of Parliament. been leading the House for so many years.

withdraw to-day from the defiant position large appreciate fully how difficult it is to grapple with this question, and they have seen in the last few days a Government exhibiting that extraordinary strength, that while they did not conceal the fact that they were preparing to make an announcement which hon, gentlemen opposite know is most difficult to bring all minds together upon. and that they were, in the face of their opponents, ready to state their position in the House and in the country on a clear and definite platform. They were powerful enough and strong enough, I say, to harmonize the honest differences prevailing in their own camp, to reconcile them in the clear light of day, honestly and fairly, to admit that differences have existed, but they were able in the end to make the proud boast that a spirit of compromise prevails in the Conservative ranks, that patriotism exists in the Conservative party to-day as it has since 1867, and that on this question as on all other great constitutional questions, thank God, the Conservative party has in the end come together and in the end has triumphed, as I believe it will triumph on this question. So putting jibes and jeers aside, this at all events is our position today. Hon, members heard it stated from the lips of the leader of the House a few days ago; hon. members heard that some of his colleagues could not go with him on this question; hon. members now hear today that we have a Government consisting of the same number less one, that we have now a Government committed absolutely to an important policy, and a Government thoroughly in accord one member with another. Will hon, gentlemen opposite now tell the country where they stand? they before they ask this House to adjourn -I ask them through you, Mr. Speakerlet the country at large know whether in as brief a time they can come together on this great question and tell the people exactly where they are prepared to stand. will then remove the suspense in the country to which the leader of the Opposition has referred. There has been suspense. There is no longer any suspense regarding the position occupied by the Conservative party and the Government; there is suspense, however, in regard to the position of the Opposition on this Manitoba school question, and I now make way for some of the hon. leader's lieutenants to remove that suspense and tell the House where they and their party stand.

We from the province of Quebec are deeply interested in the Manitoba school question, and we have strong reasons why we should desire hon, gentlemen opposite to come to a decision in regard to that question. Where are hon, gentlemen opposite on this question at the present time? They are complaining that we on this side of the House have had some differences of opinion or even misun-derstandings? What understanding have they had on this question? The understanding has been to remain mute and silent. make a special appeal to my hon. friends from Quebec, who no doubt care a great deal for this Manitoba school question, never to allow it to be said that they voted for adjournment and thereby allow the hon. gentlemen opposite to cross over to this side of the House without having some policy on this difficult and important question. I have too much confidence in the Conservative party, I have too much confidence in the Government at the present time, I have too much confidence in the public utterances made on the floor of Parliament, utterances which cannot be ignored without disgrace and dishonour, I have too much confidence, Government the present \mathbf{in} repeat. not to believe for one moment that remedial legislation on the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and of the remedial order passed in March last will be carried out. For these reasons, I hope my hon. friends from Quebec will to-day act as they did the day before yesterday, and oppose this motion to adjourn. What reasons have they for giving a different vote from that recorded by them the other day? Would they advance this question which they have so much at heart? No. We stand in the same position to-day as we did the day before yesterday when we come to confront and compare the position occupied by the two parties before the House, and I hope the same vote will be given.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not concerned in answering the challenge, nor have I a right to answer the challenge which the Minister of Justice has thrown down to my hon. friends who sit on the Opposition side of the House. But I am here to say, speaking, I hope, still as a Conservative, as I claim to be, speaking in the name and as representing the feelings of a great number of gentlemen on this side of the House on the matter—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. McCARTHY. We shall see before the session is over whether my statement in that regard is correct or not. But we know at least where the Government stands, and where the Government stands unitedly. I cannot for my part understand what this three or four days trouble has been about, what this difficulty has been, if the explanation which is offered to the House is all that is to be told about it. Why, Sir, a very clear and definite statement is made to this House on Monday last, that the Government would call an early session for the purpose of implementing the remedial order by a Bill which the Government as a Government would press to a conclusion. But we are told now that because the Government intimated that they would correspond with the province of Manitoba and endeavour to see whether Manitoba would obey the order and comply with it, or rather do what was just to the minority, a misunderstanding arose. Was that misunderstanding justified? Was there any secret statement made? Was there any subterfuge on the part of the majority which gave rise to the course taken by the hon. Postmaster General and the hon. Minister of Public Works? The pretense is that the majority of the Cabinet might have accepted something else than the remedial order, something less than the contemplated Bill, and if that was the idea which prevailed, if that was the subterfuge which underlay the statements, then I think the hon, gentlemen from Quebec were right in having an explicit statement and an explicit and clear understanding with their colleagues, and I cannot imagine there could have been anything else than that subterfuge or we would not have had three or four days interregnum. Now we know where we are. The province, which has told us in plain but yet in firm language, in answer to the order of His Excellency, that they will not take the responsibility of carrying that order into effect, is to be invited again to stultify itself and to say that it will carry the order into effect. We know perfectly well that that is hopeless. And what of the thirty-nine gentlemen from the province of Ontario who have told the Government that they were not prepared to endorse or support the Government which will carry out the remedial order by a Bill in this House? These gentlemen have now, it seems, to give in to their leaders from the province of Quebec. These gentlemen who brought their pressure to bear with such effect that the Government dare not introduce a remedial Bill this session-although the Bill was ready cut and dry to their hands, and has been since March last-these gentlemen are now, for sooth, to take what is administered to them (for the second time in the history of this Parliament) from the province of Quebec. They are to take the statement made here by the Minister of Finance. And the deliberate answer given to the question of my hon. friend from Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Girouard) that there is to be a pretense of asking Manitoba that which it is known Manitoba cannot comply with; and then the great Conservative party, forsooth, is to be pledged, in the interest of minorities, to force upon the small province of Manitoba, through the federal powers, a hateful school law, which, I trust, will never by this Par-liament be placed upon that or upon any other community.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, all the hon. members in this House have, no doubt, realized the serious nature of the position in which the Government of this country have been involved within the last few days. We have all realized that grave differences had arisen between the hon. members of the Government, as to how to make a satisfactory settlement of the question that confronts them and come to an understanding on the same. Within the last few years, Mr. Speaker, members of this House who showed a great concern for the future of the country, men distinguished for their abilities, great statesmen whose science and legal attainments made them a tower of strength for this House, have departed from our midst—I now allude to the late Sir John A. Macdonald and to the Hon. Edward Blake, among others, the former of whom has departed from our midst to join the great majority, and the latter has left us to display his abilities in a higher parliamentary sphere—and I ask, Mr. Speaker, whether possibly these men could, with all their clear insight into politics and with their large political experience, have foreseen that the Government of the country should, one day, fall into the weak hands that now hold the reins Apart from this consideration, of power? Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that at as early a date as 1890, Sir John Macdonald, when his political career was verging to an end, and at a time when religious and racial differences were arising in our midst which threatened the very life of the Canadian Confederation and jeopardised the great work of his whole life, Sir John Macdonald, I say, with those cares preying upon his mind and feeling that his career was drawing near its end, and in accord with a most distinguished statesman, who was then the leader of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition in this House, devised the means of settling those differences, in case they should ever come up for solution before the Government of this country. This legislation was carried without a dissentient vote in this House. That legislation was framed with a view to referring to the courts for decision these most intricate and important political questions, and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), who was fully aware of the consequences that were involved in the passage of this legislation, recorded his vote Subsequent events, Mr. in favour of it. Speaker, evinced the remarkable wisdom of the policy pursued, under those circumstances, by those statesmen, Sir John A. Macdonald and the Hon. Edward Blake. The Manitoba school question which was then just looming up above the horizon, all bristling with difficulties, under the shape of national and racial prejudices, was referred to the courts, and in the case of Barrett versus the city of Winnipeg, the minority which appealed to a higher jurisdiction, until she should reach the foot of the Throne, was gard especially to freedom of conscience and non-suited. Nothing daunted by this first worship. The Manitoba Government denon-suited.

failure, the minority resolved upon fighting it to the bitter end, and decided to press their claims until justice should be done and until the political problem at issue should be solved, no matter what the final issue might prove to be, if only it was settled on the lines of justice and British fair play. An appeal for redress against the Acts complained of was then taken under the constitution, before the Governor General in Council. His Excellency the Governor General in Council, previous to considering the grievances of the Catholic minority in Manitoba, deemed it his duty to refer a certain number of questions to the Supreme Court of Canada. The decision of the Supreme Court was that no appeal would lie to the Governor General in Council. Once more the Manitoba minority decided to appeal to the highest court in the Empire, and the decision of the Privy Council of Her Majesty, of January, 1895, was to the effect that the grievances complained of were well founded, and that the school laws enacted by the Manitoba Government in 1890 invaded the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority in educational matters. Now, the only alternative left for the Government, Speaker, but to hear like complaints and grievances of the Roman Catholic minority and to give a decision on the lines of the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England. His Excellency the Governor General in Council decided, in conformity with the judgment of the Privy Council, that the grievances complained of by the Roman Catholic minority were well founded and called for redress, and a declaration or remedial order based on the lines of that decision was passed on to Manitoba. The legislature of the province of Manitoba took into consideration the order sent on to it by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, and gave the Federal Government an unequivocal, and positive answer. Speaker, I may remark that, prior to the passage of the remedial order, His Excellency the Governor General in Council had already taken into consideration the grievances of the Roman Catholic minority; and that his attention had been drawn to those grievances by the petition signed by all the members of the Roman Catholic Episcopate of the Dominion of Canada; further, that His Excellency in Council, last summer, had thought fit to transmit to the Government of Manitoba an extract of the report of the Privy Council approved of by His Excellency, asking the Government in the most parliamentary way, to redress the grievances of the Catholic minority, which interested the Dominion in general; and that in pursuance of a policy which requires that the right of minorities in the different provinces of the Dominion, irrespective of creed, should not be prejudiciously affected. with reclined to remove or redress the grievances complained of by the Catholic minerity and did not give a satisfactory answer to His Excellency in Council. Subsequently, an appeal was taken to the Privy Council, and, as alluded to above, a favourable decision was rendered by the committee of the Privy Council, and then, the remedial order was sent on to the legislature of Manitoba. And what are the terms and the purport of the decision come to by the Federal Government, in reply to the legislature of Manitoba. The Government, by its declaration on Monday last, pledges itself to enter into further negotiations with the legislature or rather with the Manitoba Government. There is only one political body with which we can now negotiate; that is the legislature of Manitoba, and that political body is now adjourned. The legislature shall not sit again before this Parliament has come to an end. How then can this Government hope for a satisfactory settlement of the question, if they are precluded from negotiating any further with the legislature of Manitoba? I may say further, Sir, that the reply given by the Manitoba Government to the Cabinet, which I have before me, is not only improper, but insulting for the Government. What is the purport of the answer? First, the Manitoba Government state that the legislature has always realized the importance of the school and educational problem in that province; and that they have good grounds for be-lieving that they still realize its importance. That the Federal Government, that passed on to them the remedial order, know very little as to how to solve the problem, and that in case they should require a royal commission to advise them, the small legis-lature and the members of the Government of Manitoba will take the trouble to come down to Ottawa, to open the eyes of the Cabinet. Such is the purport of the answer given. Last summer, the Cabinet sent a message to the Manitoba Government; and with a view to enter into further negotiations, they made overtures to them set down in such courteous terms as to preclude the legislature of Manitoba from all possible risk of refusing to enter into negotiations, had they been in the least degree disposed to do so. Entreaties were of no avail. The case had then to be taken before the courts. in order to get to a proper construction of the constitution. The minority, relying upon a judgment of the Privy Council, which decided that they had good ground of complaint, and stated their grievances in no uncertain way; relying moreover on the admissions made by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), when arguing the case for the Government of Manitoba before His Excellency General Council; relying Governor in admissions the further upon the of very promoter of the law, that it was a tyrannical and unjust law; I say that the minority applied for relief to this Government, which passed a remedial order and sent it on to the Manitoba Government. The latter, through its positive and improper reply, has divested itself of its legislative powers so as to invest this Government with the same. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be seen from the remarks I have just made, how it happens that, through the exertions and the wise measures adopted by the far-sighted statesmen who governed this country-some of whom have disappeared from the parliamentary arena, while others have since joined the great majority, bequeathing to us a rare monument of legislative wisdom and foresight-this is how it happens, I say, that the Manitoba school question was allowed to reach a stage of settlement, and a clear and unequivocal solution, through medium of the legislative power of this House. But, Sir, it belongs to great statesmen to unravel great political problems, and to small statesmen to make them unsolvable. I am afraid less no settlement should be reached on the school question, during this I apprehend less the Government should not be able to fulfil their pledges, however positive they may be. There is no reason for dilly-dallying with the question. The Government, as in duty and honour bound, should take their ground and redeem their pledges. My political opponents, as well as my political friends, know that I have nothing to gain by my present attitude. My political opponents know my fidelity to my party, from the exertions I have put forth to fight them. They know also how, in the political campaign that took place quite recently, I fought against my hon, friend from Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion), whom I see now in his seat. Those who took part in the struggle are aware of the strenuous exertions I put forth to secure the return of the Government candidate. They know the earnestness with which I upheld the honour of my party. I regret to say, Sir, that I was deceived as to the degree of energy and good faith of the Government. I say further, that, after receiving from the Manitoba Government such a letter as the one they received, there is no other path open to them, with a view to bringing any further negotiations to a successful issue, but to crawl from Ottawa to Winnipeg, and beg on their knees from the Greenway Government to rid them of this legislation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. (Translation.) On all fours.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) And I am sorry to see at the head of this procession my hon. friends the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron). I have no hesitation in saying, Sir, that it is below the dignity of this Government to be under the necessity of crawling on all fours to Winnipeg, after having met with so flat a denial as the one they received. Sir, the remedial order was of such a character as to lead us to believe that we had at last found a proper solution of the poli-tical problem. The pledges that were then given by the Prime Minister in the other House were of such a nature as to induce us to believe that the pledges given would be redeemed. Now, the Government wishes to enter into further negotiations with the legislature of Manitoba. I warn him against the impolicy and the unprofitableness of such an undertaking. As I suspect the good faith of the Government, I cannot approve of the course they pursue nor repose any confidence in them any longer. I am sorry to say that in the ranks of the Ministry there are not to be found men up to the standard of our departed chieftains. While I greet the Ministers as the successors of the great men who have sat before them on the treasury benches, of those men who have removed the obstacles that blocked the way to legislation on these intricate questions; but unfortunately, I do not know that they are ready to learn the lesson of wisdom and experience which they have been taught by these great patriots. But, Sir, I may say that there is one member of the Cabinet who has thought it below his dignity to take back the resignation he had sent in, and again fall in the ranks of the Cabinet. The political career of this man is a remarkable one. He may, no doubt, have inveterate political enemies, but all agreed in saying that he is a man endowed with great energy and moral ccurage. I am satisfied that his compatriots will greet him as a courageous man. Sir, some are of opinion that he has inflicted incalculable injury upon the Liberal party. I consider, Mr. Speaker, that this man has not dealt a mortal blow to the Liberal party, but that, through him, the province has got rid of a dangerous Government, as well as the Liberal party upon which was saddled the responsibility of the action of that Government, although they did not approve of its course. He has merely lopped off the mouldering branches and useless twigs, that would otherwise have pumped the sap of the Liberal party, stunted its growth and prevented its bearing an abundant harvest of political fruit. Now, Sir, this man seems to have endeavoured to rid the Conservative party of a certain faction which is imperilling the very life of the party, through its stubborness, its disloyalty, its spirit of partiality and injustice, in denying the min-orities in the different provinces their lawful rights in religious and educational mat-ters. I believe, Mr. Speaker, as others do, that the Tory party, outside of the province of Quebec, will look upon Mr. Angers as one of their enemies, but to those of our Ministers who have remained at their posts in the Cabinet, I shall say this: that Mr. Angers, by his attitude on that question. has reunited into a solid phalanx the whole province of Quebec. Now, Mr. Speaker, we are asked to vote confidence in the promises of the Cabinet. Allow me, Sir, in connection with this matter of blind confidence which we are asked to repose in the promises of the Cabinet, to tell the House a story. One of the members of the Government who is now in his seat on the treasury benches, had, it seems, made certain promises to one of his friends who had a claim to settle with the Government and who was pressing the settlement of his claim. Now, what I wish to impress upon the House, is the characteristic reply made by the member of the Government whom I now see in his seat. His friend told him, one day: "Say, I am out of patience; I can't trust you any longer; you must settle that affair right away." Said the Minister: "Don't get mad, friend, I am going to make you another promise. Mr. Speaker, the Government wants to give us further pledges. They promise to enter into negotiations with the provincial authorities of Manitoba, to find out whether they can arrive at a satisfactory settlement in favour of the oppressed minority. Those negotiations cannot and will not have any result. Some say, Sir, that it is only another device to adjourn the settlement of the question, and I think they are right. An hon. member on the other side of the House reminds me, on good ground too, that the hon. members of the Opposition have not stated to the House their policy with regard to the Manitoba school matter nor where they are prepared to stand on the question. They retort, rightly too, that the Opposition is not bound to state to the House the course it intends to pursue on the question. In that respect, the Government have made known their opinion. But it is none the less true that, whenever they happen to hear themselves reproached with not having fulfilled their promises, they remind us of their former promises. But, on the other hand, the Government admittedly have the benefit of the position, as they have a well-defined public policy on the question, and a policy still better defined and reiterated by the ministerial statement which has just been made to this House. I give the Government credit for this well-defined attitude; still I should give them more credit, were they to pass from the domain of mere speculation into the realm of substantial reality, were they to give up making mere promises, in order to fulfil the Mr. Speaker, I venture to say that, to my mind, the future of confederation is seriously threatened, and the danger will only be intensified by the course pursued up to the present moment towards Manitoba. There are rocks ahead, and the weak policy of the Government is a serious threat for the future welfare of Canada. No legislative power should be allowed to transgress the law of the Empire nor interfere with the judgment Let us take a look of the highest courts. across the line and take, for instance, the great American people. They also had their own political problems and very important ones too to solve; and in fact, if we take any of the great nations of the world we will find that in order to develop their territory and rise to the rank of a great people, they all had extraordinary difficulties to face and to overcome. Such was the case with the American republic. The United States saw its very life threatened. It had an hairbreadth escape, under certain circumstances. The dilly-dallying of the great leaders of the republic with the problems they had to face, led the country to civil war, and this was the outcome to the doctrines that pervaded the United States, which brought about a conflict which resulted in the loss of millions of human lives. That doctrine was that of noninterference, advocated now by my hon. friend the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in favour of the province of Mani-He might learn from history how rivers of blood flowed throughout the land, as a result of that doctrine taught by Calhoun. What was that doctrine, Mr. Speaker? It was the doctrine of State independence. even in the matters which were within the scope of the jurisdiction of the central authority. Calhoun, the famous apostle of slavery in the southern slave states, was the first truly great American statesman who first advocated the doctrine of non-interference, which the hon, member for North Simcoe would like to see applied to the judgment of the Privy Council by the Manitoba Government. As the Government here have more than once already yielded to the Manitoba Government, especially at the time when there arose a difference about railway monopoly, they now allow them to break the constitution and the law. They have kept breaking the law and infringing upon the rights of the minority these five years past. The minority has been robbed of its rights and the weak Government that we have for the Dominion of Canada come now and tell us: Let the minority wait six months longer and the Government go on robbing that while and should nothing turn up during that time. shall then afford them redress. To $\mathbf{m}\mathbf{y}$ mind constitutional theories professed by Manitoba present symptoms of a rebellion against the highest courts of the Empire and against the decrees of Her Majesty in Council, and I hold that the Government are against ment are open to censure for not carrying out the judgment of the Privy Council. On these several grounds, I cannot, until the Government shall have fulfilled their pledges, vote confidence in them; as soon as they shall have fulfilled their promises—better late than never-I shall vote confidence in them. The Catholics of Manitoba have suffered long enough; for too long a time have they been deprived of their schools; too long have they been ground down; for too long a time have they, a poor minority, been compelled to contribute out of their own moneys to the education of children whose parents were much wealthier than they were. The reign of injustice has prevailed long enough.

I arraign the Government for not taking now the necessary steps to put a stop to such a state of affairs, after the judgment of the highest court in the Empire has provided the means for them and at a time when no obstacle stands in the way. Compromises have ever been fatal. In the United States, compromises made with regard to the doctrine of non-interference by the Federal Government with local governments, led to this result, that the southern states, emboldened in their course by the inertness of the central power, finally believed they were under no obligation to obey the federal They went to the length of constitution. holding that the different states could override the judgments of the courts and the enactments of Congress. The federal government allowed the constitution of the country to be transgressed by the states, just as this Government allows the constitution to be transgressed by the province of Manitoba. Now, what was the result of such a policy? The American Republic came within an inch of being wrecked, and for over three years it was a prey to all the horrors of civil war. I wish to impress upon the Government the danger of allowing the dogma of non-interference being planted in this Canada of ours, either through their own inertness and supineness, or in any other way. I want the Government to let it be well understood by the provinces that they shall not be allowed to wreck the constitution, what though the majority of their inhabitants should require it, and even though their legislatures should so enact. Where then do I stand to-day? I know not that any one among the Government supporters share my views on the matter; but I am going to define my political attitude for the future. I somewhat defined it a moment ago, when stating that the Government should have no claim to my support, until they had enacted a remedial legislation, restoring the rights of the minority, on the lines of the judgment of Her Majesty's most honourable Council, and of the remedial order passed on to the Manitoba Government. As all the hon. gentlemen are aware, I am in perfect accord with my party as to the other articles of its political platform; but on this capital point, I consider that the Conservative party is now under the leadership of men who have their moments of weakness; and upon the present occasion, I consider that they have had a Wheremoment of deplorable weakness. fore do the Government not pass their re-Are there insuperable medial law now? difficulties standing in the way of its passage? I see none at all. As I said a moment ago, it is humiliating for the Government to enter into any further negotiations with the Manitoba Government. most a disgrace for the Government to go back on bended knees to the Manitoba legislature, after we have been told that every one of its members had an imperative mandate from the people, under which they were bound to return the answer they have given us. Did there transpire anything calculated to prevent our passing the contemplated legislation? Or did anything happen of such a nature as to warrant our entering again into any further negotiations with It is transparent now that no such negotiations could come to an issue. Manitoba has already given our demands a flat denial, and shall still do so. The problem to be solved is by no means a new one. It might be objected that it matters not whether we should wait a little longer, as we are asked to do in the declaration made before this House on Monday last; that the question is near being solved and it matters little whether a delay of a few months should occur or not. A Parliament which should concern itself with its duty, and a House which should concern itself with its honour, would take no such action, after receiving such an answer as has been given us by the Manitoba legislature. I say that there was here again a moment of inexcusable weakness on the part of the Ministers. deemed it necessary to such a course, it was only owing to their lack of firmness and resolution, at the beginning. How shall I stand, in the future, in relation to my party? I am going to define my attitude, leaving it to others who share my views to determine their own position, which, however, I think will be exactly similar to mine. In the future my attitude towards the party shall be that of a Conservative unionist. In Great Britain, where the constitutional regime is so well understood, there is a party of Unionists, which was formed with a view to the upholding of the British constitution. A fraction of the Liberal party there, Sir, have coalesced with the Tory party and adopted a policy based on the lines of the upholding of the Union. That now styles themselves Unionist. party It matters little whether the English Liberals did right in forming into a ecalition with the Conservative party, but I say my position in the future, shall be that of a unionist. I am in favour of the upholding of our constitution in all its integrity. I do not wish to join the ranks of the Liberal party, which has made no satisfactory declaration of principle in my opinion at least, on the important issue which is now before Parliament. I do not want my course to be construed as if I were disposed to form an alliance with that party. I do not wish to sever my connection with the Conservative party, but I shall be ready, should the Government fail to redeem their present pledges, to make an alliance with any patriot, with any man willing to join hands with me to uphold the constitution and adopt a policy calculated to check any transgression of the constitution. I am a Government supporter in so far as I am ready to help them to reach speak the language of reason, justice and the object they protend to have in significant. the object they pretend to have in view.

Such is my well-defined policy, or rather, my position in the Conservative party. I shall join, in the future, with all the men willing, like me, to uphold the constitution, with all the men disposed to protect the rights of the minority, with all the men willing to stand by the minorities. Mr. Speaker, while perusing the history of the American Federation, I found described there the very same spirit of tolerance and benevolence which pervades my own province towards the Protestant minority. That example is found in one of the states of the federation; in the state of Maryland. The extract I am going to quote is from Bancroft's History, v. I, p. 275. Allow me to add that I sincerely wish that the state of things described in the extract I am about to read, should prevail not only in the province of Quebec, but throughout the different provinces of the Dominion. Such a state of things as described by Bancroft should also prevail here, in Canada; let our fellow citizens from the other provinces take a hint from the American historian in this respect for their future guidance; let them follow in the footsteps of the people of Maryland-in connection with the treatment accorded to the minority there. I may remark, Mr. Speaker, that what Bancroft says of the course pursued by the people of Maryland applies to the line of conduct adopted and followed by the Catholics in the province of Quebec towards their Protestant fellow citizens:

But far more memorable was the character of the Maryland institutions. In all the other countries of the world persecuting laws prevailed. The oath of the Governor of Maryland, which was devised in 1648, went on in these words: "I do further swear I will not by myself, nor any other person, directly trouble, molest, or discountenance any person whatsoever, for his or her religion or in the free exercise thereof." Toleration grew up in the province silently, as a custom of the land. Thus did the star of religious freedom harbinger the day; though, as it first gleamed above the horizon, its light was coloured and obscured by the mists and exhalations of morning. Roman Catholics who were oppressed by the laws of England, were sure to find a peaceful asylum on the north bank of the Potomac; and there, too, Protestants were sheltered against Protestant intolerance. The foundation of the colony was peacefully and happily Such were the beautiful auspices under which Maryland started into being; its prosperity and peace seemed assured; the interests of its inhabitants and those of the proprietor, Lord Baltimore, were identical; and, for many years, peace and harmony prevailed undisturbed. The history of the province is one long record of benevolence, gratitude, and toleration. Harmony was disturbed by no intestine faction.

Would to Heaven that it would also apply to the province of Manitoba. At the entrance of the province of Maniinto confederation, Cartier, framing its constitution, exclaimed: "May truth." Cartier! how cruelly deceived you have been in that respect by thy Englishspeaking fellow-citizens! On the very floor of this House, within the walls of which went forth these utterances, lo! we hear to-day from a Government which pretend to be the heirs of his policy, we hear them declaring that justice should not be done immediately to a minority which has beer deprived of its rights for these five years past. Let not my words nor my attitude be construed into a threat to the Conservative party as such: but if any construction is put on them, let it be as a blame inflicted upon the weak and vacillating policy of the men who represent Cartier to-day, at a time when an injustice is being perpetrated, and when they have to deal with the rights of the French and Catholic minority in the provinces. I hold, Mr. Speaker, that the constitution of the country is in jeopardy, if we cannot bring about justice, concord and harmony to prevail in our midst. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the liberties of our country are threatened. What is freedom? I shall give my own definition of it; but let the hon, members of the Government listen to the definition given to it by one of the greatest geniuses that ever lived in this land of America. Here is what Franklin thought of popular freedom:

Should I be asked what distinguishes free countries from those which are not, nations which are ripe for freedom from those which are still far from it, I should say: It is neither a constitution nor houses of parliament, nor newspapersall these may become instruments of oppression and tyranny; the true test is justice and a respect for the law. Tell me what the tribunals are and I will tell you what the people are. the government and the citizens bow down before the law and the protecting forms which it has set up? Doubt it not, then, liberty is there! law played with, evaded by treacherous or violent measures, are there any special tribunals or judges corrupted either through passion or interest? Flee! liberty in that country is but a-snare, and public institutions but a mere mockery. Liberty, mark well my words, is a regard for right-it is but another name for justice.

Was there any justice in the course pursued by the majority in Manitoba towards the minority? Is there any justice in the course now followed by this Government and this Parliament, when postponing the settlement of the question to a session to be called six months from now? Both Governments are guilty in that respect. The Government of Manitoba, for its spirit of rebellion, and this Government, because of their recklessness and weakness displayed by them in having the law of the land respected, and in restoring the reign of injustice, which, in the words of Franklin, is but another name for liberty. In the province of which I have the honour to be one of the representatives here, I may say, Mr. Speaker, without fear of contradiction that, should the legislation of that province, where the French and Catholics are in an overwhelming majority, attempt any invasion of the religious freedom and other rights of the minority, it would be annihilated, pulverized by the French and the Catholics themselves, the very day the members of that legislature should go before the people and claim its support. How comes it, Sir, that the reverse should take place in a province, the majority of which is recruited from emigrants, that came from abroad to claim hospitality on our shores? And remember, Sir, that they claimed hospitality from a race which is entitled to as great a credit for having developed the country and promoted its progress and march onward towards civilization, as the Anglo-Saxon race itself. I say further that they claimed hospitality from a race without the co-operation of which there would be no province of Manitoba to-day. They claimed hospitality from a race without whose help there would be no Canadian Pacific Railway to transport the emigrants. They claimed hospitality from a race which, by way of acknowledgments and gratitude, they now rob and despoil, exerting themselves at the same time to ravish the souls of its children. Mr. Speaker, I am far from being hopeful in the political future of the country. And in rising in my seat to-day to address the House, I was prompted by no other consideration, as a representative of the people in Parliament, but a desire to fight the good fight for the freedom of my fellow-citizens; let them be English or French, Protestant or Catholic, it matters not. I stand to-day, as I have always stood up to this moment, as a champion of tolerance, as an advocate of freedom and equal rights for all.

Mr. LACHAPELLE. (Translation.) Speaker, it is not necessary for me, in rising to reply to the speech of the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont), to state that I will not take up certain important parts of that speech. Although my hon, friend was very eloquent, I do not deem it necessary to reply to all the observations made by him. The essential point now before the House is whether we should withdraw our confidence in the Government, by voting for the motion to adjourn moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition, or whether we should continue them that confidence. That is the whole question. In referring to the Government, I beg to specially refer to the hon. Ministers who represent in the Government the province of Quebec. Should we now forsake the hon, the Minister of Public Works and the hon. Postmaster General, or should we continue them the confidence we have placed in them ever since we have been following That, Mr. Speaker, is the whole them? question. I will take the liberty to reply in as few words as possible to the hon. member for Bagot. The hon, gentleman prefaced his remarks by a history of the Manitoba school question. He, perhaps, forgot after this history of the question, to give us the true and proper appreciation which was now to be made of it. Who is it that struggled for the minority, who is it that battled for the Manitoba schools since 1890? Who is it that stood the fight required in order to come to the peaceful settlement, which we all desire, of this difficult and important question? Is it not these very Ministers whom the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) so easily deserts now? Is it not these very Ministers whom he takes pleasure in bantering by stating that they are not great statesmen, but little statesmen? The error in appreciation made by the hon. gentleman seems very strange to me. It seems to me to form the most of his speech. I can well understand that it would be different if the position were different. I can well understand that if we were, for instance, at the last moment when action might be taken on this question, we could no longer hesitate. could then understand all the violence of his language. What is the question after all? Nothing more than a mere postponement of three or four months to finally settle this school question. The Government, through the hon. leader of this House, states that the remedial legislation claimed by the hon. member for Bagot, will be brought before this Parliament at the next session. For my part, I cannot see the logic of the speech of the hon, gentleman, and I think that under the circumstances we should not forsake those who undertook to settle this question, for, after all, it is only a question of postponement and nothing else. But it is said this is a new promise. I deny that the Government spent their time deceiving the friends of the separate schools in Manitoba, that they spent their time making promises to lure public opinion. No doubt promises were made, but to say that since 1890, the Conservative party spent their time luring public opinion with the settlement of this Manitoba school question, no, I deny it peremptorily. What are the facts? The hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) has just stated that we have been pleading for four years, appealing from court to court, and all that to end in this new promise of passing a legislation at another session of this House. There is no fault to find in the hon. members of the Government, for their is nothing extraordinary in their whole conduct. The suit was a protracted one, but is it not true that we see people pleading for years and years for a simple matter of a hundred dollars? Is it surprising that in a case of this magnitude, the judicial proceedings before the courts should have been protracted? We must not prejudice the public opinion. The hon, gentleman is wrong, and he is mistaken in following the course he has just adopted. It is not a good way to have justice done to the minority in Manitoba. As I stated a moment ago, it is only after all a question of a postponement for a few months, and there is no question of principle involved. We all know that our hon, friends on this side of the House are devoted to the cause, the settlement of which they have so much at heart, a most important cause if ever there was. If it was a question of principle, I would understand the course followed by the hon. member for Bagot. But such is not the case. The hon. leader of the House stated that there only arose differences of detail between the members of the Cabinet and that these differences do not relate to questions of principle. In his statement of Monday last, the hon. leader of the House solemnly stated on behalf of the Government that all the members of the Cabinet were one on the question of principles, that is on the question of doing justice to the minority in Manitoba. Every one agreed on that question, and they were all unanimous as to that. No dissatisfaction was shown in this respect. All there was to do, according to the statements made to-day in this House, was to remove the misunderstandings, and it is what was done. Perhaps there was also, apart from these misunderstandings, let us say the word, a mutual want of confidence, but all the members of the Government accepted a statement which was calculated to reassure the hon. Ministers who represent the province of Quebec in the Government. Under these circumstances, I say that the Ministers from the province of Quebec were not only bound to give in and take back their vacant seats, but they were bound, and rightly bound, to ask the support of their friends in the fulfilment of the duties and obligations they undertook to fulfil and the putting aside of all trifling personal vanity, so that they might do their duty, cost what may. The hon, the Minister of Public Works imparted to us his feelings in the words so full of emotion he has uttered at the beginning of this sitting. The fact is I perfectly understood his position. I perfectly understand that he has passed through one of the most painful moments of his political life and that the hon. Minister suffered more than one can fancy. Solemn statements were made in this House, statements which implied a most formal pledge on the part of the Government to settle in a satisfactory way the Manitoba school question. The first opinion is not always the sound one, far from it; it may even be said that it is often unsound, but the one following cogitation and reasoning, the second one, is truly the good one. 1 hope this second opinion of the people will finally be with the hon. Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works. these gentlemen have reconsidered their first decision, as it was their duty to do. hon. Minister of Agriculture, whom I regret to see out of the Government, has followed another course. He considered the situation from another point of view. The question is such an important one that we must not be surprised by this. The province of Quebec has too much interest in the settlement of this question not to be represented in the Cabinet which pledges itself to give it a satisfactory solution. It was not advisable for our Ministers to leave their seats vacant, and I say this considering the whole thing from the only standpoint of the settlement of this question. Would the question have been better served by our representatives remaining out of the Cabinet? I say no. For all these reasons, I think the hon, member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) is wrong in withdrawing his confidence from the Government, and that he was also wrong when archly bantering the Ministers of the province of Quebec. I say he is mistaken, he falls into a serious error which he himself will find out when in I say he is mistaken besober thoughts. cause we are going to continue the same struggle in this House under the direction of our Ministers. We are also going to continue this struggle during the recess. We joined in this fight when our Manitoba co-religionists began complaining and we will only cease fighting when they will cease complaining and when the question will be finally disposed of. I therefore say that it is because the hon. Ministers of the province of Quebec and because the majority of the members of the province of Quebec. I have no doubt, show this opinion that they will continue to give the Government that confidence which is so necessary to bring about the settlement of the school question. The Government has given our French Ministers explanations satisfactory enough to justify their coming back. It was said that it would have been better to require that the Bill should be brought before the House. From a practical point of view, I do not think it would have given us more guarantees than those contained in the statements made by the Government Monday last and to-day. For one thing is sure, except for one actuated by a feeling justifiable with our opponents, but not with us, and that is that it follows from these statements made by the Government that the question will have to be settled at the next session in a satisfactory way. Should the Government not keep their promise, I regret to say it, but I would consider that as a dishonouring act which I do not believe the Ministers likely to be guilty of. I now come to a point of the speech of the hon. member for Bagot on which he laid particular stress. It is that the Manitoba legislature cannot receive new propositions from the Government for a settlement of this important question. He says the Manitoba legislature is not sitting. But no one will question that it can be called together for the consideration of a serious question. So that the reasoning of the hon. member for Bagot on this point is altogether groundless. As I understand it, the reason why a friendly hand is held out once more to Manitoba is to justify the strong action this House will have to take should it decline to accept it. I beg to state to my hon. colleagues in this House, and particularly to those of the province of Quebec-I have no fear in making this statement—that Sunday last I happened to meet the Superior of the community of that declaration with profound disappoint-

Collin and we talked the matter over. day last, we were in full crisis, something like to-day for all that. I was representing to him that the settlement of the question could be postponed. Here is his answer: could be postponed. Here is his answer: When a body, political or non-political, is compelled to take a violent action, it cannot take too many precautions, and your action will be all the less violent, said this gentleman who is acknowledged as a luminary in the province of Quebec, your action will be all the more acceptable to your natural opponents on this question as you will have taken more time to settle it, and then if you should be compelled to cause this policy to be followed by a strong action, you no doubt will have to take it. Well, I think this statement from so distinguished a man as Mr. Collin expresses the opinion of all the members of our clergy, of all our bishops, from Bishop Langevin to Bishop Gravel.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LACHAPELLE. (Translation.) I am so well satisfied that such is the opinion of these reverend gentlemen, who are perhaps more interested than we are in the settlement of this question, that I have no fear in stating that I will not have the humiliation of being contradicted by any of them. I think, Mr. Speaker, I have replied to the principal points of the speech of the hon, member for Bagot. A splendid speech, full of historical researches, but a speech which. I think, without any desire to judge it too severely, would have its justification in other circumstances, but not now. The question now is only as to the motion to adjourn. The only question we have to answer is this: Should we withdraw our confidence in a Government which for four years, through even personal sacrifices by some of their members, have helped us to continue this series of costly trials? What do they ask from us? A few more months to settle this question. Should we withdraw from them our confidence? I think we should not.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I heard with deep regret the statement made on Monday in the House by my hon, friend the leader of the House, that unless the Manitoba Government makes an acceptable arrangement with this Government in the way of which remedying the grievances minority complain of on the lines of the remedial order and the terms of the judgment of the Privy Council in January last: "this Government would be prepared at the next session of Parliament to be called not later than the 2nd of January next, to introduce and press to a conclusion such legislation as will afford an adequate measure of relief to the said minority, based upon the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and the remedial order of the 21st March last." I say again, Sir, that I heard St. Sulpice in Montreal, the venerable Father | ment and regret, and sent here as I have been by my constituency to support the present Government, and bound as I think I am in honour to give them all proper support in what are properly Government I think it, perhaps, measures, proper and wise to say here in the presence of the Government, so that my words may go to my own constituents and to the country: That any Bill based upon the remedial order which imposes the provisions of paragraphs "A," "B," "C," any Bill exempting the Catholics of Manitoba from the duty of paying school rates, and which furthermore empowers the Catholics of Manitoba to orpanize separate schools, and furthermore entitles the Catholics of Manitoba to a proportionate share of provincial moneys voted for education, is one which I cannot support.

Mr. JONCAS. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) rose in his seat, I was prepared to record my vote against the motion to adjourn, moved by the hon, leader of the Opposition, but now, I have changed my mind. Why, Sir, at the very moment when we still cherished the hope—however faint a glimmering of hope it might be-to secure the settlement of the Manitoba school question, at this very moment, I say, when we are making the sacrifice of our self-love, we meet with provocations, and that from one of the most important members on this side of the House! The hon. member for Albert stands up in his seat and tells in so many words: You may do as you please, gentlemen, but should the Government introduce and press to a conclusion such a legislation as will afford an adequate measure of relief to the minority, what though such legislation be based upon the constitution, I cannot support any such measure. I was inclined to think, Sir, that the Government were in earnest when pledging themselves before the country, and I was prepared to oppose the motion of the hon. leader of the Opposition; but how can we take for serious a declaration which is not even accepted by as influential a government supporter as the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon)? course followed by the hon, member is a blame cast upon the Government. This last challenge, Sir, fills the cup to the brim. have relied so far on the pledges given by the Cabinet, up to the moment when their own friends repudiated those promises. What course then is there open to us, when we are confronted by such a situation? I have written in the newspaper, of which I am the editor, that the grievances of the Catholic minority in Manitoba would be re-I was prompted to take that position by the pledges which were given me by members of the Cabinet. We do not want to invade the rights of any minority; but, also, we want equal rights to all. We shall not allow Manitoba, nor any other pro- forces me to record my vote in favour vince in the Dominion, to tear off a leaf from | of the motion of the hon. leader of the Oppo-

the constitution. As representatives of the province of Quebec, we want justice done under the constitution and nothing else. Now, Sir, I was prepared to grant the delay asked for by the Government, in the hopes that such a delay might bring about a settlement of the question in the near future; but, if the very arrangement we had accepted, perhaps to our prejudice, is to be set aside, we cannot any longer put up with The hon. Minister of Public Works and the hon. Postmaster General have made, this afternoon, a great sacrifice-in fact, one of the greatest sacrifices which a political man may be called upon to make-by consenting to remain at their posts in the Cabinet, in order to extricate the position; and this is the very moment chosen to provoke us, in the way the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) did, and that, too, by a man who, through his attainments and influence, occupies a high situation in this House. He tells the Government in so many words: What decision so ever you may give, we shall never consent to vote in favour of a remedial legislation which will afford relief to the minority in Manitoba.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Are the Government to blame?

Mr. JONCAS. (Translation.) I state a fact. Such is the answer to the offers of peace made by the Government, after the events that transpired within the few last days. It is an unwarrantable challenge on the part of the hon. member for Albert, who is so well informed as to the facts I allude to. The very fact that the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) stands up and tells this House that he cannot support any remedial legislation which may be introduced, vindicates the statement that there is no longer any hope that the Government may succeed next session in passing a legislation which will afford relief to the minority in Mani-And, moreover, with such declaratoba. as those, what do the tions pledges given that a remedial legislation is to be introduced next session, amount to? No doubt, as the hon. member for Bagot said, the Government have pledged their word. But can they redeem their pledge? I am afraid less this pledge should be as illfated as all the other promises. I was ready to take stock in this new pledge given by the Cabinet; but I cannot forbear, after the challenge hurled by the hon. member for Albert, recording my vote in favour of the motion of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) not at first intend to address the House on the question at issue; but circumstances are quite altered now. I think the hon. member the statement which for Albert (Mr. Weldon) has just made, considerably the position, alters sition. Should the hon, member take us to be children, he is quite mistaken. We all stand on the floor of this House on a footing of equality and we do not mean to be dictated to by anybody. From such provocations as that of the hon. member, we fear, not without grounds, less the pledges made in relation to the settlement of the Manitoba school question be not fulfilled we want to have serious pledges. But in voting in favour of the motion, I do not mean to cross over to the other side of the House. I place no reliance on the Liberal party. That school question has been raised by the Liberals of Manitoba and their friends. I regret that the Liberal leaders have not yet thought fit to inform us as to the policy they would carry out in power; they have not pledged themselves to settle the question in conformity with the constitution. Is there not among the hon, gentlemen opposite, one single man devoted enough to the interests of his party to state to the House that they are in favour of settling the question according to the wishes of the Episcopate? Let the hon. gentlemen muster up sufficient courage to make such a statement and they may be sure thereby to win sympathies that they are lacking now. Were I to judge by the position taken by the hon. Were I to member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) I should say that, to my mind, the delay asked for by the Cabinet is not likely to be conducive to a settlement of the question; because, pledges are of no avail, if they did not materialize. Should the Government, next session, introduce a remedial legislation, I shall only be too happy to support their policy then as in the past, without for all that giving up my freedom and independence. Nor do I intend to oppose their general policy. I was returned to this House as an independent Conservative, and I intend to remain so, reserving to myself the right of judging the different questions that come up before the House on their own merits, let them be introduced either by the Conservative or by the Liberal party. As to the different measures brought up by the Cabinet, I am ready to support or oppose them, according as I consider them to be in the public interest or not. I do not intend to enter into the merits of the question it is a trite matter. may allowed, before I resume my seat, to say that I look upon the course pursued by the hon. the Minister of Public Works and the hon. the Postmaster General as one requiring extraordinary courage. For I presume that, after all that transpired in the Privy Council, they came to the conclusion that there was no longer any hope of coming to a settlement of the school question, by allowing their Protestant colleagues in the Government to assume the whole responsibility in the matter. They have decided to question may be arrived at, in accord with the wishes of the Catholic minority. To my mind, they should not be blamed for the course they have pursued; although, I am sorry to say I for one cannot approve of it, under the circumstances. As to whether the pledges given are such as may be relied upon, that is a question as to which they are better informed than I am. As I have not the same grounds as they have for judging of the propriety of such a course, I shall feel it my duty to record my vote in favour of the motion.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, for fear my silence on this occasion might be taken as an endorsement of the action of the Government on this question, I wish to say I do not approve of that action, and I hold myself free, when the proper time comes, to oppose the proposed measure.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr Speaker, I do not know that it is necessary for me, as I am already so deeply pledged in reference to this matter, to repeat again, what I have said more than once in this House, that if any Government attempt to impose upon the people of Manitoba legislation of the nature referred to, against the will of the people, I shall most assuredly feel it my duty to record my vote against that Government, when the question arises. However, I desire to say that I think the course the Government has pursued in endeavouring to arrive at a friendly arrangement with the Manitoba Government is on the lines of the best British statesmanship, and is a course which I believe the people of this country will most heartily approve.

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Speaker,—
Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. AMYOT. I am sorry that I hear "question." I suppose the question which we are discussing now is important enough to justify us in attempting to get a clear understanding of it. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Joneas) has just said that when the motion was made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, he was disposed to vote against it; but that, as he sees the Government abandoned by one of its friends, he will abandon the Government too. I cannot see the logic of that. I know the difficulties the Government has to face in connection with this important question. When so many friends threaten to abandon it, what help does it receive from the Left? Who is ready on the left to abandon his party to help the Government on this question?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Government to assume the whole responsibility in the matter. They have decided to remain at their posts in the Cabinet until next session, in the hope that, through their exertions a satisfactory settlement of the tlemen before the public: "When did you state your policy on that question?" In this House you do not speak; you are not obliged to speak—I admit it; you may remain dumb—you have the right to do so. You may do what you please, but you must take the consequences of your action, and your action to-day is essentially nothing. What does your press say? What does the "Globe" say? What do all the Grit papers of Ontario say?

Some hon. MEMBERS. What does the "World" say?

Mr. AMYOT. The "World" is not the whole world for me.

Mr. CASEY. What does the "Spectator" say?

What do the Grit press Mr. AMYOT. We will speak of the others in a sav? moment. The "Globe," not later than yesterday, and the day before, declared that it would be a terrible thing to pass re-medial legislation; and it supported its contention with the same strain of argument which it generally uses in all its articles. The "Globe" is forming the opinion of the Grit party in Ontario. Grit party is dumb in this House. Where is the help that the Government receives outside of its own party? It will lose some friends and it gains nothing from the Left. Hon. gentlemen come to us and seriously say: On account of that, give up your alliance with your old friends of thirty years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No; six months.

Mr. AMYOT. Six months? No. In 1892, as soon as the contestation of my election was over and I could not be accused of coming to my own friends from personal interest, I joined the ranks of the Conservative party, to which I had given my support till 1885. I gave up the Conservative party when they were in power in Ottawa and in Quebec, and went to the Opposition. I did not do it for my personal interest or the personal interest of my friends.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. AMYOT. Who can deny that? I see it is near six o'clock, and I may as well take the time that remains between now and then in speaking of my own personal affairs, as it seems to please the hon. gentlemen of the Opposition. This is the way they receive the discussion of this question. When they are before the electors they are in favour of remedial legislation; but they will not say it in the House or write it in the Grit press. They want to change the grounds of the discussion, and discuss my personal merits instead. It is not a very brave attitude for a party which professes to deserve power. Mr. Speaker, I am not ashamed of my personal position in this House and in this country. I gave up the Conservative party on account of what I thought was a great crime in the administration of justice. So long as that question was in the political arena, I did not rejoin the party; but when it ceased to be a living question, and when the men who had been commanding in Canada at that time were doing so no more, I had to judge the party as I found it standing before the country. Not believing in free trade and not believing in all the divers theories of the Left, I went to protection, which I never abandoned, because in the greatest moments of excitement in the National party, I said, so long as the United States protect themselves against us, we must protect ourselves against them. I never gave up that policy. I went back to the Conservative party with unstained hands, and with the dignity of a man who was true to his convictions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. AMYOT. Many of those who say "hear, hear," could not say as much. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that hon. gentlemen exhibit such a spirit to-day before so respectable an audience and so respectable a House. This discussion is upon a question involving the future existence of the confederation. To-day the question is whether the federal treaty, the solemn pact which has been entered into, will be respected or not, whether two millions of people will be deceived by two millions and a half of people. Look at the Act of Confederation containing a solemn written promise, endorsed by Her Majesty the Queen; look at the Act of Confederation and the Manitoba Act. which is based upon it. What does the Act of Confederation say? I will not quote the precise words, but give their meaning. It says that the minority will continue to have separate schools. I ask the hon, member for Albert if that is not the meaning of the treaty?

Mr. WELDON. I do not think so.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon, gentleman does not think so. I will have, I suppose, to read him the very words of section 93 of the Confederation Act:

In and for each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, &c.

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the provinces of confederation.

All the powers, privileges and duties that the union by law conferred and imposed in Upper Canada on the separate schools and school trustees, of the Queen's Roman Catholic subjects, shall be, and the same are hereby, extended to the dissentient schools of the Queen's Protestant subjects and Roman Catholic subjects in Quebec.

Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the union, or is thereafter established by the legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

In case any such provincial law, as from time to time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority on that behalf, then, and in every such case, and as far as the circumstances of each case require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section and of any decision of the Governor General in Council under this section.

Now, I will ask the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) if he considers that, under this section, separate schools, for instance, are granted in the province of Quebec? Does he consider that we would have the right in Quebec to abolish the separate schools of the Protestants, and does be consider that in Ontario they would have the right to abolish separate schools? I will allow him with pleasure to interrupt me.

Mr. WELDON. It does not seem to me that this is the motion or the time to discuss that question with the hon. member. I shall have great pleasure, if I happen to be here next winter, to discuss that matter with him.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon, gentleman is of course at liberty not to answer my question. I think if he had an answer which would justify his interpretation of the clause A. B, C, and if he wanted to follow the A, B, C, of the law he would give me an answer at once.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. AMYOT. I cannot refrain, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon, member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont), making a short review of the circumstances which have brought about the situation now existing. We must remember, first, that the law in question, passed in 1890, was obtained through false representations and false promises; and I say that the Conservative party was not responsible for that law. An appeal was made to the In that first appeal the Catholic minority was defeated. You will admit, Mr. Speaker, that the Catholic minority mitted to that decision, did not foment trouble, did not go on attacking the laws and the courts of justice. A second appeal was taken, and this time it was successful. This second appeal which was taken before the highest tribunal of the Empire, declared in most emphatic terms that the appeal to the executive at Ottawa was well founded, that the Governor in Council had jurisdiction, and that the proper course to be pursued must be determined by those to whom that determination has been committed by the statute. It was therefore decided by the highest tribunal to which we can apply that the appeal was well founded, and that the rights and privileges of the minority had been infringed. Upon that decision the Government passed the remedial order. The hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has repeatedly admitted that this remedial order binds the Government for the future. I am of opinion that he is right. The remedial order was sent to Manitoba: Manitoba sent its answer, and some say that the answer is a complete refusal, without any hope whatever for future action. Such, however, is not the opinion of the "Globe," and of the press generally in Ontario. The "Globe" has said constantly that there is no hope whatever, and I will in a moment give two or three quotations from the paper in that respect. I think myself that there is no hope whatever that Manitoba will do anything. But when you see in a country numerous newspapers saying the contrary, we must take facts as they are, and public sentiment and opinion as we find it. At all events, the Government, finding that there is a refusal say: We will present a remedial law and will press it for adoption at a special meeting of the House which will be called for a specific date. They ask us to support them, they want delay, and we are asked whether we approve them in that course or not. Mr. Speaker, I respect the opinion of the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont). No more generous heart perhaps beats in any breast in this House or country. I respect the opinion and sentiments of the hon. senator (Mr. Angers), who has just left the executive, but the question between them and us, or at all events, between them and myself is this: We are all friends of the separate schools; but who will be the best friends of the schools? will work in such a way as to insure their re-establishment? The reasons which the Government gives for asking delay are these: They want to take away the pre-text which is invoked in the press that the remedial law should not be presented now, because there is a chance that Mani-toba will revise its decision. They want to apply that supreme remedy of the remedial law only when all possible hope or chance of acting by Manitoba has been exhausted. Such is the position they take. Can I blame them? And for the benefit of whom will I blame them? Would it be for the benefit of the schools? I do not think so. I am not afraid of the ultimate fate of the schools. They are based upon the law as interpreted by the highest tribunal, they are based upon justice, and in no civilized country can such a doomed to perish. cause be T sure that these schools will ultimately be established. But the Government says: We want to take away the pretext that Manitoba, if we gave them another chance, might act. And I yield to their opinion; I think that, acting in wisdom, we must give them the delay for that reason. If they were to press the law immediately, they would be accused by the "Globe" and all the newspapers that follows its advice of having acted hurriedly. The Government believe that, when we have to deal with a nation a delay of six months is not too great a one, if it tends to bring harmony. They say, impliedly: We want to have some time to prepare public opinion, to explain the question of autonomy to our people. The question of autonomy is perhaps not entirely understood. The autonomy of a province is sacred, I admit. The autonomy of the Dominion Parliament is sacred also. Each must remain within its own sphere. But there is something more than the autonomy of a province in this question; there is the question of the autonomy of the family. The subject of education belongs to the fathers, to the heads of families. The powers in this respect are only delegated to the provinces, they are only delegated to the schoolmasters. We in this Parliament have been constituted the guardians of the autonomy of the family in this regard. It is declared in the Manitoba Act that vested rights in matters of education, vested either by law or practice, shall not be infringed upon. And in that law it is declared that if the provincial government infringes upon these vested rights, we in this Parliament are to be the guardians and must restore those rights. And shall we abandon that position? Shall we not allow the delay asked for by the Government, who ask it in order that they may facilitate the restoration by explaining the question to the people? need they explain it? Because And why Because. unfortunately, the great majority of the newspapers in this country have been leading public opinion astray. And I will show that to be the case. It will not please everybody, but it is true as far as I can see. Public opinion has been led astray by the fight which has been going on in Ontario for twenty years, which fight has kept the Tories of Ontario out of office for that length of time. The principle of the autonomy of the family, the sacred principle of education, will kill in this country any government either in Ontario or the provinces that will not recognize the rights of every one. And to-day the circumstances are favourable for our friends in Ontario to correct their mistakes of the past, and to prove that they are ready to receive all citi-zens, of any creed and any race, in ranks to work together harmoniously for the good of the country. If the Tories of Ontario, who are far from being numerous in this House, should succeed in depriving their brother Tories of Ontario, who are with us, of the party advantages safely obtained by giving equal justice to all, they will kill their party in this House, not only for to-day, but for many, many years to come. In this Dominion the sentiment of equal justice and liberty of conscience is sufficiently understood to ob-Well, the Government tain everywhere. want to help in spreading the knowledge of that noble sentiment; they ask for delay. and I think they should have it. Another reason they give is that the law will be a most intricate and most complicated one, and they want delay so as to have the necessary time to prepare it—to prepare it in such a way that if it is called in question before the tribunals of the country it will resist attack, in such a way that it will work smoothly and will completely overcome the regrettable difficulty that is sprung upon us through no act of the Conservative party. These are the principal reasons why the Government ask us to wait for six months more. And they come boldly and manfully before the country, and say: This is our policy, we want to propose a law in the lines of a remedial order based upon the judgment of the court; we will propose it and press for its adoption. And our representatives in the Cabinet are satisfied with the kind of law that will be proposed. Am I to say that these two hon. Ministers of large experience, lawyers, men who have been mixed up with public affairs for a long time past have not their eyes open? I cannot say that, Mr. Speaker. I have confidence in them, and I will continue my confidence in them. I have confidence in the hon. the Premier, who, when he entered public life was defeated in his riding, because he was a supporter of separate schools. I have confidence in these gentlemen whom the country has entrusted its destinies for such a long time; I have confidence that they are sincere, that they do not deceive us. The reasons they give for delay are sufficient, and I cannot refuse $\mathbf{m}\mathbf{y}$ grant themconfidence for the future. Now, Mr. Speaker, I said this afternoon that the Grit press was opposed to the schools. I was asked to speak of the Conservative press. I do not want to take up too much time of the House, but I have here a quotation from the Montreal "Gazette." Those who wish to read it will find it in the issue of 5th July. This paper is one amongst many others that most emphatically admit the grievances. and the obligation of this Parliament to come to the rescue. But there is a quotation which I cannot refrain from giving, as it is the opinion of a man, an honourable man, who does not belong to this country, but occupies now a very exalted position, Lord Salisbury. Here is what he said about a month ago. I take this from the Ottawa "Citizen":

And Lord Salisbury, less than a month since, delivered an address in London on "Religious Education," in which he said: "All they (the Church of England) asked was for freedom for themselves and for others, freedom for all alike to teach the children of parents who sympathized with them sacred truths as those parents understood them."

The Ottawa "Citizen" is another of those papers which voices the opinion of the Conservative party favourable to the re-establishment of separate schools. Now, what do I find in the Grit press? The "Globe" of August last said:

The attempt to restore the separate school system in Manitoba by outside interference is hopeless, and the sooner that this is recognized the better

And a few days ago it spoke of "the tremendous task of making an additional law for the west." This is a very clear position for the "Globe," and it reflects the position taken in this House by the hon. member for North Simcoe, whom I must congratulate. He is a frank man. He comes squarely before a million and a half Frenchmen and says to them, everywhere except in our province and on our hustings: We want to deprive you of your French language. And he, a celebrated lawyer, admits that the judgment of the Privy Council established that the Catholics were deprived of their privileges and vested rights, and still he says: We will refuse to restore them to you; we will go on and take away your money by force of law. Here is a lawyer who says boldly: We will rob you. I have seen the time when the Catholics were thrown into the fire or given to wild beasts to be eaten. To-day the hon, gentleman is just and fair, and he is satisfied with robbing us. He says: I will take away the money of your people by force of a law which has been declared illegal. He refuses to give a remedy to the grievance, and he calls that applying the law, and thinks he is a just man. He wants to deprive us of our language, he is bold enough to say so. Unfortunately, he is too old a man to begin that work. His hair is getting gray; and it may well be that when he is no longer honouring this world by his worthy presence, the French language will be spoken still, numerous French children will be born, and they will perhaps pray in French for the repose of his soul. Now. I admit his manliness. He says he will fight the Government because they have promised to bring down a remedial law. I like that position, because then we will see how many people in the Dominion are so fair and just, and of so noble a character, that we may go on living with them. But I am sure that, if I may judge the future by the past, the number who will follow him will not be large enough to entrust him with the destinies of this country. Now, Sir, it has been said that if Cartier was living he would blame the Government. I do not think so. If Cartier was living he would say: Here is a very difficult question; public opinion has been led astray by the press for political and party interests; and here is a Government who wish to apply a remedy, to bring back to Canada an era of peace and harmony. They are honest and honourable men, and they ask for delay. Their reasons are good, their policy is good, and they have given an assurance to the minority that the majority would come to their rescue. And then Cartier would add: Do not destroy the great work of confederation, give a chance to the party that always remedied the errors of their adversaries, give public opinion a chance to be enlightened and set right again, and then we will be in that happy position in which every one desires to see this country, justice will prevail, and it will be an honour to be a Canadian.

Mr. TAYLOR. Occupying as I do the position of chief whip for the Conservative party, and having been vilified in the press. I think it but right that I should make a few remarks before this debate closes. Ever since I was 18 years of age I have been an Orangeman, and I am now representing perhaps the strongest Orange constituency in the province of Ontario, containing more Orangemen, more Protestants, than many, if not any other constituency in the province of Ontario; and for these reasons I think it but right that I should say a few words on this question. Orangemen are not constitution wreckers. Orangemen, if true to themselves if true to their obligations, must uphold the constitution of our country, It is true we have some men in this country, and I am sorry to say we have them in this House, who pretend to be more Orange than King William ever was: and, although they have never joined an Orange lodge in their lives, yet they would willingly wreck the constitution and wreck the country, if they could, to make some party capital out of it. Orange-men are not made of that kind of material. I have been blamed by my constituents, and many of them passed resolutions condemning me for a vote I once gave in this House on a burning question at that time, known as the Jesuit question. Resolutions were passed condemning me for having given that vote. It was said that I gave that vote for the purpose of pandering to Rome. 'Tis true, in my constituency there are some 700 French and Catholic voters, but, for reasons best known to themselves, and exercising the right of every British subject to vote as they see fit, they have, in my last three elections, almost unanimously voted against me, and for the Reform candidate, only excepting twenty-five or thirty of them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Good for them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, good for them, but bad for the Conservative party. It was said that the vote I gave on the Jesuit question was given with the view of capturing those Catholic voters. When the next election came on, my 25 or 30 Roman Catholies friends who had stood by me in my former election, continued to stand by me in the succeeding election, but no more. I did not receive one more French or Catholic vote in that election than I did in any previous elections, but for the vote I gave on the Jesuit question, I lost many of my warmest supporters, Orangemen and Protestants who had strong views on that question. But there are times in the history of every man when he should rise above party feeling in the interest of his country, and when he should take, not only his political life, but, if necessary, his physical life, in his hands, for the salvation of his country and the maintenance of the constitution. I knew when I was giving that vote on the Jesuit question that I was taking my political life in my hands. But I am a layman. I did not take advice of the lawyers, because they gave advice on both sides, and if you listen to lawyers, you will-

Mr. BERGIN. Pay for it in the end.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, if you pay for it, you can get almost any kind of advice. If you listen to the lawyers you will come out somewhat in the position that the Irishman found himself in. Two Irishmen came to this country and put up at a hotel for the night. During the night, the hotel caught fire, and their mode of escape down the stairway off, they simply being cut had through the window. out put his clothes on and jumped, and Mike followed, but Mike in putting his pants on had not discovered that he had put the wrong side to the front. When they landed on the ground Pat asked Mike, "Are you killed?" Mike said, "No, I am not killed." Pat then asked him, "Are you badly hurt?" Mike said, "No, but I think I am badly twisted." So it would be if we took the advice of lawyers; we would come out badly twisted if we took their advice, either on the Jesuit question or on the Manitoba school question. But, being a layman, interpreting the constitution as I interpreted it, I dld my duty in voting as I did on that question, believing I was living. up to the constitution and to my obligations in upholding the constitution of this country. After the election of 1891 the school question began to loom up. An agitation was got up in the country then. It was stated that in the session of 1892 legislation would be introduced to establish separate schools in Manitoba. At that time, I called together the Conservative Association of the constituency of which I have the honour to represent, and made a speech on that occasion, a portion of which I will read to the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it all.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will read all dealing with the question that I propose speaking on. I said:

Now, Mr. President, having dealt with local matters as far as I purpose doing at present, I will refer to a subject which is creating a good deal of interest throughout the country. That is what is known as the Manitoba school question, with reference to which I wish to define the course that, as your representative, I intend taking when it comes up in Parliament at its next session.

The Dominion of Canada is governed by a constitution known as the British North America Act. This Act was passed by the British Parliament and accepted by the Parliament of the Dominion and the confederated provinces of Canada.

Previous to confederation each province was a colony in itself, had its own parliament and had the right to pass its own laws, subject to the approval of the British Parliament. Each province had its own customs and excise laws. When confederation took place, all this was changed. The British North America Act gave to the Dominion the right to collect all customs and excise duties, with the condition that it should pay to each of the provinces an annual subsidy of 80 cents per head of the population of the province, the amount being based on the last census returns. The census was to be taken every ten years by the Dominion Government for the purpose of arriving at the amount to which each province should be entitled.

Each province was to have a legislature of its own and was given exclusive jurisdiction to deal with certain questions, such as municipal institutions, all school questions, dealing also with its own moneys, its own Crown lands, &c., &c.

The Dominion Government was to have exclusive jurisdiction over other matters, such as trade and commerce, administration of justice, taxation, &c.. &c.

All Acts passed by any of the provincial legislatures were to be approved by the Governor General and his advisers, who have the right to veto any Act of the provincial legislatures, which veto power is, however, not to be exercised unless the Act under consideration interferes with private rights or those of the Dominion, or injuricusly affects any other province of the Dominion. In a similar way the Queen and her advisers have the right to veto any Act passed by the Dominion Government, but the power is restricted to Acts contravening private rights, rights of the Crown, &c., &c.

The legislature of the province of Quebec passed a few years ago an Act, known as the Jesuit Estates Act, with the object of settling a local question with which the Government of Quebec had, by its constitution, the exclusive right to deal. This Act affected property held by the government of Quebec, which had formerly belonged to the Jesuits. When the Jesuits were suppressed, they left this property in the province of Quebec. and the local government took it over and held it as Crown lands. After many years, the Government undertook to sell the land, Roman Catholic Church claimed it, alleging in support of its claim that it had carried on the work of the Jesuits while the order was suppressed, and that it was, therefore, entitled to the lands. In the meantime the order of the the lands. Jesuits had been restored by the Pope, and it also claimed the property. The Quebec Government, claimed the property. The Quebec Government, however, said that the property belonged to neither of the claimants, and, forthwith, offered it for sale. The government soon found that it was impossible to find purchasers, as Catholics were restrained by the bishops, who forbade the sale, and Protestants were reluctant to buy, owing to the fact that the Catholics, who numbered seven to one Protestant, all, directly or indirectly, Matters reclaimed a share in the property. mained in this condition until Mr. Mercler under-He opened negotiatook to settle the question. tions with both the bishops and the heads of the Jesuit order. They offered to surrender their claim for $2,000,000. They afterwards reduced their demand to $1,000,000, and, finally, after a good deal of correspondence, an agreement was made by which Mr. Mercier's government pledged This amount was not to itself to pay $400,000. be paid, however, unless the Pope, who is the common superior of Catholic bishops and the Jesuit order, should be made a party to the contract, and should say how the money was to be divided for educational purposes between the Jesuit colleges and the other Roman Catholic in-A further condition was. stitutions of learning. that the Pope, as head of the church, should see that the bargain was carried out in all its details, and that no further claims were set up to prevent the government from going on and disposing of the property. This being all satisfactorily arranged, Mr. Mercier said that, as this was the people's money, all going to Catholic orders for educational purposes, a sum proportional to the Protestant population should be voted to the Protestant Committee of Education for the educational purposes of the Protestant portion of the community.

An Act was, therefore, passed by the legislature of Quebec, ratifying this arrangement, no opposition being offered by the Protestant members of that House. This Act, when passed, nad to be sent to the Governor General for his approval. The Governor, on the recommendation of his advisers and of Sir John Thompson, as Minister of Justice, allowed it to go into operation, as it was an Act which, by the constitution the Quebec government had a right to pass. After the Governor had approved the Act, a petition was sent in asking him to disallow it. This was was sent in asking him to disallow it. When the House met, Colonel O'Brien not done. moved a resolution, which was, in effect, that the Government ought to have disallowed the Act. If this motion had carried, it could not have changed the Act. It would only have caused the Government to resign, for it must do so if a vote of censure be passed. I, as your representative, had to vote on the question, and I voted as I would do again on the same question. I voted that the Government should not be censured for having done its duty and having lived up to the constitution by which we are governed. It is on account of this vote that I have been charged both in the press and in the pulpit with having voted to give the Jesuits $400,000. In this statement there is not a word of truth, yet the circumstances were so misconstrued that many people, not knowing the true state of the case, condemned me. I think, however, that now most people fully understand it, and freely admit that, as your representative, I did right, because, if we are to run this country without causing disruption, we must allow each province to live by its own constitution.

A few years ago the province of Manitoba passed an Act known as the Public Schools Act. This provided that there should be but one public school system, and that no moneys should be voted to separate schools. When this Act was passed by the government of Manitoba, it was sent to the Governor General and Council for approval. A petition, signed by every archbishop, bishop and priest in the Dominion, was sent to the Governor General, asking that the Act be disallowed. The Governor, acting upon the recommendation of Sir John Thompson, as in the former case, allowed it to go into operation, as it since I made that speech to my constituents was an Act which, by the constitution given to Manitoba, the government of that province had u. Now, before Manitoba became a right to pass. province, separate schools, both Catholic and Protestant, had existed there, and, after it became a province and was given a constitution, these were continued. The government of Manitoba voted money each year to these separate schools, but the legislature, as it had a right to do, passed an Act which changed all this. The separate schools continued, and after a time taxes were The supporters of separate schools. called for. both Protestant and Catholic, refused to pay taxes Their property was seized to the public schools. and sold, and one Catholic and one Protestant case was tried in court and appealed until the matter reached the Queen's Privy Council. There it was decided that the government of Manitoba was competent to pass the Act and had not exceeded its constitutional powers in any way.

Now, when Parliament meets, I expect that some French member will move a resolution similar in every respect to that moved by Colonel O'Brien on the Jesuit question, to the effect that the Government ought to have disallowed the It would, however, defeat the Government Act. and cause it to resign, as it would be a vote of censure. How will my friends who found fault with me for voting as I did on the Jesuit question, wish me to vote on this? If they are consistent, they will have to find fault with me again, for I intend to vote on this question in just the same way as I did on the other, seeing that, so far as our House is concerned, they are exactly parallel questions. I will again vote and say that the Government did right in not disallowing the Act. I intend to be consistent, whether those who find fault with me are so or not, but I do not blame any one for finding fault, as many were misinformed and did not understand the question.

It is said by some and believed by many that the Government will introduce legislation to override the provincial Act and to grant separate schools to Manitoba. I do not know what the Government may do or intend to do, but I do know the course that I, as your representative, intend to pursue. As a supporter of the Government and as my duty demanded, I notified my leaders over two months ago that, if they introduce any legislation to interfere with or override that of the province of Manitoba, I feel it to be my duty to vote against them. I now tell you, the members of this association, that this is the course I have marked out for myself, and, if I am not, on this question, in accord with majority of my party, I will feel it to be my duty to tender you my resignation, as I claim that the provinces alone have the right to settle these local questions. If the Jesuits' Estates Act is to be repealed, it must be by an Act of the local legislature of Quebec, and if separate schools are to be recognized by the government of Manitoba, it must be by an Act of the legislature of the province. But the same law must apply to all provinces, that each shall have the power to deal untrammelled with its own local questions, a power to which they all have a right by virtue of the constitution granted under the British North America Act.

That was a speech that I made two years ago, and before the last decision of the Privy Council was rendered, and on which decision the remedial order now under discussion was based. The decisions of the Imperial Privy Council are part and parcel of our constitution in this country, and the Privy Council have rendered their judgment. They have said by that judgment that grievances exist in Manitoba, and that by the Act of 1890 the Manitoba Government have perpetrated an injustice on the minority in that province. That decision of the Privy Council was signed by Her Majesty the Queen and was sent to our Government, and in turn it was the duty of the Governor General in Canada and his advisers to pass that remedial order on to the Manitoba Government. That was the constitutional way of doing it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says "hear, hear." I will shortly quote his words where he distinctly stated that it was the duty of the Canadian Government to send it on to the Manitoba Government. I will also read the statement of the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) that the Government were entitled to no credit for having done this because it was simply their duty to do so. That is the opinion of lawyer against lawyer. That is what these gentlemen say, and what can we laymen say when we have the advice of two such constitutional lawyers as my hon, friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser). Then what did the Government of Manitoba do? When I was up in Haldimand I met the hon. the Attorney General of that province, and in one of his speeches which I will quote shortly, he said that the Government of Manitoba would immediately send the remedial order back to the Federal Government as soon as the House met. Did they do that? No. The legislature of Manitoba met and the remedial order was there before them, and Mr. Greenway asked the House to adjourn to give him time to consider such an important matter. The House adjourned and he took the matter into consideration, and he met the House and asked for another adjournment that he might have still further time to consult able lawyers so as to thoroughly understand the remedial order. When he met the House again, did he say to the Dominion Government or to the Governor General: There is your remedial order, do what you like with it. No; but he holds out the olive branch and says: If further negotiations are had the matter The hon, member for may be adjusted. Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) wrote a letter to the papers and in that letter he stated that it is the opinion of the people of Manitoba that the matter may be adjusted.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to say that I never said that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I refer you to your letter published a short time ago in the "Citizen."

Mr. MARTIN. My letter did not say any such thing.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, whatever that letter said is what I say. I am not a lawyer but

I know what plain English means, and if the letter of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) means anything, it means that the matter can be settled and will be settled by the people of Manitoba, who will grant what is asked for.

Mr. MARTIN. It means just the opposite to that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will not misquote the hon, gentleman, I will read his letter:

Editor Citizen,—I notice in your issue of today's an interview with the Hon. Mr. Ouimet, from which the following is an extract:—

However, it would be idle to discuss that now as no legislation has been asked by the Catholics of Manitoba giving them the right to share in the funds provided for education by the Government or by the local authorities if their schools are not up in secular teaching, to the public schools of the province. All that they ask is to be at liberty to add to the secular education required in the public schools such religious teaching as will meet their religious views. I may say that if that had been provided for in the legislation of 1890, we would never have heard of the Manitoba schools question.

There has been all along a very serious misunderstanding between the Roman Catholic Church and the people of Manitoba, if the above is an accurate statement of the position of the Church. I suppose, however, that we must take for granted that Col. Ouimet is in a position to formulate the wishes of the Roman Catholics in connection with this question. If so, then I may say at once that there is no need of any remedial legislation in order to bring about such a state of affairs. I believe the people of Manitoba would be willing to give the Roman Catholics all that is asked for.

Everybody wishes that a solution of the question may be found without any coercion on the part of the Dominion Parliament, and if the demands of the minority are correctly expressed by the Minister, I am very much at sea in my acquaintance with the views of the Manitoba people, if they will not bring about of their own accord all that is asked.

"All that is asked," says the hon. gentleman. The grievances are to be remedied as stated by the Minister of Public Works. My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) says that the people of Manitoba and the government of Manitoba will give them all they ask.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, if he sees any resemblance whatever between the statements in the interview with the Minister of Public Works, and the language of the remedial order?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have read the statements of the Minister of Public Works as given here, and I have read the statements of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin), and I will leave it to the common sense of the people of this country who are laymen and not lawyers to draw their own inference. I believe that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has fully corroborated what I stated before I commenced to read his letter. The letter of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) continues:

When I introduced the School Bill of 1890, I pointed out that in so far as it provided for religious exercises in the schools, it was in my opinion defective. I am one of those who deny the right of the State to interfere in any way with matters of religion. I said then, and I still think that the clause of the 1890 Act, which provides for certain religious exercises, is most unjust to Roman Catholics. If the State is to recognize religion in its school legislation such a recognition as is acceptable to Protestants only, and in fact only to a majority of Protestants, is, to my mind, rank tyranny. The desire of those with whom I think in this matter is to eliminate every question of a religious nature from the school laws and to make the schools purely secular. This has not been done in Manitoba, and that course is apparently not supported by a majority of the people there. That being so, surely it will be admitted that the nature of the religious exercises or religious teaching (I am unable to make any clear distinction between the two) should be such as is agreeable to the consciences of those whose money is taken to support the schools. I have sufficient faith in the liberality of the Manitoba people to declare on their behalf that if a final settlement of this question can be reached upon the lines suggested by Col. Ouimet, they will do their part. What Manitoba has insisted upon is that the Roman Catholics shall not have a system of separate schools such as existed prior to 1890, which were exempt from the general laws as to efficiency. If the Roman Catholics are willing to accept the schools as they exist at present and as they may from time to time be modified with the addition of such religious teaching as they may desire, then there should be and I am sure would be no difficulty in reaching a settlement of the whole question without any legislation on the part of the Dominion Parliament.

Yours truly,

JOSEPH MARTIN.

Ottawa, June 25th, 1895.

If I can understand the English language, and if my hon. friend from Winnipeg speaks, as he professes to speak, for the legislature and the people of that province, then there will be no difficulty in the Government of Manitoba adjusting the difficulties that are claimed to exist in that country. I may just say for myself that had the Government done as it had been rumoured two years ago they would dohad they introduced an Act to override the Act of the Manitoba legislature, I would then, as I notified them, have voted against them. Had they introduced it at the session a year ago, I would have done the same; the decision of the Privy Council had not then been rendered. Had they introduced then been rendered. it this session, I would have voted against And, in pursuance of my duty as whip, I found that if the Government introduced legislation this session to override Manitoba, and if enough Government supporters voted against them, it was the intention of all the Liberal members of this House, whether Protestant or Catholic, to down the Government for it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How did you find that out?

Mr. TAYLOR. I found it out by statements which were carried to me by hon.

gentlemen in close communication with hon. gentlemen on that side of the House.

Mr. DEVLIN. You do not know what you are speaking about.

Mr. CAMERON. You speak now.

Mr. TAYLOR. I got the information; and, whether it was worth anything or not, it was my duty to communicate it to my chief. At the same time I communicated to him that if he introduced legislation to force Manitoba, there were many Government supporters who would do the same; for they thought that the matter should be deferred, and that every possible effort should be made by this Government to have the matter adjusted amicably, on the lines of the letter of the hon. member for Winnipeg, by the local legislature, which, by the constitution of this country, has exclusive jurisdiction to deal with such matters. Like the hon. member for Winnipeg, I have faith in the people of Manitoba. believe the people of Manitoba and the Government of Manitoba will obey the remedial order, and the decision of the Queen's Privy Council, which is part and parcel of our constitution. I have no reason to doubt that they will obey that order. for the word sent down here by the Manitoba legislature was to the effect that they were willing to try and adjust the matter. The hon, member for Winnipeg says his letter has a different meaning from what I take from it, and from what the people of this country will take from it. But you may take the same meaning from the answer of the Manitoba legislature to the remedial order. If I can read and understand the English language, it says: We are willing to negotiate further. Then I say it is the duty of this Government to meet them on that ground. Had the Government introduced and tried to pass legislation at this session, I believe they would have been acting wrongly and contrary to the true meaning of the constitution; but they have delayed the matter to another session, in order to try to adjust it, as I believe they will; because I believe and accept the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg that the people of that province are just as loyal and true, and as ready to uphold the constitution of this country, as any other community under the sun. Therefore, I believe they will, and until they do differently, I will not believe to the contrary.

Mr. CASEY. If they do not do it, what then?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not believe they will refuse; I have no idea that they will. I take the word of the hon. member for Winnipeg, who was a member of the Manitoba legislature, and the father of the Manitoba Schools Act, and who says it went too far—that it did an injustice, and that the legislature of Manitoba will undo the wrong that was done at that time. I have been blamed by some of my friends in my own constituency, as well as by some outside of it, for having gone up to the county of Haldimand to assist in the by-election of the hon. Secretary of State. I was invited to take part in that election; and being then, as I am now, a good supporter of the Government of the day, I felt it my duty to go. I went and did what I could to carry that election in the interest of the Gov-ernment and of the country and of the Conservative party. I had the honour of meeting on the platform there my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), who was defending the claims of the candidate he had put forward in the constituency, and I found that riding flooded with inflammable literature in the attempt to raise a fight in this country before the fight was on. I found an Orange card for Orangemen, and other cards in other colours, distributed all over the county. I will read:

Your vote and influence are respectfully solicited on behalf of Jeffrey A. McCarthy, the candidate opposed to the acts and policy of the Dominion Government with respect to the Manitoba school question.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is wrong about that?

Because had I as an Mr. TAYLOR. Orangeman sat at the Council board, as the hon. Secretary of State had, I would have felt it my duty, as he felt it his duty, as a loyal citizen of this country, to pass the remedial order on to Manitoba. That was all the Government did up to that time; but the hon. Secretary of State was condemned as not worthy of a seat in this House or in this Government, simply because he carried out the constitution of this had country. Had I been in his place, I would have done the same. And what does my hon, friend from North Simcoe say in his argument before the Governor General and Council? This is his argument:

Another question is as to how remedial action is to be carried out. You will make a remedial order. I do not quite agree with my learned friend that you are to frame an Act of Parliament for the legislature of Manitoba. Your duty would be well performed, in case remedial action was to be taken, if you pass the remedial order and left the legislature of Manitoba to put that in the form they saw fit.

That is what my hon. friend said, and he went further. He said:

The Privy Council have determined that there is a grievance; they have determined that there is jurisdiction in the Governor General to pass a remedial order * * * I am not going to say that there is not a grievance. I am precluded from that by the judgment.

My hon friend agreed that there was a grievance, that the duty devolved upon the Government to pass a remedial order, and yet in the face of that, he sought to have the Secretary of State, when the Secretary of State came before his constituency for re-election as a member of the Cabinet, condemned, because the Government had done their duty in obeying the Queen's command to remedy the grievance, if there was a grievance. Some people have found fault with me for having gone up to Haldimand to do what I did, but had I been in the place of the Secretary of State, sitting at the Council board. I would have obeyed the command of the Queen and the Privy Council just as he did. The question for the county of Haldimand to decide was this: Had the Secretary of State done wrong in performing his duty? And they decided that he had not by electing him by the largest majority he ever obtained in that constituency. I had the pleasure of meeting my hon, friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) on a platform at Haldimand. The hon, gentleman preferred a charge against me there, and I told him that I did not think he would prefer it in this House. He charged me with having attacked his personal character. I repudiated the statement. He charged me with having circulated throughout that constituency the statement that members of his family were members of the Roman Catholic Church. did not say so; I denied the charge; I gave him my word of honour that I had not said so. But a friend of the hon, gentleman was at the meeting, and did hear one of the speakers make that statement, and stronger statements than I made? Then the hon, gentleman tried to make people believe that I was in that constituency for the purpose of raising sectional feeling against himself. I was not. I did not attempt anything of the kind. and I have not attempted it here. I have heard the rumour repeated in Haldimand, and outside, but I do say that if the hon. gentleman wished to educate his daughters in a nunnery-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let the hon, gentleman go on. It is in keeping with his usual character.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not. I am just repeating what the hon, gentleman tried to charge me with up there. I said there that I would put the question to my hon. friend here, and I want to be as good as my word. I say that he has a perfect my word. right to do that as has any other man in this country; but he had no right to make the statement in the constituency of Haidimand, where I was unknown, that I was making statements which were not in accord with the facts. I may quote, also, another statement of my hon. Friend, in reply to a reference of mine to my hon. friend from Guysboro' as an authority for making the statement that I referred to. hon, member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) was quoted in the "Globe" as having said at a meeting held on 5th April, according to a despatch from Halifax:

At the meeting where Sir Hibbert talked so violently, Mr. D. C. Fraser pointed out that the Manitoba question was not the issue; that the Government could not claim credit for discharge ing the duty imposed upon them by the Privy Council; that the Liberals were in favour of meting out justice to the Manitoba minority; and that by appealing to religious prejudices Sir Hibbert Tupper was injuring the cause of the Manitoba minority. The trade question and the boodle record of the Government were para-mount issues. The meeting in question was at Beaver Meadows.

I stated that this was the opinion of a leading Liberal from the maritime provinces, who was an able lawyer, and I put his opinion against the statement of the hon. member for North Simcoe. The hon, gentleman then got up in that audience and replied that the hon. member for Guysboro' was not a lawyer, but an old miner. I retorted that the hon, member for North Simcoe would not repeat his statement to the hon. member for Guysboro' on the floor of this House, and said that I would not make a statement in any constituency which I would be afraid to make in this House. These two hon, gentlemen can now settle it among themselves. However, I think the majority of the people of Haldimand accepted my statement in preference to that of the hon. member for North Simcoe, judging by the majority by which they returned the hon. Secretary of State. The people of Haldimand did not condemn the Secretary of State for what he had done, and for what any honourable law-abiding, law-loving citizen of this country, the subject of Her Majesty the Queen, would do, in sending on that remedial order. The people of Haldimand did not condemn him, and I certainly was not going to condemn him. I believe that the Government, in sending that order to Manitoba did right. that they right have done now in saying to Mr. Greenway: We accept the olive branch you hold out; we accept the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin); we believe that the people of Manitoba, if given the opportunity, will settle this question. I believe that they will, having every faith in the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg, having every faith in the people of Manitoba; and I do not think there is an hon. member on this side who can or will condemn the Government for having sent on that remedial order, and for having asked that four or six months' delay be given them to try and adjust this matter with the Manitoba Government in a constitutional manner, which will be acceptable to the people of Manitoba. If time be given, 1 believe that the people of Manitoba will remedy the injustice which the hon. member for Winnipeg says that he and his colleagues committed in passing that Act in to the Ministers. They were wanting in fair 1890, and every law-abiding, law-loving person in this country will be grateful to this Government for having taken the course they did.

Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, it is not without some feeling that I rise now to state before this House and before the country that I cannot accept the policy of the Government with respect to the question now under discussion. In the early days of the session, when the hon. leader of the Opposition addressed the House on the Address in answer to the Speech from the Throne, he inquired from the Government whether the words uttered by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) with respect to the school question were a true index of the policy of the Government, or whether it was to be found in the words uttered by your humble servant, who was then seconding the Address. Now, I must proclaim that I was not speaking the truth, but that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was right. Since the Government are not willing now to fulfil their promise, which they are able to do just now, I cannot support the policy which they intend following in connection with this important question which has now troubled the people of this country for nearly five years. I do not delude myself as to the difficult position in which my present stand will put me in this House, no more than I deceive myself as to the position in which I will be put by both political parties. I am well aware that the position I am now taking may ruin my political career. I am very weak and very young, and I am beginning my private career almost at the same time as my public career. My public career may end to-morrow, but after all my motto is this: Do what you ought, and come what will. If I should be removed on account of this question, if I should never come back in this House, I will enjoy the satisfaction of having done my duty. Should my action now cause my ruin, I wish to be When I came to this House in ruined. 1892, I pledged my whole support to the Government. I never measured it to them. I excused many things which a good party man, under the constitutional system, must excuse, and that in the public interest. But there are circumstances in which you cannot go farther than public interest dictates to you: You shall not go farther. Here is a circumstance in which public interest dictates to us: You should no longer support the Government. It is true the Government has promised us a remedial legislation for next year. We must take their statement as put before this House. Were there any promises made outside of this House? I know not. Should there be any, they are not known. Is it because the Government was afraid to make them public? In any case, as long as they are not public we must say that they do not exist. I will make at the outset a reproach play in respect to one of their colleagues, the hon, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Angers). When the hon, gentleman had resigned owing to the statement the Government was to make in this House, he begged the Prime Minister not to put the official statement before the House prior to his own official ex-He in all reason planation being given. claimed that his explanation should be known at the same time as the official statement of the Government. Why did they not do that? It was because they wanted to prejudice the case of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture. They wanted to produce the effect they had in view. They wanted the explanation of the hon. Minister to come only three days after the official statement. I say there was no fair play, I say the Government were even wanting in courtesy towards the hon. Minister. Why do we not accept now the statement of the Ministry? It is because the province of Quebec would not accept of it. It is because, in spite of the shadow of promise which is to be found at the end of the Ministerial statement, the Government has put themselves in the impossibility to bring again the question before the House. It is because the Government does not proclaim the jurisdiction of this Parliament. Why do they want to enter into negotiations with the Manitoba Government? We know, in the first place, that the Manitoba legislature has declined to take any action on the remedial order. The Dominion Government says there is a difference of opinion with respect to this question and that there is still a glimpse of hope to come to an amicable settlement. What does that mean? If our Government do not admit that they have met with a refusal, they say therefore to this House that we have no jurisdiction. Where does the jurisdiction of this Parliament come from? It comes solely from the refusal of the Manitoba legislature. If there was no refusal, we have no jurisdiction. Now, they want to enter into negotiations with the Manitoba Government; with a political body which has no right to refuse and therefore to give jurisdiction to this Parliament. What right has the Manitoba Government to say to the Government at Ottawa that it will settle the school question with the Catholics? The question is as to the removal of an unjust law. The Manitoba Government has no such right; it exclusively belongs to the legislature. Propositions in view of a settlement may be made to it, but not to the Manitoba Government. It is stated in the Ministerial declaration that a communication will be addressed to the Manitoba Government, not to the legislature, in order to try to come to an amicable settlement. But if our Ministers make new propositions, they renounce thereby to the remedial order. When making new propositions, I presume the intention will be to receive either an approval or a refusal. To do that, the Manitoba legislature will have to be called together.

can only be called on the advice of the Ministers of Manitoba, and as they are opposed to any arrangement, one has only to read the speeches delivered in the course of the debate which ended by a refusal to be satisfied in this respect—they will not call the House together. Now, was there really a refusal to obey the remedial order? Assuredly there was. What does the answer say? It says substantially: We cannot obey the remedial order; we cannot abolish our present schools. It says, moreover, that the Catholic separate schools existing prior to 1890 were inefficient, and, thirdly, it suggests the appointment of a commission, not for an amicable arrangement, but to prove that the legislature was right in its refusal. Therefore, the refusal is emphatic, and should the Dominion Government wait for a fuller refusal, it will never have it. Never receiving a more emphatic refusal, the Federal Parliament will never have any jurisdiction. If, moreover, the argument does not quite hold good as legal argument, I think it holds good all the same, but I will consider the question under the most unfavourable light. I say that should the argument not be quite legal, at all events, new difficulties are created by new facts. It is giving more legal form to Manitoba to prevent the Catholic minority from having the justice which it claims and to which it is entitled. Suppose we pass here a legislation in that direction, I am not simple enough to think that Manitoba will not oppose such a law before the courts, that the province will not appeal to the judicial power to have our law quashed. And if they have to go to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, they will go. If we should now pass the remedial law, it is certain the judgment of the court would sanction our legislation. It is sure we would have in our favour the whole authority of the last judgment. But add new facts, and you will prevent the Catholics in Manitoba from arguing for the maintaining of the remedial law with sure chances, since it will be said that new facts have occurred. I think it is giving a great advantage to the Manitoba Government, and uselessly putting Catholics in a less favourable position. I stated a moment ago that the Manitoba Government would decline to change their law, and I think no reasonable man could say the contrary. Already there was a definite emphatic and, I will say, insolent refusal by that Government, and should there be any people inclined to think the statement of the Manitoba Government is not formal enough, and even. I will say once more, insolent enough, they have only to take the statements made in the course of his speech by Mr. Sifton, the Attorney General of that province, the very man who brought this measure before the legislature. Here is what he substantially said: The question is not whether the system is good, but whether we should obey or not the remedial order. The position is Now, it this, that we have changed the old school law, and that we decline to restore the schools we have then abolished. We cannot be forced to obey the remedial order. It is after such statements that this Government would have it believed that the Manitoba Government would consent to make new suggestions to them. Manitoba will answer as she has already answered: We have nothing to suggest, all we have to say about that matter is to be found in our answer to your remedial order. Further on, Mr. Sifton says again: There are two essential things which the Federal Government cannot do: they cannot, by a remedial legislation, compel us to tax and contribute to the support of these schools by public moneys. And Mr. Sifton infers from this that the Federal Government can do nothing by interfering. What do the Ottawa people know about school matters in Manitoba? They know nothing, says Mr. Sifton, and he expresses the hope that the Dominion Parliament will not decide to interfere with the Manitoba school system. Such are the words of Mr. Sifton, which are to guide those who are intent on foreseeing what will result of the step this Government intend to take and construing the answer made by Manitoba to the remedial order. What does the statement of the leader of the House say? It states that if a satisfactory arrangement is not come to, then the Parliament will be called and a remedial law passed. The main features and the particulars of the Bill to be introduced But suppose the Manitoba are not given. Government should not give any answer, or merely an evasive answer, what would happen? Must the Parliament be called? No, since it would have no jurisdiction. mind, this is the position taken by the newspaper "The Mail," in an editorial published a few days ago. Here is what the "Mail" of the 9th July, 1895, said:

Provided the Manitoba Government declares that the province will absolutely and positively do nothing, then Parliament will be called in January of next year and the Government will follow the decision of the Judicial Committee with a measure of legislation, which the House will be asked to adopt.

Therefore, the Parliament will only be called if Manitoba should send a quite positive answer and should refuse to submit to the injuction of the Federal Government. But if we should have an evasive answer, such an answer as the Manitoba Government can give with the ill-faith which characterizes them, and for the purpose of embarrassing the Federal Government, an evasive answer tending to the indefinite postponement of the settlement of the question, we would have no session, and, consequently, no remedial legislation. That is why we should not now accept the promises of the Why do they not bring on at once? I have pon-Government. up a legislation at once? dered about this being able without to get a satisfactory answer. The Government have the confidence of the House, at least they contend they have it and I think they have it. I think they have the confidence of the Conservative party, and if they have the confidence of that party, they ought to bring up a legislation this very day, and not wait for six months. If they have not now the confidence of the majority of this House to enable them to pass such a legislation, will they have it in January next? If they are unable now to pass such a legislation, where will they find the majority required to pass it in January next? They intend to glide along until the eve of an election and appeal to the people without definitely settling this question. If it is true that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has computed forty friends of the Government decided to oppose a remedial legislation, who can tell if there will not be fifty in the month of January? I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is not reasonable to wait any longer. If the Government have the confidence of their friends, if they are sincere, let them bring up their measure at once and we will see what fate it will have. But in the meantime I cannot have any confidence in the statements they make to us. If I am mistaken, I will be the first to proclaim it when January has arrived. I will be the first to state that I was mistaken, that the Government was right and I will hasten to make apologies to them. The Government may be sure that I will then give them my entire support. I wish I be mistaken, but I think what I have just stated fairly conveys the opinion of the many serious people and expresses the opinion of the men most devoted to the cause of the minority in Manitoba. Two or three years ago, I attended a meeting of the Conservatives of this House, and the Hon. Sir John Thompson then stated that he wished to settle the question in a constitutional way. I want to know, said he, if the Dominion Parliament has a right to interfere in the school matters in Manitoba. question is a new one, and I wish to know the opinion of the highest court in the Empire. If it should state that we have a right, we will interfere. If, on the contrary, it denies us such a right, we will not interfere. I then approved of and I still approve of this position. It was just and reasonable. It was important to know whether we had a right to command to the Manitoba legislature and give it an order such as we ought to give it to-day. At this meeting, all the Conservatives accepted this principle. It was therefore admitting that should the judgment of the Privy Council be favourable to us, it should be carried out. Well, will they now violate the implicit agreement made on that day? Will there be any breach of the faith then given to us? Time will tell. The position taken by Sir John Thompson is approved of, I may state without any fear, by the whole Catholic clergy. And since the judgment of the Privy Council has stated that rights were violated and ago that should Cartier be living, he would that we have a right to interfere, it behooves mourn over the want of courage of his old the Federal Government to have the courage party-he who always protected the minto have it carried out. The hon, member for Hochelega (Mr. Lachapelle) stated a moment ago: But this a new postponement which we are requested to grant; suits involving only a hundred dollars last much longer, it is not surprising that so much time should be required for the settlement of such an important question. It is true that sometimes unimportant trials may last years and years. But in the present case, the trial is over, the judgment is rendered, the Catholic minority won their case, and it only remains for the Federal Parliament to carry out the judgment. The time is off, the "mise en demeure" is done; therefore if we have the courage that such a judgment ought to give us, we ought to say to the Manitoba legislature: You have declined to do justice to the Catholics, we are equal to our duty and we will pass the remedial law. When the French Ministers resigned, they had no doubt good cause to do so. I cannot believe that men occupying these high positions, men whom I always respect-ed and I still respect could have tendered their resignation without any good cause. It will be observed that when their resignations were tendered, the official statement of the Government was before the House. Therefore it was after mature deliberation that they came to such a decision. Well. where are the new facts? What additional guarantees have they secured to change their decision?

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) There are none.

Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) Let them be shown to me. If such guarantees exist they are wrong in not putting them before the House. If there are none, surely the responsibility they now assume is very great. There is nothing extraordinary in what we now ask. Is it very difficult to do a small minority like that of Manitoba the justice to which they are entitled? What seems extraordinary to me is that the Federal Government which is especially charged with the protection of the weak and few, should have to be requested over and over again, not to do them justice, but to prevent them from being fleeced out every day. What we claim for the Manitoba minority is not justice, it is simply asking a thief to leave us at least a shirt. It is very elementary; it is not justice, or it is the most elementary And it is the Conservative party. the party which signed the constitutional Act of Manitoba and exacted the guarantees which were acknowledged by the Privy Council, it is that party which declines to cause to be respected these rights which they themselves inserted in the constitution of Manitoba. Indeed, the hon. member for Bagot was right when he stated a moment orities-he who took good care to put in the constitution of Manitoba all the guarantees to which the original settlers of that province were entitled. He it was who feunded the Conservative party and was its greatest statesman, for he was not afraid to cause to be respected the constitution he had given to his country. If the Conservative Government can no longer do justice to the minorities, if they are no more their protectors, indeed they are wanting in their duty, they no longer represent, in my opinion, the views of the Conservative party they no longer represent the platform of our party.

Mr. TARTE. (Translation.) This is ancient history.

Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) I would ask the hon, member for L'Islet to proceed with precaution. I do not mean to say that it is ancient history. I agree with him that these last years, there was introduced in the party an element which has caused to mourn the men who have at heart the interests of our country. I do not say that the Government yielded to that element today. I do not say either that they did not give in. But I say that this element was introduced into the party and it was consequent that for several years a wrong direction was given to it. And now the hon. Minister of Agriculture goes out of the Government because there is no more respect for the traditions of the Conservative party. They will likely attempt to throw discredit upon his conduct. Mr. Speaker, if there was a man who has shown energy and moral courage, it was Mr. Angers. There is one thing sure: if he goes out of the Cabinet, it is not for his personal advantage. He leaves his position poor and with no other means than he may derive from his talent. He deserts a good position, as any one will admit, with nothing but his abilities to earn his living and support his family, but he has the satisfaction of having done his duty, of having shown that he was a man, that he had in his breast a heart beating at the right place. He has shown that he had courage. Be sure, Mr. Speaker, that the course he now takes will be approved of by the majority of the people in our province and supported by right-thinking men who will admire the position he now takes. I do not say that I leave the ranks of the Conservative party to join that of the Liberal party. No, I say I remain a true Conservative, and I will never support a Government which will not pledge itself to do justice to the Catholics of Manitoba. We are told by some who try to discourage us: What will you win by your stand? Merely to cause the hon. leader of the Opposition to come into power. I do not care who will come into power after this Government. I do not care to know whether the present Government will be kept into power or whether the leader of the Opposition will succeed in getting into power at the next election. Should the hon. leader of the Opposition carry the day, and should I be returned, I will give him my support, I will give him fair play, provided he begins by doing justice to our compatriots of the west and he causes to be respected the constitution violated by the Manitoba Government.

(Translation.) Mr. Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. Speaker, allow me to congratulate the hon. member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay upon the splendid speech he has just delivered. His reasoning expresses the views of the great majority of his compatriots, to what-ever party they may belong. The hon member has taken the position of a man of spirit. Charged by the Government, at the beginning of this session, with the confidential task of proposing the Address in answer to the Speech from the Throne, he pledged his word that full justice would be done during this very session to the oppressed Catholics of the province of Manitoba. And finding now that the Government, according to their statement, flinch in the fulfilment of their pledges, finding that the Government are changing their position, the hon gentleman withdraws his confidence from them. This Government do not respect the statements they made and under which they pledged the power of the Crown to do justice to the Catholic minority; they flinch in the fulfilment of their duty and the hon. member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay says plainly to them before this House: I have been deceived. This Government has deceived me; the Ministers who made promises to me have deceived me and I withdraw my confidence from them, and I return them with the contempt it deserves the word they have given me and which they have not kept. The position of the Government in connection with the question of the schools of the minority in Manitoba is as clear and simple as it can be. It has nothing new. The Government has no new difficulties to meet. The difficulty has been the same for five years and during five years the Government has been hesitating. It was only in the month of March last that driven to their last intrenchwere compelled by they ment. judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to take a position and to say: We will uphold the Catho-lic minority. The Government then stated that this minority had certain rights and privileges granted to them by law passed in 1871 by the Manitoba legislature. They found that these constitutional privileges granted to the minority the right to build, maintain and direct the schools, to impose taxes for the maintaining of these schools, and to have their share of the public moneys voted for educational purposes. The Government asserted unanimously that such were the privileges and the rights of the Catholic minority in Manitoba, and at the same time they summoned the province of Manitoba to restore the separate schools, to give to the Catholics the privileges and the rights of which they had been unjustly deprived. The remedial order added that should Manitoba fail to settle the question according to the terms of the order, such a refusal would give to the Dominion Parliament the necessary jurisdiction to force on the Manitoba legislature the law it would decline to enact. The pledge taken by the Government was a solemn one. It was a pledge upon their honour they could no more disown and as soon as the condition existed of the refusal of the Manitoba legislature to legislate, it was their duty to take action. They were in duty bound to cause to be respected the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to cause the constitution to be respected, to replace the minority in the position which it formerly occupied. That was the position of the Ministers; such were the Ministerial statements. I have no doubt whatever that such was the intention of the Government when they called Parliament. When they filled the vacant seats, the hon. Minister of Justice, who made the report upon which was based the remedial order, went to Nova Scotia and appealed to the confidence of the people by making use of this remedial order. He said to the voters of that province that should Manitoba refuse to act, this Parliament would give relief to the wronged minority. On the other hand—and I am referring now to what I know-I have seen and heard the hon. the Minister of Public Works going in the county of Vercheres, from church door to church door, from one parish to another, stating that the Government had taken measures for the relief of the Catholic minority, and that should Manitoba refuse to comply to the remedial order, the Federal Parliament would do its duty. On nomination day, the hon. Minister stated, in the presence of Mr. Geoffrion and of thousands of voters, that the Government would propose a remedial legislation at the next session, legislation based upon, and drafted in the very terms of, the remedial order they had just passed. The hon. Minister stated that Parliament had specially been called to pass such a legislation. I am not referring to newspaper reports or to matters of hearsay. I attended the nomination in the county of Verchères, and I positively heard, along with thousands of other people, the statements I have just referred to. Therefore, a legislation was to be brought this session for the relief during should the the Manitoba Catholics legislature of that province refuse to comply to the remedial order. I once more say that the hon. the Minister of Public Works stated that the Parliament had been specially called to pass the remedial legislation upon the refusal of the legislature to do justice to the Catholic minority. There was no doubt whatever about the refusal of the Manitoba legislature. The fact is the decision of the Government of Manitoba was not doubtful. It was known by the result of the vote on the motion of Mr. Fisher, one of the Liberal members of Manitoba, who requested the legislature to pass a resolution stating that the federal interference was useless, and that the legislature was ready to take cognizance of the grievances of the Catholics, if it was proper to do it. The vote on this resolution stood 25 to 10. it was the very vote that rejected the remedial order. It was known that the local legislature did not even intend to take cognizance of the grievances that had been set forth. The position as between the Government and the minority in Manitoba was therefore clear; it was known that the Manitoba legislature would refuse to remedy the grievances. It was known likewise that the order was peremptory; these things were so well known that Parliament was called in order to pass the law which they now decline to pass. Why do the Government refuse now to pass the law they promised and which they pledged themselves to bring before the House during this session through their members in the various counties of the Dominion? We know why and we did not want the statement of the chief Ministerial whip (Mr. Taylor). We know that there is a corporation outside of this House which controls the hon. gentlemen opposite. We know that there is in the county a secret ccrporation whose deliberations are secret. We know that there is a political organization working in the interests of the hon. members who now control the Goveinment. We know that forty members of this association among the hon, gentlemen opposite have presented the Government with a serious ultimatum to which they would have stuck thick and fast. This ultimatum was to the effect that soon as the Government would venture to keep the word of honour which they had given, as soon as the Government would bring up a remedial Bill, the forty members of this association who sit on your right, Mr. Speaker, should withdraw their confidence in them and pass to the other side, that in such a case the Government would find themselves in the impossibility of having the Bill passed with the only support of their friends and would possibly be compelled to step out of power. When the representatives of the Catholic minority in the Cabinet found that the word of honour given to them and communicated to the people would not be kept, they likewise made a receding move, intending thereby to show their dissatisfaction, and the three French Ministers, the hon. Postmaster General, the hon. the Minister of Public Works and the hon. Minister of Agriculture, withdrew, threatening to leave the Government and to take away from them the confidence of all the Frenchspeaking Ministerial members. During three days these gentlemen have resisted; but three days were enough to exhaust their patience, with the exception of one of them. Although he is far from being a man whom I respect and esteem and in whom I have any confidence, I must say that he has taken to-day a position which should cause to blush those who did not follow him. The two others have come back to their treasury benches. Have they brought anything with them, can they show to their friends any concessions, any guarantees or advantages they have secured from their colleagues? We have heard the hon. Postmaster General and the hon. the Minister of Public Works this afternoon. According to what they say, there was a misunderstanding as to the meaning of the Ministerial statement. They had not read it properly, I presume, they had not apprehended the whole extent and tenor, and after three days of cogitation, of moving about, of negotiations and procrastination, they at last opened their eyes and found out that this declaration contains all that is required to guarantee the rights of the Catholics of Manitoba and give satisfaction to their friends in this House. Is it surprising, in the face of such a back-down, in the face of a movement which I do not want to qualify more severely, but to which the province of Quebec will give the proper qualifying I am sure, is it surprising, I say, that among the friends of these gentlemen, there should be not only hesitation, but a feeling of indiscretion and contempt, and that the people should withdraw from them the confidence which had been bestowed on them to such a large extent? What is surprising is that among those who profess to be the friends of the cause of the minority in Manitoba, among those who profess to be anxious for a remedia! law, there should remain a single one to follow them in their back-down and applaud their surrender. The more accomplished by the hon. gentlemen, I have just referred to, is from any point of view a calamity for the cause of the minority. If the Ministerial statement was good and sufficient Monday last, there was no reason for the seditious move to which they committed themselves. They have acted rashly like thoughtless people, they have endangered the interests of the minority. If they had good reasons, as I have no doubt they had, and if, without obtaining anything, they come and take back the seats which they had left in compliance with a public duty. I say that it is such a degrading example for the House and for the people at large that it will provoke not the indignation, but wrath only the of the House and the whole country. Why, Sir, political men occupying the highest positions, the recognized representatives of a whole race, of a great religious body.

are agreed that the statement made by the ing a remedial legislation. Government was not satisfactory; they have selves driven into a corner, they are now sent in their resignation, considering that looking for a back door, and as the hon. the interests which they had undertaken to member for Gaspe (Mr. Joncas) so nicely protect were being sacrificed; and, now, the same hon, gentlemen, without having secured any new pledge, have decided to remain at their posts in the Cabinet, and they stand up here and tell us that they did so for the sake of their co-religionists. Well, Sir, I say this was not a decent course for them to pursue, as they went back without having bettered the condition of the Catholics in Manitoba. Now, what will be the practical outcome of this double move on the part of the hon. Minister of Public Works and the hon. Postmaster General? The result is that the settlement of the question has been adjourned to six months from now. Now, Sir, all the members have noticed how the Government supporters have accepted the solution without a dissentient voice. All the hon, members have been edified as to the genuineness of the hopes entertained by the Government of introducing and enacting a remedial law, next session. No sooner had the hon. the Minister of Justice attempted to offer an excuse, when the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), one of the leaders of the Conservative party in New Brunswick, rose from his seat and declared that, should the Government introduce a remedial law, he would oppose and record his vote against the measure. He was followed by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison), and by the hon, member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), both of them devoted supporters of the Government, who made similar statements. And if the forty subscribers of the famous declaration of war against the Government had manliness and backbone enough to stand and state to the House their feelings on the matter, they would repeat the same declaration as the one we have heard from the lips of the hon. members I have just mentioned. Still, one of them, whose word has more weight in the party than any other, and who occupies the position of chief whip for the Government, Mr. Taylor, said a little while ago, that, if they had introduced their remedial legislation two years ago, he would have voted against it; that if they had introduced it a year ago, he would have done the same; and had they introduced it this session, he would also have voted against them; but, when pressed for an answer to the question which was put to him whether, in case Manitoba should decline to take any action in the matter, and the Government should introduce a remedial legislation, whether, I say, he would vote against the Government, he declined to answer; but I am positive he would vote against them, because the combination will then be twice as powerful as it is now. In my humble opinion, the Government are trying to slip out of their promises made to Parliament. They have not now, nor ever had, the intention of introduc- | question, and he was ready to support it,

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL.

Finding themput it, the other day, in his paper, the delay now asked for is but a subterfuge, or means devised to escape ministerial responsibility, and to gain time, in order to get rid of Parliament. And then, once the hon. gentlemen will be closeted in the Privy Council chamber, whether the hon. the Postmaster General or the hon. Minister of Public Works be willing or not, the majority of their Protestant colleagues will readily find out a pretext for dissolving Parliament and holding a general election, without calling another session. With the co-operation and help of the Orange Association, which is so largely represented in the Conservative party, the Government are in hopes of securing an easy victory and obtaining a new lease of power. The members of that association will set themselves about agitating public opinion throughout the country, and will render impossible the settlement of the question, either by a Liberal Government, should they come into power, or by the Conservative party, for the reason that the people, roused by their inflammatory language, would refuse to render justice to the Catholic minority. It might perhaps be found impossible for any government whatsoever to muster a majority willing to impose upon the province of Manitoba a just and fair settlement of the question, based on the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and the remedial order. Such is, Sir, the probable outcome of the present state of affairs. I wish my forebodings may prove wrong; I earnestly hope so. I sincerely wish events may take a better turn, and that peace may reign once more in the land. I wish the members of the Orange Association may draw in their horns: and after the great celebration of to-morrow is over, as also that of the victory they have just won in this House. I wish they may display a little more generosity and justice than they have done in the past. But, as I said, it is a forlorn hope. Now, Sir, I come to some remarks fallen from the lips of two hon, gentlemen who taunted the Liberal party for not having stated their policy on the school question. I hardly believe these hon. gentlemen have paid any serious attention to the course of political events; otherwise. they would have read what the hon. leader of the Opposition said on the question, when addressing public meetings in the cities of Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg and throughout the province of Ontario and Quebec. The policy of the hon. gentleman is a well defined one, and one that leaves no room for doubt. The hon, leader of the Opposition has over and over again stated that this was not a party issue. He has declared that he did not want to use it as a foot-stool to reach power. Let the Government introduce a measure to settle the and endorse it, should it prove to be a just, honourable and fair settlement. He was not, to quote his own words, responsible for the Government of the country; he was a mere member of the House of Commons, and as such, he had a right to appreciate the policy of the Government, and he pledged himself to co-operate with the Government and help them to carry out a remedial legislation. Can the hon, gentlemen expect the hon, leader of the Opposition to go beyond that? If the hon, leader of the Opposition meant to use this question as a footstep to climb up to power, his course would be quite different. He would then try to make obstruction and embarrass the Government. He did no such thing, for the reason that, to his mind, this is not a party issue, but a question of justice about which both parties should agree. The hon. leader of the Opposition having thus stated over and over again his intention of co-operating with the Cabinet, outside of his right of judgment on the matter, the Government should have felt encouraged by such a generous declaration to introduce such a legislation as would have afforded an adequate measure of relief to the Catholic minority, without wounding the feelings of the other creeds and races throughout the Dominion. It would be a serious mistake on our part, were we to allow this question to assume the complexion of a creed or racial issue. The great majority of our Protestant fellow-countrymen are actuated by the love of justice and British fair play. There are found among them some who, for instance, like the Episcopalians, are in favour of separate schools. There are those who though they favour, on principle unsectarian schools, at the same time admit that the grievances complained of by the minority exist, and that justice should be meted out to them. We should rise above party considerations and consider the issue that confronts us from the standpoint of justice, fair play and constitutional rights which should be guaranteed to all, to whatsoever party, race or creed we may belong. For my part, Sir, I have before now, had the opportunity of explaining my attitude on the Manitoba school question. Here is what I stated on the floor of this House, in the Manitoba school question. 1893, on the motion of my hon. friend the member for l'Islet (Mr. Tarte). In order to avoid any ambiguity, I shall quote verba-tim, from "Hansard," 7th of March, 1893, what I then stated.

Our position is well and clearly defined, as I shall endeavour to point out as briefly as possible. We contend, first, that the Catholics in the province of Manitoba have certain rights which have been outrageously infringed upon; secondly, that it was the bounden duty of the Government as soon as they received the Greenway acts, to disallow and annul them. That this power of disallowance may be exercised within twelve months is admitted beyond dispute, nor can it be questioned, as this power is vested in the Dominion under the constitution. In the third place, we contend that the time for disal-lowance having once expired, it was the duty of the Government to enact such remedial law as were calculated to redress the grievances com-plained of by the Catholics in Manitoba, instead of resorting to various devices, now as in the past, to avoid dealing with the just claims of the latter. I say the Government are open to censure and condemnation at the hands of this House and the country for the policy of deception they have pursued up to now. I, for one, Sir, am ready to assume my own share of responsibility, and to support any government whose first article shall be the redress of the wrongs inflicted upon the minority of Manitoba; on the same ground, I would pledge myself to support no government whose programme would be to withhold from the Catholics of Manitoba the just treatment they are entitled to and which they are now being denied. On the other hand, should the hon. the Minister of Justice pledge himself to enact such remedial legislation as might be calculated to redress the grievances complained of, in accordance with the report of the 21st of March, 1891, I am ready, with a large number of my friends on this side of the House, to give him a fair support, thus making up the loss of a few votes among his supporters brought about by this honest course.

Now, Sir, we take the same stand on the question that we took in 1893. Now, as in the past, we ask the Government to do their duty, and we reiterate our offer to co-operate with them as a set-off for the loss of votes among their followers. At the time the Government turned a deaf ear to our offers, just as they do now; they would not listen to the voice of honour and justice. They did not dare introduce a remedial legislation. In 1893, the hon, members are well aware what an outcry was raised by the Orange lodges in this country; and it was to obey the orders of the lodges that the Government at the time did not take any action in the matter, just as they do now. And they will likely remain mute and will not recover their power of speech until the people shall have rendered their verdict, which will allow the hon, gentlemen on this side of the House, I hope, to cross over to the other side, in order to restore the harmony and good understanding which should prevail among different elements of our population, to ensure the respect of all the rights of the people, and to give satisfaction to those who want justice to prevail in our midst. I believe the majority of the people of this country want fair play for all, and to see justice and peace prevail here. I believe the great majority of our people want the constitution and the treaties to be obeyed to the letter, and justice done to every one of the provinces Dominion. Then only the shall it be possible for us to be the great nation, which it is the fondest dream of our ambition to establish upon this continent; then only shall this dream materialize and evolve into a tangible reality in the future. I hope the result of the popular verdict which is to be rendered at the next election will be the consolidation and not the I hope, then, we shall have seen the last of the race and creed wrangles, of that war of races, and that far from being intensified, our dissensions will gradually die away; if not, then, we must forego all hopes of ever becoming a great and prosperous people. It is still within our power, as I said, to escape those evils which would precipitate the ruin of confederation, if we only make up our minds to get rid of the clique that now governs the country and in putting the reins of Government into the hands of men in whom the people repose confidence.

Carling (Sir John),

McLean (King's),

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Bill (No. 129) to amend the law respecting superannuation of judges of provincial courts (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was read the second time and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. Minister explain what changes are proposed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is only to make clear the reading of the law. We had a lengthy discussion on the subject when the resolution was under consideration. At that time the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) and the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) raised a point which made it necessary for me to look into the subject a little more carefully. I have looked into that question in order to see that no radical change was being made, but that the Bill was, as I first stated to the House, merely to make clear the rights of the judges in admiralty. And I will just state succintly for the information of the committee the clause of the existing statute to show that there is nothing here in reality new. So far as the Department of Justice is concerned, this Bill was not absolutely necessary; it was the construction placed upon the existing statute. But one of the judges, a judge of the maritime court, suggested that, in consequence of the new statute, or rather the institution of the of the admiralty courts under the Canadian system, or under the Exchequer Court of Canada, this Bill would make the position absolutely clear. Under the Consolidated Statutes, chap. the superannuation of judges courts of vice-admiralty was provided for. The Act constituting the maritime court, the Revised Statutes, chap. 137, makes it also a superior court; and the Revised Statutes with respect to provincial judges provides that all judges of superior courts are entitled to pensions. So that, before the admiralty jurisdiction was given Act, Exchequer Court the judges the admiralty and of the vice-adof courts, as such, were entitled miralty to superannuation. Then there was Imperial legislation under which this Act in Canada was passed, and it was provided that their position should be in no wise impaired. And the clause in the Imperial Act, the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, makes every judge affected by that entitled to a pension. this Bill now follows these two Acts and the Exchequer Court Act, and makes it clear that these judges of vice-admiralty, local judges in admiralty, are the judges of a superior court in the sense of the Superannuation Act. And I would say to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) that, so far as the other powers that he feared might be involved here are concerned, there is this distinction—that any judges who are constituted the local judges in admiralty hold their position as other judges of the land, but that provision under which no action has been taken and no action is likely to be necessary, for appointing deputy or surrogate judges is one that makes their tenure different from that of the admiralty judges. They hold office only during pleasure of the local judge who appoints them. So. we are not enabling a large class who may be appointed as deputies to come in under the provisions respecting superannuation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What do you call a local judge?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. has been any misunderstanding, because Now judges of the old vice-admiralty courts. the statement made by the Premier and the

There were none others constituted. There are two local judges of admiralty under the Exchequer Court Act.

Mr. MULOCK. Are there vice-admiralty judges?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All the vice-admiralty judges are local judges in admiralty.

Mr. MULOCK. Do they all hold other positions?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All except Judge Irvine in Quebec.

Mr. MULOCK. This in no way enlarges the superannuation?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No; the law at present is in the same line—there is no change.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire, with the consent of the House, to move that Government Orders have precedence on Mondays for the remainder of the session.

Mr. McCARTHY. After questions put by members?

Mr. FOSTER. After questions put by members, and also saving the hour for private Bills.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before that is passed, I want to call the attention of the Minister of Finance, as leader of the Heuse, to a certain statement which I find in the report of the Senate Debates on Monday. A question was put there by the Hon. Mr. Scott with respect to the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway, in these terms:

Before the House rises, will the hon. Premier be in a position to inform us whether it is intended to bring down legislation with regard to the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway? I understand it is proposed to bring down some legislation with regard to it.

To which the Premier replied:

No, I think not. My impression is that the Finance Minister stated there was to be no further legislation of an important character except, of course—he did except at the time—remedial legislation. I am not aware of it.

I find in our notices of motion on the same day that the Minister of Railways introduced an Act respecting the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company, and I would like to be informed whether there has been any misunderstanding, because the statement made by the Premier and the action of the Minister of Railways, hardly accord.

Application and the Control of the C

Mr. FOSTER. I notice my hon. friend read an extract from the Senate "Hansard," in doing which I think he was quite out of order. However, as he has drawn attention to a proceeding which took place in our own House, I will look into it.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would like to know what business the leader of the House proposes to go on with to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. We will go on with the general business—inside the House—the Bills, and we have Ways and Means, and some supplies yet ungranted. We will take some Bills, and probably after that, Supply.

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire to give notice that when the hon. gentleman moves the House into Committee of Supply, I will call the attention of the House to the action of the Government with reference to the Manitoba school question, and move a resolution.

Mr. LAURIER. I have also been waiting for some time for the same opportunity.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, has priority.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 12th July, 1895.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

12th JULY PROCESSION.

Mr. CASEY. Before we proceed with the Orders of the Day, I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works about a matter which almost amounts, I think, to a question of privilege. Was it with his permission that members approaching the House this afternoon were obstructed by a procession crossing the parliamentary grounds?

Mr. OUIMET. No provision was made by me, and I do not think that any provision was necessary.

REPORT.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Select Committee appointed to supervise the Official Reports of the Debates of the House during the present Session, presented the Fifth Report of the Committee, as follows:—

Sir Richard Cartwright.

The Committee recommend that Messrs. A. N. Montpetit and F. Hughes be paid the sum of $500 each for services performed by them during the Session in connection with the translation of the Official Report of the Debates.

Report concurred in.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MULOCK. Before the Orders are called, I would like to ask the Secretary of State if he has yet been able to produce that return that has been promised?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I had it, Mr. Speaker; but I did not want to present it until I should have an inquiry from my hon. friend. I beg to lay the return upon the Table.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the Minister just been able to lay his hands on those documents as to which some discussion arose the other night and which were referred to by the Controller of Customs?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On the third reading of the Bill during the discussion of which this subject was referred to, a full statement will be made.

SUPPLY—TENURE OF OFFICE BY THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I purpose submitting to the House, Sir, the following resolution:—

That, in the opinion of this House, section 59 of the British North America Act of 1867, which prevents the removal of a Lieutenant-Governor of a province for five years from the date of his appointment, except for cause assigned, and communicated to the House of Commons by Message, was intended to prevent the undue influence of Federal Ministers in provincial affairs; and the practice which has become prevalent, of permitting Lieutenant-Governors to continue in office for long periods of time after the expiry of their commissions, by which they become removable at any time, without assignment of cause, is an abuse of authority calculated to impair responsible government in the provinces of the Dominion.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the various provinces which constitute the Dominion of Canada that existed prior to the union parliamentary government had been established. The same principles of ministerial responsibility which prevailed in the mother country had already become well recognized in the provinces which were embraced within the federal union. The British North America Act makes provision for the principle of parliamentary government as it relates to this Parliament. The provisions of the Act do not refer to the provinces in this regard at all. It is declared in the preamble of the Act that:

It is necessary or desirable, that the provinces should be federally united under the Crown of with a constitution similar in principle to the of protecting parliamentary United Kingdom.

solely to the constitution of this Parliament; they do not at all refer to the constitution of the provinces, and for the reason that I have given—because the provinces had their political institutions, the principles of which were well settled, those principles being similar to those of the Government of the United Kingdom. The rule well recognized in the relation between the Imperial Government and the colonies is a rule perfectly consistent with provincial autonomy; it is a rule under which the English parliamentary system is established. And the existence of that system, wherever it has been introduced into the colonies of the Empire, depends solely, according to the intentions of the constitution, upon Imperial abstinence from any interference with the manner in which the government is carried on and the legislative policy is marked out. Now, Sir, we are protesting in large degree against Imper-ial interference by the indifference of the people of the United Kingdom to all matters which specially concern ourselves. It is only when the legislature of a province or the executive government of a province; are disposed to cross the boundary which the Imperial Government has marked out between those powers and functions which are specially assigned to each province, and those which are retained possession of by the Imperial Parliament and the executive government of the United Kingdom. Imperial Parliament, or the Imperial Government is not likely, I say, to abuse its authority to the same extent as is the Federal Government in Canada. The Imperial Government does not draw its support from the same constituent body as that which maintains the Government in the various provinces, so that there is never anything like the same community of interest between any political party of any province and any party existing in the United King-But, Sir, that is not our position in a. We who sit in this Parliament dom. have the sympathy and support of our respective parties, which have the same constituents that support the legislature and the administration in the provinces. There was, at one time, a strong disposition on the part of Ministers in this Parliament to seek seats in the local legislature. one saw how extremely improper that was, for it was not an impossible thing for a Minister of the Crown in the Dominion to obtain a seat in the local legislature, and sit there in Opposition, and, though in Opposition, controlling, in no small degree, the Lieutenant-Governor, who was being advised by his political opponents. We carried through this Parliament a measure which prevented members of this House from being eligible for seats in the local

the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, legislature. We did that for the purpose government All the declarations of the preamble relate securing the same freedom, the same independence to the members of any local administration that are possessed in provinces not so constituted. Now, Sir, by the provisions of the British North America Act, section 59, to which I have referred, the Government here may advise the Crown to appoint the Lieutenant-Governor who holds office during pleasure. He is, nevertheless, not removable for the period of cause; five years, except for specific when such cause arises, it is the and duty of the Administration to report the fact to both Houses of Parliament. the Now, the objection I make to the existing condition of things is that in the case of many of the Lieutenant-Governors of provinces, they have been permitted to hold office for several years after their commissions have expired, and at the moment the commission expires, it is in the power of the Government to remove a Lieutenant-Governor without assignment of cause, and without any report to either House of Parliament. Now, I say that this is a highly objectionable condition of things. If it is proper, during the five years that the commission is in existence, that the Lieutenant-Governor shall not be removed without adequate cause being assigned, and without that cause being reported to both Houses of Parliament, it is obviously improper that the Lieutenant-Governor should continue to hold office after that period has expired. If the Government desire that the Lieutenant-Governor shall hold office for a longer period than five years, they should issue to him a new commission, they should put him beyond their power of removal for any subsequent period, just precisely as he was beyond their power of removal for the period for which he was appointed in the first instance. What is the object of this provision of the law? The object is to make the Lieutenant-Governor independent of the Government here, and solely subject to the advice which his constitutional advisers may think proper to give him. Now, let me mention two or three instances in which this rule has been departed from. Mr. Robinson, a Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, held office from 1880 to 1887, a period of seven years, two years of which he held liable to removal at any moment, upon the advice and instruction of Ministers here. Sir Leonard Tilley held office in the province of New Brunswick from 1885-to 1893, a period of eight years; so that for three years of his term of service he was liable at any moment to be removed from office by the Administration; and, therefore, if the Administration had chosen to interfere in local affairs, they could have brought pressure to bear upon the Lieutenant-Governor, if he desired to continue in office, which was altogether inconsistent with the duties that are assigned to him, under the law, to discharge. In 1888, Mr. Schultz was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, and now, in 1895, at the end of seven years, he is Lieutenant-Governor still. For the past two years he has held office by the suffrance of the Ministry, he is liable at any moment to be removed without assignment of cause; and that being so, I say that this condition of things has become an abuse which ought to be corrected, and for that reason I put into your hands this resolution.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If I may be allowed to say so, it is a pity that the hon. gentleman, who has made an exceedingly moderate argument upon an admittedly important subject, has chosen this occasion to bring forward the question. The motion before you was that this House should resolve itself into Committee of Supply, and, of course, on that occasion, the amendments which are presented constitute a direct challenge of the conduct of the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As a rule.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, the hon. gentleman will remember that Sir John A. Macdonald accepted a motion, in 1891, that I proposed from this side of the House.

Sir OHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Perfeetly so. The hon, gentleman did not do me the favour of waiting until I finished my sentence, and the exception he happens to mention, I think, supports the statement which I made, that these motions, as a rule, involve an attack upon the Government; and I was going on to answer that in the language of the resolution in your hands, and in the argument of the hon. gentleman, there is no mistake whatever as to the challenge contained both in the resolution and in the argument. The hon, gentleman, within his right, of course, contends that a practice has grown up in connection with the appointments of Lieutenant-Governors, and their continuance in office after the expiry of the fiveyear term, that amounts to an abuse. hon. gentleman's language was that this practice also had become prevalent. I think the hon. gentleman's motion is to the same effect, and I shall refer to that. In his argument he describes this practice as amounting to an abuse, and, therefore, whatever there may be in the merits of the question when discussed on another occasion, and whatever opinion might prevail as to the question in general, this is an amendment so framed and so supported that the Government cannot accept. I think that this statement in the resolution:

That the practice has become prevalent of permitting Lieutenant-Governors to continue in office for long periods of time after the expiry of their commissions, by which they become removable at any time without assignment of cause, is a statement that history does not support. One of the first cases in which a Lieutenant-Governor was permitted to remain in office over the five-year period, if I recollect aright, was the case of Lieutenant-Governor Archibald, during the time of the Government of which the hon. member for Bothwell was a member.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He was appointed a second time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He was appointed afterwards a second time. The hon, gentleman is quite correct, but months had intervened during the tenure of office by hon. gentlemen and the incoming of the succeeding Cabinet of Sir John A. Macdonald, and during that period this wrong upon the constitution as the hon. gentleman argues, was committed. what I wish to say is this, that the cases to which the hon, gentleman has referred, extending over a long period of years, are not many, and this is the first occasion upon which the practice has been formally challenged in this House; and again I say that under these circumstances it is hardly a fitting opportunity to make the challenge, and it is not one of those opportunities when the arguments that may be brought forward can be expected to receive their due weight. The hon, gentleman spoke of the spirit of our constitution. He referred to the language of section 59 of the British North America Act, and in the short time that I have had the opportunity of looking into a question of such importance, I am not able to agree gentleman with the hon. that practice, in the few cases to which he has referred, is in any respect inconsistent the spirit of that with But I will mention how many gentlemen have occupied that position in the different provinces since 1867, and the record seems to show that the practice has been absolutely in accord, not only with the terms of the British North America Act, but, as I think, with the spirit of that Act. Section 59 is as follows:

The Lieutenant-Governor shall hold office during the pleasure of the Governor General, but any Lieutenant-Governor appointed after the commencement of the first session of the Parliament of Canada shall not be removable within five years from his appointment, except for cause assigned, which shall be communicated to him in writing within one month after the order for his removal is made, and shall be communicated by Message to the Senate and the House of Commons within one week thereof, if Parliament is then sitting, and, if not, then within one week after the commencement of the next session of Parliament.

So that there is the term and there is the provision for occupancy of the office over the term. In order to fully understand what degree of importance is to be attached to the motion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) at this period of our history, I propose, though it may be somewhat tedious, to mention the names of the Lieutenant-Governors and their terms from 1867 down to 1893, as given in "Todd's Parliamentary Government in the British Colonies."

That list of cases seems to answer the very strong resolution, a resolution entirely too strong in its terms, moved by my hon. friend. But in most of those provinces, since 1878, the Lieutenant-Governor has been appointed by a Federal Government not in political accord or harmony with the local legislature, or rather the local government, and this House has yet to learn of any case where there was the slightest objection raised to extending the term of office of the Lieutenant-Governor holding this position at the pleasure of the Governor General. That seems to me also to afford some answer to the hon. gentle-Looking through Todd, I man's motion. have curiously observed cases of several governors holding their commissions direct by Imperial commission of the Imperial Government in the Australian colonies, whose terms seem to run to seven years. 1855 to 1862, for instance, in South Australia, the position was held by Sir Richard Graves Macdonnell. From 1872 to 1879, in New South Wales, the position was held by Sir Hercules Robinson. The general practice in colonies under the Imperial Government, as in Canada under the Governor General, is, no doubt, the five years term; but I have been endeavouring to insist that there has been no abuse, and that the hon. gentleman's resolution is, to say the least of it, premature. Having admitted the general principle, having shown, as I think I have shown, that the exceptions in Canada are as contemplated by the Act, and have not become anything like a practice, that no general complaint from the local government has been made, the resolution which the hon. gentleman has to-day placed before the House should be voted down as being premature, as not being supported by the facts.

Mr. LAURIER. I rise simply for the purpose of calling the attention of the Minister of Justice to the erroneous, if he will permit me to say so, view which he has taken of the amendment to go into Committee of Supply. The hon. Minister has taken the ground that almost of necessity such motions carry with them a vote of want of confidence in the Government. This assertion can be maintained neither in law nor in the practice Of course, there are of this Parliament. motions which by themselves carry censure and such motions would necessarily imply want of confidence in the Administration. But when the motion presented is such as this motion, affirming a general principle, not particularly calling in question any practice or any action of the Government, it does not carry with it want of confidence, unless, indeed, it is made so by the will of the Administration. If the Administration cares to do so, it always has the power to declare that a motion moved in amendment to go into Committee of Supply is a motion of want of confidence; they have the power, and it follows they can take that course. But I dispute altogether the proposition that this is such a motion as to involve want of confidence. I know this is a weapon often resorted to by the Administration in order to defend a rather dubious course where the existence of the Administration is dependent on such a vote, and I remember more than one occasion when hon, members have been placed between their conscience on the one side, and giving support to the Administration on the other, and as a rule their conscience has given away to their confidence in the Administra-tion. But this is not necessarily the case to-day, and I think my hon. friend is unwise, if he permits me to say so, in not inviting a proper discussion and taking the feeling of the House upon this question. He says that no complaint has been made and that no evil has resulted from this practice.

SIT CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think the hon. gentleman hardly puts that right. I have denied the practice existed. I said the cases were exceptional.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon, gentleman said that no evil has resulted from the practice.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. From even the exceptional cases.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of my hon, friend to a case with which I know he is familiar, but which he seems to have forgotten. In 1882, on motion to go into Supply, the question of the dispute as to the boundaries between Ontario and Quebec was brought in in the form of an amendment, moved by a prominent supporter of Governor shall be appointed for a term the Administration at that time, the late of years by commission, can be violated with Mr. Plumb. The amendment read as following, and if no evil results flow from lows:

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved: That in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that the western and northern boundaries of the province of Ontario should be finally settled by a reference to, and an authoritative decision by, either the Supreme Court of Canada or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Great Britain, or by the Supreme Court in the first place, subject to a final submission to the Judicial Committee, as the province of Ontario may choose; that such decision should be obtained either on appeal in a friendly action, brought for the purpose, or by reference to the said courts, or either or both of them, by Her Majesty, under the powers conferred upon her by the Imperial and Canadian Parliaments, as the government of Ontario may prefer, and that the said reference should be based on the evidence collected and printed, with any additional documentary evidence—if such there is—and that, pending the reference, the administration of the lands shall be entrusted to a joint committee appointed by the Governments of Canada and On-

Now, strange to say, this motion was presented by a prominent member of the Administration, was supported by the Administration and resisted by the Opposition, and it was carried in the House by a strict party vote. The motion of the Government to go into Supply was defeated by the Government itself. Surely in view of such a case, it cannot be said that an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply carries with it the character of a motion of want of confidence.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not necessarily.

Mr. LAURIER. Then is there any reason why this motion should be made a want of confidence motion?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. argue so.

Mr. LAURIER. At this very moment there is a case in point before the country. The Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba has for some time occupied his position by suffrance of the Administration and not by his commission upon which he was appointed. He can be dismissed to-morrow and a successor to him can be appointed the day after tomorrow. He may be retained for one day or for one year, just as suits the convenience of the party in power. I ask the Minister of Justice, is that a practice which should be tolerated? The hon. gentleman says that so far no evil has flown from this, but does results follow from the breaking of a law, that it is right and proper that the law should be broken? Will he maintain that because no evil results have followed, that therefore we should go on without any rules whatever. If the provision of the constitution, which says that the Lieutenantsuch violation of the law, the law might as well be dispensed with at once. But, Sir, laws exist in all cases because if there are no laws abuses may result, and I call the attention of my hon. friend, that he has given no reasons whatever why such practice should be defended. Indeed he has not defended it. His only argument is that no evil results have flown from it and I submit that is no argument at all.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would not take part in the debate, Mr. Speaker, but for the fact that I think it is too important a matter to go, as it were, by default. I do not care whether the Government treat this matter as a want of confidence or whether they do not treat it as a want of confidence. I am sorry that the hon, gentleman who has spoken on behalf of the Government has announced, contrary to the intention and will of the introducer, that the Government treat it as a want of confidence motion. What I think is, that, recognizing and rethe tenure of office which holds under Lieutenant-Governor federal system, this House ought not so long to have tolerated the abuse of the continuance of the system which is complained of. Why is it that the British North America Act has distinctly defined the tenure of office that the Lieutenant-Governor holds. He is not appointed during good behaviour, he is not appointed during pleasure; but he is appointed for a definite fixed term of years, and he is not to be removed except by the Government for cause assigned which must be communicated to this House. This all goes to show that in the experiment which was made of a colonial government appointing Lieutenant-Governors, that the Act defines that the Lieutenant-Governor should hold a position of independence and should not be in any respect beyond what the law requires him to me, subservient to the central power. Therefore, Sir, where it is brought to our attention, I think we would be derelict in our duty, if we allow this question to be treated as of no importance whatever. I did not understand the Minister of Justice to justify it, or if he does justify the departure from the plain terms of the law, he does it but faintly indeed. But what may be said, if this matter does not now engage our attention, and does not receive from us that consideration that its importance demands? It may be felt that when it was brought to our notice that Lieutenant-Governors have been permitted to hold my hon. friend argue that because no evil office, after their terms had expired, and during pleasure, and subject to removal of course without notice; that we did not think it of sufficient moment to give it any attention. I therefore desire to say that I believe it to be a matter of the very gravest importance that this provision of the statute should be definitely adhered to. It does not prevent a gentleman who is Lieutenant-Governor being reappointed, for we know that in the case of Sir Leonard Tilley that was done twice, or thrice, but what is calculated to degrade the high and important office of the representative of the Crown in the provinces is, that he should be in the position that at any moment he could be recalled; and that in that sense he is put in a position to perhaps obey directions from the central body, which in his duty to his province he should wholly and absolutely disregard. The case that has been referred to in the province of Manitoba is a very striking one, and one which exposes the mischief and the danger to follow from a continuance of this practice. We are told in this House, and we have been told elsewhere, that the gentleman who holds the office, is most anxious for reappointment. We were told not very long ago, that this gentleman had come to Ottawa for the purpose of trying to be continued in his office and was willing under these circumstances to bargain away his functions and the rights of his province. I do not know whether these charges are true, but this I do know: That the fact that these charges could be made tend to degrade and lower the dignity of the high office which the Lieutenant-Governors occupy. For that reason and that alone, I think that we should require that the statute should be adhered to, and that the abuse should not be allowed to continue to exist. So that, speaking on behalf of myself-I have no right to speak for anybody elseon a question of this importance, I could not give a silent vote, and, in voting for the resolution-if a division is called for. I shall certainly vote for it—I do not treat it as a vote of want of confidence or blame the Government. Attention has not been directed to the matter before, and we are perhaps as much to blame for the past as the Government. But in the future we ought not to continue a practice which seems to me to be at variance, not simply with the spirit, but with the plain letter of our constitution.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not at all understand my hon, friend, the Minister of Justice, to argue against the advisability of carrying out the law as a general rule; I think my hon, friend made that admission. It is an important question, there is no doubt. What I have noticed in this discussion is that the variation from the rule has not been challenged, because of any special instance of harm having resulted from the commission of any Lieutenant-Governor running over its time of five years.

At the present time, as my hon. friend said, there is but one instance of such.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There are four.

Mr. FOSTER. There is but one existing at present. Frankly, I think we are all agreed that the law binds, and that the principle of the law is a good one. But I want to take exception to two points. My hon, friend argues that necessarily the independence of a man is entirely destroyed when his term of five years is over, and he is then liable to be removed at any moment at the pleasure of the Administration. Although theoretically that may be maintained, I do not think that practically it has any appreciable effect. A person who has held such a high and honourable position, and is worthy of holding it—who has done that for a period of five years, and done it to the satisfaction of the country as a whole, and the province over which he is Lieutenant-Governor—does not feel for a single moment, if for reasons of state his term is prolonged for an indefinite number of months, that therefore his independence is in the least at stake. He will act just as independently and will feel himself just as honourably bound to fulfil the duties of his office according to his oath as he was before his term had run out, and as he would be if his term had not run out. There is also another view which may be held. It might sometimes be not for the benefit of the state, but quite the opposite, that a man should be taken from the gubernatorial office immediately upon the expiration of his term of five years. might be some important business of negotiation which was current during his term, which had not been finished, which was still in negotiation, which he was thoroughly conversant with, and which it might be considered best should be finished before he left the gubernatorial seat. Such a case as that is quite conceivable. Outside of these considerations—and they are practical considerations, which any Administration has te take into account-I quite subscribe to the doctrine that the term of the governor of a province should conform to the legal limit, and that, if there is any intention that he should be continued in office any length of time beyond his term, outside of the considerations I have mentioned, it would be far better to give him a second term at once than to keep him on for a large number of years. A few cases have occurred sufficient to emphasize the rule. I am ready to acknowledge; but no case that I know of has occurred as to which condemnation could be based upon ill results that have followed from the temporary prolongation of the term.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The hon, gentleman who has just spoken has carefully avoided two views of the case which I think may well be brought to the attention of this House.

For several days past this House has rung with denunciations of those who would not obey the constitution. No language too strong could be used in denunciation of those who would not obey the remedial order or the judgment of the Privy Council. We were almost rebels because we would not obey the constitution. But where, for reasons of state, as the hon. gentleman says, it suits the Government to violate the constitution in regard to the term of a Lieutenant-Governor, nothing is to be said about it. It is just as much a violation of the constitution to set aside and deliberately disobey the clauses of the British North America Act in regard to that as to violate any other provision of the constitution. But for reasons of state in one case the provisions of the constitution are to be insisted upon, and in the other case they are not to be considered of the slightest importance. There is another view of the case. It may be true that the hon. gentleman who occupies the position of Lieutenant-Governor is perfectly independent; there may be no question of his independence; but what have we to say of those numerous applicants to whom the office is held out as a bair to induce them to support the Administration when otherwise they might not do so?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing personal in that, I hope.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It does not apply to the hon. Minister of Finance undoubtedly. But one can easily imagine a case where gentlemen, either in this House or outside of it, might have the temptation held out to them year after year and month after month; and, at a critical time in the history of an Administration, it might be considered exceedingly convenient for some such reason not to fill the office. But I do say that for hon, gentlemen who have insisted so loudly upon the necessity of obeying the constitution, coolly to argue that for reasons of state, as they term it, they may deliberately set aside the clauses of the British North America Act, is a little too much for those who have heard the speeches that have been made in this House in the last few days.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend has argued that the constitution has been violated. As I read the constitution:

A Lieutenant-Governor shall hold office during the pleasure of the Governor General.

That is an absolute statement; and what follows is a qualification of that:

But any Lieutenant-Governor appointed after the commencement of the first session of the Parliament of Canada, shall not be removable within five years from his appointment, except for cause assigned, which shall be communicated to him in writing within one month after the order for his removal is made.

Mr. MULOCK. That qualifies the pleasure.

Mr. O'BRIEN.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend, I apprehend, is quite mistaken as to the significance of this language. A general statement is here made that a Lieutenant-Governor shall hold office during the pleasure of the Governor General; and then comes a limit in favour of the appointee—that for five years he shall not be removable, except for cause assigned.

Mr. McCARTHY. Therefore he holds office during pleasure?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, certainly he does.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Five years, certainly.

Mr. DAVIN. During pleasure, and then comes the qualifications, so that what the hon. member for Bothwell aims at is a thing which should properly be attained by revising the British North America Act; but so long as the British North America Act remains as it is, I hold that no charge can be brought against the Administration, Liberal or Conservative, which may happen to advise His Excellency to continue a Lieutenant-Governor in office longer than five years, because, according to that rule, he is appointed for that term, and then there is a qualification in favour of the appointee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I listened to the remarks of the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance with some regret. In particular, I thought that the Minister of Finance, who admitted substantially the correctness of my hon. friend's position, was exceedingly weak when he contended that no man's impartiality, no man's independence was liable to be impaired by the fact that he was a mere occupant at pleasure. Why, one merely needs to state the proposition to know that such a person must of necessity forfeit his independence pro tanto when he ceases to be an officer holding his position for a term of years during good behaviour; and the hon. gentleman knows quite well that the value the whole of these officials depends entirely on the belief of the public, the legis-lature, the Ministers with whom they act, that they are impartial and independent. There can be nothing more calculated to degrade the office of Lieutenant-Governor than to allow those who hold that office to remain there at the mere pleasure of the Ministry of the day. And I am very far indeed from believing that no evils have arisen when Ministers, as we have seen on occasions, hold their office to a various certain extent at the mercy of the Lieutenant-Governor, who in turn holds his absolutely at the mercy of the Government here. Because no evil has been stated to have occurred, it does not at all follow that no evil has occurred. If the hon, gentlemen choose to reappoint a man whose term of office is completed, we have nothing to say. It may or may not be expedient, but it is, at any rate, within their discretion, and a thing for which they are properly held responsible; but if they choose, under circumstances such as have occurred in other provinces, and more particularly under circumstances such as are occurring to-day in Manitoba, to keep in office a gentleman who holds it absolutely and mainly at their pleasure, they will expose themselves very justly to the charge of having interpreted for purposes of their own, the plain intent and spirit of the British North America Act in a manner in no ways contemplated by the constitution, and utterly repugnant to the spirit of the constitution; and their action may produce very grave and We know perfectly mischievous results. well that in this particular case it has been asserted publicly—I do not say that we have the evidence to prove it herethat the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba came down here with the proposition, neither more nor less, that if things were made pleasant for him, and he got an extension of his term, he would dismiss his Ministers. That may or may not have been the case. and under the peculiar circumstances of the case there was ground for suspicion that some such intrigue was going on; and it is in the highest degree important for the usefulness of any officer, that his tenure of office should be of such a character that no such suspicion could arise about it. If it is of any use to have Lieutenant-Governorsa thing which may be doubted and which is under discussion at present-if these officers are of any value, if it is desirable that they should be continued, if it is desirable that these petty mock courts should be maintained at considerable cost to the country, then at least the men who preside over them should be independent of the Government here, or at any rate only subject to removal under such circumstances as the constitution prescribes. It is an evil—and one which may prove to be a serious one before we meet againthat the Governor of one of our provinces should be in a position entirely fatal to his independence; and this Parliament will be false to its duty unless it expresses a strong opinion as to the inexpediency of allowing such a state of things to continue for one hour.

Mr. COCKBURN. While I sympathize to a considerable extent with the feelings which prompted the hon, member for Bothwell to draw the attention of the House to this matter, I do not think he has brought forward sufficient evidence to establish the fact that there has been so prevalent a contravention of the constitution that it behooves us to act in such a manner as really to pass a verdict of blame upon the Ministry. I am anxious that so honourable an office should be left free, as far as possible, from the control of the Dominion Government; but at the same time, we must all feel that in a large Dominian, such as it is our privilege to rule, there are many cases in which it may be inadvisable, in the public interests, to remove a Lieutenant-Governor. I have no sympathy, I may say, with my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) in his remarks with reference to the numerous applicants who may be knocking at the door which leads to the office, for I should rather read the argument in this way, that if there are so many applicants among the supporters of the Government ready to take that office, they will bring such influence to bear upon the Government as to prevent this practice becoming so very general as it is hinted it might become. I think, on the contrary, that there is a great safeguard in the fact that there is a sufficient office-seeking spirit on both sides; and I cannot but feel that as long as we have so strong a feeling in Canada to grab public offices, we may rest assured that very few Lieutenant-Governors will be allowed to continue in the position beyond the appointed term unless there be strong reason in the public interest why they should not be removed. I hope that the advice given by the hon. philosopher from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will be accepted by the Government in a spirit of resignation-not that I mean they should resignbut that they should take his advice to heart. I feel, however, that the philosophic spirit which characterizes the hon, member for Bothwell has perhaps led him somewhat astray in the matter. If he desires to preserve that philosophic unity in his discourse, and in the rules he has laid down, he should allow himself to be carried past the boundaries-I will not say of common sense-but of that sense which makes us give and receive a little light. I trust a matter of this kind will not be trusted to a vote, but I hope, if the Government have seen fit to unduly prolong the office of any Lieutenant-Governor, they will take every opportunity, as speedily as possible, to remedy that condition.

Mr. WELDON. I am in favour of the practice recommended by the hon. member for Bothwell, but he has not made out a case which calls upon me to vote for the resolution. I am asked to declare by my vote that:

The practice, which has become prevalent, of permitting Lieutenant-Governors to continue in office for long periods of time after the expiry of their commissions, by which they become removable at any time, is an abuse of authority calculated to impair responsible government of the provinces of the Dominion.

The hon, gentleman draws an inference which cannot logically be drawn, and he winds up with a declaration which I, for one, cannot make. I did not think that a case of abuse of authority has yet been made out. If I understand the Minister of Justice and the leader of the House, who spoke afterwards, they agreed that the common rule should be to give a Lieutenant-Gover-nor a fixed term, but they also pointed out that the reading of the constitution is clear enough, and that no very good reason has been given for putting a hard and fast limit upon it. The constitution simply says in substance, that the Lieutenant-Governor shall have a minimum term of five years. It is a grave thing to alter the constitution, to tie the hands of the Administration with a hard and fast rule; and I do not think that a case for so doing has been made out. Much as I would like to see the practice followed, in every possible case, of having a new commission made out when the five years' term comes to an end—and the House, on both sides, is pretty much agreed that such is a sound practice—there may be unforeseen cases in which it would be hazardous to have the constitution altered as proposed.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Mills, Bothwell):

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CASEY. The hon, member for Victoria, N.S. (Mr. McDonald) came in while the motion was being put in French.

Mr. SPEAKER. Did the hon. member hear the motion put?

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria). I did.

Mr. CASEY. Is it not required that the hon, gentleman should hear the whole question read?

Mr. SPEAKER. My ruling, given in 1891, is that a member must be in the House, and hear the whole of the question read, either in the French or in the English language.

Mr. McKAY. The hon, member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) did not vote.

Mr. HAZEN. I did not hear the question put.

SUPPLY—THE MINISTRY OF AGRI-CULTURE.

Mr. MULOCK. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of this House, and more particularly of the Government, to the vacancy in the Cabinet. I understand that we no longer have a Minister of Agriculture. Now, there are reasons why this important department should not be left without an efficient head for any considerable length; of time. And in view of the statement that has just fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Centre Toronto, that there are any number of office-seekers in the ranks of gentlemen opposite, it can hardly be pleaded in justification of a long-continued vacancy of the office that there is any difficulty in getting a fit and proper person to fill it. For instance, we have the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). He has been certified to by a large section of his constituents as well qualified. And 1 believe that there is evidence that he is personally willing to undertake the job. suppose that the hon, member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) would also offer his help. I will not take time to refer to the qualifications of all the gentlemen who might be considered eligible. But I venture to say that there are certain duties attaching to this office that are of such an important character that there should be no delay whatever in placing that department in commission. I mean, not to have it a branch of some other department, not to have it attached to another department for the time being, but to have it properly organized to meet any contingencies that may The particular interest to which I call the attention of the House which will not admit of any laxity of administration, is the observation of the complete quarantine between Canada and the outside world in respect of cattle. We have a long fron-We are told from the official tier to guard. reports that there are stations at different points from ocean to ocean guarding that frontier. The least slip, the least oversight, the least indifference on the part of any official may be conducive of serious injury to the agricultural interest. Therefore. I offer the suggestion at the earliest possible moment, that every precaution may be taken to guard this industry. For my own part, I do not understand how this department can be efficiently managed or the work of guarding the frontier carried on unless there is at once an appointment to the head of the department of a person in every respect equal to the responsibilities of the position.

Mr. FOSTER. I have but little to say in reply to my hon. friend. He was good enough to point out several gentlemen on this side who might be looked to to fill that position. The gentlemen whose names he mentioned are men of ability and capacity who would perform the duties of that de-The hon. partment, no doubt, very well. gentleman was too modest to speak of sundry persons on the Opposition side of this Chamber who might also have aspirations to fill such an office as this-himself included. But I would like to caution my hon. friend that he must temper his aspirations to that high office with the recollection of certain contingencies that might occur. Strange things might take place in his own constituency. With reference to my hon. friend's laudable anxiety that the office of Minister of Agriculture shall be properly looked after, and carefully administered, I think he need not give himself any trouble in that respect. The office has been vacant only two days, and the Government will see that, in the meantime, it is properly administered, as it always has been; and at a convenient opportunity will fill the office by a man of capability, who will be acceptable to the country.

Mr. CASEY. I think it is not at all out of place that hon, gentlemen on this side the House should trouble themselves about this vacancy. The office is a very important one, and although it has only been vacant for a couple of days, it is not too soon to ask that it should be filled. If this Government is as strong as it professes to be, it should hail with pleasure the first opportunity of opening a constituency, and having an election, and showing that it is strong, not only in the House, but in the country. By doing so it would also accomplish what we have long contended they should have done in regard to the Minister of Agriculture, it would secure the presence of that Minister in this House. This is the House in which he should sit, this is the House in which the farmers of the country are directly represented, this is the House where explanations on such important matters ought to be made. have laboured for some time under the inconvenience of having a Minister who was not only a lawyer, and unacquainted with agriculture or its needs, but who was in another place. We have had to get explana-tions second-hand. My hon, friend the Sec-retary of State has had to make the explanations this year, and has done very well, considering that he was only the mouthpiece for another Minister, and that he had not the information first-hand. But that department is one which should be represented in the people's House by a Minister who is an authority himself, a farmer, or, at all events, one wno is intimately acquainted with farmers, and with their needs. think it is quite in place to urge upon the Government the propriety of immediately filling this office, and of filling it by a member of the House of Commons, both to accomplish the end which I have last referred inspection and to, and also to show triumphantly their strength in the country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish only to say a couple of words, and those shall be more particularly in reference to the hon, gentleman who administered the Department of Agriculture up to a couple of days ago. It great benefit to a great many of the farmis true that that hon, geutleman is a member of the legal profession, and it has been said by the member for West Elgin (Mr. could be made to have proper inspection Casey) that on account of that fact he did so that our stock could get into the American not administer the department in the later-market. I am perfectly certain, as a est of the agriculturists of Canada. I have farmer myself, and largely engaged in fatonly to say that although that hon, gentle tening animals, that if we had had proper man is a member of the legal profession, he did secure a very wide knowledge of the affairs of his department; and whoever; looks into the affairs of that department, and whoever carefully goes over his management of the department, will find that he initiated very many steps for the advancement of agriculture and of the dairy interests, and that, during his term of service, he did excellent work for the farmers of Canada. I think it my duty, as having represented him in this House during this session, to say now, in his absence, that he did excellent work in administering the affairs of that department.

Mr. CASEY. I did not say that the hon, gentleman, the late Minister of Agriculture, had not administered the office properly. I merely said that on account of his ignorance of the subject he was not able to appreciate the needs of the farming com-munity as it is desirable that a Minister of Agriculture should be able to do.

Mr. McMILLAN. In connection with this subject, I wish to say that, during the in-cumbency of the late Minister of Agriculture, neither the experimental farm at Ottawa, nor the other experimental farms in the Dominion, have been as successfully administered as they would have been had a thoroughly trained agriculturist presid-ed over that department. I fear not to state that up to this period there has not been a thoroughly practical agriculturist to carry on the operations of the central farm, one who is thoroughly acquainteđ with and the raising care stock, such as has been attempted on that It is of the utmost importance that the man who holds that important office should be acquainted with the feelings and aspirations of the farmers, and that acquaintance can only be obtained after a long and practical experience. There are a number of very important questions to be settled in the interests of the agriculturists of this country, and one of them is the quarantine regulations that exist between the United States and Canada. that it would be in the interest of the farmers of Canada to-day if regulations were adopted providing for a complete system of abolishing quarantine. The regulations should be so changed that both our fat and lean stock could be taken into the United markets. At the same time, existing conditions should be so changed that our great stock-raisers can enter the American market with their cattle. I hold that it would be a ers of the province of Ontario, yes, and of so that our stock could get into the American inspection so that our fat stock could go to the United States, within the last twelve months we would have enjoyed nearly $1 per cwt. more for our cattle than we have been getting. It is therefore of the ut-most importance that there should be a practical man, one who has a seat in this House, to hold the office of Minister of Agriculture, so that he may sit here and hear all the discussions that take place with reference to the agricultural business of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Public Works...... $174,650

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. item of $99,800 for repairs and working expenses for harbours, docks, and slides, what have they got to do with booms and slides? How much goes for harbours?

Mr. OUIMET. It is an old form. There is a vote for general repairs, maintenance harbours and rivers, slides and booms, and the work done is put under the heading of general repairs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. State generally what you want to do with the appropriation.

Mr. OUIMET. This expenditure includes amounts paid for making good damages not provided for in the Estimates for the works, different amounts being spent for wharfs and other structures.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe with respect to the graving docks that a total vote is asked of from $30,090 to $40,-000, $13,000 being required for Esquimalt, about $10,000 for Lévis, and $8,000 for Kingston. What receipts have been obtained from each of these docks, and why is it necessary to ask for $11,000 for repairs when these are practically new works and are presumably in fairly good order?

Mr. OUIMET. At Kingston we have to pay for the staff, including the engineer, assistant engineer, foreman, night watchman and labourers. Then there is an expenditure of $1,400 for coal, and $600 for repairs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I recommend that the phraseology of the vote be changed, as an amount of $1,400 for coal is placed under the head of repairs.

Mr. OUIMET. There are only two columns, one for expense of staff, and the other for repairs. This system applies very well as regards slides and booms where no coal or other supplies are furnished. No doubt the language could be more accurate, but the system would have to be changed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWR!GHT. How many men are on duty at the several graving docks?

Mr. OUIMET. I have already given the number at Kingston. There are nine at Esquimalt, and six at Lévis.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What income has been received from these graving docks, respectively?

Mr. OUIMET. From Lévis during the year 1893-94, $13.310; from Kingston, $7,453; Esquimalt, $10,786.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are we to understand that, entirely apart from the cost of construction, the receipts at Esquimalt and Kingston do not equal working expenses?

Mr. OUIMET. The revenue will about meet the expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a deficiency as regards Esquimalt and Kingston.

Mr. OUIMET. Some years there is a surplus; during other years there are fewer accidents to vessels, and consequently less revenue for the docks.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe that $24,850 is required for the Ottawa district staff. What does that staff consist of, how many compose it, and what are the salaries paid?

Mr. OUIMET. The revenue of the Ottawa district slides and booms is over $(3,600) annually. The staff is required to keep the slides and booms in working order and collect the revenues from them. The staff consists of one superintendent at $2,500, and accountant at $1,600, paymaster, $1,200, six deputy slide-masters, five boom-masters, and two or three other officials and labourers. The general repairs last year cost $14,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What does the district embrace?

Mr. OUIMET. All the slides and booms on the Ottawa River and its tributaries.

Mr. McMULLEN. The repairs cost $14,-603. The staff will number nearly a hundred, I think.

Mr. OUIMET. Twenty-four men are employed on the regular staff for the purpose of maintaining the slides and booms and collecting the revenue. The cost of general repairs, maintenance of dams, slides and booms at different stations was $7,900. The general repairs on the tributaries cost $8,000. The amount collected last year was $63,-151.38.

Mr. McMULLEN. What about the St. Maurice district?

Mr. OUIMET. There are very considerable works on that river, and they used to cost $26,000, but they are now reduced to $18,000, including repairs which were very extensive last year and will be this year on account of the increased quantity of timber produced in that district. Last year the revenue was $14,371, and it will probably reach $18,000 this year.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the revenue was $14,000, and we paid the staff nearly $8,500, it would, therefore, appear that it cost 60 per cent of the revenue to collect it.

Mr. OUIMET. That staff is not altogether for the collection of revenue, but for repairing and maintaining the slides.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me we must keep a very excessive staff there.

Mr. OUIMET. These works are not for the purpose of obtaining revenue but for the purpose of accommodating the timber trade, and if we can make ends meet it is all that is required. They are built just as if we erected public works for the general good on any highway. They have not been built for revenue. These men are not supposed to be paying taxes to the country, but only what is equivalent to the maintenance of these works, and when they are no more required they will be abandoned.

Mr. BOWERS. There is a continuous line of telegraph now from Digby to Westport, a distance of about forty miles, and I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the necessity of extending it to the lighthouse at the west point of Briar Island, a distance of one and a half or two miles. At this point nearly all the vessels pass in and out to the Bay of Fundy, and in case of wreckage, it takes a very considerable time for a person to come to the village to get help as the road is a very bad one. In consequence of this delay life and property might be lost at that point, which might not occur, as help could be obtained by telephone, if the line were extended to the extreme point of Briar Island. Another reason for erecting the telegraph is, that sometimes the whistling buoys go adrift from Trinity Rock and the Lurcher Shoal, and come around Briar Island when they If there was a line exare towed in. tended to the lighthouse, there would be continual communication with the village, and if the buoys went adrift, vessels could go out and get them. There is now a risk of them drifting ashore and breaking up, which would entail quite a loss upon the department. The expense would be small. I think the company would build the line and run it, and keep it in repair for a very small yearly stipend. I would ask the Minister to take this into his consideration, and see if he cannot provide a small grant for extending that line and opening up communication with Westport. Not only the lightkeeper but the engineer of the fog-alarm live there with their families, and in case of accident, it is very inconvenient at times for them to leave and go for help, as there might be stormy weather or a heavy fog. I think it is very necessary that this line should be extended, as it would afford great facilities not only to the inhabitants of Westport, but often to the owners of shipping at St. John and other parts of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. OUIMET. This matter will be attended to. I will instruct my superintendent of telegraphs to make a report to me on the matter. As he is within hearing, he will know all about it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that there is an increase of $1,500 this year for cable and telegraph lines on the coast. Will the hon, gentleman explain why this increase is asked?

Mr. OUIMET. Whenever repairs are required to be made to the cables, we employ the steamer "Newfield," which is a Government steamer, and whatever our department pays for it goes to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which owns the steamer. This $1,500 additional, as I understand, is required to put in new machinery for the general purpose of repairing cables.

Excise $472,953 75

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that the Controller proposes to make a reduction of $11,700, largely in the preventive service. Will he be good enough to explain whether this reduction arises from the fact that he did not require to spend the money before, or whether he is attempting to economize?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Two years ago it occurred to me that a good many of the officers belonging to the regular staff in the different revenue districts throughout the country might do a good deal of the work then done by the preventive staff. The expense on that account was larger than it ought to have been and, as one very good result of my visiting most of the districts and talking with the collectors, I came to the conclusion that we could effect a saving of this $6,800 in the preventive service. I am satisfied that the service can be effectively performed with the amount I ask.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is an item here of $5,000 to pay collectors of customs allowance on duty collected by them. collectors of customs, when called upon to discharge the very slight duty in connection with the Inland Revenue Department, might very well do it without additional wages. If they cannot, a change should be made in the law. Our Civil Service, both inside and outside, are better paid than any other class in this Dominion, and I cannot understand why men should be allowed to draw double pay simply because they are required to do some little extra duty. They are still the servants of the country; they are not the servants of one department only; and they should ready to serve their country as they are required by the several departments. Why is this system continued?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I can only say that it has always been considered that this mode of collecting the revenue is to be commended for its cheapness. As a matter of fact, no officers are appointed for the smaller places, but a very small percentage on the collections are allowed to the officers of the Customs Department. If the hon. gentleman is justified in saying that the officers belonging to the different departments in the outside service are overpaid, I am bound to say that that does not apply to the officers who collect our revenue in this way. In all places of any consequence where there is sufficient work for an officer of each department, two officers are But these small percentages appointed. are only allowed in the smaller places, where the customs officers are invariably paid very small salaries. If the hon, gentleman examines into the matter, he will find that what they receive from both departments combined amounts only to a ≤mall salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not saying that the hon. gentleman is responsible at all, neither do I say that the staff was overpaid, but I merely say that they are as well, if not better paid than any other class in the outside service. But I contend that if the Act, as it now stands, prevents any officer doing something in connection with the Department of Inland Revenue, it ought to be altered. If there is more work than can really be done by one man, and an assistant is required, let one be appointed; but this system of paying officers simply because they are called upon to do some little work in addition to their ordinary routine duties is a bad precedent. I would like to learn from the Controller whether the payments are in the shape of commissions, or in what way these officers are paid.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). On collections up to $3,000, 5 per cent is paid. That is less than any collector's fees I ever heard of. From $3,000 to $5,000, $150 per annum is paid. From $5,000 to $19,900, $200 per annum is paid. Over $10,000, $250 is paid. It appears to me that we are conducting that branch of the service very economically, and I have a great deal of difficulty trying to get along without making new appointments.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am pleased to see the reductions which are being made, and no doubt the Controller of Inland Revenue is doing the best he can. But, in my humble opinion, if the statute prevents civil servants doing this additional work, it ought to be changed. The commissions paid may be low, but after all, if a man is getting $1,200 a year for doing one work, and then is called on to collect $3,000 for the Iuland Revenue Department—and I presume his work consists chiefly in receiving money-$150 a year is just that much addition to his salary.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). He has really to do considerable work. He has to make all the entries for the bonding warehouse, and do a great deal of work beyond collecting the money.

To enable the department to supply methylated spirits to manufactories, the cost of which will be recouped by manufacturers to whom they are supplied; and to pay for rent, light, power, freight, salaries, &c..... $75,000

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Some years ago it was found that to allow methylated spirits to be manufactured outside was to give encouragement to a certain class of low whisky vendors who use it for bonding purposes, and the policy was adopted of the Government manufacturing these spirits The reason and selling them to the trade. for this item is as follows:-A year ago, when the Minister of Finance was preparing his Estimates, he adopted a change to which I was then, and am now, opposed. because it is not fair to the Estimates I have under preparation. Previous to last year, we asked for the sum of $5,000 merely to come and go upon in order to carry on work of manufacturing methylated its. We showed by our business respirits. port at the end of the year, a profit of some $30,000. The Minister of Finance adopted the new policy, not only with regard to this department, but other institutions, such as the manufacture of binder twine in the penitentiaries, and made us ask Parliament for what was required to carry on the business each year. Therefore, it is that last year the sum of $85,000 was charged against made went into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and did not appear to our credit in the report at all. I wish to point out that the addition of $75,000 to our expenditure is not really an expenditure for the purposes of the Inland Revenue Department, but is a sum which we ask Parliament to give us in order that we may give back. not only that amount, but $30,000 more.

Culling Timber..... $2,950

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. be glad to understand exactly what has been done in respect to this item, which previously amounted to $27.950. these various persons, who have been in the habit of receiving something like a pension from us, been wiped out altogether, or been transferred to some other depart-

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The Bill which stands in my name on the Order paper provides for the substituting of a system of voluntary inspection in the case of lumber so as to make it analogous to the system adopted in the inspection of staples of other kinds. The prime object in introducing that change was one of economy. There did exist a very great necessity for some change in this branch, because it was a non-paying branch. For some time, the expenditure had been some $10,000 to $15,-000 in excess of the revenue, and a great many people could not understand why the general tax-payers of the country should contribute for the payment of inspection fees in a service which belonged peculiarly to the buyers and sellers of lumber. That commended itself to me. My opinion is that in all matters of inspection, the voluntary system should be adopted; that is, if men wish to have anything inspected, they should pay for it, as they do now in the case of fish and wheat and other staples. when it became known that the Government contemplated a change, the trade made certain representations to the effect that the system which it was proposed to adopt would result in bringing back the old state of things which existed a great many years ago, when the present Act was introduced, when the inspectors were appointed. Difficulties of such a grave character arose between the buyers of square timber and the producers that, many years ago, the Cullers' Act was introduced, under which the cullers were independent of both these parties. was pointed out to the Government that while those who contended for the revision of the present system conceded that they could not ask that the deficit of revenue should be made up out of the public chest, nevertheless they were of opinion that the system might be retained with the reduction of the staff, while the trade could not possibly suffer; at all events, there would be no loss to the revenue. Of course, the chief object the Government had in view was to our expenditure, but the $30,000 profit we make both ends meet. But while Government wished to economize, they did wish to make everything out of the system. The whole subject was gone into very carefully to find out if some arrangement could not be made which would be reasonably satisfactory to all. The Government has changed its policy in regard to this branch. When I asked this $2,950 of the Finance that this Minister, it was intended should be put through the House this session, substituting the system I have spoken of for the one now in force. After this, on looking into the matter, it occurred to me and to the Government that it would meet the wishes of the trade, and, at the same time effect a saving of some $10,000 or $15,-000, and make both ends meet, by asking the House to grant an additional sum of $14,550.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does that come in? It is not before us, and we are to have no Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The object is a good one. If it takes money out of the public chest, it is only that it may be paid back. I do not see where the difficulty is. I will ask the committee to vote this sum, and will leave it to my hon. friend—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But how is to be done? We are to have no Supplementary Estimate, and you cannot use a Governor General's warrant for this purpose without utterly disregarding both the spirit and the letter of the statute.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Why cannot we have Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. McMULLEN. I commend the effort of the hon. gentleman to reduce the expenditure upon this branch. A return brought down last year in response to a motion that I made gives the expenditure of the cullers' offices at Quebec and Montreal for ten years as $265,000, and that for wages alone; while the amount collected in fees during the same period was $200,000. So, in addition to the fees received, the country had to pay out $65,000 to make up the bill for wages alone. For years we pressed upon the Finance Minister and this Government that reductions should be made in this branch. Every year the amount of money paid for the staff has been in excess of the revenue collected. The Government must have been aware of this, and yet not until the fact is publicly exposed is any effort made to effect a saving. Last year I drew the hon. Controller's attention personally to the discrepancy between the amount collected and the amount paid out.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That was for Three Rivers.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, for Quebec and Montreal.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not remember that.

Mr. Wood (Brockville).

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman may not remember it, but it is a fact. His reply to me was: What are you going to do with these men who have been employed a long time in the public service? I am glad to know that the reduction is to be made at last. But it should have been made long ago instead of waiting until the matter became so glaring that it could not possibly be further defended.

Mr. CHARLTON. I understand the hon. Controller of Inland Revenue to say that he proposes by a vote of $14,550 not yet in the Estimates to provide for this service which formerly cost $27,950. I see that in the present expenditure are included items of $6,000 for superannuated cullers, pay of cullers, $8,300; contingencies, $6,000; Montreal office, $900 and Quebec office, $6,750. How are the reductions to be effected so as to bring the expenditure within the $14,550 proposed? And why was not that $14,550 included in the Estimates with the $2,950?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman was not present when I made my previous explanation, so I will recapitulate briefly. The object, when the Bill was introduced, was to have the system of inspection voluntary. But this would not meet the objections which the Cullers' Act was originally passed to meet. The Government, after full consideration, and after consultation with those in the trade, concluded that we could retain the present system and yet greatly reduce the expenditure.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then, the details of these changes were not decided upon in time for the Estimates?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). No.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the pensions paid to superannuated cullers are suppressed?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). No.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that two of these cullers were superannuated up to the 30th December last year. Have there been any more superannuated since that time? What is the intention of the Government with regard to the rest?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The intention is to superannuate those whose services will not be required after the first of next month.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many of them will be put on the superannuation list in this way?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Six, at an average of $200 each. Their salaries while so engaged have been $700 per annum.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that one was superannuated last year at the age of 37. What is about the age of those he intends to place on the list?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I have not that information, as I did not know that a discussion would come up to-day with regard to cullers. I do not know the names exactly of those whom we shall superannuate, for we have not yet decided upon those whose services will be retained. However, on Monday I will supply the hon. gentleman with the information.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the Minister say whether the staff as well as the cullers are eligible to be superannuated? I see you have nine cullers at Quebec. How many of a staff have you in addition, and are they eligible to be superannuated?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The cullers do not contribute to the superannuation fund, but the staff does.

Weights and Measures, Gas and Electric Light Inspection..... $99,800

Mr. BOWERS. About the salaries of these officers who go around inspecting weights and measures, when they visit a place to inspect scales or to inspect weights and measures, do the parties owning the scales or the weights and measures have to pay them any fee for carrying around the standards? Does the party that has his weights and measures verified pay the inspector anything for carrying around the standards?

Yes, cartage fees. Mr. WOOD (Brockville).

Mr. BOWERS. If a scale is a little out of order and these officers make it right, are they supposed to get paid for that, besides verifying the weights?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). No weights and measures official is allowed himself to try the scales.

Mr. BOWERS. Suppose there is a platform scale for weighing hay or coal, and the officer finds, upon verifying it, that it is not just right, and he goes to work and makes the scale right, perhaps lowers the balance a little or raises it, has he a right to fees for that?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think so, yes.

Mr. CASEY. Does the inspector claim cartage fees from the person whose weights and measures are inspected ?-because I find that the Government pays the transport.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That is what the item is made out of.

Mr. CASEY. For instance, I see that the Government paid J. Egan, London, $257 for the cartage of weights. Now, does he charge extra fees to persons whose scales are inspected?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). He returns to the department the fees that he collects for that purpose. He collects fees averaging about 25 cents.

Mr. CASEY. In the Auditor General's Report, I see a charge for transport of | House resolve itself into committee on Bill weights. Is he paid twice for transport of weights, once by the department and once by the individual?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Certainly not. That is part of his return which he makes to the department.

Mr. McNEILL. I want to ask the Controller whether it is illegal to use a spring balance as a scale?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Yes.

May I ask why it is il-Mr. McNEILL. legal? Why is it that the public are prevented from using these scales? Is it not a fact that in the Post Office Department these scales are used? Speaking from my own view of the subject, I think it is a great grievance that people are not able to use a scale which is a perfectly good scale, and is a cheap one.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They do not remain good.

Mr. McNEILL. I suppose no scale remains good after a certain length of time. After a certain time every scale requires to be examined and adjusted, and as soon as these scales are shown to be untrustworthy, then they should be set aside. But as long as they are good, as long as they weigh properly, it seems to me a hardship that people should be deprived of the use of them. I would earnestly bring the matter to the attention of the department, and ask them to consider it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would say to the hon, gentleman that that matter has been brought to my attention. In matters so technical I rely altogether upon the judgment and experience of those who are well versed in those matters. Balances are liable to be influenced by temperature, they are liable to get out of gear to a certain ex-The experience of my predecessor and officers is, that where they are used for purposes of weighing they are liable to get out of gear very quickly.

Mr. McNEILL. It seems very strange that scales should be liable to get out of gear so quickly, especially when so much reliance is placed upon them in the post office.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). They are not generally used.

Mr. McNEILL. But they are frequently used. In the old country such scales are very frequently used.

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne) moved that the

(No. 78), respecting the South Shore Railway Company (Limited).

Mr. FLINT. I desire to offer a few observations on this Bill in order that when it comes to the committee, attention will have been called to several salient points as to what is asked by the promoters. The very large amount of public interest felt in the measure is my principal excuse for detaining the House a few moments while I call attention to some phases of this matter which have not yet been sufficiently presented to the attention of hon. members. I very much regret that a motion which I placed on the Order paper some time ago, in which I asked the Government to bring down the correspondence and papers on file with the Government in connection with the application for a subsidy for this road and with respect to subsequent matters, has not been acceded to promptly by the Government. The conversation which took place on that motion being presented to the House has given hon, gentlemen considerable insight into the matters which will form part of our discussion this evening. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, on that evening a large amount of matter foreign to the subject of the South Shore Railway was interjected into the debate by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), who called the attention of the House to important matters in connection with railway construction in his county. The hon. gentleman went into those matters at great length, I do not say at unnecessary length, because he felt them to be important in connection with matters in hand regarding railway undertakings in his own district. My hon, friend took up some of the time of the House, but I presume hon. gentlemen interested in railway construction in that portion of Nova Scotia considered the time was well spent. The South Shore Bill, to which some amendments were made by the Railway Committee, I need hardly say is not an original Act of incorporation. The company was originally incorporated by the legislature of Nova Scotia on 30th April, 1892. That Act constituted certain gentlemen a corporation for the purpose of building a railway from Yarmouth to Shelburne, in the county of Shelburne. Those gentlemen were E. Franklin Clements. Wm. V. Brown, Frederic Nichols, Charles F. Medbury, Albert M. Perrin, Harvey B. Doane, John F. McLarren, Henry I. D'Entremont, John McDonnell, T. Wishart Robertson. Thomas Robertson, Edgar M. Clements. The history of this company shows that those gentlemen subsequently sold out whatever interest they may have had in this work to other gentlemen, some of whose names will be mentioned in the course of my observations. But there is a matter to which I should like to call attention, that vince of Nova Scotia, and extend the powers conferred by it in several directions. One of these directions was that the road instead of ending at Shelburne, may be continued along the south coast of Nova Scotia to Halifax, with a branch to Lockeport and in other directions. It also asks very extraordinary powers, and they will appear to be very extraordinary when the true his-tory of the company is recited. It asks power for the company to build wharfs, warehouses, hotels, to construct steamship lines, and enter into most extensive business arrangements, involving almost every branch of commercial enterprise except that of keeping a retail grocery store. The original capital of this company was $100,000, with power to increase it to a certain amount upon the vote of the company. I will call the attention of the House to one particular proviso of the local Act incorporating this company, because it will throw some light on the position of the company seeking to have the charter amended, and it will enlighten the committee as to part of the true inwardness of the company's intentions. Clause 28 of the Act says:

The portion of the company's railway lying between the town of Yarmouth and the town of Barrington shall be begun and completed within four years after the passing of this Act, or reasonable progress towards the completion, satisfactory to the Governor in Council, shall be made within two years by the company, to ensure such completion; otherwise this Act shall cease and determine.

In other words, this company had to complete its road to Barrington, which is about forty-seven miles, within four years of the date of the charter, or it had to begin colnstruction within two years of the passage of the Act, and make reasonable progress towards construction, satisfactory to the Governor in Council. Now, what are the facts of the case in connection with that particular clause? The company not only did not begin to do any practical work on the road until about six months after the expiration of the two years. It is contended that the company was never properly organized, that the amount of capital stock quired was never paid into any bank, and that the company never got upon its feet in a legal and constitutional manner. But this fact is admitted on all hands, that the charter has lapsed if that proviso is held to mean what it says, that the road must be commenced two years after the date of the Act, and progress made satisfactory to the Governor in Council. For six months the two years after the expiration of the company had scarcely begun operations. The company as then constituted did begin operations about October, 1894. They entered upon the work with a great flourish of trumpets and the Yarmouth "Times." the Bill before the House does not mention the organ of the company, informed the good the name of any incorporator. It simply people of the western part of Nova Scotia asks the House to revive the charter of that the road was now in the hands of a 1892, which is a local charter of the pro- first-class commercial corporation, that contracts were made, and that it would be constructed at the rate of ten miles every thirty days, and be completed in a very short A large number of men were employed upon the road. A company was engaged to supply the plant and other things necessary to carry on its construction. It was not given by contract, but there was simply an arrangement made with a company for the hiring of the men and animals, and so on. They went on with the work from October until the middle of February, when the whole thing collapsed. Operations ceased entirely, and the labourers, many of them from the eastern part of the province were dismissed. The people living along the line could not get paid for the supplies furnished by them. We witnessed the extraordinary spectacle in the streets of one of our most thriving towns, of hundreds of men almost upon the verge of starvation crowding around the offices of the company demanding their wages and unable to obtain them. The clamour was so great that finally some of the supporters of the company raised sufficient money to pay these unhappy labourers at the rate of 33 cents on the dollar. They were told if they did not take that they would get nothing. They took it, and about 640 were dismissed. The merchants in the town who supplied goods to the amount of seven or eight thousand dollars each, and the farmers and fisher-men who supplied to the extent of from $300 to $1,000 each, were left without their money. Some were compromised with at the rate of 30 cents on the dollar, and others were not paid at all. Many of the engineers and foremen were unable to obtain their salaries and were compellel to sue the company in the courts. Judgments were entered against the company to the extent of $60,-000 or more, and the contractors who supplied the workingmen and the animals necessary to carry on the work also got judgments for a large amount. In addition to that the company collapsed in another direction. In fact, perhaps the collapse in this direction occurred just previous to the other collapse. Among the directors of the company whose names were heralded with a great deal of unction by the local organ of the company, were Mr. Frederick B. Farrar, of Boston, and Mr. Alexander, of New York. These were held out to the world as bankers of great means and almost unlimited wealth. You, Mr. Speaker, and almost every hon, gentlemen in the House, are familiar with the extravagant claims made for gentlemen (particularly those belonging to the United States) if they happen to have their names on a banking sign in New York or Boston. The word banker signifies unlimited resources to the uninitiated, and when a good-looking gentleman is pointed out as an eminent financier from New York who could build miles of railways without thinking anything of it, the unsophisticated mind is easily deceived. So the good people down there were deceived in this manner. Mr. Farrar, who is a very respectable gentleman indeed, turned out not to have the unlimited financial standing he was represented to have, and the same might be said of Mr. Alexander. Mr. Alexander was treasurer of the company, Mr. Farrar, vice-president, and a gentleman whose name will occur frequently through the debates, and who is quite well known in financial circles in New York, Mr. Tunis G. Bergen, was a member of the company. There is no indication from the papers produced that Mr. Bergen ever paid one dollar into the company of which he was president, or ever had one dollar stock in it. Mr. Farrar had, if his own affidavit is correct, one share, and Mr. Alexander had one share. Five hundred and three shares, a little over half, were placed in the hands of Mr. Alexander, as trustee, in order to retain the control of the stock in the hands of the company. The company borrowed the money of Messrs. Farrar and Alexander with which they started operations, and the public were grossly deceived by this appearance of wealth at the outset of operations. I will read the affidavit of Mr. Farrar, vice-president of the South Shore Railway Company, and which was taken in proceedings which he and Mr. Alexander initiated in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia in order to wind up this company. This affidavit will show more clearly than any of the papers yet produced the financial status of the company, the rotten condition of the company, which started to build 45 miles of railway and ignominiously failed in grading more than 11 or 13 miles. That is the company which now comes to this House and by this Bill asks the privilege of building 230 miles of railroad, and of establishing steamship lines, and great hotels, and other undertakings which would demand from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 capital. I will read the affidavit of Mr. Alexander, the treasurer of this company. These proceedings occurred about at the close of the transactions to which I have referred, and they revealed a state of affairs which demands that this House should pause before it gives its sanction to the reconstruction of a company which would give us a state of things ten times worse than before, if we again allowed it to deceive capitalists or the public with these bogus claims of unlimited wealth and ability to construct Here is the affidavit. the railroad.

IN THE SUPREME COURT.

I, Henry E. Alexander, of New York, in the state of New York, U.S.A., being sworn on oath, depose and say: that I am the treasurer of the South Shore Railway Company, Limited, of Nova Scotia, now in process of construction;

That the capital stock of said company is $100,000, each share of the par value of $100;

That there have been issued, to the best of my belief. 514 shares of said stock of the par value of $51,400;

That of the said 514 shares, I, as trustee, own 503 shares, the certificates of which stand in the name of G. B. Bard, trustee, which certificate was duly assigned and transferred to me, on its back, on 1st September, 1894. Of the remaining cleven, one share is owned by each of the following persons:—Jacob Bingay, Yarmouth, N.S.; E. K. Spinney, Yarmouth, N.S.; F. B. Bard, Brooklyn, N.Y.; Tunis G. Bergen, Brooklyn, New York; Frederick A. Farrar, Boston, Mass; W. C. Clarke, Wakefield; H. E. Alexander, New York; C. S. Keene, Newton, Mass.; W. L. Newcombe, Brooklyn, N.Y.

I am ignorant as to who own the remaining

I am ignorant as to who own the remaining two shares.

I am informed and believe, that 25 per cent of them, and no more paid in;

That said railway company owes debts amounting to more than $100,000, which it is unable to

That it has no money in its treasury and no assets excepting its capital stock, unissued bonds, franchise and roadbed so far as graded and ironed, and such interest as it may have in the grant or subsidy from the Dominion Government, to which it will not become entitled until the rails are laid on 10 miles of its roadbed, no rails being owned by the company at the present time; and said company is unable to pay its debts in full, and is insolvent, and is not able, and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, said company and its officers do not intend, to proceed further with the undertaking of constructing the said railroad under existing conditions.

And I further depose and say, that within the past six months I have advanced to said railroad in money the sum of $56,500, which sum has been in no part repaid, and said railway company owes me that amount with interest to date; and I desire and request to become a party plaintiff to the proceedings instituted in the Supreme Court at Halifax by Frederick A. Farrar, or, on his behalf, one of the stockholders of said company, which proceedings have been instituted for the purpose of winding up the affairs of said company in accordance with the provisions of the laws of Nova Scotia.

(Signed) HENRY E. ALEXANDER.

This affidavit has the usual certificate, and is dated the 20th of March, 1895.

Mr. BORDEN. Was that after the date at which application was made to this House for the Bill which is now before us.

Mr. FLINT. That was after the date of the notice given in the "Gazette" and other journals of the application to this House for the charter which we are discussing. Now, the company through its promoter, the hon. gentleman whose name is on the Bill, has denied that it is insolvent. And yet I hold here the affidavit of the treasurer of the company that it is insolvent and unable to pay its liabilities, in addition to the vast quantity of other evidence that is before the House. Now, let us glance over the affidavit of the vice-president of the company, and see what he says of the financial condition of a company which has undertaken to construct 230 miles of railway; to establish a line of steamships, to build wharfs and hotels, and to carry on operations demanding the expenditure of many millions of capital. Seeing that no names are given in this charter, it is, so far as appears on the surface, a purely speculative concern. Certain persons whose names are unknown, and whose financial qualifications are unknown, are coming here and asking the sanction of this House to operations demanding an enormous amount of capital, in the face of a failure the most scandalous, the most iniquitous and the most distressing that has occurred in almost any portion of the Dominion, which has carried untold miseries into a great many homes in the western part of Nova Scotia. Mr. Farrar, the vicethe par value of said shares, to wit, something president of the company, makes this over $12,500, has been paid to the company upon affidavit: affidavit:

4292

IN THE SUPREME COURT.

I, Frederick A. Farrar, of Boston, in the county of Suffolk, make oath and say as follows : -

1st. I am the Frederick A. Farrar above named and named in the petition, copy of which is exhibit "A" to this affidavit:

That is, the petition asking that the company be placed in liquidation.

2nd. That W. B. Olmanditchie, of Halifax, in the county of Halifax, N.S., solicitor, was duly authorized as my solicitor and agent to sign my name to said petition, and to present said petition to the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia or a judge thereof

2rd. That such of the statements in said petition as relate to my own acts and deeds are true. and such of said statements as relate to the acts and deeds of any other persons I believe to be true; and the ground of my belief as to matters contained in said petition which are not herein sworn to, is information to that effect received from reliable persons, which I truly believe to be irue;

4th. That the said the South Shore Railway Company, Limited, was incorporated on the 30th day of April, A.D. 1892, by Act of the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia, being chapter 130 of the Acts of the said legislature of the province of Nova Scotia, made and passed in the year 1892;

5th. That I am a shareholder of said company, and hold one share therein of the par value of $100, upon which I am informed and believe that 25 per cent only is paid up, and that I am a contributor of said company and a person liable to contribute to the assets of said company, under the Companies Winding Up Act, in the event of the same being wound up, as owner of said share;

This is the vice-president of the company, and he is informed and believes that 25 per cent of his one share is paid up. This is one of the great Boston millionaires whose names have been heralded to deceive the poor people of the western part of Nova Scotia, the constituents of the hon. member for Shelburne, who are to-day suffering for want of railway communication, owing to obstacles which have been placed in the way of railway construction by a gang of financial shysters:

6th. That I am, and have been, a director and vice-president of said company from August, 1894, to the present time, and have a fairly intimate knowledge of the affairs of said company and its financial condition;

'7th. That the capital stock of said company is $100,000, divided into shares of $100 each; that I am informed and believe, that $51,400 only of said capital stock is subscribed, and that only 25 per cent thereof, or less than $13,000 thereof is paid in:

paid in;

That is, the capital with which they were supposed to commence work.

8th. That, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the names of the stockholders of said company other than myself, with the number of shares held by each and the amount paid in thereon, are as follows:—Jacob Bingay, Yarmouth, N.S., 1 share; E. K. Spinney, Yarmouth, N.S., 1 share; F. B. Bard, Brooklyn, N.Y., 1 share; Tunis G. Bergen, Brooklyn, N.Y., 1 share; H. E. Alexander, New York, 1 share; W. C. Clarke, Wakefield, R.I., 1 share; C. S. Keene, Newton, Mass., 1 share; W. L. Newcombe, Brooklyn, New York, 1 share; H. E. Alexander (trustee), New York, 503 shares, in one or more certificates duly assigned and transferred to him upon the back thereof as trustee for F. B. Bard, trustee, in whose name the certificate stands;

9th. As the record books of the company are kept at Yarmouth, I am unable to state with certainty exactly when the company was organized.

I may say this is a point now in the courts of Nova Scotia for elucidation. One of the points taken by the hon. member for Queen's, N.S., (Mr. Forbes) in the motion which he will place on the Order paper, and which, when this Bill reaches committee, he will move as an amendment, in order that the rights of litigants may be protected:

The company, for the purpose of carrying out the undertaking for which it is chartered, has secured land and locations, the extent of which I am unable to state with certainty, but I am informed and believe, has 15 or 16 miles of its location substantially graded for the purpose of its railroad;

10th. That the property and assets of the company consist of its land and locations, franchise, its capital stock and bonds unissued and its right, whatever it may be, to a subsidy from the Government, which, I understand, is to be paid when the construction reaches a certain stage which it has not yet reached, and probably some other assets of which I have no definite knowledge.

assets of which I have no definite knowledge;

11th. To the best of my knowledge and belief, the funds of the company have been expended in the expenses incident to its organization, in acquiring of land and locations, in the cost of grading 15 or 16 miles of its location, and, generally, in the expenses of acquiring and constructing its roadbed. As the books and accounts of the company are chiefly kept at Yarmouth, I am unable to state with certainty the names of all the creditors of said company or the amounts due to them respectively, but I am informed and believe that said company is indebted to Edgar K. Spinney, of Yarmouth, for supplies furnished, $7,000, more or less; to the firm of Parker, Eakins & Co., of Yarmouth, for supplies furnished, $7,000, more or less;

I believe that Mr. Spinney has obtained judgment in the Supreme Court for his claim, and that the firm of Parker, Eakins & Co. has also obtained judgment in the Supreme Court, for the amount due them, which is something under $8,000.

—to the firm of Messrs. Strong & Lee, contractors, or to Strong, of said firm—I am unable to state the amount of said indebtedness of the company to him, but I believe it to be more than half the amount claimed in his suit; to Jacob Bingay, for money said to have been advanced by him, to what extent I cannot say with certainty, but I do not think for more than $2,000; to Henry E. Alexander, of New York, in a large amount, alleged by him to be $56,500, and to the firm of Burdett, Farrar & Co., of Boston, of which I am a member, the sum of $30,436.32, subject to additions on interest account.

Now we really find where the bulk of the money came from to make the show of work which deluded the unfortunate creditors of the company; $30,000 was provided by the banking firm of which Mr. C. Farrar was a member, and about $60,000 was provided on the credit of Mr. Alexander, making nearly $90,000 loaned to the company by these two gentlemen, or through their influence. Mr. Farrar and Mr. Alexander both became insolvent in consequence of the advances they made to this insolvent concern, and the whole thing became insolvent together. Mr. Alexander goes on to say:

But that at the present time the said company is unable to pay its debts, and, in my judgment, and as I verily believe, it is impossible for said company at the present time to carry on the undertaking for which it is incorporated; that the grounds for my belief, as stated in this paragraph, are stated in the next succeeding para-

13th. That the grounds for my belief and opinion, stated in the next preceding clause, are, as I am informed and believe: (a) the company owes considerably more than $100,000; (b) that it has no available funds with which to pay its indebtedness; (c) no property, to the best of my knowledge and belief, to apply thereon, except its real estate locations and franchises, which are of uncertain value, and its unissued bonds and stocks, for which, at the present time and under present conditions, there is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, no market and no market value, and (d) its right or interest, whatever it may be, to the subsidy granted, or to be granted, by the Dominion Government, which is uncertain and contingent, inasmuch as the road has not reached that stage of construction which, I am informed and believe, is a condition necessary to said subsidy; (e) that I am informed and believe, that suits have been brought against said company by Edgar K. Spinney, Parker, Eakins & Co. and Munro, Strong & Lee, or some member of said firm, and by Jacob Bingay, seeking to recover judgment against it upon their claims hereinbefore stated;

14th. That no portion of said company's railway has been actually completed, and, as I am informed and believe, not more than 15 or 16 miles of its location substantially graded; that no rails have been laid upon its location, and none are owned by the company.

15th. That no resolution of the said company has been passed to the effect that it has been proved to the satisfaction of the company that the wind up the same, so far as I am aware;

16th. That, in my judgment and as I verily believe, by reason of the fact hereinbefore stated, the said company cannot, under present conditions and in the international states. tions and in the interest of all the contributors, as well as of all other persons interested, it is advisable and is just and equitable, that said company should be wound up;

17th. That I have no object in making application for the winding up of said company other than a desire that the assets of the said company should be applied to the payment of its liabilities, and the business of the said company, which cannot be carried on under existing conditions at a profit, stopped.

Sworn, &c., before

SAMUEL JENNISON, Commissioner for Nova Scotia

15th March, 1895.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think you all agree with me that a body of men asking Parliament for the privileges asked for by this Bill, never came before this Parliament with such a record under their own handa record of debt and disaster. They come here asking, not that they be revived for the purpose of carrying out the original work for which they were chartered by the provincial legislature, but for extending their work fully two or three times more. Had they asked Parliament to place their company under the jurisdiction of the Dominion, had they come here with a clean financial record, showing that they had met their obligations honourably, showing that they were possessed of ability to carry out their contract with this Government-a contract which may be alluded to later in the debate, a contract made as late as the 28th February, after the company was notoriously unable to carry on its work—had they come here with a colour of financial credit they might have had some face to ask this Parliament to extend its jurisdiction over them. But they were not content with that. The real reason underlying this application is that litigation was pending in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, at the suit of the province, by its Attorney General, to declare the original charter of the company void, to declare its organization improper, and to prevent the company continuing the career which it had continued up to that date. The real object of this application here is to remove the case from the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, where it ought to be settled, and where these accounts can be settled, and involve the province of Nova Scotia in heavy costs for its temerity in undertaking to claim that the charter of this company is void. I believe that this Parliament will pause long before it undertakes to exercise its power and jurisdiction and remove this case, in which a province is the plaintiff, from the jurisdiction of the courts of that province. This is a point which should be pressed earn-company cannot, by reason of its liabilities, con- estly upon the attention of hon. memtinue its business, and that it is advisable to bers, whether Parliament should exercise its power to commit an outrage of that kind. Certainly, Nova Scotia has some rights, and among these is the right that this Parliament should hold its hand from interfering with the courts of that province. The reason why the province took this action was this: There is another railway being constructed in Nova Scotia over the same line of country as that over which the promoters of this Bill desire to construct their road. That other company is meeting all its obligations, and has continually worked, with the exception of two winter months, when it ceased operations on account of the inclemency of the weather, steadfastly in constructing the road. It is working today. Contracts have been undertaken for the bridges with an eminent firm in Ontario, in the city represented by my hon. friend the member for Peterboro' The other road is being con-Stevenson). structed with the consent and assistance of the local authorities along the line. The town of Yarmouth has given the right of way within the limits of the town. The municipality of Yarmouth has given the right of way, Argyle, Barrington, and Shelburge have given the right of way as for an burne have given the right of way as far as the railway has gone. The company is building the line in good faith, and meeting its obligations. The company under consideration proposes to carry its line ing its obligations. through the suburban parts of Yarmouth, and the people there find their lawns, gardens, and fields ploughed up by the contractor's workmen. They ask themselves if this company has the right to run a road through their lands. Consulting authorities they were informed, rightly or wrongly, it is not for me to say, that the company's charten had experient and that they had no charter had expired, and that they had no right to carry their line through the town of Yarmouth and a large portion of the municipality of Yarmouth and Argyle. And these owners, many of whom have not been paid for the land taken from them, have appealed to the Attorney General, and, later, after a long and patient hearing by the previncial authorities, have appealed to the courts to find if they must submit to outrage at the hands of a moribund and insolvent railway. All that the people of Yarmouth ask is that the matter be left to the courts, and that this effort to remove the question from the jurisdiction of the courts by the side wind of appeal to this House be not allowed to succeed. This is admitted to be an insolvent concern. It has judgments entered against it by almost every one who supplied it with the funds by which the work, so far as it has gone, has been carried on. The company has not even kept faith with the railway navvies who did the hard work in the inclement months of December, January and February, but sent these men adrift, to find means of subsistence where they could. Sir, I believe the spectacle has scarcely ever before been presented in this country of men responsible for such a situation, having the courage to come before the representatives of the people with such an impudent demand as this, to be placed upon their feet by this Parliament to go forth as they did before, to rob and swindle the people. peculiar feature of the case which, no doubt, will receive considerable attention, is the connection of my hon. friend from Shelburne (Mr. White) with these various railway undertakings. There is a company Company. called the Southern Railway chartered to build a railway from Shelburne to Halifax. That company was chartered, I believe, largely through the influence of the hon, member for Shelburne. hon, gentleman advocated the claims of the company to encouragement at the hands of the Government of Canada, and the Government has made a contract with the railway company for the building of this road from Shelburne to Halifax. The application for the subsidy, I believe, was made by the hon. gentleman. And yet the hon, member for Shelburne appears as the promoter of this Bill to enable the South Shore Railway Company to construct a road over almost identically the same country, and thus destroy the opportunity of building the railway, aid for Is not this a most which he had secured. extraordinary situation for a gentleman to appear in? Railways are not so common in this country, these works are not so easily built that we can afford to have two railways building lines over the same country-

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman; but it is nine o'clock, and I suppose the termination of the hour to be devoted to the consideration of Private Bills. And as my hon. friend (Mr. Flint) seems inclined to take up a good deal of time on this, and as there are eight or ten private Bills to follow, if the intention is to take up the hour for Private Bills every day with this debate, the House will be face to face with a difficulty for which it must find a solution.

Mr. CASEY. Adjourn the debate on this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. That will not be done.

Mr. FLINT. I do not wish to take up the time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes more is allowed for the consideration of Private Bills.

Mr. FLINT. I do not wish to take up time, but this is a very important matter to my constituents. I was endeavouring to show the disastrous consequences to the people of the South Shore that must follow the encouragement of rival claims of this kind by this Parliament. We all know the anxiety the people in various parts of the Dominion have shown to secure railway communication. I suppose there is no subject in which the people between Yarmouth and Halifax around the south shore are so deeply interested, or any upon which they are so united as in the desire for railway construction. Their means have been expended, through proper channels, in encouraging railway construction all over the country. The local legislature has assisted railway construction in all other parts of the pro-vince. It has become a by-word there so that certain counties are called non-railway counties. The local government has always expressed the greatest anxiety, apart from all political considerations, to assist with any means at their command, the constructhese railways in The Dominion Government has done the same, and the resources of the people of that part of the country have been expended through the Dominion treasury, to which they contribute as largely, if not more largely, than any equal number of people in any portion of the Dominion. means have been expended in assisting the Dominion, and they ask themselves if they, too, are not to share in those advantages. They, too, have looked with anxiety to the operations carried on by the promoters of these various roads, and they have felt that success was almost within their reach. They see the Coast Railway, now a standard gauge road, paying all its obligations, its lines surveyed to Shelburne, its roadbed almost ready for the rails over 20 miles of its length, its iron bridges ordered for the two large rivers, the Tusket and Salmon; they see that this road will have trains running, if they are not interrupted, before the snow flies this winter; they see the promoters of the Southern Railway Company actively engaged in securing the necessary capital, they see the work going on in the county of Shelburne, and they ask themselves if, after all, another and rival undertaking is to be chartered by this Parliament to come into the field to interfere with the credit of the men at the back of the Coast Railway, in order to be ahead of them in their application to this Government and other localities for public assistance. They realize that if this Parliament places a rival in the field, their chances of securing a speedy railway communication. a communication which they deserve, and which they will certainly have if they are not interfered with, will be very materially injured if this Bill were allowed to pass. Now, the hon, member for Shelburne appears again in a railway role in connection with the Coast Railway Company. He it was who was the original solicitor of the Coast Railway Company, he it was who the charter enacted by drafted legislature of Nova Scotia, he it was who agreed with the promoters of that road that if, after 12 months delay, the South Shore people did not start their road, if the people were ever to secure railway communication, then was the time. And so they took up the idea of a narrow gauge road. I will not occupy your time by going over the history of the arguments as between the advocates of the narrow and the broad gauge roads, but the narrow gauge was advocated by the hon, member for Shelburne and by the leading men of his county, and the county of Yarmouth, simply as the best thing they could get under the circumstances. The promoters of the standard gauge had failed to come to time, and so my hon. friend, as it was his right to do, supported before this Government the idea of a narrow gauge road. Here is a letter to the late Premier, written by the hon. gentleman on the 2nd March, 1893:

Adverting to the personal application recently made to you by Mr. Leonard Atwood, of Philadelphia, for a subsidy of fifteen hundred per mile for a line of narrow-gauge railway, 91 miles, from Yarmouth to Lockeport, in the county of Shelburne, I beg leave to recommend this application to your most favourable consideration.

The contemplated road will pass through aimost a continuous settlement, connect with the Western Counties Railway, now happily joined with the railway system of the province by the completion of the missing link, and at last, after the people of the county of Shelburne have agitated for some years, they will be afforded the advantage of railway facilities for travel and traffic.

A careful survey has been made of the contemplated line by the provincial engineer of Nova Scotia, who has given the proposed system his unqualified endorsement as suitable for this section of the country, and the councils of the several municipalities through which the road will run, after having fully inspected the working of similar lines in the United States, have unanimously agreed to assess the ratepayers for land damages and right of way.

Mr. Atwood and other gentlemen associated with him have taken the necessary steps to obtain a provincial Act of incorporation, and desire . to commence work as soon as the spring opens; and, considering the utter want of railway facilities in the district and the necessity for the immediate encouragement of this work, I trust this application will receive your prompt and favourable consideration, and that, in case no railway subsidies are granted at this session, some assurance will be given that the road, if proceeded with, will be subsidized next year.

This letter was dated nearly a year after the Coast Railway had got their charter. The late Premier replied on the 6th March, 1893, in these terms:

My dear Mr. White,-I have received your favour, confirming your verbal application for a subsidy for a line of railway between Yarmouth and Lockeport. I shall submit your application to the Minister of Railways without delay, and request for it as favourable consideration as possible.

Now, Sir, the hon, gentleman, in common with everybody, supported the idea of a narrow gauge road, which was subsequently so much abused by him and his friends. No one favoured the narrow gauge road in the abstract as the best possible road, but they favoured it as the best possible road But since the under the circumstances. South Shore road came into the field and insisted that only a standard gauge road should be built, in order to meet the strong expression of public opinion from the hon. gentleman who abandoned the narrow gauge road at that time, and in order to meet the objections that were made from many quarters, the promoters of that road induced. the capitalists who were behind them to increase the amount of their assistance, and, at the last session of the provincial legislature, they obtained permission to construct a standard gauge road. They went to the legislature of Nova Scotia and got an amendment to their charter, permitting them to change the narrow gauge to a standard gauge, and they subsequently made an arrangement with the Government of Nova Scotia to alter their contract in order to secure the subsidy of the local legislature to a standard gauge road. The Coast Railway is now a standard gauge road, subsidized by the local legislature of Nova Scotia, given a free right of way by the town of Yarmouth and all the municipalities for its lines, it is in the hands of capitalists who are meeting all their obligations, abundantly able to complete their work, as demonstrated by the fact that they have filed satisfactory bonds of eminent bankers with the Government of Nova Scotia for the sum of nearly $400,000, and have contracted to build the road to Lockeport within a given time. Sir, no company has ever given stronger assurances of its determination to carry out its work than has the Coast Railway Company. Yet in face of this fact, my hon. friend is urging upon this Parliament to charter a company to build over the same territory another standard gauge road. Can it be conceived that Parliament would be so unjust to men who are carrying out their work in good faith, who are under heavy bonds to the provincial government, as to charter a rival road in that sparsely-settled country, the plans of the two roads being almost parallel, as was shown in the Railway Committee room within the past two weeks, where it was shown that the line of the South Shore Railway crosses the line of the Coast Railway in four places, and that for many they ran side by side. miles here I can appeal to every hon, member not to support such a monstrous proposition. But if hon, gentlemen consent to support such a proposition, I trust they will so guard and check the operation of those financiers that no injury will be done to any interest in the western part of Nova Scotia, that they will protect the province and the litigants before the Supreme Court in the action before that court, that they will compel this company to have sufficient capital to carry out their undertaking, that they will insist on there being in the charter, clauses which will ensure payment by the members of the new company or those who intend to undertake the construction of this road for the rights of those parties who have already been financially interested, that they will admit that the 66% per cent of the obligations which remained unpaid as liabilities on the road shall be paid by the new promoters, that the bills for supplies furnished by farmers and tradesmen and also amounts due to labourers shall be paid.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for private bills has expired.

Weights and Measures, Gas and Electric Light Inspection...... $99,800

Mr. CASEY. In regard to the inspection of electric light, how long has this been in force, and is it being successfully carried

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The Acts of last session with respect to the inspection of electric light, as well as regards the establishment of electric units, came into force generally throughout the country on 1st July last, by proclamation. The Acts have been carried out by the officers of the department in connection with the inspection of gas. and it is intended that the inspection of the department as regards electric light and gas shall be worked together. It is too soon to see exactly what the effect will be. time between the passage of the Act and that when it went into force was occupied in instructing the officers and inspectors in their duty.

Mr. CASEY. Does the Act take cognizance of electricity used for other purposes than lighting?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). No.

Mr. CASEY. It is important that the Act should be made to apply to the measurement of electrical power as well as that for electric lighting.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The meters can be worked as effectively as gas meters, and electricity can be accurately measured.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the Controller will do well not to make this Act too expensive in the case of the smaller companies. Electricity is being used for a great many purposes, and I have had a good many complaints made as to the excessive charges levied by inspectors. The amounts levied on small companies seem to be altogether out of proportion to those levied on the larger companies in cities. Controller would do well to be rather cautious about requiring a minute system of this applies both as regards electricity and gas, more particularly as regards electric light. The electric system is in its in-fancy, and is liable to be introduced for a variety of purposes, but if suddenly young companies are burdened with unnecessary expenses for inspectors, and I think such officials are liable to magnify their office, progress will be retarded. The hon, gentleman is aware that in a good many cases these companies pay very small dividends, or no dividends at all, and while there should be inspection, it is not desirable that the companies should be loaded down with inspection fees.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). In regard to the inspection of gas, that system has been in operation for many years, and it is now carried on under the same methods. I dare say in some cases where the operations of the gas companies are limited, they may complain of the fees; the public, on the other hand, are very much interested in having the quality of gas kept up to the requirements of the law. The operation of the electric light inspection Act is tentative, and as the use of electricity is still in its infancy, the department is exercising great caution in applying the inspection system.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the hon, gentleman to say that as regards the inspection of electric lighting, he will endeavour to apply it at present chiefly to the large centres?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Yes; that is what we have done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be the more sensible course, because it is not desirable that in a comparatively new enterprise which is likely to be extended in many ways, it should be burdened with heavy inspection fees.

Mr. RIDER. When electricity is furnished by a company by the horse-power, is there any means of ascertaining if they supply the proper quantity? Horse-power represents a certain mechanical force. It is not a certain voltage or amperage of electric force. It seems to me it should be tested in some practical mechanical way rather than by voltage of electric current. Has the Controller considered the matter?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It has been very carefully considered and the operation of the Act has worked satisfactorily, and I have no doubt will work satisfactorily. I am assured by electricians and those learned in subject, that the whole subject of measurement in every form can be correctly ascertained.

Mr. RIDER. The hon. gentleman will see that there is quite a difference between the inspection of electricity for lighting pur-poses and for power. If electricity is sold by the horse-power, I fail to see how it can be inspected under the same system as if inspection outside of the chief cities, and sold for lighting. The determining of the horse-power supply must be quite different from the inspection of the quality of electricity for lighting purposes.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If you are speaking of electricity for other purposes than lighting it does not come under the operation of the Act.

Mr. CASEY. My hon, friend will see that electricity, whether supplied for lighting or for motor power, is measured by units of volume and by units of intensity. These units are used in measuring electricty for lighting purposes or for any other purpose. In the absence of any system of inspection, electricity has been sold hitherto by the horse-power, and the point I wish to make is, that that is a very unsatisfactory way of selling it. An electric company says: We will supply you with so many horse-power, and the user pays for that, but there is no means of ascertaining whether he gets the power that he pays for. What I urge is that meters should be put in to measure electricity sold for motor purposes, in the same way as in the case of electricity used for lighting, so that a man may know how much he gets and how much he has to pay for. From what I know of electricity I am prepared to bear out the Controller's assertion that it can be measured very accurately indeed. There should be a way of determining the quantity of electricity delivered. application of that method should be enforced as between buyer and seller, and when electricity is sold for motor power, the meter should be inspected by Government in the same way as gas meters. The use of electricity for motor power is growing, and I believe it would grow much faster if there were some satisfactory way of showing consumers that they got value for their money.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the Controller some changes which I think ought to be made in the Weights and Measures Act. The present Act was passed a good many years ago, and I find by it that vegetables; for instance, potatoes, turnips, carrots, parsnips, onions and beets are set down at 60 pounds to the bushel. I do not know by what means it was ascertained that this was the proper weight. From tests that have been made-I think by the department—or at any rate by friends of mine, I find that potatoes weigh 54 pounds, turnips about 52 pounds, and carrots, parsnips and beets about 48 pounds, and onions about 46 pounds to the bushel. This Act also provides that these articles must be sold by weight unless a special bargain is made to sell them by measure. I think that is unfair to the producer. If he sells a bushel by measure he is entitled to be paid for a bushel. I know of a case in which a man sold 18 bushels of onions, which he measured and delivered; and the man who bought them weighed them, and the result was that the producer got paid for only 11½ bushels. This provision specially affects the section of country from which I come, because the farmers there go more largely into the raising of vegetables than they used to do, and they are anxious that the bushel by weight and the bushel by measure should be made to agree, or that the Government should abandon the bushel by measure altogether and have everything sold by weight. I would like the hon. Controller during the recess to prepare a measure for next session of Parliament to meet this difficulty, so that when a farmer sells vegetables he would not be obliged to give five pecks to the bushel.

Mr. RIDER. So far as my experience goes, vegetables are sold largely by weight, and the price is based on the weight.

Mr. WILSON. I would ask the hon. gentleman if it is not customary in his section of the country to sell potatoes by the bag?

Mr. RIDER. I know that is the rule in Mentreal, but they count on 90 pounds to the bag, or a bushel and a half, and the price is based on the weight. Very often we find that the weight varies according to the quality of the article; the poorer the article, the lighter it will be. Therefore the safest and fairest way, and the way generally adopted, is to sell by weight.

Mr. WILSON. That is what I ask the Government to provide for, so that that will be the law. I quite understand that at certain periods of the year certain vegetables weigh more than at other times, but that does not help us under the present law, because a man is obliged to sell by weight if the purchaser sees fit to require it. In that way a sharp dealer can easily get an advantage over a producer who is not sharp. He may buy three or four hundred bushels of vegetables; nothing is said about whether he is buying by weight or measure, and when they are delivered the dealer, understanding his business, insists on weighing them, whereas the producer expected he was going to get so much per bushel by measure.

Mr. RIDER. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that a bushel of potatoes will not weigh 60 pounds?

Mr. WILSON. I mean to say that in winter time, or after they have been dug a while, they will shrink in weight.

Mr. RIDER. That depends on the quality and the size. Potatoes of good size, rounded measure, will weigh 60 pounds to the bushel. Oats are 34 pounds to the bushel. In the province of Quebec they are sold on the basis of 32 pounds to the bushel, and the price is for 32 pounds. But when we buy oats in Ontario, we expect to get 34 pounds, and the price is fixed accordingly. So that I do not see any objection to selling by weight.

Mr. RIDER.

Mr. WILSON. I do not object to selling by weight, but I wish that to be done unlformly. What I do object to is that when a man sells by the bushel he is only paid for three-fourths of the quantity.

Mr. RIDER. I hope the Controller will bear in mind that it is very inconvenient to have changes made in standard weights of staple articles. When the trade are accustomed to certain standards, it causes a great deal of disturbance to have them changed.

Mr. WILSON. I fail to see how it will disturb trade or anything else to provide that everything shall be sold by weight, and not at all by measure.

Mr. McMILLAN. As a farmer I am perfectly satisfied with the present system. I am convinced that farmers, as a rule, are better satisfied to sell by weight than by measure. For instance, our oats are sold as 34 pounds to the bushel, but sometimes they go 36 pounds to the bushel. The same is the case with potatoes. If they are grown in good strong soil they will go 60 pounds to the bushel; while if they are grown in black muck or in sandy soil they will weigh less. The present system of selling by weight is understood by the farmers, and is generally acted upon.

Mr. CASEY. I think the most solid amendment to the Weights and Measures Act in this respect would be to provide that these articles should be sold entirely by weight. About twenty years ago we did pass an Act providing for selling by weight; and that no particular weight could be called for in case anything were sold by the bushel. A bushel was only to be a bushel by measure. and not to be any particular weight, and I think that is the right way to have things sold. I do not think it is rational at all to provide that when we sell a bushel, it should mean any particular weight. The weight of grain varies on two adjoining farms, and if a man sells at a price per bushel, and a bushel is taken to weigh a certain number of pounds, the purchaser may be getting a superior class of grain at the same price as ordinary grain. I think the word bushel should either be left out of contracts altogether, or be taken to mean a bushel measure. On the London market in Ontario, the custom ever since the time I speak of has been to sell grain by the cental, 100 pounds, and that is a great convenience to everybody. I think the attempt to keep up a constant relation between the bushel measure and the bushel weight is as absurd as to try to keep up a constant relation between the value of a certain weight of gold and that of certain weight of silver.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I quite appreciate all that has been said, and I think I have represented almost everything that has been advanced here to-night to my the weight.

hon, friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson). The whole question, if there is a question, at all worthy of consideration is whether the custom of purchasing by the bushel ought to be abolished, and the custom of purchasing weight established. I thoroughly appreciate the advice tendered by hon, gentleman, that changes in of this character should not be hastily made, because they do lead to disturbances in trade which is sometimes fraught with a good deal No doubt the weight of a of mischief. bushel of vegetables depends, first, on the season of the year when weighed, because when taken out of the ground they weigh more than they will some months following; and secondly, on the size of the vegetable itself. I promise, however, that during the recess I shall communicate with the boards of trade throughout the country on this subject. I have already communicated with the boards of trade of Montreal and this city, and they say that no complaints have been made in the direction pointed out by the hon. member for Lennox.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is this difficulty, that the weight has been fixed, in former times with reference to the Winchester bushel, and the Imperial bushel was larger.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville.) This was stated in the Act itself, which was passed some twenty years ago. It is true that the weights of these different articles mentioned in the Act do not bear out the actual measurement of the bushel. For instance, in the Act, potatoes, turnips, beets, parsnips, carrots and onions are supposed to weigh 60 pounds to the bushel, but it is shown by actual measurement that potatoes weigh 524 pounds to the bushed, and that weight varies according to the time when they are taken out of the ground. Turnips, 46½ pounds to the bushel, subject to the same qualification; potatoes, 421/2 pounds, carrots, 4514, parsnips 331/2 pounds, and onions, 45 pounds. My hon, friend thinks they should all weigh 50 pounds to the bushel. I do not think there would be any great harm done to make it 50 pounds in the case of onions alone; but to alter the whole Act, with the information we have at present, would be fraught with some trouble. I do not know why 60 pounds—unless by analogy to the Winchester bushel-was adopted, but it appears that it was intended make 60 pounds the standard for a bushel measure. As regards what the hon. member for Stanstead said about oats weighing more than they were actually purchased for, I may say that in the case of Manitoba No. 1 hard wheat, there was not a bushel grown last year that did not grow nearer 64 pounds, yet it was purchased at the rate of 60 pounds to the bushel.

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). It was sold by the weight.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I understand that grains generally are sold by the weight, but my hon. friend will find that the custom of trade differs in different localities. I can only say that I shall communicate further with the boards of trade and see what I can do next session in the interests of the trade.

Mr. CASEY. My point is, that you should get rid of the term "bushel" altogether. In the case of vegetables, it is extremely absurd to retain the bushel measure. They should be sold by the weight, but I do not think there should be anything to prevent their sale by the bag. In the latter case, the buyer knows the size of the bag and takes his chances; and if he wants to have them weighed, let him buy them by the pound.

Mr. FOSTER. This discussion is very interesting but we are not now proposing any change in the law, and we are not making any progress with the Estimates.

Mr. CASEY. I hope the hon. Minister will not suppose that, on this occasion. I have been trying to take up the time. I simply have been making what I thought were useful suggestions to the Controller, and the Controller seems to think them interesting.

Mr. McMULLEN. In connection with the inspection of weights and measures. I would recommend the Controller to reconsider that whole system. There are country districts where the weights and measures are never inspected. If there is a law compelling inspection, it ought to be put in force. If not, such a law should be passed. I see that the revenue from the inspection of weights and measures is $38,000 and the expenditure $56,000. If there is anything that would be free, in order to secure thorough inspection, it should be the inspection of weights and measures. The seller is interested this well as as the buyer, and it absolutely necessary that correct weights and measures should be used. Now, I am informed that in some cases where the people are poor, when the inspector comes to inspect the scales, the storekeeper, in order to avoid the fees imposed, will put part of his scales under the counter and not have them inspected at all. No doubt the inspectors try to do their duty, but every inducement should be offered those who are using scales to have them inspected, and a heavy penalty should be imposed if they do not have them inspected. I would like to know if those who manufacture scales must have them inspected before they are offered for sale.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). They are usually inspected at the factory, but this is not obligatory. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that the public ought to be protected by a measure of this kind. I hold that view. But everybody else does not. Some hold strongly to the opinion that this law should be made self-sustaining. I have never been able to adopt that view since my attention was drawn to the administration of the department. It is really the public that is being protected by this lawsometimes protected against its own inclination. I am bound to say that the department has not enough money at its disposal perhaps, for as strict a performance of all its duties as I would like. When the balance for the administration of a measure of this kind is on the wrong side and we have to come down every year with a deficit, one moves slowly in asking for more money. The officers are paid the lowest of any class of officers in connection with the department. I do not know whether there were any cases of parties putting the scales under the counters in order to avoid inspection. I can only say that, as in other cases where parties try to evade the payment of just dues to the Government, they can be punished, and I do not think that the department would hesitate to enforce the law against any parties so offending.

Mr. McMULLEN. We were speaking of allowing them to charge cartage. I would like the Controller to adopt the system of making them issue stamps for cartage. In some cases they may charge cartage without making any return of it. I do not say that the inspectors are dishonest, but I think in some cases they charge much more than they do in others. In order to secure the full return of the money they receive, stamps should be issued for cartage the same as for the inspection.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Cartage is necessary, because in many cases the instrument must be taken to a certain place. If the scales were brought to the place where the instrument is, the charge, in many cases, would be still greater.

Adulteration of Food and Fertilizers, and the administration of the Act respecting Fraudulent Marking—To meet expenses under these Acts......$25,000

Mr. McMILLAN. I see an item here with respect to Seaforth. There is a charge of $120 for rent and another for 10,770 pounds of coal, costing $35. Is each inspector allowed to have an office and to charge for rent and coal? The hon. Controller will find the figures I refer to at page S—85 of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The person you refer to is the food inspector of that section, I think. Can the hon. gentleman get an office for much less than $10 a month in Seaforth?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the inspector's own kitchen is his office.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I will look into the matter now that the hon, gentleman has called attention to it.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, $25,000 is to be voted for this service, and I see that last year it cost $24,007. I do not pretend to go into all the items, but I notice that some of them are very large. The charge for salaries at headquarters is $8,500. I do not know that we have received value for $1,000, so far as the reports sent out show. We have a report, from time to time, upon a few hundred samples analysed in the course of the year, and consisting mainly of milk, wines and spirits, and a few classes of groceries, such as pepper, mustard and a few other things most commonly adulterated. Judging by the reports sent out, no results are achieved that could not be achieved by one chemist with a properly equipped laboratory. I, perhaps, put the cost too low when I said $1,000. But I am sure that one efficient chemist at $2,000 a year could do all the work that is done in this department that is of any real value to the public.

I notice that the amount of fees collected is about $9,000, leaving about $15,000 to be met out of the general revenue. I will ask the Controller to do what, perhaps, he has not had time to do—look over the work done by the department and see if the public gets value for the $15,000 it is called upon to pay. I do not think he can reasonably contend that the public gets value for one-half, or even one-quarter of that amount. The salaries at Ottawa alone are $8,500. Surely that sum should pay for all the analysing that has been done in connection with the whole service. They cannot require a staff in Ottawa paid at that figure and all these other local analysts besides. The local analysts are necessary, no doubt, for convenience in the different provinces. but with such analysts as Mr. Ellis, in Toronto, and the analysts at Montreal. Quebec and elsewhere, you do not require an $8,500 staff in Ottawa to carry on any analyses required in connection with the adulteration of food. Perhaps the Excise Department may require the services of these gentlemen in other capacities, but they are all charged to this item. I must urge the hon. gentleman to look into this matter very seriously, because it is perhaps the grossest item in the Estimates in respect of comparing the amount with the extent of the work done. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman has the least idea of how much money is being wasted on this branch of the department.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I cannot accept what the hon, gentleman has said as to the uselessness of the branch, and the cost of the branch, as compared with the amount of work done. I have looked into the cost of the branch, and I try to keep the cost of any article is not the work of one day. it is not the work of two days. It requires some' times a great many days to bring about what appears to be very small results. Has the hon, gentleman ever visited the department?

Mr. CASEY. I have visited it in the old days.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If the hon, gentleman would honour the laboratory with a visit, and have a talk with the chief analyst and his assistant, and call there day after day when Parliament is in session, he would be considerably enlightened as to the nature of the work. As I said a moment ago. these duties cannot be discharged by everybody; it is only skilled and technical persons who can do this kind of work. It is a work that requires the utmost caution. The ingenuity of men's minds is directed to no one thing more intensely than to the adulteration of food, in order that the product itself may be cheapened and put upon the market, however spurious it may be, at a price which will enable the fabricator to make money out of it. Take the case of fertilizers alone, take the case of Paris green, if you will. I introduced into this House last session an Act to place that article on the list of those to be analysed under the Act providing for the prevention of adulteration of food. It was discovered that poor men who had scarcely anything else to live upon but their garden stuff and potatoes, were using Paris green which was of no use. Every day we are adding to the work of that branch, and it is one in which the work is well worth the money paid for

Mr. CASEY. Though I have not lately been in the department here, I am far from being ignorant of the process of chemical analysis. I have seen a good deal of it elsewhere, though not much here. I am aware that one analysis occupies considerable time, but I am also aware that a hundred such analyses may be going on at the same time under one man's charge, and are so going on.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman is decidedly mistaken.

I take the liberty Mr. CASEY. contradicting the hon, gentleman in that I say that a hundred different respect. analyses may be carried on under one man's charge at the same time. The solutions have to be made, and they are set to stand for a certain number of hours before the reaction is complete; but a large number of these can be set agoing at once and mature together, and the results be obtained at the same time. When I say under one man's charge, I mean under the charge of one chemist, with two or three students. within bounds, and not to exceed the Esti-mates in any way. But making an analysis analyses of fertilizers referred to by the perhaps, who are learning the business. The Controller have not really amounted to a great deal as a means of public protection. The total amount of fertilizers imported into Canada is so trifling that the amount spent in this department alone would more than pay for all, I fancy.

Mr. FOSTER. Most of them are produced in Canada.

Mr. CASEY. With regard to the inspection of food, I am inclined to agree that it is a most important subject, and that the analysts employed are capable men, but I think the hon gentleman has far too large a staff at work at Ottawa. The list of analysts on these two pages includes a large number of the best chemists in Canada.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not think I have made an appointment under that Act since I have been in the department.

Mr. CASEY. I say that too many appointments have been made, if the hon, gentleman did not make them. There are enough analysts on these two pages to do all the analysing that is required in all the departmens. My own impression is that the analyst should be almost exclusively made by local men, one for each province, or two for each province. I hardly see the need of ary more than the one superintendent for the whole business in the department at Ottawa, and the work would be just as well done by these other eminent gentlemen. It is only a few articles of groceries, milk, spirits and wines that we see reported upon, and taking the total number, I do not see the results for the money. I have no doubt the Controller has looked into the expense, but I think he has not made himself as familiar as ought to be with the amount of output for the expense.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). How do you know that?

Mr. CASEY. I judge it from the explanation given by the hon, gentleman. I have not been able to get any satisfactory explanations from him and the publications of the department do not show value for the money. I will leave it to any chemist or even to any man of common sense to say whether there is anything in the report like value for the money spent. This item of $25,000 is more serious than are many of those discussed at great length in the committee, and the money is in very great part wasted. I shall probably take the opportunity next session, if the hon, gent|eman still occupies his present position, to call attention to it at greater length, and to prove in full what I have stated to-night and what is the fact.

Mr. McMILLAN. There are four food inspectors. I observe that only one charges for fuel, &c. Are his duties in any way different from the other inspectors?

Mr. Casey.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The other men are excise officers and this man is not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. spect to this item I desire to make one remark to the Postmaster General of the expenditure on mail service absolutely no detail is given, while four or five pages are taken up in giving salaries and allowances. It formerly was the custom to give details in regard to the principal amounts paid for mail service. We want to know how much has been paid to the principal railways and to steamboat service and other services. There should be stated in some detail how the vote of $2,125,000 is distributed, and especially how much goes to the Canadian Pacific Railway, Grand Trunk Railway and Intercolonial Railway.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should like to make a statement which possibly might expedite the passing of the estimate. amount for post office for the year ending 30th June, 1896, shows a reduction of $18,-075. The amount for mail service is simply for which the department is liable under existing arrangements, and no provision has been made for any additional service during the coming year. For salaries and allowances the amount is $17,965 less than we voted last year. The difference it is proposed to save by reductions in the outside service. In miscellaneous expenses the amount asked for is $98.75 less than last year. The amount asked for next year is the same as the amount actually expended during the last year. The hon, gentleman by referring to the report of the Postmaster General will find that the details of expenditure for mail service cover upwards of 100 pages, and I do not see how it would be possible to place them in any form to convey more information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A great many old estimates contained those details. How much has been paid to the Grand Trunk Railway, for instance?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There are so many services connected with the amounts paid to the Grand Trunk Railway that they would have to be summed up. All the details, however, will be found in the report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The committee should know how much has been paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway, Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway and the balance for land service might be lumped together.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They are detailed in the report.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for South Oxford has evidently not read the report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have something else to do than to read a thousand pages of a Minister's report. If I were to spend all my time in looking over this, it might be very convenient for the gentlemen who are passing these Estimates, but we have a right to have this information boiled down in the Estimates.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will get the details from the Auditor General's Report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to have from my hon. friend some general statement as to this very important department. I think he has now been there three years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Less three days.

CARTWRIGHT. RICHARD Less three days, as my hon. friend observes. By the way, was the pay stopped then? However, we will not grudge it to him. Probably it is only a compensation for the strain of mind that the hon. gentleman may have been put to. There is a deficit of about $700,000 in this department. I have myself been of opinion that particularly present circumstances, we ought to be rather more cautious than we have been about extending our post office service. I do not want to deprive the public of any reasonable accommodation in that way, but it does appear to me that in a great many of those outlying districts we have been altogether too profuse in the service, and that a very large amount of money has been spent which it is not convenient for us to spare. would like to know from the hon, gentleman if he hopes, within a reasonable time, to equalize our expenditure and our receipts. Our receipts have increased largely within the last dozen years, but unhappily our expenditure has also increased enormously. It seems to me there ought to be a halt called. We have gone on spending a good deal more money than is really required for the efficient conduct of the service, and we ought to try to bring about an equalization between the outgoing and the incoming in this department. It seems to me that three-quarters of a million a year spent over and above our receipts is more than ought to be spent in any department, and more than we can really afford.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am quite prepared to state that the service in Canada is superior to the postal service in the United States or in any other country, except perhaps, possibly, England. The great extent of our territory and the sparseness of our population is a source of very considerable expense in Canada. An enormous amount of territory has got to be covered, and the expense is very much larger than in a country where the population is more concentrated. Under the present system, if the expenditure is increasing, it is caused by the development of the country. The hon, gentleman must consider the great cost of providing mail service through the west ern country, such as the Kootenay district of British Columbia, where the revenue from customs and other branches of the service is largely increasing. Those who are investing their capital in developing mines there demand a postal service which permits them to be in intimate communication with the sources of supplies, and it would be impossible for them to carry on their business otherwise. As the country is growing in those far distant regions it becomes necessary to establish a service which certainly is very expensive. I think, however, that from the benefit the country at large gets. there is no reason of complaint here. In almost every country the postal service has never equalized the revenue with the expenditure. The records of the last ten years shows that while the revenue has been continually increasing the expenditure has not increased in an equal ratio. some knowledge of the department now, I must frankly state that I do not see any possibility, within a good number of years, that the revenue and expenditure of the department is likely to be equalized.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. aware that there is a great deal of pressure brought upon the hon. gentleman by both sides of the House, but making allowance for the necessity of supplying the outlying districts, I think we have been yielding to that pressure a good deal more than we ought. Fifteen years ago our total expenditure was $1,700,000. During that time we have unfortunately not increased very much in population, although we have increased in area, but we have added rather more than 100 per cent to our post office expenditure. I think that $2,000,000 added to the post office expenditure within fifteen years is rather too large an addition, when we remember that the population of the country has hardly increased 20 per cent. If the hon, gentleman were to curb the expenditure for two or three years. I think there would be a fair chance of the revenue overtaking it. With all possible desire to assist those outlying districts, I think that old Canada has been milked quite enough, and in nothing more than in the huge sums that have been expended for post office accommodation. They have the right to post office accommodation, but they have not quite the right to have all these large sums expended upon them. I am not quite satisfied either as to the extent to which our railway subsidies have gone, and that is one reason why I wanted to get the details of the amount paid to these various great railway corporations.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon, gentleman will look at the Auditor General's Report he will find the sums set forth there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the information we should have in the Estimates.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is all in the Auditor General's Report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very! likely. I think, however, that both the hon. Minister of Finance, and the hon. Postmaster General should understand that it is not our business on this side of the House to make ourselves acquainted with the details of the money they are proposing to vote. It is their business, when they come here to ask for money, to be prepared to give these details in full, and it is not an answer which we on this side can accept to tell us that the information will be found in the Auditor General's Report, or anywhere else. The place to have it is here, and it ought to be placed in the Estimates Moreover, the Auditor in some detail. General's Report does not refer to these particular sums at all. It shows what was expended, not in the year 1895-96, for which you are asking the vote, but in the year 1893-94; so that, while it may be useful to aid us in cross-examining the hon. gentlemen, it does not answer the question I am putting.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there is no increase at all in the amount. I hope the hon. gentleman did not understand me to say that it was his duty to look into the Auditor General's Report; but if he will refer to that report, he will see that it requires several pages to give these details. When I stated that the information was in the Auditor General's Report, I did not mean to say that I should not give the information, but that it would be almost impossible to get up the Estimates for the Post Office Department if all these details were to be put in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want the hon, gentleman to give what would be entirely unreasonable; but I think either he or his predecessor made a considerable mistake in omitting the usual details which formerly appeared. I have here the Estimates for 1880-81, and I will give the hon, gentleman an idea of what I think would be sufficient. We have here heads of expenditure for mail service; by Grand Trunk Railway, by Great Western Railway, by Intercolonial Railway, by other railways, by steamboat and sailing crafts, by stage coach, and other conveyances. These are given in detail—the Grand Trunk for Ontario and Quebec, the Great Western for Ontario, the Intercolonial for all the provinces in which it runs, and so on. These are very proper things to put in the Estimates, and they are very convenient, and afford information which I think we ought to have.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman, I think, is quite right.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am pleased that the hon. member for South Oxford has not asked for any reduction in the salary of the hon. Postmaster General for the days he was absent. To do the hon. gentleman justice, I think he went out only to bring back those who were lost; I think that was his object. The hon. gentleman manages the mails. I suppose, therefore, he manages the daily "Mail," and I will read a sentence of the daily "Mail" of to-day:

The first desire of the Government seems to be to keep the federal finger out of local legislation, and, although, through the eagerness of some public men, it may yesterday have suffered the loss of a Minister, moderate opinion will sustain it in the pursuit of that important object.

I have no time to read the whole article.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is a well-written article.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, it is a well-written article. I would like to know if the hon. Postmaster General agrees with it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It does not come in the Estimates, and I am not bound to answer that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The daily mail belongs to the hon. gentleman's department, and I think we might get an answer now from him whether he is going to put his finger any further into provincial legislation, or not. This is a good time to have that explained. At any rate, I quite readily concur in the full payment of his salary as Postmaster General; but, so far as the others are concerned, I think I shall have to object.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to make an appeal on behalf of the country postmasters I really think they do not receive that fair treatment in the matter of salaries that is meted out to postmasters in cities and towns. A great many country postmasters are expected to run a post office all the year round for the paltry pittance of $15 or $20 a year, whereas city postmasters are paid $3,000 or $4,000 a year. The Ottawa postmaster receives $3,000; the Montreal postmaster, $4,000; and the Toronto postthe Montreal master, I believe, the same amount. One or two applications have been made to me from country postmasters, and I must admit that the hon. Postmaster General treated me with the greatest possible courtesy in showing me how matters were regulated; but I think the system of paying country postmasters should be recast and an additional sum paid to them. I know some people who have, for years, run country post offices, where it takes almost the whole time of one person to attend to the work, for a miserable sum of $30 or $35 a year. This is really taking the labour of these people at far below its actual value. I think the whole system should be recast, and the country postmasters given a little more and the city postmasters a little less. There is another point on which I wish to obtain information. I notice that there are 375 mail clerks employed in the different districts throughout the Dominion. In the Ottawa district, there are thirty-eight; while in the Toronto district, which includes Hamilton, there are only forty-nine; in the London district, forty-three; in the Kingston district, only ten; in the Stratford district, only sixteen; and in the Montreal district, only thirty-six; in New Brunswick, the number is thirty-eight; while in Nova Scotia, which is a larger province, we have only twenty-eight.

Mr. HAZEN. The New Brunswick one runs all the way to Montreal.

Mr. McMULLEN. That may be, but it appears singular that you should have such a very large number in Ottawa compared with other divisions.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon, friend has been so long lecturing me about economy that I have at last become convinced that we should be as economical as possible. I admit that the country postmasters are paid very little, but I do not see how it is possible, out of the amount voted by Parliament, to pay them more. My hon. friend has spoken of $20 to $30, but some of them are only paid $10 a year. We have 8,000 post offices throughout the Dominion, extending to districts very remote, and in some of which the mail matter is very insignificant; and if we paid the country postmasters more, the department would have to curtail the service which is progressing in the same ratio as the country. As regards disparity in mail clerks between Ottawa and Montreal, the reason is that the mail clerks in the Ottawa district run as far as Port Arthur, and it is necessary that we should have a larger number of men to do that work, because after these long runs it is necessary to lay off a certain number of men and their places must be taken by other men. After a trip to Port Arthur and back, the mail clerks are kept in Ottawa three or four days. Kingston shows a smaller number of mail clerks because the clerks are put down to Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman's explanation with regard to the mail clerks at Ottawa is quite satisfactory. I did not know they go as far as Port Arthur. With regard to the post offices, I did not intend that an increase should be made to country postmasters unless by decreasing the salaries paid in the cities and towns. I contend that $2,000 will be quite sufficient remuneration for a postmaster either at Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa or Winnipeg, in all of which $3,000 to $4,000 per year is paid. Make the salaries $2,000, and you will get any number of men of experience and ability ready to take the position at that figure. You would then effect a saving of from $5,000 to $10,000, which you could divide among the country postmasters who are working for little or nothing.

Mr. DENISON. The hon, gentleman is quite mistaken with regard to Toronto post office. In that office there are 150 to 200 employees, and it requires an extra good man to properly manage such a staff and attend to all the questions that are continually presenting themselves for his decision. Besides, in Toronto $4,000 would not go further than $2,000 in the county of Welland, where the expenses are not nearly as high in rents and everything else. Toronto is the largest office in Canada. More mail matter goes through that office than through any other office in the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. One means of enabling the Government to pay the country post-masters a little more will be to reduce the cost of free delivery in the cities where people receive their mails three or four times a day, and use the savings thus effected in giving the country postmasters a little larger salaries. In the country districts people only get their mails once a week, and the postmasters are paid little or nothing.

Mr. DENISON. In the cities we pay for that free delivery by the extra charge of two cents on every drop letter.

Mr. FRASER. There has been a gross deception practiced on the Postmaster General with regard to the Morrison contract. I asked for a statement, and I find that, without tendering, it cost $9,000 to carry the mails from the railway station in Cape Breton to Sydney, a distance of 100 miles. I asked the Postmaster General before whether the Government have made any extra payments to Mr. Morrison.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There was nothing extra; this is all he received.

Mr. FRASER. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the case. As the hon. gentleman knows, the distance from Hawkesbury to Sydney is about 100 miles. At present the principal mails for the island of Cape Breton are carried by railway. And yet it costs $3,000 more to carry the mails than it did before the railway was built. And the mail service is now performed by the contractor with one horse. I have a statement made by a former supporter of the hon. Minister, Mr. Paint, as follows:—

PROTEST against the continuance of a certain contract for the conveyance of Her Majesty's mails in Cape Breton, N.S.

Dominion of Canada.

Province of Ontario.

By this public instrument of protest be it known, to all whom it may concern, that on this 29th day of May, A.D. one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five, before me, Richard John Wicksteed, a public notary in and for the province of Ontario, duly commissioned and sworn, and practising in the city of Ottawa, in the said province, personally came and appeared Henry N. Paint, of Point Tupper Station, Cape Breton, in the province of Nova Scotia, gentleman, who, being by me duly sworn, severally declared on oath:

That in 1889-90, one John Morrison, of St. Peters, Cape Breton, was paid $5,724.88 by the Postmaster General of Canada for the conveyance of the mails between Hawkesbury and Sydney. By the terms of this contract he was required to furnish accommodation for passengers in a stage to be drawn by not less than two horses, &c. In 1890-91, Morrison got $6,270.73, whereas, Henry Archibald, of Port Hastings, C.B., was then and since carrying nearly all the mails for him by railway. In 1891-92-93 and 1894, Morrison got the large and increased sum of $9,000, with extras and perquisites. In the beginning of the year 1894, John Morrison, the father, transferred his contract to his son, Metzler Morrison, the father being then candidate for the local legisla-In January, 1894, a very short advertisement appeared in the columns of three journals in Cape Breton, inviting tenders for the service above mentioned; these tenders to be received in Ottawa and to be opened on the 26th day of January, 1894, and service to commence on the 1st day of February, 1894. By thus allowing only five days in midwinter to commence a service of greater cost to the country than any other of its kind, it was attempted to avoid competition. competition did occur, and was bought off. When the valuable and heavy mails for the mining population and interests of Sydney, Cape Breton, were carried by Morrison's coach, for twenty years he received about $5,000; now, when the railway carried the great bulk of the mail matter, he receives in the vicinity of $10,000, only a few local mail-bags having to be delivered by him. It may be said that the railway destroyed his passenger business. In reply, I assert that long beforc the railway was completed, he had disgusted and turned aside the travelling public from his coaches by doubling the fare or largely increasing it in the winter season, when the steamboats were In consequence, passengers preferred laid up. to hire private conveyances and local teams. Morrison for some twelve years did all in his power to destroy the Conservative Government at Ottawa. I would myself be willing to, and do now hereby, tender for the punctual delivery of the mails and the perfect performance of this service between Hawkesbury, or McIntyre's Lake Station, and Sydney, the service to begin on the 1st day of July, 1895; the route to be subdivided into five sections, or a less number, as agreeable to the Government and its inspector-for the yearly sum of $4,950.

Wherefore, the said Henry N. Paint hath requested me to protest, and I, the said notary, at such his request, have protested, and by these protests do publicly and solemnly protest, on behalf of the said deponent and the people of Canada, against the payment by the said Postmaster General of any further sums of money to the said John Morrison or Metzler Morrison, under the terms of the contract now existing between the said parties for the conveyance of the said mails between the said termini.

And I further protest, in the said behalf, against the further continuance in force of the said contract, the Postmaster General being, according to law, in duty bound to annul the agreement between the above-mentioned contracting parties, inasmuch as the public interest requires such annulment.

Thus done and protested, in the city of Ottawa, this 29th day of May, A.D. one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five, and in testimony where-of I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my notarial seal, the said deponent having hereunto subscribed his name.

(Signed) H. N. PAINT.

(Signed) R. J. Wicksteed, Notary Public.

Dominion of Canada, Province of Ontario.

I, Richard John Wicksteed, notary in and for the said province, duly commissioned and sworn, and practising in the said city of Ottawa and dwelling therein, do certify the foregoing to be a true and exact copy of an original protest on record in my office.

In testimony whereof. I have hereunto set my hand and notarial seal this 28th day of May, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five.

R. J. WICKSTEED, Notary Public.

The following are the subsidies for some other mail routes in Canada:—

Halifax and Mahone Bay, daily, 62 miles.. $3,100 Gaspé and Pasebiac, 103 miles, daily..... 6,715

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is in Quebec.

Mr. FRASER. Yes; and they get the best of it there every time, or, if not, they will know the reason why.

St. Peters and Grand River, daily, 17 miles 399 00 This matter has been referred to again and again, and I call the Minister's attention to it in order that he may not be further imposed upon. It is really too bad that the carrying of these mails should cost $3,000 more than before the railway was built, when the work done by the contractor was much greater. This affidavit is made by a reputable citizen who represented the county in Parliament. I trust that now that atention has been called to the matter it will be looked into and dealt with.

Mr. GILLIES. My hon, friend is evidently misinformed, or he would not take the stand he has done with regard to this item. I am very familiar with the route referred to by my hon. friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser), and if the hon, gentleman knew the circumstances he would fully and unreservedly endorse the actions of the Post Office Department in passing this item as I do. A daily stage service was established over this road as far back as 1863. It was conducted by the firm of . S. T. Lindsay & Co., of which firm the present contractor was a member. The stage line of the route was run from New Glasgow to Sydney, a distance of nearly 200 miles. That went on until the railway was open to the Straits of Canso in 1883, when that portion of the route from New Glasgow to the Straits was cut off and Mr. Morrison became the sole contractor from the Straits to Sydney with a pro-rata remuncration for the distance. This went on till 1866, when the daily stage mail line was opened from the Straits to North Sydney by the Grand Narrows route, that is on the other side of the lake, a route running parallel with the route referred to by my hon. friend from Guysboro', but on the other side of the Bras d'Or Lake. The route touched upon by my hon. friend runs between Hawkesbury and Sydney via St. Peter's, and was the only mail route through Cape Breton till 1866, when the opposition mail line by the north side was established at a cost of over $5,000. The transportation of the mails, then, from the Straits of Canso to Sydney and North Sydney, after the establishment of this second route, cost over $11,000. When this route was established it took away a large portion of the passenger traffic that went by the St. Peter's route, and consequently disturbed the calculations made by Mr. Morrison when he took over this route. What was the fact? In 1889, long before the railway was opened, and not after it was opened, and when the county of Richmond was represented by a Liberal. Mr. Morrison represented the facts to the Post Office Department, and stated that he would have to abandon his contract unless a larger sum was given him. He then showed the department that the route could not be continued by him as a stage line unless he was paid at the rate of $9,000 per year. That was long before I came here, and while the county was represented by a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite. From then until now Mr. Morrison has not had a single dollar of an increase. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken when he says that the business was conducted by a one-horse team. No better equipped stage line exists in the whole Dominion than that between the Straits of Canso and Sydney. When I came here I insisted that the line should suffer no impairment, at all events, but inasmuch as that stage line was the only means by which the people between the Straits of Canso and Sydney, extending over a distance of 100 miles, could communicate with the railway, especially during winter. I insisted that the stage line as it existed from 1863 till then, should be continued, and it was so continued. Now, in reference to the tenders mentioned by my hon. friend, they were asked for in every paper of any consequence published in Cape Breton, and by public notice posted in every post office from Hawkesbury to Sydney, and only two tenders were offered. One was from Mr. Morrison, the present stage proprietor, who was, of course, in a position to tender, because he had his plant on the line, he had his stables established at different points from Hawkesbury to Sydney, mistaken.

and was therefore in a position to compete, perhaps, on more favourable terms than any one else. However, there was competition, and a man named McGinnis, a very respectable man, tendered for a sum of about $8,000. When he was notified that his tender was the lowest, and when he was given a month to take over the business, the gentlemen who were named as securities for the due performance of that contract, refused to sign the bonds, and asked that their names be withdrawn. What was the department to do? Simply to receive the only other tender, that of Mr. Morrison, who had tendered for $9,000, and who was performing the work, and he has been carrying on the service ever since. I may say that while I am here, I shall insist upon that stage line being continued through that territory in an efficient manner. The route extends over a distance of 100 miles through an important and populous settlement, and it carries a large amount of mail matter, and passed through a territory, the people of which are cut off in winter from railway communication, except by means of this stage line. I am quite sure that after this statement my hon. friend will endorse my action in that respect.

Mr. FRASER. I would certainly endorse the hon. gentleman's action in securing proper mail communication. But I want to call his attention to the fact that in the year 1889-90 Mr. Morrison only received $5,724, and he was willing to carry the mail at that rate.

Mr. GILLIES. No, he was not. At that time he gave notice to the department that he could not continue at that rate, and then it was increased.

Mr. FRASER. In 1890-91 he received $6,270, and in 1891-92 Mr. Morrison changed his politics.

Mr. GILLIES. No.

Mr. FRASER. That is true, and at once up went his salary to $9,000. The hon. gentleman won't deny that in 1890-91 Mr. Morrison changed from being a Liberal to a Conservative. He ran in the Liberal interest, and was one of the strongest Liberals in the county, but in that year a change came.

Mr. GILLIES. Does my hon. friend say that Mr. Morrison ran in the Liberal interest at any time?

Mr. FRASER. My impression is that he ran for the local House.

Mr. GILLIES. In the Liberal interest?

Mr. FRASER. Previous to that year. However, I know this—

Mr. GILIJES. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken.

Mr. FRASER. No, he was the strongest Liberal at that time in the county. I know what his politics was when Mr. Blake was down there. Of course, the hon. gentleman does not know, and the department does not know, that contemporaneous with his change of faith, up went his salary from $6,000 to $9,000.

Mr. GILLIES. My hon. friend is again nistaken, and he must not repeat that.

Mr. FRASER. I know that is a sore point with the hon. gentleman, and if he will wait until I am through, he will understand it better. I have got the floor. I say that in 1891-92 his pay was raised according to the Postmaster General's Report to $9,000, for the same distance, that he ran before for $5,724. More than that, I say he changed his politics at that time.

Mr. GILLIES. At what time?

Mr. FRASER. I say that in 1889 he was a Liberal; in 1891-92 he was a Conservative. That is the statement I make. The rate of payment went up from $6,000 to $9,000, and it was continued at the latter rate down to the present time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I hope he will change again.

Mr. FRASER. So long as he can get $3,000 a year for changing to the Conservative party, there is no fear he will change again. These are dear men. According to the reply which the Postmaster General gave to me, the work continued to be done during these years without tender or contract. Tenders were not called for until 1893-94. The change was made from $6,000 to $9,000 without tender and contract, and Mr. Morrison never tendered at $9,000.

Mr. GILLIES. He did.

Mr. FRASER. The answer of the Post-master was that he did not.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. Now, perhaps the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies) will withdraw his statement. When the payment went up to $9,000, it was through the influence of the members of Parliament for the island of Cape Breton. There was never a tender for the $3,000 added up to 1893-94, when tenders were asked for. Why was it raised by $3,000? The service was not as great as it was before.

Mr. GILLIES. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. No man will travel by road if he can travel by railway. I venture to state, and the hon. gentleman will not make a statement to the contrary and allow it to go to Nova Scotia, that there is as much mail and as many passengers travelling by road now as there was previous to the Intercolonial Railway being built.

Mr. GILLIES.

Mr. GILLIES. No.

Mr. FRASER. But here are $3,000 more being paid. As the number of passengers and the number of letters decrease, so the salary increase. In 1893-94 tenders were asked for. A short time after this contract was given Mr. Morrison was a candidate for the local legislature, and he got it transferred to his son, a young man, who was not at home at that time, but was at Halifax, and everybody knows the old gentleman has the advantage of it now and that the contract was transferred simply to allow him to run for the local house. I have made a calculation which may interest the hon. member for Richmond. The distance from McIntyre's Lake to Sydney by railway is about 80 miles. The railway subsidy of $3,200 per mile for that distance would amount to about $256,-000. Add interest $7,680, and this subsidy given to Mr. Morrison of $9,000 per annum and the amounts would make over one million dollars, that is taking the railway subsidy and the mail subsidy together. This Government can borrow money at 3 per cent. At this rate of interest $9,000 annually paid to this contractor would represent a capital about $300,000. That amount would build a railway, put down sleepers and rails from the present terminus of the railway to St. Peters. Here is a chance for the hon. member to get the railway extended a distance of 25 miles.

Mr. GILLIES. What would you do with the balance of the road from St. Peters?

Mr. FRASER. Or provided a subsidy of $3,200 per mile were granted under similar conditions, it would pay for a railway from the same point to Louisbourg. There would be still a balance remaining of $44,000, which if invested as a sinking fund would in 50 years pay the whole amount. This is an admirable way for my hon. friend to get the South Shore Railway built; and if the local government gave a similar sum. the company he represents would no doubt be very glad to build the road. This matter should receive the serious attention of the Minister. Although the payment of this mail contractor leaped from $6,000 to $9,000 without tender and contract, he does not need to carry the mail so far now, because instead of living at Hawkesbury he is living nine miles nearer.

Mr. GILLIES. He is not paid for as long a distance.

Mr. FRASER. He is under contract for $9,000.

Mr. GILLIES. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. I ask the Minister if anything has been taken off $9,000 because the contractor now carries the mail nine miles less distance?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman has submitted some question to me which I have answered.

Mr. FRASER. The Minister says the contract is for $9,000. I see the anxiety of the hon, member for Richmond.

Mr. GILLIES. You have made a statement that the contractor receives $9,000 for carrying the mail from Hawkesbury Sydney, which is not correct.

Mr. FRASER. His contract is for $9,000 to carry the mail to Sydney. I have not yet received an answer to the other question, but I will allow the Minister to correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. GILLIES. I will correct the hon. member.

Mr. FRASER. I would not accept the hon, gentleman's correction because the Minister would have to correct him. He is too much interested in this to give any correction.

Mr. GILLIES. What do you mean by that?

Mr. FRASER. As a member for county. I want the Minister to tell me whether any amount for the nine miles was taken from the contract and the $9,000 was reduced?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. gentleman wishes me to reply to that question, I say that from information received from the deputy when the distance was reduced by nine miles a certain amount, a proportionate amount, was deducted from the original contract.

Mr. FRASER. Then he will receive $9,000. less the proportionate amount for the nine miles?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. Perhaps the Minister will give me the amount.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The proportion of the amount paid for 100 miles is deducted for the nine miles on the whole amount of the contract.

Mr. FRASER. Therefore, he received the same amount for the balance as he did before. Has he received any compensation for giving up his building at Port Hawkesbury?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. FRASER. Once upon 22 time this mail was carried a good deal cheaper than even Lindsay carried it for. Of course, I would not expect that the mail should be carried to-day as cheaply as then. But the point I want to make is: That there has been a gross fraud perpetrated upon the department; that this man should receive, without tender or contract, $3,000 more than he did before. It is certainly not right. have given the sworn statement here of an ex-member of Parliament. If the Minister looks into this matter, he will find that it members opposite, and when the county in is of such a character as to warrant him at once cancelling the contract and calling for tenders. While I do not say a word of general complaint about the Minister, I do say that now, as his attention is called to this, it would be an outrage for him to allow it to continue any longer. I know a postmaster who has not received anything for years because he wanted $40 a year. McGuire, of Steep Creek, wanted to give up the office, but nobody would take the responsibility, and he has been doing the work all the time in the interest of that sec-They reduced his remuneration to $10, and, being a high-spirited man, he would not take a cent because it was nothing like what it should be. This man, Mr. Morrison, was a Liberal, and because he changed his politics he got a premium of So far as his influence was concerned, he did use it for them when they got him over, but he ought to have been willing to espouse the excellent policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite for the sake of the truth he received, rather than for the solatium of $3,000 a year. I would ask the Minister to at once cancel the contract, after the statement I have made, and it is a statement unchallenged by the Minister. that Mr. Morrison received $3,000 additional without ever having tendered at all. While I do not hold the Minister particeps criminis with him, I cannot help seeing there is something wrong.

Mr. GILLIES. I am indeed astonished that the hcn. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) persists in making statements that are not within his knowledge, and that are not consistent with the facts.

Mr. FRASER. They are sworn to.

Mr. GILLIES. By whom?

Mr. FRASER. By an ex-member of this House.

Mr. GILLIES. Well, you have not read them. I think that my statement would be taken in this House, or anywhere else, just as readily as the statements of the hon. member for Guysboro', and I am stating the facts and nothing but the facts. hon. friend does not make his statements upon his own responsibility, and they are wide and far from the facts. Mr. Morrison got this increase in the latter part of the year 1889.

Mr. FRASER. That was the first increase.

Mr. GILLIES. And the only increase that he got, from that day up to this. make this statement from my place in Parliament, and if I am wrong, I will be quite ready to admit that I have made In December, 1889, a misstatement. or got 1890, Mr. lanuary, Morrison this increase, when he was, 28 the hon. said, gentlemun a supporter which he lives was represented in this House by Mr. Flynn, an uncompromising supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite. From the day that he got that increase until this moment, not $1 mo e has been given him than was given in the first instance. I am quite sure that the officers of the Post Office Department will corroborate in every particular, the statement I am here making. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) has admitted that the passenger traffic on this route fell off consequent upon the construction of the Cape Breton Railway. But this stage line had to be maintained intact, and in exactly the same state of equipment, after the railway was opened, as it was before. This railway runs as I have said on the opposite side of the Bras d'Or or lake and is of no local accommodation to the people served by this stage line. Mr. Morrison had to maintain the same number of horses, coaches, drivers and grooms, and his outlay in every respect was the same as before the railway was built and before he lost his passenger revenue. The receipts were less, and, consequently, he had to say to the department that he would have to give up the contract if he did not get the increase. In 1889, while he was an ardent Liberal, he had to give up that contract, or get the increase necessary to enable him to run that line. He got it, although he was a Liberal, and although the county was then represented by a Liberal in this House. From that day to this, he has never been paid $1 more. Some time after the railway was opened through Cape Breton, he changed the western terminus from the Straits to McIntyre's station, making it seven miles less, and the department deducted that proportion of the distance from the whole amount paid him. That is the whole story. A more honest or above-board transaction was never carried out in this country, and I am glad that it was brought up to enable me to make this statement.

Mr. FRASER. When did you say the pay was increased?

Mr. GILLIES. In December, 1890, or January, 1890. The first payment, I believe, was made in January, 1890.

Mr. FRASER. I will read the Minister's answer to my question:

Mr. FRASER asked: How much has been paid for carrying the mail from Hawkesbury, Inverness county, to Sydney, C.B., during the years 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893 and 1894, giving the amount for each year?

And the Minister replied:

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In 1889, $5,724.88; in 1890, $6,270.73; in 1891, $9,000; in 1892, $9,000. It was in 1891 that the payment of $9,000 was made. I am speaking by the book here. I got the answer from the Postmaster General himself, and I suppose he knows more about it than the hou. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Gillies). I say that is the reply

I received from the Postmaster General, that the year 1891 was the first year in which Mr. Morrison received the increase, and that was coterminus with his change of politics. Now, where is the hon. gentleman, I would like to know. That was the exact year, and, according to the Postmaster General, that continued in the years 1892, 1893 and 1894—those four years. Now, I know that the hon. member for Richmond would not intentionally make a statement that was not correct; but he has.

Mr. GILLIES. I have not.

Mr. FRASER. Well, I put his statement against that of the hon. Postmaster General. that is all; he will have to settle that with the department and the public records, which show exactly what took place. Now, I ask what credence can be given to the gentleman's statement-not that he would wilfully say anything wrong-when he is two years wrong as to the year Mr. Morrison received his increase. Mr. Flynn did not represent Richmond in 1891. Other gentlemen came here with Mr. Morrison when the change was made, and I think it is exceedingly ungenerous in the hon. gentleman to attempt to show that it was Mr. Flynn who got this done. Mr. Flynn did not get it done, because Mr. Morrison was a political friend of Mr. Flynn at the time the hon, gentleman mentioned. There is something further in this answer of the hon. Postmaster General, and I take it that it is from the records of the department. and is certainly correct:

John Morrison was the contractor from the beginning of 1889 until the 1st of March, 1894.

Then, he did not, as the Postmaster General said, have any contract with the Government for the extra amount, but the old contract was continued with an additional $3,000 added to it; and it is very curious that the $3,000 was given the year before the railway was opened. If I understand the hon, gentleman's argument, it was that Mr. Morrison received more it was because it was costing more to do the work: but he received the $3,000 before any of the Cape Breton mail was carried by the railway at all, for the Postmaster General answers that the mails have been carried by the Cape Breton Railway since the 1st of June, 1892, a year after Mr. Morrison received the $3,-000 increase; and it is a curious thing that the same amount has been continued when it is stated that another man offered to do the work for less. The hon. Postmaster General states—and I accept his statement at once-that nine miles have been taken off. That fact is had enough: but here remains the fact that in 1891 the amount was increased, and in that year Mr. Morrison found it useful and expedient to change his politics.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, so far as the politics of

Mr. GILLIES.

Mr. Morrison are concerned, I did not know whether he was a Conservative or Liberal.

Mr. FRASER. Was the hon. gentleman Postmaster General in 1891?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes. The hon. gentleman has given me information, more especially the sworn evidence. which I have no doubt he will not mind communicating to me—

Mr. FRASER. It will all go into "Hansard."

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In order that I may go thoroughly into the history of this contract, I may say that my statement which I gave in answer to the hon. gentleman's question was the official statement placed in my hands by the officers of my department. I will deem it my duty to look into the matter, and if there is anything in the contract which is not in the interest of the public, I shall certainly see that it is changed in such a way as to meet the requirements of the service, and be in the interests of the public.

Mr. BORDEN. There is one consideration in all this which it seems to me should interest the taxpayers of the Dominion gener-I gather from the discussion that some years ago a certain service in carrying passengers and mails between two points in Cape Breton Island was rendered at some $6,000 a year. Subsequently, it seems, a railway was constructed there out of the public funds of the country, and that rail-way is now carrying most of the mails and all the passengers which prior to that time were being carried by this mail route; and instead of the change relieving the treasury of this country, the mail route is continued and the amount of money paid to the contractor is increased rather than diminished. This is an illustration of the way hon. gentlemen opposite are guarding the interests of the people of this country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think the hon. member for Guysboro' referred to 1891, when the contract was renewed. I became Postmaster General in 1892.

Mr. GILLIES. I am really sorry that I have again to correct my hon. friend from Guysboro', and that he will persist in running in the mistaken groove that he fell into when he began this discussion. Now, I will make the statement again. I will ask the Postmaster General to substantiate it from his place; and if he is not prepared to do so now, I will ask him to do so, in justice to me, at the next meeting of the House. From the time Mr. Morrison got the first increase, in the early part of 1890, up to $9,000, when he showed he was not able to maintain that service, in the efficient state in which it was then and is now, at the former rate—from that time until the present, he never got one dollar more.

Mr. FRASER. I did not say he gave it from 1891.

Mr. GILLIES. I am saying from 1890, when he got the first increase.

Mr. FRASER. Settle it with the Postmaster General.

Mr. GILLIES. My hon. friend would have this committee believe that Mr. Morrison got an increase in 1889, in 1890—

Mr. FRASER. I did not.

Mr. GILLIES. That he got an increase in 1890 and 1891.

Mr. FRASER. I did not. I said that the increase of $1,300 was given in 1891.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon, gentleman said in 1889. I want to get him nailed down to some particular time. He now says 1891. In January, 1890, the increase up to $9,000 was given Mr. Morrison, and from then until now he has not received an increase of one dollar, but he has been paid uniformly at the rate of $9,000 from January, 1890, -eighteen months before I came here at all, and while the county was represented by Mr. Flynn, an ardent supporter of my hon. friend opposite. From January, 1890, when he got that increase, he has not received one cent additional; and the apparent discrepancy between 1890 and 1891 and 1892 is caused apparently by the fact that one year runs into another.

Mr. FRASER. Could 1889 be run into 1891?

The increase began in Mr. GILLIES. 1890 at $9,000 a year. From then until 30th June, it appears small in the Auditor General's Report, or the Postmaster General's Report, because for that period it is given as made up of two sums, namely, the old amount of $5,800, and the increased amount of $9,000. When I saw the answer of the Postmaster General, I went immediately to the department, and saw the deputy (Mr. White), and he explained it to me at He gave me the statement I give here; and if my hon. friend will go to the department to-morrow, he will find exactly that matters there correspond to the letter with the statement I have given.

Mr. FRASER. I regret that I have to call the hon. gentleman's attention again to the fact that he is confounding two things, according to the statement of the Postmaster General, given on page 448 of "Hansard." According to that statement, in 1889, $5,724.88 were paid. In 1890 there was a rise to $6,270.73. I am bound to accept the statement of the Minister against any given by his deputy, unless the Minister will rise and say that the statement he gave was incorrect. The hon. gentleman is confounding the rise from 1889 to 1890, with the rise in 1891. I want to call his attention to the fact that $500 more were given in 1890, just as Mr. Morrison was running in that direction than were given him in the previous year. But when it came to 1891 and his conversion was complete, the amount reached $9,000. Is it possible that the statement of the Postmaster General could have remained this long without correction? Why did not the hon. member for Richmond put a question, and have the correction made in this House?

Mr. GILLIES. I can show it now.

Mr. FRASER. Yes, when we are debating the item, he tries to introduce a poor sub-official to give his testimony against the Postmaster General. Why did not the hon. gentleman correct it as soon as he saw it, for we have now his statement that he saw it, and made the correction. There was an advance of $500 in 1890, and I will accept the statement of the Postmaster General rather than any other statement made by any deputy.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I see no discrepancy between the answer of the Postmaster General and the statement of my hon. friend. The Postmaster General said that the contract was paid for in 1891 at the rate of $9,000. It seems to me that that is positive proof that the increase must have taken place the year before.

Mr. HAGGART. It is plain as possible that my hon. friend's statement is quite correct, and in strict accord with the Postmaster General. In 1889, the Postmaster General says that he paid $5,924.88. That took him to the 1st January, 1890. The hon. member for Guysboro' says that the increase was from 1890.

Mr. FRASER. Not at all. You are a year out.

Mr. HAGGART. I am correct. In 1889, it is not the fiscal year which is given here. what was the payment during the year 1889? It is $5,724.88. It is the fiscal year that the statement referred to. In the fiscal year of 1889 the payment was $5,724.88. That would take him to 1st July, in 1890, when the amount was $6,720.73. That included the increase for these months, which would be $1,500, or the amount of $9,000 a year from the date the hon. gentleman spoke of.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will see into what an error he has fallen. If he will take the blue-books he will see that the Postmaster General was right and that he is wrong. I have here the Postmaster General's Report from year to year. If the hon. gentleman will take up that report, he will see that the amount paid for the fiscal year 1890 was $5,724. Now, I will go to the next year, 1891. The Postmaster General's Report for 1891 gives the figures for the fiscal year 1890 and the payment on this contract is $6,270. Now, the hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Gillies), said that the increase was made in 1889.

Mr. HAGGART. 1st, January, 1890.

Mr. HAZEN. Let us get that right. The hon. member from Richmond says the change was made in the month of December, 1889, and the increased pay commenced in January, 1890.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The first year in which it appears from the Postmaster General's Report that $9,000 was paid in 1892. That, I suppose, means that the payment was made in 1891. Very well, then, we see that, instead of being in 1889, it is in 1891.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes, there is no doubt about it. The sum was not paid over till then.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. However all this may be, it does not in the slightest degree relieve the department from the statement made by my hon. friend which statement simply was that there has been a gross waste of public money. The Government builds a railway in Cape Breton at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars, I suppose-perhaps a million or so-and the first result is that some trumpery line which used to be run for $6,000 it is now paid $9,000, and I suppose the railway is paid $10,000 or so for carrying the mails. It is no wonder that we are paying hundreds of thousands of dollars more for postal exthan the whole postal amounts to. This is a good illustration of the point to which I drew the attention of the committee—that there is a great deal of waste in the expenditure of the Post Office. If we are going to increase little post office routes 50 per cent while the work is done by railways alongside, it is not much wonder that we have a deficiency of $700,000 in the Post Office Department. I do not care a straw about the relative merits of Mr. Morrison and these other contractors; but I merely point to this case as evidence of very gross mismanagement and extravagance on the part of the Post Office Department; and no pretense of excuse or explanation has been given by the Postmaster General or his predecessor, the present Minister of Railways. Not one solitary vestige or reason is given for this man's salary, or annuity, or conversion money, or whatever you choose to call it being increased from $6,000 to $9,000. It is clear that the cost of carrying these mails is probably more than 100 per cent more than it was in 1889. What possible explanation or excuse can there be for paying $9,000 for that which cost only $6,000 before the railway was built? If the Postmaster General or his predecessor has an explanation let him give it. The public outside do not care whether Mr. Morrison became converted or perverted in 1890 or in 1891. What we do want to understand is whether when railways are constructed not great expense to the public and mails must be conveyed by their means, the result is to be that we are to pay 50 per cent more for one-half the service we formerly received.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not know anything about the service in question, but there was one consideration that suggests what may answer the objections the hon. gentleman has raised. It is a well known fact that when tenders—

Mr. CASEY. There were no tenders.

Mr. DICKEY. routes, one of the main considerations that the tenderer takes into account is the revenue he can derive from passenger traffic along the road. I know men in my own county who are driving mail routes for less than the actual cost of the service; but they make up the balance by carrying passengers and parcels and messages along the road. This man has a long route. He formerly carried all the passengers between these points and received a large revenue from that source. When the railway was built that source of revenue would be cut off, and when the department called for tenders, a person tendering would have to throw the whole cost of the mail upon the mail itself, instead of being able to count upon help from the other items I have mentioned. This is a large contract which requires a vast equipment of horses and carriages which probably only two men in the locality would be able to furnish. Without saying that the increase was not excessive, it is quite evident that there must be some increase when all the passenger traffic was: taken away from the contractor. And it is quite a matter of indifference, so far as that is concerned, whether the passenger traffic is taken away by a Government rail-way or by anything else. This mail route, I understand, serves a county which cannot be reached by the railway itself. It is simply a question of passenger traffic that gives revenue being taken away, making an increase to some extent necessary.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The strength of the hon. gentleman's argument is turned to weakness when we find that the railway was not open until a year after the increase was made.

John Morrison was the contractor from the beginning of 1889 until the 1st March, 1894; since that date Mr. J. S. M. Morrison has held the contract. Mr. John Morrison acquired the contract criginally in 1885 by transfer from Mr. P. S. Lindsay, and on its expiration in 1889, the service was left in Mr. Morrison's hands under yearly agreement.

And at that time the sum paid was increased $3,000.

Mr. CAMERON. In 1889?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister of Militia prefaced his remarks by saying that he did not know much about this matter, and I think if he had followed the course of the debate previously, he would have known more about it. But we were all of us in the position of knowing nothing about this matter until it was brought up by the member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser). And if the discussion had been limited to his statement, and to a temperate reply from the Postmaster General and the local members on that side of the House, we would not have concerned ourselves so much about it.

But the excitement of the hon. mem-In tendering for mail ber for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) and of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies), and of the ex-Postmaster General, have made it clear to us that there is an extremely big nigger in the fence, whether his name is Mr. Morrison or not. It has been made perfectly clear, from the report and from the admissions of the Postmaster General himself, and by the language of the hon. gentleman who became so intensely excited over the matter, that this man Morrison is being paid 50 per cent more for doing much less work than he was doing some years ago. When his change of politics took place, it seems to have made a great difference to the hon. member for Richmond. But it is no matter to us. The fact remains that he got increased pay for doing increased work, and that he changed his politics either at the same time or a little later. In fact, he has become one of the friends of the Government, and even one of their very dear friends, for he is dear at $9,000 a year. I think we must all admit that we are aware of the existence of a nigger there, though we may not be able to draw his picture.

But I would emphasize the fact, the hon, member for South Oxford has done, that it is in these directions waste occurs in the the Now, I do not fully Office Department. agree with the hon. member for South Oxford that the time has come for extreme economy in providing mail service to the small post offices in the country. I agree that we must not give extravagantly dear postal service to small places; but I would remind the Postmaster General of a fact that he may not be aware of, that there are many sections in the older parts of Canada, old settled places, which have no better mail service now than they had twenty years ago. My own constituency is an example. It has but very little better mail service in the way of frequency than it had twenty years ago. I suppose that is due to the fact that the riding has had the misfortune to be represented by a member who had not the ear of the Minister as fully as if he had been a supporter. However, I am bound to say that when ever I have brought anything before the notice of the Minister, he has given it fair consideration; but these matters have not been brought to his notice in the same way as they would have been had the county been represented by a supporter of his. Now that same thing may have happened elsewhere. There are many parts of the country where, from what I may call quasi natural causes, the development of the mail service has not kept pace with the increased population. His attention has been called to a question of mails on the Michigan Central Railway to St. Thomas.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The present arrangements have been accepted by them, and they are running an increased service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think the hon. gentleman will find that his county has been treated very well.

Mr. CASEY. I am not complaining at all, but I am making the point, rather in support of the Minister than in opposition to him, that it will be necessary for him, not-withstanding the general cry of economy, in many of the older parts of the country, to make little improvements here and there In the mail service, in order to overtake the increased population. But I say that it is in such cases as this Morrison job, where, probably without the knowledge of the Minister at all, a job has been perpetrated, that the waste takes place, and not in providing the necessary accommodation for well settled districts. Now, I find that in the London district, with a population of a couple of hundred thousand or more, there was only $54,700 paid for land carriage of mails: while in British Columbia, with a population very much less, with a railway and a navigable river going through the most of it, there was $58,450 paid. Of course there are several reasons why British Columbia is expensive, but I do not think the mail service in the older districts, such as London and Kingston, has been kept up to the relative pitch as it has been in the newer country. My hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has espoused the cause of the country postmasters. I am with him in that, too. I believe that there is room even there for economy in one direction, with liberality in another. I am not willing to state my conviction that no more expansion should be given to our local mail service. I believe that in many districts it is absolutely necessary, in the interests of justice. In regard to salaries, it has been generally stated that some changes have been made in the salaries of the or his subordinate, at postmaster Some weeks ago I asked a question on this point, and the Postmaster General said that no change had been made up to that time. Since then I have been assured locally that some changes have taken place. I now repeat the question and ask has any change taken place up to the present date? In regard to allowances to the country postmaster, I have been told to ask how often the salaries are revised, and I should like to know what proportion they bear to the revenue of the office.

Mr. CAMERON. Before the Postmaster General answers those questions I desire to say a few words in connection with another question which has not been sufficiently thrashed out. We want to ascertain the facts. The hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) made statements which were said to be somewhat at variance with the facts. Considerable discussion arose in that connection. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has in my opinion to some extent settled the facts; he has shown to this House that the increase in the cost of the mail service from Hawkesbury to Sydney was made in December, 1889.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think in the beginning of January, 1890.

Mr. CAMERON. And that payment for that service commenced in January, 1890.

Mr. FOSTER. On the 1st May.

Mr. CAMERON. We have ascertained two main facts: First, that the change was made in December, 1889, second, that payment commenced in May, 1890. At that time the contractor was, I am informed, a Liberal, and at that time I know from my own personal knowledge that Richmond was represented in this House by a Liberal. In May, 1890, to my personal knowledge Richmond was still represented by a Liberal. So at the time the increase was authorized Richmond was represented by a Liberal, and at the time the increase was given it was so represented. I was astonished to find in view of these facts the hon. member for Guysboro' become so very much excited. He was very much like a great many of my own countrymen who do not become good converts, except they are caught young. So the hon. member for Guysboro' cannot see as clearly some of us who were politically caught young, but now that the hon. member for Queen's has removed the cloud which overshadowed that hon, gentleman he will realize two facts, first, that the change was authorized in December, 1889, and, second, that the increase commenced on May, 1890. I hope the member for Guysboro' understands these facts, and that no other increase has taken place up to the present time. The hon, member for Richmond, who is a Conservative, was not elected until March, 1891, so all those corrupt practices, if they were corrupt, were carried on while Richmond was represented by a Liberal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman want to hold me responsible for all the political rascalities done in the county I represent?

And the second of the second o

Mr. CAMERON. No. While all on this side of the House failed to convince the hon. member for Guysboro' that he was wrong, the hon. member for Queen's enabled him to sit down quietly. Then we saw a general attempt made by hon, gentlemen on his right and left, by the financial authorities, to divert the attention of the committee from the great question as to the contract being given to Mr. Morrison while Richmond was represented by a Liberal, and whether the increase was given while Richmond was represented by a Conservative, and they fastened the whole case on an hon. member who was not elected until a long time after the transaction occurred. The mail route between Hawkesbury and Sydney is Before very important one. the railway was built there was a competitive mail line established in 1866, which carried a large number of passengers formerly carried from Halifax to Sydney, by what was called the central route, which has since become the route of the railway. When the term of Mr. Lindsay's contract in 1889 terminated, no one would undertake to carry the mails from Hawkesbury to Sydney for the former amount, owing to this central mail route having been established and the large curtailment in the carriage of passengers. There was nothing corrupt in that, and I do not care whether Richmond was represented by a Liberal or a Conservative at that time, or whether the contract was given to a Liberal or a Conservative. It is not very complimentary to intimate that a leading Liberal in Richmond could have been purchased for so little money. There may be some other grave reason for the change offered. When the railroad was built there was an additional reason why the amount paid should be increased, because a larger number of passengers were then carried by the central mail route. There was, however, no increase after 1891, even after the railroad was built. But when the starting point was changed from Hawkesbury to Mc-Intyre's Lake, nine miles nearer Sydney, the Post Office Department very properly reduced the cost of service pro rata for the nine miles as compared with the 100 miles. Now, we understand the facts thoroughly, and there is no disagreement about them, and I am sure the House is very much obliged to the hon. member for Queen's for illuminating the case so strongly that immediately afterwards there was an attempt to make a diversion from the subject altogether by honourable gentlemen opposite.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The House is very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for thinking that when a Conservative Government commits indescribable folly in its action in the county it is quite sufficient to say that the county at that time was represented by a Liberal. Such are the hon. gentleman's political ethics. Does he not know that under the beautiful system of government that prevails, the representative of a county, if he is not a follower of the Government, is not allowed to have any influence with them whatever. The patronage of the county is given to a defeated candidate or to some other prominent Conservative. The repetition of the statement that the county was represented by a Liberal at the time that this improper and indefensible change was made, is irrelevant to the arguments adduced by hon. members on this side of the House. The Postmaster General has promised that if the facts are as stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) he will have them remedied, but his supporters behind him do not seem to They want this like the announcement. $9,000 continued and they argue that it should not be cut down because the county was represented by a Liberal when the change was made.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In reply to the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey), so far as St. Thomas is concerned, no change has been made whatever, but an investigation is being gone on with by the inspector so as to ascertain whether these changes will be made or not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is stated to me or authority which I take to be reliable, that it is the intention of the department to divide the province of Nova Scotia into two districts, the eastern and western, and to appoint an inspector for each. At present there is but one inspector, Mr. Charles J. Macdonald. If this is the intention what is Mr. Macdonald's salary to be, and what will be the salary of the other inspector? Is it true that the present member for Colchester (Mr. Patterson) is to receive the appointment for one district?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman can find the reply in the Estimates which have been submitted to the House. There is no appropriation taken for a new inspector, nor an increase or reduction in the salary of the present inspector. That could not be done unless the department asked for an appropriation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It could be done by dividing the salary.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am afraid it could not be done that way.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is it to be done?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have told the hon, gentleman that I cannot create a new district without having the money voted by Parliament.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Unless you cut down the salary of the present inspector.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am afraid I could not do that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not asking you to do that, I am asking for information.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to a matter connected with the mail carriage in the North-west Territories. The price paid for the service, according to the last report of the Minister, between Battleford and Saskatoon, is $7,049 a year. The service is twice a week and the distance ninety miles. I am informed that when this contract was let to Messrs. Leeson & Scott, in November, 1890, a tender was sent in by Mr. Thomas Dewar, of Battleford, to do the work for $30 a round trip, or $60 a week, or $3,120 a year. The contract with Leeson & Scott expired in 1894, and without tender it was renewed to them at the same price. It is perfectly absurd for the Government to give as much for carrying mails in the North-west Territories in 1894 as they did in 1890, because the price of everything has been enormously decreased since then. We have the statement of Ministers that great saving has been made in the cost of supplies in the mounted police since 1890. Mr. Dewar was perfectly competent to do the work, and in 1890 he tendered to do it, for $3,900 a year less than Messrs. Leeson & Scott offered to do it for, and less than their tender was renewed for in 1894. I have this on substantial information, and it certainly seems impossible to believe that the Government would pay to one firm about $4,000 a year more than the work could be effidone for by another responsible ciently person. If I am interrupted by the leader of the House and other Ministers in this way I can keep on for five or six hours. I am, at least, entitled to ordinary civility.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon, gentleman had a mind to go against all that his leader promised me this afternoon and to obstruct the supplies, he can do so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I rise to a point of order. He has a perfect right to bring this matter before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that he has not, but because some person makes a remark to his neighbour here, he gets up and says he will occupy the House four or five hours. That is what I object to.

Mr. MARTIN. I think there should be ordinary decorum in the House when a member is speaking.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman will get the decorum he deserves, and no more.

Mr. MARTIN. Then the leader of the House justifies his incivility to me by saying that I broke some promise.

The leader of the House Mr. FOSTER. was not addressing the hon, gentleman. I thinks he can buildoze the whole House.

was addressing the hon. Postmaster General, and I will listen to the hon. gentleman or not, just as I please.

I found fault with the Mr. MARTIN. gross incivility of the leader of the House in interrupting me in my remarks.

The hon, gentleman is the Mr. FOSTER. last man in this House who should talk of incivility.

That may be, but if I am Mr. MARTIN. uncivil, that does not justify the hon. gentleman's incivility to me.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. leader of the House addressed a remark to me which had nothing whatever to do with what the hon, member for Winnipeg was talking about.

Mr. MARTIN. Then why does the hon. gentleman interrupt me in my remarks?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is not so important as to demand the attention of every member in this House when he is addressing the Postmaster General.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not ask the hon. gentleman to listen to me, but I say that it is very uncivil to me for Ministers of the Crown to take the attention of the Postmaster General when I am asking him a question.

The hon. gentleman is Mr. FOSTER. The Postmaster General wrong again. was all attention to him.

Mr. MARTIN. I certainly found it very annoying.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw his remark in reference to the leader of the House.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not withdraw, because the leader of the House charges me with obstructing.

Mr. FOSTER. I took the hon. gentleman's own words. He said he would keep us five or six hours on this Estimate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He said that if interrupted he could keep the committee.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to convey this intimation that if the hon. Minister thought by the method he was pursuing, that he was going to prevent me-

Mr. FOSTER. I was not noticing you. I would disdain to do it.

Mr. MARTIN. You were making a great deal of noise and preventing me speaking.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not propose to be bull-dozed, either, by other members of the committee.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon, gentleman

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. MARTIN. I have my rights that I am going to assert; and this is not the first time, when I have attempted to address remarks to the committee, that the Finance Minister has acted in the same way.

Mr. FOSTER. In what way?

Mr. MARTIN. By being very noisy and interrupting me. The hon. Minister knows perfectly well that he was very offensive, and interrupted me very much. I brought this matter up with no idea of obstructing the committee. I brought it up because I was asked to do so, and get an explanation, and I propose to get it. As I was saying, Messrs. Leeson & Scott had been very large contractors for the mail service in the North-west. They were contractors for the service between Calgary and Port Saskatchewan, a service which cost the Government between $12,000 and $13,000 a year. If the other contracts were given on the same principle on which this contract appears to have been given, without any reference to the other tenders that were received, and at prices so extravagantly beyond what the department might have had the work done for, the amount lost by the Government would be very large indeed. Under these circumstances, I would like to know from the Postmaster General whether the facts which I have alleged, and which have been communicated to me, are correct or not.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I take it that the hon. gentleman is discussing the contract between Battleford and Saskatoon. It is a very old contract, and when Mr. McLellan was Postmaster General, he visited that section of the country, and personally looked into the matter.

Mr. MARTIN. In what year was that?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In 1886 or 1887. And from the information he personally obtained, he considered that the contract should be continued to Leeson & Scott, who were the best contractors, and were doing their work very well. Subsequently, on more than one occasion, the matter was referred to the inspector for that division, and the report which he sent to the department was that the contract should be continued to Leeson & Scott.

Mr. MARTIN. What year was that?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. About two years ago. The inspector's report convinced the department that the contract should be continued, and it was continued.

Mr. MARTIN. I must say that the explanation of the hon. Postmaster General is very unsatisfactory indeed. Here is a contract which is costing the country $7,049 a year. It is, I fancy, the largest contract in Manitoba or the North-west Territories for carrying the mails. I understand the Postmaster General to say that in 1886, the then Postmaster General. Mr. McLellan. went up there and looked into the matter himself, and came to the conclusion that the contract should be given these people for the amount that was then given. That is surely a very poor explanation, in view of the fact that the work could be done for so much less. In 1890 tenders were advertised for, amongst these sent in was that of Mr. Thomas Dewar, who was just as competent to carry the mails as Leeson & No doubt Leeson & Scott do the work satisfactorily, but no doubt also Thos. Dewar would be able to do the work just as satisfactorily. How can that question be determined except by the course, adopted in 1890, of asking for tenders? What excuse then was there for the department deliberately giving $7,049 to Leeson & Scott when Mr. Dewar was willing to do the work for $3,120? Again in 1886, everything was very much more expensive in the Territories than in 1890, and in 1890 things were very much more expensive and this work was worth very much more than in 1894. But while in 1890 the department went through the farce of calling for tenders and then gave the contract to the highest tenderer, Leeson & Scott, for $7,049, in 1894, after everything has gone down and when the cost of doing the work was 20 to 40 per cent less, the department did not even take the precaution of asking for tenders, but deliberately reawarded this contract another period of four years, at $7,049 to Thos. Dewar was at Leeson & Scott. that time prepared to send in a tender if he had the opportunity, and he is ready at twenty-four hours notice to do the work for $3,120.

Mr. DALY. Neither Mr. Dewar nor anybody else could possibly undertake that work and carry out its contract for the sum mentioned by the hon, gentleman. The first thing that the Post Office Department has to do is to look to the responsibility of the men who undertake the contract and to the fact that they have been hitherto satisfactorily carrying out the contract. There is not a black mark in the department to-day against Leeson & Scott, and no doubt what moved the inspector to recommend them was that they had so well conducted their contract, through a long and difficult trail, with few inhabitants, in winter and summer, under trying circumstances. The hon, gentleman says that the price of living has so decreased between 1890 and 1894 that Mr. Dewar could do the work at a much less figure than what is paid Leeson & Scott. The hon, gentleman does not understand the condition of the country over which the contract runs, and he has never been there. It is from Saskatchewan to Battleford, a distance of 90 miles, over a trail along which there are only two settlers. There is no habitation from Battleford to Saskatoon with the exception of the habitations of these two men. For the first 22 miles out of Battleford, you have to cross 22 creeks to the Eagle Hills—a very hard road to travel, particularly in winter. When it is remembered that these men have to carry this mail in sunshine or rain-whether the thermometer is 30 to 40 below or 90 in the shade,—and have to furnish relays of that they horses at different points and houses as well, one can see that the expense is much greater than if the mails were carried through a well settled country. As far as the price of building is concerned between Saskatoon and Battleford, there is no difference as compared with 1890. The price of wages is not lessened. On the contrary, the condition of things there is identical with what it was in Winnipeg twenty years ago. The records of the department show that there are no contractors who from year to year have done thir work as satisfactorily, under trying circumstances, as did Leeson & Scott. They carried the mail in the old days from Regina to Battleford, from Swift Current to Battleford during the rebellion, and from Calgary to Edmonton before the line was built; and in consideration of the services they rendered and the fact that they were well equipped in horses and riders and responsible men for the carrying of the mails, their contract was extended.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think that the Minister of the Interior has added anything to the case made by the Postmaster General. I was particular to say that no suggestion against Leeson & Scott was ever made or intended. It is not necessary to allege that Leeson & Scott are doing the work badly, because it is not a matter I bring before the House. I say nothing against that firm, but I charge the Postmaster General with deliberately wasting $4,000 of public money in the letting of this contract. The Minister of the Interior takes exception to my statement that prices have been reduced-he says that that does not apply to that country. That is absurd on the face of it. If it is true, as the Minister has stated, that there is a reduction in the expenses of the mounted police on account of the reduced prices-

Mr. DALY. That does not obtain there.

Mr. MARTIN. Suppose they get their supplies in Regina.

The mounted police do not Mr. DALY. get all their supplies from Regina, it is a question of feed for their horses.

Mr. MARTIN. I understood the hon. Minister to say that the goods had to be freighted from Regina.

Mr. DALY. So they have.

Mr. MARTIN. If the original cost at Regina is lower, the cost at Battleford must be lower, for the freighting does not cost that in 1894 this contract was extended to more, but rather less. But I only mentioned | these people for another period of four this incidentally on the ground that one would expect the contract to be less in 1894 than it was in 1890. But the Minister of the Interior makes the peculiar answer that they have renewed the contract with this firm in face of the fact that in 1890 Mr. Dewar offered to do the work for $3,120 on the ground that they were afraid that Mr. Dewar would not do it.

Mr. DALY. What knowledge has the hon. gentleman of that?

Mr. MARTIN. I have been informed. There is nothing to show that they called upon Mr. Dewar to furnish security and that he failed to do so. When a contract is given to a man, the practice is to exact from him security for the performance of that contract. If he gives that security, there is no justification for giving the contract to another man at more than twice the price than has been offered. The Minister of the Interior suggests that Leeson & Scott had done a great deal of good work, and that the inspector thought that out of gratitude-

Mr. DALY. I did not put it in that way. I said they had done their work well.

Mr. MARTIN. I understood the hon. Minister to put it in this way, that the firm had done so much good work for the Government that they did not like to take the contract away from them. Now, I would go this far: Other things being equal, I think is an eminently proper to discuss, and, thinking so, no sneers or jeers or uncivil conduct on the part of the leader of the House will prevent me from discussing it. I do not see why he should make himself so offensive. I would like to ask him to point out any occasion when I have been offensive to any member.

Mr. FOSTER. I could not do it.

Mr. MARTIN. I criticise the Government as severely as I can, but I do not think the hon, gentleman can say that I do it in an offensive manner.

Mr. FOSTER. No, no.

Mr. MARTIN. I was going to say that, other things being equal, or even if there been a small difference between Leeson & Scott and the other tenderers, I think the Government would have been justified in giving them the preference. But surely that is no justification for giving them the contract at $4,000 more than the others asked, on a $7,000 job. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is an enormity. Every charge I have made is completely admitted by the Postmaster General.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not admit years without tender, and the only justification is that the inspector recommended

Mr. HUGHES. Has the hon. gentleman any evidence that this Dewar tender was put in and what the amount of it was.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Where is it, pray?

Mr. MARTIN. It is my information, and it has not been denied. I am not supposed to give evidence as to information in the hands of the Government.

Mr. HUGHES. The Deputy Postmaster General tells me that he has no record of Mr. MARTIN. No tenders were asked for in 1894. But in 1890, Mr. Dewar did offer to do the work for $3,120. He has in his possession a letter from the department acknowledging his letter, and that is all. And in the face of that the contract is given to Leeson & Scott. Four years afterwards, the department thought it not necessary to go through the farce of calling for tenders, for it is surely folly to call for tenders if you intend to consider only one of them. Much has been made of the good work that Leeson & Scott have done. Whatever work they have done carrying mails during the rebellion, they have been paid for most liberally. They are wealthy men, having made large sums out of their contract. I am not finding fault with them on that account. I am not discussing them in this matter. They have done only what others would have done But what I under similar circumstances. am discussing is the action of the Postmaster General and his department.

When was this tender Mr. HUGHES. put in by Mr. Dewar?

In 1890. That was the Mr. MARTIN. only time tenders were asked for, and Mr. Dewar sent in his tender at this price.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon, gentleman charges that tenders were asked for by advertisement in 1890.

Mr. MARTIN. That is my information.

Mr. HAGGART. The Postmaster General could not furnish it at once four years ago. I was Postmaster General at that time, and if the hon. gentleman says so, it must be correct, but I will find out.

I do not state it on my Mr. MARTIN. own knowledge, but I have been told so by a person in whom I have every confidence, and I have every reason to believe it is correct. But I do know that in 1894, Mr. Dewar was prepared to make the tender, because I had communications from the party from whom I got the information, prior to the time when the contract expired in 1894, telling me that all the tenders had been sent in in 1890, and that Mr. Dewar to another man for $7,049, and then, four was at that time prepared to do the work for $60 a week. Since then, I have received other letters in which it has been stated that the parties understood that the contract had been renewed. That is the information I received this afternoon, and the Postmaster General agrees that it has been renewed, and that no tenders were asked for, but it was done upon the inspector's report. The Minister of the Interior justifies the inspector's report because that is a lonely country up there, and it is expensive to carry the mails. But it is surely no justification for the Government to give $7,000 for a work if it is only worth $3,000. to say that it is an expensive work to perform. Seven thousand dollars is a large sum to be paid for this work. The contract expires, and no excuse whatever has been made to justify the department in not asking for tenders.

Mr. HAGGART. The gravamen of the bon. gentleman's charge is this, that tenders were asked for at first, that there was only one offer for $3,200, in 1890, and the contract was given to another person for $7.000.

Mr. MARTIN. That is exactly, as to 1890.

Mr. HAGGART. I was Postmaster General at the time. I think the hon. gentleman must be mistaken, I am sure his information must be incorrect.

Mr. HUGHES. Why did not the hon. gentleman put a question on the Order papers so that his information might be obtained in time?

Mr. MARTIN. Early in the session I did give a notice of motion asking for papers, and I intended to make these remarks then. But that motion was passed while I was absent one day, when the House was going through unopposed motions, and a friend of mine moved it on my behalf, not knowing that I wished to make some remarks. That motion was passed three or four weeks ago. and no return has yet been laid hefore the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are you sure it was so long ago that you moved for the papers?

Mr. MARTIN. I am sure it was three or four weeks ago. But there is a further charge, that in 1894 no tenders whatever were asked for. Now, if it is true that in 1890 a tender was received for $3,200, that makes the failure to ask for tenders in 1894 all the worse. I think the hon, gentleman will agree with me in that.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, if your premises are correct.

Mr. MARTIN. If it is correct that in 1890 the department had an opportunity to get this work done for $3,200 that they de-liberately refused to accept, and gave it years afterwards they deliberately renewed the contract with the same contractors without any tenders being asked for at all, the committee will see that it is a very serious matter. It is not a two penny ha' penny matter. It is probably the largest contract, with few exceptions, made in Canada for carrying the mails. So far as the Government are concerned, I think they have offered no justification for their course.

Department of Trade and Commerce—Outside service......$19,100

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why cannot you do with $10.000 for expenses in connection with the negotiation of treaties, or in extension of commercial relations, instead of the $15,000 that you are asking for now?

Mr. FOSTER. Because they have extended, notably in one instance. Australia, where we have sent an agent to do work with the different Australian colonies. The item is to extend the agencies a great deal, as may be found elsewhere.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suggested to the Minister last year the propriety of distributing amongst the members of the House, three or four copies of the chief reports of the English consuls abroad. They would cost very little. Every member knows who the traders and men of commercial enterprise are in his constituency. The information would be most valuable, and there is nothing we could publish on our own account that would not cost far more. and contain infinitely less information.

Mr. FOSTER. I will remember that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would support my hon. friend's representations. I have looked over some of those English consular reports. They are made with great care, and they are of great service, indeed, to English merchants. They ought to be distributed here, if they could be obtained from the English office for any reasonable sum.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know from the Minister what he expects to accomplish in sending an agent to Australia at a cost of $5,000 a year. Does he expect to increase the importation of frozen meat, and many other articles to come into competition with the producers of this country? It is quite clear that the interest of the farmers is a matter of secondary consideration. The Government cannot accomplish anything to promote the farmers' interests by sending a commercial agent to Australia, although they might further manufacturing interests.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. While I do not object to the reductions made in the salaries, I want to know the principle on Mr. Martin.

which they are made. In regard to the commissioner, why has his salary been reduced, or has the hon, gentleman appointed a new commissioner?

Mr. DALY. Mr. Smith remains commissioner, and the reduction was made with his consent. Other reductions amounting to $200 each were made in salaries of the superintendent of mines, Mr. Pearce, of Mr. Gordon, inspector, and of the secretary, Mr. Burpee.

Mr. MILLS (Both well). The Winnipeg office should be abolished, for no staff is required there except an agent. It is duplicating the business in a most unnecessary way, and the actual amount of work coming into the office might be performed by a single individual.

Mr. DALY. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Government appointed a Civil Service Commission in 1891, and that commission recommended the abolition of the Winnipeg office. It was pointed out that at the time the office was established the Canadian Pacific Railway had not been built, and that office was necessary to save time.

Mr. DALY. The office is absolutely necessary and will have to be continued, possibly with not the same number of clerks, and the staff will be gradually reduced. The hon. member for Bothwell is mistaken in regard to duplication of work. The work done there is surprising. It is necessary to have some person as commissioner who is in touch with the people of Manitoba and the Northwest. Under the Dominion Lands Act all applications for patents come before him and he countersigns them, and immediately this is done a homesteader can deal with it the same as if a patent was issued. There are continually such applications before him for decision. He has also many other duties to perform, and I am satisfied that for years to come it will be absolutely necessary in order to conduct the business satisfactorily to have a commissioner there.

Mr. McMULLEN. It might be necessary to keep an agent there. I give the hon. Minister the opinion of the whole Civil Service Commission, which was appointed to investigate the civil service, both inside and out, and that commission dealt particularly with the Winnipeg office and declared that there was no possible excuse for continuing it in existence. I give the commission's decision in reply to the statement of the Minister of the Interior.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here we are charged $117,000 for Dominion lands chargeable to income, $75,000 for Dominion lands chargeable to capital, and then there is an expenditure of $100,000 at headquarters, making altogether about $300,000, while our total receipts from the North-west were barely $158,000 according to the statement supplied here by the Finance Minister. So it takes $2 in our North-west to collect $1. There is no use in disguising that the people of Canada have very just cause of complaint. I cannot understand how, when the total receipts of the whole North-west from sales of land, timber limits and ranches, are only $158,000, it is necessary to spend $300,-000 for staff.

Mr. DALY. Where is the revenue to come from?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We should not expend the money.

Mr. DALY. Where are we to derive the one of the offices is abolished. revenue? Pre-emptions having been abolished our revenue from that source has ceased; the only revenue we can expect is from the sale of Dominion lands, and the railway companies having lands for sale are strong competitors. The revenue is one which may decrease instead of increase. but the expenditure as regards the agencies will have to be continued. It is impossible to measure the expenditure by the receipts in this case. It is necessary to have the agents to conduct the business of the department and encourage settlers. If we were receiving $2.50 an acre for pre-emptions, the hon, gentleman might have reason to take exception, but we are deriving no revenue except from timber and the sources I have mentioned, and the revenue cannot be expected to meet the expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a very strong argument for cutting down the expenditure.

Mr. DALY. It has been cut down as far as possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have the strongest possible objection to the way business is conducted in the North-west Territories. Any man of business habits could conduct the Interior Department for about one-third the present amount, and no doubt the same results would follow. The salaries of the outside service amount to $40,000, the expense of travelling is $30,000, then there are other expenditures for Dominion land agencies amounting to $41,-COO. I do not believe if the department was conducted on business principles that we need to spend half, or perhaps one-third of the sum we are now expending, and it is high time for the Canadian public at large to demand that the North-west expenses should be very materially reduced. We have a deficit of $4,500,000, according to the statement of the Finance Minister, and here we are only receiving $150,000 revenue and spending $300,000 in collecting it. No wonder we have a deficit of $4,500,000.

Customs—Collection of Revenue...... $874,285

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. there are very considerable reductions here and I would like to ask on what principle the hon. gentleman has made them? Was he very extravagant before or is he extra economical now?

Mr. WALLACE. We are getting more economical. I have gone through each port myself and we are superannuating a number of the old officers, some of them 70 or 80 years of age. We are proposing to make the men work harder than they did before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About what number of officials have been superannuated?

Mr. WALLACE. About fifteen, and every

Mr. McMULLEN. What reduction is made in the matter of printing?

Mr. WALLACE. In the old days when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power newspaper advertising amounted to many thousands of dollars. Last year we spent not a dollar, except for advertising unclaimed goods. The printing is now done at the Bureau, and consists of the necessary forms and books for officers which must be printed if the business is to be carried on.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am very glad to find that the hon, gentleman is reducing the expenditure in connection with advertising.

Mr. WALLACE. We are not reducing the expenses because we have none at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will give the hon. what has been spent by his gentleman Government in advertising in the several newspapers for the eight years between 1887 and 1894. I have prepared the statement myself and it will be found to be correct.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that in the Customs Department?

Mr. McMULLEN. It is in connection with the Government service.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the hon. gentleman ought be asked to confine it to Customs Department.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman referred to what was spent by a previous Government, and I wanted to give him what this Government spent for advertising.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon, gentleman can give no figures for the Customs Department, because there are none.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will give you the gross figures:

Toronto "World," $7,855.74; Toronto "Mail," up to 1889, and then the "Empire," $41,143.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think this is in order.

Mr. McMULLEN. The customs advertising are included in these sums.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend say that $1 of that has been spent by the Customs Department.

AND REPORT OF THE PARTY OF THE

Mr. McMULLEN. It has been spent by the Government anyway:

The St. John "Sun" got $88,036.08; the Regina "Leader" got $39,279.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The whole amount in the Estimates is $15,000, and the hon, gentleman has already given about $150,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. There are only a few more items, and the remark of the Controller of Customs make it necessary that I should give them:

The Yarmouth "Times" got $22,608; the Charlottetown "Examiner," $12,377; the Halifax "Herald," $62,603; the Moncton "Times," $83,-908; the Montreal "Gazette," $44,408; the Quebec "Chronicle," $32,365.

That has all been drawn by each of these papers in eight years.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the Controller of Customs if he has done anything with regard to getting an examining warehouse close to the post office at Winnipeg?

Mr. WALLACE. I have made application to the Minister of Public Works with regard to getting accommodation for the small parcels and packages in the post office. I have not been able to accomplish anything with regard to the examining warehouse.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the hon, gentleman tell me why he has not been able to accomplish anything?

Mr. WALLACE. For the simple reason that it would cost many thousands of dol-We have got a good examining warehouse now as the hon. gentleman knows, although it is true that it is not in the centre of the city. It is not in the centre of the city, it is true; but for commercial purposes, there are no complaints of any extent about it. I met the merchants of Winnipeg when I was up there last December, and their only complaint was on account of postal parcels having to be taken to the custom-house, a considerable distance. promised to try to have that remedied, and expect to have it remedied in a short time. They also mentioned that it would be a convenience to have the examining warehouse nearer the centre of the city; but there would be an inconvenience in that as well, because it would not do to have the examining warehouse there without the custom-house also.

Mr. MARTIN. It strikes me the hon. gentleman could make this arrangement without any increased cost. The Dominion lands office occupies a considerable portion of the Government building, and it is not very important, it might be removed to the present custom-house, and the custom-house given the flat now occupied by the land office. I am inclined to think that since the election has been removed a little further off, the hon. gentleman is not so active as he was at the time he met the merchants.

Mr. WALLACE. If the custom-house were removed to the post office building, we would have to have an examining warehouse adjacent to it. I made an examination as to that with our inspector, and we found that the lowest price for which we could get a suitable examining warehouse would be $2,700.

Mr. MARTIN. I am satisfied that is away beyond the mark.

Mr. DALY. I may say that the matter has been discussed between the collector of customs and myself. There is no objection on our part to going to the custom-house and giving up the flat we occupy in the post office. The only question is the question of expense.

Mr. MARTIN. I know a building at the rear of the post office, belonging to Mr. Mitchell, which could be got for $1,200.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:-

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending on the 30th June, 1896, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons. Government House, Ottawa, July, 1895.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That the Message of His Excellency the Governor General be referred to the Committee of Supply.

He said: These Estimates are only such as are necessary because of changes which have been made in the main Estimates. For instance, the hon. Minister of Militia had to make savings in the main Estimates sufficient to drill the active corps of the cities. To do that he had to strike out certain items. The sum of $8,000 in these Estimates is to make up for that. Then, in the rearrangement of the Estimates for culling timber, which involves no more expense to the country, an item of $14,000 has to be provided for. A sum of $1,000 is asked for the family of the late Senator Burns, in which I think the whole House will concur.

There are two or three other items which are simply rearrangements of items in the main Estimates.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I shall not say very much about these Supplementary Estimates, but what arrangement of business will the hon. gentleman have for Monday?

Mr. FOSTER. We will take Bills and Supply, or may be, instead of Supply, go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What particular Bills?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say generally there is the North-west Territories Representation Act, the Lead Smelting, the Bill to amend the Customs Act, and two or three Bills by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman intend to proceed with the amendment to the Superannuation Act?

Mr. FOSTER. I think I shall. I will not say positively.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 15th July, 1895.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

WINDING UP ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 144) to amend the Winding Up Act, being chapter one hundred and twenty-nine of the Revised Statutes. He said: This is a short Bill, and is for the purpose of making applicable in the various provinces the practice and procedure in regard to the discovery of assets of judgment debtors.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

EXEMPTIONS UNDER THE INSURANCE ACT.

And the same of the company of the contract of

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 145) to authorize the Treasury Board to exempt sundry societies from the operation of the Insurance Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to give power to the Treasury Board to exempt certain classes of insurance societies from the operation of Take, for instance, the the Insurance Act. organizations of the Railroad Engineers. Conductors and Brakemen. These classes of employees have among themselves associations for insurance against death and against accidents, the benefits being confined to their own members. They are a class of men who are either formally prohibited from insuring in other societies, or they are practically prohibited by the high rates that are charged for men in such hazardous occupa-These societies have been carrying on their operations for some time on the supposition that they are exempted under section 43 of the Insurance Act. However, it is their practice to give the amount for which the member is insured upon total disability as well as upon death, so that in that way they carry on accident as well as life in-They have been prosecuted in surance. several instances by certain informers, who are endeavouring to recover penalties in that way. It is proposed by this Bill, to give the Treasury Board power to exempt such a society, if the case appears to be one worthy I submitted the matter, which is one of real hardship to railroad engineers and brakemen and conductors, to the Superintendent of Insurance, who, after looking into it very thoroughly, recommended that this course should be pursued. I may say, that in the province of Ontario, they are exempted by Act of the province itself. This would put them in the same position in relation to the Dominion Act that they now are in as regards the Ontario Insurance Act.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is it confined to this one class of societies?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; to this class of societies that does not carry on a general insurance business, so that it is clear from possibilities of abuse in that way.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does it extend to benefit societies having insurance organizations of their own?

Mr. FOSTER. You may say that the railroad men have an insurance scheme of their own, for their members pay these fees and the members or their successors get the benefits. This Bill does not refer to those having regular insurance features and doing a general business to any in whose case it is clearly established that hardship exists.

Mr. MULOCK. Of course, it is premature to discuss, the Bill at this stage, while judging from the remarks of the Finance Minister, the recommendation may be perfectly proper to exempt the societies named from the operation of the Insurance Act, yet the general character of the recommendation may be open to criticism. If we are to understand from the explanation of the hon. Minister, that, without rhyme or reason or without following any statutory lines, the Superintendent of Insurance, or the Government of the day, can, of its own volition, exempt from the provisions of the Insurance Act any associations that may be successful in applying, I think it is a very wide power to vest in any Government. The legislation, I think, should prescribe lines upon which the discretion of the Government can be exercised.

Mr. FOSTER. It does.

Mr. MULOCK. When the Bill is printed, we shall see whether it is open to what I consider as an objection. I do not wish these remarks to be considered as hostile to the particular society named. The only reason that makes it necessary for the society that has been cited to apply for relief is that its insurance branch is not confined to life insurance, and section 43 of the Insurance Act exempts only those associations that pay at death, and not those that pay because of disability. I hope that when the Bill is printed it will appear that distinct lines are laid down on which alone the Government's discretion can be exercised.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not rise to offer any objection to the Bill, but to point out that great dfficulties have been found in deciding as to the proper interpretation of the law. It is certainly most unhappily worded. I would suggest to my hon. friend that this would be a good opportunity of making clear what the Government think it means, and what it has been held by one of the courts to mean, but as to which there is great difference of opinion.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

WHARF ON THE ISLAND OF OR-LEANS.

Mr. CASEY (for Mr. Langelier) asked. How much has the Government expended on the works of the St. Laurent wharf on the Island of Orleans, and what was the cost of the storehouse built on the said wharf, and what has been done with the timber, iron and other materials remaining after the completion of the works on the said wharf?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. The wharf at St. Laurent was originally constructed in 1866, and the cost of the original work was $23,594.42. In 1890-91 an extension was built, which cost $7,841.87; making a total of $31,436.29. 2. In 1893 an expenditure of $665 was authorized for the construction of an open freight shed on the wharf, and repairs to the planking, about $450 being the cost of the shed, and $215 being expended on repairs. 3. The department is informed by the resident engineer that he is not aware that any materials of any kind were left after the completion of the work.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Mr. CASEY (for Mr. Langelier) asked, What is the annual revenue of the Three Rivers Harbour Commission? What are the annual expenses of the said commission, for salaries and all other expenditure? Is the Three Rivers Harbour Commission in debt to the Government. If so, the details of such indebtedness?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. The total revenue for the year 1894 was $7,164.02. 2. The expenses for the same year were $5,858.91, being as follows:—

~ 1 · 1 · 1 · 1 · 1 · 1 · 1 · 1 · 1 · 1	04 004 40

3. As per the reply of the Minister of Finance on the 8th instant (page 4099 of the unrevised edition) the Three Rivers Harbour Commission owed the Government on 30th June last, for loan, $81,760.97; arrears of interest, $30,479.24; arrears and interest thereon on account of sinking fund, $8,751.82. There is a sum of $800.52 at credit of the sinking fund.

CHARLES LEDUC.

Mr. DEVLIN asked, Is Charles Leduc in the employ of the Government? If so, what position does he occupy and what salary does he receive? Did he ever visit his office during the year ending 30th June, 1895, and if so, on how many days was he present? What amounts have been paid to him in the way of salary and for other reasons during the years 1891-92-93 and 1894?

Mr. FOSTER. 1. Yes. 2. He is paymaster of the Ottawa River Works branch of the Department of Public Works, and receives a salary of $100 per month. 3. Yes, but no written record was kept of such attendance. Mr. Leduc's work is principally outside work as paymaster. 4. In 1891-92 the salary was $1,200; other expenses, $86.31; 1892-93, salary, $1,200; other expenses, $82.37; 1893-94, salary, $1,200.

COLLECTOR OF TOLLS AT GRENVILLE.

Mr. CHRISTIE asked, Has the Government made any inquiry into the position of Mr. Alexander Pridham, collector of tolls at Grenville, and has the Government given permission to said Mr. Pridham to carry on a general business as merchant in the name of his clerk?

Mr. HAGGART. In 1893 the attention of the Government was drawn to the fact that Mr. Alexander Pridham, collector of tolls, Grenville Canal, was keeping a general store, when he was informed that he would either have to resign his position or give up his He elected to retain his official position and gave up his store. W. W. OGILVIE'S CLAIM FOR DRAW-BACK.

Mr. MACDONALD (for Mr. Lister) asked. Has W. W. Ogilvie made a claim for drawback of duty paid on imported corn? If so, when was such claim made and what was the amount claimed? Was the claim supported by affidavit or statutory declaration? If so, what was the name of the person who swore to the same? What was the name of the official before who it was Under what circumstances would sworn? he be entitled to the drawback? Is the affidavit in the possession of the Government? Has an investigation been ordered or made in respect of such claim? If so, What who is the official who made it? was his report? How much money has been paid to the said Ogilvie by way of drawback of duty on imported corn prior to his said claim, and is it the intention to pay the claim?

Mr. CASEY. Has the $16,000 odd been paid?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Where is your affidavit?

Mr. WALLACE. Perhaps the hon. member for Grey can tell.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BOYLE. I call the attention of the House to omissions in the Votes and Proceedings of Wednesday last, 10th July. A division was taken on the amendment moved by the hon. member for East York, that said Bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to add the following clause: Then follows the clause, setting out that the rate charged should not be more than two cents per mile. On that division I voted nay. I find my name is omitted from the division list. On Friday, 12th July, an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), on going into Committee of Supply, relating to the appointment of Lieutenant-Governors. A division was taken on the amendment. I voted nay, but I find my name omitted.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MARTIN. I should like to ask the Postmaster General when the papers relating to the letting of mail contract between Battleford and Saskatoon will be brought down?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The return has been ordered, and I expect it will be brought down at an early day. I take advantage of this opportunity to give the hon. gentleman some information in relation to that contract to which the hon, gentleman referred when the Estimates were under discussion. learned from my department that no tender was received from Mr. Dewar in regard to the mail contract which was under discus-

Mr. MARTIN. Was that 1890?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, and there was no tender asked for and no advertisement published asking for tenders. That is the information I have received, and I thought

WRECK OF STEAMSHIP "MEXICO."

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to inquire from the Government if they have had any official information of the wreck of the steamer "Mexico" in the Straits of Belle Isle, this vessel having on board the first cargo of dairy produce sent by the Government under the cold storage system as an experiment? Do the Government intend to make immediate provision for another experimental shipment? I hold that such a course should be followed, and those engaged in the trade would like to know the Government's intention.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can answer part of the question put by the hon. gentleman. The steamer "Mexico" has been wrecked. A telegram was received by my department this morning stating that the vessed was in a wreck and in danger of foundering, and calling for a Government steamer to go and aid the vessel. Finding there was no danger to life, I did not think it was a case where a Government steamer should be sent.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In answer to the other part of the question, I may say that the next ship will be the "Dominion" of the same line, which will leave Montreal on 18th July, with cold storage facilities.

PAYMENT OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BRYSON. I desire to inquire if the Government has decided to place Bill (No. 23) on the Government Orders? This is the Bill to which I drew attention about ten days ago. It is one of very great importance, and I should like to ask the Government if they have formed a decision as to what course they will adopt?

Mr. HAGGART. The Government have not decided to place the Bill in question on the Government Orders. It is a Bill of importance, and one which will require a great deal of care in its preparation. The statement made by the hon, gentleman showed that it is a Bill to provide a more speedy mode of collecting wages by railway employees when such are A great deal nine or ten months in arrear. of consideration and care will be required in drafting a suitable Bill in order to provide that some railway corporations shall not be, to a certain extent, blackmailed. intention of the Government to prepare a Bill in the direction of the Bill proposed by my hon, friend. NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES REPRE-SENTATION ACT.

House resumed adjourned debate on proposed motion of Mr. Daly for third reading of Bill (No. 121) further to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think there are some objectionable features in this Bill which I hope the hon, gentleman will not press. There is a provision in section 2. providing that section 13 of chapter 15 be repealed, and the following substituted: "If any elector finds his name not on the voters' list in the polling subdivision to which he belongs, he may apply to the enumerator not later than two days before polling day, to have his name added to the said list." This will make a alteration serious in My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), when the subject was up for discussion the other day, said: that this was not really a voters' list as we understand the matter at all. That is so. There is no voters' list in the North-west Territories as at all corresponding to the voters' lists in the other parts of the Dominion. The preparation of this list seems to be merely for convenience. because the law as it now stands, and which the hon, gentleman proposes to amend and alter in this one important particular, provides that a person may come forward on the day of election and then apply to have his name put upon the voters' list, and he may vote immediately after having his name so placed. What the Minister now proposes is, that a person to vote at the election must apply at least two days before the day of election. Well, the polling divisions in the North-west Territories are in many places very large. They embrace a very considerable extent of territory. The population is sparse, the number of voters few, and in, I believe, the majority of cases heretofore, the voters did not apply to have their names put upon this list until they appeared at the polls for the purpose of recording their votes. Many of these persons will now be obliged to go a long way to the returning officer in order to have their names put upon the list, and the Minister proposes to restrict practically the right to vote-which is protected against spurious voting by the provision of the oath that the persons are required to take-by insisting that the person shall at least two days before the day of polling go to the returning officer and have his name put upon the list. That will be a matter of very great inconvenience. You compel a man who resides 20 miles away from the returning officer to go to that person to have his name entered for the purpose of recording his vote. I can see no reason whatever for requiring the party to subscribe to a voters' list of this kind before the day of polling. The law as it stood was much more convenient than it will be by the change introduced, and I propose, Mr. Speaker: "That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee to so amend it as to strike out this provision.'

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Mills) has already spoken on this question, and some one else will have to move the amendment.

Mr. LAURIER. I beg to move the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) cannot do so either. He moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. EDGAR moved in amendment:

That the word "now" be struck out of the motion and the words "this day six months" added at the end thereof.

Mr. DALY. I again call the attention of the hon, gentleman to the fact that there is nothing new in the Bill before the House. We are simply making a correction that should have been made last year. In the amendment to the North-west Territories Act last session, a change was made providing, as the law now stands, that a voter might have the privilege of putting his name on the voters' list two days before the election. Previous to that the law provided that he could put it on the night before the election. The hon. gentleman anticipates, that on account of the sparse settlement of the country a person may be prejudiced, but the hon. gentleman forgets that the polling divisions for which enumerators are appointed are numerous and that no be prejudiced, because could man the districts are of such extent one can come the that any to merator and get his name upon the list. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) stated that it made no difference whether a man's name was upon the list or not, because he could vote in any event. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. He evidently did not read the law, because section 32 of the North-west Territories Representation Act provides as follows:-

Every enumerator, having revised and corrected such returned copy of each voters' list compiled by him, if he deems such correction necessary, as provided in the next preceding section, shall write at the foot of such copy and close to the last name thereon two days immediately preceding the polling day, a certificate in the form of the second certificate contained in form "K" in the schedule to this Act.—49 Vic., cap. 24, sec. 32—57-58 Vic., cap. 15.

Section 33 provides:

The enumerator shall deliver the voters' list so certified forthwith, or before eight o'clock in the morning of the polling day, to the deputy returning officer for the polling division to which it relates; and such list, as received by such deputy returning officer, shall be the voters' list for such polling division.—49 Vic., cap. 24, sec. 33—57-58 Vic., cap. 15.

Sections 45 and 46 provide:

45. Every person whose name is on the voters' list, unless sworn as in the next preceding section provided shall, before being permitted to vote, if required by any candidate, agent or elector, take the said oath number one, and if he refuses to take the same, erasing lines shall be drawn through his name on the voters' list, and the words "refused to be sworn" written thereafter.—49 Vic., cap. 24, sec. 45.

46. Every voter shall be entitled to vote whose name is on the voters' list and has not been erased therefrom in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this Act, or whose name is added to the said list as herein provided, but if any such voter, when required by the deputy returning officer, or by any candidate, agent or elector, refuses to take oath number two in the said form "P," he shall not be permitted to vote, and if his name has been entered in the pollbook, erasing lines shall be drawn through it, and the words "refused to take oath number two" written thereafter.—49 Vic., cap. 24, sec. 46.

Therefore, according to the law as it stands, the man's name must be upon the list before he can vote.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What about section 44?

Mr. DALY. Section 44 was repealed, and by the amendment of last session, when we introduced the ballot into the North-west Territories, section 45 of the Revised Statutes, chapter 8, applies as to the poll, and reads as follows:—

Not more than one elector for each compartment shall, at any one time, enter the room where the poll is held, and each elector upon so entering shall declare his name, surname and addition, which shall be entered or recorded by the poll clerk in the poll-book provided for that purpose, which shall be kept in the form "R" in the first schedule to this Act; and if the same are found on the list of voters for the polling district of such polling station, he shall receive from the deputy returning officer a ballot paper, on the back of which such deputy returning officer has previously put his initials, so placed that when the ballot is folded, they can be seen without opening it, and on the counterfoil to which he has placed a number corresponding to that placed opposite the voter's name on the poll-book.

His name must be upon the list before he can get a ballot paper. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) was wrong in his statement. The voter's name must be upon the list before he can vote.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He could have got it on when he went to vote.

Mr. DALY. No, he cannot; and he never could.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Oh, yes.

Mr. DALY. The hon, gentleman is mistaken. The law previously provided that the night before polling day he could get his name upon the list.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is not the provision of section 44.

Mr. DALY. That was repealed last session, and section 50 of the Dominion Act If the hon, gentleman was substituted. will look at the Act of 1894 he will find that by section 10 of the Act, certain paragraphs and sections of chapter 8 were incorporated in the Act, and amongst them clauses 51 to 55, I think, inclusive. think, 51 to 55, inclusive. was repealed last Section 44 session. The consequence is that the law, as it now stands, independent of the amendment which is proposed, which is only to correct a mistake made last session, is that a man can get his name put on the list only two days before the polling.

Mr. McCARTHY. If my hon. friend were right in his law, this would not be a valid objection, because it would be only bringing the notice into conformity with the amendment which the hon. Minister says was made last session. But I think the hon. gentleman will find that that amendment was not made. Section 31 was amended to provide that the enumerator, two days before the polling day, shall add to the list the name of any qualified voter that has been omitted. Section 44 provides that the deputy returning officer shall, while the poll is open, if required by any elector whose name is not on the voters' list, administer to such elector the oath, and shall then add his name to That is certainly not directly the list. amended, and I do not think it is inferentially amended by anything in the Act of last session. At the same time, I think should not refuse to read the Bill the third time, but I propose that we should go back into committee to amend section 2 by striking out the notice, and if necessary to repeal section 44. I do not see any object in the two days limit, and it seems to me inconsistent with the other provision. We have first a provision for an enumerator, to whom any person can apply to have his name put on the list; then we have the provision that at any time before polling day an elector can have his name put on the list; and thirdly, we have the provision that he can do that on polling day. I do not see why section 31 should not prevail. I therefore propose as an amendment to the amendment:

That all the words in the amendment be struck out, and the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House with power to amend the second clause thereof by striking out "the first subsection," and that it have power "to repeal section four of 57-58 Victoria, Chapter 15."

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think my hon. and learned friend is aware of the reason why that change was made last year, amending chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes. It was found that the provision allowing men to go on the day of polling and have their names put on the list, led to false swearing. There was no time for the enumerator to inquire into their allegations, whereas if they have to make application two days before the day of polling, an inquiry can take place.

Mr. McCARTHY. That section has not been repealed.

Mr. DAVIN. I grant that. I would suggest that it would be well perhaps to go into committee in order to repeal that, and to perfect what was aimed at last session.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Section 44 in the original Act was put in after very full consideration, for the purpose of meeting the convenience of a sparse population over a very large district. My hon, friend says that to require the parties to enter their names not later than two days before polling day is a protection against fraud; but surely the hon. Minister does not propose that the enumerator shall have the power of deciding whether a party has made a false declaration or not, and whether he is entitled to have his name kept on the list or not. That is a very extraordinary power to give to an officer who might undertake to disfranchise every one in the polling division whose political opinions were different from his own. Certainly the law never contemplated giving him any such power, and I do not think we ought to give him that power now.

Mr. MARTIN. I certainly understood last year, when we discussed this matter at considerable length, that the law would be such that the voters' list would be practically of no use at all, except, as explained then by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), that it would save time. By section 44 any person could vote, whether his name was on the voters' list or not, by being sworn, for his name would then be added to the list by the deputy returning officer. I do not understand that the present Bill proposes to alter that. If it did, I should have serious objections. If there is any doubt about that, I think we should make it right, for the reasons mentioned by the hon. member for Bothwell. The provisions as to the preparing of voters' lists in the North-west are most crude. The list is prepared eight days before the election. There are no proper checks upon the enumerators; there are no proper methods of appeal; there is no appeal to anybody; there is no provision for bringing the voter before the enumerator; everything can be done practically in the dark, and everything is done a very short time before the election. If that voters' list is to be final, unless the person applies two days before a polling day, it certainly will be a most gross outrage. There is, as I have said, very little difference, because if a man has not got his It name upon the voters' list, he can get it on, under section 41 of the Election Act. Unless that provision remains, it certainly would be a matter which would require a very thorough discussion, and which would not be submitted to by this House without a great deal of opposition.

Mr. DALY. I have been misled by the brief before me. There has been a mistake on the part of the Clerk. And under those circumstances, I would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his amendment, and the amendment of the Bill will stand until to-morrow, in order that I may look into it. I have been entirely misled by the brief before me.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it the intention of the Government to alter the law so that this may be finally completed two days before the election?

Mr. DALY. That was the intention last session.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it the intention now?

Mr. DALY. I will tell you to-morrow.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That would disfranchise one-half the population.

Mr. DALY. No; it will not.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MULOCK. Inasmuch as the hon. Minister has not quite made up his mind, I would call his attention to the clause he proposes. He proposes that two days before the voting day the electors who want to be put on the list, shall make a journey to wherever the enumerator may be, no matter how long the distance, and make their application. The enumerator may reserve judgment, and the elector will not know until the voting day whether he has a vote or not, but must take his chances.

Mr. DALY. Not at all. I would ask the hon. gentleman to read section 31. That section provides that if any enumerator, at any time before posting up any voters' lists. and two days before the polling day, is fully satisfied from representations made to him by any credible person—so that the man himself does not require to go in order to have his name put on. Any credible person can have it put on.

Mr. McCARTHY. Surely, it ought not to be the law in the North-west that a man should have to take the chance of some credible person—assuming there are credible persons in the North-west—applying on his behalf. The whole of the provisions are very unusual and extreme. There is a clause allowing the enumerator to strike off voters' names, behind their backs, without any cause being shown, or any opportunity being given to show cause to the contrary. I suggest to my hon. friend that he had better reconsider the measure and see whether it would not be better to dispense altogether with the enumerator.

Mr. DALY. It has been the law since 1886, and no objections were ever made until the other day.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

PENITENTIARIES.

Bill (No. 131) to amend the Acts respecting penitentiaries (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to amend the first section by adding the words, "hereafter appointed," so as to make it apply only to future appointments, and not affect the position of any officers now employed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the meaning of the change?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At present there is a special residence either built or purchased for these officers. These were originally heated and lighted by the Government. By the Act of 1887, the salaries of the wardens were increased, and these privileges abolished. The wardens were obliged to live in houses, in several cases, larger and more expensive to maintain than they would personally select. The extra expense of heating is not great. The introduction of electric light, which will soon be universal, will reduce the cost of lighting to a small item. As regards the quarters of the deputy wardens, they are now part of the prisons; and as a matter of fact, are heated by a system common to the building. This provision is not intended to cover fuel for culinary purposes. The which salaries are making excessive trouble in the management of prisons were based upon some theory which is contemplated by the explanation I have given-that is to say, the officers were to pay for heat and light, and so on, and the result of that has been to handicap the department in the management of the prisons. For instance, you may have a warden and a deputy warden, thoroughly good officers, who may not be in accord; they may not work harmoniously together, and yet, while the department may be cognizant of that, it is not possible at times to make a case for the removal or the disciplining of either. Whereas, if the salaries were on a uniform basis, there would be no difficulty whatever in removing one or the other to another penitentiary, and so producing harmony.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The only change is that heretofore you have not provided free fuel and light, and now propose to do so. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And reduce the salaries from what they were before.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do you propose to make a reduction in the salaries which will be about equivalent to the free light and fuel?

Sir CHARLES HIEBERT TUPPER. About equivalent in the case of a warden.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And in the case of the other, is it not so?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Taking it generally, they would be, but they vary.

Mr. MULOCK. It would be better to divide that into two sections. The first applies to light and fuel, and the second to labour. Make the words "and the" in line 9 begin subsection C.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Very well.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there any limit to the area given to wardens and deputy wardens for gardens and grounds?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Speaking from memory, I should say there was not. The area depends upon the circumstances; any waste land that we cannot make use of—

Mr. MULOCK. It is merely a garden for their own use, I suppose. If there was any considerable tract of land—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh, no; we use that ourselves. It is obligatory upon us to use that for prison purposes. What is allowed these officers is practically a vegetable garden.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Referring again to the first part of the section, if I understand it correctly, the change suggested is not to apply to existing officers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Exactly; no existing officer will be interfered with—that is, existing officers of the rank. But in case of promotion, to the persons who become "wardens or deputy wardens," this Act will apply.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then, existing wardens will not be entitled to free light and fuel?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, they get the additional salary under the arrangement of 1887.

Mr. McCARTHY. This clause seems to recognize a proprietary interest in the garden in the warden himself. I do not see how it is limited.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The clause refers to lands "attached to the residence."

Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

Mr. McCARTHY. There is nothing to prevent him using it for his own family.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is what it is intended for.

Mr. McCARTHY. I suppose so. But, if he cultivates more than he requires for his own purposes, there is nothing to prevent him from disposing of the produce of the garden, and so virtually entering into competition with market gardeners.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We limit that. This is the old law—lands "attached to the residence"—and the practice is that we attach or detach the land.

On section 2.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This incorporates as part of the law the construction of the existing law fixed by the late Minister of Justice. The point formed the subject of discussion between the Department of Justice and the Department of Public Works, and this is intended to remove doubt.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see that the 10th section of chapter 182 of the Revised Statutes says:

The construction and repairs of building and other works in the penitentiaries shall be under the control of the Minister of Public Works.

The amendment permits the Minister of Justice, in cases where he holds that convict labour may be used, to take charge of such works. Suppose that the Minister of Justice takes charge of the construction of such works as can be constructed by convict labour, does it become part of his duty to accept plans for buildings, advertise for architects' plans, and so on?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The system is to work in harmony with the Public Works Department. The claim was that this work should be done under the Department of Public Works. But the late Minister of Justice, after a careful examination of the whole Act, insisted upon a construction of the law in accordance with these words, he contending, practically, that where he was of opinion that convict labour could do the work, it should be taken from the control of the Minister of Public Works to that extent. But as to the plans of the works, the Department of Justice invariably resorts to the Department of Public Works.

On section 3,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In this section, after the words "Section 32 of the said Act," I would like to insert the words, "Chapter 182 of the Revised Statutes of Canada." This clause is rather important, Mr. Chairman. An anomalous practice has grown up in Canada. which the officers of the department represent, in some cases, is followed by inconvenience, if not worse consequences, in the administration of the All the officers except the penitentiaries. surgeon and chaplain, were bound to give their full time, and were not permitted to engage in other remunerative employment. The experience of my officers agrees with that in the penitentiaries in other countries, that if you have a prison chaplain and a prison surgeon, and wish to get the benefit of their administration, they should not have any other calling for money; because, if they have outside employment for remuneration, the experience has been— in the main, though there are exceptions even in Canada—that the prison work becomes secondary and their main work is the outside work. And, as the salaries are fixed at such a figure as to make it possible for us to secure the best men as chaplains or surgeons, it is deemed best to have these officers devote themselves exclusively to the prison work.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does that apply to existing officials?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, in these cases, seeing that some of these officers have served for many years and have come in on certain conditions, many of them having abandoned all outside work, we have felt that it was not right to cut them off suddenly in a material degree, as this would do. All these provisions apply to new appointments.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why not put in a short clause that this Act shall only apply to persons hereinafter appointed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That would be well, and I will amend the section in that respect.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think, perhaps, the committee is entitled to some information from the Minister of Justice as to what rule governs his department in the selection of chaplains for penitentiaries, as to their denomination.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We have in all our penitentiaries now, under the present Act, a Roman Catholic and a Protestant chaplain, and no others.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does it follow from that arrangement that the inmates of the penitentiaries are about equally divided between Catholics and Protestants?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, speaking from memory, I think the Catholic denomination is the largest. I may say that in respect to the payment of chaplains, I think Canada is more liberal than any other country in the world, Belgium alone excepted. I think in Belgium the state pays for the chaplains. I think they allow chaplains of every denomination to attend to the prisoners. I think Canada is almost alone tamong the nations of the world where the state pays for the services of chaplains of the two religions.

Mr. SCRIVER. It is to my knowledge that in many of the penitentiaries of the United States, chaplains are paid a salary.

Mr. FRASER. I think we should adopt the method prevailing in Belgium. I do not believe myself in paying chaplains for work of that kind. I think it is the duty, and should be the privilege, of clergymen of all denominations, to do that work gratuitously.

On section 4.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to insert a new clause as section 4, and I move in amendment that paragraph A of section 52 is amended by striking out all the words after "convict" in the 9th line, and substituting the following: "Shall be compelled to labour on any obligatory holidays of the religious denomination to which he adheres."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is that possible? I do not think those parties adhere to any.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is an optional clause, and it enables us to respect the religious convictions of each denomination in the prison.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was suggesting to the hon, gentleman that none of them have any.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They are supposed to have those of the sect to which they belong.

Mr. CHARLTON. How would the hon. gentleman do in the case of the Seventh Day Baptists, who observe Saturday as the Sabbath?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We shall have to study their faith and respect their prejudice.

On section 5,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A memo. has been handed to me setting forth the unfairness of the operation of the present section. For instance, if an official was appointed on the 2nd day of last July, he would not get his annual increment until the 1st July, 1896; while an official appointed two days previously, would secure his increment on the 1st July, 1895.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is the statutory increment?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, each year.

On section 6.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentlemen have the Bill before them as to what is proposed. I will run over the salaries of some of the officials, beginning with the wardens:

Penitentiary. Officer.	Minimum Salary.	Maximum Salary.	Present Salary.
Kingston. Warden. St. Vincent de Paul do Dorchester do Manitoba. do British Columbia do Kingston Deputy Warden St. Vincent de Paul do Dorchester do Manitoba do	2,000 2,000 2,000 1,200 1,200 1,100	$3,000 2,800 2,400 2,400 2,400 1,500 1,500 1,400 1,200	$3,000 2,800 2,400 2,100 2,300 late warden. 1,500 1,500 1,400 1,000
British Columbia do Kingston Accountant. St. Vincent de Paul. do Dorchester do Manitoba. do British Columbia do	900 800 800	1,200 1,200 1,100 1,100 1,000 1,100	1,400 1,400 1,000 1,100 1,000 950 1,000 late salary.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With reference to wardens and deputy wardens, the hon. gentleman adopts the minimum, and in fixing the salary for the future appointments of accountants, he adopts the maximum.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Looking over the field, I have taken the opinions of men who have had large experience, and the salaries given are sufficient to enable the Government to secure the services of thoroughly good men. The amount to be paid surgeons is $1,500. At the present time the rates are: Kingston, $1,400 to $1,800; St. Vincent de Paul, $1,000 to $1,400; Dorchester, $1,200 to $1,400; Manitoba, $1,000 to $1,200; British Columbia, $600. In two cases Parliament has been voting $200 over the maximum for many years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So the hon. gentleman is going to increase the salary paid to the surgeon in British Columbia.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, in some cases there is quite a levelling up, because the differences have been most extraordinary, and without reason. In a large penitentiary such as Kingston the warden has a very large staff, while in a small penitentiary the warden has a small staff. There is no system at present prevailing in regard to salaries. Under this Bill we propose to have the system of uniformity and the benefits flowing from it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Can the hon, gentleman state what is the average number of immates in the British Columbia penitentiary, as compared with the average number in St. Vincent de Paul?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Speaking off-hand, about half.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is it considered fair to give them the same salary?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Kingston affords a good illustration. The salary of the surgeon is $1,500 and there are 490 convicts; Dorchester has half that number. Under this Bill there would be uniformity as regards salary. I say the proposed system is the right one, for this reason, that in the case of Dorchester the warden has only half the staff to assist him. In Kingston, where there is a large number of prisoners, there is a very large staff, and the duties of the warden at Kingston and at Dorchester are exactly the same.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How does that argument apply to the case of a surgeon who has not a staff under him? In some penitentiaries the duties of a surgeon would be two or three times as large as the duties of a similar officer in other institutions.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No doubt one officer may have heavier work than another, particularly in the case of a surgeon in one of the large penitentiaries. If we pay a sufficient sum to make it obligatory on the medical men to give their exclusive attention to a penitentiary, that is all we can do. No doubt in some prisons the surgeon will have less to do, though according to this system each surgeon will be drawing the same salary. This, however, will be a great improvement over the system that now obtains, where these physicians take outside practice and receive in some cases a sum far below that to which they are fairly entitled, and we take care to pay a sufficient salary to obtain the services of intelligent and able men.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the proposal of the hon, gentleman is not a reasonable one. Take the case of a physician who is employed at a penitentiary where there are very few convicts. If he is denied the right to practice outside, he will certainly in a few years not be well qualified to discharge his duties. He would be very much more efficient if he were to engage in outside practice, but of course it should only be to such an extent as not to interfere with his duties in the penitentiary. Where an officer has a large number of convicts to look after, whether he is warden or physician, his responsibilities are greater and he is entitled to a larger salary than such an officer in a penitentiary with a smaller number of convicts. It will be a great mistake to undertake to pay a small salary to an officer, especially a physician or surgeon, and provide that he shall not engage in any practice whatever outside his official position. It was simply condemning a man to become rusty in his profession, and every year he would be less qualified to discharge his duties. The same observation may be made with respect to wardens, for a warden this case, he would have to be there. We in a large penitentiary has greater danger ask both the chaplains and the physicians to face and much greater responsibility is resting on him to see that none escape and to the penitentiaries, and we cannot, of that proper order is maintained in the institution than a similar officer in a small penitentiary. The Minister in undertaking lains and some surgeons less heavily than to reduce the salaries in cases even where a large amount of work is to be performed. and to introduce a system of uniformity, is laying down a rule that will be far more objectionable than the one which now exists.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It will be found that the Government have provided an ample sum of money to pay the medical staff, judging by other institutions, such as public hospitals where of patients require large number attendance and where the work very hard. It is impossible to devise any system having this object in view that will satisfactory on all prove actually points. In British Columbia penitentiary, for example, and in Manitoba penitentiary, there are 100 inmates in each case, but the physician of the former receives $1,200 and of the latter, $600; and so the whole list of salaries might be gone through and considered. Two points are to be gained by this Bill: first, we provide a sufficient sum to get good men; and second, having done that, we are able to move these men from point to point as occasion requires without doing injustice to any of them. The saving will be considerable, and we have only struck off abnormal increases that have been made in the past.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why does the gentleman make a distinction between an accountant and storekeeper, and state in the Bill that an accountant shall only get a salary provided the inmates number 300. What provision is made in case the number of inmates does not reach 300, and what is the distinction between warden, accountant and other officers?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The provision referred to does not affect the question of salary. Each officer is to be paid $1,200, and in penitentiaries where there are 300 inmates the accountant is also to act as warden's clerk.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the Minister intend to apply the same principle to chaplains as he does to physicians?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. I presume there would be not more than seven or eight Roman Catholic convicts in Stony Mountain penitentiary. At present I understand the chaplain gets about $600 a year, and I am sure he is scarcely ever there, while the Protestant chaplain remains at the penitentiary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. to give their exclusive time and attention course, count noses every day. I frankly admit that the work will fall on some chapon others. By having the exclusive attention of those officers it will remove some of the complaints that have been made. One of the objections from prisoners' aid societies is based on the fact that these officers sometimes look upon the convicts as a secondary consideration, their main work being somewhere else. The officers do not take such pride in their work as they would, if the convicts happen to be their sole charge. The hon. gentleman is right in the case of Manitoba. One religious denomination would be comparatively small, but the amount involved is also small.

Mr. MARTIN. What would be the salary of the chaplain in Manitoba?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At present it is $1,000 in one case, and $800 in the other. If there is any new appointment made, both these chaplains will be paid $800 a year.

Mr. MARTIN. The Protestant chaplain lives there and devotes his whole time to the work, as most of the convicts are Pro-The Roman Catholic chaplain testants. could not possibly find anything to do the whole time if he were there. He is a priest and has considerable other duties. It does seem absurd to employ a man and keep him there all the time and pay him $800 a year, when he has got only seven or eight to attend to, and, at the same time, to pay the other man the same sum for looking after eighty or ninety. The present salary seems to be altogether too large for the work involved.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Justice. if I understood him correctly, said that as the medical officers were at present paid only a small salary, they generally devoted most of the time to outside practice, and made the penitentiary practice subsidiary to their private practice so that the con-victs did not get their best attention. The hon, gentleman states that under the present Bill it is intended to give the medical men what would be considered a reasonable salary for their whole time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it provided by this Bill that the medical man, when so employed, cannot exercise his right as a medical man, either in consultation or practice, or in any way, outside of the penitentiary?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes; he is to be the prison surgeon, exclusively.

Mr. SPROULE. In the event of his doing any other practice, in consultation, or otherwise, does the Bill prevent him taking a fee for that?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Your arrangements, of course, might provide that, but I do not imagine that they would interfere with his right under his diploma.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We say that so long as he is our surgeon, he must be our surgeon exclusively, as is the case in large hospitals. It has been represented with great force, that, as we require medical officers, we ought to have good men, who should be our own officers exclusively, as is the case in every well-conducted prison. It is thought better that they should not be at the beck and call of a general practice.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They cannot remain fit for the discharge of their duties if they are confined to a small institution, and not allowed to practice outside.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We have got but few penitentiaries, and the most of them are removed quite a distance from the city, such as Kingston, Stony Mountain, and Dorchester. It would seem that the surgeon in these cases ought to be very near the prison.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this provision is an injustice to the medical profession, and to the neighbourhood in which the penitentiary is situated. Many of these penitentiaries have only a limited number of prisoners, and the time of a medical man cannot be amply occupied in attending to 300 persons, even if half of them are sick, which is not the case. There would be only a small percentage sick, and the result would be that a medical man, knowing that his salary and living were assured, might become rusty in his profession. would not have the same stimulus as if he were doing a much more extensive practice. On the other hand, it is to be supposed that these men are competent in their profession, and I respectfully submit, that being so, the community should not be denied the benefit of their skill, when it might occasionally be called into requisition, either in consultation or in cases of emergency. Suppose that an accident should happen, and that no other doctor than the medical officer of the penitentiary were available, should the fact that he was connected with the penitentiary prevent him from giving assistance or advice? That provision seems to be almost unreasonable.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman is pressing it a little far. I do not suppose that Parliament expects the Department of Justice to close its eyes and ears to all human sympathy. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has now suggested that a terrible accident might happen near a penitentiary, and that one of those surgeons might feel that he was not at liberty to render assistance. I do not think there is anything in the spirit of the Act to prevent that, nor was it for a moment contemplated to prevent the surgeon rendering assistance in such cases. whole point is that he is to be exclusively our officer. At present our difficulty is that he is only incidentally our officer, and chiefly interested in private practice. In the case of these serious accidents referred to by the hon, gentleman, it may be half a day sometimes before the services of the surgeon can be obtained under the present arrangement. Under this Bill his first duty would be to the prisoners.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not provide, then, that his first duty shall be to the prisoners. Do not prevent him discharging any other duties so long as they do not interfere with his attendance at the prison.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This will do no injustice to any man, as it does not apply to any surgeon at present in the service. Every future appointee will know the provisions of this Bill before he enters the service. But I feel that I am not speaking without the book, having some knowledge of the practice in other institutions. In our own country, some of the most brilliant men now in the medical profession have spent a large portion of their lives in this work for a very small sum of money; and the sum provided for here is, comparatively speaking, exceedingly generous.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to the sum, nor do I say it is not adequate compensation; but I do object to the contention that a medical man who attends a hundred prisoners for twenty years is just as efficient as the one who attends a thousand, because the one is able to be actively engaged in his profession and to keep up with the times, while the other is provided for, whether he does little or nothing, and he has no stimulus to keep up with the times. Then, some of these men are experts in a particular line, for instance, in typhoid fever or diphtheria, and I do not think it would be incompatible with the requirements of the situation that their services should be available for consultation, without encroachThe state of the s

Mr. CORBOULD. I notice that the number of convicts in the Manitoba penitentiary is about the same as the number in the British Columbia penitentiary, while the doctor in the former is paid about double the amount paid to the doctor in the latter. I would like to ask why there is this difference?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am removing the difference. I see no reason for it whatever. I take the ground that where the responsibilities and duties are the same, the poorest way to ascertain the compensation to be allowed is to count the number of heads requiring attention. I think all we should do is to provide adequate remuneration for proper and competent men, and appoint only such, and, when we find that they are incompetent, get rid of them.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the Minister of Justice what saving he estimates will be effected when the schedule of salaries is in full operation in all the penitentiaries?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. $4,000 odd per year.

Mr. McCARTHY. It seems to me a rather scandalous affair to which the hon. member for Winnipeg has drawn attention, that a gentleman there gets $800 a year for attending to three or four convicts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. $800 for the Catholic chaplain and $1,000 for the Protestant.

Mr. McCARTHY. It does appear to me that we are going too far in laying down cast-iron rules for application in every case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is one of the points in which the present system is equally weak. At St. Vincent de Paul the convicts are nearly all Roman Catholics, and there the chaplains are paid in the same way. So that Manitoba and St. Vincent de Paul set off each other.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am afraid two wrongs do not make a right. The difficulty might be arranged by providing that these shall be the maximum salaries, leaving power to the Governor in Council to reduce them to a reasonable figure. But to keep a priest like a stalled ox for three or four convicts seems to me absurd.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUUPER. I think it would really be a small piece of work, in regard to salaries of this kind, to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy)—and I say that quite respectfully— and to endeavour to reconcile differences amounting to only a few hundred dollars. Under my system, one religion, one chaplain will have comparatively little to do. So, in St. Vincent de Paul, the chaplain of another faith will have comparatively little to do. men who occupy these positions must be ready to change places—to go anywhere according to the exigencies of the public service; and the department will not be handicapped by any question as to what they are paid at their different posts. I think that circumstance compensates for the discrepancy in the pay-list. The other suggestion of the hon. member would, I fear. put upon the Department of Justice more trouble than the whole thing is worth. A man comes in with his eyes open, and knows what men of certain rank are paid, no matter what their religion or where they are to be sent; and there will be far less grumbling that at present. At present the files of the department are filled with representations, many of them most ingenious, in regard to the pay granted for services rendered; but under this system, men knowing at the start what they are to have, will have little reason to complain. One or two cases such as those that have been mentioned, ought not to be allowed to break up the whole plan.

Mr. DALY. I understood the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) to say that the present Roman Catholic chaplain of the Manitoba penitentiary, Father Cloutier, had only five or six convicts under his charge.

Mr. MARTIN. I did not confine myself to any number.

Mr. DALY. If the hon, gentleman will look at the report of the Minister, he will find that Father Cloutier had twenty-two convicts under his charge, and the Protestant chaplain, the Rev. Mr. Goulding, had fifty-four under his charge on the 30th of June. If you take St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, you will find that on the same date there were sixty Protestant convicts convicts. So and Catholic if you take the total number of both penitentiaries, you find that relatively Father Cloutier has more to administer to than has the Protestant chaplain at St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. CHARLTON. Just one more question with regard to the disparity of salaries. The surgeon receives $1,500 and the chaplain, $800. Now, the chaplain must have taken an arts course; he must have spent three or four years in a theological seminary. His education is really of a higher order than that of the average surgeon. A surgeon may get his diploma after three or four years' study, and I would ask why that class of employee—if I may use that term—should have the best salary and the best equipments, while those who have spent the most time and money in fitting themselves for their profession should receive a fraction over one-half what the surgeons receive?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We have to take things and chaplains as we find them. Unfortunately, while chaplains and ministers of the Gospel in this country have, as a rule, an academic training, their pay is horribly small. It may be to our disgrace; but at any rate our information is that $700 a year is a handsome stipend for most of the ministers of the different denominations.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not so bad as that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is my information, and my individual information is worse than that in my own province, and, I think, the hon. gentleman's province also.

Mr. FRASER. The salaries of Presbyterian ministers are $700 at the minimum, and go up to $3,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Presbyterian is one of the richest and best paid denominations in Canada, and I am very glad of it, and yet $700 is the salary.

SUPPLY—THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Before you leave the Mr. LAURIER. Chair, Mr. Speaker, I deem it fit and appropriate that we should pause for a moment in order to consider what position we now stand in with reference to a question which is fast absorbing the public mind to the exclusion of all others—a question which is of a most perplexing character, involving, as it does, strong religious feelings, coupled as it is with a new and important interpretation of the constitution. I believe we have it yet. It has been patched up, it has been settled. Three of colleagues of the hon, gentleman who now leads the House, three members of the Administration, tendered their resignations to the Prime Minister. Two of them, it is true, have since withdrawn it, but the third yet remains outside. Now, I would ask, at the outset, what is the cause of the crisis? We know somehow that it is connected with the Manitoba school question, but what is the precise point of difference which led these hon, gentlemen to take the extraordinary step which they did? What the point of difference is between them and their colleagues, is certainly not clear at all from anything that has been said on the floor of this House. The hon. Minister of Finance, speaking the other day, said that there had been simply a misunderstanding between him and his dissenting colleagues. But if we are to take the interview which was published in the Montreal "Star," and which was had by the correspondent of that paper with the Minister of Public Works, and above all if we are to take the explanations which were given on the floor of the Senate by the Hon. Mr. Angers, the ex-Minister of Agriculture, we must come to the conclusion that the point of difference between the Government and their dissenting colleagues was not a simple misunderstanding. If we are to take the explanations not given here, but given to the Montreal "Star" by the Minister of Public Works and those given by the Hon. Mr. Angers to the Senate, we must come to the conclusion that the point of difference between the Government and their dissenting colleagues, was, that though the Government professed to be willing and determined to restore to the minority in Manitoba their separate schools, of which they were deprived by the legislation of 1890, still those colleagues and a large section of their followers in this House did not believe in the sincerity of the Government, but that they believed, on the contrary, that the whole course of the Government, from the beginning to the present time, has been to make the restoration of those schools absolutely impossible. "Misunderstanding" is not the word, but if a proper word is to be applied to the present condition of things, "mistrust" is the word. Mistrust of the Government, mistrust of their intentions, mistrust of their ability, nay, of their desire to implement their promises-mistrust by their colleagues who have sat from day to day with them at the Council board, mistrust by their followers in this House who have been voting with them for a very great number of years. If we look at the condition of things, we must come to the conclusion that this mistrust is not without solid foundation. There foundation for it, not only in the dubious course followed by the Government on this question, but also in the general character and conduct of this Government. I am not surprised that those gentlemen who have at heart the restoration of the schools to the minority in Manitoba should have no faith whatever in the policy of the Government or in the promise of the Government, because it is a fact that upon no question not merely this one, but upon no question whatever—have the Government ever had any settled policy of their own. They have nc mind of their own, they cannot come to any decision whatever; or if ever they do take up a position, forthwith they proceed to undo what they have done before. Looking at their course, they would seem to be afflicted with some cerebral malformation which, as soon as they have taken their attention all the objections against that to implement the promise which had been course, and impels them forthwith to undo made in the Order in Council. Since that what they have done. Looking at their time, however, though we were told that course, it would seem that their nights and their days are haunted by the demon Look at their of doubt and vacillation. course during this very session, and what has that course been but a record of unfulfilled promises, a record of broken engagements, a record of decisions adopted and then abandoned, a record of conflicting determinations and of retrograde modifications. When Parliament met in the month of April, we were formally told in the Speech from the Throne that we were really to have at last what we had often been promised before, an insolvency law. The Bill was introduced in another branch of the legislature, but when it came up for second reading. the hon. gentleman who had charge of it there, saw that there was in the usually serene atmosphere of the upper house a storm gathering, and forthwith sought a harbour of refuge, throwing the whole cargo overboard and with it this ominous When Parliament opened in month of April there was a difference between the ship-owners and the shippers of cattle, a difference upon what is to that trade a very important matter, the space which shall be allowed on board ship for The ship-owners wanted to each animal. give 2 feet 6 inches, the exporters wanted 2 feet 8 inches. The Government made a regulation in favour of the contention of the ship-owners, fixing the space at 2 feet 6 inches. Then we have a delegation of the shippers of eattle. That interest showed its teeth to the Government, and forthwith the Government proceeded to undo what they had done and to reverse their regulations. When we came here we were told that the Government, a few weeks before, had passed an Order in Council granting a loan of $2,500,000 to the Hudson Bay Railway Company. were not officially informed of the fact, but somehow or other we knew it. put a question to the hon. gentleman who leads the House as to whether this was the fact or not, my hon. friend could not remember; he had to look at the papers. A loan or present of $2,500,000 was a matter which did not impress itself upon his mind. And when, at last, we had extracted proof of the assertion that an Order in Council had been granted, we asked the Government whether they would lay that Order in Council upon the Table of the House. We had to have a fight with the Government in order to obtain the production of these papers. When the papers were brought down, we asked the Government whether or not they would implement their promise by legislation. we could get no answer. At last, after question upon question from this side of the House, the hon. gentleman told us that there would be no more legislation this session upon any subject other than was mentioned upon the Order paper, and upon the Order Attorney General, whose duty it would have any course upon any question crowds upon paper was not found any Bill or resolution there would be no legislation upon that subject, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways has given a notice applying to this very company. So there was another change in the policy of the Government. But, though the Bill has been called five times, my hon. friend has not yet moved to introduce it. Perhaps there is still another change in the policy of the Government. So it has been all along and all through the record. Doubt, vacillation, wavering, change; firm in one thing only, firm in the purpose of keeping office by whatever sacrifice of honour or dignity or principle. When Parliament met here in April, we were told that an Order in Council had been passed by this Government, commanding the province of Manitoba to restore to the Catholic minority there the schools of which they had been deprived in 1890. Sir, if our hon, friends on the other side of the House could not be consistent with themselves in matters of moderate importance, it is not at all to be wondered at that in a matter of such magnitude as the Manitoba school question they should have been vacillation incarnate. We had an order passed by the Government commanding the province of Manitoba to restore the schools of the minority, commanding it to do under threat that if it failed to obey, this Parliament would force those schools upon them. Sir, when that order was passed there was a great shout of triumph in some quarters. Two or three elections were fought over it, and, in one election to my certain knowledge, the promise was made that if the province of Manitoba failed to obey the order, this Government would put the order in the shape of legislation. What has taken place since? The province of Manitoba failed to obey; the province of Manitoba refused to obey. And then what? Instead of implementing the promise which had been made to the electors of Antigonish, instead of implementing the promise which had been made to the electors of Verchères in par-ticular, the Government proceeds to turn right-about face, and it says: Let us negotiate. Let us negotiate! It will strike many, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentlemen are ending with the proposition with which they should have commenced. Let us negotiate! This is a very wide departure indeed from the attitude which was ever maintained by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House upon this question. For, when this matter came up in the month of February, after the decision of the Privy Council had been received, they called Manitoba to their bar to answer the question before them The province of Manitoba begged for delay, but delay was refused. At that time the legislature of Manitoba was in session. The Prime Minister of Manitoba was ill and the duty of leading the House fell upon the been otherwise to argue the case for the province. The province, by its representative, Mr. McCarthy, asked to have a delay allowed in presenting its case. The Government here refused delay. And now, after they have refused that delay, after they have told Manitoba to come before them. now, after they have passed the Order in Council, they proceed to reverse their position and they say: Let us negotiate. I understand that the Prime Minister, speaking in another branch of the legislature says that he received a letter from a man saying that his policy of conciliation was a grand policy. Yes, indeed, that policy of conciliation would have been a grand policy at the outset. But it is not a grand policy when it comes after the rebuke administered to the Government by the province of Manitoba. It would have been a grand policy at the outset to be moderate in language and firm in action; but I see no grandeur in a policy that is bullying in language and weak and meek in execution. But we shall be told: After all it is better late than never; better attempt a policy of conciliation late than never, even if it comes at the fourteenth hour. I should say so-better late than never. I imagine every man would say so. imagine the friends of the separate schools in Manitoba would say so. Yet they do not say so, and why? Is it because they object at all to the policy of conciliation? Is it because they object that the Government of Manitoba should be approached in a friendly spirit? No: the reason is that the dissenting Ministers, and the dissenting followers of the Government, have no faith in the promises of the Government. The case has been plainly stated by the Hon. Mr. Angers, in the speech which he delivered the other day in the Senate. Let me quote some portions of that speech; they are most pathetic in their expressions. having referred to the speech delivered by the Premier, in the debate on the Address, at the opening of the session, he proceeds in this wise:

Was it necessary to get another declaration of the same kind to induce all the lovers of justice to wait and accept a second promise? For me, the first is good; and, for me, the second one is not so good.

Then he proceeds to say that the voice of the Prime Minister has been since suppressed, upon which the Prime Minister interrupted him to say: "What has been suppressed?" To which Mr. Angers answered:

Your promise has been suppressed by the influence which seems, although existing in a small fraction of the population of Canada, to have made itself so strong that it acted like a damper upon the voice and utterances of the Premier, and new utterances had to be made, it seems, in that declaration of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman is not in order when he refers to what took place in the Senate.

Mr. LAURIER.

Mr. McCARTHY. What took place in another place.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, then, in another place, the dissenting Minister proceeded to say—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, member is still out of order. Under cover of the words, "another place," he cannot refer to what took place in the Senate.

Mr. LAURIER. I am reading from a newspaper article.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you quoting from "Hansard?"

Mr. LAURIER. No; I am quoting from the "Globe" newspaper.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member is not in order in referring to speeches that were made in the Senate, even though he is reading them from a newspaper.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, at all events, one of the dissenting Ministers stated his objection, that he had no faith in the sincerity of the hon, gentleman, and he stated, moreover, that if the promises made by the Government were not implemented this session. he had reason to fear that they never would be implemented at all. Now, Sir, this is certainly most extraordinary language and conduct on the part of a member of the Administration, on the part of a gentleman who had been associated with them, and one of their prominent colleagues; and I must say that, according to my own judgment, the hon. gentleman had too good grounds to speak in the manner he did. Sir, I charge against the Government of the day, and I invite their answer, that they have dallied with this question, they never dealt with it frankly, fairly, sincerely; and it I am allowed, by the rules of debate, I will say they never dealt honestly with that question. There are two elements on the other side of the House. There is a fraction of hon. gentlemen who support the Government, who are against separate schools; there is another fraction who are in favour of separate schools; and the policy of the Government upon this ques-tion has been to give hopes to both of these elements, thereby placing themselves in the impossibility of satisfying either of them. This is the position which has been taken. When the Order in Council was passed in the month of March last, there was a shout of triumph all through the province of Quebec where the great majority of the population are in favour of separate schools. In the election that took place in the county of Verchères, the Minister of Public Works called God to witness that this present session of Parliament would not pass without the promise of the Government being implemented by legislation. The session is practically over, and where is the legislation? Why has not the promise been implemented? Why has not the pledge which was given to the electors of Verchères been implemented by the action of the Government? The Government did not dare to implement their promises. If there is any other reason for their failure, let us know it. Now, we had a speech the other day by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), the whip of the party. He spoke his mind, and, speaking his own mind, he spoke the mind of a good many of his colleagues on the other side.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the point of order? I think this is the same question, we are discussing the same motion as we did the other day. The hon. gentleman proceeded to speak as follows:

I may just say for myself, that had the Government done as it had been rumoured two years ago they would do—had they introduced an Act to override the Act of the Manitoba legislature—I would then, as I notified them, have voted against them.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member is not quite correct is saying that the debate to which he is now referring is the same that is now before the House. We are now upon a motion to go into Committee of Supply; the motion which was before the House the other day, was a motion for the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I am speaking upon an amendment which I intend to move and which refers to the very same question. Of course, I am within your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. My opinion is that this is not the same debate. Of course, I am subject to the opinion of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt of the ruling of the Speaker; at the same time, for my own part, and I am sure I may speak for this side of the House, I have no objection to the hon. gentleman ranging over the whole session.

Mr. LAURIER. I will bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I do not want any favours from the other side of the House. simply say this, that I have always understood from the language and from the conduct of the hon. member for South Leeds, not only on the floor of this House, but even in interviews, that he would vote against remedial legislation at any stage, Of course, and under any circumstances. he was the whip of the party, he was the shepherd of the flock, and the whole flock would have followed him in his vote, whatever it was. When it was found, however, that there would be no legislation at all upon this subject, when it was found that the promises would not be implemented, the Ministers who represent the province of Quebec in this House, and who have taken the most prominent part in this question, threatened to resign; and, in order, I imagine, to preevnt their resignation, the Government decided to make a declaration in this House, which was made just a week ago to-day, and a part of which I will read:

If by that time the Manitoba Government fails to make a satisfactory arrangement to remedy the grievance of the minority, the Dominion Government will be prepared at the next session of Parliament, to be called as above stated, to introduce and press to a conclusion such legislation as will afford an adequate measure of relief to the said minority based upon the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and the remedial order of the 21st March. 1895.

Now, Sir, this statement was not accepted by the hon, gentlemen, not accepted by my hon. friend the Postmaster General at first, not accepted by my hon, friend the Minister of Public Works at first, and never accepted by Mr. Angers, the Minister of Agri-For what reason? For the reaculture. son that I have already stated, faith the they had no in promises of the Government, that, having been deceived once, they did not want to be exposed to be deceived the second time. want to Sir, though this language may be clear enough, I must say, if we are going to judge the conduct of the Government and the policy of the Government by the interpretation put upon it by their organs, there is to-day much reason to believe that the mistrust of Mr. Angers is only too well justified. Let me here quote to the House the interpretation put upon that statement by the chief organ of the Government, the "Mail and Empire." In its issue of Friday, 12th July, that journal speaking of the statement of the Government, said:

To some minds the statement made by the Government is not wanting in definiteness. Mr. Mc-Carthy interprets it as a declaration that the old school law, which Manitoba renounced, is to be re-established by federal legislation. This criticism is met by Sir Mackenzie Bowell in his statement to the Senate, wherein it is maintained, first, that Manitoba having declared 'that the strict letter of the remedial proposition, as understood there, cannot be observed, is to be invited to do what it reasonably can; and, secondly, that in the event of a distinct refusal being given, Parliament will be asked to legislate, not on the lines of the stricter reading of the remedial proposition, but with moderation, and, as is understood, without injury to the national system of education. This explanation points to no federal legislation, if possible, and to very restricted federal legislation, if there is to be legislation at

Here is the policy of the Government interpreted by their own organ. There is to be no legislation; but if, after all, they are compelled to introduce any legislation whatever, it will be of such a namby-pamby character as to amount to a farce; if there is to be any legislation introduced, if they are to be forced to their last entrenchment, then legislation will be of a namby-pamby character, so restricted, so diluted, that every one opposed to separate schools can swallow it and grin over it as a huge joke. It is to be wondered that, under such circumstances, hon, gentlemen have lost faith in the promise of the Government and should be deeper in their conviction than they were before. Everything that has taken place tends to show that the policy of the Government as outlined in the chief organ is just as I have stated. In the province of Quebec the organs of the ministerial party have declared again and again that the Prime Minister was in favour of separate schools. We know this is a question which has long agitated the province of Ontario, and I believe the Prime Minister in his early days, even prior to confederation, had taken an active part on that question. was the side he took at that time I do not know at present, but at all events I have seen it stated more than once in the organs that support him in the province of Quebec that he was personally in favour of separate schools, nevertheless the hon. gentleman has made a declaration that, speaking for himself personally, he was adverse to separate schools. I take some of the comments also of the Conservative party newspapers upon this very order, and what are they? Here is, for instance, what the London "Free Press" says:

In Ontario we will have the statement that the Ouimet-Caron end of the patent combination has capitulated, and that Sir Mackenzie Bowell, in shirking the question for another six months, and putting the kickers off with promises which he knows he cannot implement, has proved himself to be a great statesman.

That is the construction put upon the order. From first to last, in everything that has taken place hon, gentlemen will find that the construction which is placed upon the language of the Government is that there is a lcop-hole somewhere, and that no more next session than this session are the promises made to the minority to be implemented. What have we to show to the contrary? What is there here to show that the Govenment are sincere in their utterances, and that there is no loop-hole open as to the fulfilment of their promises? They want us to believe them. Why do they not first convince their own colleagues, why do they not first convince their own followers as to what is their policy? The Government is simply reaping now the results of their double language used in order to conciliate at once the Orange vote and the Catholic vote. so long as I see here an hon. gentleman, a member of the Administration in his seat, how is it possible for me to suppose we are going to have remedial legislation on this question-I refer to the Controller of Customs. The hon, gentleman is not of the Cabinet, but he is of the Administration; he is not of the Cabinet, but, I think, his The hon. shadow is over the Cabinet. gentleman belongs to a powerful order in this country, he occupies a prominent position in that order. There was a meeting of the order to which he belongs on 13th March last at St. Catharines. The hon. gentleman was present and took part in the proceedings. Part of the order of business was the adoption of a report, which reads as follows:—

In dealing with reference to the grand master's address to the Manitoba school question, the committee say, that, "While as individual members of the order we might, and no doubt would, agree with him in the method proposed as a settlement of that question, yet, as a matter of organized action on the part of the grand lodge. we do not think it advisable to carry out his proposal to anticipate the policy of the Governor General in Council by means of a memorial. We would, however, place on record our opinion that, for the successful operation of a national school system, all religious teaching or instruction in schools, and everything in the regulations calculated to cause irritation among the creeds, should While reiterating our opposition be eliminated. to the existence of a separate school system anywhere in the Dominion, we believe that if grievances exist in Manitoba to the educational detriment of the minority in that province, it should be left to the legislature of Manitoba to adjust the same. We therefore recommend that this opinion be substituted as the action of the grand lodge, in place of the recommendations of the grand master on the subject.

That is to say, the recommendation was here made that the province of Manitoba should not be interfered with, but the grievances of the minority should be left to the operation of the legislature of that province. That report was adopted by the grand lodge, as I understand, and it was adopted unanimously, I believe, and no doubt by the vote of the hon, gentleman. How, I want to know, so long as a prominent member of the Administration who has taken a direct pledge, as is here stated, against remedial legislation remains in his seat as a member of the Administration, can we expect, whatever may be said by the Government, that these promises will be implemented? There is more. The hon. gentleman a few days ago spoke on this question on an occasion which I will not do more than indicate, and in concluding his speech. he said:

So that, apart altogether from the cardinal principle of the question, there is a real and substantial difficulty in the way of details to be confronted which gives added weight to the objection to parliamentary interference with Manitoba. I propose, however, to await events, rather than to anticipate what may never occur, nor do I intend to be led or entrapped into precipitate action upon the subject by any device, no matter from what quarter it may come.

It may never occur, says a member of the Administration; it may never occur, says an hon. gentleman who has a right to speak on the question, and he says further that he will not be entrapped into giving any premature opinion or into taking precipitate action upon it. Sir, is that the language consistent with the solidarity of the Gov-

the action of a Government that seeks to stave off the difficulty of to-day by creating a greater difficulty for to-morrow? All the members of the Government are responsible one for the other on this question as well as on all questions, and unless there is unanimous action they must explain their differences; and the Government cannot be said to have unanimous action so long as they allow one of their colleagues upon a public occasion, and in order to capture voters, to make such a statement as this: "Oh, you need not fear, the question may never come before Parliament." It is not sufficient to have a policy such as has been expressed by the looking Government, to Orange vote on the one side and looking to the Catholic vote on the other. We must have from the Government today a clear and defined policy as to what are their intentions, because they cannot please everybody, though they have been trying that for so long past. Now, Mr. Speaker, in the face of this, when the Government have had no settled policy up to the present time upon this question, I am entreated day after day by hon. gentlemen opposite or by their friends, to say what is my own policy upon that question—

Mr. FOSTER. Now we will have it.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, two years ago, speaking upon this question, when it came before the House for the first time, I stated then that in my estimation there was no doubt whatever as to the powers of interference by the Government. I stated then, that reading the history of the constitution, reading the history of clause 93, there could be no doubt whatever in the minds of any disinterested persons, that there were powers of interference in the constitution laid down by that section. I stated then: That the question which was to be solved was not a question of law but simply a question of facts; facts to be ascertained in order to lay down the law. That was my policy then. I stated it at the time without fear. It was not heeded. It was not accepted, but as it was not heeded-

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend permit me to interrupt him a moment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. Just for one moment. Did I understand my hon. friend to say that when he made the statement here that it was a question of fact and not of law, that that was his policy on the question?

Mr. LAURIER. I stated then that it was my policy on the question.

Mr. FOSTER. It is difficult to see how that is policy.

Mr. LAURIER. I stated then that the power of interference existed. I stated that if the grievances laid down by I tell them, I care no more for their praise ernment one to the other? Or is it not rather the Catholic minority were true, that the schools were Protestant, there were grounds sufficient for interference. I said so at the time. My advice was not heeded. How-ever, I did not expect that from hon. gentlemen. But as my advice was not heeded, I folded my arms, and waited for the hon. gentlemen to be wiser and to give us their policy, a thing which they have failed to do ever since. And, Sir, because they failed to do it ever since, and because I would not change my own policy, having given it once, until they showed a better policy themselves, they have been ever since doing me the honour of insulting me every day in their press as wanting in courage. Well, Sir, to be wanting in courage is a grave charge I admit. But if to make promises and not to implement them is courage, if to make threats and to quail before their consequences is courage, if to be boisterous in language and meek in action, is courage, if to pass an order and refuse to execute it is courage, if to act in such a manner as to force your best friends to the conviction that you are deceiving them is courage, there is a galaxy of courageous men on the treasury benches before us, such as we have not seen for a long time. Sir, courage is a noble thing in itself, but foresight is not to be Foresight is not to be despised either. despised in such a country as this, with all its conflicting elements. My courage is not of the kind of courage possessed by hon. gentlemen opposite, I admit. My courage is not to make hasty promises and then to ignominiously break them. My courage is to speak slowly, but once I have spoken, to stand or fall by my words. There is such a thing as courage and courage. When the six hundred men of the Light Brigade charged the Russian guns at Balaklava, they gave to the world such an example of courworld seldom saw; but as the age a French officer, high in command, Marshal Bousquet, if I remember aright, who happened to be on the battlefield, remarked: "C'est beau, mais ce n'est pas la guerre," It is splendid, but that is not war. Yes, those six hundred men when they rushed into the furnace of iron and fire, when they courted death with such sublime indifference, covered the British arms with a halo of fame which shall move the hearts of all men so long as daring courage and cool bravery continue to be admired by all men. I am not aware, however, that British generalship shone very brightly on that day. Those six hundred men, who rushed into the fight as they did, for the sake and for the honour of England, will live and live for ever, but the name of the commanding general is already lost in oblivion. Sir, I have no doubt whatever that it would be an easy thing for me to commit some glorious, some chivalrous blunder which would earn for me the plaudits, and the fame, and the praise, and the glorification of hon. gentlemen opposite, and their press as well. But than I am afraid of their taunts; for so long as I am here occupying a position which the confidence of my friends has placed me in, I will endeavour to commit no such mistakes as will send joy in the hearts of my opponents and dismay in the ranks of my friends. And when the day comes for me to walk into the battle, I hope that I shall perform my part without any bragging, and, God helping me, without any weakness either. But I am not in the battle today. No, the battle is there. There is the seat of contest; there is the raging conflict. Let those hon, gentlemen opposite unite their discordant elements. Let them unite their differences into a policy. Let them bring down that policy, and then, Sir, I pledge myself here that if it commends itself to my judgment, I shall give it all my support. I say again, what I said before more than once, that I have no desire that my party should walk into power over the Manitoba school question. Let hon. gentlemen opposite settle that question. I will be most happy to give them my support, but they must settle it in some other than they have tried heretomanner Something must at once, because be done. and fore. this policy done at once, delay, this policy of vacillation, is not only paralyzing, but it is fast disintegrating national life: fast disintegrating national life. I say, because it is arraying against creed, and race against race. Something must be done, and done at once. What should be done? I have no hesitation, for my part, in here speaking my own personal sentiment, to say that I do desire and do wish that the minority in Manitoba may be allowed the privilege of teaching in their schools. to their children, their duties to God and man as they understand those duties, and as their duties are taught to them by their church. That is my wish. But I do say, that if that object is to be attained, it is not to be attained by imperious dictation nor by administrative coercion. If that object is to be attained, the hand must be firm and the touch must be soft. Hitherto the touch has been rude and the hand has been weak. Sir, this is my policy. We must build up a nation here-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, gentlemen on the What else can side may laugh. What matters it to them if do? country is raked up by the fire of dissension and discord, so long they keep the places they have at long 88 the This is my policy. present time. must carry out the idea of confederation. We must have a nation here; we must build up a nation; but if this is to be done, we must teach every citizen, no matter what his creed or his race may be, in the prosecution of his rights, not to exact the last pound of flesh. We must teach every citizen in the prosecution of his rights to make some concessions to the feelings, nay, to the prejudices of his fellow-countrymen; so that they may not find themselves oppressed by the laws of the country; but, on the contrary, that all in the country may have in their hearts a pride in Canada, a pride in our institutions, a pride in our laws. Sir, I belong, I am proud to say, to a party which has always been signalized for its broad views of tolerance and justice to minorities; and when the time comes for the Liberal party to deal with this question, I think I can make the pledge for every member of the Liberal party, that we will en-deavour to solve that problem on lines that will be found fair, equitable, and satisfactory to the minority, and on those broad lines, yet of equal rights and equal justice to all which underlie our constitution. It is because we are animated with these sentiments, and because I arraign the policy of the Government as a policy of uncertainty, with no ring of truth about it, that I beg to move:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:— "this House regrets the failure of the Government to deal with the Manitoba school question in a manner demanded by the best interests of the country, and is of opinion that the ministerial declarations in regard to the question are calculated to promote a dangerous agitation amongst the Canadian people."

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 88) respecting the South Shore Railway Company (Limited).—(Mr. White, Shelburne.)

(In the Committee.)

On the preamble,

Mr. MASSON. This Bill has already had a good deal of discussion in the House and in the committee. But for the fact that neither the hon. Minister of Railways, nor the hon. Minister of Justice were present during the time the Bill was discussed in the Railway Committee, I would not have any remarks to make this evening; and I do not now wish to occupy the time of the House, in view of the number of Bills now standing on the Order paper, many of which are unopposed, and I would gladly see some means arrived at whereby they could be dealt with this evening, without being delayed by a long discussion on this Bill. Without entering into a discussion of the matter, which there may be other opportunities of going into, I wish to state, in the presence of this committee, the objections I have to this Bill. In the first place, it seeks to revive a local Act, after the revival thereof has been refused by the local legislature. This, I think, is quite suffi-discussion, at this stage of the Bill, is in orcient ground for a refusal by this Parlia-der. The hon, gentleman is discussing whement to entertain a proposition of this kind. Secondly, it seeks to revive a local Act, the House, but the House has sent the Bill after a rival company, relying on the laps- to the committee and has adopted the prining of the Act now sought to be revived, ciple of legislation. has commenced operations, has thirty miles under contract, and is actively pressing the work forward. This also is a ground that has always been taken by the Railway Committee, and I think by this Parliament -that where two companies have obtained charters over the same route, and one allows its charter to lapse, and the second goes on and commences the work, this House refuses to revive the charter of the other. I could cite many instances in which that principle has been followed. I remember the late Sir John Macdonald laying it down that such a proceeding would jeopardize many enterprises undertaken in reliance on the faith of Parliament. In the third place, the object of the Bill is to interfere with litigation now pending, brought in the name of the Attorney General of the province of Nova Scotia to declare the charter now sought to be revived null and void by lapse and forfeiture. Attempts have been made, and no doubt attempts will be made, to minimize the force of this litigation; but of all kinds of litigation, that brought in the name of the Attorney General of a province should be protected and observed. It is of far greater importance than an ordinary The hon. Mincase between individuals. ister of Railways will recollect the position taken by himself, and the Conservative party throughout the country, when the legislature of Ontario attempted by legislation to interfere with a suit between private parties, the suit of Caldwell vs. Maclaren, then pending in the courts. was then looked upon by the party to which I belong as being an outrageous thing for the legislature to interfere with litigation between private individuals. We have also heard a good deal about the iniquity of legislative interference on behalf of qui tam actions-actions brought by private individuals to enforce a penalty for some act done or omitted to be done. This legislative interference has always been condemned so far as I know, by the party of which I have the honour to be a humble member. The action relating to this company is a far more important action. other kind of action is one where a private individual seeks to investigate a public matter, and, in doing so, has to make the Attorney General a party defendant. It is a still higher action in which the Attorney General is a party plaintiff. If this legislature should interfere with a suit of that nature, I think its action would be indefensible on any ground whatever. Now, on a further ground, I take it, this Act should not pass.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. rise to a point of order, as to whether this the road now actively opposing this revival.

ther this Bill should be considered at all by Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman intimated he was going to make some motion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My point is that the hon, gentleman's argument attacks the principle of the Bill altogether, and his only motion, in the line of his argument, would be to reject the Bill. The Bill has been read the second time and sent to this committee for the purpose, not of discussing whether the legislature should deal with this class of legislation, but whether the clauses should be adopted as they are put. The principle of the Bill cannot be discussed in this committee, but only on the motion for the second reading.

Mr. MULOCK. No doubt the argument of the hon, member for Grey (Mr. Masson) would be perfectly in order on the second reading; but it seems to me it is also in order, in Committee of the Whole, for example, on the motion to adopt the preamble. If, for example, the preamble were rejected. the whole kill would be rejected. committee decide against the preamble, what becomes of your Bill, so that, as the preamble of a Bill is in issue in the Committee on Private Bills or the standing Committee on Railways and Canals, it must also be in issue in Committee of the Whole. Shall the preamble be adopted? Upon that motion, the whole principle of the Bill is in issue. This is not a public Bill but a private Bill; and it appears to me that any argument relevant in the Committee on Private Bills is relevant in the Committee of the Whole on this Bill.

Mr. MASSON. I do not want to detain the House, and the only point I have left is this, that there is no reason for two roads in the district now, and that the promoters of this Bill have by their action, justified the objection raised that they are seeking the charter for the purpose of selling it. I have here a couple of affidavits in support of that statement. One is from Mr. Leonard Atwood, dated 11th July, in which he states

In the city of Yarmouth, on or about 2nd February, 1893, one E. Franklyn Clement, who claimed to own and control the charter granted by the province of Nova Scotia for the line of railway in question, in virtue of having subscribed for all the stock except $1,000, approached me and agreed to sell all the rights and stock owned and controlled by him under the charter for $1,900.

This affidavit was made on 11th July, this year, and the event spoken of is stated to have occurred on 2nd February, 1893. That was at the time when work was started on

I also have another affidavit from William Nunn, made in Toronto, in which he says that he is thoroughly conversant with the affairs of the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, as well as the affairs of the South Shore Railway Company, Limited, and he firmly believes that the South Shore Company have no intention of building their road, but that their main object in applying to Parliament is to facilitate the sale of their enterprise to the coast railway of Nova Scotia. The reasons given for such belief are as follows:—

One of my reasons is the fact that E. F. Clement, of Yarmouth, N.S., who controls the local charter of the South Shore Railway Company, said to me that he was already interested in the present Bill before Parliament; he has been, to my knowledge, a most active promoter of the said measure, and he approached me in the Russell House, at Ottawa, on 3rd June last, and stated that if I could bring together Mr. Drill, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Williamson, of New York, for the purpose of selling the South Shore charter, there would be a big pot of money to divide, and he would give me a share.

In addition, I would call attention to the fact that the name of Williamson, who has been spoken of so often as a New York millionaire, is, according to Bradstreet's report, an employee of H. B. Hillsford & Co., prominent brokers, and is said to receive the salary of $2,500. This New York millionaire, therefore, is an employee receiving this salary. These are the reasons on which I base my opposition to this Bill in all its stages. As the discussion would be naturally long, and as there is now a number of Bills standing unopposed, to which it would be a great advantage that we should give precedence, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Whether my point of order be good or bad, the question would be much better discussed with the Bills before the House. As far as I understand, the promoters are not at all adverse to having the Bill amended so as to protect existing rights in connection with the litigation the hon. gentleman refers to. Outside of that, the hon. gentleman has made no point whatever.

Mr. EDGAR. I would support the motion of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson) on this ground. I would do so, not that I think it will affect in any way the fate of the Bill before the committee, but because it will give an opportunity to the House to spend a little over half an oour in considering the few Bills which are on the Order paper and which are not opposed by anybody. I do not understand that this motion will affect the consideration of this Bill or its progress for more than half an hour. It will stand on the Order paper in its place. If the committee rise and report progress today, the Bill will stand on the Order paper in its place. It would be only a proper thing to give the unopposed Bills a chance.

Mr. MASSON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think that would be most unfair. And the object is apparent. The effect of it is also apparent. This Bill would be choked by discussion such as was attempted last—

Mr. MULOCK. Well, kill the Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, and the Bill would be killed. Any fairminded man, and any man who is not determined to hinder this Bill will, I think, endeavour to secure fair consideration for this measure in its proper turn, and its proper turn is now.

Mr., EDGAR. I would like to say to the Minister that I have never yet been accused of trying to affect unfairly the discussion of a private Bill—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And I do not accuse the hon. gentleman of doing that now; but I say that is what the effect of the hon. gentleman's action will be.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not think that will be the effect, or I would support it.

Mr. MASSON. I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Justice referred to me as trying by unfair means to affect this Bill. At any rate I do not think that I have merited any such remarks from him. The statement I made set forth plainly what the object was. This Bill stands in the way of Bills that are unopposed; there are two Bills that are opposed, but let us get through the unopposed ones to-night.

Committee divided: Yeas, 54; nays, 91.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. FORBES. Before the preamble of this Bill is carried—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. FORBES. I regret that those who favour this Bill are not prepared to listen to a fair discussion of the principles involved. When this Bill was before the Committee or Railways it was with great difficulty that those who were opposing the Bill could get their views heard by the committee, and it seems that those who favour the Bill are in the same frame of mind as they were then.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DEPUTY CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. FORBES. I can understand the hon. gentlemen on the other side opposing anything that will tend to benefit the province of Nova Scotia. From the representatives of Nova Scotia in the Cabinet down to the lowest subordinate, they have set themselves against the efforts of those who endeavour by fair means to promote railway development in Nova Scotia. The hon. Minister of Justice has been second only to the hon. The object of the Minister of Justice evi-House to take time and consider?

Some hon, MEMBERS, Order,

does not want to do any business.

Mr. FORBES. It is quite evident to those who are in favour of wise and judicious legislation, and who sit for the most part: that side, that the majority of hon. gentlemen opposite are not willing that this prolegislation as is proposed by this Bill? Sir, I have solemn affidavits, that I will produce in a few minutes and ask you to consider. in support of the charge that I make against! this Bill. The charge is that in the province of Nova Scotia, after solemn and careful deliberation, and several lengthy hearings, upon which able counsel on both sides were heard, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of that province, advised by his Council, saw fit to institute a suit in the courts of Nova Scotia contesting the legality of the charter, the very identical charter which this House is asked to confirm by legislation of this Parliament. Sir, this is a most peculiar Bill. It is said in the terms of this

The company, as now organized and constituted under the said Act of the province of Nova Scotia, is hereby declared to be a body corporate and politic within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada; and this Act and the Railway Act of Canada shall apply to the company and its undertaking, instead of the said Act of the province of Nova Scotia and the Railway Act of Nova Scotia.

Sir, I ask the Minister of Justice, with his judicial mind, calmly to consider that clause. Can that clause have any other meaning than this, that whereas an Act was passed by the province of Nova Scotia, saying that certain persons should be incorporated for certain purposes within the jurisdiction of the legislature of that province; and whereas such persons have forfeited their right, under the terms of said charter, to carry out the enterprise, the powers which they were given by the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia-

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. FORBES-and whereas doubts have member for Shelburne (Mr. White) in en- arisen as to the validity of said charter and deavouring to stifle railway enterprise in the right of said incorporators to use the that province. If a party advantage is to powers vested in them by the said legislabe gained, gentlemen opposite will oppose ture of Nova Scotia, in the terms of said anything that is of advantage to the people. Act, and whereas there is now instituted in the province of Nova Scotia, one of a dently is to infringe upon and cramp prosecies of lawsuits for the purpose of testing vincial rights. Now, Sir, what is the printhe right of the corporators to use that Act, cipal feature of this Bill that we ask the and whereas those proceedings are still series of lawsuits for the purpose of testing pending, is it not patent to everybody who is cognizant of anything with respect to legislation in this country or any other, that an Mr. MULOCK. Evidently the committee attempt is being made, under cloak of a servile majority in this House, to choke provincial rights, and to interfere with the ccurts of the province of Nova Scotia. Sir, the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) has put himself on record with regard to on this side of the House, and who are this matter, and it is rumoured that he has ably supported, I am proud to say, by some been induced by other parties in the prowise and able gentlemen on the other side vince to lend his countenance to a measure of the House, but not by the majority of like this. Sir, I say such a thing was never heard of in any British country, that by brute force of a majority, the authority of posed legislation should receive adequate an inferior tribunal should be overborne by consideration. Now, Sir, why do we ask a superior tribunal and prevented from exthe committee to pause before making such ercising its functions. Sir, I charge against ercising its functions. Sir, I charge against the non. member for Shelburne who promotes this Bill, that he is guilty of all—I was going to say, the crimes in the decalogue; but he is guilty of a serious breach of the rules of this House. The hon. member is on record as a promoter of railway measures said to be for the benefit of a certain section of the province of Nova Scotia, and yet, during the years 1892, 1893 and 1894, when that hon, gentleman undertook to support that measure known as the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, we find him, between the 11th day of July, 1894, and the 22nd day of July, acting as the paid advocate and attorney for another company, and transferring his allegiance-

> Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I think the hon. gentleman ought not to make such a statement as that without some grounds. It is entirely untrue. I never received a cent from anybody for the purpose the hon. gentleman insinuates.

> Mr. MULOCK. I rise to a point of order. The hon, member for Shelburne charged my hon. friend with having stated something that was entirely untrue. I submit that those are unparliamentary words. should be withdrawn.

> Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In the noise that has been prevailing for the last half hour. I did not understand what the hon. member for Shelburne was saying, and so I did not call him to order.

> Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). What I said I will repeat.

> Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. member has no right to interrupt the hon. member for Queen's, N.S. (Mr. Forbes), un less he rises to a point of order. I may add that the proceedings of the committee are very disorderly. I would ask hon, members not to throw these bunches of paper across the Chamber, because if one of them struck an hon, member in the face, it would certainly cut his face. I think everybody is interested in keeping order.

Mr. FORBES. I have the handwriting of the hon, member for Shelburne in my possession, in which he advocates the construction of the road known as the Coast Road, and declaring over his own signature that the road was in the best interests of that section of Nova Scotia known as the South Shore. I have further to say that the hon. member for Shelburne was the paid secretary for the Nova Scotia Southern Railway, and in that capacity he advocated the interest of the road known as the Hervey road, running through the counties of Shelburne and Queen's, and on to the city of Halifax. I have further to say that as such paid secretary, advocate and attorney of the said road, he stood by that company they paid long as his fees. Subsequently, when it became necessary for another body of capitalists supposed to possess money, coming from the United States, to approach this Parliament for the purpose of getting legislation, the hon. member for Shelburne, thinking the Southern Company had not all the money required to pay his taxed bills of costs, did exactly what he said on Friday, when he told us in the committee that he found Mr. Hervey and his son had left the country without paying their creditors, he also left the company in the lurch, and let them slide, and accepted a retainer on behalf of the South Shore Company, the company that is now endeavouring to obtain a Bill from this Parliament.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That statement is absolutely incorrect and unfair.

Mr. FORBES. I never said the Minister of Justice was senior counsel.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You might as well have said so.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. gentleman does not know the facts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was protesting against an unfair statement.

Mr. FORBES. This was the statement of the hon. member for Shelburne; he said that the promoters of the Southern Railway had disappeared and not paid their bills, and when he found this to be the case, he resigned his position as adviser, and, I do say, that under the eye of the Minister of Justice he signed a contract with this Government as secretary of the company, and that contract is on file with the Government.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order. Is not all this discussion out of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No; I do not think it is out of order. It is on the preamble of the Bill, and so long as the discussion is kept without the scope of the Bill. I do not think it is out of order.

Mr. FORBES. The hon, member for Shelburne is here as a representative and trustee of the people's interests. I am not addressing him as a solicitor, but I say that a gentleman who occupies the doubtful position which he occupies, should be very cautious indeed. And what about the position of the Minister of Justice? What is the practice of the English Parliament? Members of the Cabinet have nothing whatever to do with private legislation. They are not permitted to have anything to do with it by the rules of the House, and by a grand social understanding it is recognized between all hon. gentlemen that when the public interest comes into conflict with their personal interest, the public interest must always pre-This is the only way to induce an hen, gentleman who occupies the dubious position, or the duplex position, occupied by a member of this House, who is the paid advocate of this company, to act, and this is the only case we have had before the House. There is nothing for that hon. getleman to do except to retire as regards his private capacity, and withdraw from the advocacy of this Bill before the House. There are reasons why this Bill should not become law, that should appeal to the fair reason and understanding of any hon. gentleman, whoever he may be, who knows how to consider and deliberate on a question in a deliberative assembly like this We have had, time and again, brought to our attention in Parliament, conflicts of jurisdiction between legislatures. This is a special occasion when the broad, fair mind of the Cabinet itself, advised by the Minister of Justice, should come into play, and decide that inasmuch as it has been proved and establishel to the satisfaction of the majority that this measure which some hon. members are trying to pass this House, would inflict on Nova Scotia, severe injury, because it involves a gross and unfair attempt to gag and override the courts of the province, to subvert the jurisdiction of our courts, and crowd on the majority of the people of that pro-vince a measure which they do not want, it should be withdrawn. I say, further, that this Bill should not prevail for several other reasons. One reason in particular has been spoken to by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson), who proved by solemn affidavits that the statement made by the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) that the advocates or backers of this proposed legislation were fully capable, financially, of carrying out this enterprise, was incorrect, and that, as a matter of fact, these people were utterly unable to pay their bills. He proved, by affidavits, a fact long known to us, who have opposed this legislation, that Williamson and other gentlemen whose names have been given to the House by the hon. member for Shelburne, were practically bankrupt, so far as regards their ability to carry out this road. Imagine a party of gentlemen of the character and means set forth in these affidavits read by the hon. member for Grey to ask this legislature to grant them powers to build a railway 230 miles in the province of Nova Scotia, at a probable cost of over \$2,000,000, when it was clearly established in the minds of hon. members that they were not wealthy men, that they were nothing but employees, receiving salaries from \$500 to \$2,500, that they were Whiton, Boston, 02 per cent; Chas. without capital. Yet these were the men whom the hon. member for Shelburne proposes should be incorporated and constitute the backbone of this company. $\mathbf{W}\mathbf{e}$ had a statement made a few days ago by that hon, member, in answer to a challenge made to him as to what had become of Alexander, who had become bankrupt, and actually insolvent. Referring to that gentleman, the hon. member for Shelburne said that Alexander and certain creditors of the road were going to take stock in the new For what purpose? enterprise. Not for the purpose of keeping money in the enterprise; but they were going to take stock: instead of payment of their debts, they having been creditors of the old road, the old company having only raised \$12,500 in cash with which to carry out a two-million dollar enterprise. In violation of the terms, and against the spirit of all joint stock companies, and against the spirit of our laws, they had stuffed their stock-book; they had taken a block of stock, and put it in trust, for they had only one share of the stock of the company apiece and afterwards they borrowed money from widows on which to carry on the old enterprise. The hon, member for Shelburne has stated in the House that they had refused to lend any more money to that company, that the promoters were unable to pay their debts, and did not intend to finish the road. The hon, gentleman told us that those who took the assignment of the laborers' claims against the company and paid 33 cents on the dollar for their claims, were going to take stock in the new company to the extent of 66 cents on the dollar and construct the road. That means that Parliament is asked to place on the statute-book a law that will enable an absolute fraud to be perpetrated and the member for Shelburne, either in his guileness or ignorance, is willingly lending himself to that scheme. The hon, member for Shelburne, occupied that dubious position, still persists in saying that the allegations in the preamble of the Bill are correct. I hold in my hand the statement of the creditors of the road who advanced money but who were ashamed to take stock in the company. They advanced it on the personal credit of Messrs. Alexander & Farrar, alleged to be capitalists in the city of Boston, and the amount advanced was \$106,400. These two gentlemen made affidavits of insolvency, and in the reorganization now, here is what the creditors propose to take in satisfaction of their respective claims from wherever they can raise the money. W. B. Strang, jr., 7th National Bank, New York, 22 per cent; Mrs. M. B. Wheeler, Grovnor S. Hubberd, 35 Wall Street, New York, 22 per cent; E. K. Spinney, Nova Scotia, 17 per cent; Parker, Eaken & Co. Nova Scotia, 156 per cent; Jacob Bingey, Nova Scotia, 072 per cent; Jacob Bingey, Nova Scotia, 072 per cent; D. H. Andrews, Boston, '06 per cent; Chas. Keene, Boston, 02 per cent; Royal Adair, Boston, '02 per cent; and the committee, '042 per cent; total. '100 per cent. Representing \$106,400. That is the way these gentlemen propose to get their money back, and how is it proposed to construct the road when these creditors take nothing but stock for their indebtedness? There would be no new money whatever coming into the road. We have the affidavit read by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson) showing that one Clements and others, including the hon. member for Shelburne, I firmly believe, were associating themselves together for the purpose of putting this Bill through Parliament and making this contract with this Government. There was a contract made in February last, but if the Government dared to submit it to Parliament it would be shown to be bogus. The bogus signatures of gentlemen who never were in "esse" are upon it. That company would make a contract with the Government for the subsidy of \$112,000, which was voted last July to the South Shore Company, provided that this Government is not upset in the meantime by attempting to bring down remedial legislation. That contract will be made for the purpose of getting the subsidy and app ying it so far as is possible to paying the debts, a list of which I have read. In the event of their not being able to handle the subsidy, they propose going upon the money markets of the United States and preventing the corporation of the Coast Line Company from floating their securities. The Coast Railway Company have up to date spent the following: Expenses of organization, surveys and construction work to 15th December, 1895, \$143,672.21; officers' salaries, engineers on surveys and plans, 1st January to 1st April, 1895, \$4,305; pay-roll and supply bills for April, 1895, \$4,671.30; pay-roll and supply bills for May, 1895, \$5.309.06; pay-rolls and supply bills for June, 1895, \$8,-216.72; total, \$166,174.29. Mr. FORBES. It may be that certain gentlemen on the other side of the House voted against the amendment because they were under the impression that the coast line road was a narrow-gauge road. wish, for a few moments, to show that it is nothing of the kind, but that it is a standard gauge road. The company constructing that road was incorporated in 1893 by the legislature of Nova Scotia. It was then supposed to be a three-foot gauge road. The corporators applied to the several municipalities to assist them in securing financial aid from the Government of Nova Scotia, and they secured it on that basis. then approached gentlemen from different sections of the province.

SUPPLY-THE MANITOBA SCHOOLS QUESTION.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who addressed the House before we rose at six o'clock, twitted this side of the House with having passed, or with, at the present time, passing through a ministerial crisis. Well, Sir, I acknowledge the advantage which this party possesses in that respect, and I take the allusion to it as a compliment. It is, I think, pretty well understood that only that party which at Yarmouth, $44,550; 1st July, 1895, for forms Governments and carries them on is fencing with R. L. F. Strathy & Co., liable to such a thing as a ministerial Montreal, $5,000; estimated expenditure for crisis; and my hon. friend, who, for the July pay-rolls and supplies, $9,000; total, last seventeen years, has neither formed a $109.956. This statement is signed by Mr. Government nor attempted to carry on a George A. Fletcher, the treasurer of the Government may have the slightest satiscompany. This Coast Line Company has faction which he obtains by speaking about, thirty miles already under construction, it or watching with all the interest and zest imaginable, ministerial crises in the party which, during those seventeen years, has always had in this country a stable Government, and a stable policy behind that Government. My hon, friend may be congratulated on one thing, and condoled with on anproof of their solvency. It is not like the other. He may be congratulated on the fact bankrupt South Shore Company which asks that he has not had ministerial crises to Parliament for a confirmation of its bankrupt trouble him during the last seventeen years. He may be condoled with upon the rather mournful fact that, although time after time during those seventeen years, he and his party have fixed their longing eyes preamble of the said Bill after the words "Nova on the treasury benches, and hoped to them through ministerial gain they have been disappointed hopes. There are men called wreckers, who may never possess a good ship of their own, but who linger about the sand dunes and the rocks, waiting for the good, tight, staunch vessel, in stress of weather, to come in and go to pieces, when they may, perhaps, have plunder, if they do not get the solid hulk of the vessel itself. We have passed through ministerial crises. Not very long ago the hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House, having lost hope after elections that had passed, and having seen their best-cherished plans go aglee, determined within themselves, and more than once expressed that determination, that of course there was no hope for them until the hand of Providence should strike down the leader of the Liberal-Conservative party; and then they hoped, in the confusion, to leap into power. The hand of Providence was laid heavily upon this party, and the chief who had led a Government so long, and who had led a people so long, was taken away. Then the hopes of our hon. friends were very high, but their hopes were dashed. Not long afterwards they expected again to gain possession of the good ship of state, when the captain was again suddenly taken away-when Sir John Abbott died-they had high hopes again, and their hopes again vanished; for, from among the officers who manned the good ship of the Government, one stepped into the captaincy, and a strong and firm hand held the helm of the vessel, and guided it amidst all the troubled waters through which it passed for four or five years. Once again, a ministerial crisis came into view, and death having taken from us that leader, these hon, gentlemen, who could no longer trust to their policy, but who simply looked to disintegration to do a work inside of a party which they, with all their artillery, are not able to do from the outside, supposed that they would come into power.

Their vauntings upon the platforms, and seemed fair enough; and I wish the House the high hopes and cheerful predictions with which they came to this session, gave promise to all their friends of speedy victory—victory from disintegration and falling asunder of the Liberal-Conservative party. Again they were disappointed, and now, at this last juncture of circumstances, when they see what they think is a grave crisis over a grave question in the Liberal-Conservative party, they are hopeful of taking advantage of it; and once again they hope to slide into power upon two motions for the adjournment of the House, and the colourless, catch resolution now before us. Se I present to my hon, friend his cogita-Ministerial concerning tions crises to which I have added my own, and I wish him joy, so far as this party concerned. The hon, gentleman, in the next place, sought to establish that this crisis through which the Ministry has been passing, and on which this House has been very intent arose from a lack of confidence among the members of the Cabinet themselves, from mistrust, the one of the other. What are his proofs? He marshals, in the first place, the statement made in another Chamber by one of my late colleagues who, I regret to say, has felt it his duty to leave the Government and is no longer with us. But, Sir, he failed to marshal the full statement itself. Every one in this House, on both sides, who has read that statement and has thought over it, knows that the grounds which our late colleague took-the strong grounds that he took—were first, that it was useless and unnecessary and possibly harmful to any longer negotiate with the local government of Manitoba; and secondly, that in the course of added new negotiations, this Parliament might possibly lose its power—an opinion in which I am glad to know he does not find very much support outside of himself. But these were his principal grounds, and it is an inference, of my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier), which is not warranted by my late colleague's statement, that distrust and want of confidence was the reason which caused him to leave the Government. My hon, friend went on to cite quotations from newspapers and the like in order to amplify that proof; but he made one slip with reference to the statements which were read in this House by myself on two occasions, when he ventured incidentally to give his own opinion with reference to those statements. The opinion he ventured to give was this, that the statements, on the face of them, seemed fair enough. That was the only attempt my hon, friend made to attack the documents themselves and show to this House and the country that they implied distrust or grounds for distrust. And in the sole and only effort which he made to attack the documents themselves and draw an inference from them, he had to confess that the documents, on the face of them, to remember that admission which he made. As against his argument that it was mistrust and lack of confidence which caused the difference in the ministry, I wish simply to give him two facts, which I think will be strong enough with this House, and I think strong enough with himself. The first is the two statements themselves, read on two different days in this House by myself; the second is the statement which I myself made when speaking upon that motion, that the divergence which took place between my two hon. colleagues and the rest of the Government was due rather to a misunderstanding of the terms of the state-ment than from mistrust or lack of confi-dence. That was substantiated by the statements of my two hon. colleagues themselves in this House; but if there is one fact, more than another, which makes truth of my contention, it is that the Government's policy is now before this House in full, and the Ministers are here to back it up as a united ministry. So I think that assumption of the hon. gentleman falls to the ground. The hon, gentleman says that there are factions in the Government-some for and some against. That again is met by the fact that we stand here to-day, as I have said, as a united Government-united upon the policy which we have stated to this House, united upon the policy which we have given to the country; and that statement, as I have said before, is sufficient to disprove the attempt my hon. friend to prove that confidence and mistrust are rife, that there are factions in the ministry it-self. Just here in passing, I wish to say that the Government have made no promise on this question in the past which they have not implemented. They have made no pledges to this House and the country which they do not intend to implement when the time comes. But my hon, friend quickly passed from that, because he merely mentioned it in passing, and he said that this mistrust, this want of confidence among the ministry was due to a generic fault in the character of the ministry and of the Government itself, that generic fault in the Government and the ministry being that they have not a mind of their own, that they have no settled policy, no opinion of their own. They are haunted, my hon. friend says, day and night, by the demon of doubt and vacillation, and he attempts to prove that this is true by citing cases of great vacillation and lack of a stable policy with reference to certain measures which this Government has introduced. What are tne measures? This Government, for instance, introduced an Insolvency Bill. It had that Bill debated before one of the Houses of this Parliament, it had passed its second reading, and it was allowed to drop, and my hon. friend cited that as one of the proofs of the great instability and lack of settled pelicy on the part of this Government. My hon, friend may read the history of governments, of his own government a long while back, of other governments in this country or in other countries, and he will find it no unusual thing that measures, even of importance, measures which the Government introduces and discusses are either laid over to a succeeding session or dropped entirely from the Order paper. that this is an unerring thinks proof of vacillation and lack of stability of and of settled policy in the Government, he will find few governments in this age which that same kind of proof would not convict of the same instability and lack of policy. But, coming from less to greater, he cites another instance to show the lack of stability and settled policy of this Government. And that, forsooth, is not a Bill at all, not a Government measure brought down in this House, but it is a small question of departmental regulation, the whole difference of which is summed up by a breadth of two inches. It was a question as to whether it were wiser in the department which had it in charge to make a regulation which should give the cattle shipped across the Atlantic a space of 2 feet 8 inches or a space of 2 feet 6 inches on the ship. And because, after the question had been discussed pro and con between the cattle shippers, the cattle dealers and the Minister who had it in charge, the Minister came to the conclusion that it would be well to give the cattle the benefit of the 2 inches, my hon, friend founds a charge of instability and lack of settled policy for which he asks this House to condemn the Government. These are the examples that my hon. friend gives to prove that there is such a lack of stability and of settled policy in this Government. My hon. friend should not allow his vision to become distorted in that way. A very object kept close to the eye will make it impossible for him, if he shuts the other eye to see a very large object some distance away. My hon, friend has been so intently looking at that 2 inches of difference in cattle space in ocean vessels, that he has forgotten to look at the broad measures of the Government to find in them that very settled policy and stability which his soul longs for and which he affects to find so lacking in this Government. What are the broad lines of policy on which this Liberal-Conservative party has based itself from confederation and upon which it has sustained itself in successive appeals to Parliament and in successive elections in the country. It is not a question of 2 inches in space in cattle ships crossing the Atlantic; it is not as to whether a Bill introduced in either houses shall, after discussion be laid aside for a time or not. The people do not take stock, nor does the House take stock in such trumpery questions, when contrasted with the great lines of policy upon which a Government is conducted. And when you discuss broad lines of policy and upon these contrast the two parties, then it is that I might say to my hon. friend that, instead of being so solicitous to remove the mote from his brother's eye, he had better remove the beam from his own eye. Take the first question upon which the Liberal-Conservative party placed itself as upon a broad and stable platform—the union of the proof British North America into a strong confederation. From 1867 up to the present time the Liberal-Conservative party has pursued that policy with a tenacity, foresight, energy and success which have made this country what it is have given this country the impetus carry it forward which shall to greater success. Take another great line policy the Liberal-Conservative of party-the establishment of means of communication between the provinces of this Dominion, so that confederation should not be upon paper merely, but become an actual union with the life blood of commercial and social communication running from province to province throughout the Dominion. And, Sir, against the most frenzied efforts of the Opposition, against their work in season and out of season, against heated appeals to the country at times when the House was in session and at times when the House was not in session, the Government conceived and carried out the policy of complete railway communication from the Atlantic to the Pacific, crossing our prairies, leaping over our mountains, and affording means of communication not only from sea to sea, but laterally through almost every part of this The Liberal-Conservative party country. and Government have had the energy to carry out that line of policy against all the force of the Opposition and against all the opposing influence that gentlemen on the other side could bring to bear. Sir, there was another broad line of policy-the development of industrial life and activity, the building up of industrial establishments of this country. And from 1875 when it was proposed, and from 1878 when it was formulated as a specific policy, up to the present. in what respect has the Liberal-Conservative party faltered or flinched with reference to that policy? Not once. Hon. gentlemen opposite who were protectionists became free traders and then became protectionists again. Hon. gentlemen opposite, in their opposition to this policy of developing the industrial life of this country on the lines of reasonable protection have boxed the compass of changes; they have look east, south, north and west; have been everything by starts and nothing long; have had nothing but changes and variableness in their policy while the Liberal-Conservative party has adhered steadily and resolutely to a policy of reasonable and adequate protection to our industries. The hon, gentleman went on after that to say that this Government-approaching nearer the question under discussionhad never dealt frankly, sincerely or honestly with what is known as the Manitoba school Sir, I meet that with a direct negative, as emphatic as words can make it. and I base it upon the statement which I shall prove before I get through, that from the time this question came to the front until the present day, the Government has done nothing else than act honestly, sincerely, frankly and wisely in this matter. Sir, when this question first came before th's House, when the school law was passed in Manitoba in 1890, what was the first question which met this Government? The first question was as to whether it should veto the legislation of Manitoba or not. And if any clamour was raised for that veto power being exercised, it was to be found among the friends-and in his own province-of the leader of the Opposition. But the Government took a frank and honest and consistent course on that question and refused to veto the legislation of the local legislature and government of Manitoba. And that legislation went into effect. What was the next course? Sir. this Government encouraged the appeal to the courts to see whether that legislation was intra vires; it aided that appeal to the courts, and it did it above board. And the result was that in the highest court of the empire that legislation was pronounced to be intra vires. There demand made upon the Government that it should come to the aid of the minority in the province of Manitoba, by remedial legislation at once, which would put the grievance right, and give back to the minority the privileges which they before that time had exercised. The course of the Government was again consistent in that regard. It said: Above all things, let us know exactly what our powers are, let us know exacty what your grievances are; and before we make a single step to remedy what you declare to be your grievance, let us know exactly what our constitutional So, Sir, taking advantage powers are. of the piece of legislation which was the joint product of both parties in this House, which Mr. Edward Blake, the leader of the Opposition, and Sir John A. Macdonald, the late chief of the Liberal-Conservative party, agreed upon, following the line of that legislation, they advised that the minority in the province of Manitoba should go before that tribunal, that the matter should be carried up to the highest court, and that all the constitutional powers should be made perfectly clear before any such important and far-reaching action as they asked for, should be taken by the Dominion Government. Was not that consistent? Was it not an honest policy? Was it not a straightforward policy? Was it not a wise policy? Well, Sir, this course was carried out, and after we had the decision of the highest court, when all the points were cleared by minority was fully demonstrated, when the powers that the Government possessed were placed beyond doubt, then the minority came back to this Government and asked that its appeal be heard. The Government then heard its appeal, and the Government heard counsel for the local government, and as a result, they made the remedial order. Was that not a wise thing to do? Was it not an honest thing to do? Was it not a necessary thing to do? My hon, friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) shakes his head when I asked the question whether it were a wise thing to do, intimating that he thought it not wise that the Government, under the circumstances, should have issued a remedial order. What, Sir, was the state of the case? In what position did the Government stand? Yonder, in one of the provinces, a minority; here a law and constitution, which gave to that minority the only access to the only power which could ultimately right their grievance; and the only door through which that aggrieved minority could come into the presence of the only power that could remedy their grievance, was a remedial order issued by the Government which heard the appeal. Yet my hon, friend says that it was not a wise thing, not a right thing for the Government to do, to open that door to the minority, and to allow it, with its grievance, to come face to face with Parliament. Sir, I hold that any Government which had that position under the constitution, which, by its whim, caprice or will, interposed itself irrevocably between that minority and the Parliament which the minority wished to approach, would be taking upon itself a responsibility which I, as a member of the Government, would not take upon myself, and which I think any Government would be wrong in taking upon itself. For ever and wherever in this country there is a minority with a grievance, with that grievance backed up by a decision of the highest court of the land, when that minority prays, through the only dium, through the only door, by which it can reach Parliament, namely, the granting of a remedial order, that it may be brought face to face with Parliament, which alone can remedy what it declares to be its grievance-so long as that condition of things exists, it is the duty of the Government to open the door, whatever else it may do or may refuse. Fault has been found, and would be found. I suppose, by my hon. friend, and perhaps by many others, as to the extent to which the remedial order went. They say in so many words that it went too far. How far did the remedial order go? The remedial order went just so far, and only so far, as the alleged and certified grievances of the minority went. When I say the certified grievance of the minority. I mean the grievance which was considered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and upon which, and with that decision, when the grievance of the reference to which, their decision was made.

I say that it would have been an assumption of power which I think would have been unwarrantable, if the Government had refused to open that door, by its remedial order, just as wide as the established grievance of the minority, in order that if Parliament wished, it should not be shorn of one jot or tittle of its jurisdiction and power fully and completely to right that grievance, if it chose in its wisdom to do so. So much then with reference to that. I believe that the verdict of this House, and the verdict of this country hereafter, will be that in these actions, and so far as we have gone, the Government has done its simple duty. and only its duty, in that regard. Well, Sir, much has been made of the fact that the language of the remedial order was too mandatory, that its language was too arrogant. and that it should have been rather a request; and the charge is brought against the Government that it irritated the province of Manitoba in the language and issue of the remedial order. Well, Sir, I do not think that governments in this country, provincial governments or Dominion governments, are simply children. I think they are made up of grown men who understand the relation between governments; and I doubt if there is one iota of foundation in the order, in the circumstances under which it was given. and the quality which it necessarily must have, to justify such a charge against this It was like the order of a Government. court, and it simply asked the Manitoba government and legislature, in so far as legislation was necessary, to remedy the grievance, a grievance which had gone through the courts, and the decision as to which had come back—to remedy that grievance so far as legislation was necessary to do it. I was going on to say that the remedial order having been issued it ought not to be considered as wanting in courtesy or in thoughtfulness towards the local government, because of the necessarily judicial tone in which it was couched, and that it partakes in no nature of a threat, but that it is simply, as it were, the order of a court, reciting the facts and declaring what, in the judgment of the court, following the judgment of the Privy Council, seems to be necessary in order to remedy the grievances by the local authority itself. from the issue of that remedial order and the time which elapsed after that remedial order was issued, until this session of Parliament was time given and granted to the province of Manitoba to take the matter into its consideration and to come to its conclusion as to what it ought to do, as to what it might do in the premises. And, Sir, after the answer of that legislature to the order was received, the Government had then two courses open to it, one of which was now that this Parliament if that were considered as a refusal to legislate, was clothed with jurisdiction in the matter, it ances by legislation; or the other course. that still another attempt should be made, other negotiations entered into and another space of time left, in which the Manitoba Government and legislature could think over the matter, and could make up its mind whether or not it still ought not to come to a reasonable and satisfactory arrangement by virtue of its own power, and in its own legislature. The Government, after thinking the matter over very carefully, came to the conclusion that in a matter of this moment, it was best that the local government should be given every possible epportunity to make the settlement within its own power and of itself before jurisdiction should be taken by this Parliament and remedial legislation should be introduced into this Parliament. Does my hon. friend object to that? there was any point to my friend's remarks this afternoon is was this, that conciliation should be tried, and his quarrel with us, was, as it seemsed to me. that conciliation had not been, as he said. tried from the first. That is to say, the hon, gentleman does not quarrel with the idea of a chance being given to Manitoba to make good the matter, and remedy the grievances within its own power, but his quarrel with the Government an impeachment of the Government seems to have been that this conciliatory course was not taken from the first, and his argument was that the remedial order was too harsh and conciliation should have been commenced at that time and carried on as well. So that on this line of policy which the Government has adopted, I cannot see that my hon. friend finds fault with the Government for the added time it has given for a settlement of this question by Manitoba itself. The statement of the policy of this Government has been made in this House. I leave it to the House and I leave it to the country if it is not a clear statement of a policy, if it is not definite. I call my hon. friend who sits on my right (Mr. McCarthy) to witness. He has declared in this House that the Government's position has been stated clearly, definitely, and is well known, and he bases his attack henceforth on that line of policy which he declares we have stated and which is definite and clear. it or is it not a clear and definite line of policy when the Government states as a Government, and unitedly, to the House and country that there is, we believe, a grievance of the minority, and for permanent settlement it is best that the grievance should be removed by the local legislature itself, and that intricate and important legislation ought not to be undertaken hastily by this House, and ought not in any event to be undertaken until the utmost limit has been granted to the local government and the legislature to settle it, if possible, satisfactorily themselves? Is there a child could proceed at once to remedy the griev- above ten years of age who does not draw possible to mistake. No great paper in ence which will definitely show where my this country doubts, no legislator in hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) ever has stood, this country doubts, no legislator in this country who is not prejudiced, or does not speak from simply party views, doubts as to what that means. The only possible doubt that a man can have who wants to see remedial legislation and who clamours for it now is that something may intervene between this and the next session, so that if the Manitoba Government and legislature do not settle the question satisfactorily, this Government will not be in a position to settle it and carry out its pledge. That is all. Is not every pledge of policy made by a Government, and every policy laid down by an Opposition governed by those very conditions? They state what their policy is to-day. No man living and no Government can state what, under circumstances untoward, fatal, may occur to prevent that policy being carried out.

Some hon. MEMBERS, Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Hon. gentlemen must not laugh until I have finished what I am saying. I am here to state, and to state it on behalf of the Government, that so far as a policy can be decided on unanimously and unitedly, this policy is: That so far as it can be enunciated clearly, this policy is enunciated clearly, and so far as this Government is concerned, it intends to adhere to that policy, word for word, line for line, and letter for letter. Well, Sir, now let me for a moment, contrast the policy and state-ment of the Government with the course of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and the party which holds him as its leader, and the exponent of its policy, a statesman who is continually vaunted by his party as being head and shoulders above the statesmen of the Liberal-Conservative party, a leader, Sir, who is looked upon by his followers as heaven-given and destined to lead them in the near future to the longwished for treasury benches, and the delights A man, Sir, who is continually of power. taunting hon. gentlemen opposite to him with lack of high principle, and lack of high practice in statesmanship. What, Sir, has been the course of that hon. gentleman: what has been his position in the past, and what is his position to-day? Five years this question has been before the country, and for these five years my hon. friend has led that party and been its exponent. I defy the face of clay and the tongue of mortal-

Mr. CASEY. The face of brass.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, with regard to my hon, friend I defy even that, and he has it. I defy any one to find in the pages of "Hansard," the official record of this Parliament, or in the records of the press which chronicle the sayings and doings of our public men, or in the records of the Liberal party convention over which he has presided, and a fair and clear idea of what that means of which he has been the leading spirit. from the very statement of it? It is im- I defy any one to point to one single sentor to-day stands upon that question. My hon. friend has made no announcement of his policy in all these years. My hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) has not made even a valuable suggestion as to what he thinks should be done.

> Mr. McMULLEN. Do you want to steal our clothes?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Mc-Mullen) wants to know if I propose to steal his clothes? No, I have too much regard for the hon, gentlemen who sit around me. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, for five years, has been always running for shelter on this question. The first underbrush he got into character and quality of the Manitoba under school, and he kept that for two years or more, and I \mathbf{am} not sure but he is under that yet. He asks: What is the character of those schools; are they Protestant schools? It is a question of fact, he says, and for five years he has been asking that question, and for five years he has been taking precious good care not to answer that question. Why, Sir, does my hon. friend not know what his own people think (and by his own people I mean his supporters in the province of Quebec), who are in favour of remedial legislation and separate schools in Manitoba. Does he not know what his friend from Iberville (Mr. Béchard) thinks? Does he not know what his friend from Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) thinks? Does he not know what his friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) thinks? Does he not know what his friend from Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) thinks? Go through all the different counties of his province, and what do his friends think? Do they not think that these schools are Protestant, and that the fact is well established that they are Protestant schools. And yet my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) has been with these friends for five years, and up to this moment his mind is like a blank piece of paper, so far as information is concerned as to whether these schools are Protestant or not. My hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) has a supporter, and a sole supporter, and a left-hand man from the great western country. He might have asked him for information as to the quality of these schools, because if I am not mistaken, the opinion of that gentleman is that these schools are Protestant schools. I think he (Mr. Martin), has been making a very strong plea lately that they should be secularized, for by secularizing them, he says, you take away any grievance the minority had that anything like Protestant doctrine was taught in these schools. Has my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) ever sat down by the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) and asked him his opinion with reference to these schools? My hon. المراجع المراج friend (Mr. Laurier) even went to the scene has been out of them for the last year of action itself. He was in Manitoba. He had a conference with the minority, not once but twice, and they told him all they knew about it, and they knew everything about it. He hob-nobbed with the local government, the members of his own party in that province, the authors and founders and continuers of this legislation. Did he try to inquire from them as to what was the character and quality of these schools? Is he to-day misinformed about them, or is he to-day still under the shelter of that cover and fighting from behind it? He either knows or does not know the question of fact. No man of average intelligence would take more than five hours to convince himself as to it. Mr. Joly de Lotbinère put just a little bit of energy and investigation into ic, and straightway got upon the platform in Quebec and declared that he knew all about it, and that they were Protestant schools. My hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) does know or does not know. If he knows, why is he not using his knowledge? If he does not know, there are only three reasons why he does not. One reason, that of incapacity (and you should not mention incapacity and the leader of the Opposition in the same breath); the other reason, utter carelessness, and he is not going to take the imputation of carelessness in this great matter. And the third reason: cowardice. As a man who claims to be a statesman, I put this question to him: Can he as the leader of a great party, and a commanding light in this country, afford to go through five years of turmoil upon a question which he himself says is shaking confederation, or may shake confederation to its very foundation, and not make himself sufficiently informed as to facts, and not then inform his people and his party as to these facts. If his people in the province of Quebec believe these schools are Protestant, and that therefore they keep from the minority the justice and the right which they claim; if his people believe it and are wrong, and my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) knows they are wrong, his first and most responsible duty as a statesman is to teach them that they are wrong and to eradicate that idea from their minds. And as a consistent man, if he believes that these schools are in that position and believes that therefore there is a grievance, it was his duty during these five years to have been backing up his people in their Neither of these things has he done. He has simply stood under cover and shot from behind the bush. Sir, he had another cover. When he was challenged again to give an opinion and to make a statement of his views, he declared that he could not do it because this question was before the courts, and that he must not open his mouth upon it while it was sub judice. I beg to inform my hon, friend that the matter has passed through the courts and nearly; and yet my hon. friend has not opened his mouth. But. Sir, he had another cover still. He entrenched himself behind this idea, which he put forth again and again: Let the Government find its own policy; it is not my duty to find a policy for the Government. Granted that it is not; but I do contend that it is his duty to find a policy for his party; and it is his duty to the country, as the leader of a party and as a statesman, to let his voice of truth and information go forth to the people, in an agitation which he says is fraught with such danger, to lead them in the right way; but up to the present moment, Sir, not even a valuable suggestion, as I have said, has come from my hon. friend. But I will tell you what my hon, friend has done. Now, in this year of grace, and in this present month, after all these agitations, and after these five years of mental travail, he has risen to this height: he has plucked up courage, and taken a sufficiently definite position to actually move the adjournment of the House on two occasions. You may search in vain the annals of government and parliamentary practice through and through to find any similar instance of a great question being to the front, agitating men's minds and threatening the peace and quiet of the body politic and a leader of a party, who for five years has diligently found fault with every step the Government has taken, at the end of that period, when he thinks they have made their final irretrievable step, simply plucking up courage enough to do what? To define his policy? To propose a remedy? To put against the lack of policy of the Government, as he calls it, a definite proposal of his own? No, Sir. He plucks up courage enough to try to profit from what he thinks is a crisis amongst his opponents, and to sail into power by the poor, miserable, mean artifice of putting the Government out on a motion to adjourn the House. To that height my hon. friend has risen and that noble eminence he occupies to-day after five years of mental and moral travail on one of the greatest subjects that has ever been before the Canadian Parliament or the Canadian electorate. Well, Sir, to-day when he arose to his feet this House expected something. On your right, Mr. Speaker. expectancy sat on the faces of hon. members. On your left a milder form of expectancy was observable. The hon. gentleman's supporters had experience of similar occasions. and did not expect too much. And the representatives of that interested public outside who have thronged these galleries today, sat listening with bated breath as the hon. leader of the Opposition rose to arraign the Government upon their definite and declared policy-to prove that that policy was insufficient, and to propose something which should settle this question and approve itself to the House and to the electorate as a fair and just settlement of the the jibes and sneers, and the pyrotechnic question. And, Sir, what did they hear? display which gradually led up to the state-When the hon, gentleman came to the point ment of this triune policy of his: as it was of setting forth his policy, they listened said of the charge at Balaclava, so it might with attention, and the three great planks be said of this—it is magnificent, but of his policy were laid down. What was the it is not war. If I were a Frenchfirst? "Two years ago I said that the man and had good command Government under the constitution had French language, I could say Government under the constitution had French language, I could say to my certain powers; that was my policy." Will hon. friend: "Ce n'est pas magnifique, any man in the world make out the meaning et ce n'est pas la guerre." But my hon. of a statement like that? Why, Sir, I friend rose from those three dry sticks of always supposed that a policy was a definite fact which he denominated his policy, and statement of what ought to be done and what the man or the party was going to do. But my hon. friend has another idea of a policy, and he brings up a two-year old, musty statement which means nothing, and re-terates it to-day when all the country is silent with expectancy and declares: "That is my policy." But he thinks that is not quite sufficient to stand upon; a little misgiving takes hold of him; and he resuscitates another two-year old statement. "Two years ago," he says, "I declared that this was a question of fact and not a question of law; that is my policy." Again, one is puzzled to know how such a statement can be tortured to mean a definite policy. Yet when the hon. gentleman gave it forth and said, "That is my policy," every man of his support cheered, and cheered most lustily. They had got what they wanted-a definite, clear cut policy; as clear, Sir, as the sunlight, with no shadow upon it at all. Again, I ask, what is the meaning of the word policy, and how can such a statement of mere fact be denominated a policy, and be cheered by half a hundred or more of intelligent statesmen at the back of their leader? But, Sir, my hon. friend wants to have a trinity of planks to stand upon. Feeling yet a little insecure, he went one step further, and resuscitated another old statement. He said: "Two years ago I declared, if the schools are Protestant, then there is a grievance and there ought to be a remedy; that is my policy." There you have it, gentlemen of this House; there the country has it—three isolated facts, uttered two or three years ago resuscitated to-day in the face of a great crisis when the hon. gentleman says confederation is shaking to its foundation, put together, echoed and re-echoed, applauded and re-applauded by his followers as the policy of the Liberal party upon this school question. Then, he went on to say: speak not hastily, but when I have spoken, I do not take it back." The hon. gentleman has been so much in love with the first part of that proposition of not speaking hastily that he has forgotten to speak at all, and consequently has nothing to take back. He talked about the charge at Balaclava and gave us some fine rhetoric with reference to that noted charge, and told how the French General who criticised it said that it was magni-ficent, but it was not war. And so I thought of all the pleasant badinage, declared in tragic tones that something must be done and done at once, that the country was being disintegrated, that confederation was threatened. Then, in the name of heaven, why does not my hon. friend do something? Hon. gentlemen opposite laugh. That is just what I expected. I expected my hon. friends opposite to laugh the very moment I mentioned the possibility of their leader doing something. The idea is so foreign to him, they know their leader so well, that the mere suggestion that he shall do something sends them off into inextinguish-But look at the situation able laughter. now in a graver aspect. My hon. friend poses as the saviour of this country. He comes up, filled with the idea of a crisis, and declares that the country is being disintegrated and confederation is in danger. Against him stands the policy of the Government. But that is not sufficient for him. The situation, he cries, is pressing, the crisis is great, confederation is in danger, and something must at once be done. What is that something he proposes to do? It is another motion. Not a motion to adjourn the House. This time he is on higher ground; this time he has a motion which is going to bring light out of this darkness, hope out of this despair, and unity and stability out of this disintegration with which confedera-tion is threatened. What is his motion? He asks the House solemnly, but firmly, to declare that they regret the failure of the Government to deal with the Manitoba school question. How? In a manner demanded by the best interests of the country. And furthermore, he is of the opinion that the ministerial declaration with regard to this question is calculated to promote a dangerous agitation among the Canadian people. Why, Mr. Speaker, what are the two lines of the Government's declaration? They are, first, give Manitoba six months to settle the question herself. My hon. friend thinks that is dangerous. Why, he argued for it this afternoon. He blamed us because we had not been practicing concilia-tion all the time. But there is another branch of the question. That other is that if nothing is done to settle this matter satisfactorily, legislation will be introduced into this Parliament. Does my hon. friend say that that is dangerous? I ask him that question now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. In this resolution my non. friend declares that something is dangerous. I want to know what he declares to be dangerous-the delay of six months for Manitoba or the remedial legislation which, in the event of Manitoba doing nothing, is to be introduced when Parliament meets again. Which does the hon, gentleman say is dangerous? Or is it both? My hon, friend did not deign to explain it in his speech. My hon. friend, when he is asked the question now, remains silent in his seat. How delightfully definite is the hon, gentleman's policy. The Government's work for five years is all before him; and yet, when he comes to regret that the Government is dealing with the Manitoba question in a manner not demanded in the best interests of the country, he has no suggestion in his resolution or speech as to what is the manner demanded by the best interests of the country. Not the least. My hon, friend rose to the height of twice moving the adjournment of the House to defeat the Government. But to-day he reached a still higher plane, and he moved a colourless catch motion, which every man who is opposed, in the least particular, to any step the Government has taken, or who is opposed in the least to throwing a single ray of light on his own views, could vote for. I challenge my hon, friend to put a motion before the House, laying down a definite, plain policy, in substitution for the policy of this Government, and ask this House to support it. My hon, friend says that something must be done, and done at once. He is in a position to do it. Jurisdiction is now invested in this House. My hon. friend can introduce his Bill, his measure, and submit the same to the House for its adoption; and this House has jurisdiction to make it law. If he and his party have any plan, they can put it into the shape of legislation, and this Parliament is in a position to pass upon that legislation. Has he Will he do it? Will he give done that? even a suggestion of it? My hon. friend taunted us with being cowardly. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have put our position plainly and clearly before this House, and have taken our stand on it. Has the hon, gentleman done the same?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Where is your Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend taunted us with trying to keep together in union in this party and the country the two great branches of different belief and different race. Does he find fault with that? Has he no solici-Would the leader be tude for the same? worthy of the name who did not, in the spirit of toleration, in the spirit of love of unity in diversity, which my hon. friend made a part of his peroration, try to join all sections and creeds together in this country, within the ranks of his party, instead of making a cleavage line dividing them? My hon. friend taunts us with being disunited How is it with himself? in our councils.

I challenge him and his lieutenants to rise to-day and say what they are in favour of on this question. They dare not do it. of on this question. They put motions which are colourless; they dodge every motion which is definite; the thing they do not want to do is to put themselves on record. Thev have been through this House and through skulking this country without giving the least information to the people of where they stand, looking only, and hoping only, for profit to themselves and power to themselves through the disintegration which may come to their opponents. I like the men who will attack from without, who will batter down the walls, who will attack the beleaguered political fortress from without and capture it manfully; but I despise the men who will send their minions inside and try to capture it by exciting dissensions within. I ask my hon, friend to leave this pusillanimous statesmanship, this miserable small-minded manoeuvre of attempting to put Governments out on motions of adjournments and colourless catch motions, and to rise to the spirit of the occasion and the importance of the question by giving this House and the country the benefit of a statesmanlike opinion, the benefit of his declaration of what his policy would be, what he thinks would heal the sore, what he thinks would make peace and lasting and durable amity and unity throughout the country. To none of these does he respond. All his hopes, all the hopes of his party are based upon dissension in the ranks of gentlemen opposite to him and are as far as possible removed from any policy that he proposes to substitute for the policy of his opponents. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to my hon. friend tonight; I appeal to him and to his lieuten-I challenge them again, to rise in this House and give their opinions with reference to this question. I challenge them to do it, but they will not do it. I said to my hon. friend who sat by my side when the leader of the Opposition rose to-day: "He will talk around everything and commit himself to nothing." And it fell out exactly that way. The hon, gentleman talked around everything; he committed himself to nothing; he ended up by declaring: I am not going to commit any chivalrous blunder. No; the blunders my hon, friend commits will never be chivalrous. He has made many blunders, he will make many more; but he does not run many risks of making that chivalrous blunder which consists in simply rising and stating plainly and frankly and honestly his position upon the great questions of the day.

Mr. TARTE. Mr. Speaker, you will never see me voting for the establishment in any part of Canada of a school system under which the languages of the two great nationalities represented here are not taught. Each time I rise in this House I am tempted to express my sincere regrets that such a system as I favour was not in existence during my school years. If I spoke in my native language to-day I might hope, at least, to do justice to some extent to the great question that is now before you. But, Sir, if there ever was an occasion when a French-Canadian public man should try to be understood that occasion is the present. And, speaking in another than my native language. I must ask the indulgence of the House. We have listened to a very eloquent speech indeed. But looking at that speech squarely, what do you find in it? You find that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, calls upon us to give him a policy; he challenges us to formulate a policy for the other side of the House. Sir, the hon. gentleman, with all his experience, has evidently forgotten that we are not called upon to assume the duties of the Government. Governments have duties to perform; opponents also have duties to perform. We on this side perform our duties in calling upon the hon. gentlemen who administer our affairs to keep the pledges they have given for years and years. So much abuse has been heaped upon my head that to-day I feel justified in giving, as briefly as possible, the view I have entertained upon this question. From the day when the legislature of Manitoba adopted these school laws in 1890, and the law abolishing the French language, I did not hesitate to advocate a policy of disallowance. I am always surprised when I hear even the foremost men in the House apparently scandalized at such a proposal and declaring that the autonomy of the provinces must be maintained at all hazards. Those who have read carefully the debates upon confederation cannot forget that Mr. Brown, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Galt—nearly all the important English-speaking members of the House held the view that the right of veto was the very keystone of our system. They may have been right or they may have been wrong. But, the right of veto has been established. And no one has defended it with more eloquence or more strength than my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I listened with care to that hon. gentleman's speech, in 1888, if I remember well, on the Jesuit Bill question. He advocated strongly the disallowance of that measure, which was assuredly a provincial measure. But, Sir, let bygones be bygones. I claim that the disallowance of the Manitcba laws would have been a safer and more just mode of dealing with them than the one that has been pursued by this Government. With what are we face to face to-day? By the tacit consent of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, a system of national schools has been established in the province of Manitoba. They have the power to veto the laws by which those schools are established to-day. They did not disallow those laws. But the same government, if we are to believe the statements of the gentlemen from the did they do? They passed the remedial province of Quebec, would ask us to undo what they have allowed to be done. I say it would have been more manly, it would have been more just to disallow those laws immediately. Archbishop Taché began by asking for the exercise of that right of veto. In the petition of 7th April, 1890, he asked that these Bills should be disallowed. But, Sir, he was soon led in another direction. Archbishop Taché was, no doubt, a good man, a good missionary, and it is far from my intention to throw suspicion upon Surely not. his memory. But he was living thousands of miles away from the centre of population and of politics. He was born a Conservative; he belonged to the good old school of which Bishop Lefleche is to-day the most eminent representative in Quebec; the very word "liberal" frightened And he was led by hon, gentlemen on the other side to have confidence in them and in them alone. Yet. Archbishop Taché had learned to know gentlemen opposite before In the inquiry of 1874, he stated day. that he had been deceived over and over again by the late Government of Sir John A. Macdonald. But in spite of all that, as I said a moment ago, he stood by the Conservative Government in their policy of non-interference. The bishops and the French Conservative party in the province of Quebec took their lead from him, and agreed not to press for a policy of disallowance, but on the condition that certain legal proceedings should be taken and followed up to the end. We are to-day face to face with the result of that policy. To any man of common sagacity, it should be evident that all these proceedings were instituted and have been carried on to gain time. What did we see? In the province of Quebec assurances of one kind were given, in the province of Ontario other assurances were given. I have under my hand here an article published in the Orange "Sentinel," in 1893, in which the present policy of this Government was foreshadowed. That article stated: The Government will go on with these proceedings; if the judicial committee of the Privy Council decide that the minority has rights, the Government will not do anything at all upon that judgment. Sir, that which the Orange "Sentinel" foretold in 1893, is taking place to-day. Well, such was the policy of the Government until the judgment of the Privy Council. In Quebec they were saying one thing, in Ontario they were saying another thing. Their position became much more embarrassing after the judgment of the Privy Council. They were now confronted with the judgment of that high court, and what were they going to do? Sir, we had four elections, two in the province of Quebec, one in Ontario, and one in the province of Nova Scotia. The Govern-The Government were bound to do something, and what order that we have heard so much about. But of that remedial order, it seemed at the time, and it seems to-day, that there are many interpretations. In Verchères we had of that the full interpretation My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works and myself took a certain part in that election. I was in Verchères on nomination day, and half a dozen of my hon. friends on both sides of the House were there with us. The Minister of Public Works. after having made eloquent appeals for the support of his candidate, called God to witness the truth of the statement he was going to make. I well remember that the crowd had a good laugh at him that day. We asked the hon. gentleman what kind of a law it would be that would remedy all the grievances of the Manitoba minority, and gentleman started that hon. had in his pocket the very remedial order about which the leader of the House speaks The hon. Minister of so evasively to-day. Public Works was then very positive, and. holding the paper over the heads of the vast crowd that was listening to him, he said: This is the law that we are going to present to the House. I call on my hon. friend from Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion), on my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Ouimet), and on my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) to say if I am not correct when I state that the Minister of Public Works, holding the order in his hands over the crowd, told us: This is the law we are going to introduce. I then asked him, "When will you introduce that law ?" Public The hon. Minister of Works, again calling upon God as his witness, answered: The law will be introduced during the next session of Parliament. These were his words, I quote them from "La Minerve," of 13th April:

Mr. Geoffrion asked by what Statute we will settle the school question. That Statute will embrace precisely the same terms that are contained in the remedial Order in Council, and, if Mr. Geoffrion had read that Order in Council, he would have seen that the Government meant to be serious, and will be serious. Nothing will stop us in our determination.

But the hon. Minister was supported by another great authority in making all these pledges. He had with him a very important telegram from a gentlemen occupying a very high position in this House, I mean my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, who was in those days fighting in the battles of justice and equity, so he said, in Antigonish.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They got justice there.

Mr. TARTE. Yes, and more than justice. The Minister of Justice desired to say a good word in behalf of the Conservative candidate in Verchères, and so he sent the Minister of Public Works this telegram, which I translate from "La Minerve":

Antigonish, 11th April, 1895.

Mr. TARTE.

Antigonish will declare minority in Manitoba. itself for the rights of justice and for the cause of the good government of the country. Our friends ardently desire your success in defence of the cause, which is the same everywhere in the Conservative ranks.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

After these statements. were not yet sure that the truth had been told What did the Minthem. ister of Public Works do? Now, I am going to call the attention of the House to the real cause of the whole trouble with which we are face to face to-day. The Minister of Public Works, I have reason to believe, with the consent of the Government, instead of acting as a statesman, instead of doing what the leader of the House has asked us to do, namely, to take the full responsibility of his act, the Minister of Public Works, I say, seeing that he was not believed and not trusted by the electors, went to the Archbishop of Montreal and asked him, not only did he ask him, but I will go so far as to say that he even forced him, to interfere in Verchères.

Mr. OUIMET. The statement of the hon. gentleman is not founded on fact.

Mr. TARTE. I expected that very denial from the hon. gentleman, I was prepared for it. I must accept it. The hon. gentleman forgets many statements, I am afraid. In past days he has forgotten many, and he has done so to-night. I have here an interview with the Archbishop on 19th April, 1895, and the last part of it only will I

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. From what paper?

Mr. TARTE. From the "Herald." After reciting the facts, here is what the Archbishop said-here is what the reporter makes the Archbishop say:

From the statement made by Archbishop Fabre it appears that the using of the second letter was brought about in this way. The fact that the cures had been instructed to remain neutral became known, and was interpreted by certain Liberal journals as meaning dissatisfaction of the bishops with the remedial order and the action of the Government. His Grace was, therefore, called upon by the Catholic members of the Cabinet and asked to remove an impression which was not only a handicap to them in Verchères, but prejudiced the cause of remedial legislation with their colleagues in the Government. Grace, therefore, issued a second letter, wherein he made it clear that he approved the action of the Government in passing the remedial order, but he was careful in no way to reflect upon the Liberal party.

Do I understand the hon, gentleman to state that neither he nor any of his colleagues to his knowledge called upon Archbishop? Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that neither he nor Prospects here are everything that could be de-sired for those who wish to give justice to the any of his colleagues wrote, not only to the Archbishop, but to those around him? Does the hon. gentleman state that neither he nor any of his French colleagues asked and pressed upon the Archbishop of Montreal to interfere, giving as a reason that the action of the bishops was prejudicing them with their colleagues? I will accept the hon. gentleman's denial.

Administration of the Control of the

Mr. OUIMET. Why should I speak for my colleagues when they can all speak for themselves?

Mr. TARTE. It is quite true that the hon. gentleman has enough to do to speak for himself, but it is no less proof that what the Archbishop said was perfectly correct. The hon, gentleman knows that his colleagues called upon the Archbishop of Montreal. The L'ostmaster General called upon His Grace on two different occasions; the Minister of Agriculture called and wrote. The result of all these visits was that the Archbishop issued a circular, which I have here. I will not read the whole of it, but I will give its most important parts. The prelate at first sent a letter to all the priests not to interfere, but after the French members of the Cabinet had complained that the inaction of the clergy was injuring them, the bishops interfered believing if they did not interfere it would be all up with the remedial order. Here is what the Archbishop wrote. I translate it from the French:

In asking you to keep silence on the Manitoba school question, my intention is that you should not speak about it from the pulpit. You are, however, free, outside of it, to express the entire satisfaction of the episcopacy with the firm and courageous position lately taken by the Federal Government. It is only justice to the good will he did not call on Archbishop Fabre. Will he deny that he made public and gave to the press a private letter written to him by Bishop Moreau? I charge the Minister of Public Works with having made public a private letter addressed to him a few days before by Bishop Moreau, that he did not only make it public but broadly circulated it in every house in Verchères? It read as follows:-

24th March, 1895.

Hcn. A. Ouimet.

Allow me to express to you the earnest pleasure felt in making communication with you and your colleagues as regards the position you have taken in favour of the Catholics of Manitoba. It is precisely what all Catholics and true friends of the country expected of our hon. Ministers. They have accomplished the very difficult task which was imposed on them, with a spirit of justice, with a fairness and devotion which call alike for the gratitude of all French Catholics and admirers of good government. May Heaven bless them with all His benedictions and come to their help of good government. until perfect victory over all their enemies shall be accomplished. Very great also has been my pleasure in learning that there will be a session!

of Parliament in April next. The great question of Manitoba schools will certainly be discussed, and it will be then that our Ministers will pronounce the sentence of life or death. opinion that, after an act so courageous and so noble, they cannot fall from their high position, because they have the support of all those who have a sense of justice and right and who desire to advance their country. These are in greater numbers than those who have allowed themselves to be dominated by injustice and fanaticism.

That interference which the Ministers forced on the bishops is at the bottom of all the trouble with which we are face to face today. But at the same time those promises were made in the province of Quebec, pledges of quite another kind were made in the county of Haldimand. If I am well informed, the Secretary of State and his friends told their important followers that the remedial order was simply an act of administration and that nothing would come out of it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is quite true.

Mr. TARTE. Yes, and the best evidence is, that when Parliament met, the Speech from the Throne referred to the question in that vague way of which the leader of the House is an expert. Even when he speaks through the mouth of the representative of our sovereign, we can recognize the vagueness of his language. Well, Parliament met, and speeches were made. My hon, friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Belley) made a speech to which I may not allude. But I will read the newspaper comments upon it. My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) also My hon, friend from Chimade a speech. coutimi (Mr. Belley) was evidently authorized by the French Ministers to state that of our legislators to encourage them to pursue to there would be remedial legislation this session, and my hon, friend from East Simcoe The Minister of Public Works stated that (Mr. Bennett) was just as evidently authorized to state that there would be no remedial The Maritoba legislature met, legislation. and something had to be done; but the Government were afraid to be obliged to come out of the bush. What did they do? I have shown, they had promised the church and they had begged the church to interfere on their behalf? What did they do, Sir? We all know that His Excellency, Lord Aberdeen, is a man of great good sense and of He knows his duty too well high honour. to do anything improper. I most certainly will not allude in any disrespectful way to him, but I am to a certain extent allowed to refer to him in this Chamber. His Excellency entered into the arena. It is not possible to conceive, it is not possible to admit, that, when he called Mr. Greenway and Mr. Sifton to come to Ottawa, that he did so without being authorized by his advisers. He was authorized by them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has told us that we have no policy. Did the hon, gentleman have a policy, when, after sending to the Manitoba Government that remedial order, he called on His Excellency to negotiate on his behalf? Is this policy? Let the country answer that question, for I can allude no But, Sir, Manitoba declined to enter into these negotiations, and what did the hon, gentleman do? Did he proceed immediately to keep the pledges which the hon. Minister of Public Works had given in Verchères? Did his Government introduce a remedial law? No, but they discussed carefully the matter between themselves, as the leader of the House has told us. result of that discussion was that, on a given day, we heard that the three French Minis-We have been told a ters had resigned. great many stories about their resignation; but "La Minerve" has given the genuine story of the whole thing. "La Minerve" is the property of the Postmaster General, and it is edited by Mr. Royal, an ex-lieutenantgovernor, who, during the crisis, has been in constant communication with the French On the 11th of July, "La Min-Ministers. erve" gave us a full report of the incidents of the crisis. I will not read the whole of it, as it is too long, but I will translate a few brief extracts. The article is headed, in French of course, "The Secret of the Crisis," and it says:

To properly understand the position, it is necessary to know what has taken place between the French Ministers and their English and French colleagues, in so far as it is possible to control the one thousand contradictory rumours which are circulated.

I call the attention of the House to what follows:

Last Friday, after several days of deliberation, the Cabinet adopted unanimously a statement which was to be put before the House. When the Ministers separated, they were in perfect accord, and the Catholics were in a position to declare that they were satisfied, because they had obtained an acknowledgment of the rights of their countrymen. Saturday, when the Council met again, the harmony had disappeared. Thanks to a secret work, a certain number of Ministers had changed their views, and four paragraphs had been stricken from the statement, in spite of the energetic opposition of the French-Canadian Ministers, who then refused to accept that statement.

Is that true or not? I have more than one reason to know that it is perfectly true.

Mr. OUIMET. Let me interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) to say that nothing in that report has been warranted by anything I have said.

Mr. TARTE. The statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Ouimet) is just as vague as the speeches of my hon. friend the leader of the House.

Mr. OUIMET. I am no more at liberty to say what has not taken place in Council than I am to state what has taken place.

Mr. TARTE. I do not say that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has given this information to Mr. Royal. The hon. gentleman knows that "La Minerve" is not under his control, but it is under the control of his colleague, the Postmaster General. The writer goes on to say:

The work of several days was lost, and everything had to be begun anew. At last, on Monday, the English Ministers arrived in the Council Chamber with the statement which has been read to the House.

The statement is too long to be read by me to-night, but I will give it to the reporter. Briefly, it says, that the French Minister had asked that the words "separate schools" be introduced into the statement that was read to the House, and that instead of these, the words "adequate means of relief" had been introduced. Will the hon. Minister deny what I am stating? I will accept his denial, if he denies that the French Ministers have pressed upon their colleagues to put these words in the statement. At any rate, he knows that I am perfectly right in the statement I make.

Mr. FOSTER. You are perfectly safe in making a statement about what was done in Council. Nobody can deny it or affirm it.

Mr. TARTE. I am not responsible for the statements of my hon. friend's colleagues. If they have spoken it is not my fault; and if my hon, friend takes time to read the statement I have in my hand, he will see that the secrets of the Council Chamber have come out. It is not our fault, I say again. The Ministers were out at the time, and they did not intend to return to the fold as soon as they did. And they evidently spoke. Well, Sir. the House does not know yet why the French Ministers went out. We have the statement that was made in the House, but the country is still asking why the French Minister went out. It is also asking why they went back. Why they went out is not quite known; but why they went back is, I think, pretty fully understood. The hon. Postmaster General has been a Minister for a long time; in fact, his calling is to be a Minister. If he were not a Minister, God knows what he would do. I am told that he was very anxious indeed during the three days that passed between his so-called resignation and his return to the Government. Sir, I am inclined to believe that he went out to leave out the hon. Minister Agriculture. On a former occasion the hon. Minister of Agriculture was pretty near going out of the Government; I allude to the occasion when the disallowance of the North-west ordinance was pressed. At that time the hon. Postmaster General kept him in and did not go out himself. This time he went out, and the Minister of Agriculture has been kept out. The hon. Minister of Public Works was quite sure to stay out. His interviews with all the newspaper men he could see were read to the House. has was starting for war and for blood. Sir. The the reception that he got when he took his seat is a warning of the reception that awaits him in the province of Quebec.

Mr. OUIMET. Hear, hear.

Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." I say again to him, he should not have gone out, or he should have stayed out. The position he occupies to-day is a very important one. He has taken upon himself the succession of Sir George Cartier. In the district of Montreal he has been looked upon for a certain time at least as the leader of the great Conservative party; and when a man occupies such a position, he has a duty to perform, and the hon. gentleman has shown want of dignity. or incapacity or want of courage. He has gone into this Government, I take it, in about the same way that he went into the Privy Council Chamber for the first time. I happen to know what took place in 1891. The hon, gentleman did not go into this Government by the grand door of honour and truthfulness and fidelity to his friends; and on the present occasion he has played the same role that he played in 1891. And it is a very curious coincidence that this time he went into the Government through the same negotiator, the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), as he did in 1891.

Mr. FOSTER. It is wonderful how much you know.

Mr. TARTE. I happen to know some little things about the hon. gentleman's colleagues in the province of Quebec. Will the hon. gentleman deny, for instance, that in 1891 the hon. member for Cardwell was a party to a pledge that was given to the Hon. Mr. Chapleau in his house by the ex-Prime Minister and by Senator Drummond? I was not the only witness, either. I think my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) knows as much as I know about that, because, if I remember rightly, on that very occasion he was offered a position in this Government, and he declined to take it; and my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, took it. As far as the ex-Minister of Agriculture is concerned, he went out and he stayed out. Well, Sir, I am not here to defend him. He has friends who can defend him better than I can; but even his bitterest opponents will not deny that on this occasion he has given evidence of fidelity to his duty and of strength of char-Now we know a good deal of what has been the policy of this Government in the past. What is it going to be The hon. Minister of Fiin the future? nance has made a long speech, and he has begged us to give him a policy. Sir, what is his policy? His policy is not to do arything during this session, and to say that if the Manitoba Government does not settle the Manitoba school question in a satisfactory way, then this Government may do something. He has asked us many questions. I will ask him, what does this something mean? Is it going to be a remedial law covering the remedial order? The hon. gentleman will not say it is.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it necessary to give my hon. friend any answer to any question he may ask me. He knows everything.

Mr. TARTE. The hon, leader of the House is, of course, very much above every one of us. Still, he might condescend to give us a few short answers. We have listened to him patiently, even when he was saying nothing. Let him not imagine that he is above public opinion. On the floor of this House I am on just as good a footing as he is. He may have a better opinion of himself than I have of myself. I quite admit that I am only a humble member of the House. I have the misfortune of not speaking the English language as well as I speak my own language. Let him learn the French language as I have learned the English language, and let us fight a good political battle together. Well, Sir, he does not want to answer that question, because he is not able to answer it.

An hon. MEMBER. He is afraid.

Mr. TARTE. Yes, he is afraid. He will not answer me, but his organs speak for him, and they speak more definitely than he does. What does the "Mail" say, the organ paid-I will not say bought-by the money of his colleagues? What does that organ say? It says that there will be no remedial legislation, or that if there is any, it will be of the mildest possible kind. That organ goes on to charge the hon. gentleman's former colleague with being at the head of the church party of Quebec. It accuses Mr. Angers of trying to excite racial hatred and passion. The hon, gentleman will not answer, but his organ will speak for him, one of his Ministers will answer for him. He will not even tell us that we are going to have a session; we are not sure of having a session; but we are sure of one thing, that the Minister will not speak, some of his colleagues and friends will. On the 12th July one of his colleagues, the Controller of Customs made an important speech in the city of Ottawa. He reproached the Bishop of Nicolet with having written a factum to the sacred congregation of the Propaganda; he said that the publication of that document was an indictable offence, a felony; and he went on to say that if the Government dared to introduce remedial legislation, he would step out of the Government. My hon. friend used the heard from language that we have mouths of three hon, gentlemen on the floor of Parliament; and that we would have heard from forty members on the other side if the Government had attempted to introduce remedial legislation this session. But, Sir. we have further language of the same kind from friends of the hon. leader of the House. In Hamilton a gentleman, who calls himself a Conservative in good standing, alderman Cook, spoke. He said:

There never was a time when Orangemen and Protestants should stand more firmly and allow of no surrender by legislation. Manitoba had done what she had a right to do. He was sorry to hear the Government say that in six months they would pass remedial legislation, if Manitoba did not remedy the grievance to the minority. If the Government should pass remedial legislation, he would oppose the Government.

I call the attention of the House to the next sentence:

We have got to crush out this French race in Canada, and we will never have peace until we do so. These Frenchmen will not be coerced, but we have to grind them down and make them understand that we mean business.

In the county of York, where my hon. friend is a prospective candidate, a gentleman spoke also—the leader of the Conservative Opposition in the legislature. This gentleman, Mr. Pitts said that if the Government ever dared to introduce a remedial law, he and all the Conservatives he could control would go against the Government. I have made those quotations to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the serious state of things with which we are face to face. The Government, by their vacillating policy, have brought about a state of things that we cannot characterize as aught but very dangerous. In Manitoba, on the 12th July, speeches were made; and in these speeches we are told that the people of Manitobasome of them at any rate-are prepared even to rise in arms if this Government should introduce a remedial law. Similar language has been used in many meetings in the Orange lodges. Sir, are we going to have civil war again? If the unwise, the vacillating policy of this Government is going to bring this new disaster on this country, the least imprudence in Manitoba could to-day excite a very dangerous conflict. We cannot ignore that. Well, it seems to me that when a Government, by their vacillation, have brought about such a state of things, they are no longer worthy of public confidence. Even if they introduced such a law here, I say that it would be a most dangerous thing to trust them with the enforcement of such a law. What would they do with it? I ask my hon. friends from Quebec to weigh that question. We are in a small minority in Manitoba, and the least imprudence will lead to a most dangerous conflict. The hon. gentleman laughs. The hon, gentleman may laugh at the voice of a member of the House who is after all just as good as he. I am not proclaiming myself a puritan; I am not going upon the public stand and teaching puritanism as my hon. friend did in the past for many years; but if when I am speaking from my seat in this House, I am speaking as representing electors who are just as good and honest and loyal as the electors who will not elect my hon, friend in his own county.

the following the place is also to the place of the place

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose my hon. friend never wrote for money.

Mr. TARTE. When I was the editor of a paper, I got, I will not say, a decent salary, because there are very few newspaper men who get that, but when I wrote on a public question I supported it as well as I could. But my hon, friend, after preaching prohibition for many years for money,—which he cannot deny—came to the House and went back on all his preaching.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend is courteous in one thing and wrong in another.

Mr. TARTE. I accept the statement of my hon. friend, but I want to ask him if on that very question of prohibition he has not played the same vacillating game he is playing now.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman is wandering away from the statement before the House.

Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend stated that we had no policy on this side. I want to ask him, as one knowing something about constitutional law and parliamentary government, if it is the duty of the Opposition to form a policy?

Mr. FOSTER. It does not seem to be.

Mr. TARTE. Great men—not quite so great, perhaps, as the hon. Finance Minister, but still of some ability—have not taken the hon. gentleman's view. Lord Palmerston, for instance—of course, he was not as big a man as my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) but he was something of a man. Sir Robert Peel would not have answered as the hon. gentleman has answered, and yet he has been considered a man of some ability. What did Sir Robert Peel say?

It is an old maxim that the duty of an opposition is very simple; it is to oppose everything and propose nothing.

And in the same spirit, Sir Robert Peel said that he would refuse to prescribe until he was called in. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, is perfectly prepared to prescribe, but not to undertake to cure the incurable disease inflicted upon the country by hon. gentlemen opposite. Sir Robert Peel goes on:

The peculiar office of the opposition is doubtless to watch with keen eye the conduct of the government they oppose, to see if anything be blamable or liable to criticism to trip them up even before they fall—

That is just what we are going to do——at all events if they stumble to mark their stumbling and call upon them to set things right again.

Right again.

The originators of measures and inventors of a policy, the individuals who come forward with their schemes and suggestions for public approbation, are not the opposition but the Ministers of the Crown.

The leader of the House would be happy if my hon, friend the leader of the Opposition were to place upon the Table of the House a remedial Bill. He would immediately adopt it. The Ministers have not been able to indicate any policy or to propose any Bill. If we were ridiculous enough to make a Bill for them, to assume their duties, they would be very much relieved, indeed. The country understand that we are not called upon to do that. The policy of the leader of the Opposition is, in my estimation, a very clear one. What has he He says: I am ready to grapple with the question. Is not this a policy? The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) who is opposed to the policy of this Government, as he stated the other day, but who is, nevertheless, going to vote for it, laughs. Well, I ask again, as against the policy of postponement that we have had for years and years, is it not a perfectly good policy when my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition says: I am ready to grapple with the question, and to settle it. If my hon, friend was called to power tomorrow, and did not keep his pledge, if he did not grapple with the question and settle it, it would be the duty of those who have supported him to vote against him. Sir. we are to meet again in six months, it ap-All the organs in Ontario of gentlemen opposite declare that we must not have remedial legislation.

Mr. DAVIN. What does your organ say?

Mr. TARTE. Our organs say very rightly that we have an incapable Government, a Government who have deceived the people. But what do the organs of the French Ministers say. Look, for instance, at "L'Evenment." It is obliged to say: We have no confidence in our friends; we have been deceived. "What does "Le Canada" say in the person of Emmanuel Tasse, an able Mr. Tassé has retired from the editorship of "Le Canada"? Why? states why: I have been deceived; I no longer have cofidence in my friends. But the organs in Ontario, the "World," the "Mail and Empire," the Hamilton "Spec-tator," state that there will be no remedial legislation. In six months, things will be worse than they are to-day, and God knows they are bad. As I said at the beginning of the remarks, I am about to conclude, I am sorry that the languages of the two great nationalities that are here to stay are not taught in every school in Canada. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I hope I shall never give in this or any other House a vote to establish or to re-establish a school system under which the two languages are not upon the same footing. I go further and say that if my hon. friends on the other side of the House, instead of resorting to the hateful mode of coercion, had managed in such a way as to grant to my fellow-countrymen in Mauitoba and the North-west, the benefit and blessing of the teaching of the French language, the Manitoba school question might have been settled long ago. Sir, I speak for myself alone; I have no right to speak for anybody else. But I say again that so far as I am concerned, let my hon. friends try to restore to my countrymen the official use of their own language, the teaching in the schools of their own language, and they will have done a great deal. A great many suggestions have been made, and gentlemen opposite ask of this side of the House what suggestions we have to offer. making one. Why, my hon. friend is not ready to-day to go on with the measure his colleagues have promised the public. Six months hence, I say again, we shall be in a worse position. Passions will have been inflamed, speeches will have been made on one side in Ontario, and, it may be, in Quebec on the other. In Quebec we will preach the same doctrine we have preached in the The public press has, on many occasions, circulated false reports of meetings that we have attended. For my part, nearly every day I see my own words distorted. I suppose I can stand it—I must. The duty we have to perform, if you will allow me to say so, is to go calmly to work. These speeches made on the 12th July will not improve matters; and will you allow me to add, Sir, that the position taken by my hon. friends the French Ministers will not improve matters, either. If we could make up our minds to act like politic men; if, on both sides of the House, we decided to take the responsibility of our actions, a great many things would have been done that have not been done. Sir, what has done the greatest harm in the Manitoba question? Is it not the unfortunate publication of Bishop Gravel's letter? Who caused Bishop Gravel to write that letter? Sir, I am not going to traduce the bishops of my own church in this House, but in the name of the church to which I am proud to belong, I wish to protest against the abuse that has been made of the authority of that church. Our bishops are good men, indeed. They are not politicians. When approached by designing men, they are apt to be deceived. If the Bishop of Nicolet had not been deceived, if Archbishop Fabre had not been deceived, they would not have interfered in the way they did. I was sorry to read somewhere a statement that the province of Quebec was endeavouring to dictate to the Dominion. I beg to assure my hon, friends in this House, and the English population outside the House, that the French Ministers who represent the province of Quebec in the Government, have made blunders, they have compromised them-Let them alone be compromised. Sir, the province of Quebec is a proud province. It may have made mistakes, it may have its failings. The French race that Mr. Coo wants to trample upon, is a proud race. It may have its failings. I do not know any race which does not need improvement. But, Sir, the province of Quebec is a loyal province, the church of Quebec is a loyal church. It may make mistakes, some of its members may make mistakes. I am sorry for the interference that has taken place. My friends on both sides of the House, Conservative as well as Liberal, are sorry as I am myself. When we meet together, we express the same views and the same ideas. If the Roman Catholic bishops had not interfered at all-and allow me to add if a great many Protestant ministers had not interfered at all—we might be just as well off. I take my seat, thanking you for the indulgence you have shown me. I take my seat in the full conviction that this Government cannot and does not intend to settle the question, with the full conviction that they will go on pursuing the same deceiving policy, that they will deceive Ontario, that they will deceive Quebec as long as they can. Fortunately, they cannot go on much longer, the country will not much longer be exposed to the mismanagement and unwise policy that the Government have been pursuing. I know that there are in the Conservative party, in the grand old party that I have known in better days, thousands and thousands of men who have made up their minds to oppose this Government. As I say, we shall not have long to wait. If Parliament is not dissolved by treachery before another session, it will be dissolved by course of law in the month of April next. And, Sir, when this Government has to give an account of its deeds, I believe that it will be condemned by the people of this country.

Mr. OUIMET. The speech the hon. gentleman has just made can be thoroughly answered by his own statements, statements that he made a week ago over his own signature in the paper called the "Cultivateur, of which he is the editor, and over which he has sole control. When the hon gentleman was led to believe that remedial legislation was going to be introduced he felt very sorry, he felt that his position before the province of Quebec would be so compromised, and that the success of his party at the next election would be so jeopardized, that he endeavoured to soften the blow that was about to fall upon himself and upon his party, and he wrote as follows in his paper :-

This remedial legislation was only resorted to as a means to bring the active and violent intervention of the clergy into the electoral struggle, Archbishop Conroy in Canada. It is to obtain this intervention that the Government will introduce the so-called remedial legislation. We are, therefore, in the presence of a bold, audacious and cynical electoral manoeuvre, freighted with consequences and perils for the Catholics, for the French Catholics especially, and for the entire Dominion. There is not in the whole Canadian Parliament a man of any intellectual ability who dces not know that it is impossible, in the present state of things, to force Manitoba to submit to any educational law adopted by the Federal power. Such a law can be passed, but it cannot be put into effect. It cannot be put into effect if Manitoba chooses to resist; and, unfortunately, no one can doubt that such resistance will take place. Such resistance has been, so to speak, organized by the Tory party itself.

Mr. TARTE. Please go on.

Mr. OUIMET. I do not want to detain the House; I will do like the hon. gentleman, and give the whole paper to the "Hansard" reporter.

Mr. TARTE. I want the hon gentleman to go on reading.

Mr. OUIMET. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the same gentleman who, eight days ago, charged the Government with the most audacious attempt to commit the clergy, as he says, to a violent intervention in politics in order to compel remedial legislation. The hon, gentleman realized that the effect of that remedial legislation would be so disastrous to himself and to his party, that he endeavoured to weaken the result of that legislation in advance, and to take upon himself. I suppose, as he tries to do on every occasion, the merit of the whole thing. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have to speak of myself, but as a member of this honourable House, I think I owe it to my colleagues to state, in answer to what has fallen from the lips of the hon, gentleman, the facts as they exist. I have been charged with having entered this Government by the back-door, I have been charged with having been false to a friend of mine, a man occupying a high position in the province of Quebec, a gentleman who is yet an intimate friend of mine. Mr. Speaker. I beg to state that when I was twice offered the portfolio of the Hon. Mr. Chapleau in the Government of Sir John Abbot. I refused it. I refused it because I would not take a portfolio belonging to a friend of mine. Every political consideration apart, I must say that I never ran after a portfolio, I had no necessity for doing so and I did not wish it, and from my own choice I would not have it to-day. When I was offered and solicited, in the presence of Mr. Desjardius, the Senator, by Sir John Abbott to accept a portfolio as the colleague of Mr. Chapleau, I accepted it; and I accepted it because it was then pointed out to me that I could be of great use, under the very difficult circumstances in which the party was placed at the time, on the eve of the by-elections upon as in the days which preceded the mission of which depended the fate of the party. I accepted and went into the fight, and the result of the bye-elections in the province of Quebec was of a nature to satisfy my hon. friends who had shown confidence in me that I could really do good service for my party. We won the elections, nearly all the by-elections, with the exception of the first. the election at Richelieu, and I am proud to say that as a colleague of Mr. Chapleau I did honour to him. I am sorry to take the time of the House to give these explanations. but as a member of this House I thought that I owed it to my colleagues in the Government and in the House to make that statement. Again I am sorry to speak of myself, but I hope that after having been 22 years in the House, I am in a position to say that I have never done an act which was not worthy of a member of this House, that I have not on every occasion maintained the dignity and honour of this House as an independent member, as the President of this honourable House, as well as a member of this Government.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I have endeavoured on more than one occasion to obtain the favour of your recognition, but unfortunately without success, and my desire was to bring to the notice of the House and to challenge the policy of the Government from beginning to end with respect to the Manitoba school question. My hon. friend, who was more lucky this afternoon than I was, has put a motion in your hands. Sir, in which reference is made to the question that I am most anxious to discuss here; but I am unable after listening to the debate which has taken place, to say that the merits of this question have yet received attention at the hands of hon, members of this House. My hon, friend who leads the Opposition in this House has with great effect and upon facts which certainly justify many of the observations that he made, has been able to point out the inconsistencies of hon, gentlemen occupying the treasury benches, and the hon. gentleman who leads the House has with much effect pointed out what in his view was the want of policy on the part of the Opposition. Well, Sir, I am not particularly concerned with either one view of the case or the other. What I am concerned in is the question of whether we in this House are prepared either now or at any other time to adopt a remedial Bill. I cannot agree that the statement of the Government in that respect, whatever it has been in the past, is not now definite and clear. For my part, judging by all the rules of constitutional Government, it appeared to me that the adoption by the Government of the remedial order was a clear adoption of the policy which is embodied in that order; but I rather gather from what has fallen from the lips of the Finance Minister to-night that that was not the view which the Government took. He rather seemed to say that the order was passed simply and solely for the purpose of enabling the question to be brought before this House; but whether that may be so or not, it is quite certain that now at he end of the session. the order having been granted, the order having been sent to Manitoba, and Manitoba having declined to obey that order, the Government have come down with a clear and definite policy, if words mean anything, that they propose at a very early day to invite this House to pass a remedial Bill. For my part I have no hope, not the slightest expectation of any arrangement being made with the province of Manitoba. I do not think if we read the answer made to the remedial order, made by that legislature, not in haste, not in anger, but after due deliberation, that any sane man can hope that the same Government which brought down the answer to the remedial order or the same legislature which by a very large majority adopted it will within the next six months or less than six months, and that is the limit of grace permitted to it and them to change their course, make any alteration in the conclusion at which they arrived. So that it appears to me we are now face to face with this view of the question. We have now arrived at that stage, because in one respect I think the Government were quite warranted in postpening legislation to another session; I do not think it would have been reasonable at this period so near the end of the session to ask hon, members to stay one month or two months to consider the question of a remedial Bill, and therefore in that respect I am free to say that I think the excuse of the Government for procrastination was well founded and well justified. But that there is any hope or any reason to expect that anything can come out of renewed negotiations with Manitoba is to my mind perfectly illusory. If that view be correct, we are here face to face to-night with the Government's policy, so far as the policy of the Government can be announced. Let me draw attention to the answer given by Manitoba to the remedial order, and let me draw attention further to the pretense made that this Government or the legislature of Manitoba has in any sense or way by this answer pretended that under any circumstances they were prepared to change the course which they deliberately adopted when they made that answer. Having set forth the facts in the recital, they answer in this way:

We are, therefore, compelled to respectfully state to Your Excellency in Council that we cannot accept the responsibility of carrying into effect the terms of the remedial order.

Nothing can be more definite and clear than that. They go further:

Objections on principle may be taken to any modification of our educational status which would result in the establishment of one or more sets of separate schools.

They bring up the abstract question, which we know prevails as an objection in Manitoba against separate schools for and on that reason alone. But I pass them by. They go further and say:

Apart, however, from the objections on principle, there is serious objection to it from a practical educational standpoint. Some of these may be briefly indicated.

I need not trouble the House with what those objections are. Briefly they are, that in Manitoba the country is very large, the school tax weighs very heavily on the people, large portions of the lands do not yield any assistance towards that tax, and on the whole if there is any place in the Dominion where a separate system of schools is unwise and unworkable it is in the province of Manitoba. They go on gently to say, with perfect truth I venture to assert, that:

When this remedial order was made, there was not then available to Your Excellency in Council full and accurate information as to the working of our former system of schools. And we also believe that there was lacking the means of forming a correct judgment as to the effect upon the province of the changes indicated in the order.

Sir. I had the honour to appear for the province before the Council that advised His Excellency to make this order, and while I did the very best in my power in the limited time that was granted, for there was much hurry, and no time was to be allowed to the province then. The order had to be made, and made for the purpose of bringing in a remedial Bill this session-and while begged that the Attorney General, the head of the educational department, who alone had full information, might be granted an opportunity of appearing, that simple prayer, which ought to have been admitted, one would have thought, in justice to a great province, was denied to Manitoba, and I was compelled to go on and do the best I could. Until I heard the Attorney General when he came down to the county of Haldimand to state to the people of this province why it was the legislature of 1890 had abolished separate schools, and why the province was not prepared to restore separate schools, I did not realize (and I fancy few gentlemen in this House who have not followed the speeches of Mr. Sifton have been able to realize) how enormously strong the case was for a change in the school system, and how impossible it is to revert to the old system. And so, Sir, they gently say to His Excellency that his advisers acted without a full knowledge of the subject which they professed to deal with when they passed the remedial order. But, Sir, in truth that was not the way the case was presented, because my friend Mr. Ewart who represented the Catholic minority, did not pretend to ask the Council, upon the merits of the case, for a remedial order. Having gone through some historical references, all of which really had gone by the board, and having made certain charges supported by affidavits which he Was compelled withdraw; he rested his case in end simply and solely upon the fact, 1871, 12,000 people, that in ten sand of whom were half breeds, established separate schools in Manitoba, and that in 1890, when there were 150,000 settlers, they in their wisdom had thought fit to introduce a system of public and national schools. And the remedial order follows that line. Reading it all through, there is nothing more or less to be found in it that separate schools existed, that separate schools were abolished, that the Privy Council in England said, that under the peculiar wording of the statute, that constituted a technical grievance in reference to which the Governor General in Council had power, if he thought fit, to pass a remedial order. And the Governor Council, without knowledge as to the working of the law or the possible effect of the change, directed the Manitoba legislature to make that change. We are now told tonight that that was done simply for the purpose of opening the legislative doors here, so that they could get from this Parliament whatever this Parliament was willing to give: the widest possible margin being left, because in the same way they were not in any sense to be denied the right to have everything restored of which they had been deprived. I am reading it through, Sir, for the purpose of pointing out that from beginning to end of the answer to this remedial order, there is not a suggestion of a compromise. I challenge any gentleman to say that there is a word in it which holds out the hope that the province or the legislature propose to make any change, or to make any compromise in any sense or in any way. It goes on:

It is urged most strongly, that, upon so important a matter, involving as it does the religious feelings and convictions of different classes of the people of Canada, and the educational interest of a province which is expected to become one of the most important in the Dominion, no hasty action should be taken, but, on the contrary, the greatest care and deliberation should be exercised, and a full and thorough investigation made.

So they challenge investigation, and they argue, and argue it seems to me with irresistible force, that before a change of this kind, (involving as it does the religious feelings in all parts of this Dominion and the interest of this great province) further investigation should be made. There is no suggestion from this Government that any further investigation is to be made. On the contrary, Sir, I find it stated by the Prime Minister that he will have no commission, that he would vote against any commission, because commission or any further inquiry would be utterly and entirely useless. So we are to have no further investigation, and we are to have no further examination. We are not to be enlightened any more by January next than we are now in July. I will not trouble the House with any legal argument for I am now dealing with a question of fact, and I will come to the concluding part of the remedial order, and then I fancy I will have read to the House, all that appears My point is (and I am in this document. troubling the House simply with that view), that there is no possible hope to expect a settlement from the Manitoba legislature, which, as Mr. Angers very well said, has just adjourned and wont meet again until after next January, unless specially called for the purpose of dealing with this question. There is no possible hope of any settlement by the legislature of that province and it is from the legislature alone it could have come,—prior to the time we are to be assembled here again, to pass a remedial Bill. This Government have made their announcement. My hon, friend who leads the Opposition says they are insincere, that to the people of Quebec they are holding out the hope of a remedial Bill and to the people of this province they are allowing it to be understood that there will be no remedial law. There were some significant words which fell from the hon, gentleman in his speech, about the possibilities that may happen between this and the 1st of January, and, of course, the Government cannot be held responsible if any of those unforeseen events occur. There may be something of that kind. There is the insinuation that the Prime Minister is to be got rid of in the meantime and that the arrangement may possibly not be binding upon his successor. Has there been given a bond in point of fact, since the word of the Ministers was not acceptable to their colleagues? bond were not given we might not troubled (and I should be rejoiced to hear it) with a remedial Bill next January. For my part, I think we are bound to accept the statement made by the Government, and I certainly so accept it as being an honest, a frank, and a sincere announcement of their policy. As an announcement of their policy I think we are bound to consider it now, as if the Government had been newly formed, and had come down to this House to announce their policy and we were asked to accept it. I am not at liberty in this motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) to express any opinion. Voting for motion or voting against this motion, will not express in the slightest degree the view I hold upon this question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Nor the view of anybody else.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman says "nor the view of anybody else." That may be so, Sir, but I am not responsible for the motion. I do trust, Mr. Speaker, that before this House is prorogued I may be happy enough to catch your eye, if you only look this way. I have tried for it twice, Sir.

I gave notice formally on Thursday last that I proposed to bring up the question, and I do hope yet that I may have the opportunity of making it, and that then this question may be discussed on its merits. I rise at this moment for the purpose of saying that I do not feel inclined to vote for this motion, and I feel equally disinclined to vote against it. If I vote for it what would I say? I would say "that I regret the failure of the Government to deal with the Manitoba school question." Well, Sir, nothing would please me better than that they had failed altogether to deal with it. I would have been delighted, Sir,-knowing now as I do what they meant by the remedial order—if having got this answer, argumentative, calm, deliberate, from this province, they had seen way to let the matter rest. their cannot therefore say, so far as this is concerned, that I have any quarrel with the Government; and yet I cannot say, affirmatively that I think they have dealt with this matter as they ought to have done. They have announced a policy. That is one way of dealing with the question; but I shall take an opportunity, if I can, of challenging the policy of the Government in a way in which I think it ought to be met before we separate, so that the country may have the benefit of hearing expressed, pro and con, from all sides of the House, the views on which this question must ulti-Therefore, following mately be settled. great examples in England, I will withdraw from the House during the voting on this resolution; for I do not feel that I can vote for it with any satisfaction, and I should feel much more dissatisfaction if I voted against it.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) French statesman, Mr. Thiers, when addressing his colleagues in the French Chamber of Deputies, after he had several times risen in his place to speak on the same subject, craved their indulgence because he said they ought to extend their indulgence to a man who harboured in his breast deeply-rooted conscientious convictions. On the question now before the House, Mr. Speaker, I may say I entertain also deeply-rooted convictions, and I trust the House will allow me to offer a few remarks about what has been said to-night by hon, members in connection with the Manitoba school question. When Thiers rose in the French Chamber, under the circumstances alluded to, it was to ward off from his country the scourge of a foreign war, and the danger of an invasion. But the policy he advocated was one which thwarted the schemes of the time-servers and of those men who speculated on the military supplies, for it is on record that, during the Franco-German war, speculators sold to the Government shoes with pasteboard soles for the French soldiers; and it was those time-servers and speculators, who, in order to lull the fears of the people, were seen to inveigh against M. Thiers's patriotic harangues, and who proclaimed aloud that France was ready for war, and that there was not even a single button missing of the soldiers gaiters. To-night, we have listened to the utterances fallen from the lips of the hon, gentlemen who lead the two great political parties, in this House and in the country; but they have been very guarded in the expression of their views, and have avoided committing themselves on the question at issue. The hon, leader of the Opposition has brought forward a motion, which the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. Mc-Carthy) stated he could not support. But But then, the leader of the Opposition has arraigned the policy of the Cabinet; he has conjured up a few jeers and gibes on the return to the Cabinet of the stray colleagues of the hon. leader of the House. These gibes, at least, find their justification in the vacillating course pursued by the Government on this question. The hon, leader of the House has thought it fit to oppose a vigorous reply to the gibes and taunts of the hon. leader of the Opposition. He has pointed out the splendid record of the great Liberal-Conservative party for these last seventeen years, and outlined the great deeds accomplished by that party under the leader-ship of the distinguished chieftains whose loss the country bewails still more bitterly under the baleful circumstances that confront us to-day. The hon, leader of the House has reviewed the splended achievements of Sir John A. Macdonald and his illustrious colleague, Sir George-Etienne Cartier, as also those of the Tuppers, the Tilleys and so many other members of the different Conservative Governments, from 1878. He has claimed credit for the carrying out of those broad lines of policy, for the union of the provinces of British North America into a strong confederation. But, I think, Mr. Speaker, when these great lines of policy were being carried out, the hon. gentleman's voice was not then heard within the walls of this Parliament. Then the hon. leader of the House spoke of another great line of policy of the Liberal-Conservative party, the development of industrial life and activity and the building up of industrial establishments; but, Sir, neither can the hon. gentleman's Government claim any credit for the building up of the National Policy. It was Sir Leonard Tilley and Sir John A. Macdonald, and the other eminent leaders of the Conservative party that laid down the broad lines of that policy. hon. leader of the House has also claimed credit for a great many other political achievements, which will not go down to pos-terity with the name of the Government attached to them as the promoters of those measures, and still less, will history give them credit for the proceedings instituted to bring about the settlement of the question now before the House. The legislation enacted with a view to the solving of this political question was the joint work of the two leaders at the time, Sir John A. Macdonald and the Hon. Edward Blake. sequently. Sir John Thompson and some of his colleagues submitted for the opinion of the Supreme Court certain questions affecting the Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba, in connection with the main question at issue. Everybody is aware of the fact that Sir John Thompson—whose loss the Conservative party feels the more keenly as it sees his seat occupied by the present leader of the House-submitted for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada and to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of England the questions which have been decided by those tribunals, allowing the Catholic minority to come back and ask that its appeal be heard of the Governor General in Council; so that my hon. friend cannot claim any credit for the settlement of that question so far, nor lay any claim to those deeds as being the achievements of the Government of the day. In the distant future, Sir. the hand of our historians might knock off the head of the hon. leader of the House, the plume of feathers which he has made for himself and his Cabinet out of the achievements and great deeds performed by his predecessors, the leaders of the Conservative party. The balance sheet of his political achievements and political feats are likely to prove a pretty meagre one. I have risen in my place, to-night, Sir, to repel the imputations cast on the hon. Minister who has remained outside the Cabinet. as well as on the hon. members in this House, who adhere to his views on the Manitoba school question. All the hon. members understand that I wish to refer to the Hon. A. R. Angers, who, in order to remain true to his conscientious convictions, has felt it to be his duty to send in his resignation and to remain outside. The papers, the leading organs of the Conservative party in the province of Ontario, when the departed leaders were at the head of the Conservative party, used to raise their voices and compose the differences of opinion in the ranks of the party; and they used to preach the gospel of toleration, peace and harmony; but where are they now? Those very same papers, the mouthpiece of the hon. Ministers, who occupy on the treasury benches the seats filled by our great statesmen, are now fanning the embers of the fire of discord within the very ranks of the Conservative party. Not satisfied with encouraging the province of Manitoba to rebel against the judgment of the highest court in the realm, they go still further and cast imputations on those who do not approve of the course pursued by the hon, gentlemen who now represent the province of Quebec in the Cabinet. They contend that the Hon. Mr. Angers and those who approve of his line of action, extreme ultramontane views and put forth unreasonable claims, which do not commend themselves to the better judgment of the people. It is not the case, Sir, that the Hon. Mr. Angers, nor any one of the hon. gentlemen who adhere to his views on this question, set up unreasonable claims, and when the time comes for the Government to carry out its pledges and the promises reiterated solemnly in their capacity as a Government -unless they choose to slip out of their former pledges by new promises—the House will be satisfied that we are not as unreasonable as some people are pleased to represent us. The House will be satisfied that we are not-as contended by the "Mail and Empire," the chief mouth-piece of the Conservative party, and also the chief slanderer of all those who do not endorse its views-so unreasonable as to encroach on the rights of the majority of the province of Manitoba. What are our claims, Sir, with regard to the rights of the minority? Do we mean to lord it over the majority and put the latter under the control of the minority? No, the editors of the "Mail and Empire" are well aware that such is not our pretension. We simply claim the schools guaranteed to us by the constitution. We have been slandered long enough. Long enough we have been taunted by people in Ontario who did not know the nature of our claims, or who knowing them, misrepresented them, in order to arouse religious and racial animosities and bring back hatreds and conflicts. Long enough we have been taunted and slandered by both political parties and their organs in Ontario. We ask for separate schools which the Catholic children of the minority may attend, so that Catholic parents may not be coerced to send their children to public schools which according to the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) and the hon. memfor North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) ber merely Protestant schools. are people profess for respect these the freedom of conscience. Now, the courageous Government that we have come and tell us that, in six months from now, a more satisfactory settlement of the question will be arrived at. Suppose that next session we pass a law, restoring to the Catholics their educational rights. The law may be appealed to before the courts; and the Catholics of Manitoba might have to wait many years before the law is supplemented by further provisions. As I just said, Mr. Speaker, we do not mean to do violence to the conscientious convictions of the majority in Manitoba; but we merely claim in favour of the minority certain rights guaranteed to them by the laws of the country, and by the constitution such as interpreted by the last judgment of the Privy Council of England. Can it enter any one's mind that Manitoba alone, out of all the other provinces, shall not bow in obedience to the law of the Empire? I appeal to your judgment, Mr. Speaker. This Parliament, years ago, passed a law regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors. lieved such a legislation to be within the competency of this Parliament, on the ground that we had a right to the regulation of trade and commerce in general, under the constitution. The local governments appealed from the law enacted here and the Privy Council of Her Majesty decided that it was not within jurisdiction to regulate the traffic of intoxicating liquors. Another case in point is the disallowance of the Streams Bill. The Ontario Government had enacted an Act for protecting the public interests in rivers and streams (1881), which was disallowed by the Government of the Dominion. To this decision strong objection was taken by the Government of Ontario; the matter went in appeal before the Privy Council of England and was decided in favour of the Province of Ontario. Did the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald wait six months before bowing to the decision of the Privy Council? Did it ever enter the mind of any hon, member in this House or outside of it, that the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada, two legislative bodies, to my mind, far above the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba, could interfere with the decisions of the Privy Council and wait five or six months before repealing those laws? In disallowing the Streams Bill, the Government had exceeded their powers; and by both sides of the House, the decision of the Privy Council was accepted as a finality. This is the second time the legislature of Manitoba rebels against the laws of the Dominion and the decisions of the Privy Council; and yet, this strong and energetic Government that, who if we are to believe their supporters, display such an incredible amount of energy, decline to mete out the most elementary justice to the aggrieved minority. The legislature of Manitoba and its supporters are on the road that leads to rebellion, just as the Southern States were, at the time when they resisted the decisions of Congress and of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Manitoba Government decline to carry out the decisions of the highest tribunal in the realm: and now the Government say, give Manitoba six months to settle the question herself. That means that the minority is going to wait six months more for the redress of the grievances it has been complaining of for over five years. The Government are going to enter into further negotiations with the Government of Manitoba. From the statement of the hon. leader of the House, it would seem that this time the Government of Manitoba are to be approached in a friendly and conciliatory spirit. But I ask the hon. leader of the House, and as the leader of the Opposition very pointedly put it-why was not that conciliatory course taken from the first? At all events, to my mind, the language of the declaration or remedial order is neither too mandatory nor too high, and I do not think it ought to be considered as wanting in courtesy or thoughtfulness towards the local Government, at any rate. I may say that diplomacy is not my forte, but it strikes me that the answer of the Government of Manitoba sounds to my ears as a challenge to the federal Government to carry out the remedial order. It is an outrageous defiance. And the Government falter again and flinch in their policy; and they have nothing better to propose than to postpone I am afraid action until another session. less, during their pilgrimage to Manitoba, the Government should meet with some accident. This puts me in mind of a story. One day, two gentlemen, very neatly attired, were travelling in the cars. One of the gentlemen had his feet and hands manacled; for he was being kept under restraint. They were brothers. The former was a lunatic, but his folly was intermittent, and when he fell into a fit, he would become raving mad, and that is the reason why they had manacled him, so as to prevent any accident taking place during the journey. Still, for intervals of several hours, he would enjoy the full use of his intellectual faculties. And then, when in his right mind, he talked quite sensibly and was pleasant in his own way. During one of his lucid intervals, he said to his brother: Please rid me of those handcuffs; you don't know what a nuisance they become in the long run. His brother removed them from his limbs. The lunatic then said: You can't fancy what a nuisance those hand-cuffs are; and I bet you could not keep them on for five minutes. His brother said: That's just where you are The lunatic said: Well, I am mistaken. going to handcuff you, and you tell me after five minutes, how you like them. Now, it happened that this man was being led to a lunatic asylum. The conductor, havto a lunatic asylum. ing accosted the passengers, the passenger who was compos mentis asked him to rid He told his brother him of his manacles. that he had quite enough of the experience. But the lunatic, who was then in one of his lucid intervals, said he would not have it so. And turning to the railway employee, he said to him: My brother is a lunatic, and, at times, becomes raving mad, and then he could smash up everything, if you set him free; for he is a very dangerous man, when in his fits. And so it happenel that the one who was in the full enjoyment of his intellectual faculties, was handcuffed and sent to the asylum, while the lunatic was set free. Now, it is the Greenway Government that is being handcuffed. They have put themselves in that position, owing to their answer to the remedial order. But the Federal Government, through their policy of conciliation, are going to be handcuffed in their turn, by the fact they enter into fur-ther negotiations. The Government's hands will be tied and handcuffed as it were; so that, when the moment comes when it will be necessary for them to bring in a remedial legislation, they will no longer be able to do so, while, now, they are free to pursue that course, so long as they do not enter into negotiations. The hon. members in this House who support the Government and who want to have a remedial legislation put upon the statute-book, ought to realize the situation and oppose the course pursued by the Government. They should ask them to give up the idea of negotiating any further. Where will the Government stand if the negotiations contemplated prove to be an At all events, the Government abortion? can expect no practical result to come out of these negotiations. But, Sir, the Government in preparing the plan of their campaign, have not forgotten to keep a back door open. It is quite true that so long as they remain in power, they are pledged to their policy, but who knows but some unforeseen events might not take place. Were, for instance, the hon. Prime Minister to resign, either on the plea of ill-health, or on any other ground, and were a new administration to step in before next session, then, is the hon, leader of the House prepared to tell us whether the new Administration would be bound to carry out the pledges of the former Cabinet, and whether the Manitoba minority would not run any risks, owing to his policy of postponement? I am satisfied that the Manitoba minority have lawful rights, that they have rights guaranteed by the constitution, and by such interpretation of the constitution as has been put upon it by the tribunals. I am satisfied that, were the Government to take a firm stand on the question, they could have a remedial legislation put upon the statute-book this session; and if some of their supporters broke with them on that account, their loss would be made up by the votes from this The Government are side of the House. well aware of all this; but they thought they could bargain for the rights guaranteed by the constitution to the minority; the Ministers believed that, for the sake of their popularity-and it is an ephemeral popularity, that rests on no other grounds than race and creed prejudices-they could postpone for years and from one session to the other. a legislation that would afford an adequate measure of relief to the minority; and why. Because they were afraid of the electorate, or a portion of the electorate, aroused by heated appeals to their racial and religious prejudices. As I just said a little while ago, Mr. Speaker-and I think the statement cannot be too strongly emphasized-I anticipate disasters for confederation. Let not the hon, gentleman lend a deaf ear to the warnings of reason and truth; let them understand that there are rocks ahead for confederation, if we allow religion and national wrangles to be stirred up, for they constitute the greatest danger that can beset the path of a young nation in process of formation. The Government are blind to the danger the country is threatened with. To their mind, everything is running smoothly, so long as they are safe in power, and it will be all right, if they can get rid of Parliament, and postpone action and delay the matter until another session is called. They ask for delay at a time when the country is upon a volcano; they want to postpone action at a time when monster meetings are being held in Winnipeg, and when twelve thousand men are seen parading the streets of that city, as was the case just a few days ago, clamouring for the political decapitation of one of the colleagues of the hon, leader of the House. They beg for delay, and they do not realize that, by those means, they are fanning into new life the embers of the fire of religious and racial hatreds. They beg for delay, fancying that it is never too late to resort to the necessary means to quench the flames. As a great statesman said to his countrymen: Beware, gentlemen, of begging for delay from illfortune; for ill-fortune never grants any respite. Another thing I would take exception at, would be to see the hon. Ministers compare themselves, in their life time, to Sir John Macdonald and Sir Geeorge Etienne Cartier. I noticed that the inspired organs of the Ministers are just beginning to institute such comparisons. I am sure they are not in earnest, but it teases and dumbfounders one who knows the utter fallacy of the statement, to see our Ministers placed in comparison with those great statesmen, to whom a grateful country has just raised Not to mention the unusual modesty that such a course evinces, on the part of our hon. Ministers, I would give here expression to the wish that they may leave to the future judgment of posterity the care of erecting their statues on Parliament Hill. I may be told that Cartier, on the New Brunswick school question, was also abandoned by several of his supporters from the province of Quebec; that, after having been unmercifully slandered in his life time. he was, after death, proclaimed a great man. It may be so, and I have not lived these many years without being aware that great injustice was done the memory of Cartier. But, Sir, I say the course pursued by Cartier was in no way similar to the position occupied by our Ministers. Cartier had no judgment of the Privy Council enabling him to restore to the minority in New Brunswick their just educational rights. On the contrary, the decision of the Privy Council was against the minority. And wherefore did exhort his colleagues to bow in obedience to the law and to the decisions of the tribunals? He himself states the ground of his position on the matter, in one of his speeches which I now have before me, in which he propounds the true constitutional He says: Bow down to the tribunals and the constitution, and should you ever appeal to them, and they favour your claims, then you will be very glad to avail yourself of the tribunals and constitution. To-day, the grievances of the minority are backed up by the decisions of the tribunals and by the constitution, and Parliament, or rather the Government, asks for further de-The grievances exist and are well lay. founded; still, they arouse differences between the Ministers on that matter. Three Ministers have sent in their resignations; one of them is no longer a member of the Government, and the two others have returned to their posts in the Cabinet. And now the Government are trying to create the impressions that the agitation, far from gathering any new strength throughout the country, is calming down, dying out. Let us wait, and time will tell who is right and who is wrong; time will vindicate the truth of my statement. I sincerely hope, in the interest of the Catholic minority in Manitoba, that my forebodings may prove false. But it is not only the interest of the minority that actuates us in advocating so vigorously this cause. To my mind, there is a question of national honour involved in it. The hon. leader of the House does not appear to be aware that, outside of the answer of the Manitoba Government, there rests upon his Government—if it can be dignified by that name-a question of honour. After having received the peremptory answer given by the Manitoba Government, a government that is in the least concerned with their dignity, would not enter into any further negotiations. If the hon, leader of the House tries to escape from the obligation of honour that rests upon him in his capacity as leader of the Government, he will lose all prestige, and when once a Government has lost its prestige, it can no longer be a Conservative Government. As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, this conflict has been raging for over five years. But, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has remarked, it was not the Catholics who insisted upon this education clause being embodied in the Confederation Act; but it had been embodied in the constitution as a statutory guarantee of the rights of the Protestant minority in the province of Quebec, who insisted upon its being included in the constitution. wish further to state here that the majority of the people of this country are in favour of There are nearly two separate schools. million Catholics in the Dominion, who are in favour of that system. Moreover, all the members of the Church of England, which aggregates about 600,000 souls, are of the same opinion. This gives us one-half of the people of this country as in favour of separate schools; and among the other religious denominations in Canada, there is a large number of reasonable men, loyal subjects of Her Majesty, who are also in favour of that system. I believe that if the sense of the House had been taken as to the passage of a measure in that direction, this session, it would have been disposed to grant to the Manitoba minority-not a retrograde and absurd school system, as would have it the "Mail and Empire"-but a school system in keeping with the intellectual progress of the age, a system under which the children of the poor would be given that moral instruction and that shaping of life which go to make of the child a good citizen. I hold in abhorrence, Sir, that policy of compromises which our Government repeatedly told us they intended to carry out with regard to Manitoba, a province which is now in rebellion against their authority. mises, as shown by the history of the United States, always result in compromising af-Through compromises, the very life of the American republic was imperilled. It was owing to the doctrine of nullification advocated by Calhoun that a spirit of rebellion pervaded the public mind to such a degree that a civil war endangered the very existence of the republic. I do not believe the hopes cherished by the Government will ever be realized; and as I am of opinion that the peace of the country is going to be disturbed, during six months, by a dangerous agitation over this question, I intend to record my vote in favour of the amendment of the hon, leader of the Opposition. I declare that so long as the wrongs of the minority are unredressed at the hands of the Government, I cannot restore to them the confidence I have hitherto reposed in them.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques-Cartier). Speaker, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) has spoken of secrets or supposed secrets of the Conservative party to which he belonged for so many years. It is true, for a long time he was a prominent member of that party. He was the proprietor of a leading newspaper, published in the city of Quebec, in the interests of that party, and very often in that paper appeared articles from his powerful pen in defence of the principles of the Conservative party. hon, gentleman has the right to change his political allegiance he has the choice to throw mud and dirt upon everything that he formerly worshipped; but I deny the right of the hon, gentleman or any other gentleman, either in public or private life to reveal pri-In regard to my hon. vate conversations. friend the Minister of Public Works, I have only one thing to say-that when he enterered the Cabinet of the late Sir John Abbott, I was far away from Canada—in fact, in Great Britain. In regard to the quotation made by the hon. member for L'Islet from Todd, I think it is important that we should look a little more carefully into the book from which he quoted. He quoted only one authority, Sir Robert Peel; but there are a great many precedents to show that on national questions it is not only the privilege, but it is the duty of the Opposition to give every possible assistance to the Government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DUPONT.

Just Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques-Cartier). wait a moment, and hon. gentlemen may laugh as much as they like. Here is what I find in Todd at page 417, the very page quoted by the hon. gentleman:

But it is quite compatible with these functions for an opposition, under certain circumstances, to coincide with the policy of ministers, and to ground their attack upon the weakness of the administration in carrying out principles which the sense of the country has approved.

Again, at page 419:

Occasionally, such communications (between Government and Opposition) assume a more important aspect, and refer to different political questions, in the settlement of which the cooperation of both sides of the House is desirable. And if there is a question as to which it is desirable, that there should be the concurrence of both sides of the House, it is this question, which is not a political question, but a politico-judicial one, which has been imposed on this House by the judgment of the Privy Council. Let us see what is the practice in Great Britain. At page 420, it is said:

Two or three interviews of this description occurred between Pitt and Fox. Mr. Addington consulted Pitt, his predecessor in office, on various occasions. Mr. Brougham, when in opposi-tion in the House of Commons, had communications often and again of the most delicate nature with Lord Castlereagh, with Mr. Canning, and with Mr. Percival, to the last of whom he was more vehemently opposed than is usual between those in opposition and the head of a government. During Lord Melbourne's Administration, the Duke of Wellington, who then led the opposition in the House of Lords, was in constant comunication with the government, not only upon "all military matters, but likewise upon many others.

After the defeat of the Wellington Administration on the question of reform, and before the passing of the Reform Bill of 1832, under Lord Grey's Ministry, frequent communications took place between ministers and the opposition, for the purpose of arriving at an understanding in regard to this difficult and momentous question

I think we have enough authorities to show that the hon. leader of the Opposition does not follow British precedents. But I heard an interruption this evening, when the hon. leader of the House was speaking, Where is the policy of the Government? Where is the policy of the Government? Where is your Bill? The Bill, it is true, has not been laid on the Table; but we know what it is going to be. The promise of the Government, made public before the House, is that remedial legislation is going to be introduced on the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and the remedial order. Where is that remedial order? It is on the Table of the House. This House then is fully aware of the character of the remedial legislation which this Government intends to pass. My hon. friend who has just sat down has spoken of the supposed compromise between Manitoba and Canada. He is afraid that the Government is going to compromise this important question, and that no proper relief will be obtained for the Well, Mr. Speaker, minority in Manitoba. the Government has declared, in answer to the question which I put the other day, that they will not be satisfied with any answer from Manitoba except on the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and the remedial order. Is not that sufficient guarantee? As far as I am concerned, I believe it is. But so far as this House is concerned, I may tell the hon. member for Bagot that no compromise which the Government may make can remove the jurisdiction of this Parliament over the question. If next session we are not satisfied with the compromise between Manitoba and the Canadian Government, it will be for this Parliament to express its dissatisfaction and proceed to give such relief as, in its opinion, should be given to the minority. I am very glad that new negotiations are going to be opened. The answer of Manitoba, although containing a positive refusal at the beginning, still contains some remarks which give us hope that a settlement will be made. It is very important that this local question should be settled by the legislature of Manitoba instead of by the Federal Parliament. That would remove all causes for irritation between the different elements and races of this country, and would be the best mode of securing the rights of the minority, because those rights would be in the hands of the local authorities instead of in the hands of this Government, which may find it difficult to enforce a law relating to education. The name of Cartier, who will always be a model to politicians in this country, has, I believe been wrongly used in this discussion. Not on one single occasion, from the early years of the union of Upper and Lower Canada, did Sir George Cartier ever use any expression or take any course in Parliament which could possibly have been interpreted as hostile to either one or the other province or race inhabiting this country, or to any religion in this country. On the contrary, the policy of Sir George Cartier was one of peace and harmony with all the elements of this Dominion. I think, therefore, the name of Cartier was falsely invoked in this discussion. Our policy should be to keep peace and harmony in this country and not provoke I compliment the hon. a war of races. The defeat of the Government is a very insignificant and unimportant question compared with what would then have been the re-The result would have been to shake confederation to its very foundation. The Government would have been obliged, as they were entitled to, to demand a dissolution, and they would have gone to the country without having the province of Quebec properly represented; and according to the precedents, what would have been the con-sequence? Not a war of religion? No, but it would have been a war of race, a war of the whole confederation against the French of the province, of Quebec. I think the Ministers who came back were right when they refused to face such consequences. The hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont) has talked of the South. Well, I visited the South a few years after the great rebellion of 1865. If the hon, member for Bagot had seen the devastation and ruin in that country, he would employ every means before resorting to arms in the settlement of the constitutional difficulties existing in one of our provinces. My hon. friend, I must say, did not speak of any resort to arms, but that would have been the consequence of the policy he advocated. It would have been the inevitable consequence of the withdrawal of the three Ministers; and if the Government went to the country without the province of Quebec properly represented, we would have had a war of race. I am very glad that means have been adopted to preserve this country from such a danger. My hon, friend from Bagot mentioned that on previous occasions this Parliament has passed laws which were afterwards deunconstitutional. clared He cited the Streams Bill and the License Act. This is true; these statutes were passed after mature deliberation, not only during one or two weeks in the last hours of the session. but after they had been the subject of months' discussion. and notwithstanding this care and attention were quently declared unconstitutional. my hon. friend if what took with regard to these two statutes to be taken as a guide, whether instead of coming to the conclusion that we must not wait for six months, but must proceed at once, he should not be led to the opposite conclusion, that we should not legislate in haste, but on the contrary, take due time and deliberation in the framing of an Act establishing separate schools in Manitoba, the more especially as such an Act presents still greater difficulties than any statute which this Parliament has yet been called upon to pass. Every clause of such statute must be carefully weighed, as otherwise no rights will be secured to the minority. The hon. member for Bagot must not forget that the Manitoba government will fight the Bill which we will pass inch by inch, before the courts of justice; and it is only after the law officers and advisers of the Government and the members of this House who are lawyers, are perfectly satisfied that we are within the jurisdiction of this Parliament with the subject matter of every clause, that we should pass the Act. For that rea-son, which is mentioned in the statement made by the leader of the Government, if there was no other reason, the delay asked should be granted. For those reasons, I shall vote against the amendment of the leader of the Opposition. First, because he has no policy, when he is bound to have one on a national question like this; and, in the second place, because I entirely approve of the course pursued by the Government. Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) I feel. Mr. Speaker, that at this late hour of the night. I must ask the indulgence of this House for the few brief remarks which I am about to make. I have listened attentively from the outset, to all the utterances that have fallen from the lips of hon, gentlemen on both sides of this House, during this debate. I was anxious to hear what the hon. the leader of the Opposition had to say on the subject; and I was no less anxious to hear what the hon. leader of the House had to state. Although admittedly the Opposition leader has not laid down a definite, plain policy on the question at issue, still, I may say the Government are, in duty bound, to declare their policy; and it is incumbent on the hon, gentlemen who occupy seats on the treasury benches, it is incumbent, I say, on the leader of the Cabinet, to tell us where they stand to-day upon the Manitoba school question. What is the issue now before the House? The question is whether the pledges that have been given to the Manitoba minority are satisfactory and beyond cavil; and whether the federal compact is carried out. The issue before the House, Sir, is whether the constitution is to be transgressed with impunity, and whether the majority will approve of such a transgression. Such is the main issue before the House. I think, Sir, when the federal compact is violated, the duty of having it respected, does not devolve upon the Opposition leader, but upon the Government; and it is their duty to do right to the minority, to uphold the constitution, which is committed to their trust. It were idle, Sir, to refer to Bourinot, Todd or any other exponents of the constitution in the matter: plain common sense is all that is required. The duty of carrying out the constitution devolves upon the administration of this country. If the hon, leader of the Opposition does not do his duty by the country, are the Government thereby justified in shirking their duty? Most certainly not. We arraign the Government in this Manitoba school question, because they are wanting in courage in not introducing, this session, such remedial legislation as would afford an adequate measure of relief to the Manitoba minority. And, Sir, what will be, in the future, the outcome of this unsettled policy of the Government? The consequence will be to make it impossible for this House to enact such legislation as would afford a full measure of relief to the minority, in case such a legislation should be introduced at the next session of Parliament. This legislation, Mr. Speaker, would be incomplete and could afford inadequate relief and redress; and that is the reason why I say the Government should have introduced this very session, their legislation, so as to press it to a conclusion and perfect it at the next session of Parliament, to be called in January next. The Government themselves must agree that the legislation which is to be introduced at the next session cannot be but incomplete and inadequate; because the Bill then introduced will contain no special enactment as to the proportionate shares of provincial moneys to be granted by the Manitoba legislature for the support of separate schools. I hold that the Manitoba Government will give no share of the provincial grants to the Catholic minority. The Bill in contemplation ought therefore to contain an enactment providing the means of reaching that end. in case the Manitoba legislature should decline granting any share of the provincial moneys to the minority. I give utterance to that view now, and I have no nesitation in saying that there lurks a very serious danger in that direction. I hold that the legislation to be introduced at the next session should contain an enactment governing those legislative grants; and hence follows the necessity of another session being held. in order to perfect that legislation by adding to it the provision I have just referred to, an enactment which I look upon as necessary in order to secure for the minority the rights guaranteed to it by the constitu-As this legislation will be enacted only next session, I ask the hon, gentlemen -and I call to it the attention of the hon. gentlemen who represent here the province of Quebec-what would occur if the Opposition were to come into power, pledged to carry out a policy, one of the main planks of which would be the non-interference, by the Federal Government, with the Manitoba legislature? From the utterances of the Government supporters, the majority of the Liberal party are opposed to the principle of Federal interference. Now, if the Liberal party rode into power on that question, at the next elections, this would preclude Parliament from perfecting the remedial legislation to be introduced at the next session, a legislation, I say, such as would afford an adequate measure of relief to the minority. Under such circumstances, I hold that the remedial legislation contemplated never be supplemented by provisions which would remove the grievances complained of by the minority and afford them a full and adequate measure of relief; and, therefore, I ask the hon. members from the province of Quebec whether they are willing to run the risks of waiting six months more before they get such a measure passed by the House, and also, whether they are willing to incur the risks attending the accession to power of the Liberal party, who, they contend, would never perfect the remedial legislation clamored for by the minority. Such a policy is unacceptable, in view of the fact that there is nothing to justify this delay of six months. There are many other points which might be properly argued in this connection. Our position in the province of Quebec is this: we wish to avert a war of races and a war of creeds; we do not want to excite evil passions of race and creed, by heated appeals to religious or national prejudices, calculated to revive the conflicts of the past. But are our fellow-countrymen disposed, I ask, to allow the rights of a minority, guaranteed by the constitution, to be trampled upon? Should we give out now on this present issue. Presumably before four or five years have elapsed, the Prime Minister of Ontario, being no longer at the head of affairs, they will say: Let us do away with the separate schools. I may be told that they certainly have no such right under the constitution. True, but neither has the majority in Manitoba the right to deprive the minority of its schools, except it be the right of the strongest. So, later ou, with Ontario; might will overcome right, just as now, might knows no right in Mani-And the Ontario separate schools, having been swept away, they will go still further and ask: What is the use of the French language here? Why go to the expense of having all those statutes published in the French language? And here again, the right of the strongest will prevail, and might will know no right. It devolves upon us now, French-speaking members of this House, to enter our protest and to ascertain whether the rights guaranteed to us under the Federal compact are to be infringed upon with impunity. In 1867, we entered the Canadian confederation, under certain conditions. Any party to a compact, which is broken, may be released from it. I say that all men of good will, irrespective of creed or race, whether they belong to the majority or the minority, let them be Protestant or Catholic, English, French or Irish. I say they are bound to join hands and exert themselves to secure the respect of all rights, established and recognized by the convention of 1867.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the hon. gentleman means only to take one item pro forma to-night?

Mr. FOSTER. I supposed that the hon. gentleman would be ready to go on; there are very few items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But every one is disputable and will require discussion. There are the items relating to the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. Then the Minister of Railways has to make his explanation as to railway affairs—and it is impossible that at two o'clock in the morning we can go on with these.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The first item is the dairy commission.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest that we take up the supplementary Estimates that have been brought down. It is impossible to go on with the others.

Mr. FOSTER. We shall never get through with the Estimates as we are going on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is no fault of mine. The hon, gentleman had four days in which he might have gone on, but for reasons of his own, we made no progress. The hon, gentleman might have gone on; we were ready. To go on with these general items is simply to keep us here to very little purpose for an hour or two.

Mr. FOSTER. Take up the supplementaries.

Civil Government—Department of Trade and Commerce—To provide for the salary of a third-class clerk.....

$650

Mr. Belley.

Mr. McMULLEN. The question with regard to the Department of Trade and Commerce have not been discussed, but will naturally come up on this item. I think we should be allowed a fair opportunity of discussing it, and I would suggest that you take up item 2 and leave this to stand.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No. no.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then we may as well go on and discuss the question. I hold in my hand the report that has been furnished the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No. no.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, there has been no discussion on the Department of Trade and Commerce yet.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the principle involved in this is to be carried out, every member of Parliament affected should participate in the advantage. The hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Livingston) had the misfortune to get his leg broken and was absent from Parliament nearly the whole session, but no provision was made for his case.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, member for Waterloo did not die and leave his family unprovided for, as Senator Burns did. This is a compassionate allowance to his family. I am not going to submit the item for the hon, gentleman referred to, or for the half dozen others whose case is just as strong as his. I am not admitting the principle that when a member does not do his services here, but is away sick at home he necessarily must have his allowance. This case is submitted to the House to ask whether they will grant this sum as a compassionate allowance.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not challenging this case. But I think the case I call attention to, also deserves the attention of the House. Allowances have been made in similar cases before.

Mr. HUGHES. Has any sum been paid to any member of this House or the Senate this session or last session when that member or senator was not in attendance? If so, then, I think the case of the hon. member for Waterloo should be considered.

Militia—Drill of city corps and field batteries$80,000

Mr. CASEY. Is any ammunition to be provided for artillery practice?

Mr. DICKEY. I am not able to give the hon, gentleman that information.

Mr. CASEY. I spoke about it on a previous occasion and the hon. gentleman did not know then.

that.

Will that sum pay the Mr. HUGHES. city corps in full?

Mr. DICKEY. No: but it is proposed to drill the city corps for twelve days.

Mr. MULOCK. I have received a communication from a North-west pensioner asking why it is that the pension payable on the first day of the month, is never paid to him till late in the month. His right arm was shot in the North-west, and is now withered.

Mr. DICKEY. One gentleman in a similar case spoke to me, and I understood him to say that it only applied to this year. think the vote was not ready for payment. But if there is an exceptional case of that knew whether they were or were not insort, I can scarcely understand it. I shall certainly see that he be paid at once.

Mr. MULOCK. He says this is due on the first of the month, and a voucher and receipt are sent to him, which he has to sign and return to some local authority, all of which consumes a good deal of the month.

Mr. CASEY. I understood the Minister to say just now that this amount would not pay the city corps in full, but that they were understand that we had this money in the to be drilled twelve days, and the balance was to be provided for in some other way. What does he mean by that?

Mr. DICKEY. It can be voted by the House at the next session, or it may be provided for out of contingencies. This will more than do eight days, but I do not know how much more.

Drill Shed at New Westminster..... $5,00)

Mr. MARTIN. I would like some explanation of that item.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an item for the drill shed in last year's vote. The contract was let, but the work could not be finished before the 1st July, therefore, there would be no money to pay, because, after first July, the vote lapses. The contract having been made, the amount was voted on the supposition that it would be spent before the 1st July. But the contract not having been fulfilled by that time, the money had to be carried on so as to be available.

Mr. MARTIN. That item, I suppose, is included in the sum of $116,000 which is paid in the main Estimates to have been voted for 1894-95, but which will not be required until 1895-96. Were not the Government in possession of the information which the hon, gentleman gives us now?

Mr. FOSTER. If they had been, the money would not have been re-voted, or the work would have been hurried. At that time we supposed it would be done before the 1st July, but it transpired afterwards that it was impossible to carry out the con-

Mr. DICKEY. I am trying to provide for tract before the 1st July. The original appropriation was $5,000. The work is being done now, having commenced in the beginning of July.

> Mr. MARTIN. So it is a new determination arrived at since the original estimates were prepared.

> Mr. FOSTER. No; it is not. The sum was voted a year ago to build the drill shed, but, for some reason, the contract was not let, and, after the contract was let, it was impossible to finish it. There was plenty of time until the first July to finish the drill shed, but the work did not go on, and no money was paid. The contract was let about a month ago. The Estimates were prepared in February.

> The Government surely Mr. MARTIN. tending to build when they prepared these Estimates in February. Evidently, at that time, they were not intending to build?

> They were intending to Mr. FOSTER. build.

> Mr. MARTIN. Why was not the contract

Mr. DICKEY. The hon, gentleman will previous year's Estimates, and in the change of the Department of Militia, a delay occurred in completing the contract, and as soon as I could get to it, in the work of the session, I handed the matter over to the Public Works, with instructions to carry it out. The contract was made as speedily as it could be, in view of the long distance between here and New Westminster. Delays occurred, and so we did not get the contract completed until some time in June.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not see what the Department of Militia has to do with the mat-

Mr. DICKEY. This vote was originally taken in the Estimates of the Department of Militia, and not in the Estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. CORBOULD. One of the reasons for the delay was on account of the site. The city of New Westminster furnished the site for the drill shed. The first site they selected was abandoned, and a new one was selected. It was only late in the spring that the new site was determined upon, about May.

What was the value of Mr. MULOCK. the site?

Mr. CORBOULD. It was given by the city. It was worth, I should think, about $5,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that we are asked to vote here $14,000 for the purpose of Last year the entire repaying cullers. venue from that source was only $12,006. We have for a number of years been paying more for wages than we get in fees. Some $65,000 have been sacrificed in the last ten years in keeping a staff of cullers that were not wanted, and here we are asked to vote $2,000 in excess of the revenue Again we are asked to vote $7,200 last year. annuities to superannuated cullers. I would for the next few years at all events. So the like to know what is the wages of these cullers that are now placed upon the super-annuation list, how long they have served, and what retiring allowances have been granted to those cullers that have been superannuated?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I cannot tell the hon, gentleman the length of time the cullers who are to be superannuated, have But he is wrong in saying that there is a deficiency of $2,000 between the sum asked for in the supplementary Estimates, and the revenue last year. In the sum of $14,000 is included the sum of $7,000 of the amount paid to the annuitants, not only those who would be superannuated on the 1st August, but those who were superannuated some years ago. I wish to tell the hon, gentleman that the revenue which will be received by that branch during the coming year, will somewhat more than meet the expenditure.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is this amount for superannuation not included in the ord; nary superannuation vote?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I understand the present system has always been followed. It is a special superannuation under a special Act. It is a good provision, because we expect a surplus this year in that branch, and that will apply towards payment of the sup-

The entire sum required should be put in one vote, so the people can understand what they are asked to contribute to the superannuation fund. By dividing the payments and putting them under Inland Revenue and other departments it will be impossible to obtain an exact account of the total amount paid. This is the first case in which I have noticed a vote taken in this way for superannuated officers.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville.) You have voted the same vote for years.

Mr. BRYSON. I think the hon. member for Wellington is unnecessarily alarmed. The quantity of lumber going to Quebec this year will be about three and a half million feet, the dues collected on which will amount to about $12,000, so as the Controller has correctly stated, there will be a surplus over the expenditure. It is understood between the Controller and trade that in future the cullers' office at Quebec will be made self-sustaining by dues collected and will involve no charge to the country. It is easy to understand why $7,200 should be asked for superannuations, because there will be a few more cullers superannuated. The staff is now reduced to five, and it is contemplated to reduce it to four, who will be able to do the measuring of all lumber both from the St. Lawrence and Ottawa going to Quebec hon, member is unnecessarily alarmed, for the Quebec office will be self-sustaining, and there will be a small surplus so long as the timber remains at two and half millions to three millions of feet.

Mr. McMULLEN. I hold that these cullers who have been employed by the Dominion have received fair remuneration for their services, and instead of making them pensioners for the balance of their lives they should have been removed without superannuation. I do not think it right to superannuate them, for this country is now paying $263,000 in superannuations and this vote will bring it to $270,000. What I object to at this moment is that the superannuation vote should not be voted in one amount, and this committee should not be asked to vote separate amounts and thus have the expenditure diffused over different branches of the service, whereby members may be deceived and it become impossible to find how much is really paid for superannuation allowances.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand the Finance Minister to say that if the committee passed the Supplementary Estimates, he would not proceed further.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to get them all passed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was on Mr. McMULLEN. I maintain that it is prevailed on my friend from Wellington not an improper way of applying pubils money. to proceed with the discussion on the other control of the contro

These Supplementary Estimates were brought down after the express declaration made by the Finance Minister repeatedly that further Supplementary Estimates would not be submitted. I might have pointed out this fact and objected.

Mr. FOSTER. They are not Supplementary Estimates as generally considered.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I could have taken strong objection to any further Supplementary Estimates being considered, but I did not do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Four items of the main Estimates remain. The Sault Ste. Marie Canal has already been discussed for two months.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, the Public Accounts Committee, and the evidence has been reported and is now in shape for discussion. If we sit until four or five o'clock in the morning hon, members are not in a fit condition for to-morrow's work.

To enable the Dairy Commissioner to promote the dairying interest of Canada by making provision for the placing of fresh-made creamery butter on the British markets in regular shipments, without deterioration in quality, and for securing recognition of its quality there.. $20,000 of what is to be done with this money. It was on a simple motion like this that the Government last winter took advantage of buying a quantity of butter, not from the farmers but from a great many of the dealers and sent it to the old country. I have a most decided objection to public noney being spent by this Government for purchasing butter and putting it on the British market. It would be better for Canada to-day, and our butter would have stood higher, if a single pound had never been put upon the British market by the Dairy Commissioner. In 1892 and 1893, I interviewed one of the commission men in the old country who handled a large quantity of Canadian butter, and I could get no information on the matter until I called for a report that he had sent to Canada. That report, as well as the last report of the Dairy Commissioner, shows that a quantity of the butter shipped to England should never have been sent there. Butter made in the month of January was sent over in the month of April, when it was off flavour. as well as being too salty and too highly coloured. If there is any of this money to be used, either directly or indirectly, for purchasing butter for England, I most strongly take objection to it. I had been led to understand that only some $7,000 or $8,000 would be required to assist in establishing refrigerators both on the trains and on the ships.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I can give my hon. friend the information in a few words. We have already discussed the question of purchasing butter, and as it is not intended to spend any of this money in the purchase of butter for the English market it is not necessary to refer to the question now. This vote is for the purpose of providing cold storage. It is expected that this sum will enable the Dominion Government not only to supply steamships with fittings that will last for a number of years, but that it will also enable Canada to place upon the British market 2,000,000 pounds of cream-Canadian creamery butter the sale of which abroad will relieve the congested market at home. Cold in my district, namely, Mr. W. D. Rorke, of storage has been arranged for upon the railways, and at Montreal, and across the Atlantic. The railways arranged with are the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway, and the arrangement with them is as follows:— The Government guarantees to the railway two-thirds of the price ordinarily charged for carloads from the point of shipment to Montreal. Then the shipper is charged by the railway the full ordinary, less the carload rates, from the shipping points to Montreal, and the sum which is received by the railway from the shippers is credited to the Government and set off against the amount which is guaranteed. That, it is believed in many cases, will pay the whole Mr. McMILLAN. I want a full statement of the sum which is guaranteed to the railway by the Government. But in case it does not, a small sum is asked for and part of this money will be used for the purpose of assisting in that. So far as the cold storage in Montreal is concerned, we have made arrangements with the Montreal Cold Storage and Freezing Company. We get the storage there at lower than usual rates, namely, 8 cents per 100 pounds of butter for the first fifteen days, temperature not exceeding 20 degrees, and 121/2 cents for each subsequent thirty days. The Government bears part of this expense and offers to those who comply with the requirements as to shipping, a rate of 5 cents per 100 pounds for the first fifteen days, and for the following thirty days or a less period, 8 cents per 100 pounds. We fit up the ocean steamships ourselves at a cost of from $250 to $350 each per ship. Each compartment will hold about a ton by cubic measurement, and the charge from Montreal to Liverpool is to be 15 shillings per ton measurement. The charge from Montreal to Bristol is to be 20 shillings per ton measurement. Each one of these compartments will carry about one thousand packages of butter, and each package of butter will contain about 70 pounds.

> Mr. McMILLAN. How long is that arrangement entered into by the Government for? Is it for more than one year?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No.

Mr. McMILLAN. Has the Government anything to do with putting butter on the British market?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Nothing in the world, except in assisting by cold storage.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not agree with the hen, member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) who appears to criticise the Government adversely for buying butter and putting it on the English market, because I am informed by men who are in the business in my part of the country, that they are very much in favour of this system. In support of that I may read a letter which I received from the proprietor of one of the largest creameries

Meaford. A short debate took place on this matter at the beginning of the session, and I sent him a copy of the "Hansard" containing the report. In reply to my letter he wrote as follows:—

Your kind letter in reply to mine of 4th instant received, with copy of "Hansard." Please accept my thanks for the same, and, if not intruding on the Minister, please convey to him for myself and other creamery men thanks for his kind assurance. I was speaking yesterday to a pronounced Grit, who said: "I do not go with the Government, but I give them credit for an honest effort to benefit the trade." I met many of my patrons on Saturday, the 8th instant, when the question of continuing the experiments of last winter—

He refers to buying the butter and shipping it to the old country:

—the question of continuing the experiment cf last winter was pratty freely canvassed, and I did not hear one unfavourable comment, but many of warm approval.

Mr. MULOCK. That must be a pretty ancient letter?

Mr. SPROULE. Well, it is dated on the 11th June so that it cannot be so ancient. It is not fit to take down and dust like some of the arguments my hon, friend (Mr. Mulock) advanced last year. This is from a live creamery man, and an active man in the business who is and has one of the largest creameries in the country. Out of three letters received by me, every one of them is favourable towards the Government continuing the experiments made last year. As has been pointed out, the experiment was stopped at the very time it would be valuable. One of the unfortunate conditions of our butter in the old country is, that our shipments are periodical, and for a certain length of time none is sent over there. Consequently the English people do not get accustomed to the butter as they would if it were shipped at frequent intervals. Minister has stated that an arrangement has been made with the Grand Trunk Railway, whereby a train would be run from Windsor, and another on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also that a train would be run from Owen Sound, one from west of that, and another east of Toronto. I find that in that arrangement he has left out the Northern Railway entirely, and I think the Nipissing and Midland Railway. This man lives at the terminus of the Northern Railway, and he is unable to take advantage of this arrangement, unless some further provision is made for that purpose. I wrote to the Minister some two weeks ago about it, but received no answer. hope some change in the arrangements will be made whereby this man and others living along the line may take advantage of it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not the least astonished that butter-makers should wish the Government to continue the arrangement by which they were getting 20 cents a pound for butter which only brought 15 cents in the British market. A very large quantity was purchased from dealers in Montreal at 20 cents and sold in the British market at 15 cents. Is it any wonder that they should be in favour of the Government continuing that arrangement? But the Government cannot, under any circumstances, exercise the same care as dealers who have been in the business for years. In 1892 and 1893 we were told that we had established a great reputation for our butter on the English market, and that this was going to be of great benefit to us; but in 1894, the Dairy Commissioner did not put a pound of butter on the British market. I am favourable to refrigerators in vessels and cars, but I am not in favour of anything further than that being done by the Government.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I notice that in this arrangement the Government include only creamery butter, although the Dairy Commissioner states that the quantity of dairy butter produced in Ontario is some 3,000,-000 pounds, whereas the amount of creamery butter produced is only 1,750,000. In western Ontario there are very few creameries. The farmers themselves manufacture the butter, and in many cases it is just as good butter as the creamery butter; but they have not facilities for handling it. This cold storage is going to be of great benefit in sections where the trains will run. But I notice that the Huron and Bruce branch, and the branch from Sarnia to Stratford, have not been included in the arrangement. These districts include the largest dairying section in Ontario, and I think they should be included. I think also if the Government would establish cold storage at some point in the west, say Stratford, and accumulate carloads of butter there, it would be a better arrangement than carrying it in small lots through to Montreal. I think it would also promote the quality of the butter to have it inspected at a point like Stratford.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon, member for South Huron seems to think it was an inducement to dealers to sell their butter to be able to get 21 cents a pound for it. It is true, the arrangement was made when the price of butter was higher than it is to-day. Butter-makers would be glad now if they could get a much lower price than that. This gentleman says:

I have at present three tons of choice creamery butter, made on the 7th of May, and I can see no opening for it. We would be very glad if we could realize 15 cents a pound, if the Government would continue to buy at that price and put it on The arrangement stopped at a time the market. when we most needed it. Cold storage across the ocean is nothing unless it is supplemented by refrigerator cars and some agency for handling the If the Govbutter in Montreal and in England. ernment had continued, through the dairy commissioner, the advance of last winter, or even to the extent of 15 cents a pound, it would have materially changed the state of the market, and been of immense value.

Mr. McMILLAN. That individual must be very ignorant of the butter trade if he does not know that the butter trade of England is as open to the commission merchants as to the Government itself. No agent the Government can send to England could take precedence of the commission men, and any man in Canada is just as free to send butter to them as the Government is.

Mr. SPROULE. We have the assurance of the dairy commissioner that there should not only be cold storage in the vessels, but that cold storage should be provided in England so that the butter would be put upon the market in good condition. In addition, some one is required to handle the butter and to put it on the market every two or three weeks. This man may be, as the hon. member says, ignorant of the butter trade, but he has been like the hon. member himself in the business for a long time. He agrees with what the Government has done, and he is only sorry that they do not continue it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In reply to my hon friend who asks for arrangements to be made on additional lines, I wish to say that the commissioner has not made arrangements on as many lines as he wants, but he is trying to make arrangements for other lines. At points where a special car does not go through the railway will take butter in good condition to some such central point as Stratford, and it will be handled there.

Mr. McMULLEN. What amount will the Dominion lose by the wreck of the "Mexico?"

Mr. MONTAGUE. The butter was not ours. All we lose is the cold storage.

Mr. McMULLEN. What amount was spent in putting that in?

Mr. MONTAGUE. $250 or $300 for each boat.

Mr. CASEY. It is decidedly a breach of the arrangement for the Finance Minister to insist on bringing this item at this hour, as it was reserved on the ground of getting full information and discussion. It is manifest, for many reasons that we should have a Minister of Agriculture at this season of the year. It is stated a French paper that we are not have a Minister of Agriculture until next session. I call attention to the present condition of the department, which is that the dairy commissioner and the manager of the Experimental Farm are between them the Minister of Agriculture, and I ask the leader of the House for some explicit statements with regard to the report, apparently made with authority, in Government organs, that we are to have no Minister of Agriculture until another session.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I would ask the leader of the House if it is the intention of the Government to take up the Bill respecting the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway this session.

Mr. FOSTER. I think so.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2.35 a.m. (Tuesday).

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 131) to amend the Acts respecting Penitentiaries.—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Bill (No. 143) to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.—(Mr. Foster.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. HAZEN. When this Bill was before the House on the last occasion, the opinion was expressed by several members that it would be only fair that provision should be made in this Bill that those members of the House who are officers of the active militia, and who attended camp during the session, should not have charged against them the $8 a day during the time they were so absent at camp. There seemed to be a general opinion that that was only a fair proposition, and I propose to move an amendment to this Bill embodying that provision.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Denison). Your amendment is out of order at this stage.

THE CUSTOMS ACT.

On the Order for consideration of Bill (No. 140) further to amend the Customs Act as amended.—(Mr. Wallace.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I promised to make a statement before this Bill took the next stage, in reference to a discussion which occurred a night or two ces I am as positive as any one can be that it has ago. The Controller of Customs, having benot been received. fore him his record, gave to the House the information that on a certain day in January, 1894, the papers connected with the seizure of Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell had been referred to the Department of Justice, with very broad instructions. A letter was read-I will not refer to it more than to say that, apparently that explanation left it wholly upon the Department of Justice to fill up the gap in the explanation. I consulted the files in the department, as this was a matter relating to a period when I had nothing to do with the Department of Justice, and my officer laid before me the following letter, a copy of which is shown by the register to have been sent to the Controller of Customs on the 27th February. The letter is dated the 26th February, 1894:

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 30th ult., respecting the Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell seizure, Montreal, I have the honour, by direction, to inform you that the Minister of Justice thinks that, in view of the settlement made by your department in November last, it will be for you to consider whether criminal or other proceedings are to be taken against the members of the firm or either of them. I may add that from the papers it is evident that Mr. Boyd is criminally responsible in the matter, notwithstanding the settlement of the money claim. If you desire that proceedings, criminal or otherwise, should be taken against the firm or any member of it, and you will advise me of your decision, I will issue the necessary instructions in the matter.

I immediately communicated personally with the Controller of Customs, and ascertained from him the facts which he had subsequently discovered in connection with this letter, and those he can better state to the House himself on the present occasion. I will simply mention for the information of the House that when Sir John Thompson was presiding over the Department of Justice he proceeded upon the general rule, which obtains now, that in connection with the institution of proceedings the Department of Justice advises as to proceedings. whether civil or criminal, would lie, but the practice has always prevailed to leave it for the department particularly concerned to say whether proceedings are to be taken or not, because to that department we have to look for the expenses of any litigation which may follow.

Mr. WALLACE. On this subject my secretary wrote as follows:-

Ottawa, 1st July, 1895.

Dear Mr. Wallace, -- Re Mr. Newcombe's letter of 26th February, a copy of which you showed me, I have looked over all the papers connected with the case, and no such letter is on file. No record of it is in the correspondence room, nor is any trace of such a letter among your private correspendence, where I searched as the last resort. No one here has any recollection of such a letter having been received, and under the circumstan-

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper

Respectfully, J. R. K. BRISTOL, Private Secretary.

To the Hon. Controller of Customs.

So far as my department is concerned, no such letter was received. In reply, I addressed the following letter to the Minister of Justice:

Ottawa, 15th July, 1895.

The Hon. Sir Charles H. Tupper. Minister of Justice.

Dear Sir Charles Tupper,—On Thursday last I was shown a copy of a letter addressed by your deputy to my department under date 26th February, 1894, replying to my reference of the Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell seizure case, by letter of 30th January, for whatever action that your department might consider advisable and necessary in the interest of justice with respect to the criminality of Boyd. I beg to say that this letter was never received by this department so far as I can find, and I was awaiting action by your department, while apparently you were awaiting instructions from the Department of Customs, which I supposed had been communicated in my letter of 30th January, 1894.

If you still have reason to believe that criminal proceedings will lie, I think it would be to the interest of this department for such proceedings to be taken.

I feel it necessary, however, to refer you to the non-success of prosecutions made in almost exactly similar cases in other years. Vide remarks of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, when Minister of Customs, page 1298 of "Hansard" of 1889.

I am faithfully yours, N. C. WALLACE.

I might say further that the present Premier, who was then Minister of Customs, in a speech he delivered in this House referred at great length to a large number of cases in which criminal proceedings had been taken by the Department of Customs against parties for violation of the customs laws and for having been guilty of criminal acts against those laws. The whole statement of the case, which is recorded in the "Hansard" of that day, shows that the Department of Customs had very seldom been successful in obtaining verdicts after instituting criminal proceedings, and it appears to me that although the evidence was conclusive in all the cases stated by the Minister, the juries failed to reach a verdict of guilty. In my own experience as Controller of Customs we have had criminal proceedings instituted, one case being that of a smuggling vessel under the command of Captain Bouchard, which was seized on the Lower St. Lawrence. The vessel was captured in the act of smuggling. The vessel was seized and it was found to be filled with smuggled liquor. The liquor was, of course, confiscated, the vessel was also confiscated, and criminal proceedings were instituted against Captain Bouchard. But I am sorry to have to say that, although the evidence appeared to my department as well as to the Department of Justice to be absolutely conclusive, we failed to obtain a verdict against the captain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. appears to be a rather extraordinary case. So far as I could gather, the statement of the Controller of Customs and the statement of the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Justice expressly stated that sixteen or seventeen months ago a formal communication was sent from his department to the Customs Department, in which the opinion was expressed that this person was criminally liable and proceedings should be taken by the Controller of Customs. Now, the Controller tells the House, unless I misunderstood him, that this despatch was never received. That appears a very extraordinary occurrence between two such departments. One would have imagined that the Controller, if he received no reply, would have stimulated the memory of the Minister of Justice for the time being, and unless my recollection is wholly at fault, the Controller did state the other day that he had had verbal communication with the Minister of Justice. It does not appear that the explanation given is as satisfactory as I would wish, and in any case it reflects gravely either on the Controller of Customs or the Department of Justice, if a despatch of that importance was sent and did not reach its destination. One would have thought that a matter of this importance would have warranted some communication between the two officials. As to the illustration given by the Controller, I can scarcely attach very much importance to it. The two cases are not at all on all fours. In one case it was an ordinary smuggling proceeding, in consequence of an attempt made to bring liquor, and although the evidence may have been clear it would not be likely to result in conviction; but this case is one in which there is distinct and absolute proof of repeated forgery and repeated perjury, and it does not appear to be creditable to the way the administration is conducted that we should be offered eighteen months afterwards this very lame and halting explanation of a manifest miscarriage of justice.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE moved third reading of Bill.

Mr. McCARTHY. In committee we discussed the question which is involved in this Bill. It is proposed to establish a board of customs which is to consist of the officers of the department, and against that proposition it was argued in committee that a board of customs consisting of gentlemen independent of the department would be more in accordance with the wishes of those chiefly engaged in the business of importing. I propose to move an amendment, which does not, however, go the whole length of saying that the board shall be absolutely independent of the department, for, I think, a middle course would be the better and wiser one, namely, that the board of customs should be presided over by the Commissioner of Customs and that it should consist of gentlemen selected in the manner pointed out by the petition of the Montreal Board of Trade, Most of the objections urged in committee against this proposition appear to be objections to which the Bill as framed is equally oper. Undoubtedly these gentlemen cannot all beat different places at one time, but no more can the board of customs that is proposed by this Bill. That objection was urged very strongly by the Controller, and it was pointed out how impossible it would be under the circumstances to perform the functions which the board was appointed to perform under the proposition made by the Montreal Board of Trade. Then it is not necessary, of course, that these gentlemen should be of the character or the kind of the appointees in the United States. The appointment rests wholly with the Department of Customs, but it is not to be presumed that that department would appoint parties who are not fit and competent to discharge the duties. The suggestion is that there should be an expert from the chief branches of trade. That expert might not be as competent in the other branches of trade as he would be in his own, but there is no reason to suppose that he would not be equally capable of discharging the duties involving upon him as any officer of the department. A man because he is in dry goods, is expected to have special knowledge of that branch of trade, but if he is an intelligent man he ought to be as competent in the other branches of trade as one of the Assistant Commissioners of Customs who is named in this Bill. If the House will reflect, I think it will be seen that satisfaction-and the only object of this amendment is to try to give satisfaction to the importers—will not be given by the proposition made in the Bill, and I therefore propose:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions that the Committee have power to consider in substitution of clause 2 of the said Bill, the following:—

"That the Board of Customs shall consist of a commissioner of customs or any officer for the time being acting as such, or five members to be appointed by the Governor General in Council, and who shall be experts in each of the principal branches of trade, as follows:—(1) dry goods, (2) hardware, (3) oils, paints, &c., (4) drugs and chemicals, (5) fancy goods, stationery and jewellery, (6) groceries, provisions and fruits, (7) leather and shoe findings; and that such board shall have special power to perform such duties as are assigned to it by any Act of the Parliament of Canada or by the Governor General in Council. Three members of such board shall form a quorum, to be competent to transact the business of the board at any meeting thereof, whether regular or fixed or special, to be called by the clearman."

Mr. LISTER. Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, I want to say a word or two about a matter which engaged the attention of the House a moment before I came in. A letter appears to have been written by the Justice Department to the Controller of Customs respecting the charge made against Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell, of having defrauded the revenues of the country and been guilty of perjury and forgery. I understand that in response to the letter written by the Controller of Customs, the Justice Department informed the Controller that some, or all, of these gentlemen were liable to be prosecuted for having defrauded the country and for having committed the crimes that I have just enumerated. Now, the other afternoon the Controller of Customs stated to the House that he had had no communication at all with the Justice Department, save and except a letter he had written and some verbal communication with either the Minister of Justice or somebody in the department; and that the result was, that it was not thought advisable to prosecute these parties. The hon, gentleman told us at the same time, that the amount out of which these men had defrauded the country was something like $4,000 or $5,000. My information is that the total amount involved is something like $38,000. I am told, the Controller of Customs went back only for six years and held these parties responsible for the amount abstracted for these six years only, and that in fact the amount involved is something like $38,000. I would like the Controller of Customs to say whether that is correct or incorrect. Did he only go back for six years, or did he investigate the frauds for many years back from the time there was reason to believe these frauds first commenced. That is an important subject for consideration, and a question which I think the Controller of Customs has a right to answer. I was not in the House yesterday when the question was answered respecting the claim against W. W. Ogilvie, but the facts appear to be, that W. W. Ogilvie made a claim upon the department some twelve or fourteen months ago, amounting to some $4,000 or $5,000 for rebate of duty upon corn imported into the country. It appears from the answer of the Controller of Customs that in addition to the amount which the Ogilvies claim to be now in the hands of the department, they have already been paid on prior importations some $16,000 or $17,000. House has a right to know whether the department investigated the propriety of the payments of the moneys which have been paid back to Ogilvie prior to twelve or fourteen months ago when the last claim was made by that firm upon the Government. The Controller of Customs was rather indefinite as to the reasons why the Government retained that money on hand. If Ogilvie & Company were entitled to be paid back that $5,000, it is somewhat remarkable that the of the money for fourteen or fifteen months after the claim was made. Either this firm is entitled to be paid back the full amount of the money or it is not. My hon, friend informs the House that an investigation took place and that the matter was placed in the hands of Mr. McLaughlin, an officer of customs of the city of Montreal; and the answer made by the Controller is, that the report made by that gentleman was not sufficiently satisfactory to the department to justify them in paying this rebate to Ogilvie. The House has the right to know why this report was not sufficiently satisfactory. Does that report show that Ogilvie & Company had been making a claim upon the department for a rebate, upon the ground that they had "kiln-dried, ground and sold for human food "the corn imported into this country? According to the amount of rebate that these people have received, and the amount they now claim, they appear to have imported over 300,000 bushels of corn into Canada. The charge made against them is that, instead of complying with the statute by kilndrying the corn and selling it for human food, they sold it for animal food and other purposes, and therefore were not entitled to get the drawback at all. If the department have found on investigation that there is a doubt as to the right of Ogilvie to get back the $5,000, it seems to me that would be sufficient to justify the department in investigating the matter further, to see whether he was really entitled to be repaid the $16,000 which he got prior to making There is another this last claim at all. point about this matter which is somewhat suspicious. The claim to a drawback must be supported by an affidavit, either of the man who claims the money or by his agent acting for him and having a full knowledge of the facts. That affidavit should be filed with the department and should set forth that the law had been complied with—that is to say, that the corn imported had been used and sold according to law; and upon that affidavit, the department would be justified in paying the drawback. Now, it appears, according to the statement of my hon. friend, that such an affidavit was filed in the department. so, it should still be in the department, and the hon. Controller should be able to inform the House who made that affidavit, before whom it was sworn, and every particular in reference to the case. If the attidavit is not in the possession of the department, I would ask the hon. Controller whether or not there is any truth at all in the statement that the affidavit was returned to Mr. Ogilvie, either directly or through somebody else; because, if it was returned to him, that would be an extraordinary pro-ceeding on the part of the department, inasmuch as the department would be bound to keep the evidence of the claim in order to take whatever proceedings they might think Government should have retained possession necessary. Therefore, I would ask the hon.

Controller whether the investigation extended to the total importation of corn by Ogilvie since these regulations were in force, whether he knows as a matter of fact whether the affidavit made by Ogilvie or anybody else in support of the claim for $4,000 odd has been returned to Ogilvie directly or indirectly, or whether it is still in the hands of the department.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down is, as usual, inaccurate. He misquotes what I said when he states that I said I had no communication with the Department of Justice.

Mr. LISTER. I did not say that.

Mr. WALLACE. I made no such assertion at all. I said that in a file of the department which I had in my hand, and which I had not time to look over, there appeared to be no such letter. Since then my secretary has looked all through it, and finds no such letter in it. Before the hon. gentleman came into the House to-day I read a statement of my secretary in reference to that. No such letter and no record of it can be found in the department. hon, gentleman also states that I thought it not advisable to prosecute these parties. I made no such assertion. What I did sav was simply what was in the letter. Then the hon. gentleman says: "You have only gone back six years; why do you not go back further than that?" Well, if the hon. gentleman wants to learn a little law, I may tell him that you can only go back six years for the collecting of a debt.

Mr. LISTER. I know that perfectly well.

Mr. WALLACE. More than that, if he wants to learn a little more law, you can only go back three years for the imposition of a penalty.

Mr. LISTER. I know that perfectly well, too.

Mr. WALLACE. If he knew that perfectly well, why did he say: "Why do you not go back for these penalties more than six years?" He either had a lamentable ignorance of the law, or he was trying to mislead the House. His statement is that there were cases in which the penalties amounted to $38,000.

Mr. LISTER. No, not penalties.

Mr. WALLACE. What then?

Mr. LISTER. Defrauding the revenue.

Mr. WALLACE. Defrauding the revenue to the amount of $38,000. All I can say is that our officers went back as far as the law would permit. We seized all the books, all the invoices, all the papers, letters and records of every description. We had three very competent men working for many weeks and taking account of every business transaction of that firm, as recorded in their own books. Their books were taken without their knowledge that we were going to come down upon them. Those books were carefully gone over, and tabulated statements were made of all their business during the time we could, according to law, impose penalties; and the seizing officers who were interested in the seizure, were anxious to make that seizure as large as possible—not to omit one dollar which could be legally claimed by the department against the parties; and their report was that $4,800 odd was the amount of money of which those parties had defrauded the Government.

Mr. LISTER. For six years?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think they were in business six years. At any rate, we went back to the limit the law permitted us, and we found that $4,800 was the total amount; and when the hon. gentleman says that they defrauded the Government of $38,000, I would like him to produce some proof of his statement. I presume that every record connected with the seizure is in Montreal, in the possession of the department. With reference to the case of W. W. Ogilvie, the hon. gentleman asks me whether we investigated the propriety going back a number of years to the payments that find whether had been made to him were properly made. I did not go back, I did not investigate the action of my predecessor in office at all. I was administering the department, and took up the cases, as they came before me, in the regular form of business. We made two payments to Messrs. Ogilvie after I became Controller of Customs, which I referred to yesterday: One of $650 in January and the other of $730 in March, 1893. These were the only payments made to Messrs. Ogilvie since I became Controller. I further stated that there were claims put in for over $4,-000, which claims were not paid as the evidence, in the opinion of our officers, was not sufficiently conclusive to warrant us in paying them. Then the hon, gentleman asked another question. There was an affidavit, and he asked: Who made the affidavit? I gave full particulars of that yesterday. He asks: Was the affidavit returned Ogilvie? I do not know that such affidavit was returned to him; does the hon. gentleman know that it was? What information has he about it? He has made some statements. I know nothing in this matter but what was straight, fair and correct; and if the hon. gentleman knows anything else. let him make the statement and not deal in innuendoes and insinuations. So far as I know, no affidavit was returned to Mr. Ogilvie-certainly not with my knowledge or consent. If the affidavits which Mr. Ogilvie made were returned, what would be the effect? Simply that the department would have no evidence to justify them in giving Messrs. Ogilvie the refund. Mr. Ogilvie and nobody else will be the loser.

The Government received the duty on the corn and the refund of 90 per cent was applied for. The conditions under which such refund was made were considered as not having been complied with, and the moneys were not refunded. The Government, on the contrary, retained the money paid for the duty on the corn when the corn was imported. Now, I will deal for a few moments, Sir, with the amendment placed in your hands by the hon, member for North Simcoe. That hon, gentleman moved amendment that a board of experts be appointed. He copied his motion from the petition of the Montreal Board of Trade. That a board of experts be appointed which shall consist of five experts, one for each of the principal branches of trade, namely: dry goods; hardware, oils, paints, &c.; drugs and chemicals; fancy goods, stationery and jewellery; groceries, provisions and fruits; leather and shoe findings. Then the document from which he copied his amendment goes on to say that such a board of experts has for some years been in operation in the United States, where it appears to have insured to the Government the payment of full customs dues and to have at the same time given satisfaction to the importers. I deny those propositions. As I stated some days ago, there is no such board of experts in the United States at all. The board of experts in the United States is an entirely different board and organization from that proposed by the Montreal Board of Trade and copied by the hon, member for North Simcoe. What is the personnel of that board of experts in the United States:

Hon. G. C. Tichenor, president of the board, was, previous to his appointment as general appraiser, Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, for about four years. Previous to that he was a special agent of the Treasury Department for about fifteen years, and previous to that he was engaged in the practice of the law.

Hon. Thad. Sharratts was, previous to his appointment as general appraiser, for four years customs appraiser at the port of Baltimore. vious to that he was engaged in the practice of

Hon. C. H. Ham was, prior to his appointment as general appraiser, customs appraiser at the port of Chicago for three or four years, and, prior to his appointment in the customs, he was engaged in the practice of law.

Hon. G. H. Sharpe, prior to his appointment as general appraiser, was for three years surveyor of the port of New York. Prior to that he was engaged in the practice of law, and was a member for a number of years of the legislature of the State of New York, and was for a considerable period Speaker of the Assembly.

Hon. Col. J. A. Jewell was, prior to his appointment as general appraiser, supervising special agent of the Treasury Department for about four years. Prior to his employment in the customs he was engaged in the hotel business.

Hon. H. M. Somerville was, prior to his appointment as general appraiser, a practicing lawyer. During a number of years immediately prior to his appointment he was judge of the Supreme Court of Alabama. Mr. WALLACE.

Hon. J. S. Wilkinson, jun., prior to his appointment as general appraiser, was appraiser at the port of New Orleans for a number of years. Before his employment in the customs he was engaged in journalism.

Hon. F. N. Shirtleff was, for upwards of fifteen years previous to his appointment as general appraiser, deputy collector of customs at Portland, His occupation or employment prior to his appointment in the customs could not be ascertained

Hon. Wilbur F. Lunt, prior to his appointment as general appraiser, was United States attorney for the state of Maine and a practising lawyer.

Mr. J. R. Lake, clerk of the board of general appraisers, was previously an assistant clerk of customs in the Treasury Department at Washington.

Thus, of the nine appraisers, six were lawyers by training and practice and the other three were specially trained during a number of years in the service of the Treasury Department. It is said among business men in New York that this board is not at all satisfactory to them. Further proof of this dissatisfaction is shown by the resolution of the merchants of Massachusetts, who complain that there was no uniformity in appraisements and that the working of the Customs Act, under this general board, was unsatisfactory in every respect. Supposing the board recommended by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Mc-Carthy) were appointed, and a question of the appraisement of dry goods came up before it, who would appraise the goods? There would be simply one appraiser. He would be the only expert on that board who would have any knowledge of the appraisement of dry goods, and therefore the only one competent, as an expert, to give a valuation or classification of the goods. same might be said of hardware, dry goods, chemicals and the other classes into which he proposes to divide those experts. as to the salaries, the chairman of the board of experts of New York gets $9,000 a year, and each of the other members gets $7,000 a year. I presume the men in Canada would require to be as expert as those in New York, and if we gave them the same salaries we would have an expenditure of $44,000 a year. I claim that we have a better and more satisfactory system in the Customs Department to-day, and one certainly more satisfactory to the mercantile community than the proposed scheme, without any additional cost to the revenue, but simply a little additional work to our own officers. When a question comes up for classification appraisement or value, we send article, if it be dry goods, to the dry goods appraiser in Toronto, in Hamilton, Montreal, Halifax and St. John. In a few days we get the opinions of all those men, all experts in that particular line. at particular line. They give inions without any additiona the department. That is a opinions additional more satisfactory appraisement than the proposed by the hon. gentleman the amendment submitted to this House. We have the opinion of five or six experts in the dry goods trade as to the classification and appraisement of that article, while under this system we should have these difficulties adjudicated upon by a board consisting of a dry goods man, a hardware man, a druggist, a grocery man and a leather man, four of whom would be deciding questions they were not familiar with. Therefore, I say this amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Simcoe would be decidedly a more expensive system than the present, and the working would be prejudicial to the department, and would create dissatisfaction among the importers and manufacturers of this country. For these reasons, it should not be incorporated in the Customs Act.

Mr. SCRIVER. The amendment proposed by the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) commends itself, in my judgment, as an eminently judicious and proper one. The Controller of Customs has briefly stated his objections to it. Some of the objections, I think, are not well founded. I think that the fact that such bodies as the boards of trade of several of the most important cities of the Dominion have asked for the constitution of such a board as this is evidence that the present system has not worked well. The Controller of Customs says that under the present system you have the advantage of receiving the opinion of five experts, the sample being sent to that number of appraisers. I may be permitted to say, without reflecting upon the competency of these appraisers, that they have not, in some instances, the full confidence of the business men of the different cities of the Dominion. It has been stated, I believe with some foundation, that these appointments are not always made because of the qualification of the individuals named for the offices for which they are appointed, but that political considerations have weight, and that, in some instances at all events, men not the most competent to be found in the various cities of the Dominion have been selected for these important positions. The Controller of Customs says that under the system suggested by the hon. member for North Simcoe you will have the opinion of only one man in each particular branch of trade, while four others who are not skilled in that department would be given the power to decide as to the classification and appraisement of the article placed before them. Well, it is not true that in a multitude of councillors always dwells safety. I think that if the man representing the particular branch of trade was honest and competent, he would be likely to be impartial, and his opinion would naturally sway the other members of the board of experts. Moreover, I do not think the question of expense should be taken into account. stand upon considerations of expense if the It is not at all likely, if such a board of system is to be improved. If a material im-experts were appointed, that we would rigidly follow the example of the great and rich country on the other side of the border. We should not be expected to pay these men such large salaries as are paid to members of the board of experts there, and it is not at all likely that the expense would be anything like that which has attended the carrying out of such a system in the United States. But, granting that it would be followed with some expense, if the end desired should be attained, the end of leading the various business men of the country, the members of these important bodies, the boards of trade, to feel satisfied with the establishment of a system which would afford them some protection against the occasional arbitrary action of the Board of Customs, I think the question of expense should not weigh with us very much. For my part, valuing highly, as I do, the opinion given by such a body of merchants and traders as those who compose the board of trade in Montreal, I am of opinion that the amendment moved by the hon, member for North Simcoe is, as I said before, an eminently judicious and proper one.

Mr. LAURIER. I should have hoped that the Government, in view of the opinion that has been expressed not only by the board of trade of Montreal, but, if I may say so, by the business men of Canada, would accept this proposition. The Controller of Customs stated a moment ago that the system which was proposed by my hon. friend from North Simcoe would not be as advantageous to the commercial community as is the present system. Well, against the opinion of the hon gentleman there is the fact that he will seek in vain, I believe, amongst the business men of Canada for one single man who would approve of the present system. The hon, gentleman has stated to-day that all the members of the boards of trade have not pronounced against the present system. It may be they have not. But I think he will seek in vain for a board of trade that has pronounced in favour of the present system, and many are those that have pronounced in favour of the change proposed by the hon, member for North Simcoe. What are the objections to the proposed system brought forward by the hon. gentleman? He says, in the first place, that it would be too expensive. Granted that it would entail some expense, that expense would not at all reach the figure stated by the hon. gentleman—$40,000 or $50,000 a year. The hon. gentleman makes up that whole amount by assuming that these officers would be paid as high salaries as they are paid in the United States. But no one supposes that such high salaries ought to be paid to such officers here. However, whatever the expense may be, I think it is childish for a great commercial country like Cauada to provement is to be made in the system, I am quite sure that the question of expenditure should not stand in the way. The other objection stated by the hon. gentleman is that the system in the United States. which is the prototype of the system now proposed, has not worked as satisfactorily—

Mr. WALLACE. The system in the United States is worked out under a board composed mainly of lawyers. It is proposed here to have a board of men who are experts in the various branches of trade. That is really what we have to-day.

Mr. McCARTHY. Are they necessarily lawyers?

Mr. WALLACE. That seems to be the case.

Mr. LAURIER. I think it is quite fair to say that the system in force in the United States is the prototype of the system now proposed. I should hope that the manner in which the system is carried out in the United States would not be the prototype of the way it would be carried out here. For it is evident from what the hon, gentleman says that the system in the United States has been abused by the manner in which the appointments have been made. I gather from the statement made by the Controller of Customs that the system has not been properly carried out because the proper class of men have not been selected to fill the places. The board in the United States is composed of nine members. The Controller of Customs states that of these six are lawyers. It is evident that these lawyers could not have been selected because of their fitness as business men, but because of their political services. Another member of the board is a journalist. I suppose he was selected for the same reason. Another man is a hotel-keeper; I do not see that he can have had any other quali-fication than that occupation would give him; and the last had no occupation. It is evident, therefore, that in the United States, though the law was good, the object may have been defeated by the character of the men who were appointed. But the hon. gentleman can find an obvious way of reforming that evil; it would be that the Governor in Council should not fill up those offices with lawyers, journalists, or hotelkeepers, but that they should be filled by who are experts in the different branches of trade for which appraisers are needed. In this way he would meet the views of the Board of Trade of Montreal. I am sure that if the Montreal merchants, or Canadian merchants generally, expected that such appointments were to be filled with lawyers, journalists and hotel-keepers, they would say at once, Let us keep the system which is in existence. But as I should expect that the Government would follow the spirit and letter of the Act, then I would expect that the character of the men would be really what it is intended to be, that they should be really experts, and then all the advantage which the Government expects, would flow from that system. Now, how can the Government in face of the petition which has been presented to this House, covered, if I remember rightly, by over 600 signatures of men of all shades of politics—indeed, of no politics at all—and when the very first names on the petition are those of friends and supporters of the Government—how is it possible, I ask, in face of such a petition, in face of such a universal condemnation of the present system, for the Government to persist in maintaining it?

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to refer to some statements made by the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MARTIN. I rise to a point of order. The hon, gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman cannot speak again.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask it from the House as a favour. Of course, if the House does not wish to hear me—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman cannot speak again, if objection is made.

Mr. FOSTER. It is an objection which is very seldom made to the responsible head of a department who wishes to make explanations.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Before the question is put, I think the House is entitled to a little further explanation from the Controller of Customs.

Mr. FOSTER. He cannot give it. He wished to give it, but it was objected to.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Well, perhaps the hon. gentleman cannot explain. The facts to which I wish to call the attention of the House are of a very important character. The hon. Controller of Customs, in speaking the other night, said that in the case of Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell, all his responsibility ceased with regard to the prosecution of Mr. Boyd, the moment he handed the papers over to the Department of Just-The Minister of Justice told us a few moments ago that all he had to do was to advise the department whether there were grounds for prosecution—and that it was then for the department concerned to say whether the prosecution should go on. I think I have fairly set forth what was stated by the Minister of Justice. It appears that that opinion was conveyed to the Coutroller, and he was distinctly told by the Department of Justice that there were grounds for prosecution; and, according to the statement of the Minister of Justice, the responsibility then rested upon the Controller of Customs as to whether that prosecution should go on. Very well, then, what becomes of the statement of the Controller of Customs, made the other day.

that his responsibility in the matter ceased when the papers were handed over to the Minister of Justice: It is evident from what has been told us to-day, that the nonprosecution of Mr. Boyd, who has been charged by the Controller of Customs himself with perjury and forgery, charged by him with those crimes in face of this House, and before the country—the responsibility, I say, for the non-prosecution of those charges rests entirely upon the Controller of Customs himself; he is responsible for the fact that this gentleman has not been pro-He excuses himself for not having gone on with the prosecution on the ground, as he says, that on a recent occasion they failed to convict a man in the Gulf of St. Lawrence for smuggling whisky. Now, the public know perfectly well that with a smuggler, especially under the circumstances upon which the seizure referred to was made, there is always a great deal of sympathy, and one can very well understand that in the case of this man Bouchard, there was a failure of justice. Is that any reason why a man at the head of a great commercial concern, who is publicly charged here before the country with perjury and forgery, and the proofs of which, it is evident, from the statement of the Controller of Customs, are in his hands. is not to be prosecuted? Why, Sir, it is a premium upon fraud, it is a premium upon crime of that description, if a man occupying this position is to understand that he may make false affidavits, as he is charged by the Controller with making, that he may be guilty of forgery, as he is charged by the Controller with being guilty, and yet is not to be prosecuted because the department failed to convict a smuggler in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Now, that is exactly the position in which the Controller I will call the attention of the House to the statement made by the leader of the House when this matter was under discussion. He stated that the matter was one that could not be allowed to rest there, that there must be an investigation. now, is the leader of the House, who represents the head of the Government in this House, to allow this House to understand that a member of his Government, having before him proof of an act such as he has charged against this man Boyd is to permit that act to go without prosecution simply because of some such flimsy excuse as he stated? I say the duty of the Controller is plain, and there can be no question about sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The bon. gentleman, I am sure, is making a mistake, and could not have followed the letter read by the Controller of Customs. The Controller read a letter to-day, sent to my department since the discovery of this letter of 1894, in which he gives positive instructions to the department to go on. The other portion of the letter to which the hon. gentleman refers, and which he apparently thinks was the only portion, was a mere remark as to the experience of the department in connection with this prosecution. But, as I heard the letter read today, it gave instructions to preced and to enforce the criminal law. The hon, gentleman evidently did not understand that.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The hon, gentleman, at any rate, cannot escape from the dilemma in which he placed himself by saying his responsibility ended by placing the matter in the hands of the Minister of Justice. But with whomsoever the responsibility rests, it is quite clear that the matter cannot be allowed to remain where it is, that charges of this kind cannot be made unless it is intended to prosecute them. The fact that this extraordinary condition of things existed between the two departments, that a letter of that importance should have been laid aside, and not have been aside, and not have acted upon for months, certainly indicates a looseness of administration for which responsibility must rest upon somebody. Of course I accept the statement. I did not understand the letter to be read as the Minister said it was read. I made all due diligence to ascertain what the Controller of Customs did say, but I did not so understand him, if the statement was made. If I have done him any injustice in regard to that matter, it is my duty to retract it, but at the same time the case is one that does not reflect the very highest credit upon that department.

Amendment negatived.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the third reading of the Bill is taken, I wish to ask a question in regard to some documents which are lost, or alleged to have been lost. Perhaps the Controller has given that information, but amidst the confusion in the House I did not hear it. I wish to inquire if those documents have been returned to the Department of Customs, which were alleged to have been returned to parties who were intended to have been criminally prosecuted by the Controller? The attention of the Minister of Justice as well as that of the Controller was called to this point, and I understood an explanation was to be given on that point as well as on other points.

sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All the papers sent to the Department of Justice were returned in a letter of February, 1894.

Mr. MULOCK. What has become of the prosecution?

Mr. FOSTER. The Controller explained that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have not heard what become of the documents. The Controller was to have informed the House on that point.

Mr. WALLACE. In reply to the hon, member for Oxford, I have to say I know nothing of any papers having been returned. I asked the hon, member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), who referred to the matter, "Whether any papers were taken away, or any papers stolen?" He refused to answer. I know nothing more. If any member of the House does know anything more, I should like to have the information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What we want to know is whether those documents are in the possession of the Controller?

Mr. WALLACE. No authority has been given to return any of the papers, but to retain all the papers.

Mr. MULOCK. What about the prosecution?

Mr. WALLACE. That has been explained.

Mr. LISTER. The hon, gentleman has repeated the slander he uttered the other night.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LISTER. Or the insinuation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman should withdraw the word,

Mr. LISTER. I withdraw the word "slander." The hon. gentleman insinuated, however—

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Lambton has spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman spoke to the amendment moved by the hon, member for Simcoe, and is in order in speaking to the motion now before the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LISTER. The hon, gentleman for a second or third time has thought proper to get up here and talk about the disappearance of these papers. I remind that hon.

Mr. O'BRIEN.

gentleman that only the other night he consequence because no conviction would stated that he had sent the papers to the take place. Now, Sir, having said this much, Department of Justice and they had never I warn the Controller to be more careful been returned. The Department of Justice about his statements and I advise him to tells the hon, gentleman that they were returned.

Mr. WALLACE. I deny that.

Mr. LISTER. The hon, gentleman told us the other night that he wrote a despatch to the Department of Justice and that the only communication he had had since was verbal communication with the late Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice refutes the statement he made by telling the House that the department wrote the Controller and returned the papers to him. Where is the hon, gentleman's accuracy now? He is ready to charge other people: with inaccuracy, and yet there is no more inaccurate man in this House to-day than the Controller himself. The hon, gentleman undertakes to teach people law. He knows more about brown sugar and black tobacco than about law. We on this side of the House know perfectly well that he would have to go back six years in order to prosecute those parties; but does he not know that it is necessary to go back even before that time in order to prosecute them and, in order to show venality, to show that the people are worthy of punishment beyond a fine. The hon, gentleman must not take to; himself all knowledge possessed by members of the House of Commons. He cannot afford to talk to other people about how little they know. I should like to find a man who knows as little as the Controller, filling the position he fills or any position at all equal to it. He has not answered the charge made against his department. has not told us what became of the affidavit made by Mr. Ogilvie, although he has given us to understand that the affidavit is not in his department. I asked the hon, gentleman before, and I repeat the question now. was that affidavit returned to Mr. Ogilvie? If so, why was that done in face of the fact that the department thought it necessary to appoint an officer to investigate the affairs of that mill and the claims of Mr. Ogilvie? Why should that affidavit have been returned? If the fact is established by the inspector or officer of the Government that there was fraud committed on the Government, then it was the duty of the Controller to have retained in his possession every evidence that would have proved that fraud in order that the offender might be punished, and the hon, gentleman, unless he is simple indeed, knows that if that affidavit has been surrendered by the department and if there has been wrong-doing in Ogilvie's mill, if this Government has paid money which it had no right to pay back, the evidence to prove the guilt of the person who made the claim has been lost and no conviction could take place, and prosecution now would be utterly worthless and of no

Mr. WALLACE. The Controller does not pretend to have all the knowledge of this House, but it appears that he does not require very much knowledge to teach the hon, member for Lambton. With respect to the affidavit in the Ogilvie case I have made inquiries in the department, and, as I stated yesterday, that document is not there. The accountant reports to me that it was delivered to Mr. Watters. That is the last record we have of it.

Mr. LISTER. With what instructions?

Mr. WALLACE. The accountant gave no instructions, and had no authority to give any instructions to his superior officer.

Mr. FOSTER. Another pointer.

Mr. LISTER. Is that a pointer?

With reference to re-Mr. WALLACE. turning the papers to the Department of Justice, I made no such statement as the hon. gentleman refers to. I made no further statement than that contained in the letter, saying that the file accompanied the letter, and that I would call the special attention of the Department of Justice to the report Mr. Watters concerning the transactions of the firm of Boyd, Ryrie & Campbell. I knew nothing further of the papers, but supposed they were on the file which I held in my hand at the time. I have no reason The whole of the to think otherwise now. papers were not in that file, but they were a large packet of documents and were not in the department at Ottawa, so far as I can understand, but in the custody of the officer at Montreal.

Mr. CASEY. The Controller of Customs thinks he has taught the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) something, but I think the House will fail to see what instruction he has given him. He has at all events taught us that he is more anxious to say something which he thinks to be smart, than to give the explanation which his duty as a sworn Minister of the Crown demands of him. I ask the Controller of Customs not to leave the House while I am speaking. Mr. Speaker, the hon. the Controller of Customs leaves the House in the middle of my remarks and while I am about to ask him a question. That shall not prevent me from asking the question, for I will make the House cognizant of what I would call his cowardice if it were parliamentary to do so, but I believe it is not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will withdraw the word cowardice.

Mr. CASEY. I have not used the word ecwardice. I said I would use it if it were parliamentary.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman did use the word cowardice, and I ask him to withdraw.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the word cowardice was used more than once by the leader of the House yesterday.

Mr. SPEAKER. If my attention had been drawn to the fact that an hon, member of the House used that word I would have ruled it was not in order.

Mr. CASEY. I do not know who drew your attention to it this time, but according to your ruling I will withdraw the word. I am aware that a higher standard of courtesy is expected from members on this side of the House than from members on the other side.

The Controller of Customs told us yesterday that this affidavit was in the possession of his department, but he did not tell us what became of it. He told us to-day that it was given by the accountant of the department to Mr. Watters, who was the acting commissioner, and who is now uncomfortably situated. He was asked by my friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) what instructions were given, and the Controller had to show his smartness by saying that the accountant could not give instructions to a superior officer. He cannot expect the House to believe that the accountant acted on his own motion in giving up these papers to Mr. Watters. In the absence of the explanation which he has sought to avoid giving by leaving the House, we must believe that he told the accountant to give up this affidavit to the acting commissioner.

This document has since disappeared, and its disappearance has rendered the prosecution of the suspected parties impossible. Until the Controller of Customs clears his skirts in this matter, he is directly responsible to the country for the action of the accountant and of the acting commissioner, and for the disappearance of this important legal document, and for the failure to be able to enter suit against the parties alleged to be guilty. He says he sent these papers to the Department of Justice and never got them back. The Minister of Justice says he did send them back. I leave the Minister of Justice and the Controller of Customs to settle the dispute between themselves as to the exchange of these papers between the two departments. It is a pretty state of affairs when the heads of two departments cannot agree as to what passed between them. It shows the utter lack of system and management that prevails in the Government. Un-til the Controller of Customs tells us by facts as I heard it.

whose authority these papers were given by the accountant to Mr. Watters, he is responsible for their disappearance. It is a very serious charge to make against him, and I do not wonder he left the House.

and a second contractive of the second of th

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think that the Government can afford to leave the matter in its present condition. Although there are some points in controversy, yet certain facts admitted by the Government are sufficient to call for explanation and inquiry. It is admitted that a firm of importers were discovered in defrauding the revenue, and that, as a result of an inquiry before the Controller of Customs, a Mr. Boyd was found guilty of having committed forgery, perjury and The Controller made that statement on the floor of the House, and when it was asked, if Mr. Boyd had been brought to the bar of justice, the Controller was able to clear his skirts for the time being by reading a letter which purported to transmit to the Minister of Justice the forged documents with instructions to take such cognizance of the case as justice demanded. If I remember aright, that was in February, 1894.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was the hon, gentleman in the House when I read a letter which had been sent to the Department of Customs, and when the Controller read a letter of a recent date, either of yesterday or to-day, which had been sent finally to the Department of Justice?

Mr. MULOCK. I did not hear that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think the hon, gentleman would continue his line of argument, if he had been present. I read a letter of February, 1894, from the deputy of the late Minister of Justice to the Controller of Customs, stating that, under the facts, he was of opinion that Boyd was criminally responsible, and that the fine that had been inflicted would not interfere with criminal proceedings which would be taken, but that he waited further instruction as to whether these proceedings should be instituted or not. No answer was received to that letter. After this discussion, on search being made, and the record showing what I mentioned in the Department of Justice, I saw the Controller of Customs. then stated to me, as he stated in the House, that there was no record in his department of that letter, and, in support of that statement, he read to the House a letter, which he showed to me from one of his officers, that further search saying had made and there was no such letter on file. The papers which accompanied that letter of February, 1894. went back to the Department of Customs. My hon, friend then read a letter dated either to-day or yesterday, stating that he had not given instructions to the Department of Justice to proceed Minister for the information he has given explanation of these transactions. There At the same time, it fails, I think, to meet the case. As far as the Department of Justice is concerned, they appear to have given certain advice to the Controller. My recollection was that the Controller had for- lic service. As I said when the matter was warded the alleged, I may say admitted, last before the committee, it is most unwarded the alleged, I may say admitted, forgeries to the Minister of Justice in February, 1894, leaving the matter in his hands. Now, Sir, it seems to me incredible that the Controller of Customs could have entirely ing a high or a humble position; and when forgotten so serious a matter, and have failed to make inquiry of the Department of Justice why his letter had not been answered. In February, 1894, he lays a grave responsibility upon the Minister of Justice, and not until July, 1895, when the attention of Parliament is called to the matter, does he appear to have again intervened Less than that will not satisfy my view of in the transaction. omitted for eighteen months to ask the department what had become of these documents, so important in the interest of justice, and how, after having gone through an inquiry involving a great deal of time and responsibility, he could have allowed the matter entirely to escape his memory, and have neglected to see why the accused had not been brought to the bar of justice, passes my comprehension. And to all that, the circumstance that the forged papers are not where they ought to be, in the custody of the law officers-where they are, I suppose, nobody knows-and that there is no record of the letter of the Department of Justice to the Controller's department-

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is a record in the Department of Justice.

Mr. MULOCK. I am speaking of the Controller's office. The plainest man in the country knows what ought to have taken place. He knows that the moment the Minister got those papers, if justice had been done, a warrant would have been issued for the accused, a trial would have ensued, and the Controller and his officers would have been necessary witnesses at that trial. And yet we find the Controller of Customs without any record of a reply from the Department of Justice and failing to inquire why there was no reply; all these incriminating documents disappearing: an affidavit which was said to have afforded foundation for a criminal prosecution in another case also disappearing; and these matters brought to the knowledge of the people of Canada by a serious charge made by my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister), who said he could prove this charge and many others if a committee were appointed to examine witnesses under oath; and yet the Administration not being the first, as they ought to be, to court the fullest inquiry under the noonday sun that it would be possible to hold. Comment is hardly necessary. There is a failure of justice, whoever is responsible. The Minister of Justice of the Controller in bringing these examples

Mr. MULOCK. I am thankful to the hon. will admit that. The public will demand an has been a breaking down in the administration of justice here, and there will be a withdrawal of public confidence from one of the most important departments of the pubpleasant for any person to listen to accusations touching seriously the personal honour of a member of this House, be he occupycharges such as those made by the hon. member for West Lambton are promulgated in this House, there is but one course open for honourable men-to have an open and thorough inquiry that will dispel mystery, bring truth to light, lay bare all the facts, convict the guilty and acquit the innocent. How he could have what the situation demands.

> Mr. MARTIN. I think it is scarcely correct, as stated by the hon. Minister of Justice, that the letter read to us by the Controller of Customs is an explicit direction to the Department of Justice to prosecute Mr. Boyd; because in that letter it is stated that if the department are still of opinion that criminal proceedings would lie-

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. haps the hon, gentleman will be satisfied if I tell him that I take that letter as sufficiently definite to institute proceedings.

> Mr. MARTIN. That may be the view of the hon, gentleman. If the hon, gentleman chooses to take that letter as a direction, he may do so; but that does not excuse or palliate the very evident desire or intention of the hon. Controller of Customs to shield Mr. Boyd in this matter. He has done it most effectually, in the first place, by refraining for eighteen months from making any inquiries of the Department of Justice in reference to his letter to that department. Then, when it is brought home to him without any doubt that eriminal proceedings could be effectually taken against Mr. Boyd, he writes a letter to the Department of Justice, which the Minister of Justice attempts to show is a clear and explicit direction to that department to act, but which I venture to say can be read very easily the other way; because in that letter the hon. Controller says: If the department is still of opinion that criminal proceedings will lie in this case, it would be in the interest of the department to take proceedings against this man; but I would point out that a former Minister of Customs stated in a long speech in the House of Commons in 1889 that proceedings which have been taken against smugglers had failed to result in conviction, and a prosecution which I took against whisky smugglers in the Gulf of St. Lawrence was equally unsuccessful. What is the object of failure before the Minister of Justice? What is the object of the halting manner in which that application is made? And had it not been for the action of the hon. member for West Lambton, whom the hon. Controller of Customs has most unjustly abused for his conduct in this matter, it would have remained in this way without any action being taken. Let us look for a moment at the other case, which seems to me a very serious one, indeed, the case of Mr. Ogilvie. The hon. Controller of Customs says that it is a matter of indifference where that affidavit is. If the affidavit is not in the department, so much the worse for Mr. Ogilvie, because his claim for a rebate cannot be made unless the evidence contained in that affidavit is before the department. That affidavit contains the sworn statement of Mr. Ogilvic, which was necessary in order that he should get the rebate, and which, if true, entitled him to the rebate. The department refused to give Mr. Ogilvie that relate. Therefore, in their opinion, Mr. Ogilvie's statements were not true, he was liable to prosecution for perjury, and it was the duty of the Controller of Customs to instruct the Department of Justice to prosecute him for perjury. Surely, either one thing or the other. Mr. Ogilvie im ported a considerable quantity of corn. That corn he was entitled to kiln-dry and sell for human food, in which case he was entitled to a rebate. In his affidavit he stated that he had complied with the law, that he had kiln-dried the corn, and sold it for human food, and he asked a rebate of some $4,000. The department were apparently not satisfied with Mr. Ogilvie's affidavit, and deputed their officer to inquire into the That officer did so, and recircumstances. ported that he could not advise the department to pay the rebate. What is the meaning of that report? It can only have one meaning, and that is that the statements contained in Mr. Ogilvie's affidavit were false and untrue. How, then, can the Controller of Customs say it is a matter of no importance to any one, except Mr. Ogilvie, in the prosecution of his claim against the Government where that affidavit is? Why, it is most important to the Department of Justice. That department will say at once: Furnish me with the affidavit if you desire me to prosecute Mr. Ogilvie for perjury; and surely either the Government must pay Mr. Ogilvie that $4,000 or prosecute him for perjury. There is no alternative. the Government refuse to pay the $4,000 on the ground that the conditions of the law had not been complied with, and on the ground necessarily that Mr. Ogilvie's affidavit was a perjury, the Controller is not justified in refusing to go into matters which occurred before he was Controller. The facts having come to his knowledge, he is bound to inquire into the circumstances under which this same man, in the same way, obtained $16,000 from the public and the first the second of the second secon

treasury. If Mr. Ogilvie had intended to defraud the revenue of $4,000 in this particular case, would it not justify the department inquiring into the circumstances by which that same man obtained, shortly before, the sum of $16,000 from the public treasury under a similar affidavit?

HIBBERT CHARLES TUPPER. Although it is not necessary, I cannot refrain from saying one word, which, I think, will expose the very unfair line adopted by the hon, member for Winnipeg with regard to the Controller of Customs. He either listened to the debate which we have had on this matter on two or three occasions. or he did not. In any event, the argument he made to-day was one that could not be pressed by any fair-minded person. He argued that the Controller of Customs had endeavoured to shield this Mr. Boyd from a criminal prosecution and improperly attempted to prevent the law being enforced against him. How does he reconcile such a desire on the part of the Controller of Customs, when it is not disputed that at the outset, on the 30th June, 1894, these instructions were sent by the Controller of Customs to the Department of Justice. After mentioning the inclosure of the file relating to the subject, the Controller goes on to say:

It seems clear that Andrew Boyd, the senior partner of the firm, has been guilty of defrauding the revenue by writing out false invoices, making false declarations, and possible forgery.

With that letter in the possession of the House for over a week—

Mr. MARTIN. That only makes it all the worse.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman from Winnipeg has that sort of mind that he does not hesitate to rise here and say that the member of the Government who gave instructions was anxious to shield Andrew Boyd. That is to say, the Controller could inform the Department of Justice that Andrew Boyd was, in his opinion, guilty of a crime, that he would submit the whole matter for whatever action the Minister of Justice might consider it advisable to take, and at the same time be most anxious to shield Boyd from crime.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—THE MANITOBA SCHOOLS QUESTION.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. McCARTHY. Although we have been discussing the Manitoba school question more or less for the last six or seven days, yet, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we have had any opportunity of considering the question upon its merits. And as, according to the programme of the Government, we will be called upon at an early day—not later, at all events, than January-to receive from their hands a Bill for the carrying out of the remedial order, I think we ought not to separate without affording a full opportunity of having the question discussed and decided as to whether, when that Bill is presented, we will be prepared in this House to enforce that remedial order which the legislature of Manitoba has declined to obey. I propose to draw attention, not merely to the present policy of the Government, but to its policy in connection with this matter from the first. back to 1801 when the Government were first called upon, by a petition presented to them, to veto the legislation of the province; and I have always thought, as I now again repeat, that the one justifiable proceeding of the Government from first to last was the refusal which they then gave to veto the School Bill. It was impossible-regard being had to the history of the school question in Canada, regard being had to the many discussions and debates with reference to the New Brunswick school law, regard being had to the discussion also that took place, if not in this House, at all events, between the Department of Justice and the province of Prince Edward Island-for the Government to veto the law, for it has come to be accepted as the unwritten law that this Government will not interfere, by exercising the power of veto, with any law relating to education which may be passed by any province. I am, therefore, glad to know that in 1891, before the last election, despite the pressure, no doubt, of a very urgent character, which was brought to bear upon the Administration of that day, then led by the late Sir John Macdonald, the Government adhered to the policy which had been accepted by both political parties of this country and refused to interfere with the school law of the province. But, unfortunately, my commendation of the conduct of the Government must end there; for, from that time out, I venture to say that every step taken by them has been an unwise and impolitic step, until their course has, at last, landed us in the condition in which we found ourselves here last weekdisintegration of the Government, disintegration of parties, perhaps, on both sides, at all events, of the party on this side; and the existence of a question of such magnitude and on such a subject that it is calculated to raise issues and feelings which no other question, since confederation, has prominently brought SO to the front. In that report of Council the suggestion was made that if the petitioners of should for the veto the Bill turned out to and the law constitutional power of the proin the vince to pass, the Government here would entertain the question of redressing the grievances of the minority in that province under the clause of the Manitoba constitution. When, in 1892, it was found, after a long and tedious course of litigation, under the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that the law was constitutional, that it did not deprive the minority of any right they were entitled to under the statute, that it was within the power of the province to pass-then, naturally enough, those who had been promised in 1891 that their grievances should be redressed if the event happened, which did happen, were back again at the Council Chamber demanding that the promise made to them should be kept. And what did the Government do? In 1891 there was no hesitation about the power of this Government to pass the remedial order. But no sooner had they started on the course of considering this question of the infringement of the rights of the minority than they were suddenly seized with the consciousness that they might not have the power. Then, for the first time, did it occur to them that the promise which had been made in 1891 was a promise which was impossible of fulfilment. And the proceedings having been commenced with all due solemnity, a committee having been appointed, and a judicial inquiry, or so called judicial inquiry having been instituted then, for the first time, the Government paused. Whether they paused for the purpose of making sure their jurisdiction was well founded, or whether they paused with the hope that the courts would say that they had no jurisdiction, I do not intend at this moment to offer an opinion. But, at all events, it gained delay. The questions were then referred to the court under the Act which had been passed at the preceding session upon the suggestion of Mr. Edward Blake for the purpose of informing the Governor General in Council whether or not His Excellency had power to entertain the appeal, as it was called, and to grant a remedial order, which was the measure of relief that the petitioners sought. The questions having gone from the Supreme Court to the judicial committee were, as we all know, ultimately determined by the judicial committee deciding in favour of the right of the petitioners to have their appeal entertained, and pronouncing that the Governor General in Council had the authority to deal with the matter and to grant the relief by the passage of a remedial order. Now. Sir, that is the first point upon which I desire to state, as emphatically as I possibly can, that I think the Government was wrong. I mean to say, Sir, that that question came before the Government as all other questions come before the Government, to be dealt with, I am not going to say, not in accord with justice, but according justice and according to right and according to what was wise and prudent in the interest of the province and in the interest of the community as a whole. But I utterly deny, and I challenge any person to establish by any kind of reasoning or proof that in acting in that way His Excellency the Governor General and his advisers were a judicial body. The Government of this country has ceased to be a judicial body, or rather, the Government has never, since confederation, been a judicial body. Undoubtedly there was a time when our government, our kings, exercised judicial powers. But, since the abolition of the Star Chamber, that authority has been taken from the Government of England; and. so far as I know, the Government of Canada never possessed it. And, when we have a Supreme Court, it would be an extraordinary proceeding that the Supreme Court, deciding matters judicially, should be passed by, and the political body, the Government should be called upon to pronounce upon questions Therefore, Sir, with judicial authority. this question came before the Government just as would any other question. I do not mean to say that the Government were not at liberty, if they thought fit, to hear both sides. The Government have in many cases, adopted that course. But it does not follow that because the Government, in the exercise of the authority vested in it in any matter, thinks fit or proper to call the party opposing the claim to argue or state his reasons therefor, the Government is acting judicially. If the Government were acting not upon the responsibility of Ministers of the Crown but as judges, then the Government could not be held responsible for any conclusion they might honestly arrive at, no matter how erroneous it might be, any more than a judge upon the bench could be held responsible for the wrong conclusions he reaches-and we all know that our judges do frequently arrive at wrong conclusions. But, Sir, according to that view the Government would have to be perfectly free from all political considerations, they would have to act as our judges act-with a single eye to the judicial office and judicial duty which they had assumed. Now in this case we perfectly well know that that was not the character assumed. Why, Sir, the Minister of Public Works, a short time before the hearing of this appeal, publicly announced at a meeting that unless a remedial order was made, his duty would be to retire from the Government. Now, it is impossible to suppose a judge or any gentleman filling a judicial position, in anticipation of the argument of the case declaring that if the case was not decided in a particular way duty would be plain and clear—to abandon his position.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman know that that has been denied?

Mr. McCARTHY. I have the proof here, and if it is denied, I will be most happy to submit it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You say he stated that if the remedial order was not passed he would retire.

Mr. McCarthy.

Mr. McCARTHY. I did not pretend to use the exact words of the hon. Minister, but I gave the substance of what he said; and I think that the hon. Minister of Public Works, when I quote from his statement, will not say that my recollection of his language on that occasion is not substantially correct. The speech made by the hon. Minister at St. Hyacinthe reported in the Government organs of the 25th February, 1895, was as follows:—

Mr. Ouimet said he was one of those who demanded that justice should be given to the minority. They had taken an appeal to England at their own expense, and had been successful. The appeal of the minority had not only been maintained, but had been solemnly confirmed. The Privy Council had once for all decided that not only had the minority in Manitoba a right to schools of their own choice, but that nobody had a right to deprive the minority of their schools. The course now open to the minority was to demand the re-establishment of the separate schools which they formally enjoyed. Mr. Ouimet stated there was unanimity amongst the members of the Government on this question. A time had been fixed for the advocates of the minority to plead their cause, and to show what remedial legislation should be passed. The Cabinet would be called upon to act in accordance with the judgment of the Privy Council. As soon as the case was heard, a decision would be rendered, and Mr. Ouimet added that if that decision was not in accordance with the constitution, there would be but one thing for them to do, and that was to retire from the Government.

Now, Sir, I think that what I said was substantially true. If the hon, gentleman is quibbling, or desires to quibble, and wishes to state that the decision was not in accordance with the constitution, and did not mean that there should be a remedial order, I would be quite willing to accept the hon. gentleman's statement. But I do not think the hon, gentleman would stand up in this House and say that the constitution did not require of him and his colleagues that a remedial order should So that I am right, I think, in be made. the statement I made that this so-called judicial officer, in anticipation of the argument, announced at a political meeting that if the order was not made, that if the constitution, according to his interpretation of it—and that meant the passage of the order -was not obeyed, then he would retire from the Government, and that was the only course left for him to do. Now, Sir, it is plain that he thought there was a chance that this remedial order could not be enforced, and would be of no effect. No judge who had paid the expenses of an appeal to England-because that is one of the boasts that the hon, gentleman madeno judge who had made such a statement as that, could be permitted to sit upon a cause, and if he did sit there, the conclusion arrived at by him would not, of course, be worth the paper it was written on. It is only fair, however, to say that when I was pressing this point before the Council, the subject. Well, Sir, I am bound to say the I rime Minister, and I think one of his that I heard the Secretary of State, I am colleagues. I am not quite certain but that bound to say that I have read on more than it was the Minister of Justice, said that if I one occasion his utterances on that subwas dealing with the question of their responsibility, I need not press the matter further, because they admitted their full that sense. It is impossible to say, in fairresponsibility for the order which they proposed to make. Therefore, I think it will not be necessary to do more now than just state that, notwithstanding the language used in the statute, which uses the term "appeal," regard being had to the manner in which this so-called appeal was to be prosecuted, it must be treated and looked upon as an application, made like any other application, to the Governor General in Council, with regard to which the Governor General acts upon the advice of his responsible Ministry. And we find the proceedings in accordance with that. port is made to His Excellency, which His Excellency adopts, and if my hon, friends will take the trouble to look at it they will find that this is the ordinary way in which the affairs of our Administration are carried on. The Governor General acts by Order in Council, and all the proceedings in this case were as usual, with the single exception that the gentlemen of the Privy Council chose to call themselves a judicial body, chose to treat the matter as if it was a legal trial; but ultimately they adopted the procedure which is usual in all matters which come before the Council, and which ultimately have to receive the sanction of the Governor General. Now, Sir, the only importance at present to be attached to that is that an effort has been made, in my section of the country, at all events, to disclaim responsibility. I do not think it was so in the province of Quebec. There, glory was taken; there, it was a matter of triumph; there, the Government asked the public to remember that they had passed the remedial order at considerable risk, and that they were entitled to every credit for it. But, up West, the line taken has been different. We had an example of it here the other night from the whip of the party. I heard him make the same statement in the county of Haldimand. There he said that the Governor General had passed on to Manitoba the Order of Her Majesty the Queen, through the Privy Council; the Government had no responsibility whatever. They represented to the people that the Government had to obey the law and constitution, and they had, consequently, passed on the order to Manitoba, and there was no responsibility. The Secretary of State told us the other day that he, at all events -and I allude to it now because it was not in debate, but simply in a discussion that took place on the ministerial explanations -had made his views on that subject perfectly clear to his constituents; that he did not do as the leader of the Opposition had done, observe a judicious silence on ject, and I think I am also bound to add that you can understand his language in ness to the hon, gentleman, that his language does not mean that; but it is equally impossible to say that his language does not mean the reverse. There was no such statement made in Haldimand as was made in Vercheres and in Antigonish, there was no clear and definite promise of remedial legislation. There was a statement of the law and constitution, and the people were told, as we heard here the other night, that neither was the Government, nor the Secretary of State, nor anybody else, responsible for what had been done; that it was cruel to speak of the matter, cruel to hold him to any account; that his duty commenced and ended with passing the order on to the province of Manitoba. Sir, this trouble might have been saved, these difficulties, which are now causing a disruption, the end of which no man in this House is probably able to foresee, might all have been avoided by a little firmness in the begin-I do not mean to say that there ning. should not have been every effort to conciliate, that there should not have been communications with Manitoba, as there ought to be when complaint was made by any section of the community upon a question as to which this Government had authority and jurisdiction. But I do mean to say that if the Government had consulted Manitoba, had invited, as the Government afterwards did with reference to the North-west, a statement from Manitoba of the causes which led to the change of the school law, the matter ought to have ended at that time. Why, Sir, we have had here within recent years a complaint made by the same ecclesiastical authorities with reference to the administration of the school law in the North-west Territories, where they had separate schools. There was a formal complaint and petition, accompanied by all the usual circumstances, and that petition was sent on to Mr. Haultain, the gentleman who administered the affairs of that territory, and his answer having been received, and the Committee of the Privy Council here having investigated it, thought that the answer had disposed of the alleged grievances, which were stated in the petition, and no redress was given to them with regard to the North-west. We had complete power and authority, either to veto their laws or to repeal them; this was not a province, but merely a territory; and yet that was the result of the investigation that was made of the so-called grievances with regard to the separate school system in the North-west Territories. But. Sir, the Governments controlled by the same influence that is controlling still, by the influence of hon. gentlemen opposite, I asked, and it was not what the province who held the pistol to their heads and was entitled to expect. And why was this threatened their destruction, the Government, regardless of the consequences, and sented themselves, said they would deal a session to pass, they must have redress with this matter in such a way as, if posthis coming session, they must insist on sibie, to save themselves the responsibility, that. That was the view which prevailed. but also to enable the minority to have their separate schools re-established in the order was made. The circumstances attending the making of that remedial order have been already adverted to. I will pass over them very briefly: I want to make my statement here complete, or I would not refer to them at all. I ask you, Sir, and this House to remember that the Government which finds delay now such an important matter, a matter that ought to entitle them to credit at the hands of this House, acted with undue precipitation with respect to dealing with the province. Let me give the dates. The judgment of the Privy Council was pronounced on 29th of last January; the order was not made till 2nd February. am informed, and I think I am correctly informed, that it was not until the 19th February that the formal order reached this I may be wrong as to that, for the time seems long, but that is my information; and three days before, the province; was summoned by telegram, on the 16th, so that the petitioners might come here, and to appear ten days afterwards at the bar of this House would have jurisdiction to take justice here, or injustice, whichever you into consideration their case, their hard-may choose to term it, to show cause why ships and their grievances, and deal with a remedial order should not be issued. Ten days is the time allowed, in ordinary suits between parties; but ten days' notice of trial is given with the knowledge that a day has been fixed for trial, and if the case is coming on, the defendant will have notice ten days before. But here the province is summoned, and summoned by telegram, with only ten days' notice, to appear to answer for its legislation on, perhaps, the most important subject within its jurisdiction. Well, Sir, I received instructions on behalf of the province to appear, I think it was on the 24th, the hearing being fixed for the 26th; that was two days before the time fixed for the hearing. I appeared on the 26th, and asked for delay. I asked for delay until the session of the legislature closed. I pointed out that no one was competent, or as competent, at all events, to state to this Government why it was that the legislation had been changed as the Attorney General of the province, who was the head of the department; but he was then engaged in leading the House, the Prime Minister of the province being ill in That indulgence was found to be impossible. I was granted—for I was appointed without any instructions except the remedial order papers—a delay in order that I might communicate, and either go to Winnipeg to get information on the subject, or to get a gentleman to come from Winni-hurry? The hurry was because Mr. Ewart. on the other side, said the minority had to escape the difficulties which then pre- been suffering so long they could not allow The order passed in order that this House might be within its jurisdiction during the province of Manitoba. And so the remedial present session in implementing that order if it became necessary to do so. The order was made, and since then we have had conflicting statements in regard to the effect of the remedial order, and with respect to the responsibility of the Government according to the quarter in which those statements were made. It seems there is another view, a view which certainly had not occurred to me before, in addition to the view put forward by the hon, member for Leeds, that this was merely passing on Her Majesty's order to the province of Manitoba, and it is not a view which is accepted by every one who discusses this question. The other view is that the Government felt they were bound, irrespective of the merits of the case altogether, and without regard to its merits, in disregard, I may say, of its merits, to pass the remedial order in the most ample terms in which it could be passed. granting every demand made by petition, them.

HIBBERT TUPPER. Sir CHARLES Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is the new policy, the last worship; and I trust we shall hear no more about passing on the order to Manitoba, that we shall hear no more about Her Majesty having commanded the Canadian Government, because it is a slander on Her Majesty. Her Majesty does not interfere in England on a matter of this kind, and certainly she does not interfere in Can-The theory is that when they apply here, it is not the duty of the Government to consider the merits of the case, but it is their duty so to open the parliamentary doors that the minority may come here and get remedial legislation.

CHARLES TUPPER. HIBBERT That is your own view.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thought it was accepted, judging by the cheers that came from the Treasury benches.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It was your own argument. I will read you your argument, if you like.

Mr. McCARTHY. I will state my own argument, and therefore it is not necessary to read it. I cannot refer, of course, to what was said in another debate, but I am peg and inform me. But that is not what in the judgment of the House as to whether I have misinterpreted the view of the Government. What I am anxious to do is to try and fix the Government down to some statement; I want to know exactly where they stand, what their view is. Is it merely passing on the order, is it that they were bound to open the parliamentary doors, is it that they considered the merits of the case? Let us know what their position is. The merits of the case were presented on behalf of the minority by my friend, Mr. Ewart, and I suppose he made the best case the circumstances would admit. what was the case that gentleman made, and on which the Privy Council pronounc-ed? First, it was that, according to the treaty which was entered into at the time Manitoba became a part of Canada, there was a guarantee given to the minority that they should have their separate schools. Then there were several statements made that at various times in the history the province, promises had been made by members of various Governments that the separate schools should not be taken from Those latter statements were supthem. ported by certain affidavits, but the affidavits having been read and filed without notice, they were withdrawn sooner than allow an answer by affidavit to be made. so the attidavits which should not have appeared in this blue-book, unfairly appeared in this blue-book which has been circulated all over the country, casting reflection upon my hon. friend for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), and making statements with reference to Mr. Greenway and other These were affidavits which gentlemen. were formally withdrawn at the time of the hearing, and as to which there was no opportunity of making a reply. In printing them here, and circulating them throughout the country for the purpose of damaging men and damaging parties who had no opportunity of answering them, the Government were guilty of a transaction which I wish I could characterize within parliamentary terms. Well, Sir, the case that Mr. Ewart presented was this simple fact as to which there was no possible dispute, and as to which there could be no possible dispute: That separate schools had been established in Manitoba in 1871, and that separate schools had been abolished in 1890. If that constituted a ground for relief, then undoubtedly the case for the petitioners was complete, and, in fact, there was no necessity for argument, and the whole thing was a gigantic farce, because that was the basis on which the hearing of the case was heard. The Privy Council had determined that under the words of the constitution of Manitoba, as contained in the Manitoba Act, the establishment of separate schools subsequent to confederation. and the repeal of that separate school Act. constituted what, for want of a better term, is called a grievance; constituted, at all events, the right to give the minority the power to come to the Privy Council and ask for a reconsideration of the question, and authorized the Government to make a remedial order, which being disobeyed, gives this Parliament jurisdiction to carry out the terms of the remedial order so far as that is within the constitution and jurisdiction of the province. But, Sir, I want first to deal with a matter which has affected a good number of people. It has been determined as a matter of law that the constitution, as worded, and the Manitoba School Act, as drawn, did not guarantee to the minority separate schools. It has been determined that the rights which were guaranteed to the denominations in Manitoba-and it was a right appertaining not merely to the Roman Catholics, but to the Anglicans and Presbyterians and possibly the Methodists-was a right to do as they had been doing at the time that part of Rupert's Land became a province. That was the right, and that is the right alone which is guaranteed now under the highest interpretation of the statute which we have got from the Judicial Committee. Therefore, as a simple question of the construction of the constitution, there is no more to be said about it. But, Sir, I go a long way with those who say: If the constitution by a slip of the pen has omitted to guarantee rights which were intended to be guaranteed by this Parliament, and which were the result of a treaty between the settlers at that time and the authorities here; and because the strict letter of the law does not give that right, would you deny it to the people of the province? Well, I have two observations to make about that. In the first place, when you speak of this as a treaty it must be borne in mind that Rupert's Land had become a part of this Dominion. We had purchased the territory from the Hudson Bay Company. There was no such thing as a treaty acquiring it from a foreign, or even a quasi-foreign authority, and it is erron-eous to speak of it as a treaty at all. What was intended by Her Majesty, and what was proclaimed to the settlers there at that time was that the rights of the individuals inhabiting that part of the country which Canada had acquired should be safeguarded to them, and the right, whatever it may be, is a personal right, differing in that respect altogether from the right that belongs, for instance, to the province of Quebec, by virtue of the treaty which was made at the time of the cession, between the King of France and the Crown of England. What Her Majesty the Queen authorized the Governor General to do here, and what the Governor General proclaimed he would do, and what this country, I venture to say, has done, was to guarantee to the people of that province—the few inhabitants as they were-protection in their rights and their privileges. That was an individual protection, and not one which by any possibility of construction could extend to bind the province for all time. But, Sir, perhaps that view matters little. I am prepared to establish here by the most conclusive authorityand I am glad to know that if I do that I will remove the only cause which moves the Prime Minister of this country to adopt the policy of a remedial order and to promise to introduce a Bill. The Prime Minister is moved simply by the consideration that separate schools were guaranteed as part of the treaty, or part of the bargain made between the inhabitants of the Red River country at that time and the authorities here at Ottawa.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. Speaker, I was McCARTHY. pointing out, when the House rose for recess, that Mr. Ewart, in his presentation of the case on behalf of that portion of the Roman Catholic minority whom he represented, had altogether six grounds. The first ground was the historical one, that there had been a bargain entered into between the inhabitants of the Red River country and the people of Canada, as it then existed, that there should be separate schools, and that that bargain was to be considered as a treaty—as a parliamentary pact, to use the language of the Lord Chancellor—which ought to be given effect to, although it did not appear within the four corners of the Act of Parliament. The other arguments presented by Mr. Ewart-and I do not desire to do him any injustice—I will trouble the House with, beyond mentioning, that when disputes arose with reference to the abolition of the Senate of Manitoba, certain guarantees had been given by the English, and that pledges had been given on behalf of the Liberal party, prior to the time they attained power in Manitoba. These arguments were supported by affidavits, and The other argument was were withdrawn. of a similar character, depending upon an express agreement or promise made or entered into by Mr. Greenway in person with the late Archbishop Taché. This also depended on affidavits, and was withdrawn. I now propose to establish, as I think I can in the most conclusive manner, that there was no bargain between the settlers and the authorities at Ottawa that they should have It is as clear as anything separate schools. can be that, in the disturbances that took place in the Red River district prior to its incorporation in the Dominion, there were two bills of rights, or lists of rights, as they were called. One list of rights, which was prepared, I think, in the month of November preceding the year in which the negotiations took place, I think in 1869, makes no reference at all to separate schools; makes no reference at all to separate schools; original document, which copy was sent it is not asserted by any person that it does. here to the Department of Justice; and a

The second list of rights was prepared by the 40 gentlemen-20 French-Canadian Halfbreeds and 20 English—who were elected and called a provisional assembly. lists of rights were submitted to Sir Donald Smith, the hon. gentleman whose place is beside mine here, and they are to be found in our parliamentary returns. Sir Donald Smith, who was sent with two other delegates from Ottawa, signified, on behalf of this Government-although, of course. he had no authority to bind the Government-what he supposed it would be prepared to do. But, Sir, that list of rights No. 2, which will be found in the sessional papers of the following year, does not contain, I think, nor is it pretended by any person that it does contain, any reference whatever to separate schools. So far there is no dispute. It is admitted on all hands that neither list of rights No. 1 nor list of rights No. 2 made any demand on behalf of the settlers of Red The only de-River for separate schools. mand that was made with reference schools was that a grant of money-$30,000 per annum, I think-should be made towards the support of separate schools so long as that part remained a territory; for at that time it was not supposed that it would be incorporated into a province. A dispute arises as to whether there was a fourth list of rights-unquestionably, there was a third list of rights-because in what is called the fourth list of rights there is a demand for separate schools in paragraph 7; and the whole of this controversy turns on whether or not the fourth list of rights is a genuine document or a spurious document-whether, in point of fact, there was a fourth Bill of Rights, or whether No. 3 was the last and the one which was brought here by the delegates, and on which negotiations place for the settlement of the terms for the admission of Manitoba as a province of the Now, Sir, let me, as briefly as Dominion. I can, give to the House the relation with regard to the fourth list of rights. claimed that that document was in the possession of a gentleman who is still living, a Father Ritchot, and that upon it there were marginal notes made by him as one of the delegates to Ottawa, indicating that that was the document on which the negotiations He was the chief of the had taken place. three negotiators sent from the Red River down to Ottawa to enter into negotiations with the Government here with reference to the admission of that territory as a pro-vince. It is admitted, Sir, that that document is not now to be found. It is claimed. however, that a copy of it was put in at the trial of Lépine, who was tried for high treason, I think, as late as 1874. It is said that Father Ritchot appeared as a witness at that trial and produced the original document, which has been mislaid. But fortunately, it is said, a copy was made of the certified copy of that document was produced before the Privy Council at the argument to which I have referred. Nobody heard of it; though, when I say that, of course, I have to assume, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that those who were at the trial of Lépine heard of it; but it was not generally spoken of or known as a claim that was put forward by any section of the population until 1889, when the agitation with regard to separate schools arose. Then Archbishop Taché produced a copy of this fourth list of rights, which contained a claim for separate schools as they existed in Ontario and Quebec; and he claimed that it was agreed to on the part of the authorities here, and should have been, if it was not actually, incorporated in the Manitoba constitution. That was very promptly controverted; but I desire first to make plain exactly all that was said in favour of, all with reference to there is so-called fourth bill of rights. and think I have recapitulated with perfect fairness all that is said in its favour. Now, the third bill of rights is undoubtedly an authentic document. No one pretends that there was not a third bill of rights; no one pretends that a third bill of rights was not framed by the provisional council of which Riel was the head, composed out of a body of forty, who were elected in the month of March, 1870. Remember, I have told you that bill of rights number two was the first outcome of this council-that is of the whole body of forty, to which it was submitted, and that appears in our own sessional papers. Then there was the other document, this third bill of rights, framed by the provisional government of which Riel was the head and Mr. Bunn was the secretary. There is no doubt whatever that there was this third bill of rights. There is no doubt it was prepared by the provisional government; but the dispute turns on the fact as to whether this third bill of rights was the document handed the delegates sent to Ottawa, or whether the provisional government, of which Riel was the head, had not altered the third bill of rights and made a fourth bill of rights, and that that was the document which was sent here to Ottawa. Let me give the evidence, which appears to me absolutely conclusive, that no such bill of rights as the one denominated "number four" ever existed. First and foremost, the delegates left Winnipeg on the 23rd March. They left with a letter of instructions from Mr. Bunn, the secretary, of a most formal character, giving them their instructions, instructing them that they were entrusted with a bill of rights, and that they had discretion as to some of the articles contained in it, but no discretion as to others. That letter is published in the blue-book containing the argument that took place before the Privy Council, at page 113, and it reads as follows:-

mand a larger than the second of the second

Sir,--The president of the provisional government of Assiniboia in Council appoints you, by these presents, in authority and in delegation—you the Reverend Messieur J. N. Ritchot, in company with John Black, Esquire, and the Hon. A. Scott—in order that you may proceed to Ottawa, Canada, and that there you may place before the Canadian Parliament the list entrusted to you with these presents, said list containing the conditions and propositions under which the people of Assinibola will consent to enter into confederation with the other provinces of Canada.

A TO THE STATE OF

Signed, 22nd day of March, 1870.

By order, THOS. BUNN, Secretary of State.

Then the other document that was referred to in his letter of instructions is still more explicit:

To the Rev. Mons. Joseph N. Ritchot.

Inclosed with this letter, you will receive your commission and a copy of the conditions under which the people of this country will consent to enter the Canadian confederation. You will arrive at Ottawa promptly as possible, and on arrival you will, in company with the Hon. M. A. Scott and the Hon. John Black, enter immediately with the Government of the Dominion into the negotiations which are the subject of your commission.

Please observe that, as regards articles numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 17, 19 and 20, you may, in concert with the other commissioners, exercise your discretion; but you must never forget that, since the entire confidence of the people rests on you, we look to you to do all in your power, in the use of this discretion, to assure to us the rights and liberties which have been until now refused to us.

With reference to the other articles, I am directed to inform you that they are peremptory. I must further notify you that you have not at all the power to bring to a final conclusion any arrangement, that any negotiation conducted by you with the Government of Canada must first receive the sanction of the provisional government.

I have the honour, &c., THOS. BUNN, Secretary of State.

Now, mark the date of this letter, the 22nd of March. Mark the further fact that it was on the 23rd March these delegates left for Ottawa. And the question comes up, what document is referred to here as the document containing the list of articles and propositions upon which Assiniboia, as it was called, was prepared to enter confederation? The first important fact, and it is a historical fact which has never been disputed, is that on the day these delegates left, namely, the 23rd March, this provisional government published a manifesto to the people of Red River stating that delegates had been sent and that the terms and conditions upon which they were authorized to treat were those contained in the bill of rights No. 3. Now, that is a fact which has never been called in question. It is stated and known perfectly well in Winnipeg and it has never been disputed or denied. What the late Archbishop Taché said was that notwithstanding this, the provisional council had altered bill of rights No. 3 and converted it into bill of rights No. 4. If so, it was most extraordinary that the provisional government should have issued a manifesto to the people in which they related that the bill of rights which they sent was the one we now know as bill of rights No. 3. But the matter is settled now beyond all controversy by the English blue-book containing these documents, which was brought down at the time, and which contains correspondence from the then Governor General, Lord Lisgar. In a despatch of 29th April, Sir John Young as he was then, in writing to the Colonial Secretary, adds this posteript to the communication:

I think it is right to forward to Your Lordship a copy of the terms and conditions brought by the delegates of the North-west, which formed the subject of the conference.

On page 130 of the blue-book, it is stated as follows:—

A list of the rights and a list of the terms and conditions referred to in your letter of instruction.

(Signed) THOS. BUNN, Secretary.

To John Black, Esquire, one of the delegates. So, if anything at all is capable of proof, I think it is established, beyond all reasonable controversy, that the document which was brought down, upon which, as His Excellency then informed the Home Government, the conference had taken place, was not the so-called bill of rights No. 4. but the bill of rights No. 3, and that bill of rights contains ne allusion whatever to the question of schools. It will be asked, perhaps, how then came the bill of rights No. 4? I do not think it is difficult to account for. Remember that this so-called provisional ernment was in direct defiance of the authority of the Crown, and when these delegates came to Ottawa, as Father Ritchot afterwards related in his report made in Winnipeg, the Government ostensibly refused—Sir John Macdonald and Sir George Cartier being the gentlemen delegated to speak on behalf of the Government-to treat with these gentlemen as delegates from a provisional government which the Governor General could not allow them to recognize. At the same time, the document was produced, and, of course, was returned amongst the correspondence we find here. And when Father Ritchot went home to Winnipeg, he complained in his report—and it will be found in the blue-book here; for I cited it in. full from a paper called the "New Nation" published at the time-he com-Ottawa, plained that down here in while they declined to treat with him upon the bill of rights which he and his colleagues had brought down, they put a list of rights or so-called list of rights in his hands, which formed, as it were, the basis of the terms upon which this country was prepared to treat with the settlers of the Red River. Upon this the note in Father Ritchot's handwriting appears and explains, as it appears to me reasonably without imputing bad faith or concoction of this document to anybody, which it is not necessary I should do. Then what conclusion are we driven to? That in the three different lists of rights prepared by the people of the Red River, one in November, one in the early part of March, one in the latter part of March—one by the council in November, one by the counc'l of forty and one by the provincial government-no claim was made in reference to the schools except in one, I have forgotten which, that they should have a certain amount of money annually for the support of their schools. We are therefore left in this position—that whatever appears in the Act of Parliament was the free grant or free gift of the people who were negotiating here; it was not the result of any demand, it was not in consequence of any claim; but it was probably suggested here by the same influence, which have from first to last claimed that in all our constitutions of the Nortuwest and wherever we had the power, we should insert not merely a clause of this kind, but also a clause with reference to the dual language. Now, I think that is a fair explanation of it, and the conclusion of it is this-whatever the Act of Parliament gives, and to the extent that the Act of Parliament gives, we are bound to respect it, we are bound to abide by it so long as it is the law of the land. But when it is elaimed on behalf of the minority that they are entitled to get something beyond what the Act of Parliament contains, something that they say ought to have been included, but which through inadvertance was omitted, I think I have shown satisfactorily to any impartial man that the claim utterly and entirely fails and that there is no ground whatever for supposing that they are entitled to anything outside the four corners of the document itself. Sir, intrinsically, it is impossible to imagine that there cculd have been any such claim. One of the paragraphs which these delegates were permitted to treat about, that is to surrender or not to insist upon, is paragraph No. 7. This paragraph No. 7 is the one said to contain the claim to separate schools. But paragraph No. 7 as it reads here, is as follows :-

That a sum of money, equal to 80 cents perhead of the population, shall be paid by the Dominion of Canada to the local legislature until such time.——

And so on. A very natural one to be treated about; a very proper one for negotiation. But if you insert instead of that the clause with reference to the schools, and if you imagine the people there are interested in their schools and separate schools to the extent that has been represented, it is evident that the delegates would not have had any power to abandon it or to escape insisting upon, it. Then, Sir, I come back to the cases that is presented—and I adopt this case.

because I think that it is fitting that I do." And, in the Act Parliament framed should do so. I know of no place where upon that it will be found that care was the claims of the minority have been so taken to let it be made perfectly clear and formally set forth as in this deliberate argument by the counsel; and therefore I take it as the best case that could be put forth on their behalf. But before I pass to the main question I propose to deal with, let me clear up a matter about which I am afraid there is a good deal of misapprehension in the minds of members of this House, or some of them at all events. I do not think that the hearsay that has been so industriously circulated that the action of the Government here was in pursuance of the mandate of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, has been yet entirely cleared away; and that is a point upon which I desire now, with the indulgence of the House, to cite not so much my own view, which is perfectly well known and, perhaps, goes for very little, but the view propounded by the gentleman who argued the case before the Judicial Committee. I will fortify that with the language of the Law Lords who heard the case, and I will add perhaps something that has not yet been brought to the notice of the Canadian Parliament, although I see it was referred to by the Attorney General in the discussion which took place in Manitoba. Now, in the first place, I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, who may perhaps take part in this discussion, will risk his reputation as a lawyer by contending there that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had jurisdiction to give a mandate to the Governor General of this country, or that the Judicial Committee had authority to say what this Parliament should or should not do. Sir, the Judicial Committee merely stood in the place of the Supreme Court of Ca-Their only jurisdiction is derived from the fact that by our own Act of Parliament we authorized the Governor General in Council to submit questions of difficulty either in fact or law for the information of the Government to the Supreme Court of this country. And we gave the right to any person who was interested in the decision of our Supreme Court to carry the case to the Judicial Committee. And it will be remembered, for it has been often cited, that when Mr. Blake made the proposition that such a Bill ought to be passed, Sir John Macdonald took exception to the argument that Mr. Blake presented. He based his objection on the misunderstanding, as it afterwards turned out, that Mr. Blake proposed to substitute the opinion of the court for that of the Privy Council of this country and to remove from the Privy Council its ministerial responsibility. Sir John said: "Believing as I do in responsible government. I will be no party to any system which will lessen the responsibility which ought to be borne by the Government, or allow the courts to say what the Government of this country should or should not taken to let it be made perfectly clear and plain that the questions to be submitted to the court were for the information of the Privy Council. I need not quote the words of Sir John Macdonald, for his statement has been referred to frequently before. But I will read Mr. Blake's expression of opinion upon the same subject when he made his proposition:

I by no means propose to withdraw from the executive its duty; my object is to aid it in the efficient execution of its duty.

Further on in his speech he said:

It is but an enabling proposition; it but empowers the executive to obtain—by a procedure replete with the essential requisites for the production of a sound opinion—the views on legal questions, leaving to the executive so aided the responsibility of final action.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman any more of Mr. Blake's speech there as to the reasons for his action?

Mr. McCARTHY. No; I took this from "Hansard," but I have only the paragraph applicable to this point. Look at the Act of Parliament framed upon that, and it will be found that it declares that questions may put to the Supreme Court information of the Governor in Council. Well, now, questions were put, the Supreme Court answered those questions. parties who were interested appealed from the decision to the Judicial Committee, and that committee said that in some respects the answers of the Supreme Court were erroneous and ought to be corrected, and they corrected them accordingly. then, can it be said that the Judicial Committee, speaking in appeal from the Supreme Court, pronouncing the judgment that the Supreme Court ought to have pronounced, and that alone—that anything that fell from that judicial body could be treated here as a mandate to the Government of this country? Why, Sir, that question never was before the Supreme Court. They were asked whether a grievance had occurred, and whether there was jurisdiction, and the answer is in the affirmative. not denied that we had jurisdiction, but how that jurisdiction was to be exercised, was not before the courts, was not argued, and is not present. How, therefore, could their decision possibly be a binding decision ?how be of any effect at all one way or the other, upon the Government of this country? Sir, I do not think this great Parliament, and the Government which leads this Parliament, have yet come to the position of being obedient to the mandate of any court. I know no court which can command the Governor General of this country. What is done here is done by the Administration of this country in the name of the Crown, in the name of His Excellency the Governor General, who represents the Crown. They are his advisers, but the acts of the Administration is the act of the representative of the Crown. But if there was any possible question about it, that is absolutely set at rest when one reads the discussion that took place before that body. I am really ashamed to occupy the attention of this House with a discussion of what seems to me perfectly clear; but I know that amongst many members with whom I have had the honour of conversing, doubts are entertained, from reading newspapers, and probably newspapers on one side of politics only, where it has been persistently and industriously stated and circulated that the Government here, in order to escape responsibility—I am speaking now of the newspaper argument in their behalf-had merely done what they were obliged to do, and what they had been ordered to do, and such as all loyal and good subjects ought to have done. For a moment, however, I will trespass upon the time of the House by referring to the argument before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Mr. Blake was the leading counsel in that argument. and, at the very beginning of his statement, which will be found on page 26 of the Manitoba School case, the Lord Chancellor interrogated him as to what was the meaning of the appeal, what were the facts involved in it, and Mr. Blake very frankly and very properly answered in this wise:

The LORD CHANCELLOR. It is not before us, what should be declared, is it?

Mr. BLAKE. No; what is before Your Lordships is, whether there is a case for appeal.

The LORD CHANCELLOR. What is before us is the functions of the Governor General.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, and not the methods in which he shall exercise them—not the discretion which he shall use, but whether a case has arisen on the facts on which he has jurisdiction to intervene. That is all that is before Your Lordships.

Mr. Blake repeatedly referred to it again. I will trespass upon the House by reading one or two references more from Mr. Blake, on page 32. Mr. Blake is here quoting from the minute made by the Council, of which Sir John Thompson was chairman, and he says:

Your Lordships will observe the phrase "at present."

He is speaking of the Minute of Council in which this language is used:

The application comes before Your Excellency in a manner differing from applications which are ordinarily made under the constitution to Your Excellency in Council. In the opinion of the sub-committee, the application is not to be dealt with at present as a matter of political character or involving political action on the part of Your Excellency's advisers.

What does Mr. Blake say to that?

Your Lordships will observe the phrase "at present." On the preliminary question, which is a question whether there are grounds to entertain an appeal, the committee thought they were going to act judicially, but, very properly, they added the words "at present," because it is quite obvious that when they enter upon the sphere of action of entertaining an appeal, their functions must be political, of expediency and of discretion, just as much as the functions which, in the last resort upon their recommendation, are assigned to the Parliament of Canada itself, of course, a political body.

How can anything be plainer than that, so far as Mr. Blake's opinion goes, the gentleman who is acting on behalf of the Roman Catholic minority that is referred to repeatedly all through the argument. For instance, at page 37, Lord Shand says:

If the appeal is before the Governor, would he be entitled to take political considerations into view?

Mr. BLAKE. Doubtless.

Lord SHAND. That is what you get into if your appeal is a successful appeal?

Mr. BLAKE. I should say so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You call that obiter, I suppose?

McCARTHY. McCARTHY. No, not obiter, be-the courts there are ascertaining cause what they have got to decide. Counsel representing them says: With these questions Your Lordships are not to be troubl-If the counsel representing them says to the court, We do not want information upon that point, how can it be claimed that the court is giving an opinion which my hon, friends here are bound to obey? It is a concession on the part of the appellant counsel, that upon these questions, which, ir themselves, are plain enough, there is uo jurisdiction for the Judicial Committee, any more than there was for the Supreme Court of Canada, to determine the responsibility of the Governor General in Council. Lord Watson says, at page 39:

I suppose we are not asked to give any such finding or opinion as would tie the Governor General to follow any recommendation of the Canadian Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think Your Lordships are. I do not like to make an absolute concession at this time.

Lord WATSON. I rather took it from your statement that we are in a position in which we ought not to do that.

Mr. BLAKE. I think Your Lordships are not bound to go further.

Lord WATSON. I suppose we are bound to give him advice in this appeal. He has asked nothing else but advice throughout. He has not asked for a political decision which shall fetter him in any way.

Mr. BLAKE. It could not be. The law which creates the tribunal for the purpose of giving advice, expressly states that in their political capacity they are not bound by that advice.

That is the law to which I referred a mouent ago. The Lord Chancellor, at page 62, says:

The question seems to me to be this: If you are right in saying that the abolition of a system of denominational education which was created by a post-union legislation, is within the 2nd section of the Manitoba Act and the 3rd subsection of the other, if it apply, then you say there is a case for the jurisdiction of the Governor General, and that is all we have to decide.

Mr. BLAKE. That is all your Lordships have to decide. What remedy he shall propose to apply is quite a different thing.

At page 87, Lord Shand intervened:

There must be a marked difference, with reference to anything interfering with what was the state of matters at the union, and anything interfering with the state of matters which had been changed by the legislature after the union. In the one case it would be bad in point of law and 'ultra vires," in the other you can destroy the right, but that destruction of the right is liable to appeal.

Mr. BLAKE. That is precisely the line which I am about to adopt.

Lord WATSON. It may be qualified or abrogated.

Mr. BLAKE. The case does not arise, if there are privileges which have not been broken. I suggest that the provision of the enabling clause, with subsection 1, is absolutely complete in itself.

That is the first clause, which restrained the legislature from making laws which would deprive any religious denomination, or any class of persons, of the rights which they possessed at the time of the union.

It requires in its nature no supplement of any kind—no appeal to a political executive tribunal, as the Privy Council of Canada—no appeal to a legislative tribunal, as the Parliament of Canada, is wanted. Nothing exists for the executive tribunal or for the legislative tribunal to operate upon. No question of expediency, no question of discretion arises. The course of the law is all, and it is enough. That is the whole theory.

Again, at page 88, I find:

The appeal is to a political and non-judicial tribunal.

And it goes on to show how absurd it would be to suppose that the appeal was to anybody except a non-judicial tribunal. I now will mention Mr. Blake's references, on page 193:

Lord WATSON. I apprehend that the appeal to the Governor is an appeal to the Governor's discretion. It is a political administrative appeal, and not a judicial appeal in any proper sense of the term, and in the same way, after he has decided, the same latitude of discretion is given to the Dominion Parliament. They may legislate or not, as they think fit.

Mr. BLAKE. Only within the limits of his discretion; they cannot go beyond.

The closing words of his reply may be referred to with advantage. At page 266 will be found his last words:

Mr. BLAKE. What we ask your Lordship. is, What the privileges were, and how far they have been infringed; and then we propose to ask the Governor General to determine how far he will go. I do not ask your Lordship to make any suggestion as to his action, which, I conceive, from the beginning is political. He is to be instructed as to the law; and then his action and the action of the Parliament will carry the thing out.

There is no doubt at all that the instruction or direction was as to the question of law. I will come in a moment to the questions that were asked, and we will find to what extent the Judicial Committee has power to go, and then I will allow the hon. gentleman who may follow me to seek, if he likes, shelter under the direction of the Judicial Committee, if he thinks that argument will avail him. I call attention now to what Mr. Ewart said, at page 180. Mr. Ewart is asked this question by Lord Watson:

Lord WATSON. The power given of appeal to the Government, and upon request by the Government to the Legislature of Canada, seems to be wholly discretionary in both.

Mr. EWART. No doubt.

My hon, friend the Minister of Justice will perhaps endeavour to reconcile a mandatory order with this statement of the law, which say it is discretionary. I leave that for the hon, gentleman to do. Lord Watson then said:

Lord WATSON. Both in the Government and in the Legislature.

Mr. EWART. Yes.

At page 183, Mr. Ewart says:

Before closing, I would like to say a word or two as to what we are seeking. As it has been already remarked, we are not asking for any declaration as to the extent of the relief to be given by the Governor General.

Although it was not asked, we are now told it was ordered.

We merely ask that it should be held that he has jurisdiction to hear our prayer and to grant us some relief, if he thinks proper to do so.

One or two extracts from the opinion of the Law Lords during the course of the argument. At page 121, to which I have not referred, Lord Watson makes this emphatic declaration. Mr. Haldane's argument was that this clause applied to clause No. 1, that the right of appeal only existed where clause No. 1, which was prohibition, had been violated. The argument on the other side was that clause No. 1 was complete in itself; that clause No. 1 said it could not be done, but it was done; the law was all-powerful to give redress and afford relief. The clause under consideration could not be held applicable to that, and in order to give a fair and reasonable meaning it must be held to apply to some other part of the constitution.

Lord WATSON. I am prepared to advise the Governor General and decide on the meaning of this clause, but I am not prepared to relieve him of the duty of considering how far he ought to interfere.

Lord Watson, at page 180, said:

Lord WATSON. The power given of appeal to the Government, and, upon request by the Government to the legislature of Canada, seems to be wholly discretionary in both.

I think I read this quotation before in connection with Mr. Ewart. Mr. Ewart said, "No doubt." At pages 258-59, Lord Macnaghten made these observations:

Lord MACNAGHTEN. We are a judicial body, and he is not sitting as a judicial body.

The learned judge seemed to have anticipated the argument which might possibly be made.

Mr. HALDANE. There come in those considerations which I will not venture to repeat.

Lord MACNAGHTEN. He is to take into consideration many things which we have not to.

Then the Lord Chancellor interrupts.

The LORD CHANCELLOR. He cannot do anything himself. At the last resort the only person or body who can do anything more are the Parliament of Canada, who are certainly not under legal compulsion to act, and certainly would not act unless they conceived there was some substantial ground for it.

Mr. HALDANE. Certainly not.

I think I have read opinions expressed by Lord Watson, Lord Shand and Lord Macnaghten, and the Lord Chancellor in two or three places, though not in all the places in which he made remarks. So far as I have gone, if I am not misrepresenting all that occurred, if I am not citing passages without their appropriate context, which would lead to a different conclusion, every hon, member must realize that beyond all question it cannot be said that in anything the Government were doing they were acting under compulsion or in obedience to any mandatory order. Let me now submit the questions which were asked, and on which this jurisdiction was founded. Hon. members will not find in this list of questions submitted Supreme Court of Canada, and which afterwards came before the Judicial Committee, one solitary word of comfort for the case I am now anticipating. There is not a question here which in the slightest degree gives countenance to it. There are six questions. No. 1 was:

(1.) Is the appeal referred to in the memorials and petitions stated in and made part of the case and asserted thereby, such an appeal as is admissible by subsection 3 of section 93 of the British North America Act of 1867, or by subsection 2 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, 33 Victoria (1870), chapter 3, (Canada)?

That was decided, as we know, in this wise, that the appeal was not well founded under the British North America Act, but that it was well founded under the Manitoba Act. The second question was:

(2.) Are the grounds set forth in the petitions and memorials such as may be the subject of an appeal under the authority of the subsections above referred to, or either of them?

The answer was, Yes. In other words, that schools gives the right of appeal. It was a cause, or in language with which I am more familiar, it was a cause of action. The answer to the third question is:

That the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Barrett against the city of Winnipeg, and Logan against the city of Winnipeg, does not dispose of nor conclude, the application for redress based on the contention that the rights of the Roman Catholic minority which accrued to them after the union under the statutes of the province have been interfered with by the two statutes of 1890 complained of in the said petitions and memorials.

The answer was, therefore, that the decisions in the cases of Logan and Barrett, did not conclude or determine the complaint which is made now. It was not pretended it did. All that Logan and Barrett determines was that the Act of 1890 was intra vires, that the legislature had the power to pass it, and the question which now arises is of quite a different character. The fourth question I have dealt with because it is included in question No. 1, and merely repeated. The fifth question was:

Has His Excellency the Governor General in Council power to make the declarations or remedial orders?

Has His Excellency "power." The question is not: Is he bound to make the declarations, but has he power to make them. In other words, has he the authority to make these declarations.

(5.) Has His Excellency the Governor General in Council power to make the declarations or remedial orders which are asked for in the said memorials or petitions, assuming the material facts to be stated as therein, or has His Excellency the Governor General in Council any other jurisdiction in the premises?

The answer to that question was, that His Excellency the Governor General had the power, and I will read the answer in detail:

(5.) Answer to the fifth question—That the Governor General in Council has jurisdiction and the appeal is well founded, but that the particular course to be pursued must be determined by the authorities to whom it has been committed by the statute; that the general character of the steps to be taken is sufficiently defined by subsection 3 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act of 1870.

These answers are all that we are bound by, and we are not bound by them, according to the opinion of Sir John Macdonald and Mr. Blake, which was, that this was only for the information of the Governor in Council. Speaking technically, and speaking strictly, of course they were not binding upon the Government, and if they were not binding upon the Government, of course they cannot be binding upon Parliament. Many people think that the two judgments of the the post union establishment of separate Judicial Committee cannot be reconciled. schools and the abrogation of separate For my part, I am able to see the distinction and can realize how the Law Lords arrived at the conclusions they did. I do not attempt to set up my authority or my opinion against the decision of the highest court in the realm. Two observations are to be made with regard to the answer to question One is, that their Lordships have gone beyond the question, and to the extent which they have gone beyond the question, if it was at all important, which I do not think it is, it is not binding in any sense. Let me see if I am not right in that. The two questions are asked with reference to jurisdiction, and therefore if their Lordships had gone on beyond the simple which would have been quite sufficient by the word "yes," it is simply something that their Lordships were not invited to give their opinion upon, and of course Government would not be bound in any sense to follow it. But what their Lordships did was to say; That the Governor General in Council has jurisdiction and the appeal is well founded, but the particular course to be pursued must be determined by the authorities. That is, by the Governor in Council, to whom it has been referred by the statute. Then they go on to say, which is a mere obiter, and which after all does not add to whit we know, and does not take from it in the slightest degree:

That the general character of the steps to be taken is sufficiently defined by subsection 3 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act of 1870.

That is the judgment, and now let me come to the reasons for the judgment. When their Lordships were dealing with this matter in the judgment (and that is what we heard so much of) their Lordships say this:

For the reasons which have been given, their Lordships are of opinion that the second subsection of section 22 of the Manitoba Act is the governing enactment.

In other words, the British North America Act does not apply:

And that the appeal to the Governor General in Council was admissible by virtue of that enactment, on the ground set forth in the memorials and petitions, inasmuch as the Acts of 1890 affected rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority in relation to education within the meaning of that subsection.

No person disputes that, at this date at all events. Whatever controversy there may have been as to whether there was an appeal upon these subsections before, this decision has now set at rest, and it is completely and absolutely concluded by this judgment. Their Lordships go on:

The further question is submitted, whether the Governor General in Council has power to make the declarations or remedial orders asked for in the memorials or petitions, or has any other jurisdiction in the premises. Their lordships have decided that the Governor General in Council has jurisdiction, and that the appeal is well founded, but the particular course to be pursued must be determined by the authorities to whom it has been committed by this statute. It is not fair for this tribunal to intimate the precise steps to be taken.

Perhaps my hon, friend will base an argument, because they say the "precise" steps to be taken, but I point out to the House, that we did not ask what precise steps should be taken. What we asked was: Has the Government jurisdiction to entertain this appeal? To put it in plain language so that every one can understand it, what we asked was: Was the repeal of the Act of 1871, (which was passed after the union), by the Act of 1890, a deprivation of the rights which the Roman Catholic minority then enjoyed which gives them the right to come here and complain. These were the two questions and they exhaust the whole subject. Their Lordships say:

Their general character is sufficiently defined by the third subsection of section 22 of the Manitoba Act.

Negatively their Lordships add what their Lordships are not called upon to add:

It is certainly not essential that the statutes repealed by the Act of 1890 should be re-enacted or that the precise provisions of those statutes should again be made law. The system of education embodied in the Acts of 1890, no doubt, commends itself to, and adequately supplies the wants of the great majority of the inhabitants of the province. All legitimate ground of complaint would be removed if that system were supplemented by provisions which would remove the grievance upon which the appeal is founded, and were modified so far as might be necessary to give effect to these provisions.

There is the whole of it, and that is perfeetly true. That statement is an opinion, and a very correct opinion. If this petition was to be entertained, if the order was to be made, their Lordships intimated, just for what it was worth, that the order need not require the repeal of the Acts of 1890 and the re-enactment of the Acts of 1871, but that all legitimate causes of complaint would be removed if a statute or statutes were passed adapted to and grafted upon the Public School Act of 1890, which would practically restore to the Catholics the rights they had enjoyed prior to that enactment. Now, Sir, it certainly will not be argued by any person who cares at all for his standing in the community as a professional man, that there is anything in this that is mandatory or compulsory—that there was not the most complete and ample discretion to be exercised on the part of His Excellency's advisers-that they might have gone so far, or might have gone the whole length, as they have done, or might have dismissed the petition and said, All things considered. there is no sufficient ground to call upon us to interfere. For, Sir, the position of the Governor General is this: He has to act before this Parliament can be called upon to act; he is interposed between the local legislature and the Dominion Parliament. I can quote the language of the Law Lords to that arena, the Governor General must have passed upon the question; so that there was not to be a direct appeal from the local legislature to the Dominion Parliament. The Governor General in Council, upon his responsibility, was to investigate the claim for redress put forward in the petition, and unless he saw sufficient cause, this Parliament was not to have any jurisdiction to intervene. Now, Sir, Mr. Christopher Robinson is a gentleman of whom I am sure my hon. friend has the highest opinion as a professional man, and we have Mr. Christopher Robinson's opinion, obtained by the Autorney General of Manitoba, on this very question. It was stated on the platform in Haldimand -in an election campaign it is not to be expected that the imagination will be kept within ordinary bounds-that Mr. Christopher Robinson had given an opinion that the Governor General in Council was bound to pass the remedial order. In the Winnipeg 'Tribune," I find in Mr. Sifton's speech the opinion of Mr. Robinson set forth. He is asked the question: Whether the Governor General's determination upon the application or appeal was not a question of political policy, and whether he was bound to make an order by anything called for either by the statute or by the judgment of the Judicial Committee. Mr. Robinson's opinion is as follows :-

The restoration of the privileges of Roman Catholics in Manitoba is undoubtedly left open by the judgment, in the sense that it is entirely in the discretion, both of the Governor General in Council and of the Dominion Parliament, to what extent, if at all, they will act upon the appeal or upon the Order in Council, respectively, in affording a remedy.

It cannot, I think, be said that the mere fact of right of the Roman Catholic or Protestant minority in relation to education having been affected by provincial legislation, entitles them, in every case and under all circumstances, to the restoration of such right, or to any relief. Their right is to appeal, but the result of such appeal must depend, as I have said, upon the judgment of the Governor General in Council and of the Dominion Parliament, whose course would no doubt be determnined by a sense of justice and right, and by a due regard to the letter and spirit of the constitution, in view of all the surrounding facts and circumstances in each particular case.

The expressions of opinion of the Judicial Committee in this matter are in no legal sense binding upon the members of the Dominion Government, or of the Parliament of Canada, so far as any action to be taken by either is concerned.

Both are at liberty to exercise their own discretion, and not the less because it is declared that a grievance exists. As I understand the judgment, it cannot be said, strictly speaking, to decide more than that the appeal will lie.

That is all, and that is as far as I am willing to go. It is quite sufficient, course, to give the jurisdiction to the Governor General in Council, and quite sufficient if the hon, gentlemen on the treasury benches are prepared to accept the responsibility of their action. I am only arguing any assumption that they were ordered to do what they have done. Frankly, if they had passed the order, deliberately accepting the responsibility of it, I would have nothing more to say in regard to that. I do not pretend that it was not open to them to pass the order; and I could not challenge the propriety of their action if they had been acting judicially, and had been ordered by a higher power to do what they have done. Now, in what way should this question have been viewed by the Governor General in Council? The province had exclusive power in educational matters. It had the right to pass the School Act of 1871, and it had the right to repeal that Act, as it did repeal it, by the School Act of 1890. That is perfectly valid law; and until repealed by the Parliament of Canada, so far as the Parliament of Canada has power, or until repealed by the local legislature, that law stands; there is no doubt about that. When the minority appealed here, what consideration should have actuated the Privy Council of this country, upon whom the high and responsible duty was cast of in-Was it. Sir. vestigating this question? simply that separate schools had been established, and that separate schools had been abolished? If so, why all this argument? Why these four days of discussion? Because that statement could not be denied -separate schools had been established and separate schools had been abolished. that all? Why cite, as Mr. Ewart did, the fictitious bill of rights No. 4? Why try to prove that my hon, friend from Winnipeg had gone into some county and pledged his government that they would not abolish separate schools? Why try to prove that Mr. Greenway had visited Archbishop Taché and entered into a compact with His Grace that if he got the support of the Roman stand by separate Catholics he would What is all that for if the simple statement that separate schools had existed and that separate schools had been abolished made it incumbent upon the Governor General in Council to re-establish them? Sir, I scout any such proposition; it cannot be accepted by any person. But, Sir, I will venture to point out, and prove conclusively, that there was no other principle. speaking now as if this were a judicial body. I am not going to make charges of bad faith or corruption-I am speaking, of course, in the broadest sense of the term-against the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches. I am assuming that they were actuated by proper motives, and not by the mere counting of party noses, and by the considera-tion of what would best suit party exi-gencies; and I venture to say that if you read Mr. Ewart's argument from beginning to end, you will not find in it one word that will justify this Council or this Parliament in over-riding the will of the local legislature and re-establishing separate schools that they cannot shelter themselves under in Manitoba. When this question came, in 1890, before the province, what was the proper ground for the province to consider? That system of schools has been in force for nineteen or twenty years. There had been separate schools for the Catholic and the Protestants, and there were the results to be found from this system—results and open, results well known throughout the whole of Winnipeg and the And it is because the results of province. that system have been absolutely and utterly disastrous, because there was not, as I believe, one solitary soul ever emerged from a separate school emerged from his original position, because illiteracy prevailed from beginning to end of them. Because the public money was wasted which the local legislature were entrusted with to provide for the education of the people, because the object of a school system was not attained, that the legislature, after due and careful consideration, decided that what should be done was to establish a system That was of public and national schools. the ground upon which their decision was based. That ground was frequently established, and has never been contravened. Not one word will be found in the argument presented, and upon which the Council acted, not one word will be found in the remedial order to show that the question ever entered the consideration of hon. gentlemen; but they, in haste, as if it were a matter of no consequence whatever, laid a mandatory order, commanding a great province, not very fully represented in this House, and represented by gentlemen who do not seem to care very much what becomes of the province—they are being wak-ened up, I am glad to see; the hon. Minister near me has been called upon to hand in his resignation.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what you want.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend seems always to dread that above everything else. He never dreads anything but that.

An hon. MEMBER. That remark does not come in very gracefully from you.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does it not? Here is a province with six representatives in this House.

Mr. DALY. Quite capable of looking after themselves and the interests of their province.

Mr. McCARTHY. We will see about that. In the meantime, I draw attention to the fact that the province is but a small one, so far as numerical representation goes; but I venture to say the hopes of this country depend upon Manitoba and the North-west, and you are disturbing it; you are interfering with Manitoba

Mr. DALY. Who?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not speaking of my hon. friend, but of the interfering by this remedial order. You are interfering with Manitoba, you are oppressing, you are attempting to coerce Manitoba, and you will yet live to rue the day when you attempted to trample upon the rights of a province without cause, without any ground, without consideration or investigation. It appears that of the public money granted to Roman Catholic schools, there was no audit, no account, and the same system was to be restored under the remedial order.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). No.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman has not read it or he would not say that. The remedial order requires that system to be restored, and I will refer to it in a moment if the hon. gentleman doubts it. Under that system, public moneys were distributed to schools which were not kept open more than a day or two in the week; and by some hocus pocus, which I am not able to fathom or understand, it went to Roman Catholic and Protestant teachers in the ratio of $349 to Roman Catholics against $170 to Protestants, although it should have been distributed on an equal basis. these schools, which were supposed to be kept open, taught by Roman Catholic priests, were kept open a day or two here or there, and the money went to the maintenance of the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. GILLIES. Where does that appear?

Mr. McCARTHY. In the statement of Mr Sifton.

Mr. GILLIES. That is not law.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is fact.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There was an electoral campaign on where Mr. Sifton made these statements.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not know what my hon, friend did in the election campaign.

Mr. BERGIN. You know what you did yourself.

Mr. McCARTHY. I challenge my hon. friend to show that Mr. Sifton made any statement on any platform from which he spoke in Haldimand or Ontario which was not based on fact.

Mr. TISDALE. They were contradicted, every one of them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I challenge my hon. friend to produce a single proof of his statements.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is a pretty barren kind of challenge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You made the statements.

Mr. McCARTHY. I gave the hon. gentleman my authority. I suppose that the head of the Education Department ought to be an authority?

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman know that a gentleman in the other House denied the whole of these charges?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not at liberty to refer to what took place in the other House.

Mr. BERGERON. It is published in the newspapers.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have made my statements, and if the commission is issued. which the local government invites, I have no doubt they will be proved up to the hilt. Why does the Government not accept the challenge which the local government have thrown down in answer to their remedial order? The Manitoba Government say they will facilitate an investigation, but this Government will none of it. The challenge is not accepted, and no attempt is to be made to see whether the charge is or is not true. There is another cause which renders Manitoba a province where it is almost impossible to support a system of separate The province of Manitoba is as large as the province of New Brunswick, and larger than Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island taken together. It has not yet a population of 200,000. It had at this time a population of about 150,000 scattered over the province. It is a country, to use Mr. Sifton's own statement, of magnificent distances. is a country in which the people are sparsely settled, and I give one more statement on the authority of Mr. Sifton. There are now in Manitoba, 884 schools in operation, as they call it, according to the last returns.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are those inclusive of the schools supported by voluntary subscription?

Mr. HUGHES. Do they include the separate schools?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not know whether they include separate schools or not, but I will give the number of separate schools, which does not materially increase or dim-The number of separate schools now is only thirty eight, and probably those are not included. I suppose these 884 schools are the public schools. Now, it was proposed by the Attorney General himself to with-draw the grant of public money from schools in which there is not an average attendance of seven; but upon investigation it appears that if that enactment was made, it would deprive no less than 150 schools of these 884 of a share of the public grant, and virtually close them up. Now, if you separate and divide in a country like that, you make it almost impossible to educate the people at all. Why, with the public schools, in 150 of which there is not actually an average attendance of seven But you are to divide them, you are to separate them, you are to re-enact contribute to a Catholic school, and that no Catholic shall pay a tax to a Protestant school, in order to advance the educational the of people of Manitoba. These are considerations, I think, that ought to weigh with this Parliament and ought to have weighed with the Governor in Council. The cost of the schools, of course, is The scattered nature of the very great. population increases the per capita expenditure upon the schools. Are these considerations that should have weighed with the advisers of His Excellency? Were they taken into account? Let me give the population as divided between Roman Catholics and Protestants. That is a consideration. I do not put it on the ground that the minority is very small and that the right which would be granted to a larger minority this smaller minority are not entitled to. But I put it upon the plain, practical ground that with a small Catholic population and a proportionately large number of Protestants, the policy of separating the two in educational matters could not be of advantage to either section of the population. For this is not merely a question of Catholic or Protestant. Even in this province, if you divide a school section—and perhaps the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) will be able to back me up'in that statement-and make a separate school and public school, and you must enhance the cost of education and make it less efficient.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that why you are in favour of separate schools?

Mr. McCARTHY. When the hon. gentleman asks me something sensible. I will answer him. In 1871, the total population of Manitoba was 12,000, of whom about 10,000 half-breeds-5,000 French and 5,000 Scotch half-breeds—and the other 2,000 were the pioneers who had gone in there to gain such advantages as early settlers may look for. In 1881, when the first census was taken, the population had increased to nearly 66,-000, of who 12,000 were Catholics. In 1885 the population was 108,000, the Catholics being 14,000, or 13 per cent. They were over 50 per cent in 1877, they were 18 per cent in 1881, 13 per cent in 1885, and in 1891, at the last census, there were 20,000 Roman Catholics out of a population of 152,000, making the same proportion as before-13 per cent. The only separation of half-breeds from the Quebec French was made in 1885, when the number of halfbreeds was shown to be 4.369. I see it now stated that the half-breeds are practically extinct. I do not give that on any authority, and I do not know that it is correct. Compare the figures I have given with those of the other provinces, where we get on fairly well without the separate schools. In British Columbia the Roman Catholics are 21 per cent of the population. They have no separate schools. In New Brunswick, about the law which says that no Protestant shall which we had so much trouble in the times gone by, there are no separate schools. There are little infractions of the law permitted, I am told, and they enable the people to get on without difficulty

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes; I have heard that there are little infractions of the law; but I do not know. If you will trust the local legislatures and not mandate them and not command them, you will find the people settle down very well. But if you attempt to pass remedial orders, you will find your Government disintegrated and crises continuous, and perhaps have to ask another six months to arrange matters without the time being given you for that purpose. In New Brunswick, the Catholics are 36 per cent of the population; in Nova Scotia they are 27 per cent; and in Prince Edward Island they are 43 per cent. And Prince Edward Island hard, as we remember, when the present hon, member for Queen's Davies) was Premier of the local administration, for the right to manage the schools, and against the principle of denominational or church schools. Looking at these figures, one is at a loss to understand how it is that this 13 per cent of the population of this province of Manitoba—who are by no means unanimous—must have separate schools or this confederation is to be torn asunder, the Dominion is to be shaken to its centre. Unless these 20,000 Roman Catholics are to have separate schools managed by themselves under their ecclesiastical authorities, the life of this Dominion of Canada is not worth forty-eight hours' purchase. That is the story we are told. It seems incredible; it seems strange to imagine that we are standing upon so insecure a foundation. Some of these reasons—I will not say all—were presented to the Privy Council. All of them would have been heard if the Privy Council had granted reasonable delay. Many of them, no doubt, the Minister representing Manitoba has urged upon his colleagues. And against these reasons not one argument was urged on behalf of the Roman Catholic minority who claimed the re-establishment of Roman Catholic separate schools. But the Roman Catholics are not unanimous in that claim. A gentleman appeared before the Council who came all the way from Winnipeg to speak on behalf of himself and other Roman Catholics who differed from those who wanted separate schools. He said, in substance, that, having to travel through the province in the course of his occupation, he had ascertained that these schools were most inefficient, that there was not a master, except in Winnipeg possibly, that understood a word of the English language; that he became convinced years and years ago that the separate school system was not giving the Roman Catholic children of the province the chances they were entitled to, and for his part he was in favour of the public school system; that have satisfied those hon. gentlemen open his daughter, although a perfectly good Catholic, was a teacher in one of the public schools, and he himself was one of the school trustees in the city of Winnipeg.

HIBBERT CHARLES TUPPER. He was condemned by a resolution of a public meeting, a Catholic meeting.

Mr. McCARTHY. Undoubtedly. I do not think there is any difficulty in the priests getting up a meeting of that kind. But my hon. friend will not contradict what I said, that he was elected as school trustee in a Catholic ward, and that his daughter was engaged as teacher in one of the schools.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken, it is not an exclusively Catholic ward.

Mr. McCARTHY. I understood that the ward in which Mr. O'Donoghue lived, was a Catholic ward.

Mr. MARTIN. There are a good number of Roman Catholics there, but I do not think it can be called a Catholic ward.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the hon. gentleman say what other Roman Catholics Mr. O'Donoghue came down here to represent?

My hon. friend has Mr. McCARTHY. asked me something that I know nothing about.

Mr. DEVLIN. Can he give one name?

Mr. McCARTHY. I know nothing about Mr. O'Donoghue more than that he came here desiring to represent himself, he being a Roman Catholic, and said that he was asked to represent others.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The best proof that the hon. gentleman knows nothing about him, is that he accepts his statement.

Mr. BERGERON. Does he know how to read?

Mr. McCARTHY. I have just stated what took place, and I leave hon. gentlemen to draw their own conclusions. Certainly, he did not come down here, and run the risk of the odium that he has had to undergo. without having a good deal of moral courage, at all events, and, perhaps, more than is possessed by those who conveniently assail him behind his back.

Mr. DEVLIN. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to imagine for a moment that I was assailing him.

Mr. McCARTHY. I was not alluding to the hon. gentleman, I was alluding to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière). Now, I have reached this conclusion, and I ask the House to follow me, that, under the circumstances, this remedial order ought not to have been made. I have endeavourto give my reasons why should not have been made.

to conviction, that certainly there was no compulsion on the part of the executive. and that it was a matter wholly within their political discretion, and when I use the word "political" I do not use it in the low sense in which the word politics may be used. I use it in the highest sense, in the light in which it was before the executive. What was before the executive was this: In the interest of this province, whose educational system they were asked to interfere with, ought they to act? The province is: If the schools are not administered as nonclothed with authority in this matter, and has thought it wise to establish this national system of schools; ought the executive, who has the power, to interfere with the province? I submit that such interference could only be based upon the establishment of the fact that the system was incompatible with the object the province wished to attain, namely, the educational advancement of its people. But it will be not permit them to attend. said, no doubt, that the gross injustice of this system calls for relief, that justice to the minority, of which we hear so much, required the interference of this parliamentary body. Now, I want to know in what that injustice consisted? It consisted in the fact that certainly they had a better system of education, so far as secular education goes, than they had before. It will not be denied that the former system was inefficient, that in a sparse Roman Catholic population it must always be inefficient—I am speaking within reasonable limits; and that so far as education goes. all the people who availed themselves of the public school system, were advantaged by the change. Now, I do not think that will be questioned. But it is said, it was stated across the Chamber, and I may, perhaps, refer to it, that it was robbery—and I was called the accomplice of robbersam not sure but that I was called a robber myself-because this system enabled the majority to tax the minority for the support of the public schools. Now, let us consider, for a moment, what right has the state to tax for educational purposes at all. It is quite true, as has been argued. that education belongs to the parent, and when the state intervenes it is because the parent has failed to perform his duty, and because the interests of the state, and of a democracy such as this, all depend upon the people being educated. That is the sole ground upon which there is any interference by the state in the subject of education; and the state does not do its duty, does not discharge its obligations to the citizens whose money it takes, unless it sees that value is given for the money, and that the child is being educated. what great injury is done? What is the system that prevails there? Why, it is urged that they are Protestant schools, that Roman Catholic children are compelled to attend Protestant schools, or, at all events, to pay towards their maintenance; ard that they do not, and cannot avail themselves of the benefits flowing from that system. They are not Protestant schools. That question was conclusively decided in Barrett's case. I am not now speaking of the administration of the schools. dealing with an Act of Parliament, we are dealing with the School Act of 1890, against which the appeal was taken; and in the very first clause of that Act is the declaration that the schools shall be non-sectarian. sectarian, redress can be had by the laws of the land, and by appeal to the courts of the province. If they had been Protestant schools by act of the legislature, the judgment in Barrett's case would have been reversed. It could not but have been a deprivation of privileges to compel Roman Catholics to contribute to schools which are Protestant, and which their conscience could

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There were other schools open to them, the voluntary schools that they had before.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes; I am saying that according to the decision in Barrett's case, they were not Protestant schools. My hon. friend shakes his head. I can give him the passage if he wants it. The point was distinctly argued, I argued it myself, and it was decided that they were not Protestant schools.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems they are now.

Mr. McCARTHY. If they are, they are not in accordance with the Act of the legislature, and it was the Act that the appeal asked to be set aside. If an Act of Parliament is not obeyed, the hon. gentleman knows that redress can be had in the courts, because the Act says that the schools shall be non-sectarian. And it says that no religion shall be taught in the schooland in that respect they would almost satisfy the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes)—unless by order of the trustees; and that whatever religious exercises are to be allowed, they must be such as are prescribed by the advisory board.

Does the hon, gentleman Mr. AMYOT. understand that under the present law the schools are neutral, and that no religion whatever can be taught in them?

Mr. McCARTHY. I have said that the schools are non-sectarian. I have said that, according to the Act of the legislature, no religious exercises are to be permitted in any school unless the trustees allow it.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Allow me to read the clause.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have said that if religious exercises are allowed the religious exercises are those prescribed by the advisory board.

Mr. McCarthy.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. reads as follows:-

Religious exercises shall be held in the public school entirely at the option of the school trustees of the district, and upon receiving written authority from the trustees it shall be the duty of the teacher to hold such religious exercises.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is exactly what I said; I am glad the hon. gentleman read the passage. Now, what are the religious exercises? The religious exercises are here.

Mr. BERGERON. Those are non-sectarian schools.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is what the hon. gentleman does not seem to understand. they are not non-sectarian the hon. gentleman's coadjutor can appeal to the court, because the Act says they must be non-sectarian. If the hon, gentleman will read an earlier section, section 2, I think, it is, he will find that the schools must be non-sectarian. So if the hon, gentleman finds the schools are not non-sectarian, then the schools are not conducted according to the Act of Parliament, and therefore an appeal will lie to the courts.

TUPPER. CHARLES HIBBERT These are the words "except as above provided." I will read the clause as made in a quotation given by Mr. Ewart in his argument. He is quoting from the Act and he reads the first part:

The public school shall be entirely non-sectarian, and no religious exercises shall be allowed therein, except as above provided.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman has not read from the Act of Parliament.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. am only reading a quotation from Mr. Ewart's argument.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. Minister will find that it is the first or second section of the Act.

Mr. WELDON. It is section 8, which says that public schools shall be entirely non-sectarian, and that no religious excrcises shall be conducted, except as above by the Roman Catholic minority was as reprovided.

Mr. McCARTHY. If "as above provided" is giving the advisory board power to regulate those exercises, it also provides that a school shall be non-sectarian. If the administration of the schools as carried on by the advisory board is inconsistent with non-sectarianism, of course the Act is misconstrued, and condemnation should lie against the administration of the Act and not against the Act itself. Let me point out what the religious exercises consist of, and what the objections are to them. They consist of a short form of prayer and the reading in either version of the Bible, either the Douay version or the version used by Protestants, of certain chapters. Every-

Clause 7 of the Act thing that Roman Catholic ecclesiastics could object to is eliminated. There is no possibility of any portion of scripture being read in the public school that is not such as in Ontario would form a part of what we know there as the Ross Bible, which was approved and corrected by the late Archbishop of the province. A simple prayer is allowed, a copy of which I am sorry I have not here to read, as it might do this House a great deal of good, although I do not want to interfere with the privilege of Speaker in that respect.

TO THE STATE OF TH

Mr. FORBES. Get the hon. member for Haldimand to give it.

Mr. McCARTHY. No doubt he would do it better than I, he having more experience. To these simple religious exercises no hon. gentleman who belongs to the Christian religion will object. We are Christians in common, and perhaps we are very common Christians.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Speak for yourself.

Mr. McCARTHY. But so far as that goes there is no question about this, there is not an hon. gentleman who would object to the simple prayer the children are taught to repeat at the closing exercises of the day. The whole objection made by Mr. Ewart to the curriculum in force under the authority of this advisory board, which provides for eight grades altogether, was as regards the history of religious movements, Henry VIII. and Mary. The only objection that the Roman Catholic minority make to the book-because, of course, we all understand that it is not a question merely of teaching. but the Roman Catholics want the children to be taught history from the Roman Catholic standpoint and not from the Protestant standpoint—was as I have indicated. No doubt the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) would like history taught from the French instead of the English standpoint.

Mr. BERGERON. It depends.

Mr. McCARTHY. The only objection made gards the subject of "Religious Movements, Henry VIII. and Mary." The answer is, that if this history is an untrue representation of the events of that period it should not be in But when complaints that curriculum. were made of that book or of the other history, that of Buckley, the advisory board inquired into the complaint and found that this very history was in use at the convent at Winnipeg, and therefore the board did not think it should be expunged from the curriculum of the public schools. I happen to know that this is the history which is used in the separate schools in the Northwest Territories with the sanction and under the bidding of the ecclesiastical authorities who are in connection with the school board there. So we have got a system of public schools; we have a declaration that they are to be non-sectarian; we have religious exercises on which all agree—they may not go far enough, but so far as they go no person dissents from them—and we have the permission to read certain chapters in the Scriptures taken from the version in which we all coincide. Is that a great hardship? What is to be done in a new country with 150,000 or 200,000 people scattered over a vast territory? Are the Anglicans to have separate schools, because the Lord Bishop asked for them? Are the Icelanders to have them, for they want them?

Mr. DALY. The Icelanders never asked for such schools.

Mr. McCARTHY. They do not want to be taught at all.

Mr. DALY. They are very fintelligent people.

Mr. McCARTHY. If they do ask for them, will they be denied them?

Mr. DALY. They never asked for them.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon, gentleman cannot deny that the Anglican Church and the Lord Bishop want them. We want to have schools for all, and therefore if a new country like that, and in every province of this Dominion it ought to be the same, there should be public schools which all can attend, in which everything offensive to any decromination will be eliminated, a school system made free and equal for all classes is what consorts with the principals of our constitution and the underlying doctrine which pertains to our social state. Some hon. gentleman will think this a monstrous state of things, that these few half-breeds or French or Catholics, call them altogether 20,000 people if you like, should be compelled to go to those schools. But a higher authority than hon, gentlemen have pronounced on this subject. Monsignor Satolli, who has been sent to this country for the purpose of superintending Roman Catholic affairs for the continent.

Mr. AMYOT. No, Sir, not to this country.

Mr. McCARTHY. To this continent I should have said.

Mr. AMYOT. We are in the continent here.

Mr. McCARTHY. He is sent to this continent.

Mr. AMYOT. He is not sent to the continent; he is not sent to Canada.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, I stand corrected. He is sent to the smaller half of the continent. Will that do the hon. gentleman (Mr. Amyot)? He has been sent here to superintend Catholic affairs, and when he came here he found a dispute raging in the church as to whether Catholic children should or should not attend public schools? And what was his decision, and what was his conclusion. Why, Sir, his decision and his conclusion was, and it is here to be read and seen; he was representing His Holiness of Rome, and I suppose it applies to the Catholic church of the continent, to French as well as to English, and to all classes of the community. He commends in very clear and definite terms, that the children are to attend the best schools, even if they have the choice of going to separate schools, and that where there is no choice they are to attend the public schools, and they are not to be, nor are their parents to be denied the rights of the church because they do attend public schools. The Archbishop says:

When there is no Catholic school at all, or when the one that is available is little fitted for giving the children an education in keeping with their condition, then the public schools may be attended with a safe conscience, the danger of perversion being rendered remote by opportune remedial—

That is where the term remedial order comes from, I suppose.

—by opportune remedial and precautionary measures; a matter which is to be left to the conscience of the ordinaries. We strictly forbid any one—

This applies to my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) I suppose:

-whether bishop or priest,---

Mr. AMYOT. Oh, no, that does not apply to me.

Mr. McCARTHY:

—We strictly forbid any one, whether bishop or priest, and this is the express prohibition of the Sovereign Pontiff, through the Sacred Congregation either by act or by threat to exclude from the sacraments, as unworthy, parents (who choose to send their children to the public schools). As regards the children themselves, this enactment applies with still greater force.

To the Catholic Church belongs the duty and the divine right of teaching all nations to believe the truth of the Gospel, and to observe whatsoever Christ commanded (Matthew, xxvii., 19); in her likewise is vested the divine right of in-structing the young, in so far as theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven (Mark, x., 14); that is to say, she holds for herself the right of teaching the truths of faith and the law of morals, in order to bring up youth in the habits of a Christian life. Hence, absolutely and universally speaking, there is no repugnance in their learnuniversally ing the first elements and the higher branches of the arts and the natural sciences in public schools controlled by the state, whose office is to provide maintain and protect everything by which its citizens are formed to moral goodness, while they live peaceably together with a sufficiency of temporal goods, under laws promulgated by civil authority, &c., &c.

Well, Sir, we have a little experience of that in the province from which I come. We have separate schools there, but my hon. friend (Mr. Amyot) will hardly believe it, that more than half of the Roman Catholic children attend public schools. More than half of them, I say, even chough they have the option of separate schools, and the privilege of separate schools. Why, Sir, in the county which I have the honour to come from, I made a calculation the other day, and I find there are 2,300 Roman Catholic children of school age, and the school accommodation for them in the separate schools is less than 300, and the other 2,000 are attending the public schools.

Mr. MASSON. Or not any.

No; the majority of Mr. McCARTHY. them are attending the public schools. That is the case in places where they are sufficiently numerous to establish a school, it it was advisable to do so. In one township I know, where there is a church big enough to hold a thousand people, and where there are two priests (it has been an established parish as long as I can remember) there are no separate schools.

Mr. AMYOT. Will the hon, gentleman allow me to ask if they are French schools?

Mr. McCARTHY. I hope not. ought not to be. We do not want French schools.

Mr. BERGERON. That is very frank, anyhow.

Mr. McCARTHY. Very frank. I bave never disguised that in the least. Now, Sir, that being the condition of things, what great hardship is it in that portion of the North-west that there should not be separate schools, and that there should only be the public school system of schools. it may be said, that this iniquity was perpetrated by the Liberal party, and to many hon, gentlemen here, perhaps the fact that it was a Liberal enactment is sufficient, of itself to condemn it. They think that prima facie it must be wrong, if the Liberal party introduced the national school system. will comfort these hon, gentlemen by reading to them the declaration of the Conservative party of Manitoba. The Act was passed in 1890. It was passed by a Parliament which was two or three years elect-It was passed by a body which had received no direct mandate from the people, and the argument, and the strong argument used was, that when that particular legislature had been returned, the change in the school system had not been prominently brought to the attention of the electors. But, Sir, another election took place, and at that election, both political parties declared themselves upon the school question, and the Conservatives as well as the Liberals placed themselves upon record on that subject, and they declared in the clearest possible way that they were in favour of a system of public schools, and they went one better than the Liberal party, and resolved:

1. That they are in favour of one uniform system of public schools for the province;

2. That they are ready and willing to loyally carry out the present School Act, should it be held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of Great Britain to be within the legislative power of the province;

3. That, in the event of such School Act being held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of Great Britain to be beyond the legislative power of the province; then, they will endeavour to secure such amendments to the British North America Act and the "Manitoba Act" as will place educational matters wholly within the legislative power of the province of Manitoba, without appeal to the Governor General in Council or the Parliament of Canada.

So that both Liberals and Conservatives at the elections which followed the passing of the Act united in declaring for a public school system. In the following session, when a Bill was brought in to repeal that Act, out of forty members, thirty-nine being present, all but four, if my memory serves me right, voted in favour of the School Act, and against this repeal. We, therefore, have the deliberate and practiccally unanimous view pronounced by both parties in Manitoba that the school law should not be interfered with. now, Sir, I come down to the point at which we have arrived; and in doing so I shall have to pass hastily over some mat-ters which ought perhaps to have been mentioned. For my part, I frankly accept the declaration made by the hon, gentleman on the treasury benches. I cannot conthere is one hon, gentleman ceive that among their own followers who will pay them so poor a compliment as to suppose that in the statements they have made to this House there is any reservation, mental or otherwise. I think that if I can go so far as to take them at their word, their own followers are bound to do so without question and without cavil. They have had a struggle lasting over several days. It has been an internecine war. It was doubtful which would gain the upper hand. We have not a record of the pros and cons; we have merely the results.

Mr. FOSTER. The member for L'Islet will tell you all.

Mr. TARTE. "La Minerve" wrote it; I did not. My hands are clean as to that.

McCARTHY. The hon, gentleman has advantages that I have not. All I know is the result. I know that from day to day we asked for the position of the Government, and from day to day we were put off; and at last, when their position was announced, it led to a terrible upheaval. That breaking up may have been real or it may have been fictitious. One of the hon. gentlemen may have gone out to watch that more headstrong and giddy creature outside who required control. If so, he performed his functions admirably; he kept his hand upon the pulse of the patient, and at the proper moment, when the reaction point of his allegiance. The question which set in, he was brought back in docility to the hon, gentleman asked, and which the the fold. That thick witted gentleman, I hou. Minister answered in his place in Parliathink, must always remember the part that was played upon him, if that is not a misconception of the situation. But undoubted-ly, one hon, gentleman did resign; he has actually retired, given up his portfolio, shown his good faith; and several hon. gentlemen in this House have indicated that they have lost confidence in the promises of the Administration-and I do not wonder at it. For my part, standing in their shoes, and looking at the different declarations that were made to them, looking at the passage of the remedial orderwhich certainly bound the Government in good faith to go as far as was necessarylooking at all that, I do not wonder that these hon, gentlemen began to think that they were being trifled with; and therefore their rebellion is not very extraordinary. But I think we are bound to accept that there was a deliberate resolve upon the part of the Government to threaten Manitobabecause that was what it comes to-that if before the first Thursday of January she did not undo what she had done last June, this Government would press with all its power and force, and with all the aid of the party behind it, the passage of a remedial Bill. There was perhaps room in the statements that were made for an escape from this result—so it seems to have been thought. I should not have thought so. I should have thought that every gentleman, whether in this Administration or whether in the one that is to succeed it, was bound in honour to stand by the pledge, given in pursuance of the compromise agreed to in the Cabinet. I should have thought, when this Government obtained authority from His Excellency to announce to this Parliament that with his consent this House is not to be dissolved, but is to be summoned again before a certain day, that no self-respecting man would ever go back of that pledge or promise. But. Sir, it seems that my hon. friend from Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Girouard) doubted; although, so far as he was interviewed, he appeared to be satisfied. evidently was considered a proper medium for clinching the matter. The difficulty felt seems to have been this: You may negotiate with Manitoba, and you may get some kind of a promise from Manitobapossibly that when the legislature meets they will reconsider the situation—and you may come down in January next and say, the negotiations is going on very satisfactorily indeed, and every hope is held out that a satisfactory solution of this unfortunate difficulty will be arrived at, and it would be unwise for us to interfere with the province under these circumstances. But my hon. friend shut the door upon that possibility by asking the question which I will read. Not that he is likely ever to forget it, because I think it formed the turning ment was:

en un la major la companya e companya de la mandaria de la mandaria de la companya del la companya del la companya de la companya de la companya del la companya de la companya del la company

Will the negotiations to be entered into with Manitoba, relating to the schools, unless they bring an acceptable arrangement on the lines of the remedial order and the terms of the judgment of the Privy Council of the 29th January, 1895. preclude or postpone the introduction of the remedial legislation announced in your statement of Monday last?

Mr. FOSTER. My answer simply is, they will

Now, Sir, that certainly defines what a satisfactory settlement of the question would be. The doubt arose from these words in the statement of the Government:

A communication will be sent immediately to the Manitoba Government on the subject, with a view to ascertaining whether that Government is disposed to make a settlement of the question which will be reasonably satisfactory to the minority of that province, without making it necessary to call into requisition the powers of the Deminion Parliament.

Now, the question that troubled my hon. friend was, what is "reasonably satisfactory?" It may not be very satisfactory to some of the Government's supporters in this House. What is meant by that? So he asks the question, and he is told that nothing will be satisfactory that is not on the lines of the remedial order and the judgment of the Privy Council. Well, Sir, if that be so, we know exactly where we stand. The hon, gentleman got it clearly enough that nothing would be deemed satisfactory "unless they bring an acceptable arrangement on the lines of the remedial order and the terms of the judgment of the Privy Council of the 29th of January, 1895." Why. Sir, if Manitoba does not do that, we are to have the Bill next January. And what Bill are we to have? We are to have a Bill, also, on the lines of the remedial order and the judgment of the Privy Council. That is what we are to have. The difference in phraseology is not intended to imply a difference in meaning:

The Government shall introduce and press to a conclusion such legislation as will afford an adequate measure of relief to the said minority, based upon the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and the remedial order of the 21st March.

Now, if no arrangement will be satisfactory which is not based on the lines of the remedial order, no Bill can be adequate which is not based on the same lines. Surely that must be so. You are not going to insist that Manitoba shall do more than you are going to do yourself. You have stated what Manitoba must do, and, therefore, we have got to know what you propose that we shall do.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. An hon. gentleman says, "Hear, hear." I do not know whether he approves of or disagrees from my statement, but I think it is a reasonable conclusion. I do not know, in the intricacies of this wonderful question, whether the English language fails in exactness to convey its meaning.

Mr. FOSTER. You should try French.

Mr. McCARTHY. French is the language of diplomacy, and I suppose in order to be perfectly exact and precise, the declaration of the Government ought to be in French. We have got it here, and I ask what does it mean. Perhaps we will have some explanation before this debate closes. What does a Bill, based on the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and the remedial order, mean? Surely we are entitled to know. Here is the remedial order. What does it say? It says this:

That the said appeal be, and the same is, hereby allowed, in so far it relates to rights acquired by the said Roman Catholic minority uader legislation of the province of Manitoba, passed subsequent to the union of that province with the Dominion of Canada, and His Excellency the Governor General in Council was pleased to adjudge and declare, and it is hereby adjudged and declared, that, by the two Acts passed by the legislature of the province of Manitoba, on the 1st day of May, 1890, intituled, respectively, "An Act respecting the Department of Education" and "An Act respecting Public Schools," the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority of the said province, in relation to education, prior to the 1st day of May, 1890, has been affected by depriving the Roman Catholic minority of the following rights and privileges, which, previous to and until the 1st day of May, 1890, such minority had, viz. :-

Now, what were they deprived of? They were deprived of, in the words of the judgment:

Of the right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support Roman Catholic schools in the manner provided for by the said statutes which were repealed by the two Acts of 1890 aforesaid.

They were deprived of the right to share proportionately in any grant made out of the public funds for the purposes of education.

They were deprived of the right of exception of such Roman Catholics as contribute to Roman Catholic schools, from all payments or contribution to the support of any other schools.

Then, it was ordered that these rights should be restored. Does the Government mean, or does the Government not mean that these rights are to be restored? I think my hon, friends from Quebec are entitled to know that. I think the hon, member for Provencher is entitled to know that. Nothing less than that will satisfy the hon, gentleman.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. No, nothing less.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is any thing else intended? Is anything else suggested? And if so, what? Because Manitoba was commanded to do this, and Manitoba has declined. Manitoba is again to be commanded to do this, if I understand it, and Manitoba, of course, may reasonably be supposed to de-cline. Then, we are face to face with a remedial Bill. I therefore think it is not inappropriate that I should call the attention of the House to this policy on the part of the Government. Am I wrong in saying that this Government exists solely for the purpose of implementing the remedial order? Am I wrong in saying that we are to have a sixth session of this Parliament solely for the purpose of carrying a remedial Bill? Am I wrong in supposing that if it were not for this, there would have been a dissolution before January next? Am I wrong, accepting, as I do, in all sincerity and honesty, the good faith of the Government, in supposing that that is the whole object and end of the January session, namely, to carry through a remedial Bill, without having, as far as we know. any other duty to perform except to vote the supplies? Am I wrong in saying that now is the time to challenge that policy and express our opinion about it? Sir. hon, gentlemen are satisfied to swallow the policy because it grants a temporary relief. They are willing, in order that they may escape from their present embarrassmeat, to do what? To vote approval, possibly of this policy. I shall put it as plain as I can in the resolution in your hands; I shall put it as clear and as plain as language can make it. I do not desire to have my hon, friend accuse me of any catch resolution. I think that those who differ from the Government have the right to challenge their position. I think that those who are prepared to say that, under no circumstances, will they pass a remedial Bill in the lines of the judgment of the Privy Council and the remedial order, ought to say so now. It is not fair by the Government. it is not fair by the country, it is not fair by anybody, to go on for six, or more, months longer, simply to come here next session and vote against the remedial Bill. It is not fair for the hon, gentleman, the Controller of Customs, whom I do not see, and who ought to be with me on this vote, to go out of this House and not vote on this question, or to stay in the Government and vote down this resolution, for between this and next January I trust that the country will understand this question, I trust that every school-house on every concession line will be seized of it and that no man will be called on to cast his ballot without a perfect understanding of the position he takes.

Mr. HUGHES. He is following distinguished English precedent.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is the hon. gentleman authorized in stating that?

Mr. HUGHES. I speak for no one but myself.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thought the hon. gentleman was speaking on behalf of the Controller of Customs. If not, we must proceed in the absence of the Controller of Customs. I believe the English practice. to which the hon, gentleman appealed, is this. That a Controller of Customs, up to the time he is called on to vote, not being in the Cabinet, is not bound by the policy or acts of the Government; but, from the time that he knew this remedial order was passed, unless he was assured by his colleagues that they did not mean it, that they did not intend anything more than merely to open the legislative door, and that they did not propose to carry the remedial order into effect. I think in honour he was bound to let his colleagues know that he could not support them in it and to offer his resignation, which it was their business to accept or not, as they pleased. But from the time when they approunced on the floor of the House But from the time when that this is their policy and their only policy. I do not understand how any gentleman who differs from them on this great question, for it is admitted to be a great question, the greatest since confederation some say, though that may be an exaggeration—can remain quiet and. advice and as public men, deny his assistance to prevent it being enacted into law. I can understand those gentlemen who agree with the policy supporting the Government, and of course every gentleman is entitled to his own opinion. Sir, it is said that the Government have not yet exhausted all means of settlement with Manitoba, and that they are bound to do so before resorting to the extraordinary measure of passing legislation in this Chamber. I am not going to repeat what was so much better said than I could say it by the leader of the Opposition, to the effect that the time for conciliation was before and not after the Order in Council. I agree with that, but I will not trouble the House with a repetition of it. But I hold that no reasonable man can read the Order in Council and read the answer to it, and consider the position of the province of Manitoba to-day. and then rise in this House and declare that there is a possibility of Manitoba changing its course. I am bound in a parliamentary sense to believe any gentleman in this House who declares such opinions, but it is only in that sense that one is bound to accept so extraordinary a statement. Manitoba, in her answer, has declared that she cannot take the responsibility of obeying, and has pointed out many reasons why she should not obey. She has invited an investigation which the Government have officially announced they do not propose to make. And she winds up her answer with these mords:

We respectfully suggest to Your Excellency in Council, that all of the above considerations call most strongly for full and careful deliberation.

Mr. McCarthy.

and for such course of action as will avoid irritating complications.

We deem it proper, also, to call attention to the fact that it is only a few months since the latest decision upon the subject was given by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Previously to that time a majority of the members of the legislative assembly of Manitoba had either expressly or impliedly given pledges to their constituents which they feel in honour bound loyally to fulfil.

Some hon, MEMBERS, Hear, hear,

Mr. McCARTHY. "Hear, hear," some hon, members say. This same legislative leady is still in existence and will be in existence until January next. The same reasons of honour which prevented these gentlemen from breaking their pledges must continue to exist unless the House be dissolved for the purpose of settling this question, of which there is no suggestion.

We understand that it has been lately suggested that private funds of the Roman Catholic Church and people had been invested in school buildings and land that are now appropriated for public school purposes. No evidence of such fact has ever been laid before us, so far as we can ascertain, but we profess ourselves willing, if any such injustice can be established, to make full and fair compensation therefor.

That is the only promise or suggestion that is made. Confident in the strength of their position, they commence, by saying:

We cannot accept the responsibility of carrying into effect the terms of the remedial order.

They point out the objections in a community such as that of Manitoba of having separate and distinctive school education, they draw attention to the territorial difficulties under which they labour, owing to the sparseness of their population and the smallness of their resources. They add that when the remedial order was passed, His Excellency's advisers had not the knowledge before them of the form and working of the system, and they believed there was lacking the means of forming the correct judgment of the effect upon the province of the changes indicated; and having professed these views, they invited inquiry-and this is the olive branch that we have heard so much about-into the allegations of which they have no evidence before them, that the property of Roman Catholics was taken away, upon the establishment of which as a fact they are ready to make restitution. Is there any reasonable man in this House who thinks that in the five and a half months left there is any possibility of a settlement of this question under which Manitoba will do differently. Are we not bound to stop this agitation? Are we not bound to let the Government know our position? Or have the thirty-nine stray sheep that wandered came back into the fold again? There is a policy which was expressed here, in language which I will not sully my lips or offend your ears, Mr. Speaker, by repeating. But let me translate it, Sir. It is to keep the opposite party out, no matter on what consideration. On one hand is the policy, "hands off Manitoba," and on the other the policy of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor). On the other hand, some of those who want a remedial Bill are satisfied with the promises they have got. But, Sir, there is not a man from the province of Quebec who would stand by the Government if the Government announced they were not going to introduce a reme-dial Bill, and if they did not believe or affect to believe that the Government would carry out that promise. But the Government supporters from the other provinces may probably think differently. Holding views on this question just as strong as my own that in this community no Government can ever pass a remedial Bill; that, while it may do much by advice and conciliation and suggestion, just as we are doing with the Government of the North-west with reference to their schools, no Government could live forty-eight hours after announcing its policy of carrying out a remedial Bill. Who is asking for it, I should like to know? What did the educational returns from Manitoba show? Let the hon, gentlemen from the province of Quebec drop this agitation and this question will settle itself in two years. Why, Sir, out of ninety separate schools that were in existence at the time the law was passed, there are only thirty-eight now left in which the separate school system is kept up. parate school system is kept up. I have here the exact number of those who have come in under the present school system. Out of 91, there are 51 that have either disbanded or have come under the public school system, and but 38 are out, and these 38 are out, remember, with all this agitation, with all this fight, with all this hope that remedial legislation may be carried; and I venture to think that if it was not for that agitation, all these people was not for that agitation, all these people would have come in long before, the question would have been amicably adjusted in that province, and amongst the people who are concerned in it, and it would not have become a bone of contention in this Parliament. I have to apologize to the House for the length of time that I have been obliged to occupy in endeavouring to make plain the view which I hold upon this question, and I conclude by moving this amendment:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"this House has heard with regret the statements recently made defining the policy of the Government respecting the Manitoba school question, and is unwilling by silence to allow it to be assumed that, at the session to be held in January next, any more than at the present session, it is prepared to pass a law to restore the system of separate schools in Manitoba on the lines of the remedial order of the 21st March, 1895.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In rising to oppose the amendment which has been put into your hands, I cannot rerfain from giving expression to a conviction un-der which I have laboured during the hon. gentleman's argument. That argument has not been made for the first time by the member for North Simcoe to-day. Every argument, especially every argument he has used except those in the last twenty minutes of his speech, is familiar to me, and must be familiar to those who have followed this question from its inception, or from the time when, to use his own language, the member for Simcoe brought this bone of contention into the political arena. hon. gentleman, however, made me feel that if there be merit in his position, if there be force in his argument, it is a great pity that he was born so late in the Canadian confederation. Those arguments would have been pertinent, those arguments were used, many of them, in 1870, a considerable length of time ago in the history of this new country. The arguments he has used today, I venture to say, were put with just as great force, were put with just as much support in the country, in the year 1870, as they have been in 1895. The conviction of the Canadian Parliament at that time was that the constitution of Manitoba should follow as nearly as possible on the lines of the con-stitutions of some of the older provinces, with the object and the hope that by such with the object and the mope that by such a constitution we might happily get rid of the quarrels and troubles which, before 1867, threatened dire disaster to many of Her Majesty's possessions in British North America; and the statesmen of that day, both Liberal and Conservative, joined in a collection and conclination and a policy of harmony and conciliation, and a policy of compromise. Able men, Liberal and Conservative, who were just as ardently, and, I believe, far more sincerely, opposed to the separate school system, than the hon. member for Simcoe, were willing to sink their opinions for the sake of harmony, recognizing, as they had to do, the fact that the two great creeds of this country, Protestant and Catholic, nearly balanced each other; and that every interest we had, the interest of home and the in-terest of country, would be conserved by making the constitution which they did make, and by making it to mean what the Law Lords have decided it to mean, and to imply, notwithstanding all the technical criticisms which the hon. gentleman furnished up for no other purpose than to make, if he could, that decision of Her Majesty's Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of small weight in this House, and in this country. That he has failed, there can be no manner of doubt. His course, from the time when he began his dangerous agitation in this country, is one track of failures from the start, in 1889. Whether he took his stand on legal or constitutional ques-tions, we have lived to learn, and this country knows now, that whether in the Imperial Privy Council, or whether at the polls, where the voices of his fellow-country men are to be heard, his course and his opinions have met with signal condemnation. And so he was driven, in his desperation, a day or two ago, to refer to this "hateful" system of separate schools, a system with which his own province is most familiar, a system which has operated well in his own province, and, during which that province has been able to hold the premier rank in this country, a system that obtained, with the consent and approval of almost the entire population of the great prefince of Quebec, and a system which, I would remind him, in 1894, he was willing to see fastened on the North-west Territories. I hold under my hand the proof of that important statement, that, notwithstanding all the hon. gentleman has said about the iniquity of this system, about the dire consequences that flow from it, about the injury to the youth and to the people of a country, about the spread of disunion among the population, the hon. gentleman was willing to put it on the statute-book in regard to the constitution of the North-west Territories. In 1894, when pleading with this House to adopt an amendment in that direction in connection with the constitution of the North-west Territories, the hon. member for Simcoc said:

If the people of the North-west adopt a scheme of separate schools and afterwards apply for admission into the confederation, there will be no great harm done to say: Very well, nothing in any law we can give you shall prejudicially affect any rights or privileges with reference to denominational schools.

Grant him his way, grant him his whim in that respect, and he was willing to put upon the statute-book, in connection with the North-west Territories, for all time to come, a system that he has denounced tonight in unmeasured terms.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon, gentleman is absolutely incorrect. What I said was that I had nothing at all to do with the system which the North-west people chose to adopt; but what I desired was to remove from the statute-book a law which compelled them to have separate schools. I thought it was for the people of the North-west to have separate schools or public schools, which ever system they chose, and the hon, gentleman cannot find a word that I ever spoke different from that

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have read the statement as reported in the "Hansard." The hon. gentleman can say, if he likes, that it is incorrectly reported.

Mr. McCARTHY. No. no.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But if that is a correct statement, I have nothing to withdraw. My interpretation is entirely based upon the language as given in the "Hansard," and I repeat it, and no language of mine could be more emphatic on the point, that he was willing to secure, for all time to come, a system of separate schools in the North-west Territories if the people there at the outset, demanded it. But in this case the hon, gentleman has attempted, with all the ingenuity he could command, and with all the technicalities of which he is master, to show that the people in Manitoba, that the half-breeds or the original settlers there, never made, in a clear and unequivocal manner, a formal demand, and he has conjured up arguments to show that the treaty, though in terms it might imply rights on the part of the people in those Territories, was of no avail and no effect. But I will come to that a little later on. What I dedo, and to do \mathbf{so} earnestly as I possibly can, is to warn, if not this House, for it may not need the warning, the country against crediting the hon, member for Simcoe with too much earnestness in this matter. I cannot impute motives here; but if the facts warrant it, it is my duty, it is the duty of every Canadian to sound a note of warning in regard to the political tactics adopted by that hon. member from the day he became, if not a political outcast, at all events a political desparado, ready on each and every occasion to tear down the party to which he was once proud to belong, and he came to such a pittable plight yesterday that he found himself unable to find a resting place in the House when a vote was taken on one of the issues raised by his mischievous campaign in 1889. The hon, gentleman says there are English precedents for it. I am glad he did not mention an English statesman's name in connection with such a course. I have seen a cartoon where I think Lord John Russell was represented as having put on a placard "No Popery" and immediately he proceeded to run away. Perhaps that is the precedent to which the hon, gentleman referred. But I think this House will be somewhat surprised and students of English parliamentary history will be somewhat surprised to find any similar case of such extraordinary conduct on the part of the chief agitator, and by a gentleman whose utterances here must be considered in connection with another important fact. I may be wrong, but I will go to English precedents, and up to this time I have searched in vain for a case where a member of Parliament under circumstances such as those connected with the member for Simcoe was allowed to make a speech such as he had on this occasion, was allowed to open his lips either to inflame members of the House or to inflame the hearts of his countrymen, or was allowed to give his opinion on a matter on which he had been paid advocate outside the House. Following English precedents the hon. gentleman's lips would be dumb on such an occasion. In England nothing is better understood than this. If it is not the absolute rule, good taste has commanded silence on the part of men whether distinguished or not distinguished, whether sitting on the front benches or on the back benches, who having received retainers in the profession to which the hon, gentleman belongs venture to discuss those questions which they have put before the tribunal, or canvass for votes in the Parliament of the country. Why, even in the case of the Parnell Commission, there was a discussion when the Attorney General and the learned gentleman who succeeded him as Attorney General gave information to the House of Commons. discussion was brought up on that subject, and the Speaker of the House gave it as his opinion that while the practice had been in the line of commanding silence on the part of gentlemen engaged professionally in the courts as regards discussing those opinions on the floor of the House, on this matter before him it was largely a question of good faith. I mention this, however, for another purpose. The hon, member for Simcoe to-night, violating as, I think, the practice of the English Parliament, and the very proper practice, has done what? He has done simply this, he has argued the case over as he argued it when a counsel, paid as he was and retained as he was on the other side, and when there was a counsel to reply to him. He has argued before the Parliament of Canada the case which he argued previously before the Privy Council of Canada, and on that occasion he sought to depreciate the weight of his opporent's argument (Mr. Ewart), by referring to the fact that he had been so long a time identified with the case he was then advocating that he could not be considered to be in a judicial frame of mind. What is the frame of mind of the hon. member for Simcoe? What is the frame of mind of an hon. gentleman who went out to that province in 1889, before this legislation was put upon the statute-book, and there, speaking with inflammatory language, raised the whole question that has been disturbing every province in Canada from that time down to the present. After playing that role in that year, and legislation having been put upon the statute-book, what then do we find? We find the hon. gentleman engaged in litigation. He has told us himself that he was engaged in the Barrett case, that he was employed to make the arguments he has just used. That was in Again, before the Privy Council of Canada he came, an interested party in the sordid sense on this question, and tonight he is the last of all men who while attempting to deal with the merits of the question, should have departed from his brief for a moment to lecture independent members of this Parliament, to lecture the Controller of Customs, and to attempt to frighten other hon. members who only differ independent, that they are not counsel for the Manitoba Government, that they have received no money for their opinions or their votes; and yet the hon. gentleman presumed in this House to talk about the course which hon. gentlemen, and independent hon. gentlemen, ought to take upon this question. Let the hon. gentleman cite English precedents for such a course, and he will fail to find a single man pretending to be a statesman or a reputable member who, holding a position professionally, which the hon. gentleman does to-day in connection with this question, undertook to lead the opinion in the House of Commons for a single moment. But his record on this question does not fit him to lecture any one. Either as counsel or as statesman silence on his part would have been far the best course for the hon. gentleman to pursue. On every ground this was an occasion when he should have said little. have had the history of the Mantoba school question. It began in 1889. Legislation followed, and on the floor of this Parliament the hon. gentleman was busy instructing the members of the House as to the legal intricacies and difficulties. He it was who sneered at the late Minister of Justice for thinking he could find some new constitutional method of settling this question. And to-night while he said that no one pretended the Barrett case concluded the consideration of the general subject, and the Law Lords had so held, I have to remind him that no less a man than the hon. member for Simcoe was of that opinion until the last decision of the Privy Council showed not only that he was wrong, but the able counsel on the side he represented, Mr. Cousens Hardy, thought the point so poor that in answer to the court's question he said he would not pretend to argue what the hon. member for Simcoe thought to be without doubt when addressing this House on a re-And so, in connection occasion. John Thompson's Sir course it with found to be singularly been has rect in every particular. Although treada new field, those who take the trouble to look back to reports in this matter will find no vacillation and no hesitation, but with great care and great caution, and with that extraordinary perception that marked him as a statesman and as a counsel, every course he marked out as the proper course to be taken was decided by the Privy Council to be the proper course, I can give to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) other points to prove my statement, that on this subject he is not in a position either to lecture this House or to discuss so lightly the opinions of their lordships of the Privy Council. Before the Prvy Council of Canada and to some extent to-night, we heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) say, that the decision of the Privy Council was not required by the from the hon, gentleman in that they are statute and was unnecessary. He told us

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

With all deference be it said, it shows how: little the Lord Chancellor understood the question, when he seemed to think that an Act to supplement an Act of this kind might be passed without interfering with the Public School Act.

Macdonald desired should be accomplished when they secured the passage of the Act by which that question was remitted to the Privy Council in England. We were right in saying to the people of this country that in connection with that remedial order, we were carrying out the judgment of the highest tribunal in the Empire. Whether the court was acting in an advisory or mandatory manner, whether any part of the judgment was obiter, or whether it was germane to the point under discussion, the result was the same. The conclusion that the Law Lords of the Judicial Committee had reached was clear and distinct, and having consulted them on this question for the second time, the Catholics abiding content with the first decision, it would have been absolute madness to sit down and pick out of that judgment just such portions as the

It was natural say that the draughtsman of the Manitoba for the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) to Act had evidently not been used to that sort desire that we should take a technical atti-of work. Again in another part of his argu-tude all through, that we should cut and ment, he told us how little Lord Herschell carve on that judgment, that we should take understood in regard to the matter. Said the questions and carefully examine the the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. judgment and drop out every unnecessary McCarthy) before the Privy Council of sentence, and pare it down to simply "yes" Canada:

Judging from his argument to-night, that would have given him great comfort, but I venture to say: No matter what the ultimate result may be, this country would not have been enjoying the quier that it does enjoy, owing to the great weight and the great importance that that judgment had in the minds of all reasonand definite, but for over an hour he has able men in Canada whether Liberal or Conservative. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Mcthe history of this question we were not Carthy) was careful not to state one of the extravagant positions which he took before rect in some interlocutory stage. The great the Privy Council of Canada when arguing point he endeavoured to make was, that his case. I must remind him of it, however, because I desire, if I possibly can, to destroy tached great weight to the reasons in the by fair argument the position which he may judgment of Her Majesty's Privy Council, for the time being occupy in the minds of correct in the main part, as is also the posi-jargument was in favour of bad faith, the tion of the Government shown by the re- worst of bad faith, the absolute, ignoring medial order and the decision in that com- of the constitution, or of the Acts of Parliathe ment. It was force of their position was, that whether idle for him to make that argument before Privy Council; but before a tribunal which datory, yet it was so well considered, and he said was not judicial, and which he says so well reasoned, that under the peculiar he believed was entirely political, he did not blush to say that in his opinion no effect it was more valuable than any utterance on ought to be given to section 22 of the Manithat question could be in Canada or out of toba Act. That statement is so startling ing the answer of the hon. member (Mr. Mc-Carthy), given to a question put by my hon. colleague the Minister of Militia (Mr. Dickey):

> Mr. DICKEY. I understand you to say that, in your view, that section of the Manitoba Act should not under any circumstances be given

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman asks me to read page 42, and the position of the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) is explained there as follows:-

I think there would be the Mr. McCARTHY. difficulty pointed out but, in the case of the Min-ister of Justice, when the law is decided, there still remains a question of policy, which it is for him to decide.

Then I asked:

That was his position as a counsel; it was after all his position to-night, if his position amounts to anything-that no matter handling of this matter was judicial; all what was in the statute, before that statute was passed, the negotiations did not go so far. Grant all that he said; grant all the every district in this country between the conflicting statements as to whether the passing of the legislation of 1890 and the demand for separate schools was contained end of 1894, and spoke frequently on this in bill of rights No. 3 or in bill of rights No. 4; but there is a statute and how does he meet it? He meets it by saying that we should treat it as a dead letter, judicial attitude upon it. I at no time was willing and at no time bandy words, I think, at this juncture as shall be willing, to take that position in to whether our duties were judicial or poliregard to the constitution of this country; itical. All that the people are interested in and we were right, therefore, in bringing to knowing is, whether we maintained a judiour aid, as we logically could bring to our cial attitude until the adoption of the remeaid, the judicial deliverance of the Imperial dial order; and many eminent lawyers be-Privy Council in regard to this matter of guarantee, to which I will refer later on. For no man could use stronger lanshow guage than is found there to that there was a substantial and binding guarantee on the part of this Parliament with the Roman Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba; and by that guarantee, as interpreted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, this Government long ago decided, and has never swerved from that decision, to stand faithfully to the end. Now, the hon, gentleman says we promised redress of grievances if the courts dismissed the appeal at an early stage of the proceedings. I think that was a mistake on the part of the hon. gentleman; and to correct that mistake, as it is important, I will refer to the minute of Council on the report of the Minister of Justice, as contained in Mr. Ewart's book, on pages 31 and 33, where the facts of the case are stated. The hon, gentleman was referring to what I may call the interlocutory proceedings, and to the steps taken before the opinion of the courts was obtained on this question. Said the Minister of Justice in his report:

If the appeal should be successful, these Acts will be annulled by judicial decision; the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba will receive protection and redress. The Acts purporting to be repealed will remain in operation, and those whose views have been represented by a majority of the legislature cannot but recognize that the matter has been disposed of with due regard to the constitutional rights of the province.

THE RESERVE AND ADDRESS OF THE PROPERTY OF THE

If the legal controversy should result in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench being sustained, the time will come for Your Excellency to consider the petitions which have been presented by and on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Manitoba for redress, under subsections 2 and 3 of section 22 of the "Manitoba Act," quoted in the early part of this report, and which are analogous to the provisions made by the British North America Act, in relation to the other provinces.

The statement of the hon, gentleman as it fell upon my ears was so inconsistent with I am not going to say that the splendid course, as I think, adopted by there is not a grievance; I am precluded from Sir John Thompson from the outset of this difficult question down to the day of his death, that the correction is made necessary. Sir John Thompson's conduct in the the records show it. He went over the province of Ontario; he went practically over question, which was threatening to become a very burning and troublesome question: but he never swerved from maintaining a We need not lieve that our function in that regard was entirely judicial. But the hon, member for North Sincoe, before he began that long branch of his argument, told the House that the present Prime Minister frankly admitted on the hearing that the Government would assume full political responsibility for their decision in regard to the remedial order. There never was the slightest flinching in that respect on the part either of the present Prime Minister or of the late Prime Minister. Amidst tremendous difficulties and against extraordinary pressure. I do not hesitate to say so, the late Prime Minister maintained the same impartial attitude up to the day of his death. That was, that if the courts would settle this question one way or the other, so much the better for Canada, so much the better for all of us. Some would regret the de-cision, but all in the end would respect it. Keep it if we could out of Parliament; keep it if we could from the polls. There was no cowardice in that position. In my opinion, it was the truest and highest type of statesmanship. But whether the policy was wise or unwise, that was his policy; and all his colleagues, so far as I know, endeavoured to follow his advice When they met they endeavoured to treat the question in a judicial manner, and the hon. member for North Simcoe had no reason to complain of the treatment he got. All the com-those functions once performed, we never plaint the hon, member made to-day was hesitated to admit our full political responsithat the notice was short. Now, to show, bility; and we have the satisfaction of knowif I may say so, how unfair the hon. gentleman was in his argument, I have to Parliament has been in session for three call your attention and the attention of those who have read the blue-book which was distributed so long ago, to the fact that, notwithstanding all the time that has elapsed since that short notice was served upon the hon, gentleman, from away back in February down to this 16th of July; though he has been in consultation and campaigning with Mr. Sifton, and though he has been giving a great deal of attention to this subject, he has not been able to bring one single additional argument to this House beyond what is contained between these two covers. The only reference he has made to what is new is to transactions which occurred after the hearing. This shows that the hon, gentleman strained to make a case against his old friends and against the Government of the day. Referring again to the remedial order, I would like, in support of what I: have said in regard to Sir John Thompson's attitude, to quote Sir John Thompson's language. In speaking in the House of Commons shortly before his death, he said:

But, with regard to the questions which come up in the appeal, the course of action has to be reversed; and while, as I admit we are perfectly responsible for everything that we will do, we have to be guided, in some degree at least, by the judicial rather than the political sense in ascertaining what the rights were of those who appeal, and how they should be dealt with, because those rights are entrusted to our safe-keeping by the constitution.

And again:

A motion which declares that we have assumed judicial functions, and that that is entirely inconsistent with ministerial responsibilities. Sir, I do not hesitate to affirm, as my belief and as true constitutional doctrine, that for everything a minister does, he is responsible to parliament, as well as to the people.

Sir John Thompson was willing to go over further than the hon, member for North Simcoe, for that hon. gentleman was willing to exculpate us from all our discretionary mistakes when acting as members of the Railway Committee. He was willing to admit that when sitting as members of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council of Canada, we were exercising judicial functions. So that, I think, if it were important-and with all respect to the hon. gentleman, I do not think at this stage it is important-an argument could be made, assisted by some of the hon. gentleman's own admissions, to show that in a very large sense the Government, on that occasion, had judicial functions and were bound to act in a judicial spirit. At any rate all we can claim is that we strove to act in a judicial and impartial spirit. It was for our whether we were countrymen to judge sincere or successful in our efforts. But for join issue with him and there I think we can ing that to-day, the sixteenth of July, after months, after the remedial order has been adopted since 19th March, the hon, gentleman has never challenged that remedial order? Has he ever exercised his rights and asked this House to condemn the Government for adopting the remedial order. If that remedial order be so bad and if he thinks the Government merited condemnation for it, how is it that the remedial order practically stands unattacked? We know that since the date of the remedial order three or four elections have taken place in three provinces; and out of three of these elections, not a man came to this Parliament who did not assume responsibility for the remedial order. Reference was made to the hon. member for Antigonish. Well, the hon. member for Antigonish. Well, the hon. member for Antigonish pledged himself up to the hilt to support the remedial order. He claimed that the Government had done nothing more than its duty and had no right to count on political support for having performed that duty. In the county of Haldimand, in the Protestant province of Ontario, the Secretary of State stood to win or lose on his responsibility as a party to the remedial order and gained a great victory. The hon, gentleman made another charge which, I think, was a small matter in connection with a debate of any importance; but as he made it, a reply is required, and I have a small answer which will completely dispose of his small point. He said that some affidavits reflecting on some parties had been printed in a blue-book, and that this blue-book was distributed throughout the country by the Government. Sir, I could not satiate the demand of the hon. gentleman himself for these books. He himself distributed more than his share, and was an applicant for them for the purposes of distribution. And it is to be said that in a great crisis, as he calls it, we are to be charged with distributing these slanders when he himself distributed more than his share ? When we are attacked, it is a comfort to know that the hon, gentleman shares the responsibility. The hon, gentleman, coming to a larger aspect of the question, said that separate schools were not guaranteed for Manitoba. That is where the Government cannot go the full length with the hon. gentleman. If he says that there is no guarantee in terms, if he says that the statute differs in that particular other statutory from enactments in the British North America Act, there will be no great quarrel; but if he wishes to conclude from those terms that there was not a substantial guarantee, that it was not intended the minority guarantee to their rights to separate schools in the province of Manitoba, there I am willing to make our case good indeed. We can refer, first of all, to history; we can refer to a discussion which went on similar lines to that which the hon, gentleman has forced upon this House on this occasion. We find that at the outset, before the Manitoba Act was considered, the people in Canada who were most anxious for that statutory guarantee in the British North America Act were the Protestants. I know, as a matter of fact, that the original draft of the British North America Act, under which the rights of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec, are guaranteed, was in the hand writing of Sir Alexander Galt, who I take it, was the representative of the Protestants of Quebec in those negotiations. As to the parties most interested at that time, I think there is no room for dispute. I could produce also documentary evidence to show that when the British North America Act was being considered in London, the parties most interested and who were induced to memorialize the delegates in order that this guarantee should be made absolutely certain and sufficiently included in the Act, were the Protestants of the province of Quebec, represented by a Protestant clergymen and by a committee for that purpose. When this question was under consideration in this Parliament, all these various views again came to the front; and in dealing with Manitoba, some hon. gentleman retaining the views of years before, but older and wiser, knowing the difficulties that would exist were there no protection for the minority in the province of Manitoba voted for the constitution as it stands, and the only thing furnishes a foothold for the hon. gentleman's argument, namely: the difference between a guarantee and what we say practically and fairly construed amounts to a guarantee, the Law Lords of the Privy Council have explained. Whether the Catholics or the Protestants were in the ascendant, it was believed that when the school system would be established in that province, in the early history of it, the numbers would be as well balanced that this Parliament could rely on justice being done to the minority, whatever it might be. Under those circumstances, Parliament on that occasion came to the wisest and best conclusion and framed the Act as it is now. No man, looking at the discussion in this House, as reported in the papers at that time, or having regard to the opinions of the fathers of the confederation or the advice given from time to time by the former leader of the Opposition, Mr. Mackenzie, by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and on an occasion long ago by the present leader of the Opposition, can fail to admit that it was intended by all concerned and by the country at large, with hardly a difference of opinion, as a substantial guarantee of the rights of the minority. the case would be precisely the same if they to their utterances. But when you had happened to be Protestants. I would come to what the Lord Chancellor said, we production of the state of the like to fortify my position by reference to the opinions of the Law Lords. And I would refer to the statements made by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Herschel, At page 198. Lord Herschel used this language:

I mean it is very difficult to shut one's eyes to the fact that at the time the Manitoba Act was passed—one is entitled to look at the circumstances-you had a Catholic and Protestant population nearly balanced; you had notoriously (for that you may certainly look at this legislation, and indeed it is common knowledge) the Catholic part of the population set upon separate schools for their denomination. It is with a view to the protection of rights of that sort that this legislation is passed. Practically, your contention would place Manitoba in a worse position for the Catholic minority, as it might be, or the Protestant minority, as it might be, in a position of less protection than you get in Ontario.

The hon, gentleman tells us that there was no guarantee. That has been settled. That is good language, if you like for the courts; but it is not the language for the high court of Parliament; that is not the kind of argument by which nations are made or preserved. At page 204, referring to the same point, the Lord Cancellor says:

Is it not conceivable legislation to say: We will trust to you, the provincial legislature, the power of dealing with education; but this is a question upon which there is known to be a keen feeling and a difference of opinion, and you are not to destroy any privileges or rights at the time of the union. Further than that, if you legislate within your powers, the minority shall not be without protection: there shall be then an appeal to a superior authority, the Governor General in Council, and, if he thinks that, within your powers, you have been depriving the minority of any right or privilege in relation to education, then he may express that decision, and effect shall be given to that decision, or may be given to that decision by the Dominion Parliament?

And at page 230, the Lord Chancellor says:

Is it so extraordinary, when you remember that this was an arrangement made as one of the terms on which the union was to be effected?

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman says the Lord Chancellor does not understand history. hon, gentleman argues that these were not the terms-

I mean to say, Mr. Mr. McCARTHY. Speaker, that the Lord Chancellor had not any evidence before him on that point, either one way or the other-it was not submitted.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think we will take it for granted that it would have been different if this had been presented by Mr. Ewart or Mr. Blake, who, forsooth, are quoted to-night as authorities, though they were counsel in the case, and The minority happens to be Catholic: but we asked to attach the greatest imortance are told we must not listen to it, we must not listen to what Lord Watson may say, for their duty was to say very little; and, so far as I have been able to understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) to say nothing that could possibly give comfort or strength to the minority in Manitoba. The hon, gentleman says that there is no evidence to support the Lord Chancellor when he asks that question:

Is it so extraordinary, when you remember that this was an arrangement made as one of the terms on which the union was to be effected?

There I am interrupted by the hon. member for North Simcoe. There the hon. member challenges the Lord Chancellor for his evidence, and no doubt in this connection arose the discussion about the bill of rights and the negotiations that took place. Lord Chancellor, however, says:

It would be shutting one's eyes to the most obvious facts which were exhibited on the face of the British North America Act itself, if one were not to see that one of the obstacles to this federation scheme was the fear of educational legislation in the separate or distinct provinces which might affect the position of those who desired a denominational education. That runs through all the provisions of section 93, and it appears to me to be on the face of section 22 also. Therefore, it is not extraordinary in that case to find limitations and safeguards and superior legislative power given to the Dominion Parliament, which represents the country as a whole. It does not strike me as extraordinary.

And the hon, gentleman would ask us to turn aside to settle nice subtelties of law, to study with him fine distinctions, to go over historical documents, but to pay no attention to the language of a judge which he was careful to use only as a judge should use it. The hon, gentleman says there was no evidence, but the Lord Chancellor finds his evidence on the face of the Act. To the Lord Chancellor the matter was plain which the hon, gentleman thinks is wrapped in a certain amount of mystery and about which, certainly, there is dispute. At page 276and I must ask the indulgence of the House while I give these authorities, because, to my mind, they answer far better than any argument I can conceive of the most important points made by the hon. member for Simcoe—the Lord Chancellor, in giving his reasons for the judgment said:

In their Lordship's opinions, the 2nd subsection is a substantial enactment, and is not designed merely as a means of enforcing the provision which precedes it.

And later on:

Those who were stipulating for these provisions of section 22 as a condition for the union, and those who gave their legislative assent to the Act by which it was brought about, had in view the perils then apprehended. The immediate adoption by the legislature of an educational system obnoxious either to Catholics or Protestants, would not be contemplated as possible. As has been already stated, the Roman Catholics and number. It was impossible at that time for either party to obtain legislative sanction to a scheme of education obnoxious to the other. The establishment of a system of public education in which both parties would concur, was probably then in immediate prospect. The legislature of Manitoba first met on the 15th of March, 1871. On the 3rd May following, the Education Act of 1871 received the Royal Assent. But the future was uncertain. Either Roman Catholics or Protestants might become the preponderating power in the legislature, and it might, under such conditions, be impossible for the minority to prevent the creation at the public cost of schools which, though acceptable to the majority, could only be taken advantage of by the minority on the terms of sacrificing their cherished convictions. Their change to a Roman Catholic system of public schools would have been regarded with as much distaste by the Protestants of the province as the change to an unsectarian system The was to the Catholics.

> Further, in his formal reasons for the judgments, at page 280, the Lord Chancellor savs:

> Bearing in mind the circumstances which existed in 1870, it does not appear to their Lordships an extravagant notion, that, in creating a legislature for the province with limited powers, it should have been thought expedient, in case either Catholics or Protestants became preponderant, and rights which had come into existence under different circumstances, were interfered with, to give the Dominion Parliament power to legislate upon matters of education, so far as was necessary to protect the Protestant or Catholic minority, as the case might be.

> So Lord Watson, on page 205, interprets it. I will not trouble the House with that, but merely say that Lord Macnachten, at page 232, uses language to the same effect. But let us go back now to the father of confederation, so to speak, as I think Lord Carnarvon was Colonial Secretary at the time the British North America Act was being considered in the English Parliament. Judge Fournier, in his decision, quoted Lord Carnarvon when discussing the main Act, and most members in this House will admit that for all practical purposes, for all purposes of legislation, for all considerations that ought to weigh here, there is no difference between the Manitoba Act and the British North America Act, and that if we wished to find the history of the Manitoba Act, it is necessary to study the history of the provisions in the main Act. Lord Carnarvon, in 1867, speaking in the House of Lords, said:

If the object of the clause is to secure to the religious minority of one province the same rights and privileges and protection which the religious minority of another province may enjoy, the koman Catholic minority of Upper Canada, the Protestant minority of the province of Quebec. and the Roman Catholic minority of the maritime provinces, will thus stand on a footing of entire equality. But, in the event of any wrong at the hand of the local majority, the minority have a right to appeal to the Governor General in Council, and may claim the application of any remedial law may be necessary from the central Par-Protestants in the province were about equal in liament of the confederation.

Now, I am not disputing the other point to which I may refer, that granting all that, it would remain for this Parliament to do as it pleased, in other words, this Parliament can do right or wrong—I would be willing to admit that so far as this case is concerned. We have power to do wrong. But to my mind I have never heard an argument. I certainly did not hear it to-day. which should weigh for a moment in the consideration of members of this House. that we did in this matter anything else than our duty; on the other hand, we should rather strive to act generously in keeping any faith that was pledged by this which this Parliament Parliament, and should regard as sacred. Now as to the real grievance on the part of the minority, I would like to refer again to the argument before the Law Lords. At page 39 Lord Watson said:

It may be, that after full consideration, and hearing the grievance out, we may come to be satisfied that there is no real grievance.

I refer to that, because it is important in connection with the hon, gentleman's argument. The court were of the opinion that they could have advised us to that effect, and the very fact that they were apprised of that, that they so viewed it, that they could come to a finding as to whether there was a grievance, should lend additional weight to the language they have used. On page 284 they state what in their opinion, constitutes a real and actual grievarce on the part of the Roman Catholic minority:

The sole question to be determined is whether a right or privilege which the Roman Catholic minority previously enjoyed, has been affected by the legislation of 1890. Their Lordships are unable to see how this question can receive any but Contrast the position of an affirmative answer. the Roman Catholics prior and subsequent to the Acts from which they appeal. Bafore these passed into law there existed denominational schools, of which the control and management were in the hands of Roman Catholics, who could select the books to be used and determine the character of the religious teaching. These schools received their proportionate share of the money contributed for school purposes out of the general taxation of the province, and the money raised for these purposes by local assessment was, so far as it fell upon Catholics, applied only towards the support of Catholic schools. What is the position of the Roman Catholic minority un-Schools of their own deder the Acts of 1890? nomination, conducted according to their views, will receive no aid from the state. They must depend entirely upon the contributions of the Roman Catholic community, while the taxes out of which state aid is granted to the schools provided for by the state, fall alike on Catholics and Protestants. Moreover, while the Catholic inhabitants remain liable to local assessments for school purposes, the proceeds of that assessment are no longer destined to any extent for the support of Catholic schools, but afford the means of maintaining schools which they regard as no more suitable for the education of Catholic children than if they were distinctly Protestant in their Manitoba Government have not said that.

character. In view of this comparison, it does not seem possible to say that the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority in relation to education which existed prior to 1890, have not been affected.

Then on page 286 they go on to say:

Their Lordships have decided that the Governor General in Council has jurisdiction, and that the appeal is well founded.

The appeal set out the grievance categorically as the basis of the appeal, and all the points which were included in the paragraph I have just read on page 284, are found again in the remedial order, and this is the language which induced the Privy Council of Canada to make that remedial order:

But the particular course to be pursued must be determined by the authorities to whom it has been committed by the statute. It is not for this tribunal to intimate the precise steps to be taken. Their general character is sufficiently defined Ly the 3rd subsection of section 22 of the Manitoba Act. It is certainly not essential that the statutes repealed by the Act of 1890 should be reenacted, or that the precise provisions of these statutes should again be made law. The system of education embodied in the Acts of 1890 no doubt commends itself to, and adequately supplies the wants of, the great majority of the inhabitants of the province.

Now comes very important language:

All legitimate ground of complaint would be removed if that system were supplemented by provisions which would remove the grievance upon which the appeal is founded, and were modified so far as might be necessary to give effect to these provisions.

Now, then, the Law Lords find there was a grievance, the member for Simcoe admits there was a grievance. The Law Lords state what the grievance was, state how to remove it. We have that from the highest judicial tribunal in the British Empire, and considering all the difficulties, and many of them have already been referred to sufficiently, the Privy Council in Canada, keeping closely to that judgment, induced His Excellency to approve of the remedial order. Now, mark you, this order is not directly challenged, no one condemns us for passing that in terms. An omnibus resolution, a side attack, can be made upon it, but no direct attack has been made upon Why, the leader of the Opposition has not hesitated to say that we used language too peremptory, too stern, too dictatorial. The hon, member for Simcoe caught up the idea and found fault with the manner in which the order was framed. None of them have ventured to say that any precedent could be found for drafting a document known as the statutory order, for the statute speaks of the order, speaks of direction, which should not be in the nature of a command. There is not a disrespectful word in the document from beginning to end. The Manitoba legislature and the arguments which are directed solely to the phraseology of the order. No man in his legal effect. senses will deny that every member of the Manitoba legislature knew exactly what this Government wanted, knew exactly the position of this Government, both as regards the order, which was technical, and the utterances which came to their ears time and again as to the intense desire, not as Canadians, that the whole question should be compromised and settled on the floors of the legislature of Manitoba. We all wish that every Catholic and Protestant-

and the second s

Mr. MARTIN. You took a strange way of showing it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. am prepared for that; I am dealing with that argument, if it can be dignified with that name. That complaint does not come from Manitoba. Where is the document to show we offended either the Government or the legislature? Is it to be found in the According to the hon. member answer? for Simcoe, it is explicit, it is determined. Ought we to have quarrels when the honmember for Simcoe as counsel for the Manitoba Government informed the Canadian Privy Council that no matter what order was passed they would defy? Ought we to have acted like children when we saw in the Speech from the Throne language that led to that conclusion? Ought we to have turned away from making every endeavour possibly to reach a friendly con-clusion because any particular individual has said what the course would be, what he thought of our action. Lawyers know, the hon. member for Winnipeg knows, that the greatest possible care had to be used in drafting that order, and had it not been explicit, had it not been a direction, had it not been firm, had it not been decisive, it would not have been worth the paper on which it was written. It would have been absolutely a complete abortion. No action could have been founded on it, no remedial legislation could have been passed on it, and those who have looked into the question and studied it know that it is at all events strong enough to be able to withstand up to the present date any assault that has been directed upon it either with regard to any particular line or as to the phraseology of the whole. It is common information, it is notorious what the attitude of the Government has been as regards the Manitoba legislature. We do not, however, the lines of the order. Technically they

That was left to the hon, gentlemen, who may be right. Technically it was for them are, politically speaking, in desperate straits, to answer back and to say: You have issued who have no desire to pacify, who have an order within your right, calling upon us no desire to preserve, apparently, anything, to do so and so; we will not comply with Their aim seems to me to tear down and your order. Now, having done that, we destroy. So far as this House is concerned, reply that we may find federal legislation and considering even the criticisms outside necessary instead of provincial legislation on of this House. I can afford to pass by those the subject. An issue has been reached, a step at all events has been taken-that is the But when gentlemen speak as members of the Manitoba Government did speak-and I have the language under my hand ready to refer to it if necessaryon the line as reported, and answering back said: we cannot comply with that order as given, and when a large and influential section of this country as represented by partisans, not as Conservatives, but as the press, and by men both political and nen-political but Canadians, had a feeling, an idea that it was quite possible that Manitoba would do something to settle this question, ardent advocate of remedial legislation as I was from the time when it was first considered by the Privy Council of Canada was of the opinion, and the Government was of the opinion, that we were bound, no matter what the political consequences might be, to exhaust even that hope, to sound everything in that direction, so that, to be frank with the House, when the time of action should come here we should have at our back not only those who were zealous or over zealous in the case, but have in support of remedial legislation the sound second thought of Canada, the middle mind, so to speak, and those not swerved by parties holding extreme views on one side or the other. We took this course so that when we act, to use the language of the Liberal leader, we shall be able to act with force, and because we believe we have not all that force at our back which we expect to be able to have; so we have called a halt for a time, to sound the Manitoba Government respectfully and in a most friendly manner and to exhaust every supposition that action will possibly be taken in that legislature. The hon. member for Simcoe does us the justice to say that the position is clear and the consequences are clear; and that there is no reason to believe that no action in that direction will be taken, then this Govern-ment in the next session of Parliament will be prepared to act, and I believe will be able to act with greater effect than if action were attempted at the present moment. I hesitate at this late hour, knowing that hon. gentlemen who are listening to me are familiar with everything I say on the subject, to go line for line over the argument of the hon, member for Simcoe. It is not because I have not the material. I hold the material in that blue-book. I followed the argument strange feature I think in the hon, gentle-but why he should argue at such length man's argument. The English blue-books centain Lord Lisgar's despatch (then Sir John Young), of the 29th April. It referred to the inclosure, and showed that this bill of rights did not correspond with bill No. 4. But the hon, gentleman did not state what seems to me an important fact in connection with that dispute—and I regard it simply as one of historical interest, as hon, gentlemen will see from the argument I have submitted-that the inclosure is a newspaper clipping from the Toronto "Globe" of 23rd April, 1870, and it is contained in a despatch of 29th April, 1870. This was not mentioned by the hon. member for Simcoe as a newspaper clipping; it was mentioned as an ir closure in a state document, and considering the strong evidence on the other side, not only that of Father Richot to whom reference was made, but that at a state trial which took place, this bill No. 4, was the bill there accepted as evidence-not entering into that-I merely mention that as one of the strongest features of the hon. gentleman's case and yet if fully presented it would seem to have not as much strength comparatively as might be supposed. Clearly that clipping could in no sense have been a careful copy of a state document, and a mistake may have arisen in that connection. Nevertheless the hon. gentleman said the English blue-book settled the whole question—the clipping of the "Globe" of 23rd April incorporated in the despatch of 29th April, set aside the evidence of Father Richot and all the documentary evidence on file in the Department of Justice. The hon, gentleman declared that there had been no demand made for separate schools. I will not go over my answer, but I will merely refer to it in this connection. That is disputed, but there is a statutory bargain, and it is upon the statute and not on the prior negotiations that I for one take my stand. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Mc-Carthy) said that if the Act of Parliament is definite that it would be conclusive. have already given his evidence to show that no matter how definite you make an Act of Parliament, it is not always considered as conclusive by him. Even in this case where there was a remedy provided by law, the hon, gentleman's argument was that no remedy should be given. I referred a moment ago to the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) as to whether that decision was mandatory or not, and later on he referred to whether this Parliament was bound by it. No one contends that Parliament is in the slightest degree fettered by what has taken place. All that has happened is the vesting of Parliament with certain jurisdiction and powers to go to a certain extent, and a certain extent only. But it was strange to me to hear the hon. gentleman, able and distinguished as he is, labouring with that part of the case. It may be the poor enforcement, or the non-inforce-to have done. For instance, there is a that I was not sufficiently well informed, in regard to the history of this Act under which the reference was made, I am at a loss to understand. Why, the statute itself settles the whole point; the hon. gentleman discussed, for in subsection 6 of 37 it says:

> The opinion of the court upon any such reference, although advisory only, or for the purpose of appeal to be taken, is final.

> That is the expressed provision and with the reason for that legislation I will not now The hour being late, I am further deal. hurrying, as the House will see, over the points as quickly as I can. The hon. gentleman spent a long time in an attack on the old system of separate schools in Manitoba as he called them. A great deal of what the hon, gentleman said might be admitted for the purpose of the point before us. great deal of what the hon. gentleman said was no doubt true in his own province in its earlier history under their system of legislation. I think that is the common experience. There had not been many years for the Act to operate. This, however, is my position: While strongly in favour of remedial legislation, and anxious to promote it in every efficient and effective way, I am in no sense committed to the system of separate schools. But, be they good or bad, we know that a very large and a very respectable and very influential part of the population, almost half the population of Canada, believe in that system. And that system having been discussed, was engrafted on the province of Manitoba, and under the decision of the Privy Council, and in the opinion of the Law Lords, that system ought to be maintained, not in its weakness and not with any blots. And the Catholics of Manitoba so far as I understand it—and I have followed the history of the case pretty well-have not insisted on any inefficient system being restored to them. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mc-Carthy) does not mean to say that we are bound to force on the province of Manitoba, if we attempt to act all the worst features of the old system. The hon, gentleman has referred to the draft Bill. It does not propose to revise those features of the old system which he condenms. None of the advocates of the rights of the minority are asking, for instance, to escape proper inspection.

> Mr. McCARTHY. What does the draft Bill eliminate?

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman knows as well as I do that the draft Bill eliminates all these points upon which he was able to put his finger connection with his attacks. except in what he called misgovernment. He referred chiefly to what seemed to him mal-administration, or misgovernment, and ment of the system. He has not attacked the school system in Ontario where the separate system obtains. The majority of the people of that province are proud of it. and are strengthening it and improving it every year. If it were necessary to enter on this question I believe that the minority could make a good case. For me, they need not go that far. For me it is sufficient to know or to believe, that a bargain was made. and a bargain being made, and it being part of the Canadian constitution, as a Conservative and as a Canadian I am willing to die for that, either politically or in any other way. I am ready to join with friends to my right, or to my left, or in front of me, ready to join hands with any loyal Canadians in maintaining each and every part of the Canadian constitution. It is in that cause that the present Government are now absolutely committed, and into that fight they will go with as stout hearts as men ever went into a political or any other battle. That, as I understand it, is the position of the Canadian Government. We may be right or we may be wrong in regard to what the substantial guarantee involves, but if time permitted (and perhaps on another occasion time will permit) I would refer with pleasure and with pride to the utterances of my old chieftain Sir John Macdonald, to that father of confederation, and to the utterances of every great public man, Liberal or Conservative, that Canada has produced. Every man who has had experience in the hon, gentlemen who have something to say government of the confederation or of the upon a question that interests them very older provinces, every man whose name has come down in our history. I am happy to know and believe are on record, as being in favour of separate schools, or when not in favour of separate schools they were in favour of a compromise such as was made in the old Canadas, and which was of such great importance to those two provinces. All these great men of our history are in favour of the bargain that was made with the minority, the undefined minority so to speak in Manitoba. Were these men living to-day, they would be found doing their utmost to see that good faith is carried out with that minority. I have confidence, that after those preliminary skirmishes are over on this question, and when our political opponents have got all the capital that may perhaps be fairly due to them in any difficulty that may surround the Government: I have abiding faith that when the time for action does come, the policy as enunciated by the leader of this Government will be supported by them, with as much zeal as by many hon, gentlemen who sit behind me. I know that in the Conservative party there are those who do not see eye to eye with the Government. All the greater regret, for the sake of the great cause. No one has hesitated to admit that these difficulties exist; and I am for that reason more rejoiced than ever that there is a Government that is able, under these trying circumstances, while differing with some of its friends, to stake its reputation and its standing in a great cause. While I do not profess to be a profound student of Canadian history. I do claim to be an ardent Canadian and an ardent student of our country's history; and with all my reading and with all the information I have been able to obtain, ever since this question was launched, properly or improperly, upon the thoughts of Canadians, I cannot conceive of a greater cause to struggle for-I cannot conceive of a cause in which our national reputation is more involved than in the cause of the minority, be it Catholic or Protestant, in Manutoba; but above and beyond all that, in the cause and for the sake of the Canadian constitu-

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Mr. Speaker.—

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend is rising to speak: but, after having received information as to the number who are anxious to speak, and who have very strongly preferred their request that they should not be obliged to speak at this hour, after our very late session of last night. I have come to the conclusion that perhaps it is better not to press the matter too strongly. anxious, as I am sure all men in this House are, to have our deliberations concluded and our work done, so that we may go home as soon as possible. At the same time, I do not want to press too strenuously upon much. Therefore, while consenting to an adjournment, which my hon, friend has asked to be allowed to move. I wish to press upon the House the necessity of our coming to a vote on this matter by six o'clock tomorrow afternoon if it is at all possible.

I move the adjourn-Mr. LaRIVIERE. ment of the debate.

Mr. LAURIER. I would suggest to my hon, friend that perhaps it would be more advisable to resume this debate at eight o'clock to-morrow night.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we must go on in the afternoon.

I think perhaps the Mr. McCARTHY. House will tolerate me if I make an answer to the personal attack which the hon. Minister of Justice thought fit to launch upon me in his opening observations. Sir, it is a poor cause—and the hon. gentleman must have thought his cause a poor one-that requires to be sustained by personal vituperation and abuse. I do not think I said one word from beginning to end in the rather long and I daresay tedious speech I delivered to this House, that could be considered by any hon, member as offensive; certainly I did not intend to do so; and for the hon. gentleman to get up and tell me in the presence of this House that I was taking a position that was unwarranted. by reason of my professional connection with the Manitoba Government, was, I venture to say, refer to the debate that is before the House unjust, unparliamentary and without one on a motion to adjourn. vittle of justification. Sir. my right here I know perfectly well. When the hon, gentleman can find a precedent to show that the professional connection which I have had on two different occasions with the Manitoba Government—one in defending the constitutional Act of 1890 before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which is not now in question, and another, in appearing to oppose the passage of the remedial order -in the slightest degree disqualified me from speaking and acting-

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask the hon, gentleman whether these were the only two occasions on which he advised the Manitoba Government?

Mr. McCARTHY. When the hon, gentleman has a right to interrogate me. Sir. I shall be perfectly willing to answer. I am not called upon here to disclose my professional conduct nor my professional dealings with any man or any Government. What I have done. I have done publicly and openly: and it was perfectly well known what my atritude was on this question before I spoke temper. to the hon, gentleman as one of the members of the Privy Council here. The hon. gentleman perfectly well knows that I took part in the discussion on this very question which took place in this House two or three years ago. If the hon, gentleman will consult the practice, he will find that we have here no such rule as they have in England. But even in England, Sir-and I am quite willing to stand by the most extreme! view of parliamentary practice—the late Attorney General, the present Lord Chief Justice, then Sir Charles Russell, and the Attorney General at the time, Sir Richard Webster, both took part in the debate upon the Parnell Commission, in connection with which both had been engaged professionally. and. I suppose, what they could do without remonstrance and without rebuke, I was perfeetly right in doing. But from a gentleman who occupies the position of Minister of Justice in this House, from one of his name, the last thing to be expected was an attack of that kind upon me. The history of Canada has been disgraced by the connections of the hon, gentleman and by their conduct from first to last-

Mr. MONTAGUE. Order. That is not a personal explanation.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not confined to a personal explanation. I am speaking on a motion to adjourn.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman rose to make a personal explanation, and while he did so I sat quiet. But if he is speaking on a motion to adjourn. I raise the point of order that he cannot refer to a past debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, member can

Mr. McCARTHY. I should have thought that the babies of the House knew that: I thought every one who was here a week understood that. It ill-becomes that hon, gentleman, I say, to taunt me, after my experience in public life, with having come here subsidized or in any way influenced by what has occurred in my professional proceedings. If I were to suggest that the hon, gentleman, sitting in Council year after year, votes to his own father $2.000 which the statute does not warrant, what justification could be offer for it? I desire to keep free from this kind of discussion; but I wish that hon, gentleman, as well as other hon. gentlemen in this House, to know that I am able to take care of and protect myself when I am assailed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think the House would have considered my attack far more unfair and unjust if the hon. gentleman had been contented with dealing with the remarks which I have made, instead of giving way to such a deplorable

Some hon, MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Certainly it was deplorable, when the hon, gentleman was induced to utter the most miserable insinuation against a gentleman with whom he was always closely allied while that gentleman was a member of this House, and with whom he co-operated on every possible occasion. The hon, gentleman was surely in a temper when he was induced to villify by insinuation that absent man, and to resort to such an extraordinary exhibition of temper when he cited the case of my voting a salary to Sir Charles Tupper, my father. The present Government in England have to learn from this most potent, grave, and reverend seignor, who talks about childish ignorance, because, as I understand it, there are several relatives in that Government who have to vote salaries for each other. But, to come back to the point which disturbed the hon. gentleman. He did not think it was wrong to refer to Mr. Ewart as being influenced in giving his views to the committee of the Privy Council of Canada by the fact of his having been associated, professionally, for so long a time in this case. He deemed it an important point in his argument on that occasion to prove that that gentleman had been, for a long time, identified with the cause he was then advocating. What I have said with reference to the hon, gentleman's position, I am able to prove. He admits that he has acted in this matter as the paid advocate of the Manitoba Government, but he says this is a personal attack, and he becomes irate. The conscience of the hon, gentleman must have some effect. I say he cannot find that any leading member of the British House of Commons ever took the part the hon, gentleman is taking in a discussion of his client's case, or brought the case of his client before the House of Commons. So that, instead of accepting the challenge, he resorted to what I consider a deplorable exhibition of temper. Let me, however, give him some authority for my statement. He referred to Sir Charles Russell, and Sir Richard Webster. So did I. He forgot that I told this House that the circumstances in their case were plain, so as to bring them outside of the rule which it is not considered decent to violate in the English Parliament. hon, gentleman has evidently not studied carefully this part of parliamentary very For his benefit, I will refer him to the very case—the case of Sir Charles Russel and Sir Richard Webster. They had been connected with a parliamentary commission, professionally, and they made They did not move motions: speeches. they did not advocate action by the House in anything like the sense the hon, gentleman is moving now. They were discussing the report of the commission, or something incidental, and here is what was said:

Mr. McNEILL. The Lord Chancellor of the day was Lord Chelmsford, and in the debate to which I am referring, the mover said it was well known that it was the practice of Lord Chelmsford, while he was at the bar, to take no part in any proceedings in the House in which he was professionally concerned out of it; and, on the other hand, he would never act as advocate out of the House in any case in which he had been professionally concerned within its walls.

I hope the hon, gentleman is listening. Sir Richard Webster, instead of claiming that he was exercising his undoubted rights in making a few remarks on the matter, said it was an entirely different case from what the hon, gentleman has atteputed to declare in this House. He explained:

I believe, from my study of the question, that you. Mr. Speaker, have laid down the correct rule—that the Standing Orders of this House, and the rules which govern men apart from Standing Orders, forbid any member bringing forward or supporting in this House any measure for the purpose of obtaining a fee or reward.

I ask the hon, gentleman to read that, because he put a great deal of reliance on the standing order in Parliament differing from our standing order.

And further than that, I think no hon. member should, in his capacity as a member of this House, advocate afterwards any case in respect of which he has received fee or reward.

On two occasions the hon, gentleman tells us that he has received fees, and gave me what I considered a very impertment answer.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I withdraw that if it is unparliamentary. But the hon, gentleman gave me, certainly, an answer not worthy of himself or this House. He referred to Sir Richard Webster's as an example for his course, and I am giving him Sir Richard Webster's language of 1893, in the incident of which the bon, gen-Sir referred. Charles tleman Russell charged with making an observation in that debate, and the Attorney General deemed it a matter which was not to be dealt with flippantly. Sir Charles Russell dealt with it as its importance and his dignity required. I need not press home; I am sure now of my point in making the charge and the statement. My object was to minimize all that heat of argument and sham eloquence of the hon, gentleman, and to remove the impression from this House and the country that the hon, gentleman was acting solely from patriotic motives. The rule in England is that a man in the House of Commons must be above suspicion and when advising the House as to policy, it must be considered there is no outside influence of any kind at work. I did not say the hon, gentleman was doing anything My whole argument was dishonourable. that he was doing what the Parliament in England would not tolerate, and what would weaken his position in this House and country on the Manitoba school question. Sir Charles Russell, being charged with having taken part in the discussion, said:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

I wish the House to be put in possession of the exact facts of the case. On the occasion referred to by the right hon, gentleman, a motion was brought before the House by my right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in which he impugned, in certain respects to which I will not refer, the conduct of my hon, and learned friend, the member for the Isle of Wight (Sir Richard Webster). On that occasion I took no part whatever in the debate. I said I would take no part in the discussion, and I absented myself from the House. I found in the reports of the papers next day that a statement had been made by my hon. and learned friend which was considered a matter of moment on the point raised as to my hon, and learned friend's conduct, which was that he had handed to me and to my right hon. friend, the present Home Secretary, with whom I was associated, a particular letter on a particular day.

Now he goes on:

I find I used the language referred to by the leader of the Opposition, in which I said:

I regret to say I still think that the conduct of the case has been practically unfair to the defendants.

That was his observation, and Sir Richard Webster, pressing him with a violation of a particular rule, said: "The proceedings were pending," to which Sir Charles Russell answered:

Of course the proceedings were pending. The House will, therefore, see that what I was doing on that occasion was not initiating a discussion or taking part in a debate, but, after the debate was over, setting right a mistake which had been made, and showing that a statement which affected me and my learned friend, the Home Secretary, was, in fact, incorrect.

Now, Sir Henry James—and I think he is a good authority on questions concerning the etiquette of the English Bar of the British House of Commons, said:

But I am disposed to take a somewhat generous view of this rule. The object of the rule, no doubt, was that a person should not advocate the same cause in this House for which he had received fee or reward out of it.

Whether that is pleasant to the hon, gentleman or not, I made the point fairly in debate, and will make it when I have the opportunity, for he cannot take people by the beard, he cannot ride rough-shod over the people of this country and declaim about the rights of either the minority or the majority, without having to admit that for a large portion of his eloquence and a larger portion of the study he has given to the question, he has been well paid by the client whose cause he is pleading. I make the point in fair debate with the best precedents, and I stand by the position I have taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it would be just as well, perhaps, that the House and the country should understand that whether the hon, member for North Sincoe (Mr. McCarthy) was or was not the paid advocate in his professional capacity of the Manitoba Government, it is tolerably well known that the hon, gentleman is remaining here at a great sacrifice of remunerative professional engagement for the purpose of doing what he considers, rightly or wrongly, to be his duty That, I think, may be fairly set against the very ungenerous and uncalled-for attack that the Minister of Justice has made upon him

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to add some further remarks to the very case that the Minister of Justice brought up to prove that the hen, member for North Simcoe was wrong in the attitude he has assumed. If the hon, gentleman had read fully the debate from the "Hansard" with regard to that case, he would have been able to read the decision of the Speaker in direct opposition to what he has quoted, and he would have seen that the quotation from Sir Richard Webster means exactly the opposite of what he stated it to mean. What was the case? Mr. Conybeare, brought before the attention of the Attorney General, at that time Sir Charles Russell, the question of a member of the House having been engaged in a criminal prosecution, and whether that member was at liberty to engage in a discussion in the House with regard to that case. The Attorney General was inclined to think that the member was not entitled to engage in that discussion and so expressed himself. McNeill then inquired whether the proposed amendment was not in distinct contravention of the rule of the House:

He referred to the rule of 22nd June, 1888, which laid it down as derogatory to the dignity of the House for any of its members to bring forward, promote, or advocate in the House any proceeding or resolution in which he might have acted or been concerned for or in consideration of any pecuniary fee or reward.

And then he went on to make some further remarks. Then the Speaker being thus appealed to by Mr. McNeill gave his clear decision. I will read that decision, and the House will see that the rules referred to have no reference to a case of this kind, and they will see what they do refer to:

Mr. SPEAKER. As I have been appealed to, I am bound to express an opinion on the subject; but the hon, gentleman has not given me much time to consider it. There are two resolutions of this House dealing with the question. One was passed in the year 1830, and the other in 1838. In the year 1830 it was alleged that members of this House promoted, for pecuniary reward, private Bills in which they were professionally interested, and a resolution was passed forbidding any member, by himself or by his partner, to promote in this House private Bills in which he was engaged. In the year 1858 another allegation was made, namely, that that rule had been evaded, and that members of this House, in taking up cases, were really paid for advocating those cases in the House, and a very stringent resolution was passed, which by the leave of the House, I will read: "It is contrary to the usage and derogatory to the dignity of this House that any of its members should bring forward, promote or advocate in this House any proceeding or measure in which he may have acted or been concerned for or in consideration of any pecuniary fee or reward."

Some hon, MEMBERS. Hear, hear,

Mr. MARTIN. He quotes the rule; he then goes on to apply the rule to the case in question.

Mr. WALLACE. Apply it to this case.

Mr. MARTIN. I will, presently,

The House will see that was strictly confined to the cases in which a member, in his public capacity, as a member of Parliament, advocated a particular personal cause, or promoted any case and received a pecuniary reward for so doing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman has left out a part.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon gentleman will surely give me an opportunity to make my point.

That, I think, is the distinction. I cannot, therefore, say that it is contrary to the rules of this House for any member who has been engaged in a criminal case, to engage in this House on a subsequent occasion in a debate relating to the same case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon, gentleman will not object to my pointing out that strangely enough the "Hansard" does not read as the hon, gentleman has read. And the hon, gentleman reads what is not here in "Hansard" at all.

Then if I go on and read, just as the hon. say a word from a favourable point of view. gentleman did, what Sir Richard Webster

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In fairness to me, as both the hon. member for North Simcoe and myself are being criticised, will the hon, gentleman allow me to read what is in the "Hansard," and is not in the "Times," in the Speaker's de-

Mr. MARTIN. I think it would be better for me to continue my remarks and let the hon, gentleman speak again if he desires to do so.

TUPPER. CHARLES HIBBERT Sir The hen, gentleman knows that I have no right to speak again.

Mr. MARTIN. Sir Richard Webster goes on in these words, which are in "Hausard," and which the hon. Minister read:

I shall not, of course, introduce into this discussion the slightest element of personal consid-But my recollection does not quite aceration. cord with that of my hon, and learned friend. If that applies to my hon, and learned friend, the Attorney General, it applies, unquestionably, to the hon, and learned member for York, to the hon, and learned member for a Scotch constituency, and to some others who made speeches in this House while the proceedings were pending, and with reference to matters which must have come, to a certain extent, to their knowledge as counsel in the case. If I may humbly say so, I believe, from my study of the question, that you, Mr. Speaker, have laid down the correct rule—that the Standing Orders of this House, and the rules which govern men apart from Standing Orders, forbid any member bringing forward or supporting in the House any measure for the purpose of obtaining a fee or reward.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And

Mr. MARTIN. And further—

That is the letter and the spirit of the understanding which should actuate members of my own profession and all other members.

TUPPER. CHARLES HIBBERT There again "Hansard" differs.

Mr. MARTIN. What does Sir Henry James say? The hon. Minister of Justice has no right to interrupt me in this way. Sir Henry James says:

I do not know whether there is any question before the House, and, therefore, whether I am in order in saying one word on a question which affects both persons and our profession. As regards the point of order, I would really suggest that there be no question raised on this matter. I will, if I may, show how little the rule that has been read, applies. Suppose I, as the counsel who had prosecuted James Egan, had stood by the side of the Home Secretary and said I thought there would be no impropriety in his bringing a fair discretion in that case, would I be shut out from expressing that opinion by virtue of this rule? And, if it would be improper

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Mr. MARTIN. I have the London "Times." point of view, it would be equally out of order to

Now, what is the principle that lies at the back of all this? What was the object of these rules passed by the House of Commons in England? The object was to prevent a member of Parliament from using his position to promote a thing he had been paid to promote. Would the hon. Minister of Justice suggest for a moment that the hon. member for North Simcoe made the remarks he did to this House because he had been paid by the Manitoba Government to do so? The hon, member for North Simcoe has a reputation in this country so far as these matters are concerned which will not be effected by any attacks of that kind by the hon. Minister of Justice. Suppose a case: Mr. Christopher Robinson has been counsel for the Manitoba Government in this matter. Suppose he should become Minister of Justice in the Government of the Dominion; suppose afterwards a question on the same lines as this came before this Parliament :--would Christopher Robinson a Minister of Justice, bound to defend his Government, bound to lay down the law on behalf of his Government, be precluded from doing so because at some time in the past he had received remuneration from the province of Manitoba in connection with this litigation? The whole attack is absurd, it is most ridiculous, it is appealing to a rule which was laid down for a purpose which the Minister of Justice would not dare to charge upon the hon, member for North Simcoe. I agree with the just indignation which has been shown by the hon, member for North Simcoe on account of this most uncalled-for attack, and I believe the best opinion on both sides of this House agrees in resenting the attack that was made upon him by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. DALY. I am sure the House has been very much edified by the warmth shown by the hon. member for Winnipeg. He stands upon the same platform with the hon. member for Simcoe as he stood in Portage la Prairie in 1889, when he started this unfortunate trouble.

Mr. MARTIN. That has nothing to do with it.

It has a great deal to do Mr. DALY. with it, because the hon. gentleman has exhibited a considerable amount of warmth in the defence of his friend from North Simcoe. Now, to be fair to the Minister of Justice, it is only right that I should read from the English "Hansard" what the Now, this is official: Speaker did say.

To say that any man who has been engaged in a criminal case is not to engage in this House on a subsequent occasion in a debate relating to the same case, I cannot, because as far as the rules of this House are concerned I do not think it is contrary to them. I can quite understand that it would be highly improper for any member to to discuss the prerogative of mercy from a hostile take part in a discussion here on a case in which he was concerned, and which was still undecided; but after the case had been decided, then there might be information at his disposal which could be usefully supplied for the conduct of the debate. I am not about to set my opinion against that of the judges of the land, or to say that it is contrary to, or in accordance with, professional etiquette for any member of this House to make use of facts or information which have been gained by him either for or against a case. The House will therefore see, on the point of order, that I cannot stand in the way of the hon. gentleman to whom reference has been made, bringing on this matter; but at the same time I shall leave it to the legal profession to decide whether it is contrary to legal etiquette for hon. and learned members to take part in a debate under the circumstances.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR. As you, Mr. Speaker, have ruled that it is a question of legal etiquette, may I again press the hon. and learned gentleman as to whether it is not the fact that, 'pendente lite,' and before the decision of the commission, he intervened in the debate, and used these words with regard to my hon. and learned friend who sits near me (Sir R. Webster): "I did think that the conduct of the case had been unfair to the defendants." I must again press him for his views on that point in the light of the answer he gave to the question of the hon. member for Camborne.

Sir CHARLES RUSSELL. If the right hon, gentleman will tell me what was the occasion on which the language was used, I will answer his question. I have no reason to doubt the entire accuracy of what I have said. When the statement to which the right hon, gentleman refers was made, as he says, 'pendente lite,' there was no 'lis perders'; and there is an entire absence of analogy between that case and this case. Although strongly provoked, I abstained from taking part in the debate on the occasion referred to.

Then Sir Richard Webster says:

I think no hon, member should in his capacity as a member of this House, advocate afterwards any case in respect of which he has received fee or reward.

Then Sir Charles Russell said:

I wish the House to be in possession of the exact facts of the case. I have now referred to "Hansard," and find that my recollection was strictly accurate.

Then Sir Henry James, whom the hon. gentleman was quoting, says:

The object of the rule no doubt was that a person should not advocate the same cause in this House for which he had received fee or reward out of it. Although my hon, and learned friend the Attorney General has said that there was no litigation in respect of the Parnell Commission, there certainly was a proceeding which comes within the terms of Lord Hotham's rule, and I am not disclosing any confidence when I say—for I have mentioned in this House before—that I felt that fact so strongly, that after the determination of the proceedings, and after the report had been made, and when the matter came up for discussion before this House, I appealed to the present Attorney General, and I offered him that if he and all the other counsel, the Home Secretary and the members for Dumfries and York would abstain from discussing that proceeding in which they had been engaged I and the late Attorney General would also abstain. My hon. and learned friend clung to his right, for reasons I do not complain of, and I am sorry to say the House on that occasion had to listen to six learned counsel who had been in the case. But I wish to say this is a question entirely for the consideration of the hon. and learned gentleman who brings forward this amendment. If he thinks, after taking advice from those who act with him, that he will not bring to bear upon the discussion any question which will have an influence cast into it by his being professionally retained in the case, then he is within his right in bringing forward this amendment.

But the report of the "Hansard" is entirely different to the one the hon, gentleman has read from the "Times," and bears out the contention that was made by the Minister of Justice in his reply. Now, here is the rule laid down by May, at page 82:

A member is accordingly incapable of practising as counsel before the House or any committee. By resolution, 26th February, 1830, members of the House of Commons are prohibited from engaging, either by themselves or by a partner, in the management of private bills before this or the other House of Parliament, for pecuniary reward. Nor is it consistent with parliamentary or professional usage for a member to advise as counsel upon any private bill or other proceedings in Parliament.

Mr. CASEY. The hon, gentleman has done great service for the cause of good government by reading that last quotation from May. He has put the whole case in a nutshell. This rule is intended to prevent members from practicing before the Private Bills Committees.

would ask the Minister of Justice to turn his attention to the real meaning of the rule, which is to prevent members of this House from promoting Bills before committees of this House. Sir. I remember—the hon, gentleman does not, he was not here at the time, nor in politics at all—when the chairman of a Private Bills Committee, a gentleman on that side of the House, had to step down and out of the chair because he was concerned in the promotion of a Bill then before the committee. The older members of the House will remember the case to which I refer. The rule laid down in the quotation just made from May, is intended to prevent members profiting by their position as members of this Let me also point out that my hon. House. friend the Minister of the Interior was mistaken when he supposed that the English " Hansard" was official. The English "Hansard" is not an official publication.

Mr. DALY. It is as official as the "Times."

that I felt that fact so strongly, that after the determination of the proceedings, and after the report had been made, and when the matter came up for discussion before this House, I appealed to the present Attorney General, and I offered him that if he and all the other counsel, the Home Secretary and the members for Dumfries and York would abstain from discussing that proceeding, in which they had been engaged, I and it is taken, is an absurdity that only a very young member of the House would have fallen into. I am not astonished at the Minister of Justice, or the Minister of the Interior falling into that mistake. My hon. friend from Winnipeg is even a younger member than they are, but with his four years' experience, he knows better than that, and was able to teach a lesson to the Minister of Justice and the Minister of the Interior on a question of parliamentary procedure.

Now, to pretend that in this country where questions of constitutional law are being argued all the time before the courts, no counsel who has had the good fortune to be employed on a case could ever speak in this House on that case afterwards, is an absurdity worthy of the source from which it comes. To pretend that counsel who are eminent enough to get charge of such cases, must never afterwards speak of them in the House of Commons, is a contention that may well befit a beginner, a gentleman as youthful in the legal profession as the hon. Minister of Justice. But when he applies that contention to a man of ten times his eminence in the profession, of twenty times his eminence in the House, he is doing himself all the injury that he can. Now, I am glad this point has been discussed, I am glad it has been settled out of the mouth of the friend of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daly), to whom he handed that rule in May to be read for reference. I am glad it is settled out of his own mouth, that the rule of the English House of Commons does not apply to this case at all. I am glad this question has been settled because it does not concern this particular debate but the principle of debate in this House, and I hope that attention having been called to it, a stop will be put to the practice of the promotion of private Bills by members and even by Ministers before committees of the House.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 17th July, 1895.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the House to assent to the following motion:—

Mr. CASEY.

That for the remainder of the session two sittings be held, one each day commencing at 10 o'clock and continuing until 1.30, and the other commencing at 3 o'clock and continuing till the hour of adjournment.

The committees have finished their work, and I imagine all the members are anxious to close the House as speedily as possible. I hope there will be no objection to this motion.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not prepared to give my assent to this motion just now. There is a matter of which I have privately spoken to the leader of the House, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow the motion to stand.

Mr. FOSTER. I will let it stand for the time being.

ST. PETER'S CANAL.

Mr. CASEY (for Mr. Fraser) asked, Has the attention of the Government been directed to the following editorial in the North Sydney "Herald" of June 26th, 1895, headed "St. Peter's Canal," in which among other things it is stated: "It may be that before letting this latter contract the officers of the department having this work in charge have not been sufficiently careful in their examination of the conditions of the work. This may become a matter for the Government to deal with." If so, what do the Government propose doing in the matter? 2. When will the St. Peter's Canal be opened for traffic?

Mr. HAGGART. The attention of the Government was called to the article in the North Sydney "Herald," for the first time by this inquiry. The facts are that the superintending engineer took every care in the examination of the condition of the lock, before an appropriation for the rewas asked for. Diver Sutherland thoroughly examined into the condition of the lock and gates in June 1892, and again in October, 1893, on which occasions he reported the wooden floor as destroyed, and the gates badly eaten by the teredo (a sea worm), but to be doubly sure, and to fully test the report, the superintending engineer subsequently employed Diver James Simpson to examine the lock and especially the gates, and he fully corroborated Sutherland's statement in every essential particular, so that it will be observed great care was taken to ascertain the condition of the lock and gates before the letting of the con-tract for the work of repairs. The contractor failed to carry the work through to completion, and it is being done by the Government by days' labour, at his expense. Owing to the contractor failing to complete the work, delay necessarily arose in prose-cuting it, but it is hoped the canal will be open for traffic some time in August proximo.

ROAD AT FENELON FALLS.

Mr. CASEY (for Mr. Edgar) asked, Has the Government received any conveyance of, or any written authority to fill up the short street or road in the village of Fenleon Falls, which lead from Colborne Street to the steamboat landing at the entrance to the locks? If yes, by whom was the conveyance or written authority given or signed? What was its date, and what was the consideration paid by the Government?

Mr. HAGGART. The Government have not received any conveyance or written authority to fill up the old road in the village to Fenelon Falls, but as soon as the Government's attention was drawn to the fact of the contractors when building the lock, had left debris on the road, orders were given the superintending engineer to level and grade the road.

VACANCY IN THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. CASEY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the leader of the House and the House to a question I have put before in another form without obtaining any reply. The question is, how and when do the Government intend to fill the portfolio of the Minister of Agriculture? I have before me a very prominent organ, which speaks more particularly for the farmers than any other paper in Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to conclude his remarks with a morion?

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps Mr. Speaker will permit me to continue.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman may, with the indulgence of the House, ask why the place has not been filled, but he cannot make a speech.

Mr. CASEY. If you rule so now it is all right, but you have never ruled so before, under similar circumstances.

Mr. SPEAKER. Oh, yes; I have always ruled that way.

The farmers are very ex-Mr. CASEY. cited about this matter, as stated in the organ of theirs which I have here, but which I cannot quote from now. I think myself that this portfolio should be filled, especially at this season of the year, and that the department should no longer be left in the hands of irresponsible parties, such as the director of the dairy industry and the director of the Experimental Farm.

Mr. FOSTER. I can inform my hon. friend that the department is not left in irresponsible hands. It has been administered by a member of the Government,-

Mr. CASEY. Who?

Mr. FOSTER-and my hon. friend (Mr.

the Government, and in their good-will towards the interests of the farmers, to allow them the time they consider necessary, in the use of their own judgment, to make this appointment.

The statement is made in Mr. CASEY. Conservative papers that it will not be filled until next session.

THE DROUTH IN ONTARIO.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have a letter from a valued correspondent in the county of Grey, telling me of the terrible effects of the dry weather on the pastures and on hay. He says that the pasture is entirely destroyed, and that it is almost impossible for the farmers to keep their cattle. have been obliged to import hay, and they are forced to pay very high freight rates for it on the railroads. My correspondent has urged upon me to bring this matter to the attention of the Government, in order to see if it is possible to get the Government to use their influence with the railway companies, so that the commodities required to keep cattle from starving might be carried in at cheaper rates than they now pay. From Toronto to Durham, from which place the complaint is made, where the hay is required, they are now obliged to pay 17 cents per 100 pounds for freight, and other products are charged in like high proportion. I would urge upon the Government that they should do something with the railway compamies so as to afford these people better facilities for getting in hay and other pro-ducts to keep their cattle from starving. We have given seed grain and made other concessions to people, and I hope the Government will take this matter into their serious consideration, so as to, if possible, alleviate the distress which prevails. correspondent further tells me that in some localities they have been obliged to cut down trees in order to allow the cattle some opportunity of feeding and sustaining themselves. I hope that Mr. Speaker, and the House, will pardon me for bringing up this matter, as it is, perhaps, the last opportunity I will have of calling the attention of the Ministers to it this session. The Government will have an opportunity in the meantime of making inquiries, and if they find the condition as my correspondent describes, and my correspondent is a very reliable and respectable man, I hope they will take some steps to relieve the difficulties, and the privations and the excessive railway charges which our farmers labour under.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government has heard with regret the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) that we are to be deprived of his presence in this Chamber. and that this is the last time he will have an opportunity of bringing such an important matter before the House. The Government also sympathizes with the farmers who Casey) will have to repose faith enough in suffer affliction from the drouth, and in so far as the powers of the Government warrant, they feel inclined to give very respectable and considerate attention to the subject mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I appreciate the kindness of the hon. Minister. I meant that it was the last time I might have an opportunity this session. I can inform him that I will not have to run away from my county, nor go over a bridge to another county.

SUPPLY—THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply, and the motion of Mr. McCarthy in amendment thereto.

Mr. Lariviere, Mr. Speaker, after the exhaustive speeches that we have heard yesterday, there is very little left to say on the legal part of the question now before the House, as raised by the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I will, however, try to give as brief a history as I can of the whole question, as it has occurred in the province which I have the honour and pleasure to represent in this House. The schools in Manitoba were established in the earliest days of the existence of that country as a colony. When Lord Selkirk attempted to colonize the Red River Valley, his first care was to procure missionaries and to provide education for the children of those who had become inhabitants of that country. population then, besides the Indians, was composed of the employees of the two respective companies that had been trading in Western Canada, and of the descendants of those employees. But none of them were properly called settlers until the noble lord made an attempt to create a colony, which although not perhaps successful at the start, has been the nucleus of the population of the province of Manitoba to-day. As early as the year 1818, at the request of Lord Selkirk, the Bishop of Quebec. Mons. Plessis, sent missionaries to the Red River Valley, in order to establish missions there, and also to provide for the education of their children. The first missionaries were the Rev. Messrs. Provencher and Dumoulin, and part of their instructions were as follows :-

The missionaries will take particular care of Christian education among children, and for this they will establish schools and catechisms in all localities they have occasion to visit.

Further on in their instructions we read:

The missionaries will establish their home in Fort Douglas (now a part of the city of Winnipeg), on the Red River; will build a church, a house, and a school.

Upon starting on their long journey, these reverend gentlemen were provided with a letter of recommendation from His Excellency Sir John Cope Sherbrooke, who was then Captain General, and Governor General eral in and over the province of Upper and Lower Canada, and commander of His Majesty's forces therein. That letter is as follows:—

To all whom these presents shall come:

Whereas the Reverend Joseph Norbert Provencher, Severe-Joseph Nicholas Dumoulin and Guillaume Etienne Edge have been appointed by the Most Reverend Bishop of Quebec to proceed as missionaries to the Red River and adjacent Indian territories, there to disseminate the Christian religion and to afford to the inhabitants the benefit of the rites thereof, now know ye that, being desirous of furthering so pious and useful a work, and of offering the fullest protection and support in my power to the persons engaged in it, I do hereby call on all His Majesty's subjects, civil and military, and do request all other persons whomsoever to whom these presents shall come, not only to permit the said missionaries to pass without hindrance or molestation, but render them all good offices, assistance and protection wherever they shall find it necessary to go in the exercise of their holy calling.

Given under my hand and seal-at-arms, at the Castle of St. Louis, in the city of Quebec, this twenty-ninth day of April, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, and in the fifty-eighth year of His Majesty's reign.

(Signed) J. C. SHERBROOKE.

By His Excellency's command,
(Signed) ANDREW WM. COCHRAN,
Secretary.

Therefore the first settlement of missionaries in that district was under the auspices of the civil authority—under the auspices of the Governor General of the then provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. After the settlement of those missionaries and the starting of their schools, the other denominations came later on, and likewise established missions and schools. So that from the earliest period up to the time of the entry of the colony into the Dominion of Canada as the province of Manitoba there existed the schools of three different denominations-the Roman Catholic, which were the first, established in 1818, the Presbyterian, established in 1821, and after that the Anglican. Up to the time of confederation these schools worked admirably; there was no friction, and they were recognized by the then existing civil authorities-by the Government of the colony of Assiniboia. Grants of money were made and the people were taxed for their support, each settlement and each denomination having its own school. At the time of the entry of the colony of Assiniboia into the confederation as the province of Manitoba, this question of schools was, of course, discussed; and it was insisted upon, if not by the whole, at least by the largest portion of the population, that what had been won before should be maintained; that is to say, that each denomination should have the free exercise of its privileges. No matter what may be the opinion of the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) about the respective bills of rights, it is a fact that one of the conditions of the entry of that colony into the Dominion of Canada was that it should enjoy a system of separate schools. So much was that the case that the negotiations that then took place between the central Government here and the delegates from the colony of Assiniboia resulted in the adoption of the Manitoba Act, which is an almost verbatim copy of the bill of rights which is now recognized as the one that was used in those negotiations. With regard to the authenticity of that bill of rights, we have the affidavit of the only surviving delegate, and the only surviving person who had anything to do with those negotiations, in which he declares that the bill of rights used in those negotiations was the one that was produced in the Lépine case in the courts of Winnipeg in 1874. There is one thing sure: when that bill of rights was produced in the courts at that time, there was no intention at all that it should be used for any other purpose than the purpose of that trial; and that it was a genuine bill of rights has been proven by subsequent facts. Now, is it to be wondered at that the Manitoba Act should contain such provisions as those which exists with regard to schools? Not in the least, because the clause regarding education in the Manitoba Act is only a repetition, with very slight modifications, of the provisions on the same subject contained in the British North America Act. I say more: I say that the spirit of the constitution is in favour, if not of the establishment, at least of the maintenance of separate schools wherever such schools are created, or wherever they exist by law or by practice; because where such a system was in existence by law or by practice prior to the entry of a province into confederation, or where it is thereafter established, it becomes unchangeable. That is to say, it cannot be altered or abolished either by the local power or by the federal power. Therefore I say the spirit of the constitution is in favour of the maintenarce of separate schools, and we must not be surprised that there should have been a difference between the first judgment rendered on this question by the Privy Council and the second judgment, because in the first case the contention was that we had a system of separate schools by practice, if not by law, prior to our entry into the confederation, and that the local legislature had no power to abolish or alter that system in such a way as to affect the principle. That was the only question that came before the Privy Council in the first case. In the second case, the question took a different form. We presented a petition to the federal authorities here, based on the rights which we were entitled to exercise under the British North America Act with regard to the schools that were established by the legislature of the province of Manitoba after our entrance into the confederation; and the Manitoba Act, as I the sentiments and views of those who were have stated, protects the mainteance of such schools. Subsection 1 of the Act reads as follows:-

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class or persons had by law in the province at the union.

That was our first contention, under the Manitoba Act, in the first case that went before the Privy Council. The subsection reads as follows :-

Where, in any province, a system of separate or dissentient schools existed by law at the union, was thereafter established by the legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor in Council from any act or decision of any previncial authority, affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

It was under this section, and the one corresponding to it in the Manitoba Act, that, in the last case, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council found that our rights and privileges had been interfered with and removed by the Act passed by the Manitoba legislature in 1890. These rights we had acquired under the Provincial Act which was passed after our entry into confedera-So that the question is not whether this House should establish a system of separate schools or allow the so-called system of public schools to be perpetuated in Manitoba. The question is not whether we are in favour of separate schools or opposed to that system, and we are not called on to give a decision according to the feelings we may have in favour of the one system or the other. Our position to-day is the same as would be that of a judge in deciding a case, in which he may have a personal opinion, but in which he must decide according to the law and the facts. Here we have to decide according to the facts, according to the law, and according to the constitution. Whether we are m favour of the one or the other system is immaterial, we have to give justice unto whom justice is due. Now, although I have established these premises, although I have established that in the question before us we are not called on to decide whether we are opposed to or in favour of any special system of schools, still, I have to follow the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. Mc-Carthy) in some of the arguments he made and especially in some of the statements he made when presenting his motion. But, before doing so, I propose to show that from the entry of Manitoba into confederation up to the law of 1890, the system then in force was perfectly acceptable to the people, and that there were no reasons for abolishing it. There was neither legal nor any other grounds or reasons. The system was abolished simply and solely The because those who abolished it were opposed to it, and they abolished it regardless of enjoying the system. If we go back to the time when this system was in force, we find several proofs that it was very acceptable to the people at the time, not it acceptable to them were opposed to any change, on they account of the probable bad results and on account of the trouble that any change would cause in the community. coming back to my first point, I claim, in spite of what has been said to the contrary, that the system we had before was a good one; and I have to endorse my contention by the statements of men who certainly cannot be charged with being partial to separate schools, men even who have, perhaps, since altered their minds with regard to that system; but if they did so, the change could not have been disinterested on their parts. Dr. Bryce, who is a member of the present board of advisers in Winnipeg, and who is to-day defending the present school system, wrote, in 1887, when there was no question at all of any change, as follows :-

The separate school supporters are viewed in the light of being exempt from the general law which establishes a national system of education. In Manitoba, the Roman Catholic schools are as much national as the Protestant. No special rights are given to either Catholics or Protestants.

Dr. Bryce is a Presbyterian, and professor of Manitoba College. In the same year, the reverend professor wrote as follows:—

The Government grant is voted for one system of schools, and is divided according to the population of children. No special rights are given either Catholics or Protestants. All moneys are equitably distributed.

Now, this reverend professor who has written a good many books, wrote a book entitled "Manitoba, its infancy, growth, and present condition." He wrote this book in 1882, just a few years before the abolition of separate schools. In it he said:

Lord Selkirk's scheme of perfect religious equality and toleration is that still subsisting in Manitoba. * * * There is no bone of contention to disturb the prevailing harmony. No church is given any place of precedence.

Now, Sir, I have here an abstract from the report made by Mr. J. B. Somerset, at the time superintendent of schools:

In connection with its working (the law) during the last seventeen years, it may be pointed out that the schools of the province have been managed without a particle of the denominational friction that has caused disturbance and bitterness in other provinces of the Dominion. * * The past history of the province encourages the hope that perfect justice to each interest shall result in a continuance of the harmony that now exists.

This is another Protestant gentleman who speaks very freely, very openly, very frankly and very honestly. A certain Dr. Morrison, who is now living in the maritime provinces.

was school inspector for the Protestant schools for a time. He wrote last year as follows—

Throughout all these years, from 1871 to 1888, no complaint was ever made with the workings of the * The people, separate school system. Protestant and Catholic alike, were perfectly contented with the school system as it then existed. Now, Sir, it remains to ascertain why the change took place, why the system was modified. As shown by these proofs that I have given, the system was accepted by the people, all were thoroughly content and no change was asked. The answer is easy; it is that politics was introduced into the question; politics took hold of the question in order to use it for political purposes. That is the only reason why a change was made. And who was the first man to promote that change? He was no less than the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Mc-Carthy). At a time when nobody in Manitoba thought of making a change in the constitution of the province on this question of education, when nobody knew there was any dissatisfaction on that question, the hon. member for North Simcoe took into his head that he ought to start an agitation in that direction. And, not being satisfied, perhaps, that he would meet with sufficient success in his native province, he came and started this disturbance in the province of Manitoba. He made a speech at Portage la Prairie; and my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), who was present, will remember the circumstances. But, Sir, the hon, member for North Simcoe did not content himself with having started that agitation, but he came back here to the city of Ottawa and made a report of what he had done there; and attempted to make predictions as to what the future would bring forth in this movement of his. I have here the report of a speech that the hon. gentleman made in the city of Ottawa, before the Equal Rights Association of this city. He was at the head of that movement at the I do not know that he is at the head of it yet. There is no tail to that movement, so there can be no head. He said:

We have a record for eight months, Mr. Chairman-I mean the Equal Rights Associationwhich any political party could boast of in a decade of years; and if there are men among us now who want to go back to their old political alliances, I say, Shame on them. They ought to alliances, I say, Shame on them. They ought to be satisfied with what we have accomplished in so short a time. (Loud cheers.) What have we Go to the province of Manitoba, accomplished? and what do we see there? Why, the government is going to deal, not only with the dual language question and the iniquitous Act which was fastened upon them, but with the separate I had the honour of standing upon the schools. same platform at Portage la Prairie with the Attorney General of the province

My hon. friend from Winnipeg will remember it, as I have said before.

Mr. LARIVIERE.

—when he announced his position, in anticipation of the action of his government, that he would cease to sign cheques for the publication of the statutes in the dual language, or he would cease to be Attorney General.

He has done both.

Do you tell me the Equal Rights Association had nothing to do with that question? Of course, the feeling was there; the grievance existed, the people's minds had only to be directed to it, and the moment attention was drawn to it, the province of Manitoba rose as one man and said: We want no dual language, and away with separate schools as well. (Applause.) Let me prove that what I say is correct. There ought to be no sympathy between Attorney General Martin and myself, according to political creed. He is a Liberal; I am a Conservative; therefore, we should be sworn focs.

In the course of his address he said, further:

He was glad to notice that at last the Protestant minority of Quebec had waked up, and at an early day he hoped to have the pleasure of addressing them in Montreal on the question. They all had their hands full. In Ontario they would have to deal with the question of French teaching in the schools; in Manitoba they had the dual language to deal with, and in the North-west they had the same question. As soon as the work had been accomplished, they would be in a position to master the same difficulties in the province of Quebec.

That is the origin of the abolition of the separate schools in Manitoba. When the contention is raised that the schools are abolished because they were ineffective, because they were not good schools, I say that that contention was never used or raised when the abolition of the schools took place. The only argument brought forward by the Attorney General at the time when he introduced that Act was not that he had anything to say about the management or the state of the schools at the time, but that the policy of the Government was to abolish the system and nothing else. Now, Sir, that is the fact; because I remember that in the debates that took place at the time it was never contended that the schools were ineffective or that there were any such things in existence as are reported to-day by those who want to justify their action of that time. Now, the hon, member for North Simcoe has repeated the charges against the old system that the Attorney General of the present day, Mr. Sifton, made upon a previous occasion. I have before me a speech delivered by Mr. Sifton, the Attorney General of Manitoba, as reported in the "Globe" on the 25th April last. Mr. Sifton, in the course of his speech explained the state of things prior to 1890, and is reported to have said:

Mr. Sifton then explained the state of things prior to 1890. There were, he said, what might be called two systems of public schools in existence, a Protestant system and a Catholic system, with a Board of Education having a Catholic section and a Protestant section. The Board of Education absolutely controlled the system, the Catholic section their schools, and the Protestant section the Protestant schools. Each section received its grant and the government was not seen at all in the system. This state of things lasted from 1871 to 1890, and the people, therefore, had had ample time to see how it worked out. The way that it did work out was that the teachers placed in charge of the schools were not fit to teach snywhere. The examination papers on which anywhere. they got their certificates, were such as would be set for boys of nine years of age. Then, the attendance at school was not looked after at all. The schools were not opened regularly, and there was no inspection. The money grants were paid all the same, although schools might not have been opened more than three or four days a week, or for only two or three months in the Another objectionable thing about the old system of Catholic schools was that the accommodation was simply abominable, except in the case of about twelve or fifteen out of the whole number. Although this was the case, these Catholic schools were getting about twice as much under the government grant as the Protestant achools were. The result of all this was that, under this system, one generation of French Catholics grew up absolutely illiterate. Sifton here referred to petitions sent to the Government, in which six out of seven of the petitioners were unable to sign their names, and had to make their marks. Since he had come to Untario on this present visit, he had received an urgent petition sent to the government, and signed by 27 French half-breeds. Of these 24 made their marks, and only 3 signed their names. This was not a pleasant thing to tell, but it was true, and was the result of the old system. cculd go from one end of Manitoba to the other, and he would not find among the business or professional men a young man from any of those families. The children of such families remained There was on the farm where they were born. no idea of progress among them. If this system were imposed upon them permanently, it would simply make them hewers of wood and drawers

Of course, this is a campaign speech, but I have never yet seen such a tissue of falsehoods as the one I have just read to this House. I say that the Catholic schools at that time were on an equal footing with the other schools. I say, moreover, that their programme of studies was more complete in fact, and contained more matter, than the programme of studies of the corresponding schools under the Protestant section of the Board of Education. I will not say they were better than the other schools, but I will say they were equal to the other schools. I have here the programme of studies that was adopted by the Board of Education and was in force in 1890, as compared with the programme of the Protestant schools:

- 2. Spelling.
- 3. Composition.

So that in the programme of the Roman Catholic schools, there were three branches that were not included in the programme of the Protestant schools. Moreover, I will say that there were not two schools, I think, out of the whole number, where the dual language was not taught. It has always been supposed that these schools were entirely French, that is to say, that only the French language was taught therein. Well, Sir, in many of those schools where the community was chiefly English-speaking, the schools, though Catholic, were entirely English schools; and in all the other localities, whether the population was mixed or not, both languages were taught, and are still taught in them. Now, with regard to the quality of those schools. In 1886, as the House is aware, there was a Colonial Exhibition held in London, and Sir Charles Tupper invited the Superintendent of the Roman Catholic schools, as well as the Superintendent of the Protestant schools, to send to that exhibition copy books and other work of the pupils. This letter reached the superintendent after the 29th July, the schools were closed and when children were on their holidays. Within a few days after the receipt of this request, a person went around and picked up whatever copy books and other work done in the schools, he could procure, and he found that eight schools were able to send school work compete in the Colonial Exhibition. Therefore eight of the Roman Catholic schools sent in exhibits to that exhibition, and the result was that eight diplomas came back, and eight medals were awarded. have here, Sir, copy of a letter which was written by Sir Charles Tupper in reference to that exhibit:

> Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886. Canadian Section, London, 29th July, 1886.

To T. A. Bernier, Esq.

My dear Sir,—I duly received your letter of the 3rd instant, and thank you for the memorandum which you have prepared on behalf of your section of the Manitoba educational exhibit. I shall be pleased to receive a thousand copies of the memorandum and to see that they are carefully distributed. The exhibit which you have taken such pains to collect has already attracted considerable attention, and I do not doubt it will add to the success of the Dominion at the exhibition.

I remain yours faithfully,

(Signed) CHARLES TUPPER.

William Clark, commonly known as Capt. Clark, who was in charge of the exhibit in London and who was a former resident is not a Roman Catholic, but is, I believe, a Presbyterian. He wrote from London on 27th July, 1886, to Mr. Bernier as follows:-

Mr. LaRiviere.

I can speak with experience with reference to the excellence of your section, two of my daughters having been for a long time with the good sisters of St. Boniface, where their progress was as satisfactory to me as it was pleasant to them.

WILLIAM CLARK.

This was the result of the exhibit sent at the time to the Colonial Exhibition which was held in London in 1886. This was only three years prior to the passing of the Act complained of. It is contended in House that those schools were not looked after, that the money was paid to them without any control being exercised. I say this, that every year the Superintendent of Education, who was at the same treasurer of his section of the board, made a report to the Government as to what had been done with the money granted by the legislature to the respective sections of the board, and at no time was there any trouble and at no time was their attention called to the fact that the money was not properly distributed and not properly accounted for. I exercised the functions of Superintendent of Education for three years, and on no occasion was I ever called upon to make any further reports than those yearly made by myself, and this was the experience of my predecessor as well as my successor, to the Government as to what had been done with the moneys that had been granted. On the other hand, it is contended that there was no inspection made of those schools. Section 75 of the old Act provides as follows:-

75. It shall be the duty of every teacher:
(d). To keep a visitors' book, and make an entry therein of every visit; to offer the said book to all visitors, and to request them to note therein any remark which they may think proper.

(e). To allow at all times the trustees and vistors to inspect the registers and visitors' book.

(g). To hold, at the end of every year, at least one public examination.

Section 80 of the same Act is in the following words:-

80. The visitors in each school district may be:

(a). The priest or clergyman.

(b). The members of the provincial legislature.(c). The judges of the Court of Queen's Bench and County Court.

(d). The members of the section of the board.

By the above provisions of the school law the Roman Catholic schools were open to visitors being inspection by 23 Roman Catholics and 38 Protestants. whilst Protestant schools there were 55 Protestants and only 9 Roman Catholics. When I spoke about the change not being called for and it being only a move for political purposes, I should have brought to the attention of this House some debates that took place in of St. Boniface, the town where I reside, the different religious bodies in the province at the time. At a meeting of the Presbyterian Synod held in the city of Winnipeg on 22nd November, 1892—that is after the first decision of the Privy Council had been given,—Rev. Dr. Robertson read the following resolutions which were presented by the Committee on Education:

That this synod, in accordance with the position taken at previous meetings of the synod in favour of national schools, established in Manitoba in 1890. desires to express its continued anxiety for their complete establishment throughout the bounds of this synod. It declares its determined opposition to any measures looking towards interference with the provincial rights of Manitoba, which have, by the highest court of the realm, been ensured in the position taken in It protests against any the School Act of 1890. remedial legislation, aiming at the fastening of separate schools upon the province of Manitoba, or aiming at in any way making it possible for such to be maintained upon the public funds. synod also reports the efforts of the friends of national schools in the Territories in seeking to have established a public school system suited for all classes of the people, and free from denominational bias. The synod further calls upon the people whom it represents to be vigilant and earnest in maintaining their rights in the premises, while at the same time cultivating a kind and patient spirit towards those who hold opposite views.

During the debate following this motion Rev. Dr. Bryce spoke as follows:—

He believed there was a great movement amongst the French people in favour of national schools. The resolution was not in favour of sectarian schools. He knew that the action of the Presbyterian Synod, as representing the strongest religious body in the North-west, in declaring for national schools two years ago, and which was sent to the Privy Council, had an important effect in the matter of the decision which was given.

Rev. Dr. King, a very highly educated and liberal-minded gentleman, who holds the position of President of Manitoba College and is head of the Presbyterian church in Manitoba. says:

Rev. Dr. King took strong objection to the resolution. First, he did not agree with Dr. Robertson, that religion should be relegated to the church and family.

He believed it would be bad for the state, if such were carried out.

One great difficulty he found was, that, he thought, in three of the resolutions they were transcending and entering the domain of party These resolutions were far in excess of any previous ones passed by the body now in As individuals, they could have their session. opinions in this matter, but he did not think, as a Christian body, they should pass such resolutions. He did not think that it would deepen the church tone to have discussions on remedial legislation or provincial rights. He was surprised to see that those who framed the resolutions, favoured the North-west Territories School Act. which contained a clause debarring ministers from sitting as school trustees or holding any office in the education department. He could not see that the people needed any summons to stand by their Some Presbyterians might take a differrights. ent view of what were provincial rights from follows:-

It would place the Presbyterians of Winnipeg in the same relations as the Presbyterians of the Northern States were at the time of the great American rebellion, and the breach they made has never yet been healed. He be-lieved it depreciated the tone of the church to make it the tool of a political party, which, by passing the resolutions, they would do. If they acted as the mover and seconder wished them to do, they might have very grave issues to en-He had no doubt that it would help on counter. a particular party to pass these resolutions, so he would move, in amendment: That all the resolutions be omitted except the first one.

Rev. Mr. Farquharson (Pilot Mound) said he was sorry to part with his brethren in this matter, but he was strongly opposed to interference with Reman Catholic schools. The minority in Quebec were not receiving equal rights in school matters, and the Presbyterians of that province felt the injustice, and why should the Catholics in this province be treated unfairly? While the state had the right to insist that every child should receive some education, it had no right to say how a child should be educated.

As he was proceeding to develop his idea, Rev. J. M. Douglas moved, seconded by Rev. C. W. Whyte: That the discussion be postponed until to-morrow. This was lost. Mr. Farquharson then moved an amendment to the effect, that, under the existing circumstances, the synod deprecated any attempt on the part of the province to collect taxes for public school purposes from such Roman Catholics as not only refused to take advantage of the public schools, but also supported their own schools.

A further clause proposed that such legislation be enacted as would put Catholic schools in the best form for carrying on their work.

Dr. King's motion, seconded by Professor Hart, that the resolution be amended by making the first one the deliverance of the house, was declared carried by a considerable majority.

Dr. King next moved, seconded by Rev. T. Wright: that the synod, in harmony with the decision of the general assembly of 1887 on the subject of religious instruction in the public schools, would earnestly deprecate any change in the existing school law of the province of Manitoba in the direction of the withdrawal or the abridgement of the right now enjoyed by the people to have, at the discretion of the duly elected school trustees of the province, being of the opinion that such withdrawal or abridgement is not required by any consideration of justice, and, besides being valueless as a measure of conciliation, would be both dishonouring to God and In speakinjurious to the interests of the state. ing of the motion, the mover held that the great aim of education and the interest of the state in education was to form character and good habits. He asked how such could be formed without religion and religious interests. He looked upon the making of the schools purely secular as an attempt simply to make things right by giving He said the Roman Catholics each a grievance. could have schools without the Bible, if they wished. The motion was carried.

Before this meeting was concluded, the Rev. James Farquharson handed in to be recorded on the minutes, his reasons for dissenting from the resolution, even as modified by Dr. King's motion. They were as follows:—

1. Although on parents, not on the state, devolves the duty of determining how the children are to be educated, yet the synod's resolution recommends the state to compel to support one system of schools.

and the control of th

2. At least some Roman Catholic parents are so thoroughly opposed to the education given in the public schools that, although compelled by law to support the said schools, they refuse to send their children to them, and voluntarily maintain parochial schools.

3. If the people in the province and of the Dominion are to become speedily one in sentiment, which all desire, the majority must deal, not only justly, but also generously, with the minority.

Mr. Farquharson added, after reading his rea-

Mr. Farquharson added, after reading his reasons for dissent, that, if by any means, by compromise or otherwise, the present law should be found to be workable, no one would be more delighted than him.

I just wanted to show by this quotation that the unanimous sentiment in the province on this school question is not as represented by our opponents. On another occasion, even prior to the passing of the Act there was a meeting of the English Church Synod at Winnipeg, and the present primate of Canada, his Grace the Archbishop of Rupert's Land, spoke on the occasion. This meeting took place in December, 1889, prior to the passing of the Act. The Archbishop of Rupert's Land then said:

Criticisms that have been made on the addresses of Dr. King and myself suggest one or I have seen it represented that we would prefer the present system of separate schools to any merely secular system. I do not besitate to say that I would; but at the same time I think this an unfair way of putting the matter. There is much in the present system that is objectionable that could be removed. Under proper restrictions, I see a measure of justice, and no injustice, in separate schools, and I do not think that it will be easy to do away with them. However the Roman Catholic authorities may approve of the subjects of religious teaching that Protestants would agree upon, they will accept no teachers but their own. The great majority of Roman Catholic children will, therefore, be sent to their own private schools rather than to state schools not under Roman Catholic instructors, whether there be religious teaching in If there is no religious teaching, them or not. there will be but the stronger expression of dislike. The day will come when one, if not both political parties will discover that it is undesirable for the state to have this inferior secular instruction, and unjust to the Roman Catholic section of the community, that, while getting no state aid for its private schools, it should have to contribute to the support of the state schools. And the separate schools will reappear—possibly, in an objectionable form. If Protestants allow the threatened secularization of the public schools, they may expect to see in a few years these two classes of state schools-Roman Catholic and sec-Will that be satisfactory?

And further on:

The Roman Catholic Church might give its sympathy and aid in all that I propose, but we cannot look for this. In that case, I simply say that I should infinitely prefer that the Roman Catholic Church should continue to have separate schools under satisfactory conditions for the state, to our schools being without religious instruction.

Well, Sir. we have the admission of the promoter of this School Act of 1890 which we are complaining of that the schools which he intended to establish at the time were schools in which no religion should be taught, and that they were to be absolutely godless schools. I presume that the hon, gentleman has been very sincere on this question from the start, because he has never failed to express the same opinion whenever called upon to speak on the subject, and I will read some of his remarks. The Attorney General at the time, the present hon, member for Winnipeg, made this statement in the House when introducing his Bill:

The Government's position had not been determined because they were dissatisfied with the manner in which the affairs of the department are conducted under this system, but because they are dissatisfied with the system itself.

That does not accord with the contention of the hon, member for North Simcoe when he says that these schools were abolished because they were not properly conducted or administered or were not good schools. Now, what is the opinion of the promoter of the School Act? The present member for Winnipeg, who was the promoter of the Act of 1890, is reported by the Winnipeg "Free Press" as having spoken on the 22nd of February, 1894, as follows:—

He was himself—not satisfied with the School Act, and had never been so. He had made a strong effort to have the public schools, controlled by the government, really made national schools with religion obliterated. He was now more convinced than ever that that was the only school which would be justified as constitutional. It has been urged by satisfied supporters of the Act that none would complain of the devotional element introduced, as it was of the broadest nature, but they found that the Roman Catholics had the very greatest objection to this provision of the Act, and he was dissatisfied himself.

* It had been said that in the event of his opinions being adopted, our public schools of the greatless ashered.

of his opinions being adopted, our public schools would be godless schools, but by many staunch supporters of the School Act it had been privately admitted to him that the religious exercises practised in the schools at that time were without value. But as a matter of sentiment, they added,—oh, as a matter of sentiment, perhaps—but he could not understand such an argument. The Roman Catholics had honestly stated that in their belief the two forms of education should go together. The Protestants admitted, on the other hand, that it was impossible to have religious training in schools, and only asked that it be recognized, insisting, however, in imposing their views on others in that respect. Rather than that small amount of religious training should be done away with in the schools, the Protestants said they would prefer the old state of affairs. He would leave it to his audience to determine which was the more honest stand of the two.

We have a more recent production from the hon. gentleman, the letter which he wrote on the 25th of June last, and which ing they never received money as priests, was published in the city papers here. In but as teachers, and in no case did they that letter I find the following:—

When I introduced the school Bill of 1890, I pointed out that in so far as it provided for religious exercises in the schools, it was in my opinion, defective. I am one of those who deny the right of the state to interfere in any respect of matters of religion. I said then, and I still think that the clause of the 1890 Act which provides for certain religious exercises is most unjust to the Roman Catholics. If the state is to recognize religion in its school legislation, such a recognition as is acceptable to Protestants only, and in fact only to a majority of Protestants, is to my mind rank tyranny.

The desire of those with whom I think in this matter is to eliminate every question of a religious nature from the school laws and to make the schools purely seculiar. This has not been done in Manitoba, and that course is apparently not supported by a majority of the people there. That being so, surely it will be admitted that the nature of religious exercises or religious teaching (I am unable to make any clear distinction between the two) should be such as is agreeable to the consciences of those whose money is taken to support the schools.

This is another proof that the schools as they exist in the province of Manitoba today are in reality a continuation of the Protestant schools that existed before the abolition of the separate schools system in 1890, and that they are still Protestant schools. Now, another charge made in the speech of Mr. Sifton is that some of the separate schools were not taught during the whole school year. Well, there might have been an exception; but from my own experience-and I think I know something about them-those schools were kept open the whole school year round, that is to say, during the full 200 days, as required by law; because no school that was not open and in operation during 200 days was entitled to receive the grant that was awarded by the section of the Board of Education to which it belonged. As to the qualifications of the teachers, I may say that they were up to the standard, and they compared well with those of the Protestant schools. I know that at the time I was acting as Superintendent of Education most of the teachers came from the normal schools of Quebec and Montreal; and in addition to the certificates which they brought from those schools, they had to pass the necessary examination provided by our own regula-In those schools, as I have said, tions. not only was the programme followed in entirety, but the two languages, its English and French, with were taught, Now, it is confew exceptions. very of tended again, that some schools were taught by priests. Well, there were, perhaps, in the distant districts, a few places where the people were too poor to support teachers who would require full salaries for their services, there were cases, very few, where the priests devoted themselves to teaching schools, but in so doing they never received money as priests, but as teachers, and in no case did they teach school or receive money unless they were properly engaged by the school trustees, who alone could entrust them with the teaching of those schools. I can give one instance of a place where the Catholic population is chiefly composed of half-breeds, and where a priest taught the school. This was Fort Ellice. The Hon. Senator Boulton, on one occasion, made the following statement with regard to the teaching there:—

In my immediate neighbourhood there is a separate school, named after the clergman, Father DeCorby, who founded it. He conducted a separate school there for years, to which the Protestant population in its neighbourhood went. They were all satisfied with the school; they had no complaints to make of it.

Major Boulton is not a Roman Catholic, and he gave this statement of his own free will. It is said that most of these schools were not open half the time, that some of them were only open a day or two, and that they received the allowance. That could not be the case, because no school could get an allowance unless the declaration be made under oath by the school teacher and certified to under oath by the two trustees, that the school had been running for at least 200 days in the year. Now, when I consider the percentage of attendance at the respective Protestant and Roman Catholic schools at different periods, I find that there was very little difference between the two. In 1881 the percentage of children enrolled in the total school population, was:

,	rer	cent.
Protestant schools	• • •	70 66
Difference		4
In 1889—	Per	cent.
Protestant schools	•••	75 69
Take the percentage of the averag	e a	ttend-

Take the percentage of the average attendance of the total school population:

In 1881—	Per	cent.
Protestant schools
In 1889—	Per	cent.

Not a great difference. Let us compare that with the average attendance in the schools since the inauguration of the new system of schools in 1890:

In-		Per	cent.
1891	*		43
1892			43
1893		• •	41

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, these are the Protestant schools of to-day, the so-called public schools. Compare this with the percentage of the average attendance of the number of enrolled children in the schools previous to the Act:

PERCENTAGE OF THE AVERAGE ATTENDANCE TO THE NUMBER OF ENROLLED CHILDREN.

Protestants.	Catholics.
$\begin{array}{cccccccccccccccccccccccccccccccccccc$	nauguration

So that, under the new system, the attendance is less than it was under the old system when it reached as high as 65 per cent for the Protestants, and 66 per cent for the Roman Catholics, whereas, under the new system, the attendance in 1893 fell to 48 per cent. Take another table under the new system, the new school law, the new management, this improved school system as it is called. In 1891 out of 28,678, total population of pupils, 6,656 attended school less than fifty days in the year; 7,341 attended school less than fifty to one hundred days in the year; 13,996 attended from one hundred days and upwards, so that the majority of school children entered on the school register did not attend the school 100 days in the year. In 1892 the same proportion exists. In 1893 again the same proportion exists, as will be seen by the table:

	Attend- ance less than 50 days.	Attend- ance 51-100 days.	Attend- ance less than 100 days.	Total school population.
1891	6,656	7,340	13,996	28,678
1.892	6,975	6,231	12,306	29,594
1893	7,539	8,414	15,953	34,417

So that under the present system the school children do not attend school on the average more than six months in the year, and some a great deal less. I shall not delay any more on this subject. We all know that soon after the passing of this Act, the Roman Catholic population of Manitoba took every possible constitutional step to have their grievances removed. Petitions after petitions were forwarded, and representations made, first to the local authorities, and later on to the federal authorities, and we all know the result. When I heard the hon. member for North Simcoe last night complaining that we gave very short notice to the Manitoba Government when we summoned them to come down to defend their cause before the Privy Council, it struck me that when the local legislature of Manitoba undertook to pass the Act abolishing our local schools in Manitoba, they gave us very short notice, indeed. In fact, after their minds had been made up to abolish those schools, they would not either heed any advice or retard the passing of the Act in order to ascertain whether their position was legal, under the constitution or not. Consulting the journals of the provincial legislature, I find that several amendments were submitted before the passing of the Act asking that the question be delayed so that it might be considered by the proper courts of justice with a view to ascertaining whether the legislature in passing such a law was acting within its power or not. But it was of no avail, for the legislature had made up their minds to pass the law, and, whether right or wrong, whether they had the power or not, they were determined to keep their course. Now, one of the most reasonable amendments proposed was this:

Mr. Gelley moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Jerome: Whereas, grave doubts exist as to the constitutionality of the Bill, and the carrying out of the same would subvert all practices heretofore in use since the province entered confederation; and

Whereas, such radical changes, if put into force at once, would thereby cause great confusion, which will be greatly increased if said Bill be declared ultra vires';

Therefore, to avoid all such unnecessary changes and confusion, be it resolved, that the Bill (No. 13) respecting public schools be not now read a third time, but be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House, with instructions to strike out the last clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:—"This Act shall not come into force until the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada be obtained as to its constitutionality."

And the question being put on the amendment, the House divided, and names being called for, they were taken down as follows:—Gelley, Gillies, Jerome, Lagimodiere, Marion, Martin (Morris), Norquay, O'Malley, Prendergast, Roblin, Wood.

The nays numbered 25. Of the eleven who voted yea, six were Roman Catholics and five were Protestant Conservatives. Before I conclude, let me say a word about the rights of the parents, Protestants or Roman Catholics, to dictate what the education of their respective chidren shall be. I find that men of the highest standing have affirmed the rights of parents in this matter and have declared that any system that involves a denial of the parent's right of control, the right of parents to instruct their respective children according to their own creed and belief, is wrong. Mr. Gladstone, speaking on the subject of denominational schools, said:

As regards the existing denominational schools,—

In England, of course:

—it is a very grave and important question which we have to ask ourselves—whether we are frankly, ungrudgingly, willingly and systematically to make use of that powerful agency for the purpose of good secular instruction which is placed at our command in a great degree, if not exclusively, through the vigorous action of religious zeal and love? Let us not disguise from ourselves that this is a question of the greatest moment. The answer to it, I own, appears to me to be perfectly clear. The answer is, that nothing but folly could induce us to refuse to avail ourselves of an opportunity so valuable.

Now, this is the opinion of the great former leader of the great Liberal party in England. But here is the opinion of the leader of the Conservative party, Lord Salisbury, the present Premier, who has just come into power:

Numbers of persons have invented what I may call a patent compressible religion, which can be forced into all consciences with a very little squeezing; and they wish to insist that this should be the only religion taught throughout the What I want to impress schools of the nation. upon you is, that, if you admit this conception, you are entering upon a religious war of which you will not see the end. There is only one sound principle in religious education to which you should cling, which you should relentlessly enforce against all the conveniences and experiences of official men; and that is, that a parent, unless he has forfeited the right by criminal acts. has the inclienable right to determine the teaching which the child shall receive upon the holiest and most momentous of subjects. That is a right which no expediency can negative, which no state necessity ought to allow you to sweep away; and, therefore, I ask you to give your attention to this question of denominational education. It is full of danger and of difficulty; but you will only meet the danger by marching straight up to it, and declaring that the prerogative of the parent, unless he be convicted of criminality, must not be taken away by the state.

I might cite other authorities, but I will content myself with these two. I will, however, for the information of my hon, friend from North Simcoe, give him the report of a little gathering in my own beautiful province, in which he may find something for his edification. This extract is headed "An Indian on the School Question," and I would ask the hon, gentleman to give me his attention while I read it:

A number of religious, temperance, political and other bodies or organizations having offered expressions of sympathy and encouragement to the provincial government for the stand which has been taken on the Manitoba School question, a band of Indians who had encamped by the railway track and were having a picnic on the remains of an old horse that had been injured by a passing train, thought it their duty to offer expressions of sympathy and support to the government in their time of trial. The chief, who is known as The-man-who-catches-theporcupine-with-his-hands, was appropriately attired for the occasion. His hat consisted chiefly of the skin and feathers of a he-owl; his coat dilapidated, but swallowtail, somewhat still retaining traces of former magnificence his trousers were made of a coffee sack, and when the violent gesticulations excited by eloquence caused the tails of the coat to part, the words Best Java, in black letters, could be noticed on his posterior. Chief Forcupine said that in the matter of the school question there was much need of sympathy. Catholics wanted devotion in schools, Protestants did not want devotion and were willing to turn religion out of their schools if Catholics would do the same. The government was sick on the matter, great chief Laurier was sick, great chief Greenway was sick, Chief Porcupine was sick, great newspaper man at Winnipeg was crazy and oars like a desire to express sympathy and to suggest that education like Indian education is best.

Now, Sir, I will close my remarks by stating that if we to-day are called upon to deal with this question, if to-day there is so much treable and agitation throughout the Domicion, I may say that the primitive cause of all this is no less than the hou, gentleman who moved this amendment on the school question. He was the promoter of the legislation that we complain of, be was, I may say, the author of the movement that started at Portage la Prairie in 1889; and having pursued this course ever since, he now comes to this House and asks us to blame the Government for the promises they have made to remedy the grievance that we complain of. Sir, what have we done, a handful of Roman Catholies in Manitoba, that we should be treated in this way? When these rights and privileges are guaranteed to us by the constitution, why should this Parliament be called upon to deny us the enjoyment of those rights and privileges? When the Imperial Privy Council has decided in our favour, is this House to set up its judgment above theirs, and is this House to deprive a few Roman Catholics in the province of Manitoba of those privileges which, I repeat, they are entitled to? The hon, gentleman who spoke last night, said there were only 20,000 Roman Catholics in Manitoba, and why, he asked, should they enjoy those privileges when the total population of the province is 152,000 ? Sir, we are more numerous in Manitoba, in proportion to the total population, than are the Protestants in Quebec in proportion to the total population. We want the same privileges in Manitoba that the Protestants are enjoying in the province of Quebec, we want them because we are entitled to them by right, because the constitution guarantees them to us, and we ask nothing but what is due to us, nothing but what is fair, Now, Sir, while I say that I am opposed to the amendment moved by the hon, gentleman blaming the Government for having made the promise or remedial legislation, I must say that for my own part I regret that the Government, instead of postponing the settlement of this question for another six months, has not thought it wise and proper to bring in remedial legislation at once, and do away with the grievance that we have been complaining of for the past five years. I regret that the Catholic minority in Manitoba should be put off for another six months, and perhaps longer. I regret that we should be compelled to pay taxes for schools which, according to the hon. member for Winnipeg, are in effect Protestant schools, and at the same time, that we should be compelled either to close the doors of our schools, or to beg from our friends the money that we require to maintain them. It must be remembered that we drunken Indian-everybody was sick, and Indians are living in a new province, our population is composed of natives and of new settlers who have not the means sufficient to meet the requirements of their position. They are comparatively poor, and while they are compelled by the existing law to pay for the support of schools which they cannot accept, at the same time they are compelled to pay for the maintenance of their own schools, or else shut them up alto-gether. Now, Sir, shall this House be a party to the perpetration of such an injustice? No. Sir: I cannot believe it. matter what the views of hon, members may be on the school question in the abstract, the claim we now put forward in the House is that we are by law and by equity entitled to our separate schools in the province of Manitoba. Has not the Privy Council declared that we have been deprived of a privilege and of a right that we had been enjoying for nineteen years prior to the passing of this Act of 1890? And, Sir, when the duty rests upon this Parliament of restoring those rights, or those privileges, if you choose to call them so, when this Parliament is called upon, under the provisions of the constitution, to restore those rights that have been stolen from us, are we going to prove recreant to our duty? Are we, as statesmen-because I suppose we all consider ourselves to be statesmengoing to refuse to perform our plain duty as statesmen in remedying the injustice that has been shown to exist? We are judges in this matter, we must not decide this question according to our individual opinions, but according to the law and the constitution, and the law and the constitution ought to be obeyed. This is not a political question upon which we should divide upon party lines. I hope when the time comes to settle the question both parties will join hands and settle it in a fair, liberal, just and equitable way.

Mr. DICKEY. I desire to make a personal explanation, not to offer any remarks on the subject before the House. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) referred to the publishing of some affidavits which were put in evidence at the hearing before the Privy Council of Canada, and subsequently withdrawn as the case proceeded. The hon, gentleman seemed to feel that that was a great injustice not only to himself but to others, and the present Government as an organization has quite enough faults to answer for without answering for my personal faults, and I therefore desire to take the personal responsibility of publishing those affidavits. They were put in and read, and subsequently, as the proceedings show, were withdrawn. Mr. Ewart claimed they should be printed, and there was no contest over it, in fact, the question was never raised. I was then Secretary of State, and the Printing Bureau sent and asked me whether they were to be printed.

I was going into the room on the second or third morning, and without consulting my colleagues and without giving the matter serious attention, I said, "Certainly, they are part of the proceedings, print them, and print that they were withdrawn." I may print that they were withdrawn." have been entirely wrong, perhaps I was; I must say, on considering the matter when the printed book was placed in my hands, I thought I had made a mistake. What I want to say is that any observation founded on want of good faith or on the idea that there was any intention on the part of the Government in so acting is entirely mistaken. We are still subject, and I personally and particularly am subject to any remarks as to any practical injustice that has been done, but I do not want the House to suppose that there was any intention in placing the affidavits there, of taking any unfair advantage, and that there was anything more than a mistake made. That mistake occurred inadvertently, and hon. members may refer to it as they think proper. but they should consider it not an intentional and wrong act.

Mr. McNEILL. I hope, in the few observations which I shall offer to the House, I shall endeavour to say nothing which may wound the feelings of any one who differs from me on this very important and, I am afraid, in some quarters, very exciting question. Before making those observations I wish to offer to the House, I desire to state why it is I feel it impossible to support the amendment which has been moved by the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and I will read my reasons, with the permission of the House. Had this been a plain resolution condemning any attempt to force separate schools on Manitoba, I should, as a matter of course, have voted for it. The resolution, however, appears to me to be framed not so much to obtain the sense of the House on that question as with a view to embarrassing the Government at the very time when they have been fighting the battle of the province to this extent at least, that they have been resisting a strong effort that has been made to induce them to proceed with remedial legislation at once, and they have insisted upon time being given to arrive at an amicable adjustment of the difficulty, if possible. It seems to me that, under these circumstances, and at this time, it would be an especially ungracious act on the part of any one who, like myself, desires at all hazards to uphold the rights of the province, to vote to defeat the Government. It also seems to me that if I defeat the Government, and bring in hon. gentle-men opposite, I run the risk of bringing in a party who may go much further in the direction I disapprove than the present Government are prepared to go. For they may force separate schools on the province at once without making any attempt at comthe message being received by me just as promise. So that, to use a homely saying,

I should simply find myself out of the fry-know of him and from what the people of ing pan into the fire. Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this resolution because, apparently in order to secure support from a certain section of hon. gentlemen opposite, the scope of it is reduced to such narrow limits that it is quite inadequate to express my views. The condemnation it contains is confined to remedial legislation on the lines of the remedial order. It ought, in my view. to go much further, and condemn any attempt to force separate schools on Manitoba, whether on the lines of the remedial order or not. Sir, had this been a simple straightforward resolution condemning any attempt to force separate schools on Manitoba, I would have voted for it. But I refuse to risk the defeat of a Government whose general policy I approve, with the result of bringing in a Government whose general policy 1 would disapprove, and whose policy on this question the leader of the party carefully conceals. I say I refuse to do this merely to support a transparently tricky, half-hearted resolution of this kind. I do not wish to use the word "tricky" in any invidious sense, and if the time ever comes when an artempt is made to force, not merely remedial legislation on the lines of the order, but separate schools of any kind, on the people of Manitoba, I shall be prepared to oppose the attempt with my voice and vote.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When does the hon, gentleman expect to get into the fire?

Mr. McNEILL. I am satisfied it will be a very long time. Having taken the liberty of reading that statement to the House, I wish to be allowed to make one other observation before I proceed to deal with the question that is really before the House. I wish to say this, that I heard with the very greatest pain some remarks that in the heat of debate fell from the Minister of Justice last night. My hon, friend the member for North Simcoe is now, I suppose I may say so, my political enemy. At all events, he has not acted exactly the part of a political friend towards me, because he selected my constituency. I think, as the first constituency in which he had a candidate placed to support his own particular views. But be that as it may, the time was when the hon. gentleman was my close political friend, and my very warm personal friend, and I am under obligations of personal friendship to that hon. gentleman that I never can forget; the marks of that which once has been are not very easily obliterated in my mind in this regard, and I cannot in silence allow an imputation to be cast on the hon. gentleman without saying that I think that imputation was altogether unfounded. The imputation, as I understood it, was that the hon, gentleman was actuated to some extent at all events, by pecuniary considera-tions in the course he was taking in regard to this matter, and I think it is only due to the hon, gentleman to say, from what I now discussing—than the Jesuits' Estate

Ontario know of him, that there is not any within the four corners of man Dominion who is less likely to be actuated by such motives than the hon, member for North Simcoe. This, I think, it is only due to say, and I would be very sorry to take any political advantage in this contest upon grounds such as those to which I refer. Having said so much, and having taken some time already, T must say that I think short speeches at this time of the session are very much in order. I shall endeavour to make the observations that I have got to make as brief and as simple as possible. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, so that there may be no misunderstanding upon that point at all. that I bring no charge of intolerance against those who desire to force separate schools upon the majority of the people of Manitoba; no charge of intolerance at all. think I may say that I fully sympathize with many of the views that they have at heart. I am quite sure that they are actuated by the belief that in what they are doing, they are doing justice and are doing right. And I will go further, and say, that I can sympathize largely with them in the desire to see secular teaching interfused with religious instruction. further still, that I can sympathize with the chivalrous feeling and sentiment which actuates our friends from Quebec when they rally to the support of the minority of their own blood and their own religion in Manitoba. But, Mr. Speaker, I hold that the majority of the people in Manitoba; that the province of Manitoba has, subject to the provisions of the constitution, a right to decide for herself what system of education shall obtain there, and ought to hold that right although free from attempted coercion at the hands of any other province of this Dominion, or of this Parliament, or of any extraneous power whatever. have said, I sympathise with my French friends Canadian in their desire co-religionists relieve their and compatriots from that injustice that they think they labour under by reason of the passing of the Act of 1890 which took away from them suddenly— and I think in some respects, harshly-rights which they had acquired and which they had enjoyed for some nineteen or twenty years. must say to my friends, and I must say it with all kindness and in all friendship, that I do not admit there should be one rule for the province of Quebec, and another rule for the province of Manitoba. I say that this question of education is a strictly local question, and I say that it is a question that has been handed over to the provinces absolutely, except in so far as that absolute control has been cut down by the first and second subsections of the Act. I say that this is in its nature a matter much more essentially local—this Act of 1890 that we are years ago. discussed some It is a more local matter if for no other reason, for this reason; That the is not a body Jesuit body confined to the province of Quebec, but a body which has its ramifications over all parts of the Dominion. And I say further-and I am sure my friends will allow me to make these statements, and to express my views in a friendly and quiet way in reference to this matter—I say that the Jesuit Estates Act was as distasteful, was as absolutely opposed to the rooted conscientious convictions of the minority in Quebec, as this Act of 1890 is opposed to the conscientious convictions of the minority in Manitoba. I say still further, that the Jesuits' Estates Act was not only opposed to the religious convictions of the minority in Quebec, but it was opposed to the religious and conscientious convictions of the majority of the people of every province in the Dominion of Canada outside of Quebec; a statement which cannot be made as to the Manitoba School Act of 1890. Therefore, I say, that when this House decided that the majority in Quebec had the right to control legislation there in reference to this Jesuits' Estates matter, and that this House should not interfere, this House cannot now consistently order that the conscientious convictions of the majority in Manitoba are to give way to the conscientious convictions of the minority. But, Mr. Speaker, I shall be told that the constitution says that we are obliged to establish separate schools in the province of Manitoba over the heads of the overwhelming majority of the people there, and contrary to the desire and wish of the legislature of that province. Had it not been for this statement, I should not have ventured to intrude any words of mine on the attention of this House; but I do not feel inclined to sit down silently under the imputation that I am not willing to be guided and to be ruled by the constitution of the country in which I live. Therefore, it is, Mr. Speaker, that I wish with all humbleness to point out my reasons, at all events; a reason for the faith that is in me, that we are not called upon by the constitution to perpetrate any such Act as it is foreshadowed we shall be invited to perpetrate. Mr. Speaker, what is Fortunately, the recent the constitution? decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has simplified this matter for us very much indeed, for that decision has made the question clear, and has defined this as the law: That it is only one section of one Act that we shall have to cousider, namely, the 22nd section of the Manitoba Act, and that we may leave out of consideration altogether the British North America Act, so far as the discussion in this House is concerned. What are the sections of this Act which we are told, compel us to force separate schools on the province of Manitoba against the will of that pro-vince? They are very short. They are only two, and with the permission of the

Mr. McNeill.

House I will read the subsections, as I need not trouble with the opening part of the clause. The first subsection says:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice at the union.

We will take this first section in the first place. Well, Mr. Speaker, we need take up but a very short time in discussing that subsection, because it has been decided in Barrett's case that this Act of 1890 interfered with no right or privilege with respect to denominational schools, which any class of persons had by law or practice at the time of the union. Therefore this section, so far as this discussion is concerned, may be left out of consideration altogether; it is outside of our discussion at present; but, before passing away from this section, I wish to call the attention of the House to its particular phraseology:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the union.

We see, in the first place, that this section has reference only to rights and privileges which existed at the union. But what is the meaning of the words: "Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect"? The meaning is that if any Act of the provincial legislature be passed which contemplates an interference with any such right or privilege, then this greater power, this Act which is a Dominion Act, and which has the sanction of Imperial authority, steps in as a bar to the going into force of the local Act; and the local Act, at least that part of it to which we are referring, becomes null and void, and is of non effect whatsoever. This is how the framers of the constitution framed their provisions when they sought to declare that a right or privilege could not be interfered with. The framers of the constitution made it impossible to interefere with it. I call attention to that, because it is very important in connection with what follows. Now, we come to the second subsection which is the one that really controls this matter, and you will observe the difference in the wording. The one says nothing in any law shall prejudicially affect; the other is:

An appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any Act or decision of the legislature of the province or of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

We see at once that the words of this subsection are much wider than the words of the other; because, while the first subsection is confined exclusively to rights and privileges which existed by law or practice at the union, the second refers to any right or privilege. Now, when the minority and those who represented them found that they had been defeated in the Barrett case, and vious reason, for the difference we find in that they could not succeed under the first section of the Act, they thought that under the words of the second subsection they would succeed. They thought that the rights which were guarded by that subsection were such rights as they had been deprived of. They went to the Supreme Court, and three out of the five judges there decided against them. But, nothing daunted, they carried their case to the highest court in the Empire, and that court decided unanimously that the separate schools which had been conferred upon the minority in Manitoba by the Act of 1871 did fall within the protection of this second subsection. Therefore, if we find that this clause declares that those separate schools are not to be interfered with, or that if they are interfered with they shall be restored, then most assuredly the contention is well founded that under the constitution we are obliged to restore them. But is there any such provision to be found in this clause? "An appeal shall lie"-does that mean that the separate schools shall be restored? member the words of the first section, which prevents interference. If the framers of the constitution meant that the rights referred to in the second subsection should be restored, that was equivalent to saying that they could not be interfered with. Why, then, change the wording of the statute? Why not include those rights in the first subsection? Why should the framers of the constitution provide an elaborate and expensive machinery of this kind to do what would have been done by one additional word in the first subsection? But, Sir, it was not the intention of the framers of the constitution that those rights and privileges which might come into existence subsequent to the union should receive the same protection as the rights and privileges which existed prior to the union; and why? A very little consideration will show us why. Because the rights and privileges which existed at the union were rights and privileges which were known and understood, and the danger, if there was any danger, in connection with them was fully appreciated. But the rights and privileges which might come into existence after the union were unknown; they were in the womb of the future; no one knew what they might be; no one could tell whether they might be fair and beneficent rights, or monstrous and mischievous rights. Acts of Parliament are not always just, we know very well. Unfortunately, they are often very unjust; and the framers of the constitution had no intention of enacting that, by a mere snap vote in the legislature. some provisions which might be monstrously unjust should be maintained and perpetuated for all time. Therefore it was that they left to the future the things of the futureleft to the men of the future to deal with the things that might in the future be established. This is the reason, the plain and ob-these two sections. No. Mr. Speaker, the men who framed this constitution were not so fatuous as to put a clause into it which would perpetuate for ever rights which were unborn, and the particular nature of which no man living at that time could imagine. But that is the contention we have to meet here to-day. We are told that the constitution requires that these separate schools shall be restored. The assertion is made stoutly enough. But 1 have heard no proof whatever adduced that the constitution does anything of the kind. Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, in the very able remarks he made last night, referred to certain statements made by the judges in the course of the argument and in the judgment. But the quotations which my hon, friend made in no degree prove the contention which he sought to establish. Those quotations were made in reply to the counsel who was endeavouring to show that the appeal which was then being argued before the Privy Council did not fall within the second subsection at all. Mr. Cozens Hardy and Mr. Haldane were arguing that there could not be a case. They were endeavouring to prove that it was absurd to say that there was a case under the 22nd subsection, and the statements made by the Lord Chan-cellor were in reference to that argument. I wish now to recall to the House again for one moment, the statement of Mr. Blake which was referred to by the hon, member for North Simcoe last night. Mr. Blake stated what it was he was asking decision upon; he laid down what the case was that he was arguing. Is there any gentleman in this House who will assume that Mr. Blake, whom we all know so well, did not understand what the question was which he wanted to bring before the court? What did Mr. Blake say? At page 26, I find:

The LORD CHANCELLOR. It is not before us what should be declared, is it?

Mr. BLAKE. No, what is before your Lordship is, whether there is a case for appeal.

The LORD CHANCELLOR. What is before us is the functions of the Governor General.

Yes, and not the methods in Mr. BLAKE. which he shall exercise then—not the discretion which he shall use, but whether a case has arisen on these facts on which he has jurisdiction to intervene. That is all that is before your Lordships.

Again, at page 38:

Mr. BLAKE. The question, whether, on the whole, acting in their political capacity, the Privy Council believe that they ought not to act, or to act in what we may consider a lame and half-hearted way, or to go the whole length of cur demand, is no part of the question I have to submit to your Lordships.

Again, at page 266, just before the final judgment:

Mr. BLAKE. I do not ask your Lordship to make any suggestion as to his action, which I conceived from the beginning is political. He is to be instructed as to the law; and then his action and the action of the Parliament will carry the thing out.

It is rather interesting, at this moment, to call attention to a remark which Lord Shand made:

Lord SHAND. Do you think it is necessary for us to go much deeper: That there was established a system of denominational education which was regarded as a privilege by all the parties who were in the minority?

Then he goes on to say:

Lord SHAND. It would be a very different thing to go to the Governor General and ask him to establish a denominational system, or get him to ask the legislature to do it. I do not think you would ask that.

That is the very thing, we are told, that the constitution says we have to do, and that the Privy Council, by its decision, says we have to do—to establish a system of denominational schools in the province of Manitoba.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose the hon, member will admit that the court went further than Mr. Blake said it was necessary to go.

Mr. McNEILL. I am coming to that. I admit that to avoid, as I believe, a misconception, the court went a great deal further than Mr. Blake said they required to go, or than they said themselves they had a right to go.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. McNEILL. It is not an opinion at all. I give the hon. gentleman the proof. Far be it from me to offer an opinion on any such question:

Lord WATSON. I apprehend that an appeal to the Governor is an appeal to his discretion. It is a political, administrative appeal, and not a judicial appeal, in any sense of the term, and in the same way, after he has decided, the same latitude of discretion is given the Dominion Parliament to legislate or not, as they think fit.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McNEILL. Yes, you all admit that, but if you are bound by the constitution to legislate in a certain way, you cannot have that discretion.

Lord WATSON. The power given of appeal to the Government, and, upon request by the Governor, to the legislature of Canada, seems to be wholly discretionary in both.

Mr. EWART. No doubt.

Lord WATSON. Both in the Governor and in the legislature.

Mr. EWART. Yes.

Mr. McNeill.

Lord Watson says, further on:

He has to take into consideration many things, which we have not to. He cannot do anything himself. At the last resort, the only person or body which can do anything more is the Parliament of Canada, who are certainly in no legal they felt there was some substantial grounds for doing it. I think that those quotations sufficiently show what the opinion of the judges was with recompunction, and certainly would not act unless

I think that those quotations sufficiently show what the opinion of the judges was with regard to what they were to decide. I will quote from the judgment of the Lord Chancellor at page 284, and if the hon. Minister of Justice will be kind enough, for one moment, to hear this, he will find it a direct answer to the question he put:

The sole question to be determined is, whether a right or privilege that the Roman Catholic minority previously enjoyed, has been affected by the legislation of 1890.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was not the question I put to the hon, gentleman. It was whether the court had not gone further than merely to answer the question, and whether they had not given their opinion as to what course should be followed in order to remove the grievance.

Mr. McNEILL. I thought I had answered that question already. I thought the hon. gentleman said something with regard to my opinion, as to whether the court had gone further or not than the question before them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I said that was a matter of opinion, and, consequently, a matter of argument.

Mr. McNEILL. The argument is settled by the Lord Chancellor. He says the sole question yet to be determined is whether the rights or privileges of the minority which the Roman Catholic minority previously enjoyed, has been affected by the legislation of 1890.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And my point is they have gone further than that.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. Minister of Justice points out that the court has gone further.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They gave the benefit of their views whether it was necessary or not.

This is a question which Mr. McNEILL. is somewhat out of the line of my argument, but I may deal with that point at present. I am now arguing the question whether we are by the constitution called upon to do a certain thing. I will go into the merits of the question afterwards. am dealing with the constitutional point We are in no way called upon, under the constitution, to pay any regard to the advice which these four most able men, most impartial men, and most ignorant men. so far as the conditions of Manitoba and their relations to the Dominion are concerned, may give as to what is best for Manitoba and the Dominion. Their impartiality is beyond any cavil or doubt, and so is informed of the special matters connected with this subject in the North-west Territories, and, for my part, I decline to hand over the political adjudication of the question by this House to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. This is now simply a matter of politics that we are discussing; it is not a question of the constitution at all. My hon. friend has apparently abandoned the contention as to the constitution, and is referring now to an obiter of the judges that is in no way binding upon us, which is not in reference to a question of law at all; which, even if it were in connection with the matter of law would not be binding upon any court. When the hon. gentleman comes here with the suggestion that this obiter is binding upon the Parliament of Canada in this matter of grave political consequence affecting the interests of this great Dominion, I say that, however able these gentlemen may be, we the Parliament of Canada are better informed on the matters of that kind than they can possibly be, and we are the tribunal to decide these questions. The question was not referred to the Judical Committee of the Privy Council as to what action we should take. I do not blame or suggest any blame to them for making that remark; I say that they made it, in my opinion, probably in order to prevent a misconception. They arrived at a conclusion which we all knew before they arrived at it, that certain rights and privileges had been granted, and certain rights and privileges had been taken away; and, in order to guard themselves against misconception, against the idea that they had suggested that it was necessary to put these rights and privileges back exactly where they were, they say that it is not necessary. They say:

It is certainly not essential that the statutes repealed by the Act of 1890 should be re-enacted, or that the precise provisions of these statutes should again be made law. The system of education embodied in the Act of 1890 no doubt commends itself to, and adequately supplies the wants of the great majority of the inhabitants of the province. All legitimate ground of complaint would be removed if that system were supplemented by provisions which would re-move the grievance upon which the appeal is founded, and were modified so far as might be necessary to give effect to these provisions.

Does any one suggest that this Parliament is bound in any degree, is bound to the weight of one poor scruple, by a remark of that kind on the part of these gentlen'en? With all respect for their great erudition and ability and unquestioned impartiality, I repeat again that, so far as the matters we are discussing here are concerned, so far as the local affairs of Canada are concerned, they are in point of fact ignorant, and whether they are ignorant or not, we are not bound by remarks of that kind. If the Minister of Justice has no better argument than that upon which to found his and an analysis of the state of

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is rather against imperialism, is it not?

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will have his little joke. I have been drawn away a good deal from what I had intended to say-

Mr. McCARTHY. It has done a great deal of good.

Mr. McNEILL—but before I pass away from the constitutional question, I wish to make one further remark. It is said that there was an agreement that the minority in Manitoba should have their separate schools. If there was such an agreementand I am not in a position to decide whether there was or not, for I candidly admit that I have not waded through all the documents in connection with this matter-we find it in the first clause of this section of the constitution. But the second clause of this 22nd section distinctly negatives the idea that these separate schools, if they were to be had at all, were to be preserved in perpetuity. The second subsection of this 22nd section shows that whatever rights and privileges it may have been understood they were to have, these were not necessarily to be preserved in perpetuity, but were subject to revision from time to time by the local legislature, but always with the right on the part of the minority to come to this House for redress of grievances if this House thought it desirable that those grievances should be redressed.

Mr. AMYOT. Will the hon. gentleman say what he understands by the word "practice" in the second subsection?

Mr. McNEILL. I do not think that that is germane to the point I am at present dealing with. But as I understand it, no rights existed by law at the time of the union. Therefore, in order to make it quite clear that the minority should be protected in all the rights they had enjoyed in reference to the denominational schools, the word "practice" was put in as well as the word "law." I was about to say, so far as the merits of the case are concerned-

Mr. AMYOT. Are we not bound to keep the practice in this matter?

Mr. McNEILL. That has been decided in Barrett's case, and is out of the discussion. as my hon. friend will understand. We are now upon the second subsection of the Act. Now, there has been-I do not say that it has been purposely done—a wonderful con-fusion of two distinctly separate thoughts in connection with this discussion. One idea is that we are bound by the constiopinion that this judgment of the Judicial tution to do a certain thing, and the other is that we are under moral obligation to do it. And, as soon as we prove that we are not compelled by the constitution, the two questions are mixed up, and it is made to appear that some statement in the course of the argument or judgment casts a moral obligation upon us. Now, I am ready to the South Shore Company obtained their deal with the question of moral obligation.

SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY, N.S.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 88) respecting the South Shore Railway Company.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FORBES. I was in hopes that we could end this difficulty by coming to an agreement upon an amendment, which was practically understood to be the result of negotiations. Amendments have been submitted to the promoters of the Bill, but, so far as I can learn, they are not yet accepted. I do not know whether they propose to accept them or not.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). The hon. member knows that the proposal he has made cannot be accepted.

Mr. MclSAAC. Before this motion is carried. I desire to make some remarks. wish to direct attention particularly to a phase of this question which has been adverted to by several hon. gentlemen during the last debate. An impression has been sought to be created in this House that the Government of Nova Scotia was hostile to the South Shore Railway Company, and was unduly partial to the Coast Road Company. These are the two rival railway companies in the western part of Nova Scotia. I may say that during all the time these negotiations were going on with the Government of Nova Scotia, I happened to be a member of that Government, and I think I am in as good a position as any other hon. member in this House to state what the attitude of the Government in Nova Scotia was during all this time towards the South Shore Company. It has been asserted over and over again that the Premier and the Government of Nova Scotia were hostile throughout to the South Shore Company, and unduly partial to the Coast Line Company. It has been asserted that the charter which was granted to the Coast Line Company was granted by the Government, and argument is made in this House on the assertion that it was the Government which did this, and refused to do that. Now, let me tell this committee that this charter first obtained by the South Shore Company, was granted by the legis- strance and opposition. But it is left to wards given to the Coast Line Company was granted by the legislature of that province in 1893, one year later. The ground taken by the promoters of this Bill is that the South Shore Company obtained their charter one year before the Coast Line Company, and that consequently they have the best rights; and that afterwards, the Government interfered to injure their rights by negotiating with the Coast Line Company. Now, as I say, the charter was first obtained by the South Shore Company in April, 1892, to build a line of railway from Yarmouth to Shelburne. In that charter it was provided that the company should begin operations within two years, and that they should have until 1896 to build the road. In about one year after the charter was obtained, the Coast Line Company came to the legislature to seek a charter. Now, here let me remind the committee that the Government of Nova Scotia at this stage had nothing whatever to do with this charter. The charter for this Coast Line Railway was introduced in the House of Assembly by Mr. Johnston, who was then a colleague of mine in the Government, and one of the representatives of the county of Shelburne in the House of Assembly. His colleague in the representation of that county was Mr. Cahan, who was the leader of the Conservative Opposition in that province. This is a point of importance, and I would like the Minister of Railways to pay particular attention to this phase of the question. When this charter was introduced by Mr. Johnston, it will be conceded that if there was anything wrong in it the leader of the Opposition would have brought it to the notice of the House on that occasion. Not only was he one of representatives of Shelburne, but was the leader of the Conservathe tive party in the House, and if the object of this charter was to do any injustice to the South Shore Company, if the object was to give some advantage from a party standpoint, to the Liberal party in the province, and to work any disadvantage to the Conservative party, surely the man, above all others, who would raise his voice against that charter, would be the leader of the Opposition himself. Did he oppose it? Did any Conservative member in the House of Assembly oppose the passage of the charter for the Coast Line Company? Not one of them, and yet the South Shore Company had obtained their charter from the same legislature one year previously, and if any injustice was going to be done to the South Shore people, and if the Liberals were likely to gain any party advantage over the Con-servatives, surely that was the occasion, above all others, when the leader of the Opposition should raise his voice in remonhon, members in this House, years afterwards, to come forward and tell this House charter was instigated by Government of Nova by the Scotia. Liberal party, for the purpose of the invading the rights of a company which obtained a charter one year pre-Sir, the records of the debates that took place are the best proof of what I said. Can the hon, member for Shelburne (Mr. White) who is promoting this Bill, tell me that he was opposed to the passage of this charter to the Coast Line Railway Company in 1893? On that occasion, I believe he represented the sentiments of the Conservative party in the county of Shelburne. I remember well the first time I had the pleasure of meeting the hon, gentleman in Nova Scotia. He was in company with my friend, and his friend, the Hon. Mr. Johnston, who was the local representative of the county of Shelburne. I was introduced to the hon, member for Shelburne by Mr. Johnston, and the occasion, I believe, was when the hon, member was in Halifax with a draft Bill of this charter, or if not a draft Bill, at least with some papers in connectinon with that company.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I am sure the hon, gentleman does not want to state anything that is not true. I may say that I had nothing whatever to do with promoting this charter for the Coast Line Company in Halifax. I wrote the charter, but nothing more. But I was in Halifax at that time with regard to another road, Mr. Hervey's. I think that is what the hon, gentleman means.

Mr. McISAAC. Perhaps the hon .gentleman had not the charter with him on that occasion, but, as he says himself, he wrote the charter, and he knows, and will not deny, that on the occasion when this charter was submitted to the legislature, he was heart and soul in unison with Mr. Johnston, and all the Liberals and Conservatives in the county of Shelburne, in urging that this charter would receive the support of both parties in the House. My hon. friend cannot deny that. It is a matter of public record, and I hold in my hand, and intend to read from, the debates of the House of Assembly on that occasion, to show that both Liberals and Conservatives in the county of Shelburne and Yarmouth, and, throughout the province, were united on this question. There was not one Conservative member in the House who was opposed to granting a charter to the Coast The only objec-Line Railway Company. tion urged against it now is that this company got a charter one year before. Under certain circumstances that would be a valid objection, but no valid objection existed then, because although the company had obtained a charter it did nothing during the year, the company made not the slightest move to organize or to show any bona fides, or to demonstrate that they had a dollar of capital and had any intention to build the road in that part of the province. For years before either companies obtained a charter from the legislature, as the hon, member for Shelburne (Mr. White) well knows, there was an agitation in the western part of the province for railway extension from Yarmouth to Shelburne and along the south shore to Halifax. Effort after effort had been put forth by Conservatives and Liberals, by the friends of railway extension in that part of the province. All those efforts were futile, including the effort of the South Shore Company, which obtained a charter one year before a charter was granted to the Coast Line Company. When the Coast Railway Company came before the legislature there was not a Conservative in the House of Assembly who opposed it, and there were no people in the province who objected to it. Speaking now as regards the position in which felt myself in 1893 as a member I of the Government coming from may mention it. was represented that every effort to obtain railway extension from Yarmouth along the shore had failed. It was represented to the legislature that the South Shore Company had done nothing, although it had received a charter about a year before. The leader of the Opposition did not oppose the granting of a charter to the Coast Line Company. The Bill was introduced by a private member in 1893. It passed its various stages in the legislature without a dissenting voice. There was some discussion when the Bill went through the House, and in order that there may not be any misunderstanding. I desire and intend to read to the House all the discussion that took place in the legislature in regard to the granting of a charter the Coast Railway Company. to this promise I do not propose make much time. The take up very consists of the speech discussion one member. No hon. member felt should oppose it, no one was so unpatriotic as to consider he should oppose even a narrow gauge railway in the counties of Yarmouth and Shelburne, especially when every effort in the past to secure a broad failed. The gauge road had county of Queen's which lies alongside the county of Shelburne was very much interested in railway extension from Yarmouth to Shelburne, as well as those two counties themselves. I will read to the House the only speech de-livered on that occasion. It was the speech of Mr. Hemeon, who represented Queen's. took keen That gentleman a interest railway extension in the western part of the province. When he heard there was a proposal made to build a narrow gauge line from Yarmouth to Shelburne and extend it further, he, with many others, felt that a narrow gauge road was not desirable in those counties or in any other part of the province. That opinion was largely shared by members of the legislature; it was shared also by members of the government, and they looked on the project with a good deal of disfavour. The hon, member for Queen's, on the motion for the second reading of the Bill, made the following speech:

Mr. Hemeon said that, in looking over this Bill, it would be seen to be rather a new departure from measures hitherto introduced relating to the construction of lines of railway in this province. The line contemplated by this Bill was what was known as a "narrow-gauge" line of railway. As this was a mode of constructing railroads which had not hitherto been pursued in this province, it was one with which, probably, few in this House had any practical acquaintance. Instead of, as in the standard gauge, 4 feet 8½ inches, the dis-Instead of, as tance at which the rails were placed apart was only 2 feet. One such road was opened in 1879, from Farmington to This road last year carried over 25,000 passengers and 28,000 tons of freight, and was capable of carrying ten times as much, if that many passengers and that much freight had offered. The read to which he referred had been extended from Philips to the Rangeley Lakes in 1891, a distance of 30 miles; also, one connecting Strong with Kingfield; distance, 16 miles. He had personally travelled over a road which had grades of 250 feet to the mile, and curvatures of 22 degrees. The difference would be seen when it was remembred that in Nova Scotia we allowed no grade of over 80 feet to the mile or a curve of over 6 dc-This made a manifest difference in the Such a road could be carried around hills ccst. in order to avoid fillings, and over grades to avoid cuttings, and consequently through a country that would be impossible or very expensive In the state of Maine the to an ordinary road. read to which he referred was carried through a country that was wild, hilly, even mountainous, and the grades were steeper and the curves sharper than on many carriage roads in this province at the present time. He was in a position to say that the roads did their work efficiently and He was in the United States at a time when the winter was at its height and snowstorms were frequent, but the roads did their work as regularly as wide-gauge roads. He saw one train, drawn by a 38-ton engine, which hauled 90,000 feet of lumber. This was as large a freight of that material as was to be found on any road in Nova Scotia. One engine on such a road could haul cars enough to carry between 300 and 400 Therefore, it would be perceived that such roads were in every way desirable. Another important fact was, that they could be built at a much lower cost than wide-gauge roads. The first cost of construction would not exceed 50 to 60 per cent of the cost of a wide-gauge road, while the cost of the subsequent operation of the road would not exceed 60 to 70 per cent. time ago the $50 stock of the road from Farmington to Philips was sold at $75. At the present time the stock could not be purchased for anything approaching $75. The section of country thing approaching $75. The section of country between Yarmouth and Lockeport, through which the road contemplated by this Bill would pass, was such that a road of this description would fully answer all the requirements for many years to come. The construction of this road would enable the people of that part of the country to obtain railway accommodation, for which they had long waited, and for which they might have to wait many years if a more expensive road was It was quite reasonable that the people should seek the construction of this road, and he trusted that the government would entertain the project favourably. He trusted also that his remarks would enable the members of the House who were not familiar with narrowgauge roads, to gain a better idea of their value. This is all the discussion that took place in the Nova Scotia legislature when the charter of the Coast Line Railway Company went through the House. speech in opposition to the charter, or is there a word in it to say that it was an invasion of the charter of the South Shore Railway Company which had been granted by the same legislature a year before? Does that speech show that the South Shore Company had invested a dollar of honest money in the enterprise, or that they had the slightest intention of ever constructing the road? Was there a Conservative on the floor of the Assembly who could say word in its behalf? Was there any Conservative in the Assembly so low as to do reverence to that company, which this Parliament, I am sorry to say, has for the last month been endeavouring to resusci-When other people have sought another charter from the legislature, that was the time for the friends of the South Shore Company to oppose any interference with its rights. Where were the ten or thirteen Conservatives in the legislature on that occasion? Where was Mr. Charles H. Cahan, the leader of the Conservative Opposition, who represented the county of Shelburne, now represented in this House by my hon. friend (Mr. White)? Mr. Cahan is a man who could upon this or any other question make a bitter and able fight, but when this charter was moved by his own celleague, Mr. Johnston, and during all the stages of that charter, the leader of the Conservative Opposition never said a word We were told here that the to oppose it. Government did all in its power on that occasion and ever since to obstruct the South Shore Railway, and to aid in every way, fair and unfair, for paltry political reasons, the Coast Line Company. I have been a member of the Nova Scotia Government during all these years, and I deny that, and I challenge any member of this House to truthfully assert it. The Government of the province had nothing whatever to do with the charter of the Coast Railway Company. The members of the local government sat in their places as the members of this Government should do now, and listened to the arguments in its favour. They knew that a charter had been given one year previously to the South Shore Company, and they saw that another charter was introduced by one of their colleagues from the county of Shelburne. They saw also that the other member from the county of Shelburne, who was the leader of the Opposition, never opposed this charter while it passed through its various stages in the House. I cannot repeat that too often because it is the crux of the whole discussion. That charter became law by the unanimous consent of every Conservative and every Liberal in the legislature. That was in the spring of 1893, and at this stage the Government had done nothing whatever in connection with it, nor had the company approached them. Having obtained a charter from the legislature, they took steps to organize the company, and having satisfied the Covernment that they became legally organized under the charter, they appealed to the Government, representing that their charter gave them power to build a narrow gauge railway from Yarmouth to Shelburne and along the southern coast. In the beginning the Government did not look with favour upon the construction of a narrow gauge road in the province, but when it was represented that every honest effort had failed to secure a standard gauge road, they consented. In part of this Dominion are party lines more strictly drawn than in the province of Nova Scotia. When two rival companies undertake to build roads in any part of the province, we usually expect to see party rivalries creep in. But in this case, when this company went to the Government and asked for a subsidy to build a narrow gauge railway from Yarmouth to Shelburne, both the Liberals and the Conservative party in those counties supported the application. We are told that the Government of Nova Scotia bonussed this company for petty party purposes; but there was not an opponent of the scheme at all. All parties in those two counties joined in urging the Government to aid this railway; and the municipalities granted the right of way in those two counties.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). In the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. McISAAC. I know that there is one hon. member who is not very much known in the province of Nova Scotia, the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills). Very few counties in Nova Scotia know anything about him, except that he has lately acquired some notoriety in connection with the military property in this county. I say the counties of Yarmouth and Shelburne granted a free right of way to the Coast Line Company. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, if this is not on the line of railway and paid for.

After the company was duly organized, an application was made to the government. in which it was represented that a smaller subsidy than was usually granted for a standard gauge road would be sufficient. The government of Nova Scotia, after duly considering the question, came to the conclusion that aid should be granted, for the reason that all the people in that part of the province urged it very strongly, and that there was no difference of opinion on the subject between the two political parties The government first promised $1,500 per mile. Afterwards, when it was agreed to widen the railway, the subsidy was increased to $2,200 a mile. After all these negotiations had taken place, and after the company had commenced the construction of the road, the company entered into a contract with the government, and I am going to read the essential features of that contract. I read from a speech delivered by the Provincial Secretary last session, as reported at page 25 of the debates of the House of Assembly for 1895:

The third contract was that between the government and the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, which related to a narrow gauge road from the town of Yarmouth, in the county of Yarmouth, to the town of Lockeport, in the county of Shelburne, the distance not to exceed ninety miles. This contract was entered into on the 18th September, 1894, and the condition was that the work was to be commenced forthwith and be completed before the 1st October, 1896. The ordinary subsidy given to railways was $3,200 per mile, but in this case, as the road was to be a narrow gauge road, the subsidy was placed at a lower figure. The company would receive $2,200 per mile instead of the $3,200 per mile usually given to broad gauge roads. As to the terms of this contract, he asked the attention of the House while he read the clauses relating to the manner in which the company was entitled to obtain payment of the subsidy.
(a) "They shall be entitled to receive the sum of twenty-two thousand dollars, being the subsidy for ten miles, when they shall have fully completed, equipped and put into effective operation, to the satisfaction of the provincial engineer, a section of ten miles of the said railway from Yarmouth eastward, provided that when such subsidy is claimed the work of constructing the remainder of the railway is being vigorously and effectively carried on, and that, in addition to the completion of said ten miles, they have expended on such construction on the adjacent sections a sum of not less than $59,000. Such expenditure shall be established by the report of the provincial engineer, who in making such report shall take into account only useful and effective work actually done and paid for, and materials for construction actually delivered

As to the further payments it was provided: (b)" They shall be entitled to receive further payments of subsidy from time to time on successive ten-mile sections fully completed, equipped and put into effective operation, to the satisfaction of the provincial engineer, provided that (in every case prior to the completion of the whole line) when such subsidy is claimed the work of constructing the remainder of the railway is being vigorously and effectively carried on, and that, in addition to the work actually completed, they shall have expended on such construction on the adjacent sections a sum of not less than $25,000. Such expenditure to be established by the report of the provincial engineer in the same way as that specified in the foregoing paragraph (a), provided also, that in no case shall the company be entitled to claim subsidy until they shall have paid or caused to be paid all wages due to the workmen employed and all charges for materials supplied for the construction of said railway." It would be seen, as respects the first ten miles, that the company must complete it and nave expended $50,000 on work ahead before they could get the subsidy for the first ten miles, and that in the case of subsequent sections they must have completed each section and have expended $25,000 on work ahead before they were entitled to claim the subsidy for such section. There was in this contract a condition of an exceptional character to which he wished to call attention. The government were aware that there was more or less of a railway war down the shore, and that there was perhaps more than the usual amount of doubt as to the success of the company undertaking the enterprise, in view of the rivalries and struggles that were going on. For this reason they thought it necessary to take extra precautions to secure the completion and equipment of the road. The supporters of the enterprise, the gentlemen who might be called the financial backers of the road, were John A. Brill, manfacturer, of Philadelphia; George Martin Brill, manufacturer, of Philadelphia, and George A. Fletcher, merchant, of Philadelphia. These three gentlemen were men of high financial standing and business re-They came to the government in support of the narrow gauge scheme, and agreed to enter into a personal obligation for all the debts that the company might contract in connection with the work. They agreed, further, that if the company should let the work of construction as was the custom, to another company, they should become responsible, so far as the government could make them so, for all the debts which the sub-company might incur in connection with the work. They had signed a bond of that nature, and, so far as it was possible to make them so, they had rendered themselves personally liable not only for all the debts incurred in the province of Nova Scotia by the company, but also for the debts of the construction company to which the work might half Lest this should occasion any misconbe let. Lest this should occasion any misconception, he felt it necessary to add a word of warning as regards claims which might be made of a more remote character. The gentlemen named agreed to become personally responsible for the debts of the Coast Railway Company, and for those of the sub-contractors in the first instance, but as regards sub-contractors in a more remote degree, they assumed no liability. Those who dealt with persons not being the company or the construction company, to which the work might be let, should not be misled by companies, first, the Coast Railway Company, and, second, the construction company, so-called. For other contractors or sub-contractors, the gentlemen who entered into the bond were not liable.

Usually in submitting contracts of this nature the government did not submit specifications, because they were voluminous, and it was hardly necessary that they should be laid upon the Table of the House. But as this was the first narrow gauge contract entered into, the government brought down a copy of the specifications, so that they might be printed in the journals of the legislature.

I think that I have given ample proof that the Government of Nova Scotia were not in any way biased but acted in an impartial manner throughout, so far as these two companies are concerned.

Mr. LISTER. The questions involved in this discussion are of such importance that I think the discussion should not be confined entirely to members from the province of Nova Scotia. We, in the province of Ontario as well as in the other sister provinces. are interested in the legislation now before the House. We are interested because there are principles involved in this legislation that affect all the rest of the Dominion, principles upon which this House and the Railway Committee of this House have over and over again pronounced; and to me it is amazing that the Government should permit the discussion of the Bill now before It is incredible that in view of the action of the Railway Committee in years past, in view of the action of this House upon similar legislation, the Governmentfor what motive it is impossible for me to conceive—should permit the promoter of this Bill to go on with it. What do we find here? We find it proposed to resuscitate a defunct railway company for the purpose of constructing a railway parallel to a line of railway which is now in the course of construction through a country which is utterly inadequate to support two rival lines of railway. The only inference which can be drawn is that the legislation now before the House is destined to compel the bona fide company now constructing the read to buy the other company out and repay that other company for the losses they have made in the undertaking which they initiated some years ago. What are the facts? To revive this railway charter means, in the first place, that the Coast Railway Company will be hampered in the sale of its bonds. It means that the Coast Railway, which has undertaken its work in good faith, which has spent a large sum of money in the work, may be obliged to abandon the undertaking entirely for the reason that it is confronted with another railway having a subsidy from the Dominion. And this Government is aiding and abetting this monstrous conspiracy against the rights of the people, it is aiding and abetting a parcel the nature of the bond. Whatever value there was in the bond, and he thought it was a valuable one, it only applied to the debts of the two out credit or capital to destroy a legitimate undertaking which is honestly prosecuting its work. The Government are backing up the hon, member for Shelburne (Mr. White) who, in this matter, does not occupy a position which a professional man should like to occupy. What do we find? The hon, member for Shelburne was a solicitor for the South Shore Road. He was paid by that undertaking, as I understand it.

Agriculture of the control of the co

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne), I never received a cent of money from it.

Mr. LISTER. They never paid anybody, but probably they promised to pay.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I never was their solicitor.

Mr. LISTER. Very well, if the hon. gentleman was not the solicitor for that road, he is the promoter of it now. The hon. gentleman, according to his own statement in the House, drew up the charter for the Coast Line Railway. He was the solicitor for that road to the extent that he was employed to draw its charter, and according to the Minister of Justice last night, he should not be here taking any part in any debate or measure affecting that company.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think the hon. gentleman wants to do an injustice to the hon. member for Shelburne. That hon. gentleman said distinctly that he never received a cent from the company.

Mr. LISTER. There are two companies.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I never received a cent or even sent in a bill.

Mr. IASTER. The hon. Secretary of State does me the justice of saying that I do not want to put the hon. member for Shelburne in a wrong light. He has stated that he was not the solicitor for the South Shore Road, and I have accepted his statement. But I was going on to say that the Act of Parliament to incorporate the Coast Line Company was drawn by the hon. gentleman from Shelburne. If the lawyers down in Nova Scotia draw bills for nothing, they are somewhat different from the lawyers in my province. We would charge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does my hon, friend say that he would not draw for nothing the charter for a company to run a line through his own constituency—to open out and develop his own constituency?

Mr. LISTER. Not for a rich corporation; oh, no. They could afford to pay the little fee for that service.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You would be delighted to do it.

Mr. LISTER. Would the hon. gentleman give his medicine for nothing?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I sometimes do.

Mr. CAMERON. He gives many a dose in this House that gentlemen opposite do not like

Mr. LISTER. At all events, my hon. friend drew the charter. According to the statement of my hon. friend from Antigoish (Mr. McIsaac) the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) appeared in the legislature of Nova Scotia for the purpose, no doubt, of helping on the Coast Line Railway. Now, the South Shore Railway Company had been incorporated, they had done a little work on the road, and they had allowed their Act of incorporation to run out; it had expired.

Mr. CAMERON. Time's up.

Mr. LISTER. Does the chairman say that time is up?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Five minutes more.

Mr. LISTER. I would like an hour.

An hon. MEMBER. Sit down.

Mr. LISTER. Oh, no. This is too important a matter. The South Shore Railway, as I was saying, was incorporated by the provincial Parliament of Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia is in the eastern part of the country, and has more than a local reputation from the fact that the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) claims it as his home. There could only be one member like the hon, gentleman. Now, let us get to business; these interruptions necessarily lengthen the few remarks I have to make. The South Shore Railway did a little work—

Mr. CAMERON. When?

In 1894. Then it allowed Mr. LISTER. its charter to run out, and ceased to be a corporate body. The Coast Line Railway Company then applied for incorporation. Now, Sir, that was the time for the gentlemen who are promoting this legislation to appear before the legislature and say: You have no right to incorporate this company, because we have an Act of incorporation, and we intend to apply to the Dominion Parliament to have the powers in that Act revived. But neither my hon. friend from Shelburne, nor any other gentleman so far as we know, appeared before the legislature to raise any objection. The people of that country wanted a road, and the Nova Scotia Government decided to incorporate this company and to subsidize it. The company went on honestly; they entered into a bond with the Nova Scotia Government to have so many miles of the road completed by the month of October next. They have nearly twenty miles graded; they have the stonework of their bridges up, and have made contracts with the iron manufacturers for the superstructure, which is to be up within the course this work is done, the member for Shelburne again appears as the evil genius of this road. He comes to Parliament, after his company is in bankruptcy, after it has been declared absolutely insolvent, and after proceedings have been taken to close Chairman, if you are curious.

The hour for Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Private Bills has expired.

SUPPLY-THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock, I was endeavouring to show, and I hope with some degree of success, that no obligation is cast upon this Parliament by the constitution to re-establish a system of separate schools in the province of Manitoba. stated that on the discussion of this question, there seemed to have been a remarkable blending together, if not confusion of two distinct considerations—the one being whether we were bound by the constitution to do this, and the other whether grievances, and great grievances, arising we were bound by moral obligation to do it. So far as the constitutional obligation there not dozens and scores of people who it. So far as the constitutional obligation is concerned, I do not propose to add anything to what I have already said. But, is concerned, from every point of view, who with your permission, I will say a word have been reduced from a condition of upon the other aspect of the case, and what luxury, which for generations had belonged I have to say will be brief, for I very much fear that I have already trespassed too long penury at the present moment? Was not upon the patience of this Chamber. And | in what I am about to say I would most especially ask for the kind consideration and forbearance of my French-Canadian friends larger considerations were not to prevail? in this House; for what I am about to say; must, from its very nature, be something that they will not like to hear. I mean to say that I must contend for something of which they entirely disapprove. But 1 hope I shall let fall no word that can, in any degree, wound the susceptibilities of any one in this Chamber, or out of it. Now, the question that is presented to us to consider at the present moment is this: It having been decided that we are not bound by the constitution to restore these separate schools, are we bound by moral obligations; is it right and just and necessary that these schools should be re-established? That a grievance exists, I admit. No one can gainsay the fact, the patent fact. that certain rights and privileges were conferred upon the Catholic minority in Manitoba, and that those rights and privileges. after they had been enjoyed for 19 or 20 years, were taken away suddenly, and, as I have already said, I believe harshly, in certain respects. But now the question is: whether this Parliament is obliged, from in reference to that by the Endowed School moral considerations, from consideration in Commissioners? Rights and privileges were reference to the best interests of the people conferred upon several parishes, among of two or three months. But now that all of this country-for those are the considerations which we have to deal with hereto remedy the grievances which are com-plained of. The nature of the grievances was described by the hon, member for Simcoe last night, and I will not enter minutely into that matter. But I wish to it up and sell it out, and applies to have say that it does not follow, nor is it grant-the Act of incorporation revived. What ed by any legislative assembly in the world. does he do it for? I will tell you. Mr. that the existence of grievances in the sense in which this term is used here, is a reason why these grievances should necessarily be redressed. I wish to make my meaning clear on this point. In one sense, of course, it is not a grievance, but in the sense in which my hon, friend used the expression, it is a grievance. In the wider, and broader, and larger sense, nothing can be a grievance if the general good requires that that socalled grievance should exist. But I speak now of the restricted sense, and I say that in the restricted sense, it is a grievance. But have legislative assemblies, have parliaments, been in the habit of considering that because a grievance of that kind exists. it must be redressed, irrespective altogether of larger considerations? What was the case with regard to the Land Act of 1870 in the United Kingdom? Were there not were without reproach, so far as character But, is concerned, from every point of view, who to their families, to a condition of absolute that a grievance? But did the Parliament of the United Kingdom consider that because such a grievance as that existed, the Did they ever say that that was a reason why these grievances should be redressed in the sense of doing away with the larger legislation? Surely not, we all know that it was not so. Take the case of the disestablishment of the Irish Church. Were there not grievances-great, undoubted, undeniable grievances? was it considered necessary that these grievances should be redressed? Take the case of the operations of the Charity Commissioners in England. Were there not great grievances, were there not notorious grievances? But was it considered necessary that they should all be redressed? Take the case of the endowed school commissioners in England. Do we not know that grievances of the most pronounced character arise from the putting into effect of the legislation which gave rise to the Endowed Schools Commission? I have in my mind at this moment one case, that of Dulwich College, the great educational establishment for South London district. And what was done others, the parish of Camberwell, the inhabitants of which had for all time the right to send their children to that school at rates lower than the rates which the children of other parishes were obliged to pay. That right was taken away from them by the endowed school commission, and it is notorious that all over England the Endowed Schools Commissioners acted in this way, and that grievance after grievance was the result of putting into force the provisions of the statute by which they were created. But was it considered necessary to repeal that statute because these grievances were brought into existence under it? Surely not. If my hon, friend the Minister of Justice were present, I would refer him to an instance nearer home, and I would ask him whether, when fishermen were allowed to fish with a mesh of a certain size, and when the Department of Marine and Fisheries, acting upon considerations for the general weal, changed those regulations, de-prived those fishermen of the rights and privileges that they possessed to fish with nets of that particular mesh, and forced them to use another, and a larger, and a less efficient means of obtaining their livelihood-I would ask whether he considered that the fact of that grievance existing, was a reason why this Parliament should intervene and repeal the Act which had been put on the statute-book in the general interests, and for the general good? I say we have to deal with a question of this kind on large and broad principles, and we have to ask ourselves here, not whether a grievance in this sense exists, but whether, that grievence existing, it is in the general interest of this country that the legislation which gave rise to that grievance should be virtually repealed. We have to ask ourselves the broad question: Whether it is better to allow this grievance to exist, or to compel the majority of the people of Manitoba to legislate in a way contrary to the wishes of the majority of that province—whether we in this Parliament should interfere with the free province of Manitoba in the exercise of its undoubted right in respect to education? We have to look, in order to arrive at a conclusion on this question, a little afield, and see what the results have been in other provinces of this system of separate schools which it is sought once more to establish in Manitoba. I cannot help looking at my own province of Ontario, and I cannot help contrasting the condition of things I find there, where this system of separate schools exists, with the condition of things which exists in New Brunswick, where separate schools do not exist, with the condition of things which exists in Nova Scotia, where separate schools do not exist, with the condition of things in Prince Edward Island. where separate schools do not exist, and I find in those provinces where separate schools do not exist a condition of things is coming about which I believe will naturally follow where separate schools do not exist and where the children are brought up together under one national system of educa-tion. I find, if my information be correct, that in those provinces that bitterness of feeling which unhappily to a certain extent exists between the people of different religicus persuasions in Ontario, and which unhappily did exist in those provinces at one time, is rapidly dying away. I understand that there now Protestant and Roman Caand more are becoming more reconciled to one another, that the children being educated in the common schools are forming attachments and friendships from childhood which will continue to manheod, and such troubles as we know in Outario are happily almost unknown by those provinces by the sea. Under these circumstances, I ask, in the general interests of this country is it for us to deliberately determine in this House that we will trust on the majority of the people of Manitoba this system of separate schools, which certainly in the province of Ontario has not contributed to that feeling of good-will that we should like to see obtain in the minds of the people of this country? We are asked, as I have said before, in consideration of the conscientious scruples of the minority to override the conscientious scruples of the majority in that province and impose on them a system of education which they utterly disappove of. I ask whether, on broad principles, we are called upon to do this thing? It is called redressing a grievance. I ask whether we assembled here in this House have a right to redress a grievance of this kind, whether in the general interests of the people of this country it is well we should do this thing? That is the point we have to consider, and that is the point we have to determine. And if I may say one word to my French-Canadian friends on this subject, it is this: that if there is one thing more than another I hope to see it is an amicable. friendly and satisfactory arrangement of this burning question, and I would say to them, if I might venture to do so, that if they approach the people of Manitoba in a reasonable spirit, in a kindly and friendly spirit, as I am sure they wish to do, and if they ask of them not those things which they cannot grant conscientiously, but things which they may grant and which my French Canadian friends may all be able to agree to, we may hope that a satisfactory solution of the question may be arrived at. But at the same time I wish to say this, that if it comes to be a question of struggle between the Dominion authority and the authority of the province ne man can tell where that will end.

Mr. AMYOT. We have been led into a trap by confederation.

Mr. McNEILL. But one thing I am sure of, and I hope my hon, friend will allow me to bring that consideration to his mind, and it is this: that it would be almost impossible to frame enactments to give effect to any legislation we may desire to pass in this House which the people of Maniif the people make up their toba. minds to do so, will not be able to evade and escape. For years this struggle may go on, for years this struggle may continue in this Dominion, for years this House may be called upon time after time to endeavour to give effect to legislation we may pass, and the result will be that we will just be pursuing the province of Manitoba from one legal thicket into another; and, therefore, I say in all kindliness and friendliness to my French-Canadian friends that I strongly advise them to endeavour to arrive at an amicable and friendly arrangement of this matter, because I am quite sure that if it be atempted to coerce the legislature of Manitoba it will be an exceedingly difficult and very dangerous undertaking.

Mr. WALLACE. I will not trespass very long on the time of the House. I heard the statements made by the hon, member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) with respect to the schools of the province of Manitoba. It is clear to me that the proposal that those schools should be restored virtually as they had existed previous to 1890 is a proposition that will not meet with acceptance in this House, nor with acceptance at the hands of the people of this country. The facts are undeniable. We have the evidence of Mr. Sifton, Attorney General of Manitoba, who. I understand, is also Minister of Education in that province, as to the state of the schools, and those statements were read by the hon. member, and not contradicted, or at least no proof was given that they were incorrect, and if after nine year's experience of the schools of Manitoba under that plan, it is found out that out of 26 of the population 24 are unable to sign their own names. but have to make their marks-and that is the statement of Mr. Sifton—and that only two can sign their names, it appears to me that a radical change is necessary if the people of Manitoba are to do their duty to the rising generation of the province. It is quite clear that the schools in a sparselysettled country, such as Manitoba is and must be for many years to come, will be inefficient if two or three different schools are to be established in one district, because not only the Protestants and Roman Catholics, but the various branches of the Protestant Church will each demand separate schools, and I do not see how the demand can be refused. It has been stated by the hon. member for Provencher that Archbishop McLean, of the English Church, is an advocate of the separate school system.

I believe that he is correct, and also that there are very many clergy of the Church of England who are strong advocates of the separate school system. Belonging to that church myself I have had an opportunity of ascertaining the opinions of the laity, and I believe the desire for separate schools as regards the Church of England is confined almost entirely to the clergy of that church, and that such a proposal does not meet with any favour among the laity of that church. If separate schools are to be given to Roman Catholics, you cannot re-fuse them to each of the other churches. What a deplorable state of affairs must then necessarily exist. In some districts is as much as the whole population general can bear to pay a support one school, and they will be utterly unable to support three or four schools. The result would be that there would be no schools, or that the schools would be so inefficient as to be altogether worthless and the children would grow up without the advantage of any education. That would be the effect of an attempt to restore the system that formerly prevailed in Manitoba, a system of which they had experience of for nineteen years, and no doubt for a number of years before. It is clear that efforts of that kind will not be successful, and that we should proceed very slowly indeed in that direction. Another point worthy of consideration is this: If it should be deeided by a majority of the Parliament of Canada that remedial legislation should be imposed upon the province of Manitoba, there is no use shutting our eyes to the fact that that would create endless trouble and difficulties in that country. We should not shut our eyes to the difficulties that would immediately ensue. The Manitoba would immediately ensue. The Manitoba Government has the control of education there. They have the control of the purse-They have control of the educational machinery, and if they were hostile to any proposal made by the Government of Canada, they could impose obstacles innumerable. The proposal that is made by the Government to-day, to see if some way can be devised, through the co-operation of the Dominion Government and the Government of Manitoba, that would meet with the approbation of the people of the province, is, therefore, wise. The hon, member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) did me the honour of reading some remarks I made on Friday last in the city of Ottawa. Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to read some further remarks I made on that occasion, and to ask the hon. leader of the Opposition what his opinions are about them. I was referring then, and I shall refer now, to the interference of the clergy, and the inter-ference of the clergy of another province I referred to the interferin this matter. ence that had taken place with reference to the decision of the Imperial Privy Council of Great Britain, and I then said:

The second secon

We will now turn to another phase of this remarkable question, and we find ourselves face to face with a declaration made by no less a personage than the Bishop of Nicolet, and throws a flood of light upon the means employed to influence the decision of the Imperial Privy Council. Understand me clearly: I do not in the least wish to asperse the character of the noble lords who rendered the decision, or impute any motive save those which are honourable and just. Yet we have before us the declaration of the Bishop of Nicolet, that the church dignitaries of the province of Quebec,—mark you, not of Manitoba, but of Quebec-two thousand miles away from the province affected by the legislation of 1890. were not content to abide by the legal and constitutional methods devised and provided for settling such questions, but that they had to resort to ways and means contrary to and inimical to the principles lying at the very foundation of British jurisprudence. Are we to understand that we are returning to the practices which in the past have been provocative of evils untold and struggles written on every page of medieval Are we to accept without protest this new system, or rather the old and obsolete practices which we, as British freemen, have struggled so long to banish from our legal tribunals and expunge from the constitution? and expunge from the constitution? For my part, I answer, No! Most emphatically, No! And the great majority of the citizens of Canada will answer, No! when called upon to render their verdict. The Bishop of Nicolet informs us that, to use his own words: "I am asked if the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda can usefully intervene to assist in the settlement of It is certain that the this important question. Sacred Congregation can contribute assistance of great value to the bishops by giving them their But in what way can this Sacred Consupport. gregation accomplish this intervention? might, perhaps, through the intervention of His Eminence Cardinal Vaughan represent, among other things, to the Colonial Minister, that his predecessor, Lord Carnarvon, had given, in his own name and in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, the assurance to the Catholics of Manitoba, that they should have their separate schools. and that, consequently, the Crown is bound in henour to fulfil these solemn promises, if it does not wish to alienate the hearts of the Catholics of Manitoba. An intimation of this nature might have a good effect in reference to the judgment which the Privy Council will render within a few months upon the question which the Canadian Government has submitted to it."

I ask the hon. leader of the Opposition if he also approves of that proposition?

Mr. LAURIER. Ask your colleagues.

Mr. WALLACE. My colleagues have been speaking pretty freely on this question, but the leader of the Opposition has been very reticent, and I think it is high time he should now give his opinion. I listened with a very great deal of attention this afternoon to the speech made by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). I cordially agree with his views as to the amendment now before this House. I agree with a very large portion of his arguments with reference to this question, but I am sorry, Sir, that I cannot agree with that very high opinion he entertains of the hon. mover of the amendment (Mr. McCarthy). The hon. member (Mr. McNeill) said: "There is no one less open to mercenary considerations than the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). Well, I have looked into that a little, and I am forced to come to a different conclusion from the conclusion of the member for North Bruce in regard to that matter. There was a question brought up in the House last night as to the propriety of any member of the House of Commons, acting as a paid agent for anybody, either government or individual, and then coming to the House of Commons to force these opinions, whether right or wrong, upon the House, and, in my opinion, such is a gross abuse of the privileges of a member of Parliament. That is the opinion given by the constitutional authorities in England, and repeated by our own authories in Canada. The rule in England is this:

That it is contrary to the usage, and derogatory to the dignity of this House that any of its members should bring forward, promote or advocate in this House any proceeding or measure with which he may have acted or been concerned for or in consideration of any pecuniary fee or reward.

I am told the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) has admitted to this House that he has received a pecuniary reward or a fee for advocating the case of the Government of Manitoba before the Privy Council of Canada. He repeated in the House of Commons the arguments of which he was the paid advocate. The hon. member referred last night to the practice in England. The practice in England is so clear that it only requires to be stated. Sir Charles Russell, Sir Richard Webster and Sir Henry James, all high authorities, take the same position. Sir Charles Russell said:

The object of the rule, no doubt, was, that a person should not advocate the same thing in this House for which he had received fee or reward out of it.

Sir Richard Webster said:

I think no hon. member should, in his capacity as a member of this House, advocate afterwards any case in respect of which he has received fee or reward.

Sir Henry James says the same thing. The rule is so clear and obvious that for a member of Parliament to come into the House of Commons as the paid advocate of a government or an individual, with the fee in his pocket, and to force his opinions, whatever they may be, upon the House of Commons, is derogatory to the dignity of this Assembly. I will point out in this particular case how badly it works. In 1888, when the government of Mr. Greenway was formed, and the conflict between the two political parties was pretty hot and pretty close, and Mr. Greenway found that he required to make the greatest efforts in order to secure a majority in the House, we have evidence that he went to the Archbishop of Winnipeg and made a corrupt bargain with him.

Mr. DEVLIN. Who did?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Greenway made a corrupt bargains with the Archbishop of Winnipeg. He was to appoint a man acceptable to the Archbishop as a member of his government, and in return he was of course to have the support of the Archbishop so as to keep the Conservative party out of That compact so entered into was power. carried out by both the contracting parties. Mr. Greenway on the one side, and the Archbishop and the Vicar-General on the other. I have the affidavit of the Vicar-General, and also the affidavit of Mr. Alloway, a banker, who was present during the course of those negotiations. I will not trouble the House with reading these affidavits.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. WALLACE. I said I will not read them, and I will use my discretion. I presume they are familiar to most members of this House. The hon, member for North Simcoe had read these affidavits and knew of that bargain; and yet, because he was the paid agent of one of those parties, he was not equal to rising in this House and condemning such a corrupt and improper transaction. In view of that, we can understand the conduct of the hon member in coming into this House with the fee in his pocket, and advocating the case of the Manitoba Government. Of course, he advocated the same thing before, because I am told he received a fee from them before, in the initial stages of this question. That being the case, I think it was most improper for the hon. member not to advocate in this House what he thought was right-because I honour a man for doing that; but he found it necessary, in order to strengthen his backbone, to keep him straight in line, to accept a fee from the Manitoba Government. But, Sir, such things are not new to the hon, member. This is not the first time that he has handled public money. In other cases, I have been told, he got moneys belonging to the Dominion of Canada. I remember many years ago reading a speech of the then leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Edward Blake; and when I heard the very touching references made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) last night to the great sacrifices made by the hon. member for North Simoce in being present at his post to-day, they recalled to my mind the remarks made by Mr. Blake to which I am about to refer. And Mr. Blake made these remarks, not in Parliament where he was protected by the rules and could make any charges as he pleased, but in an open public meeting, so that if they were wrong the hon, member for North Simcoe had his redress in the courts of the country. In a speech delivered in Muskoka, referring to a certain railway there, Mr. Blake said:

I congratulate you, not with reference to the colonization railway, but with reference to the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, that, as I pointed out at Huntsville, even if the bonded debt has been increased, if the tolls are heavy, if you have no larger amount to pay, you have some compensation. You have the satisfaction of knowing that a prominent member of Parliament, and a supporter of the Government, has got an easy berth, with a salary of $3,000 or $3,500 a year, as president of the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, practically due to the subsidy—

A subsidy received from the Government, promoted by himself and his co-directors——and has made, in common with a few of the original promoters, a very handsome sale of the original stock which they took up, at enormous profits, also practically paid out of the subsidy, and that a few others have made great profits out of the contract. So that, if you don't get all the good out of it that you might, you know that some estimable citizens, not resident here, it is true, and in whose fortunes, perhaps, you do not take a very deep interest, but still some prominent members of the body politic, have got their full share of the good things of this life through the agency of the railway.

That is the statement made by the Hon. Edward Blake with reference to the hon. member for North Simcoe, and, so far as I know or have heard, never contradictedthat this hon, gentleman received a salary —for I do not suppose that anybody would say he ever earned it—of $3.000 or $3,500 a year for less than a week's work, perhaps less than a day's work, in the duties of that office; and that he made large sums of money out of the sales of stock which he was enabled to make by being president of the company. And I am told that the other directors who accepted an even share with him were very sadly and greviously disappointed. hon, gentleman is depicted as a disinterested patriot by the hon. member for North Bruce, but other members have not the same compassionate or considerate opinion of his disinterested patriotism. But is that the only case where he has used his position as a member of Parliament, where he has, at any rate, while in Parliament, taken to himself and drawn in moneys that were voted by Parliament for the construction of a railway. No, Sir. If we will look up the records, we will find that the whole career of the hon. member for North Simcoe is filled up with transactions, not of this kind exactly, but a great variety of transactions, all of them pointing in the one direction. to feather the nest of D'Alton McCarthy. Why, we had a few years ago the history of the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Co., and I was much struck by the fact that an hon. member on the other side started in to make an investigation with regard to that matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is wandering from the question before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement was made by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) that he believed the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was in this matter a disinterested patriot, that he was not open to any mercenary considerations, and I have been endeavouring to prove that during his whole career, as member of Parliament, he has been open to mercenary considerations.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon, member did prove that, he would not prove that the hon, member for Simcoe has been actuated by mercenary considerations in this matter.

Mr. WALLACE. I was just stating that the hon, member during his career, not only on this school question but in other questions which have come up before Parliament and for the consideration of the courts, has been able to feather his own nest. I remember on one occasion he made the statement at a public meeting, when charged with having received money through his law firm:

In regard to the charge, that he had been made wealthy by the fees secured by his firm, amounting to $61,958, he desired to say that he did not receive from the country one solitary cent, directly or indirectly. There was not a word of truth in the charge; it was absolutely false.

I do not know any form of words that could be used more explicit, more positive, than this statement as reported in a newspaper exceedingly friendly to the hon. gentleman. He stated also, with reference to the Northern Railway, referring, of course, to the North Pacific Junction:

With reference to the Northern Railway charge, he most emphatically denied receiving a cent of the $12,000. The railway got the money and expended it in improving the road.

The improvement of the road consisted in paying $3,000 of a salary to the president for doing nothing and dividing an enormous sum among the directors for their supposed stock in the road. I was going to call attention to the fact that he denied having received $61,000 from the company, and said he had not received one cent directly or indirectly. Now, Sir, I have in my hands a cheque. It is a very interesting cheque. It was given by the Government to the St. Catharines Mills Lumbering Co.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must again ask the hon, member to confine himself to the question before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. This is to prove the contention that I made, that the hon. gentleman has yielded to mercenary considerations, that he has not always been guided by those patriotic motives which the hon. member for North Bruce ascribed to him, and that a cheque of the Government amounting to $9,623 went directly into the hands of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPEAKER. As I have already said, even supposing everything the hon. member alleges be susceptible of proof, that does not prove that in this particular case the hon. member for North Simcoe was actuated by mercenary motives.

Mr. WALLACE. I, of course, bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker, as I always do. As you have decided I cannot proceed any further with this interesting subject, I shall have to take the first opportunity, when I will be in order, to continue the discussion of it. You have decided, Sir, that I am not to make any further reference to the cheque of $9,623 which went directly into the coffers of the firm, not through any intermediaries but in a straight line. Now, there is another matter to which I wish to refer and this, I think, has direct reference to the We have had this question of question. separate schools in another place besides Manitoba. In Ontario, during past years, we have discussed the principle whether it was better for the province to have a public school system or to have a continuation of the separate school system. In Ontario, the Confederation Act provides for separate schools. That bargain could not be changed unless by the Imperial Parliament, and they would not change it certainly without being requested to do so by the Parliament or the people of Canada in some way. Hon. George Brown, who had been fighting the battle against separate schools for fifteen years, when he accepted separate schools at the time of confederation said that he did so for two reasons. In the first place. we had to make great sacrifices in order to obtain this splendid measure of confederation, which promised to be of such great benefit to the people of Canada. In the second place, he said that we who had been fighting against the separate school system being grafted upon the public school system, who had been the watchmen on the walls for fifteen years, need be watchmen no longer, because the Roman Catholic hierarchy agreed to accept this measure, which was a mild form of separate schools, as a finality, and would ask no further legislation with regard to separate schools. For those two reasons he agreed to the system of separate schools being incorporated, in that moderate way, in the public school system of Ontario. But we have found in Ontario that they were not satisfied with the schools given them at confederation. but from year to year, Mr. Mowat, the head of the Ontario Government, has made amendments and changes in that Act in order to satisfy the Roman Catholic Church and make it more workable and effective.

An hon. MEMBER. Do you object to that?

Secretary and the contract of

Mr. WALLACE. I object to this, that when a bargain is made as a finality, when both parties solemnly agree to ask no further changes, that solemn bargain should be adhered to.

Mr. AMYOT. Apply that to Manitoba.

Mr. WALLACE. I am willing to apply the same principle exactly to Manitoba. I have never said anything different. while this battle was going on in the province of Ontario, while objection was made to the increased power given the separate school system in Ontario, where was the hon, member for North Simcoe, who is so solicitous to-day for the welfare of the province, which I believe he has only visited once or twice during his whole career. Where was he when the battle was being fought on this question in the province of Ontario? Was he found fighting against the extension of the separate school system? Not at all. I do not know where the hon, member was during the last campaign and the campaign before. Yes, I do remember where he was in the campaign before the last—he was trying to break up the Conservative party. But where was he in the last campaign?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where is Marter now?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think that is an answer to the question. I ask, where was the hon. member for North Simcoe?

Mr. LANDERKIN. He was in Washington.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for North Simcoe had announced before that, he was an adherent of Sir Oliver Mowat: he had declared that if Oliver Mowat had lost the support of Elgin Myers, he had gained the support of Dalton McCarthy. I believe Sir Oliver Mowat did lose the support of Elgin Myers; so, the hon. member as an honourable man was bound to give him his support. Still, I believe, the hon. gentleman never went home to vote for Sir Oliver Mowat. The Parliament of Canada was sitting at that time, and the hon. member could not record his vote at Ottawa, as he did not live here, and I think he did not go home to record his vote. But if he did so, he was in duty bound to support the man who was extending the separate school system in the province of Ontario, and abusing the men who were fighting the extension of that system. So I say the hon. member has not been consistent, he has not been politically honest in the advocacy of a measure in one province where he does not live, and in the advocacy of the opposite in the province where he does live. Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy the attention of the House any longer.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Go on. Mr. WALLACE. Mr. WALLACE. I do not take orders from the Oppositiou, nor are there many people in the country who do. I shall not vote for the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Simcoe. I do not believe it comes out squarely on the lines of the speech the hon. gentleman made; the speech is one thing, and the resolution he closed with is another. In my opinion, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) might also vote for the resolutionn the hon. member for North Simcoe has proposed.

Mr. TARTE. Does the hon, gentleman think I will?

Mr. WALLACE. I think the hon. gentleman could. I would like to ask if the hon. member for L'Islet did not have a hand in preparing it?

Mr. TARTE. That is a fine question.

Mr. WALLACE. For the reasons I have given, I shall not vote for the amendment.

Mr. WELDON. I differ from several members who have spoken on this question yesterday and to-day as to the gravity of this question. We all feel that the question is one of gravity, but, for my part, I cannot agree with any hon. member who says that it is the most important question that has come before Parliament since confederation. The question very much resembles one which came before this Parliament twenty years ago, when the school law of another province was attacked in this Chamber, and in the course of my remarks, I shall point out the likeness be-tween the two cases. To my thinking, the question that agitated this country five or six or seven years ago, when a great party had forced upon it by the dominant will of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) a policy which would land this whole Dominion of ours in the arms of the United States, was a question of far greater magnitude than this. I take for granted, Mr. Speaker, that in this country we are a law-abiding people. think this discussion and the discussion that is going on in the country is a very useful one. I congratulate all the members who have spoken to this motion, and whom I have heard, almost without exception, on the moderation, on the courtesy, on the excellent temper, with which they have I am not here to take any part spoken. in the discussion that arose last night at the end of the debate; but I think it fair to say—I always sympathize with the under dog in a fight-that the tone of courtesy and fairness, the logic and good temper of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr.Mc-Carthy) last night were deserving of high praise. And as a very good test, I would point out that when the hon. member sat down, the House itself was in good temper and was not impatient or irritated or angry. So, while I speak of the gravity of the question, which we must all feel, it seems to me we have had two or three or even more graver questions than this. As I say, we are a law-abiding people. There will be a contest of strength, there will be a tug of war. And what I hope for in this discussion is that, carried on in the same excellent temper with which it has been so far carried on, the public mind will be enlightened by the discussion. I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, that the discussion is one almost entirely upon a phase of the question that need not arouse acrimony, namely, the interpretation of the constitution. There is much want of light in the public mind; there is much want of light in the journals of the day; there is much want of light of guidance and leadership in the unravelling—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WELDON. The hon, gentlemen opposite cheer prematurely. If they will hear me out, I think they will not take much comfort from my remarks. That reminds me to say that in this discussion that began yesterday, shortly after three, and has now continued until ten o'clock to-night, while this constitution was being expounded and interpreted by a large number of members, lawyers and others, not one single member on the opposite side of the House has taken so serious a view of his duty that he has contributed one single idea to the discussion. Where is the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills)? Angels and ministers of grace, defend us? The hon, member for Bothwell silent on a constitutional question? One of his colleagues my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) has sat here this many Parliaments. And the hon. member for South Oxford has been a member of this House almost without a break, since confedera-Did these hon, gentlemen ever before see the two hundred and odd men in this House threading their way through the tangled forest of an involved constitutional argument without seeing the hon. member for Bothwell standing by with his lantern? Sir, as the lover said to Kathleen Mayourneen. "Why art thou silent, thou pride of my heart?" My hon. friends will not contradict me, we never witnessed such I cannot say, the rules spectacle before. of the House will not allow me to say, that there is a conspiracy of silence, but there is a policy of silence, there is a policy of inaction, which is part and parcel of their whole policy, and I think the Canadian people, who like men of action and men of decision, would prefer to sustain the Government which takes what I think is a wrong course on a vital question, rather than these timid gentlemen.

We are accustomed to compliment the Fathers of Confederation. For my part, looking at their work as embodied in the constitution, I think they are not entitled to unstinted praise. Into the general constitution, they threw that fatal clause with reference to education, which we call clause 93, undoing with the left hand that which they had striven to do with the right, when they made this federal compact. It is well known that Sir John A. Macdonald was in favour of a legislative union. All over the Queen's Empire where both Catholic and Protestant people are found in large numbers, the question of separate schools excites controversy and disunion, and creates the deepest political difficulty. I am blaming neither Catholic nor Protestant. They are both in dead earnest, they are both sincere; but every statesman in every colony of the Queen's Empire, not here in Canada alone, and every statesman in all the counties of northern Europe where the state takes strong grounds for the control and subsidizing of education, has to deal with the same difficulty. regret is that the fathers of confederation, when they incurred the great expense of adopting a federal union instead of a legislative union, threw this section 93 into the constitution. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries-if I may refer to an earlier debate-stated the fact that it was the Protestants of Lower Canada who were responsible for that. So far as I know his statement is strictly correct, and I think the Protestants of Lower Canada did very little credit to themselves, and very little credit to the liberality, and tolerance, and fairness of the French-Canadian people when they pressed so strongly for this clause in the constitution. I think he was right in saying that it was we Protestants who put that deadly clause into the cradle of this young nation. I speak in this complimentary way of the French Cana-dians, for I was reminded to-night by a well informed gentleman who lived long in the eastern townships, in conversation upon this question not half an hour ago, that at the present time in the eastern townships of Quebec, there were 22 members in the provincial assembly and in this Parliament, representing a group of counties in which the Catholic electors outnumber the Protestant electors by something like 30,000; and that out of these 22 members there are only 7 French-Canadian members, and one Irish Catholic. Now, if, French-Canmatter of fact, the Catholics have dealt with adian measure of fairness to English Protestants, I do not think that Sir Alexander Galt and the other Protestants of the eastern townships, knew the people as well as we do. It may be that the people in that day were less tolerant than the people of this day, otherwise there would be no need for that clause. My hon, friend reminded me with reference to Upper Canada, that it was a Catholic statesman, Sanfield Macdonald, who in Parliament moved that this clause 93 taking education out of the exclusive control of the provinces and putting it into the federal constitution, should be struck out; and that he, a Catholic in Upper Canada, was willing that his people should take their chances for fair-play from the Protestants. Those I think were wiser views, and I say again that I deeply deplore that this mischiefmaking clause, not a beneficent clause, invoked for the second time in the history of this country, once 21 years ago, now for the second time, has called into existence an agitation of so grave a character. It will not shake confederation to its foundations-I believe nothing of the kind. If those who think with me that this Parliament has full power to redress grievances and has full power to restore separate schools, and who think, also, that in coercing a proud province, a people of stubborn will, more harm than good will be done, and that we will not in the long run contribute to a peaceful and permanent settlement of this question; if we are more in number in this country than those who are in favour of remedial legislation, our views must prevail. If they who differ from us are more in numbers, then they will pass that Bill, and they will be consistent in doing so. I say here that I cannot anticipate civil war, I cannot anticipate a breach of the law, I cannot anticipate those disasters that many seem to fear. I think they underthe law-abiding spirit of the Catholic people, both French and English, as well as of the Protestant people. There will be a fair tug of war, there will be an open and manly contest, but in the light of day: both sides will try conclusions at the polls, and they who are the most numerous, must prevail in this country, as in all self-governing countries, and they who are the fewer in number must yield. I think the final issue of the controversy will turn, not so much upon the question of the meaning of the constitution, as upon the larger question of the merits of separate schools. country where 40 per cent or In any more of the people are Roman Catholics, and most of those of the French race, where so large a body of people are most solidly of one opinion and desire a certain thing, and where a considerable number of Protestants share that opinion, on grounds of policy alone, under these circumstances, I think, we must settle this question. I say this, although I feel strongly as I expressed myself in the House the other day. For one my voice will be raised to abide by the constitutional decision of the country which, within 12 months at the latest must be given at the polls; and if there should be resistance, though I am not a soldier, and though not entitled to serve in the ranks of the army, if necessary, I would enlist and help those who will endeavour to enforce the constitution and laws of the country. But now let us come directly to the question at issue. I shall would like to do, having regard to the great number of gentlemen who wish to follow me in speaking in this debate. I wish to argue that in my view, the constitution of this country empowers this House to restore separate schools in Manitoba, but it does not compel this House to do so. That there is no legal compulsion, is admitted by the Minister of Justice, and by every lawyer in this House. My view is that there is no moral compulsion, and that the true way to deal with this question is to deal with it on the merits. Therefore those who believe that religion is a vital part of the education and should be taught in the public schools. those who believe that that idea cannot be carried out unless Protestants are free to conduct religious exercises but also to teach some dogmatic religion, should favour separate schools. Others think that it would be better to let the state concern itself alone with secular teaching, and that the duty of furnishing religious instruction rests primarily upon the parents of the children, and secondarily upon the churches and ecclesiastical institutions of the country. First, let me restate the question that was argued with great skill, I think, and from my point of view, with almost absolute conclusiveness, by the hon. member for North Simcoe last night, and argued with conclusive logic in the magnificent speech made by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) to-night. That is the question, does the constitution compel us to restore separate schools to Manitoba? The constitution, as said by an hon. member to-day, consists of two parts, the written and the unwritten. The written part consists of three short sentences of English or French, and the unwritten part of three judgments of the Privy Council. Let me read those sections again, even at the risk of tiring the House. The written constitution of Manitoba, touching schools, is contained in these sentences, which collectively are called the Manitoba Act, an Act with Imperial authority:

1. The province of Manitoba may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject to the following provisions:—

other day. For one my voice will be raised to abide by the constitutional decision of the country which, within 12 months at the latest must be given at the polls; and if there should be resistance, though I am not a soldier, and though not entitled to serve in the ranks of the army, if necessary, I would enlist and help those who will endeavour to enforce the constitution and laws of the country. But now let us come directly to the question at issue. I shall make my argument much shorter than I
