the New Brunswick legislature by then Attorney General King, who is now judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, and it was laid down that the Act of 1871 did not deprive the Catholics of the school rights they had before confederation. The next case was decided nineteen years later, and it has been much discussed in this House to-day. The case of Barrett and the city of Winnipegs was decided in 1893, and it was held that the Greenway Act of 1890 did not deprive the Catholics of school rights possessed before Manitoba came into the confederation. The two cases are practically identical, the one affirmed the other. If one is good the other is good, if one is badly decided the other is; but it does not lie with any Canadian to question the decision of the Privy Council as being a bad decision. It is the law of the land, whether we like it or dislike it. whether we consider the judges are familiar with Canadian history or not, and whether the judges appear to have interpreted the statutes as we would interpret them or not, these decisions are part of the law of the land, part of the constitution. If we say, as did the late Sir John Thompson, that we sail the ship of state by the pole star of the constitution, we have no course open but to accept these decisions. The Catholics of New Brunswick had a stronger ground for complaint, a far stronger ground, than had the Catholics of Manitoba.

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.

Mr. WELDON. I say they had stronger grounds for complaint for this reason. While the Catholics of Manitoba under the decision of the court were burdened with the duty of supporting public schools, they being allowed in addition to bearing that burden to support their own schools, the Catholics of New Brunswick before 1871 were placed in a worse position. They too under the decision given could carry on after the union their religious schools, and they were burdened with heavy expenditures for supporting the public schools, but in New Brunswick before 1870 they had been deprived of important legislative grants, and in that respect their case of hardship was greater than that of the Roman Catholics of the Selkirk settlement, which had no legislature and enjoyed no public grant. In 1872, 1873 and 1875 the Minister of Marine and Fisheries brought up in this House the grievances of the Catholics of New Brunswick. Impelled by his warm feelings of sympathy and of love for his people and desiring to protect them, he fought the issue with a courage, steadfastness and persistency that did him infinite honour. In those years he sought by many ways to secure the help of the federal power. First, the power of disallowance, then the intervention of the Queen, now this device and now that device. this method and that method were resorted to in order to get the help of the federal power to better the position of those of kindred faith with him in the province of New Brunswick. Those efforts were unsuccessful I am thankful to say. In the twenty happy years that have rolled over the province since that struggle, the good sense of the people and the spirit of conciliation that prevails in all British provinces, if you give the people time to come down to their sober second thought, the spirit of fair-play, the spirit of neighbourly kindness made itself felt. Important changes were effected in all the large cities, in St. John and the other cities, which reconciled Catholics very much to the law and removed many of the Catholic objections to the operation of that law, which was found harsh in its first form as passed in 1871. turn to the second clause of the constitu-

Mr. COSTIGAN. Did not the Catholics accept the situation?

Mr. WELDON. I am glad to make a statement suggested to me by my hon. friend (Mr. Costigan) that the minority of the people accepted the decision of the Privy Council and the conclusion of this Parliament, and there was no talk of riot, bloodshed or separation. Section 2 of the constitution reads as follows:—

An appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of the legislature of the province, or of any provincial authority, affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

That is the written law. We have to explain that section—a case decided in the Judicial Committee. We have on that case the unwritten law, the opinion of the Law Lords of the Privy Council. They have said clearly that in the case of Manitoba the Governor General in Council has jurisdiction within the meaning of that section to hear the appeal of the minority who are complaining in Manitoba. There has been much discussion in the House as to the nature of the last judgment of the Privy Council. I call it a decision, that certainly is not the proper word, without being too fine and nice in verbal matters. The last was not a decision of the Privy Council; the last was the opinion of the Privy Council, given by them not under any Imperial instructions, but given by them at the request of the Parliament. We made a suggestion in 1890 on the motion of Mr. Blake. It was put in the statute of 1891. Mr. Blake put on record his view of that statute. Sir John Macdonald put on record his view of that statute, and I wish to speak, although the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has gone over this ground in a very careful manner, to refresh the memory of the House, and as there are some hon, members here to-night who were not here last night, and it may be that my words may go to some parts of my own province where the hon, gentleman's words may not go, I will proceed very briefly to restate this matter and give my own views, which are entirely in accordance with the views of the hon, member for Simcoe on this point. Mr. Blake's motion we all remember. He evidently had in his mind an English practice, with which every lawyer in England and every Canadian student of English law is familiar, and that is that the great tribunal in England, the House of Lords, when dealing with questions of exceptional magnitude and difficulty are glad to strengthen themselves before giving decision by obtaining the opinions of the Superior Court Judges. In a number of cases which will be in the memory of every lawyer this practice was resorted to. It was formerly a moot point in England as to whether when the House of Lords asked the help of the twelve judges of the Superior Court, they were bound by the answers received. It is now clearly settled that while the House of Lords has the right to put questions to the twelve judges, they have also the right to make what use they like of the answers they receive. I will read one or two authorities on the point, MacQueen, Appellate Jurisdiction, p. 49:

It has been sometimes asked, whether the opinion of the judges ought not to govern the decision of the House? They have never had that effect, even when unanimous.

The opinion of the judges, however, even though not adopted by the House must always be expected to throw valuable light on the subject of its deliberation, Entick v. Carrington 19 Howell, 1071, Lord Camden.

These are the opinions of all the 12 judges of England, a great and reverend authority.

Can the 12 judges of England extra-judicially make a thing law to bind the Kingdom by a declaration that such is their opinion?

His Lordship goes on to say, no. Cox p. 333 "Institution of English Government" says:

Their opinions are generally given upon abstract questions propounded by the House for their consideration, but those opinions, even when unanimous, do not govern the decisions of the House.

Mr. Blake's resolution, I have taken from "Hansard," and it says:

It is expedient to provide means whereby, on sclemn occasions touching the exercise of the power of disallowance, or of the appellate power as to educational legislation, important questions of law or fact may be referred by the Executive to a high judicial tribunal for hearing and consideration, in such mode that the authorities and parties interested may be represented and that a reasoned opinion may be obtained for the information of the Executive.

It will be noticed that the word "opinion" is used, and not decision. In the Act of Reference of 1891, chapter 25, section 4, subsection 2, these words are used:

Mr. WELDON.

The court-

That is the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council sending back its answer to our Governor General in Council.

-The court shall certify its opinion.

And under subsection 6:

The opinion of the court is advisory only.

In the "Hansard" of 1890, page 4095, Mr. Blake says:

I by no means propose to withdraw from the Executive its duty. My object is to aid it in the efficient execution of its duty.

Sir John Macdonald, in the "Hansard" of 1890, page 4094, says:

Such a decision is only for the information of the Government. * * * The Government may dissent from that decision, and it may be their duty to do so. The answer of the tribunal will be simply for the information of the Government.

I need not labour with that further, though the point is interesting. I would not deal with it at so great length were it not that this is the first case in which we have put in practice Mr. Blake's resolution, and the subsequent statute, and it is important, I think, that there should go on our records, the views of those lawyers of the House who speak on the question, as to what they understand to be the real scope and meaning of the Act. I so heartly concur in the opinion of the Privy Council; I so heartily endorse every statement they have made; I so heartily approve of their answers to the questions put, that I in no way desire to discredit that opinion. I fully accept the judgment. But it is not an authoritative judgment like the decision on the New Brunswick school case, or like the decision of Barrett against the city of Winnipeg. These judgments were part of the law of the land, as binding as an Imperial statute, and they had all the fleets and armies of England behind them to enforce them, if need be. This is an opinion of no authority. Those gentlemen can make little or make much of it, as-according to the view of Sir John Macdonald-it commends itself or does not commend itself to their reason. And if that opinion is not binding upon the Governor in Council, how can it be binding upon this Parliament? Great stress was laid upon one paragraph, the last paragraph in the judgment of Lord Herschell, which stated that the Manitoba Catholics had grievances and which suggested the way in which they could be remedied. There is no doubt that if Lord Herschell were a member of this House of Commons. he would be in favour of a remedial law, judging from the views he has expressed. But I heartily endorse what my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) said with so much power and force today, and what my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) said last night, so clearly and so strongly, namely, that no tribunal on this earth can guide this Parliament, nor dictate to this Parliament in the exercise of its discretion. All that courts of justice can do with the Canadian Parliament is to stake out the limits of their legislative power, and that is because of the fact that we have a federal system. In the Australian colonies or in Newfoundland, the courts can do nothing in the way of affecting statutes. In this country, under our federal system, they can stake out the limits of our power, but within the limits of our power, this Parliament of Canada is as sovereign as the great Parliament at Westminster itself; that mother of Parliaments. And if I may use the word, it is an impertinence that the English Parliament would not tolerate, that any tribunal in the Empire should dictate that it should do this or do that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear. hear.

Mr. WELDON. I am glad to find the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) agrees with me.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, I do, emphatically.

My hon, friend from WELDON. North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) gave a reason. They cannot know as we know, they do not know as we know. Able as they are, impartial as they are, they have not the know-ledge we have. They do not know the history of this country, they do not know the political history of this country; and it is folly for them to say, and it is folly for us to contend that we must be guided by the perfectly obiter utterances of these gentlemen who sit at Westminster. I am reminded of a story told by Sir Fitzjames Stephen, of an old and devout Hindoo who had a case before the Privy Council, and who had a great reverence for the lords of the Privy Council. And, in order to propitiate those demigods, as he thought them, he picked up in the streets of Bombay, an old idiot, and he carried him to the top of a hill, and burned him that this sacrifice might propitiate the gods in Downing No member of the House could be a stronger Imperialist than I am. I do not know of a member of this House who has a stronger wish that the bond that binds Canada to Britain shall be made stronger and firmer, but I cannot look with eyes of idolatory on any casual remark made by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and which is not law. I cannot look upon their remarks as a holy Brahmin would upon the writings in his sacred books. I differ from my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and I differ from the Minister of Justice that they spent so much time, and laid so much stress upon what Mr. Blake and Mr. Ewart said, and upon what Lord Macnaghten said, and what Lord Watson said, and upon what Lord Herschell said

But people are conjuring with these words which have fallen from the lips of counsel and judges in the Privy Council argument as if they were sacred writings. My remark is perfectly germane to the subject under discussion, when I say, that I was not overborne by those citations which the Minister of Justice read so frequently in his speech last night. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was a great offender in that matter, because he read from Mr. Blake and Mr. Ewart and Lord Watson, to attack the position some of us had taken as to the character of the proceedings before the Privy Council.

Mr. McCARTHY. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me for one moment. I cited Mr. Blake and Mr. Ewart because I thought that what the counsel presenting the case said, certainly indicated the jurisdiction and the limit of that jurisdiction. I cited them, not because their word carried any weight per se, but simply because they defined very clearly what the Lords of the Privy Council were called upon to adjudicate.

Mr. WELDON. I heard the hon. gentleman's explanation. I followed him carefully, and I thought he was tighting the old fight he had fought in the East Block three or four months ago. That issue, though not quite so removed as the war between Carthage and Rome, was not an issue in this discussion. I thought he was fighting the fight which he and I took part in in the session of 1893, in which the same question was fought. I am content to stand by the argument I then made, and I do not wish to waste the time of the House by reopening a discussion which to-night seems We are to me to be perfectly academic. past that now. The Government, in whatever capacity, made an order that the people of Manitoba dealt with that order. That is past. Let us deal with the issue before the House. This is my argument: That the answers which the Privy Council gave us, on our invitation (they are not bound any answer as us to give Taschereau pointed out) are very valuable and very interesting, but that is about as much as you can say in reference to them. The opinions of the Supreme Court of Canada and afterwards of the Privy Council. given to His Excellency the Governor General in Council, are very much like the opinions which the twelve judges of Engduring the argument. If you take a law re- land give to the House of Lords in rare cases. I come now to the last section, and hon. members, I know, will heave a sigh of relief to hear me say that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. WELDON. It is the third section, and when it is read, the whole constitution, written and unwritten, is read, and stated, so far as I am able to state it:

In case any such provincial law as from time to time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of the section, is not made.

If there is any member of this Parliament who can explain what these words mean, which are as enigmatical and as impossible of explanation as the convention of Ulster, I would like to hear him. The restrictive words in clause 3 seem to me a pure mechanical blunder of the draughtsman, and they show with what carelessness and lack of interest this matter was disposed of when the Bill went through committee. This clause is a transcript of the clause in the British North America Act, the words of which have an easily explainable meaning. They look to the laws which the new province of Quebec had to make under the constitution to put the Protestants of the eastern townships and Montreal, in as good a position as the Catholics of Upper Cauada; and the constitution says that if this new legislature of Quebec does not do what it is charged to do, we in the Federal Parliament will do it. It contemplates a provincial law being made in the future, and provides that if the provincial legislature does not make such a law, the Federal Parliament will do so. But it was nonsense to put these words in the Manitoba Act, and I am satisfied that their insertion in that document is a simple case of blundering on the part of the draughtsman, the mechanical transcription of five lines with no possible meaning. Nothing is contemplated in the earlier sections of the Manitoba Act of the nature of a compulsory school law in Manitoba; there is no Act to which the words I object to could refer; and neither grammar nor logic allow their insertion. I pass over this section and go on. The pith of the section seems to me to begin with the preposition "in," and it goes on as follows:-

In case any decision of the Governor General in Council, on any appeal under this section, is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then, and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case may require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section, and of any decision of the Governor General in Council under this section.

I need not argue that. It has been argued so often in this House that we are familiar with it. The statute says that when a certain event happens, which has happened, Parliament may make a remedial law. It is clear that we have the power. But the statute does not use any word that indicates compulsion. It does not say we must or shall make remedial laws; and I base a great deal on this clear word "may" of the Act, seeing that we have no case to guide us. We have a dictum of Lord Herschell on this point which has been referred to by the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. member for North Simcoe, so that it is not necessary for me to read it. Lord Herschell says that there is no legal compulsion on Parliament, and the hon. Minister of Justice has expressed the same view. That view, however, has not been prevalent in the country. In the papers, in the Protestant papers which I have read, it is often argued that there is a compulsion upon Parliament under section 2 to grant remedial legislation. that question was argued with so much strength and candour and conclusiveness by my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. Mc-Neill) that I do not propose to add anything to his striking and persuasive argument. He drew a strong contrast between section 1, which dealt with the rights which Catholics had in the old settlement of Selkirk, and section 2, which dealt with rights which should arise under new provincial legislation. As to the first, he pointed out that this Parliament had no power to touch them-that the courts would determine whether they had been violated; and as to the second, he pointed out that the clause not be a formal declaration that could separate schools once given would be given for ever. Such a guarantee would be a most reckless provision. If, as he said, the legislature, by any snap or hasty judgment, made an absurd law, and the sober second thought of the people led them to repent, there would be no way of repealing that preposterous law; and to suppose that any Parliament, looking into the future, would give any local legislature the dangerous power of making perpetual laws as to rights which he said were in the womb of the future, as to franchises not yet known, was to assume that Parliament in passing such legislation was acting without proper discretion. Now, I leave the argument here, and I ask the House again, does the constitution bind this Parliament to give re-medial law. If so, what clause of the constitution? The first? No, because it does not speak of parliamentary action at all. The second? No, because it does not speak of parliamentary action either. Does the third? It speaks of parliamentary action; it says that Parliament may act; but it does not say that Parliament is under any compulsion to act.

My argument on the main point is now ended. I wish to say a word or two before I sit down with reference to a statement which has been several times made in this House that while the position we are taking may be a perfectly good position in a court of law—that while we may fairly entrench ourselves behind the written text of the constitution and the toba altogether. views of the Lords of the Privy Council; yet it devolves upon this Parliament to grant redress which the courts of law cannot grant-that this Parliament should not be bound by the letter of the constitution, but that if we are satisfied that the Catholics in the Selkirk settlement or their spokesman at the time thought they were getting schools, and this Parliament thought it was giving them separate schols, though the courts said it was not, we should implement the constitution, and carry out that understanding in good faith. Tennyson says:

Truth-teller was our English Alfred called.

If there is any quality which a man of the more pride in English race takes another it is keeping faith; if there is any word that wounds an Englishman more than another it is the word perfidy. I was touched by the statement of my hon. friend from North Bruce when he said that he would not, under any fear of his constituency or under any desire to please the mob, consciously break a treaty. Was there a treaty or an understanding? I submit that is a vital part of the case. I have followed the discussion on this question; I heard the elaborate argument of the hon, member for North Simcoe; I heard the answer of the hon. Minister of Justice; I have heard the detailed statement of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRiviere), whom I do not see in his seat to-night; and having heard these hon, gentlemen and having read the history of the case so far as I have been able to master it; having also read Begg's History of the North-west, the fairness of which I think is admitted by all parties; having gone through the debates on the Manitoba Act-debates which were very long and in which almost all the leading members of Parliament took part—I frankly say that my mind has swung round upon this question. When I came to Ottawa, not having had access in Halifax to these records, I thought the position taken by the Minister of Justice was probably historically true; but after my study of these documents, my mind swung round to the belief that the Manitoba question, while to-day filling the whole sky was out at that time half the size of a man's hand. The only record of any demand by the Manitoba settlers for separate schools was in the bill of rights which the hon, member for North Simcoe calls spurious, and which I think was spurious; and I will refer to that in a moment. The discussion that took place in this House when the Manitoba Act was going through was reported at great length. While it was in committee, Mr. Oliver, a member of the House, moved to strike out clause 22, which deals with education. The first speaker, on such motion, seemed to misunderstand the law, and supposed that he was doing away with constitutional limitations upon Manitoba altogether. The Hon. William Macdougall explained that this was not the effect of the motion, but that it was simply to put the Manitoba people under section 93 of the British North America Act. Among those who spoke were Cartier, McDonald, Hincks, Howe, Mills, Bowell, Mackenzie, Macdougall.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is a very in-adequate report.

Mr. WELDON. I am sure it is a very inadequate report; it is all the report we have. From that report it would seem to me it was, if I may use the expression, an ordinary liberal amendment to a Government Bill. It was one of some fifteen or twenty amendments made on almost every section of the Bill, and the House divided. Passing by the Oliver amendment, omitting now from view the so-called fourth bill of rights, whose history was stated so ably by the hon, member for North Simcoe, I cannot find anything to support the view that there was a treaty or bargain. Let me go more into detail before I sit down, because I think this is a vital point in the case. I have the fourth bill of rights here, it is in Mr. Ewart's book, beginning at page 364. There is bill No. 3 and alongside in parallel columns is bill No. 4. What hon, members will be struck with is the remarkable likeness between the two. In both bills there are twenty clauses. Clause first is almost the same in both bills; clause second is exactly the same; clause three is changed a little. The internal evidence and the historical evidence seem to show that the fourth bill of rights was not the basis of negotiations at Ottawa, which was carried to Ottawa by the delegates, Father Ritchot, Judge Black and Mr. Scott, commissioned by Louis Riel and his council. The evidence seems conclusive in this matter. I will not weary the House by reciting it. It was stated by the hon. member for North Simcoe last night with great fairness, and he gave the dates. He pointed out that beyond doubt the first bill was genuine. On a certain day in March it was signed, the next day the delegates left, and it would have been very difficult in the time to put in a second one. He pointed out that the first, and second and third bills of rights were all sent to England by the Governor General of the day, but nothing appears in the English blue-book of this 4th bill of rights. Is it not therefore evident that the basis of negotiations here had nothing to do with the fourth bill, but that it was the third bill which played a part in the negotia-The Governor General would naturally send home the instrument on which the bargain was founded, and the fact that he did not send home this 4th bill of rights is conclusive proof that it was not considered in the negotiations. Here is a piece of evidence, which, I think, will convince us that the 4th bill of rights is a spurious instrument. Bills No. 3 and 4 run along pretty much alike until they come to the seventh clause, and there the genuine bill reads as follows:—

That a sum equal to 80 cents per head of the population of this province be paid annually by this Government to the local legislature of the said province until such time as the said population shall have increased to 600,000.

There was the demand that they were pressing for steadily in the different bills of rights—the financial term, which was a vital matter, concerning which the delegates were in dead earnest. In the spurious bill of rights, as I call it, this clause is omitted, and in its place is substituted the clause regarding separate schools. It is extraordinary that this important matter of finance which the delegates strongly urged and ultimately secure should be displaced from the bill and there should be put in its place this irrevelant declaration, taking it in connection with what precedes and what follows. That seems to confirm the conclusion reached by my hon, friend from North Simcoe. I do not think that the question of separate schools can be taken as a live one at that period at all. The school question was not then a vital one. It is easy now, when that question has become of such enormous importance, to assume that it was also then a live and burning question, but I do not think that is a fair reading of history, and I cannot accept it as such. The English blue-book gives the third bill of rights certified to by the secretary of Louis Riel, Thomas Buan, as a genuine bill. All the internal evidence support the theory that it is a genuine bill; and I cannot accept the theory that the Catholics of Manitoba asked for separate schools in this particular document. Therefore, that part of their argument with reference to the treaty breaks down. One point more. To show how little attention was paid to the Manitoba school question in 1870, contrast the debates on the Manitoba Act in 1870 with the debates on the formation of the constitution of the other provinces. The discussion of the school question takes up hund-reds of pages in debates on the British North America Act. But take the discussion on the Manitoba Act, either on the first reading or on the second reading, when there was a long discussion, participated in by Sir John Macdonald, Sir George Cartier, Sir Francis Hincks, Mr. Mackenzie, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), Mr. Bowell, now Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the Hon. William Macdougall and a great many more distinguished and leading members of Parliament, and you will find that not one word was said about the school question. I have gone through the debates very carefully, and cannot find a word on that subject, although the debates were reported at very great length. Everything else was discussed, but this school question was not, so that it could not have been in the foreground as a live and burning question. But take the other constitution, the British North America Act, and you will find that in the debates on that constitution, the school question was discussed at greater length, than any other question. In the passing of the Manitoba Act, the school question was an obscure and petty one which excited little or no interest. I think that the Catholic people of that day were not anxious or concerned to protect their schools in Manitoba. I think they expected, as most Canadians expected, that the new province born along the Red River would be a French Catholic province, and they may have fairly said that the minority would not be of their faith. and do not seem to have taken any interest in the matter. I may be asked why the Protestants did not raise the question, but no doubt the Protestants considered that practically they had the same protection which was given them in Nova Scotia and The hon, member for New Brunswick. Bellechasse asked a question as to why the word "practice" was put in, and he got his answer. I would like to give him the answer again. It is given most clearly in the judgment of Chief Justice Taylor. At that time in Manitoba there was no legislature or statutes, and the draughtsman in simply reproducing the terms of the British North America Act:

Nothing in this Act shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in any province at the union—give no protection, would put the Catholics or Protestants Manitoba in as good a position as these classes of persons were in New Brunswick, because New Brunswick had an older legislature and had statutes. Manitoba had not, and no doubt they said, to give the religious bodies in Manitoba the same real protection they enjoyed in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, the word "practice" must be inserted and therefore it was put in. If it were not for the fact, that the Selkirk settlers had no school laws, I do not think the word "practice" would have been put in section 22 of the Manitoba Act, and furthermore the draughtsman, when draughting the Manitoba Act, said: No doubt we will take the original constitution, we will take the British North America Act, and apply it as far as possible. Section 91 of that Act is all right; section 92 is all right, but when he came to section 93, some one may have said: The original clause will give no protection at all, because there are no laws; and the draughtsman struck out the old section and substituted the new. There was no doubt great carelessness in the draughting of that Act. The language of the first section was very carelessly drawn. No good draughts-man would approve of the language of the first subsection. It is evidently a piece of careless draughting. What does it say:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in any province at the union.

That is not a phrase to describe the birth of Manitoba. Canada had acquired the whole territory as far west as British Columbia, cancelling the Hudson Bay claims. Her Majesty, of her own motion, granted to Canada that territory. Canada created the new province. "At the time of the union," is a most infelicitous expression to describe the birth of the province. It is a piece of careless draughting. Not very inaccurate, perhaps, but careless. The third subsection, as I say, seems to be a piece of very careless draughting; and the whole goes to show how little interest was taken in the matter by the House or the committee of the House or by the people at that time.

As to the merits of the question, I do not think that this is the time to speak. have great sympathy for the members of the Government. They have had to deal with a question of great delicacy and difficulty. That question was thrust upon them, it was not of their own seeking. And I think that from 1891, when the first call came to disallow the Act passed by the legislature under Mr. Greenway, the administration has dealt with the question with patience, with skill, with legal insight. I voted that way in 1893, I spoke that way in 1893. I do not wish to recall one word I then said. The Government were not pre-cipitate; and I think they have read the constitution with fidelity and care. break with the Administration because of the unfortunate—as it seems to me-declaration they made last Monday week, and confirmed last Thursday. I had hoped, and I do hope, that the lawyers on the other side of the House will assist the lawyers on this side of the House to clear the air. If we are wrong, our words will be of little value. If we are not speaking the truth, our words will fall short. If our logic is good, if our investigation of history is fair, if we have adequate knowledge—then the people who the re-establishment of separate wish in Manitoba should take fair ground also. If they believe that sepaschools should be re-established: rate if they believe that necessary in a country like this, with a view to peace and order if they believe we and reconciliation; should give to the Roman Catholics what they want on the ground that a majority can always afford to be solicitous and care-ful of the feelings and opinions of the minority, let them so declare. A minority is apt to be sensitive, irritable, suspicious. How true it is. But if that is our ground, let us stand upon that ground. Let us say frankly: I am in favour of separate schools, because I believe that they will give the country permanent peace. If I believed that, then, strong as are my sympathies, and unconsciously strong as, no doubt, are my Protestant feelings, I have so great a desire to live on terms of good-will with my Catholic fellow-countrymen, whether they be of Irish, English, Scotch, or French blood, that I would be willing to abandon my own convictions and submit to the judgment of others. If, for me, the horoscope could be cast so that I might know what settlement of this question would give peace to my country, and turn her tired mind away from these wrangles, I would These wretched accept that settlement. quarrels weaken the energies and retard the development of our resources. We need all our energies to extend our industries, to give a stronger policy for the North-west, and fill that country with people, better our connections with England and improve our trade with any people that would trade with us. I may be asked, as one hon, gentleman has asked me: What meaning do you give to section 93? Is that section not a constitutional guarantee? Yes. And would you abridge it in this way. I frankly say, I will. If I can elect between two constructions, I will take the one that gives it the narrowest reading. I frankly say that because I think the policy of a federal union was, as it were, to plough a fire belt around these questions wherever they might break out; I say that that fire belt was to be coterminous with the lines of the provinces, so that these burning questions might not spread into the federal territory, so that the strong winds of passion that blow on this Parliament hill might not bear these burning brands west and east, to light new fires in all the many provinces. In closing, I would only say, may we be inspired with patience, with kindness, with good-will, and with a spirit of obedience to the law, whatever happens.

Mr. MASSON. At this late hour of the night, and at this stage of the debate, I will not trespass upon the patience of the House-

Mr. WELDON. Will the hon, gentleman allow me a moment. I meant to say that I will vote against the amendment of the hon, member for North Simcoe, for the reason that I am anxious to see the Government do the best they can to reach a provincial solution of this difficulty.

Mr. MASSON. I am very glad the hon. gentleman rose to make that addendum to his speech. I had judged from his remarks that he was going to vote the other way, and am delighted to hear his last statement. am glad that all who have spoken upon this subject have approached it with calm and thoughtful consideration, and, in discussing the matter from their different standpoints, have endeavoured to present it in a practical, statesmanlike and judicial manner. We have heard a great deal, indeed, as to the power of the Governor in Council, and of Parliament. I think these opinions differ more in language than in meaning, and I might even say more, in the meaning of the words used than in the words themselves. We are told by one hon, member that it is claimed the Governor General in Council was bound by the Privy Council's decision, or the Privy Council's opinion, as the last speaker put it. Bound in what way? No person has argued in this House, no person that I know of has argued seriously in the country that the Governor in Council here was bound to follow the opinion of the Privy Council. The Privy Council was asked, as the hon, member who has just taken his seat stated, for that opinion for the guidance of the Governor in Council, and of Parlia-And, that opinion being given, we are bound to respect it, we are bound to be guided by it so far as we consider it correct. Now, has the hon, gentleman from North Simcoe, has the hon. gentleman from North Bruce, has the hon, gentleman from Albert. the three gentlemen who have spoken most strongly upon that point, suggested such a thing as that any one of the several answers was incorrect? Has any one of them taken the slightest exception to any of the decisions of the Privy Council? No one has taken objection, and that being the case, we are bound to have respect to them. If they are correct, we are bound to consider them carefully. Although we may differ from them. we should not cast them aside as useless without giving them great consideration. I think the House will agree with me when I say that whether the order of the Governor in Council is bound or not is only a mat-ter of language, and of the meaning of words. No person for a moment will dispute that the order of the Privy Council here followed exactly the opinion of the Privy Council in England, and that Parliament is free to act, that Parliament is politically omnipotent. It would be absurd, I use the word advisedly, to say that the Governor in Council, to whom reference was made to hear the application of the minority, to hear arguments pro and con with reference to that petition, a matter that had not been presented before the Privy Council in England-that the Governor in Council would be bound to come to the same conclusion on matters of fact, or even as to the remedies proposed. Then on the other hand, we, as a Parliament, are in no way bound by the decision of the Government here. They take the responsibility, as they take the responsibility in every other administrative Act. There has been no shirking of that responsibility. From the time the late Premier stated what the Government's responsibility would be, until the present time, son cavilled at any one of these decisions no member of the Government ever shirked of the Privy Council; no person speaking responsibility as a matter of Administration. But the hon. member for North Simcoe says that all the steps taken in this matter, except the first one of refusing to veto the Bill, have been wrong. I did not hear anything n his argument to show wherein the Government had been wrong in waiting for the decision of the courts in the pending suits of Barrett and Logan. These actions formed one reason, at least, for not vetoing the Bill, because, before the time for vetoing had arrived, the matter had gone into the courts, private litigants had entered suits. and that was one reason for not vetoing. While these suits were pending, was there any reason why the Government should not wait for a decision of the tribunals upon one of the strong points urged by the min-ority? They waited for that decision. The Manitoba Court, the Supreme Court of Canada, and the Privy Council of England, each give their decision. That was a finality as far as a claim under the first section of the Act extended, but that did not debar them from further action. These suitors were claiming that the Act was ultra vires, and that it should be entirely set aside. That is very similar to a procedure we have in our division courts in Ontario. There we have a court of inferior jurisdiction, of jurisdiction to $200 in cases on promissory notes, bills of exchange, &c., of $100 on general actions and contracts. and of $60 on all personal actions, including torts to persons and property. Now, in the first class mentioned, there is a right of appeal on the merits; in all the classes of action, in all the other limits of jurisdiction there is no right of appeal upon the merits. In all the cases, in all the lines of jurisdiction, there is an application to the court for prohibition on the ground that the action is not within the jurisdiction of the Division Now, supposing a person is sued Court. in the first mentioned class, the class in which there is the right of appeal, and he objected to the jurisdiction, as well as fought the matter on its merits, he would have a right to move first for prohibition to test the question of jurisdiction, failing on the question of jurisdiction, he would then have the right of appeal upon the merits. That is precisely a parallel case to the one in question. These suitors sought first, on the question of jurisdiction, the judgment of the highest court. That judgment went against them, they were out of court. But they had the right of appeal to the Privy Council of Canada on the merits. That appeal they made, and when that appeal came up for argument here, Manitoba refused to attend, grave questions arose, and under authority of an Act of made to the Parliament, reference was Was it not right to wait Supreme Court. until these questions were decided? Now, the question has been raised, what is meant what has not been read already, the corby this right of appeal? It has been alleged responding section in the British North Amthat because the minority have the right of erica Act, which the last speaker was frank appeal, they must win in the appeal, that there is no such thing as failure, in whole or in part, that they must succeed in their the provinces. It says: claim. I think that as a question of law, that position is untenable. If there is a where, in any province, or discontinuous and the same of t right of appeal, there must be a question to decide, and that question may be decided one way or the other. It may be a partial success, and it may be a partial failure. It is for those who hear the appeal upon the eivdence produced, and the opinions they have received from the Privy Council as to matters of law, to decide what is right and proper under the circumstances. But it is said that the minority demand that they must have an entire restoration of the schools as they existed, incompetent, improperly managed, improperly taught, improperly equipped, presided over by incomunqualified teachers, petent and as it is alleged; they must have those schools back exactly in the shape they were, whether bad indifferent. good. or Ι do such understand to be the claim the minority, and I have read with great care the arguments before the Privy Council in England and the arguments made before the Privy Council here by counsel representing the minority in order to ascertain the extent of the claims made. I gather that they make no such claims as have been suggested, but that the minority would be perfectly satisfied if they had power to build and maintain their schools, and to control those schools, subject to Government inspection; that on building, maintaining and controlling their schools they should be relieved from taxes for other public schools; that they should receive their share pro rata of the government money, and I have no hesitation in saying, on the merits, that they are entitled to those claims. It cannot be argued that this means the restoration of separate schools with incompetent teachers. I understand and I gather that the minority, or a large portion of the minority, would be satisfied to allow teachers to be examined by the ordinary inspector. I understand, if there is more than one inspector, and they consider there should be more than one, one inspector should be a Catholic. Of course, I cannot gather the details fully, but on these points I think we may reason-

1871, the right that they would you have one law for Manitoba and another for Quebec? Certainly not. them agree as far as practicable. I will read, enough to say was almost verbatim in the Manitoba Act. It refers to the whole of

Where, in any province, a system of separate or dissentient schools exist by law at the union, or is thereafter established by the legislature of a province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

That is almost word for word, as regards the operative portion, the same as is found in the Manitoba Act. Therefore, there is not one law for Manitoba and another for Quebec, but there is the same law for both. I am glad the Protestant minority of Quebec has the same rights that are now being sought, the same protection that is now being claimed by the minority of Manitoba. On that consideration, I call the attention of the hon. member for North Bruce to the fact that the Protestants of Quebec are in just as bad a plight, if the power of the majority there was exercised, as is the Catholic minority in Manitoba, the power of the majority there being exercised. At the time of the union they had no separate schools as they have now. There were negotiations during the time of the Confederation Debates in respect to these schools, and from time to time we had all our Protestant church papers in Ontario, with those in Quebec, agitating in favour of improving the Protestant schools of Quebec before union took place, as they were expected to be permanently established. We had those papers fighting for their Protestant friends, anxious and earnest in their solicitation on behalf of the Protestants of Quebec. We had them publishing article after article, there was petition after petition, meeting after meeting, and if the hour was not late I would read some of the articles from the church papers, in which the difference in the schools of Lower Canada and the schools of Upper Canada as to the minority is distinctly set forth. It was shown by those papers that in the province of Quebec they did not get their fair share of public money, that they had not a fair share of taxation, that all the absentee landlords were taxed for the Catholics, that all the corporate bodies were taxed for the Catholic or majority schools, that they were therefore cut down largely in taxation, that they could not form a union section, part being in one parish and part in another, that if a Protestant school was to be established it had to be established in one parish and that when the parish was divided into two sections, the people were unable to support two schools. All these matters admitted as a marter of right to the minority in Upper Canada were not so fully conceded in Lower Canada. Up to the time of confederation no decisive step was taken. I am now referring to an article published in 1864. In 1865 we had a Presbyterian church paper saying as follows:-

Parliament will soon meet again to discuss the question of confederation. What has been done since the last session was called? Has there been placed before the public the true aspect of our law on common school of education?

Then the question is answered, and the article proceeds:

Two or three meetings, a number of circulars, an application to Parliament, and then a total cessation of everything like effort. Are we prepared, this having been the course adopted, to have this question settled in the present Parliament? If so, what are the terms we may expect?

Nothing was done. Confederation was completed, and it was not until two years afterwards, in 1869, the present Education Act of Quebec was passed, granting the Protestants of Quebec the most complete system of separate schools I have discovered, far superior to the separate schools of Ontario, the system being far more extensive in operation, and the privilege to the Protestant minority far greater. Was it in reference to this that the hon. gentleman from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) said: Is there one law for Quebec and another for Ontario? No. He referred to the action and debate which took place on the Jesuits' Estates Act. Could anything be more unfair than the inference which the hon, gentleman (Mr. McNeill) inadvertently sought to draw. He mistook his position, he mistook his premises. I do not charge him with wilful unfairness, but I say that the inference he inadvertently sought to draw was practi-cally unfair. Admitting for the sake of his argument that the Jusuits' Estate question was a matter relating to education—very remotely relating to education every one will say-how far are the two questions parallel? The Jesuits' Estate Act was passed, but until the time had lapsed there was no application to veto it. Even admitting that the application to veto had come in time, it was not vetoed, and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Mc-Carthy) yesterday declared that the Government were right in not vetoing the Manitoba Act, because it was within the jurisdiction of the province of Manitoba. So was the Jesuits' Estates Act within the jurisdiction of Quebec, and if the Government were right in not vetoing one, they were right in not vetoing the other. What was the motion of the hon. gentleman in reference to the Jesuits' Estates Act? It was that the Government should be turned out as derelict in their duty, because, all unasked for, they neglected to veto it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) forgot his premises when he said there was one law for Quebec and an-The application for other for Manitoba. veto was made and refused. Petitions were filed, and a start made on the line of appealing the matter of the Jesuits' Estates Act, as the Manitoba school question has been fought out on the right of appeal, assuming that it came within the reference to education. But when the time was named to hear the parties in the Jesuits' Estates matter, they did not appear, a settlement was made between the parties and there the matter stopped. There is still another point in which the parallel is broken right at the start. Whereas, the Manitoba School Act was passed by the majority, in spite of the solemn and vigorous protest of the minority, and on the vote every Catholic representative in the Assembly voted against it, and eight Protestant representatives joined hands in opposing the measure; the Jesuits' Estates Act in Quebec was passed unanimously and without a dissenting voice. True, two members did say "passed on division," but when pressed to have the yeas and nays, they withdrew their opposition, and on the record it shows that the Act was passed without a dissenting vote. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill) was therefore drawing a comparison that will not bear investigation, when he said, there was "one law for Quebec and another law for Manitoba." To be very brief, Mr. Speaker, I wish to give my reasons why I have made the statement that I favour the Manitoba people having separate schools to the extent I have alluded to. My first and principal reason is: That I believe in religious education in schools. I believe that so long as this is a Christian country, we must have Christian schools, be they Protestant or Catholic. If it were possible in the ingenuity of man, to discover some way in which they both could unite and obtain a reasonable and proper amount of religious education together, then I would heartily endorse that. But under the strained conditions between the two creeds in this country that is impossible at present, and while it so remains impossible I am in favour of separate schools. I am in favour of separate schools on the ground that every man is entitled to civil and religious liberty. Civil and religious liberty must embrace, and does embrace, that the parent has the right to teach his children his own religion and to have them so taught in the schools. Where the parent bears the expense himself, 1:0 one will question that right of his, but the state has a right to assist in the education, and the state has just as much right to assist in religious education as in any other class of education. It is the duty of the state to make the man as he grows up the best possible citizen, and the better he is educated the better citizen he will be, and the more religion he has instilled into him in his youth and the more he retains through riper age, the better citizen is he. Another reason why I favour the granting of separate schools in Manitoba to the extent I have alluded to is, that were I living in the province of Quebec I should demand the same rights there, and what I feel disposed to demand for myself in Quebec, I am willing to grant to those of the opposite creed in any other province in this Dominion. Now, with the exception of the last speaker (Mr. Weldon), every member who took his line of argument from the member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) dwelt largely upon what they called provincial rights. A province, be it Manitoba or any other province, has no right except what the statute gives it, and in one particular that right is limited by the statute, then that right is limited to all intents and purposes and must be treated in its limited condition. This right of appeal in questions of education is the only class of cases where the right of appeal exists; but it exists by the constitution, and it is futile to argue as the member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) argued, that it was a mistake to put it there. If it was a mistake to put it there then there is a constitutional means to have it remedied, but while it does exist in the law, the administrators of this Government must respect it, and this Parliament should respect it. As I said, Parliament is politically omnipotent and Parliament may override it, but the Ministers dare not. Their oaths of office are to administer the laws as they are, and not as they think they ought to be. They might have different opinions and they might think that laws should be amended, but their duty is to administer the laws as they find them. On the other hand, Parliament is politically supreme and may override laws. Now the hon, member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill) said that he would stand to the bitter end against forcing separate schools on Manitoba. "Forcing separate schools on Manitoba" is a very favourite expression nowadays by orators throughout the country. It is not a question of forcing separate schools upon Manitoba; it is a question of granting to the minority a privilege which the law of the land gave them, and which is hedged round with this protective right of appeal; and I am surprised to hear any man who professes to guide his life on the motto of civil and religious liberty refusing to grant to the minority of any section the religious liberty of teaching their children the religion of their fathers. Now, it is said that separate schools are an evil. What evils have been pointed out? I will admit them all-that they add to the expense; that in sparsely settled districts they are practically impossible in many cases; that in towns and villages, where the schools are near together, they establish a line of demarcation between different races and creeds; that the children do not grow up with as friendly feelings towards each other as if they all attended one school. I admit the force of all these objections; but the only other course which I have heard suggested is that advocated by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) the secular school; and I agree with the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in saying. as he did last session, that if he were forced make an election between separate schools and secular schools, he would accept separate schools. I arrive at that conclusion for the same reasons, I have no doubt, that he has. Any person who takes the time and pains to search through the records of any country that has adopted the merely secular school, must come to the conclusion, I think, that it is a very dangerous experiment. It was tried in Germany, and what has been the result. mans were a religious people, mixed as to religion, much as we are in Canada. tried the purely secular school, and what followed-I will not say what is the result? That the nation has gone largely over to infidelity. That is a greater evil than could possibly flow from separate schools. Then, in France, where it is known that a different education is given to the male from that given to the female, you will find that the line of infidelity is just as marked, predominating in one sex, and almost entirely absent in the other. I will not say that that is entirely the result of the teaching; but it has followed the adoption of the national school, the secular school, and the banishment of the priests, which was claimed at the time as a great Protestant victory. Then, let us take Italy, the very centre of Romanism. In 1848 Italy adopted the national school; and from the correspondence of the agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society, we find that for the first twelve years of those schools, down to 1860, the people of Italy were loud in their praises of their success—the great good being done by them, the great benefit which the few Protestants in the country were enjoying by being freed from the control of the priests, and the great advantages enjoyed by the missionaries and the sellers of the Bible. But a few years later, in 1865, a different tone was heard; and what have we found in the last year? We have had the bold statement made that Italy, with her national schools, is now by the growth of infidelity, under a thraldom worse than that of Rome. But we need not confine our attention to Europe. In the United States fifty years ago, they began to adopt the same system of national schools; and we find the same growth of infidelity following in their track. It may be said that this is not the result of the national or secular schools, but the result of something else. point out that it has followed their establishment in every case, and I say it would be a dangerous experiment for a young country like Canada, and especially a young country like the North-west. But before I sit down, I must refer to one or two remarks that were made by previous speakers. I was amused at the way the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) whittled away the provisions of the subsection which According to gives the right of appeal. him, the people had the right of appeal; but in no case was it possible for any good to come from the appeal, because, in all cases the majority must rule. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), however, frankly stated that he would do his best to whittle away the right of appeal as much as possible. He said the Governor in Council were to decide the appeal, not as a court of law would, in a strictly legal and technical sense, but in an administrative sense. I agree with him that far; but he does not leave us any hope of justice. He woud not rely on that. He says the question is to be decided by the will of the majority. In a question of justice, a question of rights, and privileges, snatched away in a moment, no possible case would be left by the hon. member for Albert; but he would whittle away the right of the minority to appeal. He dwelt at considerable length on the difbetween Parliament being em-I will not powered and being compelled. argue that question, which is a matter of words more than of meaning. Another question the hon. member for North Bruce dwelt on at considerable length, no doubt following the lead of the hon, member for North Simcoe, was that the action of the Government last February, in giving ten days' notice of the appeal, was improper and un-Ten days' notice may look due haste. short, but what was the notice for? Not For five necessarily to prepare a case. years that case had been prepared; for five years it had been hanging in the courts. What instruction of counsel was further required? What new material was there to bring forth? The reasonable delay was granted, and I think the reports will show that there was a very full and able discussion of the case; and the hon. gentleman who argued it comes here after six months, and is not able to add one single argument or fact to the statement he placed before the Government. For these reasons, I have pleasure in saying that I will not detain the House longer, and that I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. DAVIN. I cannot come to the discussion of this question in the same temper as my hon, and learned friend who has preceded me (Mr. Masson), because I can, under no circumstances, regard a question which might lead to grave controversies between the Dominion Parliament and any local legislature, between Dominion action and local sentiment, as so easily disposed of as my hon. friend seems to think it could be. At this late hour, at this stage of the discussion, not indeed on this particular motion of the hon, member for Simcoe, but at this late stage of the discussion on a subject which has now been before this Parliament on two or three motions, I am not going to take up the time of the House at any length. But, Sir, I come from the North-west Territories, I come from a country close to Manitoba, and perhaps it would be improper, even if I desired it, on my part, not to contribute some small share of any little knowledge I may have on the question, to the discussion. My hon. and learned friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) has commented, not I think unreasonably, on the silence which has characterized the Opposition upon this subject. He has expressed his wonder that one or more-either the leader of the Opposition or the ϵx -Finance Minister or my hon, friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills)-has not risen to give us the benefit of their wisdom on this question. Probably we might easily reason, if it were our cue to analyse the motives and the hopes that animate our friends in Opposition, but that is a matter probably after all of little consequence. have had two or three speeches of the first order in this debate. While not agreeing in all the arguments brought forward by hon. gentlemen, I may say this, that thus far this question has been discussed lucidity, with a reach of legal knowledge and legal acumen which would have done honour to any parliament. First, taking the motion before us, if I may crave the indulgence of the House for a short time, I shall afterwards refer to the reasons why I cannot, although a supporter of the Government give my approval of the position taken up by the Government on this question. Why I differ and how far I differ from this policy. And having done that, I shall have taken up all the time that I intend to occupy. What is the question really before the House? It has been announced here by the leader of this House and elsewhere by the Prime Minister that, contrary to the opinion which prevailed and the promise made solemnly in their capacity as a Government, the Government do not intend this session to bring forward remedial legislation, and they have given the reason for their delay. They say that they have reason to believe that the legislature of Manitoba itself will settle the question, but if Manitoba does not settle it then this House will be called to meet in January remedial legislation will be passed. So that what we have is this. Instead of having a measure of remedial legislation put before this Parliament this session, as was promised, and as those interested in that quesa change of policy has been adopted; we are told that, in the hope that Manitoba will settle this question for itself, the Government will lie on its oars for the present, and that if Manitoba does not settle it by next session, a measure will then be pressed through this House. Now, what does my hon, and learned friend from Simcoe think? He brings forward a motion as an amendment to a motion to go into Committee of Supply, but which is really an amendment to the policy which has been adopted by the Government on this Manitoba school question, and this is how my learned friend's motion reads:

This House has heard with regret the statement recently made, defining the policy of the Government respecting the Manitoba school question.

That is the first part of it. I need hardly say that any member of this House, my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) on the one hand and my hon. friend the Controller of Customs on the other, could subscribe to that first proposition, approaching it either from the extreme Catholic point of view, or the extreme Protestant point of view. "This House has heard with regret the statement recently made defining the policy of the Government respecting the Manitoba school question." I suppose that my hon. and gallant friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) could agree with that, because he could express regret that legislation, upon which he and his friends have set their hearts, has been postponed for six months. The motion might mean, then, a regret at the postponement. The second part goes on to say:

—that this House is unwilling by silence to appear to acquiesce in it—

That is to acquiesce in the policy of postponement or trying to make an arrangement with the Manitoba Government:

—or to allow it to be assumed that at the session to be held in January next, any more than at the present session, it is prepared to pass a law to restore the system of separate schools in Manitoba on the lines of the remedial order of 21st March, 1895.

I think that if that resolution were to be complete, the hon. member should have gone on to say: And therefore we further regret that the Government has not determined to do so and so. So that, Sir, in criticising my hon, and learned friend's motion, I will say this, that I do not thinkand I am in accord with my hon. friend from North Bruce in that—his motion is as definite as it is desirable it should be. either in that regard or in the expression of opinion. Now, Sir, I do not intend to go into the constitutional discussion further than to say that in the main I agree in the legal constitutional argument—I will not pause to point out where we differ, because I do not intend to take up much of the time of the House; but in the main I agree in the constitutional argument made by my hon, and learned friend from Simcoe and my hon, and learned friends from Albert and Bruce. In the main I agree with the constitutional argument made by my three learned friends. the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), and my hon. friend who belongs to the same inn of court of London that I belong to myself, my hon, friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). But it was stated by my hon, friend from North Grey (Mr. Masson), and was stated emphatically last night by the Minister of Justice that the views and directions and guidance of the Privy Council had been followed. I confess that I could not help thinking, the very moment I read the remedial order that it went too far. I could not help thinking that the remedial order almost wantonly exceeded the suggestions of the learned Privy Council, that high authority. I, of course, agree with my hon, and learned friends who preceded me that that august body had nothing whatever to do but to answer the questions that were submitted to them. I also agree with the comment made by my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) that I can attach no importance whatever to the conversations that took place between judges and counsel as the case proceeded. And I quite see the point of my hon. friend from North Simcoe quoting Mr. Blake and Mr. Ewart. For it was their policy to state in the strongest possible way all they could claim, and they were good witnesses for the hon. member for North Simcoe. I sat in this House with Mr. Blake and I know him personally very slightly. But of course I know him by repute. Mr. Ewart is a friend of mine. know that both Mr. Blake and Mr. Ewart are eminent as lawyers and are men of the very highest character, and both men who would fight hard for their clients. Therefore when they state their case setting forth what they claimed and what they looked for, they are witnesses of the highest authority and witnesses that were properly quoted by the hon, member for North Simcoe last night. But, Sir, to quote Lord this or Lord that, to quote even the Lord Chancellor giving obiter dicta which would have no authority and to quote their statement as having some strong bearing upon the opinion or judgment of this House, was a thing that no member of the House who speaks on the question can, with due regard to the dignity of the House, pass over in But these gentlemen give you an answer to these questions placed before them, and in closing their opinion they say:

It is certainly not essential that the statutes repealed by the Act of 1890 should be re-enacted, or that the precise provisions of those statutes should again be made law. The system of education embodied in the Acts of 1890, no doubt, commends itself to, and adequately supplies the wants of the great majority of the inhabitants of the province. All legitimate ground of complaint would be removed if that system were supplemented by provisions which would remove the grievance upon which the appeal is founded, and were modified so far as might be necessry to give effect to these provisions.

Now, what does the remedial order do? The remedial order tells the Government and legislature of Manitoba that the Acts and the provisions of the Acts that were repealed by the legislature in 1890 shall be restored. It is very brief, let me read what it says:

(a) The right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support Roman Catholic schools, in the manner provided for by the said statutes which were repealed by the two Acts of 1890 aforesaid.

(b) The right to share proportionately in any grant made out of the public funds for the purposes of education.

(c) The right of exception of such Roman Catholics as contribute to Roman Catholic schools, from all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools.

Why, Sir, that directs the establishment, not of the system that the hon, member for North Grey a short time ago described, and which he said he had some authority for stating would be satisfactory to the minority in Manitoba, but it describes the system that was in existence prior to 1890, and calls for its restoration. Now, Sir, I have pretty high authority for stating that if the system that obtains at the present time in the North-west Territories were given to Manitoba, the minority in Manitoba would be content. I have it on authority that I may describe as almost the very highest that can be had that they would be content with that. Now, what is that system? It is a very moderate system, wholly different from what is called for by the remedial In the North-west Territories we have public schools and we have separate schools. We have the same system of inspection for both, the same curriculum, the same books, the same teaching on the same schedule from 9 to 3. But from 3 to 3.30 the religion that is directed by the trustees to be taught in that school is taught. Now, I must say, that when I was told by a Roman Catholic gentleman who could speak with direct authority from the late Archbishop Taché whose entire confidence he had—this was before I came down here that Manitoba would be satisfied with the system that obtains at present in the Northwest Territories, I felt that that was an exceedingly moderate demand, and that if anything at all was to be done, less certainly could not be done. Now, knowing the sentiment of Manitoba as I do-a sentiment, I may say, that extends far beyond Manitoba, for the whole country is electric with regard to this education question-I could not agree with the extent to which the remedial order went. With what I have read from the opinion of the Privy Council before me, I could not think that it was necessary to go that length. Now, how do we stand to-day? In consequence, no doubt, of several causes, the Government, instead of bringing in remedial legislation says: We are not going to legislate this session, we have reason to believe that Manitoba will deal with this question. If they have for one moment any ground at all for supposing that Manitoba will deal with this question, it would be criminal on their part to attempt to deal with it in this House. Therefore, holding that view, I could not hesitate, when I was asked my opinion, in saying that I believe that the Government has taken a wise course in postponing action until a future day. There are various rumours abroad as to the grounds for the anticipation that Manitoba will act. think that, in judging the conduct of the Government in this matter, I am to probe into its means of knowledge. Its means of knowledge may be such that it would not be right that I should know them at the moment, or the Government may consider it well to keep them to themselves. But when the Government states that it has reason to believe that the legislature of Manitoba will deal with this matter, then, in my opinion, I have nothing more to say at present. Now, believing as I do in provincial rights, believing that it is best for Manitoba and best for every province. I cannot for one moment hesitate to say, that as the Government takes the responsibility of declaring that Manitoba will deal with the question, leaving it for a few months that have yet to elapse, it will be time enough next session, in my opinion, to discuss the question that is propounded by the hon, member for Simcoe. I think it is a monstrous thing to ask this Parliament to vote want of confidence in the Government because of some action that it may possibly take five months from now, in consequence of something that may probably take place, and of which we would all approve, not having taken place in the meantime. But this is a motion of want of confidence, and if I vote for it, I declare that I want to have those gentlemen on the treasury benches replaced by gentlemen from the Opposition.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It would be a good thing.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I have never had a very profound reverence for the opinion of my hon. friend from Montmagny, but I can assure him it was never so low as at this moment. What would happen if the motion of my hon. friend from Simcoe was carried? Would his ends be accomplished, judging by his speech? I have no doubt that one of his ends would be accomplished, because I do not think that the sentiment in his heart towards the present Government is one of unbounded and unqualified love. But what would be the result? He told us in his speech that he was opposed "a outrance" to the establishment of separate schools in Manitoba, and to remedial legislation. I am going to make a recantation, almost an apology, to the hon, and learned gentleman who leads the Opposition. I have declared again and again, and I have echoed and cheered similar declarations from other places, that on this question, as on so many other questions, the leader of the Opposition was absolutely without a policy, that his policy was, as Pope says.

To talk about it, goddess, and talk about it.

But I recant my declaration in that regard. and I want to impress my hon, and learned friend from Simcoe with a discovery I made. In a speech made by my hon, and learned friend (Mr. Laurier) on Monday night. he declared that in 1893 he had stated his policy. I remembered that we stated his policy. had had a great debate on this question in 1893, and I went and looked up the utterances of the leader of the Opposition. I find, Sir, that we have not been doing him justice in this matter, I find that he has declared his policy on this question, but I must say, in such a way that one might be excused for not remembering that he had, to a certain extent, nailed his colours to the mast. Now, he tells us in this very Parliament, and his words are almost vibrant still in the air, that in 1893 he declared his policy in regard to this question. On that occasion he went into an elaborate argument, referring to the history of the separate school question in Quebec, and this is what he declares to be his policy:

Now, Sir, what was the intention of the framers of the constitution on this point? Let us set aside Manitoba for a moment. Manifestly, Sir, the intention of the framers of the constitution was, that, whenever a law relating to education was passed in a province which had enjoyed a system of separate schools, which law the minority deemed oppressive, that minority should have the right to come before the Dominion Government—nay, before the Dominion Parliament—and claim justice—claim to be protected from that oppression. And, Sir, if there is an appeal,—

You see he went much further than my hon. friend from North Bruce went to-night, who stated that the appeal did not of necessity carry any remedy. This is what the leader of the Opposition said:

—And, Sir, if there is an appeal, it follows, as a consequence, that the authority to which the appeal lies has the right to interfere. But, Sir, so strong am I in my convictions of provincial rights that I am bound to say at once that this privilege of appeal should not be exercised except for very cogent reasons, and this interference should not take place either, except for very, very cogent reasons—reasons implying such an abuse of power on the part of the local legislature as no man with a heart in his bosom would submit to.

Later on, he says :-

Now, Sir, I can easily conceive, in view of what has taken place of late, of such an abuse of power taking place.

And he goes on :-

As you know, we have in Quebec no schools but religious schools—Roman Catholic schools and Protestant schools. Suppose the legislature of Quebec were to-morrow to abolish the system of separate schools existing there, so that the Protestant population would have either to send their children to the Roman Catholic schools or bring them up in ignorance or tax themselves a second time to establish schools of their own. Sir, if under the circumstances, an appeal were brought to this Government, is there a man in this House who would not say at once to the Government: It is your bounden duty at once to interfere and make away with this obnoxious and tyrannical legislation?

He goes on to say that the proper action would be remedial legislation, and he re-iterates this on page 1998. So in 1893 the hon, gentleman who leads the Opposition did what we had forgotten he did, he declared himself strongly for remedial legislation, though I grant that subsequently, for iastance, when he went to Winnipeg-I have read his speech there on this subject again and again-no more on this subject than on any other subject on which he touched, such as the trade question, was I able to ascertain the opinion or policy of the hon. gentleman. So if we pass the motion of the hon. member for Simcoe and the parties cross the House and the leader of the Opposition takes the place of the present leader of the House, what would happen? The very result that the hon, member for Simcoe does not desire.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). One thing would happen: we would stay on this side.

Mr. DAVIN. Not for long. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) indicates that the bon. member for Bothwell said that Mr. McCarthy would stay on this side. I do not think that the hon, member for Bothwell could have said that because it would have been ungrammatical—he is not on this side now, he is on the other side. So the hon, member for Bothwell could not have said that. He would pass from this side of the House, if you like. Whether the hon. member for Simcoe crossed to this side or not, what would happen would be this, that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) would be on the other side and he would find his friends bringing in remedial legislation. In other words, then, on this subject of remedial legislation the Government of the day and the leader of the Opposition are at one. As to the hon, member for Simcoe and other hon, gentlemen, many them on the Government side House, some of them the probably on this side, who do not want pro-vincial rights to be interfered with, what would they gain by a vote that would make parties change sides? I think it of great importance to those who take some interest in this question that they should know what are the opinions entertained and recently expressed by the leader of the Opposition. Referring to what the Government has done in this matter, have we had not evidence before us that they had some reason to believe that Manitoba itself, which is the proper place to have this question settled, would deal with it? After the hon, member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) had passed his legislation of 1890, I had the honour of an interview which was suggested by an eminent person in Winnipeg, and we discussed this school question, and I begged of him then not to appeal to this Dominion Parliament or Dominion Government but to throw himself on the generosity, on the justice of the people of Manitoba, because I said, the very moment you go outside the province, the very moment you appeal against your own legislature, that moment you raise provincial feeling side by side with religious feeling which will be very dangerous to your contention. And so it has proved. But we have had a communication to the press from the author of this legislation, we have had a letter from the member for Winnipeg. It means one of two things: Either it was a sincere and an honest opinion, based on what he knew of the province and of the legislators of the province; or else it was insincere, and I will not attribute insincerity to him. The hon, gentleman quoted an opinion of the Minister of Public Works. The Minister had been credited with saying:

However, it would be idie to discuss that now, as no legislation has been asked by the Catholics of Manitoba giving them the right to share in the funds provided for education by the government, or by the local authorities, if their schools are not up in secular teaching to the public schools of the province. All that they ask is to be at liberty to add to the secular education required in the public schools such religious teaching as will meet their religious views. I may say if that had been provided for in the legislation of 1890 we would never have heard of the Manitoba school question.

The impression conveyed by the authority in the west as to what would satisfy the Catholics of Manitoba is borne out, and this utterance of the Minister, whether authentic or not, would not be out of harmony with what I was told by the Catholics in the west. The member for Winnipeg, quoting the remarks alleged to have been made by the Minister of Public Works, said:

There has been all along a very serious misunderstanding between the Roman Catholic Church and the people of Manitoba, if the above is an accurate statement of the position of the church.

I call the attention of the Minister of Justice, or I desire to do so, for a moment. I fear that as his voice comes over to me, my voice may incommode him. When Macready was playing at Liverpool on one occasion, and a baby began to cry in the pit, the tragedian stopped, and said: If this play is not stopped that baby can't go on. So

Mr. DAVIN.

I ask the hon. Minister to give me a chance. Mr. Martin who sent this letter to the newspapers goes on to say that if this was the view taken by the Minister of Public Works, who spoke with authority as representing his co-religionists, he thought from what he knew to be the opinion of the people of Manitoba there would be no difficulty in settling this question up there. He added:

I have sufficient faith in the liberality of the Manitoba people to declare on their behalf, that, if a final settlement of this question can be reached upon the lines suggested by Col. Ouimet, they will do their part.

As I said when I commenced, I believe from what I have heard that a moderate settlement of this question would be acceptable and satisfactory to the Catholics of Manitoba, and with such an opinion as that given by the hon, member for Winnipeg, published over his own signature, if there was nothing else to influence the Ministers having charge of this matter, they might fairly pause before they attempted to hurry a settlement, because the proper place to settle this question is the legislature of Manitoba. I will go further and say that with the decision of the Privy Council before them and the opinions expressed there, although I attach no importance to anything except what appears as answers to the sixth question, and with the grave consequences that in view of everybody attach to the settlement of this question, for the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), while speaking strongly against separate schools, told the House how strongly he felt the danger of such a question as this, which tended to alarm and agitate the public mind, and the leader of the Opposition spoke of the fires of dissention being liable to be ignited by such a question as this, delay was advisable. In the early part of the session there was expressed the opinion of a gentleman from the west which would be able to solve the question. In the early days of the session and in the hearing of the Attorney General of Manitoba who sat in the gallery, I appealed to the patriotism, to the provincial patriotism, of the government of Manitoba to approach this question. Now, Sir, what is the rumour? The rumour is that they say they are ready to approach it, that they are ready to deal with it, that they are ready to discuss it, but that so long as the remedial order is before them they will do nothing whatever. That would be a very unpatriotic position for the Government of Manitoba to take. The other night the Minister of Justice stated that although the language of that order was very peremptory, and although as he stated it was the language of judgment, yet the Government did not expect that it would be carried out rigidly. I did not read the speech in "Hansard," but I gathered that the Governrigidly. I ment would be well satisfied and I am sure public opinion would be satisfied, and I am perfectly certain the party to which I belong would be satisfied, and this House would be well satisfied, if the legislature of Manitoba comes forward with a settlement of this question; and what is still more important the Catholics of Manitoba would be well satisfied. But, Mr. Speaker, whether the Greenway Government does that or not, whether the Greenway Government does its duty or not, speaking generally in regard to the question now under discussion, I must say that I can never fail to view the interference of this Parliament, the coercive action of this Parliament, with sentiments other than those of disfavour and distrust, and the certainty that it can end in no good. When I say that, I will reiterate what I believe: that if the question be discussed, as discussed it will be in Manitoba, with the temperateness that it has been discussed here to-night, the result cannot fail to be that the sentiment of Manitoba itself will force, either Mr. Greenway's Government or some other government, to approach the question and to settle it eventually in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. COCKBURN. I rise to explain, Mr. Speaker, very briefly my position in reference to the resolution which is now before Being no lawyer (and the hint has been given very distinctly to us to-night by more than one speaker that this is a legal question and reserved more particularly for legal lights)—I do not propose to take part in discussing the Manitoba school question, and a supposed remedial Bill which may or may not, according to certain contingencies, be brought before this House by the Government some time next year, generally supposed to be in January, 1896. Should such a Bill be presented to this House, I shall be prepared to speak my mind freely on the subject and to discuss it in its various aspects. At present no such Bill is before us, but we are invited by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to express our regret at the statements recently made defining the policy of the Government respecting the Manitoba school question. Now, so far as I understand the question, the policy of the Government is so to speak not absolute. It is contingent, and it is contingent upon the rejection of overtures to be made by them to the government of Manitoba for a peaceable settlement of the question before that time. The Government of the Dominion is no doubt most anxious that a peaceful solution of this question should be arrived at by the government of Mani-toba themselves, believing as they must believe, and as we all believe, that this is the best course to pursue, and that any other course is beset with difficulties of gravest character. Our Government wish to talk the matter over in a friendly way with our brethren in the young province of the west. They wish to look at the question in its various aspects, and to see if it is friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) may be not possible to arrange some mode of settlement by which this vexed question will be removed from the arena of controversy. They feel assured that if this question is left unsettled much longer it will excite racial and religious animosities, the result of which no one can foresee. And, Sir, naturally they ask us to grant them four or five months to see what can be done towards a settlement. The request is a reasonable one. I assume that they have not come to this House without having good reasons for making this demand. If they have no other reasons than those which have been presented to us in the correspondence placed before the House, they are assuming a grave responsibility. But I take it for granted that they have knowledge which has not been communicated to us, and which perhaps in the interests of peace it is not desirable should be communicated to us at present. I can say then, that in this matter, from the bottom of my heart I wish them God speed, and I hope that when we all meet here next January we shall recognize the fact that a peaceful settlement has been obtained. But if unfortunately the efforts of this Government should not be crowned with success, if unfortunately they should not be able to arrive at a peaceful solution of this question with the Manitoba Governthen in accordance with a solemn ment: declaration made on the floor of this House and on the floor of the Senate, they will, I suppose, be prepared to pass a law to restore the system of separate schools in Manitoba on the lines of the remedial order of the 21st March last. I earnestly hope that this necessity may never arise. I am deeply attached to the principles of the Liberal-Conservative party, and I firmly believe that the pros-perity and the happiness of this country depend upon the principles of that party. It is therefore all the more painful for me to feel compelled to inform the Government, that if such a law or Bill is proposed by them, I shall be constrained, however reluctant to withdraw from them that generous confidence which I have hitherto reposed in them. It appears to me that Manitoba, and Manitoba alone, can solve the present difficulty, and that any attempt to force remedial legislation upon that province will be worse than useless, and will be fraught with the gravest danger to the confederation of which we are all so proud. I cannot but fondly indulge the hope, that as this time has been asked from us, there is every pro-spect that a peaceful solution will be achieved.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). On the time being lengthened.

Mr. COCKBURN. I speak of the time that must elapse between this and the call-prepared, but I am not prepared, to assume the responsibility of refusing to grant to the Government the opportunity of settling and amicably the present difficulty. Hon. gentlemen opposite, as is well known, have no views on this question; they are absolutely viewless; they are blind, and if they are able to lead a party contented with blindness, I can only say that they are departing far, far indeed, from the traditions of the great Liberal party which they pretended to represent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We see.

Mr. COCKBURN. Many a blind man has gone through this world thinking that he saw until he fell into the ditch; and if our hon. friends on the opposite side of this Chamber are disposed not to grant even the short time proposed for a possible settlement of this question, they must take upon themselves a responsibility which few men in their sane moments would care to assume. If, by granting this short respite, peace and happiness and contentment can be secured to this country, and a struggle of races and religions avoided—if we can get Manitoba to deal with this matter, which is the only power that can really deal with it, a great deal will have been achieved; and I shall look forward with confidence to the action that will be taken by the Conservative party in this matter, feeling assured that as they have led this country during the last twenty-five years on a glorious career, they will not now flinch from doing their duty in such a manner as still further to merit the confidence of the country.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can say anything to enlighten the House on this important question. I do not rise with any such idea. My only object is to state my views and the conclusion at which I have arrived, and I shall do so in a very few moments. It may not be amiss for me to say that although I hold very strong views on this question, I am not prompted by the slightest feeling of hostility to those whose faith is different from mine. In religious matters, I believe in perfect freedom; I claim that for myself, and I allow it to others. In matters of politics, I also claim the right to hold my own I allow it to others. views, and I allow the same right to others. Now, there are certain facts which are patent to all of us in relation to this ques-The first fact which comes to my mind very forcibly is this, that the law passed by the Manitoba legislature in 1890 was declared by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to be intra vires. That is a fact which, I think, is sometimes forgotten—not by members of this House, but by those outside of this House who discuss this question. Another fact which is plain to all of us, and which was decided by the same Judicial Committee, is that the minority had a right to appeal to the Governor Council. That appeal was made.

appeal; we all agree as to that. But now we come to a point where some of us diverge. It is held by some that the Government were not only bound to hear that appeal, but that they were bound to grant it. I do not hold that opinion. I do not know that my opinion as to that is worth anything to anybody but myself. I do not speak as a constitutional lawyer; but from what I have studied and seen and heard of this question, my conclusion is that while the Government were bound to listen to the appeal, they were not bound to grant it. Now. Sir, the Government did grant this appeal, and make their remedial order. That order has not been obeyed by the Manitoba legislature. They have distinctly refused so far to obey it, and we have arrived at the present state of these proceedings. The Dominion Government have now decided not to introduce remedial legislation this session, but to postpone it until next January in order to give Manitoba an opportunity to make an arrangement with the minority; but if a satisfactory arrangement is not made by that time, then the Dominion Government pledge themselves to pass the necessary legislation. Now, Sir, my attitude on this question is this: I am opposed to interference with Manitoba. First, because I am not in favour of separate My sentiments on this question have been declared in this House on more than one occasion. I know that a great many in this country who think as I do about interference with Manitoba, do not agree with me about the schools. While I would like to see religion taught in our schools if that were possible, and if we could all agree, at the same time, I hold that in a country like this, if we want to have a national system of education, the only way we can do it is to have a purely secular system of schools. For my part, I believe the state has no business to interfere with religion: I believe in the complete separation and absolute separation of church and state; and, holding that view. I believe that the secular school system is the proper system for this country. If that system were adopted, the argument so often used by our friends from Quebec would fall to the ground. They say: Look at the minority in Quebec, how well they are treated. I admit that; but I say they are treated in that way because the schools in that province which occupy the same position as the public schools of Ontario are really religious schools, and I suppose no one would expect the Protestants to send their children to Catholic religious schools to receive an education. But if the schools in this country were all secular schools, if they were devoted to the purpose for which, I think, they should be devoted, to give a secular education, and allow the religious education to be given by the parents at home, and by the pastors of the churches, then separate schools would not be a neces-The Government were bound to hear that sity at all. I think that those who hold that religion of any kind should be taught in the schools are a little inconsistent when they oppose separate schools; but, on the ground I have stated, I oppose separate schools, which I think is a logical position. My second reason is this: Because I hold that it would be a most difficult matter to enforce a remedial law. We have all considered that question. I do not think any one has told us how a remedial order could be enforced. We are asked to wait until we see the provisions of the law; but I do not care what the provisions of the law may be. I hold that if this law is imposed on Manitoba, in opposition to the will of Manitoba, it will be not only difficult, but almost impossible to enforce any such law, I should look forward with great anxiety to a condition of things in which we would find the Dominion Government endeavouring to force a Dominion law upon an unwilling province. But, Sir, it is said by some that Parliament is bound by the Manitoba Act and the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to pass this remedial legis-lation. Now, if I believed that, if I be-lieved that this Parliament was legally bound and morally bound, then my position entirely different. But I think it is not bound either legally or morally. That question has been argued with great force by other hon, members, and I need not pursue it further. I merely state my own views on the question. The Act says that Parliament may pass a law. It does not say that Parliament shall pass a law, and even if it did I do not think Parliament would even then be bound. But when the Act says that we may pass a law, the discretion is left to Parliament either to pass the law or to refuse to pass it. The argument of the minority is that this is a question of right under the constitution. The question was asked this afternoon, Why should Parliament deny the minority their rights? The question which rather suggested itself to my mind is this: Why should we deprive the majority of their rights? Why should we say to the large majority in Manitoba who are in favour of the law passed by them in 1890: We do not recognize your rights; the Privy Council have decided that you had a perfect right to pass that law, but we deny your right, and we propose to take that right away from you and to compel you to repeal that law. There is one right which I admit the minority have, and that is the right of appeal, and according to the Act that is the only right which is granted them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). For what purpose?

Mr. CRAIG. For the same purpose as any right of appeal. If I have a case in court and lose it, does my right to appeal guarantee that I shall win my case? Not at all. I am not a lawyer, but to my mind that view seems perfectly reasonable. I hold that there might be a case in which the evidence would be so strong that this Parliament might decide that it was bound beyond doubt to interfere, and many hon. members may say that such a case exists to-day. But I hold that such a case does not exist. I hold that no case has arisen calling for us to step in and dictate to the province of Manitoba a policy exactly the reverse of what the majority of that province approves. That Manitoba had a right to abolish separate schools we all admit, and my contention is that this Parliament is not called upon to pass a law which would in effect restore the separate schools that Manitoba, in the exercise of its constitutional right, decided to abolish. I have no fault to find with the minority in Manitoba in desiring separate schools, but I hold that no case has been made out why we should step in and override a law which has been declared intra vires. I am therefore prepared to vote for the amendment of the hon, member for North Simcoe.

Mr. MACLEAN (East York). The time has come when, if one has convictions, he ought to have the courage of his convictions. The Government have convictions, and I give them the credit of having the courage of their convictions. They have presented their convictions to this House in a very strong The Opposition, I am sorry to proposal. say, have no convictions, and therefore have been unable to present any resolution defining their policy. The Ministers from the province of Quebec have convictions by which they stand, and I give them credit for doing so. I also have my convictions, by which I propose to stand, and I hope to get credit from this House for not only stating but for standing by them. I shall now proceed to state where I take issue with the Government on this question. I am as ardent a constitutionalist as is the Minister of Justice. I do not yield to any one of them in my respect for the constitution and the whole constitution. I am as strong as any one in this House in the belief that government in Canada can only be conducted on the lines of compromise, still better on the lines of conciliation; and 1 must tell my French Conservative friends from Quebec that I am in no sense a Francophobe. I respect their laws and institutions. I read their newspapers and their books: I have lived among the French people of Lower Canada, and I respect them; I have enjoyed myself there among them, and I respect them above all things for their liberality. Having said this, I think they will give me credit for good faith in this matter, and I may say further that I respect them particularly because they are a minority and a very powerful minority in this Canada of ours. I also respect them as a Conservative, because the late Sir John Macdonald in his efforts to build up this country always commanded the respect and support of the great majority of the people of Lower Canada. It is just because I have this respect for the French Canadians that I feel bound to protest against the Government of the Dominion declaring, as they do by the remedial order and by the statements twice made in this House by the leader of the House in reply to the leader of the Opposition and by the statement of the Minister of Justice last night, a policy of coercion to be applied to a province in the matter of education, as a part of the constitution and the policy of the Government. This is the crux of the whole question. The constitution was written with a pen of conciliation on the parchment of compromise, but not with the gall of coercion, and it is that which constitutes the bitterness of the Government's declaration to the people of Manitoba and to those who sympathize with them in the other provinces. I may be told that coercion in this particular case is only to be exercised contingent on the refusal of Manitoba to obey the remedial order. But that contingency is a mere side issue to the declaration of the Minister of Justice, which is a straight and categorical definition of the constitution and what it contains and the reasons which led the Government to come to the decisions they have come to in this matter. It may be that the motion of my hon, friend from North Simcoe is a double-edged motion. If that be the case, and it has been stated here by the Controller of Customs and the hon, member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), then it rested with those gentlemen to propose on a later occasion, if not on this occasion, a proposition that would meet their views and the views of those who sympathize with them. On account of their failure to produce such a motion, I must say that when the Government is challenged on its reading of the constitution I must declare myself; and if I am told that the question may never actually come up in this House, it is for that very reason, if for no other, that I must express my dissent from coercion as a part of the constitution. The Government have declared that coercion of a great province like Manitoba is a part of the constitution of this country and a part of the policy of this Conservative Government. Do they say coercion? Let them read the remedial order. It tells the Manitoba Government: You must do so and so, and if you do not we will put legislation on the statute-books of Canada that will carry out what we say. That is coercion in the broad sense, in the direct sense. It is coercion declared by the Government of Canada and declared in such a way that I very much regret it. I believe that conciliation is the only possible rule upon which government can be carried on in this country. And it is because the Government to-day asks that time may be given to carry on negotiations and to seek relief in that way that I regret. as the resolution says their employment of ccercion as they have implied it by the

and by the remedial order they have issued. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that that constitutes the whole issue in this case. And, as a Canadian, as one hopeful of the future of the country, as one determined to live up to the constitution of the country, I regret to see that it has been declared in this House by the Government that coercion is to be employed upon a great and free province like Manitoba in regard to the matter of education.

Mr. HUGHES. At this late hour of the night, I shall not occupy much time of the House. There are two aspects of the case which present themselves to the people of Manitoba. One is the race cry or what we may call the French-Canadian aspect of the situation. The other is what we may call the religious or theological or Roman Catholic aspect of the case. Now, I agree with all that has fallen from the lips of a great many of the speakers in regard to the legal questions involved, more especially with the speech of the hon, member for Albert with whose views I heartily concur. I was very sorry he did not continue and carry his argument to its logical conclusion and connect the remedial order with the proposed legislation and with the means by which that legislation could be enforced upon the province of Manitoba. However, these are questions that will arise in due time in case of failure to come to terms with the province of Manitoba during the recess of this So far as the French-Canadian aspect of the case is concerned, I certainly dissent entirely from the lines of conduct followed by the hon, member for North Simcoe in past years. So far as our French-Canadian fellow-countrymen are concerned, I concede to them every right to have their language taught, not only in the schools of Quebec, but in the schools of Ontario, and in the schools of Manitoba, wherever there may be a sufficiently large colony of them to guarantee those schools. You cannot change the language of a people in a day. I have said before in this House, we may change one's religious views as often as the sun rises and sets. But you cannot change the language of a people in that way. sequently I think it was certainly harsh on the part of the Government of Manitoba to wipe with one scratch of the pen the right of our French-Canadian fellow-countrymen of the proivnce of Manitoba to be taught their own language in their schools. I would insist upon the English language being taught in the schools of the province of Manitoba as in Ontario and the other provinces; but certainly I would have no objection whatever to the French language being taught to the French children, the Icelandic language to the Icelandic children, and so on. Yes, most assuredly Gaelic in the Gaelic settlements. In our own country, in the province of Ontario, that is done tostatements they have made in the House, day. This may seem a little visionary; but in many of the counties of the province of Ontario, the minutes of the county council are printed in one, two, or even three languages. I fail to see why a man who speaks two languages is not better than a man who speaks only one. And I am satisfied, still further, that if the policy of allowing our French-Canadian fellow-countrymen to use their own language in the schools in Manitoba had been adopted, this question would never have been brought up! in this House as it is to-day. I do not purpose entering into the discussion at any length. I dissent from the motion of the hon, member for North Simcoe for a number of reasons. In the first place, I cannot think that the hon, gentleman at this late hour of the session brings his resolution on in quite the good faith that ought to characterize an has ordered us to restore these schools. hon, member of this House in dealing with All that has vanished, and I am satisg question. moving any amendment to the hon, gentleman's amendment, as you are well aware, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, in the Mr. Speaker, is the case on going into Com- true understanding of the case than has been mirror of Supply, and we cannot, therefore, done in all the months before. Let this express in the form of a resolution that education go on for six months, and even which would meet our views. So we have if Manitoba does not settle it, as I trust it to elect either to place the hon, member for will, when this Parliament meets next Jan-North Simcoe in power and turn out the uary my strong belief is it will meet with Government, or we have to sustain the an entirely different feeling from that which Now, I must dissent from prevails now. Government. placing the hon, gentleman in power on the school question, for it is well known what views I hold on this question. I am heartily: and entirely in favour of a secular education. Last year, the hon, member for North Simcoe, in his place in the House-see "Hansard," vol. 2, page 6149—said :

My argument was, and is now-if we hand this; matter over to the control of the Territories,-He was speaking on the North-west school question:

If the people in there will be no harm done. the North-west adopt a scheme of separate schools and afterwards apply for admission into confederation, there will be no great harm done to say: shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with reference to denominational schools. if we do not give them power to choose, if we deny them the right to select for themselves, then, when the day comes, as it must before long, when some part of the Territories will ask for admission and be entitled by their population and position to have this clause enacted, then, this Parliament would be bound to repeal the law, otherwise we should be, as I say, riveting the system of separate schools upon them.

And on page 6151, he is reported as follows :--

I have my own views about them, and, though I would agree with the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), in saying that I would sooner see a separate school system than a secular system, I see no necessity at all for a secular school system displacing a separate school

These being his views, no matter what his motion might be, I certainly would feel justified in opposing him rather than turn out testants, a series of iniquities in relation the present Government. With the declaration of a policy by the leader of this Government I agree to this extent, that we have say six months in order to settle this question; we have six months in which the people of this country may be educated. And I am satisfied from the speeches delivered here this evening by the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), by the hon, member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill), and—to do him justice—by the hon, member for North Simcoe, have cleared the atmosphere and have removed a great deal of the sentimentality that has hitherto surrounded this question, the idea that we are obliged to get down on our knees and bow to the decision of the Privy Council upon a mere legal opinion. We have been told that the Queen We have no opportunity of fied that more progress has been made within the last few days in educating the people,

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the subject should be under negotiation at the end of six months, what then?

Mr. HUGHES. There is an old saying, that "It is time enough to bid His Majesty good morning when you meet him." However, when difficulties arise, so far as I am concerned. I have never yet hesitated to face them. If we were to turn this present Government out, what hope have we from our friends opposite? So far as the Reform party from the province of Quebec is concerned, I do not know very much about I do remember the old days when the Very well; nothing in any law we can give you names of Lafontaine, and Dorion, and Geoffrion, and others like these were household words in the province of Ontario, and led many of us to think that possibly these were men with whom the Conservative party of Ontario should be in alliance. But we have no right to hope, from any declaration of the leader of the Opposition, or from any other hon, gentleman on the other side of the House, not even excepting the vola-tile member from L'Islet (Mr. Tarte)—we have no right to expect anything better from the Opposition than we have from the hon, member for North Simcoe. Therefore, why should we turn the Government out that has given us six months of a breathing spell in order to settle the question, for a Government that has no policy on the question, for a Government that, so far as the province of Ontario is concerned, at all events, has fastened upon the people of that province. Roman Catholics as well as Proto Roman Catholic separate schools that are, I may say, not only a disgrace to the province of Ontario, but to civilization. When the Bill comes up we will take our stand. It is not necessary to say that should a remedial Bill be brought in, I, at least, will join hands with any hon. gentleman, be it the leader of the Opposition, who has no policy on this matter, or the hon. member for Simcoe, who does not seem to have a policy, either, except that he is opposed to secular schools-I certainly would be prepared to join hands with them in instructing the Government that we do not believe in coercing Manitoba. But I would suggest to the hon, gentlemen who are considering this matter in the meantime, that they should look into this question from various new points of view. It is a mistaken idea to think that our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens are all, or even a large number of them, in favour of remedial legislation. would call the attention of the Government to a remarkable utterance made by Mr. Fitzpatrick, a Roman Catholic member of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Quebec. I had an extract from his speech, but 1 cannot lay my hands upon it now. Speaking from memory, he said, in effect, that the Roman Catholic schools in the province of Quebec were a disgrace to civilization. also find various other Roman Catholics in the province of Quebec demanding that their teachers shall be thoroughly trained. pass a regular examination, and be legalized, in order that the children of the people in that province may have a better education. But I can give a higher Roman Catholic authority even than a member of the legislature of Quebec. On the 22nd February last, I chanced to be in Chicago, and, seeing an announcement that Archbishop Ireland. of Minnesota. and other leading men. were to address a meeting commemorating Washington's birthday. I attended in the auditorium, and heard him make an address on the subject of education in the United States, in the course of which he said:

Wisely, indeed, in its official rulings, the Goverrment of America permits no union between itself and church organizations.

He goes on to speak of the national aspect of Irish-American societies, French-American societies, and German organizations, and uses this language:

No encouragement should be given to social and political organizations or methods which perpetuate in this country foreign ideas and customs. An Irish-American or a German-American vote is an intolerable anomaly. Efforts to concentrate immigrants in social groups and retard their americanization should be steadily frowned down.

I merely present these views from Archbishop Ireland as pertinent to this question. I notice that he has spoken later at South Bend, Ind., still more strongly in favour of state national schools. I commend these charge of this case, so that during recess they may come to a conclusion, if possible, that in refusing to grant remedial legislation to the Catholic minority of Manitoba, and in endeavouring to bring about some fair settlement of the case that will be conciliatory to all parties, they would not be so highly offending Roman Catholic people, at all events of the province of Quebec and the Dominion of Canada, as they may suppose. So far as I am personally concerned, I shall oppose this motion of the hon. member for Simcoe; and when the time comes to treat the question of remedial legislation, I shall then be prepared, as I am now, to take my stand, and to oppose any form of coercion of the people of Manitoba; and I shall also be prepared to give my reasons, and I trust satisfactory reasons, therefor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am sure the House will believe me when I say that it is not from a desire to speak that I rise at this late hour and at this late stage of the debate. I wish merely to challenge some of the statements made by previous speakers, and I shall do so as briefly as possible. shall start upon the same ground as I took when I had the honour of saying a few words on the same subject during the debate on the Address, by stating my solemn conviction that this is, if not the most important question that has come before this Parliament since confederation, it is one of the most important, and worthy the best consideration of the best minds of the country. This is the first time, to my mind, that a test is being made of the validity of any guarantee given under the constitution under which we live. It is the first time that the country has been called upon, and that Parliament may be called upon, to solve that problem. Were the guarantees given at the time of confederation, valid? Were they worth anything more than the paper upon which they were written? Had they any object? Why were they put there? I was struck with the speech of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) who spoke in tones that must have impressed every hon, member in this House, and his kindly expressions were especially grateful, though we must differ, as I do particularly, from some of the sentiments and some of the arguments that he used. If, as he has concluded, it is after all only a question of majority, why was any guarantee pretended to be put in the constitution at all? Sir, suppose that Newfoundland were knocking at our doors for admission in the confederation, and were to say to us: We have a system of education now which is satisfactory. We are pretty evenly divided in Newfoundland between the two religious denominations, we are getting along harmoniously, we recognize the religious convictions of every section of our people, and we wish, as one condition of our entry into the confederation, that there should be a guarantee that ideas to the Ministers and the gentlemen in if the majority should change in our island, that change shall not prejudicially affect this happy condition of things that exists there today. Can you give us that guarantee in the constitution? The answer, I presume, would be on the old line, yes, we guarantee it in our constitution. But if an enemy of that union with Newfoundland appeared in the House or elsewhere and wished to excite distrust and was to say, place no faith on a guarantee given to a province, even if put in the Canadian constitution, and though it has the sanction of the Imperial Parliament, because it will not be worth anything when it comes to be against the will of a majority of the people. Sir, they will say, we will accept no guarantee, because we have been put on our guard; and they can have no better reason for making this refusal on account of their suspicions having been excited than the fact that all they have to do is to read not only public speeches in the newspapers but the debates of this Parliament. I therefore say it is of great importance that we should study the question from this point of view. Let me say that I protest against the arguments made, and I am afraid made for some purpose; I do not wish to say anything offensive or to be the first to use offensive epithets in this discussion, but I must disapprove of the lines taken by every speaker in this House or outside of it and by every newspaper in this country that attempts to create the conviction in the public mind, which is the judge after all, that this is coercion, that this is an attempt to fasten a system of separate schools on an unwilling people. I am not now speaking specially of separate schools, but I am speaking of a question of treaty, a question of right whether it involves Protestant schools or question Catholic schools or common schools. There was a certain condition of things guaranteed to the people which should be supported by Parliament and a sense of justice among our people, and it is hardly fair to try to prejudice the minds of the people. It is not my business to dispute statements made, when hon, gentlemen point to the condition of affairs for 19 years, prior to 1890, and point to a deplorable condition of the separate schools of Manitoba at that time and ask, do you want similar schools reestablished-I am not here to defend such schools or to dispute statements made in stump speeches even by the Attorney General of Manitoba on this subject, but I am here to say this, when hon, gentlemen ask, do you desire to restore the system under which it is pretended schools existed, that the minority of Manitoba do not want to restore any such inefficient educational condition in that country. Speaking for myself, but reflecting opinions more than my own. I am willing to adopt this broad principle, that the Catholics are as proud of educating their youth as are the Protestants, and they are willing to meet the Protestants, apart from religious instructions, on common cation as much as you do. It is, therefore, unfair to try and prejudice the public mind, with the idea that it is an inefficient and corrupt system that is desired, because the financial management is also attacked, and to prejudice the public mind by declaring that the Dominion Parliament is attempting to force that condition of things on a province like Manitoba. Another appeal is made and it is to the question of provincial rights. Show me that there is any desire by the people of Manitoba or on the part of the minority to take away the slightest constitutional right belonging to the province and I will stand up with any man in declaring that not a single vestige of right belonging to any province shall be taken from it, even at the sacrifice of separate schools in that province. A comparison has been made between this school question and the New Brunswick school question. The comparison is entirely in favour of the minority in Manitoba. Even the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), who has expressed his sincere convictions, who is broad enough to do justice from his own sense of justice, who has the advantage of the legal knowledge and training which I do not possess, admitted as much, but I speak from the facts. What was the history of the question in New Brunswick? The province appealed to this Parliament. Let me, however, take the statements in order. The hon, member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) started out his argument with this statement that there is one principle laid down, and which has been laid down by both political parties, that no interference must be had with the question of education in the provinces. I meet the hon, gentleman squarely on that issue, and tell him that both political parties have gone so far as to vote for disallowance of the New Brunswick school law in sympathy with the minority there, whose rights have been taken away by the Act of 1872. I meet the hon, gentleman squarely on that statement, and I say he is wrong. and that both political parties have committed themselves to the policy that interference can be made by this Parliament with a province having a right to deal with educational matters. I can prove by the record that both political parties voted for disallowance in the case of New Brunswick; and what becomes of the new doctrine we have heard to-night, and which I was sorry to hear proclaimed by the hon, member for Albert, that after all it was monstrous to think the majority had not the right to rule.

Mr. WELDON. Will the hon, gentleman allow me to remind him that the motion to disallow was not applied to the principal School Act of 1871, but to an auxiliary Assessment Act of 1872. The motion to disallow the main Act of 1871, if my memory is correct, was voted down in this Act.

from religious instructions, on common Mr. COSTIGAN. The main Act was before ground and say that we value efficient edu-amendment that legalized the assessment and took powers belonging to the ratepayers away, and put them in the hands of the nominee of the provincial government—these were Acts amending that Act, showing why it was inefficient and could not work. It was the soul of the Act. They were Acts of the legislature—call them amendments if you like—on the question of the New Brunswick schools. The vote was squarely on the disallowance of this Act. There was a majority of 35 in this Parliament which declared that grievances existed in New Brunswick, that the Acts were unjust and that it was the duty of the Government to advise His Excellency to dis-There we had the benefit of allow them. the majority. But the majority's opinion did not prevail. The question went to the highest tribunal, and I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the judgment was against the minority of New Brunswick. From that date to this you have never heard a voice raised in the name of the minority in opposition to or proposing to interfere with the judgment and decision of the court. We laymen, the laymen of the minority of Manitoba, think it strange we are not able to coincide in all the constitutional arguments put forward to show why in this case the judgment should not be carried out and justice done to the minority of Manitoba. Reference has been made to the Act of 1890 and its constitutionality, and as to the decision with reference to that Act the minority in Manitoba bow in obedience. But there was another clause in the Act; there was another guarantee, and that guarantee was for rights that were acquired after con-The powers of the constitution federation. under that Act were tested, and the decision was given, not that the Act of 1890 was unconstitutional,—that had been settled before and the Act to-day is in full forcebut the decision was, that in view of the fact that these rights existed, therefore a grievance existed because these rights had been taken away. Do not tell me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a question of policy of this Government, or a question of policy of the Opposition, or that it is the policy of this Parliament that separate schools are to be forced on Manitoba? Tell me rather that the Manitoba legislature, which some hon. gentlemen are seeking to throw so much sympathy around at the expense of a weak and powerless minority; tell me that that legislature of its own free act, and exercising its own power within the constitution, passed an Act that these people to-day ask you to protect them in. It is not that the Dominion Government wants to force the principle of separate schools on I have an appeal like every Manitoba. other man who feels interested in this question. I have an appeal like the minority, and to whom are we to appeal? Are we to take arms to fight for these rights? No; never will a Catholic in this country shoulder a musket or fire a shot in defence of these rights. We make a higher and nobler appeal. We appeal to the constitution, and if the constitution cannot give us our rights, then so much the worse for our country, so much the worse for her peace and prosperity. But, Sir, I believe that there is too much good sense, too much honesty, and too much patriotism in the people of Canada to refuse us our just rights. When the people of Canada understand thoroughly that the cry is not: Oh, this rotten system of separate schools is to be forced upon the free people of Manitoba, and we must fly to their aid, for there is an effort made to coerce them. When the people of Canada understand that there is no such effort at all, then they will do us justice. Our appeal and our efforts are made honestly, fairly and frankly as I make it here to-night. We Catholics are in the minority in this country, in every province except Quebec, and thank God the example of that province, in its treatment of the Protestant minority, stands out in bold relief for justice and fair play, and is a challenge to you my fellowcountrymen, the Protestants of the other justice to minorities. provinces to do Representing a portion of the people of this country here to-night, I ask you if there is anything unreasonable in the appeal for justice which we make to you. If the doctrine is to prevail that the majority is right and must rule we bow. We do not appeal to arms, but we appeal to a greater and a higher power than the power of the sword or the rifle. We appeal to the intelligence and to the sense of justice of our fellow-countrymen. We say to the Protestants of Canada, that we ask a fair consideration of this question. If you think honestly that the constitution has not provided for a redress of our grievances,-study the constitution and you will hesitate before you come to that conclusion. Some hon, gentlemen have been kind enough to say that if it was the intention of Parliament that that was a right to be guaranteed, then it should be maintained. The hon, member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) said: "If it was the intention of Parliament to guarantee that right I would not stand upon any technical defect of the law, but I would say, give it." In the name of this country I ask that every man be inspired with a broad view on this point, and if he reads the history of the question he must conclude that Parliament intended to guarantee these rights. If he concludes that, then I ask that the guarantee shall be fulfilled. Now, some hon. gentlemen have dwelt at great length on the word "practice." How did the word get into that Manitoba Act? It is susceptible of other explanations, but let me give you this explanation, and I believe it to be the correct one. New Brunswick lost its separate schools just in this way. New Brunswick had its separate schools and enjoyed them for years, under the law if not by a separate law.

So much was that the case that these separate schools could not be taken from the people of New Brunswick until the law was repealed under which they had that privilege. That law was repealed and the Act of 1872 came into force. Take the wording of the resolutions which constituted the treaty between the different provinces. The reso-lutions were the conditions upon which the different provinces agreed to come into confederation. The resolutions constituted a treaty securing to every province that agreed to them the conditions upon which they entered the confederation. If you read the resolutions and that particular clause, you will find that the rights and privileges enjoyed by the minority at that time in the province of New Brunswick were not to be prejudiced by going into confederation. When we went before the Judicial Committee in England on the New Brunswick school case, a judgment was given against us, and why? It was not because we did not enjoy these rights, but because in reading the Act, and not the resolutions, two words appeared in the Act which did not appear in the resolutions. These two words were "by law," and the Privy Council decided that because we had no separate school law we had no rights that were taken away. When this question came up in Parliament of affording a guarantee to the mincrity in Manitoba, and guaranteeing that their separate schools should not be interfered with, the experience of the past was before the eyes of every hon, member who discussed that question, and they said: "Let there be no mistake this time. Let there be no hitch now. If we insert in the statute: 'The rights and privileges enjoyed by the people of Manitoba by law,' it might be questioned as to whether they had a law or not; therefore put in the word 'practice' and you will nail it for ever beyond the possibility of a doubt." That is how the word "practice" came into the clause. members of the House who were here at the time will admit that that was the very reason, and that the intention of this Parliament was to give an honest guarantee to the people of Manitoba that these privileges would be respected. The hon, gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) denies that the claims to separate schools were put forward by any bill of rights. When that argument was presented before the Privy Council it was fairly met by Mr. Ewart at the time, but the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) went a little farther here and said: "Admitting that claims were put in by the handful of half-breeds and the few settlers that were there, does any one pretend it should have the force of a treaty? That is our own territory and we acquired it by purchase." I am sure the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) did not mean to take such ground, and if I were to ask him now I feel he will say with me: that if he considers that a treaty with a foreign country would be binding upon him or upon this Parliament, he will not say that it would not be binding in favour of the most humble Canadians, or the most humble portion of the Canadian people.

Mr. McCARTHY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCARTHY. What I said was, that it was binding with the persons that were there, but not binding with others who go in that have no claims.

Mr. AMYOT. The persons there then were too old to go to school?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Now, Sir, let me take another ground and then I will be done. I am covering only points which I thought it would be well to refer to, because I keep before my mind that in a few months from now when Parliament assembles. Manitoba will either have made a satisfactory arrangement upon this question, or this Parliament will be obliged to exercise its sense of justice and right. In the meantime the question will be discussed before the country. I wish, and I ask, that it be discussed fairly. That is all I want; because I am sure that if it be fully and fairly discussed, and discussed with full knowledge of the subject, there will be but one verdict given, and that verdict will be in favour of doing right and justice to the minority. I wish to refer to an argument used by my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon). When he talks about provincial rights,—as has been well said by a gentle-man who spoke before me,—it must be remembered that provincial rights are just the rights that have been ceded to the province in the constitution given it, and no more nor no less. It has also been stated here: "that it would be a monstrous proposition to say that any province which might accidentally pass a separate school law after confederation should be debarred afterwards from Well, it may be a very repealing it." strange proposition, and it may seem un-reasonable to some, but that Act was passed for a purpose, and it was a guarantee given at the time. But it was not passed by accident. The old Parliament of Canada for instance when discussing this subject, discussed that very point, and the objection was taken: "But that will take the power to that extent out of the hands of the local legislature." John Sandfield Macdonald, who was a strong advocate of separate schools himself, declared when the proposition was under discussion: "I protest against divided powers on the question of education. I insist that the power must be full and complete within the local legislature, and that the Dominion Parliament shall have no power of intervening in any right. I, as a Catholic, take the ground that I prefer my people to trust to the good sense of the majority in Ontario, as the minority in Quebec should trust to the majority there, rather than to have any divided power on the ques-Now, that may be but we must look tion of education." view, unsound the men who framed the constiwe are living under. tution This was brought out in the discussion at that time. and with what effect? In order to test the amount of support he could get for that view in Parliament, he moved his amendment to expunge that principle from the resolution, as follows :-

That the following words be added to the original motion:—"And that it be an instruction to the said committee to consider whether any constitutional restriction which shall exclude from the local legislature of Upper Canada the entire control and direction of education, subject only to the approval or disapproval of the general Parliament, is not calculated to create widespread dissatisfaction, and tend to foster and create jealousy and strife between the various religious bodies in that section of the province."

Eight men supported that resolution, their names being Messieurs Biggar, Burwell, Macdonald (Cornwall), Macdonald (Toronto West), Ross (Prince Edward), Rymal, Scatcherd, and Wallbridge (North Hastings). Eight men in that Parliament rose and declared that it would be a mistake that the Federal Parliament should have any power at all in the question of education. But, on the other hand, ninety-five representatives of the Canadian people said: No, in the interest of peace in the future, in view of our past excitement in this country, it is well that this question should be settled by us; and they endorsed the guarantee of an appeal that those minorities were looking for. Then, I am told that the provision of the Manitoba Act limiting the power of that province in the same direction, was inconsistent with the Confederation Act, and that there was little debate upon it, because as my hon. friend says, the report is very imperfect. There is no reference made in the debate to the school question, because those people trusted that there would be no necessity of making much noise: no one dreamed at that time any more than in the case of Quebec that the rights of the minority would be interfered with. But the Hon. William Macdougall tested the question. A motion was made by Mr. Oliver to strike out the education clause, and there was a discussion on that, but what strikes me particularly are the words used by Mr. Macdougall. He said:

The effect of the clause, if not struck out, would be to fix laws which the local legislature could not alter in future, and that it would be better to leave the matter to local authorities to decide, as in the other provinces. He quite agreed with his hon. friend in giving the same powers to this province as the others.

But though his views might be wise and well founded, when the vote was taken the clause was not struck out, the vote standing 30 to 81. I will not trespass any longer upon the patience of the House. Though I may not have convinced any one, I shall, perhaps, be excused for having risen at this late hour and trespassed to this extent upon the attention of the House.

Mr. BAKER. At two o'clock in the morning on the second day of this debate, I do not propose to make a speech; but I desire to offer one or two observations before the vote is taken, and I am constrained to do so by the remark which fell from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Costigan) in reference to the state of things which exists in the province of Quebec. I happen Protestant minority belong the to that province whose rights are to a certain extent guaranteed by the Act of Confederation, but whose rights are moreover affected by the same principle that underlies the doctrine that is to be applied to Manitoba. It is true that by subsection 2 of the Act of Confederation the privileges and powers law conferred upon the Roman by of Ontario were extended Catholics the Protestants of Quebec. But before Act of Confederation the was there was discussion as to the mode of preserving the rights of that minor-Therefore, there is a second clause in ity. Act of Confederation which applies the equally to the Protestant minority in the province of Quebec. It is provided by subsection 3 of section 93 of the Act of Confederation:

Where, in any province, a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the union. or is thereafter established by the legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

Now, although the rights of the Protestant minority are effectively guaranteed by subsection 2, they are also affected by subsection 3. In pursuance of that provision, the Quebec legislature enacted in the session of 1869 a law to amend the law respecting education in the province of Quebec. By that statute the rights of the Protestant minority were not only extended, but provision was made for the proper enforcement of those rights; and the Protestant minority of the province of Quebec is looking with anxiety to the decision to which this Parliament will I am proud and happy to say that, arrive. judging by past experience, the Protestant minority of Quebec have nothing to fear at the hands of the majority. But, Mr. Speaker, human nature is the same, and even French-Canadians are human, the opinion of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to the contrary notwithstanding; and if, goaded by acts of injustice that may be perpetrated upon their co-religionists and conationalists in Manitoba, the majority in the province of Quebec should attempt to deprive the Protestants in that province of rights which they have acquired under the statute of 1869, the Protestants would turn their eyes to this Parliament in appeal.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not in vain.

Mr. BAKER. Not in vain-I hope not; for it is idle to give an appeal if under that appeal there is to be no redress. It is nothing short of mockery to say to the minority that there is an appeal to the Parliament of Cauada if the Parliament of Canada will give no redress. It is true, there is no external power that can compel this Parliament to do justice. But Parliament itself in the exercise of the obligations and duties imposed by law upon it, is bound to do justice. I am not going to be drawn into a discussion of this question upon its merits. I confess to you frankly that I cannot understand the feelings of agitation which seems to prevade some parts of this Dominion, and which seems even to have found a foothold in this Chamber. I have lived all my life amongst French-Canadians—men who differ from me in nationality and religion-but no question of the kind has ever arisen between us. We meet and transact business, we go out and come in among each other, and we never ask at what altar a man worships his Ged. The question never arises, and I hope the day will never come when the peace that has always prevailed in the province of Quebec will be disturbed by an agitation which seems to find a foothold in the province of Ontario. In my opinion, the men are not the friends of Canada or of Canadian institutions, they are not the friends of true religion or of sound progress, who would seek to make political capital by stirring up religious discord and kindling a religious war. I hope that the effects of such an agitation will never extend to the province of Quebec, and I do not believe these effects ever will extend to that province. I have faith in the French-Canadian race and the Roman Catholic population of the province of Quebec, founded upon an acquaintance extending over the period of my whole life. And I should be sorry, Sir, to feel that a great injustice could be perpetrated against the minority of those who differ from the majority of the inhabitants of the Dominion in religious belief and in language. Mr. Speaker, with these observations I need scarcely add that I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. I must crave the indulgence of the House even at this late hour, and my desire to place myself fairly before my constituents must be my apology for so doing. The hon member for North Simcoe has placed before this House a motion which is sufficiently explicit, and the Government, have announced their policy, which I believe is also sufficiently explicit. And while at the outset I declare that I cannot vote for the motion of the hon. member for North Simcoe, still do I reserve myself the right, when the question of whether or no we shall pass legislation to carry out the remedial order, to act as the interests of my country and the justice of the case shall demand. The Government have fairly and fearlessly placed before the people a proposition, and I say it would have been better for the country had this proposition been submitted earlier, because then the heart-burnings and troubles would in all probability have by this been buried. this been buried. However, this matter must be specially dealt with in the course of a few months, one way or the other. The hon, gentleman's motion must of necessity, based as it is, opposed as it is by the Government, if carried, have the effect of defeating the Government, and as a result the Opposition must of necessity come into power, or the hon. gentleman himself. The hon. gentleman, followed as he is in this House, cannot hope to succeed as the Premier of this Dominion, or even cannot hope to be summoned by His Excellency in the event of the defeat of the Government. Not that I wish to minimize the importance of the hon. gentleman, but if he is not important in this House, I do conceive that he has importance in the country. As far as the Opposition are concerned, I can only say this, that I welcome the motion, because if they have not spoken, they will, at least on this mo-tion, have to show some signs of activity or life, and we will then see whether they are a united or a divided party on this question. If this motion is carried, it must of necessity result in the Government of Manitoba being called upon to legislate in the premises. Itis quite true, as the hon. member for North Simcoe has said, that their reply has been a dignified and courteous refusal. I do not look upon the reply of Manitoba in that light at all. I consider that they have held out the olive branch and have invited this Government to come to some arrangement for the settlement of this matter. If such a result can be brought about, it will be a matter of satisfaction to both sides of the House. The hon, member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), who, by reason of his connection with the Liberal party in Manitoba and by reason of his connection with the legislation which has been the cause of all this turmoil, may be considered to voice the opinions of a large. number of the people of Manitoba, appears anxious that this matter should be settled amicably; and that being the case, I am prepared to support the policy of the Government in referring it back again to the Manitoba legislature, in the hope that an amicable settlement may be arrived at. When this House assembles again, if the Manitoba Government have not acquiesced in any settlement, if it has not treated the matter in that spirit and light which will give satisfaction to all parties concerned. then I shall reserve to myself the right to vote against remedial legislation or to accord the Administration my support in passing such legislation, according as the conditions and circumstances will then justify me in acting.

Mr. LAURIER. I did not deem it advisable to interfere at all in this debate, for the reason that the hon. gentleman who moves the motion belongs to the Conservative party.

Some hon, MEMBERS. No.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, whatever may be said on the other side, the hon, gentleman himself said on the floor of this House that he still hoped he was speaking as a Conservative, and it seemed to me that it was a family fight which had better be settled among hon, gentlemen opposite themselves.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He is a Conservative who always votes with the Opposition.

Mr. LAURIER. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been very anxious, all of them, to know what would be the position which the Opposition would take on this question. seems to me that if the hon. gentlemen were actuated by anything like the spirit of fair play which we have the right to expect in this House from men who sit in the same House with us, though they do not share the same opinions, could have been no hesitation whatever on their part, as regards the line of conduct which the Opposition, in so far as I can represent it, would take upon this question. Hon, gentlemen opposite, when it suits their purpose, say the Opposition has no policy on this question; and when it suits their purpose again, they say the Opposition has a policy upon it, and so they make statements, either in one sense or the other, just as they they can at the moment make a point in their favour, and against their opponents. I have my opinion of this question just as I spoke on it two years ago in this House, when I proclaimed in the hearing of every man present, that, looking at the clause 93, looking at the history of that clause, there could be no hesitation at all in admitting that any minority in any province, which enjoyed the system of separate schools and which felt aggrieved afterwards by provincial legislation, had a right to appeal to the Canadian executive. I stated that two years ago; I have repeated it twenty times, forty times—since in all parts of Canada from the province of Quebec to I then stood upon that the Pacific Ocean. ground, and upon that ground I stand to-day. We have listened for two days to fine spun arguments as to what really is the effect of the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The judgment of the Judicial Committee simply declared the law as it is to be found in the British North America Act and the Manitoba Act. And the effect of it was to proclaim that the misority had the right of appeal under the constitution. Now, Sir, there may be difference of opinion even upon the interpretation of that judgment. The hon, gentleman from North Simcoe has stated that the power which is vested in the executive is simply discretionary with the Government and that they can refuse or allow an appeal. Myfriend the Minister of Justice has argued that the judgment was mandatory and that, as soon as an appeal was brought in, as a matter of right the remedy should follow. Speaking for myself individually upon that question, and speaking more from the point of view of a lawyer than from the political point of view, I would say that I would not carry the interpretation to the extent to which the Minister of Justice carried it. But I do not admit, as some members have argued, and as the hon, member for North Simcoe argued, that, though the right of appeal exists, the appeal should be denied in every case. Nor would I admit, as some claim, that the appeal should be allowed in every case. The right of appeal exists undoubtedly, but it exists as it was admitted by Mr. Blake and Sir John Macdonald, under ministerial responsibility, and it is to be exercised, as I conceive, for the good of the minority and, at the same time, for the peace and harmony of the whole Canadian people. Two years ago I stated that, in my estimation, the question was more one of facts than one of law, and that in view of the duties that the Government have to exercise and which they must exercise in the interest of the whole people, whatever may be the conclusion they reached, which they would have done well to fortify their case by an investigation of the facts. Sir, if all the members of this House were Protestants, or if they all were Catholics, there would be no question at all before the House to-day. But we are a mixed community of Protestants and Catholics and we know that upon this question the arguments that affect one religious mind do not affect another; we know that the arguments that affect Catholics do not appeal to Protestants in the same way. Protestants, as a rule are in favour of the system of common schools; the Catholics are unanimously in favour of separate schools. If this question is to be settled, it is not to be settled upon lines that will appeal to Protestants only or to Catholics only, but it is to be decided upon lines which appeal to the judgment of men and to the religious mind of all men. Therefore, I say it would have been better for the Government to fortify itself with a knowledge of what is going on in Manitoba. Now, if I may allude for a moment to a past debate, if I understood the Minister of Finance the other day, he stated that the schools were Protestant. Well, Sir, if the schools are Protestant—I address myself now to the Protestants of this Housethere would not be a man who would tolerate such a system, such an outrage upon the minority in Manitoba. But there is a dispute as to whether the schools are Protestant or not Protestant. Now, would it not have been wise to ascertain the fact beyond dispute; would it not have been wise for the Government to have an investigation of some kind which would have made known to the country positively what is the character of these schools. If the schools are Protestant, every Protestant will say the Government should interfere by all means and stop the outrage. If the schools are not Protestant, but are common, they are still offensive to the Catholics. Why? Because it is part of the Catholic doctrine that the children should have both secular and religious education. It may be said that that is a prejudice; that it should not be considered; that Catholics should be satisfied to have secular education in the schools—the teaching of reading, of history, of geography and so on. But if their conscientious conviction is that their children should be taught those religious truths, which they deem essential and necessary who can object so seriously? Would it not have been well to know these facts? There is a consideration of another nature which it would have been well to have before the House. I speak of the geographical distribution of population, in so far as religious belief is represented. If the distribution of population is such that it would have of possible system to, by a been the Catholics allow of to grouping, Manitoba to have their own schools, one great objection would have been removed from the minds of many. For the argument has been pressed with great force that the system will entail great expense. If the grouping of the population were such as to make that expense light, it surely would have been better to have these facts brought before the House, that the Government of the country might pass judgment. There is no doubt as to the right of the minority to appeal, still, in deciding the question whether the remedy sought can be prudently granted or not, it would surely have been better for the Government to have fortified theminvestigation selves by an facts, the result of which should have been brought before the House. Now. such is my position, such were the views I held a few years ago, such are the views I hold at the present time. I repeat again what I have said more than once, that I would be the last man to desire that the party to which I belong should walk into power through the door of religious strife. I would rather remain on this side of the House all my life than to benefit by the introduction of religious dissensions I was proud to hear my into this country. hon. friend from Missisquoi (Mr. Baker) state that in the province of Quebec we have been able to live in peace for all the days that he and I, at all events, have lived together in that province. I desire nothing more than that for the province of Quebec, nothing more than that for the whole Do-I repeat now what I said a few days ago, that, if we want to build up a nation in Canada, it must be founded on broad views of tolerance and Christian The Government have at last charity. taken a policy—so they say. I am not going to quarrel with them as to the character of that policy. If I were to quarrel with them, I might comment upon the numerous interpretations that have been placed upon this policy by the very men who have taken part in this debate, by the Controller of Customs amongst others, who have placed very dissimilar constructions upon that policy. We have had as many interpretations of it as we have had men expressing their opinion. Under such circumstances, I have to repeat here what I have said already, that I am not going, at this stage, to condemn the proposed legislation of the Government. I am not, at this stage, if we can prevent it, going to enter into a discussion which must come, unfortunately, if that legislation is introduced later on. I will not anticipate introduced later on. Everybody hopes, everybody expects, it. that this controversy will be settled by the people of Manitoba themselves. I have not lost all hope of that. I still that, more than ever, notwithstanding the difficulties that have been placed in the way, and I believe that the remedial order has been one of those difficulties, owing to the language in which it was couched. But it is not an insurmountable difficulty. after all. The limited time may be such an obstacle, but even of that I will not I will only say this to-day, that we all hope, at least I do hope, as a Canadian, that this controversy will not come for final settlement upon the floor of the Canadian Parliament. I do hope, for my part, that we shall be spared the lamentable spectacle the lamentable event, which, however, I see must come, if this question is brought in for settlement upon the floor of this Parliament, when the lines of parties, I am afraid, will be broken from their present cleavage and reformed largely on lines dividing the Catholics and Protestants of this country into two camps. May that never come. But it will be time enough to engage in that strife when it comes. not want to engage in it in my day, and that is the reason why I propose to vote against the amendment of the hon. member for North Simcoe.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am sure the House will not refuse me a hearing upon this question, although the hour is so late. The oracle has spoken at last, and, like the Delphic oracle of old, we know just as much now as we knew before that utterance was made. However, I am not in the slightest degree concerned with the policy of the Opposition, or with anything that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken might have to say with regard to it. My concern is with the resolution now before the House, and its effect upon the policy of the Government as set forth in the declarations which were made on two several occasions, and which pledged the Government in the strongest terms in which a Government can be pledged, to a certain course of action. Now. whatever the result of this division may be, supposing there are ever so few that vote for it, at any rate, the results that have been obtained from this debate are of exceeding importance, important not only to this House, but to the country. first time this question has been debated in such a form and in such a manner and in such a temper, and with such ability, that I think we are able to understand what are its true merits, and we may understand how far the policy of the Government is justified according to those merits. Sir, we have arrived at certain conclusions. We find an admission given, unwillingly, I admit, given grudgingly, I admit, but we have a substantial admission by the Minister of Justice that what has been spoken of as a Sudgment of the Privy Council, what has been spoken of as a judgment binding upon the people of this country, is not after all a judgment at all, but is simply a decision upon the questions that were asked, asked in order that advice might be given to the Government upon which they might act Government upon which they could without that advice being given. Therefore, I trust that we shall hear no more of the fiction which has been so frequently, so carefully, and so assiduously driven into the minds of the people of this country, that, in acting as they have done, the Government were simply obeying a judgment which they had no right nor power to disobey. Sir, the opinion of the Minister of Justice has been fortified by the opinion of every tleman who has spoken upon this side of the House, with one single exception. All their supporters who have expressed their opinion on this question, have declared their conviction that the attitude taken, I will not say by the Government, but taken by their representatives in the press, and adopted by many of their supporters in the country, and, I think, taken by individual members of the Government themselves, has not the least foundation to rest upon. The very able argument of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), as well as that of the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), have effectually taken away from the Minister of Justice the little shred of comfort that he derived from the remarks which have been so frequently quoted as given by the judges, but which form no part of their ultimate de-I think we have also got rid of the fiction which has been frequently put forward, that, in dealing with this matter, the Government simply handed over to the province of Manitoba a judgment upon which they were either to act or not, as they chose. Now, these two things have been so frequently impressed upon the people that many of them had no correct understanding of what the real merits of the question are; but I think, when they read the debates that have taken place upon this question during the last two days, they will no longer labour under that misapprehension, they will understand fully what we have endeavoured to make them understand, that in acting upon this question the Government must act as a political body, and not as a judicial body, that they must act upon their own responsibility as the advisers of the Crown, and that their action is entirely dependent upon the political views they choose to take of the situation. Now, Sir, I have to congratulate the House and the country. that after the clear argument we have heard from hon, gentlemen, every one of whom is a supporter of the Government, that view which has been so assiduously put forward with the view of misleading the people of this country, can no longer be maintained. Sir, exception has been taken to the terms of this resolution, and, I think, very unreasonably taken. My hon. friend from North Bruce characterizes it as a tricky resolu-tion. Well, I am a little afraid that my hon. friend's dread of that terrible catastrophe, the downfall of the present Administration. rather blinded his judgment as to the terms of this resolution.

Mr. McNEILL. No fear.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Well, I am not going to discuss whether there is fear or not, I am only saying that I think the hon. gentleman's very strong partisan feeling somewhat blinded his usually clear judgment as to the terms of this resolution. What does it say:

This House hears with regret the statement recently made, defining the policy of the Government.

That is, those of us who desire that Manitoba should not be coerced in this matter. The term "coerced," although it has been objected to frequently during this debate, certainly expresses the conclusion to which a number of members on this side of the House have come. We certainly regret that the Government have come to that conclusion, pending a contingency which no man in his heart believes will ever arrive. I venture to say, there is not a dozen men on either side of this House, who, if they expressed their opinion, would say that they had the slightest hope that the province of Manitoba will yield. Then, I say, having that conviction, we might reasonably expect them to join in expressing the opinion:

That this House has heard with regret the statements recently made defining the policy of the Government respecting the Manitoba school question;

And they would also join with us in expressing the opinion that this House

Is unwilling by silence to allow it to be assumed that, at the session to be held in January next any more than at the present session, it is prepared to pass a law to restore the system of separate schools in Manitoba on the lines of the order of 21st March, 1895.

The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Mc-Neill) objected to that resolution because it did not go far enough. I am afraid the hon, gentleman is very hard to please. If it went further, then it would be charged that we were going beyond the policy of resolution is Administration. That carefully framed so that it will challenge the action of the Government, because it is their own definition of it. Of course, there will be differences of opinion as to the precise meaning of the action which the Gov-But it is generally ernment has taken. admitted, and I cannot understand how anybody can read the order without coming to the conclusion, that the only logical sequence of the terms of the order is, that, whatever was done away with by the legislation of 1890, must be restored by whatever legislation is brought forward in the future. If I understand the temper of hon. gentlemen who support the claim of the minority, I can only come to the conclusion that nothing less than that will satisfy their demand. I am, therefore, obliged to come to the conclusion, not only from the terms of the remedial order itself, but also from the demand made by the supporters of the Government from Quebec, that nothing short of the re-establishment of separate schools in Manitoba is intended. There is another subject to which I will briefly allude. A subordinate member of the Admininstration has stated in the most public manner, not only in this House, but elsewhere, his opposition to the policy of the Government of which he is a member. That is a doctrine which might have held good before the time of Sir Robert Walpole, but it is impossible to maintain at the present day. There is nothing more clearly laid down by constitutional authorities than that members of a cabinet must be united on their policy. We have ascertained from the First Minister and from the leader of the House. and we had assurances last night from the Minister of Justice, that the Cabinet were united, that they were acting as one man in this matter, that there could be no possible question as to what their action would So far their position is a constitution-But what can be thought of a subal one. ordinate member of the Administration who, while occupying that position, with the advantages deriving from it, deliberately challenges this position and declares his opposition to the policy of the Government which is the very basis of the existence of The authority the administration? quote frequently on subjects of this character leaves no possible doubt on this question, and I will take the liberty of quoting a very short passage to show how completely that this doctrine is established. It is as follows :-

The responsibility of a minister who has no seat in the cabinet is less comprehensive, although in its degree no less complete. Such a one is required to render active assistance in sustaining the policy of the government, and in carrying out intelligently and faithfully the instructions given him by his political chief. But this is his individual responsibility and ends here. If called upon to represent the department to which he belongs, in either House of Parliament, he does so, strictly speaking, as the organ and mouthpiece of his official superior. He cannot be held answerable for a policy in the framing of which he has had no share; although, upon questions of special importance, he should rather resign than become a party to decisions to which he entertained strong and unsurmountable objections.

The position of the gentleman to whom I allude, who to-night made a speech which, I venture to say, no other member of all the 215 members would have made, is a most remarkable one. One can understand the position of the Secretary of State or the Minister of Railways, because they have boldly stated the position they take, and they are prepared to risk their political future upon it; but the hon. gentleman to whom I have alluded coolly tells this House and the country: I am entirely opposed to the policy of the Government, but until the time comes when I am called on to vote I will continue to attend to my department and draw my salary. The hon, gentleman is in the position of a soldier, one of a party called to lead an attack. He takes up his musket and enters the ranks and tells his superiors that the moment he comes under fire he is going to drop his musket and run The hon, gentleman's position to the rear. is one for which it is impossible to find any parallel in English parliamentary history, at all events during that period of it in which we have had something like responsible government and ministerial responsibility maintained. There is one proposition I should like to make. The debate has been carried on with such entire freedom from reference to any subject likely to create ill-feeling that I will carefully avoid doing anything which might bring the debate to a conclusion on any other terms. But we have forgotten one great principle, and, if I lay down the proposition which I am about to lay down, I hope it will be received as something at least worthy of considera-tion. The proposition I desire to lay down is this, that, excepting such rights as they have in common with all Her Majesty's subjects, the minority in this country have no rights. I say the Roman Catholic min-ority in any of the provinces, or the Protestant minority in the province of Quebec, have no rights except such as they enjoy with all the subjects of Her Majesty, and until we come down to that understanding and to that basis we shall always have these difficulties. Why, because a man is a French-Canadian or a Roman Catholic living in one province, or a Protestant living in another, what rights does it give him? I say, absolutely no rights. The whole is a misconception, growing out of these persistent attempts in this country to carry on our affairs by conciliation and by giving

I said, a few moments ago, and I repeat now, that whatever may be the result of the division in this case, however small the numbers on one side, and however large the number on the other, not only have we arrived at a clearer understanding of the real merits of the case, but we have also had from hon, members supporting the Government the clearest possible indication as to the course they will pursue when the question comes up for consideration at the session about to be held. The country. therefore, understands not only the political merits of the case, but the position of individuals with respect to it, and such being the case, and having these clear and distinct definitions and understandings, whatever other results the debate has had, it has produced these general understandings and has put an end to those misconceptions by which the public has been misled, and so, when we come to consider the case in January next, or at any other date, or deal with it at the polls, not only the members, but the electors generally, will be in a position to deal with it intelligently, fairly and honestly.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That for the remainder of the session there shall be two sittings each day, one from 10 a.m. to half-past 1 p.m., and the other from 3 o'clock p.m. until the hour of adjournment.

Mr. LAURIER. I cannot agree to that.

Mr. FOSTER. All right; it cannot be carried then. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2.45 a.m. (Thursday),

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 18th July, 1895.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

POSTMASTER AT TROIS PISTOLES.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether charges have been made against the postmaster of Rivière Trois Pistoles, county of Témiscouata? If so, has an inquiry been held with a view to ascertain whether such charges are well founded, and what is the result of the inquiry, if held? If not, why not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Charges have been made against the postmaster at Trois Pistoles. An inquiry has been ordered, but the charges are still under investigation.

STEAMER "CITY OF MIDLAND."

Mr. EDGAR asked, Was the steamer "City of Midland," of the North Shore Navigation Company, seized at Collingwood during the summer of 1894, for an infraction of the revenue laws? Was any penalty inflicted for an infraction of the revenue laws by the steamer "City of Midland," or its officers last summer, and what was the amount of the penalty? Has any, and what portion of such penalty been remitted or refunded?

Mr. WALLACE. 1. The steamer "City of idland," of the North Shore Navigation Midland,' Company, was seized at Collingwood on the 19th July, 1894, charged with having landed at the port of Collingwood, without payment of duty, two barrels of oil which had been entered for use on board the vessel as ship's stores. 2. A deposit of $400 was exacted before release of the vessel. 3. The value of the oil, with duty added, has been deposited to the credit of the Receiver-General; balance of penalty has been remitted to vessel owners. The evidence establishes that the vessel owners had no knowledge of and had not authorized removal of the oil from steamer "City of Midland"; oil was required for an excursion boat and the engineer of latter vessel, on his own authority, boarded former vessel while lying at the wharf, and moval of the quantity seized to the excursion vessel.

COAL CONTRACT AT OTTAWA.

Mr. LISTER asked, 1. Who are contractors for supply of coal to Public Buildings, Ottawa? 2. What is the quantity contracted for? 3. What is the price per ton? 4. Were tenders asked for by publication? 5. Who were the tenderers, and what was the price per ton of each tender? 6. When was the contract entered into?

Mr. OUIMET. 1st. J. W. McRae & Co. 2nd. 2.580 tons anthracite coal. 3rd. $4.70 per ton, namely: $1.40 lower than a large contract given here after public tenders. 4th. No. Last year's contract was continued as it was thought impossible to obtain as low a price by calling for new tenders. 6th. On the 8th July, 1895.

SCHEDULE AGAINST CANADIAN CATTLE.

Mr. TAYLOR (for Mr. Sproule) asked, Whether, in view of the change of Government in England and the appointment of a new President of the Board of Agriculture, it is the intention of the Government to renew the application for the removal of the schedule against the importation of Canadian eattle to that country without having them slaughtered at the port of debarkation?

Mr. OUIMET. The correspondence already set on foot with the Imperial authorities on the question of the removal of Canada from the cattle schedule is not yet concluded, an answer not having been received to the representations made in the last report by the Minister of Agriculture. It is the intention to continue to press the claim of Canada in this matter.

PRIVILEGE-THE HONOURABLE THE CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the proceedings of the day are commenced, I desire to call the attention of the House to a question which appears to me to be of grave constitutional moment, and if required I will conclude with a motion in order to bring the matter properly before the consideration of the House. The situation, Sir, so far as I know, is one of a very extraordinary, in fact. of an absolutely unprecedented character. Within a few days, the Government of Canada in the most formal manner possible have made in this House a declaration of their policy on a question of very vital consequence to the welfare of this country. In addition to this they then propose taking very unusual, indeed almost unheard of steps, for the purpose of giving effect to the determination at which they have arrived, they propose to hold a sixth session of Parliament, a thing which men who lately left the Cabinet on that ac-as he needed oil immediately, ordered re- has never yet been done since confederation. They also propose to hold that session at a time which makes it morally certain that this Parliament will be dissolved by the efflux of time instead of in the ordinary method. Now, Sir, under such circumstances, after the Government have formally committed themselves in this way to a de-claration of policy, and apparently have also committed His Excellency to consent to their proceedings, we find ourselves confronted with this extraordinary situation: that after the formal declaration I have alluded to a junior member of their Administration has risen in his place, and has publicly repudiated and denounced the conclusion at which the Government of which he is a member have arrived. That particular class of officials to which the hon, gentleman to whom I have alluded belongs, is a new class in Canada. We have not enough experience in this Parliament of their ways and work, or of the extent to which they may choose to consider themselves bound by the precedents which have hitherto ruled. But I believe their position is exactly analogous to that occupied by under-secretaries of state and by junior members of the various departments in England; and I hope it is not necessary for me to tell the House that such a proceeding as that to which I have alluded is one for which no precedent whatever, so far as I know, will be found in British annals. I do not mean to say for one moment that there is no precedent for junior members of an Administration disagreeing with their superior officers; but I do mean to say that it is utterly unknown in British practice that such a thing should occur, and that the gentleman who disagreed with the Cabinet should have continued to remain a colleague One of two things has always of theirs. happened in such cases: either the party in question has sent in his resignation to the Government, or the Prime Minister has felt it incumbent upon him to ask for his resignation; and it appears to me that honour, reason and common sense alike dictate following British precedents in all such cases. More than that, Sir, in this particular instance, it appears to me that the good faith of the Government is at stake in the very highest degree. We know that one of their late colleagues justified his resignation on the express ground that it was impossible for him to feel any confidence that the pledges of the Government would be re-deemed; and I am bound to say that it looks very much as if the statement made by Mr. Angers was likely to be fully justified. Now, Sir, this is a crucial test of the sincerity of the Government. If the Government of Canada choose under such circumstances to retain the services of the junior official who has publicly repudiated their policy, then most assuredly we cannot be expected-and least of all can those gentle-ccunt be expected—to retain any belief in tion to which we ourselves listened withthe sincerity of the professions which the in a few hours, that they are not in the Government have made. If, on the other slightest degree in earnest in desiring to hand, they adopt the English precedent, and fulfil the solemn and formal pledge which dispense with the services of their colleague, but a few days ago they gave to the peothen, whether their action may be well ad- ple of this country with respect to the meavised or ill advised, undoubtedly their sin-cerity may be admitted. Now, Sir, I think that there is a constitutional question of we have a right to inquire of the leader of very considerable gravity involved in this the House, who is supposed to represent the matter; and, without desiring to prolong Premier here, what course he proposes to this debate, as the question is a plain one adopt under the circumstances. I can hard-which any man can understand for himself, ly imagine that under ordinary conditions in order that the Government may state there could be any doubt in the mind of the their view upon it, and in order that other hon, gentleman, or in the minds of his collegues, as to what their clear duty is. Let the House do now adjourn. this House fancy, if it can, what would happen to a junior Lord of the Admiralty or a junior Lord of the Treasury, or any similarly placed official in England, if, after terpose between the hon, gentleman who Lord Palmerston or Mr. Gladstone had formally announced the policy of the Government on any important question, such an to call attention to a few considerations that official should have been found rising in his place and repudiating it. But. Sir. to come to an instance more familiar to us, what does this House suppose the late Prime Minister, Sir John Macdonald, would have been likely question undoubtedly of great interest and to do under similar circumstances? I was importance, and he has pointed out that not particularly in love with Sir John Macdonald's methods, but I will say this for him. that in such a case not four-and-twenty hours would have elapsed before one of two things would have happened: either his colleague would have handed in his resignation or he would have retracted his statement. Sir, we are about to close this session within a few days, it may be within a few hours; and before we go this House has a right to know, and the country has a right to know, whether in this matter the Government are in earnest or not. What is wanted here are acts, not words. I am not going to discuss on its merits the question whether the Controller of Customs was right or wrong in the conclusions at which he arrived. I do not want to import one word about that into the discussion. The question is simply this: whether, after the Government of which he is a member have formally announced their policy, he has any right to remain in it. distinctly repudiates the policy as he does. I. for my part, cannot see how the Government can retain any shadow of self-respect, and pass over such utterances as those of the hon. gentleman in question. Sir, the hon. gentlemen are very fond on all occasions of referring to British precedents. Let them, if they can, show me a single case in which a subordinate member of a British Cabinet has been allowed to repudiate the settled policy of the Government to which he belonged, and has retained office any longer than was necessary to demand his resignation. Are they prepared to ignore British precedents? Are they prepared to stultify themselves? Are they prepared still more to let this House break up, and to justify has just spoken and the hon, leader of the Government in this House, in order briefly have been suggested by the hon, gentleman's observations. I think the course the hon. gentleman has taken is rather extraordinary; that is to say, he has called attention to a this country has been without long experience of officers of the Government sitting in Parliament who are not members of the Cabinet. Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that there are precedents in regard to the relation to the Cabinet of gentlemen occupying similar positions to those of the Controller of Customs and the Controller of Inland Revenue, it does seem to me that it would have been more in the line of ordinary parliamentary usages if the hen, gentleman had given some notice, not so much for the benefit of the Government as for the benefit of the House. It is obvious that in the discussion which he has precipitated this afternoon there is no time to examine thoroughly the precedents to which he has referred, nor do I, for one, agree that there can be accord upon the of facts which made as the basis of his observations. He has said, for instance, that a member of the Government, not in the Cabinet, de-nounced and repudiated the Government's policy. Now I, for one, do not admit that. I submit that the position taken by the Controller of Customs cannot fairly be described as a position denunciatory of or repudiating the position of the Government of which he is a member. If the hon, gentleman's premises were correct, the question he has raised, suddenly, as it has been raised, would be of very great importance indeed. he has admitted that some very extraordin-ary things have occurred this session. He referred, for instance, to the policy of the Government involving a sixth session of this Parliament. That, undoubtedly, is unusual and extraordinary. Speaking at the moment, this is my idea of the trend of the cases that have come before the British Parliament in matters of this kind. Some of the authorities were referred to last night, and only one of them seemed to be a little inconsistent with what I am about to say of the general trend of those authorities. It is this, that a member of the Government, not occupying a seat in the Cabinet. is not supposed to be consulted, as to the initial stage at any rate, in the consideration of questions of public policy by the Cabinet. The Cabinet are supposed to deal with these matters independently of members of the Government who do not sit in the Cabinet; and when the Ministry comes down to the House with a public measure, with an Act of Parliament, and opportunity is given to the outside members of the Cabinet, so to speak,-not necessarily the junior members in the sense to which the hon. gentleman referred to them but in this case the Controllers-to consider the measure fully in all its bearings and in its application, then it is in the speech by which he defended his on consideration that in a case of this kind, The position, for instance, issue with them on the points raised, this whole question, difficult and burning as it is admitted to be, may possibly be decided without this Government asking Parliament to take any particular course of action. That is the main point. That has almost been conceded by the majority of minds in the House, so far as one is able to judge from this somewhat extended debate. There has been almost a universal expression of the hope that the Parliament of Canada may ultimately find it unnecessary to debate or discuss this measure. Under those circumstances. I for one take the risk of sayingwhile it is true I have no parliamentary reputation to risk.—that in the short examination I have made of the text books—and I have gone no further; I have not gone to the fountain head, nor do I believe the hon. gentleman himself has examined fully into if he finds he is opposed to that measure will either have to support it or retire from the Government. I therefore think, with all due deference to the hon, gentleman, that his observations are rather premature.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In order to examine this subject fairly, we have to consider what changes have taken place in the system of parliamentary government in England, and how far the adoption of the principles of the Cabinet speaking with one voice on the floor of Parliament has modified the doctrine which formerly existed on this subject. There were those in House of Commons of England, years ago, who thought there was nothing improper in a government permitting of a large number of what may be called open questions—a class of questions upon which members of the government might take, if they saw proper, different sides. Mr. Macaulay, when a member of Lord Melbourne's administration, voted against his colleagues on the subject of the ballot; and for those gentlemen either to support the vote in opposing the views of the govern-his own, he laid down this doctrine, that the government ought to speak with a united voice on all questions respecting the administration of public affairs and all questions affecting the peace, order and good government of the country. But that when the questions were of such a character that they is not obliged to anticipate the action of might with propriety have been left alone his colleagues, and so long as the differby the administration, as an administration, of private members, then it was not improper to permit members of the administration to divide on such questions. Macaulay perhaps stated his own peculiar opinions as broadly as they ever have been stated by any member of any government since the parliamentary system was intro-If a member of the Government were to declare the Government's policy upon a public question, and a member of the Administration, who is also a member of the Cabinet, should rise and combat that policy, there would be but one course open to that Minister, and that would be to tender his resignation and withdraw from the Government. Now we have, in this case, to consider how far that rule should bind members of the Government who are not responsible for the policy of the Administra-tion, these members of the Ministry who are outside of the Cabinet. Now, I do not deny that the Controller of Customs might. according to the recognized usage in England, entertain views at variance with those which the Government have expressed. I do not deny that a member of the Administration outside of the Cabinet may postpone the question of his resignation until the question comes practically before this House. But. Sir, that contention is controlled and limited by other considerations. It is not usual for a Government to come before Parliament and announce its policy upon a public question if it is not prepared immediately to deal with that question; and so it is not usual for members of the Administration who may dissent from the policy determined upon by the Government to Government had pledged themselves to a declare before Parliament their hostility to that policy. But the Government thought who is not of the Cabinet is not at liberty that this matter was of such importance to the public well-being and to the interests of the Administration, that it was necessary that they should come before Parliament and formally declare what their determinations were for the next session of Parlia-They have adopted the unusual course of asking permission from the Crown to come here and announce this session that they intend by a particular day to begin another session, and that session one that it is not usual to have during the life of a Parliament. At the very time when the policy of the Administration on this matter upon which they have made a formal announcement, is under discussion in the House, a member of the Administration, not ment on that subject and taking a line of the policy the Government intended to take. Now, I contend that he is exactly in the position of a member of the Administration who, when a Bill is submitted by the Administration, combats and resists the adoption of that Bill. A Minister of the Crown who is not a member of the Government ence between them remains unknown, he when they might have been left in the hands may with propriety remain a member of the Administration. He may take the risk of considering that this question may be, as the Minister of Justice says, settled before the time comes for Parliament to deal with it, and so may never find it necessary to resign. But that cannot hold in this case, because the Government have come down here and enunciated their policy; they have declared their intentions: those intentions are as well defined and as well known as if resolutions embodying them had been submitted to the House. And upon the declaration of these intentions the Controller of Customs has come here and has seriously argued against the policy, and declares that if it is persisted in, and it becomes necessary to legislate upon the subject, he will resist that legislation. The self-respect of the Minister and the self-respect of his chief. the head of the department, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, make it necessary that his membership in the Government should come to an end. Nothing is clearer, when you look at the cases, than that that is the principle. What is the rule long since established in England? In 1829, when Sir Charles Wetherall was Attorney General of England—and the Attorney General is not a member of the Cabinet, though a member of the Ministry-differed from the Government upon the subject of Catholic emancipation, he was compelled to withdraw from the Government, and Sir James Scarlett took his place. And you have many instances of parties being dismissed from the Administration for antagonizing upon the floor of Parliament the policy upon which the definite line of action. And the Minister to combat that policy, if it be a matter of great importance, without first tendering to the Government his resignation. I contend that the hon, gentleman's position is an anomalous position, and one wholly inconsistent with the principle of united responsibility, and with the obligations which Ministers of the Crown owe to the representatives of the people in Parliament.

The control of the co

Mr. DAVIN. It would seem to me that the hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat is entirely mistaken in the main proposition he lays down. The main proposition he lays down is this-that if a Government measure or a Government proposition be discussed in Parliament, a suborof the Cabinet, rises and argues against dinate member of that Administration, that is a member who is not in the Cabinet, cannot express disapproval of that measure or that policy without placing himself in such a position that he must resign or be dismissed. Now, in 1849 Mr. Baines, the President of the Poor Law Board, voted against the Government measure for the repeal of the navigation laws. But the Prime Minister explained that Mr. Baines had only accepted office conditionally that he should be allowed to vote as he thought fit upon this question.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. This case shows that this principle of the subordinate members of the Government voting against the policy of the Cabinet is so well understood that they actually make arrangement with the gentleman accepting such a position that he may openly in Parliament express the strongest disapproval of the Government's policy, not by mere comment only, but by voting against it. Then, in 1854, upon another question, Mr. Baines felt it his duty to oppose his colleagues, but his proffered resignation was declined on account of the high sense entertained of his public services.

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon, friend from Simcoe says, "Hear, hear." I do not know exactly the point that he tries to make, but I apprehend it is that the high consideration entertained by the Government of the day of his services, may be translated into language such as this, that the Government felt that his services to the country, and to the Administration, and to Parliament, were such that they would prefer that he should remain in the Administration. Well, the estimate of the services of a particular Minister is a physiological circumstance for the Cabinet, it is a circumstance that we have no means of measuring, we cannot tell in the minds of what members of the Cabinet it may inhere. We must only take the precedents, only take the fact, supposing the fact to be as stated by the hon, member for South Oxford, namely, that the Conof Customs has expressed approval of the policy of the Government, and yet the Government considers ,that there is nothing in that to make them insist that he should take any action, or that should cause them to take any active part Now, there is reason, surely, themselves. in all these things, and what is the obvious reason? A man who is not a member of a Cabinet has nothing to do with framing its policy, he is not consulted about Bills over which they cogitate. He is an officer indeed of the Government, and occupying a high position, but he has no Cabinet responsibility. What is the difference between his position as a member of the Government, and the position of a member of Parliament, on a question, say, like that on which Mr. Baines differed from his colleagues, or on the question on which the Controller of Customs spoke last night? What is to preevnt him, if he has nothing to do with the framing of measures, from giving his opinion? I apprehend that a moment might arrive then it would become inconvenient for the Ministry, or for the hon, gentleman himself, and then it would be time for him to think of resigning. But the point made by the hon, member for Bothwell is clearly not inconsistent with any precedent in the British Parliament.

Mr. CASEY. I think the Government may well say, and particularly the Controller of Customs, Save us from our friends. The hon, gentleman who has just sat down has done everything in his power to minimize the position of the Controller of Customs in the Government, and has done something, I think, to increase the embarrassment that must exist within the Government itself on account of their retention of that gentleman. He says the Controller of Customs is not a Minister, he is only an official.

Mr. DAVIN. No, not a Cabinet Minister.

An official of the Govern-Mr. CASEY. ment, were the hon, gentleman's words. His position in discussing questions differs, he says, in no way from that of a private He says he has nothing to do member. with framing the policy of the Government, he is not consulted about the Bills they frame. Well, all this will be pleasant information for those friends of the Controller of Customs outside of the House who believe that he is a power, and a prevailing power, within the Government, although he be not within the precincts of the Cabinet itself. I leave that point to be settled between the hon, gentleman and the Controller of Customs.

But he attempts to draw an analogy with the case of the President of the Poor Law Board, in the English Administration of 1849, who was retained in office, although he had voted against the Government on the one question of the navigation laws. Well, in the first place, that precedent does not apply here, because the navigation laws were not the essential policy on which the Government staked its existence. The policy of remedial legislation for Manitoba is the policy on which this Government claims to stake its very existence as a Government, whatever that policy may, in the end, turn out to be.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) says that in this particular case the Premier had made an agreement with the President of the Poor Law Board, Mr. Baines, that he might on this question differ with his colleagues, and oppose them in the House. Why did the hon. member bring in that illustration? Is it a fact that in this case the Government have an understanding with the Controller of Customs that he might differ from the Cabinet on the question of separate schools, that he might vote against them in the House, that he might speak against their policy in the country, in order that he might rally his Orange friends to the support of the Government; while my hon, friends the Min-Public Works and the ister of Postmaster General are rallying the people of the province of Quebec to the support of the Government, for an opposite reason? Is there an agreement of that sort? Have the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General made a solemn bargain with the Controller of Customs that they would let him kick over the traces and abuse the Government's policy, here and throughout the country, in order that he might stay in the Government, nominally, and bring the support of his Orange friends to the Administration? If so, it is time that the friends of those hon, gentlemen in the province of Quebec knew it: it is also time that the friends of the Controller in the province of Ontario knew it.

But I think there can be no serious debate as to the propriety, the decency, I may say, of retaining a member of the Government, for, although he may not be a member of the Cabinet, he is a member of the administrative Government-of keeping such a gentleman in office while he is at variance with the Government on the one vital point on which they are now asking the confidence of the country. There can be no question as to the decency of such a proceeding. The only question can be that raised by my hon, friend the Minister of Justice, as to how far the utterances of the Controller indicate want of confidence in the policy of the Government, and an intention to oppose that policy.

Now, on that point, I think we can rest easy. The Controller has delivered utterances which certainly mean a declared opposiaccepted as declarations of his opposition to that policy, and which I think can be interpreted in no other sense-although the Minister himself seems to have thought, on a late occasion, that there was a way of holding his present views consistently with sustaining that policy. When the hon. Controller of Customs addressed his subjects—I am using that word rather in a jocular sense, because I see he is Supreme Grand Sovereign of the Orange Order, and I do not know how else we can refer to them-when he addressed the Orangemen here on the 12th July, he said: he said:

For my part, and I speak under a full sense of the responsibility of my utterances, I have to say frankly and firmly, that I favour the maintenance of a non-sectarian school system in Manitoba. And then there were cheers from the assembled faithful. Now, if favouring the maintenance of a non-sectarian school system does not mean opposition to the introislation originating in this House, then the English language does not mean anything, and I am sure the hon. Controller knows enough of the English language to express his views clearly in that particular.

If our constitution permitted it, I would advocate with the same fervour a similar system throughout the Dominion. (Renewed cheers.)

So, the Controller is not only against separate schools in Manitoba, but against separate schools anywhere in Canada. Here is a part of his speech to which I wish to call special attention:

More than that, I have to say, that if occasion should arise to require a declaration to this effect on my part, by my voice and vote in Parliament, I will not hesitate for one moment to give effect to the view which I have just announced.

The Controller says that by his voice and vote in Parliament, on the first occasion which arises, he will give effect to his view that non-sectarian schools should prevail in Manitoba, and that separate schools should not be granted to Roman Catholics there:

There is, further, this very important aspect of the case to be considered, namely, the difficulty of imposing a school system upon Manitoba by means of federal legislation. The constitution The constitution commits to the provinces exclusive jurisdiction in matters of education, and, while it is true that certain reservations are made, that specified limitations are placed upon the powers of the provinces, there is no provision whereby effect can be given to any conclusion Parliament might arrive at contrary to the views of the province.

So the Controller says that if remedial legislation were passed by this Parliament, it would be impracticable and it could not be carried into effect. Could any one imagine stronger opposition presented to the views of the Government than is made by the Controller? It is true that this speech was delivered principally to the faithful on a great occasion, but it was carefully prepared tion to that policy, which certainly must be and written out and given to the press, and I read this extract from the speech as it appeared in the official organ of the Government, the "Mail and Empire," of Toronto. I notice that this important statement was omitted from the published report given by the Government organ in Ottawa, but it appeared in the Toronto organ; the hon. gentleman did not get his proof revised in time for the Toronto organ, although it was revised for the Ottawa one. After pointing out the impracticability of having the remedial order carried into effect in Manitoba,

> So that, apart altogether from the cardinal principle of the question, there is a real and substantial difficulty in the way of details to be con-fronted which gives added weight to the objecticn to parliamentary interference with Manitoba. I propose, however, to await events rather than to anticipate what may never occur.

The Controller thinks it possible that this Government, of which he is an outside memduction of separate schools by remedial leg- ber, sitting on the door-step of it, may never carry out the policy on which they have challenged the country to support them. He said: "He would not anticipate what may never occur," namely, the necessity of opposing remedial legislation. The reason is that he does not believe his colleagues intend to bring their policy to a focus in the shape of actual legislation submitted to the House, and waiting for that time, although his colleagues promised to do what he said they should not do, he would calmly await events-among these, no doubt, being the receipt during six months, of salary cheques, for the dates which would intervene between his speech and the end of the session of Parliament, to be called in January next.

He continued:

Nor do I intend to be led or entrapped into precipitate action upon the subject by any device, no matter from what quarter it may come.

No one believes that any one could arouse the hon, gentleman from his sphinx-like calm, and induce him to precipitate his decision and forestall the arrival of those pleasant events which occur to a man in receipt of salary.

On another occasion, and in a more responsible manner, the hon, gentleman stated:

It is clear to me that the proposal that those schools should be restored virtually as they had existed previous to 1890, is a proposition that will not meet with acceptance in this House nor with acceptance at the hands of the people of this country. The facts are undeniable.

The hon, gentleman quoted the evidence of Mr. Sifton to show that the schools existing before 1890 were absolutely inefficient, and he said it would not do to restore schools like those. He added:

It is quite clear that the schools in a sparselysettled country, such as Manitoba is and must be for many years to come, will be inefficient if two or three different schools are to be established in one district, because not only the Protestants and Roman Catholics, but the various branches of the Protestant Church will each demand separate schools, and I do not see how the demand can be refused. It has been stated by the hon, member for Provencher that Archbishop McLean, of the English Church, is an advocate of the separate school system. I believe that he is correct, and also that there are very many clergy of the Church of England who are strong advocates of the separate school system. Belonging to that church myself, I have had an opportunity of ascertaining the opinions of the laity, and I believe the desire for separate schools as regards the Church of England is confined almost entirely to the clergy of that church, and that such a proposal does not meet with any favour among the laity of that church. If separate schools are to be given to Roman Catholics, you cannot refuse them to each of the other churches.

The Controller is in direct opposition to the policy of the Government, and if the Minister of Justice is not now satisfied it is impossible to convince him. for the policy of the Government as expressed in the remedial legislation, be content to associate in the Administration with a man who says the people of Manitoba have been deprived by the local Act of 1890, sets forth:

And His Excellency the Governor General in Council was further pleased to declare and decide, and it is hereby declared, that it seems requisite that the system of education embodied in the two Acts of 1890 aforesaid, shall be supprenented by a provincial Act or Acts which will restore to the Roman Catholic minority the said rights and privileges of which such minority has been so deprived as aforesaid, and which will medify the said Acts of 1890, so far, and so far only, as may be necessary to give effect to the provisions restoring the rights and privileges in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), hereinbefore mentioned.

There is the clear issue of policy between the Government and its hanger-on, for as such he has been described by the hon, member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order. The hon, gentleman has no right to attribute to me such language. I never used the word "hanger-on."

Mr. CASEY. The hon, member did not use the word "hanger-on," but the position in which the Controller is standing, as stated by the hon, member for Assiniboia, can only be described by the word "hangeron." I father that word myself, but the material on which the description was based was afforded by the hon, member for Assiniboia. It does not consort with the dignity of a Government to have a hanger-on who will not follow orders, even if he be Grand Sovereign of British North America. Let him be Grand Sovereign of what he likes. so long as he remains in a Government, he should be in accord with its policy and not opposed to it, as he is showing to be by his speeches on the floor of the House, as well as before the Orangemen on the him be a man or a July. Let mouse; let him take one side or the other. Let him retire to his own sovereignty, and be content with that, or accept his position as an attachment to this Government. and support faithfully and loyally the poliof those whose bread he eats.

Of those on the other hand, who are in accord with the policy of the Government, those two Ministers especially who resigned from that Government, and came back again only on the especially strengthened assurance, with special endorsement upon it, that its promise would be carried out, what are we to say? Are they going to sit on the same treasury benches-I won't say the same Council table, because they have not taken the Supreme Grand Sovereign into the Council chamber-will they sit on the same treasury benches with a man who reviles the separate schools of Manitoba, and says no relief shall be granted the minority? Will these gentlemen who nearly, very, very nearly, indeed, wrecked the Government in order to secure the promise of remedial legislation, be content to associate master General, and the Controller of Customs to fight it out amongst themselves.

They have had plenty of fighting amongst themselves, they had changes of fighting and quarrelling and kissing and making it up again. I do not know how far the process of making it up has gone, or whether the reunion is so firm that nothing can break it. I do not know whether the love that exists between the remedial legislation Ministers, and the anti-remedial legislation Ministers is such as will carry them over all the vicissitudes of fortune that may occur between now and next session. I do say, this is one blot upon their record as a Government which they can avoid. They can see that the Government is unanimous on this vital question of their policy, or if not, they must submit to know that they have earned the contempt of the country.

Mr. DEVLIN. I am not going to discuss at any length the matter which has been brought under the notice of the House by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), but I think it is well at all events, in justice to gentlemen of high position, and of high character who have been traduced in a most outrageous manner in this House, that a defence should be made, even if it be short, of the position which they took. It is especially important that the attention of the Government should be called in a particular manner to a declaration which was made by a member of the Government on the floor of this House yesterday evening. I am not going to refer, even on the motion of adjournment, to a previous debate, but I am going to quote words which were spoken in the city of Ottawa by the Controller of floor of this House yesterday afternoon. A charge was made by the Controller of Customs against his lordship the Bishop of Nicolet, and that charge was made in the That charge was repeated on the floor of this House again yesterday, and the man making that charge spoke as a member of the Government of Canada. After referring to the part which the Bishop of Nicolet took in certain negotiations, the Controller of Customs proceeded to say:

This deliberate attempt to influence a judicial decision would be characterized in ordinary cases as an attempt to get at the jury, and is very properly an indictable offence. Such methods Such methods are not only reprehensible, but they are dangerous, as they tend to cloud with doubt the decisions of our highest tribunals, while at the same time the publication of the facts by the Bishop of Nicolet reveals the startling truth that the ecclesiastics of this church deem it both wise and just to resort to practices which the common law of Canada not only forbids, but punishes.

I would like to know if the Government en-Mr. Casey.

he will oppose this policy? I leave it for dorses the language uttered yesterday after-the Minister of Public Works and the Post-noon by a member of the Government. I noon by a member of the Government. I would like to know if the Controller of Customs, speaking here yesterday, when he repeated the statement he made on the 12th July last, spoke the sentiments of the Government of Canada. I think the matter is of sufficient importance to be brought thus publicly before the attention of the Government. My intention is to offer a defence by quoting an article which appeared in the daily Nor'wester on Wednesday, 26th June, 1895, and having reference to the same question. Dr. Grant, it will be understood, referred to the same subject, and the article says:

> We might suggest to Principal Grant, whose usual clear-headedness has failed him on this occasion, that before hastening off to the Colonial Minister or to Rome in his indignation, he will do better first to discipline a dignitary of his own church. A prefessor of Manitoba College. Dr. Bryce, has put himself very much in evidence in this school matter, and is doubtless, therefore, well known to the Principal. At every meeting of the synod for four or five years past he has been forward with resolutions on the subject, and which were not by any means as oil on the troubled waters. Two years ago he advanced as a reason why a resolution he had introduced should pass, that a fermer kindred one had been transmitted to the Privy Council, and that no doubt it had its effect in influencing the judgment of that tribunal against the Catholic contention that the legislation of 1890 was unconstitutional.

Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly sure that nobody is aware that any Catholic in this country, in this House, ever took objection to the position assumed by the Rev. Dr. Bryce, or that we ever said that he subverted the laws of the land, that he was guilty of an indictable offence, or that we ever traduced him in any possible way, especially in such language as those heads Customs, and which were repeated on the of our own church were traduced by the Controller of Customs, a member of this Government. And, after all, what was the great crime charged against the Bishop of Nicolet: The article goes on to say:

> Here was a deliberate and open acknowledgment of what Principal Grant would call "a deliberate attempt to subvert justice." By wigging Bishop Gravel for a perfectly innocent act, innocent at least in comparison with this, why not turn his attention to the Rev. Dr. Bryce?

> And why does not the Controller of Customs turn his attention to Dr. Bryce?

> Our own opinion is, that the transmission of that resolution for the purpose stated was an exceedingly improper act, and that the acknowledgment of it was evidence of an indelicacy that comes of callousness. But we are sometimes in doubt of our own judgment in the matter, when we remember that the Chief Justice of Manitoba was present at the synod at which the statement was made, and there is no report that he administered a rebuke to the over-zealous Doctor who thus boasted of his "deliberate attempt to subvert justice." For we take it that His Lordship has a full appreciation of the respect due to the courts, and is so jealously mindful of it that he would not permit any religious rivalries or animosities to stand between him and his duty on an occasion of that kind. However, one thing seems clear: If to remind a Colonial Minister of a certain historical fact is "a deliberate attempt to subvert justice," it is not less so to transmit to the Privy Council a violent resolution which is acknowledged to have been sent for the purpose of influencing its judgment. And we would like be done from Rome if the other is permitted to a any promise was made. If I correctly under-Presbyterian synod of Manitoba.

That is the defence made of the act of his lordship the Bishop of Nicolet. Mr. Speak-ed er, the Controller of Customs was not sat-that province desired to have in the governisfied to make his charge against the Bishop of Nicolet, but he included in that charge dian and Catholic minority; that he was these statements, also:

The ecclesiastics of this church deem it both: common law of Canada not only forbids, but punishes.

I question if there ever was in this House of Commons such an insult hurled against the Roman Catholic bishops of Canada, as the one contained in this sentence, uttered by the Controller of Customs a week ago, and repeated on the floor of this House yesterday. I consider that it is of far more importance than even the matter brought under the special notice of the House by the hon, member for South Oxford. He not only insults the Bishop of Nicolet in this House, composed as it is of Protestant and Catholic members—Catholic members who have always been careful to respect feelings of their Protestant colleagues, and who have never been known in this House or out of it to utter one disrespectful word towards a minister of a Protestant church, but who have been careful in all their dealings with them to respect them in every possible way. And they have to stand insults of this kind in this House, coming from a man whose position is high, and whose salary is paid by Catholics as well as by Protestants. It is an outrage, Sir, one of the worst ever perpetrated in this House; and I avail myself of this opportunity, not as a Catholic, but as a member of House of Commons and as a citizen of Canada, to protest against this insult offered to men whose character is high, far higher than that of the Controller of Customs; whose aim is high, far higher than that of the Controller of Customs: whose position is noble, far nobler than that of the Controller of Customs. Was he satisfied to stop there, Mr. Speaker? Was he satisfied to hurl his insults against this bishop and against the living colleagues of this bishop? No. Sir: he could not be satisfied with insulting the great living Roman Catholics of Canada. He had to go to the dead, and traduce the late Archbishop Taché. said distinctly yesterday that the late Archbishop of Manitoba was a party to a corrupt bargain. Sir, I resent this; I deny this: I want to know what the corrupt bargain was. In this connection the hon, gentleman charges corruption against Mr. Greenway. Mr. Greenway, I have no doubt, is well able to defend himself; but he especially charges corruption against the late Archbishop of Manitoba. As a result of the negotiations which then took place, what did the late Archbishop of Manitoba receive, and what Principal Grant to tell us why the one may not promise did he make? I am not aware that stand what occurred on that occasion, it was this-that a government was being formfor that province, that the premier of ment a representative of the French Canaanxious to have one who would be acceptable to that minority and an honour and wise and just to resort to practices which the he asked the opinion of the late archbishop. credit to it; and that, in this connection, through his vicar-general, of Mr. James Prendergast, who was afterwards taken into the cabinet. Where is the corruption in this? I rose for the purpose of protesting against these insinuations, hurled across the floor by the Controller of Customs, against the living and against the dead. He could not content himself with insulting those who are able to defend themselves, but he had to go even to the grave and insult one who commanded the respect of those who differed from him, as he commanded the esteem and the love of those who belong to the church of which he was such a bright ornament. Sir, I could not let the session close without calling attention to these subjects. I have been careful, in all the debates that have taken place-perhaps angry debates at times-not to say anything that could be hurtful to any hon, member. I have sat day after day during the last week and listened to charges which I knew were unfounded in fact, and I still said not one word, because I was desirous of not bringing even the slightest dissension into the matter or of increasing the trouble which actually exists. There is no doubt about my own feelings on the question which has formed the basis of so much discussion in the House during the last few days. My sympathies have ever been with those who are oppressed-with the cause of the minority who have the written constitution of the land on their side. That is the position 1 have maintained ever since I have been in this House, and it will continue to be my position no matter what the consequences may be; it is the position to which I will cling to the end. But. Sir, I do not wish even to take part in this debate, for the reason that I do not know how the question stands; I did not know in whom to place faith. whether in the Controller of Customs, who said we were to have nothing, or in the other members of the Government, who said that we were to have relief. I thought it better to remain quiet and see what we will have; but I could not in silence listen to insults hurled against those whom I hon-

Mr. MARTIN. I have a few observations to offer to the House with regard to the statement made by the Controller of Customs in justification of his remaining in this Government while he disagrees with its The hon. Minister of announced policy. Justice stated that it was the general opinion of most of these who had engaged in this debate that in all probability a settlement would be obtained from the province of Manitoba which would obviate any necessity of this Parliament legislating on the subject. Now, Sir, I cannot allow that statement to pass unchallenged. I have failed to hear from any gentleman who has interposed in the debates in this House on this question. any reason whatever for the hope that a satisfactory settlement would be obtained between now and the first Thursday in January from the province of Manitoba. 134 fact, I think it is clear, beyond the necessity of argument, that there is no hope whatever of any such consummation. The statement of the policy of the Government is that unless the province of Manitoba agrees to a compromise upon the lines of the reorder, at a session to commedial Thursday in mence here on the first January, a Bill based on the remedial order will be introduced and pressed through this House by the Government. What suggestion has been made which would justify even the shadow of the hope that the province of Manitoba intended to make any such compromise. The action of the Government of that province has been in that matter most deliberate. They have had plenty of time to consider the matter, they have considered it fully, and have given to the Government of Canada, and to this House their deliberate answer to the remedial order. They have deliberately stated that they cannot take the responsibility of carrying out the terms of the remedial order What possible suggestion therefore has been put forward that the Government of Manitoba might be induced, by any negotiations proceeding from this Government, to reconsider that answer? There has been. in my opinion, no such suggestion; and I am very much mistaken indeed if the Government of Manitoba and the people whom that Government represent will recede in the slightest degree from the position they have taken. It is not proposed to commence the negotiations with Manitoba or an investigation of this subject apart from the remedial order. There can, I think, be no doubt upon that point, judging by the original statement made to the House by the hon. Finance Minister. If there were any doubt as to what the nature of the renewed negotiations were to be, the question put to the Minister of Finance by the hon.

member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Girouard). and the answer received by him places that beyond all controversy. It is proposed, in the face of the plain, distinct and explicit refusal of the Manitoba legislature to carry our the terms of the remedial order, to reopen negotiations with that province with the view of obtaining the reversal of that decision. If there was, as the hon, Minister of Justice says, in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite, any hope, however slight, of any such consummation as that, I think that it is only fair for me to say that there is no possible justification for such hope. In the argument put forward by one of the speakers, as some justification for that hope, was the letter written by myself in connection with this matter. Now. I stand by everything I said in that letter. and I may say that I believe if this Government, instead of adopting the course they did, instead of forcing on, against the protest of Manitoba, the hearing of this case before the Privy Council and pressing on the remedial order which, in its terms, orders Manitoba to restore, in every respect, the system of schools as they were prior to 1890—if, instead of adopting that course, they had proceeded then to negotiate with Manitoba. I believe that the province of Manitoba would have been prepared to go into this question and to give to the mi-nority such a measure of relief, if the minority were prepared to be reasonable in their demands, as would have been satisfactory to the Dominion at large. Unfortunately the Government did not think fit to adopt that course, but took the opposite course, and they passed the remedial order. which they are authorized to pass by section 22 of the Manitoba Act, as interpreted by the Privy Council. They took their stand. and under these circumstances it became necessary for Manitoba to take its stand, which Manitoba did; and I am sure that the Government of Manitoba will not be allowed-even should it desire to do so, which I am sure it does not-by the people of Manitoba in any way to recede from that stand. On the other hand, as I stated in my letter, if the statement made by the Minister of Public Works in the authorized interview to which I referred in that letter. that all the minority in Manitoba desired was an opportunity to give such religious instruction in the schools as they thought proper, without interfering in any degree. with the School Act of 1890, so far as that School Act made changes in the school law of Manitoba and made the schools of that province efficient and subject to Government inspection and in every way public and national schools-if that be the desire of the minority, if the Minister of Public Works rightly expressed the views of the minority, then I undertook in that letter to state, that, so far as I was concerned, I thought there was justice in their claim. As I stated in that letter, I am one of those is presenting was relevant to the subject opposed to any religious exercises or instruc- before the House, but I confess I have not tion whatever in the public schools. I have been constantly of that opinion from the first, and I am still of that opinion. The province of Manitoba, however, has not adopted that course, but established public national schools, which are declared by the statute to be non-sectarian, but into which they allow a certain, amount of religious instruction to be introduced. The introduction of such religious instruction as is provided in that Act is satisfactory, to a certain extent, to the Protestants of that province. It is not fully satisfactory even to the Protestants of that province. There are many there who think that a great deal more religious instruction should be had in those schools. The Roman Catholics agree with the Protestants who are not satisfied with the modicum of religious instruction which is allowed by that statute. Under these circumstances, I expressed in my letter the belief that the imposition of such an amount of religious instruction or such a course of religious instruction as only satisfactory 21:W to a part the community was rank tyranny. In that view I could not justify the refusal of the legislature of Manitoba to extend these religious exercises, so that religious instruction to such an extent as to be satisfactory to any of the component parts of the population of Manitoba might be given. And I believe that if this Government, instead of proposing as they have done to negotiate with Manitoba on the terms of the remedial order with a view to that province legislating on the terms of that order, were, even now, to take the course they should have taken in the beginning-repeal the remedial order and then apply to Manitoba to do justice in the premises.—I believe that the people of Manitoba would respond to that appeal and would do justice under the circumstances. It must be remembered, and I think it is understood and appreciated by those in this House who have the cause of the minority in Manitoba at heart, that no legislation which may be passed by this Parliament with a view to restoring separate schools in Manitoba will be effectual unless and until the legislature of Manitoba concurs in and co-operates with that legislation. That being so, I think it will be ad- here to that answer in every respect. mitted by those who advocate justice to the minority of Manitoba that it would be very much preferable if. instead of legislation being passed in this House forcing Manitoba; in this matter, the legislation should come from the legislature of Manitoba, without whose co-operation such legislation passed in this House, would, as I have said, be with-And the legislature of Manitoba in their answer to the demands of the remedial order were careful to draw attention to the fact-

Mr. SPEAKER. I have been trying to discover how the argument the hon. gentleman succeeded.

Mr. MARTIN. The matter was introduced by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think not. The subject before the House is the action of the Controller of Customs remaining in the Government while at variance with the policy of the Government, and that was a perfectly legitimate subject of discussion.

Mr. MARTIN. As I understood the Minister of Justice, he stated that one reason that would justify the Controller of Customs in remaining in his position was that there was every prospect of this question being settled by the action of Manitoba before the second Thursday in January.

Mr. SPEAKER. So long as the member for Winnipeg confined himself to that branch of the question. I did not interfere. But the hon, gentleman, I think, is bringing up the whole question of the Manitoba schools.

Mr. MARTIN. If I have gone further than an attempt to show how impossible it is to hope for action from Manitoba. I certainly have gone beyond what I intended. I simply started out to show that, looking at the answer that Manitoba gave to the remedial order, and also from my own views as to the state of public opinion in Manitoba, there could be no possible hope of the Manitoba Government or legislature departing or receding in the slightest degree from the position they had taken in that answer. That answer clearly, explicitly tinctly refuses to obey the terms of the 1emedial order. It makes the proposal that the Government should make investigation into the state of educational affairs there. That the Government have refused to do. Then it winds up with a reference to a suggestion that has been made that moneys apart from public moneys had been taken. practically confiscated, by the Government, and it makes the offer that the Government will be prepared at any time to refund any money so taken. These are the salient points of the answer; and, as I have said before, I am satisfied that the people of Manitoba will insist that their government shall ad-

Mr. McCARTHY. I had not thought well hitherto to say anything in this discussion because I thought it was rather understood from the observations of the Minister of Justice that he had merely, as he said, interposed in the debate and so that the leader of the House and the representative of the Prime Minister would be heard from and that we should have a definite statement from that hon. gentleman of the views of the Gov-ernment upon this very important constitutional question. I regret that there has been a divergence from the question under discussion. And in saying that I do not refer to the speech made by my hon, friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), because it appears to me that it was exceedingly pertinent to this discussion to point out that there would be no reasonable hope, no hope of any kind, that before January next there would be any recantation-because I think we may call it that—on the part of the province of Manitoba, and therefore there is the more importance to be attached to the expressed hostility of the Controller Customs to the policy of the Government. I regret that the hon, gentleman from the county of Ottawa (Mr. Devlin) introduced a matter which did not appear to me to be in the slightest degree relevant to this discussion and as to which I have views which perhaps different from his, but views very strong, as to the propriety of the action which the Bishop of Nicolet took and which he himself reports he took with reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. But, Sir, I will refrain now from following that hon, gentleman, and I merely make the observation I have made in order to let it be distinctly understood that I do not accept the views that were put forward by that hon, gentleman in defence of his lordship the Bishop of Nicolet, nor, if the facts are correctly reported, would I have anything more to say in favour of the course ascribed to Dr. Bryce. Now, the question before the House is a new question here. and necessarily so, because we have had these junior officers of the Administration only for a few years past. But this question, it does appear to me, is one consideration. of very careful serving because upon the line that is now adopted. and the precedent that is now established. we would be announcing the constitutional rule that ought to prevail in cases of this kind. There must be some matters that are reasonably plain according to English precedent. It does appear to be clear that the junior officials, the under-secretaries. the Attorney General. &c., the gentlemen who are not in the Cabinet, are not responsible for the views of the Administration. as to which, of course, they have never been consulted, and until those views are brought to the notice of Parliament, and it becomes necessary for the subordinate officials to take some parliamentary action, they may maintain their position in the Administration without injury to the public service, because that, after all, is the question to be considered. It is a question as to whether the service which the Administration, as the advisers of His Excellency the Governor General, has to perform, is injured, or affected, or influenced by such a divergence of opinion as we now know to exist between the Cabinet officers and one of the Controllers who is not of that body. I say it is plain that up to that time the junior official, simply because he might disapprove of the policy, is not bound, it is a matter of quired, according to constitutional usage. to resign his position; and, of course, the Prime Minister can find no fault with him because he is not supposed to know that he entertains that different view. But it is equally clear that when the matter becomes necessary to be dealt with in Parliament, and when the official has to take some parliamentary stand one way or the other, he cannot be permitted on the floor of Parliament to oppose the policy or the measure, or the acts of the Government, although not a member of the Cabinet. Now, I take this illustration that the hon, member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) brought to our notice in the speech he delivered this afternoon, and I think that hon, gentleman and the House will see at once the distinction, a distinction which more clearly points out that rule in the case of Mr. Baines, the President of the Poor Law Board, who, in the discussion in Parliament, differed from his colleagues, and voted against the Government measure for the repeal of the navigation laws. The Prime Minister explained that so far as that gentleman was concerned, it was an open question, and the Prime Minister had been willing to accept him as a subordinate official upon the distinct understanding that he might take that ground. Well, we know there may be open questions. There might be a question in which Cabinet Ministers might differ, and which the Cabinet might wish themselves to be treated as an open question, and in which there would not necessarily be unity, even among the members of the Cabinet. But there are questions and questions; and while, in a minor matter, or even in a matter of some importance, we could understand a subordinate member of the Administration differing, and even giving expression to that difference of opinion, as to the policy proposed by his colleagues, what is to be said on a question so important as this is admitted to be? I will not adopt the extravagant language of the Minister of Justice: I think rather that it is not the most important question that has been before us. But it is an important question, it is a question deemed by the Government of such moment that it is necessary to call a sixth session of this Parliament. It has been deemed by some members of the Administration of such moment that they retired from office because the negotiation with Manitoba was to anticipate the action of the Administration. If you look at the statement made by Mr. Angers, and the statement we have here, you will realize how important the most trifling difference on this question appears to have been to the members of the Cabinet itself. Mr. Angers resigned because the Cabinet insisted that before the next session of Parliament, negotiations should take place with the province of Manitoba, and Mr. Angers said: Let us announce that we will legislate, agreeing that the legislataste on his part altogether. he is not re- tion might be postponed until next session;

let that announcement be communicated to Manitoba, and if Manitoba thinks fit to act, let her make the advance, and then we will not be embarrassed by any such condition as is proposed in the resolution of Council which was adopted by the majority. I refer to that merely to show how important this question is. Now, I desire this to be treated simply as a constitutional question, and one of considerable importance. as it appears to me, being the first of the kind we have ever had. I wish therefore to reiterate the argument of the hon, gentleman that there is no reasonable hope, and no expectation of the province of Manitoba recanting what the legislature of that province did in the month of June last. But I draw attention to this consideration, and I invite the attention of the leader of the House to it: Is this not a question upon: which, among the Cabinet, and among the followers behind them, there is a very strong feeling, and a very great difference of opinion? Is it not a matter in which it is important that the Government should educate public opinion if they hope or expect in another possible session, to carry this remedial legislation? If that be sc. is it proper or right that a member of that Cabinet should stand up at a great public meeting and denounce this policy in unmeasured and emphatic terms as one that could never be acceptable to the people of this country?

Mr. HUGHES. He did it because you were not there to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. A locum tenens.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to know he expressed my views, as he did very satisfactorily, and that it was not necessary for me to speak. I am drawing attention to this, that if that be so, according to our idea of administrative unity, then the majority of the members of this Cabinet, according to the constitution and the law. may pass this remedial Bill, while on the same platform the Controller is sitting, and would rise up and denounce that policy and point out that in the best interests of the country, it could not be adopted. Now, there is no doubt about what the Controller said. I understand he repeated it verbatim, or in substance, here yesterday evening, but I did not hear it, and I have not had an opportunity of consulting the "Hansard" allowed to speak as the read it. Here is what he said at this spoken—the author says: meeting of the 12th July:

Now, for my own part, having recited the circumstances with which we are all now so very familiar, and I speak under a full sense of the responsibility of my utterances. I have to say frankly and firmly, that I favour the maintenance of a non-sectarian school system in Manitoba, and that, if our constitution permitted it, I would advocate with the same fervour a similar system throughout the Dominion.

I propose, however, to await events rather than to anticipate those which may never occur. Nor do I intend to be led or trapped into precipitate action upon the subject by any device, no matter from what quarter it may come. Our duty, it seems to me, is to adhere resolutely to the main principles,———

Here is what he invites the whole oudience to adopt with him and the people of Canada to back him up in:

-to keep them always in view and swerve neither to the right hand nor to the left.

What main principles are dealt with there? The principle he believes in is that there shall be no separate schools in this part of the Dominion, and that where we have the power, as we have in Manitoba, separate schools shall not be imposed there. Surely that is not what is meant by this language. We are not to go either to the right hand nor to the left with respect to this guiding principle of the hon, gentleman. He proceeded:

And in this position I trust I shall not only have the approbation of yourselves, but the support of the great majority of the people of Canada.

So the Controller, speaking at a public meeting, speaking in a position of great authority and influence, invited the members of the body to which he belongs and the people of Canada with them, to stand by him against the imposition of separate schools on Manitoba, and against the expressed policy of the Government that in January next, under possible circumstances, they will introduce a Bill to impose separate schools on that province. Surely that is a scandal, the equal of which we have not on record as existing between one member of the Administration and another. I desire to eliminate all questions except the one abstract constitutional point, whether or not on the leading question of policybecause I think at this moment I may properly so describe it, of the Government it can be tolerated that one of the members of the Administration is to be in a position to stump the country and arouse public opinion against the policy of the Cabinet of which he is a junior member. Take the instance we have here. The general principle is very clearly laid down by Todd. After speaking as to what is not now in question, that the Cabinet must be unitedand no one will contend that any one member of the Administration could be allowed to speak as the Controller has

The responsibility of a minister who has no seat in the cabinet is less comprehensive, although in its degree no less complete. Such a one is required to render active assistance in sustaining the policy of the government.

This is what the Controller of Customs is openly and properly, from my point of view—but that is not a question involved here—declaring that he will do his best to oppose, and when the time comes for that action, he will be found in his place in Parliament offering it every opposition. That is the general rule, and some of the cases have been cited, including one in 1829 where Sir Charles Wetherall opposed the Roman Catholic Bill brought in as a Government measure, and resigned office, and Sir James Scarlett was appointed in his place. Not only was the statement to which I have referred, made by the Controller on 12th July last, not only was that the position in which matters stood on that date. but we have been engaged in a debate in this House for two days in which this policy has been actually challenged, and as to which the Controller has expressed his positive dissent and disagreement. Under these circumstances, I submit it is a matter of such importance that the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was well guided in submitting it for our consideration, and I hope it will be dealt with by the House irrespective of party considerations, and simply and solely as to the effect it may have upon the future relationship between subordinate officers of the Cabinet and the Cabinet itself.

Mr. DICKEY. I am glad for some reasons that the hon, member for Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) thought it proper to bring this question before the House, because it gave those hon, gentlemen on his own side of the House who had not an opportunity yesterday, owing to party discipline, to ventilate their opinion on the Manitoba school question, and give us the benefit of the advice they have to offer, although it comes a little late in the day. I do not know whether the hon, gentleman entered into a conspiracy against the hon. member for Bothwell by which that hon. gentleman should have an opportunity of delivering a speech on constitutional law: but, at all events, the effect of his action has been that the last speech on constitutional law, which I thought yesterday the hon, member for Bothwell was anxious to get rid of, was presented to the House this afternoon. I regret exceedingly, to speak more seriously, that the hon. gentleman who has introduced this matter before the House which, he says, is a matter of serious constitutional import, should not have thought it better to have taken measures to have a more intelligent discussion of it on this side of the House, because the hon, gentleman is quite aware that while he has, no doubt. investigated the matter, and taken action to inform himself on the law and practice, it is quite impossible to expect members of the Administration, after such a run of hard work as we have had lately, to be prepared to deal with a matter like this, and to consider it off-hand, except upon the most general principles. I may say, frankly, that so far give a definite opinion on the exact status | Some of them refused to vote for the amend-

I do not know whether that was a correct definition or not, but, assuming it to be so. I presume it would result in this, that the Controllers could not remain in office if they differed with the Government in the administration of affairs in their own departments.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is not what I desired to put to the House.

Mr. DICKEY. I understood the hon. gentleman to suggest that as one test.

Mr. McCARTHY. That would be a very flagrant case, if it was a matter connected with the Customs Department. My point is this: This policy has been enunciated in the name and on behalf of the Crown. This policy, it is the duty of the servants of the Crown, the Administration and its members, by every means in their power, to implement, and that where it becomes of sufficient importance, as in this case, it requires united action of the Cabinet and of the members of the Administration. is the test which ought to be applied.

Mr. DICKEY. That, the hon, gentleman will see, is another branch. But he will grant me that the first instance I gave is a good one: that the difference of opinion between the Controller and the Administration as to the conduct of his own department would be a fatal case. Another, I should say would be, a radical difference between his opinion, and the opinion of the Government as to the general administration of affairs; and for this reason, that there cannot be confidence between the Administration and a subordinate officer with reference to the administration of the department, if there was a loss of confidence upon the general policy of the Government. I say frankly that I am not prepared to give an opinion as to the particular responsibility on a question like this. Although this is an important question, it is not the general policy of the Government as we have understood it in this country. It is important, but it is a particular question which has arisen within the last two months. Now, Sir, the Government has offered a policy which contains two branches. In the first place, negotiation with the province of Manitoba, and in the second place, in the event of that failing, the introduction of legislation. It is quite certain that hon. gentlemen on his side of the House—the only class of gentlemen in the House who felt at liberty yesterday to express any opinion upon this particular point-did as a matter of fact consider as I am concerned, I am not prepared to this a policy composed of two branches.

ment of the hon, member for Sincoe (Mr. House would have been better informed McCarthy) for the very reason that they approved, and approved strongly, of a part of the Government policy. At the worst, you have this: That the Controller of Customs has expressed an opinion adverse to a part of the Government policy upon a question which is not the general policy of the Government. But, Sir, as I understand the matter, the hon, the Controller of Customs did not express any opinion of the sort at all. The hon, Controller expressed here as elsewhere his own conviction against separate schools as a principle. Now, Sir. I do not think that that would be a matter of vital importance. I speak of course with great reservation, not having considered the question. It appears that a subordinate officer of the Administration holds general views which do not accord with the Government of an incidental policy, and it does not strike me that that is a matter that would cause any very serious consequences on the part of the Controller. The only case that I am aware of bearing on the matter at all-and it is one handed me by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin)—is the ease of Mr. Bright, who wrote a letter to be used at a public meeting in Bermingham attacking very violently the constitution of the House of Lords in England—a matter in direct contravention of the policy of the Government of which he was a member. That was brought up in the House, and in "Hansard" of June 17th, 1869, the matter was discussed by Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Gladstone said: That although that did not represent the views of the Government, he had no objection whatever to any colleague of his expressing his opinion upon an abstract principle with reference to the House of Lords or any other matter. Further than that, it does not seem to me that the Controller of Customs has gone. However, I speak with reserve, and I claim the right to speak with reserve and to retain to my-Mr. LAURIER. I would like to know self further action, because the hon, member from the hon, gentleman if he can now for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) did not give me an opportunity of looking into the question before he brought it up. and therefore, I am not able at present to give a decided opinion upon it. I think the hon, member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was wrong, with reference to the Baines I think that if Mr. Baines' case applied to this, that there would not be any difficulty whatever about it. but I do not think that the fact that Mr. Baines stipu-lated that it should be an open question is a relevant fact at present. 1 believe, speaking entirely from general impression, that the rule has changed since Mr. Baines' case was decided, and that the principles of responsibility are stricter now than they were then, and that that case would have been otherwise held if it had arisen at a later day. Taking the whole question, although it is a matter fairly for discussion. I think upon it, if the hon, gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) had been good enough to observe the ordinary practice and give the Administration time to inform themselves upon the question. But, looking upon the matter as I have viewed it. I do not think it is serious enough to call for such peremptory action as the hon, gentleman invites, to adjourn the House. Therefore, I hope that the hon, gentleman will withdraw motion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As it is evident my hon, friend wants a good deal of time to consider, I have no objection to withdraw the motion. I may observe with respect to this question of notice, that had it been a vote of want of confidence I would have given notice. Hon, gentlemen are aware that at this stage of the session. I had no choice and I had to bring it up now or practically not at all.

Some hon, MEMBERS, Hear, hear, Motion withdrawn.

PROROGATION.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, probably it would be in line with the thoughts of most of the members on both sides of the House, if we were to come to a conclusion, approximate at least, as to the time of prorogation. Speaking for this side of the House, and with regard to the business that we have to get through with, I can say that I see no reason why, if we have two sessions a day, as I suppose my hon, friend will agree to now, we should not do all the business that this House has to transact to-day and to-morrow, and be able to prorogue on Saturday or at the If my hon, friend furthest on Monday. agrees to that, I would like to know.

make an announcement with regard to the Act respecting the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. That Bill, I think, will go on, but I want to say, prior to its introduction and to give information to the House as to something of its importance, that it is not a Bill which makes any money grant or anything of the kind. It is simply a little change in a contract which already exists with reference to the transport subsidy which is now under contract. I have not consulted my hon, friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and I do not know whether it would meet with his approval or not, but if he has no objection, I think we will take up the Superannuation Bill at the next session of Parliament and discuss it when there is more time, and when that voluminous return he has asked will be at hand. I believe it is the intention of my hon, colit would have been discussed better, and the league not to proceed with the Salmon estopped from legislation until it is settled.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon, friend will, I am sure, realize that it is a little awkward for me to give any intimation in regard to the statement he has made until the new measure is introduced, and until we see whether it contains any new feature. I suppose we are not likely to engage in any great amount of discussion; and, such being the case, I do not see why prorogation should not take place at the time the hon, gentleman mentions. I may say that we, on this side, had several questions of great moment and great interest to bring up, but as we have now reached the dog-days, and there is no great reason to remain longer, we shall have to postpone these matters until we come here again on the 4th of January.

The hon. Finance McMULLEN. Minister, in announcing the withdrawal of the Bill on the superannuation question. was good enough to make reference to me. As that Bill is to stand over till next session, I hope he will then introduce a measure of the character of the one I proposed this session. I think he will find that the return brought down will show a condition of things worse than was generally supposed.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to say a word with regard to the Bill respecting the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company. I have looked at the statute now on our books, and it seems to me that we could not have properly understood its purport when we assented to it. It enables the Crown to grant the sum of $80,000 a year for twenty years, and it makes no provision that the services which are to be rendered for that shall be performed. Now, if there is to be any change in that Act, this feature of it may require a great deal of consideration. As the law now stands, the $80,000 can be granted to the company, and they can assign it to secure the interest on their bonds. While the $80,000 is in consideration of the postal services, whether they are performed or not, that sum will have to be paid for twenty years. We have heard it rumoured that the proposal is to divide the $80,000, and to give one-half of it for one purpose, and the other half for another purpose. Certainly it will require a great deal of consideration whether we ought not to amend instead of enlarging the scope of that legislation.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, member for North Simcoe partly anticipated what I desired to say. I would add my objection to the action of the Government in bringing down a measure, apparently of great importance, within a few hours of prorogation. The notice of the introduction of this Bill has been upon the Order paper since the 8th of July: no doubt the matter involved has been before the attention of the Govern-

Fisheries Bill, owing to the question being ment since the commencement of this sesbefore the courts. He feels that he is sion, and I submit whether it is in the public interest, or fair to the members of this House, that legislation of this kind should be introduced in the last moments of the session. I would remind the Minister of Finance that this is not the first time that he has offended in this regard. Legislation introduced now goes through without any fair criticism. Several times we have had to call attention to this practice, and while we cannot tie the hands of the Government, I think the time will arrive when we shall have to adopt some rule to prevent them putting through shady transactions when there are practically no members of The members have Parliament present. been going away to-day in pairs; to-morrow there will scarcely be a quorum present, and the Minister has only given us in a fragmentary way an idea of what this Bill will contain. The Minister of Railways is absent. Surely we ought to know what the Bill will contain. It is, I am told, really incorporating a new company, abandoning the old Hudson Bay Railway, and rendering it unnecessary to start at the end of the 40 miles already constructed-in fact. granting aid to a new enterprise, called by the name of the old line, but in fact having no relation to it. I submit that this is not fair on the part of the Government.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask whether any of the liens or debts of the present Hudson Bay Railway Company will be placed in jeopardy by any change proposed to be made by this new Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I may say to my hon. friend that I have not drawn the Bill. It is not in my department. I did not intend to give an exposé of its contents. When the Bill is introduced, then will be the time to ask for these particulars.

Mr. MULOCK. When will it be introduced?

Mr. FOSTER. I think to-night.

Mr. LAURIER. I wish to state, for my part, that while willing to assist in reaching prorogation at the time proposed, I guarded myself by pointing out to the hon. gentleman that if the Bill proposed any new legislation or any important departure, it would be very difficult to have prorogation at the time suggested.

Mr. FOSTER. I absolve the hon. gentleman on that score. He guarded himself, of course. I do not think he will find the Bill very dreadful.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved:

THE CRIMINAL CODE.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 51) further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. propose, if the committee is willing, to drop the two clauses that stood over for further; consideration, and which I may call the contentious clauses of this Bill. The House will remember that we went through the practically non-contentious clauses, those dealing largely with procedure. Then we dealt with the Sunday observance section. and then two clauses stood over, one relating to contractors subscribing to elections, and the other to combines-striking out the word "unduly" in the present Act. hon, member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) took a great deal of interest in these two clauses, upon which there was considerable difference of opinion. I explained the case to that hon, gentleman, and I think he will be satisfied to have the clause stand over, for it relates to elections, and a full opportunity will be given for the consideration of the clause at the next session of the House, the time for which is fixed. As to the clause relating to combines, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) had a Bill on this subject, which was referred to the special committee on the Criminal Code enactments. That clause will cause a great deal of discussion, and, considering the late period of the session, I propose to drop that also. With the permission of the committee, I would like to go back to section 197, which was debated, in order to add some words so as to make it clear that the law, as it stands, does not apply to newspaper establishments in connection with the publi-It is not the object of the cation of bets. code to affect newspapers publishing the re-The words have been sults of betting. carefully considered, and I propose to change the clause so as to make it read as follows. This will prevent any of the newspaper establishments being affected, as it is not intended that that should be done:-

Now, Mr. Chairman, the leader of the House had an understanding with the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), which I was not aware of when this Order was called, that we should not take up this Bill until to-night. So I will move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, so that the hon. gentleman may have the opportunity of bringing up the matter he desires to have discussed.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I understood that the Minister of Justice intimated that hon. he would consider a suggestion made before the special committee by myself, for the amendment of clause 785. The last time this matter came before the House I wanted to urge the consideration of this matter, but the hon. Minister told me I would have another opportunity.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Now, this court be must presided over. either a judge of the Superior Court, by This court by two justices of the peace. has to be established by proclamation, but it has never been done yet. In our district, we generally have a criminal term and a sitting of the court of Queen's Bench, every two years, or three years, according to the number of accused persons awaiting trial, as the Attorney General will not con-sent to call a jury except for very import-ant offences. The consequence is that parties are left in jail, or they are allowed to go out under bonds, these bonds being renewed every six months, for one or two years. After that term has expired, the offender is released on his personal bond, and if he is not tried at the next term, he is discharged altogether. This is a very unsatisfactory state of affairs, and the amendment which is proposed is simply the extension of that section 785 to the province of Quebec. I have asked the Minister of Justice what was the objection to adopting that legislation to the province of Quebec as well as to the province of Ontario, and I was told that this jurisdiction, granted to certain magistrates in Ontario, was given because they had that jurisdiction previous to the code; and, secondly, that they had special qualifications for the office. I think this second reason is really of no import-As to the statement that they had these powers before the code, that was a reason to continue the jurisdiction. do not see that it is a reason why it should not be extended to the province of Quebec. If it was good in Ontario before the code. and if it has been deemed to be good when this legislation was passed, why should it not be good for the province of Quebec. where it would be specially useful in all the rural districts? There is a court of general sessions of the peace in the cities of Montreal and Quebec, before which, without calling a criminal term, without calling a sitting of the court of Queen's Bench. we can try almost any offence, except murder and treason. This system ought to be established in the rural districts, and the legislation that is now asked for will have that effect. Why should it not work as well in Quebec as it does in Ontario? Will it be said that our district magistrates are not well qualified? The Minister of Justice stated that when the question was brought up, the committee took strong grounds against extending it to the province of Quebec, because somebody had said that the jurisdiction was given to magistrates in Ontario because they had special qualifications. I may tell the hon, gentleman that our district magistrates in the province of Quebec have been appointed with great care. They are bound to be advocates of at least five years practice.

sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me, though he has fairly reported my words in the committee. I did not desire to discriminate in the slightest degree between the respective officers. I could know nothing of them. But what I meant was that while we had carried forward the practice that had long obtained in Ontario, in giving extraordinary jurisdiction to certain minor judicial officers, the experience was not at all satisfactory. What I desired to point out was that instead of extending a system that was not altogether satisfactory, the question would have to be considered in the near future, of the abolition of that special jurisdiction in the case of Ontario. That is a single instance, and the only one, I think, in Canada, where these powers are vested in that class of officers. I did not desire to draw any comparison between the officers of Quebec and those in Ontario.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I merely want to point out to the hon. gentleman that these officers are appointed with a great deal of care, and they are bound to have certain qualifications. They have to be practicing lawyers for five years, and, in fact, I do not know of any, who have not been practicing law at least ten years before being appointed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All of them?

Mr. LAVERGNE. I think so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not know that.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I would not answer for the whole of them, but most of them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the law require that?

Mr. LAVERGNE. The law does not require more than five years' practice. What I say is that this court of general sessions of the peace has been established by the Revised Statutes of Quebec, and must be presided over, either by a judge of the Superior Court, or by two justices of the peace, and that statute comes into force by proclamation. These magistrates are far better qualified than any justice of the peace, they have the same jurisdiction two justices of the peace, in a great number of sit cases. and are better qualified to occupy that position than two justices of the peace would be. Then I suggest that without another statute, and under the terms of that Act, we can avoid the preliminary investigation, with the consent of the de-If the defendant wishes to be tried before these magistrates, I think we can avoid the expense and time of a pre-liminary investigation. We can also avoid in a great many cases, trials by jury, by accepting that legislation, although I must say that we have very few criminal cases in any of our rural districts. I have yet to hear of any good reason why that plan should not be adopted. I understand from the Minister of Justice that it works badly in Ontario. Well, I can tell him, from my knowledge of the qualification of these officers in our province, that I believe it would work perfectly in the province of Quebec, and it would work far better than if this court of general sessions of the peace were established by proclamation, and if it were presided over by two justices of the peace. For all these reasons I hope the Government will accept this view, and consent to this amendment, which I think would be of great benefit.

to Ontario. That was the only made. If any objections were made afterwards at another sitting, I was not present, and know nothing of them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The matter was up at another meeting of the committee, and the committee was unanimous in agreeing not to deal with the subject, on a memo, which I have now in my hand, and which I read to the committee.

Mr. LAVERGNE. The reasons given, I understand, were that the magistrates in Ontario were not well qualified to sit on these cases.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Perhaps as this is somewhat in the nature of a contentious section, about which there is a great deal of difference of opinion, we had better let it stand, that we may look into it more carefully and get further information as to the effect of extending that jurisdiction to Quebec. From the information have had. I have been inclined to look unfavourably upon it. The hon, gentleman presses it very strongly, and as I do not think there is a prospect of its becoming law this session, under the circumstances, perhaps the hon, gentleman would be content to let the matter stand.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I think this is the most important amendment in the Criminal Code which has been proposed. But it is simply a question of procedure, it is not a question that requires a great deal of consideration. I know that the hon, members for Quebec were not opposed to it; I know no hon. members from that province who are opposed to

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon, gentleman's argument be correctand I am not prepared to admit it is correct-instead of going on province by province, a clause will have to be prepared and considered by which this system will become uniform. I will make this undertaking, which perhaps will be satisfactory to the hon, gentleman, that I will communicate with the Attorney General during the recess, and probably we may decide on some uniform clause in substitution of the clause now standing in the code, which applies to Ontario only. The hon, gentleman may, perhaps, be willing to allow the matter to rest with that undertaking.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Hon. members coming from my province would not give an inaccurate opinion as to qualifications for magistrates and other matters. I have spoken to members of the committee from Quebec and I have found that they are not opposed to the proposition. Some hon, members may

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 51) further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

DAIRY PRODUCTS ACT, 1893.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 21) to amend the Dairy Products Act of 1893.

This, as the House Mr. MONTAGUE. knows, is a Bill introduced by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan). deals with the question of branding upon cheese and butter the month in which that cheese and butter is produced, the idea being to prevent any deterioration of the reputation of our butter in the British market by any attempt to substitute the butter of one month for the butter of another month. The Bill was discussed to a certain extent by some members of the House when it was introduced, and the hon. member for Glengarry made a speech in which he gave a good deal of information to the House as to his desires and intentions as expressed in the Bill, together with considerable information he had received from producers as well as purchasers with respect to the necessity of the measure. The hon, gentleman gave the House considerable information, and afterwards the Agricultural Committee took up the subject and sent the owners of cheese factories and others interested in such a Bill a circular asking them for their opinion on the Bill. The replies received to that circular were somewhat contradictory. Although the weight of evidence seemed to be in favour of some such proposal, there was sufficient evidence against it to apparently justify the Agricultural Committee in not reporting any particular decision to the House, so that instead of reporting any particular decision on the merits of the Bill or the desirability of its becoming law, they simply reported to the House the evidence. I have said that opinion is somewhat divided upon it. It is pointed out on the one side that it will save the character of our cheese or our butter in the English market from the result of the practice to which I have already alluded, that of selling summer cheese for fall cheese. On the other hand, it is pointed out by those opposed to such a Bill, that in many parts of the country the cheese produced in the summer months, and this particularly applies to that part of the country where pastures are green during the whole season, just as good milk, making just as good cheese, is produced in June, July and August as in September and October, and that the effect of the Bill would be to brand the cheese made from June and July milk as June and July cheese, that it would be classed as June and July cheese made where the pastures were not so good, and consequently there would be a depreciation in the value of that product which is really as good as the fall product. Such is the objection to the Bill made by those who have taken it into careful consideration. However, there is a good deal to be said on both sides of the question, which is one in which the dairymen of the country are very largely interested, and as the subject has not been very thoroughly discussed and as the Bill has not been long before the House, the Bill, with the consent of the House, was placed on the Government Orders in order that it might receive a more thorough discussion. No doubt some legislation of this kind would be advantageous to the dairy interests. We have placed the Bill before the House, for the purpose either of passing it now or placing the discussion before the country with the view of legislating on the subject at some future day.

Mr. McLENNAN. I have listened to the remarks made by the hon. Secretary of State in regard to this measure. It was discussed in the House some time ago as a public; Bill, and I may say that it has created more interest in the country than any other public Bill that has been before the House this session. The farmers, the manufacturers of cheese, and the sellers of cheese have all taken a great interest in it. Resolutions have been passed in its favour in various parts of the country. The hon. Secretary of State says the Committee on Agriculture has not reported upon it. understand that that committee has nothing to do with making a report upon this measure. I was present at that committee when the question came up, and it was understood that the matter would come before the Committee of the Whole House as a public Bill. There is no doubt that at the last meeting of this committee there was a majority in favour of this Bill, and as to opinions being divided in regard to it in the country, the facts, will show that opinions are not divided. I have here a statement of number replies the of which we obtained to an inquiry which was sent to the people chiefly interested in this product, and it shows that from the province of Quebec 430 replies were received, which only 11 were against the Bill, and I think I can show that these 11 were largely influenced by speculators who were interested in not having this measure carried out. From the province of Ontario 348 replies were received, of which only 53 were against the Bill. Out of 778 replies received from the two provinces, only 64 were against the Bill, or 8 per cent. Therefore it cannot be said that opinions are divided in reference to this measure. I may say that the Bill has been reprinted as proposed to be amended in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon, gentleman read it as reprinted?

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the hon, gentleman read the circular sent out to the manufacturers?

Mr. McLENNAN. I intend to do so. In the first Bill it was proposed to require Americans to brand cheese coming into this country; but it has been considered better not to interfere with the Americans further than is done by the legislation we have at present. The great objection raised against this Bill in the Agricultural Committee was that it included butter. It was said that butter lost flavour and depreciated in value immediately after it was made, and it was contended that if kept in cold storage it could be placed on the market in good condition. Consequently, the provision requiring butter to be branded with the date of manufacture has been taken out of the Bill, so that it now deals with cheese alone. As I have been asked to read the Bill as amended, it is as follows:-

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and con-

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman cannot go through the Bill clause by clause on the second reading.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think my hon, friend is reading the Bill as he proposed to submit it to the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. He cannot do that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What I think, Mr. Speaker says is that the hon, member cannot read the Bill clause by clause and comment on each clause.

Mr. SPEAKER. No. The hon. member may indicate the changes from the original Bill which are proposed to be made.

Mr. McLENNAN. The principal change is that butter is omitted. Cheese is to be branded with the day instead of the year of manufacture, and is to be registered by number:

Every manufacturer of cheese shall register with the dairy commissioner at Ottawa the location and post office address of each and every factory owned or operated by him for the manufacture of cheese, and the commissioner shall forthwith send by registered letter to the manufacturer a certificate of registration showing the number allotted by the commissioner to his factory or factories.

A question was raised as to the propriety viding that every cheese manufacturer in the country shall register his factory with the dairy commissioner at Ottawa, giving the name of the place where it is located, the lot, the concession, the township, and the post office address of the man who owns it: and the dairy commissioner will send back to be put on the cheese. Every factory in the Dominion is to be registered in this way. and this will do away with the necessity of having inspectors. The result will be that when any cheese is placed on the market in London, Bristol or anywhere else, anyone can turn the cheese over and see by the brand where it was made, the date of its manufacture, and everything connected with it. So that it is not necessary for the Government to spend one dollar in providing inspectors to look after this matter. I have some other changes to propose, which it is not necessary for me to go into details unless I have an opportunity of amending the Bill in committee. I have here a resolution adopted by the Butter and Cheese Association of Montreal, in favour of this Bill, which reads as follows:-

RESOLUTION adopted at special meeting of the Montreal Butter and Cheese Association, held Wednesday, 29th May, 1895.

Resolved, That, in view of the meeting of the Select Standing Committee of the House of Conmons on Agriculture and Colonization to be held at Ottawa, on Friday, 31st May, 1895, for the purpose of securing an expression of opinion from the various dairy associations re branding of the date of manufacture on all cheese made in Canada, this association hereby places itself on record as strongly in favour of such branding, that being the unanimous wish of the entire cheese trade in Great Britain. And, further, that this association's committee on the subject (appointed 14th January, 1895) do proceed to Ottawa and attend the meeting of the select standing committee mentioned.

At a meeting of the Dairy Association of Western Ontario, at which were present over 800 representative factorymen and farmers from the whole province, the following resolution was passed:

RESOLUTION passed by Dairymen's Association of Western Ontario, at Stratford, 15th, 16th and 17th January, 1895.

That in view of the fact that recent reports would seem to indicate that Canadian cheese made during one month has been sold on the British market as the make of another month, therefore. be it resolved, that this Convention of Dairymen, assembled in the city of Stratford, would strongly recommend that such regulations be adopted and such laws be enacted as would compel our cheese factories to brand on each cheese the date and name of the month upon which the cheese was made.

Here is a resolution of the Dairy Association of the province of Quebec, met at St.

of having an army of inspectors to inspect are still of the same opinion with regard the cheese, and a sub-clause is inserted pro- to the matter, for I have had, recently, other resolutions and letters from that section of the country, approving of the principle contained in the Bill. I have a circular, issued in Great Britain, which is very important and which is necessary I should read to the House, to give hon, gentlemen an idea of the feeling in that a certificate of registration and the number country on this matter. This circular proves that Canadian Cheese is placed in a bad condition on the English market, and that the particulars in connection with it are misrepresented, or otherwise it would not be necessary to send out such circulars as I shall now read:

CHEESE SUB-COMMITTEE.

Hibernia Chambers, London Bridge, London, E.C., 1895.

To the Producers of Canadian Cheese.

It has, no doubt, come to your knowledge that there has been considerable dissatisfaction among the cheese distributors on this side of the Atlantic as to the course of the business during the last two or three years, especially as to buyers, who in many cases alleged that they did not receive the special month's make they had contracted for, which called for frequent arbitration during the season just closed.

The result has been to injure the good reputation of the Canadian product, and to destroy that confidence in dealing which is so essential between seller and buyer.

As the result of a conference representing a great majority of the trade in Great Britain, suggestions have been made to your Government as to the desirability of an Act making it compulsory to brand the date at the time of manufacture upon each cheese. It is fully believed that such protection will be a decided advantage to the factorymen and to the distributors throughout the United Kingdom, as it will at once restore confidence on this side, and effectually prevent any speculative or unscrupulous shipper covering his transactions by substituting one month's make for another. It is earnestly hoped that the factorymen throughout the Dominion will at once commence dating their cheese, especially as the desire is pretty general among the importers to favour those factories adopting this system.

Our interest is as yours, that goods should be sold honestly for what they are, and that the reputation and market price of fine fall makes should not be destroyed by the improper substitution of the earlier summer product.

Several of the shippers now and recently in England have also been approached on the subject, and they cordially endorse the action taken.

By order of the cheese sub-committee.

C. J. HIGGINSON,

Secretary.

The result was that all these arbitrations referred to were decided against Canadians who placed that cheese on the market, and misrepresented it by stating that one month's cheese was another month's make. I have a memorial here from Bristol, Eng-Hyacinthe, endorsing the resolution of the land, the original of which was sent to the western association. The people of Quebec Secretary of State and a copy sent to me. Parliament, is as follows:-

To the Honourable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Canada, in Parliament assembled.

This Memorial sheweth:

That we, the undersigned importers of Canadian product, are strongly of opinion, that it would be a distinct advantage to both producers and distributors of Canadian cheese, if the date and make was legibly and indelibly marked on each cheese before it leaves the factory where ınade.

Your memorialists, therefore, pray your Honourable House to pass a law making it compulsory upon all manufacturers of cheese in Canada to so mark each cheese before it leaves the factory where made.

Bristol, England, 25th March, 1895.

These are the names of sixteen of the leading firms in Bristol to whom we export a large amount of our cheese. The following is an extract from the Toronto "Empire," bearing on the matter:—

TORONTO "EMPIRE," 18th JANUARY, 1895.

A few years ago the export of cheese from the United States to Great Britain was very large. However, when their product was going abroad in great quantities every year, they came to the conclusion that anything would do for the English consumer. So they charged their cheese with hog's fat and other spurious articles. But the British consumer of cheese resented this treatment by spurning the stuff sent them from the States. The result was that the cheese-makers of that country lost the confidence of the English consumer, and they have not yet re-This fraudulent imposition ruined the cheese trade of Michigan, which had gained a leading position in the British market.

The Canadian manufacturers were honest in their dealings, and from the first they have endeavoured to improve the quality of their goods.

I have many letters from persons interested in the cheese industry, and I will undertake to deal with the statement made by the Secretary of State, that one cheese is better in one section of the country than it is in another. I think it will be clear to everybody that that is all the greater reason why it should be branded. Mr. D. M. McPherson, a gentleman from my county, who is the largest manufacturer of cheese in the Dominion of Canada, he puts the case as strong as he possibly can, and Mr. D. M. McPherson:

Mr. McLennan.

The memorial, which is addressed to this states that it took twenty-five years of honest and hard labour to build up the cheese trade to its present standard, and that it is highly necessary that we should maintain that standard. He says:

> Allan Grove Cheese Factories, Lancaster, Ont., 13th May, 1895.

Major R. R. McLennan, M.P., Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,-In reply to your letter of the 19th instant, would say, in reference to the Cheese Bill you are introducing re dating, &c., that you can have free use of my previous letter and my name to assist you in whatever way you think best to promote the adoption and passing of the Bill proposed.

One of the strongest arguments I see that can be used in favour of the Bill is, that the English dealers desire it to protect them from dishonest dealing; and some factorymen and dealers on this side oppose it because it will prevent them from obtaining the unjust benefit in the future which they have been receiving in the past by misrepresentation and false pretenses. The few dealers who do this misrepresentation on this side of the water blame the factorymen, and the factorymen who do the same thing blame the dealers; and it is in this way that the dealers and factorymen get out of the loss incurred by such dishonest dealing. And the English dealers and consumers have to stand the loss directly received from the deal, and the honest producer in this country (farmer and factoryman) has to stand the great loss in the future from the depreciated reputation which this dishonest dealing tends to develop.

It has taken honest dairymen and factorymen some twenty-five years to build up an enviable reputation for good quality and large quantity, but all this can be ruined in a few years by dishonest dealing.

Unprincipled dealers in all parts will take advantage of these opportunities to "misrepresent conditions," create speculation, deceive the trade. and thereby do immense damage to the trade of the country at large. I claim it is a public necessity for the good of all that such a Bill should be passed, and hence my strong and urgent support of its becoming a law.

Mr. McPherson, in another letter to me. strongly urges the branding of cheese, with the month and the day of manufacture. Mr. Alexander, who was over in England, endorses the statement sent from London and Bristol, and says:

Montreal, 27th May, 1895.

I have just returned from England, and know something of the complaints made there, and am bound to say the complaints are not exaggerated. I attribute the present demoralized state of the cheese market mostly to the enormous quantities of summer-made cheese (undated) that were stored last season, cheese which should have gone into consumption long ago, but are now flooding the markets. If the farmers gained anything, when these cheese were being stored, they are paying sweetly for it now.

These letters from men who are in this business, some of them the largest dealers in Canada, and they are honest dealers, I am happy to say. This is a portion of the letter I referred to as having received from Allan Grove Cheese Factories. Lancaster, Ont., 4th May, 1895.

Major R. R. McLennan, M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,-I notice from press reports, that you have introduced a Bill to compel all cheese and butter factories to label their product with the month made and name or brand of maker.

You have my hearty support and sympathy in the promotion of the Act; and I take this opportunity of writing you in reference to same. and take the privilege of offering a few suggestions. The aims and objects of the Bill should be to prevent fraud by unprincipled and dishonest cheese and butter manufacturers as well as dealers, to maintain the good reputation and confidence of all dealers and consumers, for our dairy product in the future, which has taken years of persistent labour honestly and faithfully carried out to acquire. With this in view, I would suggest to have the month, or the number of the month, as well as the day of the month. marked on the cheese itself, and merely tho month, or number of the month, marked on the outside of the box.

As to requiring the name of maker or brand, and place, post office. &c., I have no complaint from myself to mention, or from the trade, either in Montreal or England. However, I would suggest that all factories be compelled to brand or label all packages with their known brand and post office, as well as "Canada." This insures This insures justice to all, whether the individual makes good or poor quality. If good quality is made, the party will receive the benefit in full, and if poor quality is made, the brand and the knowledge of his being known to turn out a poor article, will either stimulate him to improvement in the future, or naturally drop out of the business, which he should do, if he persists in making an inferior quality.

I have statements made by the parties who were sent for to give their opinion on this matter before the Agricultural Committee. These parties were Messrs. Arthur Hodg-McPherson, Leitch. Professor Robertson, and Ballantyne. By a resolution, Mr. Hodgson stated that he and Mr. Mc-Pherson, of Montreal, were appointed delegates by the Montreal cheese dealers to attend a meeting of the Agricultural and Colonization Committee. He presented a resolution stating:

That the association hereby places itself on record as strongly in favour of branding and dating the month on all cheese, such being the unanimous desire of the entire cheese dealers of Great Britain.

These men are large exporters of cheese and in a position to know the requirements of the trade. Mr. Hodgson stated that the reason why they wished to comply with the desires of the English dealers in cheese was that England was the principal outlet for this product, and he suggested that the manufacturers, and not the merchants. should be the parties who should brand the I may say that this Bill has been cheese so changed as to make the manufacturer the party who shall do the branding. Mr. D. M. McPherson, one of the delegates sent ing of the committee (the Agricultural twenty-five years, and he had just returned and Colonization Committee), expressed from England. He had been shipping on himself very strongly in favour of branding of cheese. He said that he had talked to men from the east and west, and as far as his experience went, he had met none but who is in favour of it. He had also talked to farmers who came into Montreal to sell their cheese, and they also are in favour of the branding of the date upon the cheese to keep up the reputation of this product. Mr. McPherson continued:

It may be, that some agent, without instruction, in Brockville market or any other market, with a view to getting at the seller, may say "Mr. Seller, if you brand the cheese, I will not give you such a high price," and that sort of corversation spread about the Brockville Board, or any other board, produces a feeling against the branding of cheese. And from that you get the feeling in the country papers that the country is against the branding of cheese; but I am satisfied, from the papers you have sent, that, if you asked them, their answer would be in accordance with those already received.

The hon, member for West Middlesex (Dr. Roome) asked him: "Do not the sellers represent the Patrons?" and Mr. McPherson replied:

The sellers represent the Patrons, certainly: but I do not think, if you consult the sellers here, that they will represent the farmers.

Bush said: August and September cheese have the preference over that of July or June, but also June and July cheese was really better than August cheese. think that was universally admitted last year. Mr. Hodgson said: July cheese has often brought a higher price than June. There were higher prices for July last year than June. In his evidence before the committee. Mr. J. A. Leitch said: That the trade in England was divided upon the necessity of branding and dating cheese. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) asked him: " Have you any letters in your possession to that effect?" and he replied: I have not. I have no evidence to show that there is one man opposed to the branding and dating of cheese." Mr. Leitch said in the committee that he had not spoken to half a dozen farmers about this, but yet he said everybody was opposed to it. Before I go any further. I might deal with the question which the Secretary of State has placed before you. I have Mr. Ballantyne's evidence here, which I would like to place on record, but I am afraid I will be taking up too much of the time of the House in so doing. I may say briefly that Mr. Ballantyne is strongly in favour of the branding and dating of cheese. He said in the committee: that he had been a producer of milk and manufacturer of cheese, and also had been a dealer, buying and selling cheese for the last twenty-five years. He had been in England every year but one, and at alfrom the city of Montreal to the meet-most every month in the year for the last an average about 125,000 boxes of cheese each year to England, which would be about one-fifteenth of the export of Great Britain, and he was therefore in a position to know what that country required. He always placed his cheese on the markets as manufactured in the month in which it actually was made. He said:

I buy from the factory, according to the month's make. When I buy, May, I get May; when I buy June, I get June, and ship them as of the month in which they were manufactured.

He said in the committee that he got more money for July cheese during the last six years than he got for June cheese every year, without any exception. All the evidence given in the committee was to the effect that July cheese was worth more last year than June cheese. The important point they attempt to make against us, that there is a prejudice against July cheese; and if our people make good cheese in July in some sections-in certain years they say the July cheese is equal to the September makewould it not be the best way in the world to get over the prejudice in the English market by branding the cheese in order to show that we manufacture good cheese in July? There is a large amount manufactured in Canada in July which is placed on the English market as the cheese of some other month, after having been kept in cold storage for several months, Professor Robertson, at Brockville, advised the sellers to send their cheese forward every week and thus keep the market clear. It is well known to every one who has anything to do with the manufacture of cheese that the cheese is sold from the factory every two weeks or at the furthest every month at the current price of the month, but the men who buy it keep it over from two to four months in order to obtain a higher price. The farmer or the factoryman, however, does not get a cent of that advantage. It will pay to keep it, for an increase of one cent a pound on the cheese exported to Great Britain will amount to over a million and a quarter dollars per year. The farmer disposes of his cheese, the patrons of the factory are paid according to the prices received for it. Go through any factory and you will not find a pound of cheese kept over a month, and in many not a pound kept over two weeks. How can it be to the advantage of the farmers that this method of buying and selling should be allowed to go on? Suppose the speculator buys 10.000 pounds of July cheese, 5.000 of which he sells as August—getting August prices-and only the 5,000 pounds are sold as July. The whole is accounted for at July prices to the farmers. This is no advantage to him, but it is to the speculator who pockets the advance price in the 5,000 sold August. Cheese is kept over from the spring and the middle of the summer, and is put upon the English market their cheese there is no such bartering or there is so much cheese placed upon the market as there was last year, the result is that in the spring the price of cheese is lower than it would have been if the people were compelled to brand their cheese at the The farmers and factorymen do factory. not receive any benefit from these profits on the part of the speculators. The speculators are doing everything they can to defeat this Bill, it is in their interest to defeat it. But when about 90 per cent of the people interested are in favour of this measure. how can the Parliament refuse to grant it? If there is anything dishonest in this Bill let those who are opposed to it show it. Suppose that the cheese is better in one part of the country than another by reason of the natural advantages of that section, supnose the cheese is better in New Brunswick or better in Nova Scotia-that very fact makes it all the more necessary that it should be branded. The buyer or speculator goes to New Brunswick or Nova Scotia and finds the cheese not branded. He buys it at the current price in the month of July, holds it and sells it for September cheese. Then he puts the poorer cheese on the market as July cheese, thus keeping up the prejudice which exists owing to such conduct on the part of the speculators. If that cheese is branded, it will go upon the English market as July cheese and the buyers and consumers in Britain will see that it is a good article, and the result will be to break down any prejudice that might exist. The people of Great Britain are complaining about the way this cheese is put upon the market, and they would not complain, if there was no ground for complaint. Professor Robertson states that he is in favour of branding but does not want to make the branding compulsory. He says:

Well, if you make the branding of the data compulsory, these cheese-buyers are not easily gotten round and use all kinds of suave and other arguments when they try to buy cheese, in order to get it cheap. If some of them have gone to the farmers and said: "If you brand the month on the cheese, I will give you less money," they will say, when the Bill is passed: "There is a prejudice in England againt July cheese, and now that is branded 'July'; we can-They use argunot give so much for it." ments such as this to crush the prices down, and I would not put an instrument in their hands for that purpose.

Then in answer to a question by Mr. Mc-Neill, Prof. Robertson says:

They may come and say: "Your cheese is branded, and I will not give you so much for them," but without the compulsory legislation, the salesman can reply: "My cheese shall be branded if I can get as much money for them, but, if you will pay more, and prefer them unbranded, unbranded they shall be.

Dishonesty? What does this prove but the clearest attempt at dishonesty? If they brand in the fall and sold at fall prices. When trading as this. Are we, as a legislature making laws, in the interest of the people of the country, to put up with such conduct as this on the part of the buyer and seller? we to go on record as refusing to do what is necessary in order to place our product upon the English market in a fair and honourable way? Here is evidence of what will be done with the cheese of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island or any other part of the country if it is specially good cheese. The quality will be taken advantage of by the speculator and the farmer will get the current price of the month in which it is made—it is away patrons, representing their directorates, and from him and he will receive no further bene- representing fit from it. It is proposed that this branding surrounding should not be compulsory. But so long as legislation. I think it is proper we should it is not compulsory the same kind of decepget this legislation when 90 per cent of the tien will be carried on. You cannot make people are asking for it; and I hope the You cannot make! a success of any legislation unless it is Secretary of State and the leader of the made compulsory. There is legislation to House will allow this Bill to go into comcompel the farmer to furnish good milk to mittee, and let us take the sense of the the factory. If he sends skim milk, he is House on the question. If the Government punished. But you refuse to punish the will not consent, then let it go: but if Prof. people who put upon the market in a frau-Robertson is going to legislate instead of dulent way the article that is manufactured the members of this House, I say it is from the milk which the farmer must supply unfair. I have a great many other statepure or suffer punishment for dishonesty. I understand that in some way the dairy commissioner is opposed to this. He was too much upon himself to oppose this Bill. very strongly opposed to it before the first Prof. Robertson is all right in his own legimeeting, but he was much more reasonable at the last meeting. At the last meeting. he said that branding would be a good thing. and he recommended branding in every place where he went; that they were branding the articles made by the Government, but he did not want to make it compulsory: Now, regarding Prof. Robertson, I have it from the best authority that on or about the 20th April he said that he would recommend that cheese should not be branded. and that it would not be done. It is about I should know, as reprethat sentative of a constituency in this House, whether Prof. Robertson is controlling legislation in this Parliament or not. I say it is most unfair to the representatives of the people that a paid employee should undertake to dictate in regard to legislation. I am sorry to say that it looks as if his opinion was going to be adopted, because he said at the early part of the session: This legislation will not pass because I say so. More than that, the dairymen in the province of New Brunswick passed a resolution in favour of branding cheese, and sent it to a member of Parliament in this House who showed it to Prof. Robertson, and Prof. Robertson told him never to show it to anybody, but to suppress it. Is that consequence of the brand, in every instance fair treatment? Is that the way the peo-the answer was that it was sold on its ple of the province of New Brunswick and merits. They also told us, in reply to questhe people of the rest of the Dominion are to be treated? Sir, I feel strongly on this question. I know that I have a Bill that the whole country is in favour of. I have a Bill which 90 per cent of the formula of the country and the manufacture of the formula of the country and the manufacture of the formula of the country and the manufacture of the formula of the turers of this article, are in favour of, and why should it not be allowed to come to the front and become law? Besides the statements that I have shown you. I have here a number of letters that were sent in answer to inquiries, showing that about 90 per cent of the answers were in favour, and only 8 per cent against, with a few doubt-I have in my hand a bunch of ful ones. letters, being the answers from presidents, secretaries and treasurers of dairy associations throughout the province of Ontario, counted as one, but representing all their in the whole the people asking country for ments with reference to Prof. Robertson that I will reserve. I think he is taking a little timate business in the manufacturing of cheese, but selling and buying is not in his line, and he cannot possibly know as much as men that have been in this business for thirty years. I have shown you the feeling throughout the country on this matter: I have many other statements of the same nature, but owing to the lateness of the session. I will not take up the time of the House by reading them to you. I sincerely hope that the Government will see fit to put this Bill through and make it law. The country demands it, Great Britain demands it, justice and fair play demand it, and I think that this House should not hesitate to pass this legislation.

Mr. CARPENTER. Before this motion is put. I would like to say a word or two respecting it. With the hon, member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) I agree that a good deal of consideration was given to this question before the Agricultural Committee, but I disagree with him as to the nature of the evidence that was produced. The gentlemen who appeared before us were all dealers in cheese, and when they were asked the question as to whether the cheese was sold in the English market on its merits or simply in consequence of the brand, in every instance farmers of the country and the manufac- its merits and not by reason of the brand. I think that a Bill of this character, which is calculated to make so radical a change, should be allowed to stand over until another session, at any rate. If we were to pass: this legislation at the present session, I believe the consequence would be to take money out of the pockets of the farmers of this country, the very people whom we are auxious to benefit by reason of a brand placed on the cheese of certain months, against which there is a very strong prejudice in the English market, and I would suggest that the matter be allowed to stand until another year.

Mr. McNEILL. I think this Bill that has been brought before the House by my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) is one of very great importance indeed to the agricultural interests of this country, and I think it is very important that it should not be allowed to stand over. I think it should be pressed on as quickly as possible. because it has reference to one of the greatest trades that Canada possesses, the trade in cheese. The position in which we stand at present with regard to that great staple industry is this: that the people of the country in which lies our market for cheese, the people of the United Kingdom, have become doubtful as to whether they are being honestly provided with the article that we profess to provide them with. There is no doubt at all that the present condition of feeling, the present condition of distrust. among buyers in England, is calculated very seriously to jeopardize the interests of the farmers of this country. The question we have to decide to-night, so far as this Bill is concerned, is simply whether we shall now take measures to remove unfavourable impression from the minds buyers in England. With reference to the evidence that was given before the committee, I may say that Prof. Robertson, who, I am sure, is only actuated by what he believes to be in the best interest of this industry, in the evidence that he first gave. so far as I was able to follow him, seemed to be inclined to the opinion that it would be detrimental in the first instance to the farming interests, if the cheese were branded in the way suggested. He seemed to be of opinion that at first it would reduce ceed to carry that provision into effect now, the price of some of the cheese produced in certain months of the year. or let it stand over longer and subject this trade to the discredit which it is now bearing in England. He was of opinion that it would reduce the price of our July cheese on the British that certain Canadian dealers have been selling cheese on the British market brand- is very much in accord with the hon. memed as September cheese, which was not ber for Glengarry. But I call the atten-September cheese at all, with the result tion of the Government to this, that the that their action has brought discredit upon question has created a great deal of inter-this industry in Canada. There is this est throughout the country, especially in year a great reduction in the price of cheese those sections where this important inand some of those gentlemen who appeared dustry is carried on to a large extent, and before the committee, and who are experts, it is admitted we are dealing with a large and who have been dealing with cheese for and important industry in the country. It many years, were of opinion that one cause is unfortunate we should be called upon to Mr. CARPENTER.

for this depreciation in the price of Canadian cheese was the fact to which I have referred, that July cheese was branded as September cheese and sold in the English market under false pretenses. What we want to do is to remove from the minds of the English people the idea that we are dealing with them dishonestly. too much confusion in the minds of the people there between the people of this country and the people south of the line, and they know very well that dealers on south of the line are not particular as to the course they take in order to have goods placed market, and we do not want our Canadian cheese to be subjected to suspicion and our Canadian producers to be subjected to the suspicion that our dealings are the same as those conducted on the other side of the I therefore say that this is not a matter we should allow to stand over, but it is one we should deal with during the present session, so that we may have this erroneous impression removed. Professor Robertson, in the first instance, seemed to be of opinion that the branding of cheese would reduce the price of cheese in the English market for our farmers during the first year or two, but I ask hon, gentlemen who desire to give attention to this question, and who are concerned in our agricultural interests, to note that Professor Robertson, on the second occasion, admitted that, in his opinion, it would not even reduce the price this year; he thought the right thing was to have the cheese branded, and the cheese sold from the experimental farm was branded, and the only reason he assigned why he thought this measure should not go into operation this year was a purely political reason, not one given as an expert at all, but an opinion that we were legislating in advance of the opinion of the farmers of the country. That is a purely political question, a question for this House to consider, not a question to be dealt with by a dairy expert as Professor Robertson is: and the question we have to decide in this House is: whether it is best in the farmers' interests that cheese should be branded, and if so, whether we should proing in England.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not desire to The whole difficulty lies in this. discuss the merits of the Bill at the present time. Expressing my own opinion, it THE CONTROL OF THE CO discuss a Bill affecting so large and important an industry in the dying moments of the session. As the hon, member for Glengarry has well pointed out, many able men dealing in cheese, especially, have differed very widely in opinion with respect to what is best to be done. While I agree almost entirely with the opinions expressed by the hon, member, I find among manufacturers and dealers in the section where I live, which is, perhaps, the most important section engaged in this business, there are different opinions, and at meetings called, where manufacturers, dealers and farmers were represented, such differences of opinion existed. In view of this state of affairs, where the parties most interested and those who have considered this matter most fully, and know it in every detail, have not been able to come to a conclusion with any unanimity as to what is the best mode of procedure. I would strongly urge on the Government not to press this Bill through the House at the present time. I am sure the Government and the House will recognize the importance of the question, and I suggest that the whole matter stand over a very few months, when it can be taken up, and when those most interested will have more fully considered it, and they can have an opportunaity of again expressing their mature opinions regarding it.

A CANADA AND A CAN

Mr. FOSTER. With respect to this Bill, I think there is a good deal of force in what, the hon, gentleman has just stated. No one doubts the importance of the subject with which the Bill proposes to deal. The Bill was introduced by a private member. and he deserves the thanks of the House it. To use the words of the Controller of for bringing such an important question before it. He has bestowed a great deal of attention upon it, and formed very decided opinions, and he has taken a great deal of trouble in obtaining information and giving that information to the House on two or three different occasions. However, it is undoubted that there is a good deal of opposition to the Bill in different sections of the country, and since discussions have taken place in this House. I have received information to that effect from various sections. The circulation of the Bill, and the discussions in the House will all go to the country, and have the effect of inviting criticism on the subject, and I am quite sure the best course to pursue is to postpone the Bill, instead of attempting, as we must necessarily do, to consider it in a very hurried way at this hour of the session, and with so much business before the House it is impossible to frame a Bill which would be acceptable and at the same time be a benefit to the industry, and so the best course to adopt is to take the matter into consideration in the meantime. shall be here again in four of five months at the latest. The Department of Agriculture can make it its business to thorculture can make it its business to thoroughly look into this matter, and be pre- of polling. If the hon. Minister persists in pared when the House comes together to submit its information, perhaps, in the form of a Bill, and then we will be better prepared than we are now to take decided action upon it. If this Bill became law to-day, it would have no practical effect this season, and the mover was quite willing, if the Bill was passed, that it should contain a proviso bringing it into force next year. Taking all these considerations into account, I suggest to the House and to my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) particularly, that having performed the duty of bringing up this matter where it has caught the public eye, and where the members of this House have been informed of it, I would suggest that it would be better to leave it over for a few months during which time the department can consider it, and bring it up next session when we will have a representative House. I find that many hon, gentlemen interested in this industry on both sides have now taken their departure at this late hour of the session. I move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am very glad to hear the Minister of Finance make that statement. This is a matter which requires very careful consideration before legislation is applied to it. Now that it is proposed to leave the matter over, I earnestly hope that the new Minister of Agriculture will get in touch with the feeling of the country on this important question. The cheese industry has become very important, and I quite commend the course taken by the Government in not legislating too hastily in reference to Customs in reference to the Manitoba school question, I would recommed the Government to go slowly in this matter. It is possible that hasty and inconsiderate legislation might injure this growing industry, an industry of which we have a right to feel proud.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES REPRE-SENTATION ACT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Daly for:

Third reading of Bill (No. 121) an Act further to amend the North-west Territories Representation Act; the motion of Mr. Edgar in amendment thereto, and the motion of Mr. McCarthy in amendment to the said amendment.

Mr. DALY. I find that I was correct in the statement made by me that clause 44 was repealed last session by section 14 of the Act then passed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If it is repealed I hope the hon, gentleman will restore it. My information is that heretofore, more this Bill he will disfranchise a great number of the inhabitants of the North-west Territories. This is not a voters' list in the proper sense of the term, but a list for the convenience of the returning officer, and it would be a monstrous thing, if those qualified to go upon the list by making only an attidavit, should not be at liberty to make his affidavit and have their names put on the list on polling day.

Mr. DALY. My information is exactly the opposite of the hon, gentleman. My information is that instead of being a boon to the electors, the law as it stood was the very opposite and had the effect, especially in villages, of causing a number of men who were not entitled to vote, to take the oath in order to get in their vote. The enumeration districts are not at all large. The enumerator knows almost every person in the district and the people take such a keen interest in the elections that any one who does not get his name upon the list has no person to blame but himself. The hon, gentleman forgets that any creditable person can get the name of his neighbour put on the list if necessary. No harm will be done by this but on the contrary it will make a great improvement.

Amendment to amendment (Mr. McCarthy) negatived.

Amendment (Mr. Edgar) negatived. Bill read the third time and passed.

SILVER-LEAD SMELTING.

On the order for third reading of Bill (No. 142) to encourage silver-lead smelting.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the Bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee for consideration.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is for reconsideration?

Mr. FOSTER. The object is to include ores, which I explained before were necessary to the flux, but which I find are not in the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. MARA. I wish to amend this clause so as to bring within its scope other silver and gold ores, besides lead ores. In the West Kootenay district there are three mining camps, several miles apart, each one shipping a distinct class of ore. Toad Mountain is about seventy miles from Slocan, and Trail Creek about sixty miles from Toad Mountain, and about 120 miles in another direction from Slocan. The Slocan ores are silver and lead, the Toad Mountain ores are silver and copper, while the ores shipped from Trail Creek are gold, with a little silver, and sufficient iron for fluxing purposes. Until recently, the Slocan mining camp was the largest shipping camp in Kootenay. Last year the Nakusp and Slocan railway was completed, and in a very few months after the line reached Three Forks, between 6,000 and 7,000 tons of high-grade, hand-picked ore were shipped to American smelters; but for every ton of ore shipped, it is estimated that at least eight tons of low-grade are lying on the dump, or in the tunnels, in sight, that will not stand the cost of transportation. and are lying there waste and idle. same conditions prevail, to a certain extent, in the Toad Mountain camp. has not been as much ore shipped from that camp as from Slocan, but a large portion of the ore is low grade, and will not stand the cost of transportation. In Trail Creek, where the ores are gold and silver, with iron, a large quantity has been shipped this year. The Trail Creek camp was struck about four years ago, but last year the Le Roi River Mining Company shipped about 1,000 tons, which attracted considerable attention to the camp; and last fall an American, Mr. Clark, a mining man of considerable experience, bonded a claim called the War Eagle for $15,000, and spent $17.500 in development. Within a months sufficient ore was taken out to pay off the bond and cost of development; and since then they have paid a divi-Now, it dend of $50,000. might not be out of place to give the House a little information regarding this camp. the hour is late. I will read only a few extracts, which will give hon. members some information about this camp, and, at the same time, show them the class of ores which it is intended to encourage by this Bill. The following is an extract from the Slocan local paper:-

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

The officers of the War Eagle Mining Company yesterday declared a dividend of $50,000, or 10 cents a share. This is the War Eagle's second dividend. The first was paid 1st March of this year, and was 6½ cents per share, or a total of $32,500. The first dividend paid for the mine and all improvements and put the owners on "velvet". The second dividend is, therefore, clear profit. It represents three and a half months' limited production. During March, owing to bad roads, hardly any ore was shipped, and since then the mine has been restricted by bad roads between Trail Creek and the Columbia, and the repeated breaking of the cable at the crossing of the river. The owners figure on paying quarterly dividends of $50,000 from this time on.

The War Eagle stock was originally sold for 6 cents a share. It is now in a position to pay a dividend of $200,000 per annum, or nearly six times what it cost altogether to buy the mine and put it on a paying basis. There are not many War Eagles in the world. There will be one or two more in Trail Creek.

Here is an item from one of our own local papers, commenting on the above—and I can substantiate the correctness of these statements:

Many dividends declared by mining companies are misleading, most are Irish. The dividend declared by the War Eagle Mining Company last week represented the actual profit to date for three months and a haif, but it did not represent the capacity of the mine for the following reasens:-During the last three months and a half shipments have been continually interrupted, and whenever they were interrupted, there was a cessation of production from want of storage room. The mine has a considerable quantity of ore on the road to the smelter, and at the smelter, mined and shipped during the last three months and a half, for which returns are not yet to hand. It is said the net return on this ore will almost equal the dividend already paid. With the present openings and present rate of production the War Eagle is in shape to pay more nearly monthly than quarterly dividends of $50,000.

The company has ordered a 20-drill Rand compressor, and as soon as the plant is on the ground the longest and largest tunnel ever driven in It will be begun on Kootenay will be started. Centre Star Creek, and will traverse nearly the whole length of the Iron Mask ground. Thirteen hundred feet will have to be driven before tho War Eagle ore chute is struck. This will be the main working tunnel of the War Eagle mine. It will give a depth of 450 feet, and from that down the mine will have to be worked by sink-

Here is another statement on the same subject:

Mr. Wm. Teague, of Yale, gives the following report of the mining boom at Rossland, where he has recently been inspecting some mining properties for an English company:

'I have never seen such strong mineral lodes: in any country in the world. has got a solid mineral belt at a 320-feet level, 19 feet wide, which will go from $250 to $260 a ton. The ore comprises copper and arsenic pyrites, iron cap and all forms of diorite.

"The strike of the lode is north-east, and " The south-west, with a dip of about 30 degrees north. They are shipping ore under difficulties. Fully 100 four-horse teams are on the road between Rossland and Northport, shipping ore. There are from 500 to 700 men away in the mountains prospecting, and the sound of the picks puts one in mind of the time the railway was being built through Yale. Rossland has a population of from 1,500 to 2,000 people already; buildings are going up night and day, and I was compelled to pay 50 cents for a lay-down in something very little better than a shack. The camp is highly little better than a shack. promising and undoubtedly permanent, and my epinion is, that within nine months there will be 6,000 people there. A claim called the Robert Lee was struck about 6 miles from the War Eagle in a direct line. The lode is 10 feet wide, assays $50 to $60 in gold, and is bonded for $50,000 There is another one with 10 per cent down. called the Commander on another mountain. about 5 miles from the above group, which was discovered about three weeks ago, and is considered superior to the War Eagle. It has been bonded for $60,000 to a gentleman who owned the Montana smelter. Living is cheap there too. The mining licenses issued last month amounted to $1,000, and the customs receipts are over $2,000 a week. The pay-roll averages $1,000 a day. I never saw a better geological combination calculated to ensure permanency in the mineral formation.

As the Bill now reads, the ores of the Trail Creek camp will be excluded. It is advisable that these should be brought within the scope of the Bill, and, therefore, I move:

That the words "and the smelting of other ores of silver and gold" be inserted after the words "silver-lead smelting" in the fourth line. and that the words"and other ores of silver and gold" be inserted after the words "silver-lead ore" in the 8th line.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the hon, gentleman quite satisfied that a large portion of this bounty will not be absorbed in the smelting of ores, which is largely gold-producing, silver being a by-product? His real object, presume, is to promote the smelting of silver and the smelting of galena. I am only criticising his verbiage. It opens the door, I think, to disappointment. As long as the ore smelted is that which produces silver and gold, the proprietors would be entitled to claim the bounty. It is a particular kind of way that you want to describe and not the product of the ore.

Mr. MARA. Silver and lead, or what we call the galena ore, is undoubtedly the dominant ore. I believe smelters will be erected that will treat all three ores in one furnace. but it is just possible some smelting companies, or a collection of mining companies, may wish to erect a smelter at Toad Mountain where the ores are silver and copper, or at Trail Creek where the ore is chiefly The War Eagle from the bounty under the Act as it now reads. There is more silver and lead ore in Kootenay than possibly any other ore. It is generally believed that the largest known bedies of galena silver in the world are located in West Kootenay, and the object is to encourage the silver and lead industry, but at the same time if people wish to erect smelters so as to prevent the other ores from being smelted in the United States, it is our duty to assist them.

> Mr. MULOCK. The smelting is going on in other parts of Canada besides British Columbia. I believe that silver is found in the gold-bearing quartz. That industry, is pursued to a very considerable extent in the nurritime provinces and to some extent in central Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. Not by smelting.

Mr. MULOCK. I merely called the attention of the committee to the effect of the change, which admits to a claim to this bounty, smelting that may be almost wholly producing gold, but which would be entitled to claim a bounty if a quantity of silver, no matter how small, were also the result of the operation. It seems to me you should have a regulation giving some discretion in such a case.

Mr. FOSTER. It is true that a certain percentage of that ore would claim the bounty, and it is right that it should. For instance, these ores which my hon, friend has described, and which are called the dry ores, or silicious ores, certain portions of which are necessary for the proper composition of smelting. They are put in the same furnace as the silver-lead ores, are smelted in the same furnace, and the composition is called flux. I do not understand the scientific method by which it is done, but it is just as much to the interest of the country to develop the search for that kind of ore and the mining of that kind of ore on account of the consequent labour and development which will come from it, as it is to develop the mining of silver and lead ores or the galena ores in particular, but the Act does not take in any but the smelting ores. It does not take in the quartz ores which are reduced by crushing.

Mr. MARA. There are no smelters in any part of Canada but British Columbia. There are quartz mills which are inexpensive com-A well equipped pared with smelters. smelter will cost about $200,000, and before a smelter can be started in British Columbia the cost of establishing it and the capital required to purchase ores will run from a quarter to half a million dollars. In connection with silver-lead smelting, I believe that the men most closely connected with the mining industry in Kootenay would prefer to see the duty on lead increased to the same figure as in the United States rather than have the bounty. For this reason, although the United States produce more lead than any other country in the world, they purchase largely from Mexico in this The silver-lead bullion is shipped from Mexico to the United States in bond. The by-product is there desilvered, the silver being entered free for home consumption and the lead, instead of being entered for home consumption, is shipped in bond to Canada and Great Britain. Hence the great proportion of lead that comes to Canada comes from Mexico, where the miners' wages average 80 cents, whereas in British Columbia the miners are paid $3 per day. so that the British Columbia miner is brought into competition with the 80-cent per day labour of Mexico. Therefore they would rather see the duty increased to the same level as in the United States, but the Government preferring the bounty system as paid to the iron industry and adopted by the Ontario Government have introduced this measure.

NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION ACT.

Bill (No. 120) to amend the North-west Irrigation Act (Mr. Daly) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

Mr. MULOCK.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are there any suits pending under the law as it is? For, if there are, this does not save them.

Mr. DALY. There has been no litigation whatever.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There has been great dissatisfaction, however.

Mr. DALY. Only amongst some people who are ambitious to make money and want the settlers to put up the necessary capital; and we are satisfying their wants by the—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understood the dissatisfaction was among the settlers because of the appropriation of the water.

Mr. DALY. No; some speculators in Calgary are the only ones who are dissatisfied.

Bill reported, as amended, and read the third time and passed.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 145) to authorize the Treasury Board to exempt certain societies from the operation of the Insurance Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does this mean?

Mr. FOSTER. The object is explained in the Bill itself. I think when the Bill was introduced I explained to the House shortly what it was meant to cover. special case is this: The railway engineers trainmen and conductors have an insurance society for their own members. Of course, being engaged in a hazardous occupation, men of that class find it practically impossible to get insurance in the regular com-panies on account of the high rate which is charged; and so they have their own association confined entirely to their own members. Section 43 of the Insurance Act exempts friendly societies from the operation of the Act in so far as life insurance is concerned. This association, however, has this practice, that a small grant like a life insurance, which never goes, I believe, above $1,200, is given to trainmen, conductors, engineers and so on, for total disability, the same as for death, and so they are doing an accident or disability insurance, and are therefore not covered by that section 43. which lays them open to the penalties of the Act. Although there has been no abuse, and the department has taken no steps in reference to it, a certain man who has been trying to make an honest penny, if you may term it so, by making prosecutions, and gathering the penalties to himself, for violations of the Act, has come down upon this association, and subjected them to trials in Toronto, Hamilton and other places, and bothers them in the courts, and they ask for relief. After referring the matter to the Superintendent of Insurance, and talking it over with him, he says that the whole matter of friendly societies needs legislation, and he is preparing, as Superintendent of Insurance, information and the like of that believes for use. which he must place, and which he is going to recommend. He, however, reports, with reference to this. association, that if a Bill like this were passed, allowing the Treasury Board to exempt these friendly societies, such, for instance:

Any society or organization for fraternal, benevolent, industrial or religious purposes, among which purposes is the granting of life, accident, sickness or disability insurance to members thereof exclusively.

They come before the Treasury Board and the extra hazardous nature of mittee. their occupation, and upon that representation the Treasury Board may exempt them from section 43 of the Act. I think I said the other day that this treatment is afforded by the province of Ontario, and in exactly a similar way, to associations of that kind where insurance is confined entirely to the membership, and where the occupation is extra hazardous. No abuse is likely to arise from it. The Bill, I think, gives a necessary exemption to men of this class, and although it is in accordance with my own idea, it is altogether upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of Insurance that I ask for the legislation.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the legislation is quite proper and requisite. Do I understand my hon, friend to say that he is following the legislation of Ontario in regard to the Treasury Board?

Mr. FOSTER. Exactly.

Mr. MULOCK. There is one feature of that clause 43 of which I think the Government ought to take cognizance. Under cover of a benevolent, fraternal, charitable object, I think a good deal of insurance is being done. Now the spirit of that section when adopted-for I happened to have taken some part in framing it at the time—was that the main object of the association was to be fraternal, benevolent, charitable, and so on, insurance being but an incident to the organization. Now, there is reason to believe that institutions are being organized for the purpose of carrying on an insurance business, and are insurance companies pure and simple, and having no object such as those set forth. But by some provision of being an organization having for their object one or other of those purposes, the company is exempt. Now, I think that the Government should add to this clause a further clause giving them the right, and casting upon them the duty, of ascertaining whether the companies claiming exemption, are or are not insurance companies in fact. I would suggest that you add something by which you may grant this exemption only where the principal object of the organization is one of those charitable purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. That is denominated in the Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was a case mentioned the other night, Regina vs. Stapleton, in the Ontario courts, where they practically applied the old section of the statutes, as it stands, to defeat the prosecution. There was merely a culpable evasion of the statute, and where the object was, as the hon, gentleman says, not religious, fraternal or charitable, but that of insurance, and they held the statute as it stands was sufficient to defeat that.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. MULOCK. This Bill does not provide for such a case as that of Regina vs. Stapleton, and if you will let it stand till to-morrow, I will make an amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. That section 43 is the subject of a good deal of comment, as my hon, friend knows, and in it is bound up the whole matter of legislation with reference to friendly societies. The Superintendent of Insurance has been devoting a good deal of attention to that matter, and proposes a scheme of legislation with reference to it. I hope he will have it ready for our next session; and he suggests that we adopt this Bill as a mere temporary measure.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 135) further to amend the Act respecting the North-west Territories.

Mr. DALY. I move that the amendments made by the Senate to clauses a, b and c, of section 2, be disagreed with for the reason that these enactments have been incorporated in an Act entitled the North-west Irrigation Act.

Amendment No. 1 disagreed to: No. 2 concurred in.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That for the remainder of the session the House shall meet on Saturday, and there shall be two sittings on that day and other days, one from 10 a.m. to 1.30 p.m., the other from 3 p.m. to the adjournment of the House; Covernment orders shall continue to have precedence on each day.

Motion agreed to.

SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 88) respecting the South Shore Railway of Nova Scotia.—(Mr. White, Shelburne.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. FORBES moved, in amendment:

Such persons as now are shareholders in the said company incorporated under said chapter 130 of the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia as aforesaid, or who may become share-holders in the company hereby incorporated, are hereby made and declared to be a body corporate and politic within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, and the company hereby incorporated shall be and continue to be entitled to and owner of all the property and assets of every kind of the said company incorporated under said chapter 130, and shall be subject to and liable for the debts and liabilities of said company, and the Railway Act of Canada shall apply to the company hereby incorporated and its undertakings instead of the said Act, cap. 130 of the said province of Nova Scotia and the Railway Act of the said province, provided that nothing in this Act shall affect any right acquired or claimed to be acquired or held by the said company or in the of the said company incorporated under said Act, chapter 130, or any right, claim, demand or chose in action of any kind of any person or corporation or any indebtedness or liability of the said company incorporated under said chapter 130, or any action or suit now pending in any court or any matters in question in any action, suit or proceeding.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 2,

Mr. FORBES moved, as clause 2a, the following:—

As a further liability of the company hereby incorporated it is declared that the said company last named shall be answerable for all costs that may be awarded by the court to the plaintiff or relator in a certain action taken on or about the 4th of February, 1895, in the Supreme Court of the province of Nova Scotia, wherein the Attorney General, on the relation of one Alfred W. Potter, is plaintiff and the said company and others are defendants, in which, amongst other things, the status of the said company is called in question. It is further declared that the company hereby incorporated, notwithstanding any judgment or decision that may be given in said action at the suit of the Attorney General, shall be, and continue to be, duly incorporated under this Act.

Motion agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. FORBES moved to amend subsection 2 of section 4 by inserting after the word "into" in line 24, "Caledonia, in the county of Queen's."

Amendment agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. FOSTER.

IN COMMITTEE-THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 46) to incorporate the Trans-Canadian Railway Company.—(Sir James Grant.)

Bill (No. 119) respecting the Shore Line Railway Company.—(Mr. Gillmor.)

Bill (No. 84) to amend the Act incorporating the Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters.—(Mr. Northrup.)

Bill (No. 100) to incorporate the Dominion of Canada Trusts Company.—(Mr. Smith, Ontario.)

Bill (No. 105) to incorporate the Ottawa Land and Security Company.—(Mr. McKay.)

QUEBEC, MONTMORENCY AND CHAR-LEVOIX RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 98) respecting the Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix Railway Company.— (Mr. Amyot.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FREMONT moved:

That subsection 3 of section 9 be amended by adding, after the words "or in the adjoining parishes," in the sixth line thereof, the following:—"on the north shore of the River St. Lawrence," and also by adding, at the end of the said subsection, the following words:—"Provided always that nothing in this Act shall be construed as conferring on this company the exclusive right to construct and operate lines of electric railway or tramways in the city of Quebec or in the neighbourhood thereof, or in the adjoining parishes."

He said: The object of the first part of the amendment is to prevent interference with the construction of tramways on the south shore of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. AMYOT. I accept that part of the amendment.

Mr. FREMONT. With regard to the second part, the object is to prevent the municipalities interested being at the mercy of the company, should they desire to have electric tramways. If the Act incorporating this company gives it the exclusive right of building tramways or electric railways in the municipalities interested, then these municipalities will be at the mercy of the company. According to the municipal law of Quebec, the municipalities have the privilege of granting to any company this exclu-But if the exclusive right is sive right. given by this Bill to this company, then the municipalities will be prejudiced.

Mr. HAGGART. This Bill does not give the company an exclusive right. The municipalities may make any agreement they like or no agreement with it. Mr. FREMONT. Can they make an agreement with any other company.

Mr. HAGGART. Certainly.

Mr. FREMONT. This company has already been incorporated by the legislature of Quebec, and under that charter they pretend that they have the exclusive right. To my knowledge, they have protested different municipalities against granting any charter or privilege to other companies. This amendment will make the law clear and cannot injure the company in any way.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If my hon friend reads the Bill, he will find that no exclusive rights are given to the company. I do not see what necessity there is for this amendment. The Bill is perfectly clear. It simply gives a charter to this company without any exclusive right.

Mr. MULOCK. Does it create a new company?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. The other company had the local rights and privileges. That has been done away with altogether, and it is a new company altogether.

Mr. MULOCK. Is not the old corporation merged into this one?

Mr. HAGGART. Only so far as stated in the Bill.

I understood the hon. Mr. MULOCK. gentleman from Quebec County (Mr. Frémont) to say that this company, incorporated by the legislature of Quebec, claims, under its charter, to have exclusive rights, and now we are confirming this charter. There was a doubt in my mind, with reference to the charter, in view of the notice we have given, whether we should be safe in passing the Act without limitation. If charter itself gave them exclusive rights, I for one would be unwilling, without further consideration of the question, to assent to the perpetuation of that power. Has that Act been examined by the committee?

Mr. AMYOT. There was the committee, and a sub-committee, and it took three days, I think, to examine and discuss the matter.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon member for Quebec County tells me that the main committee did not see the original charter. I was on the committee when this Bill was under discussion, and I must say that I have no recollection of the charter having been gone into to see what we were perpetuating. It was not produced.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My recollection is that it was.

Mr. TARTE. The local charter does not give any exclusive right.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. member for Quebec County says it does. The simplest way would be to negative such an assertion or examine the charter. I would be unwilling, for one, that the committee should endorse all the powers in another Act without knowing what those powers are.

Mr. BRYSON. During the time the sub-committee had this Bill under consideration, the hon. member for Quebec County (Mr. Fremont) was present and stated his objections to this clause. The matter was threshed out before the sub-committee, and it was thoroughly understood, I think, by the chairman and those present-I understood, for one—that they had no exclusive rights, that the charter did not interfere with the rights of the municipality. And the hon. gentleman who proposes the amendment was perfectly satisfied that no rights were interfered with, and that the present Bill gave the company no rights they did not have before. When the Bill came before the Railway Committee, this clause was allowed to go as it had been amended by the sub-committee, and it was said that no exclusive rights were given to the company seeking incorporation under Bill (No. 98).

Mr. FREMONT. If that is so, what objection is there to stating it in the Bill. It would prevent any misinterpretation, and I do not see what harm could follow.

Mr. HAGGART. It may be a dangerous limitation of the powers of the company. I do not know what would be the effect of giving them a charter containing a declaration that they have no exclusive rights. I do not think the hon. gentleman's interpretation is right, I think they acquire no right under this charter that they did not possess under the old charter.

Mr. FREMONT. I insist upon the first part of the amendment being inserted.

Mr. AMYOT. That is already stated in the Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. There is already, a limitation in the clause, but, perhaps it does not cover what the hon. gentleman wants.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Mills, Annapolis). It is proposed to amend subsection 3, of section 9, by inserting after the word "parishes" in the 26th line the words "on the north shore of the River St. Lawrence."

Bill, as amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

LINDSAY, HALIBURTON AND MATTA-WA RAILWAY.

House proceeded to consider amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 80) to incorporate the Lindsay, Haliburton and Mattawa Railway Company.

On second reading of amendment,

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis) moved:

That it be resolved that said amendment be disagreed to, because it is expedient to leave the question of drainage rendered necessary by the construction of railways chartered by the Parliament of Canada, to be regulated in the manner provided by the Railway Act, and that a Message be sent to the Senate, to inform their Honours of the reason why the House has disagreed to their amendment.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I believe that these Senate amendments are proper. think when this Parliament incorporates a railway company that runs through any province, the company, as landholders in that province, as property holders, ought to be subject to the same rules with regard to municipal drainage as any other proprietor within the limits of the province. It seems to me that is a most just proposition. Ir. the first place, I do not think this Parliament can, and I do not think it ought, to make any attempt to protect a railway company from being compelled to keep open a natural waterway, and to put no impediments in the way of drainage, just the same as any other private proprietor. I do not think a railway company ought to stand upon a different footing. The law of Ontario makes the railway companies that are incorporated by the province, subject to the drainage laws precisely the same as any other landholder in the country; and they also declare, I think, in their Actthey certainly did some time ago-that the railway companies incorporated by the Dominion should be so subject, so far as the law would make them liable, leaving the question open, because there was some doubt as to the jurisdiction. I do not think there is doubt, but this Parliament at all events, ought to put in every railway charter where a company is incorporated, a provision that the company shall, like any other proprietor in the province, be subject to the laws relating to drainage. In many cases farmers have been well nigh ruined by impediments put in their way by the construction of railways, by the company, perhaps, making a high embankment, without any proper arrangement for drainage and back water, or where there is no natural waterway.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman is opening up a very large question, and a very important one, I admit. The view I take of it, expressing my own personal view, is that we have been legislating for railways which were built under charter obtained from the Parliament of Canada, and those railways are regulated by a Railway Act the making of which has caused a great deal of talk, and a great deal of labour, so as to make it as perfect as possible. The point I wish to make is this: I think the Railway Act should not be destroyed piecemeal. If it is considered necessary to make amendments to it, this should be done

Act, and changes and amendments should be made with due consideration. If we begin piecemeal as cases come before Parliament to cut into the Railway Act, I think we will be proceeding without any system and it will be injurious to the legislation affecting railways. But I believe that these matters are controlled by the Railway Act. If Parliament in its wisdom considers that the Act should be changed, we should amend it, but I do not think it would be right or prudent now to cut into it.

Mr. BRYSON. The point taken by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is well taken, and from my own knowledge I have seen considerable trouble arise from the drainage question. Clause 3 reads as follows :—

The company may lay out, construct and operate a railway of the gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches, from a point in or near the village of Gelert, or the village of Haliburton, on the Midland division of the Grand Trunk Railway, to a point at or near the village of Mattawa, in the district of Nipissing, crossing the streams forming the Madawaska and Petawawa rivers, and near Great Opeongo Lake, with a branch line starting from or near the aforesaid village of Gelert towards the village of Minden, and onwards, via the village of Dorset or Colebridge, to a point at or near the village of Huntsville in Muskoka; and with another branch from the main line at or near Great Opeongo Lake to the Ottawa River at a point between Deux Rivières and Rockliffe, in the county of Renfrew.

I desire to point out this: the Ontario Government legislated in the direction making the railway companies responsible for the drainage because in most cases the lines of railway were running through settled portions of the country. Let me point out to the hon, gentleman who took objection that seven-eighths of the line now under consideration will be built through forests. So there will be no harm done by allowing the amendment of the hon. member for Annapolis to pass, and the hon. member for Bothwell might, as regards this road, which will be a very difficult one to build as it will cross several streams, allow the amendment to pass.

Mr. BOYLE. While I am not prepared to express any opinion as to the propriety or impropriety of the amendment of the hon. member for Annapolis, the regulations for drainage in the Dominion are very vexatious and annoying throughout the country generally. I am familiar with the system here, but I am not quite so familiar with the Ontario system. I hear on every hand praise given to the Ontario system of settling this question. The difficulty in regard to the Dominion Act is this, that a culvert cannot be extended or drainage facilitated without any application being made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. So soon as that requirement is thrust in the face of a municias we proceeded when we formulated that pality by a railway committee, the municipality subsides and accepts whatever terms it can make without going to that trouble. A Bill was passed through the Senate, initiated by Senator McCallum, dealing with this matter, and it was drawn substantially on the lines of the Ontario Railway Act, but when it came before the Railway Committee of this House it was thrown out. Promises were then made by the then Premier, Sir John Macdonald, that legislation would be introduced at a later date. A reform is certainly necessary in this direction, and it is high time that an amended Bill should be submitted to the House to remove the present difficulties.

Mr. CASEY. This is a subject in which my county is particularly interested. consequence of that interest, I introduced a Bill on the subject this year, and the principle embodied in it is the only one on which we can deal with this matter. That principle is to subject the railway companies o'clock. to the legislation that may be in force in the different provinces where the railways are in operation. I was glad to hear from the Minister of Railways on another motion moved by me concerning railways, that the position taken by me that matters concerning the running and management of railways came properly within the domain of the provincial legislatures was correct. I expressed the hope then, and I repeat it now, that the Minister will take the same view in regard to the legislation new under consideration. Ontario has a most admirable system provided by law for settling questions connected with drainage between railway companies and private parties. It contains special provisions to safeguard the interest of the railway companies in such a matter as drainage operations, and it provides that drainage operations shall be carried on so that they may not endanger the safety of the track; in all other respects, however, the railway company is treated as it should be, like any other owner of land. Such is the position that should be taken. I hope the slight discussion on the question which has taken place may open the way for legislation on a future occasion. I intend to re-introduce my Bill next session, and I hope to obtain the support of hon. members who take the same view as I do of the matter, as the law in its present shape leaves the farmer and any private landowner entirely at the mercy of the railway company.

JAMES BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

House proceeded to consider amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 87) to incorporate the James' Bay Railway Company.

On second reading of amendment,

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis) moved:

That the amendment be disagreed to, because it is expedient to leave the question of drainage necessary for the construction of railways chartered by the Parliament of Canada, to be regulated in the manner provided by the Railway Act.

Amendment disagreed to, on division.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

PRAYERS.

THE COMPANIES ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 138) to amend the Companies Act.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the nature of the Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. The simple purpose of the Bill is to make a change to bring the time for holding real estate into consistency with the legislation lately passed by Manitoba. It extends the time from seven years to twelve years.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to point out the difference between the law here and the provincial law as to the reversion of proper-Under the Dominion law, if the real ty. estate is not sold, it goes back to the original owner. There seems to be no reason for that. Why should the original owner be entitled to the land because the mortgage company does not dispose of it? The reason the legislature insists on the mortgage company disposing of real estate that comes into its hands is that it is against public policy that it should be tied up; but the original owner has forfeited all his rights to it, and there is no reason why it should revert to him.

Mr. OUIMET. To whom should it revert?

Mr. MARTIN. To the Crown. That is the provincial law, and that is the old law of England. This is similar to the mortmain laws which were passed for the purpose of preventing real estate being tied up in the hands of the church or any corporation. Even were there some arguments for the property reverting to the private owner, why should we attempt to make the company hold it in one way when the province provides another way? Is this not a wholly provincial matter?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is a matter that ought not to be dealt with here at all: it is a matter over which we have no juris-Nor can any legislation we can adopt alter the law in that respect. The only question that can arise in Manitoba is the question of escheats, and the Mercer case decided that where the title of the land was in the province, the escheat was to the Crown as represented by the province. Manitoba, where the title of the real estate is in the Dominion, and has never been in the province, if it were escheated, the reversion would be to the Crown as represented by the Dominion. There is that difference. between Manitoba and the other provinces of the Dominion. But so far as the right to deal with real estate is concerned, the jurisdiction over that is in the province, and we ought not to meddle with it at all. We had better leave it where the law has put it, otherwise we shall simply provoke litigation.

Mr. OUIMET. It is rather late in the day to raise a debate on the constitutional question of the jurisdiction of the provincial and Dominion legislatures. The hon. gentleman knows very well that this Bill only relates to companies that are under the jurisdiction of this Parliament; and so far as these are concerned, this Parliament has authority to make laws to regulate their transactions. and especially their policy—to impose upon them certain restrictions in the public interest; and this is one of the most wholesome restrictions upon loan companies or other companies who have at their disposal the moneys of the public. It is well known that it is very bad policy to allow these companies to hold large quantities of real estate. It is better, in the public interest, that they should dispose of it. This Bill only deals Is it better that the penwith the penalty. alty should benefit the Crown or the individual whose property has been taken away from him in order to pay his debts? I think ideas on such questions prevailing at this end of the nineteenth century are not the same as they were two or three hundred years ago. In those times everything reverted to the Crown, which was held to be the owner of everything in the possession of the subject.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose one of these companies had jurisdiction given by the state of New York to deal with real estate in the state of New York. Do you pretend to say that you should regulate their conduct there? And if you could not in the state of New York, how can you in the province of Manitoba?

Mr. OUIMET. This is a Government Act and concerns companies incorporated according to this Act. I am at a loss to see what the New York companies would have to do here that would not come under the operation of this Act.

Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You have incorporated the company to do business here. Supposing they apply to New York to do business there, you could not regulate the conduct of your company in New York. Take the matter of real estate in any of the provinces, each province decides questions connected with real estate for itself.

Mr. OUIMET. It has long been accepted that the creatures of this Parliament are responsible in every detail to this Parliament in the exercise of the powers which this Parliament confers on them. The larger power employs the smaller. In every instance where this Parliament has legislatedfor instance in matters of insolvency-all the provisions which have been made here with regard to real estate and civil rights are held binding on the provinces under the Insolvency Act. It has been held by the courts that these are only a corollary power of that exercised by this Parliament when this Parliament had jurisdiction over the subject-matter legislated upon.

(In the Committee.)

1. Section ninety-four of The Companies Act, chapter 119 of the Revised Statutes, is hereby repealed and the following substituted there-

"94. The company may hold such real estate as is necessary for the transaction of its business, not exceeding in yearly value the sum of ten thousand dollars, or such real estate as, being mortgaged or hypothecated to it, is acquired by it for the protection of its investments, -and may, from time to time, sell, mortgage, lease or otherwise dispose of the same;

"2. The company shall sell any real estate acquired in satisfaction of any debt within seven years after it has been so acquired, unless there is in force in the province or territory in which such real estate is situate an Act of such province or territory respecting the sale or disposition of lands so acquired and the provisions of such Act are inconsistent with those of this subsection, in which case the provisions of such Act shall apply;

"3. If real estate to which subsection two of this section applies is not sold within the time therein limited, it shall revert to the previous owner or to his heirs or assigns."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to know what is the strict effect of clause three. Does it destroy the debt? Can the owner obtain the reversion of this free from the debt which he had previously created?

Mr. FOSTER. No; this provision is now the law and has been the law for years with regard to this matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The third substance does not say it shall revert free from all claims or other charges.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If it reverts to the owner, there would be no sense in saying that it would revert to him unless divested of any claims the parties might have. It certainly cancels the debt. We cannot make a law here regulating the transfer and disposition of real estate in any province.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We do it every day in matters admittedly within our control.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is it that is within our jurisdiction?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The subject-matter of this legislation.

Mr. MULOCK. Not the exercise of powers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a nice question which has never been settled.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Parsons case decided that we might incorporate a company which wanted to do business all over the country and give them a certain franchise, but could not give them a franchise which would enable them to transact en settember de se

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In any province.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You may give it that capacity according to the decisions, but if it wants to actually deal it must conform to the law of the province and must be enabled to deal by the law of the province. That being so, you cannot undertake to say what the company's rights shall be with respect to that estate; in doing so you are going beyond your power and are invading the powers of the province. The company must obtain from the province the power to deal with real estate and the province must decide upon what condition and in what manner that estate shall be dealt with. You interfere with the policy of the province when you undertake to legislate in this way, and the current of the decisions is thoroughly against the view upon which this legislation is based.

Mr. LISTER. I think the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) takes the correct ground as to the law. We have power under the law to incorporate a company, that is to say, we can give the same power to a company as any individual has throughout the country, to loan money and take land in satisfaction of the debt. But we cannot give a company power to deal with the land differently from the manner in which an individual may deal with it. I take it that that is perfectly clear. If we had power to give that right, we might practically abrogate any of the laws of the province in regard to real estate. This is dangerous legislation. Incorporation can only give power to deal with real estate according to the laws of the province governing real estate. I do not think there can be any doubt that we are exceeding our jurisdiction and encroaching upon the jurisdiction of the province, which is a dangerous thing, and, in this case, can only cause a conflict and uncertainty as to title.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. While I admit that the question raised is a very nice one, I think I am safe in saying that none of these points have been successfully raised in connection with federal legislation, and several Bills involving the same principle have been passed within my own time, notwithstanding the arguments advanced in the opposite direction. I may give the hon, gentleman a familiar case on which doubts have been expressed from time to time in Parliament, and yet the legislation has never been successfully attacked in the courts. Dealing with a subject admittedly within our rights, we proceed to say that certain documents shall be evidence on the trial of matters in that connection, thus dealing with matters that fall within the exclusive power of the local legislature. But in that case we proceed upon the assumption that these powers and this procedure are necessary in order to make the main provision efficient. Then, in the matter of real property, we, for federal purposes, give power to effect a title in the province by means of expropriation—that is the usual term—or by any means deemed sufficient and adequate. The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), discussing the principles that are involved and nice questions that are connected with the subject, gave, as an illustration, this Parliament attempting to deal with matters in a province which fall within the power of the provincial parliament. But it is only incidentally in this connection that these powers are given. The action is taken in each province, the action is taken under powers applicable to all the provinces and in connection with the general subject. This phase of the legislation, the hon, gentleman will remember, has been on the statute-book in this very case, as I am informed, for years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That does not matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The point I raised was that while the property might be transferred, it should be divested of incumbrance, that is, a party should not, by his own default defraud the company of its advance to him. A few words would make it clear and they ought to be added to prevent litigation. I do not object to the principle that companies should be allowed to hold and speculate in large quantities of land they have foreclosed, but we all know that in a number of cases, in spite of their exertions, they have been unable to dispose of that land in seven years. That has been notably the case in Manitoba, as anybody who has A few words had experience will know. added to clause 3 would make the meaning clear and prevent litigation, for instance: "Subject to repayment of the amount then due to the company." I do not object to the company being compelled to return the land, but I object to parties, by their own default. coming into property which, in certain circumstances, may be of great value.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. With all deference, I do not think more apt language could be used to carry out the idea of the hon. gentleman than is already included in section 3. I do not think it admits of question, and I have no information that it has been at any time brought in question. This is merely as to the title and it does not in any sense pretend to affect any claim of encumbrance.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman is assuming that the company has foreclosed a mortgage, but this clause is not limited to titles acquired by the company by foreclosure. It refers to land acquired in any way in satisfaction of a debt.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Under a judgment.

Mr. MULOCK. This Act deals with all classes of companies that may be incorporated under the Dominion Act, and that means every sort of corporation except railway companies, banks and insurance companies. And if the company takes over land, whether by foreclosure or by conveyance, if it is in satisfaction of a debt, the clause is to apply. Suppose a man owns property and is indebted to the company and he chooses to convey his land to the company, even supposing the company never had a mortgage, but simply gets the deed of the land.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No; that is not it.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, it says, "in satisfaction of a debt."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The words are very broad.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All the cases the hon, gentleman has put are covered by the clause.

Mr. MULOCK. The clause declares that a company may hold "such real estate, as being mortgaged or hypothecated to it, is acquired by it for the protection of its investments." If a man mortgages his property, and chooses to convey the equity of redemption to the company in satisfaction of the debt, the mortgage is gone. The hon, gentleman says that at the end of seven years, the question of this clause is to re-convey the property, to revive the equity of redemption. Is that intended or not? Does the hon, gentleman say it follows as a matter of course?

Mr. DALY. No.

Mr. MULOCK. To refer to the argument of the Minister of Justice, I am surprised that in view of the decision, he should have expressed himself as he has done. There is nothing clearer now in the construction of provisional powers, than that this Parliament may create powers that may not be exercised at all. You have the illustrations given in the case of Parsons and the Citizens, which most clearly distinguishes between powers and the exercise of powers. The subject-matter, it is true, may be exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament, but it does not follow that the exercise of powers with respect to that matter is also within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament. Take the case of Parsons and the Citizens, if I remember rightly, the illustration given in that case is that the Dominion Parliament may incorporate a company, and it may be necessary to carry on that company that it should acquire and hold lands in mortmain, yet there may not be a provincial law enabling the company to hold land in mortmain. So the creation of powers and the exercise of powers are wholly different things. The accordance with the local law of the procreation of powers in respect to a subjectmatter exclusively within the jurisdiction that a company were to get with reference of this Parliament, necessarily belongs to to real estate in a province. That is a case this Parliament; but the exercise of those powers, being the exercise of civil rights, must be within the jurisdiction of provincial parliaments. The Minister of Justice will see that that very principle is recognized in the first part of this amendment. I would call his attention to this fact: this Bill deals with two things; the first section saying that a company shall sell within seven years unless there is some provincial law or territorial law to the contrary, in which case the provincial or territorial law shall govern. In the first clause you are recognizing the paramount jurisdiction of the provincial or territorial law. The same principle would apply to the second clause.

The control of the co

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The second clause recognizes all the cases the hon, gentleman puts, that is all the encumbrances.

Mr. MULOCK. If the provincial law will override the Dominion law as to the time during which you may hold property, the like reasoning applies as to what may become of the property at the expiration of that time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We say it shall be done in accordance with provincial law.

Mr. MULOCK. Supposing the provincial law says that at the expiration of the time named the property shall escheat to the Crown for the benefit of the province, what becomes of these words?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the same question in another way. the hon, gentleman is right in that he is right in everything.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I call the attention of the Minister of Justice to a case that came before the Court of Appeals in the province of Quebec. It was with reference to an Act of incorporation. I dare say of some one of those very companies this Act will deal with, incorporated here for the purpose of dealing with real estate in the various provinces of the Dominion. That Act was held to be ultra vires by the Court of Appeals in the province of Quebec. It was so held, I think, by the Supreme Court here. It was taken to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, where it was argued, I think, by the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Girouard) on behalf of the parties who were resisting the validity of the incorporation. The judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was delivered by Sir Montague Smith, and he upheld the validity of the incorporation. He said the Act of incorporation was intra vires of the authority of this Parliament, but that the company could not deal with real estate in any one of the provinces except in between the different departments and cer-vince, that we could not regulate the powers strictly in point. I forget the name of the case, I dare say my hon, friend the Minister of Militia will remember it. In that case it was held that while we could incorporate a company doing business all over Canada, we could not enable it to transact business that arose within the jurisdiction of a province except in accordance with the law of the province.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS-REPRESENTA-TION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA IN THE CABINET.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. PRIOR. Before the House goes into Committee of Ways and Means, I beg to be allowed to make a few remarks. Although I know it is very late in the session, and that hon, gentlemen wish to get away, still I must ask their indulgence to say that I hoped that before the session closed I should have been able to obtain the returns I asked for in the beginning of the session, and thus have been able to give some interesting statistics to the House in regard to the revenue that is paid in by the different provinces, and also the expenditures that are I find that it is made in the provinces. impossible for these returns to be got out in time. They are far more voluminous than I had any idea of, and I would sooner not have them at all, than have them incorrect or incomplete. I shall therefore have to delay my remarks on that subject until next session; but I trust the Government will see that these returns are got out, and that I shall be allowed to see them as soon as possible after this House prorogues. There is another matter, however, I am bound to bring up before this session closes, and that is the universally expressed desire of the people of British Columbia for representation in the Dominion Cabinet. I think that after I have given some statistics, no hon, gentlemen present will think that the request made by the people of British Columbia is at all an unreasonable one. Situated as British Columbia is, geographically, lying, as she does so far from the capital of the country, it is perfectly impossible for the hon, gentlemen composing the Cabinet to visit that province sufficiently often, or for a sufficiently long time, to become thoroughly well acquainted with the wants and requirements of that country. There is no doubt that the troubles that have now and again occurred since confederation between the Government and that province, the friction that sometimes has occurred tain bodies of men in British Columbia would never have occurred had there been sitting in the Cabinet a gentleman who the wants and the requirements of the people of that country. At the present time we time we see there only is one hon, member in the Cabinet representing the vast area west of Port Arthur, and although I can say and say honestly, and not only do I voice my own feelings, but the feelings of the whole of the western members, that the hon, gentleman's opinion is looked up to with the greatest confidence, and we all know that he is a most indefatigable worker; still, no man, however intellectually and physically strong, can look after such a large area, and give that careful attention to it which the people of that district have a right to expect. Not only so, but the people of British Columbia think in all fairness that every province of the Dominion should have at least one representative in the Cabinet. We have seen lately Prince Edward Island, although possessing a very little larger population than British Columbia, situated much nearer the capital than she is, a province whose interests are not nearly so diversified as those of British Columbia, one which is in close touch with New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, that have four or five representatives in the Dominion Cabinet, receive representation in the Cabinet. I am told the Premier, in his usual hopeful manner, expressed the hope that the day is not far distant when the question of locality will have nothing to do with a member's qualifications for a portfolio. He also asserts, I am told, that the policy of the present Government is to do justice to all localities equally, but ignores the idea of the claims of any particular province whatever or locality having anything to do with a member's qualification for the appointment to the Cabinet. This is a most beautiful theory, it sounds well and breathes brotherly love in every direction, but it has not been carried out in practice. We all remember that year after year a member has been promoted to a Cabinet position, because he was a French-Canadian, or a representative Catholic, or a representative Protestant, or a representative Orangeman, or a representative Nova Scotian. All along the line that has been done, and I must say that I do not think the only qualification for gentlemeu being placed in those positions has been ability. We all recognize the ability of the members of the present Cabinet, and I do not think thirteen other gentlemen of equal ability could be found in the House, but, I repeat, that Cabinet appointments are not made on the sole ground of ability. If the appointments were made more by localities and provinces than is done to-day, the country would be better governed in many ways than it is at the present time. The one great argument against giving a Cabinet representative to British Columbia is, I am told, that the population is so small numerically. think I can show the House that although there are fewer people in British Columbia. still she is as well worthy of representation in the Government as any other province in the Dominion. I have gone very carefully into some figures which I wish to present to the House, and I think they will be found to be perfectly correct. I hope I may not offend any hon, gentleman from other portion of the Dominion in giving these comparisons, as it is far from my wish to belittle any other portion of the Dominion, but it is my duty as a representative of British Columbia to make out the best case I can for my own province by truthful figures and solid facts. I am sorry to say that some person or persons unknown, who have more sympathy with the feelings of the members of this House than I have, last night stole my notes and figures from my desk; so if I do not give them quite as glibly as otherwise might be the case, I beg to be excused. happen, however, to have a few rough figures on hand. Before the position can be considered, it is desirable that I should give the population of the different provinces of the Dominion. I find as follows:-

British Columbia	98,173
Manitoba	152,506
North-west Territories	66,799
New Brunswick	321,263
Nova Scotia	450,396
Ontario	2,114,321
Prince Edward Island	109,078
Quebec	1,488,535
Unorganized Territory
•	4 000 000

4,833,239

I have left out Manitoba and the North-west in considering this question, because they cannot possibly be classed with the other provinces, as they are entirely inland. I have, in making all these comparisons, taken the average of the figures of 1892-'93-'94, as I thought it more fair to do so than to select those belonging to one particular year. I find the average exports of the provinces in these years were as follows:—

	$ `	Per head of Population.
Quebec	56,378,631	or $37.87
Ontario	33,058,446	15.63
Nova Scotia	10,776,937	23.92
British Columbia	6,786,402	69.12
New Brunswick	6,690,718	20.82
P. E. Island	1.191.857	10.09

From this table we see that the exports of British Columbia were nearly twice as much per capita as any other province in the Dominion, and the total exports of all the other provinces only amounted to $24.10 per capita as against $69.12 per capita paid by British Columbia. Taking the average imports during the same period, we find:

Quebec	$57,567,349	or $38.67	per head.
Ontario	45,410,562	21.47	* ***
Nova Scotia	9,506,233	21.10	44
British Columbia.	5,515,587	56.08	44
New Brunswick	5,367,193	16.70	44
P. E. Island	520,496	4.77	4.6

So we find in this statement that the imports of British Columbia were 50 per cent more per capita than those of any other province, and our exports per capita are $56.08 against $26.40, the total average per capita of the provinces named. Now, Sir, in Custems duties collected—that is, customs duties alone, not including excise or any other duties—we find for the same period the following results:—

Ontario	$8,144,169	or $3.85 per	capita.
Quebec		5.25	"
British Columbia.		12.99	**
Nova Scotia		2.75	44
New Brunswick	1,027,359	3.19	• 6
P. E. Island	152,592	1.39	"

Therefore British Columbia paid in customs duties alone, nearly two and one-half times as much per capita as any other province in the Dominion. The average of the total revenue—that is the revenue from all sources, including customs duties, excise and every description of revenue,—for the different provinces for the same period was as follows:—

$14,323,627	or $6.77	per capita.
11,910,793	8.00	4.6
1,913,030	4.24	"
1,893,363	19.30	44
1,554,050	4.83	"
252,153	2.31	4.6
	11,910,793 1,913,030 1,893,363 1,554,050	11,910,793 8.00 1,913,030 4.24 1,893,363 19.30 1,554,050 4.83

According to these figures, British Columbia pays nearly three times as much revenue per capita as Ontario and nearly two and a half times as much per capita as Quebec. Although she has less than one-quarter the population of Nova Scotia, she contributed within a very few thousand dollars the same amount of revenue to the Canchequer. Taking all the rest of dividing the total and revenue population, we find by that gives an average of $6.68 per head, against $19.30 per head paid in British Columbia. am fully aware, Sir, that some hon, gentlemen may say that these comparisons are not at all fair, especially with regard to the maritime provinces, owing to the fact that large quantities of the goods consumed in those provinces have paid duty in Quebec and Ontario. I admit that, but that fact holds equally good in the case of British Columbia. Large quantities of goods are consumed in British Columbia which are imported from Montreal and Toronto and other places in the east, which have been duty paid there. I can honestly say that not one cent of duty is charged and paid in British Columbia other than on goods that are consumed in that country. I, therefore, have made no allowance whatever on this account. but have taken the figures as I found them in the blue-books. It was impossible to tell what allowance to make on this account in favour of any particular portion of the Dominion, and, therefore, I think it is the fairer way to make none at all, and to take the original figures as published. I have shown conclusively, Mr. Speaker, that the people 16.8.

of British Columbia are the best revenue producers per capita in the Dominion, and on this account alone they are entitled to the very greatest consideration at the hands of the Government. Let us now see how the shipping in the different provinces compares during the year 1893-94. We will first take the sea-going tonnage for each province and, of course, in this return Ontario does not come in, as she has no sea-going vessels:

British Columbia
Quebec
New Brunswick	1,887,606
P. E. Island	158,628

From this we see that British Columbia comes second on the list and is even ahead of Quebec. In this connection I will compare the principal ports of the Dominion, and I believe that some hon, gentlemen present will be rather astonished when they see the result. Here is the comparison:

	Tons.
Montreal	1,682,887
Victoria, B.C	1,487,793
Halifax	1,329,677
Quebec	1,053,211
St. John, N.B	1,023,655
Nanaimo, B.C	682,614
Vancouver, B.C	608,911
Sydney, N.S. (including Glace
Bay and North Sydney)	523,169
Yarmouth, N.S	286,020

We will now take the coasting tonnage for 1893-94, which is as follows:—

	Tons.
Ontario	11,299,718
Quebec
Nova Scotia
British Columbia
Prince Edward Island
New Brunswick	1,118,787

I will give a statement now of the sea-going tonnage with cargo, that is, vessels arriving and departing with cargo, and not in ballast. This will give a better criterion of the trade done in the different provinces than I have yet given. I have got the figures for years 1874, 1884 and 1894, so that we can see how the trade of the different provinces has increased or diminished when a comparison is made of those different periods:

Quebec		Tons.
1874		1,797,690
1884		2,231,356
1894		2,585,744

The advance of 1894 over 1874 was 43.8 and the advance of 1894 over 1884 was 15.8:

Nova Scotia—	Tons.
1884
1894	2,503,670

So that shipping of Nova Scotia advanced in 1894 over 1874, 73.9 per cent and over 1884, 16.8.

British	Columbia—	Tons.
1884		603,872

The increase of 1894 over 1874 in the case of British Columbia was the enormous one of 701.4 per cent, and the increase of 1894 over 1884 was 227:07 per cent.

New Brunswick—	Tons.
1874	1.184,613
1884	1.210,815
1894	1,167,586

This shows a decrease of 1:43 per cent compared with 1874, and a decrease of 3.57 per cent as compared with 1884.

P. E.	Island—	Tons.
1884		100,248
1894	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	104,710

Showing a loss of 17.9 per cent in 1894 from 1874, and an advance of 4.4 per cent in 1894 over 1884. Of the total sea-going tonnage. with cargo, for 1894, as above stated, we find that the provinces contribute in the following proportions :-

	Per cent.	Tons per capita.
Quebec	31.00 a	nd 1·73
Nova Scotia	30.00	5.55
British Columbia	23.75	20.18
New Brunswick	14.00	3.63
P. E. Island	1.25	:96

Now, Sir, I think I have given sufficient figures to tire the House, if not sufficient to convince the Government that British Columbia is entitled to a representative in Cabinet, in view of her importance as a revenue producer and as a great commercial and shipping pro-Her interests are entirely vince. ferent from those of the North-west Territories and Manitoba. Theirs are almost entirely agricultural, whereas British Columbia's wealth lies in her boundless forests, her inexhaustible and incalculable mineral wealth, and her extensive fisheries. A country with such enormous resources, a country which in a few years will be teeming her golden and silver treasures into the lap of the civilized world in ten times the quantities she can do at present, can. I think, fairly demand a representative in the Cabinet, who knows by long experience what the wants and aspirations of her people are, and who may plead her cause whenever matters relating to her interests are under consideration.. I trust hon, gentlemen will pardon me for having brought this matter forward at such a late period of the session; but it is one very dear to the hearts of the people of British Columbia, and I thought I would not have done my duty if I had gone home without saying anything about it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I am very glad the hon. gen-the session is in its last hours, to make so excellent a presentation of the case of his own province, and to spread upon "Hansard" the information which probably, when read, will be somewhat surprising to those who have not taken the trouble to look into the resources and development of the province of British Columbia, and who have had no idea of how great they were in proportion to the population of the province. So far the hon, gentleman has done his province a service. With reference to the question of representation in the Cabinet, that is rather a delicate matter for me to say anything about. In one way, I hold my own position on choice of the leader and head of the Government, and I would not like to make any positive promise in that respect in the position I myself occupy. Even if I were able to do so, I would feel a very great delicacy if the matter came to a practical issue. My hon, friend, whilst definite enough in the presentation of the claim, and definite enough in detailing the grounds of that claim, in the immense development and large resources of the province, did not exhibit the same definiteness when he came to the question as to which of the members who now represent British Columbia, and represent it so ably and well would become the choice.

Mr. PRIOR. Senator McInnes.

Mr. FOSTER. And between such excellent members in every respect, if I had anything to do with the selection, I, for my part, would feel that I had a task of very great magnitude in discriminating. I am afraid, however, that my hon, friend has almost read himself out of the competition by the unfortunate admission he made. He had some important documents-and the House has had something to say of late with reference to documents. Those documents were for the presentation of his own case in the House, and the hon, gentleman did not take sufficient care to prevent them being extracted from under his hand. So that his case was somewhat damaged by that inattention. Now, my hon, friend must prepare himself for an onslaught from Her Majesty's loyal Opposition; for if he does not take care to keep his own documents of private importance from the hands of the abstractor, they will certainly urge against him that, with respect to the care of public documents of very great importance which would come under his hands, he has proved by this lapse for the moment that he is open for attack. With reference to the province of British Columbia not being represented, of course my hon, friend qualified that, and I think qualified it in very fitting terms. He alluded to the hon. Minister of the Interior who particularly represents that section of the country west of Lake Superior, including the province of British Columbia, and he alluded to him in terms tleman has had the opportunity, even though which, I am sure, were well deserved. As one of the colleagues of my hon, friend, I can bear testimony, and willing testimony. to the carefulness and attention which he gives 10 all matters connected with that large section of the country. I do agree with my hon, friend that the country is so large, and its interests are so varied, that it is very difficult for one member of the Cabinet to properly traverse the whole; but I take exception to the statement, or the implied statement, that my hon, colleague is the only one who represents that section of the Dominion; because, for my own part -and I think I can speak for the most of my colleagues, especially those of us who have had an opportunity of visiting that province and becoming to a certain extent acquainted with it—I can assure my hon. friend that we consider ourselves very much interested in its best development and as representing its best interests. My hon. friend has detailed the surprising statistics of that province with reference to its seagoing tonnage, and with reference to its payment of customs duties, indicating its large consumption of imported goods as well as excisable goods, and the large contribution it has thus made to the treasury of the Dominion, and also with reference to its immense tishing and mining resources. Well, although my hon, friend has not had. the satisfaction of seeing his province directly represented in the Cabinet, he has yet had but as the west gradually opened up, as the the satisfaction of knowing that all this has newer and younger, and in some respects the satisfaction of knowing that all this has been a good deal aided by the policy of the Government. Take, for instance, the large development of trade and the large ton- power of the country gradually, just as it nage he is enabled to show. A certain proportion of that, and not an inconsiderable proportion, at present-and in the future that proportion will every year be enlarged—is due to the policy of the Government in laying the tracks of trade across the Paelfie, with Australia and China and Japan, thus opening to the sea-board provinces the wide field for commercial enterprise which lies in that part of the world,-in our own Australian colonies, peopled with a race like ourselves, and in the other countries densely peopled with a population which in the last ten years, we may say, has made immense strides towards modern life and modern requirements and modern commerce. It is impossible for the province of British Columbia, with its rich resources, to be placed face to face with those countries without in the future enjoying a very large and very profitable commerce, as between this country and those sections of the old world. It is, I suppose, an ideal that in a great country like this-in any country, in fact—a Cabinet should be made up of the very best minds of the country, irrespective of locality, of race or of creed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As at present.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad to have that hearty tribute from my hon, friend as to the status and condition of the members | period in the session when it could be more of the Cabinet. I say that it is the ideal, but I think I speak within the knowledge of all members of this House when I say that that ideal, as most ideals, must be tempered by other circumstances of the country. Our very wide extent, our different races, accentuated by the large populations belonging to them and other considerations, will always, I think, at least for our lifetime, greatly modify the ideal that you ought to make a Government irrespective of class or province.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is a censure of the noble three.

Mr. FOSTER. Again my hon, friend, although he uses the word "censure," does justice to my colleagues at present and of the past by giving them the attribute which is justly due to them. He calls them the noble three, and of course they are. That ideal must be tempered by the questions I have referred to. If you take the history of the United States, I think you will find that the development beginning in the east, the wealth of the country first developing in the east, and the intellectual development of the nation being predominant in the east in the early periods of the United States history, the east practically dominated everything. It practically held the reins of the Government in its hands. stronger life there developed, the west got its hold on the governing and directing gradually became more prominent in commercial and industrial interests, taking its revenge on the east in this way, and sending its strongest and best minds to government and absorbing a large share of the power of government. And this process will continue. My hon, friends have only to live long enough and to keep hopeful long enough to see the very same process in this country. The east must gradually lose its preponderant power as the great west opens up and is populated, and the west will gradually gain the preponderance, not altogether on the line of the march of population but on the lines of resources and production. I do not want to prolong the discussion, but merely make these remarks in reply to my thanking him for having brought the matter before this Parliament; and the head of the Government, no doubt, will read his remarks, when they are print-ed in "Hansard," and give them that careful consideration he always gives such matters, and I hope the time is not too far distant when all these reasonable aspirations of every section of the country will be amply

Mr. DAVIN. I did not know that my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Prior) intended bringing up this matter to-day, and regret he did not bring it up at an earlier fully discussed. At this period I do not rise to discuss the question; but as a reference was made by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) to the North-west Territories, and as we have had a very lucid exposition of the merits of the case from the leader of the House, I can, without delaying the House, say all that probably it is necessary I should say. The leader of the House says very clearly that the true ideal to aim at is a ministry composed of absolutely the thirteen best minds in the Dominion. That is the true ideal he aims at, but the hon. gentleman qualified his statement afterwards by pointing out how difficult it was to attain that or any other ideal. Now, I entirely subscribe to the proposition that the Cabinet should be recruited, as it is in England, from men who carry the greatest weight in the House of Commons, that being the only way in which he can test the ability of which my hon, friend the leader of the House spoke. But the question is one that has to be qualified in a country as large as ours, and that being admitted, we have the second principle, namely, the principle of local representation. Now, Sir, I think it is not unreasonable to say that a province. or a territory for that matter, ought to have representation in the Cabinet qua province.

Mr. LAURIER. I heard that denied the other day by the leader of the House at the time of the crisis.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not want to go into those doleful memories of my hon, friend, and we need not refer to them; but admitting the principle that a province, with a large section of country, should be represented in the Cabinet, no wise argument can be educed therefrom, that sections of a province shall be represented; that, for instance, we shall have a western member for a given province and an eastern and a southern member. Nothing can be said, to my mind, for that kind of localism nor for the moral localism that unfortunately affects the selection of the Cabinet whichever party may happen to be in power. I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the House that we should have an ideal Cabinet, but qualifies that by saying that certain sections of the country should be almost necessarily represented. I think there is a good deal to be said for his statement of the case. I will make a reference, in the same spirit, if not exactly in the same language as my hon. friend used, to the Minister of the Interior. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, as I have said elsewhere—as I have said in speaking in a quasi-public place some years ago within the sound of my voice at present—to my mind is, with one exception, the most satisfactory Minister of the Interior we have ever had, and with regard to that one exception, I do not think he is ceived from him. I believe that no man cculd be more interested in the welfare of the North-west Territories, Manitoba and British Columbia. But supposing you had three or four ministers joined into one, supposing you had the ability of three or four men conjoined in one, look at what you have to do. He has to attend to immigration and to the administration of the land and to our Indians, and I say that it is not possible that all those western interests can be attended to by one man. If you had only a Cabinet of seven or eight men,—eight as they have in the United States—it might be unreasonable to ask for representation from each province or territory; but when, as pointed out by my hon, friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), we have two members from New Brunswick, which has about 27,-000 square miles, and two from Nova Scotia, and one member without a portfolio from Prince Edward Island, which is about 2,000 miles square, the case is altogether different. And when we have five members in the Cabinet from these provinces by the sea, I think it is not unreasonable for the member. of Victoria, nor would it be unreasonable for any member from the west to utter the thought we have heard to-day. The main interests of Canada are involved in the progress of Manitoba, the North-west and British Columbia. And, Sir, the sentiment of provincial representation does obtain. I remember very well, shortly after the Hon. Thomas White died, a gentleman who is now a distinguished member of this House coming to me and saying: Whom do you think ought to be appointed Minister of the Interior? You know that is an Ontario portfolio. I find there is a strong sentiment in every province as to the number of members they are entitled to; and I have no doubt whatever that one of the considerations that would affect the action of the Prime Minister or the leader of the House if they were called upon to deal with this question would be the pressure that would be brought to bear from the large as well as from the small provinces now in possession of a preponderant influence in the Cabinet. But the time will come, there can be no doubt. I agree with the leader of the House in everything contained in his lucid speech in answer to my hon, friend from Victoria, except one point. He said: Live in hope, grow old, let gray hairs mingle in those—well, I cannot say "curls"— have said elsewhere—as I have said in speaking in a quasi-public place some years ago within the sound of my voice at present—to my mind is, with one exception, the most satisfactory Minister of the Interior we have ever had, and with regard to that one exception, I do not think he is in any way inferior. I never could wish for more attention to any business I bring before the Interior Department than I re-dealt with, instead of having one mind to there. On the other hand as I say there is occupy itself with these stupendous pro- an intimate relation between immigration blems which my hon, friend the Minister of and the administration of the land. My the Interior has to deal with? Why, Sir, take the one question of immigration. hold that that is the one great question for Canada at this hour. The statesman who can solve the problem which is constantly raised from the Opposition benches and which was raised from these same benches when the Conservative party were in opposition—the question of stopping the exodus, and the other part of the same question of bringing in of large numbers of immigrants to the North-west-will solve the greatest problem before the Dominion of be convinced that the North-west Territories Canada to-day. The administration of our and Manitoba are really as has been said lands, the administration of the Indians are from every quarter, the hope of Canada, also questions of the greatest magnitude. There the great battle of our national To-day the Minister of the Interior has future and independence will be fought out. more weighty problems presented to him for The hon, gentleman did not move a resolu-solution, I believe, than has any of his col-tion, and I was not aware that he was going leagues. There is another question, one to bring up this question. But I support the which has been dealt with by men who position he has taken, and I desire to do could not possibly know anything about it, what I can to impress his views upon the the question of the North-west mounted Prime Minister. And let me impress upon police. If we had always had the administ the Prime Minister that the portfolio given tration of the North-west mounted police to my hon. friend should be one not into the hands of my hon. friend the Minister volving the care of many documents. I of the Interior—and if it is under the containing the care of the leader of the trol of any Minister it ought to be under House is quite right about that. Either the his control.—I do not think we should have documents should not be numerous, or a had the numbers of that force reduced. The hon. Minister has lived in that country from the first; he knows that country, he is in touch with it. But, Sir, we had another gentleman, a man, undoubtedly, of great ability, in charge of this subject when that policy was resolved upon. That gentle-man made a trip to the North-west Territory: he consulted entirely with officials and not for one moment with members of Par-liament as to what should be done. This policy was resolved upon without our knowing that it was to be followed. No Northwest Minister would have attempted such a thing; he would not dare to do it. My hon. friend the leader of the Government is a man of great experience and great ability. But one requires to be brought face to face with the facts of a problem in order to be able to solve the problems that arise from those facts. And, unless the leader of the Government has an insight into questions not possessed by other men, he cannot possibly be sufficiently acquainted with the condition of the North-west or the work that the North-west mounted police have to do in order to form, as at first hand, an opinion on that subject. Sir, the two subjects of Northwest mounted police and the administration of Indian Affairs are cognate subjects, but the subject of Indian Affairs has nothing to do with land or immigration. The poles are not further distant than these, materially or morally. The mounted police are there because the Indians are there, and the Indians are quiet and progressive partly because the North-west mounted police are

hon. friend the Minister of the Interior can hold his own as to what should be done for his own province. As stated by the leader of the House he has presented in an able manner the position of that country and has placed interesting data on "Hansard." With all due respect to the resources of the province of my hon. friend from Victoria, believing as I do that its resources, its harbour, its contiguity to the ocean, must make it a power for Canada and the Empire, he has only to visit the North-west to curator for the documents should be appointed. I contend that there should be a Minister for immigration and Dominion lands. There should be a Minister to take charge of the Indians and the North-west mounted police. I say that these things are related. I say it is not a thing to put off, if it should be done at all, because now is the time, when you are laying the foundation of the country, now is the time when errors of administration, which may come from having too many things to attend to, should be Under these circumstances I reavoided. iterate my dissent from just the one portion of the Minister of Finance's speech wherein he told my hon, friend from Victoria to live in hope and to look forward to the distant dawn.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to deal with the ideal aspects of the question further than to express my gratification with the facts which my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) brought forward with regard to his province, which, I beg to assure him, we all desire to see prosper to the utmost. But I may be pardoned for descending from the lofty heights which have been scaled by the Minister of Finance and his successor, to offer to my hon. friend a couple of prosaic and practical suggestions. and to say to my hon. friend and to the hon. members from British Columbia—there are six of them—that if they desire to attain their object, they must remember, as the last speaker has said, that now is the time; and they must recollect this also, that if they want to make their powers felt, they must kick as a united body. There is a great deal member for Victoria and the hon. member of worldy wisdom as well as sound scriptural warrant in the doctrine that there is have done, unless he could have said: I much more joy over one sinner, let alone six. that repent, than over ninety-nine just men that need no repentance. For the second but you know these other men stand in my practical suggestion, I would say to my hou. way. friend that if he desires, as I do not doubt he does, that the influence of British Columbia should be felt in the Cabinet, let me advise, after what we have seen in this House, Mr. LAVERGNE. If the discussion that that his object would probably be far better has been introduced by the hon. member attained, not by attempting to secure for his province a Cabinet situation, but a controllership.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has said to the Government in effect, Don't listen to the hon, member from Victoria (Mr. Prior) in his demand for representation in the Cabinet for the country west of the Rockies. but bear in mind that Short is your friend and not Codlin. That is the point which the hon, gentleman has pressed with great vigour upon the attention of the Government, and what is more, he points out that he represents a very much larger territory, and therefore should be first considered rather than gentlemen who represent the more distant portions of the Dominion. But I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that the leader of the House, when discussing the subject of the ideal that the Government should aim at, also gave the reason why the Government was utterly unable to attain that ideal. He said that we ought to have the best men, that should be our aim, regardless of all other matters; the Government ought to be composed of the ablest and most influential men of the party. But, said the hon, gentleman, that is an ideal that is unattainable. because there are racial differences which compel us to have recourse to inferior men. We have been unable to attain that ideal, because of difference of race that had compelled us to take into the Cabinet men whom, under other circumstances, we would have been glad to pass over. Now, I do not agree with him as to the want of capacity on the part of the representatives in the Cabinet from the province of Quebec. think the province of Quebec is very fairly represented, and I do not agree with the views of the hon. Minister in that respect. But in respect of the ideal which he savs the Government should aim at, when I look over the Government benches I do not think that the Government is very much worse off with the Minister of Public Works and with the Postmaster General, than they would be with my brilliant friend from Assiniboia, and the eloquence and ability that he might bring to the support of the Government. So I think the hon. Minister was hardly fair to his colleagues in discussing this question as he did. I dare say that he was anxious to hold out hopes to the hon. for Assiniboia that he could not otherwise will endeavour to be friends with both of you gentlemen if you have a little patience, for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) is over, I must call the attention of the House to certain statements which were made on the floor of this House by the Minister of Public Works in regard to a certain post office. The hon, gentleman stated a few weeks ago, that on the 2nd of April last, he had leased a certain building in the town of Laurentides from a person called Ovide Brien. for a term of five years, at the rate of $300 per year. He also stated that it was his intention to spend during the year the sum of $350 to make this building suitable for a post office. Now, looking at the report of the Postmaster General, I see the amount of postal business done in that post office scarcely justifies this expenditure. amount of revenue yielded by that post office to the Government is the small sum of $787.41. On general principles I think this expenditure is altogether unwarranted. But there is another reason which ought not to be lost sight of. The action of the department works a great injury to a man who does not deserve such treatment. The present post-master supplies free of charge the present post office. In the villages or small towns, men who carry on a comoffice. mercial business, are usually appointed to the office of postmaster. While this man carries on his commercial business, at the same time he keeps this post office. It is proposed by the hon. gentleman to lease, in fact he has leased a house at a distance of a few hundred rods from the actual place of business of the postmaster. What is the meaning of this? It simply place means that this postmaster will have to resign his postmastership or engage an assistant to whom he will be obliged to pay about the amount of salary he receives. What are the reasons given by the Minister of Public Works for taking this action? He told the House that he would make an experiment. There are hundreds of post offices in the prevince of Quebec and other provinces where there is more revenue derived for the Government than from the Laurentides post office, and as a rule in these cases the postmaster furnishes the post office or the Government pays a small rent. I could quote a number of cases, but I do not want to enter into these details. hon. Minister, when the case came before the House, gave another reason for his policy. At that time I did not know all the facts of the case. He told the House that the leader of the Opposition should not quarrel with him for making this experiment as he was about to carry it out in the village that was the birthplace of the leader of the Opposition. I do not know whether that is considered a very material reason or not, at all events, if the hon. Minister is in possession of all the facts, this was simply adding irony to injury. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not know, when he said he was doing honour to the leader of the Opposition, that he was simply squeezing out of office a brother of the leader of the Opposition. I do not know if the hon. gentleman has thought this matter over, perhaps he has not.

POST OFFICE AT LAURENTIDES.

Mr. OUIMET. I never knew it.

Mr. LAVERGNE. So much the better. But I should like to place these facts before the House, because I think it is a pretty small piece of business, a small job, and in private business it would be considered so objectionable that men would not do such an act. I consider it a pretty harsh way to treat an adversary. I am sure that the hon. member for L'Assomption (Mr. Jeannotte). who is probably the promoter of this scheme and who has supported it with a great deal of energy in this House, the spirit of chivalry is a dream which has never haunted him. I believe hon, members would pause before adopting such a policy. I do not want to use any word that is unparliamentary, but this is a very extraordinary proceeding. Members of the House are called upon to do honour to the leader of the Opposition by injuring one of his relatives. I am sure hon, members on this side of the House are not desirous of doing so, and I wish to bring the facts of the case before the House so that members approving this policy may know what they are doing. Who will profit by it? It is something unheard of, that in a village with a small population, furnishing a very small income to the Government, the Government should pay $300 a year rent for a building which has never before been rented for more than $3 or $4 a month. It is simply a job to favour some friend of the hon. member for L'Assomption, I cannot see that it is anything else; for the public are not going to benefit in any way, either the people of L'Assomption or the people of Laurentides. If the postmaster is not fulfilling the duties of his office properly, let the Government arraign him or dismiss him; but why injure him without cause and at the same time squander public money for no useful purpose? Are there any complaints against the postmaster? Not that we know of. If so, let the Government come out fairly and squarely and manly and state what charges there are against the postmaster, and try him or call upon him to resign his office. This is a very small matter to wealthy men, or to the country at large, perhaps, but to a man of small means it may be a very serious one. This postmaster was appointed in due course, no one was dismissed to make room for him. Why should he not be properly treated? The post office revenue in the shire town of my own county is more than double that at Laurentides, but we do not dare to ask the Government for a post office or ask it to spend $300 a year rent when at the present time only $5 per month is paid for a good and convenient building and one which is satisfactory to the public. There is no justification whatever in adopting the measure proposed, and for these reasons I move the following amendment:—

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"it appears by statements made by the Minister of Public Works on the floor of this House, that on the second of April last, he has leased from one Ovide Brien a certain building in the town of Laurentides, county of L'Assomption, for the term of five years, at the rate of three hundred dollars per year, with the view of placing the post office of the said town in the said building, and that he proposes to expend this year the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars of the moneys voted by Parliament for the general expenditure of the Department of Public Works to make the said building suitable as a post office;

as a post office;
"That the post office of Laurentides is now supplied free of charge to the public by the postmaster, and that the revenues of the said office are only $787.41;

"That in the opinion of this House there was no justifiable cause for the action of the Minister of Public Works; that it constitutes an unwarranted expenditure of public moneys, and is highly censurable."

Mr. OUIMET. It seems that in this matter there is a misunderstanding all round. The amount of $300 has been expended to establish a post office in the village of Laurentides, in a house rented for five years. What brought this about was the many petitions received from the people of Laurentides, and the petitions from the public bodies of that place, asking for a public building proportionate to that given to other towns of the same size. It must be remembered that the town of Laurentides is the terminus of a railway, a centre of manufacturing, and a distributing point for a large section of that prosperous country which lies west of the River L'Assomption along the River Mas-couche. The revenue of the post office is not very large, I admit, but the village is an important one in a commercial sense.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How does it compare with Woodstock?

Mr. OUIMET. I will not reopen the long discussion in reference to that matter which certainly has made my life miserable since I have been Minister of Public Works, while I have endeavoured to redeem pledges of my predecessors with reference to these public buildings.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We will have to start it over again.

Mr. OUIMET. It is rather late in the session to go into that. The principal grievance of my hon. friend (Mr. Lavergne) is not precisely the expenditure of the $300, but the fact that an injustice may eventually be done to the present postmaster. This matter has been pressed on me for several years, and especially by the late member for L'Assemption, but never was such a grievance as that suggested to me, although it probably has been a public question in the locality. I have not visited St. Lin myself. whole thing has been inquired The into and reported on to me by my officers, and if I had known this amendment was to come up I would have produced these reports. I never suspected that the change would have the effect of injuring the present postmaster, and I am sure the hon, gentleman would say that it would not come to my mind for a moment to injure anybody, and still less anybody connected with distinguished members of this House, and especially with my hon, friend the leader of the Opposition. If I had acted under such a feeling. or if I had taken the step to attempt a kind of a job to favour my hon. friend from L'Assomption (Mr. Jeannotte), I would have made a very grave mistake. Such is not the case at all. It seems to me that of late that would not have been a very satisfactory arrangement, the hon. member for L'Assomption (Mr. Jeannotte) has shown lately that he is the last one to be influenced by any such favour. This expenditure has been made to fit up a good post office building without incurring the expenditure of a new building, and it is the result of a project that I had in mind before. Take a case in point. Here village of L'Assomption, an important place, asking postal accommodation. have told the people of L'Assomption who have no town hall of any import-ance, that if they were to erect a public building themselves and give first-class accommodation in it for a post office, that the Government, instead of building a post office, would be very glad to pay a certain amount in the shape of a good rent to have public offices in a municipal building of that kind. By doing this we would save such large expenditures for public buildings as have taken place in the past. I have frankly advocated this scheme before this House on several previous occasions, and I am sure that the House and the country will uphold me in it on the ground of economy. Now that I have pretty well redeemed all the engagements that have been entered into, I must say that before any other public building is recommended by me to the Government. I will endeavour to devise a scheme by which our towns should be served in turn according to their importance. I intend to carry out that project bona fide, and I hope the country at large will sustain me in it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I can hardly suppose the Minister of Public Works has unappeal to his colleagues whether they are dertaken to deal with a matter which will affect the public policy of the postal department, without consulting the Postmaster General. Now. Sir, when you look at the facts, you find that a very large number of the postmasters in Canada are country merchants. In the small towns and rural districts, in order that the postmaster may be enabled to accommodate the community by keeping a post office with as little charge to the public revenue as possible, you permit him to carry on some other business in connection with his duties as postmaster. The Minister of Public Works has not indicated that he intends to make a new departure. But he intends, presumably with the consent of the Postmaster General, to adopt a policy which is to enormously increase the charges on the public revenue for the salaries of postmasters, by revolutionizing the former practice, and by insisting that postmasters in every instance shall be persons who shall engage in no other business, except their official duties in connection with the postal department. Sir. that is not the object. Listening to the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works, I hoped when he declared that he was ignorant of who the postmaster was. that he would at the same time have declared that he had been imposed upon, and that he would abandon the project in which he was engaged, and would permit the postmaster at that place to continue to discharge his duties hereafter as he had been doing heretofore. But that is not the position taken by the Minister. I do not know whether the Minister knows it or not, but I called upon a prominent supporter of the Government from the hon, gentleman's own province, who I believed would communicate the matter to him, and I told him who, at that place, the postmaster was, and what seemed to be the intention of the representative of that locality. if not the intention of the Minister himself, What are the facts? The building which the hon, gentleman has rented for $300 a year stands on the assessment roll of the village at $1,000. Here is a proposal to expend in rental 30 per cent of the assessed value of the building. But that is not all. The hon, gentleman intends to have appointed postmaster the proprietor of the building. That is the position the hon. gentleman occupies before this House. He may say that he did not intend to wound the feelings of the hon. leader of the Opposition; but, Sir, the facts connected with this case proclaim the matter louder than any words he can use. He knew the postmaster was the brother of my hon, friend who sits beside me; and, in order to drive him from his position, knowing that he could not abandon his business as a merchant, the hon. Minister undertakes to put the post office into the hands of another man, in a village where the revenue of the post office is less than $800 a year. I appeal to the hon. leader of the Government in this House whether he is going to permit, and I going to permit the offices of this country and the official duties devolving upon the Government to be used as instruments to make war on men on this side of the House. That is the position in which the matter stands, and there is no man outside of this House, on either side of politics, who is of so mean a disposition that he will give his countenance or support to the position the hon, gentleman has taken, if not on his own motion, at any rate on the motion of the representative of that constituency. should the Postmaster General have done in this case, if he were approached by a representative with such a proposition? Why, Sir, he should have informed him that this House is composed of honourable men, that the warfare between parties in this House shall be an honourable warfare, and not a; warfare undertaken with the view of wounding and annoying and degrading, as far as hon, gentlemen opposite can, the men who are politically opposed to them. I say the position taken by the hon, gentleman is a monstrous position, and I call upon the Postmaster General to stand up here and be an honourable man and repudiate the course proposed to be taken; to say that this money shall not be applied in the way proposedthat it has been voted under a misapprehension of the circumstances; and that the postmaster there, having no charge against him and having faithfully discharged his duties. having engaged in a calling in which five hundred postmasters in other parts of the country are engaged, shall not be marked out for destruction, and shall not be subjected to a demand which is not made upon other postmasters in like circumstances. the honour of the Government, the honour of public men in this country, and respect for party warfare, require the hon. gentleman to make that declaration in this House: and when we are assured that the postmaster shall not be disturbed, that this scheme shall not be carried out, that warfare of this kind shall not be engaged in, then the House may call upon my hon, friend to withdraw his motion: but unless such a declaration is made, the sense of this House ought to be expressed by hon, members voting for that motion, irrespective of party, with the view of maintaining the honour and protecting the dignity of this House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I mean to follow the advice given by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, so far as standing up and being an honourable man in reference to this transaction. Sir, I appeal to those who know my mode of fighting to say whether it is my habit to strike men in the public service because of their political views. When an appointment is to be made, I consider it my duty to take my recommendations from my friends and from those who support the Government. Outside of that, it has been my practise, not only in the department over which I preside at present, but in another department over which I formerly presided, in regard to men who were not appointed by me, but whom I found in office, not to inquire whether they belonged to one side of politics or the other. That is a matter which I consider I have not a right to look into or interfere with. This is my mode of fighting, and it is what I intend to do again. Now, I fully agree with what my hon, friend and colleague, the hch. Minister of Public Works, has said in reference to the growing importance of the town of Laurentides. It is fast becoming a railway centre and a distributing point of considerable importance. The citizens of that town sent in a numerously-signed petition, asking to have a public building for the accommodation of the public there. That will astonish no hon, gentleman on either side of this House. This progressive little town, like other towns, was anxious to have a building more extensive and better fitted for the convenience of the public as a post office; and why the hon. gentleman should show so much indignation, I do not see. I must point out to the hon, gentleman that the appointment or dismissal of any postmaster comes under the Postmaster General and not under any other department. and a change of building does not at all carry with it a change of the postmaster.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon, gentleman suppose that a merchant can abandon his business and go into a separate building on a salary of $300 a year or less?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There again I am not able to follow the hon, gentleman. The fact of a man being a merchant and receiving $300 a year additional as postmaster, would not prevent him attending to his other business. He might have somebody else to look after the outside business. In any case, that is a matter for discussion, and it can be settled only by the postmaster himself, who decides what is best for him to do-whather to remain where he is and continue his commercial pursuits, or to be simply post-I repeat that the change of the master. postmaster is not at all to be looked on as the change of site. following stating that, I hope every hon. gentleman will understand that my intention is not to remove the postmaster. Public life is sufficiently disagreeable at times without adding to the ordinary warfare such means as the hon. gentleman has suggested and which he properly characterized. Cases have come to my notice where such a course was urged solely on political grounds, and I have invariably refused to interfere on that ground. Whether it be a mistake to have changed the post office or not, the removal of the postmaster had nothing whatever to do with it. The hon, gentleman says the property is valued on the assessment rolls at $1,000. Well, Sir, it is well known that in country municipalities, property is valued far below its real worth.

Mr. LAVERGNE. In a few cases, but not always.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It has always been so valued in the numerous cases that have come under my notice, both when acting professionally and since I became a member of the Government. The hon, gentleman's experience appears to have been different. However, that is a part of the case that I have not gone into, and I regret that this matter should have been brought up without preliminary notice having been given to me, as I would have been glad to put before the House the petition for a better building and other documents in connection with the matter. As I have said, this must not be considered as a dismissal of the postmaster.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. You force him to resign by making the change.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not see any reason why he should resign, but if he wishes to do so of course I cannot prevent him. Had notice been given to me of this motion, I would have had all the papers here, which would show that the change was made because of the petition to the Minister of Public Works from those interested in the community.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) Speaker, the hon. Postmaster General who has just resumed his seat, told us that he is not in the habit of striking his opponents in the back; but if he concurs in a proceeding which is nothing more nor less than an attempt made to accomplish the dismissal or force the resignation of a political opponent, I think he is just as guilty as the Minister who bears the responsibility of the deed. However, after the explanation given by the hon. Postmaster General, I hope this change of post office and the whole transaction will be abandoned, for the very reason alleged in the amendment now before the House. The population of the town of Laurentides and its post office receipts do not warrant the expenditure of three hundred dollars a year rent for a building which stands on the assessment roll of the village at $1,000. In spite of all the fine words of the hon. Postmaster General and the hon. Minister of Public Works, it is clear that this is a barefaced political job, prepared no doubt by the hon, member for L'Assomption (Mr. Jeannotte), previously to his recent vote of want of confidence in the Government. The hon, member has no doubt recorded his vote with so much the more pleasure as he had redeemed the pledge given by him to his friend Brien, that this change of building would be made, not to mention the credit of having given a post office building to the town of Laurentides; and furthermore, as he enjoyed, in the eyes of the Liberal voters of his riding, the advantage of having recorded his vote against the Government, winning thereby the sympathy of the Government yield to that influence, in certain voters. Therefore, it would answer no purpose to deny that this small piece of business is anything else than a job to favour a friend, Mr. Brien, in paying a rental of $300 a year for his house, which has never, up to now, been rented for more than sixty or seventy dollars a year, and then compelling the present postmaster to resign his position. It is impossible for a postmaster who is at the same time a merchant-a calling in which are engaged hundreds of postmasters in nearly all the parishes of the province of Quebec and in the Dominion-and who gives his whole attention to his business, with a small salary of $200 or $250 a year, to keep the post office outside of his house, otherwise he would be forced to pay to another person the salary he is paid as postmaster. I had the good fortune of paying a visit to the town of Laurentides last fall. It is a pretty little town, the birthplace of the hon, leader of the Opposition. I have found, however, with regret, that instead of progressing that town had lost in population, according to the census returns. Does it not strike us as a very extraordinary policy for a Government to increase the post office expenses, at the very time when there is a decrease in revenue. Such an expenditure cannot be accounted for, except that it is a job to favour some political friends and create trouble to a political opponent, such has been, no doubt, the purpose of the hon, member for L'Assomption. But I acquit of any personal intention in the matter the hon. Minister of Public Works and the hon. Postmaster General. The hon. Minister of Public Works said that what brought about this decision, taken with regard to a city with so small a population and which yields only a small revenue, was the many petitions received from the people of the town of Laurentides and the petitions from the public bodies of that place. If that were true, how do the hon. Ministers account for the fact that, as yet, no decision has been arrived at, with regard to the petitions sent to the Government, these ten years asking for a public building for the town of Montmagny; and in spite of the fact that the population of that rown and its postal revenue are more than double those of the town of Laurentides; how is it that those petitions have created no impression on the minds of the Ministers? The citizens of the town of Montmagny, through their municipal council and their representatives, have asked the Government these ten years, either by request, or by resolution, to build a post office for the accommodation of the public there. Up to a quite recent date, the post office was kept in a small room measuring hardly ten feet square; the office was sadly neglected, and the public did not find any accommodation suitable to a town of such importance. Now, if the petition of the people of the town of Laurentides carried with it such weight, why does not the same way as they did, when the town of Laurentides was at stake? This discrimination arises simply from the fact that the former is represented on the floor of this House by a Liberal, while the latter is represented by a Conservative. There can be found no other ground for this discrimination, as the hon, member is favourably disposed towards all the localities which have a claim to his favours. No doubt the hon, member, who has achieved such success, wishes to fortify his position by extolling the favours distributed by the Government. Therefore, I am ready to support the amendment of my hon, friend the member for Arthabaska (Mr. Lavergne) on the ground that the Government are doing an injustice to the town of Montmagny. I am disposed to vote in favour of the amendment, because the policy which the Minister of Public Works intends to pursue in the future is, as I said a little while ago, in the matter of public buildings, to serve in turn the different towns according to the importance of their population and the postal revenue they yield.—a policy which should have been carried out long ago in the case of the town of Montmagny,-and furthermore, because the Government, while granting favours, as in this instance, to small localities to the detriment of more important towns render it impossible for themselves to do justice to every one. Although I wish to see the town of Laurentides make rapid strides towards progress, and in spite of all my regret at seeing her decreasing in population, still, I cannot help censuring the Government on the ground of that useless expenditure. Then, as a corollary of what I have said, I blame the Government for having undertaken to pay $300 a year rent for that building, which had never before been rented for more than $60 or $70 a year, I arraign also the Government on the ground that their action is equivalent to an attempt to force the resignation of the postmaster, or oblige him to pay to a clerk the salary lie gets as postmaster.

Mr. McMULLEN. In looking over the Postmaster General's report, I have taken note of some of the places, the revenue of which is far in excess of the revenue of this post office and the rents of which are far lower. They are, for instance:

•		Rent, Fuel
	Revenue.	and Light.
Amherstburg, Essex	$ 1,630 00
Beamsville, Lincoln	1,377 97	60
Beaverton, Ontario	1,630 97	40
Bobcaygeon, Victoria	1,505 25	60
Bolton, Peel	1,301 05	60
Bracebridge, Muskoka	3,035 88	120

Take the places in my own riding, where there is a larger amount of receipts:

	Postal Rent, Fuel
	Revenue. and Light.
Palmerston, Wellington.	$ 2,272 00 $ 120
Mount Forest	4,270 00 180
Harriston, Wellington	3,344 00 140

These facts go to show that this is nothing but a barefaced political job—the renting of this building at $300. I defy the Minister of Public Works or the Postmaster General to point out a singe case in the whole Dominion where the rent paid for post office accommodation is so completely out of proportion to the amount collected for postal revenue. Not one-half the rent is paid in any other place where the receipts are only $800, as is paid in this place where $300 is paid for post office accommodation. Again, we find the Minister says that the Government are auxious to utilize public buildings, such as town halls, for the post offices and pay a reasonable rent for accommodation. But in Prescott where there was a good public building and a post office in it, they took the post office out and built a new one, directly in opposition to the principle laid down by the Minister of Public Works. If the statement of the Minister of Public Works be true, it is evident that he has been deceived in this matter. This postmaster will have to resign, because he cannot run a post office in a building distant from his ordinary place of business, and at the same time run his business without increasing very largely hands, and the remuneration would justify not him in so doing. The scheme has been prepared in an effort to accomplish the dismissal or force the resignation of the present postmaster. hope that the hon. Postmaster General, after getting to the bottom of these facts, will show that he is not to be made a tool of and that he will manifest his displeasure with the people who led him into this trap by refusing to carry out their scheme. If this proposal to pay $300 rent for a post office in a place where the receipts are only $740 were carried throughout the Dominion. the Post Office Department would pay three times what they are paying to-day for post office accommodation. Take, for instance. the town of Woodstock. The receipts there are about $16,000 a year, and the rental paid for the post office is only $300. No doubt there is some favourite to be rewarded by giving him three times as much as would be a fair rental for his premises. The assessed value of this property is $1,000, so that this rental represents a return of 30 per cent upon the assessed value of the property. The hon. Postmaster General and the hon. Minister of Puolic Works should try to steer clear of this little piece of political manipulation, which will undoubtedly tell against them before the public. He says this place is an important railway centre. How many places are there throughout this country of which that may be said yet which have no public building. Take, for instance, Palmerston in my own riding. It is a very important railway centre and the post office receipts are $2,500. There are many other places throughout the west which are important railway centres where the rent paid for post office accommodation is $60 or $80 a year. This appears to be on a par with the vote for a post office in Marysville. I do not know whether it is because the Postmaster General is ashamed to put in his reports the receipts from Marysville, but you will look in vain for the record of it in this report of the Post-master General. A grant of $8,000 was made three or four years ago to build a post office there and that has been revived this year.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am inclined to think the post office at Marysville has nothing to do with the question under discussion.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have said all I wish to say about the Marysville post office. As to the case we are discussing, its character appears upon its face. There is no other case in the Dominion where $300 is paid for post office accommodation where the post office receipts are only $740. I challenge the Postmaster General, or any other representative of the Government, to cite a case where even half that sum is paid where the receipts are so small. If they can show such a case, I will admit that there is half an excuse for this proposal. The proof is clear that this is a piece of political trickery.

Mr. TARTE. The Minister of Public Works has stated that he did not know the facts of this case. I am quite prepared to accept that statement; but I am also prepared to say that he should have known the facts; they are very clear. The building in question has never been rented for more than $60 or $70, and during many years it has not been rented at all. It is valued to-day at $1,000. The hon. Minister tells us that he has a report from his department. Surely that report should have stated the value of the building and also the name of the postmaster.

Mr. OUIMET. If the hon, gentleman wants me to explain. I may say that that $300 includes the cost of heating, lighting and repairs, and everything in connection with the keeping of the post office.

Mr. TARTE. We now have in St. Lin a perfectly suitable place. My hon, friend knows that I lived in St. Lin in times past, and I know the place well. The building in which the post office now is is a suitable building and is well situated in the centre of the town, while the one to be rented is outside the business part of the town. I do not accuse the hon. Minister of having willingly done what he is accused of doing, but I think that now that the facts are before him he should recede from the position he has taken. The hon. Minister says that this $300 includes the cost of heating. But the present post office building is heated at the expense of the postmaster and we have not! a cent to pay. The facts are clear, and I Government ought to take this matter into think the hon. gentlemen on the treasury consideration, and to agree upon some prin-benches should find some other means of striking at my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. I do not want to dwell long upon this phase of the case. I think the proposal is just about the size of the people who are responsible for it. It is according to their size and to their aspirations. After having said so much, I am sorry not to be in a position to vote, because I am paired.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I have pointed out before, this is only an example of the vicious system that has been adopted by this Government in spending public money without any rule or principle, and it is likely to go on from bad to worse. If there is no principle governing the expenditure of public money according to the revenues received, or for present purposes, we cannot but expect that where one constituency receives consideration such as has been pointed out in this case, the same thing is occurring in other places. To my mind this is simply another scandal in connection with the expenditure of public money. I say it is disgraceful for any member of this House to have to acknowledge that public money is expended on partisan and political considerations. Now, if this is not true, let some hon, member rise and point out that it is not true. As has been pointed out by the hon, member for Arthabaska (Mr. Lavergne), it does not seem to be a very manly and chivalrous manner of disposing of a political opponent, if the statement he makes is correct, and we will know in a few months whether it is or not.

Mr. OUIMET. I may state at once that if this was the fact, or if it had been intended, I would have abandoned the whole thing. But I am not aware of it, and I have every reason to believe that such was not the case. I would not like to appear before the public as capable of conducting such a kind of warfare against any of my opponents.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I could hardly believe myself that it was possible that the gentleman, whom I have known so long and so well, would have been a party to any such transaction.

Mr. OUIMET. • I shall inquire into the facts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. According to the facts brought before the House by the hou. member for Arthabaska, it would look very much as if this was true. However, I am glad to know that no such purpose was intended, and I trust that no such scheme will be carried out. But I wish especially to point out at the present time that if the Government of Canada are going to proceed on such a bad system in the expenditure of public money, worse than this must result, and I think the time has come when the ciple according to which public money shall farmers that they were being ground down by a be expended in accordance with the amount of revenue received at such place. farmers that they were being ground down by a huge monopoly, the Canada Cordage Company, convinced me that if such a thing existed and it

Mr. FOSTER. As this charge against the department concerning the treatment of this postmaster, has been explicitly and frankly denied, I suppose my hon. friend would have no objection to withdraw his motion.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the policy of the Government is all wrong, according to the statement of the Minister of Public Works. In a town of the size of Laurentides, which gives a revenue of only $700, you hire a special building for a post office when the building at present is supplied by the postmaster himself, free of charge, with light, fuel, &c. I think the principle is wrong, and I challenge the action of the Government upon that. Now, I am ready to acquit my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works of any personal intention in this matter. I do not charge him with that. But I point out this to him, that in a case like that where a. postmaster receives a salary of only $250 a year, it is impossible for him to carry on his business in a separate building except by means of his outside commercial busiiness. To compel a merchant who is a postmaster and who serves the public at a salary of $250 a year, and who can only do both businesses with the aid of clerks, to go and hire a special building to carry on the business, is equivalent to compelling him to resign his position.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Before he is report, it printed an edit: compelled to resign, I shall have an opportunity of dealing with the matter from a dealing with my speech: departmental standpoint.

The Tory member Taylor

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before you leave the Chair, even at this late hour in the session, I wish to occupy a very few minutes in refuting a statement that I see in the "Canada Farmers' Sun." Not many weeks ago I made a few observations in the House, and this is the first opportunity I have had since to refer to the charge that has been preferred against me and other members in this, House, in which that paper called I want that paper, or any other cowards. paper in this country, to understand that so far as I myself am concerned, I am not a coward, either in this House or outside of it: and I am prepared to give the editor of that paper, or any other person representing him, an opportunity of discussing that question on any platform in this country. What I said a few days ago is reported as follows in the "Hansard:"-

Like the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I have never favoured employing convict labour to compete with free labour. But at the time the manufacture of binder twine at the Kingston penitentiary was established, the cry among the could be broken up by the employment of prison labour, the sooner that could be done the better. The same thing would follow to-day if prison labour were not employed making binding twine for the benefit of the Canadian farmer, for I am credibly informed, and am satisfied I can prove if a commission were granted, that a combine exists to-day between the Patrons of Industry binder-twine manufactory and the Canadian Cordage Company, so that our farmers would pay much more if it were not for the work of the Kingston penitentiary. I understand that the prison article to the farmers was 6½ to 7 cents per pound, while I know that the other is sold and delivered at a much less price. For that reason. I am quite willing that the penitentiary should continue to turn out binding twine for the purpose of keeping the combine between the Patrons of Industry and the Cordage Company from overcharging the farmers, as they certainly did to a certain extent this year, and would do to a very much larger extent were it not for the industry at Kingston.

After having made these remarks in the House, the "Farmer's Sun" copied an article from the Toronto "World." I hope if the "Canada Farmer's Sun" is not always supplied with the debates of this House, as I think it is, a special copy should be sent to it on the following day after the debate occurs so that it may fairly and truly represent any statement made in this House, because it published a garbled report of what I said, and of what other hon, members said, and, after publishing such report, it printed an editorial article on the question. Here is a portion of the article dealing with my speech:

The Tory member Taylor asserts his ability to prove that a combine exists between the Farmers' Binder Twine Company at Brantford and the Canadian Cordage Company, if a commission is granted.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. If the hon. member proposes to quote from a newspaper any article commenting on any proceeding in the House or the action of any member of the House, I am afraid I shall have to rule that he is out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am reading an editorial article on the binding twine discussion.

Mr SPEAKER. I will read the rule, and the hon, member can determine for himself as to whether he will be in order in reading the article he proposes to read. The rule in regard to reading extracts from newspapers is as follows:—

It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside of the House, and referring to or commenting on, or denying, anything said by a member, or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am quite within the rules, I think, in reading this article.

goes on to say:

Why should he need a commission? Let him tell his story and we give him our assurance that if anything is proven against the management of the Brantford Company the Patron Order will denounce the wrong-doing a good deal more vigorously than Mr. Taylor or any other M.P. can do. Let us have facts and not insinuations. I did not make any insinuation at the time, I stated the plain facts. The article Grit member McMillan took the part of a lawyer admirably to fasten the charge upon the Patrons. Mr. Tupper had a badly befuddled idea in his head, and Mr. McMillan helped him to bring it out.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon, member is clearly out of order in reading this article. It certainly comments on the action of members in this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I will not read the article further in that regard, but I will quote that portion of it which refers to my-self:

"There was a letter addressed to some person," said Mr. McMillan. "I believe so," said Minister Tupper. "That is all I want to know—the Patrons addressing the Government here wanting to enter a combine with the Cordage Company and the Government to put up the price," said Mr. McMillan. "And we would not do it," was the concluding words of Mr. Tupper.

Did you ever hear a lawyer help his witness to get out some important evidence? Not less anxious was Mr. McMillan to help Mr. Tupper to say something that would damage the Patrons.

But the Patrons refuse to be injured by the assault of the cowardly M.P.'s. Mr. Beith, M.P., is a director of the Brantford Company. Why did not they go to him for information? Where was he when the debate took place? Mr. Ballantyne. ex-M.P.P., was in Ottawa last week, and he is also a director of the Brantford Company. Why was he not interviewed and some substantial facts secured? We demand the facts. Who was the writer of this letter spoken of?

In the discussion that took place in which I referred to the matter, there was refer ence made to the letter read by the Minister of Justice, and this editorial asks, where is that letter? I know nothing about it, but I do know that as a representative in this House I do not want to be classed among the members, if we have any, and I do not believe we have, as cowardly and as willing at all hazards to justify the position taken on this or any other question. For myself, I have no complaint to make against the Patrons or the Patrons' company, but, according to a letter of the president of the company, they do not claim to be a Patron institution, but a farmers' cordage company, although there are some stockholders who belong to the Patrons. But they claim credit throughout the country for running a Patrons' binding twine company, and they claim all the credit for having reduced the price. So far as regards the hon. member for West Dur-ham (Mr. Beith), I understand he is not a

Patron, but he is a director in that company, and the article asks, where this gentleman was when the discussion came on? The hon, member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) is president of the Canada Cordage Company. He is also a member of this House, and both of those gentlemen heard my statement; neither contradicted it. nor have they done so since. I am prepared to submit the facts. Before I made that statement, the president of the Brantford Cordage Company met me on the grounds in front of the buildings one day, and inquired if I knew Mr. Stairs. I asked him if he was one of Mr. Stairs' constituents. He said: No: I am from Brantford. Then we opened up a discussion as to the Patrons' binding twine factory. He said he was connected with Farmers' Binding Twine Company, and was president of it, and he asked me if I could find Mr. Stairs for him. I replied that I thought he was out of the city, but that his colleague from Halifax was here, and I would find him. I found him, and the result was a telegram to Montreal to have the member for Halifax, who is president of the Canada Cordage Company, come up. He did so, and they had a discussion, and the result was that the prices of binding twine sold by the Brantford concern and by the Canada Cordage Company have been the same throughout the season-call it a combine, or what you like. I said if a commission was appointed I could establish that there was a combine, and the prices were from three-quarters of a cent to one cent per pound more than for binding twine made at the Kingston penitentiary. letter which the Minister of Justice read that night was a letter I knew nothing about; but I understand that letters have been received, asking the Government whether they were going to raise the price to that charged by those companies. I do not intend to ask for a commission, but I make this statement, that when the Public Accounts Committee is investigating the accounts of the Kingston penitentiary and the price charged for binding twine, I propose to have summoned before that commission the president of the Brantford concern, with his books and his letters that nave been sent out, and I will then be prepared to establish that arrangements were made that the prices should be kept up, although there is a sweeping advertisement published in the newspapers, and a letter from president, which I could read, but I do not desire to occupy the time of the House. repeat that next year, when the Public Accounts Committee is in session, I will establish my position, and I throw out the challenge to the "Farmer's Sun" or to anybody who wishes to go into the matter sooner, that I am prepared to make good the position I took, that an arrangement was made between these two concerns to keep up the price, and make the farmers pay more than they were being charged by and not having been communicated with by the Kingston penitentiary.

COAL CONTRACT, PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. LISTER. Yesterday, in answer to a question on the paper affecting the Department of Public Works, the Minister informed the House that the contract for coal supplied to the departmental buildings in Ottawa during the present year had been let to J. W. McRae & Co., without tender, on the basis of last year's contract, namely, $4.75 per ton, the quantity of coal to be furnished to the departments being 18,500 tons.

Mr. OUIMET. I can inform the hon, gentleman that it is not over 2,400 tons.

Mr. LISTER. Then I misunderstood the hon, gentleman when he made his statement. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that there are other coal dealers in Ottawa besides J. W. McRae & Co., who, if they are prepared to furnish coal to the Government at a less price than J. W. Mc-Rae & Co., have a perfect right to get the contract. I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. T. G. Brigham, a coal dealer in this city, in which he says that he has been prepared to furnish coal, and is prepared to furnish coal to the Government for use in the public buildings at Ottawa at $4.45 per ton. The contract let to J. W. McRae & Co. is at $4.70 per ton, upon the basis of last year's contract. It is hardly fair to the coal dealers in the city of Ottawa to let these contracts without giving them an opportunity of competing. Everybody knows that anthracite coal this year is much cheap-For example, the gas er than last year. works in Toronto are buying their coal this year at $3.90 per ton, and the Government in Ottawa are paying $4.70. Mr. Brigham says in his letter:

I was prepared to deliver this coal for the sum of $4.45 a ton, and should the Government feel like reconsidering their award, I am prepared to accept the contract on that basis.

Mr. Brigham in his letter goes on to condemn the system of letting these contracts without tender.

Mr. OUIMET. In the city of Ottawa, as in almost every other large city in Canada. there has been a combine existing by which we had to submit to fixed prices for coal. and these prices apparently could not be broken down. Last year, after having asked for public tenders, we got a tender from Mr. McRae much lower than the others, and we accepted the price at $4.70 per ton. I thought that I had certainly made a saving of something like $2,000 in closing the transaction. Probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) does not know that not later than a month ago, the city of Ottawa advertised by public tender for coal, and the contrac: was awarded at a price of $6.10 per ton whereas we get it for $4.70. In view of this, to the country.

and not having been communicated with by any one, and being informed by my officers that I could not get it cheaper than from Mr. McRae at $4.70 per ton, I thought I was making very good terms in continuing the contract for this year at that price. Last year's contract was known to everybody, and if Mr. Brigham had been willing to cut down his price to $4.40 a ton, I would be glad to know it.

Mr. LISTER. How could be know when you did not advertise for tenders?

Mr. OUIMET. These gentlemen know very well when is the time to make these contracts. If he thought that he could sell coal for lower than $4.70 per ton, he might have given himself the trouble to come to the office and make the inquiry when there was a matter of 2,500 tons concerned. I thought I made the very best bargain, and I did so on the report of my officers. The thing was submitted to Council according to law, and I believe we got the coal as cheap as we could. Every business man knows that after a daughter has been married she can always find a husband, and so, every time a contract is awarded by the Government there are people always willing to undercut the price, especially when those people think they may gain something by so doing. I myself paid last year $6 a ton for coal in the city of Ortawa, and 1 was told the other day by a dealer that it would be the same price this year.

Mr. TARTE. He knew you were a Minister.

Mr. OUIMET. I have always found since I became a Minister that I have to pay more for anything I get than I did before.

Mr. TARTE. That is what I say.

Mr. OUIMET. That is not the usual contention of gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. They state that a Minister gets everything at half price, if not for nothing. My experience is the very reverse of that, and I find I have to pay more than anybody else. It is just as well that the public should know that, because we have been described as boodlers for so long. As the Minister of Public Works, I buy for the Government 2,480 tons of coal and I pay $4.70 per ton for it. If that gentleman were generous he might come and say to me at least you won't have to pay more for your own coal than you pay for the department. Well, that is not the case, and I do not expect that that offer would be made, nor of course would I accept it, but as it happens I buy my coal from another firm. I give that as an example that Ministers never get their own business mixed up with the business of the Government, and we never profit by anything of that kind. This contract for oal is not only justifiable but laudable, and the result of it has been to make a saving

WINNIPEG GREAT NORTHERN RAIL-

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House do, at its next sitting, resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient, in order to enable the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company to construct so much of their railway to Hudson Bay as reaches from Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan River, to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into a contract with the said company for the transport of men, supplies, materials and mails for twenty years, and to pay for such services during the said term $80,000 per annum, as follows: One-half of the said sum annually, commencing from the date of the completion of one-half of the company's line between Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River, or of the completion of a line from Portage la Prairie northerly to a point of intersection with the company's main line where the latter is located through Township 13, or from Gladstone and to the Saskatchewan River, and the other half of the said sum annually, commencing from the date of the completion of the remaining half of the company's line between Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River; and that in the event of the said company not complying with the conditions to be made in relation to the construc-tion of the first half of the company's line, the Governor in Council may transfer the $10,-000 per annum applicable to such first half to a company authorized to construct a line from Portage la Prairie or Gladstone to Lake Dauphin or thereabouts.

Mr. LAURIER. I desire simply to inquire as to the question of procedure in this case, which may create a precedent, whether the notice is sufficient. The notice was given only yesterday.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is, as I presume the ion. leader of the Opposition contends, that two days' notice must be given of any motion proposed to be moved in Parliament. My own opinion is that when the House has decided that two sittings are to be held in one day, those two sittings constitute two parliamentary days within the meaning of the rule.

WAYS AND MEANS—BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster:

Mr. QUIMET.

That the Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go again into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. CORBOULD. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I wish to make a statement as to a charge that has been made against me by the late deputy warden of the British Columbia penitentiary in a statement filed by him in the Department of Justice. I think that in justice to myself I should take this opportunity of denying that charge. Last year a royal commission was appointed for the purpose of investigating the affairs of the British Columbia penifentiary, and on the report of the commissioner the deputy warden was dismissed. It now appears from the papers which have been brought down, that the deputy warden has filed a statement in the Department of Justice accusing me of having some personal motive for his removal, and alleging that I was one of a syndicate who wished the removal of the penitentiary to a site owned by myself and my friends. I will read the part of his statement to which I refer. It is dated the 21st of December last, and in it the deputy warden says:

It would appear Mr. Corbould, the member for New Westminster is at the bottom of the opposition to my either holding office or being appointed to a post in the institution; and the reason is this. Some two years ago Mr. Corbould undertook to engineer a scheme for the removal of the penitentiary to a site on the opposite side of the Fraser River, which site is, I am informed, owned by himself and a syndicate of friends.

Now, Sir, the late inspector of penitentiaries, in his report, which is embodied in the report of the Minister of Justice for 1894, also refers to the matter in these words:

The part the deputy warden took in defeating the scheme for the change of the penitentiary site accounts for the desire of some one outside the penitentiary to witness his removal. I have no doubt, if the commissioner had been aware of the interests and motives at work against the deputy warden, he would have made a different report.

I say here, as a member of this House, that the statements I have just read are utterly false. I have never owned, nor have I any interest, directly or indirectly, in one inch of the property referred to, nor, to the best of my knowledge, have any of my The late deputy warden and the friends. late inspector knew perfectly well, when they made those statements, that they were false. Certainly, the deputy warden could have ascertained that they were, in five minutes, by applying at the land registry office in the city of New Westminster, but he sheltered himself under the words, "I am informed," and did not take the trouble to give his authority or find out whether The only what he said was true or false. motive I can imagine which actuated the deputy warden or inspector in making those statements was to draw public attention from his misconduct, and utter incapacity.

I asked him whether he would join myself in interviewing the then Minister of Justice We did so, and gave our on the subject. reasons for desiring the removal of the penitentiary. As I have said, the city was then growing very large, and the present site of the building could have been sold for as much as would rebuild a penitentiary on the other side of the river. I also mentioned that a small site would have to be purchased over and above owned by the Government, some twentyeight acres. Sir John Thompson then asked me whether I would write to some person in British Columbia and find out whether this property could be bonded or held until the Government decided whether or wrote and heard nothing more until I returned to my own province, when the gentleman to whom I had written explained that he could not get the refusal of the way prevented its removal. The mere very much, so that perhaps the present-site could not be sold for sufficient to build a new penitentiary, was the cause of the matter being dropped. I desire, as promptly as possible, to express my great regret that the observations to which he has called attention should have appeared, and to explain how they did appear. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I may be permitted to speak again, I may say that Mr. Fitzsimmons was not dismissed in the technical sense of the word. But, on paper? account of the irregularities which were shown to have existed, he was punished by dismissal for five months. In the report, recommending this course, the action was taken without prejudice to Mr. Fitzsimmons' reinstatement. I was at a loss, when the application came before me, as to the means by which I could carry out my predecessor's decision unless I reinstated Mr. Fitzsimmons in the penitentiary at New Westminister. I reinstated him there. I am bound to say that, bowing to the almost universal sentiment of the province of British Columbia, it did not seem to me well if we otherwise arrange, to retain deputy warden in that penitentiary. the evidence before me outside of the report of the commission justified the opinion that the public there, fairly or unfairly, had not that confidence in the deputy warden that it was desirable that an officer holding that hon. SHIPMENT OF BUTTER TO ENGLAND.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) As the hon. Minister of Public Works, who is at the same time Minister of Agriculture, is in his seat, I wish to call his attention to the unfavourable position in which shippers of butter from the district of Quebec actually find themselves. It is well known that shipments of butter are made to Great Britain as an experiment, as far as the district of Quebec is concerned. I have received a letter which I forthwith handed over to the lows :--

I beg to inform you that our arrangements for the year for experiments have been made with port of Montreal than from that of Quebec.

pushing unceasingly the action I have re- to secure in favour of the district of Quebec as great facilities as those afforded to the district of Montreal. I think the shippers from the district of Quebec should not be made to pay any freight on their goods up to Montreal, while they run also the risks of railway transportation, which is always sure to deteriorate this article. It seems to me that the Government should not have discriminated against the shippers of the district of Quebec in favour of those of the There is a considerdistrict of Montreal. able quantity of butter shipped from the district of Quebec. At the time when the Quebec shippers undertook to ship their butter to Great Britain, they were told by the agents of the Atlantic lines that the boats would stop at Quebec and they could load their butter there. The trouble was that when once the boat had stopped at Quehee, these same agents informed the shippers that they could not open the cold storage compartments, because that might deteriorate the goods already stored therein, by letting in the heat from outside. Therefore, these shippers, in order to avail themselves of the facilities offered by the Government, find themselves under the necessity of shipping their butter from Montreal, at their own cost. I feel it my duty to protest against this unjust arrangement which is so damageable to the district of Quebec. Furthermore, the Montreal shippers enjoy a considerable advantage over all the others, in so far as, being on the spot, they are enabled to secure the best places in the cold storage compartments. leaving to the other shippers the rest of the space. I would like the Government to give directions so as to secure a fair treatment in favour of the shippers from Quebec and other places. In the actual state of things, it is impossible to ship from Quebec the quantity of butter that could otherwise be shipped. The disadvantage under which they labour is still more intensified from the fact that there exists a keen competition between the Montreal and the Quebec shippers. I hope the Government will do right and remedy the grievance complained of, by making arrangements more favourable to the district of Quebec, and having the cold storage compartment opened when the ship enters the port of Quebec, to take in its cargo of butter for shipment to Great Britain: and having also a sufficient space reserved in the compartments. The reason alleged against opening the cold storage compartments at the arrival of the ship at Quebec was that the perishable goods would be deteriorated, on account of the heat penetrating into the compartments. I take no stock in such a statement that the fact of opening the cold storage compartment during an hour or an hour and a half could injure butter to such an extent as they pretend it would. At all events, the butter would be less injured than that shipped from Quebec on board the cars. The Quebec farmers and shippers have to pay just as much as those from Montreal for the experiment which the Government is now making, and I do not think there should be any discrimination between them. Therefore, I cannot subscribe to the argument offered in the letter I have just read, and I hope the next shipment—and by the way I may well express the wish that the next shipment may be more of a success than the last one.

Mr. OUIMET, (Translation.) Oh! that butter fetched a good price.

Mr. CHOQUETTE, (Translation.) If it sold well, it was owing, I presume, to the fact that the cargo had been insured for its full value. I hope, at all events, that the next shipment will be made in better condition for the shippers from the district of Quebec. I would also draw the attention of my hon, colleagues to the fact that an injustice is being done to the detriment of the people whom they represent here, and I hope they will all back up my demand to the Government to the effect that, in the future, all the arrangements may be so made as to place every one on a footing of equality.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) In reply to a question put by my hon, friend, the member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette), I may say this: that the city of Quebec has promoted a society known as the ship labour-ers' society. This society has wrecked the harbour of Quebec, and driven away from it all the shipping; and now, we see every day from the ramparts the ships which used to load and unload at Quebec, pass by and take in their cargo along the St. Lawrence. If, to-day, the mercantile marine of Quebec is ruined, that city cannot lay blame on any one else but itself; and even now. that society still lords it over Quebec. The Government are in no way responsible for that state of affairs. I understand that the Government has been attempting an experi-With a view to that experiment. they had to select a starting point which offered better facilities for shipment and at a less cost: Montreal was chosen as starting point. It is not fair to attempt rousing local prejudices against the Government, because they have selected Montreal as their shipping port, rather than Quebec or St. Thomas de Montmagny, or Rimouski or London. Ont. They have made choice of the port affording the greatest facilities to shippers. They acted wisely in selecting the best available port, and Quebec has no more right to complain than any other city in the Dominion. We ought to be grateful to the Government for having adopted and carried out that policy which cannot but result beneficially to the farming community; and as I stand here, one of the humble representatives of that class, I think it my duty, in their behalf, to give thanks to the Government for what they have done in that line so far.

the department is simply this: it has undertaken with the steamship company to pay the difference between the ordinary freight upon such goods as butter and the freight in cold storage. The steamship companies have Montreal as a starting port. Nothing prevents them from stopping at Quebec and opening these cold storage compartments. But, on inquiry, I find that the difference between the ordinary freight from Montreal to Liverpool and from Quebec to Liverpool is ten shillings a ton on this special class of goods. That was the reason why no arrangement could be made for shipment from Quebec. After many conferences and communications between the exporters of butter in Montmagny and other places in the Quedistrict and the department, it was agreed that it would be better and cheaper for these exporters to send their butter to Montreal so as to avoid the extra ten shillings a ton freight. Perhaps my hon, friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has given the true reason why, apparently against all rule, the freight from Quebec, which is 180 miles nearer Liverpool than Montreal, is higher than freight from Montreal. It is impossible for the Government to go further than to pay the difference in freight so as to secure the shipment by cold storage. No injustice was intended, and I think no injustice actuallly resulted from the action of the department. Although the first experiment has resulted unfortunately, we must remember that many things that have a bad commencement show very good results in the end. I am sure that the farmers will appreciate the zeal shown by the Department of Agriculture in protecting their interests.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS AND THE TARIFF.

Mr. BORDEN. I desire to call the attention of the House and the Government, for a very few minutes, to what I think is an anomalous condition of things existing in that part of the tariff which refers to agricultural implements. I refer particularly to item 294 of the tariff, and more particularly in that item, to seed drills. I will read the whole paragraph:

machines, self-binding harvesters, harvesters without binders, binding attachments, reapers, sulky and walking ploughs, harrows, cultivators, seed drills and horse-rakes, 20 per cent ad valorem.

This was modified during the last session of Parliament in the interests of the agriculturists of this country, so as to admit the agricultural implements mentioned there, at the rate of 20 per cent, instead of 35 per cent, which was the rate of duty existing before that time. In the list of articles admitted under that item, there is seed drills, and I wish to point out to the Government that under that paragraph of the tariff, seed drills, which are potato planters, when introduced into this country, have been charged

Mr. OUIMET. The arrangement made by possible that the Government intended to discriminate between seed drills used by the farmers who plant corn, turnips, and grain of various kinds, and the farmers who plant potatoes? Within a few years a machine has been invented which is manufactured in the United States, and manufactured there only, which saves an enormous amount of labour, and therefore expense, to the farmer engaged in growing potatoes. Last year one of those same machines was introduced into my constituency for the first time, and upon that machine the Government collected a duty of 20 per cent. Following that example, this year a very much larger number of those machines was imported, and this year the Government have decided that they must pay 35 per cent, instead of 20 per cent which they charged last year. Now, I have here some correspondence with reference to that, of which I will read an extract. It is a letter from the manufacturer of those implements in the United States, in which he says:

> We make shipments into the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, North-west Territories, &c., and we understood they only collected 20 per cent duty According to the revised classification-

That is, of our tariff in this country.

-seed drills are to be admitted into Canada at 20 per cent duty. At least, that is our understanding, and our agent in Windsor, Ont., looked the matter up carefully when getting his goods.

Now, as to the character of these machines I will read further the statement of the manufacturers themselves:

Our planter is certainly a seed drill, if any implement is. We plant seed potatoes, corn, peas, beans and ensilage with it in drills, and do not check-row.

Now, I am sure the Government do not desire to discriminate against people who use this seed-planting machine to plant potatoes, in favour of those who use seed drills to plant turnips, or corn or other grain. I wish to ask the Government if they will do one of two things, either to put a liberal construction upon this paragraph, the same construction they put upon their tariff a year ago when they admitted these machines at 20 per cent, or introduce into the tariff an amendment, after the word "drill," adding the word "planter." If they will do that, it will make the tariff in that respect similar to the like clause in the United States tariff. I find in the United States tariff that "agricultural drills and planters" is the phrase used; and I would ask the Government, as there certainly cannot be any intention to discriminate, to make this obvious change in the tariff, or to declare that, putting the most liberal construction upon this phrase, they will admit potato-planters as seed drills. I should like to hear from the Controller of Customs some explanation as to how it is that he can duced into this country, have been charged construe a potato planter, an implement 35 per cent, and I wish to ask whether it is used for planting potatoes, as not being properly a seed-planting machine, when the same machine, as I have read here from the manufacturer, precisely the same implement, is used to plant potatoes, corn, peas, beans and ensilage. Now, I think there is another important point here. If my correspondents who are making these complaints that they are charged 35 per cent this year, when they were charged 20 per cent last year, had entered these articles as seed drills and not as potato planters, probably the customs authority would only have charged them 20 per cent. Here you see the door is open to unfair treatment. People who import these machines, may enter them as seed drills in one place, upon which they would only be charged 20 per cent; while in another place they might be entered as potato planters, and under the construction put upon the Act by the Commissioner of Customs, they would be charged 35 per cent, a manifest injustice. I think that the class of farmers in this country who are engaged in growing potatoes, are quite as much entitled to the consideration of this Government, and I believe the Government intended that they should receive the same consideration, as any other class. They have to compete with people in the United States who grow potatees, and who buy their machines without any tax being imposed upon them, because agricultural implements there are free. The only markets our people have for potatoes are the West Indies and the United States. In the West Indies they have to compete with the potatoes sent from the United States where farmers have the advantage of using these machines free of duty; and when they send their potatoes to the United States, they meet a hostile tariff of 15 cents per bushel, and also the competition which arises from the use of these labour-saving machines, which are much cheaper in the United States than they are with us. I hope it is only necessary to call attention to this anomalous condition of things, to have it remedied. Some time ago I gave notice that I would move that section 294 of schedule "A" of the Customs Act be amended by inserting the word "planters" after the word "drills" in said section. I suppose that will come up more properly when the House is in Committee of Ways and Means.

Afficience and the contract of a fine property contract professional and contract of the contr

Mr. FOSTER. So far as the Government are concerned, we are making no changes in the tariff this year except those which arise out of the changes made in whisky and sugar, for the sake of raising a revenue. My hon, friend (Mr. Borden) has made an appeal for a change which has reasonableness in it, I daresay. At least I should be very glad to give most careful consideration to what he has brought forward if we were making general changes in the tariff, but he occupies the same ground as hundreds of others who have asked changes and who have been refused, and refused for the reason I have given.

Mr. BORDEN. The change I ask for is to make clear the obvious meaning.

Mr. FOSTER. The change suggested would reduce the duty 10 or 15 per cent. In that way it is obviously a change in the rate, whether it is obtained by the introduction of a word or by fixing a rate. With respect to the other point of discussion, as to whether the article had been fairly rated, as to whether its name has had something to do with the rate, and whether the Government could not give most favourable consideration in the interpretation of the tariff in that particular, I have no hesitation in saying that it will give the most liberal interpretation that it can possibly give, but we are limited by the verbiage of the item and opinions given, after consultation, by That portion of the Justice Department. the subject. I am very glad to inform the hon, gentleman, will be looked into; the other portion I shall have to decline on the consistent ground that we have made no tariff changes except for revenue purposes. and accordingly this part of the subject will have to lie over till another session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I fancy this is a matter which would come fairly under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Board.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not necessarily referred to the Minister of Justice. The Treasury Board, I think, has power to make modifications and reductions, though, of course, it cannot add to the burdens of the people.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman is right; but the Minister of Justice sits on the Treasury Board, and that board is guided by his judicial opinion.

Sir RICHARD OARTWRIGHT. I shope he sits with it and on it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, the Auditor General tries to sit on the Treasury Board.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So to the Minister of Justice we must address this plea. I trust, on the broad question of equality to his Irish fellow-countrymen, he is not going to impose any restriction on the growing of potatoes, and that he will consider the potato as a seed, and will not impose a duty on a machine for planting a potato seed any more than any other seed. There is the strongest possible ground for giving this item consideration, and I hope that Justice and Finance for once will agree.

CATTLE SHIPMENTS TO BELGIUM.

Mr. LACHAPELLE. I desire to ask the Minister of Finance if it is true that the Belgian Government has removed the embargo on Canadian cattle?

Mr. FOSTER. I have received a note which I intend to read to the House, that will answer the question asked by the hon. gentleman. It is as follows:—

(Cable from Sir Charles Tupper.) London, 19th July, 1895.

Bowell, Ottawa.

Informed by Van Bruyssel, Belgian Government instructing Consul Ottawa by mail they will permit experimental shipments Canadian cattle Belgian ports October, November, December, and will remove embargo altogether if no pleuro discovered.

TUPPER.

The gist of that is that the Belgian Government will allow our cattle entrance from now until the close of the season, and if no pleuro-pneumonia develops, the embargo will be removed.

CATTLE EMBARGO BY GREAT BRI-TAIN.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to draw the attention of the House to a matter that is also connected with cattle embargo. I am sure the House will rejoice at the information furnished by the Finance Minister. Last session I dealt with the matter respecting the embargo established by Great Britain in 1892, and I will briefly run over some of the circumstances that have occurred since the embargo was established. That embargo was established because the experts in the service of the British Government had found. according to their judgment, pleuro-pneumonia to exist in certain animals. Thereupon vigorous correspondence took place between the Canadian and Imperial authorities calling in question the correctness of the finding. However, it was at the close of the fiscal year 1892, and a change would not have been specially beneficial to the country. The spring of 1893 arrived, and the controversy still continued. Unfortunately during the early part of 1893, in fact at several dates in that year, according to official reports laid on the Table of the House by the Government, several other cases of pleuro-pneumonia were alleged by the British authorities to have been discovered in Canadian cattle. The report states that in May one case was found in connection with an animal on board the steamer "Brazilian," two on board the "Lake Winnipeg," and one on board the steamer "Huronian." During the whole of 1893 the controversy between the Canadian Government through its representative and the British Government continued, there being no change whatever in the condition of affairs. But in 1894 the British Government, in order to put an end to the controversy, determined to employ more thorough means in order to discover the state of health of Canadian cattle. The steps they took were to require Canadian cattle to be slaughtered on entering Great Britain, their lungs to be examined by experts and upon the result of that finding the removal or continuance of the embargo was to depend. It has been said that Lord Ripon, in 1894, decided to admit Canadian cattle free from the embargo; but 1 would say in reply that Lord Ripon had nothing whatever to do with the matter, he being simply Colonial Secretary. The Board of Agriculture of Great Britain is the board that has to deal with the matter. Lord Ripon, as Colonial Secretary, had a favourable opinion, and he expressed the hope and wish that the Board of Agriculture might see their way to remove the embargo, but he received a very emphatic reply from the board declining to do so. That letter I have in my hand, dated 16th April, 1894. So much for any statement that at any period of time there was not official or other communication, representative of the English opinions as to the removal of the embargo. In this letter, for example, from the Board of Agriculture to the Colonial Office, the Board of Agriculture, replying to Lord Ripon, said: That whilst they regret that they cannot acquiesce in the request, they propose to adopt a course of procedure in order to deal with The course which they dethe matter. termined was the one to which I alluded, namely, to issue an order for the slaughter of Canadian cattle for the examination of their lungs, and then a verdict was to be rendered according to the result of that examination. I read now from the letter in question, which appears in the return laid upon the Table of this House, page 79:

As the Marquis of Ripon is aware, the question which it is necessary for the board to determine is, whether with respect to Canada the circumstances are such as "to afford reasonable security against the importation therefrom of diseased animals." If the board are satisfied that such reasonable security exists, then they are bound to allow such animals brought from Canada to be landed without being subject to slaughter. If, on the other hand, the board are not so satisfied, then the provisions set forth in the fifth schedule to the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act of 1878 apply, and animals imported from Canada cannot be allowed to be moved alive out of the wharf at which they are landed.

This letter proceeds to deal very clearly with the matter to which I have alluded, and sets forth the cases of pleuro-pneumonia which the English authorities say they have found in Canadian cattle. letter goes on to say, page 80:

If the opinion pronounced by the veterinary officers of this department were unchallenged, it is obvious that with these facts before them, the board would have no alternative but to conclude that, owing either to the insufficiency of the frontier arrangements or to the presence of contagious pleuro-pneumonia in the Dominion, the reasonable security required by the statute was not afforded at the present time.

That was the attitude of the Board of Agriculture of England on the 16th April, 1894, and they proceed at page 83 in this lengthy document, to say, that they desire to have the examination made to which I have alluded, and the letter proceeds in these words:

With this object in view the board proposed to make arrangements under improved conditions, if possible, for a further special examination of the lungs of the animals imported from Canada for slaughter at the ports so soon as the trade has fairly recommenced.

Accordingly, an Imperial order, issued on the 7th of May, 1894, providing for the examination, and that an examination took place, as appears by the records of the Board of Agriculture of England, and it extended over a period beginning on the 7th of May. and resulted in the order of the Imperial Government of the 13th August, 1894. appears from a letter dated 16th June, 1894, from the Board of Agriculture to the Colonial Office, which commences on page 10 of the printed report of the proceedings of the board, communicated to this Government, and by this Government communicated to the House. It appears from this letter that the test began in connection with the lungs of an animal landed at Liverpool on the 20th May, by the steamer "Toronto," from the city of Montreal. The lungs of this animal were subjected to the examination of certain experts, a list of whom appear on page 11. The veterinary officers of the department in England had pronounced upon the case, finding adversely to our contention, and their opinion was submitted to a number of other gentlemen, high up, I presume, in the profession. As a result of that inquiry, the board concluded not to be governed by the finding of their board alone, but to take the opinions of other experts under the most favourable circumstances, in order to prevent any possible mistake or injustice. And so the English Government opened a court, in fact, for the elucidation of the truth; that the board might not in a perfunctory way, come to an erroneous conclusion. You will find, on page 11 of the last document that I have read, these words:

The board are glad to state that they have been fortunate enough to secure for the purpose they have in view, the co-operation of the Rt. Hon. Sir Henry James, Q.C., M.P., and Dr. J. Burdon Sanderson, F.R.S., Waynflete, professor of physiology in the University of Oxford, who have consented to attend the inquiry and to assist the president as legal and pathological assessors respectively. The board would also wish, if possible to have the assistance which might be afforded by the attendance at the inquiry of a representative of the Colonial Office, with a view to his addressing to the various gentlemen examined any questions which he may consider calculated to throw light on the question which the board have to determine, and the board would be glad if the Secretary of State would nominate some suitable member of his department for the purpose.

This letter concludes:

It only remains for the board to add, that it was with much regret that they received the intelligence which they now officially communicate to the Secretary of State, inasmuch as it confirms the fear which the board have previously expressed as to the introduction of pleuro-pneumenia into the Dominion without the knowledge of the authorities there. The matter is a grave one from every point of view, and the now to be commenced will have the effect of previding common ground upon which the action both of the Canadian Government and of the board can alike be based.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the inquiry so fore-shadowed, took place, and the result of that inquiry appears on page 34 of the This document, official records. again reciting the circumstances, sets forth on page 36 the names of the gentlemen who were invited to give evidence before the board. At page 36, the report says:

The lungs of this animal were declared by the inspector, Mr. William Smart, to present the characteristic appearances of pleuro-pneumonia. These lungs were forwarded to London, and on examination, the opinion of Mr. Smart was confirmed by Messrs. Cope and Deguid.

That opinion of the veterinarians was subjected to further tests on the part of the following gentlemen: Prof. John F. Mc-Fadyean, Prof. William Williams, F. R. Ingersoll, S. J. Rayment, Dr. Francis Vacher, Dr. H. D. Littlejohn, Dr. G. Sims Woodhead, Wm. Hunting and Clement Stephenson and others. There is a large list here of persons who seem to have taken part in this inquiry, furnishing experts and evidence for the guidance of the board. Unfortunately, during the inquiry, the report says, other cases of pleuro-pneumonia arrived. At page 16 one case and at page 36 five other cases are reported to have been discovered, and on the 13th day of August the board rendered their verdict-I read from page 58, as follows :-

It appears to the board, upon a review of the evidence above summarized, that the result of their inquiry has been to confirm and support the diagnosis made by their professional officers to a degree even beyond that which might have been expected. The position of those officers differs very materially from that of the non-official witnesses who were good enough to give evidence before the board, by reason of the fact that the former are compelled to come to a distinct and definite conclusion in every case submitted to them, and upon that conclusion the administrative action of the board must necessarily depend. It is, therefore, in the highest degree satisfactory to the board to find that so much evidence corroborative of the verdict of their officers have been forthcoming from gentlemen occupying, it is true, a much less onerous and responsible position than the veterinary officers of the board, but who were nevertheless well qualified to form a judgment on the question at issue. In no single instance did any of the witnesses examined find themselves in a position to assert, without qualification, that either the "Toronto" or the "Mongolian" case was not one of contagious pleuro-pneumonia, whilst on the other hand, the verdict of the professional officers of the board was absolutely and unreservedly confirmed in many instances.

At page 61 the report further says:

In the institution of the inquiry the board were animated by a two-fold desire. In the first place, doubts had been freely and publicly expressed as to the accuracy of the diagnosis of the beard's professional officers, and the board were board venture to hope that the investigation anxious to acquaint themselves with the ground upon which those doubts had been based. In the second place, the board desired, in the event of that diagnosis being confirmed and supported, as it has been by unofficial professional opinion, to place Canadian veterinarians in possession of a complete statement of the views of experts in this country, since it is with the members of the veterinary profession of the Dominion that, in the opinion of the board, the next step rests. It is beyond question that a disease occurs in the lungs of Canadian cattle imported into this country, which, in the opinion of many of the most experienced and best qualified veterinarians in this country, is contagious pleuro-pneumonia.

They conclude as follows:-

They have no alternative but to act on the assumption that the disease found in the Canadian animals was in fact contagious pleuropneumenia, and in view of the fact they must maintain in force the normal security provided by the statute against the introduction of disease by means of imported animals, viz., by their slaughter at the first port of landing.

This briefly closes this chapter of the matter, and shows how the board came to the conclusion to which I have alluded. I now desire particularly to ascertain from the Government why they have not taken the steps that the Imperial authorities in the month of July, 1893, asked them to take in connection with this matter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What steps were those?

Mr. MULOCK. On the 21st of July, 1893, within a year after the establishment of the embargo, the Board of Agriculture wrote to the Canadian Government. I have here a copy of the letter, which went through the usual channels. It is found in the return laid on the Table, at page 39. That letter asked the Canadian Government to adopt certain precautions, and to do certain things. It suggests, if I may summarize it for brevity, that the Canadian Government should transmit to the board copies of the statutes now in force, and detailed information as to the machinery by which the requirements of the statute are complied with. The statutes and machinery alludede to are our own Animals' Contagious Disease Act, and the precautions which the Government have adopted to protect Canadian cattle from the importation of disease. The letter further asks that the Dominion Government should be able to state that arrangements exist to secure the submission of diseased animals to veterinary officers. It is a very lengthy document, setting forth in great detail what the Canadian Government ought, in the judgment of the Imperial authorities, to do. It is not a question for our Government to determine whether the English Government was reasonable or not. are in command of the situation. We have to comply with what they deem rights if we expect to get relief; and what I am unable to understand up to this moment is why their demand was not complied with. On the 15th of August, the Board of Agriculture writes a letter to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to be submitted to Sir Charles Tupper, to be forwarded to the Canadian Government, as follows:—

The board have already indicated some of the measures, by means of which the Canadian Government can go far to secure evidence before the board materially upon the question of the restoration of the privilege of free entry which they wish to obtain, and which the board wish to be in the position to confer.

The board would venture to press most strongly upon the Canadian Government the adoption of vigorous and really effective measures such as those they have already indicated, in order to ascertain whether by any mischance the disease has found a foothold in the Dominion.

Well, two months elapsed, and the information appears not to have been communicated to the Imperial authorities, for, on the 17th October, 1895, the Board of Agriculture, then wrote as follows:—

With regard to the future the board cannot say anything further until they are in possession of the views of the Canadian Government on the various matters specified in their letter of 21st July last. In that letter the board indicated in detail the various measures which, in their opinion, the Canadian Government might with advantage take, with a view to afford more complete evidence with regard to the various matters which the board are required by statute to consider before waiving the normal requirement of slaughter at the ports where live animals are landed in this country, and the board hope before long to learn that the suggestions they venture to make have commended themselves to the Canadian Government, and also to receive information on the matters mentioned in the letter in question.

The next communication, dated the 2nd November, 1893, from the English Board of Agriculture, contains the following words:

I may add that the discovery of this further case of pleuro-pneumonia in an animal brought from Canada appears to the board to emphasize the desirability of further action by the Canadian Government in the direction indicated in the board's letter of 21st July last.

Thus, up to the 2nd November, the Government had omitted to act upon the advice of the English Government. On the 7th November, 1893, Mr. Colmer of the High Commissioner's office in England cabled, as follows, to the Canadian Government:

Board of Agriculture in official advice, "Hurona" case, emphasizes desirability further action Canadian Government; directions indicated board's letter July 21.

That cablegram, no doubt, reached Canada the same day, but we find that it was not answered until the 14th November. On that date the Canadian Deputy Minister of Agriculture wrote, as follows, to the office of the High Commissioner:—

You request an answer to the letter of the board of July 21st last. Notes of an answer were prepared and were gone over by Mr. Angers, the Minister, before he left for the West with

Mr. Foster, some weeks ago, but he then decided that the answer should be deferred until his return and until we receive a full report of some investigations which were then being made by Professor McEachran relating to the health of animals in the North-west.

I may say to you further that Mr. Angers found some of the requirements specified in the letter of the board, to be unreasonable in view of the facts, and he did not feel by any means sure that he would take the responsibility of asking his colleagues to sanction a report embodying them. The Minister is, however, expected back to-morrow, and within a short time a full report of the case of the department in answer to the board, will be sent forward.

The next document I have on the subject, dated 29th November, 1893, is a letter from the High Commissioner to the Colonial Secretary:

You will observe it is stated in the letter from the Board of Agriculture, dated the 17th ult., that, "with regard to the future" the board cannot say anything further until they are in possession of the views of the Canadian Government on the various matters specified in their letter of the 21st July last. In that letter the board indicated in detail various measures which in their opinion, the Canadian Government might with advantage take with 2 view to afford more complete evidence with regard to the various matters which the board are required by statute to consider, before waiving the normal requirements of slaughter at the ports where live animals are landed in this country, and the board hope before long to learn that the suggestions they ventured to make have commended themselves to the Canadian Government, and also to receive information on the matters mentioned in the letter in question.

I have no doubt that a full answer to the communication of the Board of Agriculture to which reference is made will be received in a short time, as indicated in a recent letter from

Mr. Lowe.

There we have it, under the hand of the High Commissioner, dated 29th November, 1893, that up to that date the Government here had not answered the requisition of the Imperial Government of the 21st July previous. On the 14th December, 1893, the Canadian Government wrote to Sir Charles Tupper, as follows:—

I may say to you in reference to the letter of the Board of Agriculture of July 21st last, it is proposed shortly to send a particular reply thereto in the form of a report of Council containing a full statement of the Canadian case. It was thought better to wait for full reports

It was thought better to wait for full reports of the veterinary investigations in the Northwest, which had been commenced when that letter was received, and further, when the more recent cases arose forming the subject of your correspondence, to wait until the close of the season before sending the Canadian reply.

Thus matters stood up to the 14th December, 1893. On the 29th January, 1894, the English Board of Agriculture again ventured to send a memo. in order to awaken the energies of the Canadian Government. They wrote, as follows, to the Colonial Office:—

I am directed by the Board of Agriculture to state for the information of the Marquis of Ripon, that the period is now approaching when the board may expect to receive inquiries as to the conditions under which the importation of cattle from Canada is to be carried on during the coming season, and they would be glad to be placed as early as possible in possession of the views of the Canadian Government with regard to the matter set out in the board's letter of the 21st July last.

That was on the 29th January, 1894, when the English Government again called on the Canadian Government to answer its letter of the 21st July previous. Well, an answer was sent, I presume a lengthy document, more or less covering the case, but you will observe from the letter of the Deputy Minister, Mr. Lowe, that Mr. Angers had taken the ground that he thought a part of the request of the English Government was unreasonable, and it probably may have been for that reason that the Canadian Government did not meet the requirements of the situation. However may be, whatever the reason for it was, the summer appears to have gone by, and Sir Charles Tupper, the High Commissioner, speaking in Dundee in November, 1894, criticised the action of the Imperial Government in connection with this matter. This brought forth from the Right Hon. Herbert Gardner, President of the Board of Agriculture, a letter in answer, dated 24th November. 1894—sixteen months after the 21st July, 1893. His letter is directed to Sir John Leng. It appears that Sir John Leng wrote to Mr. Gardner in reference to the embargo and Mr. Gardner replied to Sir John Leng in his letter of 24th November, 1894. This is a lengthy document reviewing many things that had taken place, referring to Sir Charles Tupper's apparent lack of information on the subject, and concludes with the following words:—

As regards the future—

That means, of course, as to the removal or maintenance of the embargo—

—I can only say that the matter rests mainly with the Canadian Government. If that Government would adopt the suggestions made by this board as far back as July, 1893, and make efficient arrangements for securing the notification of suspicious cases of lung disease to expert officers, by whom post mortem examinations could be made, exact records of the appearances presented being kept, valuable evidence as to the sanitary condition of animals within the Dominion would, after a sufficient interval, be available, and it would be seen whether the result was to corroborate by views expressed by Sir Charles Tupper as to the absence of pleuro-pneumonia in that country. Up to the present, however, the action of the Dominion Government, so far as the board are informed respecting it, has unfortunately not been such as the board themselves would have felt it their duty to take if there had been similar grounds for suspecting the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in this country.

I can only hope that some alteration of the position in this respect may speedily take place, so that the prospect of my finding myself in a position to remove the existing restrictions may be increased.

I am, etc., HERBERT GARDNER.

Sir John Leng, M.P.

Now, you will observe, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Gardner thought that if our Canadian Government would only adopt the suggestions made by the Board of Agriculture as long ago as the 21st July, 1893, there might be some change. Now, I want to know why the requisition of the English Government in this matter set forth in their communication of 21st July, 1893, was not complied with for the period of sixteen months, and why it has not been complied with yet to the satisfaction of the Imperial authorities. It must be borne in mind that we are not in a position to dictate; that they are in command of the situation. Whether their request is reasonable or unreasonable, we should endeavour to comply with it as far as the situation will allow. Failure to do prejudices our position. And when I look through this correspondence and see that several times the Imperial Government have endeavoured to awaken our Canadian Government to activity upon this all important question, I think the time has arrived when the Government should give an official answer as to whether the requisition of the Imperial Government has been complied with. I regret to be obliged to bring this matter up at such a late period of the session. I intended to bring it up earlier and mentioned that fact to the Minister of Finance and Secretary of State, and we had decided, subject to the rules of the House, to have it brought up on concurrence. But concurrence has not yet been reached, and, in conversation with Mr. Speaker just now, I find that, according to the rules, concurrence would not afford me to deal with the question generally as I have desired to do, and for that reason I have to take this as the only opportunity remaining during the session of discussing the question.

SALMON FISHING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. MULOCK. There was one other matter I wished to refer to before I sit down—circumstances connected with the fisheries in British Columbia. I have received communications from persons interested, and was sorry that the members from British Columbia, when advocating the giving of a portfolio to a member from that province did not happen, for the moment, to advocate the interest of a great industry such as the salmon fishing. I sympathize much with the claim of the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin)—he did not distinctly nominate himself as the Minister for the North-west Indians and mounted police, though he nearly did so, nor did the member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) pay a like attention to his own merits-but I was surprised when the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Corbould) rose to deal with a personal grievance of his own that it did not occur to him to allude to the grievances of a great class of people in that district, the fishermen, and those interested in the canning of salmon on the Fraser River. Last season, owing, apparently, to lack of knowledge as to the details of the fishing industry, regulations were issued by the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries which seriously injured the fishing season last year. As I heard the hon, member for Victoria, British Columbia, advocating the assignment of a portfolio to British Columbia, it did appear to me to be a matter in the public interest and a most important matter that some person from that province should be appointed in some way to bring to the knowledge of the members of the Government matters such as these with which they appear to be unfamiliar. I am told that the salmon do not always come up the river at the same time; there is a difference in the time of their arrival. So that if you fix a time arbitrarily within which fishing may begin and must terminate without reference to the movements of the fish, you are not proceeding wisely. In this particular case, my informant assures me, the regulations fixed the time for concluding the fishing when it had hardly begun. Application was made to the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries to extend the time, which, apparently, he refused to do, thereupon the men engaged in canning dismissed their fishermen and other employees. But after these had become scattered and it was impossible to get them together again, the order refusing to extend the time was countermanded. Thus relief came when too late. Serious injury was done to the salmon fishing interest, not only to the employers but to the employees. I am sorry I have to refer to the matter in the absence of any of the members from British Columbia, as the reference to it might more properly have come from them. But I can understand the supporters of the Government not feeling free to criticise in the House any case of maladministration or any mistake on the part of the Government. However, the very request of the hon, member for Victoria that a portfolio should be assigned to British Columbia was in itself a mild rebuke by him against certain acts, known and unknown on the part of the administration against the people of British Columbia. I am sorry the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not in the House, but I may say that I expressed the hope this year that he would see that there was no repetition of the mistake in question.

CATTLE QUARANTINE.

himself as the Minister for the North-west Mr. MONTAGUE. At this time, when we Indians and mounted police, though he nearly believe we are in the last hours of the session, I shall not pay my hon. friend the compliment of going over the whole ground that he has taken upon the question of cattle quarantine; and, of course, I shall not refer at all to the other matter which he has referred to in his address. I am glad, however, that the hon, gentleman bring this phase of the cattle question to the attention of the House, because there is one point upon which I wish to say a word or two. But before I refer to that point, I wish to say that the Government are pleased that the hon, gentlemen in these later days, have discovered that the privilege which we enjoyed, and which was refused to other countries, in the ports of Great Britain, under an arrangement which we had made with Great Britain, was such an important privilege, because I remember time after time when we discussed the question on various platforms in the country, that members of the party represented by the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House, declared that the privilege which we then secured was of no value whatever to Canadian cattle raisers. I think my hon. friend made the mistake this year, which he has made in other years, of beginning at the wrong end of this case. He has dealt with the question from the position of one more hostile than friendly to the Canadian cattle trade. Not only that, but he should have begun by first showing that there was some ground for the charge which had been made by the British Board of Agriculture. that Canadian cattle were unhealthy, that they were affected with pleuro-pneumonia. If that point is established, the hon. gentleman need not read all the documents he has read, he need not refer to this long correspondence which has taken place; and I submit that he is unfair to the Canadian cattle case, while admitting tacitly, as the hon, gentleman must admit, that Canadian cattle are healthy, and as would be asserted by hon. gentlemen behind him, if they were here. The hon, gentleman, by establishing that, would be giving his approval to the statements made by the British Board of Agriculture, who, for reasons best known to themselves, and we think well known to us, have kept up the cattle embargo against Canadian cattle.

Mr. MULOCK. Do you say that report is all a fraud?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In a moment I shall deal with that phase of the question to which my hoz, friend referred. The main question is this: Are Canadian cattle healthy or not? If Canadian cattle are not free from that disease, then we admit that the British Board of Agriculture bad a perfect right to keep up the embargo against Canadian cattle; if, on the other hand, Canadian cattle are healthy, if it cannot be shown that in any of our herds pleuro-pneumonia agree with me, that the British Board of Agriculture have not one single leg to stand upon in connection with their case. Now, the hon, gentleman has changed his ground since last year. Last year he made a very elaborate attack upon the Government because, as he said, they had not carried out strictly the regulations which were made 1879 regards in ១ន transit of American cattle through Canada. The hon, gentleman then said that we had failed to secure the removal of the embargo because we were careless in connection with these regulations. The hon. gentleman now has changed his ground, has changed his point of attack, and seems to think that the ground upon which the British Government have refused to remove that embargo is because we had not sufficiently answered the letters and the requirements made in those letters sent by the British Board of Agriculture.

Mr. MULOCK. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But he left that to be inferred, because he declared that we had not answered the correspondence, that we had not met the requirements of that board. Now, so far as the regulations are concerned, and the manner in which we have observed them, the hon. gentleman has not touched that point this afternoon. But I want to say just one word upon it, because it has been declared time after time in the country that we made a specific arrangement, that an arrangement was made by my hon. friend the late Minister of Public Works and the British Board of Agriculture as regards this transit trade, and the charge has been made upon every platform, that we did not keep that arrangement. I say that these regulations were made in an Order in Council in 1879, that that Order in Council was submitted to the British Board of Agriculture, and they approved of its provisions. I say still further, that the Canadian Government have lived up to the requirements of that Order in Council, and that the British Government have no reason whatever to find fault with us, and furthermore, the British Board of Agriculture have never found fault with us for not carrying out the regulations made in that Order in Council. Now, as regards the point to which the hon. gentleman has referred, namely, that in July, 1894, I think he said—

Mr. MULOCK. If you are referring to the board, I did not say 1894, it was 1893.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am referring to the despatch asking for certain particulars, and asking for the appointment of veterinarians, with still further inspection by this Government, and that kind of thing. I may say to the House that the point has never been raised that we have not given the British Board of Agriculture sufficient eviexists, then I say, and this House will dence, more than that, in every reasonable agree with me, and the hon, gentleman will particular we have met their request. Their request was, mainly, that we should appoint a great number of Canadian veterinarians to inspect our herds in the beginning of the year, and to send them the evidence. There was certain evidence that could be collected by the Department of Agriculture, and that evidence was collected, although it took some time to collect it. The evidence was finally forwarded to the British Board of Agriculture, but instead of appointing Canadian veterinarians, or an increased number of them, for the purpose of inspecting our herds, we said this to the British Board of Agriculture, as contained in the offer of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture: We fear that if we appoint our own veterinarians you may think they are biased in favour of the Canadian side of the case. We would rather that you appoint British veterinarians, we would rather that you appoint the very best men you possibly can for that purpose, and to show our good faith, and to show how thoroughly safe we are. and to show how thoroughly convinced we are that our Canadian herds are healthy. we are willing to pay the expenses of the experts that you appoint, and willing to lend them every facility that they may require, or that you may require, for the purpose of investigating the condition of our herds. Now, was that a fair offer or not? The hon, gentleman insinuates that we were afraid of our case, that we were not willing to give that information. I say again, that offer is still open, the Government are pledged to pay the expenses of any men the British Government may send here for the purpose of inspecting our cattle: and if they can find one single case of pleuro-pneumonia within the bounds of Canada, we won't ask for the embargo to be removed. But what we contend is this: that if we can show that our herds are absolutely healthy, that our quarantine regulations have been carried out, that we have kept our herds pure, and show that upon the evidence of British experts, we say then that we claim it as a right as well as a privilege that the cattle embargo should be removed. I do not think that any one having a single atom of reason in him would ask the Canadian Government to go further than they have gone in that regard, and certainly I am sure my hon. friend believes that we have treated them fairly in con-nection with that matter. I do not intend to say more, the subject will be discussed, no doubt, next year. A new condition of affairs has arisen in the old country, and as Acting Minister of Agriculture, has declared that the Government are opening up negotiations again, and I assure the hon, gentle-man and the House that no stone will be left unturned to secure that desired object, if possible.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite sure the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) in paying attention so closely and well to the of Parliament clearly show that applica-consideration of this question from session to session, and handling it so ably in the House deserves the everlasting gratitude of the agriculturists of this country. there is any question that deserves and requires the active, earnest, and close attention of every one interested in agriculture. and especially the head of the department, it is that of our cattle trade with Great The Secretary of State, owing to Britain. the fact that he has but recently assumed the responsibilities of his position as representing the Agriculture Department, cannot be expected to give that pointed and complete answer to the serious and grave charges which my hon, friend has made this afternoon in connection with the whole The hon, gentleman has attempted to evade the direct charge of Government responsibility for the condition that exists, but if he will closely examine the records connected with the imposition of the embargo he will find that great looseness has characterized the action of the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think before the hon, gentleman makes that charge he should submit some evidence.

Mr. McMULLEN. It has all been print-

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, it never has.

Mr. McMULLEN. The evidence has been printed as regards the quarantine arrangements between the United States and Canada, and as to the way they have been carried out, and the Government must be willing or unwilling to bear its share of the responsibility connected with the present condition of affairs.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is not a tittle of evidence to prove your statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not going to hold the hon, gentleman personally responsble, because many things happened before he assumed the position he now occupies, and for which he cannot be held personally responsible. But the Government is responsible. Take the experience we had as regards cattle admitted from the United States in to Canada. The Secretary of State will not challenge the statement that from time to time application was made by the railway companies for some change or relaxation of the provisions of the arrangement with Great Britain. In those regulations it was clearly understood that cattle were to be unloaded on one side, to be inspected, then to be reloaded, carried to the point in the United States from which they would be shipped.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You are all wrong in your statement.

Mr. McMULLEN The hon. gentleman will not deny that parts of the arrangements were violated, because the records tions were made by the railway companies first, to have the cattle inspected on board, next, to be inspected at night, and that certain concessions were made by the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon, gentleman will show one single case or any time in which the British Government found fault with the way in which the Government were carrying out the regulations, then I will admit the hon, gentleman is right. There is not a tittle of evidence, however, to show it.

Mr. McMULLEN. The fact is the British Government were not made aware of it until a considerable time after it occurred.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon, gentleman is begging the question now.

Mr. McMULLEN. Evidence has been produced to show looseness as regards the way the quarantine regulations were carried out. A statement to that effect was published in an English paper. If the statement was untrue, why did the Government not place the writer under arrest? It may be pleaded that he had removed from Canada; but perjury is certainly an offence for which a man can be extradited.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is on the evidence of that statement all these charges have been made.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why did not the Government bring him back. He was just across the river, and if the department was anxious to prove a charge against him he could have been extradited.

An hon, MEMBER. What date was that?

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot give the date, but every hon, member who takes an interest in the cattle question can easily find the date of the publication of the statement, because it was published in some paper in London, under the writer's signature. I deeply regret that the whole question regarding our cattle and the removal of the embargo has not been handled in that vigorous and able manner which such an important question demands at the hands of the Government of the day. Evidently, the Minister of Agriculture was prepared on different occasions to challenge the steps taken by the British The Secretary of State says Government. the Government have asked the British Government to send out experts to examine Why did not Sir Charles Tupper secure the services of two or three eminent experts whose opinions would be accepted by the British Government? The Secretary of State replied that the Government wanted the British Government to appoint them. That Government, however. has enough to do without paying attention as to details connected with the embargo on Canadian cattle. All would have been well if we had followed the lines indicated by the British Government some time ago. If the department had attended actively and closely to the communications sent we should have occupied a different position today. Unfortunately, the Department of Agriculture has been handled in such a way as not to secure the efficient and intelligent treatment of this important question. The Minister of Agriculture has not been a man to give care and attention to matters connected with the Agriculture Department.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh. oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hon, members may laugh. At this particular juncture in Canada we require a man of ability, experience and knowledge who is prepared to devote his whole time and attention to this subject, and relieve Canada from the unfortunate plight in which it now stands in regard to the cattle trade. Since that department is vacant, I hope that a competent man will be appointed so that the unfortunate blunders that have been made in the past will not be repeated. We know that the Deputy Minister of that department is very advanced in years and is almost in his dotage. This is the man who has had charge of the Agricultural Departnient, together with Mr. Angers, the late Minister, who knew no more about practical agriculture than he knows about astronomy, if as much. This question deserves the serious attention of the Government. people of the country have suffered seriously in the past. I myself feel sad to think that our cattle trade has been nearly ruined for want of activity and earnestness on the part of the Government, and because of their neglect to keep the covenant entered into with Great Britain in regard to quarantine. Cases have been pointed out where pleuropneumonia existed, at all events to the satisfaction of the veterinary surgeons in the old country. Prof. McEachran is paid in Canada to make a careful inspection of all our cattle exported, and I should like to know how it happened that he allowed those cattle to leave the country, if he was attending to his duty. If the Government are anxious to secure our cattle against embargo they should arrange for some prominent veterinarian in the old country to look after our interests there from a Canadian standpoint. The object of the English officials is to discharge their duty from a British standpoint and in the interests of the trade in England. We should see that some competent person should be on the other side to ensure that justice is done to the Canadians in the matter of inspection. If it is left to the British officers, we may possibly suffer wrong in certain cases. This question has been neglected by our officers in England. We know that when we asked for samples of the diseased lungs, the staff of Sir Charles Tupper's office managed the matter in such a way as to bungle the whole thing. Only about an inch square of the diseased lung Inland Revenue, as herein provided, that is to was sent out and it was so badly sealed; say :that when it arrived here it was in a decomposed state and of no value for the purture thereof consists of not less than ninety per poses for which it was required. This is a cent by weight, of raw or unmalted grain—on poses for which it was required. This is a matter of very great moment to the agriculturists of the Dominion. If the frequent efforts put forth by my esteemed friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) will secure: the active and prompt attention of Government and make them wake up so as to obtain the removal of the embargo, on which no duty of customs or excise has been my hon, friend (Mr. Mulock) will deserve the lasting gratitude of the farmers of the country, and I believe he will get it.

Mr. MULOCK. It would be out of order for me to make any further remarks, but I wish to say, that if the session were not at this advanced stage, I might deem it my duty to reply to some of the inaccuracies in ; the remarks of the Secretary of State. I I cannot allow the inference to be drawn, that by my silence I assented to many of his contentions, which I could disprove in a very short time. My main object has been to point out to the Secretary of Stateif he is acting Minister of Agriculture, and if he is not, to whoever is the acting Minister-the attitude of the English Government, so that no further delay may take! place, and that even if their demand is unreasonable, that it is our duty to endeavour to deal with it to the fullest extent.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret, Sir, that I was unavoidably absent from the House during this discussion. If there ever was a time when the Government should take some action in this matter it is this year. In western Ontario we have any amount of good cattle, such cattle as the English and Scotch farmers would like to finish, and we have very little feed to take them over the winter. Therefore, I think it is the duty of our Government to make an extra effort now to secure the free entry of our cattle into the British market this year. If they do so, it will be a great benefit to the farmers of Ontario. I do not wish to enlarge upon this question at this late hour of the session. I simply express my opinion, for I feel that if the Government take hold of the matter energetically they might probably get our stockers into the English market next fall.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee on the following resolutions :-

- 1. Resolved. That it is expedient to amend Section 130 of Chapter 34 of the Act 49 Victoria (the Inland Revenue Act), as amended by Section 4 of Chapter 46 of the Act 54-55 Victoria, by repealing such Section and substituting in lieu thereof, as follows :-

- 4. Resolved, That is expedient to provide that the foregoing resolutions and the alterations thereby made in the Duties of Customs and of Excise on the articles therein mentioned, shall take effect on and after the third day of May instant.
- 15. Resolved, That it is expedient to further amend the Act 57-58 Victoria, Chapter 33, intituled: "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs," by adding the following items to the schedule "A" to the said Act, viz.:—

199a. Salmon, fresh, n.e.s., one-half cent per pound, provided that such salmon may be imported free of duty upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that fresh salmon may be imported into the United States free of duty.

362a. Sawed boards, planks and deals planed or dressed on one or both sides, when the edges thereof are jointed or tongued and grooved, twenty-five per cent ad valorem, provided that such lumber may be imported free of duty upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satistion that similar lumber from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty.

Mr. EDWARDS. The last item, sawe.l boards, was discussed, I think, last session. At that time, if I remember rightly, lumber tongued and grooved was put on the free list, because it was considered desirable in the interest of the settlers in the North-west that it should come in free. I do not think that condition has since changed, and I see no reason whatever why the duty should now be imposed because of the construction the Americans have placed upon their tariff in this respect. The United States customs authorities have recently so construed their Tariff Act that tongued and grooved lumber going from Canada into the United States is required to pay a duty of 25 per cent. Because the United States impose a duty which is injurious to the consumers of that country I do not see that that is any reason why we should punish our people in the same way, and I, for one, wish to record my dissent from this proposed change. It is true. I am myself a manufacturer of sawn lumber. I regret very much that the authorities of the United States have construed their Tariff Act in the way they have done, but this principle I hold, not only in this matter, but in all matters, and simply because it affects the interest in which I am myself concerned, I am not going to depart by my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edfrom the principle which I hold in a gen- wards) is both more politic and more general way. I hold that it is for the advantage of the consumers of lumber in Manitoba and the North-west Territories that tongued and grooved lumber from the United States should come in free of duty. The arguments that were used last session were in favour of lumber planed on one side or on two sides coming in free of duty, but not lumber tengued and grooved. It is true, the im-porter makes a small gain from the less amount of freight he pays when he imports that class of lumber; but the lumber, after it comes to this country, has to be sent to a planing mill to be tonguard and grooved, and it costs the consumer about as much to have it tongued and grooved as to have it planed and tongued and grooved also. That was the reason I contended that tongued and grooved lumber should be put upon the free

Mr. SPEAKER. I frankly confess that I am not so disinterested as my hon, friend from the county of Russell (Mr. Edwards), in respect to this matter. I am not quite sure whether or not the decision that has been given by the Board of Appraisers of the state of New York has been confirmed by the Treasury Department at Washington, but if it has been, then what we supposed would go into the United States free under their tariff, will hereafter be charged with a duty of 25 per cent. That is to say, under the ruling recently made by the Board of Appraisers of the state of New York, although dressed lumber appears by the United States tariff to be made free of duty, lumber that is dressed upon the edgesand lumber that is tongued and grooved-has been construed to be a manufactured article, and, therefore, subject to a duty of 25 per cent. If that is the case, I do not see any good reason why the manufacturers of lumber in the United States should be put in any better position, in relation to the consumers in the North-west Territories, or in any other portion of Canada, than the Canadian manufacturer of lumber. Therefore, I approve of the action of the Government in adopting the course which they propose to the committee to-day. I venture to hope that it may result in reciprocity between the two countries in this article, and that the Government and the customs authorities of the United States may come to the conclusion that it is in the interest of the people of that country to admit, free of duty, the kind of lumber that is here spoken of, in return for the free admission of the same class of lumber into this country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me, Sir, that the people of the North-west ought to be considered a little in this matter, as well as my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, or any other parties who are engaged in the manufacture of lumber, and the view taken wards) is both more politic and more generous. We have spent enormous sums of money to promote settlement in the Northwest, and everybody knows that this will only be taken advantage of practically for the benefit of the settlers in Manitoba and the North-west, where lumber is or used to be sold at a very heavy price. I doubt extremely whether any revenue will be derived from it, and I also doubt the wisdom of bringing in any alterations in the tariff at this period of the session.

Resolved, That it is expedient to further amend the Act 57-58 Victoria, chapter 33, intituled: "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the duties of Customs," by adding the following item to the schedule "A" to the said Act, viz.:—

from Canada free of duty ½ cent per pound. 362a. Sawed boards, planks and deals planed or dressed on one or both sides, when the edges thereof are jointed or tongued and grooved. 25 per cent ad valorem, provided that such lumber may be imported free of duty upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that similar lumber from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty, 25 per cent. The Minister refused, just now, and had some reason for his refusal, to consider any proposition in the way of altering the tariff: and yet he himself comes down now, when I hope we are within twenty-four hours of the end of the session, and proposes to make an alteration which can only result, so far as I can see, in putting some further impediment unnecessarily in the way of promoting settlement in the Northwest.

Mr. FOSTER. In speaking this afternoon, before we went into committee, I had these two instances in my mind-and meant to have included them in the remarks I made -in which we have made changes on what you may call international ground. With regard to the item concerning salmon, which we have just passed, these salmon which are dutiable at present under our tariff, but just as in the case of lumber, the United States general appraisers ruled that fresh salmon could come in free. In the interests of that reciprocity in these large staples which we favoured in our tariff of last year, it was thought well to make an exception in that case, and put our salmon as well on the free list of reciprocity in accord with the ruling of the United States appraisers, to remain free so long as they remain free in the United States. With reference to lumber, the discussion will show—and in the preparation of the tariff we had that in view—that what we were anxious to do last year was to meet the United States in respect of all articles just as far as we possibly could in reciprocity of tariffs. Where they made articles free, and it was at all possible for us to make them free as well, we did so, especially with reference to the article of lumber. It has been for a number of years a point on which we all are agreed, that if we were to have free lumber between the two countries, it would be a wise thing. We went, therefore, to the full extent of the Bill which became law in 1894 in the United States, and whilst we had in view the fact that it might have the effect of making lumber cheaper in certain sections of the country, we also had in view the fact that it was going on the line of reciprocity. In the United States this restriction which they had not expressly in their tariff seems to have been brought into it by the decision of the appraisers, and it has now the force of law, and certainly we would not have gone any further last year than the United States had gone with reference to this article. we are not now on a basis of reciprocity; with the United States with reference to lumber. The United States lumber merchant brings his lumber into this market and sells it, so far as this item is concerned, on a better basis, compared with his competitor, the Canadian maker of lumber when the latter takes his wares into the United States. We think that is unfair. While we want to make the articles of living as cheap as possible, we also have a tariff on protective lines—protective lines Mr. MILLS which, in these industries, are moderated home industry. by the principle of reciprocity with our Mr. DAVIN. That consideraneighbours to the south. tion brings us back to the action we propose to take here. Sawn boards, planks, deals, and other lumber undressed, or dressed on one side only, are free, and will remain free in the Canadian tariff. It is only when the United States appraisers have decided that lumber tongued and grooved is not free that we propose to put on just the exact duty the United States charges. I am not certain whether this position of the case is final or whether the decision of the appraisers is open to review. Certainly, I think | it is subject to appeal. I know that in other cases there have been appeals from the decision of the general appraisers. I know of a case that was appealed and in which the appellants were Canadians, and the appeal succeeded. That was in the case of British Columbia cedar, which is now admitted. under the judgment of the Court of Appeal, free into the United States, although formerly 25 per cent was charged upon it.

Mr. BERGIN. They still impose a duty on the cedar for furniture.

Mr. FOSTER. That is cabinet wood. This cedar exported from British Columbia—and it is on that ground the court gave its decision—is not a wood which takes a high polish, and which can be used for cabinet purposes. I have not the slightest doubt that there will be an appeal upon this decision of the general appraisers, and the action which is taken here will be notified at once to the authorities at Washington with the intimation that just so soon as it is made free there, it will be made free again in this country, which, I think, would be a friendly inducement to a fair consideration of the case, and, I hope, a friendly settlement.

Mr. DAVIN. I am sorry that the Finance Minister is going to put 25 per cent on planks and deals, plain or dressed on one or both sides.

Mr. FOSTER. We put nothing on those.

Mr. DAVIN. When the deals are joined or tongued and grooved, will not that apply to the ordinary lumber we use for building?

had gone Mr. FOSTER. That lets in all what you Therefore, may call the rough lumber for rough purreciprocity poses. It lets in the great majority.

Mr. DAVIN. We always held it a great hardship in the North-west that a duty should be imposed on lumber. We have no timber there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You have the Rocky Mountain timber.

Mr. DAVIN. That is a long distance off. It affects the price of the lumber we use.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It encourages a home industry.

Mr. DAVIN. Certainly, and I am ready to encourage home industries, but I believe in scientific protection.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is a good thing for everybody else, but not for you.

Mr. DAVIN. If the hon, gentleman likes, he may say to me that I am in the position of those Liberals who, when the particular industry they favour is affected, rise here and protest against reduction in the tariff. They are then the staunchest protectionists, and I may be open to the taunt of speaking as a free trader.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You are on the right track.

Mr. DAVIN. I may be asked if I am not speaking as a free trader, but my answer is this, and it is a triumphant answer: That those of us who take such a view of protection as is scientific—

Mr. GILLMOR. How do you explain scientific?

Mr. DAVIN. It is too late in the session to explain it now. Next session, if I am here, I will do my best to enlighten my friend from the Atlantic coast. What I would say is this: Here you have a vast line of territory where we cannot grow lumber ourselves, and we have either to import lumber from the United States, or get it from Rat Portage or British Columbia. Now, Sir, we always felt this duty of 25 per cent to be a hardship too. As early as 1882 or 1883, I pointed out that where a man built a house costing $1,000 the amount paid in duty to the Government was $250.

Mr. MULOCK. Was not that all right?

Mr. DAVIN. I will not reply to these interruptions, because it is very easy to show there are cases where it is the truest protection to the community not to protect the individual article.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Always.

Mr. DAVIN. There are cases of that kind, and one of those cases we have here. We in the North-west Territories, all, gentle and simple, farmer and not farmer, have to buy our timber from outside. We found that a combine existed in Manitoba, and this lumber combine at once received a blow from my hon, friend the Finance Minister in his revision of the tariff, took the duty off lumber planed on one side and tongued and grooved. I certainly would express-I shall not move but I will state my opinion-that the interests of the North-west Territories and Manitoba this should not be persevered in or if it be persevered in, the most strenuous efforts should be put forward to get the United States to act in a way that will once more give us the boon that we have enjoyed.

Mr. FOSTER. That will certainly be done.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) can be a free trader when it is to the interest of the people whom he represents. with a good deal of clearness, for a protectionist, that free trade is best in the interests of the people in this section. The hon, gentleman says they have no timber growing in that section of the country and therefore, they do not manufacture. Well, Sir, the farmers of Canada are not manufacturing cotton, they are not manufacturing many other things, yet the hon, gentleman is willing to take them as a class. is no difference between a tax that affects people according to their geographical position and a tax that affects those that are diffused among the rest of the population. It is in the interest of the millmen in the vicinity of Rat Portage and on the west side of the Rocky Mountains that this tax should be imposed. And why does the hon. gentleman complain? We in Ontario are compelled to pay taxes on our coal. Our coal is in the immediate vicinity of our section of the country on the other side of the border, but we must pay heavy taxes upon it in the interest of men who reside in Nova Scotia and Vancouver Island. I do not see that the hon. gentleman, from his own point of view, has anything to complain of.

Mr. HASLAM. The effect of the position another man who had take taken by the Americans with regard to day before, is not disturbed.

lumber, so far as British Columbia is concerned is this—lumber that was worth last year $14 a thousand feet at the mill is today worth $10.50 a thousand feet. I do not think it will affect the price of lumber in the North-west, because the price has been kept down by competition between the Lake of the Woods mills and the British Columbia mills.

Mr. MULOCK. Would not the lumber that is now $10.50 be cheaper to the people of the North-west if there vas no duty on American lumber?

Mr. HASLAM. I question if it will effect the price of lumber in the North-west at all.

Mr. MULOCK. Or in British Columbia?

Mr. HASLAM. We are exporting largely to San Francisco,—flooring especially. And it is in that that the price has fallen as I said. As to the point mentioned by the hon, member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) that a house costing $1,000 paid duty to the amount of $250 I think the hon, gentleman is a little out in his calculations. A house costing $1,000 would have lumber in it only of value $300, and the duty on that would be only $75 at most, or if you reduce the duty to half you have only $35 duty, paid on a house worth $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to point out to my hon, friend that far the larger number of the items in this schedule are not affected, but are still admitted free. And there is the further consideration, as stated by the hon, member for Vancouver Island, that the competition between Rat Portage and the British Columbia manufacturers has the effect of keeping down the prices of lumber in the North-west.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the foregoing resolutions and the alterations thereby made in the duties of Customs and of Excise on articles therein mentioned, shall take effect on and after the third day of May instant.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was a point raised in connection with that particular resolution, whether the customs were entitled to collect on articles that had been taken out of bond before the hon. gentleman had made his statement. I desire to know what conclusion has been come to on that question, because, looking at our invariable custom on previous occasions, it appears to me it would be rather a high-handed and unfair proceeding to catch a man who had taken out any articles which had been in bond a few hours before, while another man who had taken them out the day before, is not disturbed.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. FOSTER. That arbitrary line must always be drawn. Whenever a tariff comes into force, you will always be able to say that it seems unfair to make one man pay so much, while another man who is fortunate enough to get his goods out a few hours before, had to pay so much less, or vice versa. That is a discrimination between the two, but the arbitrary line must come somewhere. Now, with reference to this matter, I am following exactly the same lines as were followed in the general revision of the tariff last year. If my hon. friend will look at the last clause of it, he will see that the duties took place and had force from and through the day upon which the resolutions were introduced into the House, and practically had the force of law. I am not making any innovation at all from the practice which obtained at the general revision of the tariff. It is only frank to say that on previous occasions there was a variation from that rule, when the new tariff rates took place on the day succeeding the day of the introduction of the resolution, and all entries that were made on the the resolutions were brought down. went free. There are some considerations which I think it is fair to take into account, which have weight with me, and I think they will have weight with the House. must recollect that this year the tariff was with reference to two items, and an increase in both. These tariff changes were made for the purpose of aiding the revenues of the country. The country therefore whose revenues were to be aided, had, I think, a perfect right to everything which could accrue from the putting on of those duties. It is well understood; there has been some discussion of it in this House, that for months before, in the falling state of the revenue, and from the monthly statements: that changes would be made, it was known to all, and the question was canvassed as to what the Government was going to do. Whilst a great majority of the people thought the Government would simply run it through without trying to make an equilibrium between expense and income, by adding to the tariff, and so giving more revenue, the most of people thought that no extra duties would be put on, but that we would go on and borrow in order to make up the deficiency. But a good many people did not think that would be done, and so the matter was discussed through the press, and some people came to the pretty shrewd guess that if any duties were put on, they would be put on to those two articles of sugar and whisky, or both. Now, this other consideration comes in. A man who had a cargo of sugar in the customs-house, or in port, six hours before the extra duty was placed, found, by that duty being placed on the next morning when he awoke, that he had gained just so much as was indicated by the rise in duty on the extra price which he could charge to the public, and that he know whether that matter has been settled gained that benefit without the expenditure of an atom of energy, physical or mental. Now, I say that a man has no right to complain if the Government takes what the Government intended to take, what the revenues require, the gain that was put upon it in the shape of added taxation, the object for which we brought down the resolution, the object for which the rate was raised. I think that consideration ought to be taken into account. We are taking nothing out of any man's pocket, we are taking nothing from any man that he has gained by an expenditure of his own energy, or his own vigour. I know exactly the line my hon, friend will take in answering me, but he cannot diminish in the least from what I think is the due weight that ought to be accorded to the argument I have made, backed up by the fact that we are pursuing exactly the same course as we did in the general revision of the tariff in 1894, and the conclusion come to is expressed in this sec-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Had the hon, gentleman done his duty, or shown any business capacity in carrying out the principle he has just enunciated, there would be some excuse for it. But while he perfectly sees his duty, as his own remarks show, he did not exercise the slightest business capacity so as to prevent several of his own friends from using their business ingenuity, but not their own energy, in order to make a speculation at the public expense, at the expense of the consumer, out of the importation of the article of sugar, when nearly three-quarters of a million were lost to the revenue which might have been saved. had the hon, gentleman had the courage and ability to apply the principle he has laid down, and to prevent the duties on sugar from being lost to an enormous extent. He has allowed a grievance to be made, and he has at the same time allowed the better part of a million to be taken out of the public, and out of the public revenue, which might have been saved if he had understood how to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very good as an assertion, but I think my hon. friend will find it a very difficult thing to prove on a practical basis.

Mr. McMULLEN. In this matter of the sugar duty. I would like to inquire whether a considerable importation of beet root sugar was made by the Montreal Sugar Refining Co., over which Mr. Drummond presides, and whether it was permitted to come in free, or whether it paid duty. It arrived just about the time that the duty was imposed; I fancy that it would be in the St. Lawrence by that time. I understand a question has been in dispute as to whether the company should be called upon to pay duty on that importation. I would like to between the Refining Company and the Government, and when the duty has been paid on that importation.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can say to my hon. friend is that every man has been treated alike, that upon all sugar which was not taken out from the customs before that day, duty is demanded, and duty is expected. If there be any particular considerations which entitle a man, as he thinks, to claim that his goods were not dutiable, under the Customs Act he has a perfect right to put in that claim. Just what the Government does is to abide by the law, and when the claims are put in and the information is gathered, the question is decided by the Treasury Board on report of the Department of Justice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has been done?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know exactly what has been done. The matter has been put into shape for making a claim, and if I mistake not it is before the Department of Justice.

Mr. LAURIER. I call the attention of the hon, gentleman to the fact that the line of argument laid down by him would make the date apply to the day on which the Budget speech was delivered, on 3rd May, and that would be most unfair to importers. The hon, gentleman occupied five or six hours in delivering the speech and the country then knew that the duties had been imposed. Up to that moment there had been no date fixed. Nobody could take advantage of the tariff until the following morning, but up to the time the custom-house was open for business and there was no reason why importers who went there to pass entries and pay the duties should not have been able to do so, and there was no power to call for duty beyond that required by law. The hon, gentleman says he acted for the benefit of the revenue. But importers on 2nd May had the good fortune to pass their entries at the old rates, whereas others on 4th May could not pass entries except by paying increased duties. But why should not the same rule apply to men who entered the custom-house at 10 or 11 on the morning of 3rd May or at any time before the Budget speech was delivered and before the will of the legislature was known, as well as the men who passed entries on the 2nd.

Mr. FOSTER. I will endeavour to show the hon. gentleman. The same rule applies for the very same reason. The hon. gentleman might ask why on the 3rd an importer should get in sugar free and yet had to pay half a cent per pound duty on the 4th. The reason was because the law said so. The law says so by implication when the resolution was brought down, according to the practice of Parliament, and it says so by positive enactment when the House passes it.

Mr. LAURIER. That then is the only reason—because the law says so. The hon. gentleman makes the law.

Mr. FOSTER. Parliament makes the law.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon, gentleman had in view the object of obtaining an increased revenue when he made that law applicable on 3rd May, he could by making it retroactive to 3rd January have placed even a larger sum of money in the treasury.

Mr. FOSTER. I will answer that. You must be limited by practicability. I should like the hon. gentleman to suggest any scheme by which the Government could go back and collect duties on sugar not only which had been taken out by importers but which had gone into the general market and had been consumed and digested.

Mr. LAURIER. It might be done by an excise duty, and three millions more might be added to the treasury. The hon, gentleman says that is the law. But he makes the law, and if he can make it retroactive for one day, he can make it so for one week, one month or three months. The injustice in each case is the same. In many cases to make it retroactive for one day would do injury to importers.

Mr. FOSTER. I grant you that.

Mr. LAURIER. Then let the duty be collected as heretofere, from the time it was proclaimed on the floor of Parliament. The hon, gentleman says that this practice was followed last year. It was a most vicious practice he introduced. By all the rules of justice and equity which should guide us when we make laws, the hon, gentleman is just as wrong when he compels men who were in the custom-house at 11 o'clock on 3rd of May to pass their entries to pay increased duties as if he made the date retroactive to 3rd April. The hon, gentleman has no more right to so act in the one case than in the other. If the hon, gentleman will leave the high handed view he takes at this moment and come back to the plain dictates of justice and fairness he must agree that the time when the duties should be enforced is at the moment they are proclaimed in Parliament, and not before.

Mr. FOSTER. The authority for exacting duties does not depend on when the duty proposition is brought down, but when the law is passed by Parliament, and what are the conditions of that law. The hon. gentleman is inconsistent. I am hauled over the coals because I did not protect the revenue to the extent of a million dollars. which it is alleged went into the pockets of my friends among the business men by making legislation retroactive and inquisi-Then the leader of the Opposition tive. hauls me over the coals because I did not let my friends make three quarters of a million or a million more by not making it retroactive even for a day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, but because this is the first time the law has been made retroactive.

Mr. FOSTER. Not the first time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was no addition but a reduction, and the Government could not do any harm in that case, but even then it was an objectionable proceeding.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means were read the second time and concurred in.

CUSTOMS ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) to amend the Customs Tariff, 1894.

Bill read the first time.

CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to amend that by striking out the words "the Allan Steamship Company" after the word "pay." Then it will read, "Amount required to pay for ocean mail service between Great Britain and Canada." The reason of that is that one or two ships of the Dominion Line, the best vessels, are also employed, but they do not now belong to that company, that is they are altogether apart from it, and if we keep the words "Allan Steamship Company," it will cause difficulty.

Amendment agreed to.

SATURDAY, 20th July, 1895.

Morning Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Ten o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BEHRING SEA ARBITRATION.

Mr. MARTIN asked, Whether Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper received payment from the British Government for his services in connection with the Behring Sea Arbitration, and if so, how much and when?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I received no payment from the British or any other government in connection with my services on the Behring Sea Arbitration. may say that Sir John! Thompson and myself were the only ones connected with the commission or the only officers connected with the British or Canadian Governments who did not receive compensation. All the arbitrators except Sir John Thompson received £1,000 sterling for their services, and the Attorney General of the British Government received the usual professional fees for his services, over and above his salary as Attorney General, and the officers of the British and Canadian Governments connected with that work were also paid compensation, in addition to their ordinary salary. Sir John Thompson and I received nothing but our expenses. I may add incidentally that Sir John Thompson lost a large portion of his sessional allowance, and I lost the whole of mine. The Canadian Government paid the expenses of Sir John Thompson and myself.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1896, the sum of $20,605,459.80 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolution concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 149), for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the fiancial year ending the 30th June, 1896, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 146) to amend the Customs Tariff, 1894.—(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 147) further to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—(Mr. Wood, Brockville.)

Mr. FOSTER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 148) respecting the bounty on Beetroot Sugar.

QUEBEC, MONTMORENCY AND CHAR-LEVOIX RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. AMYOT moved concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 98) respecting the Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix Railway Company.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the amendment?

Mr. AMYOT. It is to embody in the Bill an agreement with the Electric Light Company of Quebec, which was overlooked after the discussion upon the amendment moved by the hon, member for Quebec County (Mr. Frémont). The effect of the amendment is to restrict the powers given to Mr. Beemer so as to authorize him to sell the surplus of electricity only on condition that he is to buy power from the Electric Company in Quebec.

Mr. LAURIER. The agreement has been made between the promoter of the company and the Electric Company?

Mr. AMYOT. Yes, and the matter was overlooked when the Bill was before the House on the last occasion.

Amendment concurred in.

WINNIPEG GREAT NORTHERN RAIL-WAY COMPANY.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (p. 4819) respecting the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. LAURIER. I hope that some explanations will be given.

Mr. HAGGART. The resolution is intended as the basis for a Bill to enable what was the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company to change the starting point of their line, and to begin from Gladstone or Portage la Prairie and build northerly to the Saskatchewan. They had power under their charter-I think there is no doubt about that—to build the line of railway from Winnipeg to Gladstone or Portage la Winnipeg to I'rairie, but by doing so they would be paralleling the line of the Canadian Pacific or a line of the Northern Pacific, which is manifestly undesirable. The object of the Bill is to allow the company to earn $40,000 a year upon the completion of half their road from Gladstone or Portage la Prairie to the Saskatchewan. Another power the Government propose to take under the Bill is this: In the event of the company not being able or not showing sufficient energy in pushing the road or not making manifest the probability of completing the road, the Government may enter into arrangements with another company for the purpose of building that portion of the line between Gladstone, or Arden or Portage la Prairie, whichever may be the starting point, in the direction of the Saskatchewan. It interferes with no security which is at present on the road. The only interference to be avoided is in this direction: the company has already built forty miles of the road from Winnipeg northerly upon which work they have issued bonds-to what extent I do not know. The bondholders may say and contend that they advanced on that particular part of the road on the faith of the undertaking. The bondholders will have the same security if the present company build the road from Gladstone north as they had before.

Mr. MARTIN. I think we are entitled to more complete explanation as to why the company desire to build west of Lake Manitoba rather than to complete their undertaking from the end of the forty miles already This is called the Winnipeg Great built. Northern Railway and was always understood to be a railway from Winnipeg to the amend-Now. Hudson Bay. by ment the company propose to abandon Winnipeg as their starting point and commence at Portage la Prairie or Gladstone. It does seem to me that the company should be bound to give some explanation to Parliament why it is necessary to the object they have to attain to abandon forty miles which they have already constructed, throwing that away and starting from a point western, like Portage la Prairie or Glad-The hon, minister has not given us the slightest reason for the change. He did tell us that the company desired to run from Winnipeg around the southern end and up the west side of Lake Manitoba to the Saskatchewan, but he gave no reason for that.

I would not oppose any objections to their all probability seriously affect the security from a point like Portage la Prairie or Glad-I have heard no reason suggested why that should be done. The hon. Minister of Railways said that the Government would not be prepared to allow the company to fill in the link between Winnipeg and the proposed starting point, because there are two railways covering that territory already. I do not dissent from the position taken by the Government in regard to that matter, but that seems to be another reason why the company should not be allowed, without very good reason, to make this change. It is contended, and it seems to me reasonable, that the company have no. right, under their present charter to build they must build from Winnipeg northerly, and so that would have no right under their present charter to go westerly around the southern end of Lake Manitoba and then north to the Saskatchewan, because that would not be building northerly from Winnipeg toward Hudson Bay. Of course, in the Bill that is to follow this resolution. the authority will be given to make this change; but, as I say, I think some reason should be given.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) I do not see any ground for the statement made by the Minister of Railways that the present charter will permit the company to begin at Gladstone, or some other point than the one which would be a continuation of the road already begun from Winnipeg. I notice in the Act of last year the assumption is that the railway company will continue the construction of the present line. It says:

The deficiency shall form a lien on one-third of the land grant which may be earned by the company on the line between the end of the 40 miles of said railway as now constructed, and the Saskatchewan River.

It is therefore perfectly clear that the assumption is that the road is to be continued from the extremity of the road which is now constructed, and that it is to be extended thence north from the Saskatchewan River. I have had placed in my hands a telegram from the solicitors of Mackenzie & Mann, who say they have the first lien upon this road for the sum of £80,000 sterling, and they desire that there shall be no legislation which would deprive them of the rights which they now hold. If this road is begun at another point instead of being a continuation of the line upon which these bonds are given as a lien, it will be practically the construction of a new road, and would discharge the obligations of the company to those parties, and it would in going on the west side of Lake Manitoba; I which the parties hold, if the road was comdo not think it is a matter of very great pleted on the plan as proposed. Then I importance to my constituents. But it is a wish to call the attention of the Minister of matter of very serious importance to my Railways to another matter. A Bill was constituents that this company should aban-tearried through last year, the legal effect of don Winnipeg as a starting point and start; which, I think, was not very clearly apprehended by the House; and in looking over the Bill which is now under consideration, I do not think there is any improvement in this particular. I will mention it for the information of the Minister, and I shall be glad to know what he intends to do in the matter. I find that under this grant to the company of $80,000 per annum for a period of 20 years, the public services mentioned in the Bill may be pledged by the company for the purpose of raising money for the construction of the road. I also conclude, from a careful examination of the statutes, that if that is done, no matter whether the road is ever operated or not, the Government will be liable for the payment of this from any point except Winnipeg, and that $80,000 a year, or $40,000, as the case may be, to the parties who have advanced money upon this annual grant as a security. In looking over the Act of last year it seems to me that the intention of the draughtsman, and of the Government at whose instance the law was so drawn, was that this should be the case, that the Government intended the country shall take the risk of losing the moneys which it so expends, because the law provides that the country shall secure itself in another way for the means which are so expended. Now I am anxious to point out to the Minister that that security cannot be of any value to the country at all, because the land is granted upon the assumption that the road will be constructed and operated, and if the road is not constructed and operated, these parties would really not be entitled to that grant; and if the grant is made, the lands practically belong to the Government, and ought not to be handed over to the company except upon the actual construction of the road. As I read this statute, and as I read this Billassuming that the Government undertake to carry it through Parliament and it becomes law-these parties to whom this charter is given may pledge this annual subsidy to capitalists in the United States or in England, and may raise money to the amount of the present value of that annual subsidy, and may never complete a mile of the road, and yet the country would be liable to pay.

> Mr. HAGGART. No. If there is any doubt on that point at all, we will remove it. They will only be entitled to any portion of it after the road is constructed and equipped. We will make that clear if there is any doubt.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) But the hon. gentleman will see that before the road is constructed, these parties will desire to pledge this grant as a security to the parties who advance their money. That advance must take place before the road is built, and those parties look to the Government for the paycompels the Government, in point of honour and of law, to meet that obligation and compels them to look to the land security for the moneys which they have advanced.

Mr. HAGGART. I may be excused for saying a few words more to the hon, gentlemen, and especially the hon, member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) who spoke first. He says that the terminus of the road was intended to be at Winnipeg. It is, under the present Bill. One of the duties of the Government, before entering into a contract, would be to ascertain the probability of a connection being made between Winnipeg and the point of starting. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council have power do that. They can change the running powers or freight rates over either of the roads that are already built; so that part of the objection is removed. Then the hon. gentleman makes another objection, that the grant may be paid out before the construction of the road. It is true, these parties get this security and put it upon the market. The party who buys the security does it on the faith of the construction of the road, and one of the first things that he will lock into will be to see that the company have entered into arrangements with a competent and responsible contractor that the road will be finished, and that the grant will be paid out only on progress estimates as the that when the route was changed from the road proceeds. The Government do not adeast side of Lake Manitoba to the west it vance one cent of money until after the construction of the road. After the road is was to serve the people there as a colonization road, under the old charter, the tion road. That was the reason for the $80,000 a year became liable to be paid to the company; but under the new one, $40,-000 a year. The reason of the change from one side of the lake to the other which the Government take power to make in entering into a contract, is because for the first 100 miles, it passes throught the finest portions of the North-west Territories, that is, this part of it west of Lake Manitoba. The hon, gentleman must be aware that it is not for the purpose of building a road to the Hudson Bay that we are assisting this railway. When the Bill was introduced year before last providing for the construction of a road to the Saskatchewan, it was stated to be merely a colonization road. The Government were in no way pledged to a terminus further off than the Saskatchewan River. They do not commit themselves at all to the Hudson Bay Company's scheme; they commit themselves solely to the assistance of a colonization road which runs in the direction of the Saskatchewan River. This eventually might be a part of the Hudson Bay scheme, but it is not a part of the Hudson Bay scheme at present, as has been stated in this House and in the Senate. It is only for the purpose of assisting a road

River. We are making no new application. The company at present has a contract with ment of this sum of money in consequence the Government, that on the completion of of that advance. This statute as it stands the road to the Saskatchewan River, they shall receive $80,000 a year, and this con tract expires next year. The obligation we incur now is not to a greater extent than it was before; it is simply dividing the obligation into two payments, $40,000 a year being paid when one-half the road is built.

> Mr. LAURIER. I think it would be preferable if the Minister of Railways would be wholly frank instead of being half frank with the House. It would have been better if the hon, gentleman had said that this was not a link of the Hudson Bay Railway, if ever such a road is to be built, but it is a colonization road. It cannot be a road to Hudson Bay, for it goes towards the Pacific Ocean if it goes any direction at all.

> Mr. DALY. As regards this being a road of a colonization character, the hon, gentleman is correct, but it is also a link in what we hope to be the end of the Hudson Bay road, because the same company that is to build this road has power to build the Hudson Bay road, and this will eventually become part of the scheme towards which our people have been looking so long. In reply to the hon, member for Bothwell, I may say that in 1891, at the time the $80,000 a year subsidy was granted, it was stated by Mr. Dewdney and myself in the course of the discussion, and we had a map on the table, change of the route to the west of Lake Manitoba. As the hon, member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) stated in connection with another charter, these people want a line of railway from Gladstone westward.

Mr. MARTIN. This road will not go through the Dauphin country.

Mr. DALY. I am satisfied it will serve the settlers there; the country is well settled from Gladstone to Dauphin Lake.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. Minister is entirely wrong.

Mr. DALY. The company has laid out the route, and the right of way agent has made his report, it is in the hands of the company, and it shows the country thickly settled from Gladstone for the first hundred miles, and for that distance the road goes practically through a wheat field. That is the report I have from the president of the road, and it is based on the reports I have seen. As to the question raised by the hon. member for Bothwell in regard to the possibility of the promoters of the road hypothecating the $80,000 and not building a yard of the road, section 81 of the Act of 1891 provides whose terminus shall be the Saskatchewan that the money will only be paid on the construction of the railway, and that such payment is to be computed from the completion of the railway; and the people to whom the $80,000 in securities were hypothecated would he obliged to look after the contracts being carried out and the road built, otherwise their securities would be of no value. So there would be no question about the buildof the road if the bonds were hypothecated, because the holders of the securities would have to construct and complete the road before they received one dollar from the Government. In regard to the remarks made about Mackenzie & Mann, I saw a tele-gram from the solicitor of Mackenzie & Mann to the effect that they understood legislation was to be passed by which certain creditors would be excluded, and that bonding powers were to be included in this Bill. There are no bonding powers included in the Bill, and the judgment creditors of the railway stand exactly in the same position to-day as they did previously, and this Bill does not affect them, because the judgment is good against the franchise and all securities and assets of the line, whether built to the end of the first forty miles or in the direction laid down by the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). A question of identity might come up as to whether this was the same road or not.

Mr. DALY. When the name of the company was changed that was provided for. As to the position of the local government, there is an agreement filed between the company and the provincial government providing that on the land grant being earned the lien of the local government shall be removed; in fact, an equitable arrangement has been made between the company and the local government, whereby the Government's security will remain unimpaired. The only change, as has been already stated by the Minister of Railways, is that we are dividing the subsidy, giving the company one-half the amount after half the railway has been constructed, the other half becoming available afterwards.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I should like to ask the Minister of Railways whether in regard to the $40,000 a year to be paid as a subsidy for the first section of the railway to be built north, any provision has been made for the continuous operating of the road during the twenty years in which the money is payable?

Mr. HAGGART. No; nor is there any such provision in the old contract. The only condition is the forfeiture of the land grant. The undertaking of the company is to build the road in twenty years, but we have no practical or real lien except one-third of the land grant, and in this respect we have followed exactly the words of the original contract.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) What occurred to me in that connection was this: This Government might. I fear, drave an experience similar to that which may occur to them in connection with another road for which a similar subsidy was given, an experience of an unfortunate and not a very satisfactory character with respect to the road from Regina to Prince Albert. I fear there is a danger that, after the construction of the railway, there may a difficulty occur in the operating of the road; and the position would be this. that the Government would be paying out an annual subsidy of $40,000 a year to a road not in operation. Now, for a distance of 125 miles of a colonization road—which I understand this railway is now to be considered—for that 125 miles of colonization road from Gladstone north, a subsidy of $40,000 a year for twenty years is to be voted. If you capitalize that, you will find it is equivalent to a bonus, or a subsidy of about $8,000 a mile. That, perhaps, is not too large a subvention for a main trunk line to the Hudson Bay.

Mr. HAGGART. It is only $4,000 a mile.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) It is 4 per cent on a million dollars if I can figure correctly.

Mr. HAGGART. But you must remember they do not get the capital back at the end of twenty years, which is an important thing.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) It gives them pretty near to that as I think, on the basis of finance anyway. Well, it might not be too large a sum for a main trunk line to the Hudson Bay, but it does seem a large subvention for a mere colonization road, more particularly when there are competitors for the construction of a road through the same territory who would probably accept a less subsidy than is proposed to be granted to this road.

Mr. MACDONALD. As reference has been made to the Long Lake Railway, my recollection is that the $80,000 a year was given for certain services to be rendered, such as the transport of mails and Government supplies, and it is the same in this case. If, therefore, the road ceases to be operated the payment of $80,000 a year falls through.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) If that were done in this case there would be no objection.

Mr. DALY. In answer to the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) I may say that the conditions existing so far as the Regina and Long Lake Railway are concerned, and the conditions in this case are entirely different. From Regina to Saskatoon that railway runs through a country that is scarcely inhabited at all, and I do not suppose the company is earning anything on that portion of the road. The first 125 miles of this line, mate line on the map. You could go west of with which we are now dealing runs through, the lake if it is found to be more advantaa country that is settled to-day, and that ! will afford sufficient traffic to this railway length of the road a couple of miles. to pay its running expenses even in the present condition of the country. Of course as the country grows and the population increases the carrying powers of the company will be increased correspondingly. There is no doubt in the world that from the day this line is started the company will be a going concern on this first 125 miles. The conditions which the hon, member for Cardwell (Mr. White) mentions in connection with the Long Lake Railway cannot possibly exist in this case. The Government retains one-third of the land grant. This company is entitled to five and a half miles on each side of the railway. The building of the railway enhances the value of the land through which it runs, and the Government retaining one-third of that land grant, retains land that is not only worth the nominal sum of $1 an acre, but is also worth whatever increased value is given to it by the building of the railway. That onethird of the land grant will be ample security for any default which may be made i on the part of the company. The hon, gentleman will see that where the railway runs right through this land grant, the land is proportionately increased in value as the country is settled up, and as the adjoining sections are occupied by homesteaders, and the adjoining odd-sections sold to settlers ! coming in. That one-third is perfect security for any default that may be made in the carrying on of the railway.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) There is one extraordinary thing about this road. There are forty miles constructed which are now to be practically abandoned. The intention of the parties was to build a road east of Lake Manitoba, and now it is proposed to locate the road west. This is not the same as if it were for the construction of a definite line of railway, but it is in search for the location of a road the charter of which is held by certain parties. The hon, gentleman said that this road would go to the Dauphin settlement, but the Dauphin settlement is west of Lake Dauphin and this road lies to the east.

Mr. HAGGART. Not all of it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes; as located on the map.

Mr. HAGGART. It goes to the south of the lake and east of it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The lake is very broad at the southern end, and the whole width of the lake intervenes between the road as located and the settlement, so that the Dauphin settlement must be left out of the question altogether as to the construction of the road.

Mr. HAGGART. We are not confined geous, and that would only increase the Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is the difficulty of getting through Northwood.

Mr. DALY. Even as the line is located it is only 18 miles from Gartmore which is the principal post office in the heart of the best settled portion of the Dauphin country. At present these people are about eighty miles from a railway by their nearest wagon route, and if we bring them within 18 miles, we give them all the accommodation that the great part of the people of Mani-Gartmore is in toba have got to-day. Range 19, and the railway as located will run east off Lake Dauphin which is in Range

Mr. MARTIN. I was struck with the observation made by the hon, member for Cardwell (Mr. White), that this road was to be treated as merely a local colonization road. I take for granted that the propositions which the Government has made now are in strict accordance with the declarations made by the Government in 1891, when they first granted this subsidy of $80,000 a year. The statement made by the hon. Minister of the Interior of that time, Mr. Dewdney, was that the Government were not proposing by that Act to aid in any way a railway to the Hudson Bay, but were simply granting that subsidy for the purpose of opening up the country between Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan. That proposition has been still further modified by this resolution; that is to say, it is now proposed to divide that subsidy into two, and to grant $40,000 a year to this company for the purpose of opening up that comparatively small piece of country lying west of Lake Manitoba. including the Dauphin settlement. The whole undertaking, then, is treated as a local one, and there is in this resolution no recognition of the general scheme of a railway to connect Manitoba and the North-west with the Hudson Bay, with which this company started out. Discussing the local feature of the undertaking. I cannot understand the statement made by the hon. Minister of the Interior, because he must be mistaken as to the character of the country through which this railway is located. It is true, for twenty-five or thirty miles north of Gladstone there is a good settlement, which is now served by the Manitoba and North-western Railway; but north of that distance there are no settlers at all. It is true, there are settlers west of it, in the country between the Manitoba and North-western Railway and the Riding Mountains. That is a good country and well settled, and this proposed railway will skirt the eastern part of that settlement. But the country through which it runs itself is a low, swampy country, in which there are no settlers now, and strictly to the line, as that is an approxi- there will not be any until the country is drained, if it is possible to drain it, which I doubt very much. The country lying be-tween Lake Manitoba and Lake Dauphin is the last country in the world that would require a railway. The ony reason that could have induced the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway to take that route is the directness of the line towards Hudson Bay. But if we are discussing this line as a colonization line, we must dismiss the question of its directness towards Hudson Bay; and if the Government are prepared to pay $40,000 per annum for a railway to open up the good country lying west of Lake Manitoba, they are taking the very worst possible route for that purpose. It is true, as the hon. Minister of the Interior has pointed out, the people of the Lake Dauphin settlement may come east to this railway, although I am very much inclined to think, from what I know of the country, that it will cost a very great deal to open up roads from that settlement to this railway. The hon, Minister must know that the Lake Dauphin settlement extends away west of Gartmore, and so far as that portion of it is concerned. this railway will be of no benefit whatever. If we desire simply to treat it as a local colonization road, we should compel the company to run it from Gladstone, somewhat in the direction they are taking, but going west of Lake Manitoba, and then westerly through the Lake Dauphin settlement. When the Minister talks of the land grant being valuable because the railway will be built through it, he is mistaken, because the land is not fit for agriculture, and will not be materially improved.

Mr. DALY. I spoke of the first 125 miles.

Mr. MARTIN. I say that with the exception of the first 25 miles north of Gladstone, the country through which this line is proposed to be run is low and swampy, and not the kind that can be developed for settlement.

Mr. DALY. You are mistaken.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not mistaken. country is inhabited only by a few ranchers here and there, who have gone in for the hay. The only information the Minister has as to the character of the country is from the agent of this company. Would it not be well, before the Government undertake to give away $40,000 a year of the country's money, that they should get from their own engineer a report as to the character of the country through which this line is projected, and also the country west of Lake Dauphin? I am speaking from personal knowledge of the country, and I am satisfied that the report of that official would be that this railway as projected is not suited to the development of the country, and that it should be carried decidedly to the west of Lake Dauphin.

Mr. LAURIER. If such be the character is to be constructed, there is all the greater force in the remarks made by the hon, member for Cardwell. The road might not be operated as it should be, and the country would be liable for the subsidy without receiving any value in return for it.

Mr. BOYD. There is no doubt that there are more settlers between Gladstone and Lake Dauphin on this projected line than there are in the whole settlement to which the hon, member for Winnipeg refers. The railway is unquestionably going through a good country.

Mr. MARTIN. West of it, not east of it. I admit that it does skirt the eastern side of the settlement I refer to. But so far as the country between Lake Manitoba and this line is concerned, it is swampy and low.

Mr. BOYD. Have you ever been there?

Mr. MARTIN. No; but I have conversed with people who have been there.

Mr. BOYD. Just what I thought; you do not know anything about it.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, I do. I have seen plenty of people who have been up there, and I have been up in that direction myself. not very far, but I know the general character of the country. I have driven through portions of it. Between Riding Mountain and the railway, when you run east of Lake Dauphin, you get into a country of no use for settlement but only good for purposes of stock raising. If you take the other course, and vary still more to the west than this does, when you get to the Dauphin district you get into a good country which is already settled.

Mr. LAURIER. It is generally understood that the fertile portion of the Dauphin country is on the west side and not on the east side of the lake.

Mr. HAGGART. The whole question was threshed out five or six years ago before the Railway Committee. There was an application for a charter, the renewal of which passed the House the other day, for the purpose of building a road between Lake Dauphin and Lake Manitoba. There is a fall of Lake Manitoba feet from sixteen It was proposed to lower Lake Winnipeg. the lake and make a canal, and then build this railway to that particular section of country. From all the information I have got providing there was a couple of feet of water lowered from Lake Manitoba, the region between Lake Dauphin and Manitoba would be the finest part of the whole Northwest. However, the charter does not limit the compay to go in between Lakes Dauphin and Manitoba. The company may have the option of selecting what part of the country they please going northerly, and they ought to be the best judges of the route.

Mr. MARTIN. It makes a great deal of of the country through which this railway difference whether the company view the road as one from Gladstone to Hudson Bay land, worth $15 to $20 an acre, if the lake or merely as a local road to build up the were only lowered. It would not cost a very country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It may be fairly assumed that the company will see that its line goes throught the best populated country. Permission has been given to deflect any proposition of the kind. either to the right or to the left.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In going east, they are going through their own land. That with them.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I entirely agree in the observations made by the Minister time. of the Interior to the effect that the country through which the road is to be built is likely to be profitable to railway operation. If that be so, why is it necessary that so large a subsidy should be voted? At least I would ask from the Minister of Railways that a condition should be inserted to the effect that unless the road continues to be operated for twenty years, the $40,000 subsidy will not be granted. That would be perfectly logical and consistent, based on the statement, which no doubt is true, that the character of the country warrants a road being constructed through it and operated profitably. The country should be protected by our requiring continuous operation to take place before the subsidy is granted.

Mr. HAGGART. A subsidy of $40,000 a year, which would not be payable until anything at all.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They already have their land.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon, gentleman makes the calculation—it is spread over twenty years, and the total amounts to $800,000—if he purchased an annuity for that, my opinion is he would not receive half a million dollars.

Mr. MARTIN. The Government must not forget that the first forty miles of land earned will belong to the local government.. That would take up the great bulk of good land which this company has located there. I do not like to let pass the observations of the Minister of Railways with regard to the lowering of Lake Manitoba. That is another question. If Lake Manitoba were lowered, there is no doubt at all this country, which I referred to as being swampy, would be very much altered in character. But there is a great big "if" there. I am glad the Minister of Railways has that in mind and has not forgotten the observations made in this House. If the Government desire really to do something for Manitoba, there is their opportunity. It will not only apply to this particular country proposed to be served by this railroad but to the country around Lake Manitoba on the east, west and south. There are very large tracts of exceedingly valuable | His Excellency the Governor General:-

large amount to make the necessary canal. to deepen the outlet between Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg. I should be glad to give the Government my hearty support in Resolutions read a second time and concurred in.

Mr. HAGGART moved for leave to inmay be a very important consideration troduce Bill (No. 150), respecting the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I would take this opportunity of making a statement which I had hoped for an earlier opportunity of making. In the debate which arose on the ministerial explanations as to the formation of the Government, I made some remarks as to what had taken place respecting Sir Frank Smith. What I said was based upon a newspaper report which I have never seen corrected in any way and which I thought I was justified in assuming to be correct. I have since learned on what I consider to be reliable authority, that the report never was authorized by Sir Frank Smith, and, therefore, I came to the conclusion that the remarks I made were without foundation, and I have twenty years afterwards would not be worth to express my sincere regret that I spoke as I did of a gentleman who is universally respected and whom I was sorry to feel called upon to characterize in the language I did.

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. would like also to make an explanation as to a statement that I made, in a way, guardedly. I said, speaking from recollection, in answer to a question when the penitentiaries Bill was going through, that I thought the Roman Catholics were in the majority in the penitentiaries. That statement is erroneous. I find on looking at the report that there are more of other denominations than Catholics—some twenty more.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPITAKER. I have received the following communication from the Secretary of Office of the Governor General's Secretary, Ottawa, 20th July, 1895.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the session of the Dominion Parliament, on Saturday, the 20th instant, at 5.30 p.m.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
ARTHUR GORDON,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the House of Commons.

PENITENTIARIES ACT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved concurrence to amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 131) to amend the Acts respecting Penitentiaries. He said: The amendment has substantially the same effect as was intended in the first place. It corrects a mistake, probably of my own, made during the hurry of consideration when the Bill was in committee. It is in connection with the sections which shall apply to persons hereinafter appointed, and they vary the language by saying "hereinafter appointed or promoted to any office or employment."

Amendments concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Bill (No. 149) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1896, and for other purposes relating to the public service of Canada, was read the second time, considered in committee, and read the third time and passed.

WINNIPEG GREAT NORTHERN RAIL-WAY.

Mr. HAGGART moved second reading of Bill (No. 150) respecting the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I submit that this Bill cannot be now read the second time. It is a private Bill, and ought to have been introduced by petition, and therefore cannot be proceeded with as a public Bill. I think the case of the Northern Railway Company, which you will remember, is a case in point, and that being so I do not think this Bill can be proceeded with this session.

Mr. SPEAKER. This question having only just now been raised, it is impossible for me to decide the point without having an opportunity of looking into it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is a Government proposition.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not care whether it is a Government proposition or not. This is essentially a private Bill, it is a Bill it is amending a charter, and, of course, this to promote a private enterprise, it is a Bill Bill is being pressed forward with the assent dealing with the rights and interests of a private corporation as such. I will just read a paragraph from Dr. Bourinot's book, which I think will establish that fact:

Sometimes doubts may arise whether a Bill should be classed as public or private. Many cases of this nature occurred in the practice of the old Canadian legislature, but the Houses generally allowed themselves to be guided by the decision of the committee to whom a Bill might be referred. A committee has, under such circumstances, made some amendments to a Bill in order to obviate the difficulty, and bring it under the category of a public or private Bill. In the session of 1865, a Bill was brought up from the Legislative Council intituled "An Act to enable the Church Societies and incorporated Synods of the Church of England Dioceses in Canada to sell Rectorial Lands in the said Dioceses," and the objection was taken that it was private in its character and ought to have been introduced by petition. The Speaker decided against the Bill, on which no further progress was consequently made. All bills respecting synods and religious corporations are considered private since 1867.

Then Mr. Mackenzie introduced a Bill relating to the Northern Railway, a road extending from Toronto northward to the shores of Lake Huron, and to make certain alterations in the charter of the Bill. Speaking on that occasion, it was decided that the Bill must be withdrawn and the proceedings taken by petition and notice in the regular way. It is clear from what the Minister of Railways said this afternoon that this is practically an amendment to a private Bill. Here is a private corporation created for the purpose of constructing a railway. The Government propose to make a change.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They could not do that by any Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly, the company might not be able to do so. But this is proof that the Bill is an amendment to an Act of incorporation of the company and should be introduced by petition and proceedings taken on it in the ordinary way as regards a private Bill. This in no respect differs from the proceedings in regard to the Northern Railway Bill, and the ruling of the Speaker at that time was that it was a private Bill and should be introduced as such.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is an obvious distinction. This is a rearrangement of a parliamentary grant, and it cannot be carried out except by legislation introduced by the Government on resolution. There is no way of accomplishing this except by the mode adopted, the Government in the first instance having obtained the assent of the Crown. All the necessary steps This is legislation have now been taken. regarding a grant of public money, and it is a matter over which the private members have no control. It is a mere accident that it is amending a charter, and, of course, this the Northern Railway Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman who raises the point will be kind enough to quote the Act incorporating the Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Mr. MARTIN. The Bill was passed in 1887.

Mr. LAURIER. I desire to put forward an argument which must convince the House that the Bill cannot be proceeded with according to the manner in which it has been. introduced. The company is authorized to build a line from Winnipeg east of Lake Manitoba, and the plan shows the route to . be followed. To-day it is proposed to de-viate from the route which was authorized by the charter of 1887, when the Bill was introduced and passed.

Mr. HAGGART. The Bill says northerly and north-easterly from Winnipeg.

Mr. LAURIER. This is the practical effect of the Bill. According to the charter of 1887 the road is to pass east of Lake Manitoba. To-day, according to the plan submitted to the House, a new line is shown which is to be constructed according to the terms of this Bill, if it becomes law. It is a matter of public notoriety that bonds have been issued on the road as chartered in 1887, that there are over $200,000 of bonds affecting this road, the holders of those bonds having a vested interest in the road. Now it is proposed to give authority to this company to deviate from the line authorized to be built. which has been bonded and on which money has been obtained, and construct a new road, and thereby render valueless the bonds on which the company has obtained money. This affects private interests. How are the bondholders to protect themselves? They have received no notice of this Bill, and yet this company, authorized to build in a certain direction, proposes to build in another and thereby render their present bonds Under such circumstances we valueless. must come to the conclusion that the rights of the bondholders are seriously jeopardised by this legislation. What is the use of our rules in regard to private legislation? Notice has to be given to the parties, then a Bill introduced, and the Bill referred to committee, and many formalities has to be observed, so that the bondholders and creditors may have an opportunity of protecting and defending their rights when the Bill comes before the House for discussion. the present circumstances how is it possible to deviate the road to afford that right to private parties? What will occur? The company will be authorized to build, not the line bonded, but another line, and the bonds on the first line will not be worth the paper on which they are written. So, in my estimation, this is a fatal objection to the course taken. This Bill does not interfere in the surely it will not be contended that the of the parties interested. That was true of least from the company's right to build in another direction. It simply gives power to construct the road from a different point. The bondholders hold bonds on a particular section already built, forty miles in length. The charter allows the company to go along the Saskatchewan, or take another route to Water Hen River, or to start from Gladstone to the Saskatchewan-the undertaking is bonded to the bondholders the same as if it was built from either point to the Saskatche-The bondholders could not possibly object to the proposed legislation becausthe undertaking, so long as it is continued by the company which intends to build the railway, is bonded to the bondholders, and is an increased security to them over and above what they possessed before.

> Mr. MARTIN. These are statements that might be controverted. The hon. Minister takes one view, but others might contend for the contrary view, and there is there a question of private rights which it is attempted to decide and dispose of by this House without the ordinary formalities by which the rules of this House protect private interests in matters of this kind. Let me point to the statute of 1891 affecting this railway which is entirely unobjectionable. This Act is in accordance with the point mentioned by the Minister just as being a matter for the Government and a matter only requiring the consent of the Crown. There was a statute which, while it undertook to give to this railway a subsidy from the Crown, interfered in no respect with and altered in no respect the rights and liabilities of the company itself. That was a statute which was quite properly introduced into the House as a public measure. And I quite agree that those portions of this Bill which modify the statute of 1891, were quite in order, and that such a Bill could only be introduced by the Government. But Bill objection raised to this is not with regard to the modification of the subsidy, not with regard to changes in the terms on which that subsidy is to be paid, but with regard to section 2 of this Bill, which undertakes to modify and change the statute, chapter 81 of the statutes of 1887, which was a private Act and to change it in such a way that various persons might contend, would be contrary to their interests. The Act of 1887, in pursuance of the Act which preceded it, because it is a consolidating Act, granted the railway aid for 40 miles of line. The local government aided the construction of that 40 miles of railway by handing over to the railway company, under the provisions of the local Act $256,000 worth of Manitoba Government bonds, in return for which the railway company agreed to transfer to the Manitoba Government 256,000 acres of land, to be held as security for the principal and interest of those bonds. Now, Mr. Speaker, Manitoba Government would not have the right to be heard, and would not be entitled to the protection that the rules of this House provide in relation to private Bills as to the proposition to abandon that 40 miles of line. It is proposed to abandon that 40 miles.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No; but to give this guarantee.

Mr. MARTIN. The proposal is to abandon that 40 miles. Here is what is provided by section 3:—

Instead of the said railway so to be completed as aforesaid under the existing contract commencing as therein provided for, at the north end of the forty miles already constructed by the company, it may commence at or near Portage la Prairie and run northerly to a point of intersection with the company's main line.

--and so on. When that 40 miles was built was it the intention to make a road running 40 miles from Winnipeg? No. The absurdity of that proposition is manifest when you consider the terms of the land grant which the local government gave. And besides, it is well known to everybody that the local government gave that money not for the, purpose of aiding a road 40 or 50 miles in length, but for the purpose of aiding a road to run from Winnipeg to Hudson Bay. It was known as the Hudson Bay Railway. The amendment has the effect of allowing the railway to make its terminus not Winnipeg but Gladstone or Portage la Prairie. Surely it cannot be contended that that is not a modification of the private Act, chapter 81 of the statutes of 1887. There are two portions of this Bill, one providing for a change in the subsidy, as to which no objection is raised and which it is quite in order to introduce as a public measure, and the other, contained in section 3, giving the company new powers and new rights, as to which no notice has been given. As to this part, the Manitoba Government has had no; opportunity to come before the Railway Committee of this House, as provided in the rules of this House, to show whether they take the view suggested by the hon. Minister of Railways or whether they take some other view. I believe they would take an entirely different view from that of the hon. Minister.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That would not effect this point.

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly. What is the object of the rules? The object is to give protection. Surely that is a—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It does not affect the Manitoba Government's position.

Mr. MARTIN. I only speak of the Manitoba Government because they are a body outside of this House which the rules of this House are intended to protect, just as they protect others.

Mr. SPEAKER. Have they bended part of the road constructed?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, Mr. Speaker. have issued bonds on the 40 miles, I think, at the rate of $20,000 a mile, a very considerable portion of which bonds are held by Messrs. Mann & Holt, who built the railway, and another portion are held by the company in England which furnished the steel rails used to construct the road. Now, surely, Mr. Speaker, It is most pertinent to the question of order whether this Bill interferes with the company in its relation to other persons. The object of the rule is to protect private interests in such cases. The object is that the House shall not proceed to deal with private interests and private rights unless and until a petition has been presented to Parliament, preceded by the advertisements provided for in the rules of the House and until the Standing Order Committee has satisfied itself that these rules have been complied with. And even then the Bill is referred to the Railway Committee, in order that parties interested may be heard. I am not asking the House to pronounce any decision as to the Manitoba Government's claims or the bondholder's claims or the judgment creditors claims -for there are judgment creditors, who are interested in anything that is done with regard to changing the line or changing the organization of the company in any way. No persons have been given any notice of this. It comes in at the end of the session, and even now the House has it before it in rather an irregular way. No printed copy of the Bill has been distributed. I understand. I am not in a position to say what view the Manitoba Government will take in regard to this matter. But I have stated their relation to the company, and their interest would entitle undoubtedly them to come to the Railway Committee and state whether they thought these changes would affect their interests or not. So also with the bondholders and the judgment creditors. Without attempting to suggest whether these claims are or are not fair, or whether they would or would bot be considered fair by the Railway Committee, I make the point that these changes are such that the parties interested have a right to be protected by the rules of the House which provides for the method of introducing and passing a private Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. With the consent of the House I wish to give an authority for the position I take. The Red Sea and India Telegraph Company was incorporated in the English Parliament, and in May I find a reference to it which seems to be exactly in point:

In 1861, the Red Sea and Indian Telegraph Bill, which amended a private Act, was introduced and proceeded with as a public Bill, as it concerned the conditions of a Government guarantee.

I submit, without further argument, that that is the best support of the point I took which was that in this case no private promoter could introduce or earry through the legislature. And, as the Minister of Railways has said, this interferes with none of the companies' rights; it is a permissive Bill in that sense, and we are stating conditions upon which the company can, if it chooses, earn certain Government aid.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps I may be permitted the same privilege as the Minister of Justice. In the case the hon, Minister has just quoted there is nothing to show that private interests were involved as in this case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There must be.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That was a company in which the public had an interest and in which it was necessary for the But as there were Government to act. private parties who were fected by the Bill, it was held that the semi-judicial charter which applied to private Bills would apply to it, and therefore the parties whose interests were likely to be affected were entitled to the usual notice. That is precisely the principle applicable to this case. Here is a road which, as originally chartered, was to begin at Winnipeg and extend northward on the east side of Lake Manitoba for forty miles. Bonds are issued by private parties interested in that road; the value of those bonds will depend largely on whether it is continued northward any further or not. If it is continued as far as the Saskatchewan, any one will say that the security will be far more valuable than if it terminated where it now does. If the present line is abandoned after the construction of the forty miles, these securities become comparatively valueless, and the parties who hold them are entitled to the usual notice. That is a point which I press upon your attention. Mr. Speaker, and which I hold governs in this case. These bonds, which are held by the parties for forty miles and which would, perhaps, never have been taken as a security for the indebtedness to them if they had supposed that the road would never be continued on that line, are very seriously affected by the proposed change in the location of the railway. That being so, every principle applicable in the case of private Bills is equally applicable in this case.

Mr. DALY. There might be something in the hon, gentleman's contention if the bondholders of whom he speaks were affected by the proposed legislation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). So they are.

Mr. DALY. I cannot see that at all. For instance, the hon, member for Winnipeg speaks of the position of the Manitoba Government. That government have no lien or claim on the undertaking at all. Their lien was on the lands, and those lands have to be earned by the company. It makes no difference whether they are earned by the company building from Gladstone or from Winnipeg.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We have no right to decide that question until they are heard.

Mr. DALY. Under the agreement which is lodged in the Department of the Interior, as well as in the Department of Railways, the company cannot part with an acre of those lands without the claim of the Manitoba Government, which is a first lien upon them, being satisfied; and it makes no difference whether those lands are earned by the company building from Winnipeg or from Gladstone.

Mr. MARTIN. It might make a difference where the lands are located.

Mr. DALY. It makes no difference. the Order in Council they are to be five miles on each side of the railway, and the company are getting as good or better value than they did before. The creditors are Mann & Holt and the West Cumberland Steel Company. They have the bonds, and these bonds are a first mortgage and preferential lien and charge upon the railway constructed or hereafter to be constructed and on all tolls, etc. Their security covers the whole undertaking, whether it is commenced at Gladstone or at Winnipeg; and in addition to having the bonds, these creditors have judgments against the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company, and their judgment holds against the railway, whether it is constructed from Winnipeg or from Gladstone.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose the railway when completed should be a much more valuable property if built on the line of the original project, does not the hon, gentleman see that to change its location affects very seriously the interests of those parties?

Mr. DALY. I do not see it at all. Suppose that there was no legislation asked by this company to authorize them to start from Gladstone, and that they commenced to construct under the original Act from Winnipeg northerly to the Saskatchewan; could they not start at Gladstone and build easterly to Winnipeg and northerly to the Saskatchewan if they chose?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly not, for this reason: this security was given after the line was located and the work undertaken.

Mr. DALY. Not at all. If the hon, gentleman looks at the Act of 1891 he will see that section 4 provides:

The line of railway to be constructed by the said company south of the Saskatchewan River shall not be commenced until the location thereof shall have been approved by the Governor in Council.

That clause was put in advisedly, I think. after the Bill was in committee, because the consensus of opinion on both sides of the House was that this railway should be built west of Lake Winnipeg, and in order to carry out what was suggested by Mr. Dewdney at that time, that clause was inserted, so that the company could not commence to build that line until they filed their plans with the Governor in Council.

Mr. MARTIN. But that clause does not give the company any power to change their route. It only provides that on the route where they had power to build, the Governor in Council was to approve of the location.

Mr. DALY. What I say is that in locating their line west of Lake Manitoba the company are only carrying out the intention of the House at that time.

Mr. LAURIER. Does the hon, gentleman contend that this new line which is chartered to-day is subject to the existing bonds of the company?

Mr. DALY. I do, most assuredly.

Mr. LAURIER. And that no new bonds can be issued?

Mr. DALY. Not at all. The company cannot, under this Bill, build one mile of railway without that line being subject to every judgment, lien or bond existing against it, because these cover the whole undertaking, its tolls and everything else, and it makes no possible difference whether it is built from Gladstone or from Winnipeg.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Let me ask the hon, gentleman this question. If you strike out of the Bill these provisions authorizing the company to build from Gladstone northward, and they go on and build on this line, is not this a substantial deviation which may affect the interests of those who have acquired interests in the road?

Mr. HAGGART. I understand the Act exactly as the hon. Minister of Interior has explained it, that when the company got the alteration they could start northerly from Winnipeg and go by Gladstone. The object of the Bill is a limitation of that route, that is to say, it is to avoid duplicating the line of railway that already exists from Winnipeg to Gladstone, and to enable this company to start from Gladstone. The subject was fully discussed in the committee. The ground taken was that the last amendment of the charter gave the company power to locate their line west of Lake Winnipeg, and to build northerly from Winnipeg.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Look at these words in section 3:

The deficiency shall form a lien on one-third of the land grants which may be earned by the company on the line between the end of the 40 miles of the said railway as now constructed and the Saskatchewan River.

Mr. HAGGART. It says "may." It allows the company to cross the Narrows of Lake Manitoba in going to the Dauphin country. The hon, gentleman will admit that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. And does it lessen the security of the bondholders to allow them to build from Gladstone?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is wholly a new line.

Mr. FOSTER. Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question that has been raised by the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is that the reference in this Bill to the rights of a private company with regard to the construction of a railway, constitutes that portion of the Bill a private and not a public Bill. I presume that there is no doubt as to the rules of this House requiring notice to be given of a private Bill to be introduced in this House. I may, perhaps, trouble the House with one or two citations from Bourinot's Book on Parliamentary Procedure and Practice, in addition to the one made by the hon, member for Bothwell:

Whenever public Bills involve private interests which should be carefully guarded, they are subjected to the same examination provided for private Bills.

A Bill introduced in 1864 in the English Commons on the subject of the weighing of grain in the port of London was considered a public Bill, as it concerned the home and foreign trade, and also the public revenue; but the Speaker called attention to the fact that there were allegations in the preamble which were open to dispute and required to be established by evidence, and under such circumstances he deemed it advisable to commit the Bill to a select committee, by whom these facts would be inquired into, and any local or private rights would be duly protected.

A similar case occurred in the Canadian House in the session of 1883, when a member introduced, on motion, a Bill, "to increase the harbour accommodation of the city of Toronto, to extend the esplanade, and to provide for the control of the use thereof by railway companies." This measure proposed that a board of commissioners should be established for the purpose of carrying out the objects, which were sufficiently set After the second reading it forth in the title. was referred to the Railway Committee with the understanding that due notice would be given to the private companies and great corporations which would be affected by the proposed legislation. The Committee did not, however, deal with so important a measure that session, but reported to the House that the preamble was not proven.

In the English House of Commons there is a class of quasi private Bills, distinguished as "hybrid Bills." They are brought in, by order, as public Bills, but as they affect private rights "Their further progress is subject to the proof of compliance with the standing orders before the examiner, and to the payment of fees." They are generally "Bills for carrying out national works or relating to Crown property, or other public works in which the Government is concerned," or they sometimes deal with matters affecting the metropolis. They are committed to a select committee, when the Committee on Standing Orders has reported favourably. The rules of the Canadian Houses do not make any special provision for this class of Bills. The Toronto Esplanade Bill, just mentioned, would probably belong to this class, since the House found it necessary to refer it to a select committee with a view to protect the private interests involved.

In other cases, where Bills have affected both public and private interests, a different course has been followed. In the session of 1875, the Premier (Mr. Mackenzie) moved for leave to introduce a public Bill to re-arrange the "capital of the Northern Railway of Canada, to enable the said company to change the gauge of its railway, and to provide for the release of the Government lien on the road on certain conditions." Objection having been taken that some of the provisions affected private interests and altered the powers of the company in very material points, the Speaker decided that the Bill ought to be withdrawn. Separate Bills were subsequently passed by the House-one, relating to the Government lien, was treated as a public Bill, and the other, relating to the gauge and capital. as a private Bill.

In 1880, the Minister of Justice introduced a Bill to remove a difficulty that had arisen as to the title of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, which had been already the subject of Dominion legislation. The Government of Quebec, by whom that road had been acquired, believed it to be necessary to obtain additional legislation from the Dominion Parliament with respect to that portion of the railway extending from Montreal to Quebec, just as it had been previously obtained in the case of the part between Montreal and Aylmer. Objection was taken, on the second reading, that the Bill affected private interests, and the case of the Northern Railway Bill was adduced as a precedent. The Bill was then withdrawn.

What I am called upon to consider is whether the provisions of the Act now before the House affects private interests in such a manner as to constitute it a private Bill. I look at the Act of 1887, which, as I understand, has not been amended in the direction of giving the company any extended powers from that time up to the present, and I find that the company shall have full power and authority to lay out and construct and complete a double or single iron or steel railway, of a gauge of four feet eight and a half inches in width, from the city of Winnipeg northerly to Port Nelson or Churchill, or some other point on the shore of Hudson Bay; and to construct a branch railway from any point on its main line at or near the crossing of the Saskatchewan River to a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway west of Lake Winnipegosis; and the same, together with such other as shall be hereafter constructed by the said company, shall constitute the line of railway hereinafter called the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway. The company may build the railway in sections as it requires under the provisions of the Railway Act; but the branch line hereinbefore mentioned shall not be commenced until location thereof has been approved the Governor General in by Council. As the hon. the Minister of the Interior has said, the Act of 1891 provides that the line of railway to be constructed by the said company south of the Saskatchewan River shall not be commenced until the location thereof shall have been approved by the Governor in Council. I do not, however, consider that as being material, because the company were bound under the Act of 1891 to commence at the end of the forty miles. I take that to mean that they must commence at the end of the forty miles which have been constructed up to that point, and their subsidy was to be paid from that point to the Saskatchewan River on the completion of the road. Section 3 of this Bill provides:

That instead of the said railway so to be completed as aforesaid under the existing contract commencing as herein provided for at the north end of the forty miles already constructed by the company, it may commence at or near Portage la Prairie and run northerly to a point of intersection with the company's main line where the latter is located through Township 13, or through Gladstone, and to be continued to the Saskatchewan River.

Provided, however, that in the event of the company not complying with the terms of this Act, in so far as it relates to the construction of the first half of the company's railway, the Governor General in Council may, subject to the terms of the said Act and of this Act, transfer the amount applicable to such first half of the company's railway, namely, forty thousand dollars a year, &c., &c.

Now, it seems to me that this is a variation of the powers—I will not say whether it is an extension or a contraction of the powers—granted under the Act of 1887; but it is certainly a variation of the powers given to the company under that Act.

Mr. HAGGART. It is simply an addition.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes. It gives the company power to do something which, under the Act of 1887, it was not authorized to do; and from my reading, I am inclined to think that that portion of this Act should be introduced as a private Bill, with the due notice that persons interested ought to have with regard to private Bills. I am not going to discuss the point as to how the interests of the bondholders on the forty miles of road already existing would be affected by this Bill; but it seems to me that the creditors and everybody else interested should have notice of the intention of the company to apply for an addition to the powers granted it under the Act of 1887. I am, therefore, of opinion that that part of this Bill should have been introduced as a private Bill. Of course, as regards the subsidy to the railway, no doubt that is a public matter, and that part of the Bill has been properly introduced.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not know how far we can proceed with the Bill now that such an important part has been withdrawn. Mr. FOSTER. The point my hon, friend took objection to related to private rights, so to speak. That portion of the Bill is out of order according to the decision of Mr. Speaker. I think there is no objection to going on with the rest.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The decision of the Speaker is confined to clause

Mr. MARTIN. The proposition is entirely based upon the company having power to change the route. That has been taken away.

Mr. FOSTER. That we can discuss in committee.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not know that it is possible to reconcile the parts of the Bill now that this important section has been removed. Section 3 has been eliminated. Let us look at section 1. It reads:—

Clause 1 of the Aid Act is hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof it is hereby enacted as follows:—

"In order to enable the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway (formerly the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company) to construct so much of their railway to Hudson Bay as reaches from the city of Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan River. the Governor General in Council may enter into a contract with the company for the transport of men, supplies, material and mails for ten to twenty years, and may pay to the company for such services during the said terms, $80,000 per annum in manner following, that is to say: One half of the said sum of $80,000 to be paid annually, commencing from the date of the completion by the company of one half their line to be constructed between Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River, and the remaining one half of the said sum of $80,000 to be paid annually, commencing from the date of the completion of the remaining half of their line to be constructed between Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan. vided that such sums shall be paid in semi-annual instalments and the company may sell the same or may assign the same by way of security for any bonds or other securities issued by the company in respect of the company's undertaking.

Now, I understand from an observation made by the Minister of Railways that half this subsidy was to be paid upon the completion of the road from Gladstone or Portage la Prairie. But, Mr. Speaker, this cannot take place now, it having been decided that the third section, upon which the subsidy was to be paid, is now withdrawn. There is, therefore, no basis to proceed upon.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon, gentleman will see that in the event of the company not performing the work, we may ask to have power to give that part of the subsidy to another railway which may have power to build from Gladstone, or some other point, in the direction of the Saskatchewan.

Mr. LAURIER. What railway is that?

Mr. HAGGART. There is a railway company whose charter was passed to-day or yesterday.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we might go into committee on this Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. MARTIN. The clause as you read it, Mr. Chairman, is not according to the copy placed in our hands. You read the name of the company Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company. In our copy it reads Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I read it as it is here.

Mr. MARTIN. But that is not according to the copy placed in our hands.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is the official copy. I cannot read anything but what is before me.

Mr. LAURIER. But we cannot follow what you are reading unless we have the Bill in our hands.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The notice relates to the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They have left out in the printed copy in the Chairman's hands certain words. In the original it reads: "The Winnipeg Great Northern Railway (formerly the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company)."

Mr. LAURIER. I move to add the following as Clause 1a:—

If at any time before the expiration of the said twenty years, the said railway to be so constructed as aforesaid, under the said contract shall cease to be operated regularly for freight and passenger traffic, then the said payments under the said contracts shall cease, and the liability of the Government in respect thereof shall be determined—or if the operation shall cease only for a portion of the said railway, to be discontinued either for the whole or any portion of the said railway, for only a portion of the residue of the said period of twenty years, then the liability of the Government in respect of the said payments shall be diminished only in a rateable proportion, that is to say, at the rate of six hundred and forty dollars per annum during the discontinuance for each mile on which it takes place.

This is to avoid an objection pointed out this morning by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Bill is no good with it, it destroys the whole object.

Mr. LAURIER. The object of the Bill, I understand, is to give a subsidy to this company, whether it is earned or not. If the railway, as we anticipate, is going to pass through a fine section of country, then there would be enough traffic to maintain it. But I am prepared to support a bonus of a simi-I understand from the hon, gentleman's attitude at present that they have so little confidence in their scheme that the investors are guaranteed their money by the Government, whether it is earned or not. If that be the condition of the scheme, it is just as well we should know it at once.

Security of that kind Mr. HAGGART. would be worthless at present, unless they had a contract with some responsible people to work the road for 20 years. It will be impossible to negotiate something that eventuates at the end of 20 years.

Mr. LAURIER. Why impossible?

Mr. HAGGART. For the reason that the payment would then only be due on the road 20 years. No person would advance one cent on it unless he had security from some party who is perfectly able to give security that the conditions would be performed at the end of 20 years.

Mr. MARTIN. So far as the aid that was given in 1891 is concerned, that has expired.

Mr. HAGGART. No it has not.

Mr. DALY. They have the whole year yet.

Mr. MARTIN. Now similar arrangements were made with the Regina and Long Lake, the Calgary and Edmonton, the Calgary and McLeod Railways, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company entered into an arrangement for six years to operate, at any rate one of them, the Long Lake Railway, and they had to be paid, the Government of Canada has to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, they have to secure them against loss by transferring to them a considerable amount of land and guarantee them against loss in operating this Prince Albert road for six years. The six years are just about to expire, and the railway company have been a steady loser in the operation of that line. I fancy the same remarks would apply to the Edmonton line. Now they are placed in this condition in respect of these lines; they have got to go to work again and give the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or some other company, a very considerable bonus to operate these roads, or else allow them to go out of opera-tion. That is exactly the same position in which they are placing themselves in regard to this particular line. It seems to me a very objectionable kind of bonus, and I think it would be much better for the country to give a straight bonus in some other direction rather than be saddled with the necessity of seeing that this road is operat-

Mr. HAGGART. 1s the hon. gentleman in favour of the limitation of the assistance that the Government proposes?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes. I think that kind of lar amount; but I criticise the kind of assistance that the Government offer, because it involves the necessity of the Government seeing that this road is operated, or else they lose the whole of their money. Unless the railway is in a position to operate its line, of course it cannot carry any men, or mails, or freight, for the Government, and the equivalent for which the Government propose to pay $80,000 a mile cannot be rendered to the Government by the railway company unless the line is operated. And that there is going to be a loss to operate it. I think we can fairly assume, especially if it runs through a poor country, such as we were discussing this morning, if my contention is correct that the country is a swamp, and until it is made something different from a swamp, it will not furnish any traffic. It is merely a question of the traffic that it will pick up along the route. Under these circumstances I do not agree with the kind of aid the Government are giving to the railway.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon, gentleman need not argue in that direction, because that feature of the Bill is struck out. The Winnipeg and Saskatchewan Railway have no right to build, as the Speaker has ruled. from Gladstone northerly, and the aid, if given at all, must be given to a road going to Dauphin Lake.

Mr. MARTIN. The Dauphin line would probably be a paying line.

Mr. HAGGART. That part with reference to the Winnipeg and North-western, and the Winnipeg and Saskatchewan, has been eliminated from the Bill, and as to whether it goes east or west from the Dauphin road. The hon, gentleman says he would like to know that the assistance is given to a road that was not passing through this unfertile country he speaks of. What proposal is there in the Bill to go through that country?

Mr. MARTIN. It may be the hon, gentleman's criticism is correct. Of course, so far as we are concerned in Manitoba, we are willing to have this colonization road bonussed, and we are glad to get money from the Dominion Government under any pretext, we are not going to oppose anything of that kind. Our interest in the scheme is based upon its being part of a Hudson Bay railway. It seems to me the Government are taking a very poor way of aiding a road by giving to them $80,000 a mile which has to be paid to them whether they are able to operate the road or not; in other words, the Government are putting themselves in exactly in the same position with regard to this road that they now find themselves in with regard to the Regina and Long Lake road, the Calgary and Edmonton road, and the Calgary and Fort Mc-Mr. MARTIN. Yes, I think that kind of Leod road. They practically have these assistance is not a good kind of assistance. railways on their hands. They are bound to give them $80,000 a year-I think it is RELATION OF THE COLONIES TO THE the same amount-for the transport of men, materials, mails, etc. The railways have been shown to be non-productive by actual experience, it has been found that they will not pay expenses. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I understand, has lost money even on the bonus that they receive from the Government for operating the road, and it is not at all likely they will enter into any further contract without receiving considerably more than they have been paid to date. So that it is not only a question of giving a $80,000 a year, but the Government have got to take the responsibility of seeing that these roads are operated for 20 years. Now why should they place themselves in that position? not give the road a similar amount of money as a straight bonus, and relieve themselves from any responsibility of that kind?

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine that we will not change each other's opinions by long discussions on this point, and as our time is very short until the hour we have set for prorogation, I think it would be as well to take a vote now.

Mr. LAURIER. That is all very well, but it would have been much better to bring up that Bill at an earlier period. It was called by the Speaker five or six times before it was finally introduced.

Amendment negatived, on division.

On section 2,

Mr. HAGGART. I propose to amend this clause in order to comply with the ruling of the Speaker, so that it will read as follows:

That in the event of the contract not being entered into with the company in compliance with the terms of this Act, so far as it relates to the construction of the first half of the company's railway, the Governor in Council may, subject to the terms of said Aid Act and of this Act, transfer the amount to such first half of the company's railway, namely $40,000 per annum for twenty years, to a company authorized to construct a line of railway from Portage la Prairie or Gladstone to Lake Dauphin.

Mr. MARTIN. The Government propose to hand over $40,000 to another railway. they do so, the other company should be amenable to all the conditions of the Act of 1890.

Mr. HAGGART. No doubt, and it will be provided for. The $40,000 goes to the other railway with all the limitations. The Governor in Council will not give the company greater rights than it had under the old contract.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

EMPIRE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House adjourn during pleasure.

Mr. LAURIER. I should like to call the attention of the leader of the House to a matter of great importance. I observe that certain correspondence has been published with respect to the relations of the colonies, and rights affecting questions which have often come before this House.

Mr. FOSTER. I received to-day a copy of the correspondence. It relates to subject matters which came under the discussion of the Intercolonial Conference on the subject of treaty making; it is the elaborate discussion of the question, sent from the Colonial Secretary's office. These papers have just come into the hands of the Government. They will, I think, be made public in the recess.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And distributed.

Mr. FOSTER. I think so.

Mr. LAURIER. We had better move for an address to have the correspondence brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. That would make it formal.

Mr. LAURIER. I beg to move:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that he will be pleased to lay before the House all the correspondence that has taken place between His Excellency and the Imperial Government in reference to the Intercolonial Conference held in Ottawa in the month of June, 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to qualify that-of course, my hon, friend will be quite willingby adding all the correspondence which can be brought down, that is, all that is not of a confidential nature. That does not, of course, refer to any correspondence that has been laid before the Imperial House.

Motion agreed to.

PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE POST OFFICE.

I have a motion which Mr. MARTIN. I would like to bring before the House. I had extreme difficulty in getting the return on the subject from the Department of Public Works, and I got it only after a great deal of pressing. It is a matter not of very general importance, but of great local importance, the location of the new post office building in the town of Portage la Prairie. When the matter was before the House on a previous occasion, I pointed out that the Government had located this building one end of the town, outside of the business portion entirely.
answered that that was The Minister that that was done on the of his own official. have examined these papers very carefully, and I find that the official, Mr. Daniel Smith, of Winnipeg, reported very strongly against ! the site which the hon, gentleman has selected. I also stated that the Government had paid $75 per foot frontage for the lot, when, as a matter of fact, it was not worth more than $20 or $25 per foot. The statement the Minister then made was that that was paid on the recommendation of the inspector. Now, I do not find that the inspector has made any recommendation. I find that the Government got the town assessor's valuation of this land, which was $45 or $50 a foot, and this in my opinion is fully double what the land is worth. But even taking it as a correct valuation, the Government deliberately paid $75 a foot, or $25 a foot more than the highest valuation they were able to obtain. They have on file and have returned to the House certain recommendations which may be used, perhaps, as an argument in favour of buying this land at the price stated: but these recommendations are entirely from individuals who own lands close to this, and whose interest was in getting the post office located there in order to enhance the value of their lands. The town council passed a resolution, which was communicated to the Government, to this effect:

That it is the opinion of the Council that the location of the contemplated new post office for the town of Portage la Prairie should be on the corner of Tupper Street and Saskatchewan Avenue, or the corner of Campbell Street and Saskatchewan Avenue.

Now, the Government were offered a site at each of these points at $75 a foot, the same price they paid for the lot actually selected. Both of these lots are among the best business properties in the town, though not as valuable as property on the north side of the street; but instead of acting on the recommendation of the town council, the Government took the lot at the corner of Annie Street and paid this exorbitant price. The Minister of Public Works adopted the very proper course under the circumstances of directing his officer in Winnipeg, Mr. Daniel Smith, to go to Portage la Prairie and make a report on the desirability of the different locations available for a post office. Smith made the following report:

Winnipeg, August, 1894.

Sir,-In accordance with your instructions, I visited Portage la Prairie re reporting on a post office site in that town. I could not procure a map of the town showing the lots and streets as now laid out. I therefore made a map showing the business portion of the town. I also show the east and west boundaries of the business portion of the town. Principally all the business houses are on Saskatchewan Avenue, and located between Manitoba and Annie Street on the north side of Saskatchewan Avenue.

This post office is not located between those points, but it is west of the district which Mr. Smith reports as being the business part of the town-

There are four business houses west of the Mr. MARTIN.

The available sites for the post office I have marked in red and numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4. No. 1, 99 or 66 feet frontage, is available at $75 per foot. This property is owned by a Mr. Campbell, of Toronto, who, I understand, has been trying to sell it to the Government for a post office site. His agent stated he thought that he would most probably take what the other properties were offered for. He only owns 50 feet. I have another offer of the other 16 feet for $50 per foot. No. 4 is the property of the Presbyterian Church. The trustees offer the property either 66 feet or 99 feet frontage, for $80 per foot frontage, they to have the privilege of removing the buildings, which are of wood, without foundations of stone. With reference to the sites the maps show their location. The western site have the best sites for foundation, and are somewhat drier soil. There is no drainage, and the nature of the ground is wet below about 3 feet from the surface. I would, therefore, suggest that the building be well raised above the surface. The ground is level on all the sites. There are no available lots on the north side of the avenue, except inner lots, and they are held at fancy prices. The town hall is supposed to be about the centre of the town.

> I have the honour to be, Sir, Your obedient servant, (Sgd.) D. SMITH.

Now, the solid business portion of the town Fes between Annie Street and Manitoba Street, just as Mr. Smith reported. Then Mr. Smith was asked further to vestigate the properties, and he made a report on the 23rd October, 1894, as follows:-

Dear Sir,-In accordance with your instructions by telegram, I came here to ascertain the price of land in the vicinity of the site offered for post office buildings. I find the Imperial Bank purchased a piece of land adjoining the bank property, the price was $75, not a corner lot, and east of the church property I offered for post One other sale was made further office site. east at the same figure, also inside lot. perties Nos. 4, No. 3 and No. 2 on the map I forwarded to the department, I consider worth the prices asked. No. 1 being west of all business houses on the south side of the street is not worth as much.

Of those three sites, two were admirable sites, and the other was a reasonably fair site, and all available to the Government. No. 1. being west of all business houses on the south side of the street, is not worth as much. That is the site the Government selected. The inspector does not attempt to put a value upon it, but simply says it is not worth as much, and points out that it is entirely west of all the business houses on that side of the street. There is another letter from Mr. Smith, dated Winnipeg, 26th October, 1894, to A. Gobeil, Esq., Deputy Minister of Public Works:

I inclose you a letter from Mr. W. Sparling, re value of lands at Portage la Prairie. Mr. Sparling is the town assessor, and has a good idea of the value of lands in the town. I, therefore, thought well to get a valuation from him. I have marked the lots he refers to, No. 1, 2, 3 and 4 as shown on the plan I mailed Mr. Fuller, showing the available sites for the post office Now, Mr. Sparling makes a report, and without reading what he says with regard to the other sites which were not purchased by the Government, and which he says were worth $75 a foot, he says as to the site the Government did purchase:

To W. Boddy, site block 49, lot 25, is worth $50 per foot, and lots 26 and 27, $45 per foot.

Now, this is the valuation of the assessor, and yet the Government deliberately paid $25 a foot more than that. It was not because there were not other lots available, for there are none occupied at all on that side of the street, west of the present post office site. There were any number available at $25 a foot. I know as much of the value of property at Portage la Prairie as Prof. Sparling does, and I have no hesitation in saying that land has never been worth there in recent years more than $25 a foot. He, however, valued it at $50 and the Government paid $75 per foot. Here are some of the letters offered as an excuse for buying the land at this price. The first letter is dated Portage la Prairie, 20th October, 1894:

N. Boyd, Esq., M.P.

Dear Sir,-I have seen Mr. Daly's telegram of the 19th inst., re value of land on Saskatchewan Avenue, and in reply beg to say that I am prepared to make a declaration that about February, 1893, I offered $80 per foot for Saskatchewan Avenue property, distant about 170 feet from the property offered the Government for a post office site by Mr. T. W. Boddy, and I consider the property in the vicinity in question has increased in value since last year.

Yours truly,
JAS. McLENAGHAN.

That appears to be a letter that was worth something on the face of it, but when you learn the real facts, you will see it is not worth anything. Mr. C. McLenaghan owns a business block on the north side of the street, just east of Anne Street, and the post office is just west of Anne Street, and on the south side of the street. Mr. McLenaghan desired to put a fire wall on the east side of his block. In order to do that it was necessary for him to buy a small portion of the land, and he made an offer of $80 per foot for the land. He could not build his wall and make the extension he desired without having this little piece of land. Under those circumstances he offered to give $80 per foot, and the transaction consisted of a deal by which he made an exchange of land. You can see, therefore, that this valuation is most absurd. However, Mr. Mc-Lenaghan cannot be blamed for desiring to have the post office site on the south side of the street when he owns a business block on the north side just opposite. I wish only to point out the fact that this letter is not worth anything as a justification to the Government as far as value is concerned, in the face of the valuation of the gentleman selected by Mr. Smith, the assessor of the city, who valued the land at $50 per foot. ter that was referred to by James McLena-

Then we have another letter from Mr. Newman, Portage la Prairie, in reply:

Replying to your inquiry as to the value of Saskatchewan Avenue property in this place, I beg to say that in May last I purchased 100 feet on the corner of said avenue and Anne Street, which I valued at $80 per foot. This property is immediately east of the property which I understand Mr. P. W. Boddy has offered the Dominion Government as a site for the post office.

Mr. Newman owns a business stand immediately opposite where the post office is to be and is most desirous of having the post office located there, because it will raise the value of his property. On this piece of land is a hotel which got into difficulties; and Mr. Newman and his brother, being the largest creditors, took over the property. Mr. Newman says he values the land at $80 a foot. Well, he gave that price for the property, for there was a large building and a large lot of furniture. There is no comparison whatever between the value of a piece of land with a hotel upon it and the value of a piece of land on the other side of the street. In a small town like Portage la Prairie, the property on which business houses are erected becomes high in value while the building is going on, but after the principal blocks are finished the prices go down. Mr. Smith refers to a sale of a piece of property by myself there at $75 per foot, but we have some property immediately west, just across the street, for which I would be glad to get $25 per foot. It is just outside the business part. Then we have another letter from Mr. J. M. Robinson:

Portage la Prairie, Oct. 20th, 1894.

N. Boyd, Esq., Esq., M.P.

Dear Sir,-In the matter of the price asked for the post office site offered by Mr. Boddy as per telegram from Hon. Mr. Daly, I might say that I was offered $80 per foot frontage for the lot upon which the "Review" office is situated over a year ago; and the gentleman making the offer agreed also to remove the "Review" building to another lot 150 feet distant, and to have it in as good repair as before moving. This offer I refused on ground of price not being sufficient. The "Review" lot is distant about 200 feet from proposed post office site.

The local Oddfellows' lodge own the lot directly opposite this proposed site, and I think it was $75 per front foot they were offcred for their property over a year ago.

This offer was refused, some of the members thinking it would not be many years till this lot would go to $150 per foot; I think this price asked by Mr. Boddy, $75 per foot, is very reasonable, and the Government would not make a mistake in accepting his offer. So far as the offer made for the "Review" property is concerned, I may say I am prepared to make a stat-utory declaration to the truth of my statements, or perhaps, better still, produce the written offer, which I think I have among my papers.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) J. M. ROBINSON.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was the same matghan in his letter. Mr. J. M. Robinson was offered this price for a small piece of property which Mr. McLenaghan needed for his fire wall, and so offered a fancy price for it. The land where the "Review" office is is very much more valuable than the land where the post office is. Up to the end of the business portion of the street, the land keeps nearly the same value. Suggestions have been made that the Government were wise in putting this building at the extreme west end of the town, because at the extreme east end there is water in the cellars and you cannot get as good a foundation. Well, Mr. Speaker, it has never been suggested by any person in the town that the Government should put the building at the east end. The two sites supported by the council are at the centre, while this is at the extreme The court-house is at the extreme east of the business part. It is said that the foundation has cost a large sum of money. I have the authority of Hon. Robert Watson, who has the matter in charge, to say that this is not correct. In the court-house they had no trouble with the foundation. footings for the foundation, as shown on the plan on which the hon. Minister of Public Works has asked for tenders, are exactly the same for the building he proposes to put up as for the court-house. So it will cost the Dominion Government the same amount of money to put a proper foundation under their building on the site chosen as it cost the local government to put the foundation under their building in the east end of the town. It was never suggested that the post office should be put in the eastern portion, but that it should be as nearly as possible in the centre of the business portion of The centre business coincides the town. almost exactly with the centre of population. I consider that the Government have been guilty of a gross outrage in selecting this site for so important a building. I am confident that the hon. Minister, after he goes there and sees the place, will agree with me, and I am prepared to say that any hon. member will see that the sites recommended by Mr. Smith were better than the one that has been chosen. The Government is deliberately paying $75 per foot for land which is assessed for $55 per foot for the corner and $45 per foot for the rest. The assessor can only get at the value in a general way. I have no hesitation in stating that this valuation is altogether too high and that the land certainly would not have sold for a cent more than $25 per foot. It seems to me that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Boyd) has used his position to induce the Government to choose a site for the post office in Portage la Prairie to suit the interests and wishes of a few of his friends and supporters, men like Mr. McLenaghan, Mr. Newman, Mr. Garland and others of that kind. And if it is true that the Government could have obtained a good central location on the corner for the same price they paid for this out-of-the-way site they have chosen, it makes it all the more difficult for one to understand how they can justify themselves in the matter.

Mr. OUIMET It is too late to enter into a long discussion of this subject, but I will say a few words to show that the department was justified in the opinion that the site chosen was the best site. We must bear in mind that, for the last fifteen years at least, the post office has been situated within about 100 feet of the site now chosen.

Mr. MARTIN. Not fifteen years—not more than ten years.

Mr. OUIMET.—Well, ten years. And no objection was ever made.

Mr. MARTIN. Oh, yes, there was great objection.

Mr. OUIMET. No objection that I ever heard of. It is true enough that the present site is west of the centre of business. But it stands in the centre of population of the town—

Mr. MARTIN. No. sir.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman is very positive in his statements, but I can only speak from the papers.

Mr. MARTIN. There is nothing in the papers to show that.

Mr. OUIMET. I am informed that west of the site there is more business done in one establishment alone, the establishment of Mr. Garland, than there is done at any other place east of the site chosen.

Mr. MARTIN. That place is a quarter of a mile away.

Mr. OUIMET. Further, I may say that west of the site, nearly opposite, is one of the largest hotels of the place, the Leland.

Mr. MARTIN. No; that is east. It is on the opposite corner, just across the street.

Mr. OUIMET. There are also the central school and the Lansdowne college.

Mr. MARTIN. The Lansdowne college has ceased to exist.

Mr. OUIMET. Both of these are situated west of the present site. The population, I am told, is moving west.

Mr. MARTIN. Oh, no.

Mr. OUIMET. My hon. friend has said that Mr. Smith did not recommend this site. Here is what he says.:—

The available sites for the post office I have marked in red, and numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4. No. 1, 99 or 66 feet frontage, is available at $75 per foot. No. 2, 66 feet, at $80. No. 3, 66 feet, at $100 per foot.

Mr. MARTIN. That is, of course, a mistake. He corrects that afterwards. Nos. 2 and 3 could be got for $75.

Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. OUIMET. He says further:-

The western sites have the best soil for foundation, and are somewhat drier soil. There is no drainage, and the nature of the ground is wet below about three feet from the surface. There are no available lots on the north side of the avenue except inner lots, and they are held at fancy prices.

As to prices, he was asked by telegram from Mr. Fuller :-

Are rates per foot frontage given in your report on Portage la Prairie fair and reasonable ? The answer is:

Price reasonable, below current rates of adjoining property.

Mr. MARTIN. He did not refer to this side at all.

Mr. OUIMET. His report is dated in August, and this telegram is dated 8th conculsion that the present site is the best. was reasonable. of the recommendations, I do not know these gentlemen, McClenagan & Newman, but I understand they are good friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, and that they are respectable citizens of the town. But surely, if their evidence is going to be discredited because they are interested, the hon. gentle-man's evidence must be challenged in the same way, because he advocates the eastern site, and if I am not mistaken, he is largely interested in that part of the town.

Mr. MARTIN. I have large properties in the west of the city, perhaps as much as some of these gentlemen.

There is another consi-Mr. OUIMET. These gentlemen interested in deration. that part of the city, were asking that their interests might be looked after simply because the hon, gentleman had espoused so strongly the interests of the eastern people. The western people had to be looked after by some one, because nobody else would have paid any attention to them. I think the hon, gentleman himself considered the people living in the western part of the town as men whose interests were not of much account. On the whole, I think the department has acted on the reports made by our officer, and has secured the best site. and at a reasonable price.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not blame the Minister of Public Works, because he has been misinformed, but the statements he has given to the House, are not accurate. I suppose he gives them on the authority of the hon, member for Marquette (Mr. Boyd.) I have no hesitation in saying they are not accurate, because I know every foot of this town. It is not true that this site is anywhere near the centre of the population of; Portage la Prairie. I have no hesitation in saying that the population east of this site in the same block.

is very much greater indeed than the population west. So far as this business he referred to is concerned, there is nothing in that. Mr. T. A. Garland conducts a large business a quarter of a mile further west of this site, because years ago, in the boom days, he built a large warehouse upon his property in the west end hoping that business some day would go there, and rather than let the building go to ruin, he conducts the business in it. So far as the central school is concerned, it is very far from the centre of the town, and within a year or two they have been obliged to build ward schools in the eastern and northof the town. It. ern part curate to say that the town is growing more in the west than in the east. The town is growing far more in the east end than in the west end, and the population is increasing a great deal more east of this September. For these reasons, I think the site than west of it. As for Lansdowne department was justified in coming to the College, it was disbanded a year ago, and is now a boarding-house, and it throws no the most central, and that the price paid light upon the question. With regard to Now as to the character those gentlemen to whom the hon, gentleman has referred, whose testimony is given there. I drew attention to facts which nullify the testimony of those gentlemen. I would draw the Ministers attention to this fact with regard to Mr. Smith. I am sure Mr. Smith never intended to say that the price of this site was reasonable, because he has by his report practically put it out of the question.

Mr. BOYD. Since this question was before the House on a previous occasion, I cannot say that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) has thrown any new light on the subject. There is no question that there is a good deal of feeling in that town between the east and the west end, and the hon, member for Winnipeg is to a great extent responsible for that feeling. Now, the old post office has stood for the last twelve years, and the site has only been removed 100 feet west. He says the centre of the population is considerably east of the present site. I have undoubted evidence that one block east of where the present post office has been selected, is the centre of the population. I have also undoubted evidence that 40 per cent of the business of Portage la Prairie is done west of the present post office site.

Mr. MARTIN. Pshaw!

Mr. BOYD. That is the hon, gentleman's opinion, but I do not think any evidence I could produce or that any one else could produce, would satisfy the hon, member for Winnipeg, unless the post office was removed down close to the east end where he used his influence to have all the other local buildings placed. The central school is one block west.

Mr. MARTIN. No, the central school is

Mr. BOYD. One of the ward schools is put at the very east end of the town, and another school was put at the west end, and the one in the east end is much nearer the post office than the one in the west end. So far as the hon, gentleman attributes blame to me, I suppose, if there are any evil effects. I shall have to suffer for it. I do not think any position in which the post office might be placed would suit the hon, member for Winnipeg, except on his own land, and thus enhance the value of his property. In regard to any blame that he may consider attributable to me, I am quite prepared to assume the responsibility for it.

Mr. DICKEY. Does the present leader of the Opposition, the hon, member for Assiniboia, agree with his followers?

Mr. DAVIN. I hope my hon, friend will not press the Government too hard.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have received the following communication from the Secretary of His Excellency the Governor General:-

Office of the Governor General's Secretary Ottawa, 22nd July, 1895.

-I have the honour to inform you that His Mr. Boyd.

the Senate Chamber this afternoon at 3.30 p.m., to prorogue the session of the Dominion Parliament.

> I have the honour to be, Sir, Your obedient servant. ARTHUR GORDON, Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable The Speaker of the House of Commons.

THE QUEEN'S PRIZE WINNER AT BISLEY.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to bring a matter before the House that I think is of interest, not only to the hon, gentlemen present, but to the whole of Canada. We have seen in the daily press that a private in the Canadian militia has been successful in winning the Queen's Prize at the Bisley meeting; and I would ask the hon. Minister of Militia whether the information that is given us by the press is correct, as I have no doubt that he must have received authoritative aunouncement. Ιf this be the fact, I think it would be only right, and it would give satisfaction to the whole population of Canada, if the Government were to make some recognition of the glorious victory won by Private Hay-hurst. I think this victory has done more to. advertise us and to bring Canada to the front, than thousands of dollars could have done, if spent in the ordinary way by the Government of Canada. We have seen the enthusiasm that was created in England by the late Premier winning the Derby; and this is a victory that I think cannot conflict with the feelings of any religious sect, or of any class of people in Canada. It has been won in a manly sport, a sport that is kept up for the defence of Canada, and for the defence of British possessions. Under these circumstances, I think that the least we can do as a Parliament is to vote a sum of money to buy either a cup or a testimonial to show the appreciation of Canada of the way in which private Hayhurst has upheld the honour of Canada at the Bisley meeting. I am informed, I do not know whether correctly or not, that there is a precedent for the action I propose, and that the Government has seen fit by Order in Council, on a previous occasion, to give a sum of money to buy medals for the winners of the Kolapore Cup. when Canada was successful in that competition. I think, therefore, that, for the honour of Canada, this House should pass a vote in favour of giving private Hayhurst a testimonial for the magnificent way in which he has brought distinction upon his country at the Bisley meeting.

Mr. DICKEY. I am glad to be able to inform the House that I have had from two sources official confirmation of the statement we have seen in the daily press in regard to private Hayhurst's success at Bisley; and I Excellency the Governor General will proceed to think it is only right that I should say that, as Minister of Militia, I fully appreciate the honour that this achievement has brought not only upon private Hayhurst himself, but upon the whole militia force of Canada; and I also feel that it cannot but prove of great practical service to the country. It is no small event for any man to be the best shot in a gathering of all the best shots in the world, and we cannot help feeling proud that the man who has achieved that victory, has gone over with a Canadian team, and brings his honours back to Canada. I think this event will also tend to improve the whole morale of the militia force, and the shooting branch of it particularly. While in past years we have been very much gratified with the winning of the Kolapore Cup, and have looked upon that as the ultima thule of our riflemen's exercises over there, now we have moved the standard up to the very top, and Canadians now will feel disappointed if the Queen's prize does not remain in Canada for years to come. I could not allow this occasion to pass without, in this public way, testifying to the pleasure and deep gratification of the Department of Militia, and I am sure I can speak for the whole militia force of Canada, in the honours which private Hayhurst has brought to the force and to Canada. The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman with regard to a medal is, of course, one for future consideration. It is impossible at this stage of the session to do any more than formally to express the great gratification this country feels at the success of this gentleman.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I may be allowed to say that I believe the Opposition is in full accord with everything that has been said by the hon, member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) and the hon. Minister of Militia in testifying the general satisfaction felt throughout Canada at a Canadian's success in winning this prize, and I agree that the result cannot but be of great ultimate and practical advantage to Canada. While these feelings are doubtless to some extent only sentimental, there is no doubt that this event will bring the country before the attention of the world in a way that will be of great public benefit. While I congratulate the rifle team on this brilliant success, I also congratulate the officers in charge of that team this year, and especially the gentleman who has been so fortunate and so successful, and who has shown his great ability as a shot. As to the suggestion made by the hon. member from Victoria that the Government should mark in some tangible way our gratification at the success of private Hayhurst, I am sure that the Opposition will only be too glad to second any action that may be taken by the Government in that direction.

THE STEAMER "STANLEY."

Mr. BOYD. What use is made of the to give a dece "Stanley" in the summer months? I believe it is only used in winter, and I think lian colonies.

it could not be more profitably occupied in the summer than in navigating the Hudson Strait until they are closed up by ice in the fall. The only cost incurred would be the coal necessary to keep the vessel running; and I have not the slightest doubt she would demonstrate that the straits are navigable not only for four or five months, but for seven or eight months. If the people of eastern Canada understood how important this question was to the people of Manitoba and the North-west, they would be prepared to incur this expense in order to demonstrate something of what will be of great importance to Manitoba and the North-west.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I beg to second the hon, gentleman's motion in calling the attention of the Minister of Marine to this important work and would refer the Minister of Marine to the last words of Marmion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The "Stanley" it still going on, but not in the direction of Hudson Bay She is used in the summer months as a cruiser for the protection of fishermen on the Atlantic coast, and we could not afford to take her away from the good service she is doing there. Prince Edward Island would be rather anxious if she got out of fair water into any dangerous straits.

VOLUNTEER LONG SERVICE MEDALS.

Mr. PRIOR. I see the Minister and the ex-Minister of Militia present and I would ask whether either of them has made any application to the Imperial Government for the long service decoration for the volunteers. All volunteers in England who have served 21 years are obtaining a medal. Although in Canada we call ourselves militia men, still we are, to all intents and purposes, volunteers, and the feeling certainly is amongst the militia of Canada that themen who have served 21 years should get that medal.

Mr. DICKEY. The difficulty is this, that in England there are two forces—the militia and volunteers. In the Australian colonies there are also two forces. The long medal service is only given to the volun-Application was made some time ago by my predecessor for this medal, and the objection was pointed out by the English authorities that our service was a militia service. On being pressed with the argument that we had no volunteers and therefore should be entitled to the same decoration for the corresponding service, they argued that a general order entitling the militia in the colonies to the medal would entitle also the militia of the Australian colonies, and would give rise to a claim on the part of the English militia. There are two solutions to the question. The one is to give a decoration for long service in the militia which will apply also to the Austra-The other is, failing that, to have the Canadian forces treated exceptionally, as that is the only force existing in Canada, and a special order made in reference to them. The Canadian force is practically a volunteer force, because the pay is merely nominal. No conclusion has been reached in this matter, but it is being pressed and will be pressed until we get a definite answer one way or the other.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My hon, friend the Minister of Railways having laid on the Table a number of returns, I hope hon, gentlemen opposite will acknowledge the great promptitude with which these papers have been presented.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am glad to see these documents brought down even at this late hour of the session. I hope they will be considered before the 4th January next.

Mr. MACDOWALL. As I seem to be the only other member on the Opposition side, I may explain that I am sitting here to give moral support and moral tone to the Opposition. I am glad that my influence has already been such as to cause the Government to bring down three returns.

Mr. EDWARDS. We have not heard from the North-west concerning the great victory of Canada on the other side of the water. I would like to hear from my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) his opinions as to the winning of the Queen's prize at Bisley.

Mr. DAVIN. I am very glad that Private Hayhurst made a bull's eye. He must be a thorough Conservative, for I have never known a member of the Opposition to strike the bull's eye yet.

Mr. EDWARDS. If the hon, member had really appreciated the victory, I think we should have heard a longer speech from him.

Mr. DALY. The hon, member for West Assiniboia, having spoken, he desires me to say that he appreciates with other members of the House Private Hayhurst's victory at Bisley. I am sure that we were all very much gratified that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) should have brought this subject before the House, especially so, in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman was commandant of the first Canadian team that went to Bisley. It seems most appropriate that he should be the gentleman to bring this subject before the House. While I am on my feet I would like to call attention to the fact that when the hon. member for Victoria speaks his congratulations he is backed by nine other members from the West of Lake Superior. The appearance of these gentlemen upon this the last day of the session when no other part of the country is so well represented shows that the members of that part of the Dominion give very close and appreciative attention to their parliamentary duties.

Mr. DICKEY.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sir James.

Sir JAMES GRANT. It is indeed very gratifying to see nine gentlemen from the west who have come to take part in the legislative work of Canada remaining until the very close of the session. They have done credit to themselves and to the important part of the Dominion they represent. I have been delighted to hear the warm expression of appreciation of Private Hayhurst's victory at Bisley. I am glad this Chamber has closed in a most healthful condition, politically, and I trust that when we come back again we shall find ourselves in as good spirits as we are at present, in closing up this branch of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada.

ANNEXATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. MACDOWALL. As there is no other question before the House, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether the Government has any plans in view, consequent upon the failure to annex Newfoundland to the Dominion, with the object of transporting the people of Newfoundland to our North-west. I believe there is an hon. member from New Brunswick in the House just now who has taken a lively interest in this matter, and who thinks that if we cannot annex the island, and all its wealth, we may at least get the people to immigrate into our North-west and help to contribute in that way to our wealth.

Mr. FOSTER. I must ask my hon. friend to put that question on the notice paper.

UNITED STATES ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. DAVIN. The Whip of the Conservative party had a Bill upon the Order paper dealing with alien labour, a Bill which I was to have seconded, but we have not been able to pass this Bill this session. However, next session I think we shall certainly have to do something in that regard, because the way the people of the United States are behaving towards Canadians is really shocking. In today's paper we see an account, showing how some of our people are being treated. I will read the article referred to:—

According to a despatch in the Toronto papers, a Mrs. Sherman and a Mrs. O'Connor, with their families, went a fortnight ago from Toronto to Niagara Falls, N.Y., where their husbands had obtained work on the new electric railway. On Wednesday, while their providers and protectors were absent, Government officials arrived at the house occupied by the women, took them and their children into custody, locked them up for two hours, and then carted them to the middle of the international bridge and unloaded them. The youngest child of six that were thus treated was twelve days old; the oldest was ten years. The unfortunates were taken in and cared for by the mayor of the Canadian village, and he will get his reward. There have been a good many harsh things done on the Niagara frontier in connection with the enforcement of the United States immigration laws, but this exceeds them all in heartlessness. If like treatment had been accorded to all poor people who came to the United States that country would not have so many rich people to-day.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the way the people of the United States are carrying out their alien labour law, is a scandal to civilization. It is exceedingly hard for a country like Canada, that desires to take just views of those people coming here to sell their labour, to know how we are to act, when we find a highly civilized and progressive country like the United States behaving in a manner that parallels in barbarism anything that we read of in the actions of governments in the middle ages.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:—

May it Please Your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill:—

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial year ending 30th June, 1896, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service, to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Fifth Session of the Seventh Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In bringing this session of Parliament to a conclusion, I have to congratulate you on the industry and zeal which have marked your labours.

The necessary legislation having been passed, the Treaty of Commerce with France, from which favourable commercial results may be expected, will, as soon as ratified, be put into force by proclamation.

The negotiations with Newfoundland to which reference was made at the opening of the Session, I regret to say, have not resulted in any agreement for the present.

The reply of the Provincial Legislature of Manitoba to the Remedial Order issued by my Government on the 21st March last was considered of such a character as to justify postponement of further action until next session.

I am pleased to observe the grant of Parliament in aid of the fund contributed by the Canadian people for the benefit of the family of the late Right Honourable Sir John Thompson.

The amendments which have been made to the law relating to the Civil Service, will, it is believed, result in increased efficiency and economy.

The Legislation of the session will, I trust, lead to an improved administration of criminal law, to the advancement of commerce and the the extension of railway and telegraphic communication.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the services of the current year.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate, and Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In relieving you from your duties, I venture to express the hope that you will find among the people you represent a continuance of that prosperity which marked the opening year.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the thirty-first day of August next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the thirty-first day of August next.
