Mr. MULOCK. I know nothing about the person who is in debt or whether he is in Ottawa or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then you have not been listening to the discussion.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister is wholly inaccurate. He is here for the purpose of answering proper questions before we give him the money to spend, and he should do so. He will find that he will make much more satisfactory progress in passing items if he endeavours to manifest a reasonable degree of courtesy in answering.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Thank you.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister will probably get wiser on that point before he is a great deal older. I intend to continue to ask such questions as I deem necessary in the public interest, and unless we get satisfactory answers, the Minister will understand that he is to blame for the lack of progress.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. 1 am not in the slightest hurry, but I object to stupidity—that is all.

Mr. MULOCK. I object to impertinence. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. So do I.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister is commencing to recover a little of his old tactics since he has been able to return to his duties, and since his head has again commenced to assume that imaginery size that it had some time ago. He will find he will make a good deal more progress if he will just confine himself to the discharge of his duties for which he is placed in the Cabinet. If he paid $41,000 to Mr. Connor, what is the extra $1,000 for. The contract was for $40,000, nothing more nor nothing less, and we are entitled to have details of the other $1,000.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I see the amount in the Auditor General's Report as payment to Mr. Connor is given at $40,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is right. I will answer the hon. gentleman who last spoke (Mr. Somerville). The amount was paid to Mr. Connor as stated there, and as set forth in the contract. The additional amount, as I am informed, and it is all the information I can give, was for machinery required in addition to the contract. The items, I fancy, are outlined in the Auditor General's Report. I read all of them, and I suppose the hon. gentleman will find the articles that made the $1,000 among them. All Mr. Connor got was the $40,000 on his contract.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister of Justice pays one hundred cent intimates that this Mr. Rogers is probably larly will send an ordinate gallery of the House; but the Minister pounds or 500 pounds-must understand that as members of Parliament we have duties to perform, and for my own part I am not at all uneasy as to whether Mr. Rogers may be in the gallery or not. I want to know how long the defalcation existed before the Government took steps to try and collect it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Every effort was made to collect it, and when the facts were reported to me a suit was brought.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was a draft made on him?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not follow the clerks around my department to know how they transact the details of the business. I do not know the colour of the man who wrote the letter.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have been informed, and I would like to know if this gentleman for whom the Minister of Justice feels so sensitive is not the president of the Conservative Association for Manitoba?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I believe he is not, nor do I believe he ever was.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think my informant was right, and I fancy he occupied that position.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) would be better authority on that than I am.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt that accounts for the tardy action of the Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They would not have sued him at all if he was.

Mr. GRIEVE. I quite agree with much that was said by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) with regard to the establishment of the binder twine industry in the Kingston Penitentiary. The action of the Government is to be commended on that ground, and I believe in giving credit where credit is due. It is a well known fact that a huge combination existed in this country which extorted exorbitant prices out of the farmers. The Government of the province of Ontario and the Patrons of Industry did what they could to break the back of that combine, and the Federal Government, following up the good example. established the industry in connection with the Kingston Penitentiary. I give them credit for that, but I do find fault with the way they have of disposing of that twine. They will sell a carload or half a carload to some person who apparently has no financial standing whatever, but if a farmer who pays one hundred cents on the dollar regularly will send an order for twine, of 100

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He will get the same treatment exactly.

Mr. GRIEVE. No, but you will ask him to send the money with the order or pay c. o. d. I am not aware that a single farmer in the country has received credit, nor do I think it is right they should have eredit, for I do not think it is business-like to give credit for twine. We all know that twine is a cash article, and that the farmers all pay cash for it. The member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) commended the Minister of Justice for not giving the prices to the House, as he said it would be misleading to do so. That I cannot understand. You manufacture in Kingston pure manilla, pure sisal, and a mixture of sisal and manilla, and why cannot you give the prices of these three kinds? It could not be misleading. Any man who has been accustomed in the past to use binder twine knows the quality that he uses, and the argument of the hon, member (Mr. Henderson) does not amount to anything.

I was sorry to hear one statement House this afternoon : ' made inthe to do a great deal of injury to a certain industry in this country, and should not have been made unless the gentleman who made it had the facts before him. I refer to the Patrons of Industry, who established a binder twine factory in the city of Brantford a few years ago. They are putting their twine on the market, and it was stated here. Rope has not yet been manufactured in that they went into a combination with the Consumers' Cordage Company of Canada. Now, Sir, if that statement is not true; Noit should not have been made here. thing that could be done or said, could tend more to depreciate that industry before their own people, or before the farmers of this country, than the bare fact that the Patrons have entered into a combination. That industry was started to burst a great combine, and if the Patrons who are supporting that industry come to the conclusion that the directors of the company have instructed their manager to make overtures to the Government here and to the Cordage Company of Canada to enter into a combination. I take it in hand to say that the great stock of twine they have this year will be left on their hands. I believe that the farmers would have nothing to do with it if the Patrons have entered into a combination. therefore repeat that hon, gentlemen should be careful about the statement they If the statement is true, there is, of course, no fault to be found with hon. gentlemen for making it; but if it is not true, it should not have been made here.

Now, Sir, the hon, member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said that there was no reduction in the price of binder twine when the duty was reduced from 25 per cent to 121/2 per cent. I think the hon, gentleman, in that respect, is wrong. I have used, in the past, and I use at present a considerable quantity of twine, and I know of my own personal knowledge that after the reduction in the duty was made, binder twine was sold on the market at from 2 cents to 3 cents a pound less than before. Now, I hope the Government will be careful in the future with regard to placing the twine on the market. The Minister states that there are still some arrears from last year. hope he will see that in the future the business is conducted more on business principles. I know nothing of Mr. Rogers, whose feelings, it is said may be hurt. I care not whether his feelings are hurt or not, because I have a great deal of contempt for gentlemen in his position. I have no use for political hangers-cn. You may find scores of them in the lobby. knew one in my life who was worth enough powder to blow him up; and if the Government have many more such characters to relieve, I will find no fault with them if they give them twine enough or rope enough with which to hang themselves. There is, at present, I have no doubt, still a combination, not perhaps in reit is a statement which was calculated gard to binder twine, but in regard to rope, which is made of the same class of material, and in the manner, and by the same class of workmen. People who have been purchasing rope for the last few years know that it has been selling on the market at 2 cents or three cents per pound more than binder twine. the prisons, nor in the farmers' binder twine factory at Brantford, so that the cordage combination has still a monopoly of rope. 1 give the Government credit for establishing this industry in the interests of the farmers of the country; but I hope they will be careful to sell the products in a business way, only to people who are able to pay 100 cents in the dollar, and that they will not have to come down to the House and announce that certain parties are still in arrear.

> Mr. SPROULE. The hon, gentleman says that after the duty was reduced the price fell 3 cents a pound. At the time the duty was 25 per cent, the price was only cents a pound, and the reduction of the duty to 12% per cent was equivalent to a reduction of 1 cent a pound, so that I do not see how the price could have fallen 3 cents a pound. That is not reasonable. I made inquiries of the hardware men after the duties were taken off, and I found that they sold binder twine at the same price then that they did before.

> Mr. GRIEVE. The hon. gentleman knows that he had to pay 18 cents a pound for twine when it was subject to a duty of 25 per cent.

> Mr. SPROULE. We were not paying 18 cents a pound then.

Mr. GRIEVE.

Mr. GRIEVE. We did pay that at one time. The following year, without any reduction of duty the price was reduced to 15 cents, but after the reduction of duty, there was a drop to 3 cents a pound. There might have been that reduction without any reduction of duty.

Mr. SPROULE. If there were other causes for the reduction in price, the hon. gentleman cannot fairly attribute it to taking off the duty.

Mr. HENDERSON. With regard to the drop in price of binder twine, I have followed this subject for years, and my firm conviction is that neither the manufacture at the prison, nor the reduction of the duty has had anything to do with the reduction in price. I believe the real reason is the fall in the price of the raw material.

Mr. GRIEVE. Why does that not affect the price of rope?

Mr. HENDERSON. Years ago, when twine was selling at 18 cents a pound. manilla was worth as much as £58 sterling per ton, whereas to-day it is selling at £18 sterling per ton. It is quite possible under these circumstances, to reduce the price of binder twine made from manilla from 18 cents a pound down to one-third of that price. In 1893 the Consumers Cordage Company was manufacturing twine cheaper than the Central Prison or the Brantford factory; and we must remember that the Brantford factory had free money, because the farmers had subscribed it, and the Central prison had freedom from taxation, and almost free labous, while the Consumers Cordage Company had to pay for everything. But those who had been engaged in the industry for years, and had a large experience in the business, were able to buy their raw material at the proper time, and at the best advantage. We know that it came out in evidence at Toronto that in one transaction the Central Prison lost $10.-000 by purchasing raw material at the wrong time. The Brantford institution has been able to make 15 per cent profit by buying twine from the Consumers Cordage Company, and selling it to the farmers. I think the reduction of duty, which to-day amounts to little more than half a cent a pound, has little or nothing to do with the reduction in price, but I supported the principle of protection to that industry, and I believe I was right in so doing. I believe that industry was as valuable to the people of our country as any other industry. I never considered that its protection had any effect in enhancing the price; if I had thought it had, it was my determination to join with others to reduce that protection. When it was represented to the Government that those who had this protection were using it to enhance the price, the Government reduced it one-half; but I do not think that reduction of duty had anything that years ago the Americans manufactured to do with reducing the price. I am pleased that the farmers of Canada are to-day getting this article at the low price they are, and I think that the policy the Government are pursuing in manufacturing it in an institution and in a way that will absolutely prevent the enhancing of the price by any organization outside, whether the Cordage Company, or Mr. Stratford's company at Brantford, is the true policy, and I trust it will be continued for years to come.

The hon, gentleman has Mr. GRIEVE. not answered my question at all. I made the statement that binder twine sold much cheaper than rope made out of the same material. He says that the reduction in the price of binder twine is due to the reduction in the cost of the raw material. that is the case, how is it that for the last two years the farmers who have been getting binder twine at 6½, 7½, and 8 cents a pound have had to pay 12½ cents a pound for their rope. I believe now that if the Government of Ontario and the Patrons had not gone into the manufacture of binder twine, the farmers of Canada would be paying the same price that they pay for their rope.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not pretend to be a practical rope maker, but I can readily understand that when you have to twist two together, and then two more, and then join a dozen or more together, you have to employ a great deal more labour than you do on the article of binder twine, and the cost would be greater. Besides binder twine is a cash article, sold in large quau-tities, for which there is ready sale, quick returns, and consequently small profits. That is the principle of business all over. The larger and readier the sale and the quicker the cash returns, the smaller the profits. Rope is an article manufactured in the regular way, sold on long terms of credit, and it is not unreasonable that the profits would be larger than in the case of binder twine.

Mr. McMILLAN. I cannot believe the statement of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), that it is the price of the raw material alone which makes the product dearer, because I was one of a party in 1891 who telegraphed to Philadelphia and Londonderry, Ireland, to find out at what price binder twine could be laid down in Canada. We got from Philadelphia an offer of binding twine, 650 feet to the pound, laid down at Montreal at 8½ cents, and from London-derry we got an offer of the same article at nearly the same price, while at the same time our farmers were paying 14 cents a pound. That was before the duty was re-almost entirely sisal twine, a cheap article. They sold their manilla to the people of Canada very largely and used the sisal themselves. We had a superior article of binder twine to what they had at that time. and consequently the American price would be of necessity lower. As I have said already, the low-priced article was not a cheap article for the farmers. It pays a farmer better to give 10 cents for a good article than 8 cents for a poor one. Take binder twine, 500 feet to the pound at 5 cents, and another of 700 feet to the pound at 7 cents, the 7 cent article would be as cheap as the 5 cent. And the same may be said of the 8-cent, 10-cent and 11-cent article. The higher priced article is better because it works more readily. There is less stoppage in the machine, fewer sheaves are left undone, and less time is lost. The farmer has not to go along picking up the sheaves as he has to do in the Northwest, where, I am told, a great many sheaves are not picked up at all. If they would get a good article and ignore the poor American stuff, it would pay them much better, even if it did cost them a few cents a pound more. I scarcely think that the question raised by the hon, gentleman has any point, when you consider that it is the fact that our farmers have been using a better article than they have in the United States, and the better article is the cheaper in the

Mr. MARTIN. When I asked the question with regard to the amounts due the penitentiary for binder twine sold by the Government, I did so because there was a rumour in Manitoba which came to my ears, that the Government had used this business for political purposes by allowing their friends to buy this twine on credit. hon, gentleman, in answering the question, gave me the name of one person who, he said, was the only one who was now a delinquent. The special report that I referred to was amply justified in this case, but the hon, gentleman declined to give the names of the other persons to whom binding twine had been sold on credit for fear that possibly they would not deal with the Government again. I wish to join with the hon, members who have taken the stand that it is very improper indeed for the Government to sell binder twine upon credit. As has been stated by the hon, member for Halton, binder twine is not a credit article. It is sold by the other establishments concerned on a cash basis, and it is quite unfair for the Government to adopt a different principle. It is also very dangerous indeed for the Government to adopt the principle of selling on credit, for the reasons that I have pointed out. Whether it be true or not that they sell to their political friends on credit, there will be the feeling throughout the country that there are favours of that kind extended. For that purpose I would strongly urge on the Government the advisability trade that the other persons in the trade do. I had intended at that time to suggest to the Minister of Justice the advisability of giving the names of those persons to whom the twine had been sold on credit and who had afterwards paid for it, with the view of clearing up the suspicion that came to my ears. If it were true that they were ordinary business men in the trade who were in the habit of buying goods on credit and paying for them, then no reflection would be cast upon the Government; but if, on the other hand, they were friends of the Government who should not have been trusted in this matter, the House should know it. It seems to me that no injury can be done to them if they were ordinary business men who were in the habit of buying goods on credit and paying for them when due.

The state of the s

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have not the slightest objection to give the information to which the hon, gentleman refers to any hon, gentleman in this House. I merely put it to the sense of the House as to whether it would be wise in the interests of business, to publish, on the mere request of an hon, gentleman, those names. There is no desire for secrecy. The hon. gentleman is welcome to the information. I admit the right of hon. gentlemen to ascertain those facts in connection with any business in which the public is concerned, but unless there is grave reason in the public interest, I do not think we ought to mention those names in debate. Of course if the hon. gentleman finds that there was favouritism shown, it would be his duty to bring that matter to the attention of the Heuse, and the department fears no investigation of that kind.

Mr. DALY. I heard the name of one gentleman to whom binder twine was apparently sold on credit-Mr. Robert Rogers, of Clearwater-but to what amount I do not know.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. $1,700.

Mr. DALY. And, it appears, that on that $1,700, he owes us $650, according to the statements made here. I can only say that from my knowledge of Mr. Rogers, his long business experience, and great capacity, and the large business he is carrying on as a merchant and wheat dealer, the sale to him was perfectly justified. He is a man of business reputaion, and not a mere political hanger-on as has been alleged. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) himself will say that Mr. Rogers is good for $650. It may be found that there is reason for Mr. Rogers not paying the $650; there may be some dispute in regard to it. I know that Mr. Rogers is worth $650, and many other similar sums besides.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not know anything of pursuing the same course in regard to this about that; it is a delicate and a difficult matter to say what a man is worth. But I know that, under the circumstances, it was grossly improper for the Government to sell Mr. Rogers this twine upon credit. I say that, knowing all the circumstances the hon, gentleman has referred to. But I may say that the opinion generally held in Manitoba, on the hon, gentleman's own side of politics as well as on the other, and independent of politics altogether, that it was a gross piece of political favouritism to sell binder twine to Mr. Robert Rogers on credit. I do not hesitate to say that, but without making any improper reflection upon Mr. Rogers. What public reason can there be that the names of these parties are not given? I do not want to get those names for any purpose of my own. I do not want to get them privately, but across the floor of the House, so that every one in Canada may have the same knowledge that I have. With regard to the one person whose name has been given to us as a delinquent it has been found -or, as, perhaps, some members would not care to take my word, it is alleged—that the sale was an improper one. There can be no doubt that Mr. Robert Rogers is one of the principal political supporters of the hon. Minister of the Interior, in Manitoba; he is a gentleman who devotes a very large portion of his time to political work, and is known, generally speaking, as the chief organizer, or as the person in charge, as I may put it, so far as the Conservative affairs That I say in Manitoba are concerned. without undertaking to say whether Mr. Rogers is worth the amount or not. Rogers is a personal friend of my own, and I do not want to go into personal matters. But the Government have no right, in an article such as binder twine, which is well understood to be a cash article, to discriminate among members of the trade, and to sell to a political partisan and manager of their own, on credit. What is the result of it? Mr. Rogers is put in a position to use the Government property without paying for it, if he so desires. Surely that is not proper. I have no reason to suppose, from my own knowledge that there is any other person in the province who bought binder twine on the same terms. I know nothing about that; but I think the hon. Minister of Justice will see that unless the names of the other persons are named, suspicion will fall on a great many other people being in the same position. I do not care, for my own part, whether the hon. Minister mentions the names of the other parties or not, but surely there can be no reason for withholding them. If the Government do right they will do as others do, they will sell for cash, so that they do not need to care whether these men continue to be customers of theirs in the future, or not. And if it turns out that they are ordinary business people, no harm is done to them or their names. But if they are men whose relations with the Government are those of hangers-on, it will be seen that the action of the Government in selling to them on credit is without justification. I do not suppose that the Minister of Justice at the time knew anything about the action when the twine was being sold, but I am certain that there was a general feeling in Manitoba against it. The report came to me from persons dealing in binder twine, who asked me to investigate it in the House, and that investigation so far has been confirmatory of the suspicion in the minds of these people that the Government were using this business in a partisan and policical way.

AND CONTRACT OF THE CONTRACT O

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that whatever else has resulted from this discussion, it must be clear to the hon. Minister himself that it is highly in the interests of the public that any transactions that the department may have with the public should be conducted on a strictly cash basis. I cannot conceive of anything more likely to produce unfortunate scandals than allowing articles of this kind to be sold on credit to any man, whether a Reformer or a Conservative, whether in Manitoba or Ontario. Every principle of business calls upon the Government, when they engage in the manufacture of this kind, to dispose of their product for cash, and nothing else; and I would feel that an extremely strong argument was presented against their going into the business at all if they were compelled to give credit, whether it were the custom of the trade or not. Far better make a reasonable reduction, if there were a custom—which, I understand, is not the case—of giving credit, and dispose of the goods for cash rather than to allow credit. In every case, sales of binder twine should be made for cash, or c.o.d.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT That subject, of course, is one of great difficulty to deal with, and I would only suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should consider those difficulties. We have now, I am informed, the very strong opposition of the Cordage Company, and of the company of the Patrons. I have learned since six o'clock that these two companies are, at any rate, acting together, whether as a combination or not I would not venture to say. They are very much incensed, to my knowledge, with the competition they have experienced at our hands, small, comparatively, though it be. If, on entering the field, we tie our hands and feet, and decline to do business with customers so greatly sought after, we might find our-selves, at the end of the season, in a bad position. I think it is almost too early in the history of the business to make a pledge to Parliament on this point. I appreciate what the hon. gentleman says about to the Government by the announcement of the necessity of keeping the business above the suspicion of favouritism, either personal or political. That, of course, is a subject that will be jealously watched by Parliament, and, if there were ground for suspicion long continued, no doubt it would result in the abolition of this branch of penitentiary labour. With this statement, I hope the committee will believe that the subject will be given careful consideration, but, entering the field, we must, to a certain extent, be guided by existing usage. Refusing credit in cases in which credit would be given by those who are, to a certain extent, our rivals, we might find ourselves in an unfavourable position. The showing we made was not a bad one-$15,000 brought in in about two months. Evidently the hon, member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) himself believes that Mr. Rogers is able to respond to a judgment for this $650 if we get it. And that just reminds me that it may be that Mr. Rogers has some defence, though, according to my side of the case, he has none. But, according to all I have heard, he is well able to respond to this judgment. But, even supposing this amount was lost, our showing for the initial year would still be a satisfactory one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not speaking from the point of view of the merits of this case or the merits as to Mr. Rogers. But looking at it strictly from a business point of view, I think the Minister would be better advised in making. I was going to say, almost any reduction, and dealing for eash, than on the credit system, and I think that would be the experience of almost any man who has had anything to do with the collection of accounts by the Government. There is an intolerable deal of trouble when the Government enter into courts to collect moneys from anybody, and both the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance know that our books are full of debts due to us which have remained over due for years and years, and which it is not found at all desirable to collect by process of law. I foresee that if this manufacture assumes, as it will probably, considerable proportions-because I take it that the hon, gentleman expects to dispose of $200,000 or $300,000 worth per annum, judging from the scale on which the manufacture is carried on-and if he goes into the credit system, he will find that trouble, and bother, and annoyance that will be given to himself and his department, will overbalance any other advantage that might occur.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would say to the Minister that in his report, page 2, he will notice that the per capita cost is given at $456.10, and the revenue, $8.47½. Is that the per capita revenue for all the inmates of the penitentiary, and is it all that we received during that year?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The I should be glad that it be done. One its difficulty is in the way these are made out. can be reserved for discussion afterwards.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Additional machinery for binder twine made a confusion, that is what makes the discrepancy.

Mr. McMULLEN. What other occupations are the prisoners at Kingston engaged in besides the manufacture of binder twine?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There are no other industries in reference to goods put on the market.

Dorchester Penitentiary $48,576

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The increase is owing to two additional guards, and one additional teamster. Hitherto only one teamster was employed. This has been considered an unsafe practice. There are so many uses for which these teamsters are employed that it is considered unsafe to use the convicts as drivers outside the grounds.

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to call the Minister's attention to page H—36 of the Auditor General's Report, where he intimates that there seems to have been some irregularity in the purchase of articles for the warden, which are detailed on page H—27.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Sir Speaking off-hand-that was before my day -I would say to the hon, gentleman that it is a question of consideration, I take it, of the Penitentiaries Act, which I have not under my hand, in regard to how far this allowance for the furnishing of the warden's apartments was within the statute. I see that the Auditor General thinks that the purchase of these articles was irregular, and he refers to a practice that has obtained for many years, referring back again to a letter of his in 1893, where he drew the attention of Parliament to the subject. I candidly state that at this moment I am not able to go into a consideration of that matter. may say that the question raised by the Auditor has been conceded, to a certain ex-

Manitoba Penitentiary $47,793 90

Mr. McMULLEN. When did the contract end for the supplies of these penitentiaries?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. With the fiscal year.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have new contracts been entered into?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Contracts for next year have been advertised for, and will be received to-morrow.

Regina Jail..... $13,768 40

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Militia is very anxious to take up his estimates, as he wishes to be absent for a part of next week. If the committee has no objection, I should be glad that it be done. One item can be reserved for discussion afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. item of the Royal Military College.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, with the understanding that it will be open for general discussion.

Pay of Staff, Permanent Corps and Active Militia $361,950

Mr. DICKEY. I reduce this item by $20,-500, leaving the amount $341,450.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman had better explain on what principle he proposes to act, and what his reasons are for proposing the reduction.

Mr. DICKEY. This is a vote for payment of staff of permanent corps and active militia, which was last year $401,482, and in addition to that there was a vote in the supplementary Estimates of $45,000, making altogether $446,000. I propose to reduce the permanent corps to 800 men, and the reduced vote contemplated is to carry out that That will reduce this estimate to $341,000, instead of $446,000 last year. I may explain to the committee that I propose to drill the city corps and artillery, for which no provision appears in these Estimates. and as I was not able to prevail on the Finance Minister to give me any amount for that purpose, I had to adopt stringent reductions, and consequently I propose to reduce the Estimates submitted by something like $70,000 or $80,000 to provide money for the drill of those corps, and this sum of $20,500, which I strike out, will form a part of that sum. I am able to do that in this particular item by reason of the reduction of the permanent force.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon, member propose to reduce the number of commissioned and non-commissioned officers, or only the number of men?

Mr. DICKEY. Simply the number of men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to insist on the matter, although looking at the condition of the House it might not be convenient, but the Minister will remember that on the discussion of an item in the Supplementary Estimates an understanding was arrived at that he would give the committee some general idea, if he had one, as to how he proposed to deal with this somewhat thorny question of the expenditure on militia. That may be done when the discussion on the Royal Military College comes up, and I have no objection to the discussion standing over till that time. But I should like to know from the hon. gentleman, after his term of warlike service, what his general views are on the subject of the militia, both permanent corps and volunteer militia. Does the hon. Minister wish to give that information now or hereafter?

Mr. DICKEY. I do not know that I wish to give it at all. If at all, I think it better

So we will reserve the to say hereafter, when the discussion on the Royal Military College takes place.

> Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In regard to this item, you propose to take the money from the pay of the permanent corps?

Mr. DICKEY. Entirely.

Salaries and Wages of Civil Employees.. $57,000

Mr. DICKEY. I reduce that item to $55.-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe you have reduced it already.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes.

Military Property, Stores and Buildings. $97,009

Mr. BOWERS. I see in the Auditor General's Report, K-77, under the item of Rents of Military Properties: "Lunenburg-Kaulback, C.E., 50 cents." What does that item represent?

Mr. DICKEY. I am not able to give the hon, gentleman the information just now.

Mr. BOWERS. Then I observe there is a similar item at page K-79, under the head of Rents of Military Properties?

Mr. DICKEY. That is for property connected with the old fort.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The committee has passed a vote for inspection of stores. I asked for information with respect to a gentleman in the city, whose name was connected with an appointment to such a position, and who received assurance from the late Minister that he would be appointed. as I am informed, and received notification of his appointment and made his arrangements on the faith of that notification, but who, unfortunately for him, was passed over. I refer to Major Watson.

An hon, MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The statement of facts I have from him in writing, and the copy of the letter sent to him indicates very clearly that he did receive most positive assurances from the late Minister that he would receive an appointment. Acting on those assurances, he changed his position and incurred liabilities, which he was jusified in doing, and afterwards, without cause not appointed. I want to assigned, was know what the facts are, whether that gentleman was treated badly, whether a promise has been made and broken, and what reasons induced the department to refuse to ratify the promise made by the hon. gentleman's predecessor.

Mr. DICKEY. I am afraid I cannot give the hon, gentleman the information he wants. I have, of course, heard of the case to which he alludes, but I have no knowledge of it personally, and I am unable to say how far even, he is correct in saying there was a written promise. I know Major Watson's services, of course.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not make the positive statement from my own knowledge.

Mr. DICKEY. I understand that. I know of Major Watson and his services, and personally I may say that I am most anxious to do anything I possibly can for him. I am unable to give the hon, gentleman the information about what was done in the department by my predecessor. If it is a personal matter, as I understand, Major Watson would have a complaint against my predecessor in office; but I do not suppose there is any complaint about the qualification of the officer who was appointed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As I understand it Major Watson had the promise from the Minister of his appointment, and a written notice from another Minister congratulating him upon the appointment. But beyond this he has received no official notice of the appointment.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon, gentleman will see, that however interesting these facts are from a personal standpoint, they really are not in the public interest, and I do not suppose they would concern this particular vote. The hon, gentleman's experience in politics will, of course, furnish him with examples in his own experience where he was not able to carry out what he expected to. I am not able to say anything whatever about the facts.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman leads us to infer that personally he knows nothing about the matter.

Mr. DICKEY. Nothing whatever.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And there is no record in the department?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, there are records in the department concerning it, but I do not know that it would be proper for me to give verbally a statement of them. If a motion is made for them I can bring them down.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the Minister bring down the correspondence without any further notice?

Mr. DICKEY. Well, of course, I would not like to promise that, without looking at the correspondence. I have never seen it. nor did I know it was in existence until I spoke to the deputy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps the hon. gentleman will examine the correspondence and let us know at a later stage.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, I will.

Mr. BOWERS. There are several properties in St. John rented at 25 cents, and 50 cents. and $2.50 a year. It would be curious to know what kind of properties could be rented for that in a city.

Mr. DICKEY.

Mr. DICKEY. I only know of the Park property which is leased to the city for $51 a year. It is, I suppose, a valuable property intrinsically, but we do not want to occupy it, and we handed it over to the city to take care of it at this nominal rent.

Mr. BOWERS. It seems strange the property should be rented at such remarkably low sums. I trust the Minister will give us the information later on.

Mr. DICKEY. There are a good many militia properties rented at a nominal sum. That 25 cents might be a relic of an old rent of 2s. to preserve the title. A good many of our properties are an encumbrance rather than a benefit, because of the expense of water rates, and maintaining them, and we are glad to get them off our hands.

Mr. CASEY. I see it stated in the "Canadian Gazette" and other papers, that Major General Herbert is coming back to Canada. Other papers say he is not coming back. Might I ask the Minister to state what are the facts?

Mr. DICKEY. The latest information I have is, that it is very uncertain whether or not the General will return. I do not think he will return to Canada at all.

Mr. CASEY. How long is it since he went away?

Mr. DICKEY. On the 8th March, I think, and his leave extends to the 1st of July.

Mr. CASEY. If there is need of a Major-General it would seem that he should be here at the time when the camps are coming on Does the Minister know anything about the appointment of a successor to General Herbert?

Mr. DICKEY. When I came to the department I found that the General was on leave until the 1st of July. I have had a good many communications with him, the last being a telegram in which he said that he expected to leave. Afterwards I heard that he did not intend to leave.

Mr. CASEY. Do you mean leave the service or leave England?

Mr. DICKEY. I mean to leave England. I am just informed now that the General is on his way coming out, but I have no official information of it.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister does not officially know whether Major-General Herbert intends to remain in his present position or not?

Mr. DICKEY. No.

Mr. CASEY. When does his term of office expire?

Mr. DICKEY. November, I believe.

Mr. CASEY. As a matter of fact at the present time, the Minister does not know whether he is going to have Major-General Herbert from the 1st of July to November as the officer commanding the forces, or whether the General is going to resign, or what is the intention about his successor. It seems to me a very loose way of doing business that the Minister does not know of the movements of an officer of his rank and high pay.

Mr. DICKEY. I understand the hon, gentleman to complain of the length of leave given to the General. The leave was granted, I believe, on account of urgent private business.

Mr. CASEY. I was not complaining of that.

Mr. DICKEY. Then the hon, gentleman knows as much as I do. He knows that the General's leave expires on the 1st of July, and I understand he is on his way out here.

Mr. CASEY. The hon, gentleman did not know that when I first asked the question.

Mr. DICKEY. I did not officially.

Mr. CASEY. There have been so many rumours about this General resigning, and so on, that it would seem proper to ask the question whether the Minister knew anything about it, and it seems he did not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that at a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee a short time ago, Lieut.-Col. Macpherson gave evidence on a question which was asked him as to arrears οf rent due In on military property in Annapolis. reply to a question put to him he alleged that a member of this House was largely in arrears for property which he had rented from the Government there—property which had been originally rented by a man whose name I forget; that this member of the House had the lease assigned to him and had paid two years' rent, after which he excused himself from paying any more. and was now in arrears. The member of the House in question was brought before the committee and gave an emphatic denial to the whole thing, alleging that neither directly nor indirectly was he a lessee of the Government, and neither legally nor morally liable to pay the rent, and that the statement made by Lieut-Col. Macpherson was entirely erroneous. Lieut-Col. Macpherson made the statement, the question arose whether he had personal knowledge of it or whether the Deputy Minister, Col. Panet, had. It was then understood that the Deputy Minister was absent from Ottawa. think, in justice to the public as well as to the member of the House in question, the hon, gentleman should see that his Deputy Minister attends the Public Accounts Committee and settles that matter some way or the other.

Mr. DICKEY. I would be perfectly willing to do so. Perhaps it would be better for me to say nothing whatever about the matter at the present time. Immediately that I heard the rumor I called for the papers.

Mr. McMULLEN. Some questions have been put to the Minister in regard to certain small items for rent on page K-77 of the Auditor General's Report. There are a number of these items which I think he should make a note of, and say why they are set down as rents.

Mr. DICKEY. I would be glad to give the hon, gentleman the information on any particular items he may mention. There are a large number of these properties and details in regard to them all would make a very large and bulky return.

Mr. McMULLEN. For instance, I see the corporation of Toronto is put down for $100, and immediately after that, Yarmouth, P. Power, for 25 cents. Then, there is an item, Sir S. L. and Lady Tilley, $21.

Mr. DICKEY. I will get these and also the one about Mr. Kaulbach. I think perhaps it would be interesting to the House if I got all the 25 cent ones.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice also at page K-62, purchase of land for Sussex Permanent Camp, George H. White, $7,000.

Mr. DICKEY. That was paid last year for the camp grounds at Sussex, in parsuance of the policy adopted some years ago of having one permanent camp ground in each division.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the Minister say how the value of the property was arranged?

Mr. DICKEY. It was bought at private sale. The value was fixed by the report of the officers of the department on the ground. It was thought to offer superior advantages for a camp ground, and for that reason it was purchased.

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the Minister say how many acres?

Mr. DICKEY. I am told about 300 acres.

Mr. RIDER. I would like to inquire of the Minister if the fact of these military properties having been leased entitles the Government to sell them at private sale, and not by auction or by public tender. I notice that the other day, in answering a question in regard to a property situated on the east side of the Richelieu River in the county of Iberville, opposite Isle aux Noix, the Minister of the Interior said it was sold under the provisions of the revised statutes of Canada, chapter 55, section 5, subsection 3, because the property had been under lease. I would like to ask if the fact of the property having been under lease gives the Government this privilege.

Mr. DICKEY. No. As I understand, the law does not make any difference at all as to the powers of the Government. I think. bowever, that the Government has power under the statute to sell these properties if they are not required for militia purposes. and they are not necessarily to be sold by public action.

`! ,, under lease or not?

Mr. DICKEY. Yes. I do not think that is: an element in the matter at all.

Mr. CASEY. In regard to rifle ranges, I would like to ask the Minister whether any change is in contemplation in regard to the Ottawa range.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes. Of course, that is not a matter than can be answered very definitely. So far as I have been able to come to a conclusion, I think the present range is not one that we can depend upon for that although he was tearing a portion many years, and my personal opinion is that if we can secure land near the city at anything like favourable rates, we had better buy now than later, because Ottawa is a growing city, and prices are likely to go up. I hope to be able to get a very satisfactory place.

Mr. CASEY. Has the Minister any place in view at present?

Mr. DICKEY. There is a place at Rockliffe beyond the park, on which the Dominion Rifle Association took an option, which option they are willing to give the Government the advantage of.

Mr. CASEY. I inquired with regard to this range because it is one in which the whole country is interested, in connection with Dominion matches; and in view of the introduction of modern weapons, the present range will soon be out of the question. It is absolutely impossible to get a range there long enough to test the qualities of the Lee-Metford weapon. amounts seem to be the same as last year for construction and maintenance. I have not looked into the details, but would like to know if any new constructions are intended.

Mr. DICKEY. There is no special construction in prospect this year, and that vote was taken with a view to meeting the exigencies that may arise. The reduction is in the line of the general reductions which the hon. gentleman will observe through the whole of these estimates.

Mr. CASEY. I notice that we had a good deal of trouble last year in getting the particulars of the Halifax drill shed. That was put under the head of public works, That the Minister of which did not know much about it, and the Minister of Militia, though in and out of the House frequently, did not seem anxious to explain.

Mr. Rider.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon. gentleman understands that the plans of these drill sheds are always made in my department to suit militia requirements, but, of course, we have nothing to do with the expenditure of the money.

Mr. CASEY. I hope that when this item RIDER. Whether they have been lease or not?

comes up in public works, the hon. gentleman will be here to give explanations in case the Minister of Public Works should know as little about it as he did last year.

> Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to ask if, during the past season, some military property in Quebec was leased to a party who tore down a portion of the building?

> Mr. DICKEY. There was no lease granted until recently. When I came into office. I was informed that a person in Quebec was tearing down an old historic building. and I immediately stopped the work. I subsequently went down there and found down, it was for the purpose of putting another story on top. This had been used as a military store house, but was shut in by a wall twelve feet high, so that nobody could get in to see it. The man expended about $1,500, in the best of good faith, under a verbal promise of lease from the former Minister of Militia; and though he had, perhaps, no legal standing, I concluded that as the work would largely increase the value of the property, and in view of all the circumstances, I would carry out the promise made. The lessee is spending about $3,000 in a permanent direction on the property.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Where is the property situated?

Mr. DICKEY. Right behind the Grand battery. It is what is called the F magazine.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is it being used for by the present lessee?

Mr. DICKEY. I could not tell. I made some pretty stringent restrictions in the lease as to the use it might be put to. It is a very shallow building, varying from twelve to fifteen feet deep, and I cannot see that the present holder can make much use of it except, perhaps, as a tenement house.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the rental?

Mr. DICKEY. The rental inal, but the lessee undertakes to speud $2,000 in permanent repairs the first year. It was not in use but was vacant.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How long does the lease run?

Mr. DICKEY. Twenty-one years.

Warlike and Other Stores..... $55,000

Mr. DICKEY. I wish to reduce that to $31,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where are you going to make that reduction?

Mr. DICKEY. Pretty much all along the line. A very considerable proportion will be made on artillery ammunition, probably close on $7,000.

Mr. CASEY. What reduction will there be; what vote for artillery ammunition?

Mr. DICKEY. We do not have to ask for particular items. I expect to distribute the reductions pro rata among the items. The total reductions will be made by close economy all along the line. But I can tell the hon, gentleman there will be a larger percentage of reduction on artillery ammunition.

Mr. CASEY. As the hon, gentleman is asking for each service separately, he ought to tell us the reduction on each item.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon, gentleman, I think, is mistaken, these details are not given in the items. They are there for the information of the House, and, of course, I am bound to give the hon, gentleman all the information I can with respect to them.

Mr. CASEY. I hope the hon, gentleman does not intend to reduce the items for competition. I am obliged to differ from the hon, gentleman as to that.

Mr. DICKEY. I am sorry I have to do it.

Mr. CASEY. I think enough could be saved on other items to make up this other one. The artillery is one of the most important branches of the service, and one to which our young men seem to take most naturally. I think it is a great pity that the practical part of the artillerists' training should be restricted in this way. In this branch, as in the infantry, the shooting is the great thing, and if you restrict that you restrict the real object for which the force exists.

Mr. DICKEY. I realize fully the force of what the hon, gentleman says, but it was a question between drilling the artillery and cutting down other items.

Mr. CASEY: What is the use of drilling them if you do not teach them to shoot.

Mr. DICKEY. We must do the best we can for this year.

Clothing and necessaries $55,334 00

Mr. DICKEY. I want to explain to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in regard to a recent statement and inquiry of his concerning oil-skins. No oil-skins have been purchased for years past. A few oil-skin blankets were purchased, which are in perfect order, the only case at all similar to that to which the hon. gentleman referred v as the purchase of knapsacks. second-hand, from the Imperial authorities. They were kept in our stores, and I believe they were very poor. But that would be twenty-five years ago or more.

Mr. LANDERKIN. From whom do you buy clothing now?

Mr. DICKEY. From three firms—the Sanford Manufacturing Company, Watson & Co., of Toronto, and H. Shorey & Co., Montreal.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What amount to each?

Mr. DICKEY. During the year H. Shorey & Co. were paid about $10.500; the Sanford Manufacturing Company about the same; Boisseau & Co. had only a contract for the great coats.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When was that entered into?

Mr. DICKEY. Last year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And the others?

Mr. DICKEY. Last year also.

Mr. CASEY. Are they annual contracts?

Mr. DICKEY. No; for three years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the number of great coats?

Mr. DICKEY. We bought 200 artillery great coats last year, for which we paid $1,396.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How many great coats does the hon, gentleman purchase for the infantry?

Mr. DICKEY. I do not think we bought any last year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You are supposed to purchase every three years?

Mr. DICKEY. Five years is supposed to be the life of a great coat.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is included in the term "necessaries"?

Mr. DICKEY. Last year it included boots of various kinds, moccasins, mitts, gloves, gauntlets, capes and mufflers, and underclothing of all kinds; also combs, brushes and other similar articles.

Mr. CASEY. I suppose that is only for the permanent corps. That is a large appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. DICKEY. Last year we spent $14,000. There are a good many things, such as snow-sbees and moccasins, which were bought last year.

Mr. CASEY. It seems pretty extravagant. I see there is a large reduction in the allowance for clothing. Does that mean that there were large issues last year which are expected to wear for some time, or that the issue per man is to be restricted?

Mr. DICKEY. According to the statement of the superintendent of stores, there has been an undue economy in that branch of the service. He complains very much like that. that the grant is not sufficient.

Mr. CASEY. still further.

Mr. DICKEY. I am speaking of the grant as it is now, he claims that it is not suffisee that I took an extra vote on the supplementary Estimates of $33,000 for clothing for this year, which, of course, enables; me to stock up pretty well.

What allowances in lieu of Mr. CASEY. clothing, are those for the Highlanders.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes, for certain corps.

What allowance in lieu of Mr. CASEY. clothing are made for permanent corps?

Mr. DICKEY. Non-commissioned officers have a certain allowance. Uniforms and forage caps, the city corps chiefly supply at their own expense, and the rural corps, too. The hon, gentleman understands that there is a certain class of clothing served out. Some regiments prefer a better kind of clothing, and they get the equivalent of the was never able sufficiently to impress upon issue from the stores.

Mr. CASEY. As much as they please?

Mr. DICKEY. value. For instance, in case of a uniform, for their illness and the time they lost. they would get the value of the ordinary uniform, then, if they wanted a better unform, they would spend as much more as be dead now. they wanted.

Mr. HUGHES. under this heading is forage caps. All the rural corps wear Glengarries. An allowance is made for each corps, and each corps buys its own Glengarries. The value of the forage cap is not given.

Provisions, Supplies and Remounts..... $130.000

I wish to reduce that to Mr. DICKEY. That reduction is entirely in the first items, rations, forage, fuel, &c., for permanent corps. I am able to reduce this item on account of the reduction in the permanent corps.

Transport and Freight...... $45,600

Mr. DICKEY. I wish to reduce that to $36,000. There will be a smaller number to be transported.

Mr. CASEY. How is the rate of transportation fixed?

Mr. DICKEY. It varies on different routes. It is a little better than the ordinary rates of travel, but first-class.

Mr. CASEY. Is the accommodation paid for at the same rate as first-class?

Mr. DICKEY. No; cheaper.

Mr. CASEY. I think it ought to be obtained as cheap as excursion rates.

Mr. DICKEY.

Mr. DICKEY. I think it is something

Mr. CASEY. The accommodation given But you are reducing it is certainly not better than is given to excursion passengers.

Mr. DICKEY. The only railway I remem-However, the hon, gentleman will ber much about is the Grand Trunk Railing the arrangements for the camp, and that was 2 cents per mile.

> Miscellaneous and unforeseen Contingen-

Mr. LANDERKIN. I notice by the Auditor General's Report that money from the contingencies has been paid to persons who received injury or became ill in the service during actual drill. I brought the attention of the late Minister of Militia, not the latest, to this matter some time ago. About five or six voluteers in the Grey battalion became ill while at drill, and I tried to impress upon him that when others who had contracted illness in camp were receiving aid, these men should be dealt with likewise. I him the case of those young men who contracted typhoid fever and were laid up for a long time, in fact one of them died. No, they get a certain asked that he should remunerate the others

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They must all

Mr. LANDERKIN. They are there yet. The chief expenditure and their claims are there yet. I want to revive their claims, and I want to get the Minister to popularize the force and the service in that district, which was rendered somewhat unpopular, I am sorry to say, by the refusal on the part of the Minister to acknowledge the claims of those who deserved them, and who deserve them as well as any other claims that are here. I notice any number of people who are paid for illness which they contracted in the service, and I do not see why there should be a discrimination made against these. I am able to establish the claims of these parties to the satisfaction of the Minister, and I can establish beyond doubt that they contracted the illness in the camp, a long and serious illness, that they were put to great expense, and got no compensation whatever. I think their records are in the department, and I would impress upon the Minister the need of doing something for these men. I hope he is susceptible to good impressions, and I think he should look after those soldiers who became sick. He will be doing something to serve the force and be rendering justice. I pressed this matter on another Minister of Militia, and if it had not been for his evil surroundings. I think he would have paid the amount. I appeal to the present Minister to take up this claim, and see that they are paid.

Mr. DICKEY. If proof is made, I will have them paid.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If so, I will prove them.

Mr. DICKEY. It will depend entirely on what proof is presented; if the hon, gentleman can prove the cases. I will have them

Dominion Cartridge Factory, including free ammunition for rifle leagues..... $44,000

Mr. HUGHES. There are a great many rounds of Snider ammunition stored in various magazines throughout the country. hope in a very short time this arm will be superseded by a better one. I suggest the desirability of giving this ammunition free at 11.20 p.m. to the rifle associations for distribution, or, if not, that it be sold to them at the lowest possible price.

Mr. DICKEY, Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. many rounds of ammunition per annum can be turned out by the cartridge factory?

About 2,000,000 rounds Mr. DICKEY. with the present staff. We are putting in extra power.

Mr. CASEY. Could not the machinery turn out a larger number with an increased staff?

Mr. DICKEY. The additions I find are chiefly for manufacturing artillery shell.

Dominion contribution towards capital expenditure for works and buildings.. $77,500

Pay and allowance of a detachment of Royal Marine Artillery or Royal Engineers

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. many more instalments have to be paid towards this work?

Mr. DICKEY. The Dominion expenditure towards capital is $80,000; we still owe $77,500. The total amount is £30,000 or $146,-(600). This is the second and final vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. afraid I may perhaps be charged with expesing the nakedness of the land, but I declass, the Government by this Bill take sire to know how near these fortifications power to employ writers, who will begin at are to American territory?

Mr. CASEY. They are within range.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. they are within three miles of the Island to future appointments. of San Juan.

HIBBERT TUPPER. CHARLES Sir These fortifications will command the channel.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose they are less than three miles. I am afraid they command and are capable of moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 131) being commanded.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We would not admit that.

Resolutions reported.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It might interest the Minister of Justice to know that he will have time to consider the legal point of the question raised by the hon, member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) touching the Atlantic and Lake Superior Road, for, I think, the project will not go through.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will devote Sunday to it.

Annual report of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery for the Dominion. for year ending 30th June, 1894, with a partial report for services during six months ending 31st December, 1894. (Mr. Montague.)

CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 130) to amend the Civil Service Act.

Mr. LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The main provision of the Bill does away with the class of civil I am servants known as third-class clerks. In order to perform the work done by that power to employ writers, who will begin at $400 a year and reach after a time a maximum of $600 a year. Of course, the Bill will not affect in any way the third-ciass I think clerks now in the service; it only applies

THE PENITENTIARIES ACT.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER Sir further to amend the Penitentiaries Act.

Mr. LAURIER. Explain.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The main provision in this Bill is to change the schedule of salaries, which will result in a saving to the country of about $4,000 a year -not, of course, to affect the salaries of the present officers, but to put them on a uniform basis. At present the department is to some extent embarrassed when removing officers from one point to another, because, while there may be no charge against an officer of wrong-doing, it may be highly necessary for the discipline and organization of the staff to change an officer nere and there; but experience has shown us that in carrying out the change, we are sometimes met with a disparity between the officers who are exchanged.

CUSTOMS EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. Gibson) asked, Whether all, or any of the following persons (and if so, who?) are, or have recently been, in the public service, on the extra or regular staff? If so, in what branch of the service? At what rate of remuneration, and on whose recommendation have such appointments been made, and where did such appointees reside at the time of their appointments: R. O. Brown, J. McIntosh, R. White, J. Johnson, S. Wilson, J. Kennie, J. Paisley, J. Watson, J. McGuire, J. R. Clark, O. Clewlo.

Mr. WALLACE. Some of the persons referred to appear to be employed in the Customs service. They were employed on the recommendation of various members of Parliament and others. Their names, residence at the time of employment, rate of remuneration and length of service are as follows:-John F. McIntosh, preventive officer in charge at Kaslo, B.C., employed CARRIAGE OF MAILS-METECHAN. DIGBY COUNTY, N. S.

Mr. BOWERS asked, 1. What is the amount paid by the Government for carrying the mails between Meteghan and Meteghan station, via Meteghan River, Digby County, N.S.? 2. At what time was the last contract made? 3. Was it let by public tender, or was it a renewal of the old 4. Have the Government had contract? any correspondence with other parties offering to carry mails for a sum less than that now given? 5. If so, with whom, and what was the amount tendered? 6. Was the offer made before the present contract was ratified or renewed? 7. If so, why was the lower offer not accepted?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the first question, $200 per annum. No. 2. 8th November, 1894. No. 3. It was a renewal of the preceding contract. No. 4. Yes. Nos. 5 and 6. On the 4th December, the department received an offer from Mr. W. Gorman for the service between Meteghan and railway stations at the rate of 872 per annum, with an inquiry as to when the service would terminate, but as the contract did not expire until 31st March, 1895, he was told that the department was not then in a position to deal with the future No. 7. When the contract was contracts. renewed in November, 1894, Mr. Gorman's offer was overlooked. My attention having been called to this renewal, I gave instructions to give notice to the contractor 1st July, 1893; salary $1,000 per annum; of the cancellation of the contract.

STATE FUNERALS-HON. THOMAS WHITE.

AND THE RESIDENCE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPE

Mr. BRUNEAU asked, Whether the Honourable Thos. White was not buried at the expense of the state? If so, what was the cost of the funeral?

Mr. OUIMET. No. The only expenditure incurred by the Government was the cost of a special train to convey the members ment to Montreal to be present at the fun- groceries for the camp to be held at Laeral. The total expenditure incurred in con-prairie during next summer; and if so, nection therewith being $734.40.

AND TOTTENHAM.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. Mulock) asked, How long has the contract awarded to S. E. Turner in 1895 for carrying the mails between Athlone and Tottenham to run? What are the terms of the contract? Why were tenders invited in 1895 for carrying ral tenders:the mails between Athlone and Tottenham ?; _ Why were the notices inviting tenders withdrawn? What were the terms of the previously existing contract which was renewed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon, gentleman, I beg to say: 1. This contract will expire on the 31st March, 1899. 2. A daily service between Athlone and Tottenham, via Colgan and Keenansville. Loretto and Romilly, for $300 per annum. 3. Tenders were invited in accordance with the practice of the department in all cases where the termination of a contract is approaching. 4. Notices were withdrawn because the existing contract was renewed, and the intention of dealing with the tenders abandoned. 5. The previous contract provided for a daily service between Athlone and Tottenham via Colgan, Keenansville, Loretto and Romilly, for $300 per annum.

SUPPLY OF GROCERIES FOR THE CAMP AT LAPRAIRIE.

Mr. MONET (Translation) asked, Whether tenders were called for supplying groceries for the camp at Laprairie, in 1893? If so, what are the names of the parties who tendered, and the amounts of the several tenders?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (for Mr. Dickey). (Translation.) Tenders were called for supplying groceries for the camp at Laprairie in 1893. The following are the names of the tenderers and the amounts of their several tenders :-

THE FIELD BATTERY OF MONTREAL.

Mr. MONET (for Mr. Beausoleil) (Translation) asked. Will the Field Battery of Montreal drill this season? If so, when? If not, why not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON (for Mr. Dickey). (Translation.) The Field Battery of Montreal had their drill for the year 1894-95. Authority has not yet been given for the Battery to go through drill in 1895-96.

READING ROOM—FRENCH-CANADIAN JOURNALS.

Mr. MONET (for Mr. Bruneau) asked, 1. Whether the Government are aware that there are in the United States over a million French-Canadians? 2. What French-Canadian newspapers, published in the United States, are received in the reading room? 3. Have the Government never had complaints from French-speaking members on the ground that no French-Canadian journal. published in the United States was received in the reading room? 4. Is it the intention of the Government to see that for the future French-Canadian papers from the United States shall be received in the reading room; and if not, why not?

Mr. FOSTER. With regard to the first question, the Government is not willing to tie itself down to so definite a point as that. We are willing to take the statistics as read. By rule 119, authority is given to the Clerk of the House to subscribe for newspapers published in the Dominion, and to such other papers, British and foreign, as he may, from time to time, be directed by the Speaker to subscribe for. The only paper printed in French, and published in the United States, which is on file in the reading room, is the "Courier des Etats-Unis." There has been no complaint made either to the Clerk of the House or the Speaker from French-speaking members on the ground that no French-Canadian journal published in the United States was received in the reading room.

SALE OF LAND TO H. S. FOSTER.

Mr. RIDER asked, 1. What was the date of the lease to H. S. Foster of the Government land consisting of over 135 acres, situated on the east side of the Richelleu River, in the County of Iberville, opposite Isle aux Noix? What was the term for which it ran, and the amount of annual rental payable under it? 2. Has any offer been made to purchase the property from the Government for $2,000, or any other sum in excess of $600? 3. Was a recommendation made to the Government at any time to sell this property at auction? 4. Does the Government know the value per acre of this property when it was sold to H. S. Foster in May, 1894? 5. Did the Government take any, and what steps, to obtain a full report of what the value of this property was in May, 1894?

Mr. DALY. In reply to the hon, gentleman I will say: 1. The lease to Mr. Foster was dated 1st July, 1888, and was for a period of five years from the first of that month. Like all other leases of the same kind, however, its provisions continued to be in force from year to year without the lease itself being expressly renewed, the department having continued to receive rental at the same rate until the purchase was finally closed. The rental was $25 per annum. The department had previously been paying $5 per month for the care of the property. 2. No offer was ever made to the Government to purchase the property for $2,000, and no offer of a larger sum than what was paid by Mr. Foster was ever made at any time except in January, 1875, when Mr. Alex. Dufresne offered $800 for it. In the period of over nineteen years which elapsed between 1875 and 1894 the land had been stripped of its timber, and the official valua-ticn reduced from $1,000 to $600. 3. No recommendation was ever made to the Government at any time about selling this property at auction. 4. The officer in charge of the Ordnance and Admiralty lands of the Government valued the property at $600 in 1888, and held to the view that this was its value when it was sold to Mr. H. S. Foster in 1894. 5. This question has been fully answered in reply to question No. 4.

DREDGING AT COLE'S WHARF, BEDE-QUE, P.E.I.

Mr. YEO asked, What amount was paid for dredging at Cole's Wharf, Bedeque, P.E.I., during the past winter? Who were employed? What was paid for muddigger per day? What time per day, for men and for teams? What time was each man employed? How does the cost of dredging with muddigger compare with similar work done by the steam dredge?

Mr. OUIMET. The following is the answer to the hon. gentleman's question: An amount of $201.87 was paid for dredging at Hurd's Point Wharf, in Bedeque Bay, winter. P.E.I.. during the past The following were employed: Ram-John Gardiner. say, foreman; John Spurgeon Gardiner. ing digger: bourer; Damois Perry and team, hauling mud; Curtis Lord and team, hauling mud; Reuben Robbles, working digger; Charles Lord and team, hauling mud; John Rose, labourer; Lewis Holland, hauling mud. The sum of $4 per day was paid for mud-diggers, including the services of the owners. The sum of $1 per day was paid to labourers and $2 per day for a man and team. John Ramsay was employed 13¼ days; John Gardiner, 10¼ days; Spurgeon Gardiner, 10½ days; Damois Perry, 12 days; Curtis Lord, 8½ days; Reuben Robbles, 9¾ days; Charles Lord, 9¼ days; John Rose, 8¾ days; Lewis Holland, 10 days. EMPLOYMENT OF GEORGE MOIR.

Mr. GRIEVE (for Mr. Macdonald, Huron) asked, Is George Moir, formerly of St. Mary's, Ont., now, or has he at any time been, in the employ of the Government? If so, when was he employed? For what length of time? What remuneration did he receive, and what was the character of his employment?

Mr. WALLACE. In reply to the hongentleman I would say: 1. George Moir is not now, but was in the employ of the Department of Customs. 2 and 3. He was employed from 1st June, 1893 to 28th February, 1895, viz.: at the Minnesota Transfer, St. Paul, Minn., for the month of June, 1893. At Chicago from 1st July, 1893, to 31st October, 1893. At Duluth during the month of November, 1893. At Winnipeg from 1st December, 1893, to 30th September, 1894. At Duluth during October and November, 1894. At Duluth during October and November, 1894. At St. Paul from 15th December, 1894. It is the February, 1895. At Winnipeg, balance February, 1895.—since which time he has not been in the employment of the Department of Customs, or in the service of the Government. 4. He received a salary of the Government. 4. He received a salary of per day while at points in the United States—salary paid in United States being refunded by railway companies—at Winnipeg he was acting as assistant to Inspector G. H. Young. At Chicago he was examining baggage sent in bond to Canada. At Duluth and St. Paul he was supervising, the transhipment of bonded goods and grain in transit to Canada.

REV. FATHER PARADIS.

Mr. MONET asked, Whether the Government have given or promised to give a certain sum to Rev. Father Paradis, with a view to the colonization and repatriation of the Canadians of Michigan, U.S., at Vernon, in the district of Nipissing, Ont.? If so, to what special purposes were the moneys to be applied?

Mr. DALY. The sum of $200 has been paid to the Rev. Father Paradis, as a grant towards his personal expenses, incurred in the colonization and repatriation of Canadians from the state of Michigan, at or near Vernon, in the district of Nipissing, Ont. Father Paradis has travelled to and fro and has devoted much time and energy to this work, and he has neither received nor been promised any payment or reward other than this $200, so far as the Government is concerned. In addition to this, however, the department has deposited with the President of the Repatriation Society in Montreal, Mr. J. D. Rolland, the sum of $1,000 to aid Father Paradis' colony in its initial stage, subject to the condition that none of this money shall be used to pay for the transportation of the settlers or their effects, all being required to pay their own way into the country.

STEAMSHIP LINE BETWEEN CANADA, FRANCE AND BELGIUM.

Mr. LEPINE asked, How many tenders have the Government received for the establishment of a line of steamships between Canada, France and Belgium? What are the names of the parties tendering and the amounts of their several tenders?

Mr. FOSTER. I may say that eight offers have been received: Two from Furness, Withy & Co. (Limited); one from the Hamburg-American Packet Company; two from the Colomba Belge Steamship Company; one from L. de la Barriere et al, as representing a Bordeaux syndicate; one from C. N. Armstrong, and one from Marsan & Marsan. Some of these were not within the terms, I think, of the advertisement for tenders. As a decision has not yet been come to on the matter, it is not considered best to give the amounts of the tenders at the present time.

SHEIK'S ISLAND DAMS.

Mr. LAURIER asked, 1. When is it expected that the contract for the building of the Sheik's Island dams will be completed? 2. What amounts has now been paid to the contractors? 3. Is any sum due to the contractors now? If so, what is the amount?

Mr. HAGGART. The two dams will be completed on the 1st September, 1895. The weir will be completed in 1896. The amount paid to the contractors up to the 20th June is $214,310, and the amount due is $2,705.

PAYMENT FOR PRE-EMPTION LOTS IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. LaRIVIERE moved for:

Return of all correspondence, petitions, memorials or other documents, relative to the claims of settlers in Manitoba and the Territories, having paid for their pre-emption lots, when others were allowed homesteading the same as a second homestead.

He said: In making this motion, Mr. Speaker, I beg to offer a few remarks. The former Lands Act allowed homesteaders at the same time that they took their homestead to take the next claim as a pre-emption; and, in most cases, especially in the early settlement of the province of Manitoba, settlers took 320 acres instead of 160-that is they took 160 acres as a homestead, and the adjoining quarter-section of 160 acres as a pre-emption for which they were to pay a fixed price according to the regulations. At first it was one dollar an acre, and later on it was increased to $2.50. Afterwards, by an alteration of the Lands Act, a second homestead was granted to those who had completed their duties on their first hometead. After securing their patent, they were allowed to take a second homestead; and in some cases they were even allowed to take as a homestead the pre-emption lot which they had formerly secured. At the same time some of those settlers who had taken homesteads under pre-emption were compelled to pay for that pre-emption; after performing their homestead duties for three years, they were compelled by law to pay for the pre-emption during the following year, otherwise those pre-emptions would be taken away from them, that is to say, they would be deprived not only of the right to purchase, but at the same time they would lose the improvements that might have been made thereon. In most instances the settlers, not knowing that later on there would be an alteration in the Lands Act and that they might be able to secure the next lot as a homestead, paid for their pre-emption, and in many instances had to borrow money and give as security not only that pre-emption itself, but even the homestead for which they had performed homestead duties. Now, most of those who had neglected to pay, most of those who did not obey the call of the land office to pay for that pre-emption, were afterwards rewarded for their neglect by being allowed to homestead their pre-emption without any further cost. Now, the homesteaders who have performed their duties faithfully and who afterwards complied with the regulations of the office by paying for their pre-emption, are in a worse position to-day than those who have neglected to perform their duties. I understand that petitions have been forwarded to the Department of the Interior asking that these parties be put in the very same position as those who have had the privilege of homesteading their lands, that is to say, they wish either to be recouped by receiving a grant, or to be allowed the 160 acres for which they have petitioned. I am not going to suggest any manner by which their claim might be settled, but I think it is only fair that the petitions and the memorandum accompanying the same should be put before the House, so that we may be able to look into their case, and to accede to their request, if justice requires it.

Mr. DALY. There is no objection to the correspondence and papers which have been moved for being brought down, and they will be laid before the House at the earliest moment.

Motion agreed to.

INSPECTION OF LOCOMOTIVE BOIL-ERS.

Mr. CASEY moved:

That it is expedient to provide for the inspection of locomotive boilers by Government officials in the same manner as is now provided in regard to marine and other boilers.

He said: The matter which I wish to bring before this House by this motion is doubtless new to many of us. My attention was called to the subject by a resolution which was passed at a recent session of the different brotherhoods of railway employees. I find that the men most directly interested in this question, the engineers, firemen and others employed about a train, are unanimous in believing that there is as good reason for subjecting locomotive boilers to Government inspection, as there is for enforcing a similar inspection upon marine boilers. In conversation with several of those gentlemen, they have convinced me of the force of their contention, and I think it proper to bring it before the House to enable the members to consider the question, and the Ministry to express their views upon it. It will be remembered that all marine boilers in use at present are subject to Government inspection, on account of the great risk to life and property involved by the danger of the explosion of such boilers. I will not at this moment go into the particulars of marine inspection; they are probably quite familiar to the House, certainly to the Goverment. But I do urge that the number of lives and the amount of property depending upon the safe operation of a locomotive, are much larger than the number of lives and the amount of property depending upon the soundness of many marine boilers. Not only the boiler of every passenger steamer, but the boiler of every tug boat and small river craft must be inspected; whereas, only a few lives, and a comparatively small amount of property, may depend upon the state of that boiler.

In the case of a passenger train, for instance, nearly everybody can see that not only the lives of the men employed about the engine, and of the other trainmen, but the lives of a large number of passengers, equal to the crew and passengers of many a steamer, depend upon the solidity and strength of the boiler of that locomotive. Not only all those on the engine are liable to be instantly killed by an explosion, but the passengers on the train behind are liable to be killed and mangled by the severe accident which would necessarily follow the explosion of the engine. Then it is not only by an explosion of the boiler that lives are lost; lives are lost by the explosion of tubes, gauges, &c., in connection with the boiler, which should all be subject to the same inspection, of course, as the boiler itself.

I have here a copy of the "Locomotive Fireman's Magazine" of March last, giving details in regard to accidents of that kind. There is a list of accidents resulting in death to engineers and firemen, in which I find that one resulted from the blowing out of a plug, fifteen from boiler explosions, one from a bursted arch pipe, four from bursted gauge glass, three from tubes bursting. During the past year, on the railways of America. twenty-five deaths have been explosion of locomotive boilers, the or of some of the tubes or gauges connected with the boilers. The article summarizes "The accidents, the result as follows: taken in the order of frequency, stand follows: collisions, falling from engine, misplaced switches, boiler explosions, struck by obstruction, cattle on the track, runaway engine, and unknown." Those are the most frequent causes, and collisions are put down as the most fruitful source of railway disasters; derailment and misplaced switches are a close second, while boiler exarising from boiler explosion.

I think the House will almost entirely agree with me that these men are entitled When we add to the to that protection. value of their lives the value of the property itself, and the lives of passengers who may be in the cars behind the engine. I think a sufficient prima facie case has been made out to enable me to ask the House to adopt this resolution. No doubt the Minister of Railways will have something to say in regard to it, and I will reserve any further remarks I have to offer.

Mr. HAGGART. As the House is aware. all locomotives belonging to Government railways are inspected and tested periodically; in fact, the most thorough inspection that is possible is made with respect to them. I believe all the other railways in Canada follow the same rule. The Grand Trunk Railway has inspectors who do nothing else than inspect locomotive boilers, and the same remark applies to the Canadian Pacific Rail-This inspection is made in the interest of the railway companies themselves; it is of the most thorough description, and is as efficient as any Government inspection could be made. thorough Another question arises, as to whether this Parliament has jurisdiction to appoint inspection for locomotives in the different provinces. I understand the legislature of Quebee by recent enactment exempted all locomotives of railway companies in that pro-Government vince from inspection by officials as regards boilers. After making inquiries of the different railway companies, the department came to the conclusion from the replies made that the present inspection; is of a most thorough kind in every way. As to the legal point, whether we have jurisdiction or not. I am not comcompetent to judge: but in my opinion, that inspection should be left to be exercised by the provincial authorities, if necessary, and I see no reason at present from the information in the hands of the department why any legislation is required in the direction proposed by the hon. gentleman. Perhaps, under these circumstances, there being a doubt as to the jurisdiction, the hon, gentleman will withdraw his motion. I may premise, however, that, as there may

Mr. CASEY. The question of jurisdiction plosions, land slides and cattle on the track. Mr. CASEY. The question of jurisdiction are of about equal importance. It appears to is no doubt an important one, and one me that the lives of the brave men in charge worthy of full consideration. As to the of locomotives are entitled to as much pro- necessity of Government inspection. I am tection at our hands as are those of the inclined to think that the men in charge men in charge of marine boilers. A slight of the locometives, and who have to bear the obstruction on the track is liable to cause risk, are better judges than the railway comthe death of the men on the locomotive, and panies or even the Minister of Railways, a slight collision may have a like result. We have already had the experience to a slight collision may have a like result. We have already had the experience to These are causes of accident against which which I have called attention. Six becwe cannot effectually provide, but it is with- motives have been blown up during the in our power to adopt measures whereby past two years in Canada, and on one occaengineers and firemen can be protected, so sion two men were killed on the engine. So far as mechanical skill can protect them. I say the engineers and the firemen are the by instituting an honest inspection, and taus best judges as to the necessity of Governprotecting them against sources of danger ment inspection. But as to whether we have jurisdiction or not, is a point which may be argued. For some reasons I am glad to hear the hon, gentleman insisting on the authority of the local legislatures. If his contention is correct in regards to the inspection of locomotive boilers it will also stand in regard to some other matters concerning railways which I hope to bring before the House at a later period of the session, and on which I claim the jurisdiction of the province should supersede that of the Dominion. I shall be happy to quote his authority on that occassion when the opportunity arises. As the Government are evidently opposed to passing this resolution in its present shape, and base that opposition on the ground of doubt as to jurisdietion. I would be foolish to press the resolution, as it would necessarily be lost, and I therefore move, as suggested by the Minister of Railways, that the motion be withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

COAST AND SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANIES, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. FLINT moved for:

Copies of all petitions and correspondence between the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, or any of its promoters or directors, and the Government in relation to the company's undertaking. Also, for copies of all correspondence between E. Franklin Clements, J. D. Rolston, Frederick Bard and other promoters of the South Shore Railway Company of Nova Scotia, or any of the directors of the said company, and the Government up to date of proceedings in the courts of Nova Scotia to wind up the said company. Also, copies of all petitions, agreements and correspondence between the said company and the Government, with reference to the obtaining of a charter for a new company, from the Dominion Parliament, and relating to the undertaking of the said company, or the undertaking of the company proposed to be incorporated.

They also obtained free right of way, from the muniof Yarmouth, and the municipalities of Yarto the Coast Railway Company, thus showing the interest that the people as represented in those councils took in the undertaking of that company. They continued their work during the season of 1894 ber, when, owing to the inclemency of the season, work was stopped, to be resumed again about the 1st of April of the present year, since which time operations have been continued to the present time. I am informed that they have graded and have about ready for the rails about twenty miles of the undertaking. All the stone work along this distance is done. There are two iron or steel bridges to be built, which are contracted for, and are to be delivered so that the company may have trains running over the greater portion of that distance before next winter. Now, the advocates and friends of the South Shore Railway pointed out that that undertaking would be more satisfactory and more in the interest of the public on account of its being a standard gauge; and a great many of the public, thinking that, as this road connected with the standard gauge road known as the Dominion Atlantic Railway, it would be of advantage, notwith-

This of course makes the subject of all the greater importance to this House when it comes to be dealt with, because already minion Government for a subsidy, and also with the provincial government for a subsidy for the construction of that road. If this charter should be granted here, it will to a vary large degree interfere with the credit and opportunities of the Coast Railway Company and the Southern Railway Company which have already contracts with the provincial government.

Mr. FLINT. I am speaking from inforpany, feeling the pressure of the popular mation which I have had very recently. The company has been attacked in the agreed to carry out the terms of the amended courts of Nova Scotia on the ground that charter, and construct a standard gauge road its charter is void; and when a company of in place of a narrow gauge road. Consequently, for the purposes of whatever disasking for power to extend its operations to such an extent as to require three or four two companies to carry out their under-takings, that question is henceforth practi-Now, the South Shore all the towns and municipalities along the line of the rival undertaking have granted a free right of way, and that the provincial legislature has granted a subsidy and entered into a contract with the rival undertaking, this Parliament should hesitate long before involving these companies in a conflict which a resolution of this House to assist one of them would involve. I think there is a charter for a company to build it will be the duty of this Parliament, when a road from Shelburne to Halifax, and that these papers are brought down, and when company has made a contract with the Do- the fuller information which will then be available is before the House, to look very carefully into the situation, and to see that by no Act of this Parliament shall the present prospects of the Coast Railway Company be interfered with. At the present time, notwithstanding the fact that they have no subsidy from the Dominion authorities, I think they are in process of completing the first twenty or thirty miles of their road. And this Parliament should hesitate before reviving the charter of a bankrupt concern. and giving it power to injure the credit or status of its rival. We all know that railway building in Nova Scotia and the maritime provinces—in fact in all the provinces of Canada-requires the utmost assistance from every possible source in order to achieve success. This undertaking required that that contract is to be amended in the Dominion and provincial assistance; and where the one company has proceeded with the work, met all its liabilities promptly, and is carrying out, to the fullest extent, all the requirements of its charter, this Parliament should hesitate before raising its hand in the slightest degree to injure the prospects of its complete success. We must all recognize the fact that we are not so particularly concerned in the success or failure of the individual investors in a company as we are in the securing of successful railway communication to the people. The people along the south shore of tion of the company to build, if possible, a Nova Scotia have felt, ever since a railway standard guage road, so as to avoid transhippolicy was inaugurated by this Government at Yarmouth: and, yielding to this ment, that they had a strong claim to its The local Parliament has certainly done its full share in holding out inducements to these various companies. The Dominion Government has also promised gauge road. assistance upon the plan which they have pursued since the inauguration of its policy of subsidizing railway construction. Had the South Shore Railway Company been able to go on and complete their work, had they shown themselves possessed of the necessary financial strength, I believe they could have successfully appealed to the Dominion Government to use its best endeavours to prevent the waste of public money which would be involved by giving money which would be involved by giving another road. a subsidy to one road when another road, through running almost identically same line of country, was subsidized by the provincial and local authorities. If this question be fully investigated, after the correspondence is before us. I believe it will be seen that the only proper course for this Par- road to Lockeport within the time stipulatliament will be to allow these companies to ed. We have the company in that position fight the battle out between themselves, as contrasted with the South Shore Comfight the battle out between themselves, without any assistance from the Dominion Parliament whatever. They have both gone to the local legislature for incorporation, they have undertaken operations under the charters and powers given by the local legislature, and I believe they should be left the road without local subsidies or local with those powers to do the best they can to realize the expectations of their promoters and the people who are served by the railway. One matter I forgot to mention in connection with the Coast Railway Company is this: At the time the charter was granted that company, the South Shore Railway Company was, to all appearance, internal and external, a dead letter. The capitalists had not come forward, nothing was heard of the investors, and it was considered by the public, and all those interested in railway construction along the south shore that they had given up the When the narrow gauge road undertaking. was first advocated, before a charter was granted, friends of the undertaking, representing the interests of the people along the south shore of the counties of Yarmouth and Shelburne, interviewed a prominent gentleman connected with the Domin-They received verbal ion Government.

the Dominion Government, and I have it upon the best authority that the late premier expressed himself also very favourable to the scheme of completing the narrow gauge road under the impression then existing that it was impossible to raise the capital to build the more expensive standard gauge road. They went forward with the assurances of sympathy from the leading men of both Governments, and from people holding all sorts of political views. Since then a strong demand was pressed upon the attenpressure, the capitalists connected with the Coast Railway Company agreed to construct, and the local government agreed to facilitate the construction of a standard

CHARLES TUPPER. Sir HIBBERT What evidence is there of the action of the local government of Nova Scotia with regard to the standard gauge?

Mr. FLINT. I would say frankly that the only evidence I have is the personal assurance to me of the authorities of the Coast Railway Company, given, apparently, in good faith. I have said that the Coast Railway Company stands in the position of the a substantial company meeting its liabilities, carrying on its operations, and prepared to carry out its contract, having given bonds and substantial and ample security to the local government for the completion of the pany which has abandoned its work, which has judgments entered out against it to a large sum, and which has all the difficulties to meet of reorganizing the company, securing new capital, and building assistance over identically almost the same route. Under these circumstances, when these papers are brought down—and I earnestly hope that they will be, at the earliest moment, in order that we may have them in our hands when discussing this subject-I think the House will find it would be very much to the advantage of the Dominion, and people along the south shore that this rivalry should cease, and that there should not be any action on the part of this Parliament to restore to the South Shore Railway Company its powers. In my humble opinion, those powers cannot be used to carry on that work, because it comes into direct opposition to other roads subsidized by the Dominion and local governments. The tendency of all this will be, perhaps, to paralyze the construction of a railway around the south shore of Nova Scotia, rather than promote it. I trust the Government will bring this correspondence down assurances of friendliness and support from at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FORBES. Before this motion is carried. I would like to say a few words emphasizing what has been said by the hon, representatives of their counties to support it endeavour to urge upon the House and the Minister of Railways the absolute necessity of bringing down these papers as speedily as possible. The object of the people along the south shore in upholding the scheme known as the Coast road and the Southern Railway or Hervey line, is to give railway connection and accommodation to the people in that part of Nova Scotia. At the time the Coast Railway entered upon its operations there was no other road in contemplation. A charter had been obtained for a road, but nothing had been done in it, as was pointed out by. the hon, member for Yarmouth. It was considered as a lapsed charter. Capitalists did not look upon it with favour. The hon, member for Shelburne (Mr. White) himself denounced the scheme known as the South Shore road, and publicly advocated the Coast road, known as the narrow gauge road, and put himself on record in correspondence to the same effect. He interested himself to secure a subsidy from the Dominion Government to the Coast Railway, and the people identified with that scheme felt that they were certain to get the support of both the Dominion and local governments for this long desired road. Politics, it was supposed, would not be allowed to interfere to prevent or delay the construction of the line called the Coast road, to the construction of which line the five municipalities along Atwood, as follows:-

the south shore had petitioned the Goverment for support. and had petitioned the member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). I would and in every way had sought the assistance of both governments. Ottawa, 4th March, 1893.

J. D. Rolston, Esq.

Dear Sir,-I am in receipt of yours of to-day, informing me that Mr. Jacob Bingay and other wealthy men are interested in the South Shore Railway Company, and propose to build a narrow gauge railway from Yarmouth to Lockeport.

As you are aware, Mr. Atwood and others are already engaged in this enterprise.

Now, these are the promoters of the Coast road.

Delegates from the municipalities of Argyle, Barrington and Shelburne proceeded to the United States, where they met this gentleman and others interested in building a narrow gauge railroad between these points, and reported so favourably that the several municipalities have passed resolutions pledging themselves to pay for land damages for right of way and station grounds. have also been requested by the municipalities in my county to do all possible to aid Mr. Atwood in his enterprise, and to secure, if possible, a subsidy for the road; and in compliance with their request, and in company with Mr. Atwood, I have waited on the Premier and Minister of Railways. and urged them for that assistance.

I presume the gentlemen you represent have very recently become interested in this matter, and probably sinc Mr. Atwood's action. I need not say that I trust that the existence of rival companies may not debar our long suffering county from obtaining railway privileges or delay that long desired benefit.

I am, as yet, entirely ignorant of your organization, and am, therefore, unable to form any opinion as to the probability of your proceeding with this work. As the representative of the county of Shelburne, I feel myself bound to consider any proposed application for a railway passing this, my county.

I am yours very truly,

N. W. WHITE.

Again, on March 7th, 1893, the same distinguished hon, gentleman wrote to Mr.

Ottawa, 7th March, 1893.

My dear Mr. Atwood.-Your favour with inclosure is at hand. I herewith inclose a copy of my application for subsidy and a copy of Sir John Thompson's reply.

This is the application from the hon, member to the Government for a subsidy to the Coast or narrow gauge railway:

I have not yet had a letter from the Minister of Railways, and having first received a copy of the specification. I intend waiting on him again with A day or two since I was interviewed by J. D. Rolston, of Yarmouth, who was here for one day, trying to get some support for the South Shore He handed me a letter, a Railway Company. copy of which I inclose, and, after some talk, wished a reply in writing. I send you a copy of Knowing he wanted to use it, if possible, to aid his scheme, I recapitulated what had been done by the municipalities and by you, so that if he showed the letter, he would at the same time have to make known the real position of your company, and I do not think he would get much consolation out of my answer.

I at once saw Sir John Thompson and explained to him the situation, told him who the incorporators were, the offer which had been made, and my firm belief that this was only an attempt to squeeze a larger sum out of you.

A number of delegations have been here from many constituencies asking for railway subsidies, but no new subsidies will be given this year to any one.

I am confident we shall get a subsidy next year.

Yours truly.

N. W. WHITE.

Now, a year after that, in July, 1894, the South Shore Railway gets a subsidy from the Dominion Government for $3,200 a mile for thirty-five miles, a total of $112,000. This would put the South Shore Railway. called the broad gauge line, in direct autagonism with the Coast Railway, or what was known as the narrow gauge, around the south shore of Nova Scotia. If anything would bolster up the road and help it go forward and do bona fide work, it would be for the Dominion Government to give it $3.200 a mile in competition with the Coast road, only getting $2.200 per mile from the local government. The South Shore Railway Company, with its bonus from the Domintion Government, undertook this work only as late as October, 1894, whereas the other company had been going on faithfully doing work since March, 1893, and had been expending money in construction work since April. 1894. From October, 1894, the South Shore Railway Company built ten miles. On 27th February, 1895, they approach the Dominion Government asking the Minister of Railways for a railway contract, and it is for a copy of that contract that the motion of the hon. member for Yarmouth asks, and which motion I am now seconding. That contract and the papers in connection with it. will show. I think, that previous to 27th February, 1895, the Government, or certain of its members, were notified that the South Shore Railway Company were the South Shore Railway Company were gauge road. They have the legislative absolutely bankrupt, that they had failed power, subject to the approval of the

to pay their workingmen their honest wages, that they had compromised with them for 33 cents in the dollar for their labour, that they had failed to pay their sub-contractors and engineers, that they had failed to pay for their supplies, and were about to petition the courts of Nova Scotia, under the Winding Up Act of the Dominion of Canada, to be put into liquidation. A few weeks after that a petition was presented through its solicitors in the city of Halifax asking the court to appoint an interim liquidator to take charge of the affairs of the South Shore Railway Company. They made affidavits declaring it to be insolvent, that they were unable to pay their bills, and desired their property to be divided equally among all its creditors. This was considered to be an abandonment of the scheme, and it was supposed by those who were interested in railway extension around that shore, that the South Shore Company had gone up. They discharged all their sub-contracts, carried away all their tools and donkey engines, and donkeys and nothing further was done. Now we find that application is being made to Parliament to revive that old charter, which, as the hon, member for Yarneuth so clearly pointed out, had expired, and I trust that when the documents, papers and contracts are brought down, that what I have said here will be amply and fully verified. Now, it would seem by the statement of the Minister of Justice that the old company, known as the Coast Railway Company, is still supposed to be a narrow gauge road. I am well aware that the Minister of Justice, when Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was most earnest in his solicitations on behalf of the South Shore Railway Company and he stated most particularly "I think I can safely say that the Federal Government will not aid a narrow gauge road. But I shall consult my colleagues." I am reading a letter from Sir C. H. Tupper dated in the spring of 1894. I think in this letter the hon. Minister puts himself on record as opposed to a narrow gauge road. Now, I submit to the hon, gentleman two propositions. If I can assure the Minister that the Coast Road Company are changing, with the consent of the local government, their plans and are preparing to construct a broad gauge line along that shore, will he withdraw his opposition to the Coast road, and will be withdraw the grant of a subsidy to the South Shore line and promise it to the Coast line? If the hon, gentleman will do that, I shall be able to give him the most positive assurance that the Coast road will change their narrow gauge to a gauge of 4 feet 8½ inches. If he will give me his assurance now, if he will shift his bonus to the Coast Road Company, as the people of that section of Nova Scotia desire. I will give him the most ample assurance that the Coast road will go on and build a broad They have the legislative

Their only object White as well, whether they are prepared to put themselves, in direct antagonism to 99 out of every 100 people on the south shore of Nova Scotia who favour a railroad of any kind and desire the matter to be kept out of politics? The people along the south shore are anxious to have railway connec-Federal Government and the local governprises through those counties; and if the whole scheme is to be killed by reason of rival politics, then surely I say the people will throw the blame upon the hon, member: for Shelburne, backed up, as I presume he is, by the Minister of Justice. I want the people in that section of the province to know, first of all, that the South Shore Railway Company is to-day asking the assistance of Parliament to bolster up a bankrupt company, which will result in running parallel two railways around the south shore of Nova Scotia. Further than that, the Southern, or Hervey Company, has two contracts to construct a road from Shelburne towards? the city of Halifax; first of all, to the town of New Germany, and the south shore under a contract with the Federal Government. and with a subsidy from the Federal Goverement, will be a rival to the Hervey road and the Coast Railway. Surely the object of this Government is not to grant subsidies to rival railways through the same section of country, passing through the same towns and villages, and wasting the public money ir such an extravagant manner by putting in operation enterprises without any bona tide object in view, knowing as they should know, that one railway is amply sufficient to satisfy the wants of that section, or any other portion of this country. Then, again, the papers when submitted to this House will. I am sure, prove to the Government that the object in getting a contract signed between the South Shore Company, known as the bankrupt company, and the Ottawa Government, was to help them get some: blood money or repayment of their debts from the Coast road. I have it straight from . these who are most intimately acquainted with the matter and know all the details of the several schemes, who say that the South Shore, backed up by Messrs, Bingay, Williamson, the member for Shelburne and others, are trying to fortify their position so as to make the best possible case with the Minister in the matter of getting a subsidy with the object in view. Now that is very plain. We know what that means. The South Shere Railway Company has today debts recorded in the way of judgments against it, of over $36,000, and these along not show the name of the ex-president of ed by publication in the "Royal Gazette." is to squeeze out of the rival companies, that Further than that I want to ask the Minister known as the Coast Railway Company and and the hon, member for Shelburne (Mr. the Hervey Railway, such a sum of money as will satisfy those several debts, or as will enable them to pay as great a percentage as possible, and perhaps pay an assessment for political purposes, in consideration for which payment they will perhaps abandon their enterprise and leave the Government free to allocate the subsidy to whatever the through their towns and counties, and company they might see fit, so long as the it will be a pity if this opportunity is lost South Shore Company is out of the way and to them because of opposition between the provided for. That appears to be the scheme which is on foot. I do not want the Government, both of them promoting rival enter-ment, nor the hon, member for Shelburne, nor any other member in this House, to lend themselves to this scheme. If the process of the Kilkenny cats is to be repeated. and these two rival companies are brought into operation, whereby they will rival one another, capitalists will be disgusted, and will be very averse to coming forward and prosecuting any similar enterprises in the future. Therefore if the Government, when the papers come down, assure themselves by the record that the people are unanimous, and if in any possible way they can so handle the subsidies that a broad gauge railway will be built by the South Shore or the Coast line or any other company, the Government will be perfectly right in doing so. But when I see the Corst Line Company, which has expended $150,000 of hard cash and has paid all its bills which are due, is to-day going on with the work of construction of a broad guage railroad to the extent of employing over 150 men with teams and other appliances along the proposed road. and the South Shore line is at the same time proposing to carry a line through the same towns and villages on to Lunenburg, and is endeavouring in every possible way to throw cold water on the enterprises known as the Coast Line Railway and the Hervey Road, I hold that the Government would not lend its support to what is known as the South Shore line. Further, I wish to say that I have positive assurances that the contract which the Coast line company were induced to sign with the South Shore line last February was practically a bogus contract. It was signed by the president of the South Shore line two weeks after he had resigned his position.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). That is not so.

Mr. FORBES. I am told that it is so.

Mr. HAGGART. Who told you so?

Mr. FORBES. The documents will show this when they are brought down.

CHARLES Sir HIBBERT TUPPER. They show nothing of the kind.

Mr. FORBES. I am told the contract will with unrecorded judgments against it, the South Shore Company. The name purex-president.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I have the contract here—a duplicate of it.

Mr. FORBES. The hon, gentleman has no right to speak as representing the Government. If so, the motion had better be altered so that the hon, member for Shelburne be requested to bring down the papers. I do not know that the hon, gentleman has the documents.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I have a duplicate.

Mr. FORBES. Almost all the hon, gentleman's actions in this railway matter have been in duplicate, and the contract may be the same. I only desire to urge on the House that care should be exercised in dealing with this matter, and if, as I honestly believe. there is a possibility that the Government have been imposed upon, it will be their duty to look into this matter with the utmost care. I have my information from those connected with the original contract and from parties who are well acquainted with the whole transaction. I again urge on the Minister of Railways that he should submit the documents to the House as speedily as possible. Within the next two days a Bill will be brought before the House upon which light will be thrown by these documents, and they will be of interest.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). The hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), who made this motion stated that this matter would eventually come before the House when the Bill for the incorporation of the South Shore Railway came up for its third reading, and, I think, a great deal of discussion might have been spared till that time. However, as a number of statements have been made by the hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), and the hon, member for Queen's, N.S. (Mr. Forbes), who have attempted to give a history of these two roads, it may not be out of place for me to correct some of the statements they have made and give some additional ones which will throw light on the matter. It is a fact that the South Shore Company was first incorporated. It obtained a charter from the local legislature in 1892. It is also a fact that for some months, at all events, nothing was done under that charter. The gentlemen who obtained it were not financial men, to say the least of if, they were not able to build a road, they were not men of very much influence, and consequently the people in the counties of Yarmouth and Shelburne, who were extremely anxious to secure railway accommodation-who live 70 odd miles from a railway station, and in order to reach it have to travel all night on a stage coach, and are then 100 miles further away from the point towards which they generally travel than porting to be signed is not even that of the and believing those gentlemen who were incorporators of the company were not likely to build the road, had very little faith in it. About that time an engineer by the name of Mansfield, and Mr. Atwood, of Philadelphia, and the subsequent president of the road, Mr. Robertson, came through the country and professed their ability to build a narrow gauge road, not of three feet, but a narrow gauge two feet in width. They represented to the municipal councils and to the people that that kind of road would be very much better for them, that it would cost less, that they would be able to run trains two or three times a day instead of once a day, and so anxious were the people to secure a railway that we supported even the two-foot narrow gauge road they desired to build. Mr. Atwood came to Ottawa. and subsequently, as the hon, member for Queen's stated-and he read my letter-I urged on the Government the granting of a subsidy for a two-foot narrow gauge line, which we considered better than a stage ceach. Mr. Atwood professed at that time to have all Philadelphia behind him to build the road. It was to be built immediately; whether he got a subsidy or not he would commence work at once. But nothing was done. After a while those gentlemen quartelled among themselves. Mr. Mansfield came to Shelburne, and he handed over the correspondence which had taken place behimself. Mr. 1 Ween Atwood and Robertson. I have a letter here from Mr. Robertson, which he wrote to Mr. Mansfield. dated Barrington, 3rd August, 1893. It is as follows:-

Barrington, 3rd August, 1893.

Dear Mr. Mansfield,-I was glad to get your letter this morning. I hope Mr. A. can arrange business so as to come to Nova Scotia this month. I see I am helpless, I am out of it altogether, not even an incorporator dependent upon him and his associates. I have got everything so far, and could get the extra subsidy from Ottawa if Coast Line Company was organized. Delays have weakened cur position. In the meantime Hervey and his engineer have last week been in Shelburne and are to make a colourable beginning at New Germany to hold that charter. All during the summer I have urged Mr. Atwood to get organ-All during the ized by securing $55,000 subscription to stock and payment of 25 per cent on that, namely, $13,750 in cash. We could then have made contracts with the municipalities and local government, and have secured the charter and whole thing against all comers. Had I have taken Yarmouth men in last winter as incorporators, I would have been I could have gone to them and got is; it is too late now. I wanted, subscriptions; hoped and believed, that Mr. A. could furnish cash to organize, and with construction company we could have made some money, and it did look well. I have spent, as you know, considerable cash and sacrificed everything for this, and now I am on my back, prestige weakened and helpless, unless he can come to time this month. I am afraid he can't get necessary cash. He has made one or two suggestions to me about organization which will not do. It must be genuine, they were before they left-were impatient, not colourable, to secure confidence here, and I encouragement I am looking for, and I hardly know how to move. Your letter this morning gives me a little hope. I await his return to Philadelphia from Maine, and I shall write him plainly, that something must be done at once to I have at least half a dozen save our enterprise. letters here awaiting his arrival. Once he said to me, he wanted to see the road go, and asked what subscription I could receive in Nova Scotia, and to make it a success he was willing to give his entire time for nothing to make an enterprise All these things make me think he successful. cannot succeed as he wishes. It would be utterly useless, he failing, for me to attempt to solicit stock in Nova Scotia.

Supposing, now, he should say he can't get subscriptions to organize and begin, and I ask him what he will take for charter, prospectus, printing, &c., that has been done, and get assignment or agreement for assignment to me, do you think we can get started in Boston and you and I take hold of it and work it, having the road built for company at actual cost, we being content with positions and payment for our time and trouble? I believe you and myself could work it all right. I know there is lots of go in myself, and I do want to see it go ahead, and if I can only inspire capitalists with some confidence in me, added to your reputation, we can yet secure it. We want $13,-000 to organize immediately, and after that with any backing we can get there all right.

Now, this is a matter that requires prompt action, if anything can be done by you. Next week I will certainly hear from him one way or other, and my letters to him will show him what must be done, and bring matters to a head. Can't you go to Boston, consult with your friends and advise me how to act if he fails? I will at once ask his figures and get proxies from directors named in charter, and come to Boston and meet you and your friends. I can make things go this end all right, if I am only backed up financially; but I have now nothing of my own to work with. Once we get started, we can work it through all right. You have a prospectus to work with, and we can underwrite sufilcient bonds to make a beginning this year.

I see now where mistakes have been made. course, if Mr. A. should come to time, I feel there is more money for both of us on the lines he has laid down; but the enterprise must not fail if possible. A good six months has been lost, but I propose now to take the thing up vigcurously on the lines of this letter, if I can do so, and Mr. A. will listen to transfer of charter. His failure to raise the money now defeats present charter, as now situated, as I must inform him I shall have to withdraw and take another position of entirely different nature, in order to support Without my assistance, I don't bemy family. lieve he could get any extension of charter next year from the Assembly, nor do I believe present rights of way would be confirmed again to us, unless good financial standing of company was shown.

Write me fully about this letter, and tell me what I can depend upon if this move has to be made.

Yours faithfully, (Signed) THOS. ROBERTSON.

Now. I have got another letter of about the same character, dated 10th August, 1893. another dated August 17th of the same character, another one dated August 24th, and another one dated August 25th, but I do not think I need inflict them upon the House. I will keep you posted.

have told him so. From his letters I cannot get Well. Sir, it is perfectly plain from these letters that there was no financial backing whatever for the two-foot narrow gauge road, to be built by the Coast Railway You can well understand that Company. when these letters got into the hands of those who were, at all events, competent to consider them, that support was withdrawn from that company. Now, it is true they got some rights of way from the municipalities in the meantime, but these rights of way are not such as have been stated by the hon, gentlemen (Mr. Forbes and Mr. They are a little in error about that. In the first place, the municipality of Yarmouth gave a free right of way. The municipality of Argyle did not give a free right of way, but it did this: It gave a subsidy of $5,000 towards the payment for the right of way through the township of Argyle, provided the road was completed to Lockeport. The municipality of Barrington gave a free right of way, but they attached the condition to it, that the company were to construct and operate a steam ferry, between Barrington and Cape Sable Island. Therefore, even these rights of way are considerably trammelled, and are not just as have been represented to the House. These letters are dated up to September, 1893, and as it has been suggested to me it would be better to read them, and as they come from the president of the narrow gauge road, I shall do so. Here is another letter, dated 10th August, 1893:

Barrington, 10th August, 1893.

Dear Mr. Mansfield,-I have no spare copy of prospectus to send you, but have written for one which gives you charter and considerable necessary information. We have $1,500 per mile subsidy from local government.

I may say that in the meantime an application was made to the local government, and the local government, or Mr. Fielding the Provincial Secretary, wrote an evasive letter. Perhaps I should not say an evasive letter, but I will say, a letter to which a great many conditions were attached, promising, under certain circumstances and conditions, that he would give them a subsidy of $1.500 per mile for this two-foot narrow gauge road. It is that to which Mr. Robertson alludes here. He continues:

-- and I am certain of $1,500 from general or Dominion Government; so you can say we have $2,000 subsidy per mile. We have entire right of way for roadbed, stations, &c., the whole 50 I have no word from Mr. Atwood yet, as miles. he has not returned from Maine. Mr. Atwood had some sporting camps. I believe, in the backwoods of Maine, and that is what was referred to in the letter. Here is another letter, dated 17th August, 1893;

Barrington, 17th August, 1893.

Here is still another letter, dated 24th August, 1893;

> Barrington Passage. Shelburne County, 24th Aug., 1893.

Dear Mr. Mansfield,-I received yours of 19th August this morning. I cannot come to see you at date you fix, for I am not prepared. My last letters from Atwood are dated Farmington, 25th July and 1st August, and from the Camps, 12th In the latter he said he would return to Philadelphia within a few days. Since 20th July he has not read any of my letters, as all have been sent to Philadelphia, and await his arrival there. Since 20th July, as occasion required. I have advised him upon such points of information as I thought necessary to success of enterprise, and in perfect good faith have done my share to secure success. I have also frankly stated my personal position and what I deemed it was necessary to do to retain our charter and rights of way, and have asked him to say to me positively, prospects of organization. &c., in his hands, because I cannot wait longer and must do something else, because I do not feel that I could successfully fight the whole question again before the legislature and municipal councils. And it is then for me to give up the proposed enterprise and lose what I have put into it in time and money, or to ask Mr. A. upon what terms he will transfer charter and its present privileges to me. If this can be secured so that I can use it, there are two courses open to us, and we must close the one will succeed. The first, to try and get capitalists in Boston or elsewhere to take place of Atwood and associates and work it out on that plan: or, second, for you and myself to attempt to secure the necessary local stock in this county and go ahead as a local enterprise. Now, before I come to see you I want your advice as to which plan to adopt. If the latter, I roust know something of what I can do before I approach Atwood. I can easily interview a few men in Yarmouth and along the line, and obtain an idea of what chances I would have to obtain 550 $100 shares, which is necessary to have before we can organ-To do this latter thing I wanted to know from you what your estimate of cost of road per mile. fully equipped. would be, if built by a company for actual cost.

Yours faithfully, Barrington, 25th August, 1993. Dear Mr. Mansfield,-I have yours of 22nd (this Atwood has not written or arranged morning). for a meeting because of his absence in northern Maine. From your letter of this date I judge your idea to be that other parties are to be secured in Boston to place in charter of Atwood

Mv first intimation came from you, when we met last spring, and I have fought against suspicions in the hope that all would yet be well with Mr. A., but the summer is gone, my time has been frittered away, my ready money spent, and I have nothing whatever to show for it. Write me what course you advise; give me your estimate cost per mile, fully equipped. I shall have heard from Atwood, and I can then spend two days in Yarmouth and come to Boston; for, when I come, shall go and see Mr. A. personally, and I would not stop in Boston longer than to see you, going for the afternoon. If a change has to be made, it must be done quickly, and I will not wait to secure terms for transfer of charter by letter, but will go to him in person. A few moments' conversation with him will settle terms of transfer, if possible, and I can then return to Boston with something to talk on, and before 15th September can. I beheve, have my company going with local capital. : You can have 10 miles located and under contract pretty soon after that, and then we will hold the

With a local company I believe I can get $4,000 per mile subsidy, instead of $3,000, but, of course, I am not certain of that. If we could have $4,000 and all stock subscribed, which would give us another $1,000, we could sell $3,000 per mile of bonds without going out of Nova Scotia. Write me fully, and if I leave for Boston before letter can reach you, will telegraph.

and his associates, and not to solicit local capitalists. If the first is your idea, why I have no particular estimate of cost per mile, except to satisfy my own curiosity, for I have never learned the amount from either A. or yourself. As I wrote you fully before this week, I have nothing to work up yet, as, placing thorough confidence in A.'s representations, neither any name or any of my friends is in the charter. Everything is in I have asked him to tell me if I can A.'s hands. expect organization this season, plainly stating my personal position and difficulties I saw in the way of success in securing continuance of subsidy, right of way, &c., &c., already secured by me, if we had to go over the fight again next winter. He wrote me last 12th August, from northern Maine, and I have no knowledge that he has yet returned to Philadelphia, where at least a dozen letters from me are awaiting reply, all written since 18th July. I have told him plainly what I have sacrificed for the enterprise, and, in justice to me, I want him to say one thing or other definitely, so that I can go at my old business of insurance to earn a living for my family. can I come and talk to you and other parties before I get that reply from him? If, say, nothing can be done this year by him, then I propose to at once go to Philadelphia and find out upon what terms I can get charter transferred to me, so that I can try through you to float it elsewhere. I cannot understand his long visit to Maine. Candidly, I believe he is waiting there in the hopes something will turn up to help him I know no one would have secured as much as out when he comes back to Philadelphia, but such I have for this enterprise, and to think that I a course is not fair to myself. I will do anything in reason to carry out the project, but, as I have told you, I am a poor man myself and have paid out my ready cash during the past year. I have perfect confidence in you, and if you say (if charter can be controlled by us), that we can get started, I will do all in my power to get ahead with it. I propose to lay the whole matter before Father Sullivan, and await an immediate reply to this and previous letter, which I hope to receive Thursday merning next, letter leaving Boston by Tuesday boat. As I said before, the reading of these letters made it quite evident that no financial backing, to say the least of it, was behind the Coast Railway Company at that time. That brings us to September, 1893. In the meantime, the South Shore Railway Company fell into the hands of capitalists in New York who were men of financial position and standing, and they commenced in the fall of 1893 to make surveys. About the same time the Coast Railway Company put a small force in the field. The South Shore Company had a very large force of engineers in the field.

Mr. FORBES. That is not true.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). The hon, gentlemen need not deny it: I know what I am talking about. The South Shore Company had one set of engineers making a preliminary survey, and another set of engineers following them and making a location survey; while the narrow gauge people had but a small force in the field. The South Shore had Company, after having location surveys made of twenty miles of their road, sent their plans to Halifax, in order that they might be confirmed by the provincial engineer and the Government. The Coast Railway Company got ahead of them, however, and three days before the South Shore Company filed their surveys for the twenty miles, the Coast Railway Company filed their surveys for seven miles. The local government and the provincial engineer confirmed the seven miles for the narrow gauge company, and refused to confirm the first ten miles of the South Shore, but they did confirm the second ten miles of the South Shore. So that things stood in this way, that the local government Atwood promised to write me Mon-shad confirmed the first seven miles for the Coast Railway Company, and for the second heard from him? Saw S. Tuesday; he is blue, ten miles they approved of the plans for but ready to make another attempt to warm the the South Shore Railway Company. After this, some work was done. The Coast Railway Company commenced work in May, 1894, a short time before the South Shore Railway Company, and the South Shore Railway Company began in the fall of 1894. The Coast Railway Company began with a small force which they increased during the summer, and the South Shore Railway Company began with a very large force in the fall of 1894. Every obstacle, apparently, was thrown in the way of the South Shore Railway Company. They purchased and paid for a very large part of the land Company. through which they ran their road.

Mr. FORBES. That is not true.

And the second of the second o

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have had the deeds in my possession, and know what I state to be the facts.

Mr. FORBES. They have not spent $200 for right of way.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I say that they purchased and paid for a very large portion of the land through which they ran, and the road near the town of Yarmouth they were unable to obtain, because there was a dispute regarding the value of the property: and inasmuch as the third arbitrator had not been appointed by the local government, and inasmuch as the local government declined, for some reason or other, to appoint him, the consequence was the land could not be appraised. That is the reason why the portion of the railway near the town of Yarmouth has not been paid for. Both of these roads have built about an equally number of miles. It has been stated here that the Coast Railway Company have built twenty-five miles, but if you read the provincial engineer's report you will see that, at all events, up to January last they had built about an equal quantity. some fifteen or sixteen miles, and that the provincial engineer condemned very strongly a portion of the road constructed by the Coast Railway Company as not being up to the mark. Hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken of the South Shore Company as a bankrupt concern, which had actually gone into insolvency, and against which there are judgments still standing, and for the winding up of which there are proceedings now pending in court. That is not quite true. It is a fact that Alexander, Bergin, and Farrar, who were associated with the road. came to grief. The company itself did not. but these individuals who were associated with the company, and who were putting up a certain amount of money to aid in constructing the road, came to grief; and when that happened, parties in Yarmouth, and elsewhere, principally Yarmouth, not knowing what effect the failure of these individuals would have on the road, took action. and obtained judgments against the South Shore Railway Company, and recorded those judgments. The last recorded was one obtained by a Mr. Murphy, engineer, for the sum of $400. That was the only one unsettled.

Mr. FLINT. Was there not a judgment for about $29,000 recorded against the company in favour of the contractors?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I will explain all that in a moment. I said that in Yarmouth some persons had brought actions against the company; but these very people have investigated and reorganized the

Mr. White (Shelburne).

Company. Strang & Lee was one of the very firms who are now organizing the company.

Mr. FORBES. They put that debt into stock.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). If they did, it represents work done on the road.

Mr. FORBES. They compromised at 36 cents in the dollar.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I say that these people have gone into the company. have reconstructed the company, and it is to-day in a better position than ever. I will give the names of these people. They are: D. P. Andrews, of Boston, whose reference is Shawmut National Bank; W. B. Strang, whose reference is National Bank of New York; Grosvenor H. Hubbert and M. B. Wheeler, reference, National Bank; J. D. Williamson and associates, Hanover National Bank. I can give dozen of references. but probably were to give you references known the city of Ottawa, that would be en more satisfactory. Therefore, I will even more satisfactory. give you Mr. Magee, president of the Bank of Ottawa, and the general manager of the Bank of Ottawa: Mr. E. S. Clouston, manager of the Bank of Montreal: Morgan & Co., and J. Edward Simons, president of Fourth National Bank, of New York.

Mr. FORBES. What are those certificates?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I am giving you references of the stability and financial standing of the men engaged in the enterprise at present.

Mr. FORBES. Who are the men?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I have read you the names, and I give you the references. As I have said, these judgments are all arranged, they were transferred into the hands of D. H. Andrews, and have been arranged in this way. These people have taken stock in the road, that debt represents actual work done on the road, and the gentleman who issued executions at the suit of these people, the other day, and advertised them in the Yarmouth "Herald," so that these advertisements would reach here at a very opportune time, had no authority for issuing the executions.

Mr. FORBES. Who?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Look at the Yarmouth "Herald." His costs were paid, and he had no control over those judgments with one exception, and that was the judgment obtained by Mr. Murphy, which has since been paid. What the object was in issuing executions on these judgments without the authority of the judgment's creditors, and in putting the advertisement in the Yarmouth "Herald" only a few days ago, so that it would reach here at an opportune inquiries. time-what the object was I am not going to say, but those are the facts.

Is it not a fact that the Mr. FLINT. Italian navves were paid off at 33 cents in the dollar?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I know that they were paid and settled and satisfied. I do not know what they were paid. know there could be very little coming to them, because they received their board, and everything of that kind while they were So that the South Shore Railway Company, I think, hon, gentlemen will conclude, is in a very different position from that represented by the two gentlemen who last addressed the House. It has been said that proceedings have been taken in this course to wind up the concern. That is the fact: Mr. Farrer commenced proceedings in the court at a time of panic, when he saw these judgments entered up, and commenced proceedings for the winding up of the con-But he has withdrawn his proceedings, and there are no proceedings of that. Now, let us turn our attention to the narrow gauge or coast railway. In the Coast Railway: Company, they have spent some money upon the road. I believe it is a fact that they have paid their workmen up to the present I do not desire to say anything that day. is not exactly correct with regard to them or to anybody else. But, so far as I have been able to ascertain they have never financed their road; they have not made permanent arrangements for the building of the road. It is true, they obtained a contract and a subsidy from the local government, but they obtained that contract a very considerable time after the subsidy was granted by this House to the South Shore Now, I have copies of Mr. Fielding's letters, and I will read them both. From this we can get the dates for comparison:

Halifax, N.S., 4th February, 1893.

Sir.-I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of the letter of this date signed by Mr. George E. Mansfield and yourself, on behalf of a company to be incorporated, asking aid from the provincial government for the construction of a two-feet narrow gauge railway from Yarmouth to Lockeport, according to specifications attached to the application.

In reply, I have to say that the representations made by you, Mr. Mansfield and Mr. Thomas Robertson, when you waited on the Government. made a very favourable impression. There is a disposition on the part of the Government to grant a subsidy to the proposed road. I must point out to you, however, that, while narrow gauge railways may not be altogether new, they have never been introduced into our province. Your proposal, therefore, contemplates a departure from the old-established custom of our Government in railway matters. Before committing the province to the endorsement of your scheme, it will be necessary for us to make some further

If the result of these inquiries confirms the statements made by you respecting the utility and safety of the narrow-gauge road, our Government will be prepared to assist your company in obtaining from the legislature a charter on the usual terms and conditions of railway charters, and to grant for the line of railway from Yarmouth to Lockeport a subsidy of one thousand five hundred dollars ($1,500) per mile, payable on the completion of 30-mile sections, as proposed by you, such subsidy, however, not to exceed one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars ($135,000). The subsidy granted will, of course, be in all things not herein stated subject to the laws of the province of Nova Scotia.

Yours faithfully,

W. S. FIELDING, Provincial Secretary.

Leonard Atwood, Esq., 122 Boellit Building. Philadelphia.

Now, it was to that letter that he referred when he said he had a subsidy of $1.500 a mile. Now, here is a second letter:

Halifax, 14th February, 1894.

Mr. CAMERON. On the 15th March.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Yes.

Halifax, 14th February, 1894.

Dear Sir.-I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 13th instant respecting your company's railway project.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. To whom is this letter addressed?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). It is written by Mr. Fielding to Mr. Thomas Robertson.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who was he?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). He was the local candidate for Shelburne.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Strange coincidence.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne):

If your company are prepared to promptly produce satisfactory evidence of their proper organization and their financial resources for carrying out their enterprise, our Government will be prepared to advise the granting of a subsidy for a three-foot gauge railway from Yarmouth to Lockeport, the distance not to exceed ninety miles, for a subsidy of two thousand two hundred dollars ($2,200) per mile.

We shall, however, impose the same condition as has been stipulated for in other railway contracts of recent date, viz. :

That the company shall not be entitled to claim payment of any subsidy until they have fully completed and equipped the whole line and put it into operation.

That was changed afterwards:

The work to be commenced immediately after the execution of the contract, and to be continuously presecuted, and to be completed on or before the first day of May, 1896.

A satisfactory bond to be given in a sum equal to twice the amount of the subsidy.

Specifications to be subject to the approval of the provincial engineer.

This letter is not to be regarded as a standing offer to your company. Unless your company are prepared to avail themselves of its terms immediately and enter into a contract to the satisfaction of the Government, this letter must be considered as cancelled.

Yours faithfully.
W. S. FIELDING.
Provincial Secretary.

To Thos. Robertson, Esq.,

President.

The Coast Railway Co. of Nova Scotia.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What was the result of the election?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). This letter was used in the canvass.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who was elected?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Mr. Robertson was elected. The standing offer was withdrawn, and another condition was put in the contract. The contract was entered into long after the subsidy had been granted here to the South Shore Railway Company. It was provided that the Coast Railway Company must build the first ten miles and spend $50,000 or $60,000 on the next ten miles before they could get the subsidy for the first. and the condition that they must build to Lockeport dropped. When they entered into that contract with the local government they undertook to build a narrow gauge road. and a bond was given by parties in Philadelphia under the penalty mentioned by one of the hon, gentlemen who spoke to build the road. What that amounts to I do not know. The penalty most certainly could not be recovered, and what damages could be recovered in case the road was not built. I leave the gentlemen who are interested in these narrow gauge railways to determine. Now, as I said before, both of these railway companies have graded some fifteen miles of road side by side. The South Shore road is broad gauge, and the provincial engineer in his report said that the road as built by the South Shore Company is an admirable one and he commends it very highly indeed. can be no doubt that the best outcome of these troubles would be some amalgamation of these two roads. And I may say that offers have been made to that end. And I say here, and I have the documents here to prove what I say, that the persons who were manipulating the affairs of the South Shore Railway Company and the two gentlemen who are putting up the money for the Coast Railway Company actually came to an arrangement by which the Coast Railway Company agreed to sell out. And if you doubt what I say. I will read the letter. I am not going to read all these. I have here the letter of Mr. Alexander who was the chairman of the South Shore Railway Company.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne).

Mr. FLINT. He went into insolvency. He was one of those millionaires.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He was not worth a million.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I would like to call attention to the date of the letter. Sth December. Now, that is the very time when the Coast Railway Company left off work. They assign now as the reason for leaving off work last winter, that the weather prevented them from carrying it on. But, Mr. Wheaton, the engineer of that road, did not say that in his report to the provincial engineer. This is what the provincial engineer says:

Mr. Wheaton also gave a statement of works which he says will be proceeded with during the winter, but this we cannot deal with at present.

So that they evidently intended to work during the winter; and I can say besides that the newspapers of both Shelburne and Yarmouth contained advertisements asking for tenders for ties for the whole road from Yarmouth to Lockeport, although a great portion of it had never been surveyed. They were also calling for tenders for fencing the whole road. But the work was stopped about the Sth December, 1894, the date of this letter, which I will read:

To Geo. A. Fletcher, Esq., Care Mitchell, Fletcher & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

I am informed by Mr. Williamson that a proposition has been made you for us for our purchase of all rights and properties of your Nova Scotia railway and construction company, including Halifax assistance, as heretofore discussed, on the following terms, namely, we to repay you expenditures as only verified, deliver you $50,000 bonds and 400 shares, par value $100, stock South Shore Railway Company, as capitalization $750,000. Stock to be trusteed for three years, and we take care of Thomas Robertson for a small amount, and that you have accepted same. This proposition, if so accepted, we now confirm. Wire us to-day your acknowledgment of receipt of this telegram and confirm your acceptance.

H. E. ALEXANDER. Chairman, South Shore Railway Syndicate.

Mr. FLINT. That is for the company.

Mr. WIIITE (Shelburne). That is to Mr. Fletcher, from Mr. Alexander as chairman of the South Shore Railway syndicate, not as an individual. And here is Mr. Fletcher's answer, dated Philadelphia, 5th December, 1894.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What company does he represent?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Brill were the two gentlemen who put up the money for the narrow guage.

Mr. FLINT. I think the hon, gentleman is making a mistake.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburnes, I know what I miles graded ready for the rails. We have suspendam talking about. Here is the telegram:

To H. E. Alexander. 16 Wall St., New York.

I confirm and accept your offer of to-day for myself and associates.

GEO. A. FLETCHER.

Then a lot of correspondence ensued after that. As appears by these letters, At-wood & Robertson were both present at arrangements, and both agreed to them; and they went down to Nova Scotlato see Mr. Fielding, of the local government. to get the local subsidies given to the Coast Railway transferred to the South Shore Railway Company. Mr. Fielding refused to transfer the subsidies, and the consequence was that the thing fell through. Here is the last letter, dated at Philadelphia, 24th January, 1895:

H. E. Alexander, Esq.

Chairman, South Shore Railway Syndicate. 16 Wall St., New York.

We are very anxious that our contract embodied in your exchanged telegrams of the 8th December, 1894, shall be promptly performed. It should have been done before now. We have waited upon your convenience, though always ready to do our part, until we feel that we should be expected to wait no longer. May we ask you to fix the earliest date at which the thing will be closed.

GEO. A. FLETCHER.

This shows that they were not so anxious to complete this road, but that they were willing to sell out to the South Shore Railway Company, provided these moneys were paid, and that Mr. Robertson was taken care of for a small sum of money. Now, the contract with the local government is for a narrow guage road. The hon, genbuilding a narrow gauge road, and that now they are going to build a broad gauge. We have no proof of that. On the 29th December, 1894, the president of the road got cember, 1894, the president of the road got Bill (No. 34) respecting the Toronto, Hamil-up a plan, and made an application to exton and Buffalo Railway Company.—(Mr. tend the narrow gauge road from Shelburne all the way to Halifax, and this is his letter:

The town council of Yarmouth and the municipal councils of Yarmouth and Argyle, in the county of Yarmouth; and of Barrington and Shelburne, in the county of Shelburne, have already granted free rights of way to the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia (Limited). We commenced active operations in ed grading during the winter months, but the right of way will be cleared over sixty miles of our line during the present winter, and contracts made for rails, sleepers and fences, entire line will be under construction next year. and we expect to have trains running over a very large portion of it before the close of 18%. The promoters of the Coast Railway Company believe that the needs of the southern counties of Nova Scotia will be best served by a line of railway between Yarmouth and Halifax, not built with a view of giving a shorter railway connection than now exists between those points, but rather with the intention of connecting each village and town with Halifax in the east, and the town of Yarmouth in the west. They propose a threefoot gauge railway, because it can be more cheaply built and operated, and more likely to give some return for the capital that will be invested in such an undertaking. The Halifax merchant and manufacturer will, by this route. be brought in close connection with the entire population located along nearly 300 miles of our

I read this letter to show that on the 29th December, 1894, the president of this road had no idea of changing it into the standard gauge road, but up to that time he wanted to build a three-foot gauge, and extend it all the way to Halifax, and he did so because the people, as he states here, were in favour of it, and because it would be cheaper.

IN COMMITTEE-THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 90) respecting the Oshawa Railway Company .- (Mr. Smith, Ontario.)

House resolved itself into committee on Coatsworth

On section 9,

Mr. COATSWORTH moved the addition of the following provision:-

Provided always, that nothing in this Act or in the said approval of the Governor General shall be held to give effect to the said arrangement in so far as such arrangement may be (if it be) contrary to any existing contract with any municipality or other party, unless such municipality or other party shall consent thereto.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was that provision before the committee and approved by it?

Mr. TISDALE. That provision was not submitted to the committee.

Mr. MULOCK. When this Bill was before the Committee on Railways it appeared August of this year, and have now over twenty that the company were asking powers to make certain traffic arrangements with other railway companies, not named, and which were not petitioners. It occurred to some members of the committee, myself among others, that if we were to grant that power without the consent of the other companies, they not being present, we might be affecting their arrangements. In effect, the Bill was seeking to amend the corporate powers of other companies, not petitioners here, and had not appeared as petitioners, and of such changes the public had no notice. I discussed the matter briefly before the committee, and subsequently the solicitor of the company, Mr. Clarke, spoke to me and said he was quite willing to guard the rights of any other contracting parties. would get over the objection taken to the Bill by myself and others, and I think the Postmaster General took that view as well. This is a provision simply to prevent any contracts made by any other companies being interfered with by powers conferred or, unnamed companies.

Company of the Compan

Mr. LISTER. I object to this matter being settled across the Table. This amendment was not submitted to the Railway Committee, and the committee of the House has a right to obtain an explanation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think any objection can be taken to the amendment. It only refers to parties interested, and they have all agreed to do it. It is simply a provision that in so far as regards any municipality interested in the roads that exist, and which are receiving legislation at the present time, their arrangements or contracts under bonus by-law or agreement shall not be affected by this legislation. It is purely a private matter between the parties, and I do not think that when the interests of the company and of the municipalities are protected by the amendment, any objection can be taken to it.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 10,

Mr. MACLEAN (York). In section 9, which has just passed the committee, it is declared that this company may enter into agreement with the Canada Southern Railway and other roads. I have an amendment to propose, which deals with the question of the passenger rate that should be charged by this new company. I bring it up in connection with this road for this reason: That the Canada Southern has acquired, or will acquire, this Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo road, that that road, which is now controlled by the Michigan Central, is a Vanderbilt road, and this Vanderbilt road is controlled by the New York Central, all these being Vanderbilt lines, having their headquarters in the Vanderbilt offices in New York: and the New York Central, which is the great road owned by the Vanderbilts, is a two cent per mile road. By a statutory enactment of the state of New York, the New York Central is limited to that passenger rate. If that is so, and I am prepared to prove it, then the Canada Southern, if it acquires the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo line, which I believe is the present intention, will represent the New York Central, and it should accept a two-cent passenger rate in Ontario, such rate having been enacted by the legislature of New York to cover its lines in that State.

Control of the Contro

Mr. LISTER. You will ruin the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Not at all. To show that the Canadian Southern is really the same as the New York Central, on referring to Poor's Manual, page 920. I find that the president of the Canada Southern is Cornelius Vanderbilt, and among the directors of the Michigan Central are Cornelius Vanderbilt, chairman, Samuel F. Barger, W. K. Vanderbilt and Chauncey M. Depew. It will be also found that the headquarters of the Michigan Central are in the Grand Central depot, and its financial office, in the offices of the New York Central. Then the directors of the New York Central are Cornelius Vanderbilt, Chauncey M. Depew, William K. Vanderbilt, Samuel F. Barger and other members of the Vanderbilt family. It is not denied in any quarter that Canada Southern is a Vanderbilt line.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does it carry passengers at 2 cents a mile?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). My amendment does not cover the Canada Southern although it should; and if I am here next session, I will introduce a Bill for that purpose. Now, if the Vanderbilts can give a 2 cent a mile rate in New York, and find it pay, as it has been found to pay, why can they not give the same rate in the province of Ontario? That is one reason why I propose to test the sense of the House on the question. I will give the House another reason, Mr. Chairman, why the Michigan Central should concede this 2 cent a mile rate. There is on the Canadian side of the Niagara River an electric service, which gives cheap accommodation to the people using the line, and the result is that the Vanderbilts have given less than a 2 cent rate on their railway line along the Niagara River, on the Canadian side, competition. to meet that they can do it in that case they do it in the case of this which is to run from Toronto to line Buffalo, and which traverses the best paying railroad section in the whole of Canada. There is still another reason why the rate on this road should be reduced. It has got a very large bonus from the city of Hamilton, and it is getting an entrance into the city of Toronto for practically nothing. will be built at a time when railroad construction is cheaper than it ever was before, and under those circumstances they can well public of all the counties, through which afford to give the people of the Niagara peninsula, from Hamilton to Buffalo a 2 cent a mile rate. The most profitable part of the Grand Trunk system is that portion running between Toronto and the Falls, and which portion of the road helps to make up the deficit caused by operating branches, carrying foreign freight. Another: reason, and a very strong reason, in favour; fairs? of the lower rate is that there is so much traffic there that they can well afford to grant it. If we pass this 2 cent a mile resolution in regard to this railway, the other railways will have to meet the competition, and follow the example by reducing their thing in the general interest of this country rates. That was illustrated in the case of when the railways quit giving special rates, the New York Central. The York New Central came to be a 2 cent a mile railroad under circumstances similar to this present There was a Bill before the legislature case. at Albany to grant certain amendments to its charter, and enabling them to take over a small road that had a 2 cent a mile proviso granted that, but they inserted this clause:

tral Railway Company, and the rate of fare for a way passengers over the track or tracks now operated by the New York Central Company, shall be 2 cents a mile and no more whatever.

They are now restricted to that rate of fare.

Mr. LISTER. What was the passenger rate before?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). It was 3 and 4 and all kinds of rates. That one amendment put in the New York Central obtained by inserting a 2 cent a mile clause, Railway Bill compelled every other road in: the state of New York to accept that rate.

Mr. CHARLTON. My hon, friend is mistaken. The New York Central is the only road in the state of New York that has a 2 cent a mile rate.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). They come close to it.

Mr. CHARLTON. No, they do not.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I beg your pardon. I have travelled over a good many of these roads and I know it. Their rate is practically 2 cents a mile in the state of New York, and it is all due to this clause.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Erie road and all the other roads are 3 cents a mile.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). They are based on the 2 cent rate of the New York Central. I say that in this rich peninsula of Niagara, where there is only one line of railway, the Grand Trunk, if we insert a 2 cent a mile clause in this Bill, we will have settled the question of railway rates in that district. This proviso will benefit the city of Toronto and the city of Hamilton, and the travelling | ed to all other roads on the continent, especi-

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would kill all the fairs, too.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). No, it won't.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, it will.

MACLEAN (York). How kill the

Because the railway Mr. McMULLEN. companies will not reduce the rate for excursions to the fairs.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). It will be a good and give a uniform and low rate throughout the whole year. The public opinion of this country is in favour of a 2 cent a mile rate. We have had petitions in favour of the principle sent to this House from every municipal council in Ontario, from the Trades and Labour Councils, from the in its charter. The legislature at Albany Farmers' Institutes, from the Grangers, and from the Patrons of Industry. That feeling But nothing in this Act shall allow any rate of a reduction in railway fares has taken place is growing throughout Canada, and wherever fare for way passengers greater than 2 cents a mile to be charged over the track or tracks of the result has been an increase in travel, an that railroad, now known as the New York Cenincrease in the profits of the company and greater convenience to the public. challenge any gentleman in this House to disprove any one of these statements. being the facts, that this House can secure for the people of this country so important a boon, it is. I say, the duty of hon, gentlemen to support my amendment and have it inserted in the Bill. I believe that if the promoters of this Bill would wire Cornelius Vanderbilt, that legislation could only be Mr. Vanderbilt would gladly wire back: I will accept it. The New York Central Company have found that their profits have increased in consequence of the 2 cent a mile rate. They run through a very great and populous country, but they have great competition. They have four lines of their own paralleled by half a dozen other roads, yet what has been the result?

> Mr. CHARLTON. Name two or three of that half dozen?

> MACLEAN (York). The Valley, the West Shore, which they have taken over, the old Erie, the road by Rome and Watertown, and others. A report says:

> The wisdom of the change is proved by the fact, that, although there are seven railroads competing, the New York Central carried nine million passengers in 1880.

> That is the result of a 2 cent a mile rate on the best paying railroad in the United States. Its stock is the highest, its credit is the best, and it has proved that this passenger rate has been a benefit to the railway, a benefit to the public, and a rate that should be extend ally those which go through quite as good a vailroad country as is the state of New York. Another reason why we should reduce railway fares in this country lies in this fact. that as the things which are most consumed by the people have been reduced in price the use of them has increased.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Reduce the tariff, and you have lower prices.

Take the sub-Mr. MACLEAN (York). ject of postage; every time postage has been reduced in this or any other country. the use of the mails has increased tenfold and the postal revenue has also increased.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Just in the same way.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). In what way?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Reduce the tariff, and you will have better times.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). That has nothing to do with it. Whenever telegraph rates or cable rates have been reduced, the people have used the lines more, and the companies have increased their profits, and afforded greater benefits to the public. There is only one thing of common consumption in this country that has not been reduced in price in the last thirty or forty years, and that is, railway passenger travel. Why should this House bar the way to the reduction of railway rates, when everything else has come down in price? Cotton goods, woollen goods, iron goods, sugar-everything the people use has come down in price, in many cases two or three hundred per cent; and yet passenger rates remain to-day where they were forty years ago. In every country in Europe where railway as I showed the House two years ago, especially in the case of Hungary, that an immense increase in passenger travel and in railway receipts and profits has followed.

Mr. LISTER. How much did you say prices were reduced-two or three hundred per cent?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Yes. in some cases.

Mr. LISTER. Then you have nothing left.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Then, I will say that prices are one-third of what they were forty years ago.

Mr. LISTER. That is 66 per cent.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I will stand corrected if the hon, gentleman will vote for a two-cent passenger rate. If the hon, gentleman will tell us about the way in which steel rails have come down in price under a tariff law, they may throw some light on the subject. The country expects this House to grant some relief in regard to passenger rates. I make this proposition in the interests of the railways themselves. railway company will receive a greater income, and earn greater profits if it gives the people cheaper travel The companies say they are the best judges of what the passenger rates should be. I dispute that. It is on record that in the fight for the reduction of railway rates in England, the objection to the cheap third-class fare came from the companies themselves. opposed the reduction in every possible way. They gave the people poor accommodation, they ran the trains at night, and at inconvenient hours; and yet to-day the parliamentary fare of a penny a mile is the popular rate in England, and it is high time that we had a similar rate in this Hon, gentlemen will find, when country. they go back to their constituents, that the people are bent on having a lower passenger rate in this country. The electric roads which are extending in every direction, are carrying passengers at such low rates that they are taking the business away from the steam railways. One would think that the railway companies would, in their own interest, adopt a two-cent rate. They do not like to be told by Parliament what they should do; they say they are themselves the best judges. But they have refused so long to give the people what they want that it is time this House came forward and compelled the New York Central, or the Vanderbilt interest, when we are giving them the concession they are now asking for, to do as much for the people of Ontario as they now do for the people of New York state. I beg, therefore, to move that the following clause be inserted in the Bill :-

But nothing in this Act contained, or in the fares have been reduced, the result has been. Railway Act or amendments thereof, shall allow any rate of fare for way passengers greater than 2 cents a mile to be charged or taken over the track or tracks of said Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.

> Mr. TISDALE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to Rule 67 in relation to Private Bills:

> No important amendment may be proposed to any private Bill, in a Committee of the Whole House, or at the third reading of the Bill, unless one day's notice of the same shall have been given.

> I raise the point of order, because I certainly do not agree with the hon, gentleman at all that this is a proper time to discuss a matter of such importance.

> Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me rather unusual to raise a question of this kind in order to defeat this amendment. There is no doubt of the power of the House to introduce the amendment here. It is equally clear that if the hon. gentleman insists on the rule, he may delay the Bill a little longer, and he will be as likely to defeat the Bill as to defeat the amendment. I do not think it is fair to the House or to the hon. member for East York for the hon. member for South Norfolk to take this means to kill the amendment. I have no doubt that he speaks in the interest of the railways. It is part of his life-work to be connected with railway corporations, and, perhaps he knows more about railways than many other members of this House; but the members of this House know what is the interest of the people as well as the hon. gentleman knows what is the interest of the railway corporations. If any Bill has been before this House for years, in which the principle of this amendment should be introduced, I think it is the Bill under consideration, because, as the hon, member for East York has said, this line will be part and parcel of the Vanderbilt system—

Mr. TISDALE. I beg to interrupt the hon, gentleman, and to appeal to you, Mr. Chairman. He is not discussing the point of order. That must be disposed of first. I wish to have it ruled upon now.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no doubt, if the question of order is raised, that this amendment cannot be received without notice. Therefore, it is out of order to discuss this amendment now.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Two years ago, I brought up a similar motion in amendment to the Midland Railway Bill, and it was fully discussed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Two years ago the question of order was not raised, and that is why the amendment was received.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Then I have ccrtain other questions to discuss in connection with this Bill which will compel me to here a petition from several parties, which talk until the hour is up, and in that way we will get a discussion of this question. I would advise hon, gentlemen not to raise the rule in this case, but to allow this question to be discussed here to-night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am obliged eth: to follow the rule.

Mr. TISDALE. I am not in the habit of raising a question of order unless I feel it my duty to do so. The importance of this question is such that it should be discussed on a main motion, as it was when the hon. gentleman brought it up two years ago. I am surprised that the hon, gentleman, ir the course of legislation on private Bills, should raise these points so as to prevent our getting through. He had plenty of time to raise these points by a motion. He could have brought them up in committee if he wished. I was careful not to object so as to give him every opportunity of placing his views on record, and I only rose to the point of order when he was through.

Mr. SPROULE. In answer to the hon.

an amendment of this kind at this particular stage in a Bill. The hon, gentleman seems to think that is surprising.

The second secon

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have decided that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not attempting to discuss the amendment, but the right to bring in any amendment to a Bill.

Mr. FRASER. As that matter is disposed of, I have another amendment, to which the same objection cannot apply, because it does not affect the main part of the I have here a petition which I wish to read to the House; but before doing so. I wish to read the amendment which I intend proposing as clause 10 of the Bill. It is as follows:-

Before this Act shall become operative, the company shall pay all outstanding accounts for labour performed on the railway and other works of the company, and also for material supplied to or for the use of the said company, the amounts and the accounts for labour and material to be ascertained by the mayor of the city of Hamilton, and, when the said mayor shall certify to the Minister of Railways that all just claims as aforesaid shall have been paid, this Act shall become law.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I raise the same point of order with reference to that amendment. This Bill has been before the House for the last two months, and I have never heard anything about that until this moment. I do not think it is fair to spring these things on now.

Mr. FRASER. The hon, gentleman cannot raise his point of order until I have made my statement, and moved the amendment, which I have not done yet. I have reads as follows:-

To the Honourable the Minister of Railways and the Railway Committee of the Privy Council of the Dominion of Canada:

The petition of the undersigned humbly show-

- 1. That your petitioners were employed in the work of construction of the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway beween Brantford and Hamilten ;
- 2. That the construction of said portion of said railway was intrusted by the said railway company to a firm of the name of Bracey Brothers, the members of which firm were, as your petitioners believe, all residents in the United States or elsewhere out of Canada;

3. That, when the work on said railway, which had been intrusted to said Bracey Brothers was about completed, the said Bracey Brothers made an assignment, and, as your petitioners believe, the members of said firm of contractors left Canada, and are now in the United States;

4. That your petitioners are creditors of the said Bracey Brothers, or the said railway company, for work done in the construction of said railway to the amount set opposite their respective names, and that your petitioners are informed Mr. SPROULE. In answer to the hon. and believe, that the claims filed with the trustee member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), I do not see anything extraordinary in introducing respect of said work done and material supplied over $60,000, all of which claims have been due and owing since the month of February last, or before that date:

5. That the said railway company were voted a large bonus by the city of Hamilton, and that one of the main inducements offered to the ratepayers to support the by-law for said bonus was, that the amount of the bonus, and a much larger sum. would be expended in paying for labour in the construction of said railway in and about the city of Hamilton;

Your petitioners, therefore, pray, That your Committee impose upon the said railway company as a condition of any privileges or rights that may be granted by your committee to the said railway company, that due provision be made by the said railway company for the speedy payment of the debts now owing to your petitioners and others for labour done and materials supplied in the construction of said railway.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

This is a very important matter. The people of Hamilton were induced to vote a bonus of $225,000 to this company on the understanding that they would get back their money through the employment of labour by the company in and round the city of Hamilton. It appears now, however, that not only will the people of Hamton have to pay this $225,000, but will lose the wages as well. Consequently, I think a condition should be imposed upon this company by which they would be compelled to do something towards arranging all these bills. I understand that the parties to whom the $60,000 are due comprise quite a large number, only a few of whom, representing $2,500 to $3,000 have signed this petition; but I maintain that when any railway company has received a bonus, this company ought to see that no men are employed doing any work in connection with it without getting paid their wages. city would certainly never have given this bonus if they thought for one moment that the labour and material supplied the company would not be paid for. The hon, member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) has a Bill which I will gladly support. We have been legislating in the interests of the speculators, and it is high time we should come down to the common sense principle, and legislate for the protection of labour. may be said that the reputation of this firm of contractors was good; but my contention is that when that bonus was voted, the railway company themselves should have employed the labour, or if they gave out contracts, they should have compelled in the construction of said railway amount to the contractors to give security to meet the wages as they fell due.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was a subsidy granted to this road by this Parliament?

Mr. FRASER. I am not sure about that. The city of Hamilton gave a subsidy of $255,000.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the amount owing for wages?

Mr. FRASER. The amount is $60,000.

Mr. MULOCK. For the workingmen.

Mr. FRASER. Yes; that amount has been owing ever since. And a large number of these men are feeling it very much. There are farmers and others who have worked upon that road and have not been paid a dollar since that time, and they feel the pinch. The company is given the benefit of their work. It will not do for them to say: We gave the contract to Bracey Bros., and if a man works for Bracey Bros., he knew what he was doing. You could get labourers every time and avoid paying them by throwing responsibilities from one to the other in that way. This company are bound to see that the men were paid, and if they made it possible for Bracey Bros. to leave the country without paying the men, then any further advantages granted to them by the legislature should be granted upon the conditions I shall name. My hon, friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) spoke about the two-cent rate, and I am in sympathy with him so far as that is concerned. One of the ways of providing that there shall not be a repetition of these large debts to workingmen is for this Parliament to step in and say: If there is a large amount due the labouring-men, you must pay it before you come to Parliament to ask for further franchises. If you are desirous of certain advantages by legislation, it must be a condition precedent that your hands shall be clean. Parliament will then be doing what is strictly just and of advantage to that which creates all wealth—the labour of the country. It is said that these men went into the employment of Bracey Bros. with their eyes open, and why did they not make inquiry before they took the risk? Must a man who comes with his pick and shovel to get employment be a subscriber to Bradstreet or Dun. Wiman's, and get a report as to the financial standing of a man in such a case as this before he asks for employment? The man who presents himself with his pick and shovel and his two hands willing for work ought to be able to feel that when he strikes an honest blow he shall get his pay for it. It will be seen that $60,000 is a very important matter to these men. It is not an important matter for this Parliament, for we are accustomed to deal in large sums, but to the men who depend upon this money for the support of wife and family, it is a most momentous committee do now rise, report progress and An assignment has been made, and it ask leave to sit again.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Before this motion is carried, I wish to say a few words in regard to this matter. The railway spoken of runs through the constituency I represent. from the city of Hamilton to the city of Brantford. This company presented a by-law in the city of Hamilton three years the benefit of the labour expended in conago and obtained a bonus, but they did not go on with their work, and the by-law expired. Next year they presented a by-law for a large amount of money. The by-law was carried, but they did not go on with their work, and that by-law also expired. Last fall they presented a by-law for the passage of this Bill, which is very satis-$225,000, and it is said they spent a large factory to all parties concerned. But I would amount of money in the city of Hamilton in order to carry that by-law. Afterwards in order to carry that by-law. Afterwards with the amendment moved by the hon. the railway proceeded with the construction member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser). All he of the road from the city of Hamilton to the has said about the workingmen and others city of Brantford. They let the contract to being deprived of their pay is true: the a construction company which, I believe, is facts are well known to everybody in Hamcomposed largely of Americans.

Mr. FRASER. Altogether.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Not altogether, I believe, but largely. Afterwards they let the their pay, and it is said that by the time contract to Bracey Bros., who were entirely things are settled with the assignee, it is American. These men came over with their not likely anything will be left for these foremen. They sub-let the construction of men. If a law of this kind had exboarded the men who worked in the construction of this railway; they owed the labourers who constructed the railway, and they owed the flour and feed stores that supplied the feed for the horses working on construction. The whole affair from beginning to end was a complete Yankee swindle. These Americans came over to swindle the people of this country, and they have succeeded in doing it. They got their rail-way built and they have not paid for it, and now they expect legislation from this House. I say it will be very unfair to pass this be accepted by the House.

They would see it to be in their own interest to let out their sub-contracts to responsible men, men who are able to fulfil them and pay the labourers. I believe the amendment, if adopted, is calculated to do a great deal of good; and I also hope that the Bill of the hon. member for Glengarry will

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). From my personal knowledge of the circumstances in the locality, I feel that the time has come when we should adopt some legislation to prevent the difficulties that we have locally experienced in this matter. I have a strong sympathy with the Bill that my hon, friend from Glengarry has before the House, with the object of putting into the general Rail-way Act a provision that will prevent this sort of thing in future. On this occasion, as my hon, friend from Hamilton (Mr. McKay) says, the special difficulties are just these: We all know that last winter when the circumstances of the workingmen were rather dark, this company, for the third time, succeeded in securing from the city of Hamilton a large bonus, chiefly by the votes of those men who were promised employment and a winter's work when the outlook was rather dreary. Now, while I have no wish to put the least obstacle in the way of carrying out this scheme, I think it is too bad that the money should be taken out of the locality, and that the benefit should be reaped by speculators who are largely outside of this country, and that they should quietly walk off and leave the burden to fall upon the workingmen in the neighbourhood. There was very little of that labour actually performed by the Bracey Bros. They stood around and frittered away the two best winter months we have had for a long time for accomplishing that kind of labour, and when we got past the middle of the winter, and into the severe period, then everybody was set to work, and the work was pushed on under unfavourable circumstances, and at a serious disadvantage. In my own town, and I happen to live in the centre of the district, the workingmen came in from round about with their bi-monthly pay-lists certified by the pay bosses, and no money being available from the contractors, they negotiated these as well as they could. The result has been that the local grecers in that town, and the small business men who have no margin to fall back on, took these pay-sheets in good faith, expecting to wait awhile for their pay, but expecting ultimately to receive their money. Many of the farmers along the way furnished labour, and, as my hon, friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) remarked, living far away in the country, they boarded the labourers, and boarded the teams, and nearly every farmer has some bill for the accommodation of these men. The contractors have succeeded in distributing the cost of the construction of this railway over almost everybody that dwells in the vicinity of the line within two or three miles of it. I say it is grossly unfair that that sort of thing should be allowed to go on any longer. We are not isolated in this matter. The same question came up this afternoon in regard to a railway in Nova Scotia, and I think it is time some action was taken to put a stop

Mr. COATSWORTH. This Bill has been before the House for two months. Now, I do not want to say anything opposed to the interests of the workingmen, because I think I appreciate those as much as any member of this House. I think this Bill was on the Order paper in committee six or seven times and it is a very strange thing that, after it was fully discussed in the committee, we find this new-born zeal on the part of some hon, members to-night.

Mr. FRASER. I only got the papers Saturday morning, and I immediately went before the Railway Committee to ascertain if they would make some change; so that my new-born zeal is cotemporaneous with the reception of the papers.

Mr. COATSWORTH. What I say is that the matter has been before the Railway Committee, I think, on six occasions, and not a word has ever been said about this matter before. The Bill was very fully discussed last week. It took up nearly the whole of the time of one meeting of the committee, and this matter was not brought up at all. There has been no notice given of it, but it is spring upon us when the Bill is in committee of the House. I think it is unfair to the company. We do not know anything about the names of these particular men who have signed the petition. As one hon, gentleman says, they may be persons who have been speculating in these pay orders; and while I am as fully prepared as any momber of the House to support the interests of the workingmen, I question very much whether we ought to support the interests of those who have been speculating in these pay orders. think it would be a very doubtful policy for us to adopt. With regard to the payment of the men, I understand that the question of the right of the company to hold that money for the purpose of paying those men, is now in litigation. As has been stated to the committee, the company do not employ the men. The company let their work to contractors, and the contractors employ these The company have retained from the contractors a certain sum of money for the purpose of paying these men, the contractors have sued them for the money, the matter is now pending in court, and until it is decided whether the company have a right to pay the workingmen out of this money due the contractors, I do not think this House ought to legislate against the company, and hamper their action with a provision of this kind, compelling them, in advance, to pay the contractors and pay the workingmen as well. I take that point in the interest of the company, and I think that hen, gentlemen ought not, at this stage, endeavour to block the Bill by such a motion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am rather surprised at the line of argument adopted by the hon, gentleman who is promoting this Rill, that because the parties have not been informed that such a Bill was before the House or the railway committee, and because they have not been able to make known their complaints, therefore, the House ought to take no cognizance of it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is not my argument at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) I do not say it was a serious argument, but the hon, gentleman made those observations. He went further, and said that the promoters of this Bill ought not to be made liable for the Well, Sir, we debts of the sub-contractors. have in the province of Ontario a statute which gives builders a lien upon the property upon which their labour or their material have been expended. Now, it seems to me that that Bill is founded on equitable principles and equitable considerations, and I do not know why that rule should not apply to a railway corporation. if it is their bounden duty, as the promoter puts it, to see that those who expended their time and their labour on the work from which they are to derive advantage, should be paid by those to whom they have let the contract for the performance of this work. It is their bounden duty to see that those who spend their time and labour on the work from which advantage is derived by the company, are paid by those to whom the contract is let. If we undertake to put men of straw who do not reside in the country and have no property in the country forward as sub-contractors, it is their business as a neitter of due diligence to see that those who have done the work have been paid for it, or if not paid, that the money is not handed over to the contractors. That seems to me to be a principle of simple justice. and before the company are allowed to avail themselves of the labour of those men who work upon the road they ought to be made to give compensation for it. It is better that they should pay twice than that the parties who expended their labour on the work, and who have nothing else to subsist upon. should remain unpaid.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon, member for Pothwell (Mr. Mills) appears not to have remembered the measures that have been passed, or does not remember the legislation that has been enacted during recent years. Such an amendment as is now suggested was passed in regard to the Hereford Railway. I think. The Bill was not allowed to pass the House until a provision was adopted under which the new company was obliged to pay for the labour that went into the road.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In what year was that Bill passed?

Mr. SPROULE. I forget the year; I think it was about 1882.

Mr. MULOCK. There is also the case of the Baie de Chaleur Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. And there is the case of the North-west Central. In that case we made provision for the payment of $50,000. Parliament would not allow the new company's Bill to pass until a clause was introduced to ensure payments of labourers claims for wages. On this occasion no new principle is being advanced and no new precedent established. It seems strange that men who put their labour into a road, especially when the road has been acquired by men who are rated at a hundred millions of dollars, should not be paid, and that this Parliament should stand in the way by members raising objections and points of order with respect to this Bill. I do not think this is a good or well-founded point to take against the proposition. I have had other claims handed to me which I would like to speak of did time permit. The hon, member for Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) said it was strange that this matter did not come before the committee. As the hon, member for Guysboro' said, it was not brought to the notice of the members of the committee until after the Bill was passed. Serious objections were taken to the Bill, and as passed, exceptional powers were given as compared with the powers given to any other corporation during the seventeen years I have been a member of the House. Is it to be wondered that we should have a discussion on the merits of the Bill, so that the country would know in what direction legislation is tending? It does not become an hon, member to raise objection for the purpose of preventing free and full discussion of every clause before the committee. I hope other questions that will be raised will be discussed, no matter how many objections may be taken, in order that justice may be done to poor people who are unable to fight their own battles and enforce their own claims. It was well said by an eminent man that no satisfaction can be obtained from railway companies. Why? It is because they are great corporations having immense wealth at their back, and in this respect they exercise greater influence than private individuals. Railway corporations have no bodies to kick and no souls to save. The best course to adopt is to check them in Parliament, and impose on them the same restrictions imposed on other companies when they apply for charters or for amendments to charters, and compel them to pay what is justly due to the labouring men who have been employed on the work.

Committee rose and reported progress.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SALARY.

Mr. MULOCK moved second reading Bill (No. 4) to reduce the salary of the Governor General. He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this Bill it is right I should say at the very threshold that it is presented in no sense from a feeling of hostility to the Governor's General who have preceded the present incumbent, or His Excellency, or the office itself. Quite the contrary. It appears to me that all who favour maintaining this office, this connection between the mother country and ourselves, should at all times be astute to prevent abuses cropping up and attaching themselves to the office. If the office becomes too expensive, or for other reasons becomes unpopular, other reasons wholly foreign to the office itself, or which ought to be, in time that popularity will extend to the system. Therefore, I trust that whether my proposition may commend itself to the judgment of my fellow-members or not, they will at least at once recognize that this motion is in no sense intended to reflect on any incumbent of the office or to lower the position of the office in the public mind, but that it is purely and simply in the interest of economy, and I believe in the interest of the office itself. I should also say, Mr. Speaker, that I have not been prompted to bring this Bill in at this time because of any extraordinary expenditure in connection with that office of recent years. Year after year in passing the Estimates we have been compelled to vote large sums of money for His! Excellency, the incumbent for the time being of this high office, that were in no sense part of the engagements of the country at the time of the appointment, but which by long practice have come to be regarded as part of the official salary. I introduced this subject some years ago when in Committee of Supply, on motions to grant special bonuses or sums for the maintenance of certain branches of expenditure in connection with the office of the Governor General, but which were in no sense binding on the country, forming no part of the compact between Canada and Great Britain, no part of the Confederation Act, but simply voted year by year as the perpetuation of abuses; and in 1893 the House caused a return to be laid on the Table showing how much had been expended on the office in certain ways since confederation. Those figures, which are official, are set forth in the preamble of the Bill. Hon. gentlemen will, therefore, distinguish between the fixed salary, which is referred to in the Confederation Act, and other expenditures which are wholly voluntary on the part of Parliament and are therefore in no sense part of the Act. But, first of all, what was the language of the Confederation Act which fixed any sum to represent the salary of the Governor General. Section 105 of that Act contains all there is upon the subject in any statute Imperial or Dominion. This section reads as follows:-

Unless altered by the Parliament of Canada, the salary of the Governor General shall be £10,-000 sterling, payable out of the Consolidated Fund of Canada.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that this amount was not placed in the Act of Confederation as an unalterable sum. It is not a figure that requires to be changed by appeal to the Imperial legislature, the foundation head of all our legislative powers. It was simply placed in the Confederation Act that we might start as a growing concern with a salary attached to the incumbent for the time being, but to be changed as the will of the people of Canada, from time to time, deemed wise. The very fact that the Act of Confederation contemplated a change, is an invitation to the representatives of the people to consider the situation, and if they deem it advisable to make a change. Therefore, Sir, I am strictly in harmony with this statutory invitation, in inviting the attention of Parliament to the salary attaching to this office, and in asking Parliament whether or not the time has arrived when we should exercise the power vested in us by this Act, and make the alteration which the Imperial Parliament said we might make. Now, Mr. Speaker, it would be worth while, just for one moment to look at the figures which have been laid upon the Table of the House, in response to an Order, showing the total expenditure for a quarter of a century, beginning with Confederation, and continuing down to the year 1892. not got the figures for the last few years. During the 25 years from Confederation down to 1892, we have paid for the salaries of the Governors General, $1,216,666.05, and for travelling expenses. $145,903.45. This for travelling expenses, $145,903.45. last item is a pure voluntary gift by Parliament, not being part of any statutory sum payable to His Excellency. Then follow two other items, salaries of His Excellencies' secretaries, $270.350.14; contingencies of the Governors General's secretarys' office, $217,426.60. With regard to these two items of nearly half a million dollars, of course, it is debatable whether they should or should not properly be considered in this general question. I do not know, how far these salaries might be considered as of abnormal or unnecessary growth, not being behind the scenes myself; but for the purpose of argument, I group them as part of the general expenditure. Then there is an item for rental amounting to $7,854. That was for rental before we had equipped Rideau Hall. There was the purchase-money for Rideau Hall, amounting to $82, 000. I invite the attention of hon, gentlemen to this interesting item, namely, that on a property which we bought at a total cost of $82,000 which was for whatever buildings there was upon it, and the land, there has been expended no less a sum than $547,143.45 for alterations, additions, repairs, and maintenance. The average expenditure under that one item for a period of twenty-five years, amounts to over $20, 000 a year. We have further spent during that period, a sum of $108,853.01 upon furniture for Rideau Hall. $94,349.86 for wages, and $151,371.10 for aid in that I am afraid I am under the fuel and light. In all, we have spent the mark—the result is that if our population sum of $2,851.917.76, or an average yearly were equal to that of the United States, it expenditure of $114,076.70, being an aver-would cost us, on the present scale of payage yearly expenditure of $65,410.04 in ex-ment, $1,436,000 to pay the salaries of our tioned in the Confederation Act. If we ernors, against $259,000 for the salaries of deduct from that excess of $65,000 odd, the the corresponding officers in the United total annual average expenditure for Gov- States. In other words, testing this expenernor General's secretaries, and contingendrure on the basis of population, we are cies connected with the office, we still leave paying our Governor General and our Lieuthat excess averaging about $45.000 a year. terant-Governors six times as much as is Now, taking the averages of these items for paid in the United States. Now, take an inthe twenty-five years, I find that whilst dividual case. The state of New York, with they varied in different years, the average a population of six and a half millions, pays is about as follows:-We have disbursed, during twenty-five years, for Governor General's travelling expenses, a yearly average of $5.836. We have disbursed annually during that twenty-five years, an average of no less than $21.785 a year for additions repairs, and maintenance of Rideau Hall. During that same period, we have paid out annually an average sum of $4.754 for furniture for Rideau Hall. During that same period, we have disbursed, annually, no less a sum, on an average, than $3,773 for wages on gardens and grounds, and during that same period of twenty-five years we have disbursed annually an average sum of $6,148 for fuel and light, sums voted to His Excellency. Now. Sir, these are sums very large in themselves, and I submit that they are quite beyond the resources of the people of Canada. On this point it might be instructive to make a comparison, and in seeking for comparisons, I think the paying capacity of the people will be a good criterion. Taking the population of Canada as a good test of its resources, and applying the same rule in regard to our neighbours to the south, I the corresponding heads of departments in would ask the indulgence of the House for a moment while I compare, on the basis of population, the expenditure of the people of Canada, and the expenditure of the peo-ple of the United States for the maintenance of gubernatorial institutions. In Canada we disburse, annually, for salary to His Excellency, $48,666.66; in salaries to Lieutenant-Governors, $71,000; or a total of $113,666.66 for a population under five millions. In this sum of $119,000 l have included nothing whatever for expenses outside of the statutory salaries. I have omitted these because I am not furnished with accurate figures as to the corresponding expenses in the United States. Taking, therefere, only the statutory salaries for the corresponding offices in the United States, I find that the salary of the President is $50,000. that of the Vice-President $8,000, and the salaries of all the governors of all the states and territories together $201,600, or a total charge on the people of the United States of $259,600 for the salaries of the President, the Vice-President and all the governors in the union, as against $119,000 in Canada.

We have spent be one-twelfth that of the United Statescess of the annual salary of $48,866.66 men- Governor General and our Lieutenant-Govthe governor a salary of $10,000, with a residence, whereas Canada, with our population of under five millions, pays nearly $50,000. Nor is that an isolated case. I have in my hand a schedule, which I have taken from the World's Almanac, of 1895, page 353-and I have no doubt the figures are accurate-showing that the state of Pennsylvania, with a population of 5,258,000, about half a million more than that of Canada, only pays $10,000 a year to its governor. It looks to me as if the whole scheme of Government in Canada, as represented by costly Governors General, Lieutenant-Governors and Cabinet Ministers, were founded upon too liberal a scale. For example, in the United States Government there are but eight heads of departments, each of whom is paid a salary of $8,000 a year, or a total of $64,000. In Canada, we have Ministers and departments galore—eleven Ministers drawing $8,000 a year each, one drawing $9,000. and three Controllers, together drawing $18,000; in other words, the executive heads of our Government cost us $115,000 a year, as against $64,000 a year, payable to the United States. In other words, we are paying about 80 per cent more in the way of salaries to the members of our Government than are paid to the members of the United States Government. I mention that as a further illustration of the extravagant scale upon which our Government was formed. I shall be told, no doubt, that on a former occasion the Parliament of Canada passed a Bill reducing the salary of the Governor General to $35,000 a year, and that the Bill was disallowed by the Imperial authorities; and, I suppose, it will be argued that there is no reason to hope for better success should Parliament now repeat, in an aggravated form, as my opponent's might say, the proposition it made before. true that in 1868 the Imperial authorities did see fit to disallow that Bill; but what they did in 1868, when confederation had only been a year or so in existence, is no test of what they ought to do after confederation has been in existence for over a quarter of a century. They had a right to suppose in 1868 that this country would expand in wealth and population to such a In other words, assuming our population to degree as perhaps to enable us to pay these expenses without feeling them. Therefore, I given occasion for any movement in this assume that the liberal scale of remuneration adopted at the commencement was adopted under a mistaken idea, and perhaps with a more hopeful expectation as to the growth of our country than has been realized. But whatever may have been the reason, the fact stares us in the face that this original salary of $48,000 is only about half of what the office costs us now. So that my proposition may be dealt with in two ways. Even if some hon, gentlemen insist on maintaining the salary at the figure fixed in the Confederation Act, they cannot justify the expenditures which have grown up and become attached to the office within the last twentyfive years. It is not intended by the Bill that the change shall take effect until a new Governor General is appointed. I began I began this movement during the regime of Lord Derby, but I was not able to press the as being to-day in command of the treasury, measure to a successful issue during his regime. I introduced it again last year, and sponsible unless the House insists upon re-I have introduced it again this year in the form in this matter. hope that it will become law in time to apply to the successor of His Excellency. Now, it is argued that this high salary and these perquisites are necessary in order to secure to Canada the very best men the Empire can afford to send us. I admit that the salary in itself is some attraction; but I larly referred to and which are pointed out believe that the high position of Governor General of Canada is an attraction in itself, this measure to the House, hoping that even and the man who would only come for the if my figures in the direction of economy salary would not be the kind of a man that Canada would be specially anxious to have. I think that the men who have filled this high office would feel that it was a reflection upon them to be told that this salary and these perquisites were the only things that economy without at the same time in impair-had brought them here. The expenses of our Government have grown beyond what is reasonable; and if we are going to apply the pruning-knife, we must begin at which at the top. The Government must set the example, every one who is in possession of power must set the example. that we may bring back the expenditure to reasonable and moderate limits. can justify the expenditure of our country to-day? It cannot be justified by wealth of the country. There is nothing to warrant this enormous expenditure of nearly $38.000,000, except the fact—that we—are: burdened down with debt and with officeholders great and small. In making that modic economy. I do not think the hon. remark, I speak with all respect of His Excellency, who has endeared himself to the people of Canada. My remarks are wholly impersonal. They have no reference to him look to previous sessions, we cannot but or to any of his predecessors; but inasmuch conclude that when, at Confederation, the as I happen to be speaking during his regime, I would more particularly desire to be under-direction. The reason for that exists independent of his administration. Nor would I be doing fairly by the subject if I were to suggest that the expenditure has grown to its present proportions under the present administration. Taking the returns that I have covering a quarter of a century, giving the figures during the Reform regime as well as the Conservatives regimes, there is nothing in the direction of economy particularly on this score particularly to the credit of the Reform administration of 1874 to 1878. So that my criticism is wholly also without reference to any particular Government. I am not blaming now any Government in connection with this matter. The fact is, this Government has so many sins to answer for, that I need not add this to the others, if it were one. I only hold them responsible and I hold the whole House equally re-I will not trespass longer on the attention of the House, but will conclude by saying that I believe he will best serve the people of Canada and best promote the maintenance of the system today, who will aid at all times in lopping off abuses, including those I have particuin the Bill. Mr. DALY. I admit that there is nothing in the hon, gentleman's remarks of a personal nature, nor do I suppose that this Bill is intended by him to reflect in any way upon the present incumbent of the high office of Governor General nor upon any of his predecessors. The hon gentleman said he was not speaking of any government. He said that the Reform Government which was in power from 1874 to 1878 was equally extravagant as the succeeding governments. But I must say that while I believe the hon. gentleman had no desire to say anything the personal against the holder of the office or to blame any government, he is looking for some cheap popularity among a class of people known as the Patrons, or others, who are suffering at present from a fit of spasgentleman has the slightest expectation of carrying the Bill nor had he such expectation when he placed it on the paper. That the House will, on Friday next, go into Committee of the Whole to consider a resolution declaring it expedient to alter the provisions made in the 105th section of the British North America Act, 1867, and to fix the salary of the Governor General at $35,000 per annum.

(Cepy-Canada,-No. 167.)

My Lord,—I have the honour to acknowledge your despatch No. 85, of the 23rd May, transmitting a Bill passed by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, "to fix the salary of the Governor General," which Bill you have reserved for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure.

I need searcely say that it is with rejuctance, and only on serious occasions that the Queen's Government can advise Her Majesty to withhold the Royal Sanction from a Bill which has passed two branches of the Canadian Parliament. The present, however, is a measure which has important bearings, far beyond its first aspect as a mere reduction of expenditure.

The annual salary of the Governor General was fixed at £10,000 so lately as last year by the Imperial Act of Union: within the first few months of the existence of the new Parliament of Canada, it is proposed to reduce that salary to £6,500.

I fear that the effect of such reduction, if assented to, must be prejudicial to the interests of The Governor's salary for the Colony Canada. of Victoria is £10.000 per annum; there are several colonies in which it is £7,000, in Canada the amount contemplated by the Bill under consideration is £6,500. Instead of being, as it ought to be, an object of the highest ambition, the office of the Governor General is by this proposal placed, as far as salary is a standard of recognition, in the third class among colonial govern-The effect would be not merely to rements. strict Her Majesty's Ministers in the choice of Governors General to those who may follow the career of colonial governors as a profession, but further to confine the choice even amongst those to gentlemen who are still rising and who would have to look to other places than Canada as offering the highest reward for approved abilities and success.

But the Governor General is the representative of the Queen and the highest authority in a Dominion vast in extent, occupied by several millions of people, comprising within itself various provinces recently brought together, which can only be knit into a mature and lasting whole by wise and conciliatory administration. Nor is the position insulated. The Governor General is continually called upon to act on questions affecting international relations with the United States. The person who discharges such exalted functions ought to possess not only sound judgment and wide experience, but also an established public reputation. He should be qualified both to exreputation. ercise a moderating influence among the different provinces composing the union, and also to bear weight in his relations with the British Minister at Washington, and with the authorities of the great neighbouring republic.

I am sure that the Queen's advisers in this country would at all times wish to obtain for Canada a Governor General so qualified, but they could not invite his services if the income of his office is insufficient to meet the demands on his resources, and to uphold in a becoming manner the dignity of the Queen's Representative in Canada.

For these reasons Her Majesty's Government have felt it their duty to advise Her Majesty not to pass into law, by giving the Royal Assent, the Bill reserved for Her Majesty's pleasure for the reduction of the Governor General's salary.

I have. &c.,

(Signed.) BUCKINGHAM & CHANDOS,

Governor the Right Honourable Viscount Monck, &c., &c.

Now, Sir, from that it would appear that the Governor General, in sending that home, acted upon the advice of Earl Grey to a previous Governor General of old Canada; and the Bill was considered as it was in this instance by Her Majesty's Government and the assent was withheld. And I have no doubt that if this House should pass legislation to-day similar to that that was passed in 1868 it would meet with The hon, gentleman the same fate. gave as one reason why his Bill should become law and the salary of the Governor General should be reduced that at the time this Act of union was passed and the salary of the Governor General was fixed, it was supposed that Canada would develop in a large ratio and that the gentleman holding the high office of Governor General would be entitled to the salary fixed. I think I can easily meet that argument by saying that this country has largely and materially increased since 1868. Not only has it increased in the development of its resources and in its wealth, but its boundaries have been extended. At the time the salary was fixed, we had not taken into Confederation Prince Edward Island or British Columbia, nor had we acquired Manitoba and North-west Territories. When the sum of $50,000 was fixed as the salary Governor General it was considered only a fair salary for a man who was to be Governor General of a country including the old provinces of Canada and the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, surely it cannot now be considered more than a fair salary for the man who has to govern a Dominion stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I agree with the hon, gentleman in saying that it is not supposed that the salary attracts the gentleman who is appointed here, but it is only right that he should have a salary in accordance with the responsibilities and exinto the expenditure that has been made upon the Governor General's position. He first gives the salary, and then the travelling expenses and contingencies and the rentals and the cost of Rideau Hall and all that sort of thing from Confederation up to the present time. That has nothing whatever to do with the salary of the Governor General. That salary was fixed by section 105 of the British North America Act. and the fact that Canada paid $$2,000 for Rideau Hall, and, in addition. $547.143 for repairs and so on, is no argument why we should reduce the salary of His Excellency Governor General. Ιt may be well, in view of the fact that the home Government took the action they did in 1868 to refer to what was the opinion of the then leader of the Government, Sir John Macdonald. I find in Mr. Pope's life of Sir John Macdonald, Vol. II., page 15, the following :-

Sir John subsequently expressed himself on the subject thus: "The only matter that went wrong during the whole session was a measure to reduce the salary of the Governor General from £10,660 sterling to $32,000. The Government opposed this with all their might, but there was a regular stampede of friends and foes in favour of the reduction, and no arguments could avail. It unluckily so happened that the Governor's salary was the only point in the Union Act that could well be objected to. Most of the young members had pledged themselves to vote for a reduction and they carried, out their pledges. There is a great cry for retrenchment just now, which originated principally in the maritime provinces. They were unaccustomed to our scale of salaries, and Cana- ton was definitely decided upon, raised the quesdian extravagance has been made a matter of tion of the appointment of colonial Governors. daily discussion in the newspapers.'

Speaking of Lord Monck, he goes on to say:

With all this, I regret much that Lord Monck is going away. He has managed the relations between Canada and the United States ever since he has been Governor, and during all the American war with infinite discretion. The slightest mistake on our frontier might have created a war, in the excited state of feelings that existed in the United States. I think that Lord Monck feels the passage of the Bill a good deal, not that it is of any pecuniary consequence to him, but because the House refused to postpone the reduction during his incumbency, and made it commence from the 1st of July. The Bill has, of course, been reserved for the royal assent. Lord Monck has no option inasmuch as Lord Elgin, in 1851, received posi-tive instructions from Earl Grey, when Colonial Minister, to reserve any Bill affecting the Governor's salary, and those instructions have never been revoked.

Now, to show the importance and the necessity of having a first class man here as Governor General, it is well to bear in mind what Sir John Macdonald says in the words I have quoted, about the way Lord Monck managed the relations between Canada and the United States in those try-penses attendant upon his office. In the pre- of our having in Canada at all times a first amble of the hon, gentleman's Bill, he goes class man, a man of reputation, a man of education, and a man of weight and of large experience in matters of statesmanship. And then, further, it may be remembered that at the time of the reduction of this salary in 1868 it was contemplated that Lord Mayo should become Governor General of this country: but upon it being made known to His Lordship that the House of Commons had passed this resolution reducing the salary, he declined to become Governor General of Canada, and subsequently became Viceroy of India; and it put the then Government of England to a considerable amount of trouble to get a man who would accept the place in view of the action that Parliament had taken. fortunately, Sir John Young, afterwards Lord Lisgar, was at that time in England, and he was prevailed upon to accept the position, and, as we know, filled it very acceptably afterwards. Now, further in reference to what were the views of Sir John Macdonald upon the office of the Governor General, as affecting the relationship between Great Britain and this country, I quote the following from Mr. Pope's work, Vol. II., page 242 :--

> The office of Governor General-the outward and visible sign of British connection-was, in Sir John Macdonald's opinion, an institution of the highest importance, and one that could not be safeguarded with too great care. When, in 1888, the action of the Queensland Government, in attempting to obtain from the Imperial authorities a promise that the men of the proposed new Government or Governor of that colony should be submitted to them before the selec-Sir John, being invited to express his opinion caused Her Majesty's Government to be informed by telegraph that the "Canadian Government consider the present system of appointing the Governor General perfectly satisfactory, and would greatly regret any change. Reference to Government here for nomination or approvai would introduce a disturbing element, and might eventually lead to the election of a Governor, a change to be deplored."

Further Mr. Pope says:

The present manner of appointment, directly by the Crown, gives to the colonies an executive head entirely unconnected with local par-ties, and for that reason qualified to hold the balance between them. If the Governor General dees anything unconstitutional, an appeal always lies from him to Her Majesty's Government, whose servant he is. The cost to Canada of the maintenance of the office Sir John considered as rioney well spent, and he deprecated the attempts made in Parliament from time to time to investi gate too closely the expenditure under that head. I recollect, when some voluntary economy on the part of a former occupant of Rideau Hall was announced. Sir John's remark that "though well meant, it was a mistake, for," said he, "the people of Canada like to see the dignity of the office fully maintained."

That being the view of Canada's foremost ing times. That is an argument in favour statesman, I am sure it will be re-echoed by the bond a man of such that requires at its head a man of such experience and such weight as shall be able to properly consider our relations with that great nation to the south of us, I say that the people of Canada will insist, and I have no doubt Great Britain will also insist, upon our having a first-class man to fill that position. I think that from the experience that Great Britain has had in her colonies and from the views that are expressed in the despatch I read to the House a short time

Now. Sir. according to that table, showing ment of her Governors General that the colosalaries commensurate with their services. These gentlemen have left our shores leaving behind them brilliant reputations, in consequence of which Great Britain has seen fit to advance them in her diplomatic service, as she did in the case of Lord Dufferin who, immediately he ceased to be Governor General of Canada, was promoted to the highest Imperial position, namely, that of Viceroy to India, and Lord Lansdowne who was also appointed subsequently to the same position. These facts prove that Great Britain has given to us as Governors General men of the highest rank as statesmen, men whom we trust will be succeeded in the future by others of equal ability and statesmanship. Now, according to the proago, it is a principle underlying the appoint- position laid down by the hon, gentleman in the argument he used, one would suppose that the position of Governor General was an empty one, that it had no duties attached to it, that it had no responsibilities attached to it, that required the people over whom His Excellency ruled to provide him with proper accommodation. I say that it having been established by our Act of union that we should have a Governor General appointed from Great Britain from amongst her foremest statesmen, it is the duty of this country to supply that Governor General with a proper residence, and to surround him with all the comforts that we can give him in this country. Because it must be remembered that these men leave comforts at home, the most of them are men of independent means, and you cannot expect them to come our here and forego all the comforts and all the luxuries they have enjoyed in the homes they have left, without some adequate compensation; and if we provide them with a proper residence, and surround them with proper comforts, and pay them a salary commensurate with their position, we are doing nothing more than it is our duty to do. It seems to me that when we look at what Great Britain does for us, when she chooses her first-class statesmen to represent : our Sovereign in this country, when she maintains her navy, as she does at Halifax, and at the Atlantic stations, and at Esquimalt in the west, and when she guards our shores at either end, the least we can do in ; Canada in recognition of that protection, is not to quarrel and quibble in the House of Commons over the salary that we vote to Her Majesty's representative in this country. By way of emphasizing the duties and the responsibilities attaching to the office of Governor General, I may quote, I think, very acceptably from Todd upon this point. At page 32 of Todd's Parliamentary Government in the British Colonies, you will find the following:-

There is, no doubt, a general impression abroad, amongst persons who have not bestowed much thought upon the matter, that the governor of a British colony or province is little less than an ernamental appendage to our political system; necessary to fulfil ceriain ceremonial duties, useful to represent the community at large upon public occasions, or as the mouth-piece of public sentiment; and of unquestionable service to society in the discharge of a dignified and liberal hospitality, to be freely extended to whoever may be a suitable recipient of vice-regal favour, without distinction of creed or party.

different visits made throughout the country, instead of asking this House to pass a Bill to reduce the salary of His Excellency, we should not only refrain from taking any such step but feel that we owe it as a duty to the Crown and to the incumbent of the office that the salary should remain at the figure at which it was placed in 1867 by the fathers of confederation, more particularly in view of the fact that as this country has increased and its bounds been extended the responsibilities attaching to

But if this were all that we had a right to expect from a governor, it would be quite insufficient to justify the pre-eminence which is attached to his office as a representative of the Crown. Without underrating for a moment the incalculable advantages which society and the state derive from the fulfilment of the duties above enumerated, by men in exalted positions—assisted by the ladies of their household—such ceremonial observances and festivities might, without much loss of dignity or efficiency, be assigned to cabinet ministers and other prominent officers of government of adequate rank and fortune.

The governor of a British dependency, however, within the limits prescribed by his commission, is essentially a political officer; and the necessity for his office must be estimated as to the gravity and importance of the duties allotted to him in the body politic. If his duties in that relation are mainly formal, and his political functions of a small account, the continuance of the effice will be apt to be regarded as an expensive luxury, which cannot be justified by an economical people, or endured in an age which is intolerant of shams.

But if, on the other hand, a constitutional governor is actually invested with an authority which is eminently capable of being employed for the public good, and if he fills a place of trust wherein he is competent, upon fitting occasions, to interpose to guard and protect the political liberties of those over whom he presides—then, it becomes the interest, as well as the duty, of all good citizens to respect his office and to strengthen and uphold him in the exercise of his lawful prerogatives.

I hold that no person can dispute the position taken by Mr. Todd, that to uphold the dignity of the Governor General's office and surround it with all the safeguards that are necessary, it is our duty, as those over whom he governs, to assist him in every way at our command. The hon, gentleman who introduced this Bill has stated that his remarks were entirely of an impersonal nature, and he very properly referred to the fact that the present incumbent of the high office of Governor General is giving the greatest possible satisfaction to the people. I am satisfied, although I do not speak with any authority, that coming down to the question of salary, so far as the present incumbent is concerned, His Excellency himself has spent twice the amount of his salary every year he has presided over the destinies of this country. When Great Britain sends us men of such eminence as Lord Aberdeen, who with his consort, grace and dignify the position they hold, as they do, are so lavish in their expenditures in all parts of Canada as they have been in the different visits made throughout the coun-Bill to reduce the salary of His Excellency, we should not only refrain from taking any such step but feel that we owe it as a duty to the Crown and to the incumbent of the office that the salary should remain at the figure at which it was placed in 1867 by the fathers of confederation, more particularly in view of the fact that as this country has increased and its bounds been extended the responsibilities attaching to the office have increased, the different questions involved in the Government of this country, owing to the diverse nature of the Dominion and the contending influences which prevail, entailing greater responsibilities to-day than they did formerly, and the House will agree with me that the hon. member for North York cannot expect to proceed further with his present Bill. I move that this Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day six months.

Mr. McMULLEN. In entering on a discussion of this very important question, which is undoubtedly important owing to the fact that very large sums of money are spent under the head of Governor General and staff and the residence he occupies, I think the hon. Minister might have prefaced his address in reply to the hon, member for North York (Mr. Mulock) without charging the hon, member with aiming at cheap popularity. I do not think the Minister was justified in imputing to the representative of Her Majesty here. But, hon, member who introduced the Bill under our financial embarrassments, with a motive of that kind. It is well known a deficit of $1,200,000 this year, and prosthat the question with regard to the expective deficit of four and a half millions penses connected with the Governor Gennext year. I do not think that Her Majesty, subject for discussion in this House for Canada making general reductions in our several years. The hon, Minister made some expenditures. Everything the Governor remarks as to the salaries paid in other British colonies; but if he will refer to the colonies he will find that those colonies have those Governments, they have been in a ing the glowing statements made by the deplorable condition and one very trying to Minister (Mr. Daly) with regard to the digthe people. eral's salary was fixed, as was pointed out having men of great ability to fill it, the by the hon, member for North York, it was people undoubtedly believe that reductions fixed at that sum until such time as the mast be made in this department. I admit Parliament of Canada should change it that it is very important to have a man of months express its view, and reduce it to the history of our confederation when it was $32,000 per annum. The hon, Minister read necessary to have a man of great ability the reply of the Heme Government with respect to that action. I should like to emphasize one or two points in that regard. In the greater the necessity for having a man the first place it says:

I need scarcely say that it is with reluctance, and only on serious occasions, that the Queen's Government can advise Her Majesty to withhold the Royal Sanction from a Bill which has passed two branches of the Canadian Parliament. present, however, is a measure which has important bearings far beyond its first aspect as a mere reduction of expenditure.

The annual salary of the Governor General was fixed at £10,000 so lately as last year by the Imperial Act of Union: within the first few months of the existence of the new Parliament of Canada it is proposed to reduce that salary to £6,500.

The reason is there given why the royal assent was withheld from the Bill; it was simply because only a short time had elapsed since the salary had been fixed at £10,000 and the reduction to £6,500 might have been made without due consideration. No doubt it was thought that the people of Canada had not had a full opportunity of considering the measure, that there had not been sufficient experience, and time had not been allowed to see the development of the country. The Minister said there had been great development in Canada. I contend that the fathers of confederation when they cast the political machinery for the Dominion anticipated that Canada to-day would contain at least double the population it possesses. They cast that machinery on gether too ponderous and expensive a scale. We are beginning to realize that now. The general feeling throughout this country is that the expenses of Government are altogether too high. There is not an elector in under our financial embarrassments, with eral's salary and residence have forced the or her Government, would find fault at Everything the Governor General needs for himself and his household he is permitted to bring in duty free, so that he does not contribute a dollar to reduced themselves by extravagance almost our revenue. The ability to discharge the duties of Governor Parliament of Canada did within a few General, and if ever there was a period in at the head of affairs, that time is the present. The more incapable a Government is, of great ability as Governor General. I appreciate the ability of Lord Aberdeen, and I have no doubt that it will take all the ability he possesses to so direct the affairs of the country now as to cause them to tend towards the interests of the people of the country. Notwithstanding all this, I believe that I express the opinion of the people when I say that we should be less extravagant in this expenditure. tention of my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) is to reduce the salary of the Governor General to $35,000 a year, or $3,000 more than was provided for in the Bill which was disallowed in 1868. Thirty-five thousand dollars to-day will secure more of the ordinary wants of life than £10,000 would twenty years ago. Even from that standpoint, we are justified in asking for a reduction. I have myself a Bill on the Order paper to reduce the salaries of Lieutenant-Governors, and if it should be reached, I intend to give figures to show that Canada is paying more, per capita, for Governors and Lieutenant-Governors than any other portion of Her Majesty's dominion, or than any other country blest with responsible government. The enormous amount spent on repairs and furniture and other items in connection with Rideau Hall proves that there must be It is absurd to have something wrong. spent $547,143 for the last twenty-five years in alterations and improvements on a property that cost $82,000 for land and all. That shows that gross extravagance has characterized the administration of Rideau Hall affairs. It has become nothing short of a political sink hole on which a whole lot of money has been squandered in one way and another. Then look at the amount of money that has been paid for wages to vegetable gardeners and botanic gardeners. and others who have been employed around there. It is no wonder that the people of Canada are getting sick and tired of the continuance of that condition of things. If Rideau Hall is to continue to exist, then, in my opinion, it would be a thousand times better to erect substantial buildings for the accommodation of His Excellency, than to spend thousands and thousands of dollars in maintaining the present tumble-down concern. I am in favour of the Bill of my hon, friend (Mr. Mulock), and I am quite confident that if Her Majesty's Government are cognizant of the stringent financial condition of Canada they will not refuse to reduce the Governor's salary to $35,000. My hon, friend (Mr. Daly) has mentioned some of the very excellent men we have had here in that position. Well, Sir, I have had it on fairly good authority, authority that leads me to place implicit confidence in the statement made to me, that one Governor General who spent five years here, after paying all the ordinary expenses out of the money he got for fire and light, and otherwise, actually brought home with him a saving of $200,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. Gentlemen opposite may cavil at that, but you must remember that the Governor General gets $13,000 a year for fire and light, and gets nearly all the attendance inside and outside of his office and residence free, it is paid for by Canada. It is a very decided advantage to him that he is allowed to import everything he wants free of duty. Well, Sir. after all that, I have good reason to believe that that Governor General took home $200,000 to reduce the mortgage on his estate over there.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. In the face of that, I do contend that this House would be justified in making a reduction in the salary of the Governor General.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend allow me. If he is going to found an argument on that statement, for abolishing or lowering the salary of the Governor General, he should be able to state it as a fact, and not give it as hearsay. I do not understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) to state that as a fact.

Mr. McMullen.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not prepared to verify the statement, I must admit, but I have been so informed by a person who was in a position to know.

Mr. McNEILL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me for one moment.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon, gentleman cannot interrupt me.

Mr. McNEILL. Certainly not if you do not wish it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Now, Sir, I am satisfied that the expenses connected with Rideau Hall have tended to stir up a feeling of dissatisfaction amongst the people of this country. The hon. Minister of the Interior appears to suppose that my hon, friend from North York wants to cultivate popularity with a certain class of people. can tell my hon, friend that the views he has just expressed are not confined either to the Patrens of Industry, the Grits or the Tories. There is a very large class of people throughout this Dominion who are strongly in favour of a reduction in the Governor General's salary and in the expenses of Rideau Hall; and if the hon. Minister will go to some meeting in the country and try to impress upon his audience the advisability of continuing the extravagant expenditures connected with that office and its surroundings, he will get very few to cheer him. Why, in the item of fire and light alone since the beginning of the establishment, $151,370 has been spent, and on travel no less than $147,103. The whole cost of government in this country is altogether too much. We have thirteen Ministers, each drawing a salary of $7,000 and a sessional allowance of $1,000; and I must say that if $7,000 was considered an ample allowance twenty years ago, $4,000 should be considered an ample allowance now. $4,000 would procure to-day more of the necessaries of life, or the ordinary supplies required by a member of the Cabinet, than $7,000 would twenty years ago. Wheat. flour and other supplies are not over the price half they were. We the thirteen Cabinet Ministers $92,000 in salaries and $13,000 in sessional allowances: we provide them with private secretaries costing $9,000; we pay a deputy speaker, $2,000; we pay two Controllers, $13.200. That makes $129.200 for our Cabinet Ministers and our two Controllers; and we have also a Solicitor General who costs us $6,000 a year. That is only part of the ex-Adding the provincial assemblies, we have in this country 715 law makers for 4.800.000 people, or one for every 1.400 families. Of these about fifty are Min-isters of the Crown. Now, I believe we are beginning in the right way to reduce this burdensome expense, and I would like to see the Bill now before the House passed into law. I believe the Ministers of the Crown. could well afford to submit to a reduction, so as to meet the demand of the people of this country for a general reduction all around. I have no doubt that Sir John Macdonald was quite sincere at the time he expressed the opinion in favour of continuing the Governor General's salary at £10,000. That was many years ago, when no doubt he anticipated a very great increase in our population. Everybody then believed that when we got our North-west opened up and the construction or the Canadian Pacific Railway completed our population would increase from three or four millions to eight or nine millions; and had it done so there would not have been so much complaint about the cost of Government. But when you consider the whole condition of things in this Dominion and the experience of other colonies that have been extravagant in this regard, you must see that it is time for us to call a halt and make a decided effort to bring the annual expenditure of the country down to a figure which our people can bear without feeling the burden so seriously as they do to-day. I believe we could reduce the expenditure of this country by five or six millions if the Government were only ready and willing to consent to it. I believe we could reduce the expenses of the Civil Service by from $500,000 to $750,000, if the Government would put fewer of their friends in office, and only employed men to fill the offices because they were capable and because they were needed. We have too many men, both in the inside and the outside service, who are drawing salaries for doing little or nothing; and we want a general trimming in all directions, beginning with the Governor General and going down to the lowest civil servant. In this way and in this way only shall we meet public senti-ment in fayour of diminishing the burdens of the people.

CRIMINAL CODE, 1892.

Mr. LAVERGNE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 133) to again amend the Criminal Code, 1892. He said: The object of the Bill is to allow a magistrate in preliminary investigation or summary conviction to extend the time for adjournment to sixteen days instead of eight days as now provided. We are met with great inconvenience in some districts of our province when the magistrate has to administer some three or four districts. As the limit of the adjournment is only eight days, sometimes. the magistrate will come for the purpose of adjourning the case, and will come a week after that to deal with it seriously. I think there should be no objection to this measure especially when the defendants are under recognizances. It simply changes a word in two sections of the Bill.

Mr. OUIMET. We might amend the clause by saying, "Provided always that such public work shall be sold by tender or auction after public advertisement, unless otherwise authorized by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the reason?

Mr. OUIMET. It is not necessary to state the reason. Of course, the public advantage would be a sufficient reason, but I do not see that it is necessary to state the reason in this Act; that shall be done in the Order in Council.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is an emclause stands with the words "whenever practicable." Those words are sometimes used where property has been sold by a party who is entitled to receive it back again in case the Government no longer require it. In that case, it would no longer be practicable to sell it at public auction. as there is only one person having legal right to purchase. It seems to me that what the hon, gentleman wants with a provision is to declare that where it has been found impossible to obtain a purchaser at public auction, then the Government may undertake to sell.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman will inotice that it not only concerns the sale of property, but also the leasing of property, and I think it is a sufficient security for the public that no sale of that kind should take place under the authority of the Minister alone, but that the sale should be made a matter of public notoriety, as Orders in Council are published every year, and they are always the property of the public after a certain time. This should be a sufficient guarantee. But as it concerns leases as well as sales, it would be very awkward, I should think, in case of a lease, to be obliged every time to resort to public advertisement, and to public tender. Therefore, I would propose to add the words, "Unless otherwise authorized by the Governor General in Council.'

Mr. MULOCK. Under what circumstances would it happen that the Government could not first endeavour to sell the property by public auction after the sale had been public-The reasoning of the ly advertised? There are serious objections to by public auction. A sale by public auction auction. is open to all the world, there are no tenders to be trifled with, the property after Mr. CI being duly advertised is open to competition and altogether such a system would prove more satisfactory to the Government and to the public. I think the rule should be to try and sell or lease property by public auction first, and to dispose of it by tender only as the last resort. Perhaps the Minister can suggest some cases in which this plan would not work.

Mr. OUIMET. Different ideas prevail as to which of public tender or public auction is the best mode of disposing of public In both cases, however, sale could not take place unless the property had been advertised. I think the experience of every one who has had to transact business of this kind is that sale by public tender is preferable. At public auctions it may happen that very few persons are present, it may even occur that there is collusion between the bidders so that a lower price is obtained than was expected. case of a sale advertised for public tender it is not necessary to accept any tender made, any more than it is necessary to accept the last bid at a public auction. sale is by public tender and is publicly advertised, that is all that can be done, leaving upon the Minister and the Governor in Council the responsibility of taking all proper precautions to guard the public interest.

We have had numerous Mr. MULOCK. cases of property being disposed of by tender. For example, a few years ago large sections of timber land in the so-called disputed territory were disposed of by tender. When the returns were laid before the House, it appeared that those tenders consisted of two communications to a couple of persons asking them to tender.

Mr. OUIMET. That was not a public tender.

I quite agree that the Government are not bound to accept the highest bid at an auction sale, yet it would be more satisfactory to the Minister and afford a stronger guarantee to the public if the mode of selling by public auction were adopted, and the average result would be better prices. I am not at all favourable to resorting to sale by

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 116) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act.—(Mr. Daly.)

On section 1,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This Bill is somewhat unusual in its character, because it proposes to exempt persons from the operations of a law already in existence. There has been no doubt a great deal of difficulty to prevent persons taking possession of school lands as trespassers, but the hon. Minister has not, as far as I know, stated how these persons came in possession, or how it was, if they were wrongfully in possession, that the Government took no steps to protect the lands against improper occupation. The intention in reserving lands of suitable quality as school lands, was that they might increase in value, and that their sale would form a substantial fund for school purposes. If persons go into possession contrary to law, and are allowed to remain in possession, as the hon, gentleman by this Bill states that they have been for fifteen years, I do not know how he is going to protect any school lands at all. If he adopts this rule, the result will be that every man will know that if he goes upon a lot reserved for school purposes, and manages to remain in possession a certain length of time, the Government will ulti-mately ratify his occupation and give him possession of the property, just as if it had been properly opened for occupation and settlement. I think the principle of the Bill is a very important one in its practical consequences, and I have not heard from the Minister any reason for it.

Mr. DALY. The hon, gentleman has no doubt forgotten that in 1893 similar legistender, if it is possible to sell by public lation was introduced and passed in this the reason for it was that in the years 1874 practical consequence. During the past fifand 1875 a number of people squatted on teen years we have had a public expendithese lands in the townships mentioned in ture which, in my opinion, has been far out the Bill.

Mr. DALY. Some had been surveyed and others not. It appears that at that time there were not other lands available for homestead entry in that neighbourhood; and these people went there, some in ignor- of the private property of the people of this ance that they were squatting on school lands owing to the absence of a survey, and others taking them up because, as it is alleged, no other lands were opened for settlement. Upon looking at the Bill the hon. gentleman will see that the lands are all confined to three townships in one locality.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In the old railway belt ?

Mr. DALY. Yes. The Bill applies only to people who performed their homestead duties prior to the 1st January, 1880. We are not departing from any principle of the land laws. The Bill is introduced by arrangement with the local government and with their consent, in order to settle a long-standing grievance. We thought in 1893 that we had included all the parties who had squatted in these particular townships; but it appears that we had not, and we caused advertisements to be published last year, the result of which was that we received applications from these people. Each case was separately investigated, and the departmental officers saw that only the persons who came within the category I have mentioned, and who were not included in the former Act. We are simply metshould be included now. ing out to the people an act of justice which should have been accorded to them years ago, and in accordance with the desire of the local government.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY-THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to submit to the consideration of the House an amendment to the motion of the hon. leader of the House. I propose,

That all the words after "that" in the original motion be left out, and the following be substituted:—This House declares that since 1880 the public expenditure has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished.

I think, Sir, that if we examine the expenditures of this country since 1880, we shall discover that this motion is not an untimely one, or submitted at an inoppor-

House, and that at that time I explained that tune period, nor will its adoption be of no of proportion to the wealth, the resources Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before they were and the population of this country. Our expenditure, when you count what has been made on capital account as well as what has been taken from ordinary revenue. will certainly average $40,000,000 a year. Now, $40,000,000 a year capitalized would mean $1,000,000,000; and so it is clear that country there is pledged for the purposes of this Government alone $1,000,000,000 to pay this annual charge of $40,000,000. The adoption, some years ago, of the principle of charging a certain portion of the expenditures of the country to capital account had the effect of concealing from the public view to no small extent the actual amount of our expenditures. We have had charges made to capital account for public works. for railways and canals, for railway subsidies and for Dominion lands. Every year for the last ten or twelve years you have had a certain sum charged to capital account in connection with the Dominion lands, iu this way concealing the fact that our expenditure for the survey and settlement of these lands has often exceeded the amount of revenue derived from them. To show how large our expenditure has been on capital account, in addition to the very heavy rate of taxation which has been charged. I need only point to the growth of the gross debt of this country. The public debt of Canada in 1867 was $93,046,000; Canada in in 1875 it was $130.778,000; in 1878 it was $174,957,000; in 1888 it amounted to $284.-500,000; and in 1895 the gross debt of this country has reached $308,348,000. Now, in addition to the very high rate of taxation which has been imposed upon the people, this indicates a very rapid growth of public liabilities. If you add to this the provincial indebtedness, the municipal indebtedness, the railway indebtedness of the country-I count the railway indebtedness because it is very obvious that if these railways are to do more than pay running expenses, the burden must fall upon the people, and that is a legitimate charge to take into account when considering the liabilities of a people -and if you include the private indebtedness of the population : if you count all these sources of liabilities, it will be seen that we are practically in a condition of villeinage; and although the ordinary yeo-man may hold his estate free from any charge which he has incurred himself, there have been incurred on his behalf and in spite of any objection on his part the very serious liabilities I have mentioned. These are a burden upon him as certainly as if he had incurred them himself. Sir, when you look at the various charges for public purposes which have been incurred from year to year, it will be seen that the growth of our taxation has been far more rapid than the growth of this country in either wealth or population. In 1873-74, the cost of the Civil Service in this country was $$$3.685; in 1878 it was $$23.369. During the five years of the Liberal Administration of Mr. Mackenzie, the cost of civil government had actually diminished by $60,000. Now, there has been since then a constant growth, and it is impossible to refer to any succeeding year without finding that the cost of civil government in that year was greater than the cost in the year that preceded. In 1878, the cost of civil government was $823,369; in 1883, $1.084,417; and in 1893 it was $1.402,279, so that from 1878 until the present, the cost of civil government has increased 70 per cent. There has been no such increase in population, and there has been no corresponding increase in wealth. Then, if you take the ordinary expenses of government, what may be regarded as the controllable expenditure of the country, in 1873-74 it was $8,324,076, and in 1878 it was $6.542.510, or nearly two million dollars less; in 1883 it was $9,419,482; in 1893 it was $11.867.042; and in 1894 it was, in round numbers, $13,000,000, so that there has been an increase in those controllable charges of 100 per cent since 1887-88. Now, if we look at every department of the Goverament we will find there has been corresponding increase. It is perfectly obvious, when you examine the various departments, that there has been nothing like a systematic conduct of public business. There has been an overcrowding of every department from political consideration. Members have impertuned Ministers to find a place for A. B or C. because of his eminent services to the party or the valuable services of some of his friends; and the result has been that a large number of persons have been placed in the public departments for whom there is nothing to do. In 1877 there was in the Fepartment of Agriculture, including the emigration branch, 26 persons employed, messengers and clerks, the salaries of whom amounted to $32,304. If you add to this the cost of contingencies, you will have something over $40,000. In 1893, we find the number had increased from 26 in 1877 to 104 clerks and messengers in 1893. The expensions diture had risen for salaries from $32,000 to $75,988, and the contingencies had risen to $8,507, making an increase of $8 per cent in the cost of that department. Then, in the Department of Finance I find that in 1877 there were 38 persons employed at $53,412, and others as extra clerks whose salaries amounted to about $7,000. Now the number of clerks is equal to what it was before, and the expenses are $58,224 for salaries—or about $5,000 for extra and permanent clerks in the service more than in 1877-78. Then in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. there was, in 1877, 22 clerks at salaries amounting to $32,000, whereas in 1893 there was in that department 52 clerks at a total | the Department of Customs and the Depart-salary of $54,112, being an increase of 50 per cent. If we look at the Militia Department, we will find there is an equally rapid growth in the cost of management of that department. In 1877 there were 29 clerks, whose salaries amounted to $42,192. 1893-94, there were 52 clerks, whose salaries amounted to $51,332, and the contingencies amounted to $18.747; or there was an expenditure of $70,000 in 1893 as against $42,000 in 1877. Then, in the Department of Justice, I find that in 1877 there were 14 persons employed, whose salaries amounted to $18.724, and in 1893 there were 15 employed with salaries of $24,455. And in the penitentiary branch of that department there were three clerks, the expenditure in connection with whom amounted to $2,877. In 1893 there was the same number, whose salaries and expenses amounted to $6.525, or an increase of over 100 per cent. Then in the Department of the Privy Council there has been a very extraordinary increase. The leader of the House last year informed us that this was in part due to the fact that the Ministers had adopted the practice of bringing to Council a great many matters which were formerly disposed of by the Minister as head of his department-that many matters which are properly matters of administration by the Ministry have been made matters of decision by Order in Council. This, I pointed out last year, was a very inconvenient practice; it was not consistent with the patent of office which the Minister held and must necessarily lead to delay in the conduct of the public business and very considerable increase in expense. Now, I find that in 1877 there were 13 clerks employed in the Privy Council office, whose salaries amounted to $21,415, and the whole centingencies of the department-there were ne extra clerks—to $2.996, or in all, $24,441. In 1894 the number of clerks had risen from 13 to 49, and the expenses from $21,000 to $34,925. The contingencies in all were $19,-072, or contingencies for extra clerks, allowing $8,492, making an aggregate of $52,489 as the aggregate expenditure of that department of the civil service, against $24,441 in 1877. Then the organization of the Trade and Commerce Department renders it necessary, in order to trace the increased expenditure, to see what the charges were for the Department of Inland Revenue and the Department of Customs when each had to support a Minister at its head. In 1877 the Department of Customs had 23 permanent clerks, whose salaries amounted to $34,321. and the contingencies for extra clerks and writers to $4,000, making $38,321 in all. The Department of Inland Revenue had at that time 23 clerks at salaries aggregating $30,-777 and contingencies amounting to about $4,000, making $34,777 for the department, or $73,098 for these two departments combined in 1877. Now, in 1893-94 we have, bined in 1877. Now, in 1893-94 we have, under a Minister of Trade and Commerce, _____ ment of Inland Revenue, and some special provision which concerns the business of the Minister himself. We see that there were 46 clerks employed in these two departments in 1877. To-day there are in the Customs branch 46, and in the Inland Revenue branch 54, and in the Trade and Commerce branch. as near as I can ascertain, permanent and extra clerks, 12. The charges at the present time for the Department of Customs is $37,721: for Inland Revenue, $60,474, and the Trade and Commerce Department, including the salary of the Minister, $12,998. or a total of $111.193, as against $73.098 in 1877. Then in the Post Office Department there is perhaps more marked progress in the growth of expenditure than in almost any other department of the Government. In 1877 there were 97 clerks employed in that department, their salaries aggregating $8$.-239. And for contingencies, in payment of extra clerks, the expenditure was about $5,500; or in all, $93,739. In 1893 you have 321 clerks at salaries aggregating $232,169, contingencies $3,612, a total of $235,781, as against $93,739 in 1877. Then in the Department of Secretary of State in 1877 there were 28 clerks, who were paid $38.336. These 28 clerks included those in the Stationery branch and in the Police branch, a total of 11 clerks who received $9,607; so that reduces the expenses in 1877 for purposes of comparison to $28,729 for 19 clerks. The charge for contingencies was $4.132; or a total of $32,862 for the Secretary of State's Department in 1877. In 1893-94, there are 40 clerks whose salaries amount to $50,137. and the contingencies amount to $3.000. making a total of $53,127, or an increase of upwards of 60 per cent in the cost of that department. They have taken away the North-west Mounted Police from the Secretary of State's Department. In 1877 there were two persons only employed as clerks ir that branch, and their salaries amounted to $2.164. To-day the charges are $9.742 for salaries, and $5.694 for contingencies, a total expense of $15.436, against about $4,000 in 1877. Then, Sir, let us take the Public Works Department. It must be borne in mind that the Public Works Department in 1877 embraced both what is now the Department of Public Works and the Department of Railways. In 1877 there were 32 clerks in the department and their salaries. with the salary of the Minister-which I have included in each of these cases—amounted to $55,150, and the contingencies of every kind to $8.914, a total of $64.064 as the cost of the department in 1877. Now, in 1893-94, the Railways and Canals Department is separate, and to compare the cost of to-day with the cost of 1877 we are obliged to examine the number of persons employed in each of these departments and the amount of salaries paid for permanent and extra clerks. Now, in 1893-94, the Department of Public Works as it is now con-salaries amounting to $51,100. The chief engineer's branch has 28 clerks whose salaries amount to $23.617. The architect's branch has 30 clerks whose salaries amount to $27.658. The telegraph branch has two clerks with aggregate salaries of $2,230. The miscellaneous charges for clerks, 15 of whom are employed under this head, amount to $7,436. And there were 31 temporary clerks, evidently for a very short time, the payments to whom aggregate $1.853. The whole charges amount to $146,539, or leaving out the Department of Public Works speccially so called, we have a total of $95,439. Now Railways and Canals to-day employ 32 clerks, whose salaries amount to $52.648. and the special officers of that department. including engineers and others. salaries amounting to $20,263. I am including contingencies, $6,397. Some of the charges incident to that department it will be seen are very considerable. Thus, on the Cornwall Canal, there has been an expenditure of $342,019 on the contract; the expenses of oversight and management which amount to over 10 per cent, or 833. 620. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to the Department of Indian Affairs. the Interior, and Immigration. In 1877 the Indian branch, although a distinct organization, was not a separate department but was a part of the Department of the In-terior. In that branch, in 1877, there were eight clerks, and I think there were two extra clerks, their salaries amounting to $9,176. To-day there are 54 clerks whose salaries amount to $51.014, and the contingencies, $5,967 : or $56,981 were expended in 1893-94 as against less than $12,000 expended in 1877, or an increase of more than fourfold. Then in the Department of the Interior proper, in 1877, there were 28 clerks employed, at salaries amounting to $38.010. and the extra clerks employed in that branch were paid $1.123, or $39,133 for the year. In 1893-94 there were 93 clerks employed as against 28 in 1877, and their salaries amounted to $101,794 as against $38,010. Then, besides this sum, into the details of which I need not enter, there is a considerable sum due to the fact that a large portion of what would, under ordinary circumstances, and the ordinary way of making up the cost of the department, be charged against the inside service, is charged in the hon, gentleman's account and estimates against the outside service. This, I think, amounts to about $62,500, making in all $164,294. Then the hon, gentleman has a very large expenditure for immigration. The general expenditures amount to over $16,859. Now, there are emigrant agents employed in Canada in connection with this department, to whom 871.390 were paid in 1893-94. There are employed in the United States a number to whom are paid the sum of $61.890. Europe, are persons whose salaries aggregate $150.154, and in Newfoundland, a most stituted has 32 clerks and one Minister at hopeful field for immigration, I suppose my hon, friend thinks, there have been paid for concerned, there is not much indefiniteness this service $2,873. Now, when we look at about them, and we have a very clear and the Geological branch, we find there have been paid to 32 persons, in 1893-94, $51,925. Let me invite the attention of the House, not to the whole Indian expense, but to the Indian expenditure in Manitoba, and the North-west Territories and British Columbia. Those are places at the greatest distance North-west itself. The House will rememfrom the office, and they are the places which, in proportion as the distance increases, seem to increase the public burden. The Regina office, for which I think there is really no practical use, or it ought to be a very subordinate office indeed, there are 25 persons employed, to whom $31.212 are paid. There are 148 agents in the Northwest Territories, to whom $103,604 are paid. part as travelling expenses and part as But, except in the case of Governor Douglas, salaries. There are in the Territories 14.273 who conducted the affairs of the country Indians, so that it costs to look after those under the Hudson Bay Company, prior to Indians, $7.33 a head. By the treaties which its organization as a province. I do not we have made with the Indians, we are think any payment was ever made to any required to pay them $5 each, and in order indian band or tribe for surrender of territhat we may fulfil our obligations, we have tory in the province of British Columbia, to pay to an officer $7.33 to each Indian, or So that as far as this Government was $2.33 more than the sum that the officer concerned, we had nothing like the condiis required to pay over. In the case of the tion that existed in the other provinces of Manitoba superintendency, the expenses of Canada. Under the condition of things that the head office, with six officials amount to existed in Canada prior to the union, where $6.070. There are 11 clerks as against 140 the title of the occupiers had been recognized in the North-west Territories, whose salaries amount to $9.300; travelling expenses, $3, extinguished when the territory was taken 294, or $18,764 in all. So that the 9,436 possession of with the consent of the tribes Indians in the Manitoba superintendency who were engaged in hunting or fishing cost us for official management, $2 per head over it, there was gradually formed for the as against $7.33 a head in the Territories, use of the Indians, a fund, out of which When we take into consideration the they have since received annuities, and, number of these agents, when we take into except in this way, the Indian population, consideration the number of farm employees, when we consider the number of the public revenues of the country. Since persons that are employed to distribute then, some expenditure has taken place. and oversee the payments of the money that is granted for various local purposes through-Government employ. I pass by the Northwest Mounted Police, and I pass by the appropriations for public schools, for the teachers who are employed, and all the business that is being conducted under this central organization, and we find it is a species of political octopus whose tentacles are extended all over the North-west Territories. The Government form, in fact, an organized political force, through the Indian office, the Land office, the Mounted Police force, and the appropriations to establish territorial government in that country, as numerous as the American army was in former periods before the civil war.

Mr. DALY. That is right, I wonder you hesitate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, it is somewhat indefinite, but I think I will be able to show that so far as the expenditure is distinct statement of the amount of expenditure in the Estimates that are yearly submitted to us. You have a very large expenditure in the North-west Territories. In British Columbia the expenditure grown even more rapidly than it has in the ber that in the case of British Columbia Indian m_{G} have no annuities. Government of British Columbia, prior to the union, recognized no sort title on the part of the Indians to the possession of any portion of the territory. They provided in the articles of admission that we should deal with the Indians at least as liberally as they had done. prior to the union, were not a charge upon This expenditure was in part due to the control exercised over the Indians in the out the North-west Territories, we see what province of Nova Scotia, and in New Brunsa very large army of persons are in the wick, where there were Indian reservations of limited extent, but where there were no Indian funds. The amount expended there has never been very large, and I am not accusing the Minister of being extravagant in his expenditures in those provinces. But I maintain that in Manitoba, and in the North-west and in British Columbia, a very different state of things existed, and I will undertake to point out to the House that there has been an amount of money expended in British Columbia, from which neither Indians nor the public have derived any corresponding advantage. When British Columbia came into the union, an Indian agency was established in the province, in order that the Government might exercise some supervision over them, to protect their against wrong, and see that those duties which were assigned to the Government of Canada by the British North America Act were properly discharged. course, the Government of Canada did not concerned in Canada up to the present time. undertake specially to provide for the Inand so far as the number of employees is dians; they had no duty of that sort devolving on them. The Indians west of the Rocky Mountains were rather an energetic race, and, in most cases, have proved capable to taking care of themselves. In a few cases there was sickness and destitution, for which relief was provided, but, beyond furnishing a small quantity of medicine, and paying certain medical charges, there was no charge made upon the public revenue, with this exception, that when reserves came to be established for those Indians, the Government of British Columbia appointed one commissioner, and the Government of Canada another, and those two commissioners agreed upon a third, and they were to constitute a Reserve Commission Board for the purpose of settling all reserves, and this work, it was supposed. would take five or six years. That board was found to be too expensive, and it was abolished, and by agreement with British Columbia, one commissioner instead of three, was appointed. I wish to call the attention of the House to the gradual progress in increased expenditure connected and I have this to complain of, both in with the management of Indian affairs in that province, for which I venture to say there is no warrant whatever, either in the condition of the tribes of Indians or lishing a system of expensive industrial in the results which have been ac-schools calculated to make a large permanent complished. In 1877 we voted a lump charge upon the revenues of this country, sum of $25,000, and, after paying over they ought to have submitted a scheme to $6,000 for the maintenance of officials and the House, and asked a solemn expression officers in that province, the balance went towards the relief of the Indians. In 1880 the central office expenses were $8,248, this amount including salaries and rent. The reserve commission cost $14,425, and surveys, $11,594, or for these three items, parliamentary appropriation $35,267 went to the payof $48,531. ment of the officers, and $13,261 in various ways towards the Indians. In 1881 there was paid $7.781 for salaries. $12.771 for the reserve commission, and $11,008 for the surveys, or $31,561 as official expenses, out of a total appropriation of $41,401, or a sum of $9.840 was left for the aid of the Indians. Then in 1882 the salaries of officials amounted to $13,569. There had been a change There were districts established in which there were local agents, and so the amount for salaries was largely increased. There was paid for the reserve commission. $10,671: for surveys, $9.658: or $33,858 on those three items, out of a sum of $42.317 which was voted, leaving the sum of $8.459 to the Indians, as the balance having gone to maintain the official establishment. In 1883 there was paid for salaries, $18.985; for the reserve commission, $10.145; for surveys, $15.105; or a total of $44,236, out of less than $50,000 appropriated. leaving a balance of about $6.000 to the Indians. In 1884, the salaries of officials in that province were $21.493: the reserve commission, $7.506: surveys, $8.631: or a total of $37.631 out of an appropriation of $43. 731. leaving $6,100 for the Indians.

1885, the salaries paid were $22.181; for the reserve commission, $11.836; for surveys, $8,700, making a total of $40,717 as expense of Indian management, the whole of this being incurred for the purpose of paying to the Indians for medicine and various other purposes, 88,983. In 1886, the cost of salaries was $25,799; reserve commission. $10,075; surveys, $6,250; or a total of $42.-125 out of an appropriation of $48,283, leaving to the Indians, $6,158. In 1887. salaries were $30.061; reserve commission, $9.235; surveys, $16.951; or a total of $56.248 for the officials, and $5,096 for the Indians. The year 1888 was about the same as the year 1887. In 1889, the salaries were $47,704; reserve commission, $10,811; and the surveys, $12,407, or $70,922, leaving $12,001 for the Indians. In 1890, the salaries were $31.510; the reserve commission, $9.541; and the surveys, $9.341, making $50.392 for salaries, for watching and taking care of the Indians of British Columbia. year the Government established schools, regard to British Columbia and Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Before the Government entered upon a policy of estabof opinion from this House upon a policy which was not only to make a serious charge for the particular year when the system was initiated, but to make a large charge. perhaps, for many years to come. In British Columbia there were about $35,000 appropriated to schools in 1890, and $4,600 was paid out for medicines for the Indians of British Columbia who are many of them as competent to work as any other class, who are industrious, who are engaged in the lumber mills, and who are employed on the railways. They are, I say, as industrious a class as you will find among the labouring population anywhere, and why they should have been singled out, and an attempt made to pauperize them by adopting a policy such as here indicated. I do not very well see. There is this, Mr. Speaker, apart from the appropriation to schools-how much of that they got I will not venture to say, because I have not had time to analyse these accounts—but so far as the $102,000 are concerned, 50 per cent went towards the payment of the officials to take charge of this Indian population, every man of whom. I believe, is capable of taking care of himself. In 1891, the salaries were $27,821, the reserve commission $6,326, the surveys $8,909, and for medicines $3,500, making for salaries and surveys $43,057 on a total appropriation for that year of $85,-(NN). In 1892, the salaries were $30.642, the reserve commission $8.444, the surveys $9,-473, making $48,560 out of an appropriation In of $90,021. Besides, $5.500 of this sum was paid for medicines. Then, in 1893, the salaries were $31.833, the reserve commission $8.243, and the surveys $9.646, or $49.723. and besides, $4,500 for medicines out of an appropriation of $106.838. Then, in 1894, we find that there are $30,500 for salaries. $8,000 for the reserve commission, $9.672 for surveys, or $48,212 for these purposes. There were $53,200 for schools and $6,000 for medicine, making in all $107,412, of of which $5,000 was paid to relieve distressed Indians, and $1,700 to furnish them with grain. That is the total appropriation that went directly to them out of this sum. Now, ritories you have $8,000, and for police you Mr. Speaker, looking at these fifteen years have $622,959. to which I have referred, I find that during that period, there was paid for salaries and travelling expenses, under pretense of providing for the Indians of British Columbia. $387,000 for salaries, $143,000 as salaries to that reserve commission, and $165,880 for Indian surveys, or a total of $695,993. I ask the attention of the House to this fact; I ask hon, gentlemen to look at the report of that Indian Reserve Commission and see what they do. I ask them to look at the surveyors' report and see what the surveyors do for this money. Why, Mr. Speaker, $165,- 80. Sso would survey five times over all the lands that the Indians in British Columbia require. There is no indication of this coming to an end. The expectation was, when the reserve commission was established, that it would complete its work in five or six years. It has been in existence sixteen or eighteen years, and it is going on, like the brook described by Tennyson, for ever. There is no termination to the expenses. They are continued for the purpose of the payment of the reserve commission, consisting of the Hon. Mr. O'Reilly, the two surveyors that are employed, and what else it is very difficult to say. It is rather an extraordinary proceeding that the Government should organize a very elaborate and expensive series of Indian offices scattered over the province of British Columbia, and that they should undertake to make an appropriation for Indian purposes, almost every dollar of which is consumed in the payment of the organization. That is the condition of things that exists, and that is one of the things that warrants what I have said: That the public expenses of this country have increased, are increasing, and ought to be Let us look at some of the charges in connection with these offices. In British Columbia, out of the $1,029,000 that have been appropriated under pretense of helping the Indians, there has been expended on officials $695.993, leaving $333.611, a considerable portion of which goes towards the maintenance of the industrial schools that are being built or that are being maintained. You have Indian salaries, $265,770 for the year; you have had for travelling expenses. $24,938; you have had for the Interior land office. $46.300; you have for other clerks.

connected with the department, $40,180, and you have for other expenses $6.932, or you have $137.138 in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories in addition to the $100,000 charged to capital account. Now, your expenditure on Government House in the Territories is $10,255 a year; registration office, $17,697 : legislative assembly. schools, $109,000; and aid to the public works in various districts, $61,000; and to Indians, $750,000. For the Government of the North-west Territories, you have $200,-000, for immigration agents within the Ter-

Mr. DALY. Where does the hon, gentlemen get that $8,000?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have taken the salaries charged to persons resident in the Territories in the Auditor General's Report.

Dominion lands agents as Mr. DALY. well, I suppose?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think

Mr. DALY. Of course, we are not responsible for what appears in the Auditor tieneral's Report. Things are very badly mixed there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly not. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has a very large staff of persons employed in the North-west Territories to teach the Indians how to farm. They have been engaged there for the last fifteen years, and it is very interesting to notice what they have accomplished. According to the hon, gentleman's report for last year, there was harvested by the Indians of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories 39,000 bushels of wheat. 16,500 bushels of oats, 58 bushels of peas, 13,000 bushels of barley and 3,216 bushels of other grains-71.774 bushels of various sorts of grains produced by 23,000 Indians under the fostering care of the numerous officers of the Government. If you take into account the value of the services of the Indians, you will find that to produce $1.20 worth of grain and roots it costs the Government 80 cents. You have very little more money resulting from the industry of all these farm labourers and all the Indians they can persuade to work than would be produced if the Government were to pay the money to the Indians and let them remain unemployed. The average earnings of the Indians amount to about 30 cents a month, or $3.60 a year. Now, it is reported that the Indians made last year by fishing and the chase, $248,000. So that, with a shotgun and a few pounds of powder and shot. an Indian makes about $6 a month, whereas if you put him to work and employ a large number of farmers to aid him, and pay them $43.726; you have for travelling expenses handsome salaries for doing so, his earnings

$6 in the one case against 30 cents in the other. And yet the hon, gentleman has told the House that he is satisfied with the progress that these Indians are making. Now, Sir, I have shown that in almost every department of the Government the expenditures of the country are out of all proportion. beyond the requirements of the public service; and I think the House will agree with me that the present state of things. which I have not shown in detail, but of which I have given the barest outline, because the facts are open to every member to investigate for himself, warrants my proposing the resolution which I have read, and which I now place in your hands.

Mr. DALY, Mr. Speaker, although the hon. gentleman's motion charges the Government with general extravagance, he has devoted most of his time to a criticism of the departments over which I have the honour to preside, especially the Department of Indian Affairs. I can only liken the hon. gentleman to Rip Van Winkle. Because the hon, gentleman some sixteen or seventeen years ago had the honour for a few years of occupying the position I do now. he considers that the condition of the administration of Indian affairs and Domnion lands have remained exactly what they were then. In short, from what the hon, gentleman has said, one would conclude that Canada had not moved from that day to this, that our population had not increas-· ed, that the business of the Department of the Interior has not grown, but that everything had stood still from the time the hon. gentleman presided over the Department of the Interior. The hon, gentleman has been most unfair in his criticism of the expenditure on Indian affairs. He has given the House and the country to understand that it is the sole duty of the officers of the Indian Department to pay treaty money to Indians—that when we entered into treaty obligations with the Indians, all we had to do was to pay them so much per head per annum, and that the moment that was done. we had nothing whatever more to do with them. They could roam over that vast country as they pleased, with no restrictions whatever, and it was not the duty of the Government of Canada to try to raise them to the position of their white neighbours; but on the contrary, we should allow them to remain in the condition they were in at the time we made the treaties with them. The statements and arguments made by the hon, gentleman here to-day contradict the policy of the Government of which he was a member and the policy of the department over which he presided. I will show shortly that the policy this Government has pursued towards the Indians is exactly on the lines of the policy laid down by the hon. gentleman and the Government of which he was a member from 1874 to 1878. Now, Sir. now there are sixteen.

and theirs are less than 30 cents. You have what are the facts? At the time the hon. gentleman presided over the Department of Indian Affairs, taking the figures by provinces, the Indian population which we had to deal with in Ontario numbered 15,711; 10-day it numbers 17,330. At that time there were five superintendents, one at a salary of $1,400; one at $1,600; one at $1,200; one at $1,200; and one at $900. To-day, we have three superintendents, whose salaries are respectively $800, $900, and $1,200. Then they had agencies, one each at Toronto, Brantford, and Parry Sound, and two at Manitowaning. To-day we have one agent at Brantford, Parry Sound, and Manitohad twelve waning respectively. They agents then and three agency Indian clerks: now have only fourteen. Weclerks. although the and two Indian population has increased 2,000. After the 30th June, 1878, three more agents added to the staff of outside officials, making in all, fifteen agents at that time. In Ontario and Quebec, together, the expenditure at that time was $28.071; to-day it is $55,412. The cost per head then was $1.03; to-day the cost is $2.24. This increase is due entirely in Ontario to the schools and salaries paid to the inspectors, and the increased cost entailed by the payment of treaty moneys under the Robinson treaty. In the province of Quebec, the Indian population dealt with in 1878 was 4,852; in 1874 it was 7.320. At that time, ten agents were employed, and the same number is still employed; and of the agents we have now, one is paid by commissions on land sales. What was the condition of these Indians in 1878 and 1874 in Ontario. In 1878 they had 46,063 acres under cultivation. To-day they have 78.382 acres under cultivation. Then they had 4.221 buildings; to-day they have They had stock then to the amount 6,115. of 13,108 head; to-day their stock amounts to 15.552 head. Their implements then numbered 6.953; to-day they have 11.018. They harvested, in grains and roots, in 1878, 305,427 bushels; and in 1894, 363,578 bushels. They raised, in 1878, 4,904 tons of hay, and in 1894, 11.501. The value of their fish, furs, and other industries, in 1878, amounted to $80.524; to-day they amount to $165,-In Quebec, during the same period. taking the same items, the total value was $21,566, in 1878; and to-day the total is $109,837, showing the way in which the Indians have progressed during that time, and showing that the policy of the Government has had a good effect. In 1878, the Indians had fifty-three schools in Ontario, with a school-roll of 1.824 pupils. In 1894, they had eighty-three schools, with a school-roll of 2,341. In Quebec, there were ten Indian schools in 1878, with a roll of 320 children; in 1894, there were twenty, with a roll of 634. In Nova Scotia, the Indian population, in 1878, was 2,116; and in 1874 it was 2.141. There were thirteen agents then; The expenditure then was $5.324.46, or $2.52 per head; the very numerous in British Columbia, and amounted, in 1878, to $5.272.44; and in 1894 2.528 head of stock, thirty-five implements, to $6.283.24. The cost per head in 1878 was and tish and furs and other products, valued $3.64; and in 1894, $3.88. Taking the same at $628.757. To-day they have 11.259 acres table as I gave for the other provinces, under cultivation, 6.547 buildings, 19.963 acreage under cultivation, buildings, stock, head of stock, 8.985 implements; they have implements, grain and roots, hay, fish, fur harvested 144.766 bushels of grain and roots, and other products, the total value, in 1878, and have raised 4.025 tons of hay. The was $2.488 as against $35.850 in 1894. There value of their fish, furs, and other products, were no Indian schools in New Brunswick is $765.005. In 1878 there were nine schools in 1878; now there are five, with 102 childing Pritish. Columbia, with 648 pupils; todent then, and there is one now. The expenditure in 1878 was $1,829.23; and in 1894, it was $1,771.58. The cost, per capita, then was $5.97; and now it is $6.20. Taking the same table as in the case of the other provinces, the total value of the products in 1878 was $1,595, which has decreased to $200 now. There was one school in 1878, with twenty-two children on the roll. There is now one school, with thirtyroll. There is now one school, with thirty- and three medical officers. And in three children on the roll. Now we come to the North-west there were one superinten-British Columbia, to which the hon, gentied dent, one clerk, three medical officers; and man referred at considerable length, in the in the following year, on the recommendation of his address. In the Indian population dealt with at present is North-west, in 1894, we had one assistant 23,307. In 1878, when the hon, gentleman commissioner, three inspectors, one surveyor, would lead the House to suppose there was one storekeeper, 16 clerks, 19 Indian agents, no expenditure on Indian affairs in that province, we find there was one superintend-terpreters and three medical officers. There were three reserve commissioners then, and there is one now. There were three surveyors then, and there are three now. And, in addition to the agents which we had then, we have nine agents in British Columbia. These nine agents in British Columbia are scattered all over the province. As hon, gentlemen can understand, the Indian reserves are

We thus see that after deducting the anunity money paid the Indians, and the cost of cattle and implements distributed among them, and the cost of surveys, the Government of the day spent nearly $50,000 in provisions, and $150,000 in doing the work; and we find from a return made to the department in 1878 that only 6,687 Indians all toid in that country were settled on reserves. In 1894 the expenditure had increased by rearly $400,000. From 1874 to 1878—when the Mackenzie Government were dealing with the Indians, numbers of them had not come into treaty. And at that time the buffalo was roaming the plains and the Indian, from the buffalo, furnished nimself with meat, he made clothing for himself and family, he furnished his tepees, and, with the robes he sold, he purchased all the tea and tobacco and the other little luxuries that he required. But with the advent of settlement the whole situation was changed. The buffalo disappeared. Then it became necessary, not only in the interest of the Indians, but in the interest of peace and scitlement, that the Indians should be placed upon the reserves. And when they were placed upon the reserves the Government had to feed them, clothe them and look after them. It would be folly simply to set aside a certain number of acres of land as a reserve, and furnish buildings, and then Lor keep the Indians upon the reserves, because if they were not content to stay upon the reserves, they would be roaming at will killing cattle, stealing horses and otherwise irterfering with the settlers. And it has been, and is now the policy of the Government, to use its best endeavours to educate the Indians to earn their own livelihood and to make themselves, as far as possible, independent of the Government. And the effect is shown in the reduction, year after year, in the amount appropriated for food for the destitute. Later on, I shall be able to show by the figures I shall give that every year since 1878 the vote for supplies for the destitute has gradually decreased; and, instend of the policy being an expensive one, as the hon, gentleman would give the House to understand, the money used to pay agents and other officers has resulted in the Indians being encouraged to go into farming and cartle raising, building schools and compelling the children to attend these schools, to teach them trades, blacksmiths and fartacts and all the other trades that make up the usual callings of life. So the expenditure in that line has saved the country thousands upon thousands of dollars. Instead of spending an insignificant sum for destitute Indians, had we not entered upon this expenditure for special services of our agents and farm instructors, we should be obliged to spend $500,000 or $600,000 a year in feeding the Indians. If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to read the report of the Department of Indian Affairs. he will see in the report for every agency a tabulated statement of the earnings of the Indians, the trades they follow, and the improvements they have made. And no person but one atterly ignorant of the question, one who had given neither care nor time to the consideration of it would make the statement the hon, gentleman has made or attempted to give the people to understand that the whole duty of the Government towards these Indians is to see that they get their treaty money. Why, Sir, the least thing we have to do is to pay treaty to these people; the easiest thing we have to do, the least expensive part of our work of administration is to pay this money. Is it to be supposed, Sir, that the policy of this Government was such that the Indians were to be left in the state of ignorance in which we took them into treaty? On the contrary the policy that we are carrying out to-day is the policy that was inaugurated by the hon, gentlemen in 1878, What did Hon. David Laird say upon this question in 1878? He was then superintendent. He says:

I am unable to furnish any satisfactory information respecting the number of Indians in this superintendency who have accepted treaty allowances. * * * However desirable it may be to report on the operations during the past season, it is impossible in this country, where communication is so infrequent and irregular, to give a general report for the superintendency up to a later date than the 30th of June.

I deeply regret that in this comparatively unorganized superintendency I have, as yet, been unable to obtain sufficient information to warrant me in attempting to give any statistics respecting the property of the Indians. Besides paying the annuities, the great work at present in this superintendency is distributing the agricultural implements, cattle and seed promised in the several treaties, and attending to those Indians who call to represent real or imaginary grievances, and to seek relief in their destitution.

I call the special attention of the House to the fact that Mr. Laird says that the great work at present is "distributing the agricultural implements, cattle and seed promised under the several treaties." And yet, according to the hon, gentleman we have no right to show these people how to use these implements, we must simply carry out our bald treaty obligations, hand over to them the implements and the oxen, but never teach them how to plough or to put

Were it possible to employ a few good, practical men to aid and instruct the Indians at seed time, I am of opinion that most of the bands on the Saskatchewan would soon be able to raise sufficient crops to meet their most pressing wants.

in their seed. Then Mr. Laird says:

Carrying out what was in the mind of Mr. Laird, we find that to-day upon many of the reserves the Indians are raising sufficient feed for themselves. And not only are they raising sufficient to support themselves, but, as I stated, they are grinding their own flour. I would like the hon, gentleman to explain how that state of things could have been brought about if we had pursued the policy he speaks of to-day, simply handing over the implements and oxen without teaching the Indians to put in the seed. The Government did not pursue that policy, but a better and more sagacious policy, and we are reaping the fruits of that better policy to-day. thousands of cases the Indians are raising their own grain and grinding it into flour, raising their own cattle and, from their own earnings, erecting their houses and furnishing them so that they live in comparative comfort. In this we have a condition of things that could not have existed had the policy enunciated by the hon, gentleman been carried out. I cannot conceive of any person who has had the slightest knowledge of the question coming to any other conclusion than that the Government would have been derelict in its duty if it had pursued any other policy toward these Indians than that it has pursued. What does Superintendent McColl, an appointee of Mr. Mackenzie, and still an officer of the Government, say in 1878, reporting on the Manitoba superintendency? He says:

During the last summer I visited nearly all the Indian bands in the Manitoba superintendency. I am strongly of the opinion, from the apportunities of Indians throughout this superintendency, for cattle, seed grain, farming implements and schools, as well as from their urgent solicitations for farmers to teach them how to: cultivate the soil, that, under judicious supervisicn and instruction, they would soon develop into successful agriculturists and skilful trades-

Again we have an officer of the Mackenzie Government saying that we should supply North-west Territories, is less per capita tothem with cattle, seed grain, farm imple-day than it was in 1878. Of course I cannot ments and schools; and that at the urgent: solicitation of the Indians, we should supply them with farmers to teach them how to cutivate the soil. And yet because we carout the very suggestions made Mr. Mackenzie's officer, and have provided vinced. them with farms, and with farm instructors to teach them how to cultivate the soil, the hon, gentleman takes exception to our policy and ridicules the idea. I would like to know how he can reconcile his statement to-day with the report he laid upon the Table of this Because, if it was a wise House in 1878. policy in 1878, when we had but 6,000 Indians under charge of the department in the Northwest, to furnish them with farmers, how much greater is the necessity to-day when man not know that these agents and these we have some 23,000 or 24,000? connection with the question of schools which the hon, gentleman criticises, let us see what Mr. McColl says:

The establishment of an industrial school in some central place, where the Indian youth of both sexes could be taught the various industries, so as to enable them to impart their knowledge thus acquired to their less-favoured kindred. would, in my judgment, be the most efficient and practical system to adopt for the amelioration of the present dependent condition of the red man, and for enabling him to become self-sustaining and independent.

And what has the Government done but carry out exactly what was recommended by Superintendent McColl in 1878, and what the hon, gentleman took the responsibility of recommending to the House by adopting the Indian report he laid upon the Table of the House in 1878? So that for this very expenditure that the hon, gentleman criticises, he and his Government must be held responsible in a great measure because they adopted the report that was made in 1878. and that would have been the policy of their Government had they remained in office. I say this to the hon, gentleman, that I defy him or any other person to administer this department upon the lines upon which it is administered to-day, and carrying out the policy which was enunciated in 1878 by the officers and has been carried out since, with less expense and with fewer officers than The hon. we are doing at the present time. gentleman shakes his head. He is talking of something he knows nothing about, and I am talking of something of which I have had three years experience. Again, the hon. gentleman spoke of matters to-day as if they were in the same state as in 1878.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, I did not.

Mr. DALY. Yes, he did. He talked of matters to-day as if they had only slightly changed since 1878; and I have quoted quoted figures showing indubitably that the expense per head of managing Indian affairs, not only in Ontario. Quebec and the other provinces, but in British Columbia and convince the hon, gentleman, he still shakes his head; but the figures are there, and they speak for themselves. Although the hon. gentleman may not accept my facts or my by figures, I am sure the country will be con-

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? How is it that, according to his own report, the value of the Indian products is to the amount of salaries, as 120 is to 80.

Mr. DALY. What on earth has that got to do with the question? Are we supposed to furnish agents who will give a quid pro quo for their salary? Does the hon, gentle-Now, in farm instructors are necessary to keep the Indians at work? Was it contemplated by Mr. McColl, or by the Hon. David Laird, that we were to appoint agents and farm instructors to make money out of the Indians? Was it not with the expectation that they would help these men to become self-supporting? I would ask the hon, gentleman to read the report of last year and of the year before, and he will see that west and Manitoba, there are examples given where the Indians are improving, and in other cases where they have become self-supporting. It was never supposed by any person that the Indian himself was going to return to this Government cent for cent the amount of money expended upon him. On the contrary, all we can expect to-day is to keep the Indians at work. Now, from what the hon, gentleman has said, if the Reform party came into power we may conclude that he would wipe out all the agents. all the farm instructors, so that the Indian could earn with his shotgun in view of the would go back to the state in which we found him in 1878. The result would be and now there is nothing for the Indians to exactly what we have found from experi-For instance at the Onion Lake reserves, a few years ago we removed a farm instructor. When that man was removed. the Indians had gardens, they had a great his gun, but I pointed out to the hon, gentlenumber of acres under cultivation, they had their lands fenced and were making progress; and by way of showing the effect of a policy carried out upon the lines laid cultural implements, and is only earning 30 down by the hon, gentleman, I may tell the House that the next year the Indians had nothing planted, the fences had fallen down, and the whole work that that Indian farm instructor had done for the three or four years previously, was left undone for one or two seasons, and that would be the result to-day, if the hon, gentleman's ideas were adopted. But the Indian farm instructor was sent back, and matters began to improve. We keep these Indian farm instructors to-day, and although the hon, gentleman wants to know the result of that work in dollars and cents, I take it that no person dealing with Indians looks for a dollar and cent return for the expenditure that is made upon them. But the hon, gentleman will see that they have made wonderful progress, and I say that the Indians of the North-west Territories to-day, so far as their population is concerned, have made greater progress than the Indians of the United States have made. But going back to Mr. McColl's report in 1878, he says Chiefs and councillors express the desire that their children might be educated, and request me to ask the Government not only to send them teachers, but also to build them school-houses. Their appreciation of the necessity of depending more upon the product of the soil, and less upon those of the chase, is evinced by the eagerness with which they turn the agricultural implements they possess to good account.

Now, that is a little different from views enunciated by the hon. gentleman this afternoon, with glee, and his remarks were received with applause by hon, gentlemen opposite. The hon, gentleman showed how much the Indian made by the chase. He says that with his shotgun he can earn $6. and as a farmer he can only earn 30 cents. Now, that may be very clever, and calculated to catch the ear of such an almost every Indian agency in the North- audience as the hon, gentleman might be addressing in a country school-house. But no person would look upon that as an argument to convince any reasonable thinking man that the people of this country would rather have the Indians go back to the use of their shotguns whereby they could earn $6 instead of having them live peaceably upon farms and learning how to cultivate the soil, even if they could only earn 30 cents. Why, Sir, applying the hon. gentleman's argument to the Indians of the North-west, I would like to know what he fact that buffalo disappeared years ago, shoot but gophers.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not propose that the Indian should return to the use of man that the Indian who does use his gun when he has an opportunity, is making more than he can when he undertakes to use agricents during the time that he can earn $6 with his gun.

Mr. DALY. It is a most extraordinary thing that the men who earn $6 with their gun, are the very men for whom we have got to provide the most food. The hon. gentleman shakes his head again. I cannot convince him, of course. If I were to lay down the book, or to read from the figures, it would not convince him. I say that the Indians who have depended upon their guns are the very men that it costs the most money to feed, and we have to feed them. It is the man who earns 30 cents that is earning sufficient to feed himself.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I controvert that statement, and I say the hon, gentleman's report proves the contrary.

Mr. DALY. All right, I will show you later on. I am going into this question thoroughly, and I think I will be able to explode the bomb-shell the hon, gentleman supposed he had thrown into the department by his attack upon its administration. Now, coming back to his inspector, what did Mr. McColl say in 1878:

Numerous instances can be cited where the members of bands with ploughs and harrows, but without cattle or horses, have actually harnessed themselves and ploughed and harrowed their fields.

Now, should we allow that state of things to continue? Are we to allow these Indians to hitch themselves to their ploughs and harrows and to cultivate their fields in this way? That was the state of things when the hon, gentleman administered this department, but is not the condition of things now. It is a most harrowing tale, of course. Mr. McColl goes on to say:

These brief references will serve to indicate that the Indians of the North-west appreciate to a gratifying extent the advantages of looking to the soil for subsistence in the future. I have been careful to impress upon the agents the necessity of using their best efforts to stimulate the Indians to greater perseverance in the direction of agriculture, and I am sanguine as to the future advantages to them and to the Government, if reasonable and proper encouragement be afforded them to cultivate their land.

And by way of illustrating what the Government have done in that direction. I find that in carrying out the policy that was projected by Mr. McColl at that time. there was a tremendous increase of acreage brought under cultivation in Manitoba and in the North-west Territories, the figures of which I have not at hand, but I will give them later on. Another subject that has caused the expenditure of a considerable amount of money has been surveys on the different reserves. In 1878, Mr. McColl reported:

I would suggest the expediency of surveying, at as early a date as practicable, the locations they had pointed out as reserved.

From this and other sources of information, doubtless, the Deputy Superintendent General, Mr. Vankoughnet, gathered particulars for his report of 1878. As to the North-west, he says:

In the newer provinces and more remote territories of the Dominion, Indians have not yet learned the value of agriculture. As, however, the game and fish on which they now rely for subsistence, notably the buffalo in the North-west, and salmon in British Columbia, become scarce, they must turn their attention to tilling the soil or raising stock to enable them to live.

Again, he says, and this is the report of the hon, gentleman himself:

Instructions in farming or herding and raising cattle, as the character of the country inhabited by the different tribes may indicate to be best, should be furnished to the Indians, and in such manner as will effectually accomplish within the shortest period the object sought for, namely, to The Indians should make them self-supporting. be encouraged by precept, and, when necessary, by pecuniary aid, to erect houses and barns.

He says further:

Their reserves should be subdivided into lots. * * * A school should be established on each of the reserves. * * * There is nothing to prevent operations towards this much-to-be-desired end being initiated and vigorously prosecuted in the North-west Territories and in the province of Manitoba, under the supervision of competent and reliable men, who, in turn, should have over them an inspecting officer.

A thorough policy for the management, control, and education of the Indians had to be inaugurated, and the Government undertook the task with the advice and assistance of men who were familiar with the country and character of the Indians, and with what success it may be left to the public of Canada to say. Up to 1880, although the Indians of the North-west and Manitoba were gradually being induced to settle on their reserves, and begin work in a small way, and acquire property, little progress may be said to have been made prior to this year; but it will be seen by comparing the statistics of 1878 with 1894 that great development has taken place:

Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, when the House rese at six o'clock I was dealing with the Manitoba and the North-west Indians. may say by way of preface that the treaty made between the Indians of Manitoba and the North-west involved eight different obligations which the Government of Canada undertook to fulfil: 1. Payment of annuities. 2. To provide implements and tools. 3. To furnish seed grain. 4. To furnish cattle. 5. To provide treaty clothing. 6. To furnish and expended on behalf education, that is schools. 7. To survey the and Manitoba Indians:—

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Indian reserves; and S. To give the Indians education in agriculture. In looking at the figures which showed the expenditure made by the department during the last 15 years, it will be found that a number of these items are included under the head of general expenses and others under the head of destitute Indians. As I have already stated, in 1878 when the hon, member for Bothweli (Mr. Mills) was dealing with the Indians of Manitoba and the North-west the total Indian population dealt with numbered 6.687. and the total Indian population we have to deal with now numbers 23,709. In 1878 the following sums were voted by this House and expended on behalf of the North-west them their annual annuities, clothing and implements, as Superintendent Laird stated. At that time buffalo were roaming over the prairies and the Indians were gaining their livelihood out of them, and no responsibility regarding those Indians was attached to the department. Besides we must remember that at that time it was only necessary to have 300 mounted police to look after those Indians. The difference between the expenditure of $376,500 in 1878 and $776,400 in 1894, is made up of the school vote, the farm maintenance wages, the buildings and the general expense charges. The general expenses amount to $2,000, payments to destitute Indians $166,-000, less a saving now of $27,500 for destitute Indians; $1,780 for implements, and $17,500 for surveys, making an exact total increase between the years 1878 and 1894 of $400.000. I wish to emphasize the point, that whereas it only costs $32.75 per head of the Indian population in the North-west and the Territories in 1894, in 1878 it cost the country $56.30 per head. We now spend $231,750 for schools, an expenditure which is responsible for a large part of the increase. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) gave the House to understand that he was not in favour of the policy of the Government in spending so much for Indian schools. Well. we are carrying out exactly the policy which was outlined in the report of Mr. McColl, and in the report of the Deputy Superinten-

At that time the Mackenzie Government dent General laid upon the Table of the were dealing only with 6,687 Indians, most House by the hon, gentleman (Mr. Mills) of whom were in the province of Manitoba; himself in 1878. From year to year, as cirthere were scarcely any in the North-west cumstances required and as the increased with which they had to deal, beyond giving number of Indians necessitated it, we have enlarged our schools, and to-day, instead of having the ordinary day schools upon the reserves we have boarding schools and industrial schools as well. Every person. both in the United States and Canada, who has considered the question of elevating the Indians, have come to the conclusion that it is the duty of the Government to bring them up, as far as possible, to the standard of their white neighbours. It is a wise policy also, because by doing so, we are providing in the future for lessening the cost of feeding and looking after those Indians. It can be shown that whereas we are spending $231,750 for Indian schools, our payment for destitute Indians has decreased materially year after year. We are paying now some $35,000 for farm wages and maintenance of the farm instructors, as against almost nothing in 1878, but while we are doing that, we are supplying the Indians with less beef and less flour and less bacon, and the cost of the maintenance of these Indians has decreased as the cost of the farm instructors and the cost of the schools has increased. I do not think that the hon. gentleman wishes it to be understood that the policy of his party if they came into power would be to abolish boarding and industrial schools, and thus retrograde in the handling of the Indians. Sir, it is a source of satisfaction to the officers of the department and myself, who has charge of the administration of its affairs, that from all parts of the world, from Great Britain, from the United States, and from friends in Canada, who interest themselves in the matter, we have received the highest encomiums for the mode in which we are conducting Indian affairs in the North-west and Manitoba and British Columbia. Is it the policy of the hon, gentleman that we should confine ourselves strictly to the letter of the treaty, that we should furnish the Indians with implements and with oxen without instructors to show them how to utilize them. and that we should do nothing further than to erect school-houses on the reserves and place teachers in them? If that is to be the policy of the Reform party when they come into power, I wish to call the attention of the people of British Columbia and the North-west to it. I want the people of the western country to know of the small and picayune policy we are to expect from hon. gentlemen opposite should such a calamity strike the country as that they would govern its affairs. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Mills), when he spoke this afternoon, must have forgotten the policy of the Government of which he was a member in 1878, because I have shown conclusively—that we have followed the lines laid down by the superintendent in the North-west and the superintendent in Manitoba and the deputy superintendent here, as shown in the reports laid upon the Table in 1878. We are pursuing an enlightened policy towards the Inincreased dians, we are dealing with an number of them, and because our expenditure is greater now than then, are we to be charged by the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) with an improper administration of our trust? One would suppose from what the hon, gentleman says, that he and his party expected that for every dollar we expended on the Indians we would receive a dollar back. Nothing could be more absurd. Is it to be expected that we can take the untutored savage, the man who has roamed the plains without a thought of providing for the morrow, and that we can expect him to live upon the treaty money? Is it to be expected, as the hon, gentleman (Mr. Mills) would have it, that the Indian can now rise in the morning, take his gun and go out shooting for a living? However desirous the hon, gentleman may be to inaugurate a policy of that kind, I do not think he can ever succeed, because I hope and expect that the better sense of his party would be against it. The hon, gentleman looks upon the expenditure on Indian affairs in Manitoba and the North-west Territories as being extravagant, but I can tell him that the inhabitants of that country express the opinion freely that the expenditure is rather niggardly. I state here upon the responsibility of my office, that I do not believe, considering the safety and welfare of the population of the Territories, that Indian affairs can be conducted there for a dollar less than is expended to-day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And the Regina organization is a necessity?

Mr. DALY. It is a necessity, as the hon. gentleman will find out if he ever has anything to do with it. It is a necessity because in looking after these Indians we require to have men in authority on the spot who can easily go to the reserves any day when called upon. Does the hon, gentleman imagine that because everything is smooth upon the surface, and that we do not hear any reports of Indian uprisings, that there is not a serious responsibility resting upon the officers who are charged with the administration of the Indian Department? I want the hon. gentleman and the House and the country to understand that if any different policy is adopted towards the Indians by this or any other Government, that Government may wake up some fine morning and discover that they will have to pay a bill amounting to two or three million dollars. Hon, gentlemen opposite have criticised our expenditure on the Mounted Police. Well, Sir, I have entered my protest against a further reduction in the number of the Mounted Police, and I reiterate that protest here. I say a serious responsibility rests upon the shoulders of any government, or upon the shoulders of any man who recommends a further reduction of that force. force is reduced further, the people of Canada will have a bill to pay in that country that will far exceed the expenditure for Indian Affairs during the last five or six years. Although the hon, gentleman has given figures to illustrate that the Indians are earning only 30 cents a head for the instructions we are giving them in farming, I want to state that if the Government had not pursued this policy and kept the Indians on their reserves, and instructed them in the arts of peace, this country, instead of cutting down the mounted police force, would have had to increase it by 500 od 1,000 men; and by spending $231,000 in the instruction of Indian children, to fit them when they grow up to follow some useful trade or industry, we are saving at least $500,000 a year to the country which we would otherwise have to spend in maintaining police to look after them. The policy the hon, gentleman advocated this afternoon would mean that the Indians would have to ream the prairies instead of remaining on their reserves. Then, instead of seeing four or five of them at Medicine Hat or Maple Creek, or some of the other stations along the line of the railway selling buffalo horns to eke out an existence. or a few Indians at Brandon or other towns with their heads in the swill barrels of the hotels, or going about the slaughter houses trying to pick up a living—instead of seeing a few hundreds doing that sort of thing. there would be thousands. You would have Indians invading the privacy of every farm house in the North-west. Hon. gentlemer take exception from time to time to the small increase of the population in that S country; but I want to tell the hon, gentleman that if he wants to damn immigration altogether, if he wants to stop the inflow of people whether from Ontario or anywhere else, all he needs to do is to put that gunshor policy of his into operation. The policy the Government is pursuing is a wise policy, based upon many years' experience, and I will illustrate to the House the success of that policy in the past. It is all very well for the hon, gentleman to say that it costs $7 to spend $5.33 for the Indians; but I will show the hon, gentleman, the revenue of the country, with the articles by practical illustration, the benefit that I have enumerated. Now, it has to be results from the policy by results from the policy he criticises. For instance, take the Crooked Lake agency. The total cost, as shown in the Auditor: General's Report for 1893-94 is $12,697.24. This is made up as follows:-

Annuities (tre	aty obligat	tion)	$ 3,245

ing to the census, as shown in the last Indian from them, and the money they earned report, is 574; consequently, the cost of man-through the guidance and management of agement and supervision was $9.75 per capita. To that add what we paid to destitute It is to be observed that for an expenditure Indians, $4.60 per capita, and it makes a of $5,605 we get a revenue of $7,940 in total of $14.44. Of course, we must underfood and labour alone, from the Indians stand that annuities, ammunition, and on this reserve. If that were the only benetwine, and a certain proportion of implements, seed and cattle we have to supply every year under treaty obligations, whether we choose to do so or not. With proper management and a close supervision of the Indians, we brought the cost of food supplies down to a minimum, as the above statement shows. Owing to that close supervision, a large amount of Indian supplies are raised during good seasons by the Indians themselves; and, being near to the railway, and in a comparatively settled part of the country, they are enabled to sell their produce and to obtain employment. Now, on the reserve in question, the following grains and roots were raised during the past season, though it was a very dry one :-

	Bushels.
Wheat	. 1,848	$ 924	00
Oats	. 180	54	00
Barley	. 15	15	00
Potatoes	. 786	235	80
		$1,228	80

And the individual earnings of Indians on the same reserve were as follows:-

Sale of cattle and pigs do grain and roots
do wood and hay	1,470	70

Mr. Daly.

Sale of seneca root	$2,176	00
Labour, freighting. &c	80	00
Hunting, furs, &c
Miscellaneous	15	85

That money was expended by the Indians in the purchase of young stock, wagous, mowers, binders, twine, provisions, and clothing, and if they had not been kept on the reserves and taught to earn money to the amount of $6.711, we would have had to furnish them out of borne in mind that the individual Indians who sell grain of their own are rationed proportionately less by the department, and the sales are entirely from the surplus produce that is raised. The cost I have given of $4.60 per capita for the support of destitute Indians is simply an average, as many receive nothing at all from the Government, and it is the old and destitute Indians who are in receipt of sufficient food, from time to time, to support them. It will be seen from the foregoing statements. Management and supervision...... 5,605 that the Government pay to manage and supervise these Indians, $5,605, or $9.75 per capita. Owing to the supervision of the Now, the population on this reserve, accord- Indians we get $1,228 worth of produce into the supervision are chosen in the last Indian. the agents and farm instructors, was 86,711. fit the Government derived from this expenditure for management, it might be considered a good investment; but, in addition to that, the Government discharged treaty obligations through its agents, and made good progress in civilizing the Indians, and creating individuality among them. Take another agency, that of Muscowpetung's, which is north of Regina, and which has, I think, a better market for the produce of the Indians than the Crooked Lake agency. But there was a failure of the crops there last year, so that this statement is not as good as it would otherwise be. The expenditure on destitute Indians there was only $3.08 per capita, as against $4.65 per capita at the Crooked Lake reserve. At that agency last year there were 708 Indians to manage, and the expenditure was $12,134.77, and $235.55 for the Sioux band. This expenditure was made up as follows:-

Annuities (under treaty)	$ 2,780 00
Implements do	239 00
Seed grain do
Cattle do	272 00
Education (policy and treaty)	121 00
Buildings (capital)	462 (0
Management and supervision	6,275 00
Destitute Indians (Sioux)	2,172 00
Total	$12,370 00

The Indians on this reserve only raised, last year, wheat and oats, potatoes and corn, to the value of $123.40, owing to the unfortunate drought; but the surplus stock and grain which they were able to sell from their individual holdings was as follows:—

Sale of live stock	$ 57	40
do grain and roots	82	73
Hunting, sale of furs, &c	12	00
Sale of wood and hay	4,523	37
Labour and freighting	706	43
Miscellaneous and manufactures
Sale of seneca root	82	25
Total	$9,876	00

This was expended by the Indians on provisions, implements, clothing, building material and stock. The cost of supplies to destitute Indians was brought down to $2.-172, or an average of $3.08 per capita. As I have shown, the individual earnings of the Indians was $9.876. Now, we will take an agency in the north, the agency of Edmonten, as a third example. The total cost, as shown by the Auditor General's Report, is $25.197.60. This is composed of the following items:—

Annuities (treaty	obligat r	tions)	$ 3,955
Implements	do	• • • • • • • • • • • •	519

Buildings (capita	al)		2,679
Destitute Indiana	s		S,043
Management and	l superv	ision	4,676
Total	•••••		$25.198

The population on this reserve, according to the last report, is 718. Consequently the per capita cost of management and supervision was $6.50; and we paid for destitute Indians $11.20 per head, making a total of $17.70 per capita. During the past season, they raised the following quantities of grain and roots:—

	Bushels.	Value.
Wheat	1,875	$ 750	00
Oats	1,860	465	00
Barley	2,510	1,265	00
Potatoes	3,529	882	25
Garden produce	1,941	750	00
Turnips	270	7 5	00
Total		$4,187	25

And the individual earnings of Indians on the same reserves were as follows:—

Live stock
Sale of hay and wood	155	00
do furs	6,207	00
Labour. freighting, &c	666	50
Miscellaneous and manufactures	53	00
Grain and roots	40	60
Limestone, charcoal, &c	15	00

And the money was expended, as in the other cases, in the purchase of implements, clothing, building material, provisions, wagons and necessaries of life. It will be seen from this statement that the supervision and management of the Indians of the Edmonton agency was $4.676, or $6.50 per head, and owing to the supervision exercised over them, they raised produce to the value of $4.187, and their earnings by individual effort aggregated $7.196.50, or a total of $11.383.75. The three cases I have given will illustrate to the House more clearly the policy of the department in connection with the North-west Indians than the bald statement of the hon, gentleman that it cost $7 to expend $5.33 per head.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No. $7.30.

Mr. DALY. I do not take it that the hon. gentleman understands that under our treaty obligations with those Indians we are simply to see that the annuities are paid to them and provide them with implements and not take any measures to instruct and improve them. The Government would not be carrying out its treaty obligations, if it were simply to provide them with implements and not instruct them in the use of those implements. Again, before I leave the North-west Indians, it might be well to show the progress these Indians have made during the past year, and I will quote shortly from the report of the department. For instance, we find in the report of the deputy-superintendent the following on page xix:-

The agent at Assiniboine reserve writes:

"It gives me much pleasure to be able to report that these Indians have worked very hard during the past month. They have done a large amount of fall ploughing, built some new houses and repaired old ones, plastered all their stables, repaired doors, &c., to make them comfortable for the stock in winter. They have also hauled and stacked a large quantity of hay, handy to their stables, and have put up stanchions for holding cattle. These Indians are making fair progress in what may be called 'mixed farming.' They are raising wheat, oats, barley, potatoes, turnips, carrots and onions, cattle for beef, sheep, pigs and poultry, and a few make butter.

"I may also state that the Indian women of

"I may also state that the Indian women of this agency are becoming more industrious every year; they knit socks, mitts, gloves and mufflers for their families; they also tan hides for robes for white settlers. The young women make moccasins, while the old women prepare the leather. The health of the Indians has been good. Cattle, sheep and horses are in good condition and being well attended to."

Birtle Agency.—"The Indians have cultivated more potatoes this year than formerly. The yield has been good, and it is to be hoped that another year a larger area will be put in. The general health of the Indians has been good. A number in the bands make butter for their own use; in fact, have at different times effered it for sale."

Touchwood Hills Agency.—"The Indians have been employed in preparing their houses and stables for winter, and in addition Muscowequan's Band, in the latter part of October, were working repairing the boarding-school, making willow-laths, some nailing on the laths, others plastering outside. The work on the school has all been done by Indians. The live stock on the different reserves are in good condition, and the health of the Indians is also good.'

Onion Lake Agency.—" The threshing has been completed. Considerable fall ploughing has been done. The Indians have 'mudded' and whitewashed their awellings and stables, making them comfortable for the winter.

The Indian women can handle and milk their cows fairly well. A number make butter for their own use. The milk and butter, with the help of the Government rations, assist them in "The cattle are all in good condition, and the young animals thriving well. The general health of the Indians is good."

Saddle Lake Agency .- "Seventy acres were fallploughed on Saddle Lake reserve, and 80 on that of Blue Quill. The dwelling-houses and the stables of these Indians are about all 'mudded' and made comfortable for the winter, and at present the corrals are being repaired and strength-ened. The cattle are in good condition. Some families are making butter."

"On Michel's reserve the women nearly all make butter and keep a few hens.

"During September we had a number of visitors at the agency, amongst others being Mr. Ham, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Colmer and Mr. Charbonneau, of the Montreal press. These gentlemen expressed themselves as being highly pleased with everything they saw, and were particularly struck with the successful growing of tobacco, the crop being quite as good as any they had ever seen in any part of this continent. I am trying to cure these plants. I distributed some plants to about 25 different Indians, must be astonished to learn that these In-ditch, mining and hauling coal, repairing and whitewashing their houses. There has been a large amount of work done on the irrigation ditch. The general health of the Indians is good. Horses and cattle are in good condition. Indians that have heifers have retained enough hay to supply them, and others have had permission to sell hay. Indians at Lower Reserve have stored considerable potato seed. The conduct of the Indians has been good."

With regard to the Blackfoot reserve, this: is the more wonderful when we consider that the Blackfeet were the last Indians who came under the treaty:

Coutcheeching Agency .- "All the Indians here had good crops, with one exception, and there was no sickness on the reserve. On the 24th we reached Manitou Rapids. The Indians on this reserve were improving their dwelling-houses. Whilst I was on the reserve, three Indians cut 900 feet of lumber from the mill for this purpose, and intend paying for it out of the money that they will get for their hay. Before leaving the reserve I went to see a new house built by Kay-Before leaving the bay-ga-bo. It is 20 x 26, with 13-feet walls, magnificent logs, splendidly hewn and dove-tailed, plastered with lime, and whitewashed on the inside. He intends putting on a drop-siding as soon as he can afford it; has a cellar 12 x 10 feet, lined with cedar logs.

"I found everything proceeding satisfactorily on all the reserves."

Piegan Reserve.—"The Indians were at work during the early part of the month, taking up and housing their potatoes. The yield and quality were good. Having finished their crops, the Indians then began to thoroughly clean and whitewash their houses, both inside and out. A good amount of hauling has been done throughout the month by the Indians, including coal for house, blacksmith shop, agency buildings and all Indian requirements. They have been hauling building logs and corral poles from the timber limit. The health of the Indians has been very good throughout the month."

Sarcee Reserve.—"The Indians were chiefly employed in hauling hay to Calgary, erecting and repairing buildings, road-making, cutting wood, ploughing, &c. Thirty-seven acres of fall-ploughing has been done. Five houses have been built, three of good hewn logs, and two of round timber; four are completed, and one has to be roofed. Most of the houses have been whiteroofed. washed and made comfortable for the winter, and others will be attended to after payments. Indians have worked well, and are in good health. They were eager to obtain work from the settlers, and accepted every chance offered them. This year they will appreciate the benefits of their labour at haying more than heretofore, as they have not incurred any debts. All the men in the band are good haymakers, and are eager to be allowed to work during haying.

This may not seem very interesting to hon. gentlemen, but my hon friend the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and the other hon, members who know the North-west must simply be amazed when they hear these reports from such reserves as the Blackfeet reserve, the Piegan, the Sarcee reserve. They this spring, and they all grew them successfully." dians have done what the agents report.

Blackfoot Reserve.—"The Indians have been when they look back but a few years and engaged in fall-ploughing, working at irrigation remember them as wandering lazy Indians. remember them as wandering, lazy Indians, without any object in life except to get a meal as easily as they possibly could, and ready to do anything in the world but work. But. Sir. the policy pursued by the Government has enabled us to get these Indians, in the first place, to be content to stay upon the reserves, and, while they stay there, to be willing to get between the handles of the plough and plough the ground, put in the seed, and harvest the grain. And not only that, but it has enabled us to lead them to build comfortable houses for themselves and their children, to earn money by hauling coal as they do on the Blackfeet and Blood reserve, or by hauling hay and word as they do upon the Sarcee reserve. Speaking from my experience, I. can understand what hard work and indomitable energy it must have cost these agents to bring these Indians to this condition in life; and I can fairly claim that if the Government had done nothing else by this large expenditure, they have done well to hold the Indians in treaty No. 7 to the work they are doing; for there are some four or five thousand of the worst class of Indians known upon the reserves. Take the Bloods and the Blackfeet, and any man who spent any time among them ten years ago and will go there and see the progress will be simply amazed. And if any such a rals at the different places. man were told of this work without seeing That is the chief in Farmer McNeil's disit, he would scarcely believe it. Here is the best justification we can have for the policy this Government has pursued, because, as I said a short time ago, if the Government had not pursued this policy of employing farm instructors, and providing seed grain and everything necessary to bring about this condition of things, we should now be spending money to surround these reserves with mounted police, and also spending large sums for feeding the Indians. Without wishing to weary the House. I would like to call the attention of the hon, gentleman and the House to the Blood agency report, which will be found at page 87 of the Report of the Department of Indian Affairs. This report is dated 1st August, 1894:

An experiment in a small way has been made in irrigation at the agency garden which is a success, and I hope to see a number of such wheels in different parts of the reserve soon. An ordinary water-wheel with buckets for lifting is placed in the river, and this can be made to lift the water almost any height. This method of irrigating will suit our village system very well, and it has one great recommendation, viz., that it can be done at little cost.

That indicates that the Blood people are taking up the question of irrigation. report goes on:

The Indian "Black Horses" was engaged during the summer and fall in opening up the coal mine and mining coal. He got out 200 tons of ccal-130 for use of agency, farms and hospital. 50 tons for boarding-school, and over 20 tons for white settlers in Macleod and district; all of which was hauled by the Indians. They also filled the coal contract for the North-west Mounted Police at the detachments. One hundred tons of the Galt Company's coal was freighted from Lethbridge mines, and delivered to the Stand Off and Kipp detachments in a very satisfactory way. Besides the foregoing, the Indians freighted to Macleod about 50 tons of coal from the Hawk's mine, on the St. Mary's River, and made good wages at this work.

Now fancy, Mr. Speaker, any person who knews these Indians being able to say that one of them had mined 200 tons of coal, and had been engaged in delivering coal at The agent further reports: different parts.

All the freighting of flour and other supplies was done by the Indians, and this work kept a large number employed. In order to show the amount of work done by these Indians, I would point out that the total sum of money earned by individual Indians amounted to $5,772 during the twelve menths.

Fancy this sum being earned in twelve mouths by Blood Indians. To understand the full effect of this, to appreciate what it means, one should have had acquaint-ance with the Blood Indians as they were some years ago. The report says further:

The houses belonging to the Indians are much better built than they formerly were, and it is ous breaches of the law having occurred.

has a good house, horse corral, stable with hay shed opening from it, implement shed in which can be found his mower, hay-rake, wagon, &c., neatly stored away; while he has under course of erection a large cattle shed and corral. This place is the nearest approach to a white man's farm on the reserve.

"Mike" and 'Heavy Old Man" (in Farmer Jones' district) have each good houses, stables, corrals, &c. All these men named have mowers. rakes and other implements securely stored and well taken care of during winter.

The number of wagons, mowers, &c., the private property of Indians, has vastly increased, and they are taking more care of them than they used to do. A number of Indians are taking up locations and fencing them in part.

The wagons, harness and other implements supplied by the department, have also given a great impetus, and made them more anxious to follow the advice of those in charge; the sight of so much money made by the best working Indians by feighting, &c., stimulates others, and thus I am able to get all the workers I require.

During early spring the saw-mill machinery arrived, and the Indians shortly after went to the timber limit and cut logs for foundations of mill They also cut a large numand frame of same. ber of saw-logs.

Immediately after spring work, a party went to the mountains and ran these logs down the river to the mill.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to weary the House with quotations, but no one who is acquainted with the condition of these Blood Indians in past years can listen to such reports as I have just read without coming to the conclusion that the policy of the Government has not been a failure, for in dealing with these Indians, we are dealing with the worst class of Indians in the North-Then the agent among the Blackfeet, treaty No. 7, reports as follows. quote from page 89 of the report:

The Indians have been working the coal mine by themselves, and have supplied the agency, farms, schools, police, and some of the residents of Gleichen and vicinity; also some to the Sarcee Reserve, and two car-loads in part payment for two stallions to improve their stock. The money received was used to purchase blankets, saddles and make payments on their wagons and mowers. They have exchanged 20 ponies for heifers, and will take more the first opportunity. They have lost no horses of any account since the Canadian Pacific Railway Company built fences along the Their conduct has been very good, no seriline.

I could go on ad libitum, quoting from the reports of these agents to show that a similar condition of improvement exists in the different reserves. But I have particularly selected these reports from the Indians in treaty No. 7, because those Indians, as I remarked before, are possibly the worst Indians we have had to deal with in the North-west. These reports show that although it costs Canada a great deal of money to look after and administer the affairs of the Indians, that money is being well spent, and that where we are educating these men to support themselves, and to be good citizens, we are saving money to the country. Now, I come to British Columbia. The hon. gentleman made a very special attack upon the expenditure of money in British Columbia, overlooking, no doubt, the fact that the department under his care, and that of his predecesors during Mr. Mackenzie's regime expended just as much money in proportion, as we are doing. The hon, gentleman shakes his head again. I shall have to give him up, for I am afraid I shall never be able to convince him even with all the facts and figures I can give. But there are some points I would like to bring before the hon, gentleman and the House. In British Columbia, in addition to the superintendent and his two assistants, we have the following agents:—

Agent.	Agency.	No. of Reserves.	No. Bands.	Population.
H. Guillod R. H. Pidcock F. Devlin W. F. Wood R. L. T. Galbraith C. Todd Ewan Bell	Cowichan. West Coast Kwawkewith Fraser River Kamloops and Okanagan Kootenay North-west Coast Williams' Lake Babine and Upper Skeena	65 150 92 192 190 8 137 78 33	14 14 14 30 28 3 13 19	2 072 2,833 1,618 4,275 3,408 586 4,000 1,860 2,653
Indians in the interior a under any particula	nd northern portion of British (Columbia who	have not come	2,500
Total	8			25,807

Now, I suppose I could not convince the hon, gentleman that it costs more to maintain destitute Indians and to provide clothing and supplies for 25,807 Indians than it did to maintain the 5,000 or 6,000 Indians dealt with by the hon, gentleman, and the expenditure the hon. gentleman, and the expenditure the hon. gentleman had reference to is in that particular. For instance, we have nine agents, with 945 reserves, and we are dealing with 25,807 Indians, scattered over the whole territory of British Columbia. Columbia. Now, taking that into consideration, and the long distances that the Indians have to travel to their reserves, I can show the hon. gentleman, the average salary of these men being $1,200, that there are no men in the service of the Government to-day who are earning their money harder than are the agents on the reserves in British Columbia, and I venture to say that the representatives of British Columbia will bear me out in that fact. If the amount is large that we are expending there year after year in clothing, food to destitute Indians, and particularly in medical expenses, and I admit that it is, we are only carrying out what the hon, gentleman undertook to do, and did do, while he was presiding over the Department of Indian Affairs. I think, speaking from memory, that our expenditure amounts to $12,000 this year; I think that is the vote in the Estimates for medicines in British Columbia. I have here

Mr. DALY. The Indians get the money this year. The hon, gentleman would like to mislead the House, the hon, gentleman would like to mislead any person reading this discussion. Why, Sir, the figures I have given are the figures of the money that reached the Indians, and the figures that I am giving to-day represent the money that reaches the Indians. If the cost of administration is greater to-day than it was in 1878, it is by reason of the fact that the population we are dealing with is twothirds greater than it was at that time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The same population.

Mr. DALY. I beg your pardon, we have not the same population. I gave the figures to the House a moment ago, and showed conclusively that we have not the same population. But the hon, gentleman shakes his head, as he does to everything else I say. I say to the hon, gentleman that his own report, which I have under my hand, made in 1878, shows that the Indian population of British Columbia was not then two-thirds of what it is new. The figures I The figures I have given are taken from the Public Accounts, and I ask the hon, gentleman to compara them with the figures of to-day, compare the population he dealt with, and the population we have to deal with now. have shown conclusively that the cost per capita of dealing with these Indians in British Columbia is far less now than it was at that time. Now, the hon, gentleman, in dealing with British Columbia, dwelt at some length on the cost of the reserve commission. Who was responsible for this reserve commission? Was it the Macdonald Government that was in power before 1874, or was it the Macdonald Government that came into power after 1878? No. Sir. it was the Government of the Alexander Mackenzie. and Hon. the hon, gentleman himself was responsible for the commission that has cost this country so much money, and I will prove it in a short time. Now, I may say for the information of the hon, gentleman that all the negotiations that took place between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia, in reference to Indian matters, took place during the Mackenzie regime; and they are in so unsatisfactory a state that we are about to state a case as between British Columbia and this Government concerning the reserves. Now, the hon. gentleman said that we were under no obligation-he made that broad statement, that we were under no obligations to provide medicine and clothing to these Indians in British Columbia, whereas, I have quoted from the Pubiic Accounts that in one year the hon, gentleman, when at the head of the department, spent over $6,000 upon medicines

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Indians got alone in that country. What is the obligation of Canada towards those Indians? Article 13 of the terms of union, as set forth in the schedule to the British Order in Council of 16th May, 1871, which admitted British Columbia into the Dominion of Canada, reads as follows:

> The charge of the Indians and the trusteeship and management of the lands reserved for their use and benefit, shall be assumed by the Dominion Government, and a policy as liberal as that hitherto pursued by the British Columbia Government, shall be continued by the Dominion Government after the union. To earry out such policy, tracts of land of such extent as it has hitherto been the practice of the British Columbia Government to appropriate for that purpose, shall from time to time be conveyed by the local government to the Dominion Government, in trust for the use and benefit of the Indians, and, on application of the Dominion Government in case of a disagreement between the two governments respecting the quantity of such tracts of land to be so granted, the matter shall be referred for the decision of the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Matters then appeared to be going very unsatisfactorily between British Columbia and the Dominion, in more ways than one. In 1874, Mr. Laird, the then Minister of the Interior, in his report to Council, dated 2nd October, 1874, referred to this matter, and stated that, prior to the admission of British Columbia to the union, the entire annual expenditure of the Colonial Government did not exceed, at times, a few hundred dollars, and he quoted Commissioner Powell as saying that money payments had been restricted to the expenditure incurred by outrages, that no effort had been made to civilize the Indians, and to leave them alone was regarded as the best way of treating them. Mr. Walkem, then Attorney General, took exception to that, and in a long report submitted to this Government. he laid down what he considered was the policy that ought to be pursued by the Government of Canada towards the Indians of British Columbia. Matters between the Government of Canada and that of British Columbia became very strained, and, on the 2nd November, 1874, in the report already referred to, Mr. Laird recommended that an earnest appeal should be made to the Government of British Columbia to reconsider in a spirit of wisdom and patriotism the grievances of these Indians. Then it was necessary that the intervention of the Secretary of State for Secretary of State for the colonies should be called in, which was Lord Dufferin, who forwarded despatch home on 4th December, 1874, as referred to in the Order in cil based on Mr. Laird's report. we came to an arrangement that was effected in 1875 between the Dominion Government, through Hon. R. W. Scott, at that time acting Minister of Interior, and the British Columbia Government, and that was after the Secretary of State for the colonies had intervened. Mr. Walkem's suggestion made at that time was as follows:-

serves be fixed for the province as a whole, but that each nation (and not tribe) of Indians of the same language be dealt with separately.

2nd. That for the proper adjustment of Indian claims the Dominion Government do appoint an agent to reside " with each nation."

2rd. That reserves of land be set aside for each nationality of Indians, such reserves to contain, in addition to agricultural land, a large proportion of wild and forest land. Every application for a reserve shall be accompanied by a report from the agent having charge of the nation for whom the reserve is intended; and such report shall contain a census and give a description of the habits and pursuits and of the nature and quantity of land required for the use of such nation.

4th. That each reserve shall be held in trust for the use and benefit of the nation of Indians to which it has been allotted; and, in the event of any material increase or decrease hereafter of the members of a nation occupying a reserve. such reserve shall be enlarged or diminished, as the case may be, so that it shall bear a fair proportion to the members of the nation occupying it. The extra land required for any reserve shall be allotted from vacant Crown lands, and any land taken off a reserve shall revert to the pro-

5th. That the present local reserves be surrengered by the Dominion to the province as soon as may be convenient, the province agreeing to give fair compensation for any improvements or clearings made upon any reserve which may be surrendered by the Dominion and accepted by the province.

Mr. Walkem's recommendations were communicated to the Federal Government, and not approved by the Government, as the report of Hon. R. W. Scott, dated 4th November, 1875, shows. Mr. Scott took some exceptions to them, and they were not entertained at the time. Mr. Scott said that Mr. precisely with those made by Mr. Walkem. In lieu of the proposition of Mr. Walkem, Mr. Scott suggested in his report of 10th November, 1875, as follows :-

1. That, with the view to the speedy and final adjustment of the Indian reserve question in British Columbia on a satisfactory basis, the whole matter be referred to three commissioners, one to be appointed by the Government of the Dominion, one by the Government of British Columbia, and the third to be named by the Dominion and local governments jointly.

2. That the said commissioners shall, as soon as practicable after their appointment, meet at Victoria and make arrangements to visit, with ail convenient speed, in such order as may be found desirable, each Indian nation (meaning by nation all Indian tribes speaking the same lan-guage) in British Columbia, and, after full inquiry on the spot into all matters affecting the question, to fix and determine for each nation separately the number, extent and locality of the reserve or reserves to be allowed to it.

3. That, in determining the extent of the reserves to be granted to the Indians of British Columbia, no basis of acreage be fixed for the Indians of that province as a whole, but that each nation of Indians of the same language be dealt with separately.

1st. That no basis of acreage for Indian re- tween the Dominion and the local governments. which contemplate a "liberal policy" being pursued towards the Indians, and, in the case of each particular nation, regard shall be had to the habits, wants and pursuits of such nation, to the amount of territory available in the region occupied by them, and to the claims of the white settlers.

> 5. That each reserve shall be held in trust for the use and benefit of the nation of Indians to which it has been allotted, and in the event of any material increase or decrease hereafter of the numbers of a nation occupying a reserve, such reserve shall be enlarged or diminished, as the case may be, so that it shall bear a fair proportion to the members of the nation occupying it. The extra land required for any reserve shall be allotted from Crown lands, and any land taken off a reserve shall revert to the province.

> 6. That so soon as the reserve or reserves for any Indian nation shall have been fixed and determined by the commissioners as aforesaid, the existing reserves belonging to such nation, so far as they are not in whole or in part included in such new reserve or reserves so determined by the commissioners, shall be surrendered by the Dominion to the local government so soon as may be convenient, on the latter paying the former, for the benefit of the Indians, such compensation for any clearings or improvements made on any reserve so surrendered by the Dominion and accepted by the province, as may be thought reasonable by the commissioners aforesaid.

The British Columbia Government, Order in Council of the 6th January, 1876. accepted the proposals embodied in the Dominion Order in Council of the 10th November. Three commissioners were accordingly appointed, and began their labours in 1876: but in January, 1877, the British Columbia Government suggested that, with a view to diminishing the heavy cost thereof, the joint commission should be reconstructed on a Duncan's suggestions did not correspond more economical basis; and on the 23rd February, 1877, a Dominion Order in Council was passed providing that the commission should restrict its labours to places where whites and natives were living in close proximity. It was hoped that under that arrangement the commission would finish its work in a year, and that then the Indian superintendents or agents could lay out, subject to the approval of the chief commissoner of lands and works of British Columbia, the reserves in their different localities as occasion demanded. Early in the British Columbia Government pressed for the carrying out of the proposed arrangement; but the then Minister of the Interior, the Hon. David Mills, felt constrained, from the knowledge which had come to him of the critical -condition of affairs among the tribes of the interior of British Columbia, and of the many difficulties which beset the assigning of the reserves, to believe that it would be highly impolitic and inexpedient to bring into effect the arrangement contemplated by the Order in Council of the 23rd February, 1877. He feared that grave national complica-tions might result if the arrangements were 4. That the commissioners shall be guided gentions might result if the arrangements were emply by the spirit of the terms of union becarried out; and he recommended that, instead of the allotting of reserves being left to the local superintendent, Mr. Sproat be appointed sole commissioner to do that work, subject to the approval of the British Columbia Commissioner of Lands and Works, a reference to be made to a judge of the Supreme Court in the event of a disagreement. Mr. Sproat was accordingly appointed as Indian reserve commissioner by Order in Council of the 8th March, 1878, and since that date the Dominion Government has borne the whole cost of allotting reserves. What that means can be gathered from the fact that over 900 reserves have been allotted, and that last year the cost of the work was upwards of $8,000, Mr. O'Reilly now occupying the position held by Mr. Sproat. If the expense of that work has been great, and it has been great, year by year since it was entered upon, the simply been carrying Government has Dominion Government the obligated themselves to the people of British Columbia, and carrying out in full terms the Order in Council to which I have referred. I have illustrated from the figures I have given as to the expenditure made in British Columbia in 1874-75-76-77-78, that in accordance with the population the expenditure for medical attendance of pupils in 1894, as compared with ance and for medicines, supplies of imple- 1878: ments, tools, seeds, &c., was as great formerly as it is at the present moment, and in saying so I do not for a moment mean to state that the hon. member for Bothwell was doing wrong, for he was only carrying out that Liberal policy which is embodied in the Order in Council passed on the report of Hon. R. W. Scott in 1877. and we have only been carrying out the same policy inaugurated in those years only with a larger population, and as the population has increased the expenditure has advanced. I have also shown that although large expenditure has taken place in connection with the reserve commission, we are simply carrying out the obligation entered into by the Mackenzie Government in 1878 with the British Columbia Government. So it does not lie with the hon. member for Bothwell to criticise the expenditure we have made under the reserve commission. The hon. gentleman by looking at the Estimates for the present year will see that the expenses of this commission have been considerably reduced, and I hope very shortly they will be still further reduced. Another item which the hon. gentleman criticised very exhaustively was the expenditure on schools. The following statement shows the greater

We are bound under treaty to provide schools in Manitoba and the North-west. It is true we are not bound to provide boarding or industrial schools, but in establishing them we are only carrying out what experience teaches us is the only way to educate the Indians. We have to remove the children from the influence which surrounds them on the reserves, and give them that benefit which they will derive not merely from learning to read and write, but also from acquiring a knowledge of the various trades. For instance, the following table will show how the children are taught industries at the different schools:-

The average cost per capita is calculated ment of Mr. Ross, that the larger number on the average number of pupils on the of children sent to school, and the longer roll, and not on the average yearly attend- they are kept there, the better it is for ance, as all the pupils are furnished with the children and the country generally. I find from figures given the Central Prison for a year twenty-one by Mr. James L. Hughes, public school in-children can receive a year's education. We spector, that the Mimico industrial school, know that ignorance is the parent of crime, conducted by the Mowat Government, had and if that applies to white children, ten 197 pupils in residence last year, and the times more would it apply to Indian childcost per capita for the maintenance of these ren brought up with all the evil surround-pupils was $165. I showed the relative cost of conducting our Indian affairs as compared with the cost of conducting Indian affairs in the United States. In 1804, the United States 962.99, the greater part of which was ex- the House and to the people of this country pended as follows:-

The Indian population of the United States being placed at 248,000, this represents an estimated cost per capita of about $31.60. Our expenditure, in 1894, amounted to $968,-563.17, and our population being 100,227, we have a cost per capita of $9.60, as against $31.60 in the United States. The United States appropriation was not an extraceding four years will show:

The United States appropriation for schools for 1893 was $2.315.612, and there were enrolled 21,117 children, so that the provision made amounted to $109 per capita. In the same year our expenditure on schools did not exceed $300,000, and we had encost per capita in Canada $39, as against $100 in the United States. These two items in the United States appropriation:

Total $2,060,004

Our general expense and cost of management, on the same lines, do not exceed $200,000, against $2,060,000 in the United States: and in connection with their appropriation, it is interesting to note that appropriated for the Indian service $7.954. Now, I think these figures will illustrate to who are interested in this question, that the expense of conducting our Indian affairs does not begin to compare with the similar expense on the other side of the line. In order to substantiate some statements which I made a short time ago as to the decrease in expenditure, I may say that in 1878 we paid for destitute Indians in Manitoba and the North-west, when there was a population there of 6,600, $48,588, which gradually increased until it reached a maximum of $614.-515 in 1882, and that expenditure has been gradually decreased from year to year until 1894, when we only spent $206,107 on destiture Indians as compared with $614.515 in 1882, $570,458 in 1886, and $508,809 in 1887. And whereas the hon, gentleman did not expend anything on schools specifically in ordinary one, as a comparison with the pre- 1878, the expenditure for that service has gradually gone up from $2,280 in 1879 until it reached $231.750 last year; and I have a table here which shows that while the cost of maintaining our schools has increased year by year, the expenditure for destitute Indians has decreased year by year. Now, Mr. Speaker, that finishes my remarks upon the question raised by the hon, gentleman in reference to the expenditure incurred by the Government in connection with Indian af-· fairs. I have many more documents and rolled 7.700 children. making the average many facts and figures I could give, showing the necessity for the service we have here at Ottawa : but I have already delayed the House longer than I expected to do. could not, however, conveniently cut my story shorter and do justice to the case. And what have I proved? I have proved that the cost per capita of managing our Indians in British Columbia is less to-day than it was in 1878; I have shown that the cost of managing our Indians in Manitoba and the North-west, notwithstanding the $231,000 which we expended for schools, for which not a dollar was expended in 1878, is less per that country has not quite one and a half capita to-day than it was then: I have shown conclusively that we have carried items which might be compared with our out and more than carried out, our treaty general expense and cost of management obligations to those Indians by furnishing implements, tools, oxen and farm instructors. In doing this, we are but continuing the policy enunciated by the hon, gentleman and his officers in 1878, in making this large expenditure for the maintenance of Indian schools we are but carrying out the suggestions made by Mr. Vankoughnet in 1878, and laid on the Table of the House by the hon, member for Bothwell; and in expending the money we do in British Columbia in furnishing medicines and supplies to destitute Indians, we are but carrying our under other sub-heads, they pay as follows:- | the policy inaugurated then. The above shows a reduction in the expenditure, provided the amount estimated for 1895-96 will all of it be expended, amounting to $34,512.38, and a reduction of fortyfour in the number of employees. meantime, the civil government appropriation has been charged with the salaries of the staff who came over when the immigration business was transferred to this department in 1892; and over $18,000 has been added to civil government for statutory increments. But, notwithstanding that $18.-000, there is a saving of $34,512 since 1887-88, and a reduction of forty-four in the number of clerks. I will not weary the House with any more figures in connection with this matter. I will simply say that although the expenditure may have been large years ago, it has been greatly reduced. While we had fifty-one temporary ployees in 1887, we have only six now, which must indicate to the hon, gentleman that those who are administering the department are desirous of one thing only, and that is to administer it in such a way that all the business of the department will be attended to, and the most rigid economy practiced, and a way that will not only give satisfaction to the Government, but will give satisfaction to the public. I could give the hon, gentleman the position and duties of every clerk in that department, and I could illustrate to the hon, gentleman in more ways than one, how the business of the department has increased between that time and this. For instance, I showed the hon. gentleman last year, that in the timber and lands branch, in the receipts of the branch, the number of letters written and documents prepared, the work exceeded the work of the whole Department of the Interior in 1878. In addition to that, I could show that in the accountant's branch alone the Audifor General has occasioned work in that department as in every other department that necessitates the employment of three or four additional clerks. Then the hon, gentleman must remember that in his time he had no school lands, or very little school lands to All that means book-keeping administer. and clerical work. He had very little halfbreed scrip and very few half-breed claims. He had very little railway lands to deal with as we have now. He had not bonused railways with land grants as has been done since. The land grants given to railways and all the items I have enumerated have entailed a large amount of work; and I say to the hon, gentleman, with every desire to be perfectly fair, that the department is being administered as economically as it possibly can, having due consideration for the in-creased work and the necessity of giving satisfaction to the public. The hon, gentleman compares expenditure with revenue. The hon, gentleman knows that we have scarcely any revenue from Dominion lands now. Since the change with regard to preemption, where formerly we received thousands we do not now get hundreds. By an Act passed in 1891 parties were permitted to homestead their pre-emptions and since then the Dominion lands income has been decreasing year after year. In addition to other reasons for increased work, I could mention the subject of surveys. A vast amount of work has been entailed by the necessity of surveying the millions of acres that have been surveyed since 1878. A large staff has been required for making out the plans and conducting the surveys—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And re-surveys.

Mr. DALY. Only in a few cases, and most of those were made in years gone by. No corrections have had to be made in surveys that have been made under the proper system of inspection that was inaugurated a few years ago. Now, I am afraid I have wearied the House, but the subject to which I have addressed myself is a large one. and even yet I fear I have not done it justice. I have endeavoured fairly, with the material at my hands to illustrate to the hon, gentleman, and I think I have done it conclusively in the opinion of any one who looks at it from a proper standpointso far as the administration of Indian affairs is concerned it is being conducted on proper lines and on the only lines that can result in making the North-west the peaceful country we expect it to be. The hon, gentleman referred to other expenditures. Do I understand the hon, gentleman to say that he regrets that the money is being spent in the North-west, that he begrudges the money that is being expended there? Do I understand him to enunciate on behalf of his party a policy of lower expenditure in the North-west, that he does not think the money expended on these services is preper? Because, if that is his policy, I do not think the people will be disposed to agree with him, but that they will take the same view of his policy and his party as in times past. I am satisfied that on reading his speech they will come to the conclusion, as they have in former times, that the Government that has properly conducted its affairs in the North-west, the only Government that has worked upon broad lines and has followed a policy of developing and opening up the country has been the Liberal-Conservative Government, and that on the contrary, the party of gentlemen opposite has begrudged every item of expenditure that has been made in that country for the last nine years. The hon, gentleman has shown by his speech, and mere by his manner than his speech, that he begrudges every dollar expended in Indian management or territorial administration by this Government in the North-west or Manitoba.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I suppose that after so long a speech as that of the hon. gentleman, those who have listened to him are tired. I have listened for the last two hours and a half to a speech fully five-

I thought this audience was very patient. In fact the thought came into my mind that if the hon, gentleman had been speaking to a Toronto audience he would have been brought to his seat long ago; but fortunately for him he was speaking to an audience more patient than the people of the west.

Now the hon, gentleman sought to put into our mouths as Liberals a certain policy and to impress upon the people of the North-west the idea that we were opposed to a liberal expenditure of money upon the Indians of Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia. We would act as liberally in regard to the Indians as it was possible for this country to do. We take as much interest in the welfare of the Indians and would be as ready to do anything to promote their interest as the Liberal-Conservative Government.

We are in favour of the red man having everything, for we know that we have taken everything from him, and he is entitled to a liberal compensation at our hands. That would be the policy of the Liberal Government.

I understood the hon, member Bothwell to talk in that strain. did not find fault with the schools established in Manitoba or with the training given the Indians in agriculture; but he did find fault with the manner in which the money was expended, because it was extravagantly expended, and because the money appropriated for the Indians was filtered through the hands of so many officials that only a small moiety of it ever reached the Indians. It is well known that out of every dollar appropriated for their benefit the Indians received only 48 cents, and that the balance of 52 cents went to the official who handled the money and managed affairs.

Now, during the time of the Liberal Goverement from 1874 to 1878, the average amount spent for the Indians in British Columbia was $25,000. Every cent of that went into the hands of the Indians, with the exception of $6,000, or a little less than 25 per cent instead of 52 per cent which 25 per cent, instead of 52 per cent which gces into the hands of the officials under the present Administration.

Now. the hon, gentleman compared the condition of the Indians ten years ago with their condition now and said that they were better educated. That was well known to everybody. He said they were sixths of which did not bear upon the issue brought before the House by the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). The hon, Minister gave us the history of the Indians, up to the state of efficiency in which they aimost enough to enable us to write a bio are said to be at the present time? No less graphy of every Indian in the North-west a sum than $12,000,000. You would reason-Territories and British Columbia. And I ably expect that with $12,000,000 spent on wonder the hon, gentleman did not give us the education and instruction of the Indians the names. I suppose he would have done during sixteen years, they would be in a so only that he could not pronounce them, better position than they were sixteen years

> Now, is the Government deserving of that credit? Not at all. Then he went on to show that these schools were conducted as economically as possible. But it is known to everybody who has looked through the accounts of the Indian affairs, as the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and I did this year, that there are some extraordinary expenditures. An expenditure of $185 on the average for each pupil of those schools, is utterly extravagant, not $185 for the average attendance, but $185 for every pupil enrolled, when we can maintain grown up men, well fed and well clothed, in the prisons of our country for much less a sum. In addition to that, you will remember that the various religious communities sent out a large proportion of the clothes used by the Indians upon the reserves, and therefore the expenditure of the Government in that particular is reduced very much.

Now, what we contend is that the expenditure on the whole is largely beyond what it should be; and when I tell you that no less than $106.682 have been paid as salaries to the officials in the Indian Department for the province of Manitoba, you will have an idea of the extravagance in that particular; and consequently Indians do not receive the assistance which they would receive under a more economical Government.

The hon, gentleman speaks as if the Liberal party wished to keep the Indians in ignorance. Now, that is not the policy of the Liberal party. Hon, gentlemen opposite always try to put a policy of their own choosing into the mouths of the Liberal party. Why Six we have more of Liberal party. Why, Sir, we have men of superior capacity in the Liberal party, men of superior judgment, as is admitted by the entire country, and we can formulate our own policy and put a proper construction upon it, without asking hon. gentlemen opposite to do it for us. Our policy is to do all we can for the Indians, and to be as economical as possible in the distribution of the money. We take our stand upon that policy, and let it not be unknown to those who spoke upon the other side.

Now, the hon, gentleman gave many figures in regard to the position occupied by the Indians to-day in the different provinces, the various improvements amongst them. I think that does not bear upon the question at all. Our charge under better trained in the art of agricul-ture, that they were better prepared in many ways to earn their own living. the Government has been spending too much money, not only in the Indian Department, but in every other department. which I will be able to show before I take my seat. In fact, they have admitted as much themselves. We have brought this question up for many years. Last year we pressed upon the Minister of the Interior the charge that there was an extravagant expenditure of money in this department. and he stated last year, as he states tonight, that not one dollar could be saved. that they are just as economical as possible. But what did the Minister of Finance say in his Budget speech this year? He knows, and the department should know, that the said there had been more money spent in the past than was necessary, and he proposed to cut off from the Indian vote. $85,-000. We had pointed out that the expenditure was too much, that the efficiency of the department might be kept up by a militia. I am in favour of expending lesser sum, and the Minister of Finance reasonable sum in order to keep it efficient, admitted it this year by cutting down the and I am not here to-night for the purpose vote $$5,000.

Now, hon. gentlemen opposite speeches, to draw comparisons between expenditures under the Liberal administration and the corresponding expenditures under; Liberal-Conservative administration, and perhaps you will permit me to-night to give a few comparisons on this point, which I hope hon, gentlemen opposite will take to heart. We will take comparisons in controllable expenditures under the two regimes. I have no doubt that any head of department might get up here and, in a two and a half hours speech, explain their extravagance away, and sit down with the belief that he had justified such extravagance, as the hon. Minister of the Interior has done to-night. On civil Government, in 1878, there was spent by the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, $822,000; in 1894, $1,402,000 were spent under that head. Now, that is a controllable expenditure which they have increased during that time, 70 per cent. Then again, take the Department of Militia and Defence. When the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie conducted the Militia affairs of this country they were better conducted than they are to-day, and he administered that department with $618,000, whereas last year the expenditure upon Militia was no less than $1.-285,000, or an increase during that time of 170 per cert.

Now, I am not personally competent upon the efficiency of speak the administration of our militia affairs, but I will give you the testimony of a gentleman who understands them thoroughly, and if his testimony is correct, there has been blundering and extravagance in that department.

me give you the opinion Let gentleman who was in the militia for a great number of years. Col. R. H. Davis. He belonged to the 37th battallion, and in a paper read before the Military Institute. Toronto, early in 1895, he said:

A very serious charge against the Militia Department of the country. Then he goes on to say:

Their darkness and ignorance, or worse, have prevailed for many years. The country well militia is not only disorganized, but demoralized.

Now, there is the statement of a man whose testimony cannot be gain-said. Sir, let me say that I am in favour of an efficient of throwing cold water upon the militia of have this country. I know that it is chiefly comvery anxious this year in their posed of young men who would come to the rescue of their country if necessity arose. I am here to condemn the extravagant expenditure of large sums of money, without promoting the efficiency which we desire to have in our militia.

Next let me give you the opinion of the "Military Gazette," in its issue of January,

The militia has never been in a worse condition than it is to-day. Ignorance, incapacity and systematic neglect are the prominent characteristics of the present militia system.

Is that all the testimony I can bring to bear as regards the disorganization of the militia force? Major General Herbert, in his annual report of 1891, says:

The rural corps are very deficient in instruction, but their organization is still more defective. Money is spent for instruction by officers incapable of imparting it.

In whose hands is the power of appointing those officials who are incapable of imparting instruction, and to whom has money been given for imparting what was supposed to be instruction? That money has not only been a loss to the militia force, because it was expected that the force would receive instruction, but it also represents a loss to the country. I therefore condemn the extravagance shown in the militia expenditure, because the Dominion has received no adequate return for such expenditure. The Major General goes on to say:

The arms and equipments are, for the most part, obsolete.

That is the character given to the militia by those qualified to speak with authority. Need hon, gentlemen wonder that in the face of such testimony, given by high authorities, independent authorities, who have no political axes to grind, to the effect that the militia has been governed in an ignorant manner, I denounce it. We are called upon and last year it was $37.585,025, or 60 per to expend one million and a quarter dollars cent increase. Take again the redemption every year to maintain the force, and yet of the debt. In 1878 there was $1.738.745 when we criticise this expenditure we are paid on redemption of debt, and $6,400.997 accused of doing so simply for the purpose of for savings bank redemption, making a total of finding fault. Such is not the fact, but of $8,139,742, as compared with a redemption of debt last year of $1,574,628. The expenditure for the Mounted Po-, lice was necessarily more required in 1873; der a Conservative Government, the amount than it is at the present time, for there was greater danger to the people, yet the Mackenzie Government expended on that service $334.748, as compared with an expenditure by the present Government last year of $611,264, or an increase of $2 per cent. I hold that to be another extravagant expenditure that should be largely cut down.

On public works, Hon. Alexander Mackenzie spent, in 1878, $998,000, and certainly it cannot be said that he allowed the Public Works Department to be conducted in an The present Governinefficient manner. ment, however, for the purpose of putting money in the pockets of contractors, spent. in 1894, $2,034,000, or an increase of 104 per cent. Again, we have been told in this House that the Mackenzie Government increased the superannuations in larger proportion than the present Government. It is said that figures will not lie, and they do not lie in my hands, for I simply give correct figures to the House. In 1878 the expenditure under this head was $106,588: in 1894, it was $262,302, or an increase of 146 per cent.

Under the head of immigration and quarantine. I find that in 1878 the Mackenzie Government expended $180.691, as compared with $316.803 last year. I would ask hon, gentlemen opposite if more people did not come in from abroad during the regimé of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie than have come into the country since. Yet only half the money was spent under the Reform Administration as compared with the expenditure of the administration of 1894.

Let make another comparison. me T'he total controllable expenditure 1878 was $6,542,510, as compared the present expenditure of $17,927.477, or an increase of 174 per cent under the present Government. Take, again, a comparison of the cost of collecting revenue. In 1878 the cost of the Liberal Government was $5.301.124, as compared with $9,132.616 in 1894, or 72 per cent increase. Take the total expenditure in the two periods.

increased 18 per cent during the last fifteen Let me pass to the expenditure of two years. Is it not apparent that gross extrava-periods, 1878 and 1894, under the head of gance has prevailed, against which the Libe-legislation. In 1874 the Mackenzie Govern-ral party has raised its voice from one end ment expended 8618,035 under this head, of the country to the other? But let me

> In 1868, the first year under confederation, the expenditure under consolidated fund was $13,486,000 ; in 1873, six years afterwards, unhad risen to $23,316,000, or an increase during the six years of $9,830,000, an average increase for each year of $1,638,000. Take the expenditure under the Reform party. The Mackenzie Government came into power with an expenditure of $23,316,000; they went out of power with the expenditure at $23,503,000, or an increase during five years of $187,000, or an average of $37,400 yearly, as compared with an average increase under the Conservative Government of $1,638,000. Let me now take expenditure under a Conservative Government. It came into power in 1878, with the expenditure at $23,503,000, and at the end of 1894 the expenditure had increased to $37,585,000, or an increase of $14,082,000. I am giving the Government advantage of the supplementary Estimates. The average of sixteen years is $880.125, as compared with an increase during the Liberal administration of $37,400.

> In the first period under Conservative rule, the expenditure increased 73 per cent. In the second period of five years under the Liberal administration it increased less than 1 per cent, and in the third period of sixteen years under Conservative administration, it increased 60 per cent. The population under the five years of Liberal administration, increased nearly 9 per cent, while the population for the sixteen years under Conservative party, and under the benign influence of the National Policy, as the manufacturers say, it only increased 18 per cent. These are facts which cannot be controverted and which go to show the extraordinary extravagance of the present Government as compared with the economic Government of Alexander Mackenzie.

Let me give you another form of comparison. Mr. Speaker. The controllable expenditure in 1868 was $3.630,000. In 1874, when the Conservative party went out of power it was $8,324,000, or an increase of 123 per cent. The Liberal party came into power with that controllable expenditure of $8,324,000, and they went out total expenditure in the two periods. In of power leaving a controllable expenditure 1878 the total expenditure was $23.503,159. of $6,542,000, or a reduction of 21 per cent.

In 1878, the controllable expenditure was per cent.

Speaker, let another Mr. $\mathbf{m}\mathbf{e}$ take comparison to show you the difference be-In 1868 we had a population of 3.375,000, and an expenditure of \$13,486,000, or about \$4 per capita. In 1874 when the Conservative party went out of power we had a popu-\$23.316,000, or in round numbers \$6 per expenditure on their war. capita, an increase during the Conservative capita, an increase during the Conservative Notwithstanding all that, the population regime of 50 per cent on the controllable of the United States in 1894 was 68. expenditure. In 1878 when the Liberal 000,000, party went out of power, we had a population of 4,124,000, an expenditure of \$23,- compare 503.000, or \$5.70 per capita, a decrease of 5° per cent under the Liberal administration. The entire expenditure during these sixteen | years of Conservative rule, with a population of 5,000,000 rose to 7:52 per capita or an increase of 32 per cent. Here are several comparisons made upon different bases for the purpose of showing that the administration of public affairs by the Conservatives has always been more extravagant than the administration under the Liberal Government from 1874 to 1878.

I will give another comparison and I think it is a fair one. Our circumstances as regards the payments of our accounts are nearly similar to those of the United States. In 1820 the population of the United States was 9,900,000, and the expenditure, $18,285,000, or about $2 per capita. In 1830 the population of the United States was 12,886,000, and the expenditure, $15,-140,000, or $1.25 per capita. In 1840, the population of the United States was 17,000,-000, and the expenditure, $24,000.000, or about $1.50 per capita. In 1850, the population of the United States was 23.191,000. and the expenditure, $41,000,000 or an expenditure, $1.80 per capita. In 1860, the population of the United States was 31,500,-000, and the expenditure, $63,190,000, or about $2 per capita. Now, Sir, we come to the year 1860, and a change will be found in the expenditure of the United States. all know that shortly after that year there befel that country one of the most sanguinary wars that ever cursed any nation in the world. For three or four years one half that country was in deadly conflict with the other half. Property was destroyed by the millions, railways torn up, telegraph lines rendered useless, and nearly 2,000,000 of the population died on the battlefield and in the hospitals. In 1864 when the smoke of battle had passed away, they found themselves indebted to an enormous extent for the extra-what did they accomplish? To-day they $6,542,000, and in 1894, after sixteen years have only a debt of $838,000,000. They have of Conservative rule, it amounted to $17,- paid off $1,900,000,000 of their debt, and that 927,477, or an increase for that period of 174 did not hamper their prosperity in the least. per cent. They constructed railways and built canals and re-erected the cities that were destroyed by the armies of the south and of the north. tween the expenditures of the two political and yet they reduced degree after degree parties when in power. This time I will that enormous debt. Canada never had any base the comparison upon the population, war of any consequence except the little squabble that took place in the North-west ten years ago and we have heard more about that to justify our enormous expenditure than was ever heard in the Senate or lation of 3.830,000, with an expenditure of House of Representatives in regard to the > and they expended in $345,000,000 or about $5 per capita as compared with our per capita expenditure of $7.50. I know what the in Canada Finance Minister said before in answer to this, and I know what he will say now, He asked us: do you not know that there are many payments made in Canada, for which there are no corresponding payments in the United States. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I know that. Here are some of the expenditures in Canada that the Federal Government of the United States do not have to meet:

Penitentiaries	.$ 446,900
Subsidies to provinces	4.207.000
Mail subsidies and subventions	. 531,000
Government of N.W.T	. 277,000
Militia	. 1.285,000
Fisheries	467.000
Pensions and superannuations	. 287,000

Total$7,499,000

These sums total $7,499,000, leaving balance of $30,086,000 to be divided amongst 5,000,000 population, which makes $6 for every man, woman and child in the country for our ordinary expenditure. But, Sir, if we strike these items out of our calculation. we are justified in striking out of the expenditure of the United States payments made by them for which we have nothing to correspond in Canada. What are they? They are the following:-

Army pensions	$159,360,000
Cost of navy	30,136,000
Cost of military	49,642,000
Sugar bounties
Foreign diplomacy	1.750,000

Total$250,263,000

This sum must be struck out of their ac-Now, compare the balance outside count. of these items. All the general expenses for the maintenance of the entire Federal Government amount to $133,263,000, to be divided among 67,000,000 people. equal to barely $2 per capita, while we pay $6 per capita. Now, I defy and challenge ordinary expenditures of that war. There was no less a debt than $2,750,000,000 lying on the shoulders of the people in 1865, but parison of the finances of the two countries.

In 1860 the United States, after almost a travagantly, and shall I century of existence, and after building by? I think I can ve to only $12.52 per head.

party, during the last sixteen years have drawn from the people of this country, $518,560,000 to be spent in the various departments of the Government, and they have added to the debt no less than $106,000,000, which makes $624,560,000 which it cost this country to be governed during the last sixteen years, or an average of $39,000,000 every year. I am certain that if economy had prevailed to a greater extent, large sums of that money could have been saved. Now, let us compare that with the expenditure under Liberal rule. During their five years, the Liberal Administration spent $118,440,000, and increased the debt $40,000,000, making a total of $158,440,000, or an average expenditure for each year of $31.688,000. The average excess of Conservative expenditure over Liberal expenditure was $7.347,000 per year. For sixteen years this would amount to the enormous sum of $123.552,000, in excess of what would have been spent had the rate of expenditure under the Liberal Administration been maintained. Sir, have you ever considered what an enormous amount $133,000,000 is? Let me make it a little plainer, so that we may be able to grasp it. We are accustomed in this House to talk so much of millions that we have little idea of their enormity. If this sum were made into coined gold, which is worth $17.60 per ounce, it would make 316 tons of coined gold. If each ton of gold were placed upon a wagon, and a team hauled the wagon, they would form a golden procession over three miles in length. That will give you some idea of the amount of money which has been taken out of the pockets of the people of this country in excess of what would have been taken under the expenditure of the Liberal regime. If that gold were changed into silver dollars. and one placed upon another, they would form a silver colum 263 miles high.

Now, it may be argued that this expediture was necessary. Some of it was spent on works of no public utility. their extravagance in the management of and other great sums were spent ex-venture many public works, and making provision that word. Let me give you a few instances for various undertakings, had a debt of in which money has been spent corruptly. only $64.843.000, while we, a little country and blundering and incapacity exhibited, of only 5,000,000 people, with no longer You will remember that, a few years ago. history than they had at that time, have a the contractor named Onderdonk received net debt of $250,000,000. It was admitted by the men present debt of the United States amounts then in office that that amount was lost to the people, although, like the Ministers But, Sir. let me call you attention to to-day, they would not assume the responsitive extraordinary—and if I had a more bility of it. And who does not remember powerful voice, I would put greater John Shields and the section B job in conemphasis on that word—the extraordinary—and it is a secured of steatnary expenditure which is required to ing $365,000? He was accused by the govern this country. The Conservative "Globe" newspaper, openly and above beard, and he had his alternative to take the matter into the courts; but, though he threatened to take an action for libel, the "Globe" invited him to come on; but, after letting the case lie in Osgoode Hall for six months, he withdrew it. Then, has it not been proven that in connection with the Langevin block, $300,000 was spent corruptly, and that the contracts and agreements were drawn in such a shape as to place in the hands of Charlebois, the chief contractor, the power to extract from the sub-contrators, 25 per cent of their contract prices? And need I remind you of the discussion which has taken place on the Curran bridges, in which it has been admitted that there has been a steal of $200,000 of the people's money? Nobody denies the steal, although the Government deny their responsibility; yet the money came out of the pockets of the people of Canada, and will not go back into them. Now, I refer to other extravagant expenditures:-

Little Rapids locks	$140,000
Fredericton bridge	300,000
Sheik's Island dam	150,000
Lake St. John Railway	59,000

And now I come to a particular point, and I am sorry the Minister of Railways and Canals is not in his place. I am going to give him some credit. He is deserving of credit. He took hold of the Intercolonial Railway two or three years ago and managed it in such a masterly manner that he saved $500,000, and I am prepared to give him the credit for this. He can give the credit to Mr. Pottinger or any other man he pleases, but I give it to him. And I give him credit for this, that he says he has not interfered with the efficiency of the road in any particular but ordered his engineer to maintain the condition of the road and cut down the expenditure. The result was that he saved this country $500,000 or $600,000. But how many years has the Liberal party pointed out in this House to the Government years, and every year I have pointed out. and the Reform party has pointed out, that that road was not run in an economical manner. We proposed the appointment of a commission to investigate the matter, but one after another hon, gentlemen opposite got up and said that everything was done as economically as possible and that not a dollar could be saved. Yet after fourteen years of deficits, $500,000 each year, making a total of $7,000,000 taken out of the pockets of the people, the Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Haggart, saved $500,000, and thus showed that the Opposition were right in their protests. But what about the Ministers of Railways who preceded him? credit is to be given the present Minister for saving half a million dollars, the responsibility rests on the Government of not having effected that saving years ago.

Then there has been a great deal of spent in works of no money national Will utility. any hon. gentleman say that the Tay Canal is a posite work of national utility? In that canal, only 6 miles long, which runs through a level country, for the canal has only one lock where it empties into the Rideau Canal, $83,000 per mile has been sunk, or no less than $476,000 altogether. I never heard any one yet attempt to justify that expenditure. I have heard the Minister of Railways and Canals plead this justification on the public platform, that when the grant was asked in 1883, the Liberal party did not oppose it. But he must admit that I am not responsible. Had I been here I would have opposed it: and it is no justification for taking money out of the pockets of the people to say that the Liberals did not oppose it. There was at that time only $132,000 required. The following year Sir Charles Tupper brought in another estimate, and the ensuing years up to 1887 further amounts were voted each year to build the canal.

hon. members know what boats There is the steamply on the canal? "John Haggart," 117 tons; " Harry Bateman," 116 there is a yacht belonging to Mr. Peter Mc-Laren, who goes up and down the river in it for the enjoyment of himself and family; there are two other boats called the 'Rover" and the "Firefly," and an old tug not deserving of a name, and which has not got ere. This is the whole flotilla that navigates this grand canal, at an expense to the country of a half million dollars. What revenue is received from this public work every year? The magnificent sum of $126. How much does it cost for maintenance? Last year it cost $2,000 besides the interest at 4 per cent on the $500,000, making $20,000, or a total of $22,000 for maintaining this canal which is not worth 5 cents to the people.

Then another work of the national utility

Then another work of the national utility is the Trent Valley Navigation Canal. That is a work which should belong to the province, and which will never become a national one. I challenge any one to show me where at any point it can become national. You can only get six feet of water at any point on the canal, and in fact now ene of the locks is only fitted for 5 feet of water. The shipping from the northern lakes wil never be able to send their boats through the canal to reach Lake Ontario. because the cost of loading and reloading would be greater than the expense of going round by the upper peninsula. So eminent an engineer as Mr. Shanly said it would never be more than a local work. Yet this Government have spent no less than $803,-000 on it, and they have now a contract given to Mr. Onderdonk, of Canadian Pacific Railway fame, for $492,000, making $1,250,000 which will be spent for the purpose of giving a route—and a long route at that—to 12 or 15 districts. Had it not been for the late Sir John Macdonald, this work would have been in the hands of the local government.

Arrangements had been entered into between Sir Oliver Mowat and the late Mr. Mackenzie, under which Alexander Oliver was to take it over. All the negotiations were ready to be signed when Mr. Mackenzie was defeated in September, 1878. and the arrangements were not completed. Sir John Macdonald went before the constituencies and said he would make this a national work. Every year, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, and 1887, money has been voted until nearly $800,000 has been spent, and now, on the eve of another election, the Government is about to spend $492,000 more in order to curry favour with the constituencies along that line.

I might go on almost ad infinitum pointing out the various extravagances, but I will be satisfied with pointing be satisfied one or two more. Do you really suppose that this Royal Commission on the liquor question was not an absolute waste of money-$91,000 thrown away? The result of that royal commission is not worth the snap of one's finger, so far as any practical value can arise from it. It was appointed solely to avoid a direct vote upon the prohibition question; and if I could only appeal privately to the judgment of the men looking at me from the opposite side, every one of them would say that there was not a scintilla of justification for the appointment of that commission.

If we were economical in the administration of public affairs, we would never have passed that iniquitous Franchise Act, which was passed in 1885, and which has saddled this country with a great number of inconveniences, and which has cost up to the present over $1,250,000.

For seventeen years before that, we used the local lists and no one found fault with them until Sir John Macdonald, in 1885, sought to manipulate the lists in order to get more power into his own hands. The scheme was a fit sequel to the Gerrymander Act which he introduced a few years before. In Ontario, during the last election, the Denison, Liberals polled 182,000 votes in round num- Dugas, bers, and the Conservatives 186,000; and yet the Liberals have only 27 members as compared with 59 Conservatives. What was it caused this disparity? It was the iniquitous Gerrymander and Franchise Acts.

I will not detain the House any longer, but thanking hon, members for the attention they have given to my remarks and expressing the hope that they will take to heart the facts I have established, I beg to resume my seat.

Salaries of officers of the Library...... $17,262

Mr. McMULLEN. How many officers are there?

Mr. FOSTER. The same as last year, library. exactly; there has been no addition.

Mr. MeMULLEN. I hope the Finance Minister will see his way to begin to make reduction before long. He ought really to commence this year. I do not wish to detain the committee with a long discussion of this matter, but I think that reductions should be made.

Mr. FOSTER. I will look into that matter very carefully.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. matter of no very great moment, but I observe the hon, gentleman provides for two increases amounting to $100, but in the item on page 35 ?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a mistake in addition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All the worse for the parties who were to have got the benefit.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose we could call it a clerical error, and put a "2" in there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. can't do that.

Mr. FOSTER. There will be some way out.

Mr. McMULLEN. What are the regulations as to returning books, and what is the number generaly out? I have often thought that a return should be laid on the Table at the opening of every session, showing the number of books taken out, and the number not returned, according to the rules of the library. I have no doubt there are large numbers not returned.

Mr. FOSTER. The chairman of the Library Committee, the hon, the Speaker will give the information.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rules regulating the Mr. McMULLEN. Does this complete the library will be found among the standing rules of the House of Commons, and I This is the usual would refer the hon, gentleman to these rules, beginning at 111. The following is > 114. During the Recess of Parliament, the Library and Reading Room shall be open every day in each week. Sundays and holidays excepted, from the hour of ten in the morning till three in the afternoon; and access to the Library shall be permitted to persons introduced by a member of either House, or admitted at the discretion of the Clerk or Librarian; subject to such regulations as may be deemed necessary for the security and preservation of the collection; but no one shall be allowed to take any book out of the Library, except members of either House, and such others as may be authorized by the Speaker of either House.

> Mr. McMULLEN. I was aware of the rule, but I wanted to know the extent to which books are got out and not returned in accordance with the regulations of the No doubt some do not comply strictly with the rules. If there are defaulters, we should know the extent to which default exists, and I think it would be of great advantage if the Library Committee would lay before Parliament a list to show who were in default, and to what extent.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think there are defaults to any considerable extent. The librarians are very particular, and if a book remains out for a considerable length of It is a time in the hands of a member of Parliament, he is notified to return it. These notifications go very frequently and the librarians take care that books do not resummary he provides only for the regular main out for any length of time. My own What is he going to do with the impression is that very few books are lost or destroyed in that way, and certainly no books of any great value to members of Parliament.

Printing, printing paper and binding.... $85,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do you propose to make a saving of $15,000?

Mr. SPEAKER. The experience of last year justified us in coming to the conclusion that $85,000 would be sufficient for the present year. The Estimate is usually made by the clerk of the Printing Committee, but the Clerk of the House had a fair idea of the amount that was required, and he thought we were justified in reducing the previous vote by $15,000.

$6,000 Archives

Mr. CASEY. What was Mr. Brymner doing in London?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He was occupied in copying important documents, especially papers relating to the two Canada's down to 1812, and immediately preceding the union of the. They were connected at the time with the provinces. Special investigation was made of those documents by Mr. Brymner himself in London.

Mr. CASEY. He was looking into what documents could be copied. I suppose.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Because I see there is a charge for a large number of copies besides.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He was investigating them, and of course had to employ some clerical assistance.

Mr. CASEY. Was his presence required there for the whole year?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I had some conversation with him the other day, and he said that many documents that he did not investigate ought to be investigated.

Mr. CASEY. Is he to be sent back?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have not information on that point.

Mr. FLINT. I would ask the Sceretary of State if any inquiry has been made, and if so with what result, as regards the missing documents connected with Confederation, concerning which considerable discusbe remembered that one of the prominent delegates connected with the original scheme of union, stated that all the documents relating to that matter and leading up to the British North America Act, would probably be found on file in the archives at Ottawa. Immediate inquiry was made. with the startling discovery that they were found. I would ask the Secretary of State if any steps have been taken to look into this matter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not able to answer the hon, gentleman off-hand, but I will get the information and convey it to him, either privately or publicly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There are. believe, a large number of documents in the Privy Council office of a historical character, and of great value. Has the Privy Council office been searched for those papers to which my hon, friend has referred?—because that would be the most likely place in which to find those documents. While I am on my feet I may as well put another question to the hon, gentleman, and it is with regard to the journals of the Frobishers. I made inquiry a few years ago about the brothers Frobishers, who, in the century about the same time that the elder Henry went from Mackinaw up into the North-west Territories, also went there, and we know from what Mr. Henry has stated we know from what Mr. Henry has stated last year in Paris by Mr. Brymner. With in his journal, that these brothers also kept respect to the printing of historical docu-

North-west Trading Company. journals would be very valuable contributions to the history of that country. I think we have here in the library in manuscript the journal of the younger Henry. The elder Henry went up into the Northwest Territories shortly after the destruction of Mackinaw by Pontiac, about 130 years ago, and the Frobishers were there about that time. We have the younger Henry's journal beginning with the year 1799, and coming down to 1814, here in the library in manuscript, and we have also in printed form the journal of Daniel Harmon, but the journals of the two Frobishers, so far as I know, have not been discovered, Yet they must be in existence somewhere, and I think likely in Montreal or Quebec.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have no doubt that a search of the Privy Council was made for these missing documents. However, I have no special knowledge, and am therefore unable to answer. With regard to the other matter. I will call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to it.

Mr. CASEY. There is something over $1,000 here in salaries to binders in connection with the Archives branch, and only about $200 is for printing. I do not undersion took place a few weeks ago. It will tand the discrepancy between the items for printing and binding.

> Mr. MONTAGUE. I have not the figures with me, not being the head of the department, but there must be some explanation.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister who is responsible for this, should have furnished the Secretary of State with a full brief. There not on file at Ottawa, and could not be are $1.045 charged for salaries of binders, and only $204 for printing. I suppose they are for binding other than printed books. The items are on page A-7. Auditor General's Report. It seems strange that binders should be specially engaged for that department when we have a Printing Bureau where binding is done. But I wish to make one or two general remarks. It is important that in addition to this considerable expenditure for accumulating precious documents. there should be a well judged expenditure every year in printing some of the more valuable ones. There is no such security for the perpetuation of a document as to have printed copies of it in a good many places. In case of a fire in the department, all of these valuable papers might be lost with no hope of replacing them. It should be left either to the archivist or to a committee to see what documents should be published. Has a search been lately made for any additional records in Paris on the carliest history of Canada?

Mr. MONTAGUE. A search was made a journal of the North-west Territories, ments, it is a matter of importance, and several of them are being printed each year. It is not desirable, however, to expend too much money, but it is intended to continue the work.

"Patent Record"...... $9,250

Mr. CASEY. Does the "Patent Record" pay its way?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It costs $9,450 for printing and engraving. There are fees charged for the registration of patents, and the amount received, not only pays for the issue of the "Record," but also covers the whole expense of the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is any fee charged for printing cuts of patented articles?

Mr. MONTAGUE. A fee is charged for issuing each patent, such fee running from $40 to $60; that includes publication.

Mr. CASEY. I notice that considerable sums are paid for lithographing, the principal amount being paid to the Sabiston Company, of Montreal, $1,200. Is not work of this class done at the Printing Bureau?

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have not facilities there for doing that special class of work.

Statistics, Printing Year-Book and Statistical Abstract of Canada...... $4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I doubt very much whether we could not advantageously wipe out this whole amount, but in any case I am decidely opposed to an increase. The amount previously voted. $3,200, is ample to more than pay for the results we obtain. There is no justification whatever for proposing that at a time when we are decreasing every other item, to increase this item by $800.

Mr. FOSTER. It was done at the urgent request of the hon, member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), and one or two other members of the Opposition who desired more copies.

Mr. CASEY. That is a pretty good joke on the part of the Finance Minister, but the Estimates were prepared before any reference was made to the subject.

Mr. SPROULE. As one who has received a number of applications for copies of this book. I may say that I have been unable to obtain copies although I have visited the different departments and have endeavoured to either buy or obtain copies, they being specially sought for by school teachers who find the book very valuable. I have received six applications from school teachers for copies of the book, but have not been able to supply them. In my opinion the Government should print a larger edition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I move that the $800 be struck off.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman (Mr. Sproule) must have none but Conservative teachers in his constituency, because, after all, it is a partisan book.

Mr. SPROULE. The last application I had was from one of the worst Grits in the county.

Mr. MONTAGUE. With all due deference to the opinion of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) there is a genuine demand for this work, and not from persons engaging in election campaigns, but from colleges and universities, and teachers in the various institutions of the country, as well as from public men in other countries. The demand last year from all sections, and from the various provinces, was greater than could be supplied by the sum voted. This small addition will not print nearly as many copies as were asked for last year. The demand comes from members of the local assemblies, and others.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a very brilliant commentary on the desire for economy by the Government, that you could not allow $500 to give the Auditor General the requisite clerical assistance to complete his work, but that you can vote $800 for this campaign document.

Mr. FOSTER. This is to meet the demand which comes from countries outside of Canada for real information in reference to the resources of the country. I suppose an antidote is necessary for some of my hon. friend's speeches which sometimes go outside. The Queen's Printer sells quite a number of copies and that will recoup the added expense, I hope.

Mr. McMULLEN. Some two years ago. this production was subjected to severe criticism in the House, and it was then shown that it was nothing less than a compilation of campaign figures for the use of the supporters of the Government. newspaper press of the country has shown clearly and distinctly that in many cases it is an attempt to offer all manner of excuses in favour of the National Policy. additional $800 would produce a respectable and reliable Year-Book, I would not hesitate a moment to consent to it, but if we are going to have a repetition of a production containing arguments in favour of the policy of the Government, then this is only money thrown away. If we do not get a guarantee that we will have a reliable statistical record, then we are better without a Year-Book. If hon, gentlemen opposite want campaign literature, they should pay for it as we do on this side of the House, and not charge it up to the country.

Mr. HUGHES. I am surprised to see that not more than $800 increase was asked for. This year applications have been coming in for this book from the teachers of the collegiate institutes and public schools throughout the land, as well as from various others. I do not say that it is exactly perfect in all respects; very few books are perfect. At the same time, there is in the work an immense amount of accurate and useful infor- to the census, in 1891 than in 1881. mation concerning the Dominion, and it is ever, it made out 7,000 fewer farmers in sought for very eagerly by teachers. Some the Dominion. I cannot understand how years ago I distributed this book in the there could be a large increase in the numcounty I represent, and ever since. I have ber of the occupants of the soil without an had numerous applications from all the increase taking place in the number of the teachers of educational institutions in the country, as well as from the cities and towns surrounding. I think the Government would be wise in spending sufficient money to furnish a copy to every school from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. FLINT. Some hon, gentlemen appear to misapprehend the line of objection taken on this side of the House. We do not object to the publication of a statistical abstract of the condition of the country, if that abstract were satisfactory and accurate. But, it appears to gentlemen on this side of the House, and I think it appears also to any impartial observer, that this is an argumentative document in favour of the Government's policy. It does not give statistical tables, and leave the reader to draw his; own conclusions, but the statistician, who is a man of a great deal of ability, proceeds to debate and argue the matter by a very ingenious method, and the whole tenor of the book is to assist the supporters of the Government in their policy and campaign utterances. All this make the book more expensive than it ought to be. lieve that without the least deterioration to the value of the book. 30 or 40 per cent of the matter in it could well be struck out. I have seen statistical abstracts published by the United States, and there is nothing of this kind in them. I made a memo, at one time of many allusions in this book which were of so strong a partisan character that it was clear that the statistician. who is a strong supporter of the present Administration, had been led away by his political feelings. Other parts of the book might be criticised as regards its arrangement, for in many cases it is very scrappy. It selects, apparently, without any logical reasons, very peculiar periods for comparison, and to my mind it conveys a very strong impression that the compiler presents only one side of the political case, so far as I think the Government should he can. caution the statistician, and insist that an immense amount of the text between the tables be struck out. It is my opinion the committee ought not vote this large sum of money for the publication of this partisan book.

Mr. McMILLAN. I was very much surprised, in looking over the Year-Book to find that an effort has been made there to make the condition of the farmers of the country in 1891, appear more prosperous than they were in 1881. It endeavoured to make out that the farmer of 1891 had an annual income of $71 more than the farmer of 1881, but, by a strange system of manipulation, it was shown that there was a large farmers, and in making a careful calculation, instead of the farmer in 1891 being $71 better off than the farmer in 1881, he was $70 worse. That is just a little mistake of $150 by the system of manipulating the number of farmers in the country. I hope that all these inferences and deductions in favour of the National Policy will disappear from the Year-Book. If it is to be of any benefit to Canadians, as well as to strangers, all the partisan writings should be struck out from it.

Mr. CASEY. As one of those who complained, in the earlier part of the session, of not getting extra copies of the Year-Book, I think I am right in saying something on the question. The Year-Book is undoubtedly open to the accusation made by my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), and by my hon, friend from Huron (Mr. MeMillan), that it is not of the nature of a statistical record at all, but of the nature of an argument based upon statistics. be made should abstract not on any such plan. It should not be a set of reasonings from the figures, but a mere setting forth of the figures themselves, leaving everybody to form their own conclusions. In that respect I am thoroughly in accord with the position that the Year-Book is a campaign document. We are all aware of the peculiar manner in which it has treated manufactured goods. Up to a few years ago the exports of manufactures as set forth in the Year-Book and in the Trade and Navigation Returns, included only those things which were commonly considered as maunfactures—the product of factories. But at a certain period it was decided to include among manufactures in these publications such articles as lumber, because it had passed through a mill. Lumber, which always used to be included amongst the products of the forest, was put among the list of manufactured goods for the purpose of booming the National Policy. That is one of the instances in which the record has been doctored for party purposes. It would take a great deal too long to read extracts from the book to show the way in which the arguments are fitted in between the tables for the purpose of misleading anybody who is not acquainted the facts or the opposing arguments. with all these faults, the Year-Book has the sole merit of containing in brief shape a mass of statistics which otherwise could only be got by compiling them from the reports of the different departments. It is for the sake of that compilation alone that I have ever expressed a desire to get hold of the book. Seeing that it is issued as a campaign decument to the extent to which I have renumber more owners of the soil, according ferred, I think those in Opposition should get it as freely as others. I am aware that a large number of these books were placed at the disposal of Ministers as well as those that were sent to members. These would. of course, go where they do most good, and I think the book should be placed also in the hands of people who can see its inconsistencies. In an election campaign it should be put in the hands of both sides. The increase in this item which the hon, member for South Oxford proposes to strike out has not been stated to be for the purpose of more widely distributing the book. We have had no explanation yet of the object of this $800. If the Minister will state distinctly that it is for printing, it will be information for the committee; but as this increase was made in the Estimates before the question of the small supply of the book was raised in the House. I do not see any connection between the two matters. I think the motion of the hon, member for South Oxford, under the circumstances, is not unreasonable.

Amendment negatived.

Aid to Agricultural Societies, North-west Territories $7,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is it proposed to distribute that amount?

Mr. MONTAGUE. This amount is the same as last year. The vote is distributed among 38 societies on the principle of the number of members belonging to each society, the largest sum any society can receive being $250. The amount is divided proportionately among the societies according to the number of their members.

Mr. CASEY. Last year one society received as much as $307, and another $262. So that principle must be new.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is for the future.

The Haras National, for the use of six stallions for the Experimental Farms.. $6,000

Mr. McMILLAN. Is this the last year this amount is to be paid?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may comfort my hon. friend's soul by saying that it is.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have great objection to the report of any Minister being used by any company to advertise their goods. At page 101 of the report of the Minister of Agriculture there is an advertisement of the goods of this company, which, I think, is out of place altogether. When they are getting such a large amount of money. I think it is wrong to allow them to have this advertisement sent throughout the length and breadth of the land at the expense of the Government, particularly as it places these animals in a very favourable light. I have seen a number of them, and I must say that I would not favour them at all as breeding animals; and for the Government to give this company such an advertisement is unjust to all the other breeders in the country who are keeping animals of the same description.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I quite agree with my hon, friend that no advertisement should appear in the report. I fancy it must be some statement in connection with the department.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is a glowing description of these animals that they are not entitled to receive.

Mr. CASEY. There is great force in the hon, gentleman's contention that the goods of a company who happen to be used by the Government should not be advertised at the public expense. I call the attention to the fact that the goods of any company which happened to be used by the Government should not be advertised at the public expense. The whole episode of this hiring of stallions from the Haras National for the purpose of improving the breed, whether of Conservative voters or of horses I do not know, is a very scandalous one, and one which reflects no credit upon the department which the Secretary of State unfortunately has to represent to-night.

Printing and distribution of reports and bulletins of Experimental Farms, and distribution of seed grains for testing by farmers; also trees and tree seeds.. $2,000

Mr. McMILLAN. When are we going to get the report of the Dairy Commissioner? Dairying is one of the most important branches of the farming industry, and we have not had a report from the Dairy Commissioner since 1893, nor have we had a report from the Experimental Farms of 1894. If there is to be any benefit to be derived from keeping a farm like this in operation, with all the expenditure it entails, benefit can only be derived when the information gained from its operation is laid before the farmers in such a manner that they can understand the benefit of it. We have not had the report of the Dairy Commissioner since 1893. It was recommended last year by the Committee on Agriculture Colonization that the dairy and farm reports should both be included in one.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The report will be in the hands of the printer at the end of this month, covering the two years, 1894 and 1895. In that the work is brought up to the end of June this year. I give my word that it will be published as quickly as the Printing Bureau will allow it to be done.

additional sum for the same class of work. Canadian artists. There was pressure brought to increase the amount after the first item was prepared. and an additional item was added, though they both might be included in the one vote.

Mr. CASEY. Yes, but that is no explanation at all. The first item apportions the expense-so much for travelling inspectors, so much for travelling dairies, so much for dairy stations, and so on. The next item which is to be added to the item already voted has nothing to show how it is to be distributed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think it would be unwise to restrict the department as to that. My hon, friend knows that the department: is run in excellent order-none better on the continent. This is for carrying out the general work. In reply to my hon, friend it not be well to have a set of magic lantern from Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior). I would say slides for the use of peripatetic lecturers that the work was not undertaken in British whom we employ. They would be much Columbia last year, but it is to be under- more interesting than the lecture we heard taken this year.

Mr. CASEY. But in explanation of an item we expect to get some statement of the work, and where there is an increase of $2,500, as in this case, we expect some explanation of how the money is to be spent. As the hon. Minister has his advice near him, he ought to be able to give the information at once.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have these items already voted for work in Nova Scotia. New Brunswick, Manitoba. North-west Territories, and British Columbia, and also this vote of $2,500 for additional work, making in all $7,500. It is under the head of maintenance, and not expected to be continuous, and therefore kept distinct.

Mr. CASEY. Is it intended to spend more on existing stations or to increase the number of stations?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is in the discretion of the department. I suppose it will increase the number of stations.

> Mr. MULOCK. I do not see, at this moment, any justification for spending money to show the skill of the Canadian people in the art of photography.

> Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon, friend will see, from his wide knowledge of these matters, that it is impossible to separate these two. In exhibiting photos of Canadian scenes you must of necessity exhibit the skill of Canadian photographers.

of this item. We have been exceedingly that is all. I move that the item be struck lenient in passing these items upon the vaguest sort of explanations-if they may be called explanations—that the hon, gentleman has given.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think my hon. friend is hardly as fair as he usually is in making the criticism he has made. Undoubtedly good will come to the country if Canada takes a high stand in any exhibition. I am sure my hon, friend agrees with me.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not. I think it is perfect rubbish.

Mr. CASEY. Is this an exhibition of photographs bought or procured by the Government, or is this for the purpose of aiding Canadian exhibitors generally at that exhibition?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand it is to aid Canadian exhibitors as well as to exhibit Canadian scenes.

Mr. CASEY. There is a photographic branch in the Department of the Interior, where a vast number of views have been obtained of scenes along the Canadian Pacific Railway, and so on. These photographs have come to the department in the regular way, and without special expense. except the cost of shipping. These should suffice to exhibit Canadian scenery.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is to meet freight and express charges.

Mr. MULOCK. Surely such a large item could not be for that purpose. Were any representations made to the Government in favour of this appropriation?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I believe so, the Photographic Association asked for this.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest that the item stand over for further information. I am not at all satisfied that this is a wise appropriation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There are no campaign pictures in it.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the hon. Minister to allow the item to stand. I do not think it is fair of him to press it. I do not wish to be unreasonable in regard to any estimates in his charge, as he is only new in office.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you move to strike it out?

Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister insists upon going on with this question I shall have to take some formal stand upon it. I think, considering the manner in which his items have been treated he would promote the progress of the others by not insisting upon this. This is a new item, and the hon. Minister cannot give details. If the hon. gentleman refuses my suggestion, I shall out.

Motion negatived.

Salaries for Organized Quarantine Districts $35,000

Mr. CASEY. I see there is a reduction on this item. The Minister is aware that cholera is again on its travels, and I should like to be assured that this reduction of $5,-500 does not mean any relaxation of the provisions taken against the introduction of cholera. I was sorry to be told the other day that certain improvements ordered by Dr. Montizambert for the quarantine station at Quebec, had been stopped, or payment was refused. Now that the fright we had some time ago has passed over, is it that less watchfulness is necessary this year? Perhaps the Minister will explain the reduction of this item.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No relaxation whatever will take place in the efforts of the department to prevent the introduction of cholera. No works have been stopped at Quebec.

Mr. CASEY. I do not suppose the Minister could tell of his own knowledge, but perhaps he will inquire about that. I am told positively that certain things had been ordered there by Dr. Montizambert, and were countermanded by orders of the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will give you the information.

Public Health in other Quarantine Districts $5.000

Mr. FORBES. Where is that going to be spent?

Mr. FOSTER. Wherever it is required, as need arises.

Tracadie Lazaretto $4,000

Mr. PRIOR. I understand this vote is in support of the Lazaretto in New Brunswick, and I believe that in accordance with terms of union, the Dominion has to look after lepers in that province. But unfortunately they do not do the same thing in British Columbia. At the present time we have some eight or ten lepers in British Columbia, all Chinese. No white people have been affected with that dreadful disease, so far. Up to the present time, in Victoria and Vancouver, the city councils have paid for their keep and their care. They have them on an island by themselves, Darcey Island, and the cities have to pay the expense of their maintenance. But they think, as I think, that it is time now that the Dominion Government took over this charge. Although there was no mention made of it in the terms of union, the reason I believe is that then there were no lepers known to be in the country. But there are some now, and we think that the Dominion should take them over, especially when we have to make a motion on this question, consider that they are all Chinese, and that I do not think we would have so strong a claim, but considering that they are all duction of drill is $479,298; miscellaneous Chinese, and that the Government get twothirds of the head tax on Chinese immigrants, the city councils of those towns think that this Government might fairly take over that charge.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the actual cost of keeping them?

Mr. PRIOR. I think $3,000 or $4,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Dominion Government are at present paying part of the expense. For the past two years the Department of Agriculture has taken part of the general vote for health, and have contributed it towards the expense of those lepers on

Mr. PRIOR. They think you ought to pay all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what score do you make this decrease of $600 in the Tracadie Lazaretto?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is a mistake of the printer; it should be $4,600. There are at present 21 lepers in the Lazaretto.

Winnipeg and St. Boniface Hospital.... $4,000

Mr. CASEY. Is this amount paid in a lump sum, or per capita?

Mr. MONTAGUE. This vote used to be $10,000 a year. It is a vote in accordance with an agreement made in 1880 between delegates from Manitoba and the Dominion. Settlement at that time had not extended in the North-west Territories to so great an extent as has followed the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The payment is made pro rata, in proportion to the number of inhabitants in each.

FRANCO-CANADIAN TREATY.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked, When is the Franco-Canadian Treaty to be finally ratified and put into operation?

The FOSTER. Franco-Canadian Treaty will be finally ratified and put in operation directly after legislation which is now pending before this House.

EXEMPTED STREAMS.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked, 1. What are the streams which were wholly or partially exempt from the operation of subsection two of section fifteen of "The Fisheries Act"? 2. What are the streams which were wholly or partially exempt from the operation of section six of chapter 51, "An Act further to amend the Fisheries Act"?

Mr. FOSTER. The following are the streams referred to :- Exempt by Order in Council: 1. Crooked Creek, Albert County, N.B.; Nashwaak River, York County, N.B.; Beaver Creek, Waterloo County, Ont. That portion of St. Francis River in the county of Richmond, in the province of Quebec. called "Brompton Falls." All that part of the Ottawa River lying between the Chaudiere Falls and Mackay's Bay, and also all that part of the Gatineau River from the mill pond above Gilmour & Co's mills at Chelsea to the mouth of the said Gatineau River. Exempted by order of the Minister: Madawaska River, Victoria County, N.B.: Presqu' He Stream, Carleton County, N.B.: Great Salmon, St. John County, Stream at Alma, Albert County, N.B. RICHMOND STATION, P.Q., AND DENI-SON MILLS MAIL CONTRACT.

Has the Postmaster General received petitions from over three hundred people asking for leave to take their mail at Richmond station post office? 6. Were the prayers of these petitioners granted or refused? 7. Is the Postmaster General aware of the fact, that the location of the new post office at to the department? Denison Mills is only at a distance of one mile and a quarter of a post office called "St. Cyr." in the county of Richmond, and that the mail could be carried from that last post office to Denison Mills post office at a greatly reduced rate, instead of having it carried from Richmond station, which is at a distance of eight miles from the actual post office of Denison Mills?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 1. Tenders were opened at the department thirty-two days after the date of the notices. 2. Advertisements were dated 13th August, 1894. 3. Tenders were opened and contract awarded on the 18th September, 1894, four days after the date fixed for the reception of tenders. H. McDarby, the lowest tenderer, received the contract. 4. The distance between the former site and the present one is one and one-quarter miles, and the office was removed because the postmaster refused to continue the office, and every effort to secure a postmaster in the immediate vicinity was unavailing. 5. A largely-signed petition was received at the department on the 31st January last, asking either that the office be restored to its former site, or that the petitioners be allowed to receive their correspondence at Richmond station. 6. The petition was not complied with for the reason given above. 7. The Postmaster General is not aware of the proximity of the Denison Mills post office to St. Cyr post office, but will have the question of serving Denison's Mills from that office inquired into without delay.

SEIZURES OF ILLICIT DISTILLERIES.

Mr. FRASER asked, 1. Have any seizures been made by Mr. Bourinot, collector of customs at Hawkesbury, N.S., in the county of Inverness, during the year 1894, of illicit distilleries? If so, now many, and their names? 2. What amount was collected from them or obtained by sale of seized property? 3. How much was paid the informer, and what sum was paid or retained by the collector?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). 1. Yes. threefrom Alex. and John Campbell, from John McIsaac, and from Alex. B. Beeton.

lector Bourinot to pay the informers in these cases. The department is not aware for removing of the sum retained by the collector.

J. A. SECRETAN.

MILLS (Bothwell) asked, What amount has been paid by the Department of Militia and Defence to J. A. Secretan, from the 1st of July, 1893, to the 1st of June, 1895? What duties has he performed? Upon what matters, if any, has he reported

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 1. The sum of $649.45 was paid to Mr. Secretan by the department, from July 1st. 1893, to June 1st. 1895. 2. His duties were of a confidential nature. 3. He reported direct to the Minister. There is no record of his report in the department.

LIEUT.-COL. JOHN GRAY.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) asked, What position in the militia of Canada does Lieut.-Col. John Gray hold at the present time? When was he appointed Superintendent of Stores? What are the special duties assigned to him as such superintendent? What is the salary allowed him? Are any allowances granted to him in addition to his salary? If so, what is the amount?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON, 1. He is inspector of stores. Appointed by Order in Council of the 31st January, 1895. 2. He was appointed Superintendent of Stores on 22nd August, 3. His duties as superintendent of stores were to take charge of all military stores at the head-quarters of his military district, being held responsible for all receipts and issues of clothing and stores. and the proper discharge of all duties assigned to the store men and labourers under his control, and to make such returns as are called for from time to time by the department. 4. His present salary is $1,200. 5. Yes, he receives a lodging allowance. 6. $1 per diem.

LIEUT.-COL. G. MATTICE.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) asked, When was Lieut.-Col. G. Mattice retired as brigade major from the service? What was the amount of allowance paid him at retirement? How long after was it before he was reinstated? What is the amount of his salary? What other sums are paid him in addition to salary? Why was he retired, and why was he reinstated?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 1. Lieut.-Col. Mattice was retired as brigade major from the service by Militia General Order No. 51, dated 25th August, 1893. 2. A gratuity Nothing has yet been collected from the of $2,400 was paid Lieut.-Col. Mattice on his above-named persons. There are no pro- -

He was not reinstated as brigade major, but was appointed superintendent of stores on the 31st January, 1895, by Order in Council, to fill the vacancy created by the removal of Lieut. Col. Gray to the position of inspector of stores.

CUSTOMS OFFICER AT COURTRIGHT.

Mr. LANDERKIN (for Mr. Lister) asked. Whether Mr. Cronk, the Customs officer at Courtright, has been superannuated or retired? If so, has the position been filled by the appointment of some other person, and if such appointment has been made, who is the appointe?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Cronk has not been superannuated or retired, and there appears to be no necessity to do so, as the records of the department show the duties of his office to be carefully and efficiently attended to.

SUGAR ISLAND.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (for Mr. Grieve) asked, Has the island about six miles east of Gananoque, in the Thousand Islands, known as "Sugar Island," been sold by the Department of Indian Affairs? If so, when? To whom, and at what price?

Mr. DALY. Sugar or Mulcaster Island was sold on the 25th July, 1894, to Alexander Ferguson, for $900.

THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. MIGNAULT asked, What is the amount paid by the Government out of the subsidy voted in aid of the construction of the Great Eastern Railway? Of the amount paid, how much was given for that part of the line extending from Yamaska to St. François du Lac?

Mr. HAGGART. The amount paid by the Government out of the subsidy voted in aid of the construction of the Great Eastern Railway is $40,345. Of the amount paid, there was given for that part of the line extending from Yamaska to St. François du Lac, $19,260.

NAVIGATION OF THE ST. JOHN RIVER.

Mr. COLTER asked, Was any work done last year in improving the navigation of the St. John River between Fredericton and Woodstock? If so, where was the work done? What are the names of those who did the work, and what is the amount received by each? Was the person who had charge of the work recommended by the engineer of the department? If not, who was,

POST OFFICE AT LAURENTIDES.

Mr. MONET (Translation) asked. 1. Whether the Government have leased the property of Ovide Brien, on which they are about to spend $350, with a view to make it the post office of Laurentides, in the county of L'Assomption? 2. If so, on what date was the lease executed and what are the conditions as to length of term and amount of rental?

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) I may say that the property of Mr. Brien was leased by the Department of Public Works. The lease was signed on the 2nd of April last, and it is for five years; the rent is $300 per annum and that includes the lighting, the fuel and all repairs to the building during the lease.

LOBSTER FISHING SEASON.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked, Have any extensions of the lobster fishing season been granted in any parts of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick? If so, what parts of the coast of each province, and what times do these extensions cover?

Mr. FOSTER. There has been no extension of the lobster fishing season in the provinces of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick.

MANITOBA SCHOOLS-BISHOP GRA-VEL'S COMMUNICATION.

Mr. HUGHES asked, 1. Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the recently published communications of Bishop Gravel, of Nicolet, Quebec, as follows:—

Sacred Congregation for the propagation of the that they learn literature and the liberal Faith.

Frotocol No. 12051.

Rome, May 14th, 1895.

Most Illustrious and Reverend Lord Bishop:

The Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda is informed that laws very onerous for the Catholics of Manitoba have been recently adopted by the Provincial Government. That fact is the more to be deplored because those laws are contrary to a condition of things established in favour of the Catholics of that province by solemn compacts, and because they discriminate against Catholic schools, which had been flourishing in that country.

It is, therefore, with reason that in order to remove such a serious danger all the Canadian Bishops have undertaken the protection of those Catholics by most praiseworthy communications with the Federal Government.

The good-will and the authority of the Domin-· ion Government in favour of the violated rights of the Catholics and in support of the efforts of the Bishops, have not been wanting. But obstacles of no light character have up to this moment prevented the carrying into effect of these good intentions. Now, however, that by the judgment of the English Privy Council, recently given, full authority is given to the Federal Government to deal with that most important business, there is hope that the affair will take such a turn that both the undoubted rights of the religion and the good of the country will be accomplished. But the opportunity must be seized without loss of time, and the protection of, those Catholics must not be abandoned. Therefore, this Sacred Council, in a matter of such great importance, cannot but encourage and confirm by its words the zeal displayed by the Catholies, and especially by the Canadian Bishops. While also praising them for the earnest work already done for that most just cause, we express the hope that they will, with all their power prosecute the noble work thus commenced and press it to a happy termination.

An erroneous opinion seems to exist in certain minds to the effect that there is no danger in what are called neutral schools, and that Catholic children may, without any difficulty attend them. For, with few exceptions, these schools, which are called neutral, because the true religion is excluded from them with all other religions, have this bad effect that they exclude the religious principles, which should preside over human affairs, and especially in the education of youth. It is not permitted to assert that the private tuition of the parents can sufficiently remedy that defect. It can only remedy the evil partially, and it does not remedy the great wrong caused by an education given in godless schools. To that, we must add the fact that the dignity of religion must be much diminished in the opinion of children if they see it deprived of all public honour and confined within the walls of private houses. What will it be, if the parents, through negligence or on account of their ordinary occupations, do not give or cause others to give to their children any other education than that given in the school, and do not provide for their religious education.

Therefore, nothing is more conducive to the preservation of the faith among the people, nothing better can be done, especially in these times, when we see it attacked by so many errors, than to inculcate by means of the Catholic schools religion and piety in the tender minds of to them by the constitution itself. In the other young children, in order that at the same time provinces the schools are common to Protestants arts they shall learn the doctrines ordained for a Christian life, and shall retain them firmly engraved in their minds for the rest of their lives.

He will have deserved well of religion who shall have given his care and his strength to the attaining of that object.

In conclusion, impressed by those principles which the Canadian bishops have promoted with so much constancy, this Sacred Council commend most strongly their zeal in favour of the religious education of the Catholics of Manitoba, and hope that they will secure the triumph of their just cause, and will save the Church from a grievous wreng.

In the meantime, &c., &c.,

(Signed) CARD, LEDOCHOWSKI, Prefect.

Mgr. Gravel's circular letter, including his report to Rome, written in French, reads as follows :-

CIRCULAR TO THE CLERGY.

Gentlemen and dear fellow workers:

I shall meet your wishes, I have no doubt, by bringing to your notice two documents relating to the Manitoba school question. The first is a memorandum which I prepared at the request of the Most Eminent Prefect of the Propaganda, and the second is a very important letter addressed by the same eminent personage to all the Bishops of the Dominion of Canada.

THE REPORT TO ROME.

Rome, December 7th, 1894.

To His Eminence Cardinal Ledochowski, Prefect of the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda: Your Eminence:

I have the honour to submit to your Eminence the report which you have requested me to prepare on the question of the Manitoba schools.

I have done the work from memory, not having at hand any book or document relating to this question.

I believe, however, that I can affirm that the account which I give of the events surrounding this affair is strictly true.

The Confederation known under the name of the Dominion of Canada is composed of seven fully organized provinces, and of four territories still partially unorganized. Manitoba is one of these seven provinces. Her capital is the town of Winnipeg, separated from the town of St. Boniface by the Red River. Winnipeg and St. Beniface are about 1,200 miles from Ottawa, the Federal Capital. Ottawa is about 120 miles from Mentreal, and 300 miles from Quebec. ists at Ottawa a Parliament for the whole Dominion of Canada, and each province administers its local affairs by a Legislature, at the head of which is a Lieutenant-Governor appointed by the Federal Government. The Governor General, who resides at Ottawa, is always an English nobleman appointed to this office by the Queen of England.

Among the local affairs left to the administration in each province, we must include all questions that relate to schools. However, the provinces are not all in the same condition in reference to schools. Quebec and Ontario, which are the two more important provinces, have a system of separate schools. This privilege is guaranteed and New Brunswick, a certain tolerance has been continuation of separate schools as in Quebec exercised towards the Catholics, who can, thanks and in Ontario. The Federal Government made exercised towards the Catholics, who can, thanks to this tolerance have their separate schools in various localities.

As far as concerns the province of Manitoba, it is well to say that it has only been under a system of Common Protestant schools since 1890. Its history before the year 1890 includes two phases, which it is necessary to understand to appreciate the present school difficulty. The first phase embraces the period that preceded its erection into a separate province, and the second phase includes the twenty years which have elapsed since its erection into a province, that is to say, from 1870 until 1890.

FIRST PHASE.

Previous to 1870, the territory which now forms a province under the name of Manitoba was part of an immense extent of country, which was civilly administrated by an English company of fur traders. That company was named the Hudson's Bay Company. It had received from the English Crown an exclusive privilege to carry on the trade in furs in that vast country, which then contained but few inhabitants, the great majerity of whom was Roman Catholic. That majority was composed of whites, half-breeds and Indians.

Wherever there was a group of population the missionaries used to open schools for Catholies, and the Protestants were also in the habit of opening schools for their co-religionists. Several of those schools, under the direction of devoted nuns, or of brothers of the Congregation of the Oblats, were enjoying a pretty large amount of prosperity. The Catholic schools were supported by the Catholics and the Protestants by the Protestants. The Hudson's Bay Company used to make them, from time to time, grants of money, as pure gifts.

Such was the state of things when an important political revolution took place in Canada. provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, which up to 1868 had been isolated, formed the confederation as stated above. The Government of the new confederation immediately turned its attention to the vast country to the north, the possession of which had been granted by the Crown to the Hudson's Bay Company, and with the consent of England, bought that country.

When that transaction became known to the inhabitants, they thought they should not allow themselves to be sold as a vile herd of cattle, and formed a government, at the head of which they put an able man named Riel, to whom they gave the mission to prevent the entrance into the country of the officials of the Government of Canada. That leader accomplished his purpose victoriously. certain troops, but were repulsed.

In that embarrassing predicament the Federal Government requested Mgr. Taché, who happened to be in Rome for the Vatican Council of 1869, to come back as soon as possible in order to pacify his people, and to act as a mediator between the two parties. Mgr. Taché hastily came back in order to play the difficult part of a pacificator. the whole country-1,200 miles in width by 600 miles in depth-entertained fears concerning the practice of their religion and the existence of their Catholic schools, after they would have passed under the authority of the Ottawa Government, composed of a majority of Protestants, and and Catholics. At the same time, in Nova Scotia terms. They asked, amongst other things, the that promise to them.

The same assurance was given to them by the Governor General in the name of the Queen. And Lord Carnaryon, the Colonial Minister in London, telegraphed to the Dominion Government, in the name of the Queen, to grant their demand.

A clause was therefore agreed upon as follows: "The rights and privileges which the Protestant or Catholic population was enjoying before the union, either by law or by practice, shall be preserved to them after the union.'

This quotation is made from memory, but it certainly gives the meaning of the clause in question. Peace was then restored, and the first phase of the history of that country ended by its union with the Canada Confederation.

SECOND PHASE.

Immediately after the union the Federal Government constituted into a province under the name of "Province of Manitoba" a portion of the territory that it had bought, and gave it for the administration of its local affairs a legislature composed of a Lieutenant-Governor and two Houses, as in the old provinces.

At its first session that Legislature commenced to make law in conformity with the Union Act, as understood by everybody, and gave legal existence to a system of separate schools.

Two Boards of Administration were established. the one Protestant and the other Catholic, each one having charge of the school affairs of its creed. The Catholics had to maintain their schools, and received annually, out of the public moneys, a sum which was in proportion to the number of children frequenting these schools. This system, so just and so satisfactory to both Catholics and Protestants, remained in operation until 1890.

During those twenty years of separate schools. Protestant immigration was more numerous than Catholic immigration. Protestants having thus become powerful in the Legislature of Manitoba. and most of them being foreigners newly arrived in the country, and being, therefore, little acquainted with the negotiations which had taken place at the time of the union, thought they could simplify that school administration, and enacted a law abolishing the Catholic schools, and establishing Common Schools, with only one board of administration, exclusively composed of Protestants. It was an audacious violation, by the right of the stronger, of the most solemn compact and the most sacred rights. In their trials the Catholics applied to the Federal Parliament, and asked the disallowance of that unjust law. The Federal Parliament, by an unanimous resolu-That leader accomplished his purpose victoriously, tion, advised the Catholics rather to apply to the The Canadian officers presented themselves with courts, in order to have the law from which they tion, advised the Catholics rather to apply to the were suffering declared unconstitutional, the cost of those appeals to the courts of justice to be defrayed by the Federal Government.

They appealed They appealed from this judgment to the Supreme Court of Canada, composed of seven members, the majority of whom were Protestants. This court unanimously held the law to be unconstitutional. The Manitoba Government then appealed from that judgment to the Privy Council of the Queen sitting in London. Mr. HUGHES.

Manitoba than to maintain the rights of the commence a struggle against Catholic teaching. Catholics. It, therefore, reversed the judgment After having triumphed in Manitoba, they would of the Supreme Court of Canada, and declared to move the struggle into another province. It was be constitutional the obnoxious law passed by the Legislature of Manitoba. To reach that conclusion the Privy Council affected not to understand the force of the circumstantial evidence furnished by the negotiations which had taken place at the time of the union, and by the solemn assurances given by the Crown. It claimed to consider itself bound by the letter of the Act of the union, which says that: "The rights and privileges which the inhabitants enjoyed by law or practice before the union should be preserved to them."

Then, says the Privy Council, under the regime of the Hudson's Bay Company, there was no. school law, there was only a practice which consisted in the Catholics having their schools, which they supported by their own money, as the Protestants supported theirs. The present law of Manitoba leaves the Catholics in the enjoyment of the right which they had by practice before the union to create Catholic schools at their own expense. Therefore, it does not violate the compact of union is not unconstitutional.

That reasoning is so lame that it is impossible to believe that men of such intellectual strength as the noble lords could have advanced it in good faith.

Before the union, indeed, the Catholics supported their schools, but were not taxed to support Protestant schools, whereas under this new law the Catholics, while sustaining their own schools, are obliged to pay for the support of the Protestant schools, which the Privy Council is pleased to call neutral schools. The principal reason of the judgment is, therefore, false.

This judgment was a cause of astonishment for all the Dominion of Canada. The Federal Government was dumbfounded by it. All the public men of Canada well know that the Catholics of Manitoba are subjected to a crying act of injustice. But what can effectively be done for them after this judgment? The friends of order and justice all over the country were putting this question to themselves, when another audacious blow was struck by the Legislature of Manitoba.

By the deplorable law of 1890, all schools be-The Catholics lost the property came common. in their school-houses, their Catholic Bureau of Administration and fifteen thousand dollars which they had in their treasury. However, as the Catholics are generally grouped into parishes, the school officials of each parish elected by those interested men were found to be Catholic, which gave a Catholic character to the schools their jurisdiction. This was a remwithin nant of self-government on which they set much value. By a law passed in 1893. the Legislature forbids all religious teaching in the schools, and permits only the reading of a passage from the Bible at the opening of the This law contains other vexatious clauses on the subject of school books and of the qualifications to be required from teachers. There was no other alternative for the Catholics but to send their children to the neutral, but in reality Protestant, schools, or to build new school-houses, and to engage and pay teachers. and at the same time to be taxed for the support of Protestant schools. With a courage beyond all praise, they decided upon this last alternative.

In the meanwhile, Mgr. Taché presented a new petition to the Federal Government. But this time, he believed he had special grounds for urging all the Bishops of Canada to join with him. The first reason which occurred to him was that right by a special clause; the fanatics and some unbelievers in Canada had important that it would be known that the Bishops were on their guard. The second reason was that many Protestants, and even Catholics, after the judgment of the Privy Council, were saying that the Catholics of Manitoba had no reason to consider themselves injured. The Legislature having given them good common schools they should be satisfied; it was said that in the provinces where a system of separate schools did not exist there was not much fuss made about it; that neither the people nor the Bishops were complaining; that besides, the Church got along very well with neutral schools as was proved in the United States. Now, by calling on the Bishops to join with him in petitioning the Government to remedy the evils of which the Catholics of Manitoba were complaining, the Catholics of all the provinces would be aroused against the anti-Catholic agitators, and it would become evident that, in the opinion of the Episcopate of the Dominion, the Catholies were right in believing themselves injured, and in making complaints, and that the church was not so easily satisfied with neutral schools as was claimed.

Mgr. Taché then prepared a petition very strongly drawn up, in which he demanded of the Federal Government to adopt remedial measures for the wrongs of the Catholics, and he requested Mgr. Emard, Bishop of Valleyfield, and Mgr. Larocque. Bishop of Sherbrooke, to solicit the signatures of all the Bishops in favour of this document. The mission of these prelates was thoroughly successful. All the Bishops, to the number of twenty-eight, willingly gave their signatures.

But the Federal Government, on its part, after receiving the appeal of Mgr. Taché, inquired of the Supreme Court of Canada if it would be constitutional for it to intervene in the Manitoba school question. The Supreme Court answered in the negative. The Government then brought the opinion of the Supreme Court before the Privy Council of London, where the question is still pending, that is to say, the question whether the Federal Government can constitutionally intervene in favour of the Catholics of Manitoba after the judgment of the Privy Council, which has been mentioned above.

While the Government was taking this question before the courts, the petition of Mgr. Taché was signed and reached Ottawa. In response to this petition, the Federal Government decided to make an energetic representation to the Government of Manitoba.

They communicated to it, therefore, the letter of the Bishops with firm and dignified comments, which ought to have made it perfectly clear to the Government of Manitoba that the complaints of the Bishops were founded in reason, and that it should find means to remedy the just grounds of complaint of the Catholics.

The Government of Manitoba haughtily replied that it would change its legislation in nothing.

So matters stand.

It is, therefore, beyond controversy:

1. That the Catholics had their Catholic schools before the union;

2. That the Federal Government, the Governor General and the Colonial Minister in the name of the Crown, had promised them that they should have, after the union, separate schools, as in the Province of Quebec;
3. That the Act of the union secured them this

4. That during the twenty years following the evidently chosen the province of Manitoba to union the Legislature of Manitoba, interpreting the clause of the Act of union, relating to schools, according to the intention of its framers, had given the Catholics separate schools;

5. That the same Legislature arbitrarily deprived them of this right by the laws of 1890 and 1893:

6. That if this violation of a most incontestable right is not remedied, this anti-Catholic move-ment against separate schools will perhaps ex-tend to other provinces, and place Catholic interests in danger;

7. That it is important that the Bishops should prudence of these prelates to secure a happy not permit their noble petition to become a dead, issue for so serious a business." letter, but that they should, on the contrary. I communicate to you this important document, comings to vindicate their rights by a common which should render more and more dear to us course of action, in order to show to the anti-the cause of our Manitoba brethren. Cathelic agitators, and to the faithful who may, have been misled, that it is the sentiment of the Episcopate that the Catholics of Manitoba have been deprived of a clear and sacred right, and that the Catholies should keep themselves on the alert to prevent the same attempt in the other provinces.

It is certain that the Sacred Congregation cancontribute assistance of great value to the Bishops by giving them its support. As stated above, it cause, and that the church would be well satis-; Great Britain and Ireland? fied with the common schools of Manitoba, just as it is satisfied with the public schools of the United States. This opinion, which it has been sought to create among the public, would fall to the ground in the face of a support given to the Bishops by the l'ropaganda.

But in what way can this Sacred Congregation i accomplish this intervention?

It might, perhaps, through the intervention of Eminence Cardinal Vaughan. represent, among other things, to the Colonial Minister in London, that his predecessor, Lord Carnarvon, had given, in his own name, and in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, the assurance to the Catholics of Manitoba that they would have their separate schools, that, consequently, the Crown is bound in honour to fulfil these solemn promises, if it does not wish to alienate the heart of the Catholics of Canada. An intimation of this nature might have a good effect in reference to the judgment, which the Privy Council will render within a few months upon the question, which the Canadian Government has submitted

At the same time, this Sacred Congregation might address to all the Bishops of Canada congratulations upon the act so noble and truly episcopal, which they have accomplished by their petition to the Government in favour of the persecuted Catholics of Manitoba, and express the hope that they will continue by common action to demand the equitable settlement of this question. Besides the fact that such a letter would be calculated to create a favourable opinion on the question, and unite Catholics in the vindication of their violated rights, it would greatly strengthen the hands of the future Archbishop of St. Boniface, upon whose shoulders the Holy See is about to place the burden of a succession difficult to be borne.

I have the honour to be, With profound veneration, Your Eminence's humble servant, ELPHEGE, Bishop of Nicolet.

The most eminent prefect at once placed himself in communication with Cardinal Vaughan, and it may be that his intervention has contributed, on his part, to create in the English official world an opinion favourable to the Catholics of Manitoba.

However that may be. His Eminence wrote me on the 18th March that "He had seized the occasion of the favourable judgment of the Privy Council to send a circular letter to all the Bishops of Canada, trusting much to the zeal and

DELAYED RETURN.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to say that I had a question on the paper the other day in reference to the Exchange bank, and at your request, or at the request of the Government, it stood. I will repeat it to-day from the other list.

Mr. FOSTER, I suppose the hon, gentleman had thought better of the question, and had dropped it, therefore I have not my answer here. If he will put it on again, I will be prepared to answer him.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Well, I did not take it off.

Mr. FOSTER. If whoever took it off, will put it on again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon, gentleman allowed that question to stand at the request of the Government, it is not proper that it should have been dropped from the paper, and the Minister ought to have been prepared to answer.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, my hon. friend need not get up and get at me because it was dropped. It was not my fault.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No. but I will get at you.

Mr. SPEAKER. The fault was in the Printing Bureau. The question will be put on the paper for to-morrow.

SEIZURES OF CANADIAN SEALERS BY RUSSIAN WAR SHIPS.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to call the artention of the Government to some seizures of British Canadian ships that were made in 1892 by Russian war ships in that part of Behring Sea that is supposed to belong to Russia. I specially refer to the schooners "Carmelite" and "McGowan." They were ships owned by British Canadians, and were seized, as alleged, by the officers some forty miles from land, on an allogation that they had broken the Russian regulations with respect to fur seal fishing within three miles of land. I am informed that information as to the improper seizures was regularly laid before the Canadian Government, and I understand they took action with regard to it. That action, I suppose, was to lay the information before the Imperial Government with a view to having pressure brought to bear to secure compensation. The information placed in my hands is to the effect that the loss to the owners reached at least $50,000, and they seem, as is explained to me, to be without any information as to what action the Imperial Government took as to the seizure of those two ships. I need not repeat the information given to me, but if it is approximately correct, there has been a very gross outrage committed, and one would imagine that, unless the facts are in controversy, there would be no difficulty in obtaining from the Russian Government that compensation which in such a case should be given. I would ask the Government if they are in a position to give any information on the matter?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. have had a good deal to do with that subject, and it is very fresh in my mind. The circumstances are as distressing and sad as circumstances of that kind can possibly be, because the delay in reaching any adjustment of these claims, which the Canadian Government from an ex parte examination considered to be fair and equitable, has been so disastrous that I am quite aware the hon. gentleman is well informed when he says the consequences of the delay are bearing heavily upon people who committed offence, did no wrong and contravened no law, national or international. The Canadian Government received in due course the proofs of the claim on the part of these vessels, as well as on behalf of other vessels which were unfortunately molested and seized by the Russian authorities, and the result was, in short, this: that after delay the Russian Government undertook to make an examination into the facts on their own part, that is to say, by means of an exparte commission issued on the authority of the Russian Government only. The place where the seizures occurred being a great distance off, the delay necessarily followed. The result of the investigation was to clear about four ships, if my memory serves me. even according to the Russian commissioners' report, that is to say they gave those vessels the benefit of the doubt; there was sufficient proof to convince even the Russian commissioners in that one-sided investigation that at least four of those ships had been improperly seized. The other ships, they reported had gone into Russian waters and violated the Russian hunting laws. That occurred long ago. The Canadian Government pressed continuously and constantly the British authorities to expedite some method of adjustment. They pressed, for instance, that the amount of damages in the case of vessels that were acknowledged to have been seized unlawfully should be considered without delay. They represented how hard it had borne on the owners and all concerned, and they pressed for a commission to investigate the facts in regard to the other vessels that were affected; and recently finding that the British Government were dealing with the seal fisheries Bill. so far as the Russian portions of the waters were affected, taking power to continue the agreement regarding the zone around the Commander Islands and matters of that kind for the protection of the fur seal in those waters, the Canadian Government hastened to press upon the attention of Her Majesty's Government their views that no concessions ought to be made to Russia under the circumstances unless there was reason to believe that some conclusion would be shortly reached as regards the settlement of those claims for damages, and again called attention to the loss that had occurred through that delay, and presented various other points that had been pressed upon the attention of Her Majesty's Government in respect to some stringent clauses that obtained in the legislation which was expiring on 1st July next. Many of those points were met, and Her Majesty's Government informed the Canadian Government-and I feel I am warranted in making this statementthat they were satisfied that the negotiations in connection with the matter of damages was proceeding, that it was proceeding in a satisfactory manner notwithstanding the delay which had occurred, and that an endeavour would be made in this legislation to meet the wishes of the Canadian Government in respect to some of the provisions of the Bill. I observe from the newspapers that the clause contained in the old Bill, whereby vessels seized came into court with a presumption of guilt against them, has heen dropped. Other changes have also been made. But the only definite information up to date in regard to the adjustment and settlement of these claims is that these negotiations with the Russian Government are proceeding. I may call the attention of the House, and it is only fair to Her Majesty's Government to make this statement. te some of the difficulties that occur in ernment. even presenting the case of the sealers in a matter of this kind. The crews scatter, they are here to-day and away to-morrow, they are scaling one season and they are off around the world on other business altogether as sailors the next; and in regard to some information which the Colonial Office desired—I do not think as regards the vessels the seizure of which was not justified, but with regard to other vessels whose claims were being pressed—only recently such information had been obtained by the owners, and that information was considered by the Colonial Office as very important to have in their possession before whether, so far as he knows, any British pressing for a commission of inquiry into vessel has been assigned for patrol duty in those claims. But everything we could do the Behring Sea for the present season? on this side of the water to press this matter has been done. The owners have repeatedly placed themselves in communication with me and have detailed the hard-gentleman, because these papers have not ship of the case, which no one on this side passed under my particular attention this of the water denies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon, gentleman remember if the vessels to which I for that duty. I am not aware that that have called attention, the "Carmelite" and course has been followed this season, al-"McGowan," were two of those vessels that though that paper may have passed through were admitted to have been seized improperly?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER, I can speak specifically with regard to the "McGowan," but I would not like to speak Jefinitely as to the other. There were four other cases.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the date of the communication from the Imperial Government stating that the matter was proceeding?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A few days ago. It was in connection with the Bill which is being hurried through both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So no good purpose would be served probably by bringing this matter again in this House? The facts that have been laid before me appear to have been exceedingly strong. But, if a very late communication has been received stating that it is now being pressed by the Imperial Government, and if there appears to be any ground at all for believing that the compensation with respect to these seizures which are acknowledged to be erroneous, is likely to be granted, it might not be desirable for me to pursue the matter further. In any other view of the case, it would be necessary, I think, in the interests of these people to place the matter before the House.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would hesitate to advise the hon, gentleman as to any course. Far be it from me to say that he could do nothing to press this matter upon the attention of Her Majesty's Gov-In forcing this case prominently before the attention of that Government E would gladly welcome assistance from him or from any other hon, gentleman in the House. The discussion of the question might have a very good effect, in showing the publie interest in the question, outside of what might be called the departmental interest.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman will kindly take it as notice that I will, at an early day, on going into Supply, bring the matter before the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to inquire of the Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER, I am not able to give a definite answer to the hon. ish Government and the United States Government to exchange lists of vessels told off Council in the ordinary way to the Marine Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me that with due regard to the interest of the Canadian sealers, the Government would do well to request the British Government to have a moderate number of British menof-war patrolling Behring Sea while these disputes are going on. I have a strong impression that the presence of some British gunboats in that region would exert a very wholesome moral effect on both Russians and Americans, and that it is only due to our people that there should be in the neighbourhood some British authorities to whom they could appeal. I do not want in the slightest degree to bring about any collision, but the hon, gentleman will remember, I do not doubt, that under somewhat similar conditions, the Americans were in the habit of keeping one or two cruisers in the vicinity of our cruisers, simply that evidence might be fairly collected and obtained and that their Government would be kept well advised.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER, I appreciate what the hon, gentleman has referred to, but there may be a reason why the sealers have not been particularly anxious for Her Majesty's ships coming to their assistance this season, because the principal work they performed last year, was to receive at the hands of the United States vessels two ships that had been seized by the United States authorities contrary to all regulations, and which were afterwards re- Shore Railway Company of Nova Scotia, or any leased when brought into port.

Mr. PRIOR. The information stated by the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) is quite correct. The matter has received the attention of the British Columbia members. and we have kept in touch with the Minister: of Justice on the subject. Great hardships are being perpetrated on the sealers, as the hon, member stated, by the delay that has occurred, and from all we can hear from the Government they cannot get any satisfaction from the Imperial Government, although the matter has been pressed upon them time and ! time again. Not only the two ships mentioned by the Minister of Justice, but other ships have also been badly treated, as we consider, by the Imperial authorities. We have the assurance of the Minister of Justice that everything is being done that possibly can be done in the case. In regard to the remarks of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), I can also say that the pany was incorporated in 1892, and that British Columbia members do think that the Imperial Government should send men-ofwar into the Behring Sea to look after the interests of the Canadian sealers. Why they have not done so, I do not know. We certainly think they should show some interest in patrolling these waters and in looking after the interests of the Canadian sealers.

COAST AND SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANIES. NOVA SCOTIA.

House proceeded to the further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Flint for:

Copies of all petitions and correspondence between the Coast Railway Company of Nova Scotia, or any of its promoters or directors, and the Government, in relation to the company's undertaking. Also, for copies of all correspondence between E. Franklin Clements, J. D. Rolston, Frederick Bard or other promoters of the South of the directors of the said company and the Government up to date of proceedings in the courts of Nova Scotia to wind up the said company. Also, copies of all petitions, agreements and correspondence between the said company and the Government, with reference to the obtaining of a charter for a new company from the Dominion Parliament, and relating to the undertaking of the said company or the undertaking of the company proposed to be incorporated.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). When the House adjourned on Monday at six o'clock. I was answering the hon, gentleman who spoke in favour of the motion of the hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). Inasmuch as this question had then received the attention of the House for a very considerable time, and since has been threshed out, very completely in another place to-day, I shall not occupy the time of the House at any length now. I think I was able to show to the House that the South Shore Railway Comthe Coast Railway Company was not incorporated until April, 1893, that the South Shore Company not only expended a very large amount of money in making the necessary surveys for their road, but that they expended a large sum in grading some sixteen or seventeen miles from Yarmouth towards Shelburne. I showed that this was done bona fide, and in accordance with the instructions and with the approbation of the provincial engineer of Nova Scotia, whose report speaks of the road, as built by the South Shore Company, in the most favourable manner. I think I was able pany had become bankrupt by showing that It has not yet been re- the proceedings which had been attempted in the courts to put this company into liquidation had been withdrawn, and that the company had been reorganized, and that the directors and persons interested in the company were men of considerable wealth and were and good standing. position to complete their undertaking. In addition to the correspondence which I was able to lay before the House the other day, I have considerably more which I will not inflict upon the House at the present time. But one peculiar matter happened as late as the first of this month, which I think it would be well for me to bring before the House. I will read a portion of a letter I received a short time ago:

New York, 1st June, 1895.

N. W. White, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir.-Mr. Tunis G. Bergen sent to Mr. H. G. Alexander, and Mr. Alexander forwarded to me a copy of your telegram to Mr. Bergen, in which you say: "Are you, as president of the South Shore Railway Company, prepared to execute a bond with the Government of Canada for the faithful completion of this undertaking ?

Of course, I am at a loss to understand the pur-I forwarded the communiport of this inquiry.

cation of Mr. Bergen to Mr. D. H. Andrews, No. Company.

Very truly yours, J. D. WILLIAMSON, Financial agent.

I would say that I never received any such telegram as that mentioned in this letter. and I at once replied to the letter by a telegraphic despatch saying that I never received any such telegram, and asking that a copy of it should be sent to me. A copy of the telegram was subsequently sent to me, as it is as follows:-

31st May, 1895.

To G. Bergen, 55 Liberty Street, New York.

Are you, as president of the South Shore Railway Company, prepared to execute a bond with the Government of Canada for the faithful compiction of the undertaking?

(Signed) N. G. WHITE, Russell House.

Now, Sir, my initials happen to be N. W. White, and I was naturally anxious to find out who N. G. White was. I have looked over the register, and I have not been able to find that any such person was at the Russell House at that time. I have also inquired of Mr. Nunn, who represents the Coast Railway Company, and he assured me that so far as he knew, there was no N. G. White interested in either of these companies, and I can only say that in my long acquaintance with the individuals interested in both of these companies, I have never heard of Mr. N. G. White. The telegram, too, is rather a singular one. In the first place, the Dominion Government have never asked for any such bond from anybody; as far as I know, they have never proposed to ask for any such bond. But it is a fact that the local government of Nova Scotia did ask for a bond from the Coast Line Company, the company which is opposing the South Shore Company in their effort to obtain an Act of incorporation here. fact induced me to think it possible that some gentleman connected with the Coast Line Company that such knowing made demand had been from had come to the conclusion that the Dominion Government might be asking the president of the South Shore Company for a similar bond. What the object peculiar despatch was I do not pretend to say; but the fact that it asks for information which it might be desirable for some parties to obtain, makes me anxious to know the source from which it emanated. I hope some light may be thrown upon the matter here. I would be very glad indeed if any of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this motion could give me any information in regard to the origin of this telegram.

Mr. FLINT. I do not propose to occupy the time of the House in discussing the motion | sequently a broader gauge was agreed upon, which stands in my name, because the sub-70 Kilby Street, Boston, Mass., who is at this ject with which it deals is under review in time the president of the South Shore Railway another place, where it can be thoroughly threshed out, and in all probability it will be before the House again in another form. when all the points raised will have to be discussed at considerable length. Therefore. I trust that the Government will allow the motion to pass without any special observations from me upon it. I did not hear very clearly all of the address which just been delivered by the hon, member for Shelburne (Mr. White), nor the terms of the letter and telegram to which he has referred. I take it that the hon, member complains that some person has been using his name, or a name intended to be taken as his, in some communication in regard If that is the case, I to this question. would, of course, deprecate any such course as strongly as the hon, gentleman could possibly do. Of course, the matter is one of which I had no knowledge whatever until the hon, gentleman brought it forward. I did not catch the purport of the telegram: but I simply desire to say that I would concur in any condemnation of conduct of that kind that the hon, gentleman might see fit to make. Now, I wish to refer briefly to the long correspondence which the hon. member for Shelburne read the other day. I was waiting with a great deal of anxiety and interest to catch, if possible, the drift of the correspondence, and to see what bearing it had upon the question before the House, and I must confess that I was unable to do so. It appears to be a long correspondence which passed between Thomas Robertson, Esq., and a man named Mansfield, in regard to the promotion of a twofoot gauge railway, an undertaking concerning which those gentlemen subsequently fell out, and concerning which there was some litigation; and Mansfield handed the correspondence over to the hon, member for Shelburne and his friends, to do with what they saw fit. I could see nothing in the correspondence at all bearing upon the controversy now before the House, and it seems to me that the hon. gentleman might just as well have read some of my friend Robertson's love letters, for all it had to do with the subject we are discussing. Of course the impression given by this correspondence to hon. gentlemen not thoroughly familiar with the subject would be that Mr. Robertson was endeavouring to secure the construction of a railway of a two-foot gauge. But this is abandoned; it was a project which merely existed in gentlemen's minds, which they were in hopes of bringing to fruition, but which fell through, partly because the local government put their foot upon it and intimated that they possibly could not assist it from provincial funds. and partly because the people of the country through which the line was to pass thought it would not suit their purposes. But suband negotiations were entered into for a namely, an Order in Council. into the standard gauge. So, as I said in local government have been able to obtain my opening remarks, the question of one from the legislature of Nova Scotia a most my opening remarks, the question of one gauge or the other cannot arise in this discussion. Sometimes the Coast Railway discussion. is called the narrow gauge road to distinguish it from the other, because for a period of seven months it was a narrow gauge railway. But at present the company have a charter authorizing them to build a standard gauge railway. They have an agreement with the local government permitting of modifications in the contract and plans to enable them to build a standard gauge railway, and the only question now fairly and properly before Parliament and the committee is as to the details and the powers sought by the South Shore Railway Company. This company is in a peculiar position with reference to the Coast Railway Company, with reference to the Southern Railway Company, with reference to its own creditors and shareholders, and with reference to the Government. Upon all these points I am prepared to challenge the opinion of the House. If these papers bear out the points, which I think they will, this House should not encourage the revival of the charter to the South Shore Railway Company. At any rate, before the Bill can be intelligently and fairly discussed, this correspondence ought to be in our hands. I would respectfully urge on the Government to allow the motion to pass and bring down the correspondence as early as pos-

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quite agree with the hon, gentleman that these papers might be useful for the consideration of the question. It is regrettable that although the hon, gentleman has charge of this motion, and is evidently in the contidence of those people who now have the contract with the Nova Scotia Government regarding the construction of the so-called narrow gauge railway, could not contribute for the benefit of the House some information which would be of considerable importance in the direction of his own views. because the hon, gentleman does not conceal the fact that his sympathies are entirely with the so-called narrow gauge people. The hon, gentleman admitted frankly to me, the last time this motion was under discussion, that he had no evidence, other than the information which some parties connected with the narrow gauge gave him, that the local government was willing to substitute for the existing contract a contract for a standard gauge railway. I hope that the hon, gentleman will be able to secure from the people for whom he speaks, before a further discussion of this subject takes place, not what they understand the local government will do, but the only evidence which would be satisfactory as to the intention of the local government.

For this still broader gauge. This was also changed House will be astonished to learn that the extraordinary power. I do not think that a similar power is given to the government or the executive of any other part of Canada or in any other country. But by virtue of an Act passed by that House, the executive is able, out of session, to appropriate the money of the province of Nova Scotia for the construction of railways, and apparently. if the hon, gentleman's information be right, can change without legislation a narrow gauge to a broad gauge, or make an entirely different arrangement with the company than now obtains.

> Mr. FORBES. If the hon, gentleman will pardon me, he is a little in error about the power of the local government to change the terms of the contract. The terms of the original charter gave this company the right to build a narrow gauge line of three feet, but the Act passed in amendment to that last session gave the company the right to change that narrow gauge to a broad gauge and to make further changes subject to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. That has been done. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council has signified his assent to the change to a broad gauge.

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am afraid the hon, gentleman is a little confused in his explanation. I do not understand on what authority he states an Order in Council has been issued. He has but confirmed the general proposition which I made, that the executive of Nova Scotia has the extraordinary power vested in it of dealing with these matters outside of the session and independent of the legislature of the province. I do not say that we may not have some information, but all we have now before us is a contract to build a narrow gauge railway, and no one disputes that in addition to that contract, a bond, with a very heavy penalty, was given by which the parties contracting to build this railway undertake that a narrow gauge railway shall be built. That bond and contract are outstanding. No hon, gentleman has said that either of them has been cancelled.

Mr. FORBES. They will be varied.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is not the place to hear, for the first time, of the intention of the local government of Nova Scotia regarding this road. But the very confidential relations existing between the promoters of this narrow gauge system, the reference to telegrams, the reference to what the executive propose to do in the next "Gazette." confirms the views that have been pressed on my mind that this is a political railway pure and simple, so far as the local government of Nova Scotia is concerned, and there are prominent Liberals in the province-I have in my mind the names of one or two now-who do has voted assistance. I have followed this not sympathize with this political railway. We know that the head and front of it is Mr. Robertson, who was never known to be until an election was pending in the county of Shelburne, and we know he was named as president, with a government subsidy in his pocket to carry the elections. That. coupled with the statement of the hon, gentleman regarding what the local government intend to do, confirms the idea that, whether wittingly or unwittingly, many of the men who are interested now in the narrow gauge system are simply furthering the political purposes of the local government. But to show that is not altogether the view taken by the Liberals in the province, but only by those who are deeply and immediately interested in the politics of the county of Shelburne, as represented by Mr. Robertson, I may call attention to the opinion of the Halifax Board of Trade, and to a resolution moved there which I do not think has been referred to. It was moved by a prominent Liberal, the nominee at present of the Liberal party in connection with the federal election. I refer to Mr. Dwyer. Mr. Dwyer, who is a man of undoubted standing in the city of Halifax, a Reformer. and the present nominee of the Liberal the next federal election, May, 1894, the resolution for party the moved which I shall read and which will show hon, members on both sides of the Chair something of the history of the wrangling and unfortunate differences that have occarred between these two companies. I do rot hesitate to say that, while this Government has been committed to the South Shore Railway Company, while this Government willing to give them all legitimate assistance, seeing that Parliament without dissent voted for them by the name of the South Shore Railway Company substantial aid, the desire that this Government has in view is the construction of a railway through these counties so as to benefit the counties concerned. That is our primary desire, and towards that end we have done all that we properly could do. Even when there was a prospect of settling the differences between these companies, the Government gave no deaf ear to requests that they should further the negotiations, though it was a delicate task to interfere. I refer particularly to my colleague in the representation of Nova Scotia in the Cabinet and myself. But, apparently, the companies are further apart than ever. The manner in which this motion has been pressed shows that the representatives of the Coast Railway can have but one object now in view, and that object is to frustrate if they can, to obstruct as long as they can, the granting to the South Shore Railway Company the powers necessary to enable them to carry out the construction of a standard gauge railway through these counties to which Parliament subject sufficiently to know of difficulties that were placed in their way by the local government of Nova Scotia. I regret to connected with any business of this kind know, for instance, that in the performance of duties that were merely formal under the legislation granted, the work of this company has been delayed. For instance, one member of the Government was appointed under the statute to act in connection with the selection of arbitrators for the taking of lands. I regret to know that advantage was taken of that fact by the gentlemen appointed under that statute, and that thereby not only did delays occur, but difficulties were created which tended in a large measure to bring about the crisis to which reference has been made in this debate. these people, very properly, I think, come to this Parliament and say: You have given us a federal subsidy, which is the best indication that you desire to see a standard gauge railway built through these counties. We have encountered difficulties through the action of the provincial government, which is closely identified with the Opposition political railway; and we want power from this legislature whereby we may be independent of all such difficulties. And it is to show that there are Liberals in Nova Scotia who take a broad view of this question and who are anxious to see a standard gauge road built through these counties that I pass away from the immediate locality where the feeling is bitter and largely political to the city of Halifax and refer to the resolution moved by Mr. Dwyer in May, 1894, in the Halifax Board of Trade. following is the resolution:

Whereas, a standard gauge railroad from Yarmouth to Shelburne is much more desirable than a narrow gauge, the former in addition to being much more serviceable, would be a practical part accomplishment of the much desired through South Shore system from Halifax to Yarmouth, while the latter would be a certain and almost insuperable obstacle in the way;

And whereas, this board is advised that the South Shore Railway Company has made an offer to our provincial government to build and equip a standard railroad from Yarmouth to Shelburne, commencing work immediately and completing this year if the usual subsidy be granted, and to give every reasonable proof of its resources and security for honest accomplishment;

whereas, the Coast Railway Company, And who are the promoters of the said narrow gauge, after having before it, as we are advised, for over a year, an offer of a subsidy in aid of its proposed narrow gauge, has been unable to get itself into a financial position to enter into a contract with the Government for the construction of the said railway;

1. Therefore, resolved, that the said Coast

Railway Company has been allowed all the time it should have in order to prove its ability and to enter into said contract.

2. That the provincial government be urged to investigate the ability of the said South Shore Railway Company, and if their representations are found to be correct, that the usual subsidy be granted in aid of the construction of cial ability.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be submitted to the Hon. W. S. Fielding, provincial secretary for the province of Nova Scotia, and to the Hon. J. G. Haggart, Minister of Railways, Ottawa.

This resolution carried in May, 1894, runs along the lines of action taken by the federal legislation; and, at that time, I know from the representations of the narrow gauge people that they were confident that their scheme of the narrow gauge system would be the best, and were anxious to have this Government adopt their scheme, and attended here at Ottawa in order to press that subject upon the attention of the exe-Choice was made between them, one advocating a standard gauge and the other advocating—I have no doubt with the best intention of carrying on their workthe narrow gauge line. I said openly then, and I say now, that one of the great objections I had to the narrow gauge people and their company, outside of the question of the gauge altogether, was the use being made of the company before mentioned, who obtained their subsidy from the local government and won a county for that government in the local election, the president sitting in that House using his influence for this company, both political and commercially. Now, we subsidized the standard gauge company. After knowing unmistakably what the opinion of the member for Halifax regarding it, after we knew the views of the member for Shelburne who has spoken, after we had the views both of our political friends and political opponents in the other counties, and, I think, in the absence of the slightest word of opposition on the part of the member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint)—I am speaking in his presence, and if I am wrong he will correct me—the proposition of the Government to grant a subsidy to the South Shore Railway Company, giving it by name in the statute, was adopted. Therefore this change that has taken place on the part of the hon, gentleman has taken place mainly on the ground that the narrow gauge people will change their system and adopt the standard gauge, and that they have not as yet met with the difficulties that have been put in the way of the south shore people. But I think if he has sympathy with those locally interested in the South Shore Railway Company, he would do well not to withdraw it from that company. If they can be rescued from their financial difficulties, if they can complete the contract with this Government and earn the subsidies, so much the better for all the local creditors to which reference has been made. I understand, however, that their financial difficulties and debts have been greatly exaggerated. The hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) told us something of an extraordinary action on the part of a local firm of solicitors, where they had proceeded to advertise a judgment without making a demand for the money, and when the money, in fact, was being tendered to them in full of the debt and costs. This shows how acute has become the rivalry and the struggle between these com-I find that at present the South Shore Railway Company, as they had every reason to suppose they had the unanimous sympathy of this House in connection with the aid voted last session of Parliament, completely graded 14 miles of the line, and have a few miles additional partly graded. The heaviest culverts on the section are all completed, and also some of the heavy bridge masonry at Tusket River. The company have expended, according to their representations, $170,000, of which $145,000 is represented by work already constructed. There is now a very full construction plant on the line, including machinery of the most modern type, and 200 mules imported especially for the work. Under these circumstances, while I would join with any hon. gentleman from my province in regarding first the main object we have in view, the construction of a railway. I have yet to learn why any fair or reasonable sympathy should be withdrawn from this South Shore Railway Company. I think they should be given an opportunity, not only to rescue themselves, but to carry to completion the work which they honestly begun, and upon which they seem to have made considerable pro-I reserve to myself, of course, the gress. freest right in coming to a conclusion in reference to the subjects that have been raised in this debate, in advance of all the papers and all the information we can get. But that the result of this discussion should be to impede in any way the applicants now asking for a federal charter to carry on this work that was subsidized by the Federal Parliament, I have heard no good or valid reason.

Mr. GILLIES. I desire to move the following amendment to the motion of my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint):

That this motion do include all petitions and correspondence to and with the Minister of Railways, or other members of the Government of Canada, for and on behalf of the Cape Breton Railway Extension Company, for a subsidy to the railway from Canso to Louisbourg, via St. Peters, and also for and on behalf of the Boston and Neva Scotia Coal and Railway Company for a subsidy to a railway from Orangedale to Broad Cove, in the county of Inverness; and also, all correspondence in connection with the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company.

The House will see that this amendment deals with a territory somewhat different for some time. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the territory with which my amendment deals is a far: more important one than either of the counties, or the combined counties, of Shelburne and Queen's, important though they are, I suppose, in the estimation of the hon. House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, member can hardly go outside of the lines of the motion which is before the House. After reading his amendment, I find it is not relevant to the motion before the House, and I shall; be obliged to rule it out of order. Consequently the hon, member must confine his remarks to the motion that is before the House.

Mr. GILLIES. With the consent of the House, perhaps I can have it added to the original motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. No. it is out of order.

Well, I will speak Mr. GILLIES. the motion, and as I was saying, territory to which I wish to draw the attention of the House is a very important one. and the line of railway with which I wish to deal goes through a very important section of the province of Nova Scotia. The district from Canso to Louisbourg is a very important one, diversified as it is by many industries that are known to exist there. If we start at the Strait of Canso and go down to the eastern portion of Cape Breton to the port of Louisbourg, every foot of territory through which we pass is underlaid with the very valuable and economic minerals that are known to exist in Nova Scotia. If we take the large district of the River Inhabitants with its fisheries, its agricultural interests and thickly settled as it is by a very industrious class of people, and it is adjoining the important district of West Bay peopled with a hardy industrious class. There is the large and commercially important community of Isle Madame, peopled by men second to no other section of the Dominion in their enterprise, in their prosecution of the fishing industry in which they are so largely and vitally interested; then there are the large and progressive districts of River Bourgeois, St. Peter's, L'Ardoise. Red Islands, Grand River, Loch Lomond. Frambois and Fourchie. These districts. that I have mentioned, together with that of Isle Madame, comprise the county of Richmond, and, Mr. Speaker, I feel proud to be able to say here from my place in Parliament, as the representative of that county in the Parliament of Canada that a more industrious, law-abiding, loyal, God-fearing people are not to be found within the boundaries of wide Canada than the thousand that dwell within the confines of The natural resources of this Richmond. county are known to be enormously great.

from that of which we have been talking The fishery of the county, in the year 1894, as returned by the report of the Minister of Marine, amounted in value to neary five hundred thousand dollars, and this in the face of the fact that the industry was conducted under difficulties and would be increased to an incalculable and indefinite extent if the conveniences of a railway were gentleman who represents them in this available so as to enable the people to engage in and ship their fish the year round. Under such conditions hon, gentlemen will perceive the advantages that would redound to that section of the Dominion and really to the whole eastern portion of the Dominion by the construction of a railway through the county of Richmond to Louisbourg. A branch line of ten or eleven miles will connect this trunk line with the town of Arichat from which a steamer will make connections every morning and evening with Canso. thus giving that important section of Guysboro' County practically railway connection as all its passenger, mail and freight traffic will connect with the railway at Arichat. Then we come to the boundary of the county of Cape Breton, and from there to the port of Louisbourg we have the large and important districts of Salmon River. Grand Mira, Big Pond, East Bay, Gabarouse, Catalone, Main-a-dieu and Louisbourg, together with the intervening country that lies between those southern districts and the harbour of Sydney, and the adjoining waters of the Bras d'Or Lake, all of which would be tributary to this road when built. Now, an examination of the Geological Reports that are on file in this library, shows that this district is underlaid with coal, iron, valuable and manganese, and all the economic minerals that are known to exist so extensively in Canada. Now, this district contains a population of something like 40,000, and as it is 90 miles in extent, there is a population of nearly 500 to every mile of railway. In this territory there is not a single inch of railway, and the House will easily see how hampered these people are, and how greatly the development of the country must be hindered and retarded while they are allowed to remain without My hon, friend the Minister of a railway. Railways, who I am glad to see now in his seat, is familiar with all those facts, for in my several interviews with him I did not fail to press them upon him, and I am pleased to be in a position to say that he, as well as his colleagues in the Government, regard the completion of the measure as 1 have endeavoured to detail to this House in a favourable manner. And the measure of encouragement that I always received from the Government when advocating the construction of this railway was most gratifying to me and the people that I represent. We are aware of the progressiveness and liberality displayed by this Government in aiding the construction of a railway through Cape Breton in 1887, and now benefiting a large population, and accommodating extensive industries. The Government at that time, not have asked the question. As I was 560,600. Nor was this money in any way prepared to build railways in any particle misspent, nor was it a bad investment for Nova Scotia, and to subsidize any such pany to the extent of $3,200 per mile. Under these circumstances, not only was the Government justified in: Mr. GILLIES. Yes, I will later on, but extending that road, as I have indicated, I would rather at present proceed in but I deliberately affirm that they would my own way. Perhaps the House is not fully aware of the great, and, perhaps, unparalleled and really unprecedented powers which the local government of Nova Scotia have taken in investing themselves with powers to enter into contracts with, and to subsidize any company that may build railways in the province. Hon, gentlemen will search the statutes in vain of any other British province or colony to find such an Act as was passed by the local legislature in 1886. giving the government the power, the exclusive power, to deal unlimitedly in the way of subsidizing any company that would come before them to build a railway in any part of the province. They passed the Act known as chapter 1 of the Acts of 1886, which, as I have stated, vested in them unlimited and exclusive powers to deal with any company, and to incorporate any com-pany without the intervention of the local legislature, and afterwards to subsidize it to the extent of $3,200 per mile.

The House will readily see what immense power this places in the hands of the government of Nova Scotia, either for weal or woe, for the benefit of the province if used to promote its interests, and to the advantage of the government if they chose to use it in their behalf, and no doubt it was used to their advantage on all sides and on all possible I draw the attention of the occasions. House to the fact that the Act of 1886 was divided into two parts, the first part being designated as the first part, and dealing with this matter to which I brought the notice of the House. I will read its principal provisions to the House in order that hon, gentlemen may judge of the wide powers which the government assumed to itself under this Act. The Act says:

> Be it, therefore, further enacted by the Governor, Council and Assembly, as follows :-

> For the purpose of assisting in the construction of a line of railway through the Island of Cape Breton, from the Strait of Canso to Sydney or any company or body corporate, or to any per-lapplied to them for a subsidy as specified sons to be incorporated, as hereinafter provided, under the first part of section 3 of the the following subsidies and concessions:-

The House will see that these are very extensive privileges and subsidies conferred upon any company that would build a line of railway between Canso and Louisbourg. They were applied specially to the line of ways than the main line they have already railway between Canso and Louisbourg, constructed from the Straits to Sydney. Then section 5 dealt generally, and said:

The Governor in Council may grant to any company offering to construct any line of railway in the province of Nova Scotia, not already subsidized by the province, a cash subsidy, not exceeding three thousand two hundred dollars per mile, and a land subsidy not exceeding two thou-Provided, that such subsand acres per mile. sidy shall not in any case be granted until the company offering to construct the railway shall have furnished to the Governor in Council satisfactory evidence that it has at its disposal, either from grants provided by the Parliament of Canada, or from private capital, or from both, funds: sufficient, with the subsidies authorized by this part of this Act, to complete such railway, and shall have given ample security for such completion.

Mr. BORDEN. That is not unlimited.

Mr. GILLIES. It is entirely unlimited as to the number of companies the local government will have power to subsidize. and unlimited as to the discretionary power given to the local government by this Act in determining and deciding as to the capabilities of any company coming before them seeking a subsidy and unlimited as to the number of miles they are at liberty to subsidize all over the province without the vote. sanction or even knowledge of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Nova build from the Straits of Canso to Louis-Scotia.

charged with being opposed to railways.

Mr. GILLIES. Certainly, they have been opposed to railways whenever and wherever their construction would not suit them-This Act, without any further the local legislation on the part of assembly at all, gives unlimited powers to the local government to deal unreservedly and unrestrictedly with any company that came before them seeking a subsidy. In pursuance of the power conferred upon

Act. This company was incorporated by an Act of their own legislature to build from Canso to Louisbourg, and the devotees of the local government in every part of the island of Cape Breton went around pointing to this statute and saying to the people: Here the local government of Nova Scotia has done everything possible for Cape Breion in the way of subsidies so as to build a road from the Straits of Canso to Louisbourg specifically. The minions of the local (d). The exemption from municipal taxation of government would always point to this subrailway and all its stations and station sidizing statute and say: Now, there is the where is your Dominion subsidy? Let us see now what your Dominion Government will do in the way of subsidizing reads; let them manifest their good intentions towards your island by subsidizing other rail-The local government and their friends always dangled this dazzling paper subsidy that they never expected would be asked for, before the eyes of the people, and while holding it up used to shout and boast. Here is the local subsidy all ready for any company coming forward to build. Can you say as much for the Dominion Government? These were the kind of statements that were made before the people of Cape Breton by the supporters of the Nova Scotia Govern-I felt sure that the Government at Ottawa would entertain any business-like proposition that might be put before them on behalf of railway extension in Cape Breton, and would deal with it in a fairly liberal spirit. I always told the people that if any company would put a bona fide proposition before the Ottawa Government for the construction of a road from the Straits of Canso to Louisbourg, with a branch into Arichat, or from the Straits of Canso north through the county of Inverness. I felt quite sure that the Federal Government would meet such a company in a business-like and liberal manner. Well, what happened? In 1893 a proposition was made to the local government by a company incorporated under the name of the Cape Breton Railway Extension Company, asking for a subsidy to bourg. The local government said: Oh, yes, Mr. BORDEN. Yet the Liberal party is we will do that at once for you, your subsidy at Halifax is awaiting you; but let us see what the friends of the Liberal Conservative party will do at Ottawa. Although I had not the direct warrant of the Ottawa Government for saying so, yet I understood that they would deal in a generous spirit with the application of the company, and I arrogated to myself to say to the representatives of that company, that at the next session of Parliament a subsidy for the construction of a road from Hawkesbury to Louisbourg would be provided for in a manthe local government by that Act, a company ner satisfactory to the company. But I was friends of the Nova Scotia Government for saying that the Dominion Government would go so far as to subsidize other lines in Cape Breton at so short time after having completed the main line through the island. In fact the local government and their friends dreaded that the Dominion Government would deal in so generous a manner with However, on behalf of that Cape Breton. company, I made an application to the Department of Railways at the last session of Parliament, and I am glad to be able to state here that I was met in the business-like and liberal spirit that I told my people down in Cape Breton I would meet. A subsidy was provided for the first section of the road from Hawkesbury to St. Peter's, being thirty miles of the ninety miles proposed, and a written undertaking was given the company by the members of the Government that the balance of the subsidy for the whole system would be forthcoming as required by that company. This was in last September when I came to Ottawa with the representatives of the company and got the contract for the subsidy between themselves and the Ottawa Government signed, and therefore everything between the company and the Otiawa Government for the construction and completion of this road from Canso to Louisbourg via St. Peter's was completed to the entire satisfaction of the company. The company then went down to the province of Nova Scotia and asked the local government for the subsidy specified by this Act. At this time it so happened that the local elections had taken place a few months previously. and the county of Cape Breton had returned two members in opposition to the Fielding Government, the county of Richmond one. the county of Inverness two, and the county of Victoria one. The government of Nova Scotia were in pretty bad humour with the island of Cape Breton, and so they resorted to their old tactics of humbug, and they regularly humbugged that company out of its subsidy and dilly-dallied with them from the time they made their application in last September until last January or February, and would give the subsidy as far as St. Peter's and would hold out no hope for the balance of the subsidy for the rest of the system. A by-election in the mean-time was going on in the county of Richmond, and the prospect of this subsidy was held out by the local government candidate. and his friends as a great bait to the people. They said: If you do not elect a candidate of the local government now in power. how can you expect to get a subsidy for the Cape Breton Extension Railway Company. The fact was, and I say it deliberately. in consequence of that deception practised upon the people, and in consequence of these promises, and fearing that the local subsidy would be lost, the government this question? captured that seat for the local govvery short majority. ernment by a almost laughed at and scoffed at by the But I venture the prediction that they will not enjoy it very long. However, this delay completely put the company off their track, their negotiations for the financing of the road were entirely deranged, and from that day to this matters have been in such a condition that the company have been unable to go on with the road. The fault of that lies entirely with the local government of Nova Scotia. They would make no agreement with the company until after the byelection that was being run in Richmond in the latter part of last December, using the hope of this subsidy all the while as a leverage for their brilliant candidate, and when they had won the seat, they coolly tell the company: We will only give you a contract for a subsidy to St. Peter's. But, Sir, it is no new thing for the government of Nova Scotia to hold out such projects as baits to the people, for the purpose of influencing elections in their own favour. In the general local elections held in 1890, the county of Cape Breton sent two gentlemen to support the Fielding Government. When the general elections for the Dominion came on in 1891, one of those gentlemen resigned his seat in the local House in order to contest the county of Cape Breton for this House with my hon. friend, the senior member for that county; but the Grit nominee was left at home, and my hon, friend came back to resume his duties here. In the local election which was held immediately afterwards, the gentleman who had resigned his seat in the local legislature to become a federal candidate, went back for re-election for the local House, and how did we find the Grit press of Nova Scotia acting on that occasion? I will simply quote from one paper, the "Island Reporter," of Sidney, which is a Grit paper published in the county of Cape Breton, and which has a fairly extensive circulation, That paper among the faithful there. is said to be edited and controlled by the leader of the local government in the legislative council-a gentleman who candidate in the Grit interest was a federal elections of 1887. in the occasion defeated. that was on was then put in the comfortable position of a legislative councillor in Halifax, who resigned that position in 1891 to contest the county of Cape Breton again, and who, after his defeat on that occasion, was again restored to that asylum in which my hon. friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) at one time basked and enjoyed himself. gentleman, in 1891, commented in his paper upon the local election that was then in progress in the county of Cape Breton; and I want my hon, friends to mark well the unholy doctrines laid down by the Grit leaders and the Grit press in my province.

Mr. MULOCK. What has that to do with

Some hon. MEMBERS.

Mr. MULOCK, Well, then, I will take the policy of the Grit party in some other part of this Dominion to do with the motion of the hon, member for Yarmouth?

Mr. GILLIES. My hon, friend will see in a moment.

Mr. SPEAKER. I presume the hon, member is using illustrations to illustrate his argument.

Mr. GILLIES. The "Island Reporter" said this:

Mr. McPherson has proved himself the choice of the people in May, when local issues were in-He has done nothing since to forfeit the confidence of the electors reposed in him then. confidence; on the other hand, Mr. Fielding has manifested every desire to do justice to Cape Breton in railway and other matters. To elect! Mr. McCormack on 7th April would mean that no local subsidy be granted to the Louisbourg railway, that our roads and bridges be allowed to go to waste and decay, and that Mr. Fielding's wise policy of redressing the miners' grievances should be abandoned to suit the whims, splenetic wanderings and inconsistencies of Dr. McKay.

These are the doctrines held and propagated by the Grit press of Nova Scotia. Now, I will quote from the election manifesto of a candidate for the legislative assembly of Nova Scotia, the hon, gentleman who now represents Hants in that House, issued by him in April, 1891. This is what he said:

For himself, he was a straight out-and-out supporter of the local government, as led by the Hon, W. S. Fielding. He reviewed the course of He reviewed the course of the Government and dwelt on the importance of sending a supporter from this county at the present time, as we were asking a very important railway subsidy, and it would be injudicious to administer a slap in the face to a government that we expected favours from.

These quotations serve to show what an exceedingly immaculate aggregation of individuals we have governing the province of Nova Scotia at Halifax, and the manner in which they are using this Railway Act to coerce, cajole and afterwards deceive the But I have not yet finished what I have to say in this connection. The leader of the local government of Nova Scotia is a gentleman for whom I have considerable respect; I have never hesitated to say that | anywhere. When I say that I mean it entirely in a personal sense; and I will say this, that if Mr. Fielding were surrounded by better influences. I have not the slightest doubt that he would be a very much better public man. Now, what did he say in his place in the House of Assembly in 1890? He was dealing with a Bill which he had introduced as a Government measure, making provision for certain county and other muni-This Bill it was said put cipal machinery. too much power in the hands of members supporting the local government, and Mr. Fielding, referring to that question, said:

Mr. GILLIES.

We would not put in an Act of Parliament a the point of order. Mr. Speaker, what has provision that officers in the county of Richmond should be subjected to the advice of a member of that county supporting the Government, but we would act upon it all the same. One of the principles of party politics is that "to the victors belong the spoils." that is, providing we can agree what the spoils are.

This is a doctrine which I would be very sorry indeed to find a Liberal-Conservative Government entertaining or practising; and I hope that while I have the honour of a seat in this Parliament, I shall be found ready on every oceasion to raise my voice against any such doctrine if any attempt should ever be made to put it in practice. Now, Sir, badly as the counties of Richmond and Cape Breton have been served by the The Government has done nothing since to forfeit local government at Halifax, the county of my hon, friend from Inverness (Mr. Cameron) has fared no better. With that pertion of the island, however, it is not necessary for me to deal, because hon, friend, who has occupied seat in this House so acceptably to his people for many years, is quite able to deal with that portion of the island of Cape Breton. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House of Commons, for the attention given my remarks here to-day. I am quite aware that the discussion of questions of largely a local character cannot be as interesting to gentlemen coming from far off provinces of the Dominion as they are to those members representing the very constituencies affected, but I make no apology for the discussion of this question; it is an impertant one and concerns my county most vitally, and I desired that the House should be seized of the reasons that I urged upon the Government why this road should be taken up by them and subsidized as was I hold that every legitimate effort must be put forth to secure the construction of the whole system through to Louisbourg. with the branch upon Isle Madame; less than this will fall short of the requirements of the section of country with which I have been dealing this afternoon, and will be a disappointment to the people of Cape Breton. With the completion of this system an era of commercial prosperity will dawn upon that island, from which the great manufacturing centres and the distant portions of the Dominion will benefit to a degree that cannot to be foretold.

Mr. FRASER. I beg leave to draw the attention of the House to a very important matter that has not been touched on by the hon, member for Richmond (Mr. I refer to the railway now pro-Gillies). posed to be built from South Africa all the way up to Egypt. It is well known that the British Government have obtained the right to territory in South Africa which will enable them to build a railway all through their own territory until they reach the Soudan, thus not only giving them the command of the trade of that region, but great stragetical advantages in the case of war. There was no allusion made to that by the hon, gentleman,

Mr. KENNY. Is that a narrow gauge road?

Mr. FRASER. It has just as much to do with a narrow gauge railway as the whole question discussed about the island of Cape Breton. I understood the Speaker to rule the amendment out of order. What have we to do with all this discussion about Cape Breton? The House will be glad to know that there is a reason in the hon, gentleman's mind, and that is he wanted to make a speech for his constituents, because he has signally failed in his promise to get a road built through their district.

Mr. GILLIES. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that I promised any one to get that road built?

Mr. FRASER. The hon, gentleman boasted that he had obtained a subsidy for thirty miles, and had obtained a promise from the Government—for—favourable—consideration with regard to the balance. Does any one believe he would be silent on that question if he had the subsidy?

Mr. GILLIES. Even the hon, gentleman will understand that it is impossible to build a railway out of a subsidy.

Mr. FRASER. Decidedly, and, therefore, there is no company. If the subsidy will not build the railway, I suppose, as there is no company, it will never be built. If you get enough subsidy, you will get a company, but there is no company in this case.

Mr. GILLIES. There is a company, and I will give you the names.

Mr. FRASER. It is no good or it would build the road. There is a subsidy for thirty miles voted by this Government for that particular road, and there is a promise of a balance of the subsidy from the Government. Why is the road not carried out?

Mr. GILLIES. Because the local government refused to subsidize it.

Mr. FRASER. The local government has never refused, and will never refuse to grant a subsidy, subject to this provision:

Provided that such subsidy shall not in any case be granted until the company offering to construct the railway, shall have furnished to the Governor in Council satisfactory evidence that it has at its disposal, either from grants provided by the Parliament of Canada, or from private capital, or from both, funds sufficient, with the subsidies authorized by this part of the Act, to complete such railway, and shall have given ample security for such completion.

They cannot do that.

Mr. GILLIES. Yes they can.

Mr. CAMERON. What is the satisfactory evidence?

Mr. FRASER. That is a question for the Governor in Council. Suppose, for example, there was a bond required, and the hon, member for Inverness would go on that bond, that, no doubt, would be satisfactory evidence. He would so consider it. I could give a hundred cases of satisfactory evidence. I want to call attention to another point. Does the hon, member for Richmond say that this Act authorizes the government, by its own act, when Parliament is not sitting, to incorporate any company, and give it a subsidy?

Mr. GILLIES. Certainly.

Mr. FRASER. We will see. The clause reads as follows:—

The Governor in Council may grant to any company offering to construct any line of railway in the province of Nova Scotia—

Where are the provisions for incorporating the company? The hon, gentleman, I suppose, refers to part second, which authorizes the government, under a particular agreement, to buy out three companies already in existence; and the hon, gentleman says that applies to other companies.

Mr. GILLIES. No.

Mr. FRASER. Surely, as a lawyer, he cannot have read the Act. There is not a word in the Act authorizing the government to incorporate a company, except under the Joint Stock Companies Act. If the hon, gentleman were more anxious to give the facts than to make a speech for his county, he would see that he is not stating what is the fact in that connection. There is not a word in that chapter which authorizes the government, on its own motion, to put a company into operation. Part second deals with the government being able, under a certain agreement to take over the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, the Western Counties Railway, and the Windsor Branch Railway, but it only refers to those three companies. Therefore, when the hon, gentleman points out that the present government have the right to put in operation a company, of its own motion, he is not stating the fact, so far as that chapter The government never did is concerned. take such power into its own hands.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon, gentleman does, as he very often does, talk beyond the record. In reply to his statement, I refer him to section 7, and I will read it to the House, especially for the hon, gentleman's information. It is in the first part of the Act:

If satisfactory proposals for the construction of the railways mentioned in this part be made to the Governor in Council by persons who are not incorporated, the Governor in Council may grant to such person, under such corporate name as he shall deem expedient, a charter—

Mr. FRASER. Certainly.

-conferring upon them, in whole or in part, the franchises, powers and privileges granted under any existing laws of this province to any company, as respects the construction or operation of lines of railway or steamships, and such charter, when published in the "Royal Gazette," by order of the Governor in Council, shall have force and effect as if it were an Act of the Legislature of Nova Scotia.

I would refort upon the hon, gentleman that he cannot, as a lawyer, have read through the Act, and I would ask him to withdraw the statement which he made. Every lawyer will understand what a blunder the hon. gentleman has made.

Mr. FRASER. I repeat the same statement, that except by an Act of Parliament. or under the Joint Stock Companies Act, and this is equivalent to it-

Mr. GILLIES. Not at all, this is a special Act.

Mr. FRASER. When satisfactory proposals have been made to the government. then the government, through the "Royal Gazette." can take the same method of doing it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FRASER. I had that in my mind all the time. If the hon, gentleman had read, that, he would have seen that when satisfactory proposals are made to the government for the construction of a railway, and the Government are satisfied that the company can construct it, then, after giving notice through the "Royal Gazette"—exactly as they would in the Joint Stock Companies Act-that can be done. So far as that is concerned, any company which has made satisfactory proposals can, on its charter being published in the "Royal Gazette." have the thing done exactly as it can be done under the Joint Stock Companies Act. I was not referring to that-

Mr. GILLIES. You did not know it.

Mr. FRASER. What I called the hon. gentleman's attention to was simply that they could not put any company into operation, of their own motion, and I say they When the government are satisfied that the parties have made a bona fide agreeing to differ. proposal, and have the ability to build the road, as under that section 5, then they can put that into operation.

Mr. GILLIES. It is section 7 I refer to.

Mr. FRASER. Then the government will grant a subsidy under the conditions of section 5. The company must show that they are able to build the road. AS. to putting any and every company simply to operation by an act of government, the cannot they do it. There is no such thing known, and no proposition has been made to carry out such a thing. So far as the road in Cape Breton is concerned I have not a word to say. I wish them to get all the subsidies they can. not in favour of the present road. I find no fault either with the Dominion or provincial Government so far as that is con-the part of the hon, gentleman to attempt to make capital against the local government for granting subsidies while he upholds the Dominion Government for having granted subsidies. I submit that the local government has made it possible for any company that will show its bona fides to construct a road, by this grant of $3,200 per mile, and that by this step the government has shown its desire to encourage railways in Nova Scotia. And how many companies have taken advantage of that? Very few. Why? Because the government insist that the company shall show that they have the money and are able to build the road they propose. But it is different here. We incorporate companies here and grant subsidies without any respect at all to whether or not they have the ability to build the road. For example, take the matter immediately under discussion-the South Shore Railway Company, and take the Bill that was before the Railway Committee to-day to incorporate that company. Here we have a company that clearly have not the ability to build the road. They have not shown that they are able to do what they ask this Parliament to authorize them to do.

Mr. Gillies.

Mr. GILLIES. What company do you refer to?

Mr. FRASER. The company seeking incorporation to build the South Shore road. I will admit what the hon, gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Gillies) says, and I sympathize with him that the road in Cape Breton should have been where he wants one built now. He was for that line.

Mr. CAMERON. No.

Mr. FRASER. The hon, member for Richmond will not say that. I leave the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) and the hon, member for Richmond to settle that question.

Mr. CAMERON. That was settled long ago.

Mr. FRASER. Yes; they settled it by Mr. CAMERON. Not at all.

Mr. FRASER. There is not a man in Richmond County, I believe, but is satisfied that the southern road was the correct one.

Mr. CAMERON. Oh. no.

Mr. FRASER. Am I to understand that the hon, member for Inverness has won over the hon, member for Richmond to believe that the correct road was chosen?

Mr. CAMERON. He was not here then.

Mr. FRASER. But he is here now.

Mr. GILLIES. You have said that I am

Mr. FRASER. The hon, member for Inverness wishes to make it appear that you cerned. But I think it shows bad taste on are in favour of the northern route.

Mr. GILLIES. Not at all.

Mr. FRASER. Then my statement is correct-they settled it by agreeing to differ. I agree with the hon, member for Richmond that the other route was the correct one. I agree also that it would have been better for Cape Breton to have built by the southern route and then have another line through the county of Inverness, and I believe the people of Cape Breton will say so.

Some hon, MEMBERS. No. no.

member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) will oppose that-

Mr. McDOUGALL. Certainly.

Mr. FRASER-for reasons that I do not stop now to consider. But the other line was the correct one. But there is not a possibility in the near future of having this This Parliament has wisely, line built. owing to the state of its finances, come to a standstill in the voting of subsidies. the county of Inverness there were two or three lines they were wanting to build, and, one way or another, they have not got a road yet. At one time they took up one and at another time another. But the question immediately before the House is not that of the railway in Cape Breton, but relates to the southern railway, and the motion is one for papers. Let us confine ourselves to that. What are the statements made? One of the statements made and not contradicted is that this company had become a bankrupt They may not have been decompany. clared bankrupt as a form of law; we have no bankruptcy law by which they could be thrown into bankruptcy. But when a company cannot meet its liabilities and pays only 30 or 33 cents on the dollar, it is bankrupt; therefore all papers called for should be brought down, in order that Parliament may be informed what condition that company is in. There has been a good deal of discussion on the question, but I do not think there has been too much, in view of the fact that the counties of Yarmouth, Shelburne and Queen's are interested in having this railway built. These are important counties on the southern shore of Nova Scotia; and now that they have within their reach the completion of a railway to afford accommodation to their people, it is no wonder that they are appearing before this Parliament and that the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) has called for these papers in order that Parliament may be informed as to the facts. We have the extraordinary spectacle of the county of Yarmouth by its municipality, the county of Shelburne by its municipality and the county of Queen's by its municipality have come here asking that one of these roads shall be favourably considered and the other shall not. Of course we have in opposition in the municipality of Shelburne. Perhaps to these, the hon, member for Shelburne the hon, gentleman will tell me.

(Mr. White). And while one cannot help feeling that the member for the county may be perhaps the best exponent of the views of the county, still it does detract from his authority when we find the municipality of the very county he represents coming here and asking that the very opposite from that which he wishes shall be done. The hon. member for Shelburne may have better reasons on his side than the municipality, still one is-

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). There is no Mr. FRASER. I know the hon, senior petition from the municipality of Shelburne against the road.

> Mr. FRASER. Certainly there is. Here is the petition from the municipal council of Shelburne, signed by J. E. Lloyd-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read, read.

W. A. McDonald, A. F. Mr. FRASER. Harlow, James Bower, Philip E. C. Bower, James A. McKay, Ed. Greenwood.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). These are the Grit councillors, and only the Grit council-

Mr. FRASER. Of course we are not to listen to this petition, though it is signed by the warden, because he is a Grit.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). It is not official.

Mr. FRASER. Though this is signed by the warden as warden, still it is not officialthat is something new. The argument is that because he happens to be a Grit his petition is worthless. But it comes here as the official portion of the warden and municipal councillors of the county of Shelburne.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I do not pretend to say that it is worthless because these men are Grits. I corrected the statement of the hon, member that this is signed by the warden and councillors. It would appear from his statement that this was from the whole municipal council. I call attention to the fact that it is only the petition of these persons and they describe themselves as warden and councillors. official. There is no seal. councillors. But it is

Mr. FRASER. But that does not appear on the face of the petition. It appears that this is the petition of the warden and municipal council of the municipality of Shelburne, and they give their names and set out what they want. Now, the hon. member for Shelburne may be better authority than these; I am not going to say that in such a case the member for the county is not the better authority. All I say is that we must look to these things. Which of them do the counties want? Which is the better? do not know how many councillors there are of them, there are four or live others.

Mr. FRASER. There is a majority, any way, and there is no counter proposition from the minority. Neither do the minority appear by petition or otherwise, before this House or before the committee, to ask anything different from what the warden has

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). They sent largely signed petitions to the boards of trade of Halifax and Yarmouth.

Mr. FRASER. The way to come to this Parliament is through the county of Shelburne, not to go all the way round by Halifax. When did they send the petitions there?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). In 1894.

Mr. FRASER. There was no resolution moved by the Yarmouth Board of Trada, so far as I know, later than 1893.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). It was in 1894.

Mr. FRASER. The only one was in 1893. There is no other for 1894, and it was previous to that. Now that explains the whole thing. Really, have the municipal councillors of the municipality of Shelburne to go all the way to Halifax to make their wants known? It is something very curious. I would suppose they would make their wants known through their representative, or by petitioning Parliament. I do not know as he had lost his brains. At any rate they have not lost confidence in him. Is it not curious that they have to go all the way to Halifax to be heard by the board of trade at Halifax, before they can make their wants known?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). They have no representative at the board of trade, and they have one here.

Mr. FRASER. Precisely, they should send their petition where they have their representative. I will leave the House to decide which is the more correct way, to act through their representative, or to send all the way to Halifax. But they want a broad gauge road. The board of trade has nothing to do with it, except that Halifax, being a central city, of course, is interested in the trade of all the counties. But the city of Halifax, while entitled to a good deal of consideration, ought not to be the authority to determine this question. The people of the counties of Shelburne, Yarmouth and Queen's are the people to decide this question. Now, I have so far failed to hear a single word from any representative party or from any representative body of men in the counties of Yarmouth. Shelburne or Queen's against the prayer of these petitions. That is the curious thing. Surely those counties understand their own business. How does it come that not one of them has

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I know four been heard? How is it that not one of them has come here to say: This southern road is all wrong, and we wish you would give us the other? How does it happen that it is only the promoters of this Bill who are here answering to this motion to-day, or who have already answered? It is a curious thing to me. One would suppose that in a matter affecting the whole province of Nova Scotia, we would pay a great deal more attention to the Parliament of that province. or the Parliament of Canada, than we would to individuals in that province; because we are bound to assume that that Parliament is acting in the interests of the whole province, or we are bound to assume that the municipal authorities of the counties and towns through which this raiway is passing. are acting in the interests of those counties and towns, and therefore anything they say is entitled to more weight as indicating the position of matters in those municipalities. than anything else that can be said. hon, member will see that he is in antagonism to the boards that govern in the towns and counties through which that line passes-at least, I have heard nothing to the contrary. Now, that being the case, I think this Parliament ought to consider very carefully any step it takes. We cannot expect to have parallel railways passing through counties like Yarmouth, Shelburne and Queen's. They never can expect more than one railway, and they must be well satisfied if they receive one railway, just as the shore county I have the honour to represent, and the shore part of the county of Halifax would be very glad if they received one railway. We ought, therefore, to draw the line there, and to say that the company going on and doing the work, shall receive from this Parliament reasonable support. I am not going to discuss other roads outside of that. I am not going to discuss Cape Breton, or any other section outside of my own county. I have done so again and again, not with that profit that comes of hard labour, but I have learned from my experience in this Parliament, that in whatever state I am, therewith to be content. I do not think that in the present state of things the other company proposing to build the southern road in the island of Cape Breton, has within themselves the ability to accomplish that undertaking. If you only leave a margin-and I am talking now in the presence of men who have built railways-what will be the result? road will be built, and then it will not be properly worked. You must insist that only men of means shall undertake to build a railway, and you must insist upon that, not only in view of the fact that the road itself ought to be well built, but in order to insure that the road shall be well run afterward. Building a road is one thing, and running it is something else. Therefore, we ought not for one moment to put anything in the way of a bona fide company that is attempting to build a road, neither should we attempt to increase the number of companies. I am sure that the Government do not want to increase the number of companies. I am sure that by the time they have given a subsidy to every company in Canada where a road should be built, they will find that the exchequer is sufficiently depleted. I know well that the Minister of Finance has no idea of giving a subsidy to companies that are going to build parallel lines. I do not think he wants to do it, if he could. This country cannot afford it. Therefore, we should insist that when a road receives the sanction of this Parliament. we should be satisfied that its promoters have the ability to carry out what they have undertaken. Labourers unpaid! Just the same trouble that came before us the other day in a case where the labourers were not paid. I think one hon, gentleman stated that there are 200 mules in the county of Yarmouth. Not one. They came, and they were shipped away again. There is not a single one in the province of Nova Scotia. We have to cross the border before we reach : them. But these came from Boston, they afford to vote any money where there is are Yankee mules, and I believe that with a contest between rival companies and where the exception of one sick mule that was the money may be lost. We in Nova Scotia detained in quarantine there, every mule has been sent back to Boston. Not one of them is ready to work there to-day, because they have all been taken away; and the plant, I believe-I am speaking subject to correction -has all gone too.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Not all.

Mr. FRASER. Well, all except a trifling quantity that is not worth talking about. and that cannot go, because the sheriff has charge of it.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). Those suits are all settled. The claims have all been paid and the suits withdrawn, as you will find out by looking at the Yarmouth papers.

Mr. FRASER. I say that the only part of that plant that is there now, remains because it had to remain.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). It came there. and was there when the execution was issued.

Mr. FRASER. What is the value of all the plant there now?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I cannot tell you.

Mr. FRASER. Is it worth $5,000?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I cannot say.

Mr. FRASER. $1,000?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I am not a judge.

Mr. FRASER. No: and I do not think the hon, gentleman will say it is worth $500. Most all of it has been sent away, mules that he made inquiries and that the mules were there and kicking, but I find they have been exported back to the place from whence they came, to the United States.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). That is not so. The mules were brought from Baltimore. and the plant was brought from Baltimore. The mules and a portion of the plant have been taking across the line and are now engaged in a work there, which will soon be completed, and then they will be brought back to Yarmouth to complete this road.

Mr FRASER. The only mistake I made was in stating they were foreign mules instead of Boston mules. At all events, the plant cannot be utilized. So this House should act carefully in any course it adopts. I am very anxious that railways should be built in Nova Scotia and elsewhere, if they are going to prove successful, but I do not want subsidies voted by this Parliament given to companies that will not construct roads. We must not vote the money of the people, I repeat, unless a road is going to be built, and we certainly cannot have received a fair share of railway subsidies, and there are still roads to be built: but the subsidies, with the exception of that given to the Short Line, have all been granted to roads that were absolutely necessary. I am not going to discuss that question now at length, but we must not forget that every dollar which is voted to a province for a line that does not become a success lessens the future chance of that province obtaining money for enterprises that will undoubtedly prove beneficial, and when we come to ask aid for such enterprises we have not the same opportunity of obtaining it. The Minister of Finance thinks, no doubt, that if his friends spoke as frankly as I have done, we would not have so much trouble. But to subsidize a railway company when another company is building a similar line is not to act in the best interests of the people of Nova Scotia. I support the motion made by the hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), and trust the papers will be brought down at an early day. The Government will understand that a company is now proceeding with construction, and I hope they will do nothing to interfere with the rights of that comnany, which is honestly carrying out the contract and building the road.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to make some observations in answer to the hon, member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser). I quite agree with the hon, gentleman that there should not be an increase in the number of companies chartered over any particular ground in any part of this Dominion. Unfortunately, the cause of this trouble has been that and all. I think the hon, gentleman said a second charter has been granted over the same ground. If that had not been the case I assume this difficulty would not have existed. But as the charter was originally granted for the South Shore Railway, I hold the rights and interests of that company should be protected by this Parliament. These western counties railway matters occupy a very unfortunate position; there cannot be any doubt that they are very much mixed up, and, unquestionably, the reason is that a second charter was granted over the ground covered by a previous charter. We find by the report of the provincial government engineer of Nova Scotia that:

The South Shore Railway Company, Limited, was incorporated under chapter 130 of the Acts of 1892, to build, own, equip and operate a line of railway of 4 feet 8½ inch gauge, from a point on the Yarmouth harbour, Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, or on the Western Counties Railway, through the townships of Yarmouth and Argyle, in the county of Yarmouth, thence through the western districts of Shelburne County, touching Barrington, and thence to Shelburne, subject to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, in accord-ance with chapter 53 of Revised Statutes, fifth series, referring to plans and surveys.

Section 28 of the Act of incorporation provides that the portion of the company's railway lying between the town of Yarmouth and the town of Barrington shall be begun and completed within four years after the passing of the Act, or reasonable progress towards the completion, satisfactory to the Governor in Council, shall be made within two years by the company, to ensure such completion.

Under the provisions of this section, the South Shore Railway Company had two years given them to begin the construction of that road. They commenced the surveys unfortunately for the railway system of the western counties, the local legislature granted a second charter over the same ground. to which the hon, member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) so seriously objects.

Mr. BORDEN. When the South Shore Company began their surveys was it for a road that was to be a narrow gauge or one of a standard gauge?

Mr. CAMERON. It is immaterial to the question at issue. The position I take is that a second charter should not have been granted over the same ground.

Mr. BORDEN. Answer the question.

Mr. CAMERON:

The company's Act of Incorporation was passed on the 30th day of April, 1892, but no practical effort towards construction on the line of railway was observable until the first week in February, 1894, when the work of surveying commenced.

The first plans of surveys and books of reference submitted by the South Shore Railway Company, under the provisions of chapter 53 of Revised Statutes, were deposited for certification of the Commissioner of Public Works on the 5th day of April, 1894, for a distance of ten miles, from Yarmouth to Tusket River, and on the 7th day of April a second section of ten miles from thence to Argyle was in like manner submitted. to some technical irregularities in the plans and reference books and to the alignment of the arst ten miles materially interfering with the lines of location of the Coast Railway Company's plans, that had been previously submitted, the necessary endorsement by certificate had to be postponed, pending a further revision of surveys, corrections and amended alignment. Up to the present time certificates for surveys and books of reference for a continuous line of railway from Yarmouth to Lower Woods Harbour Head, covering a distance of 40 miles, have been given by the Commissioner of Public Works.

About the 1st of October last, work of construction commenced and has been since that time expeditiously and continuously proceeded with. We have heard no complaints respecting payments for materials or for labour in connection with the works of the South Shore Railway.

The history of the introduction and procedure of the South Shore Railway Company and of the Coast Railway Company may be summarized thus:

In the winter of 1889 and the spring of 1899, the provincial government had a preliminary survey made for a railway to run along the western shore from Yarmouth to Lockeport, touching Tusket, Argyle, Pubnico, Wood's Harbour, Barrington, Clyde and Shelburne, plans and profiles of which were prepared and a report thereon published in my annual report for 1890.

Subsequently, during the session of 1892, a charter was applied for by the South Shore Railway Company, which was granted under the conditions already named, and passed on the 30th day of April, 1892. It will be seen by the preceding remarks, that from April, 1892, to February, 1894, a period of one year and nine months, no work was begun or active steps taken towards construction, so far as could be noticed.

During this period of inaction, the Coast Railway Company was formed and obtained a charter in the session of 1893, to build a narrow gauge in good faith, and before the time elapsed railway to follow the shore along the route of the preliminary survey of 1889-90, touching the points already mentioned.

> Both lines follow pretty closely the same course as the Government survey of 1889-90 followed.

> The Coast Railway Company, during 1893 and until February, 1894, had the field to itself and had a party making a location survey on the first six miles from Yarmouth during the fall of 1893.

> In the meantime, the South Shore Railway; Company seemed to awake from its lethargy, new hands took the helm and placed strong survey parties in the field in February, 1894.

The location lines of both companies closely together, side by side, they cross and recross, following the same valleys in seeking easy Expensive bridges are being built alignment. over the Salmon and Tusket rivers, within sight of each other, and this order of procedure seems to intensify as the works progress. The struggle for life and survival of the fittest is in this instance very fully exemplified.

Even now, at the present stage, if the two companies could only come to some agreement whereby the interests of both could be mutually and agreeably arranged a good adjustment might be effected. For although a large sum must be lost to both parties, expended on unproductive work, still if an amicable understanding could be now arranged, the loss would not be so much as might be apparent. In some sections such as that between Yarmouth and Arcadia where but one line, the narrow gauge one in this instance, has been graded, the work might with some alperformed on both of them, such saving could not be effected.

The reason why the South Shore Railway Company seemed to have been dormant for a couple of years was simply because that company had not received any encouragement from the local or Dominion govern-In 1894 they received some encouragement from the Ottawa Government, and they had clause 5 of the Nova Scotia Act of 1886 to give them the assurance that the local government would meet their demands when they were in a position to make them. But, unfortunately, this condition of things was brought about by granting a second charter over the same ground. I contend that the party who receives the first charter and who receives substantial aid from either the local or Dominion Government, is the one that should be maintained, and particularly so as they had undertaken at the beginning the construction of a standard gauge road, which is the only one that this House should sanction. If the other company is now forced to adopt a standard gauge, it is because the action of this Parliament, and the action of the South. Shore Railway Company forced them to: do it.

Mr. BORDEN. The South Shore was a narrow gauge at first.

Mr. CAMERON. That does not matter, because it were not subsidized, and would not be subsidized by this Parliament as a narrow gauge road. That is a good reason why, at this juncture, their rights should be maintained here. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a proper time for me to call the attention of the House to a We are taking Dr. McLennan into the comparallel case, with a view, if possible, to and are reserving an equal share for you. remedy the evils which have been brought about by granting dual charters over the same ground. In 1887 the Nova Scotia legislature granted two charters over the same ground in the county I have the honour to represent, and I call the attention of the House to these facts with a view of averting any such calamity either in the west or in the east. Both of these charters I refer to were granted at the same session lines by the Dominion Government this summer. of the local legislature of Nova Scotia. is well known to the public It here elsewhere, that I had and been posed to the granting of a second charter, because I believe then, and I believe now, that it is the very best course possible to pursue to frustrate railway construction in any section of this Dominion. The same objection I had against the granting of the second charter over the same ground in the county of Inverness, influences me now to stand by the company that received the original charter in this case. It is well known that in Nova Scotia particularly, no company will undertake the construction of a road unless they have secured that terations of curvature be utilized for the adoption substantial aid from the Dominion and proof the standard gauge, and so on. Of course vincial legislatures, which in Nova Scotia when the lines run counter and work has been is provided for by the statute, and in the Dominion is provided for in the usual cenditions of granting subsidies to railway companies throughout the Dominion. In 1887, as I have said, two rival companies were chartered by the local legislature. The two rival charters ran concurrently through both branches of the legislature, and they passed the legislative council within five minutes of each other, and received the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor at the The names of these companies same time. were, first, the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company; and second, the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company. Shortly after the passage of these charters. I received a letter from the promoter of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, dated 4th May, 1887, and which reads as follows:-

Mabou, 4th May, 1887.

My dear Sir,-I have just returned from Port Hood, where the municipal council is in session. My object in waiting on these gentlemen was to secure legislation in our railway enterprise. We have asked and got the council to vote a guarantee of 4 per cent interest on $100,000 for twenty years, which is a good beginning. I think the only opposition to the vote was Hon. John The most of McNeil and Duncan, from Judique. the councillors take the idea with enthusiasm.

The Hon. John had resolutions from the American company, asking free right of way and immunity from taxation, the county to do the fencing, and, I think, something else, but he had no one to back him but Duncan, and did not get a We think we have a good vote on them at all. show of $5,000 per mile from the local and the ccal royalties for twenty years and Crown lands; the rest we depend on you getting out of the Dominion Government, viz., the $3,200 per mile. These subsidies will secure the road.

We are taking Dr. McLennan into the company not know yet who the other members of the company may be, but I am determined to keep up the Tory side of the concern.

Our charter covers all Inverness and Victoria. and in our guarantee from the county we define the line from some point on the main trunk to Broad Cove coal mines, thence to Cheticamp and Margaree, with a branch to Port Hood.

My principal object in writing you now is to ask your influence in getting a survey of those We think that you may be able to obtain this, which would be quite an item out of the way of a company. I think, if we get this thing in order, we will shatter the Hon. Dan.'s prospects for the next election, if that is not already done. Please let me know what you think of this thing, at your earliest convenience.

Yours truly,

(Signed) JOHN McKEEN.

In answer to that letter I wrote, on the 28th May, as follows:—

Ottawa, 28th May, 1887.

My dear Sir.-I find that you will have a special meeting of Council to subsidize railway companies. Pass a resolution allowing no right of way or subsidy to any company that cannot secure a cash subsidy of $3,200 in its act of incorporation from the local legislature, etc.

Yours truly.

H. CAMERON.

About the same time. I received a telegram from the promoter of the other railway company, the Hon. William Ross, of Halifax, which reads as follows:—

Halifax. N.S., 18th May.

McKam here. Full power from New York. Incorporated company to complete arrangements with you and the local government. Only municipal concession asked is right of way and tax exemption. Council meeting, Port Hood, Friday. Other companies requiring municipal bonds for four per cent interest on $100,000 for twenty years. Will you wire the Council to present this writing.

W. ROSS.

I received a letter of the same date, assigning reasons why the municipal bonus should not be given to that company, and it proved to my mind, conclusively, that the effect, if not the object, of granting these two charters over that ground was to prevent the construction of the railway, as I will show further on.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 119) respecting the South Shore Railway Committee (from the Senate).—(Mr. Gillmor.)

Bill (No. 132) to revive and amend the Acts to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine River water power.—(Mr. Martin.)

TORONTO, HAMILTON AND BUFFALO RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 34) respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.—(Mr. Coatsworth.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FRASER. I move to amend the Bill by adding the following clause:—

The company shall remain liable for all debts due for the construction of the railway of the said company, and, if such debts are due to contractors, shall cause all just claims for labour, board and building material, in respect of such construction, to be paid by such contractors or their assigns or assignees, and, in default thereof, shall be directly liable to all persons having such claims.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I have not agreed to that clause and prefer to hear what the Government say with regard to it before proposing any amendment.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am sorry my hon, colleague, the Minister of Railways, is not here as he would be in a better position to discuss this question than I. It seems to me that this is a transfer of contract from one company to another. I do not see how we can interfere between the two in order to hold the second company responsible for the debts contracted by the first company. The courts are open to the two companies for the purpose of settling their rights, and those parties to whom either company is indebted have their recourse to the ordinary tribunals.

The control of the co

Mr. COATSWORTH. As some statements were made the other night with reference to this company. I would like to place the matter right before the House, so far as the company is concerned. I was quite taken by surprise by the petition read by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser). I had no personal knowledge of the facts, and I assured the committee at the time-although some of the papers have not given me credit for doing so-that I was quite anxious the workmen should be paid and that I feit certain the company was equally anxious. I immediately communicated with the company, and received this telegram in reply from its solicitor:

Have always been desirous of paying workmen and boarding-house keepers, and wished to do so even three months ago, but assignees of Bracey Brothers and creditors holding orders upon us. payable out of final estimates, objected and would not consent to our doing so. Bank of Hamilton holds assignment from Bracey Brothers of their contract, and all moneys payable under it, as security for about $13,000 advanced by the bank. We wish to pay the workmen and boarding-house keepers now, if we can be protected; or will pay the whole amount payable to contractors into court. Think, however, the workmen will fare better if money left in our hands, as we shall contend that they are entitled to be paid in full. Our clients have already paid over $21,000 directly to labourers, on progress estimates of Bracey Brothers, and have also paid over $54,000 on their own pay-rolls for labour on the line between Brantford and Hamilton.

I think this shows the great desire of the company to have these workmen paid. I am authorized to offer this amendment to the proposition of the hon, gentleman. I think that his amendment, which he had of necessity to draw up hastily the other night, is not quite in the form it ought to be. I would propose this amendment in its place:

The company is hereby authorized and empowered to retain, from time time, out of moneys due, or to become due, to any of its contractors, a sufficient sum to pay and shall, immediately after the passing of this Act, be liable to pay out of such moneys all bona fide claims for wages now due by such contractors, or by such sub-contractors, to any labourers or workmen for personal services actually performed in respect of the construction of said railway, and also all bona fide claims against such contractors, or sub-contractors, for boarding the said labourers and workmen, while so employed in respect of the construction of the said railway; and the payment by the company of such claims, or any part thereof, shall be a discharge to them, to the extent of such payment, of any claims against them by any contractor or any person claiming by, through or under him, and shall also discharge any contractor to the extent aforesaid from any claim by any sub-contractor or any person claiming by, through or under him, and who may be primarily liable to pay such claims or any of them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that retrospective: Does it cover past claims?

Mr. COATSWORTH. All claims now due out of money now due to the contracters. There are sufficient funds in the hands of the company to pay all these claims. The company are willing and anxious to pay them, and are willing to become liable to pay them immediately after the passing of the Act, provided Parliament authorizes them to pay out of these moneys so that they will not be called upon to pay the money over again to the contractors. That is the position they want to be put in and it is the object sought to be gained by this amendment that they shall be entitled to retain these moneys, and that they shall be liable to pay them to the workmen and boarding-house keepers immediately after the passing of the Act; and that that paymeni shall be a discharge from any liability to the contractor or sub-contractor.

Mr. MULOCK. Wherein does your amendment differ from that of the hon, member As in this case: for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) ?

Mr. COATSWORTH. The amendment of the hon, member for Guysboro' commences: "The company shall remain liable for all debts due for the construction of the railway of the said company." They are not to the persons having such claims. liable for these debts at all, you see.

Mr. FRASER. If I were allowed a word and it should read: of explanation the hon, member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth), I think, would understand. The same explanation would be a reply to the hon. Postmaster General. Instead of taking the amendment I had prepared myself—and which hurriedly prepared-knowing the value of precedent in these matters, I looked up the case of the North-west Central Railway in which case Parliament had passed a clause for the same purpose as now proposed, and I took that clause exactly as it read.

Mr. COATSWORTH: But they were primarily liable.

Mr. FRASER. I know that. But I took this clause in order that I might have authority for what I did. It reads:

The company shall remain liable-

It can only remain liable for any debt until that debt is discharged-

Mr. MULOCK. Is it quite clear that there is enough money owing to satisfy these claims?

Mr. COATSWORTH. We say there is enough money due to satisfy the claims of the workmen and boarding-house keeper: and, as an evidence of our good faith, we have in our amendment stated that we shall be liable to pay them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.L.) But only limit of the amount that may be due by you to the sub-contractors.

Mr. COATSWORTH. It provides that we shall be liable, out of the moneys-

Mr. MULOCK. Ah, "out of the moneys."

Mr. COATSWORTH. I was a little doubtful on that point, and telegraphed them to know exactly the effect. They say that the final estimate will be sufficient to pay the amounts due for wages and to boardinghouse keepers.

Mr. MULOCK. Eliminate that qualifica-

Mr. FRASER. I am not anxious about the form of words, provided there is enough to liquidate the claim. The claim with regard to the North-west Central, to which I refer, is to be found in chap, 74 of the Acts passed in 1886:

The company shall remain liable for all debts due for construction of the railway, and, if such debts are due to the contractors-

-shall cause all just claim for labour, board and building material, in respect of such construction. to be paid by such contractors, and. in default thereof, shall be directly liable-

That is the company shall be liable——

In the case before us the contractors failed.

Or their assignees, and, in default thereof, shall be liable——

And so on. That would cover it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. No: it cover it at all.

Mr. FRASER. In what way?

Mr. COATSWORTH. It does not authorize the company to pay the claims out of these moneys.

Mr. FRASER. So far as that is concerned I do not object to the wording of the hon, gentleman's resolution, if it goes far enough.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If I understand the hon, gentleman's amendment it is large enough to cover claims due as well as those to become due. But I want to call attention to the fact that it restricts its application to two classes.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is the intention -that is all that it claims.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Let us see what it does and what it does not do. It provides that the company may out of the moneys, if any, which are due by them to the sub-contractors, retain sufficient to pay two classes claim than these.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is the inten-Tierst.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And if they do not owe anything to the sub-contractors, then they are not bound to pay anything to the

Mr. McKAY. I would like to read a letter! I have received from the assignee of Bracey Bros., which affords some information on this point. He says:

I have little doubt, upon a fair estimate being made by the engineer that sufficient would be coming to me to pay all the claims; but, as the engineer is the employee of the construction company who are making all the profit out of the contracts, I do not expect very liberal treatment.

That means that the engineer who passes upon the contract is the engineer of the construction company, and he does not expect that engineer to treat the sub-contractor very liberally. There is a penalty clause under which Bracey Bros. bind themselves to forfeit $500 a day if the contract between them and the construction company—which is really the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Company—is not finished by the 5th December last. The assignee is afraid that the engineer may exact that $500 a day penalty and leave but very little coming to the subcontractors. So, if this amendment covers only the money which remains in the hands of the company as due to the sub-contractors. after that is all paid, it may be there will still be a large amount due to labourers and boarding-house keepers.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. As I understand the amendment of the hon. member for East Toronto, it proposes to make the company responsible for the amount due to the men for labour and the amount due to the boarding-house keepers, even if there is not enough money coming to the sub-contractor to settle those claims.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

SOMERVILLE. If not, then the amendment does not amount to anything.

Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

of creditors-the labourers who have actu- for, as the hon, member for Hamilton says. ally put their labour upon the road, and the Bracey Bros. gave a bond to the construction boarding-house keepers. It covers no other company--which is really the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Company-to pay $500 a day for every day they were behind in completing the contract after 5th December; and, Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not acquainted as it is not yet completed, if that penalty with the facts, but I understand that it is clause is enforced, the whole liability will probably be wiped out. So, unless the company is made liable in some other way to pay for the labour and board and material, the fact is that the labourers and those who Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If these are the furnished the supplies and the boarding-

> Mr. COATSWORTH. We are dealing here entirely with ex parte statements. The hon. gentleman has stated that there are amounts due to the men and to the boarding-house keepers. We admit that. And we say that there are enough moneys in hand to pay these things. And we say that our statement should be accepted.

> Mr. SOMERVILLE. Will you put it in the Bill?

> Mr. COATSWORTH. We have stated here that we are willing that the company shall be liable to pay these moneys. We do not want to equivocate; the only reason why we want it put as I have suggsted is that we want it distinctly understood that we are not to pay twice, that we are not liable to pay these moneys to the men, and, then afterwards to pay them to the contractors as well. I assure the hon, gentleman I am not equivocating in the slightest degree. read the telegram to him this afternoon that there are plenty of funds to pay these things. I have the telegrams here, and any hon. gentleman may see them, showing that there are plenty of funds to meet these claims. We are willing to pay them, and we are anxious to pay them, because it will save the credit of the company. We want the amendment put in that way, so it will be clear that out of those moneys we are entitled to pay.

> Mr. SOMERVILLE. You say you pay out of the moneys due to the contractors, but what if there is no money due to the contractors?

> Mr. COATSWORTH. But I am sure there is.

> Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon, member was to accept the amendment proposed by the hon, member for Guysboro's

Mr. COATSWORTH. No, I won't do it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If you accepted that amendment it would protect you in the payments, and enable you to deduct them from the sums due to your sub-con-Would not that meet the whole case?-because you say you are perfectly willing to become liable to those labourers and boarding-house keepers. Then declare that in so many words.

The company is hereby authorized and empewered to retain from time to time out of moneys due or to become due to any contractors, a sufficient sum to pay, and shall immediately after the passing of this Act, be liable to pay out of such moneys.

Now, the hon, member for North York makes this proposition:

In so far as said moneys will allow, and as to any deficiency, shall be personally liable out of the company's own funds to pay all bona fide claims.

Now, I think that puts it beyond doubt. We are willing to accept that.

The object we Sir ADOLPHE CARON. all have in view is that these labourers should be paid, and the hon, gentleman, from the precise information which he has given, and which he holds from the company, and the hon, member for North York, who has also looked into this matter, are agreed; and so far as the Government are concerned. I think there can be no objection to that amendment. I think it fully covers what the hon, member for Guysbore' (Mr. Fraser) has in view in moving his amendment. I think that the amendment of the hon, member for Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) even goes beyond the amendment of the hon, member for Guysboro'. I have no objection to this amendment, and I think it fully meets the case.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. There is another They used a great deal of timber in the construction of the railway from Hamilton to Brantford, that was got out by labour, and a large amount is due for that timber. Ought not that to be included also way. with the wages and board? I think so. It is labour to all intents and purposes.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I have no authory to do that. There was nothing said ity to do that. about timber the other night. The great point made the other night was this: Here are any number of workmen who have not got their wages. Now, we agreed on that point, we say we will pay wages, and we will pay the boarding-house keepers, and that is all we were asked to do.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). With respect to the question as to how you will interpret the term, "board," there is this practical difficulty. The Bracey Bros., in the adjustment of their account, obtained pretty large supplies that were used to mitigate the expenditure for board. They gave to their teamsters and men orders for supplies for the maintenance of those teams and men, while employed on that work. Is the term "board" sufficient to cover that claim, or do you interpret this as a commercial transaction? These supplies were used for the anything about it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon, member maintenance of the teams and men, and for North York makes a suggestion. I will would simply have made the board bill larger had they not been obtained in that form. I think it is perhaps fair to include that class of claim.

> An hon, MEMBER. No doubt board covers that. Supplies for the team would simply have increased the board bill.

> Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is clear this class of claim would not be covered, because the amendment is strictly limited to claims for actual board.

> Mr. McMULLEN. When my hon, friend from Guysboro' brought this question up the other day in the Railway Committee. Mr. Osler was there, and in reply to his demand then, on behalf of the labourers. Mr. Osler stated there were a number of garnishee creditors who had taken action against the Bracey Bros. How is this going to affect them? Will this Bill deprive those people of the rights they have under the actions they have taken?

> Mr. COATSWORTH. I do not understand that exactly.

> Mr. FRASER. If it is a bona fide claim. it must be paid, as I understand. But in reply to the hon, member for Toronto, I may say that the petition does not refer to teams. It says "in respect of said work done and materials supplied." That is the petition I presented, which I read from "Hansard." Now, would not these words meet the case: "And all moneys so paid shall be pro tanto a discharge to such contractors as between them and their sub-contractors"? That would give the hon. member all he would want. I do not want to press for too much. I am very glad that the company are coming forward in this

> Mr. MULOCK. I think the company is acting very fairly.

> Mr. FRASER. I want to get as much as possible, but I don't want to be too exacting.

> Mr. COATSWORTH. I could not go any further with the amendment.

> Mr. SOMERVILLE. We understand, then, your amendment includes payment of these bills for supplies that went for the maintenance of the men and helped to pay the board bills and the keep of the horses that were employed?

> Mr. COATSWORTH. If they come within the scope of the amendment.

> Mr. SOMERVILLE. You say they do come within the scope of the amendment.

> Mr. COATSWORTH. No, I do not say road, and who fed the teams, that might be put in.

Mr. COATSWORTH. If the boardinghouse keepers are paid out of that account for their supplies.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). These were purchased, I think, by Bracey Bros. themselves, and supplied in that form by order, so that those who furnished them are creditors of Bracey Bros., practically.

Mr. COATSWORTH. If they are claims for board, they will come within the amend-

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That will generally be considered satisfactory, but there is one thing more we should do. Both sides, so far as there are sides, agree that these claims should be paid. Our right to enact this provision is, however, more than doubtful.

Some hon, MEMBERS. Hear, hear,

Mt. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That appears to be the consensus of opinion. But Parliament should make its declaration practical by providing that the Act should not come. into force until these claims have been paid.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then we are only playing with the question, for we are passing legislation which we know will be noneffective. What is the sense of deceiving the labourers? If we have not the power to; make this declaration, except we insert the provision I have mentioned, why should we pass it? I object to Parliament making itself a laughing-stock. Let us make this Act effective, and do not let us go through the farce of passing it in such a form as is suggested, when the lawyers of the House declare that it will not be effective. We do not want to play with the labourers, and have them come here and declare that we have been playing a false game, passing legislation which we knew was non-effective. Some provision should be inserted to make that declaration on which both sides are agreed effective, and that can be done by providing that the Act shall not come into force until these payments have been made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is quite evident that the Bill will not get through in the allotted time to-night. A very satisfactory arrangement is going to be made between the parties, and the company appears to be willing to pay these debts, to some extent at least. The only way in which this arrangement can be carried is to refer the Bill back to the committee and have a sub-

Mr. Coatsworth.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Don't you think it committee draft clauses so as to give effect would be just and honest to put that in? to what is now proposed. That is the only These claims do not amount to much, per-solution of the difficulty. It is evident from haps $2,000 would cover the whole. I think, the disagreement existing among the lawyers in justice to the boarding-house keepers that it is not clearly understood what the who fed the men that did the work on the effect of the clause will be, and the last statement made by an hon, member (Mr. Davies) is that we are deceiving ourselves as well as the parties in our measures for applying relief. The discussion shows the importance of amending the Railway Act, as was suggested some years ago. means Tupper, when Minister of Railways, promised to have the Act amended so that payments for wages and materials furnished should constitute a first lien on the assets of the company. No doubt many grievances occur. Labourers and people furnishing supplies suffered very seriously owing to the system of sub-letting contracts to irresponsible parties, and I would impress upon the Government the desirability of taking this subject into consideration, and amending the Act so that we may avoid in the future occurrences such as this. I am perfectly satisfied that the good sense of the committee will see that the course I have suggested is the only solution of the present difficulty, and it should be adopted for this reason, among other reasons, because the Bill will come up in the other House, and if not satisfactory will be referred back. I therefore move that the committee rise and report progress.

> Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his motion. We have arrived. I think, at a very satisfactory solution. The object of all hon, members who have taken part in this debate is to protect the workmen. The hon, member who has expressed the view of the company has done so very frankly and openly, and he stated that the company were anxious to pay for the labour that had But he said, what gone into the road. every business man would understand, that the company did not wish to pay money to the labourers and have to pay it again to sub-contractors, and the amendment suggested by the hon, member protects the labourers to the fullest possible extent. have read the amendment and listened very attentively to the discussion which has been the outcome of these two amendments, and while it may be important to consider whether the Railway Act should not be amended, do not let us at this late period of the session delay this Bill, when it really provides for exactly what every hon, member has in view, the protection of the labourers. The hon, member for York and the hon, member for Toronto have gone over this amendment and have agreed to it. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that this Bill must go before the Senate. I think the amendment meets the case completely, and I would ask that the Bill be disposed of. The time of Parlia ment is so precious at this the end of the! session that all parties should join together to avoid delays where possible. I am quite prepared to vote in favour of the amendment.

The second secon

Mr. SUTHERLAND, I do not wish to press my motion. I am in favour of the Bill and anxious that it should become law. and my only object is to facilitate its passage. If it is found, when the Bill is in the Senate, that the position taken by the hon. member for Oueen's (Mr. Davies) is the correct one, the Bill will no doubt be sent back to this House.

Mr. CURRAN. I think all will agree that this Parliament should not interfere in the way first suggested. The only manner in ing on both parties. which we can meet the present case and make our action effective is by adopting the amendment introduced at the suggestion of the hon, member for York. The question now is, does that go far enough? The amendment says, speaking of the moneys in the hands of the assignee: "In so far as said moneys will allow we have no controlover these moneys." I think if we went a Little further, and provided that in the event of their being no funds legally available in the hands of the assignee, the company shall be personally liable for the deshall be personally liable the de-We are ticiency, the case would be met. legislating in a matter we cannot control here, except to a certain extent. wish to meet this matter 17.43 practically liable. make company My hon, friend (Mr. Coatsworth) says they only want to make the company liable primarily as regards any deficiency, but I think my hon, friend will agree with most of us, that this Parliament cannot control that first part of the moneys to which he tefers. leaving a balance to be paid. Under the laws of Ontario I suppose that these funds are to be distributed in a certain way. We cannot say here, that "A," "B' or "C" shall stand aside until the labourers and boarding-house keepers shall be paid. Such legislation would not be worth a finger snap; it would be ultra vires, as the money and assets now in the hands of the assignee are absolutely under the control of the legislation of the local legislature. If the hon, gentleman wants to protect the company from paying twice, he is taking a wrong way of doing it, because our action would not relieve them from the claim of any other crediters who might come forward and formulate their demands under the laws of Ontario.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon, friend (Mr. Coatsworth) knows I am anxious this Bill should pass through in the best possible manner, and the best possible way, in my opinion, is to refer it back to the committee.

Mr. COATSWORTH. If it were earlier in the session I would adopt the hon. gentleman's suggestion. The Bill has to go through the Senate and if there are any suggestions they can be made there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, If my hon, friend wishes I will withdraw the motion, but I am satisfied he will lose by it.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the hon, gentleman (Mr. Coatsworth) willing that a clause should be added declaring that the privilege conceded to this company by this Bill shall not come into operation until the debts are discharged?

Mr. COATSWORTH. No. If hon, gentlemen on the other side will agree to assist us in carrying out the arrangement proposed. I am satisfied to have the Bill go back to the committee for the purpose of putting it in such a shape as will be bind-

Some hon. MEMBERS. All right.

Mr.MACLEAN (York) moved that the following clause be added to the Bill:

But nothing in this Act contained, or in the Railway Act or amendments thereof, shall allow any rate of fare for way passengers greater than 2 cents per mile to be charged, or taken over the track or tracks of the said Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.

He said: Two nights ago in speaking on this question I endeavoured to show that the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo road was a Vanderbilt line. I also showed that the New York Central, the great Vanderbilt line, carrying more passengers than any other railroad in America, found it profitable to charge a 2 cent rate.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It seems to me if the Bill is now referred back to the committee, the hon, gentleman will have an opportunity to move his amendment when it comes back to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. The Bill cannot be referred back until we get out of committee.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When the Bill comes back the hon, gentleman will have an opportunity of explaining his amendment.

Mr. MULOCK. If it is the intention of the committee to keep good-faith with the hon, gentleman (Mr. Maclean) the committee can rise before the hour for private Bills has expired, and then when the Speaker is in the Chair a motion to that effect can be made.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the committee rose.

COAST AND SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANIES, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. Speaker, before you left the Chair at six o'clock I was referring to correspondence which I had received from the promoters of the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, and the In-verness and Victoria Railway Company. I read a letter from John McKeen, president of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, ridiculing the Inverness and Richmond Company as possessing no means to proceed with the work. I might also quote several letters from the president of the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, to prove that the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company was unworthy of the confidence of the people. The battle of rival companies has been fought along these lines before the municipal council of Inverness from 1887 up to the present time. On 11th June, 1887, I received a telegram from one of the promoters of the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, as follows:—

Halifax, 10th June, 1887.

Provincial Council meet in ten days. Will have contract signed there. Will you have subsidy voted before Parliament closes? You are interested $5,000.

(Signed) L. G. McKAM.

In answer to this telegram I sent the following on the same day:—

Ottawa, 11th June, 1887.

L. G. McKam, Esq., Halifax.

Shall accept no interest in any company. If you secure necessary legislation or contract from local government, am informed your company will have no difficulty securing usual subsidy of $3,200 per mile here.

(Signed) H. CAMERON.

I quote these letters and telegrams to show the rivalry which existed between these two companies in the county of Inverness, as well as that which exists now in the western counties of Nova Scotia; and my object is, if possible, to get some solution by which the rivalries between these companies shall hereafter be discontinued. After I received these telegrams and other evidence of the contentions between these two companies, I applied to the late Sir John Macdonald, who was then Minister of Railways, for a subsidy from this Parliament to one of the companies which were chartered to build railways all over the county of Inverness, as represented by Mr. McKeen, who was president of one company, and by Mr. Ross, who was president of the other. My letter was addressed to the Minister of Railways on the 18th of June, 1887. To this letter I received the following reply:

Earnscliffe, Ottawa, 1st July, 1887.

My dear Cameron,—You ask me, in your letter of the 18th ultimo, whether, if a company be formed to construct a railway in Inverness which would be a feeder to the Government line, I can give any assurance that the Government would grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile. All I can say is, that when the time comes, the claims of the railway company will receive every consideration. One cannot foresee what may be the financial position of the country a year hence. There can only be a certain sum granted annually, and all parts of the Dominion must have a share. Cape Breton and Nova Scotia have been specially favoured lately, and the Government may find itself compelled next session to help other provinces. However, we shall see, when you come up next session.

Believe me, yours faithfully.

JOHN A. MACDONALD.

H. Cameron, Esq., M.D., M.P., Mabou, N.S.

Mr. CAMERON.

After receiving this letter, I communicated it to the railway companies interested. Still, the rivalry between the companies continued to wax warm. I find that in December, 1887, a promise was given to the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, one of the companies chartered by the local legislature, as follows:—

Halifax, 21st December, 1887.

Sir,—Referring to the application of your company for a subsidy for a railway from a point in the district of Margaree to Mabou, Port Hood and a point near Port Hawkesbury, about $43-5th miles, I beg to say, that the members of the Government have considered the matter, that they view the proposed enterprise with approval, and that they are ready to advise the granting of a subsidy of $3,200 per mile, upon satisfactory evidence of the ability of your company to complete the undertaking.

In the absence of a Dominion subsidy, it is more difficult than it otherwise would be to satisfy our Government of a company's resources for carrying on such a work. If you obtain a Dominion subsidy at the approaching session of the Dominion Parliament, as you say you confidently expect, there will not be much difficulty in arranging the security. We are making inquiry respecting the parties whose names you submit, and the information we have received leads us to believe that they, with the addition of others you have verbally offered, will suffice. If you fail to receive a Dominion subsidy, we shall still be willing to advise a subsidy from the province, but in that case the requirements in the way of security will be larger.

No lands have yet been granted to any of the companies applying under the Act of 1886, and I am unable to make any statement to you with repect to land subsidy.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

W. S. FIELDING, Provincial Secretary.

Frank B. Allen, Esq.,

Secretary Inverness and Richmond Ry. Co.

From the moment this letter was placed in my hands, I determined to use all my influence here and elsewhere to secure a subsidy for that company. Because it would be absurd to have a local subsidy granted to one company unless a Dominion subsidy. if granted at all, would be given to the same company. I have tried to avoid if possible the condition of things which now exists in the western counties of Nova Scotia. In that case the Dominion Government granted a subsidy to one company of $3,200 per mile on the completion of every ten-mile section, and the local government granted a subsidy on a condition which I am not prepared to state. But I say it was absolute folly for the advocates of a railway in the western counties, after they found that the Dominion Government recognized one company, and that company to some extent had secured concessions from the local House and promises as well, to divert their energies from assisting the same company in securing a subsidy from the local legislature. This letter from Premier Fielding might have been given to both companies. As a matter of fact, it was not necessary to give any company such a letter practically gave the same assurance to every company that would be chartered by Nova Scotia or the Dominion over that or any other line. It did not make any differerice whether they were running parallel or whether there was one or more charters for This promise might have that purpose. been given to all of them, and it would have had the same effect; but as this promiseguarantee as it was then called-was given to the Inverness and Richmond Company, from that time to a later period, to which I shall refer hereafter, I was determined that the Dominion Parliament should grant the same subsidy simply because this was the company recognized by the local government at the time. Unfortunately for the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, we find that in 1888 a quarrel arose between its promoters just in the same way as a quarrel exists now between the promoters of the Western Counties Railway Company, condition of things, but they reorganized in 1888 under a new management, and the new organization was registered in the shire town of Port Hood as required by law. was only the further convinced that if we obtained railways in Inverness it would only be by bringing our forces together and securing subsidies from both Dominion and local Parliaments for the same company, as otherwise the enterprise would fall through. In 1888, simply because I was assured that if I had a Dominion subsidy for that company or even the promise of it, the local government would sign a contract to the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, I made an appeal, through the members of the Government from Nova Scotia, to this Government to secure, if not a subsidy, at least the promise of it. On the 10th July, 1888, I received the following letter from the Minister representing Nova Scotia. The letter is dated from the office of the Minister of Justice at Ottawa:-

My dear Mr. Tupper,-As Mr. Pope had left for Cookshire when I received from you the inclosed letter from Dr. Cameron, I sent it on to him, and cannot give any assurance of a subsidy at present, as the answer will depend, first, on the feasibility and usefulness of the route proposed, and, second, on the means of the company to earry on the undertaking. Neither of those points has as yet been considered by the Govern-It would be useless to consider the secment. and until the first had been ascertained; and, so far, it would appear that the company have not the means, certainly without the local subsidy they have not. The Government cannot be expected to pledge subsidies at this season of the year, except in very rare cases and cases which as this, because the Railway Act passed by the session, for the reason that it cannot settle the local legislature of Nova Scotia in 1886 its railway policy, from year to year, without a knowledge of the demands which are to be made on the treasury and a knowledge of the financial condition of the country, all of which can only be ascertained after the financial year is well advanced.

Yours truly, J. S. D. THOMPSON.

Having failed to secure even a promise of subsidy from the Dominion Government at that time. I felt that the company had to rely upon the usual guarantee given by the Parliament of Canada to subsidize any company which would show its bona fides and show that it was able to go on with the enterprise. But unfortunately for this company, in 1888 there was another break up, and the company as it existed and as registered in the registry office at Port Hood was again transferred to another company. The principle stockholders of it were Messrs. Oakes. Wheaton and Gray, and they applied for subsidies from this Parliament in 1888 and 1889. In both cases and times I aided in one case at least, and I believe in them with all the power at my control. My both cases. That was a very unfortunate applications for a subsidy for those companies have been here brought down before the House, which were made in 1888, 1889. 1890, 1891 and 1892. All my applications were, from the outset, in favour of a subsidy to the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, not because I had any personal friends in that company, but simply because that company was recognized, as it appeared to me, by the local government of Nova Scotia, and because a promise was made to that company of a subsidy on the terms of the Railway Act of 1886. But as I have said, I had but little confidence in that promise, because it was only a promise which could have been made to every company, not only operating in that county, but operating elsewhere as well. As I have shown by the letter of Mr. John McKeen, it appears that he was promised not only a subsidy of $3,-200 per mile from the local government, but of $5,000 per mile, and also a reduction of the royalty on coal in the district in which he intended to build his road. So it appears from the correspondence now before the House that the local government gave a promise to both companies, notwithstanding now send you the reply. The reply does not the fact that they had charters to sure give Dr. Cameron the information he wants, but a railway practically over the same ground. I think the answer he should make the company I am not in a position to say that both I think the answer he should make the company I am not in a position to say that both railway companies, which rival each other in the western counties, have been promised any such thing by the local government, but I am in a position to say that the Railway Act of 1886 promised each company a subsidy if it fulfilled the conditions imposed upon it by the legislation then and now in force. So that the hope of securing a subsidy from the local government on the terms of that statute and the hope of securing a Dominion subsidy of $3,200 per mile from this Parliament, on the usual condihave been fully recognized as having special tions, was a reasonable hope for the South claims on Parliament. It does not do so before Shore Railway Company when it was intions, was a reasonable hope for the South

We had considerable experience in Cape Breton at knocking heads together: before the municipal council, the Inverness knocked against each other, and adopted a and Richmond Railway Company pleaded common sense line, which was acceptable for a subvention of $100,000 successfully; and I urged that both companies should secured a railway anywhere. In 1893, I amalgamate. I was not heeded. On these lines I wrote pany to amalgamate and thus secure for us a letter to the-

Mr. FORBES. I rise to a point of order. The resolution before the House has reference to the South Shore and Coast Railway Companies, and I fail to see the connection between this subject and that the hon, gentleman is discussing.

Mr. CAMERON. I think you will find, by the time I am through, that there is a strong similarity between these cases. I am going to suggest a course which you should pursue in order to reconcile your differences.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman will please confine himself as closely as possible to the question.

Mr. CAMERON. That is my intention. As you will no doubt observe, Mr. Speaker, the rivalry which exists between the South Shore Railway Company and the Coast Line Railway Company existed in Inverness at a prior date, and it is my intention, if possible, to call the attention of this House and the country to the only remedy which, in my opinion, is available in order to teach such rival companies common sense. And, in order that I may do that, it is necessary for me to point out to the South Shore Railway Company and the Coast Railway Company the reasons why their predecescorporated in 1892. At this juncture, sers in Inverness failed up to the present I may tell the House, I used all the time, and that will be an object lesson influence I possessed before the muni- to them and to the hon, gentlemen who are if they had any capital to invest, it might ness. In fact, in former times, we found If an enemy could the legislature of Nova Scotia in 1887, as ex- heads together, it would save the provincial than by pulling against each other in the and it was not until the representatives of municipal council, in the local house, and Cape Breton, in 1883 and 1884, came to the here as well. I failed, however. In 1889, conclusion that they would be no longer I advised both companies to construct the friends opposite. I wrote a letter to the the construction of a shore line from Hawkesbury to Cheticamp. I was not particular whether the branch was built by the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, or by the Government; but I was determined. if I had any influence with them or with the Government here and in Nova Scotia, to have only two railway systems on that side of the Island of Cape Breton, namely. the Government line and the railway company line. I felt that if the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company and the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company would build the shore line from Hawkesbury to Cheticamp and the branch from the point of junction through Mabou to Whycocomah, the railway interests of Inverness would be subserved. Then the Government would build the branch from Orangedale to Mabou, because it would be a paying concern. For that reason, I addressed a letter to the Premier, the late Sir John Macdonald, to which I received the following reply

Earnscliffe, Ottawa, 22nd Nov., 1890.

It is altogether premature to discuss such subjects at present.

Believe me, yours faithfully.

JOHN A. MACDONALD.

H. Cameron, Esq., M.P., Mabou, C.B.

I addressed a letter also to the late Sir John Thompson, to which I received a reply as follows:—

Office of the Minister of Justice. Ottawa, 21st Jan., 1891.

My dear Mr. Cameron.—What you say as regards the building of a branch from Orangedale to Whycocomah seems very reasonable, and if you can establish your case by showing the traffic to be as large as you mention in your letter, I will do all I reasonably can to help you to get this branch.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN S. D. THOMPSON.

H. Cameron, Esq., M.P., Mabou, N.S.

About that time we had a public meeting at Whycocomah, Inverness. My hon, friend the senior member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), will agree with me that a more delightful place to address a public meeting could not be found in this Dominion; and he will agree with me also that in no place in this Dominion can be get so good a hearing as in the district of Whycocomah. And not only he, but any person who can address a public meeting intelligently will get a calm, patient and intelligent hearing. In 1891, the warden of the county of Inverness convened a meeting at that delightful spot, and, with others, called upon me on 3rd February, 1891, to go there and explain my position in regard to railway enterprises in Inverness. I desire to call the attention of my western county friends particularly to this fact, because it may enable them to solve their difficulties:

Ernscliffe, Ottawa, 10th Feb., 1891.

My dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 8th instant on the subject of the construction of a line of railway from Orangedale to Broad Cove in Inverness. From your description of the line, it is evidently one having great merits, and the moment the general election is over, I shall bring the matter before my colleagues with every desire to meet your views. At present my colleagues are all scattered, looking after their elections. I sincerely trust that you will be elected, and thus have an opportunity of pressing the construction of this line with your usual energy and perseverence upon the Government.

Yours sincerely,

(Sd.) JOHN A. MACDONALD.

This was in answer to a letter which I wrote on the date of a meeting in Whycocomah, which was called by my opponents.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When was the letter written?

Mr. CAMERON. The letter was written on the 3rd February, 1891.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I call attention to the fact that the hon, member is now dealing with historical facts of a period antecedent to the granting of the first local charter, and in respect of a local railway more than 300 miles away from the one under discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am listening carefully to the hop, member for Inverness, and I gather from his remarks that he is endeavouring to argue that the South Shore and Coast Railway Companies should unite, and illustrating that by detailing certain difficulties that arose in relation to the railways in the county of Inverness.

Mr. CAMERON. I want to show my hon. friends opposite, and particularly the Western County Railway gentlemen, that this is a parallel case, and that this is the only way in which the difficulty can be settled. They will profit by our experience, as I have no doubt we shall profit by theirs. In order to put the case plainly to them, I desire to call attention to another letter which I received from the late Sir John Thompson. It has reference to the construction of the branch line by government:

Office of the Minister of Justice. Ottawa, 18th July, 1892.

Dear Dr. Cameron,—Referring to your letter of the 4th instant, I beg to state that it was my intention to recommend to the Government that a railway subsidy be granted for the whole distance between Orangedale and Broad Cove.

This has reference to another point which will appear more appropriately to the position of my hon. friends opposite. Unfortunately, in 1892 a great difficulty arose between the two rival companies in the county of Inverness, and in order to enable our friends to profit by experience, I shall point out the manner in which we got over that difficulty. I want them to understand distinctly that, notwithstanding that they are in the soup yet, we practically got out of it, and it is for the purpose of showing to them the best way out of these difficulties that I have referred to this case at all. The rival companies appealed to Parliament in 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892, for a subsidy. I pressed for a subsidy for the company, which was recognized partially by the local government, and if they could only reconcile the difficulty in a manner which I intend to suggest to my hon. friends opposite before I close, I fancy that we would have been a little further In 1892 there was a subsidy advanced. granted for the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company on the main line. I may state here that in 1890 this Parliament recognized the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company to the extent of granting a subsidy on the shore line, but, unfortunately, on account of the rivalry that existed between both companies, for reasons which I cannot here explain, the government de-cided to give the subsidies to the company government to undertake that branch as a government work. Be that as it may, the branch line, at their own request, and simply his speech: with the view of securing the construction of the whole railway system for the county of Inverness under one railway company, which would be advantageous, not only to the company itself, but to the residents of the county who were interested in the construction of a railway. In 1892. a subsidy was granted for the branch line. and the company having asked for the subsidy, with my full consent and with my co-operation, and having asked for a subsidy from Hawkesbury to Broad Cove, with a branch to Orangedale as well, I was a little surprised when the railway subsidies was brought before the House to learn that instead of having a subsidy from Hawkesbury to Broad Cove, as I hoped to have, and as I applied for on behalf of the company, we only had a subsidy for a twenty-five mile line. I addressed a letter Immediately to the Minister of Justice calling his attention to the fact that we only had a subsidy for a part of the line. I have already read the first part of his answer, and he continued as follows:—

and, in consenting to the vote which was made for twenty-five miles, the Government were under the impression that they were subsidizing the whole length. The figures which I used in presenting the matter to my colleagues had been furnished me by the Railway Department and represented the distance as twenty-five miles. I believe the mistake oc-curred by the officer who prepared these figures being misled by the fact that the railway from Port Hood northward, as laid down in the plans of the railway company, approached ten miles nearer to Orangedale than the coast, and he gave me the distance from Orangedale to the projected railway line from Port Hood northward instead of from Orangedale to the coast. I have no doubt whatever that at the first available opportunity the Government will cheerfully give a subsidy for the remainder of the line to the coast.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN S. D. THOMPSON. (Sd.)

I am happy to say that in response to the assurance then given, the Government did subsidize the balance of the line to the Unfortunately, again, at this particular stage there was another quarrel between the railway companies that did not exist in the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, to which I have been referring up to the present time. Now commenced the as he himself told me, "that he would burst it rivalry between members of the Inverness in the Senate." Miller, yesterday, fought against on the branch first, possibly because I was and Victoria Railway Company, and, as it pressing strongly to have that branch con- is a matter of history which was formerly structed by government itself; and it would before the public, I desire to call attention appear almost unreasonable that while the to the prominent facts in connection with company promised to construct that branch it, with the view of enabling the South line for a subsidy from this Parliament of Shore Railway Company and the Coast $3,200 per mile, we could hope to get the Railway Company in the western counties government to undertake that branch as a of Nova Scotia, to reconcile their difficulties on the same line. This matter came up on Dominion Government recognized the In- a Bill before the Senate in 1891, and as it verness and Richmond Railway Company is concisely put by my hon, and learned first on the shore line, then on the friend Senator Miller, I desire to quote from

> Mr. John McKeen, the president of this last road, of which I am now speaking, is a man of substance and character in the county of Inverness. He has been warden of that county for many years, and only gave up that representative position because he did not desire to continue any longer in it. His brother represents the county of Cape Breton in the House of Commons. Mr. John McKeen, imagining that Mr. Paint was carrying out the instructions from the company up here in Ottawa, communicated with his brother in the House of Com-mons, and his brother helped his Bill through the other chamber, and Mr. Hugh Cameron, M.P., for Inverness, fancying also that Mr. Paint was carrying out the wishes of the company that had employed him to get a Dominion charter for them over their road, also supported him. No one opposed the Bill, because the company having a local charter, no one thought worth while to interfere with them getting a Dominion charter. But Mr. Paint is trying to get a fraudulent charter, giving a majority of the directors to himself and his friends, by which he can euchre the old directors of the old property. Mr. Paint, finding that this Bill was opposed in the Commons, wrote-I will give Mr. Paint as witness to speak against himselfto Mr. John McKeen, in Inverness, asking for his assistance to carry the Bill through the Senate. Mr. McKeen is one of the four corporators of the old company that Mr. Paint had included in the new charter. He called this gen included in the new charter. He called this gentleman as a witness, and Mr. McKeen must be looked upon as a friendly witness. He is the gentleman that Mr. Paint appealed to for assistance and countenance. When Mr. John McKeen heard of the deception that had been practised he telegraphed at once to the member representing Inverness, as follows :-

> > 4th July.

H. Cameron, Esq., M.P.

Our company will certainly oppose Paint's getting Dominion charter. We meet 15th instant.

That is the first sound that Mr. McKeen gives that his eyes were open to the deception being practiced on him, and here is the correspondence afterwards between Mr. Paint and Mr. McKeen:

Ottawa, 1st August, 1891.

John McKeen, Esq., Mabou.

Dear Sir,—I herewith inclose you a copy of the Dominion and local charter of the Inverness and Victoria Railway and Mining Company.

Dr. Cameron, M.P., after much hesitancy, finally, with modifications, yielding his opposition in the House of Commons and Railway Committee, but has since renewed it, I regret to say, through Miller in the Senate. I cannot be mistaken, its second reading, saying as a reason that he expected to receive information that would enable him to give it the six months' hoist. I trust you will not aid in its defeat, as your name is in the Dominion charter, and, if it passes, we all will be in a much better position. Your brother here, I judge, did what he could to aid its passage, as he was present at the committees.

I would like you to support my hand by a telegraph. Fear nobody; act yourself.

Yours, &c.,

HENRY N. PAINT.

He was the promoter of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, and I have this correspondence from Mr. McKeen in regard to his letter:

Mahou, 5th August, 1891.

H. N. Paint, Esq., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,-I am just in receipt of yours, 1st August, also copy of charter now before the House of Commons, Ottawa. In reply, I beg to say that, at a full meeting of the directors of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, held at Hastings on Saturday 1st instant, at which I presided as president of the company, the directers were, for the first time, made aware that you were applying for a Dominion charter under a name different from ours, and the unanimously expressed opinion was, that you had acted in bad faith toward the Inverness and Victoria Railway No action inimicable to your designs Company. was taken by us, simply because we were under the impression that you had changed your application so as to allow the Dominion charter to pass to the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, as it now exists. The copy of the charter now before me shows that we were under a false impression regarding your application. I have no doubt, had we this paper before us at our meeting on Saturday last, we would have taken active steps to oppose its further progress in its present shape. As it was, a resolution was passed, asking me to procure a copy of the charter from Dr. Cameron, M.P., with other particulars regarding it, with a view to protecting our interests. Speaking for myself, I may say, that I am not satisfied with the course you have been pursuing towards the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, and I must ask you to with-Victoria draw my name from the application you are now pressing in favour of the Inverness and Victoria Railway and Mining Company. If a Dominion charter is a good thing to have in connection with our local charter, why not have applied for it with the same names as in the local, is the query new in the minds of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company?

Yours truly, JOHN McKEEN.

About the same time, Mr. McKeen wrote the following letter to me:-

Clayton, Mabou, 5th August, 1891.

My dear Sir,—The last mail brought me a letter and copy of Dominion and local charter of Inverness and Victoria Railway Company. Our company had a meeting at Hastings last Saturday. We were then informed that Mr. Paint had been applying for a Dominion charter over our ground under a different name from ours. A general feeling of indignation was manifested at what was considered Mr. Paint's bad faith with the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, and action would have been taken at the time opposing Mr. Paint's scheme, were it not that I, under the impression gathered from your letter, informed our directors that Mr. Paint's application had been changed, and the charter was now being procured in the name of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company. I find, however, by the copy of charter sent me by Mr. Paint, that this is not the case, but that the charter is being applied for under a new name, and, I may say, a new company. I am writing Mr. Paint to-day, asking the withdrawal of my name from his application, and trust the Dominion Parliament will not allow the charter to pass without giving the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, who now hold the ground, an opportunity to at least protest.

I am satisfied the other names of our company, &c., in Paint's application, would also be withdrawn, were they informed of the nature of the application.

Yours truly, JOHN McKEEN.

As soon as I received this letter, I wrote to Senator Miller, who was defending the rights of the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, as follows:—

Ottawa, 10th August, 1891.

My dear Senator Miller,—While Bill No. 136, intituled, "An Act to incorporate the Inverness and Victoria Railway and Mining Company (Limited)," was passing its stages through the House of Commons, I was led to believe by the prometer, Henry N. Paint, that he was acting in the interest of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company (Limited), which was incorporated by the local legislature of Nova Scotia in 1877. Since that Bill passed the House of Commons, I received some correspondence from John McKeen, Esq., president of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company (Limited), which I herewith inclose, and which exposes the deception.

In the circumstances, I may assure you, that there is not a member from the Island of Cape Breton in the House of Commons that would now support the Bill.

Yours truly,
H. CAMERON,
Inverness.

So the difficulties which exist now in the Western Counties are very much the same as existed in the eastern county of Inverness. But, owing to this great misfortune to the Inverness and Victoria, and the misfortune which followed the Inverness and Richmond up to this time, when they secured a subsidy from Orangedale to Broad Cove, as well as any other company that would undertake the construction of the road, there was only one way in which I thought they could get over the difficulty, and that was by amalgamating both companies, and obtaining an Act of the local legislature of Nova Scotia. Some of the promoters of the Inverness and Victoria road determined to incorporate another company that would absorb practically the Inverness and Victoria, shunting Mr. Henry N. Paint and his associates. In 1893 a N. Paint and his associates. In 1893 a company entitled the Boston and Nova Scotia Mining Company was incorporated by the local legislature of Nova Scotia, and this is practically the same company as the Inverness and Victoria. I have ample information in my possession to that effect, but as hon, gentlemen opposite are very anxious to have me terminate my short address, I will not read all the evidence I have in my possession. The House may take it as a fact that the Boston and Nova Scotia Mining Company is practically the Inverness and Victoria Company under a different name, the only difference being that Mr. Paint and his associates are excluded from that corporation. So we come down to 1892. At that period, the Dominion Parliament granted a subsidy of $3,200 per mile for a branch from Orangedale for twenty-five miles, and obtained an assurance on the authority of the late Minister of Justice that the balance of the subsidy would be granted as soon as the opportunity should present itself. In 1892, owing to the granting of the subsidy to the Inverness and Richmond Railway for the branch line, they made a survey. Here the cases are becoming exactly parallel, and this I desire my hon, friends opposite to distinctly understand. In 1892 the South Shore Railway Company was incorporated by the local legislature and in 1892 also, the Inverness and Richmond Railway secured a Dominion subsidy over their branch line, which was a part of the system of railways in the county of Inverness. As soon as the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company finished their survey on the branch from Orangedale to Broad Cove in 1892, in accordance with their charter they applied for a subsidy from the local government. It was not necessary for them to apply for a subsidy from the Dominion Parliament, because at that time, a subsidy was passed unanimously by this Parliament for that purpose. The application made to the local legislature was dated Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1892, and reads as follows :-

Halifax, N.S., 27th December, 1892.

Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Premier, &c., Nova Scotia.

Sir,-Application is hereby made for the granting by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, Limited, of a cash subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the construction and equipment of a line of railway from a point at or near Orangedale station, on the Cape Breton Railway, to Broad Cove, a distance of about 35 miles.

The company has at its disposal funds sufficient, with cash subsidies from the governments of Nova Scotia and Canada, to complete the said railway.

A subsidy to the amount of $80,000 in aid of this railway was authorized by the Parliament of Canada in the session of 1892, in the following terms, viz.:—"To the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company (or any other company undertaking the work), for 25 miles of their railway, from a point on the Cape Breton Railway, at or near Orangedale, to Broad Cove, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, in lieu of the subsidy of $50,000 granted to the said railway company by 53 Victoria, chapter 2, and on the same conditions, not exceeding in the whole $80,000."

A survey of the line of railway between Orangedale and Broad Cove has been made on behalf of the said railway company, and the sketch hereto appended shows approximately the route followed, with table of distances.

The sketch also shows the approximate route of the railway between Port Hood and Hillsboro' (on the Orangedale branch), which the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company will undertake to construct and equip, when sufficient subsidies are available for the work.

The Inverness and Richmond Railway pany. Limited, is prepared to furnish security for the due execution of its undertakings.

We are, sir, your obedient servants, (Signed) B. M. DAVIDSON, President Inverness and Richmond Ry. Co., Ltd.

With this letter was another letter from certain gentlemen who are well known to my hon, friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) and whom he will acknowledge are men of character, and means, and ability, and able to build a road in that portion of the country or anywhere else they would undertake it. It reads as follows :-

New Glasgow, N.S., 27th Dec., 1892.

Hon. W. S. Fielding, Premier, &c., Nova Scotia.

Sir,-Having reference to the application of the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, Limited, dated this day, for a cash subsidy of $2,200 per mile in aid of a railway from Orangedale to Broad Cove, I beg to state that the following persons will join with me in a bond to Her Majesty for the due completion of 25 miles of the railway by the said company when the provincial subsidy for that distance is granted.

When Dominion and provincial subsidies are available for the balance of the line, they will join in a similar bond for the due completion of the same (including Port Hood section).

> I am, sir, your most obedient servant, (Signed) DONALD GRANT.

N.B. Names of persons joining with me in the above-mentioned bonds:

Mathew H. Fitzpatrick, contractor, New Glasgow.

George McDougall, gentleman, New Glasgow. Graham Fraser, manufacturer, New Glasgow. Daniel McGregor, contractor, Brookville. Pictou.

John McIntosh, contractor, Stellarton.

I need only give the names of these gentlemen in Nova Scotia to show that they were men able to complete any undertaking they bound themselves to. In the correspondence of the local government of Nova Scotia, I find to my astonishment that the first person who raised an objection to granting the subsidy was a gentleman who is a stock-holder and was a director in the company. He addressed a letter to Premier Fielding as follows :-

Port Hastings, 9th January, 1893.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,

Provincial Secretary.

Dear Sir,-I am informed the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company are making propositions to enter into a contract with the Government for the construction of a road from Broad Cove to Orangedale, without saying a word as to their right to such contract. I think, as one of their creditors, I have a right to ask that the Government see that the debts already contracted in the county by the company be paid before! proceeding any further.

Yours very truly, (Signed) GEO. LAURENCE.

My hon, friends opposite will see that the similarity in the condition of things in the western counties and in Inverness up to the present time is very peculiar, and any lesson they may wish to learn from the experience we have had I shall cheerfully place before them. But what seems very extraordinary is, that while the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company never received even a formal acknowledgment to their application for a subsidy from the government of Nova Scotia, the letter sent to them by G. C. Lawrence, Esq., received an immediate official reply, as follows:--

Halifax, 12th January, 1893.

Sir,-I am instructed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 9th instant, in relation to the Inverness and Richmond Railway.

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) H. CROSSKILL, D. P. Secretary.

Geo. C. Laurence, Esq., Port Hastings.

At this time I find that there is another gentleman on the scene who I understand was ready to throw in his lot with other railway magnates and who was willing to invest his capital in this enterprise. I find that another application was made to the provincial secretary of Nova Scotia for a subsidy over the same ground in a letter dated Halifax, 10th January, 1893, as follows :-

Halifax, 10th January, 1893.

Hon. Provincial Secretary, Halifax.

Dear Sir-I beg leave to inform you that I and my associates will apply to your Government for a subsidy, as contemplated by chapter 1st, Acts of 1886, from Orangedale to Broad Cove in the Island of Cape Breton.

We will perfect our application so soon as we can make such arrangements as will meet the requirements of the Act, which, we trust, will be early in the ensuing summer. And we trust your Government will grant us that assistance authorized by the said Act.

I have the honour to be Your obedient servant, (Signed) D. M. DICKIE.

Any person who hears the name of that gentleman in Nova Scotia and who knows panies applying for the local subsidy for the illustrious family to whom he belongs, and the capital at their disposal, will at a glance come to the conclusion, that any railway they would promote, would be sure it would have been built before this time formal cerned. Although there was \mathbf{n}_0 acknowledgment to the application of the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company I find that this application was immediately answered as follows:-

Halifax, 12th January, 1893.

Dear Sir,-I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 10th instant, in re subsidy for railway from Orangedale to Broad Cove in the Island of Cape Breton.

Your obedient servant, (Signed) H. CROSSKILL,

D. P. Secretary.

D. M. Dickie, Fsq., Canding.

Now, Ι wish you to understand, Speaker, that up to the present time there as the Boston such company W.3.S 110 Scotia Railway Company. and Nova The reason why the Boston and Nova Scotia Railway Company was chartered in 1893, after these applications were before the local government, was, in my opinion, with the view of frustrating the completion of that branch line, or with the view of adding greater difficulties to the many which previously existed. I find that there was another application, even before this company was chartered, as follows :-

Halifax, N.S., 6th April, 1893.

Hon. W. S. Fielding. Provincial Secretary.

Dear Sir,-We hereby apply for the usual provincial subsidy for a line of railway from Broad Cove. Inverness County, C.B., to a point on the Intercolonial Railway near Orangedale in the same county, a distance of about 34 miles, and also a subsidy for a line of railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway near Point Tupper to Cariboo Cove, a distance of about 4 miles.

We are about to organize a company to undertake this work, and in a few days we will be prepared to enter into the usual contract in the name of the company.

We are prepared to satisfy your government of our financial ability to complete this work in accordance with the Statute, and, as a guarantee of cur good faith upon this point, we will only require the payment of the provincial subsidy upon the thorough completion of the entire lines which we propose constructing.

On behalf of ourselves and co-corporators,

We are yours truly,

WM. J. FRASER. R. P. FRASER. PAT. O'MULLIN. A. C. ROSS WM. J. FRASER.

Now, if anything further is necessary to convince the Parliament of Canada of the wisdom of constructing this branch line by government, it is the fact that within a few weeks we had no less than four comthat road. Only for the rivalry which existed between the companies, this road would have been built long ago. Only for by the government, because it is a piece of road which would be a valuable feeder to the Intercolonial Railway, which would be a better paying section of the Intercolonial than any other section on the island of Cape Breton, although I am well aware that every section there pays remarkably well. The following letter was also addressed to the Premier of Nova Scotia:-

Halifax, N.S., 17th April, 1893.

Hon. W. S. Fielding, Provincial Secretary.

Sir.—The Board of Directors of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company (Limited) beg leave to submit to your honourable government as follows :-

We hold and control 12 square miles of coal areas in the county of Inverness, estimated to contain more than one hundred and fifty million tons of coal.

We are the incorporators named in the Bill now being passed through the legislature, entitled, "The Boston and Nova Scotia Coal Company, Limited," under which Act of Incorporation we propose to develop and operate these coal properties.

Owing to the want of a harbour within a reasonable distance, there is no means of shipping our coal without constructing a line of railway from our mine to some shipping place or places.

Therefore, we propose the immediate construction of a line of railway from Broad Cove to Orangedale, on the Intercolonial Railway, with a branch to Mabou Harbour, and also a branch of about 4 miles connecting the Intercolonial Railway and Cariboo Cove in Richmond County, at which places we propose constructing a pier for winter and summer shipments.

We beg now to ask that an assurance will be given us, that, on the completion of the grading and bridging of one-half of the proposed railway and branches your government will pay us such proportion of the subsidy as will represent, proportionately, the cost of the whole work on compietion of the road, and, upon the completion of the grading and bridging of the entire line and branches and equipment of the road, to pay to cur corporation the balance of the subsidy of thirty-two hundred dollars ($3,200) per mile.

This subsidy is necessary to enable our company to build this railroad, and, before entering into any contract for its construction, it is essential that we should be assured of receiving this aid by way of subsidy from your government.

To open up and put in the necessary mining plant and facilities and building to enable the company to handle any considerable output, will absorb quite an amount of capital, and in view of the fact that said operations will contribute to the revenues of the province, your petitioners will expect the favourable consideration of your honourable government to this application for the provincial railway subsidy.

We are yours respectfully,

JOHN W. CANDLER. WM. J. FRASER. A. C. ROSS. R. P. FRASER. JOHN McKEEN.

With this application a certificate of character was filed as follows:-

> The Bank of Toronto. St. Catharines, 12th August, 1893.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,

Premier Nova Scotia, Hailfax, N.S.

Dear Sir,—It affords me very great pleasure to recommend to you the firm of Messrs. Garson, Purcer & Co., of this city.

They are contractors of some considerable experience, and thoroughly up to the times in all that appertains to the successful execution of contracts of all kinds and descriptions.

Besides being thoroughly reliable and trustworthy, they have good financial backing, and ridiculous about a lobster clause?

Mr. CAMERON.

you may place every reliance upon them in any transactions whatsoever.

> Yours truly, (Signed) G. W. HODGETTS, Manager.

Shortly afterwards, another application was made by the Boston and Nova Scotia Railway Company, which, in the meantime, was incorporated by the legislature of Nova Scotia. This application reads as follows:—

Helifax, N.S., 14th August, 1893.

Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Provincial Secretary.

Dear Sir,—We, the Boston and Nova Scotia Coal Company, Limited, hereby apply for the usual provincial subsidy for a line of railway from Broad Cove mines, in Inverness County, to a point on the Intercolonial Railway near Orangedale, in the said county, a distance of about 35 miles. We have organized the company under the charter granted by the legislature at the last session. We have completed the surveys and located the line, and are prepared to file the plans with the provincial engineer. The right of way we have obtained under an agreement with the county of Inverness, and are now cutting out the right of way.

We have contracted for the construction and equipment of the entire line with responsible parties under the condition, that when the railway is completed and equipped, the usual subsidy of thirty-two hundred dollars per mile shall be paid by the Government of Nova Scotia to our company. In view of the early construction of the railway, it is important we should have the assurance of your government at this meeting of the Executive of the payment of the subsidy on completion of the work, as before mentioned.

Respectfully yours,

Boston and Nova Sectia Coal Company, by JOHN W. CANDLER. President. JOHN McKEEN Vice-President. A. C. ROSS, Secretary.

Here we have, in a few short months, applications to the local government-first, from the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company; second, from a company represented by a gentleman by the name of Mr. Dickey; third, from a compony represented by capitalists from Halifax; fourth, by a company named the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company; and fifth, by the Boston and Nova Scotia Railway Company. Section 5 of the Railway Act of 1886 provided that each company would get a subsidy of $3,200 per mile on giving assurance that it had means at its disposal to finish the road. If there is anything in the world to make that lobster clause appear ridiculous in the mind of any person of common sense, the very fact that all these companies have applied to the government of Nova Scotia within that short period of time is sufficient to do it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is there

Mr. CAMERON. My illustrious friend from Bothwell does not understand the term as well as we do down by the sea, and he does not know the delicacy of the fish which moves backward when he is anxious to go forward. Now, here is a letter which I find in answer to all the applications made to the local government. It is dated in 1893. That was after the Boston and Nova Scotia Railway Company absorbed the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, and all the other companies that preceded it.

> Provincial Secretary's Office, Halifax, 17th August, 1893.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the application of your company for a subsidy for a railway from Broad Cove coal mines to a point on the Intercolonial: Railway near Orangedale, in the county of Inverness, a distance of about 25 miles, I beg to say that the members of the Government have considered the matter, that they view the proposed enterprise with approval, and that they are ready to advise the granting of a subsidy of three thousand two! hundred dollars ($3.200) per mile, upon evidence of the ability of your company to complete the enterprise.

This letter is not to be regarded as a standing offer to your company, but is written on the assumption that you are ready to proceed immediately with the work.

We shall be glad to meet you this afternoon and discuss the conditions of a contract.

Yours faithfully, (Signed) W. S. FIELDING.

Hon. J. W. Candler,

President Boston and Nova Scotia Coal Co., Halifax.

Now, I find that another letter was addressed by the president of the company to the Premier of Nova Scotia, dated Halifax. 17th August, 1893:

Halifax, N.S., 17th August, 1893.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,

Previncial Secretary, Halifax, N.S.

Dear Sir,-I have received your letter of this date, informing us that the members of the Government are prepared to advise the granting to the Boston and Nova Scotia Coal Company, Limited, a subsidy of three thousand two hundred dollars ($3,200) per mile for our proposed railway from the Broad Cove coal mines to Orangedale.

The company are prepared to arrange and complete the contract and necessary agreements.

Very respectfuly yours, (Sgd.) Boston and Nova Scotia Coal Co., Ltd., by JOHN W. CANDLER, President.

I find that another letter was addressed to the same gentleman, dated Halifax, 17th August, 1893:

Halifax, N.S., 17th August, 1893.

To Hon. W. S. Fielding,

Provincial Secretary.

My dear Sir,-I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date.

The directors of our company take pleasure in meeting you at any hour you will appoint this afternoon.

> Very respectfully yours, (Signed) JOHN W. CANDLER,

President.

Again. I have an official letter from the provincial secretary to the Boston and Nova Scotia Railway Company, which reads as follows :-

> Provincial Secretary's Office. Halifax, 17th August, 1893.

Dear Sir,-Referring to my letter of this date and the interview of this afternoon between the Government and the directors of your company, I beg to say that the members of the Government are prepared to advise the granting to your company of a subsidy of three thousand two hundred dollars ($3,200) per mile for the proposed railway, on the following conditions:

1. You are to produce satisfactory evidence that your company have been organized and the requisite amount of capital paid up. Copies of the stock-list and other papers in connection with the organization, verified by statutable declaration, will be required for this purpose.

2. The railway to run from the Broad Cove coal mines, in Inverness County, to a point on the Intercolonial Railway at or near Orangedale, in the said county, the distance not to exceed thirty-five (35) miles.

3. A bond for the fulfilment of the company's contract to be given in a sum equal to twice the amount of the subsidy. Such bond to be signed by the directors individually, and also by the members of the firm of Garson, Purcer & Company, the contractors who, you have informed us, have engaged to construct the railway.

4. The contract to be made in the customary form, under the provisions of sections 5 and 6 of clapter 1 of the Acts of 1886. Provided, however, that the company shall not claim payment Provided, howof subsidy in the manner therein set forth, but that they shall only be entitled to receive the subsidy when they shall have complied with the following conditions:-

(a). They shall have fully completed and equipped and put into operation the said railway.

(b). They shall have opened and bona fide worked a coal mine or coal mines at Broad Cove and equipped the same with approved plant and machinery sufficient for the production of two hundred and fifty thousand tons of coal per annum, and shall have furnished to the Government satisfactory evidence that they (the company) have expended on such plant, machinery and equipment of the mine at least one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000).

5. The work of constructing the railway to be commenced within one month from the signing of the contract, and to be continuously and vigorously prosecuted, and the line to be completed and put into operation on or before the 1st of September, 1895.

I have to repeat the remark in my letter of this date, that this is not to be regarded as a standing offer open at any future time. If your company are not in a position to make a contract immediately and proceed with the work, this offer must be regarded as cancelled.

Yours faithfully, (Signed) W. S. FIELDING, Provincial Secretary.

Hon. J. W. Candler. President Boston and Nova Scotia Coal Co.

So this was the final answer of the local government to the president of the Boston and Nova Scotia Railway Company. I desire to call the attention of my hon. friends opposite, particularly from the western counties of Nova Scotia, to the fact that whereas section 5 of the Railway Act of 1886 provides for a subsidy of $3,200 per mile to any company which will undertake to construct the road, payable on the completion of every ten-mile section, the terms read them must come to the conclusion that on the local government of Nova Scotia might and as well have asked the Boston and Nova. Scotia Company to build a ladder from the secure a dollar for their railway enterprise, and besides building an extension ladder; from the north pole to the moon, they would have to put their mine in a position to ship 250,000 tors of coal per year from it. was practically impossible for any company to fulfil those conditions, and no company having an earnest desire to build the road would ever have accepted them. In order to bring the comparison a little further down. I desire to show the effect of trifling with a very important enterprise by section. 5 of the Nova Scotia Railway Act of 1889. I read from the railway report of the local engineer from Neva Scotia the upshot of the negotiations which existed before the local government of Nova Scotia in 1892-93, when the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company and several other companies, in- letter from the president, as follows :cluding the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, made applications for a subsidy, before the railway company, to which a H. Cameron, Esq., M.P., Ottawa, subsidy was granted, was chartered by the My dear Sir.—Inclosed please to local legislature. The engineer reports as follows :-

The Boston and Nova Scotia Coal Company, Limited, on the second day of September, 1893, entered into an agreement with the Government subvention of three thousand two hundred dollars per mile for the construction, equipment and operation of a line of railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway at or near Orangedale Station, in the county of Inverness, to Broad Cove, in said county, the distance not to exceed thirtyfive and one-half miles.

Surveys and books of reference were submitted by the company on the 7th day of July, 1893, and certified by the Commissioner of Public Works on the 23rd day of September following. Under the provisions of the contract, plans and profiles of location, general plans of bridge superstruc-ture, and of culverts and cattle-guards, were submitted for approval on the 12th day of October, 1893, and were approved, after being amended, on the 10th day of November following.

The company, under the contract, was to commence the work of constructing the railway on or before the 16th day of October, 1893, and to continuously and vigorously prosecute the same and to complete such railway and put it into operation on or before the 1st day of September, 1895, and to also, on or before the said day of September, 1895, open and work a bona fide coal mine, or coal mines, at Broad Cove, and equip the same with approved plant and machinery sufficient for the production of two hundred and fifty thousand tons of coal per annum, time to be declared to be material and the essence of the contract, and, in default of such commencement and as aforesaid, the company to forfeit all right, claim or demand to any and every part of the subsidy to be paid.

Hon, gentlemen opposite will see that the of this promise were of such a character terms of the contract require the completion that it was utterly impossible for any com- of that road before the 1st of September pany to fulfil them. Any person who will next, and also the expenditure of $100,000 the coal mines at Broad and of more money if it was necessary to place the mine in a position to ship 250,000 tons of coal a year, before they could get north pole to the moon before they would one dollar of the provincial subsidy; and they were also required to have all that finished before 1st September, 1895, or a little over a year after the contract was signed. This was practically impossible. They asked for bread, and the local government gave them a stone. My hon, friends opposite say that this was just what the company asked for. The correspondence which I have read proves conclusively that no company asked for any such stringent condition as that; and I unhesitatingly say that no company, contemplating the building of that road would ever have accepted those terms. Now, I come to the point of similarity, exact similarity, between these two cases. In 1892 the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company applied for a Dominion subsidy through me. I received a Mabou, C.B., 22nd March, 1892.

My dear Sir.-Inclosed please find the application of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company for a Federal subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the construction of road from Broad Cove mines to Orangedale, with a branch to Mabou and Port Hood. I hope you will see your way clear to assist the application to the extent of your influ-Nova Scotia, whereby they are to receive a ence with the Government, which I know is not small.

Yours very truly, JOHN McKEEN. President I. & V. Ry. Co.

This, I may observe, was after the said president of the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company realized that their promoter here, Mr. Paint, was pursuing a cutthroat game which would enable himself to ride rough-shod over all the companies which had charters from the local legislature for that line. To that letter I sent the following reply:-

Ottawa, 30th March, 1892.

My dear Sir,-I have your favour of the 22nd, with petition from the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, asking for subsidy over 50 miles of their line of railway, which I transmitted to the department. There are two speculators here for the past week or ten days, who represent the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company. They may visit Inverness soon and interview parties concerned, with the view of reconciling existing evil contentions. Henry N. Paint is not here yet, but his letters are here as thick as leaves in ancient Valambrosa, in reference to his charter. Well, I am sorry to say that in such an atmosphere of unseemly contentions, with such vigorous prosecution or of such completion which Parliament has become so familiar for the past five years, I feel almost ashamed of the ridicule which such conduct perpetuates in the Yet I have, as usual, applied for a sub-House. sidy for a line of railway, unless the Government will undertake the Orangedale branch, as I desire. rangeualo --Yours truly, H. CAMERON.

John McKeen, Esq., President, Inverness and Victoria Co., Ltd.

Now. Sir, I have here evidence ample to prove the rivalry between these companies. I think I have produced, also, ample evidence to show that the cases, particularly since 1892 were parallel cases. The rivalry which existed between these two companies I desired earnestly to reconcile, not only before the companies were chartered in 1887, but at every stage up to the present time; and I feel that the reason why that enterprise failed was simply that my advice was not taken. And I think that if the advice which I intend to give to my hon. friends opposite is accepted, their enterprise will be put on a firm footing, as well In 1894 the Boston and Nova as ours. Scotia Railway Company, which absorbed the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, and all other little companies that stood in its way up to that time, secured a contract from the local government on impossible conditions in 1893, and secured a contract as well from the government here to construct a line from Orange lale to Broad Cove, a subsidy of $3,200 per mile being granted by this Government on the completion of ten-mile sections. I felt that there was nothing left for me to do but to aid the company I so vigorously supported up to the present time to secure a subsidy for their line. They made an application to me, which I forwarded to the Minister of Railways, and to this I received the following reply, in 1894 :-

Department of Railways and Canals,

Minister's Office, Ottawa, 11th June, 1894. My dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of to-day's date, covering a petition from the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, asking for a subsidy of $3,200 per mile for a line of railway from Hawkesbury to Broad Cove, a distance of about 50 miles.

The only reply I am able to give you at present is, that I will submit the matter for the consideration of my colleagues when the question of subsidies to railways is being dealt with by Council.

Faithfully yours, JOHN HAGGART.

H. Cameron, Esq., M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa.

I am happy to say that, as a result of the application of that company, in 1894, a subsidy for part of their branch line of railway from Hawkesbury to Cheticamp was granted, and assurance also was given to the company that, on the completion of the first section of the line the balance of the subsidy would be granted as fast as the requirements of the company demanded. Now, the position of rival railway companies in Inverness is simply this: The local government signs an absurd contract with the Boston and Nova Scotia Railway Company guaranteeing a subsidy to the company on the completion of the road, and on the expenditure of at least $100,000 on the development of their coal mine at Broad Cove, and if that was not sufficient, the expenditure of enough money to place that mine in a condition to ship 250,000tons of coal a year. The same company secured a contract from the Minister of Railways representing the Dominion Government guaranteeing $3,200 per mile to the said company on the completion of every ten-mile section. This is in accordance with the usual conditions on which subsidies are granted by this Parliament to railway enterprises of that kind. local subsidy was not granted in accordance with section 5 of the Railway Act of 1886; it was not made in accordance with the application of any company during 1892 or 1893; it was not granted in accordance with the written demands of the company itself; but it was granted on conditions which, to my mind, proved conclusively that the object was not the construction of that But, whether or not, the facts remain that the line is subsidized, the contracts are given, and the company is bound to finish the road, as the local engineer says. The company, under the contract, was to commence constructing the railway on or before the 6th October, 1893, and to continuously and vigorously prosecute the same and to build such railway, and put it in operation on or before 1st September, 1895. Now. Sir, coming to the particular case under discussion and designing to give the companies interested in the western counties railway a salutory lesson by what happened in the county of Inverness, I desire to call the attention to some material facts. First, the South Shore Railway Company was incorporated in April, 1892; second. the Coast Railway Company was incorporated a year afterwards. Now, this was the point at which those interested in railways in the western countiess should have interposed their power with the local government, if they had any. If there was any way calculated to frustrate or prevent the construction of that road, the incorporation of the Coast Railway Company in 1893 was the best calculated to secure that end. Now, I find that surveys were commenced simultaneously in the fall of 1893 by both companies.

Mr. MULOCK. No, you don't find that.

Mr. CAMERON. Never mind, it is a question of fact about which hon, gentlemen I have taken the facts as I have differ. received them in discussions heretofore. The fact remains, however, that one company was chartered by the local legislature in 1892; the fact remains that section 5 of the railway Act of Nova Scotia promised that company $3,200 per mile on the comfides, 2,000 acres per mile to the company undertaking that work. When the Coast Railway Company was chartered in 1893. they came face to face with those facts, and they secured that charter with their eyes open. I have a good deal of sympathy with the incorporators of 1893, but I have greater smypathy with the incorporators of 1502, who expended a great deal of time and money in order to place their enterprise on a sound basis. They were encouraged to pursue that course in pursuance of the requirement of the Railway Act of 1886, passed by the local legislature of Nova way Company for the first 25 miles of their These railway companies commenced their surveys about the same time, in April, 1894. The Coast Railway Company filed plans for the first seven miles, and three days later, the South Shore, for 20 miles. There was no local contract signed for either company up to that time. Coast Railway Company proceeded thus far with their eyes open, knowing that up to that time at least the South Shore Company had equal if not better claims to the Dominion and local subsidies with their rivals and predecessors, and to that extent my sympathy for them is lessened. We find that ten miles was accepted, and we find also that both companies were prosecuting their work up to the present time. I find that in 1894 the Dominion Government gave a subsidy to the Coast Railway Company. Therefore, up to that time, the Coast Line Company were in a position to withdraw from their enterprise without any serious losses, and I think if they had been governed by common sense, as I suggested to the railway companies in the county of Inverness, they would have put their heads together and amalgamated, and in this way have secured a contract from the Dominion Government and from the local government as well, guaranteeing $3,200 per mile from both governments which would enable the amalgamated companies to build a standard gauge of 4 feet 8½ inches in the western counties. If they did not pursue a course of that kind, although it is a little late, I would suggest to those companies to pursue that course now. But I would not suggest to throw the South Shore Railway Company on its back by depriving it of its vested rights in that line. Let the Coast Railway Company proceed with all the assurances they have of a subsidy from the local House, the railway trouble in the western counties if they will, and let the South Shore Rail-is owing to political agencies, stimulating way Company pursue the same silly course, if both enterprises to knock their heads against they will, until such time as wiser counsels shall prevail. When that occurs, they will put their heads together, and they will not any longer knock against each other, but they will utilize all their available means to build a broad gauge road over the line contemplated by both companies. Now, I am sorry to say that this state of things existed be benefited as well. I observe that in an-

in Inverness up to the present time. I am pletion of every ten mile section, and of opinion it has to a large extent frustrated guaranteeing also, if they showed their bona the undertaking of those lines. I am in hopes now that the local government of Nova Scotia will withdraw its absurd conditions on the local subsidy, and will grant the Boston and Nova Scotia Railway Company $3,200 a mile on completion of every ten mile section, in the same manner as the Minister of Railways of the Dominion of Canada has done. If that be done, the Boston and Nova Scotia Company will be able to build its road. I would also urge upon the local government of Nova Scotia, as the Dominion Government has given a contract to the Inverness and Richmond Railenterprise from Hawkesbury to Cheticamp, that the local government, without any quibble or without any hesitation, should grant the same company a similar subsidy, guaranteeing $3,200 per mile on the completion of every ten mile section. If, instead of pulling apart, both governments would aid enterprises of this kind in a reasonable manner and neither government would pursue a course calculated to frustrate an enterprise of this kind. I am satisfied the line from Hawkesbury to Cheticamp would be finished within a reasonable time. Contracts have been signed for the first 25 miles to Cheticamp. Assurance has been given that a subsidy will be granted for the balance of the line, the same as was granted to the balance of the line on the branch, and if the companies will take my advice, even at this juncture, they would unite and secure subsidies from this Government and from the local government of $3,200 per mile on the completion of every ten-mile section. If that was done, as it was my desire in the case of rival companies in my own county, the road would be built to the great advantage of both companies, it would be more speedily constructed, and it would confer much greater benefit on the people of the county of Inverness. I may frankly admit that unforturately this partnership concern between the Dominion Government and the local government in regard to subsidizing railways and other matters since 1886 has not terminated very favourably to either party concerned. I hope the unfortunate political contentions which exist, and which the passing of that inexplicable Act of 1886 fostered to a great extent, will terminate. I have no doubt in my mind. as was the case in Inverness, that each other. If we in this House advise them in a sensible manner and manifest a determination to bring conflicting interests of this kind to a successful issue, I am satisfied that not only will the Western Counties Railway Companies benefit by that process, but the Inverness railway enterprises will couragement of that company, and although the obstruction which may exist here and elsewhere may prevent them getting their. rights during the present session, Parliament will not expire. I have reason to belong time hereafter, and justice will be done red to a contract made by the Government to the company that first invested their of Nova Scotia with the Boston and Nova money in the Western Counties Railway; Scotia Railway and Coal Company, and at another time, and any rights and interests concrous and burdensome that it is imwhich they possess in the South Shore Railway will be maintained for ever. There the contract. When a company comes may be a hope kindled in the breast of some before a Government, and I appeal to hon, gentlemen opposite that a change may take place in this Dominion, and that in the near future, possibly they may come into power and follow in the wake of the unfortunate condition of things which exist down below. But if I may judge from the signs of the times I do not think any such event will happen within a reasonable period. I think the present Government will be sustained at the polls with a larger majority at the next election than ever before. I have reason to believe that the rank and file will follow their leaders as they did in former times. In fact if I may judge, I think they will follow the example of my illustrious countrymen of days gone by. They now see a clear sky over their heads, and diffi- we have the complaint made by the hon. culties which may have existed in the past | gentleman from Invernesswill soon disappear. Mr. McISAAC. We have heard from the hon, member for Inverness chapters of ancient history regarding railway enterprises in Inverness and other parts of eastern Nova Scotia. The question before the House, however, is one between two railway companies in the western part of the province. The hon, member for Inverness has devoted three hours to questions mainly connected with his own county. I have read most of the correspondence read by him, before, but this is the first time I have heard them from himself, but they contain very little that is new. I have heard them for the first time to-night, but long ago, even before I had a seat in the provinical legislature of Nova Scotia, which is over nine | Government?

If the contract is onerous and burdensome and the company cannot carry it out, who should first complain? Should not the first complaint come from the company itself? But > Mr. McISAAC. One member of the company is a leading Conservative in the hon. gentleman's county.

Mr. CAMERON. He is none the worse for that.

Mr. McISAAC. He is a candidate running in the county as a supporter of this Government.

Mr. CAMERON. Then he must be a Grit.

Mr. McISAAC. Let me tell you that he has not complained and that he is just as good a Conservative as the hon, gentleman (Mr. Cameron). The only man, therefore, who complains of the burdens imposed upon the company by the government of Nova Scotia, is the hon member for Inverness. Does he remember that when he makes that attack on the Nova Scotia government, that he, at the same time, makes an attack on the Minister of Railways and the federal Mr. CAMERON. No.

Mr. McISAAC. Does the hon, gentleman not know that a subsidy has been granted to that same company by the Dominion Government? If the Dominion Government is as good and as wise and as virtuous as he believes it to be, would they grant that company $3,200 per mile for thirty-five miles if they thought it was an impossible or ridiculous contract, or such a contract as was described by the hon, member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) to-night?

Mr. CAMERON. Let me explain. Some hon, MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CAMERON. Surely the hon, gentleman does not want to misrepresent me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McISAAC. Let the hon, member (Mr. Camerom take his medicine. It is his own! medicine which he has been preparing himself and distributing for three mortal hours If there be guilt in the matter. to-night. which I deny, I tell him that the Government of the Dominion is equally guilty with the government of Nova Scotia in regard to the terms imposed upon this company. Now. the hon, gentleman (Mr. Cameron) spoke about railways in his own county, three | hundred miles away from the railways under discussion this afternoon, and his arguments were more than three thousand miles in point of relevancy from the question under discussion before the House. I shall not, therefore, follow his ramblings into correspondence between himself and others in Nova Scotia and elsewhere for the last quarter of a century. The only relevant question, and it is a question which he has not touched at all, is as to the relative merits of the Coast Line Railway Company and the South Shore Railway Company. Now, the South Shore Railway Company got a charter in 1892, and the Coast Railway Company obtained their charter in 1893. The strong point urged by hon, gentlemen opposite is, that because the South Shore Company was incorporated a year earlier than the other, that, therefore, they had vested rights which should be respected, but which had been interfered with. I grant there may be something in this under some circumstances, but I want to remove the impression which I found to exist in the committee to-day, that these two charters were granted by the government of Nova Scotia. As a matter of fact. both of these charters were granted by the legislature of Nova Scotia, composed of Conservatives and Liberals. The second charter which was passed in 1893 for the Coast Railway Company was introduced by the Hon. Mr. Johnston, the local member for the county of Shelburne, and I think it was prepared by the hon. gentleman (Mr. White) who represents the very same constituency in this do with the scheme at that stage. It was old South Shore concern.

simply introduced by Mr. Johnston as the member for the county of Shelburne, and carried in the legislature. Now, the colleague of the Hon. Mr. Johnston in the representation of Shelburne in the local House was Mr. C. H. Cahan, the leader of the Tory Opposition. One would think that if there was anything detrimental to the county of Shelburne in this charter, Mr. Cahan, its representative, would oppose it, inch by inch, at every stage of its passage through the legislature. Mr. Cahan did no such thing. At page 117 of the debates of the legislature for Nova Scotia, 1893, it will be seen that the charter was introduced by the Hon. Mr. Johnston, and at page 132, the second reading of the Bill came up. If any person wanted to oppose that Bill on its merits, it was his duty to do so when the second reading was moved. Mr. Cahan, the leader of the Opposition in Nova Scotia. representing as he was bound to represent, his friends in the county of Shelburne, had then an opportunity to speak in the interests of his constituents, in the interests of the people in the neighbouring counties, and in the interest of those who obtained the charter one year before. But Mr. Cahan did not speak against this second charter. Only one gentleman, Mr. Hemeon, of Queen's, spoke on the occasion, and he spoke strongly in favour of passing the charter. The hon, gentlemen in this House from the province of Nova Scotia who are supporting the resurrection of this old concern to-day, will tell you that the people of western Nova Scotia were opposed to the second charter, and that the legislature of Nova Scotia has perpetrated a great injury upon the corporators of the first charter. The facts are, that when this second charwas passed in the Nova Scotia Assembly, members on both sides of the House regarded the South Shore charter to be as dead as Julius Caesar, and there was none so low as to do it reverence on The Coast Line Railway that occasion. charter was passed by the unanimous voice of both sides, and the company became organized, and they satisfied the Government of Nova Scotia that under this charter they had the means to complete and operate in these two counties, the road then called the narrow gauge road. Where was the hon. gentleman from Shelburne (Mr. White then? Where was his associate in the Nova Scotia Assembly? Does this House not clearly see that at that stage, there was only one of these concerns recognized in the province. The Coast Line Railway Company came before the government, and entered into a good, solid contract to build this line through the counties of Yarmouth and Shel-They entered into that contract in good faith, and under the charter which both sides of the House gave to them, and after constructing a portion of their road, The government had nothing to an attempt was made to revive the They got a few wheelbarrows, and some men, and mules, and went and covered portions of the track, and declared that their vested rights had been interfered with. Vested rights, forsooth; they had no vested rights. If their rights are interfered with they have a legal remedy. At this very time the question is pending in the courts, and a fiat has been issued by the Attorney General under which suit has been brought in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia to test the validity of Railway Company. Shore the South If the charter of the South Shore Company has not lapsed by reason of time or by reason of non-fulfilment, or from any other cause, the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia will protect it and will declare it to be still in existence; and the moment the court does that, this company will have all they say that even this pure Government, which require, all they are asking this House to require, all they are asking this House to also grants railway subsidies, do so because give them to-day. But the moment they find they think the people will give them credit themselves face to face with the Supreme if credit is due them. I think every govern-Court of Nova Scotia, the only proper tribunal to deal with this matter, they come credit for what they do rightly, and I supand ask this House to pass legislation by pose they must also expect that they will which the whole matter will be taken out be punished by the people if they do not of the hands of the court. Instead of leav-carry on their affairs as they ought. The ing the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia to government of Nova Scotia felt that they decide between the rights of the two com-panies, they ask this Parliament to over- of the people of the province, in making this ride all the rights and all the charters held contract. I say the Minister of Justice went by both companies in Nova Scotia, which I to the province of Nova Scotia shortly before contend would be an outrage for this the provincial elections of 1894- and I would Parliament to do. In another place to-day not refer to this, except that the hon, meman amendment was proposed to the Bill re- ber for Annapolis a few weeks ago quoted specting the South Shore Railway Company from a speech delivered by Mr. Fielding, and providing that its operation should not inter-said that the Minister of Justice stated at a fere with the case now before the courts public meeting that it was the duty of the of Nova Scotia, and I think the justice of Conservative party to oppose the government that amendment should appeal to the fairminded men on both sides of this House, the Dominion elections should be fought So long as that case is pending in the in the provincial elections of Nova Scotia Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, this Parlia-ment should not interfere at all. I say that the only point for this way to the Coast Line Company, and House to consider is this: if the South Shore so far as I can learn the people of all Railway Company's rights have been interthree counties are against this proposed fered with by the government of Nova legislation. Surely, then, this Parliament Scotia, the Supreme Court will give them will not intervene to impose upon those their remedy, whereas if they have people legislation against their best interests. I was not in the House this afternoon, but I am told that the Minister of Justice matter on its merits. It should not be stated that the Government of Nova Scotia, in granting the contract to the Coast Line Company, had done so for paltry party purposes. Now, Sir, I deny that, I was in the government at the time, and I wish to tell the Minister of Justice-I am sorry he is not here—that he is not justified in making that statement. That contract was given and made by the government of Nova Scotia because they believed that it was in the best interests of the counties through which the road was to run, and in accordance with the desire of the people of those counties. The Minister of Justice went to Nova Scotia shortly before the local elections of 1894, and tried to make out that this company was a political machine brought into existence and nursed by the government of Nova Scotia for political purposes, 1 dare also grants railway subsidies, do so because ment expects that the people will give them of Nova Scotia-that the first skirmish in Scotia by a large majority. This is not an argument on the question before the House; but I put it forward to answer the assertions made by hon, gentlemen oppothe case now pending before the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia is settled.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I had intended much earlier in this debate to reply to some of the observations made by the hon. Minister of Justice: but immediately after that hon, gentleman had taken his seat, we seemed to digress into the early history of matters in the Island of Cape Breton, and a little later we enjoyed a very long autobiographical sketch by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), consisting largely of references to a gentleman the name of Dr. Cameron, M.P. understood the hon. Minister of Justice to defend the application to this House for a charter for a railway known as the South Shore Railway of the province of Nova Scotia, on the ground, first, that the government of Mr. Fielding had given a subsidy for political reasons to a rival railway known as the Coast Line Railway. This to the hon. Minister of Justice seemed to be quite a sufficient argument why this Parliament should be asked to incorporate a company, the incorporation of which might mean the destruction of the Coast Line Railway, or at any rate the infliction of great injury upon that company, which has up to date spent $150,000, which has paid every bill it has incurred, and which. so far as I know, has not any outstanding liabilities. It seems to me that the Minister of Justice should be about the last man to object to the local government taking the line which he says Mr. Fielding has taken. Does the hon, gentleman claim for his government the monopoly of the exercise of political influence in granting charters or subsidies to railways? What particular iniquity, I ask you, was there in Mr. Fielding agreeing to subsidize a line of railway in his own province, which had satisfied him of its bona fides and its ability to build the line. Nobody has dared to dispute, either in this House or elsewhere, the perfect financial ability of the Coast Line Railway to carry out its contract with the government of Nova Scotia. And yet we are to be told by a leading member of the Cabinet that we must inflict upon that company an injury simply because, forsooth, Mr. Fielding, in the discharge of his duty as Premier of Nova Scotia, has seen fit to give that railway a subsidy. Why, we had a letter read here to-night by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), written on the very eve of the election of 1891 by the late Premier of this country, the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, promising to see that the hon, gentleman got a subsidy for a railway in the county of Inverness, two weeks before the election.

Mr. CAMERON. That letter did not promise any subsidy.

Mr. BORDEN. What was it for? What did the hon, gentleman use it for in his campaign?

Mr. McIsaac.

Mr. CAMERON. It was simply in answer to a letter written before there was any dissolution, and the year before the election.

Mr. BORDEN. It was three weeks before the election, and the hon, gentleman paraded that letter in the public prints, and read it in his county from one end to the other, and called upon the people to vote for him because Sir John Macdonald was going to give him a railway subsidy. The hon, gentleman talks about knocking heads together. It is not knocking heads together, but he is trying to knock the brains out of the Coast Line Railway Company. He coolly asks this House to do this to-day for the reason, for sooth, that Mr. Fielding has seen fit to subsidize a railway which had shown its good faith and which nobody denies is perfeetly able to carry out its contract. What is the next reason given, if we can dignify it by the term reason, by the Minister of Justice? The second attack he made was that this Coast Line Railway, which he proposes to sacrifice if he can, is a narrow gauge railway, and, therefore, should be destroyed. Let me go back for a moment. Perhaps the hon, members of this House will be surprised to learn that in its early stages the South Shore Railway, which is now asking for a charter from this House, was a narrow gauge road, and that both roads were on precisely the same footing. Why? Because it was agreed by common consent that it was impossible to get for that section of country a standard gauge road, and, therefore, all parties, including the hon. member for Shelburne who shakes his head. and who was the gentleman who drew up the charter of the Coast Line Railway which he now proposes to sacrifice, agreed that the only road that could be got for that part of Nova Scotia was a narrow gauge roadthat it meant a narrow gauge road or no road. Here is what one of the members of the western part of Nova Scotia said on the subject in the Nova Scotia assembly at the time:

The section of country between Yarmouth and Lockeport, through which the read contemplated by this Bill would pass, was such that a road of this description would fully answer all the requirements for many years to come. The construction of this road would enable the people of that part of the province to obtain railway accommodation, for which they had long waited, and for which they might have to wait many years if a more expensive road was undertaken. It was quite reasonable that the people should seek the construction of this road, and he trusted that the Government would entertain the project favourably.

What do we find? My hon, friend here has already referred to the fact that the people in the western part of Nova Scotia, whom we are supposed to represent, or at any rate whose wishes we are supposed to consider to some extent—the people in every one of the counties affected have sent petitions to the Railway Committee and this House asking that this Bill which is now about to be proposed to this House shall not become law. There is a petition from the county of Yarmouth, which is largely interested, against the passage of this Bill into law. There is a petition from the county of Shelburne asking that this Bill do not be-There is a petition signed by come law. the municipal council of the county of Queen's asking that this Bill do not be-Where have we heard of any come law. petitions asking that the Bill should become law? Not one has been mentioned, either here or elsewhere. The people of all these counties have shown their interest in the Coast Line Railway and their desire for its completion by giving it the right of way or bonuses. Where have we heard of their making any bonus or gift to the South Shore Railway Company? Such a thing cannot be shown. What does all this agitation mean? There must be something underneath which has not yet come to light. but which may come to light before we are through this session. The point taken by the Minister of Justice that there is a wide distinction between these two companies. inasmuch as the Coast Railway was not a broad gauge, is not well founded. fact is that legislation was passed during the last session of the Nova Scotia legislature, amending the charter of the Coast Railway Company so that they may build a standard gauge road. Further than that, the Coast Line Railway Company, at a meeting on the 6th May this year, passed a resolution unanimously of its stockholders agreeing to increase the gauge from three feet to the standard gauge of 4 feet 8½ inches. More than that, I have here a telegram from the Premier of Nova Scotia. which I will take the liberty of reading:

There appears to be some misunderstanding at Ottawa respecting the position of affairs between the Nova Scotia Government and the Coast Railway Company. The company entered into a contract, giving exceptionally strong guarantees of good faith for the construction of a 3-feet gauge road from Yarmouth to Lockeport, and made con-At the recent siderable progress with the work. session of the legislature the company obtained an amendment to its charter, providing for the building of a standard-gauge road. Part of the amending Act was reserved to be brought into operation by publication in the "Royal Gazette," by order of the Governor in Council. The company recently applied to have the Act brought fully into operation and to have the contract so amended as to provide for a standard-gauge road. We agreed to these proposals, the necessary order was made to bring the referred part of the Act into operation. Publication was made in the " Royal Gazette "-

I have it here—

—and the company was notified that the Government were satisfied to have the contract amended as proposed. It is fully understood between the government and the company that the road to be built is a standard gauge road.

W. S. FIELDING.

Now, it seems to me that that puts an end pretty effectually to the second point, the only other point made by the Minister of Justice. Some hon, gentlemen have taken the point as an objection to the Coast Line railway that it did not get its charter until after the South Shore railway had got its charter. That is true; it did not get its charter until a year afterwards. But it got its charter at a time when the South Shore railway was considered as dead as Julius Caesar, and it got it with the influence of the hon, member for Shelburne (Mr. White) who sits here now and is doing his utmost to destroy the railway company. He drew the Act, and now he says it is an iniquitous thing that the legislature of Nova Scotia should have chartered this second road. In the charter of the South Shore Railway Company there were certain provisions as to time. It had to commence operations within two years. The Coast Line Railway Company were very careful not to begin operations or spend money until such time as they believed and were advised that the charter of the South Shore railway had lapsed. Then they considered that the coast was clear. went on and they spent money. Subsequently, the South Shore people, knowing that their charter had lapsed, saw fit to go to work, and spent a considerable sum of Now, Mr. Speaker, the question money. whether the South Shore Railway Company is a company or not is before the courts of the province of Nova Scotia. And we are asked to give judgment in advance, we are asked to over-ride the decision of the courts of Nova Scotia or to legislate in advance of that decision, and to declare that, no matter what happens, we shall see that the South Shore railway has a charter, whether it is entitled to it or not. That company failed to live up to the charter it had received, and the Coast Line Railway went on and expended large sums of money. I contend that it would be an iniquitous thing for this Parliament, in defiance of the fact that the case is now before the courts in the province of Nova Scotia to do such a thing.

Bill (No. 135) respecting the North-west Territories.—(Mr. Daly.)

EXCHANGE BANK.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What amount was guaranteed by Mr. Ogilvie on account of the Exchange Bank? Has he paid all he guaranteed? If not, how much has he paid? What amount remains unpaid? What steps, if any, has the Government taken to collect it?

Mr. FOSTER. The amount guaranteed by Mr. Ogilvie on account of the Exchange Bank was $100,000. No portion of that has been paid by Mr. Ogilvie. The amount that remains unpaid is $33,625, exclusive of interest. The correspondence has been placed in the hands of the Department of Justice, but it is only fair to state on Mr. Ogilvie's behalf that he enters an objection to the payment by himself, on account of some question connected with the general distribution of the receipts.

FISHING IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. COLTER asked, Is it true that the fishery officers are selling licenses to fish for salmon with nets in York County, N.B., above tidal boundaries? If so, how many licenses have been granted, and to whom? What is the fee charged? Has any similar licenses been granted to any person or persons in Carleton County, N.B.? If so, to whom, and what fee has been charged?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the absence of the Minister of Marine, I will answer that question by saying that the fishery officers were not authorized to sell licenses to fish for salmon with nets in York County, N.B., above tidal boundaries. That answer has to be given, because it is impossible at this moment to say what has actually been done, but no authority has been given to them to do that.

BOUNTY TO SILVER-LEAD SMELTING.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House do resolve itself into Committee to-morrow, to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide for the payment of a sum not to exceed $150,000 in five years to enccurage silver-lead smelting in Canada, the payment for each ton of ore smelted not to exceed fifty cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would you inform the House what particular raiders are after the treasury?

Mr. FOSTER. I have only moved that the House go into committee to-morrow, and when I move the resolution I will explain the purpose.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION DAY-ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LAURIER. The House would like to be informed whether Parliament is to sit on Monday next.

Mr. FOSTER. I have great pleasure in saying to my hon. friend that a motion will be made that the House do not sit on Monday next.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON WATERWAYS.

Mr. EDGAR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to mention a matter of international importance. I assume that the Government are aware that at the last session of Congress an Act was passed authorizing the President to appoint three commissioners to confer with a similar number of commissioners to be appointed on behalf of Great Britain and Canada, on the subject of the waterways from the lakes to the ocean. I would like to ascertain from the Government whether they propose any reciprocal legislation to acknowledge the friendly action of the United States in that matter, or whether they have taken steps to act upon it or what they propose to do?

Mr. HAGGART. The attention of the Government was drawn to the action of the United States authorities in reference to waterways, and the question came up for pondence respecting site of the post consideration as to what action the Govern- office at Portage la Prairie, is likely to be consideration as to what action the Government should take in reference to it. It will be remembered that the commissioners to be appointed by the United States Government are to receive no pay for their services. I think it would be very difficult for us to get parties who would so act without pay. However, I intend to appoint a departmental commission of two members belonging to the department, who will receive no pay, and associated with them, another gentleman who also will receive no pay, for the purpose of meeting the United States commission.

CIVIL ACTION AGAINST MR. ST. LOUIS.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to notify the Minister of Justice that I notice by the press that the trial against Mr. St. Louis has been postponed until the 15th October, and I have been informed that it is at the request of the Government's counsel that that postponement is taking place. I would like to know if that is correct, and why the postponement is taking place. The hon. Minister well knows that the Opposition have been criticising the Government for their tardy action in this matter.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Since the hon, gentleman has referred to the matter, I may say that no special instructions have been given to the counsel acting for the Crown, in the matter of the civil suit of The Queen vs. St. Louis. But I incidentally heard that the judge of the Exchequer Court had to adjourn the court in order to keep certain appointments on his circuit, and while I am not at all sure, yet, no doubt, that is the reason. But the counsel for the Crown have neither requested nor obtained special instructions with respect to the suit.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to know when the papers and correspondence regarding cattle shipments through American territory amendment relates to number two of the to Europe will be brought down?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will make inquiries and let the hon. gentleman know on Monday.

Mr. BRODEUR. When will the Postmaster General lay on the Table the returns for which I moved some time ago?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In compliance with the order of the House, the report has been prepared and is being sent up from the Secretary of State's Department to be laid before the House. When it comes down I shall be prepared to make a statement.

Mr. MARTIN. I should like to ask when a return moved for and passed by the House about three weeks ago, in regard to corresbrought down?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Postmaster General is absent from his seat, but I will call his attention to it.

MANITOBA SCHOOLS—REMEDIAL ORDER.

Mr. McCARTHY. I should like to ask the hon, gentleman leading the House whether he is yet in receipt of the answer to the remedial order?

Mr. FOSTER. I have the same answer to make to-day as yesterday.

Mr. McCARTHY. Can the hon. gentleman say whether he has received any information that the order has been despatched from Manitoba or not?

Mr. FOSTER. I know of none.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 113) to amend Chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1892, respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Three Rivers.-(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 123) further to amend the Public Works Act.—(Mr. Ouimet.)

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

House proceeded to the consideration of Bill (No. 124) further to amend the Act to readjust the representation of the House of Commons, as amended in Committee.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) As I was not in the House when this Bill was considered in Committee, would the hon. the Minister of Public Works be kind enough to give me some explanation about the nature of the amendments that were made?

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) The first Bill. This Act as printed reads as follows:-

The township of Courcelles and the north-east part of the township of Joliette are hereby detached from the county of Berthier and annexed to the county of Joliette, for the purposes of representation in the House of Commons.

The words "the north-east part of" in the first line are struck off. Section 3 is also amended. The three last lines were struck

As that district is constituted by the Act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons, chapter eleven of the Statutes of 1892, as hereby amended.

This gave a false notion of the limits of the county of Joliette. It includes the limits such as they now are, because this county was not mentioned in this Bill. It is the old description of the county of Joliette such as defined by the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1860, and as amended by the preceding section. I may say that the Bill was drawn up as agreed upon between the hon. gentleman and myself.

Amendments agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Bill (No. 122) further to amend the General Inspection Act (Mr. Wood. Brockville) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MARTIN. Is it intended to make the fees different at different points?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That would not do. If the Government were to make such changes, it would mean that the rates would be lower at some points than at others, and the result would be that inspection would all drift to that point where it could be obtained cheapest. The section provides for lowering the rates all round or retaining the present rate, and making such disposition generally as may be necessary. There is no danger of any surplus as far as we can see, other than at Montreal and Port Arthur.

Mr. MARTIN. Does that give the Government power to retain a portion of the fees?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It gives the Government power to retain the surplus and apply it to the consolidated fund if necessary, or they can reduce the present inspection fee as they see fit.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the clause as proposed goes much further. It does not merely empower the Governor in Council to lower the fees, but to amend the tariff, which might and would entitle him to increase the fees. As the power is not wanted, I do not think we ought to give the Governor in Council power to increase.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). There appears to be something in that, because the Act fixes arbitrarily the fee, and there is no doubt this would give the Governor in Council power to increase as well as to reduce. There is not one chance in ten thousand that even Parliament would ever be asked to increase the fees. I have no objection to amend the clause in the direction suggested.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not understand from the wording of the section that the Government have any power to retain any portion of these fees at all. Apparently all that could be done would be to apportion the fees between the inspector and the departmental inspector. From all appearances there is likely to be a very large crop in Manitoba and the Territories this year, and even last year the fee of 60 cents a carload was altogether too much for the work done by the inspector at that point. While the hon, gentleman (Mr. Wood) may be correct in his idea that it is better not to have officers of this kind under salary, yet the Government should have power to appropriate the surplus of the fees to the public use.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It seems to me that the first subsection gives the Government that power.

Mr. MARTIN. There is no power given by this clause to the Government to keep any portion of the fees.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That is the intention and we can amend the section in that direction.

On section 2,

Mr. MARTIN. Might I ask the Controller if he has considered the question that I raised as to the inspector attending to insurance?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The inspector is not doing any insurance business.

Mr. MARTIN. Is not his son doing it?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Not that I know of. I do not know how I could prevent him, if he is.

Mr. MARTIN. The Government should take special pains to see that neither the inspector, nor any person who would be presumed to be the same as he is, is engaged in insurance. If the inspector's son is canvassing for insurance there will be a very strong feeling on behalf of the grain trade to keep in with the inspector and give the insurance to his son. It does seem to me that the Government should perhaps go a little beyond the ordinary course, and prevent whatever influence the inspector may possess, being used to divert insurances from the ordinary source.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The department has taken every possible precaution in the line indicated by the hon. gentleman. If one of the inspector's sons is engaged in the insurance business the department has no knowledge of that fact. If it be that he is so engaged, I do not see very well how the department can prevent it. Now, with regard to the officer himself, and the fact that injury might have been done to consignors, and those who are called upon to insure cargoes by reason of the fact that the officer in question carried on the insurance business, I can only say, that this office is in close touch, as it should be, and as it was intended by the statute to be, with boards of trade throughout the country. All the department, or the Government ever intended to do, was to provide the machinery and set it in motion, receiving suggestious from those interested in the trade itself. There has been no complaint made by any of the boards of trade, the shippers or any other persons, as to the conduct of the business by Mr. Gibbs. It may be said, as was said by the hon. gentleman when this matter was first under discussion, that any person who had to insure would be at the mercy of the officer, and would not be likely to make any complaint. In answer to that, I may say that the boards of trade throughout the country are composed of men of all classes and of different political views, and we are very apt to hear very quickly if there is any ground of complaint. In this case, I do not see how I can take any action until it is proved that the inspector through his son is engaged in the insurance business, of which I have no knowledge.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman is not likely to hear complaints from the boards of trade for the reason he gave himself. The members who are not engaged in grain shipping will make no complaint, because it is not their business to do so. The only persons who might complain are those who are engaged in the shipping of grain, and they will not complain, as they have told me privately, because they do not wish to have any quarrel with the inspector. Without casting any reflection upon Mr. Gibbs. think it extremely unlikely that any ship-per would object to paying insurance to Mr. Gibbs or his son, so long as he paid no more than he would have to pay to any other person. I am not engaged in the grain business; trade or in the insurance but complaints have come to me from men and insurance men grain do not think it a proper thing Mr. Gibbs to be engaged in the insurance business, as he has been in the past to my personal knowledge, or through any member of his family, and at the same time act as inspector. As inspector, he has great power and responsibility, and his office should be kept clear and distinct from any business connected with the insurance of grain. I lay this complaint before the Controller in my position as member for Winnipeg, and I think that ought to be sufficient notice to him to inquire into this matter. The hon, gentleman says that he cannot prevent Mr. Gibbs' son engaging in the insurance business. I think it would be quite proper for him to say to Mr. Gibbs that it is not proper for him or for a son of his to do business in the insurance of grain, which it is his duty to inspect.

Mr. CURRAN. Where are you going to stop?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). As my hon. friend says, where are you going to stop if you declare that no son or relative of the inspector should engage in the business of insurance at Port Arthur. As the hon. leader of the House suggests, it is not necessary even says, where are you going to stop if you declare that no son or relative of the inspector should engage in the business of insurance at Port Arthur. As the hon. leader of the House suggests, it is not necessary even a scandal and a disgrace, and the bar has that a man should be related to the inspector to have such an advantage as the hon. member for Winnipeg points out. It is a singular fact that when I was in Winnipeg. though I discussed this question with the members of the grain exchange and with shippers, I never heard one complaint in reference to the conduct of this office. I found that the rapid development of the grain trade necessitated some change in the law relating to the inspector's fees, and the department has not been backward in introducing legislation in that direction. The export trade in grain from Manitoba is only a matter of yesterday; it is just commencing. It is true that during the past two or three years the emoluments of the inspector have been large, though not $25,000, as the hon. gentleman has stated.

Mr. MARTIN. That includes the insurance.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman could not have any possible means of knowing what sums he received by way However, his emoluments of insurance. very nearly approached $4,000, which the department considered too large, and hence the introduction of this Act, which I intended to introduce ever since my visit to the west last fall. As I have said, not a word of complaint has ever been received by the department, not even anonymous communications, as to the performance by Mr. Gibbs of the duties of his office, and if there had been any ground of complaint, it is almost certain that we would have heard something, either from the shippers, the grain buyers, or the boards of trade, who keep a close watch on all matters of this kind.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg desires that any clause should be inserted in this Bill. He brings to the attention of the Controller what he thinks is likely to become a great nuisance, and all he asks from the Controller is an assurance that if these facts exist, the Controller will take steps to prevent their continuance.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). What facts?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The fact that the inspector or his son is engaged in the insurance of the cargoes he inspects.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not know it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Technically he may not be engaged in that business, but he may be actually through his son; and all my hon. friend asks is that the hon. Controller will give an assurance that if, on inquiry, he finds that to be the case, he will take steps to prevent its continuance. Everybody acquainted with the courts of law knows what a scandal it is for judges' sons to appear before their fathers. That has been found in the provinces of Canada to be a scandal and a disgrace, and the bar has not hesitated to take steps, as far as possible, to prevent it. The same rule should apply here. If this gentleman's son is engaged in the business of insuring the grain which his father inspects, it is very improper that he should continue to occupy that position.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I can only say that I will continue to do as I have done—give this matter every consideration in the best interests of the trade, and if I find that any person is carrying on an insurance business in a way inimical to the export trade, then I will take steps to remedy what I consider a grievance. That is the only assurance I can give.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the point raised by the hon, member for Winnipeg is a very important one, and it deserves the consideration of the hon. Controller. It is undoubtedly of the utmost importance that the inspecting of grain should be free from any suspicion or bias in any way. We all know there are often times when grain will be presented for inspection which, perhaps, may not be just equal to No. 1, but good No. 2, and if, by a slight variation, or from any circumstances, he should pass that as No. 1, he will be doing an injustice not only to the buyer, but to every man in this country, because. if confidence in the clear and unbiassed judgment of the inspector is in any way shaken, that will injure every wheat raiser in the North-west. I can readily see where an inspector, if he has any interest in insuring the grain, may be biassed by that fact, and disposed to inspect it more favourably. It would be well for the Controller to put in a clause providing that the inspector should not be directly or indirectly interested in the insurance of this grain.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I will take every opportunity of seeing that the interests of the trade are protected. Of course, if a grain inspector finds there is just a shade of difference in the wheat between No. 1 Manitoba Hard, and No. 2, it is easy for him to class it as No. 1, if he wishes to be dishonest. This inspector is not engaged in the business of insurance, and I do not that that his son is. I do not think he should, directly or indirectly, be engaged in it. I will take pains to look into the matter.

Mr. CAMERON. Last fall there were serious complaints concerning the mixing of grain. It was alleged that No. 2 had been mixed with No. 1. It had all been inspected as No. 1, but whether the inspector knew or not, I do not know. All I know is that there was serious complaint in Ontario as to the mixing of grain.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

River St. Lawrence Ship Channel...... $75,000

Mr. OUIMET. Seventy-five thousand dollars is all we propose to expend next year to keep the dredges at work on the improved ship channel between Quebec and Montreal, in order to make it 27½ feet at low tide. This amount is required to pay for the repairing of the dredges and maintenance.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does this include dredging in the harbour of Montreal?

Mr. OUIMET. No; that is done by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. The channel is supposed to start from the foot of the current down to Quebec. Where this work is done is more especially at La Barre à Boulard, Grondines, Lotbinière.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice one of the steamers grounded in Lake St. Peter. Is the channel there not sufficiently wide?

Mr. OUIMET. The responsibility for that accident has been disputed between the pilots and the authorities in charge of the ship channel, but the real cause of the accident is that the pilot got out of the channel. The channel is deep enough at that place, and there was no reason for the grounding, except that accidentally the steamer got out of the channel.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. gentleman give us the ordinary width of the channel?

Mr. OUIMET. It is 300 feet wide with 27½ foot navigation—that is 28 or 28½ feet actual depth. And, at different places, the department widens that channel to 500 feet, especially where there are curves. The constant increase in the length of the ships makes it imperative that the channel should be widened at these points in order to avoid collision when two vessels happen to meet in one of these curves. That is part of the work being done.

Mr. GIBSON. Is this vote to be used for the purpose of widening or deepening?

Mr. OULMET. For both, and for work of various kinds to be done at different places. The principal work is to be done at Barre a Boulard, which is to be deepened to 27½ feet at low tide. That is pretty heavy work. At other places we have two or three dredges at work which will be occupied in widening the channel where there are sharp curves in order to avoid accidents at these points.

Mr. OUIMET. By the department.

Mr. GIBSON. The work done by the department must be more satisfactory. would like to know if it is as cheap as the former system of doing it under contract by the yard?

Mr. OUIMET. We believe that the work is done more cheaply under the present system. I am told that the cost of dredging, since the department has taken hold of this work, has been reduced by 50 per cent-that is the actual cost of the material dredged according to the nature of the soil.

Mr. GIBSON. Would the hon. Minister say how much per yard the dredging costs under the present system?

Mr. OUIMET. I am told that the cost is from about 6 cents per yard to about 39 cents a yard, according to the stuff that is taken out.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. Minister include in the cost of dredging under the Government the expense of keeping dredges in order and other expenses of that kind?

Mr. OUIMET. We include everything. even the expenditure of the shops in Sorel, which are kept going during the winter to repair and put the plant in proper order. But the allowance for wear and tear is not included.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many men do you employ in the shops at Sorel?

The CHAIRMAN. That does not come in on this vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. The expense is part of the cost of dredging.

Mr. OUIMET. The number of men employed in the shops at Sorel varies from half a dozen to 200, according to the amount of work in hand.

River Kaministiquia......$10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How does the hon. Minister intend to spend this money?

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman knows that Fort William is now the great shipping harbour of that part of the country, and that a good deal of work has been done there to enable, the vessels, whose capacity is increasing every year, to enter the river and reach the elevators. The channel has been dredged, but last year, as the result of the severe winter and the heavy snowfall, material was carried down in the spring so as wholly to block the channel. In order that trade might not be stopped, we were obliged at once to send a dredge there. We whether this is the same Kaministiquia sent one of our elevator dredges, which is River that Mr. Mackenzie named as the working there now with another dredge of water terminus to the Canadian Pacific Rail-

Mr. GIBSON. Is this work being done by less depth. During the summer we were the hon. Minister's department, or under able to make one cut of 100 feet wide by 20 contract? to the vessels going up to load at the elevators. The intention now is to make that channel 200 feet wide and to restore the I 20 feet depth, it having filled during last spring so as to reduce it to 18 feet.

> Mr. CHARLTON. What is the distance from the mouth of the river to the elevator?

Mr. OUIMET. About a mile and a half.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is the mouth of the river protected by piers so as to prevent a recurrence of the filling in?

Mr. OUIMET. No; there is nothing of that kind. Up to the present time I have not had the means to make it a permanent work.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would suggest that if accidents of this kind are likely to occur again involving annual appropriations for the purpose of keeping the harbour clear, so important a point as the Kaministiquia River should be protected by piers, so that the scouring in the spring would keep the channel clear.

Mr. OUIMET. As I said last year when we asked for a vote of $15.000 for this work, we expect, by making the channel 20 feet deep and 200 feet wide, that the scouring during the spring will keep it free. But in any case the amount necessary to spend in order to keep the channel open is less than the interest on the cost of permanent works. The permanent improvement, it is estimated. would cost about $600,000. So that this is comparatively a cheap way of doing the work. We expect we shall not have to spend next year more than $7,000 in order to keep the channel at the depth of 20 feet.

Mr. GIBSON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether the work done by Marks & Macdonald, referred to at page P-26, Auditor General's Report, was let by contract, and whether they were the lowest tenderers ?

Mr. OUIMET. It is not by contract. That was the only dredge available. As I have said, we required this dredge to make the first cut, because our elevator dredge draws too much water to do the first cutting. We use that dredge on the sides in order to scrape the channel about nine feet deep. and then the elevator dredge is put on.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Minister tell us the reason why they sent the dredge to Kaministiquia and abandoned Port Arthur?

Mr. QUIMET. It is because trade is going there. We cannot direct trade, and so we have to give it the channel it requires.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Minister tell us way, and for which he was found so much fault with?

Mr. OUIMET. I think so.

Mr. GIBSON. How much money did the Government spend on Port Arthur?

Mr. OUIMET. I could not say.

Mr. GIBSON. Why have they abandoned Port Arthur?

Mr. OUIMET. Port Arthur is yet a very thriving town and port, a very good trade is done there.

Mr. GIBSON. When were you in Port Arthur?

Mr. OUIMET. I was there in 1885.

Mr. GIBSON. I understood you were going last year.

Mr. OUIMET. Well, I was to go.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, you wanted to go up and see the harbour.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Minister explain the reason why this work was given to Marks & Macdonald?

Mr. OUIMET. Because we could not give it to anybody else.

Mr. GIBSON. Did you try?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes, we tried.

Mr. GIBSON. Who did you try?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman must imagine himself in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. GIBSON. Not at all. If I understand the matter aright, there was another firm of dredging contractors, Murray & Cleveland, who were able to do all the work up in Kaministiquia. Why were they not asked to do this work? Is it because Marks & Macdonald are more friendly to the Government than Murray & Cleveland?

Mr. OUIMET. I may tell the hon. gentleman that Murray & Cleveland did do some work some years ago. They charged 25 cents per yard, and they used an American dredge. That dredge has gone back to the United States. We are paying $8 for the present dredge, and are saving about 10 cents per yard, on what we were paying before.

Mr. GIBSON. Where does the Government get their dredges made?

Mr. OUIMET. All our dredges are built in Canada. Last year we built one dredge the "Laval," and we are now building another elevator dredge in Sorel, and another very fine dredge is now being built for the maritime provinces by Messrs. Carrier & Lainé, of Lévis, Que.

Mr. GIBSON. Where were the former dredges built?

Mr. GIBSON.

Mr. OUIMET. That is ancient history.

Mr. GIPSON. No, because they were built on the American side. The hon. gentleman would not employ Murray & Cleveland's dredge because it was an American dredge, I suppose.

Mr. OUIMET. I am not going to be cross-examined as a witness. Let the hon. gentleman make his speech, if he wishes.

Mr. GIBSON. I am asking the Minister of Public Works the reason why he did not ask Murray & Cleveland, as well as other contractors, to do this work. He says the reason that he asked Messrs. Marks & Macdonald was that there was nobody else available. I tell him that there are dozens of Canadian contractors available for the purpose of dredging public works, but he gave it to Marks & Macdonald, of Port Arthur, over everybody else, because they were triendly to the Government.

Mr. OUIMET. Since you assert everything as if you knew it to be true, why do you expect an answer?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have a right to know whether the Government did this matter by tender, as it appears they were bound in duty to do, and as is always done in ordinary cases on public works, or whether they arbitrarily selected a particular man. Now if, as appears, they arbitrarily selected a particular man in the person of Mr. Macdonald, or his firm, then the Government are bound to give a much better explanation than they have done. Prima facie, by neglecting to tender, they have put themselves distinctly in the wrong in this matter, and may have inflicted-I cannot say positively-a large loss on the country. Had they tendered, and had Macdonald been the lowest tenderer, there would be no more to say about it. But I do not understand that is the case at all.

Mr. MACDONELL. The hon. gentleman who is questioning the Minister, evidently misinformed entirely upon the subwas ject he was speaking about. In the first place, it is true that Murray & Cleveland had the contract for dredging in the Kaministiquia. But they had not one dollar's worth of plant, they had not a dredge, and they sublet the contract to an American who brought his plant in from Duluth, and used it there during the summer, and took it away in the fall. Murray & Cleveland never did one dollar's worth of work themselves. The only work that was done, was done with American plant, brought into the country in competition with the very plant that the hon. gentleman speaks about. Now, when this contract was given, it was a small amount; I think the whole amount was only $5,000. It was so small that the incidental expenses of advertising would be considerable in proportion. No contractor who owns dredging plant would take it to Lake Superior, and there were no other dredges on Lake Superior available. No one would take their plant to Lake Superior for the amount of work that was to be done. In giving the contract to Marks & Macdonald, they gave it by days' labour, or by hours' work, and they gave it to the only Canadians that have plant in the whole country, who were available to do that work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then they would have been perfectly safe in tendering. The Government might have tendered with perfect impunity; they might have complied with the law. Apparently, as the matter stands, they have not attended to the regulations which are laid down, and to the custom of the department. They have given this without tender, and that is a thing which they have no right to do. As for this business of allowing the Government work to be done by hours' labour, I think that this House, after what we have heard, and I think that the Minister of Public Works in particular, after our experience with a certain Emmanuel St. Louis, ought to know that doing work by hours' or days' work upon a Government contract, is not a cheap and economical mode.

Mr. OUIMET. It has been pretended that the Minister of Public Works should bow to the castigation of hon, gentlemen opposite, given very uncourteously and in very bad grace, and that he should quietly allow them to administer it to him. I am not going to do so. Mr. St. Louis has done his work. His case has been brought before the courts. If he has rot been punished, it is not my fault or the fault of the hon, gentlemen. He is able, however, to defend himself whether he is taken before the courts or elsewhere.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OUIMET. Hon, members say "hear, hear." Moreover, St. Louis is known as a first-class contractor in Montreal, where he has been honestly prosecuting his trade for years and years—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OUIMET. Hon, members say "hear, hear." I tell them that a good many people may not think much more of some of those hon, gentleman than they think of St. Louis. I suppose this is outside the question. But if my answer is not good, the argument was still worse.

The CHAIRMAN. Keep to the question.

Mr. OUIMET. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to keep those hon. gentlemen to the question. When an hon. member says that the department has been acting contrary to the law, I reply that he is not able to cite the law to show that we have to give this work out by contract and that we have been doing an unlawful act. I have already stated that by carrying out the contract by days' work we reduce the cost by 10 cents a yard as compared with Murray & Cleveland's price, and I do not think the Committee can find fault with that action. I could not say the number of cubic yards, but my engineer says that the work done by the dredge at \$8 per hour brings the cost to $17\frac{1}{2}$ cents to 18 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite sure, after the statement of the Minister of Public Works, the country will come to the conclusion, and will be confirmed in the view entertained for a long time, that St. Louis has a friend at court.

The CHAIRMAN. You had better keep to the question, too.

Mr. McMULLEN. This has been pointed out very clearly.

Mr. OUIMET. I will not allow any one to insult me under cover of attacking my cousin.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say-

Mr. OUIMET. If any one will attempt to insult me, when proceedings have been taken against St. Louis, I will not allow it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish you, Mr. Chairman, would keep the Minister quiet. The evidence is that the department have violated the law in regard to this dredging work. It may be a large or a small contract, but unquestionably when it was quite within the possibility that the Government could get other men to carry out the work, they should have asked for tenders. But for some reason, known only to themselves, they let the work to Marks & Macdonald without asking for tenders. We have had no positive evidence of tenders being called for, and this kind of thing should not be repeated. Under ordinary circumstances, unless there is grave reason to the contrary, and where it is absolutely necessary that the work should be proceeded with without taking time to advertise, I contend in every instance tenders should be asked for. Was the dredging of such an urgent character that there was not time to advertise? Why has the law been violated, as it has been from time to time?

Mr. MACDONELL. The hon, gentleman has given an exhibition of utter ignorance of the subject under discussion. He has stated that probably several other parties would have tendered for this job. Let me tell him that there is not a single contractor in the whole province of Ontario, or even in the Dominion, and no one knows this better than the hon, member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), who, for a $5,000 job, would take dredging plant and tow it up to Lake Superior. In the first place, it would cost from a thousand to fifteen hundred dollars to do $5,000 worth of work. The dredge that the Department of Public Works sent there cost, I am sure. over $1,000 to tow from Goderich to the Kaministiquia. With respect to the urgency of the work, the hon. gentleman is in total ignorance in regard to it. The rabid assertions sometimes made by hon. gentlemen opposite are enough to astonish one.

Mr. McMULLEN. I should like to ask— Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the hon. gentleman in order, and is he discussing the question? The CHAIRMAN. I think so.

Mr. MACDONELL. I am discussing the subject under consideration now, and during the discussion I have a perfect right to criticise the remarks made by speakers who have preceded me. With respect to the urgency of this work, every hon, member knows, particularly the western members, that a year ago last spring a very serious flood occurred on the Kaministiquia River: so much so, that where there were 16 feet of water over the bar in the fall of 1892. in the spring of 1893 that bar was found to be filled to within ten or twelve feet of the surface. The spring fleet arrived there to the number of 20 or 22 vessels, and they were all deeply laden to 14 feet. The first vessel that attempted to go up the river was stranded, the rext followed, the third went on the bar and the others anchored out and remained there with their cargoes on board for some weeks. From all parts of the country complaints came into the Department of Public Works, more particularly from western members. The Minister of the Interior received some hundreds of telegrams from grain shippers in the west. I received no end of telegrams which I forwarded to the Minister of Public Works. The dredge commenced work as quickly as possible, and it made a gulley through the bar and allowed vessels to go in and out. The cost of the work, whether let by tender or otherwise, was 10 cents a yard cheaper than similar work was done by the Department of Public Works during the Mackenzie regime. Whereas that work cost 26 and 27 cents per cubic yard under the Mackenzie Government, it cost 16 and 17 cents under this Government. So there can be no very serious complaint as regards the cost of the work, and out of the small appropriation granted I venture to say that that part of Ontario got just as much benefit as was derived from any work ever done in the country.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon, member seems to be the defender of the Minister of Public Works in that section of country which he represents. The hon, gentleman stated that the work done by the dredge owned by Marks & Macdonald was done at a cost of 10 cents per yard less than that done under the Mackenzie regime. How can the hon, the present Dominion Government had spent a million dollars in trying to make an artificial harbour of Port Arthur they had to abandon it. The Minister of Public Works told us that he intended going there last year, but he did not go. If he did go, he might find that the place is deserted, practically speaking, and that the whole of the gentleman explain that assertion? Were the measurements inspected, and how was a conclusion arrived at as to the cost? The remarks of the Minister of Public Works show that work was done by the cubic yard for less money by Murray & Cleveland than it would cost at $8 per hour under the present rate as charged by Marks & Macdonald. I would like to ask the hon, member for Algoma (Mr. Macdonell) how long Marks & Macdonald have owned a dredge. I did not know that Mr. Marks was in the dredging business. I thought he was a merchant. He is perhaps doing the same kind of thing that he complained of Murray & Cleveland doing. He said that Murray & Cleveland never did an hour's work there. It is nothing new, and it is quite common for contractors to take work and sub-let it to other people. But in the present instance instead of asking for people to do this work, the Government employed Marks & Macdonald to do it at $8 an hour, irrespective of the number of yards taken out. If we are to understand anything of the number of yards taken out by the Public Works Department, we may go down to the Quebec graving dock where we would find that probably 500,000 more yards were paid for that never was done. It is quite easy for the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Macdonell) state that the work was done for 10 cents a yard less than was paid for it during the Mackenzie Government; but was the right number of yards taken out? That is the question. It is not a question of how much a yard, but how much was taken out, and what it was done for? I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that knowing the condition of affairs in the Public Works Department, that the contract of Marks & Macdonald on the Kaministiquia River cost more than the work did under the Mackenzie Government, because I know that under the Mackenzie Government no man was paid for a dollar's worth of work that he did not do. We find in the Department of Railways and Canals and in the Department of Public Works to-day, that men are paid for work they never perform, and this is an instance of it. I would like the hon, gentleman to tell the House, how he arrived at the conclusion and on what he has based his data, for stating that the work was done on the Kaministiquia River by this dredge of Marks & Macdonald for 10 cents a yard less than during the Mackenize Government. shows most conclusively that Mr. Mackenzie's forethought as a statesman saw that this was the proper place for the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. After the present Dominion Government had spent a million dollars in trying to make an artificial harbour of Port Arthur they had to abandon it. The Minister of Public Works told us that he intended going there last year, but he did not go. If he did go, he shipping is being carried on at the Kaministiquia which was so much opposed by the Minister of Public Works and his fellowmembers of the Conservative party when Mr. Mackenzie was in power.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I am certainly sorry for the density of the hon, gentleman (Mr. Gibson), that he did not know that Mr. Marks owned a dredge. I knew some years ago that he owned a dredge. I have known that he has owned a dredge for at least the last four or five years, and I believe that he is doing good honest work with it. Now, with regard to the price of the work. The hon, gentleman makes the same rash statement over and again, and he has not one tittle of evidence to prove it. He would not on his own responsibility make that statement sincerely. As to the measurements, he has done work enough to know perfectly well that no Government—whether it be the incapable Government that preceded this one, or the present Government-would allow any man; to work without having supervision over him. There is supervision over that dredging, and for my own information I inquired peatedly from the inspector to find out the quantity of material excavated, and I compared that with the price that was paid by the Mackenzie Government, and paid to whom? Paid to Americans that came in there. It is true that money has been spent on the harbour of Port Arthur, and to-day one of the best harbours on the lakes is there. If the Canadian Pacific Railway do not choose to take advantage of the opportunities afforded at Port Arthur, surely this Government is not to be condemned for that. This Government made the improvements in good faith and because they believed they were warranted in so doing, and, Sir, I have faith enough in the country to be satisfied; that we will all see the day when that harbour of Port Arthur will be utilized, and utilized to its greatest extent, to ship the grain from the west to the consumers of the east. Now, criticism on the Kaministiquia might be in order, but I will not indulge in it further than to point out. that during the Mackenzie regime there was some money spent on the Kaministiquia. But where was it spent? It was spent upon a part of the river that never in the world will be used for boating. It was in the wrong place, because it was seven miles from the mouth of the river where no one could go with a large boat. I claim that that money was wasted, and that the country never got any benefit from it. I do not believe that the country ever will get any benefit from the money that was spent where the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway is now, and where the famous old Neebing Hotel used to stand, and where these gigantic piles of steel rails graced the bank of the river as an ornament for years.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to inquire from the hon, member for Algoma (Mr.

Macdonell) who is Mr. Macdonald, of the firm of Marks & Macdonald, owner of this dredge? Is he any relative of the hon. member, or is the hon. member himself a member of the firm. Let us know who this Mr. Macdonald is?

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I am sorry for the density of the hon, gentleman (Mr. Charlton), because if he will look at the Auditor General's Report he will see at a glance that the name of that gentleman is not the same as mine. The gentleman who does the dredging is a man named Hector Macdonald. He lives back of Toronto. He was employed for many years by A. P. Macdonald the contractor, a gentleman well known. This gentleman is also well known in the country. I believe that he has the merit of being a Scotchman, and I think that he was born in Scotland some fifty-five years ago.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Macdonell) says that the work done by the Mackenzie Government on the Kaministiquia River was a total loss. I challenge that statement. The particular portion that was dredged out by Mr. Mackenzie is used to-day for a turning basin in the Kaministiquia River and the hon. gentleman knows that. A gentleman whom I believe is still engaged in the carrying trade told me that it was an utter impossibility to fasten a steamer so as to load her out of an elevator at any other point than on the Kaministiquia River, because you cannot keep a vessel sufficiently steady at Port Arthur to load. He said that owing to that fact Port Arthur could never be made a point of shipment for the wheat of the North-west, and that the Kaministiquia River would have to be used, and is used now, and will be continued to be used. He further informed me that the improvements made by Mr. Mackenzie, will have to be largely extended to meet the growing trade of the North-west.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). Mr. Chairman, that is another exhibition of want of knowledge. The hon, gentleman complained of the expenditure in connection with the harbour of Port Arthur. I admitted that there was an expenditure there, and a very useful expenditure, one purpose of which was to make a harbour inside of which vessels could lie either at anchor or at the docks. I would explain to the hon. gentleman, in case he is ever so forgetful as to make the statement again, that there is a breakwater across the front of the harbour, with a gap of 350 feet, through which vessels enter the harbour, and the water inside is as calm as a mill-pond.

Mr. McMULLEN. No. not if there is a storm.

like to inquire Algoma (Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). Do not say no. I must contradict that on account of your utter ignorance. You cannot possibly know, or you would never make the statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member must address the Chair.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I have made a statement-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I did not know a point of order was taken. I merely rose to correct any false impression that might exist in the minds of the members of this House with regard to the harbour of Port Arthur. I have stated the facts as they are known by gentlemen who have visited the place.

Mr. FRASER. Of course, no one seriously the personal allusions of the hon. gentleman. It would be unparliamentary if I said that he cannot be anything if not impertinent. Surely we can discuss matters without these personalities.

Mr. FOSTER. Such personalities as your own friends commenced.

Mr. FRASER. And the leader of the Government, the would-be Prime Minister of this country, thinks it is a sufficient answer to say that somebody else began. That is a remarkable position for a statesman to take. Surely it is no answer or excuse, and I am sure that in his better moments the hon. Minister would not so think it. To say that a man shows gross ignorance in this House is not a way to discuss public questions. Now, I am not going to say a single word about Port Arthur. All I have to say is this, that the only carriers who are or ever will be there did not think it as good a place as the Kaministiquia, and they left it. That of itself is a sufficient answer. Do you think the Canadian Pacific Railway would have gone to the Kaministiquia unless it was a better place? Certainly not. The foresight of Mr. Mackenzie saw that; but the present Government would accept nothing that Mr. Mackenzie did, and so they expended large sums of money to make a harbour at Port Arthur. I do not know whether Port Arthur is a good or bad harbour. I was there on a very fine day. and it looked all right; beyond that I can say nothing. But hon, gentlemen opposite have had to come back to the harbour selected by Mr. Mackenzie. Not only in that respect, but in a great many others has that man's policy been shown to have been in the best interests of the country. Now, I think that the expenditure of public money on the Port Arthur harbour, after the Canadian Pacific Railway has left it, is an expenditure that should not be made, because we should not make expenditures on works that cannot be utilized. Ardent as the hope of the hon, member for Algona may be that Port Arthur may become a port of I suppose, that the Canadian Pacific Rail-shipment, it can only become such if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will make shipments there, and they will only do so because there will not be enough accommodation at the Kaministiquia. Nearly all the wheat coming from the great west is shipped by the water-stretches which were so much maligned when Mr. Mackenzie advocated them. With regard to the work in question, I do not think the statement that there was only one person to do it is a sufficient reason for not asking for tenders. The business of the Government is simply to go through the regular way, and give everybody an opportunity to tender. Then, if there is only one tender, nothing more can be said.

Mr. OUIMET. I am reminded that last spring, very unexpectedly, the channel of the Kaministiquia was closed by an unusual flood, which caused a descent of sand and earth to such an extent that the channel was, I believe, not more than twelve feet deep, and ships were actually prevented from going in. On a Canadian Pacific Railway train going west, Mr. Van Horne and the hon, member for Bothwell were apprised of the fact, and Mr. Van Horne telegraphed to my department to have the work done as soon as possible. It was certainly out of the question to call for tenders. The dredge was there, our price was fixed and accepted, and the work was proceeded with as early and as rapidly as possible; and as soon as we sent up our dredge, the work was continued as I have stated. Even if it had been otherwise, if we had not been obliged to use the dredge which was on the spot, the course that was taken could be defended, because we were only paying a very reasonable price for the dredge, and, as Mr. Macdonell has stated, no dredge could be sent there without an expense of at least $1,000, which would have had to be added to the cost of the work. On the whole, I think the action of the department was perfectly justifiable. As to the general charge that is made against my department of not giving to the country value for every dollar that is expended, I do not think it can be proved specifically by any hon. member of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon, member for Guysboro' must be very imperfectly acquainted with the history of Port Arthur and Fort William, and the Canadian Pacific Railway's operations there, or he would not make the statement he did. He states that the fact that they built their elevator at Fort William is an evidence that the harbour of Port Arthur was not suitable, and he concludes that what had been done by the Mackenzie Government in locating the town site up there and dredging the river was properly done.

Mr. FRASER. The hon, gentleman knows, way built their elevator first at Port Arthur and then left it and built their elevator elsewhere.

Mr. SPROULE. The Canadian Pacific Railway, when about to locate their headquarters at Port Arthur, made a standing offer to that town that if they would give, if my memory is correct, 250 acres of land to the Canadian Pacific Railway for their purposes, the company would locate everything down there. They must have perfectly satisfied themselves, after careful examination, that the harbour was suitable at Port Arthur, or they would not have made this proposition. however, would not accept it, and because of their lack of liberality the Canadian Pacific Railway went up the river where they could get property much cheaper.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Beatty, who was the manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway line of steamers, told me himself that you could not keep a steamer in smooth enough water at Port Arthur to load her, and that the only place where you could safely and comfortably load steamers with wheat was just below the Kaministiquia Rapids.

Halifax Drill Hall, including purchase of site$20,000

Mr. FORBES. Has the contract been let yet?

Mr. OUIMET. It has been let, but not signed. It has been given to Mr. Asquith, for the sum of $196,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If this is going to cost a couple of hundred thousand dollars, the hon, gentleman must be proceeding exceedingly slowly when he only wants $20,000, and that a revote. Is this to be kept open steadily for the next two or three years, or as much longer as may suit political exigencies?

Mr. OUIMET. We are going to spend the money as fast as the treasury affords, and as the treasury is not plentiful now, we are going very slow. If we go fast the are going very slow. If we go fast the hon, gentleman finds fault, and if we go slow, we cannot satisfy him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. fault with a system of spending public money which will probably result in clear waste. If you are going to put up a building which will cost $200,000, the expenditure of $20,000 in the course of a year will be to a great extent frittered away. Public buildings are not at all improved, either in their construction or anything else connected with them, when the expenditure is spread over a period of three or four years, instead of the building being completed, as ordinary business men would do it, in hon, gentleman knows anything about the eighteen months, at the outside. seen a good deal of that sort of thing. We have seen these things kept dangling before constituencies, so that the members of the particularly-favoured locality may be able to utilize them, not only for one, but two elections, or may be an odd by-election, as it appears to be the practice in Halifax to have two or three elections in succession, owing to certain circumstances well known to hon, gentlemen opposite. On what principle does the hon, gentleman ask us for the sum of $20,000? My impression is, he had better save the vote altogether, and proceed, when prepared to build the work, in a proper business-like way.

Mr. OUIMET. I ask for only $20,000 be-The Port Arthur people, cause the department does not intend to spend any more next year.

> Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is no explanation. When the hon, gentleman asks for the expenditure of public money, he ought to be able to explain how he proposes to use it. The site has been bought and paid for. He is going to spend $200,-000 on the building, and he now asks for $20,000. I say that expenditure will be a clear waste of public money, and the hon. gentleman is unable to explain why he requires it.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman has not made it clear that there is going to be a waste. We intend to proceed with the building so as only to spend $20,009 this year. I do not know how the hon, gentleman makes out that the money will be wasted by going slowly. The work has not yet been begun; and if we begin only in the fall, for instance, the contractor is going to make all his preparations, open his quarries, probably, and the amount of $20,000 will be sufficient to enable him to go on with the work until the House has another opportunity of voting the further amount required.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the contract been let?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes, but it is not signed yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, If not signed, it is not let.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman knows how these things are done. The contractor has been notified that the department, with the authority of Council, has accepted his tender. He has been notified to come and sign the contract, he has signified his intention of doing so, and I suppose it is only a question of a few days when the contract will be completed. The contractor is Mr. Asquith.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have matter, I should like to know what partieular amount of work he expects to be done for $20,000.

Mr. OUIMET. mence the building, not by the roof, but by the foundation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I Jo not believe the hon, gentleman expects to get even as far as the foundation. If $20 000 is enough for the first year, when is the work to be completed?

Mr. OUIMET. Within the next discal year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is to be completed within the next fiscal year, and is to cost $200,000, and the hon, gentleman wants an appropriation of $20,000. That is a remarkably business-like way of proceeding. His $20,000, I fear, will be something like the widow's cruse; it will have to be filled a good many times over. He says that it is to be completed in the fiscal year, and he now comes down with an appropriation of $20,000. If that means anything, it means that these Estimates are not worth the paper they are written on. The hon, gentleman expects, if the statement be correct, to ask us—or somebody else very likely will have to ask us for $150,000 more within the fiscal year in order to complete this contract: and the whole of these elaborate reductions, which made more particularly in public works, are worth nothing. We are told that there is going to be a reduction in the expenditure for public works of something like $875,000. But on this one item we find from the statements made by the Minister himself that the so-called vote of $20,000 is a delusion and a snare, that we are to spend $200,000 for this drill shed within the fiscal year, and the balance is to be made up by a supplementary estimate brought down a little later on. That is a very curious way of saving money and I hope the House will lay it to heart and understand it.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman is building an argument on a mistake I made when I said that the building would be completed within the fiscal year. I did not think at the time that the 1st of July had not come yet. When I say that it will be completed within the next fiscal year, I refer to the fiscal year following that for which this vote is asked. The hon, gentleman may rejoice at having such a good opportunity of making a seemingly good argument based upon a mere mistake. What I mean to say is that within the fiscal year following the one covered by these Estimates—the fiscal year 1896-97—we expect to complete this work. The hon, gentleman knows very well that the revenue has suffered a very large decrease during the year just closing, and is not likely to be up to what it was before or what we should like to see it in the coming year. We must, of necessity, reduce the expenditure so as to bring it within the revenue. We thought,

Sir Richard Cartwright.

It is expected to com- and the Finance Minister thought, that we could not expend more than $20,000 on this work this year without unduly increasing the expenditure.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will perhaps say whether there is any understanding with the contractors as to how much is to be spent the first year. Suppose the contractors come and say: We shall nearly complete this building the first fiscal year. What then?

> Mr. OUIMET. It will be provided in the contract that the contractor is to proceed as the money is voted by the House.

> Mr. GIBSON. After this $20,000 is spent what provision will they make to pay the contractors for continuing the work? This building is to cost $200,000, and the Minister comes to Parliament for only 10 per cent of that amount on the ground that the revenue has been reduced and they must reduce the expenditure. He says he will put up a building in Halifax to cost $200,000 exclusive of $37,000 for the site, and he proposes to economize by asking only 10 per cent of the amount which will ultimately be spent.

> Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman cannot say any longer that I said so. I said the expenditure would be delayed.

> Mr. GIBSON. The impression the hon. gentleman would give the country is that his department is going to save money, but instead of that he is only asking for 10 per cent of the amount of expenditure to which the county will be committed. Why does he not come before the House as he ought to do, and ask for the sum required to complete this work. Instead of that he will resort to a Governor General's warrant, or else he will stop the work of the contractor and give him ground for a claim for extras. This principle is wholly wrong. The hon. Minister should take the House into his confidence and ask for the sum required for this building, instead of trying to lead the country to believe that he is saving by simply postponing the greater portion of the expenditure upon this work.

> Mr. FRASER. When the tenders were asked for was it stated that the contract would be let upon the conditions the Minister now speaks of—that only $20,000 is to be expended next year, and the balance in the fiscal year 1896-97?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. FRASER. Then it is evident that there has been unfairness to the other men who tendered. Of course many tendered upon the idea that the Government were going on to complete the work, but if it had been understood that this was not the case, the tenders might have been considerably different.

Mr. OUIMET. The contractors did not know any more than the other tenderers what would take place. They were all on the same footing.

Mr. FRASER. But the call for tenders did not state the conditions under which the money was to be expended. I want to show the hon. Minister that that is unfair to some of the tenderers. A man can tender more favourably if he knows these conditions, for he has virtually a year for preparation and can arrange the most favourable terms for everything he wants. It is wise not to proceed too hastily, I suppose. I do not know enough about the question to speak as to the time that should be occupied in the work, but I do not believe that it is wise to proceed too slowly. If the Government have made up their minds that the building is to be constructed. I should think it would be better in the interest of the people that it should be constructed at once. I should not think that, even with the present deficit, it would be worth while for a country such as this to delay the completion of a necessary building in order to postpone the expenditure of something like $180.000. Another point: the tender of Mr. Asquith having been accepted, I would like to ask whether the cheque that was given by each of the other tenderers has been returned? I had a letter from a gentleman in Halifax who put in a tender asking me when his cheque would be returned. There is another thing that I think is very unfair. The moment the Government agree upon accepting one tender, they should forthwith send back a cheque. It is worth interest to the man, and he should have the money. Would the Minister inform me whether the cheques have been returned?

Mr. OUIMET. I think all the cheques were returned, with the exception of that for the second tender, that of Mr. Keefe, the lowest tenderer would accept the con-

Mr. FRASER. That explanation is sufficient.

Mr. OUIMET. When tenders were asked for, the returns for the year were all before the House, and could have been known by all the contractors. These contractors know more than the hon, gentleman think.

Mr. FORBES. They never saw them.

Mr. OUIMET. All the contractors of the Government know very well that their contract may be stopped at any moment, either in part or entirely. That is one of the conditions that is always in a contract, and it is natural it should be so, because Parliament may reduce the appropriation, or stop the work entirely, or the appropriation may be cut down. All these things are provided for in our contracts.

Mr. GIBSON. But the ordinary contractor does not know all the conditions until the contract is submitted to him for signature. As the hon, member for Guysboro' has pointed out, if the contractor knew that time was to be given him, time to suit his own convenience, so to speak, that enables him to look around for suitable quarries, get suitable material, or brick, in connection with this building, especially when only a small appropriation is asked for, and then he has got a year to lie upon his oars, in which to spend the $20,000. But I want to point out that the moment this building is begun, the Government sends down an inspector at $3, $4, or $5 per day, as the case may be, at the expense of the country, and if this work should stop, or the appropriations should lapse, as the Minister points out, and the thing should be held in abeyance, what about this inspector? He is incurring expenses, and we all know that if this work is hung up, and time is taken by the Government to furnish the balance of the money for the completion of this contract it simply puts the contractor in a position to make a claim for extras, and we know how successfully contractors usually are in dealing with this Government in the matter of extras. We have only to look across the street to the Langevin and remember how many thousands were claimed by the contractor for extras, even when no suspension took place. But the Minister tells us to-day that what he asks for is 10 per cent of the amount required to finish this building, a sum quite inadequate for the work required. Why should he limit himself to $20,000? Why should the work once begun, be hampered and interfered with? The Government could facilitate the work of the contractor by placing at his disposal the money he rewhich was only returned the day before quires, because we know that the longer yesterday, after it had been ascertained that this building is in progress of construction, this building is in progress of construction, the more money it will cost, not only outside the contract itself, but the Government of necessity will be obliged to keep inspectors there much longer than would be necessary if the work was done expeditiously. As I said before, the Minister is entirely misleading the country when he says that he is simply asking for $20,000, because the revenue of the country will not stand it. He is under an obligation to spend $200,000, and it does not matter to the country whether it is spent before the first day of July of this year, or the first day of July of next year. It is an obligation the country has undertaken, it is an obligation, no matter whether this Government is in power or a more competent Government that will soon follow them, and who will have to pay that money. I say the Minister is misleading the country when he says he is simply asking for $20,000 because he wants the balance expended according to the revenue of the country.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman when he talks of the Langevin block, ought to know that the result of the inquiry that was made two years ago showed that the building cost much less than any other building of its size and quality, on the continent. I do not see why we should be taunted with these general insinuations, which are always made but not proved by the hon, gentlemen opposite. As the hon, member for South Oxford has indicated that I would have a successor from the other side of the House, perhaps the hon. member for Lincoln thinks he is the man who is going to take my place, and I suppose he is now trying to prepare himself.

Mr. GIBSON. I want the hon. gentleman and the country to understand that I do not envy his position worth a cent. Thank fortune. I can live without requiring to be kept by the Government of my country. I have no designs on the hon, gentleman's position, and I hope he will take that as a serious answer on my part. Personally speaking. I make no reflection upon the hon. Minister. I have a public duty to perform here as a member of the Opposition, and I want to perform that duty as long as I am able. He has brought up the question of the Langevin block this afternoon. I only cited it as an evidence of how this incompetent Government allow contractors to be paid about 50 per cent more than the total contract. We know that Charlebois' contract only amounted to $290,000, and yet by a clause in that contract, he was enabled to exact from every sub-contractor 25 per cent to allow them to go in and do the work of on the plaster, putting in the not show that. girders, laying the floor, putting on the roof, &c.; and the result of it was that when all the claims come in, the cost of that building will be a million dollars. The Minister shakes his head, but will the Minister say that there are no claims by Charlebois that will probably be settled between now and the elections, and that will run the cost of this building up to a That is the question. million dollars? am sure the hon, gentleman ought to thank his stars that there was a Langevin block, as otherwise he would not be where he is to-day. He need not reflect upon the Langevin block. It is an old Scotch saying that it is an ill wind that blows nobody any good, and it was an ill wind that blew the Minister where he is to-day; so he need not reflect upon what I said about Langevin block. He ought to be delighted that there is a Langevin block and a Kingston graving dock, and all the other things. I know how the hon, gentleman kicked. He said that everything was being done by Mr. McGreevy. Well, the bon. gentleman has his St. Louis, and his other relations, as well as McGreevy, Larkin. Connolly & Co. I assure the hon. gentle-in the Government of this country, but if I did take it, I am sure I would conduct the affairs of his department better than he is

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have not heard a word of explanation about anything but the Halifax drill hall, and a very bad explanation it was. We want to know something about the Lunenburg post office, and also the Pictou post office.

Mr. OUIMET. This vote is the balance that will be required to complete the contract on the public building in Lunenburg. That includes the site, building, heating, furniture and everything connected with the building. The whole cost will be $34,-

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the population of Lunenburg?

Mr. OUIMET. The population in 1891 was 4,894.

Mr. McMULLEN. The receipts from customs are $2,270, and from post office, There are forty places in Ontario where the receipts are over $4,000. building is now being completed, and it is quite right the balance should be paid; but it shows that this work was undertaken for a purpose.

Mr. OUIMET. I am sorry the hon. member for Lunenburg is not present. He would say, what is quite correct, that Lunenburg is one of the most rapidly growing towns in Nova Scotia, and it is the second or third town in importance in the province.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The revenue does

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is a very thriving fishing town.

Mr. OUIMET. There is a very large amount of business done. No less than $13.658 was collected for customs. I'ne exports were of the value of $911,848, and the imports, $400,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the explanation with regard to Pictou post office?

Mr. OUIMET. This vote is to complete the building, inclusive of fittings and furniture.

Mr. McMULLEN. The receipts are only $5,000 a year. There are thirty places in Ontario where the post office receipts are from $8,000 to $9,000.

Mr. OUIMET. The postal revenue was $5,592.

Mr. McMULLEN. The town of Woodstock gives a postal revenue of $16.000, and there are several other Ontario towns showing larger receipts. Nothing has been done in regard to erecting the building at Pictou, and I should like to know why a post office is to be built there when there Connolly & Co. I assure the hon. gentle-man that I do not want to take his place are twenty or thirty places in Ontario giv-ing double the postal revenue? Mr. OUIMET. We have discussed that before.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Minister has no reply to offer, and so I will tell my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) why post offices are provided in small places, and not in towns like Woodstock, which give a large revenue to the country. Every hon, member knows that these amounts are voted for partisan and political purposes, although I do not know that the people are aware of that fact. The hon. Minister disregards altogether the amount of revenue received under various departments, but that should be recognized as the principle to govern the erection of these buildings altogether, irrespective of party reasons. If the hon, member did not know the reasons why these votes were passed for small places, I think I have stated it pretty plainly, and the Minister of Public Works and other members of the Government, on the present occasion will not attempt to deny it. I simply take the opportunity to make this statement so that the people of the country may understand that while in the past, members of the Government have endeavoured to give some reasons why towns and cities showing a larger revenue from post office, inland revenue, and customs, had been passed over and other places had been selected for grants, the Ministers have now given up any defence, and admit that in their administration of affairs these grants are made for party purposes, and not for the public service. If that is the admission of the Government, it is well that the House and the people should know it.

Mr. KENNY. The hon, member has in sinuated, or rather stated very broadly that in the public expenditure, which we are sorry to hear is so very much limited this year by the income of the Dominion, only constituencies represented by supporters of the Government have been favoured in the distribution of these funds.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not state that. I know there are some constituencies passed over represented by Government supporters. I did not insinuate anything, I made a broad statement. My statement was, that the expenditure was made in constituencies where it would answer party purposes. I did not say that it was all given to Tory constituencies which should have it.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman did not make an insinuation, he made a very broad statement. He is not in the habit of insinuating anything, because, known and respected as he is by both sides of the House, he has the courage to state, and to state broadly, what he means. He has told the Committee this afternoon that this expenditure is made solely for political purposes. I do not believe that such is the case, because I do not think a Government, composed of its present members would so distribute the public funds.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. KENNY. That is my opinion. But I would remind hon, gentlemen opposite that some years ago, in 1878, when the good people of Canada thought the Grit party had ruled this country badly long enough, one of the members, when he appeared before his constituents in Nova Scotia made this appeal. He stated that during the five years the Government had been in power they had spent $1,877,704, as against only $650,288 spent by the Conservative Government.

and the second s

Mr. CHARLTON. Where?

Mr. KENNY. In Nova Scotia. That was an appeal made by a member of the Cabinet. And if it is very naughty to do so to-day, it must have been equally so in 1878. I do not like these tu quoque arguments, I admit, but it is just as well when an hon. gentleman makes such a statement, that he should be reminded that his own party have transgressed much more flagrantly than the present Government.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the statement made by the hon, gentleman proves that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The statement made by the hon, member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) only proves that there was an expenditure made, and that there was an expenditure where the largest amount of revenue was collected, and where the public interest required expenditures to be made. In Pictou a public building was erected deliberately for the purpose of a post office and customs and inland revenue depart-ment, which I am told is large enough to embrace nearly the whole population. Last year when this matter was under consideration, the Minister of Public Works told us that though that building might be adequate in its accommodation for a post office as well as for the other purposes, yet the present Minister of Justice had set his heart upon having a post office in this place, and as he was away in Paris the Minister of Public Works did not like to assume the responsibility of striking the vote out.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was here last session and we voted the amount without dispute.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, it was the year before. However, it is a work that has already been undertaken and partially completed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The site has only been bought.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is nearly completed, and I have about 1,500 applications from parties willing to take care of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would embrace nearly every man, woman and child of the population.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are there so many out of employment under the National Policy?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No; but they would all like to be employed at that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I believe it to be the fact that the Mackenzie Government laid down the rule, that public buildings were to be erected in places whence the greatest revenue was received. It will not be disputed that this was the rule, and whether in the case referred to by the hon. member (Mr. Kenny) it was departed from or not, I am not prepared to say. An hon. gentleman who was a member of the Mackenzie Government tells me it was not. I know, however, that that rule was regarded in Ontario, and I hold that some such rule should govern the administration of affairs to-day. The conduct of the present Government in this respect is a violation of their trust. I am glad to know that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), who is looked upon as an honourable business man, has expressed himself as ashamed that no member of the Government would stand up and deny the statement that I have made. The time has come when the people of this country should know that the rule which this Government adopts in erecting public buildings, is not a rule in the public interest. but for the purpose of securing votes. For myself, as representing the county of Oxford, which perhaps is the gravest case of neglect on the part of the Government in this respect, I thought that if a petition were laid before the Government some years ago, and that they recognized the large amount of revenue received from the town of Woodstock, that town would receive some consideration from them. However, I was mistaken. If the people are willing that the public money should be spent in this improper fashion we have to abide by it; but it is our duty to expose it in the meantime. and to point out to the people how their affairs are being administered.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would be glad to have some of the Ministers confirm the assertion of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), that appropriations for public buildings are not made for political purposes in any case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That goes without saying.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would the Secretary of State tell us why an appropriation was made for a post office in the insignificant village of Cayuga, why a port of entry was made at Hagarsville, another small village, and why a bridge was built across the Grand River, all of which happened to be in his riding? If these appropriations were made in the public interest then there are a great many villages in this Dominion which need public buildings as badly as Cayuga does. The truth is, that the appropriations for buildings have been made by this Government in a manner to warrant the suspicion that the object they had in view was to secure political influence. Such must have been the case in the instances I have cited in the county of Haldimand. If you trace the object of these appropriations in the different provinces, you will find that it is of a character to wield a certain degree of political influence in favour of the supporters of the Government. I assert in the broadest terms that the Government of this Dominion have spent money for railway subsidies, for the erection of public buildings, and in various other ways, for the express purpose of influencing votes, and that they have used millions of money belonging to the people for the purpose of bribing the people in an indirect manner to keep them in office, and to continue the same species of misgovernment that they have perpetrated for many years past. In regard to the assertion of my hon, friend (Mr. Kenny) that the Mackenzie Government had been extravagant in their appropriations for the province of Nova Scotia-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. KENNY. Excuse me, I did not find fault with the expenditure.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon, gentleman sought to convey the impression that the expenditure of the Mackenzie Government was excessive as compared with the present Government.

Mr. KENNY. I did not make that argument.

Mr. CHARLTON. The expenditure of the Mackenzie Government for public works the last year they were in office was $997,000, and the expenditure by this Government for public works last year was $2,033,000, or considerably more than double the amount. The financial record of the Mackenzie Government, in whatever way we may look upon it, proved that Government to have been economical and thrifty in their management of the fiscal affairs of the country.

Mr. KENNY. The people do not think so.

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps they did not; but as regards the question of fact it does not matter what the people think.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question is: What are the facts? If the Mackenzie Government are arraigned at the bar of public opinion, and the people arrive at a conclusion diametrically opposite to the facts, that proves that the people are ignorant of the matter, but it does not prove that the Mackenzie Government are wrong. The Mackenzie Government had a good and honest financial record, and the people of the country are beginning to understand that now. The Mackenzie Government increased the expenditure but very slightly, and where they had to it to any extent, it was to meet the obligations entered into by their predecessors. The financial record of the Mackenzie Government from whatever point it is viewed, commends itself to the people of Canada. I repeat that it is useless for the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), or for any other member of this House, to deny that this Government have used vast sums of money in the form of appropriations, not for the purpose of carrying on public business, not for the purpose of judicious and proper expenditure; but they have made these appropriations wholly for the purpose of influencing public opinion in ridings, and benefiting themselves as a political party. They have taken the money of the people, in point of fact, to buy the people and to maintain themselves in posi-

Mr. RIDER. Is it customary for the Government to build letter boxes and drawers in the Government post offices?

for, and what is it to cost?

Mr. OUIMET. The cost will be very reasonable. The sum now voted has been two years on the paper, and has not been expended: but it is expected that arrangements will be made during the year to have this building constructed.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the revenue of this post office now? I do not find in! the report that there is such a post office as Marysville. I would like to know what the receipts are.

If the hon, gentleman Mr. OUIMET. cannot find it in the report, I am afraid I cannot.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Ι suppose Government now admit that if a grant is asked for a new building at a place which they do not know the revenue of that is evidence that there is some other object to be served than the public good. I think that is very clear, because the Government are not able to say whether any revenue is derived from this post office or not.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is extravagant in his assertions. He would lead the House to believe that there is no business If my hon. friend had ever in Marysville. been there, he would have found a most thriving village, where a large number of people live and an immense amount of busi-moment tell what the revenue is, but it is comparatively large. This proposed public building is intended to accommodate the post office and other public offices. There is no public building there at present.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is a wide departure from the rule to which the Government pledged themselves. There are a hundred places where there is no post office, but where there is a larger population and a larger revenue than at this place.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very exceptional place.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A very exceptional place, and a very exceptional thing; I have not the slightest doubt about that. I want to know a little more about Marysville. The hon, gentleman says it is a thriving village. Does it contain a population of 1,500 souls?

Mr. FOSTER. More than that—about 2,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And a village of 2,000 souls requires, in the present state of the public revenue, a public building which is to cost how much? Is this $5,-000 for the site, or what is it for?

Mr. OUIMET. The building is to cost something like $8,000, not more.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It ap-Mr. CHARLTON. What is this building pears to me that there can be no more wasteful use of public money than to stud these little insignificant places with public buildings which will require an expenditure of $1,500 or $2,000 a year to keep them up, when the whole work might be done for $150, while in many parts of the country there are places with six or seven times the population and twenty times the revenue which the Government do not consider worthy of the slightest notice. I cannot imagine anything more utterly at variance with all principles of sound policy than this practice of going in search of little villages for the purpose of erecting public buildings in them. It is bribery pure and simple, and nothing else.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is quite wrong. I said that this was an exceptional place and so it is; and if my hon. friend had ever been at Marysville, he would understand what I mean. It has a business and a population and a condition of things which I think are unique in this country. The amount of business done there is very large. One of the largest cotton mills in Canada, with a large number of operatives, is there; it is the centre of an immense lumber trade: it has a large brick yard; and altogether it is a perfect hive of industry. The population is about 2,000. The village is excep-Besides the places of tionally well built. business, the mills, the factory, and the like, the houses of the operatives engaged in ness is done. I cannot at the present these industries are all built very neatly of brick and in a superior style of architecture for that kind of dwellings. There is a church, built by the chief business man of the place at a cost of over $30,000—one of the most beautiful and ornamental churches in the province of New Brunswick, or for that matter in Canada. The object for a number of years has been to have a public building somewhat in keeping with the thrift and the general characteristics of the village itself. Mr. Gibson gives one of the finest plots of land in the village as the site. The building is to be built at an exceptionally low rate of cost. When completed it will not cost over $7,000 or $8,000. There are to be no charges of caretakers or the like. The postmaster will be the caretaker and superintendent of the building. My hon. friends have spent a good deal of time criticising votes, and they have let a great many votes go through which might very well be criticised, but they are to-day spending their criticism upon one of the most defensible votes which we could possibly bring down in the Estimates.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think the hon, leader of the House is justified in making the statement he did. When I first started to criticise the vote, I do not know that I ever have objected to a vote for a public building in other places. It is the principle on which the money is being expended that I object to. The hon, gentleman himself voted for a rule which should govern the expenditure of public money with regard to public buildings. This rule is now flagrantly violated, and the only rule that seems to govern the public expenditure now, is the rule of partisan advantage.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not say that other constituencies represented by Conservatives in this House have not cause for complaint. I am sure my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Masson), who sits so quietly by, has cause. I know that there is a petition from his county asking for a public building in a place very much larger than this one, and where the revenue would probably exceed the expenditure. The hon. leader of the House can hardly expect members to sit quietly by when the rule which was laid down is not only violated but set aside altogether. Under any circumstances, I would be justified in asking what is the revenue. The hon, gentleman has not stated what the postal revenue in that town is. I think that is a very reasonable question, and when we receive that answer, I think it is right that we should point out other places which have twenty and thirty times the revenue, and to the petitions from which for public buildings no attention is paid. The hon, gentleman himself is a candidate in this particular constituency, and while he boasts of his exceeding carefulness in economizing, while he talks to other representatives from other sections on the decrease in the revenue and the necessity to economize, yet in a constituency where he expects to become a candidate himself, he finds it convenient to ask for a vote of $8,000 for a public building to be put up in a place so small that the Government is not able to give us any idea of what its postal revenue is. I do not want to be unfair here, but I want to find out whether the statement I made is correct or not; and if it is not, I want to be put right here.

Mr. FOSTER. I tell my hon. friend straight that the vote does not bear the construction fairly which he puts upon it, and which he wishes the House to put upon it. The construction he puts upon it is that because at the next election I will be a candidate in York, this vote is put in. I can tell my hon. friend that there is not the slightest connection between my candidacy in York—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I repeat there is not the slightest connection between my candidacy in York and this vote for a post office. My hon, friends smile. They will give me the courtesy of making a statement; and if they will not, the country at large will give me the credit of being truthful in making that statement, I am not obliged to make it. The arrangement with reference to the building at Marysville was entered into three years ago, and is being carried out by the Department of Public Works, but some consideration with reference to the plans and the like delayed the construction: but if I had not been a candidate in York, the same vote would have been in the Estimates. With that slight explanation, I wish to say that there is not the least connection between my candidacy in York and this vote. All the same I am very glad the vote is there. It is surely not in the category of new post offices, but is a matter at least three years old, carrying out what has been in progress during that time.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. When we rose at six o'clock it was understood that the hon. Minister would state the amount of receipts of this office.

Mr. OUIMET. I expected to get the figures from the Postmaster General, but I could not. I will try and give it to the hon. gentleman before these items are finished.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In that case the Item had better stand.

Mr. OUIMET. I think the hon, gentleman will probably not insist-

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman will have another opportunity of discussing the matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think we can best discuss the question upon this item. I have no intention of going behind the hon. gentleman's back to say anything that I would not say to him publicly. I stated that I wanted to use this information before the public, and would like to get it on the floor of the House. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, and I think the most convenient way would be to let the item stand.

Mr. OUIMET. There is a feature of this case that applies to other cases as well, and which it might be as well to state. This building is to be built half by private subscription, as it were. This is a young and and thriving village, the people only anxious not to give the were but to reduce the cost in every site, Since I came into the departwav. ment, no new vote as to post offices has been taken. When the public revenue increases again to normal proportions, the claims of other places including that urged by the hon, gentleman will be taken up— unless it is taken up by another Govern-ment, as was hinted. I have no doubt that then full justice will be done to these places which have been forgotten.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would be good to know that all governments would do justice.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have the report of the Postmaster General for the year ending 30th June, 1893, and I see no Marysville post office mentioned.

Mr. OUIMET. For the same reason, I cannot find it.

for 1894, and I do not find in it either the name of Marysville among the list of post offices. No other post office in New Brunswick is omitted. I mink that, under the circumstances, the hon. gentleman should allow the item to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no desire to delay the Committee. But I think the hon. Minister will see that we shall get along much faster with the Estimates if this item is allowed to stand.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Stand.

Quebec-Richmond Post Office and Customs and Inland Revenue Offices...... $5,000 Rimouski is the head of ocean navigation, 110

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this all that is required for this work?

Mr. OUIMET. The total cost of this building, including site, furniture, and everything, will be $15,502.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to draw the Committee's attention to the fact that the entire receipts of this post office last year were $2,084.77. The amount paid for the office now occupied is $100. Here we are about to spend $15,000 to provide a post office in the place where there is a revenue of a little over $2,000, and there are fifty places in this country having receipts of $5,000 that have no post office.

Mr. OUIMET. This building will also accommodate the other services—customs and inland revenue.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the amount of inland revenue collected here?

Mr. OUIMET. Through some error, that and the amount of customs receipts has been omitted from my notes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was this building commenced before the present Minister came into office?

Mr. OUIMET. I could not say exactly that it was commenced before my time, but I can say that it had been on the programme and that I had to carry out the promise made by the Government.

imouski Post Office, Custom-house, &c., site to be given free of cost by municipality $5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to draw attention to this case, also. Last year the receipts of this post office were only $1,856. The rent of the office we occupy now is $400 a year. And yet we are going to build a new post office there.

Mr. OUIMET. This will accommodate also the customs and inland revenue ser-The customs duties amounted to The building will also accommodate the new office in connection with the Agriculture Department, the officer attending to the quarantine business. All the public services will be accommodated there. Though this place may not be growing very Mr. McMULLEN. I have the same report fast, it is very important as being the head of summer navigation.

> Mr. McMULLEN. You have now a post office that answers all purposes, and you are paying $80 a year for it. How much will this building cost?

Mr. OUIMET. About $15,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. At 4 per cent, that is $600 a year. We are getting post office accommodation for $80, and we are going now to invest $15,000 in a post office which, at 4 per cent, will cost $600 a year.

Mr. OUIMET. As I have already said, practically, in the summer time. All the first-class passengers, all the people of some importance and of means, leave the steamer at Rimouski, and this public building will give them a good opinion of the country when they set their foot for the first time on the shores of the St. Lawrence. I think from that point of view it will be a useful expenditure.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the public will have a better opinion of this country if the Government would manage to keep us out of debt, and to abstain from expenditures of the character of some of those we have been criticising. There is no justification; for a country situated as Canada is, with an enormous debt, with burdens weighing upon the people beyond their ability to pay, indulging in reckless and extravagant appropriations of the character the Government are making. Rimouski may be an important point for tourists, it may be a point where vessels call for the last time when bound outward, but it is small place of 1.800 inhabitants, the post office rewhich is less than $2,000 a year; and the other business of the place, I fancy, is very small indeed. I would like to ask the Minister how much customs duties are collected there, and how much inland revenue. There are scores of places in Canada of very much more importance, that are not entitled to public buildings, and do not receive them. I have no doubt this rental of $80 a year procures a building ample for the wants of the post office service, and a small sum would provide accommodation for a custom-house for all the business done at that place. If we had plenty of money, and the country did not feel it, it would be all very well, but we have not plenty of money, we have a very large debt, we have a deficit this year, we are unable to meet our obligations, unable to meet our expenditures, and yet the Government are lavishing money by these appropriations. and have been doing so for years past, doing it in opposition to the promise of their leader of two years ago, that in making appropriations for public buildings, they would be governed by the amount of business that had to be accommodated, and by no other consideration. This consideration does not apply here, and there is no justification for the appropriation we have under discussion at this moment.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman is not fair, I think. He forgets that this building is to be used not only for the post office, but also for the customs, the inland revenue, and the quarantine station. Therefore, he ought to add to the rent of the post office, a sum that would cover rentals for buildings for all those other services. I think it would require at least $400 to pay rentals for all these other services. So that when the hon, gentleman says that $80 suffices to pay all these services, he is not doing justice to the Government.

Mr. CHARLTON. What rental are you paying for accommodation for the custom-house officer there now?

Mr. OUIMET. I have not the figures, but the building will accommodate him also. We pay $80 for the rent of the post office alone. The hon, gentleman knows what kind of accommodation that sum will procure us. An allowance of $80 procures us one of these little places where the postmaster keeps the post office in his private house. As a rule, these post offices are not a credit to the country. As I have said, Rimouski is an important point by reason of the fact that many strangers call there, and it is important that they should be favourably impressed by the buildings which the country provides for its public services. Suppose a gentleman travelling over the continent, stops at Rimouski to get some letters, and he goes into a small room used as a kitchen to inquire for his letters; certainly he is not very forcibly impressed with the resources of this country. In this view, I think the expenditure ought not to be criticised by the hon, gentleman as useless.

Mr. BOWERS. The remarks of the hon. Minister, if they apply to Rimouski, apply with far greater force to Digby. Here is the centre of a large mail service for all the western part of Nova Scotia, a large number of people are continually coming in from the United States, as it is one of the chief watering-places of the maritime provinces. There is only a small post office, hardly as large as that table, where the people have to squeeze in to get their letters. There is no custom-house building, and the customs officer has to keep the office in his own house, and the inland revenue officer the same. The revenue collected in Digby is $500 more than is furnished by Rimouski. Digby is a great centre for the delivery of the mail, and if Rimouski requires a new post office and custom-house, Digby requires them with much greater reason.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can explain to my hon. friend that the reason why Digby is neglected in this respect is because it is not represented by a Minister of the Crown, while Rimouski is. Before dinner we, were discussing the granting of money to build a post office in the prospective seat of a Minister of the Crown, and we are now granting money to finish a post office in a seat now held by a Minister. My hon. friend will therefore understand that if Digby were represented by a Minister of the Crown, it would have a post office, in accordance with the ideas of the Minister of Public Works, who stated himself that of course the Government, when they have public money to expend, would consult the interests of their friends first.

Mr. OUIMET. I am sure the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Bowers) will admit that Digby has not been illtreated. We have spent nearly $28,000 to make a wharf there, which will compare in usefulness and solidity with any work of that kind that has been built in the whole Dominion. I did not wait until the county elected a friend of the Government before doing that work, which the department considered was useful and necessary work. I am sure that when the resources of this country are sufficient, the claim of Digby for a public building will be duly considered.

Mr. BOWERS. I have no particular fault to find with the Minister; I was only putting forth the claims of Digby in this respect. I will give this credit to the Minister of Public Works, that I think since I have represented Digby, he has treated me fairly well as regards public works.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman ought to have said so at once.

Mr. GUAY. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, before the Committee should pass to the next item, I should like to inquire from the hon. gentleman if he has taken in earnest consideration the request addressed to him by the city council of Lévis for the building of a post office in the limits of the town of Lévis?

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) The request of the city council of Lévis has certainly received the most earnest consideration of the Government; but as the revenues of the country, at the present time, are not very large, we had to postpone this very good work to some other time. We are compelled to postpone some of the works that will win us the gratitude of Levis as well as other places. We cannot do all in a day, but I hope the beautiful town of Lévis will have its turn as well as a building worthy of it.

Mr. GUAY. (Translation.) I understood that one of the strongest arguments, as given by the hon, gentleman a moment ago, that induced the Government to build a post office at Rimouski, was that many foreigners, coming especially from Europe, called there, and that it was in order to give them a good opinion of the country that the Government was building a post office there. If such a reason holds good for Rimouski, it ought to hold doubly good for Lévis, where a great many foreigners, coming from Europe and elsewhere, call every day. They would thus be in a better position to judge whether the Administration by which we are ruled is good or bad, and in particular whether the country is prosperous. We must bear in mind that the town of Lévis is one of the most important of the province of Quebec, from the standpoint of population. The post office there gives a large revenue. One of these gives about $1,500 a year; another one gives over $1,300, and then there is the South Quebec post office. The aggregate revenue of these three post offices is over $3,000. It seems to me the request able, and I am surprised the Government should not have thought it their duty to meet it during this session; but, as stated by the hon, the Minister of Public Works, the Government have not done distributing their favours, and I am pleased to think that next year they will grant a share of them to the voters of Lévis.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) In answer to the statements just made by the hon, gentleman with respect to foreigners who call at Lévis, I have only this to say, that the sight that offers to their gaze is so grand that an additional building in the town of Lévis would not do much to raise the country in their esteem. Indeed, the panorama which unfolds itself to their gaze is such a beautiful one, that they need no post office at Lévis to provoke their admiration.

Mr. CHARLTON. With respect to the item for Grosse Isle quarantine station, $1,-000, I observe that it is only one-fifth of the amount voted last year. Does the Minister expect to reduce the expenditure at that station by that amount?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes, this is only for repairs. Two years ago the quarantine station was placed in such a state of repair as to meet every requirement. All that is now needed is to maintain it in a good condition.

Mr. LAURIER. From what appropriation is it proposed to take the money which is to be spent upon repairing a new post office at Laurentides?

Mr. OUIMET. Out of the general vote for repairs and furnishings, $10,000.

Mr. LAURIER. If I understood the Minister aright, in answer to a question, he stated yesterday, or the day before, that he proposed to spend $350 in connection with the post office at Laurentides? If I understood his answer, it was that he had not purchased a building, but that he had leased a building for five years at an annual rental of $300, including fuel, light and repairs. I should like to know from the hon. gentleman what reason there can be to justify such a course of action. Laurentides is a small place, with a population of not more than 2.000 people, if that many, and the revenue derived last year from the post office was $787.41. Yet the hon, gentleman has rented a building at an annual rental of $300. I know the place well, and I venture to say, and I am sure that my statement cannot be contradicted, that it never was rented for more than $3 per month, or $36 per year, for the last fifteen years. The place is an ordinary country place, a large village incorporated as a town. The revenue is not $800 a year. There is not in the whole province of Quebec a single place for which more than $100 is given for rent, fuel and light, with certain excepmade by the voters of Lévis was very justifi- tions which I shall name. For the post office at St. Jean, suburbs of Quebec, $400 fied in criticising its action. The agreement is given for rent, fuel and light, and from in this case has been made for five years, and that office we get a revenue of over $5,000. Then there is St. Roch's, in the same city, where for rent, fuel and light the Government pay $708.31, but receive a revenue of $7.000. For the post office at St. Sauveur there is paid $426.60 for rent, fuel and light, and the revenue received is $2,000. The town of Laurentides, as I have said, gives a revenue of $787.41. It does not cost the country anything at present for rent, fuel and light, which are supplied by the postmaster. The post office is kept by a storekeeper in his store in the same manner as in hundreds and thousands of other places, and I ask where is the justification for entering into an agreement to pay $300 a year rent under such circumstances?

Mr. OUIMET. I will state the reasons why I yielded to the solicitations made on the department for several years in regard to a post office at Laurentides. I have already stated in this House that, in my opinion, in a great many places first-class accommodation could be obtained at a much cheaper rate than to build costly structures to accommodate the public service, and I suggested as one means to adopt the payment of a reasonable rent to the private owner of a fine building, such as this is, which could be used as a post office, and after furnishing it properly we could thereby obtain adequate accommodation at a relatively small expenditure. While I do not wish to indulge in provincialism, I wish the expenditure on public buildings to be as adequately distributed as possible among the different provinces. There are other reasons beyond the mere providing of accommodation for the public service that would support the selection of suitable public buildings, and that was that public buildings should be erected so as to reflect credit on the country, and act, as it were, as an advertisement. Having these points in view. I thought that an experiment might be made in the line I have indicated, and I considered I was justified, in order to set at rest the claims of that town, which were certainly equal to those of a great many other towns, in ascertaining how such a plan would work, not only as regards the department, but also as to whether it would meet with the approbation or approval of Parlia-I think the department should be congratulated on having tried this experiment. If we had been obliged to erect a building there, it would have been necessary to take into account the interest on the money invested, the payment of caretaker, also payment for heating, light and repairs. and other expenditures which make the service for public buildings more expensive than I should like to see it. I should be inclined to reduce it if I could; but for various reasons, Parliament has been willing to incur master is paid $270 a year, and it is imthat expenditure, and I would not be justiportant for us to know whether, in future, sons, Parliament has been willing to incur it will furnish an experiment which may guide the department in its management. The hon, gentleman is really not doing justice to himself when he states that Laurentides is deserving of no more attention than any other place, when if legend be true this village has the great honour of being the birth place of my hon, friend. That fact reflects credit on the town, and something more than ordinary attention should be given to it. I am really astonished to see the first experiment I have initiated, made at a place which should be so dear to the heart of the severely hcn. gentleman, so criticised No doubt, by him. the question economy has suggested the hon, gentleman's remarks, but I shall be very much disappointed if I do not meet with the support of the House in making this experiment I have outlined.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon, gentleman has been very kind to refer to this place as my birthplace. It is; and it is because it is my birthplace, and because I have maintained a deep interest in it, that I do not like to see it associated with any form of boodle. Setting aside all the blandishments of the Minister of Public Works, I must say that I will not favour corruption in any form The hon, gentleman has stated that this is an experiment, and that it is cheaper to rent a place like this than to build a post office as was done in Rimouski. I quite agree with him in that. Does the hon, gentleman lay down as a principle, that every place from which a revenue of $780 is derived is to have a post office? If he does, and if that is the rule which is to prevail, then the hon. gentleman had better make appropriations at once for the expenditure of millions of dollars. The salary of the postmaster here is $270 a year, and is. I dare say, adequate for the work be does: but it is not adequate to give him a living, and he has to do something else. As is the case in many other places, the man is a general merchant, and keeps the post office in the store, and the idea of renting a place for $300 at some distance away is preposterous. The thing has been done simply because the owner of that place which is to be rented, had an elephant on his hands, and did not know what to do with the building. I am informed that he has not derived $30 a year for that building during fifteen years, and this is the place, forsooth, that the Minister of Public Works says he has agreed to rent for $300 a year. There is no possible justification for such conduct as that. It is nothing else but a job, perpetrated to do a favour to a political hack of the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The present post-he will be compelled to devote himself entirely to the keeping of the post office, or whether it is intended that the postmaster shall carry on his general store in a buildof which is paid out of the public treasury. If that is not the intention, then is it the intention to force the present postmaster out of his position so as to make room for another person?

(Translation.) Mr. JEANNOTTE. Chairman, I am very familiar with this question of the St. Lin post office, and one of the reasons why I am so much familiar with it is that the petition asking for this post office was presented to the Government by myself. The hon, leader of the Opposition is not well informed if he has only the information he has given to the Committee. I must tell him that his information is contrary to The petition to which I have just facts. referred was addressed to me, and I sent it to the department which had to deal with it. The hon, leader of the Opposition can see the petition, either in the Post Office Department or in that of the Public Works. This petition was signed by his political friends as well as by the Conservatives, and I will say why. This petition was addressed to me as representative of the county, and I sent it to the department, and it was signed by both the Liberal and Conservative merchants of the place.

All the merchants in that locality, both Liberal and Conservative have petitioned the Government to change the post office to this place. It is on the petition that the Government, after having waited for two years have agreed to rent the house mentioned. leader of the Opposition says that this place could not be rented for more than $3 a month. He is mistaken in that. The department could not take possession of that house before the 1st of April, because the lodgings in it were rented one for $8 a month, and the other one was rented in the winter, after the fire, for 85 a month. I declare here publicly that in the whole parish of St. Lin, and in the whole town of Laurentides, there are not ten peo-ple dissatisfied with the new post office. I have nothing to say against the present postmaster. There are as many Liberals as Conservatives in that town, and they have all signed a petition to take the post office out of the present general store. One of those who signed the petition is well known to the leader of the Opposition, and is Mr. Gauthier, brother of the late member for L'Assomption. St. Lin is not a large town now, but is the centre of a fertile and pro-The Canadian Pacific ductive district. Railway has its terminus there, and the line will, we hope, soon be extended to Joliette. It is a fine market-place, and Mr. Gauthier, the ex-member, buys largely of the products of the country there. The people are anxious that it should thrive quickly, and the Government must help it along.

Laurentides, the town itself, is building one of the finest hotels in the northern country, outside of Montreal. The only thing I regret is that the Government has not seen ing rented by the Government, and the rent fit to erect a fine building there, at a cost of $10,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). An hotel?

Mr. JEANNOTTE. Oh, no, the hotel is nearly finished now, and the Government has nothing to do with it. If the Government spent $10,000 there in erecting a post office it would be money well applied. It is a centre there, which serves all the parishes around.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is the hub of the universe.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. Oh, no; I know the Montreal people would not go there. has a large saw-mill and flour mills, and if the hon, members of the Opposition would like to have a pleasant journey, they might go and see the place, and when they come back they will ask the Government to grant $10,000 for a post office there. Hon. gentlemen need not think this is a great favour to that town. It is simply an act of justice, which was petitioned for first by Liberals. I am surprised that the hon. leader of the Opposition does not like it. At L'Assomption I was not authorized to make the statement I did, but I took upon myself to tell the people that if they wanted the same thing they could have it, and they refused it. They said: We do not want any building rented here; we want to have a fine post office to cost at least $10,000. The hon, leader of the Opposition seems to think it was a great favour to St. Lin. to rent a house when the proprietor is obliged to furnish fuel and light, lamps and everything. I would like to know if there is any member of the Opposition who would furnish all these things for $50 or $60 a year. I am sure there is not one; I would not do it myself. On the whole, I do not think the Government has done a favour to Laurentides; it has only done an act of justice, and at the request of the Liberals; and I am sure all the Liberals will be satisfied with it.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the House will be much obliged to my hon. friend for giving us all this information, which I knew, but which I could not, I am sure, have put so well as my hon. friend has done. I quite agree with him that the Government have done no favour to the town of Laurentides by putting this grant in the Estimates; but they have done a great favour to one of their friends who happened to have an elephant on his hands—who had a house which he could not rent except occasionally for more than $30 a year, and who is to receive from the Government $300 a year. This is the man who receives a favour from the Government. I agree with the hon. gentleman that no one here would furnish fuel and light for $50 or $60 a year; but store, and are very much pleased that the the present postmaster furnishes it for nothing at all; and which is the most advantageous to the country-that the Government should pay these things, or should receive them from the present postmaster for nothing? The hon, gentleman says St. Lin is a very large town, with saw-mills, flour mills, hotels, markets, and so forth; yet with all these the revenue of the post office is only $780. It is too bad that a town of that size should furnish no more revenue than that. That ought to be, after all, the basis of the expenditure of money for such purposes—the amount of business done in the place. The expenditure at present is the salary of the postmaster, $270, which leaves a balance of $510 to the credit of the country. Now you add $300 a year of rent, which will leave a balance of only $210. As I said before, it is impossible to justify this transaction; it is a job-we can call it nothing else.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. The hon. leader of the Opposition thinks the postmaster's salary is too high. The law governing salaries of this kind was passed, I think, fifty or sixty years ago, and this is the only department that has not made progress. I think it is a shame for a country like ours to have postmasters who have to keep their places open from the beginning of the week to the end, and sometimes on Sundays, and from 9 o'clock in the morning till night, and to pay them only $20 a year. Last year I drew the attention of the Government to this. I think the law should be changed. It is said there is a deficit in that department. Well, I do not care much about deficits; I care more for the welfare of the country; and I think the Government cannot have employees without paying them properly. I regard the postmasters as employees of the Government, and it is a shame to pay them only $20 or $30 or $35 a year. The salary of a postmaster should not be based upon the revenue he receives; it should be based upon the business done in the locality. The hon. leader of the Opposition asks why the revenue of Laurentides is not larger than $780 a year if the town is so large and so busy. It is very easy to explain. Ten years ago not more than ten newspapers per week were received there, whereas now between eighty and a hundred are received and distributed every week. These do not yield any revenue, but they give work to the post-master. Besides that we have the "Journal d'Agriculture," which is distributed gratuitously and does not give any revenue to the postmaster, and all those small circulars.

Mr. AMYOT. Why does he not resign, if he has too much work?

JEANNOTTE. No, he will not re-All the business men of the Lauren-Mr. JEANNOTTE. sign. have petitioned the Government against having a post office in a general post office should be put in a private building, which is not occupied as a store.

Mr. LAVERGNE. If an equal distribu-tion of public money in the province of Quebec, as well as in the other provinces, is to have any force, I would suggest to the hon. Minister to look up the names of the different post offices and see which deserve more consideration. I would draw his attention to my constituency, where he will find a dozen post offices from which the Government derives a revenue of from a $1,000 to $1,500 a year. I might mention Drummondville, Arthabaskaville, Victoriaville, Stanfold, Warwick, and several others. The reason given by the Government the absurd expenditure on are about as convincing to-night for offices those given in 1892 when they spent $20,000 on a post office at Laprairie, which gives an income to the Government of $400 a year. The reason then given was that it was a historic place. Now the reason for the expenditure at Laurentides is that the leader of the Opposition was born there, and that it is a railway terminus. I might tell the hon, gentleman that there are, in my county, several large towns which are railway terminuses, but for which I would not dare to ask for a vote for a public building. If all that was required was to get a petition signed by Liberals and Conservatives, that would be a most easy thing to do. It is impossible to commend this vote on any grounds. We are unable to get the information we want with regard to it, and the only reason we can find for it is that we are on the eve of an election.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that what the Minister has proposed cannot have had the approval of his colleagues, and certainly the explanation given by the hon, member for L'Assomption (Mr. Jeannotte) is of a very extraordinary character. In a comparatively small town, where the postmaster must keep the office in connection with some business, in order to be able to live, the Minister of Public Works proposes to remove the office from the general merchant's store and put it into a rented building under a postmaster who does nothing else. It seems that the reason for this is because four or five other merchants are jealous. The post office, with its salary of $270 a year, is to be taken out of the hands of the postmaster, and put into a building for which $300 rent is paid, and a postmaster who does no other business, is to be appointed. Why did not the hon, gentleman admit that it is a scheme to force the postmaster, who is a merchant, out of office, and to put the work into the hands of a party who is in such poor circumstances that a salary of $270 will compensate him for the discharge of the duties. The man who can afford to live business to attend to, and who is put in a building rented by the Government where he cannot carry on any other business, is a man whose circumstances are such that I would hardly care to put the distribution of the mail and the keeping of the office into his hands. The hon, gentleman, if he proposes to dismiss the postmaster, ought to have taken a more courageous way about

Mr. JEANNOTTE. The last speaker has thing has been done? said that a man who can live on a salary of $270 should not be trusted with keeping the post office, Well, we have no millionaires in our county, and a man with a revenue of $250 can keep house and live very well, and be just as honest as a man with $10,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then we understand the position to be this: The hon. gentleman moved by a patriotic desire to increase the population of this town desires a new office to be created which will maintain an additional family. If this is the policy of the Government, I have no doubt they will find numerous opportunities of applying it, not only in the village in ques- dent as to take money without having the tion, but in many other villages, especially plans ready? in New Brunswick. Just see what a field is opened there for adding to the enormous increase in population within the last few years. You might add 5,000 per cent to the population by such a principle judiciously applied. I recommend it to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Ontario-Arnprior Post Office, Custom-$7,500 house, &c..... Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the building to cost?

Mr. OUIMET. The cost of the Arnprior building is to be about $17,000.

Rideau Hall, heating apparatus, electric lighting, new dairy, etc..... $1,300

Mr. McMILLAN. How much of this goes to the dairy to be erected at Rideau Hall? I think that a few years ago a dairy was erected there.

Mr. OUIMET. Last year there was a vote of $5,000 under the same heading. We concluded that we would give the work by tender. This is a supplementary vote to complete the payments.

$20,000 Dominion Reformatory Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What about this?

Mr. OUIMET. Nothing has been done by the department, with the exception of buying a farm.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where?

Mr. OUIMET. In Alexandria. It was a favourite scheme of our late Premier, as Minister of Justice, to provide a special on that amount of money, with no other and this has materialized in an appropriation being asked for that reformatory, and Alexandria has been selected as the most favourable place for it. The plans are not made yet, and I cannot say what the whole thing will cost.

> Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the size of the farm?

Mr. OUIMET. One hundred acres.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And no-

Mr. OUIMET. Nothing except the survey. We are waiting for special instructions from the Department of Justice to prepare the plans. And, as we have not very much money, we go pretty slow in order to meet the views of the hon. Minister of Finance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. will be the cost roughly—we will not be particular within $20,000?

Mr. FOSTER. It is difficult to tell without the plans. This must be a specially designed building.

Mr. LAURIER. And are you so impru-

Mr. FOSTER. How without the plans?

Mr. LAURIER. The hon, gentleman cannot say how much it will cost, yet he asks us to vote money.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not pretend that I have the information the hon, gentleman wants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Public Works can tell us.

Mr. OUIMET. If Parliament is of the opinion that such a reformatory would be a good thing for the country, I hope we shall not be stopped because we cannot tell within a thousand dollars what the cost will be. I understand that $100,000 will cover the whole thing. The setimental part of the affair does not come within my department. I am only the building instrument.

Mr. SCRIVER. What is the sentimental part?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To secure the presence here of our friend from Glengarry.

Mr. OUIMET. It is considered most important that young offenders should be separated from the older criminals and sent to a prison where they will be free from the bad influence that permeates the atmosphere of the penitentiary. It is the experiencea very sad experience indeed-that, even under the severest regulations that can be devised to prevent intercourse among the inhabitants of these penitentiaries, if a young offender is left in an institution of place where juvenile offenders could be sent, that kind for two or three years, there are five chances out of ten that he will leave with such ideas of virtue that ultimately his crmies will bring him back. The establishment of a special place of detention for these young offenders has been advised as the best way to obviate these evils.

Sir RICHARD CALTWRIGHT. There may be something to be said in favour of separating young offenders from the hardened ones, and if the hon, gentleman would extend the application and have a special wing in which to keep the junior Ministers from the older members of the Cabinet, I am not sure but that it would be a good thing.

Mr. OUIMET. I am sure the hon, gentleman would take advantage of that as well.

Mr. SCRIVER. What is the cost of the farm?

Mr. OUIMET. I think it was $5,000.

Mr. SCRIVER. Has it been conveyed to the Government?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. INNES. Were any memorials in opposition to the proposed site presented to the Government?

Mr. OUIMET. I cannot say as to that; but I am surprised that the hon, gentleman's recollection does not cover these matters, as the whole question has been the subject of discussion for two or three sessions.

Mr. INNES. But were memorials in opposition to the site presented?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes; and it was mentioned in the report of the inspector.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is it the intention to bring criminals from all parts of the Dominion to this reformatory? The Minister has just announced that the matter had been threshed on the floor of Parliament for two or three years, and thoroughly understood. Now, he admits, when asking for a grant of money, that no plan has been prepared, that it is merely the roughest kind of estimate as to what it may possibly cost in the future.

Mr. OUIMET. It is the intention to bring juvenile offenders from all parts of the Dominion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is it the policy of the Government to make any provision for sending these offenders, when discharged from these prisons, back to the place they came from, or to some other place?

Mr. OUIMET. Certainly, Every convict who comes out of the penitentiary is provided with a good suit of clothes, his ticket and a sufficient amount of money to take him to his own place, and even to enable him to live long enough to procure employment. These regulations are in force in the five chances out of ten that he will leave penitentiaries, and I have no doubt they with such ideas of virtue that ultimately will be adopted in this reformatory.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that the Government will bring juvenile offenders say, from British Columbia?

Mr. OUIMET. As far as practicable, but the expense may stand in the way. But those are the regulations that will be submitted to the House when the reformatory is built.

North-west Territories-Public Buildings. $11,200

Mr. OUIMET. This sum is to be applied in carrying out works of renewal, improvements and repairs, which are not covered by any special or general appropriation made by Parliament, and have to be undertaken during the fiscal year 1895-96, in connection with Dominion public buildings in the North-west Territories under control of the Federal Government in order to place these buildings in a proper state of repair and efficiency by providing for the immediate requirements of the public service. Amongst other things, I see that an expenditure was required of $1.217 for the Calgary courthouse, and $1,265 for the Regina post office.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the meaning of this Prince Albert court-house, $5,-000?

Mr. OUIMET. That was one of the first buildings erected in the North-west Territories, and unfortunately it seems that the architects had not a sufficient knowledge of the nature of the ground and the severity of the climate in that new country, and they did not make the foundations deep enough to stand the frost. One side of the present building is almost tumbling down, and new foundations will have to be made. The intention, however, is to build a new building in a more central part of the town. The court-house and jail are now about one mile from the centre of the present town which is growing in a different direction from that which was at first expected.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This has only been built five or six years.

Mr. OUIMET. It has been built for a long time, but nearly every year we have had to take a vote in connection with it. I am told it was built about 1883, that is, the old court-house. The building we are now going to erect will be a new court-house. The present building will serve for the purposes of a jail and a police lock-up.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is it not a fact that this new building was put up and has never been occupied as a court-house, on account of the shoddy manner in which it was built?

Mr. OUIMET. I have explained that the foundations were not deep enough, and the building was never very good. although it has served as a jail. I understand that the remote and was so uncomfortable, held the a proper building. court in some other place nearer the centre of the town.

Mr. LAURIER. Where is the new building to be placed?

Mr. OUIMET. In the centre of the town.

Mr. LAURIER. Has the site been purchased?

Mr. OUIMET. Not yet.

British Columbia-Dominion Public Buildings, renewals improvements, repairs, etc., $3,000; Victoria drill hall and accessory buildings $2,500; Victoria new post Victoria new post office, $40,000; total.....$45,500

Mr. LAURIER. What about the Victoria post office?

Mr. OUIMET. The contract was given to Mr. Toms, of Ottawa, who died and the contract was transferred to Elford & Smith, of Victoria, by Order in Council dated 14th March, 1895, for the same price.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is the building to be erected on the site formerly purchased by the Government; do I undestand that no second site has been purchased?

Mr. OUIMET. No second site.

Mr. MARA. I wish to call the attention of the Government to the advisability of building a land office at Kamloops, with vaults large enough to contain books and papers. In the fall of 1893 the office there was burnt, and many of the records and books were destroyed. At present, a tem-porary office is rented for which $15 per month is paid. As rents go, that is as low as the Government could get a suitable building; but for about $3,000 a building could be erected with vaults large enough to contain all books, papers, and applicaanother fire should occur, destroying applications for settlement. Considerable business is done at the office. The receipts last year were over $10,000, and ninety homestead applications were made for 13,000 acres of land. As a matter of simple precaution to save the Government property there should be proper vaults provided, and as a business investment it would pay the Government to erect a building, for they would save thereby $100 a year. I hope the Government will look into the matter.

Mr. OUIMET. The Minister of the Interior is not in his seat, but I may promise the hon. gentleman that I will lay the matter before him, and I am sure the Government will come to the best conclusion in the premises, from a business point as well as in the interest of preserving the valuable archives.

Mr. MARA. Last session I called attention to the subject, and reasons of economy judge last year, finding the building was so were given then, as now, for not erecting

Experimental Farms, new buildings, $6,000 improvements, etc

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like some explanation as to where, and how the money is to be spent.

Mr. OUIMET. This amount is to carry out repairs and improvements on the different experimental farms throughout the Dominion.

Nova Scotia-Cow Bay Breakwater...... $4,000

Mr. McDOUGALD. What part of the repairs to Cow Bay breakwater does the department propose to undertake with $4,000?

Mr. OUIMET. That part which will be found absolutely necessary to keep the breakwater in place. I could not exactly say what part.

Mr. McDOUGALD. I wish to call attention to the fact that there is a large gap in the breakwater, and that $4,000 cannot repair it; more like $10,000 will be required to connect the pieces now separated. cannot understand what sort of repairs can be carried out for $4,000. The breakwater is a valuable one. It has been maintained by the Dominion for a great number of years, and has rendered great service to the marine, and I cannot understand how $4,000 is going to do anything towards maintaining the pier in its present position, or putting it into such a condition as to save it from further damage.

Mr. OUIMET. I must candidly say that when these Estimates were prepared the breakwater was not as badly damaged as it appears to be to-day, a great storm having damaged the breakwater since that time. I had reason to hope that, perhaps we might have a larger amount at our disposal tions. Great inconvenience would follow if if the Supplementary Estimates were to be granted, but it seems to be agreed by both sides of the House that Supplementary Estimates are to be dispensed with this session. So I must say to the hon, gentleman that this amount of $4,000 will be employed by our engineers with the best result possible, and I am sure they will do everything possible with that small amount to preserve the breakwater until next year, when I hope Parliament will be more generous towards the department. There is also a question of asking the coal companies to join in these repairs, as they are benefited by them, and these negotiations have not come to any practical issue yet. assure the hon. gentleman that the question has not been lost sight of, and everything possible will be done to prevent that valuable work from being damaged.

> Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This is the first time I knew you to consult the Opposition about bringing down the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. OUIMET. I must say that in my opinion the Minister of Finance has done very wrong in consulting the Opposition. and especially yielding to their very earnest prayer.

Mr. BOWERS. What part of Digby pier is to be repaired for the $4,000?

Mr. OUIMET. There is a revote to enable the department to spend the balance of the appropriation in completing that part of the pier which was left anbuilt. This will make the wharf the most solid structure in that part of the country.

Mr. BOWERS. If the work is to be done this season, I hope the Minister will proceed with it at once, and not leave it until the fall of the year. The days are long now, the weather fine, and the water smooth and if the men are employed a good day's work may be obtained, instead of working half time if done in the autumn. If these repairs are not done at once the very first heavy gale will cary that part of the wharf away and then it will cost $10,000 or $15,000 to repair it.

Mr. OUIMET. It is the intention of the department to do the work at once.

Mr. BOWERS. Was the $300 voted last year for the Church Point wharf expended?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. McISAAC. Is the $1,000 for Arisaig wharf, to be expended this season or is it a revote to cover the expenses of last season.

Mr. OUIMET. The work has been ordered and I think it is now being done.

Mr. McISAAC. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the present condition of this wharf. It is in fairly good repair but although large sums of money have been expended on it, it does not afford the facilities to the shippers and others of that district which it should. I do not find particular fault with the Minister, but I want to call his attention to some facts in connection with this. The space between the wharf and the land has filled in with sandstone and other materials during the last year or more, so that it does not at all afford a safe harbour for sailing vessels. I am informed that if a dredge were sent there for two weeks, it would render it a safe harbour, and I trust that the Minister will do this. This harbour is on the northern coast of the province of Nova Scotia where the water is very rough and dangerous to vessels, and this is the only place in which they can seek safety. It is very necessary that a dredge should be sent there as soon as possible. This is a very important place not only because it affords facilities for shippers and travel, but because also a very valuable iron mine was discovered in the locality a few years ago. It was operated last year for the first time by the New Glasgow Iron Company, and as there are no railways Iron Company, and as there are no railways if the Minister intends to build a pier at there the ore had to be shipped in vessels West Point. Surely he must know that the from this wharf. Ordinary sailing vessels at the present time can only load at the end of the wharf, and often that is not safe, and unless they are enabled to land and load at the side, where greater safety would be afforded in rough weather, the wharf is practically of no use. There is a steamer subsidized by the Government of Nova Scotia which calls at this wharf, and at other ports in the counties of Antigonish and Inverness, and in order that this steamer may do her work properly, it is absolutely necessary that the harbour should be dredged at once. I trust that the Minister of Public Works shall see to it that the dredge, which I am told is now working in some place near, will be sent at once to Two or three weeks of dredging Arisaig. would afford sufficient facilities for landing of steamers and vessels and make a safe harbour for any class of vessels.

Mr. WELSH. I thank the hon. Minister of Public Works for putting in this appropriaation for Wood Island. He made a good job of it last summer and I trust that he will not forget to have the dredge sent there at once so as to make it a and convenient harbour for the people. I have been for nine years asking for something for those people, and the Minister last year was kind enough to put in the Estimates a sum for the completion of the breakwater. Now, all it wants is to be dredged, and we shall have a good harbour.

Mr. PERRY. I would like to ask whether the sum of $6,000 is all that is to be voted for repairs to piers and breakwaters around the shores of Prince Edward Island. I suppose it must be, unless we are to expect a further sum in the Supplementary Estimates, although we have been told that there are to be no Supplementary Estimates this year. There are thirty piers around the shores of Prince Edward Island, besides Kier's Shore, North Rustico, Souris and Wood Island, and many of them require to be repaired. This sum of $6,000 would hardly repair the Tignish breakwater alone. The Minister last year promised that he would send some one of his engineers to survey that breakwater and make a report upon it. He has not done so. If he does not attend to that breakwater, it will go to pieces and float away in a short time. It is a work that cannot be overlooked, as Tignish is a place where a great deal of shipping is done. I would like to know also Dominion of Canada is in honour bound to matters to the attention of the hon. Minisdo so by the solemn compact made with ter so frequently that I hope he will Prince Edward Island. I am not aware now say he intends to do something for that he has sent an engineer to survey the them. I would also like to know if it is place and make a report. How does he expect the people to ship their cattle and horses and other produce there without the necessary accommodation. The Minister is aware that work has commenced at the Brae. The people agreed to contribute $1,000. which was supplemented by another $1,000 by the Works Department; but it would require perhaps $1,000 more to make the work substantial and permanent. An application has also been made for a pier at Campbellton. Work is also going on at Kier's Shore, and I would like to know whether it is being done by contract or by day's work. This vote of $4,500 is, in my opinion, large enough to do work by contract. I believe the man who has charge of some of the work is from Ottawa; but I do not see why a man from Ottawa should travel all the way down to Prince Edward Island to do this work when it could be as well and as cheaply done by people on the island. I want to know if the Minister is going to send an engineer this year to report on the Tignish breakwater. If he is. I would ask him to let me know a day or two previous, so that I could drive the engineer down there, and give him an opportunity of obtaining information from men who are perhaps better acquainted with the locality than I am myself.

Mr. OUIMET. I may say to the hon, gentleman that the resident engineer has received instructions to visit the Tignish breakwater, but his report has not yet been received.

Mr. YEO. When a similar item to this was being discussed earlier in the session, the hon. Minister stated that when the main Estimates came up he would give us some information in regard to the wharfs on which he was going to expend money in Prince Edward Island. I brought to his notice then several wharfs in Prince County particularly Brae and West Point, which need repairs. Every session since 1891 these wharfs have been the needs of brought to his attention, and he has promised to look after them; but so far very little has been done. I hope now he will say that something will be done during the present summer upon these works. I am glad to see that a further appropriation is made for the wharf at Kier's Shore, and I would like to ask the Minister if it is intended to continue this expenditure until the work is completed. I know that a petition was presented to his department last year, asking for the building of a wharf at Gordon Point between Sea Cow Head and Cape Traverse; also a petition for a wharf at Campbellton. The inhabitants at the latter place have constructed a considerable work, and they hope the Government will supplement and extend it. We have brought these spring, to be overflowed, and especially the his intention to do anything during the coming summer at Cape Traverse. A steamer has been plying between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine, but owing to the shallowpess of the water on the Prince Edward Island side she can only run there during tide time. I would like also to ask the Minister whether it is his intention during the present season to do anything at the harbour of Summerside. The work there has been petitioned for, and the engineers who have been sent to inspect the harbour reported to the department. have know it will require a small outlay but, considering the importance of Summerside, I think the hon. Minister should give it most serious consideration without delay.

Mr. OUIMET. With the exception of those places specially mentioned in the resolution, we intend to spend $6,000 in repairs, as much as possible on every work of importance which the resident engineer will report as requiring repairs. amount is very small, I must admit, but some of the places mentioned by the hon. gentleman, especially Summerside, would require an expenditure of about $50,000. All I can say is that the department will do its best, and the hon, gentleman may rely that every dollar spent will be represented by useful work.

Mr. PERRY. I hope the hon, gentleman will not forget to spend a few dollars at Bray.

Negro Point Breakwater-St. John Harbour, New Brunswick..... $7,000

Mr. BOWERS. How much money was spent last year on Negro Point breakwater ?

Mr. OUIMET. A very small amount. Nothing but what was absolutely necessary to protect that part where the lighthouse is situated. But we are now expending $5,000 in making and placing concrete blocks: and if the experiment is successful, we intend to solidify the whole breakwater with these concrete blocks, weighing about twenty tons each, heavy enough not to be carried away as ordinary boulders are by heavy We were not able to secure the seas. necessary labour and go on with the work before now, and we will see exactly what will be the result of that experiment before going further.

the total cost?

Mr. OUIMET. Fourteen thousand dollars.

Mr. RIDER. I would like to inquire of the Minister of Public Works if he has completed the purchase of the wharf at Magog, and if the repairs are being attended to?

Mr. OUIMET. The purchase has been made, and the Department of Justice has to see that the deed is completed. The other day I said to the hon, gentleman that it would require an expenditure of about $200 to make the pier perfect, and that will be attended to at once.

I am very glad the Gov-Mr. RIDER. ernment has decided to make this a Government work, and have taken the precaution to purchase the site and approach to the wharf. This is a very important wharf, situated on a most beautiful sheet of water. Lake Memphramagog; and as the season of navigation is now close on, it would be still further appreciated if the hon, gentleman would hasten its repairs.

Mr. OUIMET. It is understood that the repairs are to be done as soon as the money can be available. Instructions will be given at once.

Mr. RIDER. Will the work be done by contract?

Mr. OUIMET. By days' labour. It is only repairing the planking of the pier.

Mr. BRYSON. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to an amount I submitted for his consideration the other day. I find that a very small sum indeed has been appropriated for general repairs and improvements on the province of Quebec. The House will recollect that last year a small sum was placed in the Estimates for Baie des Peres wharf. The amount voted was expended last fall and this spring the wharf was in an unfinished condition and very likely to be carried away by the spring freshet. The foreman, the man in charge, secured a gentleman, Mr. Mann, to assist him in completing the work. The work has been completed and the bill has been sent certified by the inspector of the work. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the amount paid, $320. will be one of the first amounts taken out of this vote of $10,000? As it has been expended by the foreman in charge, and expended for the purpose of preventing the wharf being carried away—it is the only wharf at this place where three steamers are running daily-I would suggest that the hon. Minister give us assurance that this amount will be one of the first taken out of this vote. I regret exceedingly that the amount for the whole province of Quebec is large pier which is there, and which is un- so small; but I trust that out of it the amount that has been paid to these labour-Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is ers, and for maintenance, the account for which has been certified, will be paid.

> Mr. OUIMET. The amount mentioned by the hon, gentleman has been expended and put to good account, and will be paid as soon as this money is available.

> Mr. CARROLL. (Translation.) I would like to call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Public Works to the Kamouraska wharf. I understand that according to the plan, this wharf should be longer by a hundred feet than it is now. For some years past, no work was done there. would like to know why the works were not continued?

> Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) One reason, by which I am spared the trouble of giving any others, is that I had no money to do more. Another reason is that I think the wharf is already long enough for the traffic carried on at Kamouraska, and it has not yet been represented to me that there was any necessity for making the expenditures referred to by the hon, gentleman. A hundred feet more of this wharf would cost about $12,000 or $15,000, and the condition of our finances does not justify such an expenditure at this

Mr. CARROLL. (Translation.) I think the hon, gentleman is mistaken. I think that with two or three thousand dollars, and not twelve or fifteen thousand, he could have this wharf extended a hundred feet. As for the usefulness of this wharf, I think representations were made to the Public Works Department on the matter.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) I made a slight mistake, which was corrected by the hon, gentleman. But in the main I was right, inasmuch as the information given me by the department is to the effect that an addition of a hundred feet to the wharf would not make it more useful than it is now, since it would not give any more water. That is to say, with a hundred additional feet there would be no more depth of water than there is at the end of the wharf such as it is now. We would have to build four or five hundred additional feet of wharf, which would entail an additional expenditure of from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars. I do not think the hon. gentleman himself would, under such circumstances, recommend to the department the making of such an expenditure.

Mr. CARROLL. (Translation.) I will give the hon, gentleman the opportunity to correct once more the information given him by his engineer, by stating that no such expenditure would be required, for a hundred feet more would surely give much more water, three or four feet more than now.

Mr. RIDER. I would like to know if anything is to be spent on the wharf known as Bryant's Wharf, on the west shore of Lake Memphremagog about ten miles from Magog?

AND THE RESIDENCE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPE

Mr. OUIMET. There is nothing for that.
Mr. RIDER. Is there any report on that wharf?

Mr. OUIMET. That is not a Government wharf; it is a private wharf.

Mr. RIDER. But I did not know but that the Minister might have had it brought to his attention.

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I would like a little more information about this $10,000. About 1882 the hon, member who represented the constituency I now represent had some work done on the Black River, in the county of Drummond. Some years after, when the hon, member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) was Minister of Public Works, he promised me that the engineer of the Government should be sent to make a new report on the river. It is pretty sure that the amount that has been spent there, $2,000, will be entirely lost if the Government does not see fit to send the engineer to make a new report. Is any part of the $10,000 for that purpose?

Mr. OUIMET. No; none of it will be applied there.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Can we get any information as to how this $10,000 is to be spent?

Mr. OUIMET. I can tell the hon, gentleman what was done with a similar vote last year, though I am not sure that he will be much wiser for it. We had expenditures: Bic Wharf, Des Joachims, Grosse Isle Quarantine Wharf, L'Islet Wharf, Portage du Fort, and other works.

Mr. TARTE. An item appears, $5,000 for Baie St. Paul. Will the hon. Minister say what he intends to do there?

Mr. OUIMET. To build a wharf and make it available for general navigation, and more especially for the boats of the Ontario and Richelieu Navigation Company, which ply between Quebec and the ports of Murray Bay and Chicoutimi. That work is under contract, and this is to pay for the balance of the work. I understand that it is expected to be ready about the middle of the summer.

Mr. TARTE. Can the hon. Minister tell us how much has been spent so far on the new pier?

Mr. OUIMET. The last contract has been for an amount of about $6,500. There is what we call the isolated block, which has been kept in repair until now. We are sure that the other wharf will give all the necessary accommodation.

Mr. TARTE. Can the Minister tell how much has been spent altogether?

Mr. OUIMET. I have not the figures now, but I will get them and send them to the hon. gentleman if he wishes.

Mr. TARTE. I would like to know something about that Pointe aux Esquimaux wharf, which is a celebrated pier.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman knows this Pointe aux Esquimaux is the principal port in that section. It is a place where the steamer stops, and is an important port so far as shipping is concerned, and also as being the centre of that region. There is an old structure there now that does not deserve to be called a pier, but it has served its purpose, and has become so dilapidated that we decided to build another pier. In order to lessen the expense, we intend to purchase that old pier from the present owner, a man named Lavoie. But there is a question as to whether he can give a proper title. At all events, we are willing to pay $700 for the pier, and as soon as this contract is completed, the pier will be built with the sum we now ask Parliament to re-

Mr. TARTE. Does the Minister intend to ask for tenders for that work.

Mr. OUIMET. My engineer tells me that he intends to recommend that it should be built by day's labour. But the present pier will be utilized and put in shape.

Mr. TARTE. I should think the Minister's experience of day's labour was not very favourable.

Mr. OUIMET. Well, there is a great deal of prejudice against day labour, but I must say that according to all the reports I get from my chief engineer, as well as from the resident engineers, there are circumstances where the work is certainly better done, and cheaper, when done by day's labour than when done by It depends altogether on the circumstances. If the hon, gentleman has an hour or two to spare, and will call at my office, we will be able to show him the practical working of the two systems, at least since I have been in the department; and we will be able to prove to him conclusively that the best work and the cheapest work that has been done, since I have been at the head of the department, has been done by day's labour. The reason is this: On account of the great competition between contractors. they cut down the prices as low as possible, and in order to save themselves, there is always a tendency to use poor material, especially in works of repair, which, of course, they find very much cheaper. other cases we prefer to get the work done by contract, and it is for the chief engineer, who has no political purpose to serve, to decide which system to adopt under the circumstances. I may say that in the public works we are now carrying on, we do not expect to make any political capital by employing day's labour, and we are trying to do the work in the best possible manner, and for the least amount of money. We have no other purpose to serve. I think I can show the hon, gentleman that we have tried both systems under the most favourable circumstances, and that the day's labour system has been found in many cases to be preferable. Our policy is always to be governed by the circumstances, and to give the work by tender when the chief engineer, from all the information at his disposal, thinks that it will prove the most successful. But I am not afraid to assert and to state publicly. that whether we have followed one system or the other, we have done the best that could be done under the circumstances.

Mr. TARTE. The Minister may have the best intentions possible, but I am afraid that when the election comes on, neither he nor his chief engineer will always be able to do the best for the country. Now, take that Pointe aux Esquimaux business. Suppose we have an election in a short time; the Ministerial candidate will manage to untilize the expenditure of this money on his own behalf, and a public work which the Minister intends to be carried out in the public interest, will become simply an electoral engine. This is not right, and for that reason I would urge the Minister not to insist too strongly on the day's labour system. The Minister says he has tried both systems and that the day's labour system has worked well. Well, I am glad to hear that from his mouth, but he must admit that our experience in the past has not been such as to impress us very favourably with the advantages of that system. I would like to ask the Minister what works he has conducted by that system. For instance, has he tried it in Sorel?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes; in Sorel we have our repair shops for the whole dredging fleet of Canada, and our experience is that we get our work done in Sorel, and we can prove it to the satisfaction of every practical man, at least 50 per cent cheaper than we could get it done in any other establishment. There may be a special reason for We have men there specially trained for the work, and it is done under the supervision of a gentleman who is a practical engineer. We have also as one of the overseers a young French Canadian, Mr. Goulet, who has proved himself to be possessed of great talent as a mechanical engineer. The salaries of these officials are reason-We have no dividends to pay to shareholders, and on the whole the work is done very cheaply, as I am informed by officials whose information is reliable. We have certain difficulties, no doubt, in carrying out the work. Very often people are not satisfied because we do not employ people holding certain political convictions, but the officials manage to get over these difficulties fairly well, and in the management of this vast establishment at Sorel, the department has not been exposed to reproach for committing injustice so far as politics are concerned.

Mr. TARTE. Who is the chief engineer to be sent to Point Esquimalt?

Mr. OUIMET. Mr. Blais will be sent down. He will take charge, as in previous years, of the work on the north shore, and from my experience of the last two years he has given full satisfaction. I may point to the work done at Tadousac, and on the different wharfs of the Saguenay, which will satisfy any one that he is a competent man, for he has done the work, not only in first-class style, but also very cheaply.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the question at present under discussion is as to whether the Government should employ day labour on public works, or let them all out by contract. I desire to ask a practical question, and it is this: Suppose the Government wish to renew a work such as a pier or harbour at a cost of $2,000 or $5,000, how is it possible that this can be done by contract? It cannot be done by contract. And why? by contract. And why? By reason is there is a great difference in the piers and works, and for that reason it is impossible. No engineer can make an estimate, and, therefore, in regard to such works on which the expenditure is from $2,000 to $10,000, the proper way is to do it by day's labour. If it is done by day's labour, the first consideration is, who is the party most interested in the pier, or work? If that work can be placed under his supervision, and he can be allowed to employ day's labour in connection with the expenditure of the amount, $2,000 or $5,000, or $10,000, then the Government will get better work done than by contract. When an hon, member talks about carrying out all these works by contract, I reply that it is impracticable and therefore there is no argument in hon. gentlemen finding fault with the Government because they do not give all works out by contracts, but execute some by day labour. In regard to new works, I can understand that contracts may be let, but not as regards renewing works. It is not fair to say that the Government gave work out in order to obtain political capital.

Mr. CARROL. What will be the length of the pier at Point Esquimalt?

Mr. OUIMET. It will give twelve feet of water at the lowest tide. I am told the pier will be about 250 feet in length.

Mr. TARTE. I should like to have some explanation of the item of $8,000 for formation of tidal basin at Rimouski.

Mr. OUIMET. This work has been very earnestly pressed on the department by the people engaged in the lumber trade in this region, especially Price Bros, and King did not care very much for that harbour. Bros. Those firms which are now engaged in the lumber trade in that region are now obliged, on account of the shallowness of the water at the end of the wharf, to cart their lumber to Matane, or send it down to Campbellton. The cartage to Matane is, of course, very costly. On the other hand, if they ship it by the Intercolonial Railway to Campbellton, they are placed in a very disadvantageous position. Lumber shipped from a port on the Baie de Chaleur is considered to be the lumber of that region, and it appears-I do not know anything personally about it—that the reputation of the lumber of the Ri-mouski region is very much higher than that of the lumber round Baie de Chaleur. I am told the difference amounts to about put public money there if there are to be $2 per thousand. The people of Rimouski, and the firms I have mentioned have urged on the department that the wharf at Rimouski should be lengthened, and a tidal basin built, so that not only may ships come to wharf, but also float in the basin at low tide without injury by wind or wave. This work would be a very expensive one, and the department has not yet taken practical steps to proceed with it. We have had plans prepared and estimates made: we have not yet asked for tenders, but every- made an observation which shows how often thing is ready to advertise for tenders. It we are proceeding in the dark. The Miniswill depend very much on the amount required whether we shall go on with the work or not. The amount in the Estimates is very small, compared with the probable total cost, which may be placed at from $90,000 to $120,000. I am asking for this vote so as to be able to go on with the work if it is possible for the Government and the department to undertake it.

Mr. TARTE. It seems to me that the Minister should be very cautions about such a work.

evidence that we are cautious.

Mr. TARTE. I do not see why we should be called upon to vote this sum when the Minister admits that he does not know the cost of this work.

Mr. OUIMET. Do you object to it?

Mr. TARTE. I do not. Having no official information, I would not take upon myself to object to it. The Minister should not be in too much of a hurry about the matter if he does not know the cost of the work. I am informed that there is a question as to whether Pointe au Pere would not be a better place, and I would like to know if the Minister has taken that into considera-

Mr. OUIMET. That is an old sore in the department. It has been pressed upon our attention for a long time by the people who live there and by the pilots, but it was found that the large shipping companies

The work, no doubt, would be useful to allow the pilots to land in stormy weather. but it would require an expenditure of nearly a million dollars to do it properly. Even if I had the inclination, I am sure the Minister of Finance would not allow me to go into that heavy expenditure now. I can assure the hon, gentleman that I will proceed very cautiously in this matter, as in everything else.

Mr. TARTE. I am afraid that if we have a general election, the Minister will be carried away from the safe course he announces. I have in L'Islet a wharf which could be lengthened for a very small sum of money.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be dangerous to elections.

Mr. TARTE. The Minister tried it before. but they were not successful. I again ask the Minister to give a little attention to the wharf at L'Islet.

Mr. OUIMET. If I were to do it before the elections, you would charge me with bribery, and I must avoid that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister has ter has told us that this work, for which he asks $8,000, will cost upwards of $100,-I wish to call the attention of the 000. House to a practice which has grown up here of recent years, but which is wholly unknown in the United Kingdom, and that is, of asking a certain appropriation for public works without first solemnly laying before the House the cost of the undertaking as a whole, and informing the House of the nature of the work for which an appropriation to a limited extent is asked in the Estimates. We have over and over Mr. OUIMET. I think we have given you again been committed surreptitiously-I am not speaking of this department particularly, but I would instance the industrial schools in the North-west and British Columbia-to a charge that is not a yearly charge, but a permanent charge for all time. I say that we should follow the English rule, which is the only proper rule in cases of this sort, and that the House ought to be fully informed as to the total amount of the cost for which a partial sum is asked. The House will see how very important it is that a small sum ought not to be asked for a work that implies a large expenditure, without fully informing the House as to the amount of that expenditure and the character of the work.

> Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Mills) ought to know that last year when this vote was first asked, all the information he refers to was duly given. I gave the estimated cost of the whole work, the object for which the vote was asked, and the benefit that was expected to come from the The only thing asked last undertaking. year was to allow the department to have at its disposal this small sum of $10,000, but at the same time asking confidence in the department to entrust them with the expenditure of the whole amount, if the department saw the necessity for it. The hon. gentleman cannot charge me with not giving the House full information on the subject. Perhaps if there is anything that can be charged against me, it is that I am too candid, and give too much information, for which hon, gentlemen opposite are not willing to give me credit.

Mr. TARTE. Am I to understand that the Minister will not begin the work at Rimouski Wharf without knowing the entire cost and without asking for tenders?

Mr. OUIMET. The only way to ascertain the cost of a work is first to have the plans and estimates made by the engineer. That has been done. The more practical way of ascertaining the cost would be to advertise for tenders, and I have said that everything will be ready for that in a short time, if it is not ready now. I am not expected by the hon. gentleman to call for tenders and award the contract before I am authorized to do so by the House. The only thing left for me to do now is to have an estimate prepared, and have the matter laid before the House, according to the information I have received from my engineers, and that is what I have done.

Would the hon. Minister Mr. TARTE. kindly tell me who is to be the resident engineer for all the works in Rimouski county?

Mr. OUIMET. Breen is the resident engineer in charge of that district down to the Magdalen Islands.

Mr. TARTE. Is it not a fact that last year J. C. Tache was sent down there as one of the engineers?

Mr. OUIMET. Two years ago Mr. Tache was detailed to take charge of the repairs to the wharf at Rimouski, and also the repairs at Matane. Breen was occupied somewhere else in the meantime.

Mr. TARTE. Is he going to be sent this year?

Mr. OUIMET. No. Mr. Tache was detailed two months ago to look after the some information about this item of $8,000 work at Ste. Anne de la Parade. He has not yet returned. I do not know where his services will be required this year, but he will not be sent electioneering. We do not depend very much on the works of these department? engineers in that respect.

Mr. BRYSON. On the 20th of July, last year, as will be found at page 6,508 of "Hansard," I brought to the attention of the Minister the claims of some farmers for damages caused by the construction of a dam at Grand Falls at the head of the Coulonge River Slide. On that occasion the Minister said:

The report was received too late to bring the matter before Council, and will have to stand over for another year.

As I am disappointed in not seeing any provision in the Estimates for these land damages. I would like to ask the Minister if he will be able to take sufficient moneys from some of the amounts voted for the province of Quebec, to pay these farmers? The matter has been standing for five years, and it is of importance to these farmers, and I would ask the Minister to give it his earnest and careful consideration.

Mr. OUIMET. I am informed by my engineer that this item, which was in the Estimates as they were prepared for Council, has been omitted somewhere, either in my department or in the Finance Department.

Mr FOSTER. Certainly not in the Finance Department.

Mr. OUIMET. It is unfortunate that these people should be deprived of what is due to them, which is a small amount; but I am sure that I would be hauled up before the Public Accounts Committee by the Auditor General if I should try, even for the sake of doing justice to his friends, to take the amount from any other appropria-I do not see how it could be done.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman should not complain if he is hauled up before the Public Accounts Committee, if he has not the amount voted by the House, and takes it from another item. That is a very curious proposition.

Mr. OUIMET. How dear is the Auditor General to hon. gentlemen opposite. I have just said it could not be done, and the Auditor General would not allow it.

Mr. BRYSON. If the Government will send an arbitrator to the farmers and have the amount fixed which these people are to receive, so that next session we shall know exactly how much is required, some progress will be made.

Mr. OUIMET. That will be done.

I would like to have Mr. LAVERGNE. for the tidal basin at Rimouski. Are we to understand that it is to be applied in part payment of the contract for that tidal basin, or for preliminary works to be done by the

Mr. OUIMET. There is no preliminary work concerned in it. The preliminary work is done by the officers of the department, and they are paid with the salaries they receive.

Mr. OUIMET.

Mr. LAVERGNE. That is not an answer to my question. Is this to be applied in part payment of the contract?

Mr. OUIMET. If the contract is entered into and the work proceeded with, this money will be paid out as the work proceeds.

Mr. LAVERGNE. If not, it will not be used?

Mr. OUIMET. If not, it will remain in the coffers of our esteemed Finance Minister.

Mr. BRODEUR. I notice that $5,000 is voted for guide piers for the Beloeil Channel in the river Richelieu. Has a contract been given for this work?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. To whom has the contract been awarded?

Mr. OUIMET. To Mignault & Belanger. They have signed the contract, and the work is going on.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. OUIMET. Three thousand, eight hundred dollars.

Mr. BRODEUR. For what reason is $5,000 asked for ?

Mr. OUIMET. The contract only covers crib-work, and the balance will be employed in dredging and some other additional work that will be necessary to accomplish the object in view, that is, to facilitate the passage of boats through the channel.

Mr. BRODEUR. Was only one tender received?

Mr. OUIMET. Several tenders.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that the work has not been begun yet?

Mr OUIMET. The contract is signed, and the contractors are making their preparations.

Mr. BRODEUR. When are they obliged to finish their contract?

Mr. OUIMET. At the end of November.

Harbours and Rivers, Ontario...... $105,350

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to know what exactly has been done, including the regulating of the water of Lake Simcoe and Couchiching. I see that the hongentleman got some money last year as well as this.

Mr. OUIMET. The trouble with that outlet of the lake is that it is too small in the spring freshets, and the work to be done is to increase that outlet without making it deeper. It is just to enable a larger amount of water to go through the outlet when the water is high. What I mean is that the lottom of that outlet will remain as it is, so as in the summer time to leave the waters of the lake at the same height as now. That work has been done to prevent a second flooding of the surrounding countries in June after seeding time, and also to improve the lake for navigation.

Mr. MULOCK. Has the hon, gentleman already taken any steps to carry out this work?

Mr. OUIMET. Tenders have been called by public advertisement, and the contract passed, and the contractor has received instructions to go on with the work.

Mr. MULOCK. A vote was in last year's Estimates. Why was the work not proceeded with last year?

Mr. OUIMET. Because the plans were not completed and also because there were some difficulties raised as to jurisdiction. Complaints were also made that the result of these improvements would be to injure some people who had water powers in the vicinity, and this had to be inquired into before undertaking a work which might involve future litigation. It has been ascertained that no injury will follow to anyone, but that, on the other hand, it will be a benefit to the whole surrounding district, which is a farming district of very great importance.

Mr. MULOCK. I am quite familiar with the locus in quo and I know that the regulating of the waters is of public interest. I am not objecting, but quite the contrary, because I have more than once pressed upon the Government the necessity of having this matter attended to. Has the hon, gentleman made any arrangements with the owners of any of these privileges?

Mr. OUIMET. No, there are none to be made because we have found the representations of the people baseless, and are pretty sure that the improvement will be injurious to nobody.

Mr. MULOCK. Then no part of the grant goes to anybody for any water privileges at the outset?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. MULOCK. It all goes towards regulating the waters?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. What are the details of the plan for regulating the waters.

Mr. MULOCK. What are the arrangements made, if any, for keeping the water back?

Mr. OUIMET. It cannot be lower than it is now because the outlet is going to be widened and not deepened, so that the discharge of the lake at low water will not be larger than it is to-day.

Mr. MULOCK. Supposing after this contract is carried out and the widening has the effect of lowering the level so as to interfere with navigation, then it will be somewhat late.

Mr. OUIMET. It will not interfere with navigation.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the hon, Minister is not familiar with the geography of the neighbourhood.

Mr. OUIMET. My engineer is.

Mr. MULOCK. There is a narrow connection between Lake Simcoe and Lake Couchiching. If you lower the level too much, it will interfere with navigation.

Mr. OUIMET. If the hon, gentleman will look at the rough sketch I have sent him, he will see how the work is to be done. He will see that the channel is not to be deepened, and when the water reaches its ordinary level the discharge will not be greater. It is only while the water is very high that the discharge will be greater.

Mr. MULOCK. Have the levels of all the outlets been taken?

Mr. OUIMET. Four outlets have been surveyed, but the improved work will only be made in two of them.

Mr. MULOCK, I call the hon, gentleman's attention to a point of great import-While it is important that the water be regulated so that it will not be too high and flood back on the adjoining lands, it is also important for many reasons that the level should not fall too low. If your scheme lowers the waters, without any provision for retaining the waters after the principal spring freshets are over, it may happen that you will be disappointed in this scheme and find the communication between the two lakes absolutely interrupted for a certain season of the year. theory is well enough, but the practical effect may be if you lower the water down to a certain level and there is not sufficient supply to the lakes for the remainder of the season, to make up the loss by evaporation and overflow, navigation between the two lakes may be interfered with, and vessels will not be able to approach the harbours around the lakes. That is a danger you around the lakes. have to guard against.

Mr. OUIMET. My engineer tells me that clearing the river ought to have been undertaken that has been taken into the calculations.

Mr. OUIMET.

This contract for clearing the river ought to have been undertaken two years ago. The cost of the work

Mr. MULOCK. Did the hon. Minister advertise for tenders, and who has the contract?

Mr. OUIMET. The contractors are Wurtele & Co. We did advertise for tenders.

Mr. MULOCK. In what papers?

Mr. OUIMET. In the papers in Ottawa, Parrie, Toronto and other places. The only charge that can be made against us in that connection is that we advertise too much.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a matter which I first urged upon his consideration two years ago—the removal of the obstructions that are accumulating to the interruption of navigation in the river Sydenham. And we informed him publicly, as well as by letter, this work should be done that season. Last year I called his attention to the subject again, and the assurance was given by himself and Minister of Marine and Fisheries—

Mr. OUIMET. Not by me.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell)-that one or the other would do the work, whichever found that it was within his jurisdiction. Now, there is no special appropriation for this work in this vote. I call the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns for the last thirty years, the amount of shipping leaving the river Sydenham every year is larger than that of any port in the Dominion, except the port of Montreal. The hon. Minister has an appropriation for dredging Port Dover harbour, $15,000. The amount of shipping visiting Port Dover harbour for a whole year, I will venture to say, is not as enters as the river Sydenham the port fortnight. From Dresden, the upper port on the East Sydenham, a steamer runs daily-or did run as long as navigation was possible—to Sarnia; and there is also a daily boat from that port to Detroit. I call the hon, gentleman's attention to the subject again, and I ask him and the Minister of Marine and Fish-eries, who is here, which of them proposes to undertake this matter during the current year. When the water is high large trees, branches and all, that have fallen into the river, float down stream until they become saturated and sink, or they are sunk by the earth that adhere to their roots. Though the river is deep it is, in many places narrow, and these sunken trees are a serious obstacle to navigation. There are also sunken logs; and sometimes steamer owners complain of the wheels of their vessels being broken, and there is danger of more serious disaster by the vessels being pierced by the logs that remain in the water. This contract for clearing the river ought to have been under-will be comparatively little. I think that all these obstructions were removed some years ago by dredges; and, no doubt, the same thing could be done now. Both branches of the Sydenham, both north and east, ought to have obstructions removed. The lumbering operations carried on on the river are very large, and the traffic very considerable. I think the Minister ought not to permit the third year to go by without having this matter attended to. There are a large number of items very much in excess of what would be required for the work I mention, for works which in public utility and public importance would bear no comparison with this that I ask the Government to undertake in the public interest.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No. Mr. Chairman; I want to know what the Minister proposes to do in the matter. I think I am entitled to an answer, especially after the pledges that have been made.

Mr. OUIMET. So far as I am concerned. the hon, gentleman knows that I agree with him that we should look into the matter and see that the obstructions in the river Sydenham should be removed. After looking into the matter. I discovered that it was outside the jurisdiction of our department, and it was more within the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The hon, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I think, took some steps towards the redemption of the promise that I had made; and from what I could ascertain at the time. I believe that the obstructions were not considered of a sufficient character to justify the expenditure, and for some other reasons, we did not spend what was necessary for the work at that time. I will promise the hon, gentleman that I will direct my officers to again confer with the Department of Marine and Fisheries in order to come to some understanding; and to ascertain again the extent of the work necessary to be done and also the means to be taken in order to do it. If the work can be done at all it could be done. I think, out of the general appropriation for dredging, and probably the two departments will come to an understanding, and, if our engineers report that the work is necessary, we shall have to see that it is done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to a promise made by him a short time ago to a deputation who waited on them from the town of Chatham, with reference to a bar at the mouth of the river Thames. The hon. Minister kindly promised them that steps should be taken to remove the bar, which is one of the greatest impediments to the navigation of the river. But I am sorry to say the matter seems to have escaped the hon. Minister's attention, and nothing has been done as yet. I would like to know from the hon. Minister, while we are on that vote, when we may expect work to be commenced, and whether any contract has been let as the hon. Minister promised?

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman knows that in consequence of the continual receding of the water in the lakes. the dredging work to be done in all these harbours is very considerable. I should say more considerable than our plant will enable us to make, while the amount placed at our disposal by Parliament is not sufficient to meet all demands. It is a very serious question whether this Government will have to undertake the very large expenditure that will be required if the level of the lakes continues to lower. I am inclined to think that this country could not undertake to keep all its harbours at the depth that is required to meet the requirements of navigation. I must say also that, as a rule, the business done and the traffic at all these ports, have been greatly reduced since they have had communications with the large railway lines. All these things have to be carefully considered, and the department will have to decide very soon whether a larger amount will not have to be placed at the disposal of the department to keep up these harbours, or whether we shall let them shift for themselves. It is hoped that the level of the water in the lakes will again rise in course of time. Engineers and those who have experience in the matter, say that the level of these lakes has been gradually lowering for seven or eight years, and after that they say the water will rise for an equal number of years. I do not know if that theory is correct, but we are keeping a record, and in a few years we will be better able to say. At all events, as regards the harbour referred to by my hon. friend, if a promise was made that the work will be done, it will certainly be fulfilled. The dredges at our disposal have done the work that has been promised, and the harbour in question will receive its due share of attention, although I am afraid that on the eve of a general election I shall be charged with attempting to bribe the electors of the hon, gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am glad to have that promise of the hon. Minister, because the matter is a very important one, as was pointed out to him at the time. For about twenty-five miles from the entrance on that river there are eighteen to twenty feet of water. It serves a large section of the country between the city of Chatham, and other portions of the territory. Now, right at the mouth of that river, there is a bar where there was only seven feet of water this summer.

Mr. OUIMET. It forms every spring.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not every spring. The department dredged out the channel there. I think, two or three years ago. Now, all the people want is a small appropriation, part of the canal mentioned, and feel sure if probably $2,000, to dredge a channel through in the meantime. We hope and believe that the level of the lakes will gradually rise, the level of the lakes will gradually rise, and if this amount is expended now, there will be no further sum required probably for a good many years. This was all pointed out to the Minister some three or four weeks ago. As I stated, it is a matter of great importance to the people of that part of the country, and I think, under the circumstances, they are entitled to this work. this is such a small amount to ask for that removed, which could be done at very little I think the Government ought to grant it. I think one of the Government dredges is not far from that neighbourhood, and it would only be a matter of a week or two at most for the dredge to go in there and cut a passage through, making the water ten feet deep, and thus accommodate the vessels that require to pass through. I cannot press this matter too strongly upon the attention of the Minister, and I certainly hope that he will take it into his serious consideration, and that before the season of navigation passes by, some steps will be taken to relieve the people of that part of the province. I would like to ask him how soon does he think a dredge will be available to do that work.

Mr. OUIMET. I expect about the end or July.

Mr. TAYLOR. In this vote that is now being taken, I see an item for improvements or dredging in Kingston harbour. I may say that I have received several letters in reference to that portion of the harbour lying north of Kingston bridge, and the mouth of the Rideau Canal. I made application to the Minister of Public Works, and he stated that that portion of the river belonged to the Department of Railways and Canals. I applied then to the Minister of the latter department, and I got the reply from him that it belonged to the Kingston harbour. Now, I am just in receipt of a letter to-night which I wish to read, and I ask the Minister of Public Works to consult with the Minister of Railways and decide which department will attend to this matter, for I think it is one of great importance. I will read the letter:

Bedford Mills, 26th June, 1895.

Dear Sir-Last week we went to Kingston on the steamer "James Swift," and were surprised to see how low the water was below Kingston Mills. The steamer got stuck in that part known as the Basket, and dragged in many parts through the flats. If there is not something done with this part of the channel very soon, we fear it will be the cause of stopping navigation on Kingston and Rideau Canal. So far this season we have been freighting Ottawa and Montreal way, and expect to commence now freighting Kingston way. We find trade very dull, and if we have to contend with bad navigation,

Yours truly,

J. P. TETT & BRO.

Those gentlemen are shippers of lumber, and have their mills at Bedford. They have been shipping to Montreal and Ottawa, and now, as they say, they want to ship to Kingston. I have received a complaint from the captain of a steamer that there are They are not getting anything, so far, and some boulders and some sand bars to be expense. I hope that whatever department has charge of the work, they will see that it receives prompt attention; if not, it will necessitate the stoppage of freighting over the Rideau Canal to Kingston.

> Mr. MULOCK. What are the terms of the contract for the work in the harbour at Toronto? By the Auditor General's Report of last year $63,000 was paid to Murray & Cleveland at the eastern gap. Can the Minister state the terms of the contract, how far it has been performed, and how much yet remains to be performed?

> Mr. OUIMET. The contract was given to Cleveland & Murray, and it is being carried out on a schedule of prices, of which I will send the hon, gentleman a copy. We are building a double row of jetties in order to preserve a channel in the eastern part of the harbour and secure for it a depth of fifteen to sixteen feet. The jetties are built of large and heavy crib-work, after dredging has been done, and the cribs are filled with stone. It is very important work, and is being very well carried out. It forms a magnificent and solid structure that will last for years and be of immense benefit to the harbour of Toronto. It is expected the whole work will be completed, so far as it is now proposed, during the fiscal year.

> Mr. MACLEAN (York). This work is justifying its construction every day. It has reduced the time of the boats going across the lake to Niagara, and what is still more satisfactory, it is preserving the island, which is one of the best assets that Toronto possesses. The sand is piling up against the breakwater, and is thereby saving the island, and every day we can see that the land is increasing.

> Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister will send me a copy of the specifications and schedule prices connected with the work, I will accept that in lieu of the explanation to-night.

> Mr. McMILLAN. Is it the intention of the Government to send the dredge to work at Bayfield harbour during the present summer?

Mr. OUIMET. I am sorry to say that I have not at my disposal the necessary money it will be a regular calamity in our trade. Hope you will succeed in getting government to put the Rideau Canal dredge on the to make advantageous the dredging suggested by the hon, gentleman. The first thing tion of the improvement of the Fraser River to do would be to pepair or rebuild the breakwater in order to prevent the continuous filling up of the harbour, which I must say is one of very great importance. As soon as we get rid of more important works we will look to it.

AND THE RESIDENCE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPE

Mr. McMILLAN. That harbour was built largely by moneys contributed by the residents there. A large number of fishermen to keep the river from overflowing, but are engaged there. Had these works been only as regards keeping the river in its proposerly cared for, the present condition per channel?

would not have ensued, but the work was Mr. OUIMET. Yes. never properly carried out. When a storm occurs the fishermen cannot put into the harbour, but must go to Goderich or some other port. I hope the Minister will take the matter into his consideration.

British Columbia-Fraser River-Improve-

Mr. CORBOULD. I am sorry to see the item for the improvement of the Fraser River has been dropped to the sum of $10,000. At no time in the history of British Columbia has it been more necessary for an expendi-ture to be made on the Fraser River than for by the local government in order to at the present time. The committee will ascertain what means should be taken remember that last year the valley of the Fraser was visited by a flood which did immense damage. At that time the leader of the Government, Sir John Thompson, announced that the Pominion Government were entering into a joint scheme with the provincial government to carry on extensive works of improvement on that river. Last year a survey of the Fraser was commenced. The small amount of $5,000 was placed in the Estimates, and the work was proceeded with. But this year I see that no sum is to be voted for continuing the survey of the Fraser. I should like to ask the Minister whether it is the intention of the Government to drop the survey or continue it.

Mr. OUIMET. The survey of the Fraser River, as I am informed, is completed so far as it is necessary to ascertain what improvement works are to be carried out to secure uniformity of the channel, and to: prevent the erosion of the shores. But that belongs to the Dominion Government only so far as it may interfere by changes of the channel, with navigation. We are not bound to do the work of protecting individual property, but we are bound to do work that is necessary to prevent the channel being altered continuously, as it is exposed to be altered every time the water becomes very high. That work is to be continued. The amount at our disposal is perhaps not so large as we would desire to see it, but I can assure the hon, gentleman it will be put to good use. The work already done has been very useful, and I hope that next year we will be able to spend a larger amount so as to increase the benefit that has followed the work done by the department in the direcnavigation.

Mr. CORBOULD. This $10,000 is only towards the improvement of the mouth of the river?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. CORBOULD. I can quite understand that the Dominion Government is not liable

Mr. CORBOULD. Therefore, the survey was made. Surely the Minister was mistaken in saying that the work is completed, because it is not half way down the river yet.

Mr. OUIMET. I am assured by my chief engineer that so far as we require information, the work of surveying done is sufficient. Surveys had been made before, and the work done last year was only to complete what was required. Probably the hon. prevent floods from taking place, as it did last year, and generally to prevent their recurrence and damage being done. has formed a subject of negotiation with the provincial government, and negotiations have not come to a termination yet; and I think when the negotiations are completed, we will be in a position to join with the local government in undertaking any survey and inquiry with the object I have stated, to ascertain if works can be devised to prevent the recurrence of these very unfortunate floods that occurred last year.

Mr. CORBOULD. The surveys have not been dropped?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. MARA., Last year Mr. Gamble resident engineer of the Public Works Department in British Columbia made an examination of the Columbia River, from Golden to Revelstoke, with a view of ascertaining the practicability and cost of making that part of the river navigable. Just above Revelstoke there is a small canyon which could be improved at slight cost. From there Death Rapids the navigation is tolerably easy, and from Death Rapids to Boat Encampment, a distance of 60 miles, it is easy navigation. Along the Canoe River, there is a large area of good agricultural land, which can be brought within easy communication of the mines of Kootenay Lake. I would like to know from the Minister if it is the intention of the Government to carry out the works mentioned in his report of last year?

Mr. OUIMET. The information referred to by the hon, gentleman has been sent to the department, and the necessity of mak- a trade. I hope that the Minister will take ing improvements in the navigation of the this into his consideration, and have that rivers indicated by him has been carefully looked into. On the other hand, information calamity to the whole province if the shipsteamboat was in contemplation now, and cost of insurance. the department, having such limited sources at their disposal this year, did not see fit to ask for an appropriation. soon as there are signs of steamboat communication being opened up. I am sure the works he has referred to will be undertaken and completed without delay.

Mr. MARA. Early this spring the Public Works Department conjointly with the provincial government did good and substantial work on the river banks at Revelstoke in preventing the erosion of the banks at that point. It is necessary that this work should be extended both above and below Revelstoke. Is it the intention of the Government to extend that work, provided the local government will co-operate?

Mr. OUIMET. Our intention is to comgovernment.

Mr. HASLAM. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the ling at Egmont Bay and Victoria West, fact that some time ago I presented a re- Prince County, and also at Cascumpec quest on behalf of the board of trade of harbour. I would particularly ask the Min-Nanaimo for some dredging to be done in ister to pay attention to Malpecque and Nanaimo harbour. Last year there has been an export of some $2.691.000 worth out of portance. that harbour, and three vessels have touched bottom in the south channel, although in Cardigan, and as soon as the work there is each instance the vessels were drawing less; water than the admiralty chart shows should have been there. The channel is gradually filling up with silt from the river, so that to-day the buoys marking it are over 200 feet north of where they were a few years ago. In view of the very large amount of shipping in that harbour and the close competition there is now in the export trade, very serious damage may be done to the whole of British Columbia if there is any neglect in doing the dredging necessary to keep the channel in good order. are two channels to the harbour, but large? vessels cannot very well come out at the: north channel. It is more convenient to: come in at the north channel and go out at the south channel. The class of vessels are gradually getting larger, so that to-day it is easier to get vessels carrying 3,500 or 4,000 tons than it was to get vessels of 2.500 tons a few years ago. These two circumstances together make it possible that in a very short time, the chances are, vessels will have to increase their rate of insurance. If the rate of insurance and the charges are increased it will be very damaging to the trade, because they have to compete very trade, because they have to compete very Mr. OUIMET. Mr. YEO. Where is it intended to employ the Prince Edward Island during the present season? I would remind the Minister of the necessity of dredging being done in the channel leading to Kier's wharf. This wharf is being repaired and extended now, but before it can be made a good shipping place it is necessary that the channel should be straightened and deepened. I know that application has also been made to the department for dredging plete that work conjointly with the local at Summerside, and I hope that during the present season a dredge will be sent there. I may also remind the Minister that his department has been petitioned for dredg-Summerside which are places of great im-

> Mr. WILMOT. In reference to the dredging done on the St. John River, that work is in charge of Mr. Shewan, the resident engineer; and last year I pointed out that inasmuch as this gentleman was a stranger there, unacquainted with the river, I considered that it would be desirable, in the interest of navigation, that he should have the advice of some person who is acquainted with it. A very important work is being carried on at present on the Oromocto shoals, and the engineer is not carrying it on in accordance with the views of persons who are best acquainted with the navigation of the river, such as the captains of vessels. I should like to remind the Minister of my communication to the department in reference to this matter, and I would ask if it is his intention to have some one to consult with the engineer in regard to the work.

and I am satisfied that he will go and see cents additional very often makes or breaks the place, and get a competent engineer to confer with Mr. Shewan and himself, and see what is the best means of carrying on the work. I must say, at the same time, that Mr. Shewan's reputation for ability and earnestness in his work is one of the best in the department, and I am quite surprised to hear that he is open to the charge of making mistakes in the work he is doing. At all events, the matter will be inquired into.

Mr. FORBES. I have a stock question which I have asked for the last four years: When are we going to have the dredge ready for operation on the south shore of Nova Scotia? The original dredge which we had there has been lost for a number There is one in operation in of years. Prince Edward Island, and we cannot get the use of that for even a portion of the There is work enough there to keep a dredge in operation for several seasons. and I think the least the Minister could do would be to send us for a part of the season a dredge from another part of the conntry. In my county alone, there are three places that require the use of a dredge, and the operations of commerce are impeded very seriously for the want of one. It is nearly twenty years since we have had any dredging in the harbour of Liverpool, which is obstructed by a bar. A year and a half ago, the hon, gentleman's own engineer reported on the condition of that harbour. and one of his own colleagues, at the request of some of his friends in the Cabinet on my question, made an application for a small vote of $3,500 to improve it, if not completely, at any rate, partially; and I would like to know why that amount is not in the Estimates, and if there is any hope of it being voted at the present session? The hon. Minister is also aware that there is a bar at Coffin's island which is a serious impedient to navigation. In stormy weather, if the fishermen are caught outside of the harbour, this bar, being directly across the mouth, are unable to enter. Several lives have been lost here, though I do not attribute this entirely to the want of dredging; but if the bar were properly dredged, a great deal would be done to facilitate the operations of the fishermen, and to render their lives and property more safe. I have spoken of the bar further west at Port Mouton, where the pier has been lately repaired by the Government; but that cannot take the place of the dredging. I am sorry that the vote has been reduced this year by $10,000. Might I ask the Minister why that is done. and also if the whole appropriation of $40.-000 last year was expended?

Mr. OUIMET. The vote of last year was totally expended. The hon, gentleman may draw his own conclusions as to whether $30,000 will enable us to carry on operations during the next fiscal year. As to the new dredge. I am assured that it will be completed in the month of September, but I am very much afraid that the lateness of of navigation.

the season will make it rather risky to send it down the gulf this year. It will certainly be there at the commencement of next season, and ready to do good at all the places which the hon, gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. YEO. Has the Minister any idea when the dredging will be completed at Cardigan and at Souris, and also to what part of the north side of Prince Edward Island it is intended to send the dredge?

Mr. OUIMET. I am told that it will take three weeks to complete the work at Cardigan, and three weeks at Souris. After that the dredge will go to the north side.

Mr. YEO. To what part of the north side?

Mr. OUIMET. Every harbour where work is urgent and useful.

Mr. YEO. There are different harbours on the north side, but I would ask attention particularly to the one I have named.

Mr. TARTE. What does the hon, gentleman intend to do with the sum of $25,000?

Mr. OUIMET. We are now building an elevator dredge. We have four elevator dredges. One has been sent to the Kaministiquia. Another has been dismantled, and with the machinery we have mounted a new dredge which is now working at Barre à Boulard. Lotbinière, and another is working at Contrecoeur. We are now working at another elevator dredge, and we expect that dredge No. 11 will be too old after the work of this season, and will take out its machinery and place it in a new dredge. Each dredge has a tug to accompany it.

Mr. TARTE. Where will that tug be built?

Mr. OUIMET. At Sorel.

Mr. TARTE. What amount out of the $30,000 for Ontario and Quebec is to be expended in Quebec?

Mr. OUIMET. It will be divided between the two provinces as equally as possible, so as to meet the urgent requirements of both.

Mr. TARTE. Where is the share for Quebec to be spent?

Mr. OUIMET. We are doing some work just now on Lake St. Louis, and we are going to work at Laprairie, to dredge the canal for the steamers. Last year the regular line of steamers was stopped on account of the channel not being deep enough. We have been doing some work at Louiseville at the mouth of the river, in order to enable the boats to get in. There is a pretty large traffic being done there. At Nicolet we are also doing some work. We may do work at L'Assomption and various other places, where it is necessary for the improvement of navigation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has the hon, gentleman estimated a certain sum for certain places, or is it a mere guess?

Mr. OUIMET. This is an annual vote. We know pretty well what our own dredges can spend and this is to meet that expenditure. Every spring we have a programme. We take all the demands made and the reports sent to the department, and we do what is most pressing and useful.

Mr. TARTE. The hon, gentleman buys a great deal in Sorel. I would like to know under what system he buys?

Mr. OUIMET. We buy in the open market. Whenever supplies of some magnitude are required, we buy by tender, but as a rule they are not advertised for. We send round invitations to the most important merchants to send in their prices. We have a superintendent there who requisitions the department every time he wants something.

Mr. TARTE. What is the amount your officer is authorized to buy without reference to your department?

Mr. OUIMET. Nothing at all. He has: to refer every time. The whole control is at the head office.

Mr. TARTE. Will the hon, gentleman tell

Mr. OUIMET. Mr. Dorais, under Superintendent Houghton.

Mr. TARTE. Is any part of this to be spent on the slide at Alma, in Chicoutimi and Saguenay?

Mr. OUIMET. No. $5,000 is to be mainly expended on the St. Maurice work. requisitions in that direction to the department have been greatly increased. The timber taken down the St. Maurice will certainly be double this year of what it has been, and the revenue will be more than doubled. The expenditure has been kept down as much as possible.

Mr. TARTE. Does the hon. Minister say that the slide at Alma is to be abandoned?

Mr. OUIMET. I think it will.

Mr. TARTE. I have heard a great deal of complaint about it. I have in my hand a letter in which pretty hard things are said, whether true or not, I do not know, I am told that a large sum was spent there, and that slide is of no use.

Mr. OUIMET. It was largely used while timber was made in that region, but last year no timber went through the slides, and the question now under examination is whether we should abandon that work altogether, and I think we will.

Mr. TARTE. Who is in charge of that slide?

Mr. OUIMET.

Mr. OUIMET. A man of the name of Boulanger.

Mr. TARTE. How much is he paid per year?

Mr. OUIMET. Something like $300.

Mr. TARTE. I call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that that man Boulanger with his sons, I am told, monopolized the whole amount of money that was spent there.

Mr. SPEAKER. Mr. Chairman, I observe that in this vote there does not seem to be any sum asked for for repairs to the bridge at Des Joachims. In connection with that I would draw the attention of the committee to the report made by the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, dated 30th June, 1894. He says:

The Des Joachims bridge is an interprovincial bridge crossing the River Ottawa, and was completed by the department in 1884-85. Towards its construction the provinces of Quebec and Ontario contributed $4,000 each. * * * It is in such a dangerous condition, that, in January, 1894, it was condemned and closed against traffic.

If my information is correct, the total cost of the bridge was about $40,000, $8,000 of which as stated in the report, was conus who is the officer in Sorel who makes the tributed by the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and the balance, about $32,000 by the Dominion. The work, as stated here, is in a very dangerous condition, so dangerous that parties have been notified not to use the bridge. Now, in the Supplementary Estimates of last year the sum of $1,250 was voted for the repairs, and an equal sum. I understand, was contributed by the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. But no part of the $2.500 was expended, for the reason, as I underand Quebec. stand, that the sum would not be sufficient to make the substantial repairs that are required to the superstructure of the bridge. The information I have in regard to it is that the substructure is in a very good condition, but that it would require some $10,-000, or perhaps a little more to put the superstructure in a state of complete repair. seems to me that it is doubtful economy to allow a work of that character which has cost the public so much money to be abandoned and go into a state of disrepair where so small a sum as that stated by me. part which would doubtless be contributed by the provinces, would be required to put the superstructure into a condition of repair. I may state that this work is of the greatest possible necessity to the lumbermen who are operating on the north shore of the Ottawa. I would like to know from the hon. Minister whether it is intended to abandon the work altogether, or to ask money at some future time to put it in a state of repair?

> Mr. OUIMET. As the hon. Speaker has stated, the amount necessary was too large to allow of any repairs effectually being made out of the limited vote at our dis-There is no danger that bridge should be carried away by water, and we can wait for another year without endangering the substructure of the work. During the year, negotiations will be opened with the local governments to ascertain whether they will be willing to pay their! share of the repairs, and if successful, I would recommend to the Government to place at the disposal of the department the amount necessary for the work.

Mr. LAURIER. As to the bridge at Edmonton. Has the site been selected yet?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Which site is it.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman knows where the old ferry is. There is now a ferry a little below at the bend of the river. That is the place.

Mr. LAURIER. There are two ferries.

Mr. OUIMET. I think there are three now. There were two when I was there. The site selected is opposite what we used to call, at the time, the Ross Hotel.

Mr. LAURIER. Is not that below the town as it exists to-day?

Mr. OUIMET. No: it is the site which has been selected by the town itself.

Mr. TARTE. Who is the resident engineer for the work?

Mr. OUIMET. Gouin and St. Laurent prepare the surveys and plans. They are stationed at Winnipeg, and have charge of the works of the department in Manitoba and the North-west.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would call the attention of the Minister to the bridge across the Burlington Canal. I notice that $5,000, which is a re-vote, is placed in the Estimates for this purpose. I trust the Minister will be able to give us some assurance that this work will be prosecuted during the coming season. I need not press upon him the great necessity of completing this bridge at the earliest moment, because I am sure he is aware of the nature of the present means of communication across this canal. means of crossing the channel at present is an old-fashioned scow, which has been in use a great many years. A great deal of travel crosses the canal here, for this is one of the leading roads into Hamilton from the north. Besides, a village has grown up on the beach extending a considerable distance on either side. I would ask the hon. Minister if he is able to say that the work will be proceeded with this summer, and if he thinks it will be ready for the superstructure in the winter season?

Mr. OUIMET. The work is going to be proceeded with. The hon. gentleman is perhaps aware of the obstacles we met with on advertising for tenders. The Hamilton people protested, and those owning property adjoining the bridge objected that the swing bridge would interfere with their buildings. Then the question came up whether it would not be better instead of a swing bridge to have a drawbridge. Investiwere made, plans were mitted by interested parties, especially by these people who expected that a drawbridge could be drawn on the road, and would not interfere with the buildings adjoining. But this plan had to be set aside again. The masonry for the pier has been advertised for, and in due time a contract will be passed, and probably the bridge will be ready next year.

Mr. TARTE. Has the Minister any report?

Mr. OUIMET. The vote is merely to keep the road in order. The hon, gentleman knows there is no regular road there, and our own linemen have to travel long distances. The amount is just to keep the road in suitable order to enable the line repairers to go along the line as necessity requires. This vote is certainly necessary.

Telegraph lines, British Columbia...... $4,500

Mr. MARA. As the Minister of Public Works is aware, I applied for an appropriation to construct a telegraph line from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Nicola, a distance of forty miles. The Nicola Valley is known as a thriving settlement, and the settlers think the time has arrived when they should be put in telegraphic communication with the outside world. I may say that I believe the provincial government would contribute one-half the sum if the Dominion Government would pay the other half.

Mr. OUIMET. I am not aware of such an arrangement. But it is the policy of the Government to have these various places, which are becoming more important every day, provided with proper telegraphic communication, that is, until such time as the regular telegraph companies can take hold of it themselves. I think they have been very useful in the past, and if there is any need of undertaking the construction of that line, the Government will do so. Before leaving this subject of public works, I may say that I was asked the other day as to whether Mr. Hamel had received any pay after he was discharged. I made inquiry, and I am in a position to say that he has not been paid one cent since.

Mr. TARTE. Has he been discharged altogether?

Mr. OUIMET. He has been discharged. His services have been dispensed with.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask a question of the Minister with regard to the Picton post office. My hon, friend from Queen's, P.E.I (Mr. Davies), was to ask the question. I was out and he also happened to be out at the time. I received a communication from Picton on the subject, asking for information. The item was passed a little while ago, but if the Minister would allow me, I would like to ask if that work has been let.

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. MULOCK. My correspondent tells me that the land was bought some time ago, and that it is revenue-producing, and he desires to know who is getting the revenue of this property.

Mr. OUIMET. The department.

Mr. MULOCK. When is this work to be proceeded with?

Mr. OUIMET. I could not exactly say. Tenders have not been asked for.

Mr. MULOCK. Is it intended to proceed with it this year?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The item is passed and cannot be discussed. I raise to a point of order.

Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister of Public Works does not wish to say anything further about the item, there will be another way by which I can get at this information, no doubt. I am told that a large portion of the revenue derived from this property—

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman is talking of an item that has already been passed.

Mr. MULOCK. I ask the Minister of Public Works. If he chooses to answer, well and good.

Mr. OUIMET. I will give the information as soon as I can get it. I do not know myself now.

Mr. MULOCK. The information I want to get is this: the property was bought I am told some years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. I object to this as being out of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Denison). It is out of order.

Mr. OUIMET. Perhaps the hon. gentleman might have a talk with me to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and the committee rose.

ADJOURNMENT—THE PICTON POST OFFICE.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. OUIMET.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire to suggest to the Minister of Public Works an item upon which I should like to obtain some information, if he will give it at a future occasion. I allude to the property bought some years ago as a site for a post office at the town of Picton. I am told that for some time the revenue from that property has been collected and retained by the former vendor for his own benefit; that may or may not be correct, and I am sure the Minister will be very glad to remove any erroneous impression of that kind should it exist. That is one point. Another point on which I desire to obtain information is, as to whether the site bought is to be utilized for the purpose for which it was bought, that is for the purpose of a post office? I am obliged to the Minister of Public Works for his courtesy on a recent occasion on my expressing a willingness to receive information in the public interest, and here I recognize his courtesy, and I will further recognize it when he gives, as I am sure he will give, this information which I ask purely in the public interest.

and the first of the control of the

Mr. OUIMET. I will give the hon, gentleman the information.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon, gentleman bring down particulars as to the reformatory which is to be built, as to its cost and the plan he intends to pursue?

Mr. OUIMET. My department will have to confer with the Department of Justice in regard to what accommodation will be required, and other matters. When that is done, my officers will go to work and give the hon, gentleman very exact estimates as to what will be the cost. It will take a few days, but I will give the information.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. (Friday).

COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. WELDON moved:

That the quorum of the Select Standing Committee on Railways and Canals be reduced to 25 members for the remainder of the session.

Mr. EDGAR. No notice has been given. I object to it.

Mr. WELDON. If the hon, gentleman will look at the practice he will find that this motion does not require notice. I took the trouble to consult the text of Dr. Bourinot's work, and his ruling seems to be clear enough.

Mr. LAURIER. I think there were several precedents to the contrary in the session of 1891.

Mr. MULOCK. In 1891 a motion was attempted to be made by the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee in respect to matters that had gone through the House pro forma, and on the point being taken before the House on that occasion the Speaker declined to hear the motion under motions, and it had to go on the Order paper. On that occasion the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee had presented to the House the authority, if I remember rightly, of the Public Accounts Committee, recommending a certain course in regard to the examination of witnesses. The point was taken before the House that that motion could not be proceeded with in this informal way under the head of motions, and effect was given to that objec-The test was that where the motion was assented to as a matter of course and allowed to pass as a matter of course and was an informal motion not involving any discussion, it might fairly be allowed to come in at this stage as part of routine; but where it involved a substantial discussion, or was in itself material, in that case it could only come in and take its place as ary other notice of motion. This certainly is a proposition that may involve considerable discussion, because the object of the metion would have to be discussed—it would be proper to point out the object of the motion in discussing it—and it would involve a very exhaustive discussion upon perhaps collateral matters. We have had in short form a partial discussion of the matter involved, and two days and two nights have been spent by this House in discussing what I may term a mere branch of the matter involved, and it is still undetermined. So the subsequent discussion of this motion must take a wide range, and it is unfair that a ration involving consequences so extensive should be sprung upon the House without notice to the persons interested. Not only the rules of the House but a sense of justice show the necessity of rules being applied here. There must be a reason requiring notice of motion. The reason is obviously that interests affected may be considered, and that the House may not hastily commit itself to attitudes to which it should not commit itself. We cannot be too careful in proceeding gradually and carefully in dealing with a matter such as this. Here, without notice to anybody, a motion is made, of a general character it is true, but intended to deal with a particular interest. It is impossible to ignore what is behind this motion. There is a large issue at stake before a certain committee of this House, and that issue is one of far-reaching importance. and the object of this motion is that that issue may be disposed of in a certain way. Mr. Speaker, I submit there is nothing which the majority is more bound to respect than individual rights. If we ignore the right of property, and by any laxity allow property to be confiscated, to that extent-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. MULOCK. I will only finish the sentence.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not want even in spirit to evade the point of order. But we are unable to discuss this question without recognizing that it is making use of a general rule in order to deal with a particular matter, and interests are involved that will be affected in this particular by this procedure. I think the point of order is well taken by the hon, member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), and that this House is entitled to notice before this motion can be considered as now presented by a private member.

Mr. WELDON. I should like to read the authority, which I find in Dr. Bourinot's work, at page 744, as follows:—

When a committee cannot meet for want of a quorum—

As was the case this morning,

-the attention of the House may be called to the fact, and its interposition invoked. In such a case the House will order: That the committee be revived, and that leave be given to sit and proceed on a certain day. Or the House may order: That the committee have leave to sit and proceed with two or more members, in case there is no likelihood of a quorum. In the Legislative Assembly of Canada, 1863, a member complained to the House, that one of the standing committees had not met for some time, and would not assemble for several days to come, and requested that the House would order the committee to The Speaker said, with respect to this meet.

point: "The House could instruct the committee to meet, and it was not necessary that the member who desired the meeting, should give notice of a motion.

Practically that is the case to-day.

Mr. MULOCK. There has been no attempt to get a quorum.

Mr. EDGAR. I submit that there is no case of urgency shown. If we are going! into any matter that has not been shown before the House-

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not the point of order.

Mr. Speaker, no special Mr. EDGAR. facts can here be shown to ask an exception from the general rule, or else, if they are shown, they can be discussed. If they are to be stated by one hon, member they must be discussed and stated by another. So I propose to make the statement, that no special circumstance has been shown for an exception to the ordinary rule that notice must be given by notice of motion. The case cited from Dr. Bourinot does not apply. because it has not been shown that a quorum of the Railway Committee cannot be obtained. The Railway Committee was sitting for hours to-day.

There was no Some hon. MEMBERS. quorum.

Mr. EDGAR. After the committee had been sitting from 10 o'clock to 1 o'clock today, and when the members all got hungry, it was discovered that there was no quorum, and I am not surprised at that. But you cannot legislate for such a circumstance as that. You must give members of the Railway Committee a chance to get their lunch, and because there was no quorum, after sitting for three hours, that is not a special circumstance on which to ask this permission from the House.

I think I can show that Mr. TISDALE. urgency does exist and that it is necessary in this case to reduce the quorum.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to do what I can to assist you in a decision on this point of order. I do not pretend to know why my hon. friend has moved in the matter, but it seems to me the point of order is well taken. The general rule, of course, is as you will find at page 373 of Bourinot: No motion can be made without notice of it. There seems to be no exception to that general rule, or at all events, the representation that my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) brings to our notice does not appear to me to be the least in point. In the legislative assembly of Canada, 1863, a member complained to the House that one of the standing committees had not met for some time and would not meet for several days to come, and he requested that the House should order the committee to meet. What the Speaker then ruled was: North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). The case I that the House could instruct the committee to meet, and that it was not necessary for the member who desired the meeting to give notice of motion. But that is not the motion now before the House. This motion is to reduce the quorum of the committee. is not a motion directing that the committee should meet, or one that might be made without notice, because it is the duty of the committee to meet. Here the motion is to change a standing order of this House made in the earlier part of the session, which order fixed the quorum. To revoke or change a standing order without notice does appear to me to be quite outside our practice.

Mr. CHARLTON. In our standing orders we have reference to the matter of motions in paragraph 32:

A motion may be made by unanimous consent of the House without previous notice.

I apprehend that there is no other rule bearing upon the question and that notice of motion must be given unless there is the unanimous consent of the House to the con-

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). At page 502 of Dr. Bourinot's book I find the following:-

Under Rule 79 of the Commons, a majority of the members of a committee compose a quorum; but it is now usual, on the appointment of the standing committees, to fix it at a certain num-An exception, however, is ber immediately. made in the case of the committees on "Privi-leges and Elections" and on "Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines," the latter of which is composed of a very large number compared with others. Consequently, there must be a majority others. of the members of these committees present before either can proceed to business. Sometimes the chairman or other member of the select committee will move, that the House order a reduction in the number of the quorum, in case it is found difficult to obtain a large attendance of the members, or this may be done on the recom-mendation of the committee itself.

As the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says, when we undertake to apply that exception, due notice of motion must be given.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to a precedent during the session of 1891. On the 8th of July, 1891:

Mr. WALLACE moved: That the order of the House of the 25th June last be rescinded, &c.

Mr. LAURIER. I think such a motion as this requires notice.

Mr. WALLACE. This motion is made by the instruction of the committee.

and so the debate went on and the Speaker ruled as follows:-

Mr. SPEAKER. There is nothing now before the House. I have ruled that the motion requires notice.

Mr. WELDON. I ask the indulgence of the House to reply to the hon, member for cited in 1863 is identical with this case. I cannot see any distinction whatever although I have listened carefuly. There is a like urgency in this case. The quorum of this committee is 84, and I am perfectly certain there has never been a quorum there this year, nor do I think a member of this House has ever seen a quorum in that committee. We had a very large attendance to-day, and there was not more than 70 present. When the vote was taken the total number present was 61. Practically the reason which prevailed in 1863 is an urgent reason now, because if we cannot meet, the business will be blocked.

Mr. LAURIER. That refers to the time when we had controverted elections before the committee.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I moved the other day for the reduction of the quorum of a committee, and while this point was not taken, yet I do not think it occurred to any hon, gentleman to suggest that notice of motion should be given. I would like to call the attention of the Speaker to standing rule of the House No. 79:

When a number of members are appointed to compose a committee the majority of the same shall be a quorum, unless the House has otherwise ordered.

It does seem to me, therefore, that a motion would always be in order to make the order contemplated by the House. Before sitting down. I would like to point out that the House certainly never did realize the extraordinary number of members on this committee in connection with that general rule requiring a majority to form a quorum, because in the British House of Commons five is the general number constituting a quorum for any committee of that House, a House twice the size of ours.

Mr. SPROULE. In answer to the statement of the hon, leader of the Opposition as to a motion having been ruled out of order because notice was not given of it, I find that on the 25th of June, 1891, the motion of the hon, member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was made without any notice. It was to the following effect:—

Mr. Mulock moved: That it is desirable that any witness called before the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, be examined under oath or affirmation touching any matters coming before them.

Motion agreed to.

There was no notice given of the motion, nor any recommendation from the committee that it should pass.

Mr. MULOCK. There was no objection.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the leader of the Opposition takes the position that it never has been done.

Mr. DAVIN. At one time it was the practice in this House for the chairman of the committee, on presenting his first report, to move; a reduction in the number constituting a quorum, and there could be no notice of that,

Mr. McCARTHY. It was not necessary, because the report was a notice.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would like to call attention to this fact, that the standing committees of this House are formed upon the report of a committee appointed for that purpose in the early days of the session, that in each case the report of the committee fixed the quorum, and that this motion, which is intended to change the quorum then fixed for this particular committee, is equivalent to amending the report of that committee without notice. That is surely entirely inconsistent with every rule and practice of Parliament, and every member can see the evil results of establishing a precedent of that kind.

Mr. SPEAKER. In view of the conflicting opinions that have been expressed by hon, members on both sides of the House, I find myself somewhat at a loss in coming to a conclusion in regard to this matter. Generally speaking, the rule which has been by the hon, member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), that motions require notice, is a sound rule of parliamentary practice; but I confess that I do not think that the precedent which the hon, member has quoted as having been made in 1891, applies fully to the case now under consideration. I find the following in Mr. Bourinot's work:—

In case the committee do not report with reference to a Bill, the House should take cognizance of the matter. "It is the duty of every committee to report to the House the Bill that has been committed to them," says the best English authority, "and not by long adjournments, or by an informal discontinuance of their sittings to withhold from the House the result of their proceedings. If any attempt of this nature be made to defeat a Bill, the House will interfere to prevent it." Sometimes, under such circumstances, a committee will be "ordered to meet" on a certain day, "to proceed with the Bill." When a committee cannot meet for want of quorum, the attention of the House may be called to the fact, and its interposition invoked. In such a case the House will order: That the committee be revived and that leave be given to sit and proceed on a certain day. Or the House may order: That the committee have leave to sit and proceed with two or more members, in case there is no likelihood of a quorum.

Now, the case, as I understand it, is this: Certain Bills have been referred to the Committee on Railways, and the members of that committee say that, in consequence of there not being a quorum obtainable, these Bills cannot be reported.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Control of the Contro

Mr. SPEAKER. That I understand to be the statement of the case made by members of the committee. If that statement is not correct, it may alter my decision; but if it be the case that a quorum of the Railway Committee cannot be obtained, surely no hon, member of this House would say that the whole of the proceedings with regard to the Bills that have been referred to the committee should be delayed for want of a proceeding such as is proposed to be made to-day. If the statement be correct that a meeting of the Railway Committee cannot be had because a quorum cannot be obtained, then, I think, it would be in order that this motion should be put.

Mr. TISDALE. As chairman of the committee, I am prepared to state the facts. The last meeting of the committee was held the day before yesterday, when it sat from eleven o'clock till three without a quorum.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. If there were 84 people in the room, they were not all members of Parliament. To-day the committee met at ten, and at one o'clock, while discussing the measure which was before it on the previous day, it was counted out by motion, and I was compelled to rule that there was no quorum. These are the facts.

Mr. EDGAR. As to the question of fact, I suppose I may make a statement. I have been almost as regular an attendant of that committee as the chairman, and on no day with the exception of to-day, has the committee failed to meet and do business when it was called, and to-day it sat for three hours. I am quite prepared to agree that when the committee is duly called and is obliged to disband for want of a quorum, there is ground for interference; but the chairman of the committee will agree with me that during this Parliament there has never been an occasion when the Railway Committee was disbanded when it was called, for the want of a quorum.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon, gentleman is quite right in saying that. So far as my knowledge goes, the question of the quorum has never been raised at any time during the years that I have been chairman. I have just sent to the clerk of the committee for the record of the proceedings of this morning. It was before one o'clock when the main division was taken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think any member of this House would take exception to the motion if the facts were as stated by the hon. gentleman; but there is a great difference of opinion on that point. Apart from that, I do not think the House would object to the motion made by the hon. member for Albert, if it were made in the proper way, after notice given. For myself, if proper notice were given of it, I agree that it would be a proper motion to carry, but certainly not without notice.

Mr. DENISON. The hon, member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), says it seldom happens that a committee is counted out. Then, if it was counted out to-day, that is a reason to my mind why the quorum should be changed. The fact that in this House with 215 members, 20 constitute a quorum, is a strong reason why a committee of 164 members should have a smaller quorum than 83. I think 20 would be quite sufficient, and I would vote for that number if I had the opportunity.

Mr. LAURIER. I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that if it be the case that the committee from time to time meets without a quorum, that would be a good reason for changing the general rule and that change should only be made after due notice. I do not say that there may not be reason to change the rule if it be found that the quorum is too large, but I am strongly opposed to this motion being made, without notice, to suit a special case and for a special purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. The committee, adjourned to-day at one o'clock to meet to-morrow morning at nine. We are near the end of the session, when it is important railway legislation should be put through that committee, and it is for that reason we propose to meet to-morrow at nine. I am prepared to say, and I think the whip of the Opposition will agree with me, that if the quorum remains as it is, there will not be sufficient members in the city to form a quorum.

Mr. BORDEN. We are asked to change the rule for a special occasion and a special purpose. I think this House will hesitate before undertaking to accept and pass a motion of this kind without notice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that the very strongest reason that could possibly be given against your consenting, Mr. Speaker, to allow this motion to be put, has been given in the statement of the hon. member for Leeds. It is perfectly clear that what I can call nothing else but a trick is attempted to be played on the majority of the members of the committee. Every man knows that the vast portion of the members of the committee have already made arrangements to leave this town and will not be here until Tuesday morning at the earliest, and that, under such circumstances, in a matter of grave importance which has been under discussion for a considerable time, a member should be found to move that we should do what we have very rarely done, what has not been done from the commencement of the session until the present, hold a meeting at an unusual early hour on Saturday morning for the express purpose of putting through a Bill, probably without the consent of the majority of the members of the committee, appears to me as gross a parliamentary outrage as in my 33 years experience I have ever seen attempted.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is one other precedent to which I did not refer when I first spoke, and it is this. On page 744 of Bourinot's book, the following will be found. after the case referred to by the hon, member for Albert :-

In the session of the House of Commons of 1877 a Dill respecting the Albert Railway Company came up from the Senate with amendments, and was referred to the Committee on Railways in accordance with the rule in such cases. was then near the end of the session, there was a difficulty in obtaining a quorum of the committee. and the Bill was not reported. The member in charge of the Bill moved that the order of reference be discharged, and that the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill be considered. The Speaker decided that no notice was required of such a motion, and the Bill was then taken up and its further consideration deferred for three months—several members having strong objections to its passage.

It seems to me that this, although not exactly a case in point, is one that would justify the course proposed in moving this motion without notice. I understand there is a large number of Bills which have been referred to the Railway Committee, and if a quorum of that committee cannot be had no business can be done. The result must be that the whole of the railway legislation before the Railway Committee would be stepped. I am, therefore, of opinion that this motion can be put.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We can debate the desirability of the motion, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER. Certainly. The motion is that the quorum of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines be reduced to 25 members for the remainder of the present session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before that motion is put, I want to have a little discussion upon it; and I daresay that as it is an important question, a few hours may be very profitably spent, in view of the light thrown on the matter by the hon. member for Leeds. Let us understand exactly where we are. In the first place, we find that a discussion involving various important questions of constitutional law, various questions of right, has been going on for a considerable time on this particular Bill. There is no sort of doubt in the minds of any hon, gentlemen that this measure ought to be discussed and fully considered, and ought to be fully considered under such circumstances as will give a large number of the members of this House, who belong to the Railway Committee, an opportunity of expressing their views. Now, it is perfectly evident that we have, by common conmake this change. If that is done, so far sent, agreed to respect Saturday as a holiday. It is more particularly desirable, in the interests of the Ministers themselves, that that should be done, because we are aware that they are far from a unit on certain important questions, because we are aware that they need-poor people-rest as much as any of the rest of us, and I, for my part, cannot be an accomplice to depriving hon, gentlemen opposite of the short interval which is to be given them to decide a matter which has exercised them, as we know, ever since a very early period of this year. As regards this question they must clearly be present, many of them, in the Railway Committee to-morrow morning. It will be obvious to everybody that we are doing a very improper thing in interfering unnecessarily with the holiday of the Ministers and depriving them of the opportunity of giving that ripe and serious consideration to questions which have exercised them for a long time-questions on which, if I am correctly informed, there were great differences of opinion, which even led to arguments not commonly recognized as likely to be used in Council Chambers. In view of all the circumstances connected with this motion, which is for the express purpose of holding a committee meeting to-morrow morning at an early hour, at which, if we sit to our usual period to-night, it will be almost impossible for many of us, myself among the number, to attend, there is the strongest possible ground to refuse assent to a motion which is evidently made, I am sorry to say, for the purpose of carrying out what is neither more nor less than a trick. I would not object so much if this committee had been ordered to meet on Tuesday or Wednesday morning, but I object execedingly to this motion when it is done for the express purpose of enabling a hele-and-corner meeting to be held at a period when the great majority of members of this House, no less than the great majority of members of the committee, are necessarily absent from the city or would be put to extreme personal inconvenience if called upon to attend. The object of this motion is to make it impossible practically for a quorum of the Railway Committee to be present.

Mr. TISDALE. As far as I am concerned. I would much prefer changing the motion until Tuesday morning.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The House does not meet until three o'clock Tuesday.

Mr. MULOCK. Say Wednesday.

Mr. TISDALE. Wednesday morning, then.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That will remove my personal objection, and I am glad to find that the hon. gentleman is suffias I am concerned there will be no objection.

Mr. TISDALE. I wish to say one word, notice has not been given for to-morrow. The committee adjourned and I withheld the notice until I saw what, if anything, was done in the House. Notice was given in the committee that the motion would be made. I quite agree with some of the things the hon, gentleman has said, and I wish to say on behalf of the Railway Committee, and particularly for myself as chairman, that the object of the motion is to put us in the position not merely to deal with one Bill but to deal with all the Bills before us. There are nine Bills to my knowledge, and if we do not put ourselves in a position to make progress, we cannot get through work in time. If the motion passes, I will not call the meeting until Wednesday.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not see that the committee are in a position to make a report to the House. From a statement made by the hon, gentleman, the committee had not a quorum. That fact would prevent them from making any report.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not a report.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Therefore there can be no information communicated to the House on which this House can act at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The chairman does that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But he does it as the organ of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman's position is clearly untenable. Suppose that a number of members sufficient to make quorum impossible refused to meet, there never could be a report of the committee and this House could never take action.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is quite true, but the member, as a member, can bring the matter as an ordinary subject for the action of the House.

While the proposal of Mr. CHARLTON. the chairman of the Railway Committee to call the meeting on Wednesday obviates the objection to meeting on Saturday, most of the members are out of the city and the House is not in session, there is still another difficulty in the case, in my opinion. We should exercise the utmost care in this House with regard to setting precedents that may operate in the future adversely to popular liberties and proper parliamentary gov-Now, we are acting upon a moernment. tion of which no notice has been given. I take it, Mr. Speaker, from the remarks you made, and from the authority cited by yourself, that, if the fact had been admitted, which is not admitted, there would be propriety in having this motion acted upon; but the assertion made is denied and not admit-want of a quorum. Under any circumstances, with no fact admitted such as is necessary to justify the action, with the existence of such fact disputed and denied by many members of this Railway Committee, with the fact established that the committee has never met without proceeding to business, that it never was demonstrated to be without a quorum until to-day at one o'clock, after it had sat until its usual time for adjournment—I object to this ruling; I object to proceeding with this motion without due I object to it particularly, as it is notice. proposed that the committee shall not meet until Wednesday. If notice is given to-day, the motion can be brought before the House on Tuesday, and decided, the quorum can be reduced on Tuesday, and the committee can meet on Wednesday, as proposed; and the difficulty that arises of establishing a precedent, which, in my opinion, is a very questionable one, will be obviated. No purpose is served by putting the motion to-day, so we had better give to the question the benefit of the doubt that clearly does exist, and possibility of establishing a precedent which is not in accordance with the rules of the House, and of the best principles of parliamentary government.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not want to discuss the question, but the view I take is, that the precedent has already been set under the rule of the Speaker.

Mr. CHARLTON. The motion has not been acted upon.

Mr. EDGAR. But Mr. Speaker has given his ruling, which was not appealed from; so the question is decided, I am afraid. must assume for the present, that we were wrong, and the Chair was right.

Mr. CHARLTON. But it is a bad precedent.

Mr. EDGAR. But I am afraid it is set. and will not be altered by what we may do.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 128) to amend the Act respecting certain female offenders in the province of Nova Scotia (from the Senate).—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

NAVIGATION OF THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to inquire of the of Marine Minister or, in his absence, of the Minister of Justice, who has been acting as Minister of Marine, if the attention of the Government has been called to the fact that a Bill relating to the navigation of the great lakes and of the channels connecting with those lakes as far ted. It is not admitted to be the fact that the Montreal, has been passed by the American Railway Committee were unable to act for Congress? That Bill received the assent of the President of the United States on the 5th February, and went into operation on the 1st March, 1895. The Bill, which I hold in my hand, makes provision with regard to lights, fog-signals, sailing vessels and steam vessels, and establishes a complete code of signal, and makes many important changes, as I understand, which, of course, it will be necessary for the Canadian lake marine to conform to, if we are to secure one uniform code of rules for the lake marine of both countries. Has the attention of the Government been directed to this law, and have the provisions of the law of Congress been considered, with a view to bringing the laws affecting our lake marine into accordance with them?

TUPPER. HIBBERT CHARLES I am sorry the Minister of Marine happens I personally do not follow to be out. as closely I the legislation as did. I have no doubt, however, from my experience of the Marine Department that the officials have considered that legislation very carefully, and will bring it in due course to the attention of the Minister of Marine, and then to the attention of the Government. But it has not yet been formally considered by the Government.

THE MARKLAND MORTGAGE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to inquire of the Minister of Finance whether he can lay on the Table the mortgage given to Her Majesty by the Hon. George H. Markland? I have inquired about that two or three times, but I have not as yet seen the mortgage or a copy of it.

Mr. FOSTER. The mortgage cannot be laid on the Table. It cannot be found. It is registered, and it might be copied.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to mention to the hon. gentleman that from information received, I understand this resolution proposes to accept a considerably smaller sum than is due to the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I wish to notify him formally that I have been informed, though I am not speaking with positive knowledge, that the property covered is ample security for the whole of the original debt.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not our information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Exactly, and that is a matter that ought to be inquired into, because we have no right to give up public property for less than its value. That is one reason why I want a copy of the mortgage at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to go on with that to-day, so far as passing the resolution, so as to have my Bill introduced, and then it might rest until we get the information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we ought to have a copy of the document before us before we proceed to pass the resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. Before we pass the second reading?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On the distinct understanding that no further stage is taken until this document be produced, within a reasonable time to allow us to ascertain the facts.

Resolution (p. 2408) respecting the release and discharge of a certain mortgage given to Her Majesty by the Hon. George H. Markland, was read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 136) respecting the discharge of a mortgage to Her Majesty, known as the Markland mortgage.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COMMERCIAL TREATIES.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 126) respecting commercial treaties affecting Canada.

Mr. EDGAR. Does the hon, gentleman propose to go into committee on that Bill today?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. EDGAR. Have the papers been brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. The papers were brought down yesterday, but they have scarcely any relation to the Bill. They are merely formal communications that have taken place.

Mr. CHARLTON. We have no time to verify that.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not think the House should go into committee to-day on that Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolved itself into committee.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not think the hon. gentleman should press that motion. There is no particular reason why it should be taken up to-day that I am aware of. It is not going to be assented to this afternoon, and cannot be assented to. It has got to stand in the position of other Bills. When hon, members who take an interest in the subject have not had an opportunity of looking at the papers, I hardly think the hon, gentleman should rush the Bill through committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to take the position of forcing it through at all, but I my hon. friend's atto ask want tention to the history of this Bill. The Bill is simply to confirm the treaty. The treaty has now been before the House for two sessions. I might almost say for three sessions. Everything in connection with the treaty itself has been thoroughly and repeatedly discussed. have done everything that was necessary in order to bring matters to such a position that the treaty should go into actual force. The House had reason to expect that it would have been ratified before we met again, but something cropped up in the meantime, and that was simply this: That order to make sure that the treaty obligation entered into between Great Britain and the most-favoured nations would be respected, it became necessary that we should so legislate that most-favoured na- cessarily affected by a reciprocity treaty. tions should have the same advantages. The point may come to be one of very great quoad these articles, as France has in our markets. There are no papers brought down yesterday that materially affect that position. All the information has been before the House for a long time, and everything has really been done except simply to take that difficulty out of the way before passing the Bill. The most-favoured nations are to have the same position in our markets as by this treaty is given to France. Therefore, my hon, friend will not say that I am trying to force the Bill. At the same time we are getting well on towards the close of the exchange for a consideration given to us by session, I hope.

Mr. EDGAR. This Bill was only introduced on the 20th June.

Mr. FOSTER. But the Bill, with the whole principle involved, was introduced in the early days of the session.

Mr. CHARLTON. It may be true, as the leader of the Government says, that the papers which have been brought down do not materially affect this Bill, but members of the House who are interested in it, have. I think, a right to claim the privilege of examining these papers, at all events, and satisfying themselves that the estimate placed upon them by the leader of the Government is a correct one. The system of forcing through legislation is not a good one, and if we do things decently and in order, it is proper to allow one day to intervene between the second reading of that Bill and its consideration in Committee of the Whole, especially where the papers relating to that Bill have not been in the hands of the House to enable members to understand the position. Having some interest in this Bill, I hope that the leader of the House will not press its consideration in committee to-day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not certain whether this French treaty can be regarded as in the strictest sense a treaty of reciprocity. I do not know what position the Government have taken as respects that. But if it be a treaty of reciprocity, there is a question involved of great importance, indeed, which should require to be carefully thought out by the legal adviser of the Government; that is, the question whether, when you make a treaty of reciprocity, what are known as the most-favoured-nation clauses, apply at all. My belief and my contention has always been that they do not, that a reciprocity treaty is a thing wholly and entirely apart, from the nature of the case, from any one of those treaties containing general clauses and general powers, and I would not like that in passing this Act we should appear to depart from that principle, or in any sense appear to recognize the fact that favoured-nation clauses made by Great Britain, or made by ourselves even, are neimportance within a moderate space of time, and we should make no rash decision. The hon, gentleman will recollect perfectly well that his late leader, Sir John Thompson, on being interrogated on that point, appeared to entertain the same view which I myself entertained and which has been expressed by other members of this House, to the effect that a reciprocity treaty is a thing wholly and entirely apart, that a reciprocity treaty is a treaty by which we grant or sell rather certain special privileges in a particular power. It is as much, to my mind, a bargain between two nations as the exchange of a bushel of barley for half a dozen yards of cotton would be between two individuals, and the favoured-nation clause should not apply to cases involving such a transaction. I am not, at this moment, quite clear whether the hon. gentleman leading the House regards the treaty with France as a reciprocity treaty, I rather incline to think he does; but the point is one of great importance, and one on which we should be very clear, indeed, before we place legislation on the statute-book which may appear to contravene the principle I have spoken of, and which, to the best of my recollection, was confirmed by the opin-ion of Sir John Thompson.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman has raised a point not new to the House, and as he states the interrogation was made on one or two occasions, and our late leader, Sir John Thompson, spoke on one occasion. There are, of course, two views. One is that a reciprocity treaty, as the hon, gentleman has said, is simply a treaty, in which one country sells to the other, which both countries sell to each other for a material consideration, something which one has and the other wants, and that the very fact that a quid pro quo is given for that, bars out the claim for like treatment to a nation which has most-favoured treaties in that respect. The two lines of thought may be called the American and British

The British Government has always gone on the assumption that most-favourednation treaties do bind in this respect, and that so far as she is concerned, when she makes a treaty by which she gives some privilege to a foreign power, and that for-eign power gives her something in return, at the same time every power which has the most-favoured-nation treaty with Great Britain, participates in that privilege. And you might take that argument a little further, and say that the third power which claimed to participate had already bought the privilege, and that the terms were stated in the treaty which had been entered into between Great Britain, and that this very power, which stipulated that if, at any better terms were given to another power, they should be conceded to her, in consideration of what this third power was supposed to give to Great Britain at that time, she bought also whatever advantage Great Britain should give to the third power. Sir John Thompson, if I remember rightly the discussion, and I think I do, rather inclined theoretically, in his own view, to the idea that a reciprocity treaty was simply a treaty between two parties. that it was a bargain and sale; but, at the same time, he kept clearly in view before this House the distinction between that view and the British view. The Government, of course, concedes the British view. The question is outside of academic discussion, and the position is thoroughly conceded by this Government. In fact, this treaty itself began and the negotiations were carried on under the express instructions and under the express understanding that so far as this treaty was concerned, the most-favoured-nation obligations should be observed, and those powers should have the same privileges as were given to France quoad articles admitted into the country by virtue of the treaty. Negotiations proceeded on that basis, the treaty was made, based on that principle, and we propose to carry that out, and, so far as the most-favoured nations are concerned, we propose to give them. by virtue of the treaties which Great Britain has with them, exactly the same privileges in our markets as to those articles as France obtains. The hon. gentleman should scarcely take objection to that course. It certainly should be favoured by him, as I understand, theoretically, at least, the hon. gentleman and his party are in favour of the widest possible trade. These principles have already been discussed by this House, and I think the House will understand that so far as the Government is concerned, in regard to this treaty, we propose to stand by the British view.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With the permission of the House I desire to say two things to the hon. gentleman. In the first place, I doubt the historical correctness of this statement. I have not the papers before me, as I did not expect the matter to be brought up; but I believe that Great Britain, in making her treaties, has not invariably followed that rule, that she has done so sometimes, but my recollection at the present moment is that, in the last instance of a reciprocity treaty, that with France, Great Britain did not concede to other nations the privileges granted to France. That is my recollection. It is a matter that could be verified by reference to documents, and to the English "Hansard," but so far as I recollect, that was a reciprocity treaty in the stricter sense. There is an obvious inconvenience in our committing ourselves, even by an Act of this kind, to any such understanding as that which the Government has proposed to act upon, and I. for myself, dissent from it, and I would have desired the second reading carried on a division if the matter had been brought up. However, I shall have an opportunity to record my dissent on the third reading. I entertain strong views as to the extreme impolicy and impropriety on the part of the Government in allowing favoured-nation clauses made by Great Britain on her own part, without reference to us, to prevail at all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not the practice to do it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not admit the right of the British Parliament to legislate for the Canadian people. Her Majesty is Queen of England, and also Queen of Canada, and on matters affecting Canada she is bound to take the advice of her Canadian advisers and the Canadian Parliament. I do not fancy the Minister of Justice will find much to dissent from in that view.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We agreed pretty closely in that view, I think, and possibly our communications with the British Government have been in that direction. I suppose they have. This matter is one which would warrant a little delay. I do not particularly object to the hon. gentleman going on, because I can take the opportunity at the third reading to raise a discussion, if need be, on this matter, although it is a little inconvenient to discuss a matter after it has gone through committee.

Mr. AMYOT. I am glad to see that the Government intend pushing through the matter as soon as possible, because a certain portion of the press has been attacking them.

Mr. BERGERON. Which press?

Mr. AMYOT. The Opposition press. That press has attacked the Government on account of that treaty. It has stated that the Government had no intention to carry out the terms of that treaty, and that the treaty itself was a sham to deceive the public. am glaid that this unjust attack will be now impossible, and I hope the members of the Opposition will show in the House that the attacks of their press are false.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What I have to say upon this subject may, perhaps, be said in the committee, on the first clause. The Minister of Finance has correctly stated the American view with regard to reciprocity treaties. The United States have, on several occasions, had the question before their State Department, and on every occasion they have held that a reciprocity treaty is a special treaty which gives to no nation with whom they have a favourednation clause, a right to the privileges that are granted in a treaty of reciprocity. The rule in the United States is exactly as has been stated by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the Finance Minister. But with regard to the nance Minister. But with regard to the English doctrine, I think the Minister of Finance will find that their rule has not been uniform. In a discussion with the Government of Spain, with reference to the admission of certain products into the island of Cuba, they put the doctrine pre-cisely as the Minister of Finance has stat-ed it, that is: That the favoured-nation clause gives them the absolute right to any concession made to any other state, no matter under what circumstances or by what arrangement that concession has been made. The doctrine laid down in that case has not been followed in any other case. For instance, the English Government recognized the American doctrine at the time a treaty was made between England and the United States in respect to Canada. They did not insist that the products of other colony should, under favoured-nation clause, go into the United States upon the same terms that the products of Canada did, nor do I think the doctrine was recognized in respect to Spanish wines after the Cobden treaty. It shows that the doctrine has not been uniformly applied in England. There is this much, which I think is very clear. It is not worth while to say "good morning" to a certain party until you meet him, and, that being the case, it is not necessary that we should declare, in advance, that we will concede to every state or nation with whom England may have a favoured-nation clause, what we concede to France. If we are bound to do that under any arrangement made by Great Britain, according to the recognized law of nations, we do not need this declaration, and if we are not compelled to make the concession, then we will be relieved, and the hon. Minister will see that that provision is unnecessary.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think I can

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not think it is possible that, when this treaty was entered into. either the French negotiators, or the negotiators for Canada could have understood what the effect of it would be, as now interpreted.

Mr. FOSTER. Both understood it thoroughly.

Mr. EDGAR. Well, I am sure the people of Canada did not, and I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did not understand it, because, according to his answers to questions from this side of the House, he could not tell whether these reductions, which we made on behalf of France, were to be in favour of all the world, or of France alone. The Minister of Finance, at that time, was not instructed, although, perhaps, the negotiators were. Now, what is the result of this? Here, under Article III., France gives certain concessions to Canada, and allows certain articles which we have to sell to be introduced into France at their minimum tariff rates. I do not complain about that, for it is well enough so far as it goes, and it might do us some good. But what do we give in return for it? In Article I, we take certain concession to France by taking off the ad valorem duty on wines, soaps, nuts, almonds, prunes, and so on. I suppose one would think that these two reciprocal concessions should balance each other. But what do we find now? We find that while we only get that reduction which France gives us, we give the reduction made in favour of France to any number of other countries, among which are, according to the statement of the Government—Argentine, Austro-Hungary, Belgium, Bolivia, Chili, Columbia, Costa Rica, Germany (Zollverein), Muscat, Russia, Salvador, Sweden and Norway, Uraguay, and probably also to Egpyt, Montenegro, Mexico, Persia, South Africa, Venezuela, Zanzibar. We get no favour, however, from any of these countries. We do not get any encouragement for Canadian commerce, but we allow them all these benefits of a reduction in their tariff by this Bill to-day. I do not know how that could possibly be considered a good stroke of business on behalf of Canada. We get a little benefit from one country, and we allow about fifhalf of teen other countries to get the same benefits from us as we give in return to this one country. That, Sir, is a very serious thing. If we are going to repeat this experiment in many cases we would have no tariff left. The protective system which the hon. gentlemen so strongly advocate is interfered with in this matter, particularly of wines, show in the committee that it is the case, and that, perhaps, is c e of the matters in which I rather commend the increase of than otherwise. But the winegrowers of this country may just as well understand now, if they did not before, that while they thought they were only going to have the competition of France for their cheap wines, they are to have competition from all the long list of countries I have read, and, among others, Austro-Hungary, Germany, and Belgium, where a great quantity of these wines are manufactured. The bars of our customs tariff are taken down, the duties are reduced, and our native wine-growers are so much handicapped. It is just as well that that should be clearly understood. I entirely agree with the hon, gentlemen from Oxford and Bothwell, that we should hesitate very long before we acknowledge by our legislation the right of the British Government to legislate for Canada, or to force us to legislate for ourselves as they have done by this long list of treaties which I have read. included us in all these treaties, except one or two, without any knowledge or consent of Canada, and we cannot get out of them. We cannot, by any appeals to Great Britain, relieve ourselves of the burdens of these It is true, they now make provisions of more or less force that Canada may be relieved of these treaties, but we know what that means. In the Berne Copyright Convention they made a provision of that kind, to the effect that Great Britain could denounce the treaty on behalf of Canada on giving a year's notice. have asked them, by address of this House, for probably five or six years, to do that, and they have never done it. I hope the Government are still of this view, and that they are going to make absolutely sure that Great Britain will not hang this treaty around our neck any longer than we want. I think the late Sir John Thompson was anxious that, before he asked Parliament to ratify this treaty, it should be made abundantly clear that the Government of Great Britain would act at our suggestion without our having to knock at their doors for five or six years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That assurance has been given.

Mr. EDGAR. I think I saw in to-day's paper that that assurance was given by the Colonial Secretary. So far so good; but we are at present taking these burdens upon ourselves, which I have pointed out.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I had not before examined this Bill with any care, because I had supposed that it was an Act to bring into operation the treaty between Canada and France; but I see that it is for a wholly different purpose. It is an Act to provide for the consequences which are supposed to result from that treaty with respect to other states than France. Now, I must deprecate the course the Ministers are taking with regard to this matter. Let me call their attention to what is stated in the Bill:

The advantages granted to France by the treaty with that power mentioned in the said Act, with respect to its commerce with Canada, shall extend to any and every other foreign power which by reason of the operation of such treaty is, under the provisions of a treaty with Great Britain, entitled, in whole or in part, to the same or to the like advantages with respect to its commerce with Canada, to the extent to which in manner aforesaid such other foreign power is entitled thereto.

The hon, member will see that he is giving legislative recognition to a certain doctrine which the American Government, in their interpretation of international law, repudiate, and which has not been uniformly recognized by England; it has been recognized at some times, and not at other times. It seems to me, as the hon, member for South Oxford says, that the arrangement for securing reciprocity is the sale of certain privileges on the one side for the acquisition of certain privileges on the other side, and is, in that respect, wholly independent of the operation which public law would give to a favoured-nation clause. What the Government propose to do by this Bill is to give to the favoured-nation clause of the treaty which England has made with Germany the same effect as is given to those clauses of the treaty which we have made with France in respect to all imports into this country from Frauce. If the Government had taken power to give effect to any provisions of those treaties which, by the law of nations, are found obligatory upon Canada, reserving to themselves the right to discuss the subject fully with the Colonial Office, it seems to me they would have done better than they have done by the arrangements that have been This Bill further provides:

So long as such other foreign power continues to be entitled to such advantages, the operation of all laws inconsistent with its enjoyment of them shall be suspended to the extent to which they are so inconsistent.

That, of course, is a mere corollary to the section that precedes it. The third section relates to Great Britain and her colonies So far as Great Britain is concerned, we have nothing to complain of here. She has put no impediments upon our trade, and, therefore, the concession contained here may be made absolutely. That is not made under any law of nations; it is made as a matter of public policy, and I am not objecting to that. But I think the first and second sections are very objectionable, because they assume a controverted principle of international law to be a settled principle. The hon. gentleman cannot say that the doctrine set up in its extreme form in Great Britain's negotiations with Spain on one occasion, is the accepted doctrine of international law, and he will not be in a position to contradict that if he carries Let | through the first two sections of this Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. AS a matter of fact, I find, on looking into the Cobden treaty that, to all appearances, no such provision as is referred to or attempted to be enforced by this Bill, went into effect between the two contracting parties. The language of the treaty is, in all cases, that wines, and other specified articles, imported from France shall be admitted at a reduced rate of duty in consideration of His Majesty the Emperor of the French reducing the duty on the schedule of articles of British production. While the thing is not expressly defined in the treaty, its language would go to show that in making that treay with France the English Government paid no attention whatever to the doctrine of favoured-nations, but took practically the same view that I take as to treaties of reciprocity, and that appears to have been by the hon, gentleman's late The fact, I think, will be found to be as my hon, friend from Bothwell has stated it—that the British Government have, according to the exigencies of the situation. talked both ways, and it is very impolitic for us, without any necessity, so far as I can see, to lay down a doctrine which we may find it exceedingly inconvenient to enforce hereafter, unless the hon, gentleman has a distinct statement to make to us that the British Government have refused to allow him to put this treaty into operation without such a stipulation being introduced. I do not understand that anything of that kind has occurred.

my hon, friend to think of one or two interrogations. When we passed our Bill last year that everything had been done which was necessary in order that the ratification should be exchanged between the contracting parties, France and Great Britain. Why, then, were not ratifications exchanged? Why has not this treaty been in operation for the last seven or eight months? That is one question which might well be asked.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where is the correspondence?

Mr. FOSTER. It has been brought down. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When? Mr. FOSTER. Last night.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must point out to the hon. gentleman the utter unreasonableness of asking us to this Bill now. He knows that when the correspondence was only brought down last night, we could not possibly attend to it. have not even seen it. That correspondence may contain documents with which we ought to be acquainted in order to discuss this particular measure.

Mr. CHARLTON. I urged that objection, and it was overruled by the House, and a ceive the same. Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

consideration of the Bill forced on the committee. I protested then and do so now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps the hon. gentleman would read the letters or despatches.

Mr. FOSTER. They are before the House. I was just going to make a recital of what I thought I had explained before. I was stopped at the point where we had passed an Act here last year and supposed it would go into force, and was just going to answer the question why it did not. Before I do that, I want to go back to a point anterior to that, which has already been before the House and thoroughly explained and canvassed. That is the argument made by the hon, member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar) a year or two ago, that surely France could not have known that most-favoured nations were to have the advantage of this treaty, otherwise she would be putting herself into the position of giving us a 'quid pro quo,' and then suffer the consequence of those same concessions which were given to her by Canada being given by Canada to every other country that had most-favoured-nation treaties with Great Britain. I replied that whether the French Government and negotiators were making an improvident bargain or not was for themselves, but they entered into the negotiations and conducted them with the full knowledge that that was the antecedent condition. Instructions were, at the very commence-Mr. FOSTER. I thought I made a fairly ment, sent to our commissioners, Lord explicit explanation at first, but I would ask Dufferin and Sir Charles Tupper, reminding them that the most-favoured-nations treaty obligations had to be respected and conwith reference to this treaty, we supposed sidered as a necessary condition in the making of a treaty. The negotiations proceeded upon that basis, both the English and French commissioners knowing it well, both Governments understanding it well, and it being thoroughly acceded to, and it was so stated in this House. The House knows, from the discussions, that it was the intention, without any doubt, from the first, that mostfavoured-nations were to receive the same benefits in our markets as France, from the very fact that a solemn treaty obligation rested upon Great Britain to give these benefits to these most-favoured-nations. The question arose subsidiary to that, whether we should give the same condition to the colonies and to the United States or outside powers, and the position of the Government on those questions was thoroughly well determined. Not only did Sir John Thompson make the assertion in the House, but I myself made it—it can be found in "Hansard," and has been made more than oncethat we intended to give the colonies the same privileges 'quoad' these articles our markets as we gave to France, and that of course, we recognized the fact that the most-favoured-nations would demand and reMr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman will see that that was an open question. The debate will show that.

Mr. FOSTER. That was never an open question with the Government or with the House in anything the Government said about it. Under all these conditions, the discussion took place most thoroughly in the House, and we passed our Bill and supposed that ratification would take place. But when the Bill was sent home and the ratification of the treaty came to be approached, Great Britain raised the point at once that Austria. Germany, Belgium and other countries which had most-favoured-nation treaties with her, had a right to ask that the very moment those goods from France came into this country at a lower rate, their goods of the same character should come in at the same rate. Great Britain refused to approach the ratification of the treaty until that condition was made, so that it would be so practically operative that the most-favoured-nations would have no grievance at all, but that it would be certain that the very moment the French goods of the kinds mentioned entered our ports at the lower rate, goods of the same kind belonging to the most-favoured-nations would enter our ports at that rate, without any cavil at all. We proposed the ratification of the treaty under the promise that we would make the necessary legislation in our tariff to meet that condition, and that the legislation would probably be had before trade could actually open up, but Great Britain took the ground that it was not well to run the least risk of the mostfavoured-nations' goods being for a single day or week or month refused admission to our ports under the same conditions as Therefore, the position the French goods. was taken that it would be better, in order to avoid all questions, that the actual legislation should be passed before the ratification took place, and that that legislation should be definite and certain, not by proclamation, but embodied in the Bill. We at first had the idea of making our Bill a general one to meet the circumstances of any treaty that might hereafter be made; but on thinking it over, we decided that it would be better to confine this to the treaty in question and go no further, inasmuch as Parliament would always have power to pass a similar Act with reference to any treaty, since Parliament have to ratify the treaty before it could So that we are dogo into operation. ing this directly on the line of the particular contention which was urged at the time of the negotiation of the treaty, well understood by both contracting parties, and which we are now carrying out by this legislation in accord with the desire of the British Government. The matter is not a theoretical We may have our theoretical ideas as to whether such a treaty is simply a reciprocity treaty, and that, therefore, no third | leader.

power has the right to ask for lar or most-favoured treatment, but that is aside from this discussion. If we are going to have the treaty ratified, we must respect the treaty obligations. For this is a treaty between Great Britain and France; Great Britain is pledged to third powers by treaties between herself and them, and these treaty obligations must be carried If we are going to have the treaty ratified at all, it can only be upon these conditions—conditions to which, I must say, the Government raises no cavil. Then, with reference to the colonies, as stated in the House last year and the year before, we propose to extend the same privileges to these as we do to France. This is for considerations of sisterhood and amity and the gradual drawing together of commercial relations between ourselves and the colonies.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is quite clear, from what the hon. gentleman says, that the House was not properly advised previously as to what was involved. I interrogated the hon. gentleman myself, as to the exact extent of reduction of revenue through this treaty. Apparently, he did not know; he had the vaguest guesses—

Mr. FOSTER. About what?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As to what the extent of the reduction would be.

Mr. FOSTER. I gave the hon. gentleman statistics on that point.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman did not give any accurate calculations, but only guessed at the result.

Mr. FOSTER. I brought down exact figures.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon, gentleman did not then know how far the treaty would go, and I doubt if he understands it to-day, or has any accurate calculation as to the full extent of the loss of duty, coming down to a basis of pounds, shillings and pence. It is very clear now, that the loss will be considerably larger than the estimates he made covering French wines and other articles. Fruits from other countries, of which we import considerable quantities, will come in free, and I do not think the hon, gentleman even so much as made a statement about that.

Mr. FOSTER. These figures were brought down to the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not in any detail.

Mr. FOSTER. Why, yes; they are even printed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, what is the amount? Another point is, that some gentleman has carried off the correspondence.

Mr. FOSTER. It must have been your leader.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, it was not Mr. Laurier, as I happen to know. I applied for it since this debate commenced, and I am told that it is in the possession of an hon. gentleman on the other side.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who can be the guilty party?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to tell tales. But the correspondence is in the possession of one of the hon. gen-We have a right to see tleman's followers. The hon, gentleman that correspondence. says it does not contain anything particular. But I understand it is a voluminous correspondence; and, be it good, bad or indifferent, it ought to be in our hands while we are discussing this subject. The hon, gentleman must see that to discuss this treaty in detail without this correspondence, which was of sufficient importance to be moved for and brought down, is something he ought not to ask.

Mr. FOSTER. My duty ended when I brought the correspondence down. We will have to have a special committee to look after it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman might, at least, provide some means whereby it would be on the Table when it was wanted. The object is to inform the committee and the members of the House who have paid more or less attention to this subject, precisely what the ground of contention was—for. doubtless, there was some contention and dispute between the Government here and the Government in England. I really think that, before he asks us to go on, the least he can do is to find this correspondence, which, I believe, is in the hands of a follower of his own.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman suggest?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not concerned in getting this Bill through.

Mr. FOSTER. But I thought you might be interested in the information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The onus lies upon the hon, gentleman to supply the necessary information to enable us to discuss the Bill.

Mr. EDGAR. According to my recollection, the replies given by the Minister of Finance to inquiries as to how far the revenue would be reduced by this treaty, related only to the reduction on our trade with France. I think the Minister of Finance will recollect that. I am sure he made some statements on that subject.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon, friend is sure I made some statements, it is at least incumbent upon him to turn them up.

Mr. EDGAR. I am trying to support what the Minister of Finance says. My hon.

Sir Richard Cartwright.

friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) says the hon. gentleman did not make any estimates of the loss of revenue—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Except as regards France.

Mr. EDGAR. He did as regards France. But he did not attempt to make any estimate of loss of revenue as to other countries from which our importations come.

Mr. FOSTER. Most certainly I did.

Mr. EDGAR. I fancy that, in the item of nuts, prunes, &c., France is not by any means the largest exporter to Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is a document on the subject. I am afraid my hon. friends are not at all careful. They are exceedingly desirous of information, hankering for it, in fact. But when it is before them, they are like well-fed creatures—

Some hon, MEMBERS. What kind of creatures?

Mr. FOSTER. Human creatures. When food is placed before them, they refuse to eat, and when it is all before them, they cry for more. Here is a paper brought down in the session of 1893, in which my hon. friends will find the statements of importations for three years of the articles named, from all countries, the value and the duty. And I have here statements with reference to the last fiscal year, and other years, on the same subject. This has been a matter of record.

Mr. EDGAR. What objection is there, then, for the hon. Minister to tell us the facts?

Mr. FOSTER. I should think it almost an insult to give my hon. friend information that has been before him for almost three years.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. Minister has discovered it this moment himself, if he would but admit the truth. What is the reason he cannot get up and tell us the facts, even if they are in the blue-book? What is the loss of revenue on these articles?

Mr. FOSTER. I supposed you were making legislators of yourselves here, and were ready for any discussion.

Mr. ALLAN. I would say that there is one clause of this treaty that I approve of, and that is the clause relating to the termination of the treaty. I believe the Government should take the necessary steps in order to bring about the termination of it as As regards some sections soon as possible. of the country, at least, the effect already has been very damaging indeed. Although this treaty has not been brought into force yet in the section whence I come, we have felt its disastrous effects already. I allude to its influence upon a very important industry My hon. in this country, the grape-growing industry, one that has attained considerable proportions during the past few years. The effect of the passing of this treaty was simply this, that, while farmers or grape-growers used to sell their grapes at 3 or 4 cents a pound last year, large quantities of grapes on Pelee Island and elsewhere were actually sold ½ cent per pound, or $10 per So low became the market for grapes that the large wine growers of the island withdrew almost entirely from the market. price was so low that the farmers were not able to obtain for them more than the price I have named, half a cent per pound, on the average. In fact I know personally that large quantities of grapes were consigned on commission on which there was absolutely no return. Now, that is the effect of the French treaty in the county of Essex, and I suppose it has a similar effect in the Niagara district. And what good will this treaty do? Under the old tariff. Canadian products were admitted to France quite as low as they are now, without developing any considerable trade with France. When this treaty was introduced, the hon. gentleman utterly failed to show that it would be beneficial to this country to any extent, while upon the grape-growing and other industries it has been very injurious. I hope the Government will exercise the power retained in the treaty, and give notice at an early day of its termination.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I believe that this missing correspondence is in the custody of a gentleman who has unfortunately left the city, and it is locked up somewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. We can send the Serjeant-at-Arms after him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You had better do it, and get us another copy, or adjourn the debate.

Mr. FOSTER. We will have it before we take the third reading.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I thoroughly sympathize with what the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Allan) said with regard to the effect of this treaty on the Canadian wine-growing industry; and when the main treaty was up before, I took occasion to suggest some provision which would ameliorate the condition of the grape growers in Essex and other wine-growing districts. They petitioned the Government at that time that if this treaty were made, the Government should do something for them in the way of giving them free alcohol for the fortification of their wines. The Government at that time promised to take the matter into consideration, but we have never heard from them since. I would now like to ask the leader of the House whether he has any intention of meeting the views of the wine growers. They are certainly a native industry, and they come under the idea of a protective policy. They are certainly entitled to consideration in this matter, because they are about to lose a large portion of their trade, and unless there is some compensation they will be sufferers, and with them the country also will be a sufferer by this treaty.

Mr. McGREGOR. In the county of Essex. of which I have the honour of being one of the representatives, there is a very large extent of ground taken up by the growing We went on with this industry of grapes. in good faith, thinking that the Government would act as they had been doing before. The policy of this Government has been, as I understood from the leader, to increase the tax on the rich, and to lessen the taxation on the poor. But in the matter of this wine duty, the policy has worked just the other way. We find that the duties have been increased on hardware, sugar, and a large number of other articles consumed by poorer classes of people we find that the wine. But that reand now country. duty is taken off wine. duction of duty works in favour of the rich rather than the poor. case of fine wines costing $18 to $20, 30 per cent is taken off, being a reduction of $6 to $8 on each case. Consequently the effect is to increase the taxation on the poor and to take it off the rich. Now, there is a large amount of money invested in this industry. We have in this country more than 5,000 acres in grapes, and there is a arge amount of money invested in plant that is used for the purpose of making wine and of taking care of those grapes. It is true that the quantity of wine made in the couvtry is not large, but this fact has to be borne in mind, that where grapes are grown, if, unfortunately, they are affected by the frost and rendered unmarketable for table use, they can be converted into wine. In the county of Essex, which I represent, this treaty will materially affect us in more ways than one. I may say that when we took up this matter last session, we did not take into consideration the fact that there were thirteen other countries besides France that would be allowed to send wine into this country at the reduced duty, and some of them would send us as much wine as Consequently the loss of revenue would be very large, and our wine producers would suffer seriously in consequence of the admission of these cheap wines. Therefore, I think the Government ought to consider this matter from this point of view, before they conclude to pass this Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. members from Essex (Mr. Allan and Mr. McGregor), because I think they are instructive, and I sympathize with them. As a protectionist I entirely sympathize with the view taken by those hon. gentlemen. If we are to develop the wine industry in Canada, we shall have to apply the same system to it that we have applied to other industries. namely, protect it. As a consistent protectionist, I may say I do not, and never did. take very much stock in this treaty. But now that we know that of necessity it has a wider scope than at first sight it seemed to have, I rather sympathize with the remarks of one of the hon, members from Essex that we should look forward to a time for terminating this treaty. Now, the cheers that my hon, friends have received from those around them, are to me very edifying, because they illustrate what we have seen here again and again, that wherever a Reformer's constituency is interested in a protective tariff, and you touch that protective tariff with your little finger, you would almost imagine, from the outery raised against it, that you had touched the ark of the covenant. I think that is instructive. But I must say, as a consistent protectionist, that I do not think this treaty is a very great advantage to Canada. With respect to the question that has been under discussion, it seems to me it is one that we cannot affect here by any legislation of ours.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

A Message from His Honour the Deputy Governor, by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1895, and for other purposes relating to the public service to which I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words:-

In Her Majesty's name, His Honour, the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

COMMERCIAL TREATIES.

Mr. DAVIN. I think, if possible, the Government should take steps to urge the Imperial Government to release Canada of its obligations under the favoured-nation clause, and that in future, if possible we should be placed in a position so as not to be bound without our own consent. When protection, this measure was before the House last that these pyear, it will be seen from the speeches of is a content in through with the feeling in the mind of gentleman so gentleman and supporters of the Government, as well as members of the data the treaty did not work well for Canada, notice should be given to put an end position?

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has made allusion to the alleged inconsistency of the members for Essex County, who, while belonging to the Liberal party, and professedly opposed to protection, yet object to the removal of protection by the Government from the special industry which is carried on largely in their own county. - I do nor think the position taken by those non, gentlemen is against their profession. assume that the assertion of the Government is true, that its policy is to afford protection to native industries; and, admitting that to be the policy of the Government, they assert that the conduct of the Government, to be consistent with its professed policy, is to prevent the injury of the domestic industries, or adopt a policy which would not discriminate against those industries, and, proceeding on that assumption, they take the ground that in Essex there is a large grape-growing interest, and that the Government, to be consistent with its profession and policy, should not sacri-I do not see there is fice that interest. anything incensistent with their professed principles on the ground taken by them. They merely desire to hold the Government to the proper discharge of their self-assumed duties under its own protection policy. and they assume, if that is to be the policy of the Government, if the Government is to be governed by its professions of principle, that it is acting inconsistently with its profession in these cases. In Essex there is in the island of Pelee. 5.000 acres suitable for grape growing, and there is not a spot on this continent where grape growing can be more successfully prosecuted than in that island; all grapes ripen there, and also in Essex County. All along the shore of Lake Erie, and in that section of Ontario between Lake Ontario and the mountain, extending from Hamilton to Niagara, there is an admirable grape-growing region, and if the Government is to protect home industries, as is claimed, the industry which has grown up there can be fostered by the policy, which it professes to believe is the true policy, this is certainly an interest that need not be injured now by a treaty which has so far not resulted in any advantage to Canada, or to any portion of the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIN. The very language used by the hon. gentleman, for instance, such terms as "sacrifice," implies the proposition of protection. The very contention he made that these parties are injured by the treaty is a contention that is born of the general principle of protection; and if the hon, gentleman was consistently, and if the hon, members for Essex were consistently opposed to the National Policy, still more, if they were consistent advocates of free trade, as it is in England, would they support this position?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). As a consistent protectionist, I desire to ask if the Government intends to do anything for the wineproducers in Essex and throughout the country whose interests have been seriously affected. These interests have been affected by the act of a protectionist Government, and, that being the case, the Government are in duty bound to do something for those people, and they can do so, as the grape-growers and wine-producers have pointed out, by granting compensation in the shape of free alcohol for the fortifying of their wines. I therefore think the Government should make a declaration now, in their own interest and in the general interest of the country, that they are prepared to meet the wishes of those people and apply a remedy for the injury which the Government is doing them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, meniber for West Assiniboia has quite forgotten that the hon, members for Essex were not specially calling for protection. They were not pointing out that protection was required. What they set forth was that there was the policy of the Government, and it was against the interest they represent. A heavy tax is placed here on the alcohol used by them. In France, the alcohol used by the wine-producers is free. Here there is a heavy tax placed on sugar. In France there is no tax on sugar used in this industry. Does the hon, gentleman pretend to say that if we removed the tax from sugar and from alcohol to these persons' interests, it would be affording pro-That is what is asked by the wine-producers in the petition which they presented some time ago. The hon. gentleman would scarcely say that that is demanding protection: such action points in an opposite direction.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). That is legitimate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). On the same ground the hon, gentleman should give the farmers a chance in the tobacco-growing business.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I am ready to do that.

Mr. ALLAN. It is certainly highly amusing, if it were not so absurd, to hear the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) lecture any hon. gentleman in this House upon consistency in relation to tariff questions.

He is a gentleman who has himself repeatedly talked on the one side and voted on the other.

Mr. DAVIN. You cannot give an instance.

Mr. ALLAN. You have only to turn up the records of "Hansard" to see my statement confirmed.

Mr. DAVIN. Will you give a single instance?

Mr. ALLAN. A dozen instances. I might mention to you binder twine, and many other items of interest to the North-west on which you pursued just such a course.

Mr. DAVIN. You cannot give a single instance.

Mr. ALLAN. I have always been an advocate of a revenue tariff, and although I have heard before just such remarks as were made by the hon. member (Mr. Davin) with reference to this wine duty, yet it seems to me they are exceedingly absurd. If there is one thing that all classes agree upon-revenue tariff men, protectionists and free traders—it is that wines and liquors are proper subjects for taxation and duty. That is agreed everywhere. We are protesting here against a treaty that is injurious to this country, and the promoters of that treaty have failed to show that it has been, or will be beneficial in any degree to Canada. The hon, gentleman says that we are inconsistent, because the tariff on wines specially affects our constituency, and that therefore we oppose its reduction. Why, Sir, I will take even broader ground. Take the duty on corn. I say that so long as protection is the policy of this country there is no in-consistency in our opposing the singling out of certain articles particularly important to one district, for less-favoured tariff treatment than is given to other articles. That is a doctrine. I have always adhered to. There is a duty on corn and a duty on pork, but we always had a duty on pork, even previous to the infliction of the National Policy. So far as the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) in relation to wines are concerned, people would have to be very thin-pated indeed to take stock in such arguments as he used. There are few people who can be so easily gulled in the county of Essex. The county of Essex does not ask any particular favour at the hands of the Government. I am satisfied that they would vote overwhelmingly to be placed in the position they were before the National Policy became the policy of Canada. They have always been in favour of a revenue and the Liberals in that sectariff, tion of the country have never taken the National any other. If Policy had any justification whatever, it was that the farmers of this country were to be benefited by a duty on agricultural products; and it is impossible for any one to prove that, with the single exception of official returns that the exports of wine from Indian corn, which we do not raise a sufficient quantity of in this country, protection would benefit the farmer, taking one season with the other. It is certainly very amusing to see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) rising in his place to lecture any hon. gentleman on inconsistency in reference to the action he takes on tariff questions.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member (Mr. Allan) has made a statement in this House which he ought to be able to substantiate. He says that I have spoken one way and voted another. I challenge him to give a single instance of that, and I say that he cannot do it. That statement has been made in the Grit press, from which it has evidently been taken by the hon. gentleman. There is absolutely not a tittle of foundation for it. I defy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Allan) to substantiate his words.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was the leader of the Opposition he was thinking about.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). We are drifting away from the subject of the French treaty into a matter which is of more personal interest to the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) than it is to the public of this coun-

Mr. DAVIN. It was one of your own friends who introduced the subject.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). With respect to this treaty, there is just this difficulty to my mind. We came to an understanding with France, by which we gave her certain concessions and were to receive other concessions in return therefor. It now appears that the concessions we have to make to secure this treaty are much broader than appeared on the face of the first negotiations. Take, for instance, this question of wine. Outside of the question of protection altogether, we have now the statement that it is not at all confined to the wine that we import from France alone, and that in conof the favoured-nation treaty sequence clause of the mother country, and in consequence of our kindly feeling towards the other colonies, the practical effect has been to reduce the duty on the importation of these wines from many other countries as well as from France. The result amounts to this: Under the original treaty as presented to us, the concessions were stated then to be much larger on the part of Canada than on the part of France, and that objection is increased ten-fold now. time when, above all others, it is undesirable that the finances of Canada should be hampered by further reductions of revenue, we find that we have to make still wider concessions. What are the facts in connection with the development of the wine industry? Take the Australian provinces as an example, and you will find from the Australia to Great Britain, for the first five months of this year, were 230,000 gallons. as compared with an export to Great Britain for the same five months of 1895 of 150,000 I do not need to recall to the House what we were doing last year when we had the colonial representatives here. and were entertaining the representatives of these colonies. We are feeling it in our pockets to-day to the extent of $120,000 per annum, and for what are we doing this? We are doing it to develop the trade of Australia, and to enable the Australian producers of wine who have natural advantages we do not possess, to compete with the Canadian wine production. We are, in fact, bonusing the Australian wine-grower to enable him to deliver his wine cheaper in our market. That is in the interest of developing trade, I grant you. but it is a one-sided interest, and under existing circumstances. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Essex, that the earlier we give notice of the abrogation of the treaty the more satisfactory it will be for the Canadian people.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is one feature of this question which I do not think has been touched upon, and I fancy that a great many people of this Dominion were not aware of it when it was first proposed. At the inception of this treaty a great many petitions were presented to the House by the temperance people in opposition to the reduced duties on wine proposed here. The extended scope which is now to be given to the treaty by this Bill, not only reduces the duty on French wines which have a mixture of alcohol in them, but that same privilege of reduced wine duties is now extended to the colonies, and to the many countries with which Great Britain has a favoured-nation treaty. Now, I do not think it was at all understood.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was expressly stated.

Mr. McMULLEN. This treaty will result in the importation into Canada of a lot of adulterated French wines. In addition to that, I notice that the hon, member for East York (Mr. Maclean) proposes that we should go further and assist our own wine-producers by allowing them to have alcohol free of duty in order to adulterate their wines and make them more intoxicating.

Mr. MACI.EAN (York). Not adulterate, but fortify.

Mr. McMULLEN. And encourage the use of intoxicating liquors. In the face of the very strong temperance sentiment which exists in this country, and which is constantly growing, the Government are legislating in the very opposite direction.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I advocate free alcohol for the wine-growers in order that our Canadian wines may be sold in our own country at no disadvantage in competition with French wines. French wines and wines produced in the United States are fortified by free alcohol, and if we allow French wines to come in at the rates proposed, we shall be simply giving the whip hand to our competitors. This alcohol is used, not to make the wine intoxicating. but to put it in such a condition that it will keep; and we have Biblical authority for saying, "Take a little wine for thy stomach's sake." I would again press for an answer to my question. A year ago the leader of the Government told us that they would consider the petition of the wine-They surely have considered it and reached a decision, and I would ask the Finance Minister to give us some assurance to-day that the Government have not made up their minds that they intend to consider the claims of the wine-growers of western Ontario.

Mr. GIBSON. I am sure that the hon. member who has just taken his scat does not appreciate the value of the wine made in the province of Ontario, because the wines imported from France will not bear comparison with it. Wines are made in France from liqueurs, sugars, and almost everything else, except the grape, while our native wine, as made in the Niagara district, will compare more than favourably with port wine imported from Spain. The hon, member for East York and myself, with some others, interviewed the Government on this subject when Sir John Thompson was Prime Minister. On that occasion the Controller of Customs twitted me with being a protectionist, so far as wine was concerned, because I said that if anything would bear having a duty placed upon it, it was wine. But the Government now propose to allow the wines of France to come into competition with the pure wines produced by the grape-growers and wine-makers of the Niagara peniusula, and the county of Essex. The effect will be that this industry will be destroyed, because we know, as a matter of fact, that light wines are to-day sent from France to Montreal for less money than the same kinds of wines can be sent for from the county of Essex by rail to Montreal. I see the Finance Minister laughing, but he knows very well, because he has sometimes a moment of weakness-

Mr. FOSTER. I was imitating you—I was taking a smile.

Mr. GIBSON. You do not smile very often, I believe, but when you do I am told you take brandy on shipboard. However, if the hon, gentleman would come to the Niagara peninsula I would give him a native wine that would do his heart good, and that would compare more than favourably with the wine that he wants to import from France. I say, without being a protectionist, that if there is anything the wines of France and other European countries coming into competition with our native industry, and I will show you why. It is the unmarketable grape that is sent to the wine-press. In that way our farmers are enabled to get from the wine-producers $20 a ton for the grapes that cannot ' be sent to market. By allowing this treaty (Central Railway Company system, to go into force, the Government will be the result was, to the Dominion, particularly to the part of the province of Ontario which I have the honour to represent.

Management of the control of the con

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I wish to read to the House the petition of the winegrowers. After petitioning against the ratification of the treaty, they say, if it is to be ratified:

That the wine manufacturers of Canada earnestly demand some special legislation enabling them to use spirits under similar re-strictions as those governing the United States and other foreign wine-makers.

On the preamble,

Mr. FOSTER. I want to amend the title of the Bill by making it read: "An Act to amend the French Treaty Act of 1894. I wish to say to the hon, member for East York that if he will repeat his question be-fore the third reading of the Bill, I will give him an answer. I intended to answer him this afternoon, but I wished the Bill to go through when it got started.

Mr. COATSWORTH moved that the order, "House again in committee on Bill (No. 54) respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company." be discharged, and that the said Bill be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 96) to incorporate the International Radial Railway Company.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I move that the following clause be added to the Bill :-

The maximum passenger rate allowed to be charged over the track or tracks of the said company shall not exceed 2 cents a mile.

Mr. GIBSON.

It did not require a general Act in this instance, and it does not require a general Act to obtain many things, and this is exactly a case in If you make one road accept 2 point. cents a mile rate, all the others must accept it, if they wish to be competing lines. road, which it is proposed to build, will run through the best-settled portion of the province of Ontario, and some of the lines marked out by it run through a section of country not well supplied with railways, but very largely populated, and, if it be the fact that it has a large population in its territory, and that railways can now be built for very much less than formerly, it is high time that railway companies should recognize the fact that, as everything else has come down in price, the rates of railway travel should come down. As I told the House the other night, there is not a thing in common use which has not fallen in price with the exception of Everything in use during railway travel. the last forty years has come down one-half in price, or one-third, or even more. Railway travel forty years ago was over 3 cents a mile, and it is the same to-day. Freights have come down enormously, and why should not the ordinary traveller be recognized, as well as the freights; surely, he is entitled to the same consideration. apparently, he receives no consideration in this House or in this country. The State of Michigan has made great progress in this They have tackled the question of respect. railway travel over there, and they have compelled the roads to recognize a rate of 2½ cents per mile. Mr. MACLEAN (York). They are not compelled to do it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They sell those tickets here for $22.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). If they can do so, why should they reject this proposal that they should give 2 cents a mile passenger travel. It is said that we, as a country, have entered into a contract with these roads to allow them to establish themselves in this country, and until they have become paying concerns, we have no right to interfere with their traffic arrangements. To that we sim- not been managed, they would be paying concerns to-day. But, as a matter of fact, they have not t.v. been well managed.

And the greatest barnacle of all on our railways is in the cheap rates they give on through traffic. The great grain merchants in Chicago, great houses like Armour & Co., have grown enormously rich within the last few years, and have become a great power, and what is the reason of it? The reason is, that they have got such low rates on traffic for their western produce through Canada that the Canadian railways have only been enabled to make ends meet by maintaining their old passenger rates. they charged this foreign traffic at a higher rate, and if they gave some consideration to the Canadian farmer, they would be doing justice in the case; but, on the contrary, they have devoted all their energy, all their consideration, all their benefits to the through traffic of the United States, and have done nothing to encourage local traffic and local travel.

It is the road whose bonds stand the highest, it is the only road that has four tracks, and Another great barnacle is, that it it has succeeded in compelling all the other taken to pay the bonds of roads in companies to recognize the 2-cents-a-mile the United States which it claims are neces-principle. I wish to read a telegram I received the other day from Buffalo:

In answer to your telegram of this date, the New York State law fixes local rate on New York Central main line two cents per mile. No other trunk line in New York State has this rate locally, but of course they make the same rate to competing points.

This is from the passenger agent of the New York Central. This great line in New York State has made more money and carried more passengers than any other in the state, notwithstanding that it has seven great competing lines parallel with it. Surely, we ought to make an attempt to establish the same rate in this province, where a similar state of affairs prevail. The province of Ontario is very much similar to the State of New York. It is true, that the New York Central has a great deal more travel, put, comparatively speaking, that state and our province are very much alike, and we ought to try the experiment here. And, talking of experiments in legislation and experiments in the matter of railways, I wish to draw attention to what Bagehot says in one of his works on government and the consti-He says there is nothing like experiments in legislation; if you believe in a thing, try it. De not try it over the whole country, but pick out the place where the conditions are most favourable, and try your experiment there. I ask the House to compel this road, which has gone to no expense, which is to run through a well-populated part of the country, to make the experiment of 2-cents-a-mile railway travel. Surely, no harm could be done by that, for they are out no money now.

Mr. INGRAM. Why discriminate?

Mr. MACLEAN (York). We are not discriminating; we are asking them to accept a new set of conditions; and, if they accept them at the start, they cannot claim that any injustice is done to them. Take the There the 2-cents-a-mile case of England. rate has been adopted. The result of that policy has been to popularize railway travel, to increase the profits of the companies and to contribute very greatly to the convenience of the general public who use these railways. In favour of the 2-cents-a-mile rate, we have not only the argument that it will contribute to the convenience of the people, but we have the argument that it will increase the revenues of the railway companies, and enable them to pay larger dividends to their It may be asked then, why we do not let the companies recognize this fact and reduce the cost of travel? answer is, that they have hitherto refused In England, where to reduce their rates. this rate was imposed, for years and years they refused to recognize it in effect; they did in form. They treated those paying a penny-a-mile rate as if they were cattle, gave them poor trains and uncomfortable cars, at night and at But, in spite of and ran the trains hours. inconvenient spite strength \mathbf{of} public through the all, opinion, they were compelled to give the public paying the penny-a-mile rate reasonable accommodation, and that is the most popular form of travel in England to-day. If we go to Hungary in Austria, where the state has taken control of the railways, and where they have vindicated the right of the people to regulate the railways, especially in regard to their tariff, the reduction in the rate there has resulted in two great things: the number of people who travel on the roads has been many times increased, the revenue of the road has been enormously augmented, and the roads have become profitable concerns. We may be told that these are populous countries. Certainly they are, but the price there is much below the price in our country, and the mileage there is much larger than the mileage in Canada. So that if these countries have succeeded in conferring a benefit on their people by reducing the cost of travel, why can we not make the experiment in Canada? Why cannot we try it on one or two roads in Ontario? It is not going to hurt any one. Why is this House so anxious about the shareholders of this projected railway, in which not one dollar is put up? Why don't we tell these people: You must recognize the rights of the public; you must give some concessions to the public in return for the concessions we give to you to build the to the wants of the people and the carroad, and in giving you the opportunity to riage of freight, there is no more need for make money. If you want to run a railway in Canada, you must run it on the lines on which railways are run in England, in Germany, in New York state, in Hungary, and in many other countries. Let us say to them: You can take your charter, you can have your privilege, but it is on the condition that you recognize the fact that railway travel must come down in price, or we shall compel you to be the first company to inaugurate that rate of travel. It won't hurt them. They know the conditions put upon them when they start in; and if we do not make a start in connection with one company, it will never be made in this country, but the companies will continue to rule the people instead of the people ruling the companies. Now, I do not wish to go much further in the discussion of this question on the present occasion. I have a much stronger case in regard to another railway whose Bill comes before this House, but at present I shall content myself with saying, and I call upon the members to support me in saying, that in establishing this new company we should compel it to recognize the fact that railway travel must come down, and that they must reduce their rates to at least two cents per mile as the maximum; and that on condition of this reduced rate, they may go ahead with their line and see what they can do in reducing the exorbitant tax which the people are now forced to pay.

Mr. SPROULE. In seconding this resolution, I wish to say that I do so because I think it is in accordance with a principle we should adopt, and in no railway, to my mind, is it more applicable than to the one under consideration. If you look at this Bill you will find that it suggests one of two things: Either that it is designed for the purpose of locking up that section of country for the next five years, and holding it under the control of one corporation, who may take charge of it, building from time to time short sections of twenty miles each and turning them to useful account, holding out their privilege as a threat against other railway corporations who might wish to invade that country; or, on the other hand, that it is intended to be an electric railway through that district of country. Now, in looking upon the map you will be struck by this fact, that you can scarcely miles 20 ten in any direction to-day without striking a railway. because there is any need is not for additional railway an there that charter is asked for. A short time ago I had occasion to go through that section. I had to travel about twenty-seven miles to get to a certain point, and I went on three different lines of railway to get there, and we seemed to be crossing railways all the time. Therefore, to my mind, in regard an additional railway in that country than block out a section of twenty miles on any there is for the fifth wheel of a coach. I say that it suggests to us that there is some other scheme behind it, and what is it? It seems to me, in view of what has taken place lately in railway enterprises, that it means a radial railway for the purpose of getting control of that section of the country, to build a railway in small sections, and then running them as they can get possession of electric railways in the various towns. Why do I say so? Because I find, according to this Bill, that it takes the city of Hamilton for the starting point, and we know that the city is traversed at present by lines of railway in almost every direction.

The company may lay out, construct and operate lines of railway of the gauge of four feet, eight and one-half inches, radiating from a central point in or near the city of Hamilton to the following terminal points:-

Now, let me read the terminal points:

(a.) To the town of Waterloo in the county of Waterloo, passing through or near the towns of Galt, Preston, and Berlin, with a branch from some point on the said line between Hamilton and Waterloo to the city of Guelph, in the county of Wellington;

Now, this takes up lines between these towns: Galt, Preston, Berlin, Hamilton, Waterloo and Guelph.

(b.) Also to a point on the Niagara River in or near the village of Fort Erie, in the county of Welland, passing through the counties of Wentworth, Lincoln and Welland, with a branch from some point on the said line to a point on the shore of Lake Erie, near the mouth of the Grand River, passing through or near the village of Dunville;

Now, this is through another section of country that is already more than amply supplied with railway accommodation. the next clause says:

(c.) Also to the town of St. Marys, in the county of Perth, passing through or near the city of Brantford and the town of Woodstock, with a branch from a point on the said line to the shere of Lake Erie, in or near the village of Fort Burwell.

Now, you will notice there are three main lines, and at least three branches, and that these three main lines and these three branches include nearly all the important towns and villages in that south-western Then we go on to the other part of the Bill, and it gives us an additional reason for believing that this is really the intention of the promoters. Why? Because in the provisions for commencing operations they ask for certain powers:

Notwithstanding anything contained in the Railway Act, the provisional directors, for the purpose of commencing construction of any section of the said railway not to be less than twenty miles in length.

They may commence any portion of the twenty miles in length. As long as they of those proposed lines between any of those towns, and

So soon as 20 per cent of the $200,000 of the capital stock, or such larger sum as is equal to $2,500 per mile of such section, has been subscribed, and 10 per cent paid thereon.

or $4,000, they can commence operations. They may build that section from or to any one of these towns. In another clause of the Bill they disclose their hand a little more clearly, by asking power to amalgamate or make running arrangements with the street railways in those towns, and those street railways, most of them, are electric railways to-day, and they will be all electric railways in a short time. They were asking here a provision which was denied them, to make the street railways part of their line. Now, then, they go on to say:

Before commencing construction of a second section of the railway measuring not less than twenty miles in length, 25 per cent of $200,000 more of the unsubscribed capital stock, or such larger sum as is equal to $2,500 per mile of such section, shall be subscribed, and 10 per cent paid thereon as aforesaid.

In like manner the construction of any further section or sections of the said proposed railways measuring not less than twenty miles each, may be commenced as aforesaid when not less than $200,000 of the capital stock of the company, in addition to all capital stock of the company already subscribed for sections previously commenced, as hereinbefore provided, or such larger sum as shall be equal to $2,500 per mile of such section, has been subscribed, and 10 per cent paid thereon as aforesaid.

That is $5,000. Does not that show the plan which the contractors or promoters intend to follow. Already there is between Galt and Preston an electric road, four and a half miles in length, and I am told it is one of the best paying investments in western Ontario. This has given a new idea to speculators, and I presume the intention is to get possession of the south-western peninsular, where there is an immense population and a great many towns and villages; they hope to secure this control for the next five years for the purpose of connecting these towns and villages, as they from time to time raise a little capital and find it desirable to extend the project, and make it a paying investment. So practically we may look upon this as a huge electric railway scheme. I have already given facts sufficient to make out a strong case of suspicion, because further railway accommodation is not required, and there are already roads there, and so there is no reason for building the road except the fact that these new electric enterprises are spreading rapidly throughout the country to-day, and are paying enterprises. Why is this amendment specially applicable to this Bill? Because all the electric railways are now charging a lower rate than 2 cents per mile. If I take the electric road in Toronto, what do I find? There the people travel six miles for five cents, or less than one cent per mile. | ject were one to build railways in Manitoba yet there is no better paying investment there than the electric road. They are willing to carry a passenger round the city or its whole length for 5 cents. Some persons may, no doubt, say that the reason why this low rate pays in Toronto is because it is a city with over 200,000 inhabitants. But the road from Preston to Galt passes through an agricultural country, and yet shrewd men have invested their capital and have built the road, and although it is four and a half miles in length, the charge is only 5 cents, or about one cent per nile. owners of the road are nevertheless satisfied. At Walkerville there is an electric road three miles in length, for which 5 cents is paid. In every instance the rate charged is less than the hon, member for York proposes, and yet it is sufficient to induce the investment of money in these enterprises which in every instance return poor profits. If that is the case, it is specially proper that we should carry the amendment so that the rate shall not be more than 2 cents per mile, which, as I have shown, is higher than that charged on electric roads. I come now to Ottawa. The electric cars carry a passenger from the Union Depot to Rockliffe, which I am told is about five miles, for 5 cents, and back again at the same rate. There is no city at Rockliffe. Ottawa is a comparatively small city, having about 47,000 people, and yet the investment is a paying one and the They do even better owners are satisfied. than this, for they grant six tickets for 25 cents, or less than 4 cents for five miles, and between 5.30 and 7 o'clock they give eight tickets for 25 cents. Yet these rates pay, and the owners are willing to give them, and have done so without the application of outside pressure. If these roads pay at i these rates, and the best evidence that they do is by a practical experience as shown by their returns, and if they pay even when they run between small towns and through an agricultural country, such an enterprise between Hamilton and Dundas, Galt, Guelph and Elora, and connecting these towns must pay as well as a line between Galt and Preston. There is no reason why it should not do so, for the district is well populated and the towns are comparatively large; and if the scheme is ever carried out, as I believe it is intended, and these towns are connected, and the promoters of this Bill thus acquire street railway rights throughout this territory, if another company comes to this Parliament and seeks incorporation for a road there we shall be met with the same objection as was presented in the Railway Committee to-day, that an investment of capital has been made, that this company has certain vested rights and that Parliament has no right to interfere with them until the five years granted them to build the road have expired. We should be cau-ticus in acting on these matters. If the pro-

where such did not exist, to build a radial railway extending from a central point, north, south, east and west, I could understand it; but a road starting in Hamilton, which is called the hub of the universe there. and I give the city credit for enterprise and activity, for it is one of the finest cities in Canada, would prove one of the finest paying speculations, and this House should adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York compelling the company not to charge more than 2 cents per mile. If we go to the railways themselves, what is our experience? The hon, member for York (Mr. Maclean) has told the House that when the proposal was made to limit the rate charged by the New York Central to 2 cents per mile, it was opposed on the same ground as that taken by hon, members opposed to this amendment. It was said that the money invested in railways gave no adequate returns, that if the rates were reduced men would no longer invest in railway enterprises. But the amendment was carried in the legislature. Those in favour of the amendment said that more people would travel. We know that such is the fact, and proof is to be seen in every excursion. It is an undeniable fact that this corporation, which has been for years operating between Suspension Bridge and New York, with branches radiating in different directions, is the best paying railway on the continent. There was, no doubt, some reasons why this amendment should not have been inserted in the Railway Bill before the House the other night, but no Bill brought before Parliament has furnished stronger reasons for having incorporated in it this amendment than the present Bill under consideration. for the reasons I have given. There are many other reasons that could be advanced. but I do not wish to appear to talk out the Bill. I should like to see the Bill pass, but I want a full and free expression of the opinion of members on the subject, because I believe there are many hon, members who believe as I do, that the adoption of this amendment will prove no detriment to the enterprise and will not prove likely to reduce the earnings of the road after it is put in operation, and as this will be an electric road, and no electric road is charging more than 2 cents per mile, the amendment moved by the hon. member for York should become law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have listened with some considerable interest to the discussion on this question, and I feel bound to say that, theoretically considered at all events, there is no reasonable doubt that where we create railway corporations, and more particularly where we create railway corporations running through a country already well served, this House has full and ample right to attach just such an amendment as this suggested. More than that, I am not at all sure that the time has not come when we should introduce such amendments into Acts obtained for new roads. If a new road is going to be introduced in such a region as the Niagara peninsular there. is no doubt whatever that the promoters of it and the parties who subscribe must see their way very clearly, and I believe there is a great deal of truth in the allegation made by the mover that were a cheaper rate given the railways would be compensated by the increased travel. I think that has been pretty abundantly shown by the experience in England and other countries. I have not had very much time to examine the details of this amendment, and it is possibly rather awkward to discuss a matter of this kind sprung somewhat suddenly on the House in respect to a particular road. I would suggest to the hon, the mover (Mr. Maclean) that it would conduce better to his purpose-which, I presume, is to have a full expression of opinion from the House-if he were to introduce his amendment on the third reading of I think, speaking from recollecthe Bill. tion, that where a similar clause has been introduced in the case of English railroads, that all that has been required is that there should be one train each way per day.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). In New York state it is not so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. speaking of the English tactics. They have a parliamentary train, as it is called, on which the rate is one penny a mile, but that, however, must have been from a very early period of railroad history in Eugland. I believe that the train has been found to be profitable enough. I think it would probably serve the hon. gentleman's purpose better if he would bring this motion on third reading rather than in committee. For myself, I have considerable sympathy with the proposition he has laid down, and while I see grave difficulties about interfering with roads, which have already been constructed, and which are burdened with heavy debts: and roads which are not paying anything like a decent interest on the amount of capital-and foreign capital at that-which has been put into them: I must say that in the case of new roads constructed under present conditions, I cannot but feel that there is very fair ground for taking some such step as the hon, gentleman (Mr. Maclean) suggests, and insisting that some reasonable rate, which it is for the Government to consider, should be introduced for the bulk, at any rate, of the traffic.

Mr. MASSON. I was surprised to see the hon gentleman (Mr. Maclean) discuss the question now, as I understood he would wait until the third reading of the Bill

Mr. SPROULE. If the third reading is to be forced on to-night it will have to be discussed now.

Mr. MULOCK. It would hardly be advisable at this stage, and on a partial discussion, to vote down a proposition that is to be introduced later on. The sense of the House should be taken on the proposition only after a full discussion. I will not take up the time of the committee further than to say that I sympathize with the movement in question, and in addition to the arguments that have already been advanced, it appears to me that a statutory limitation such as this will have the effect of developing greater economy, not only in the management, but in the initial cost of the railways. Heretofore, we have been in the habit of incorporating railways and allowing them to water their stock, and their nominal capital finds its way at par into the hands of the general public, and at par become a charge for all time upon the earning power of a railway, which, after all, is a monopoly to tax the people. It is impossible to regard a railway so far as it concerns the people that are served, by it other than in the enjoyment of a monopoly. Geographically, it excludes all others from the same territory, and, that being the case, it is our duty at the initial stage, such as this, to put in conditions that confront the investing public. Nor does this proposition differ in the slightest degree from the present statute law respecting railways. A provision of the Railway Act entitles the Governor in Council to reduce railway tolls when a railway has already been incorporated. That is decidedly a more severe mode of treatment than the proposition now before us, because the proposition involved in this motion is to put this condition in as part of the charter, so that the investors know in advance, at least the outside earning power. That cannot be said in reference to the provision of the law which entitles the Government. without the sanction of the proprietors, to reduce their tolls. I think, therefore, that ceeding in the right direction, and I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is prothat he will not allow it to be formally defeated, but will either take the substantial opinion of the committee now, or else have the proposition—unprejudiced by being formally defeated-brought up at a later stage.

Mr. DENISON. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) referred to the English railways having a penny a mile rate. I know that was in existence twenty-seven or twenty-eight years ago when I first went to England, and I am quite satisfied that it must have been incorporated in the original charters to railways. If the English Parliament would do that so many years ago, not knowing what the result of railway traffic would be, it is much more necessary for us now to start out on a new line. We have been going. in Canada, on a three-cents a mile rate, and it has been urged by some hon, gentlemen

That seems to me, a very poor argument, not obliged to take it. If we are ever to commence limiting the rates we might as well commence now. some time or other, and why not begin at it go unanswered; and, as the time is so once. As has been pointed out by previous short. I move that the committee rise, respeakers, this company has practically covered the whole of the Niagara peninsula, and also up to Guelph and Brantford. The Ontario Government have recognized the principle that railways should not be allowed to earn too much, for I find this section in one of their Acts respecting electric railways, passed last session:

Tolls and fares to be levied by the company as nearly as possible shall be so fixed and regulated, that after paying "working expenses," the balance of annual receipts shall not exceed 8 per cent, or $8 on every $100, on the total capital stock of the company actually paid up in cash and then issued and outstanding; and if in any year the gross receipts from tolls and fares shall be such, that after deducting therefrom the "working expenses" there shall remain an an ount exceeding ten per cent of the total amount actually paid up in cash on the capital stock of the company then outstanding, then all such excess shall be placed to the credit of a special account to be called "the surplus tolls account." provided that in no case shall the fares exceed the maximum rates prescribed by subsection 7 and 8, of section 43 of this Act.

That shows the desire on the part of the legislature of Ontario to control and regulate the earning power of these railways. I also see that in section 7, the Bill says:

The fares to be taken by the company for each passenger shall not exceed five cents for any distance exceeding three miles, and shall not exceed 1 cent per mile for any additional distance. Childrep under ten years of age shall be carried for three miles for three cents, and for any additional distance at the rate of half a cent a mile.

Lately, in Toronto, when we were making a new bargain with the Street Railway Company, we exacted the condition that between the hours of five and half-past six o'clock, in the morning, and five o'clock and half-past six in the evening, passengers should be carried for 3 cents. The result is, that a passenger can travel the belt line 8 miles for 3 cents, or at less than 1/2 cent a mile; or he can travel from West Toronto Junction, down Dundas Street, along Queen Street and King Street, to the Woodbine, a distance of 7 or 8 miles, for 3 At any other time of the day, by buying the bunch tickets, he can travel the same distances for 4 cents, or, if he pays cash, for 5 cents. I believe the road incorporated to run from Beamsville to Grimsby is also tied down to city rates. If ever there was an opportunity when we might, without injuring anybody, make a start in this direction, it is in this case, when we are incorporating a new line. There may be arguments against applying this provision to old lines where vested rights exist; but in this to-night that we should not make an ex-case, if the company do not want our charter ception in the case of this particular line, as we propose to give it to them, they are

Mr. MASSON. After the discussion that We have got to commence on a new line has taken place, I do not feel disposed to let port progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY-DISMISSAL OF LIEUT.-COL. LAZIER.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia a matter that was a subject of discussion last year; I refer to the dismissal of Lieut.-Col. Lazier, of Belleville. I do not intend to discuss the matter to-night; I only wish to make a suggestion. I do not ask the hon. Minister to reply to-night; I do not think it would be reasonable to expect him to do so. The hon. Minister may remember that Lieut.-Col. Lazier was summarily dismissed from the service, and, when the matter was brought up in the House, the then Minister of Militia, as the hon, gentleman will see on referring to "Hansard," defended the action which resulted in his dismissal. That action seemed very severe and cruel. He was dismissed on a report, without inquiry; and the then Minister approved of what had taken place, and in fact delivered judgment, so far as the head of the department could, in advance of the inquiry. The result of the inquiry was to reinstate Col. Lazier, and, therefore, it is fair to assume that his dismissal was not justifiable. Now, I ask the Minister, on behalf of Col. Lazier, if he deems it proper to do so, to investigate the circumstances connected with his dismissal and reinstatement; and, if he finds that he can do so, to as publicly relieve the colonel from the charges of which he was accused on the floor of the House, and which must have been foundationless. Although he was reinstated, the language of the Minister of Militia on that occasion is on record, and is not as yet I ask this to be done withdrawn officially. as a matter of justice to Col. Lazier, and I think it will be so regarded by the militia generally, who are not supposed to be under as strict martial law as members of the regular service. I need not say that in making this suggestion, although I do so cheerfully, I am not making it voluntarily, but at the suggestion of persons who are interested in having the charges against the colonel withdrawn.

Mr. DICKEY. As the hon, gentleman intimated, when he began, I have no personal knowledge whatever of the matter to which he alludes, and, therefore, I am not in a position to express any opinion about it. I will certainly, as he desires, have the papers laid vice between Shediac, Summerside, Pictou, as promising that, because it entirely de- which we give $10,000. pends on what I find in the papers.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Three lines of steamers to run between St. John and Halifax, or either, and the West Indies and Sout's America.. $80,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe there is a reduction here of $23,000, to which I have no objection, but I wish to know under what circumstances it is made.

The subsidies, when ar-Mr. FOSTER. ranged about five years ago, included three lines. One ran from St. John to British Guiana, touching at the West India Islands and the islands in the Carribbean Sea, making some eight or ten ports of call. The second ran from Halifax to Jamaica, and the the third from Halifax to ports in Cuba. For these three services we paid $103.000. This year we have entered into an arrangement by which one of these services is dispensed with, namely, the service of Cuba. Owing to their peculiar tariff conditions and the advantageous position they gave the United States as compared with us, that did not prove a very profitable route. It has been dispensed with, and the services going on are the round service from St. John and Halifax to British Guiana, calling at the islands in the Carribbean Sea, and the service from Halifax to Jamaica. The service to Cuba being dropped, we saved that amount of subsidy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Did the old con-be reduced. tract expire?

Mr. FOSTER. It expired, and a new contract was made, subject to a money vote in Parliament, which contract was laid on the Table some two or three weeks ago.

Mr. FORBES. What length of time does it cover?

Mr. FOSTER. Five years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Same bonus?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and same parties.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman explain the reduction of $2.-000.

It serves that long section of coast there which is without railway communication. A railway does run a distance along the bay, but it is not completed to the end of the mouth of Baie des Chaleurs. It runs twice a week.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see you have struck out the words "between St. Peter's, Irish Cove and Grand Narrows.' If you reduce the service the subsidy should

Mr. FOSTER. In the contract entered into with the Bras d'Or Steamship Company for the current year, the routes have been somewhat changed, and the service referred to as between St. Peter's, Irish Cove and Mulgrave is now a distinct service, but run in connection with the other routes, and it seemed advisable to strike out the words.

Steam communication during the season of 1895, for not less than 32 full round trips between St. John, N.B., and Halifax, N.S., via Yarmouth and other way ports.....

$7,000

Mr. BOWERS. This was formerly $5,000. Two years ago the Hon. L. E. Baker wrote asking me to try and get the Government to grant $2,000 more and have the steamer Westport and Freeport. The memcall at bers for St. John. Lunenburg, Queen's, Yarmouth and myself waited upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce, now the Premier, and placed the matter before him. pledged himself to put in the $2,000 extra. As I understand the hon. Minister, when

Hon. L. E. Baker was here this spring he made some objections to making these trips. If the hon. Minister would insist that these calls should be made at Westport and Freeport when it is not foggy, they would be made without any trouble. We do not wish the steamboat to stop when it is foggy weather. There is not more fog there than there is at any of the ports on the south shore of Nova Scotia, such as Lunenburg, Lockeport and Barrington. There is not There is not more trouble in stopping at Westport than there is in stopping at these ports on the south shore. If in making the contract with the Yarmouth Steamship Company it was made a condition that they should stop at Westport and Freeport when fair, there would be no trouble in giving the communication. I do not wish to ask anything unreasonable, but I think communication with these ports should be given.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can say that this is the estimate that has been given. It is impossible, I think, to make such a change to the conditions as proposed.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not ask for any change this year, but for the future.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister will take It into consideration, no doubt.

Steam communication from the 1st of July, 1895, to the 30th June, 1896, between St. John, Digby and Annapolis.. $12,500

Mr. McMULLEN. Who has this contract?

Mr. FOSTER. The steamship "Monticello." owned by St. John City Company.

Mr. BOWERS. I notice a new boat run by the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company twice a day to St. John. Can this new boat carry passengers and collect fares where this other boat has a license and Dominion subsidy?

Mr. FOSTER. There is nothing to prevent them carrying passengers, and nothing to prevent the passengers paying if they wish to do so.

Steam communication for the season of 1895, to 30th June, 1896, between Pictou, N.S., Murray Harbour, Georgetown and Montague Bridge, P.E.I....

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That seems a comparatively small subsidy. What service is rendered?

$1,200

Mr. FOSTER. It is a small subsidy; but the service, though not very large, is very useful. It is carried on by the Three Rivers Steamship Company with the steamship "Electra." giving a regular steam weekly service between Pictou, N.S., Murray Harbour, Georgetown and Montague Bridge, P.E.I.—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has Montague got a bridge, too?

Mr. Bowers.

Mr. FOSTER. That has no connection with the political bridge—calling thereat on all voyages from Pictou and on all voyages returning.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What size of steamer is this?

Mr. FOSTER. Her tonnage is not given in my notes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If this subsidy is sufficient for the service in question, it would seem that the other subsidies are on rather a gigantic scale. I should say there was not enough difference between this service and that mentioned in the item last voted to justify the payment of ten times as much for the one as for the other. The comparison suggests that steamships hailing from St. John are rather more favourably dealt with than steamships from other parts of the maritime provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be an easy rule of judgment to apply, but I think my hon, friend will scarcely think it a fair one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Prima facie, it would appear so.

Steam communication from May 1st, 1895, to June 20th, 1896, between Grand Manan and the mainland..... $4,000

Mr. BOWERS. Why has this been reduced? I understand the boat does not pay its owners now, and is run under great difficulties.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems to be the amount of the contract.

Steam communication from April 1st, 1895, to June 30th, 1896, between Port Mulgrave, Arichat and Canso, and between Port Mulgrave and Guysboro', and from April 1st to November 30th, 1895, between Port Mulgrave and Port Hood

$4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe there is a reduction there, how have you affected it?

Mr. FOSTER. They get $5,000 per year, but this vote is for only part of a season. The other part is the supplementary estimates for the current year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to this item, but I think this is a proper occasion on which the inon. gentieman should explain to us, so far as lies in his power, what is the position of the negotiations with Mr. Huddart or his company with respect to the proposed twenty-knot service of which we have heard a good deal, but which appears to have declined to materialize. I should like a full, comprehensive statement—I do not want a history—of the present state of the negotiations.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid I shall have hard work to keep myself within the hon. gentleman's definition. For a full and comprehensive statement of the negotiations I would refer my hon, friend to the revised edition of "Hansard." In "Hansard" for the last three years will be found the state of the negotiations fully declared up to the end of last session. Nothing has transpired to vary very much the conditions of that question up to the present, and chiefly on this account. As my hon, friend knows, about a year ago, we had an intercolonial conference in the city of Ottawa, at which certain points with reference to intercolonial and Imperial trade and communication were taken up, and a strong resolution was passed by the conference in favour of a continuous line of steam communication, taking in the Pacific and the Atlantic by way of Canada. Resolutions of sympathy, and even more than sympathy, with that proposal were passed. Lord Jersey afterwards made his report to the British Government, he having been commissioned to sit at that conference as a representative of that Government. That took a certain amount of time, and it was found impossible to push the scheme, in fact it was inadvisable to attempt to do it, until the report of Lord Jersey should have been made, and the British Government should have had an opportunity of giving some attention to that report, and of giving an answer, in fact, to the representations which were made as to how they would look upon the scheme. Lord Jersey's report was made in due course, about January of this year, and was very favourable indeed, as my hon. friend knows if he has read that report, as no doubt he has. The British Government have been considering it. My hon. friend may have noticed not long since that in the reply of Lord Rosebery to the delegation that waited upon him to urge the matter upon the favourable consideration of the Government, his views were entirely sympathetic, as were also those of the Marquis of Ripon, Colonial Secretary. I think his statement was of this tenor, that the subject was now before the Government, and that he himself and the Marquis of Ripon were sympathetic with the movement, and they hoped that any action of the Government would tend to aid the spirit of the resolutions, would be in the line of the resolutions. which were proposed by the intercolonial conference. The British Government have not, however, yet given their decision with reference to the matter, although in answer to a question in the House not long since, it was stated that the matter was being forwarded with all possible speed, they were getting information, and having reports made by the Post Office Department and some other departments. However, their reply has not been given, and I suppose it is not likely that any reply will now be given until the elections have taken place and the new Government are seated in power there. However, that has all had the effect of preventing it from being considered: and it was impossible for that reason alone. even if the conditions of the money market had not had an influence, for Mr. Huddart to do anything with his scheme beyond continually working at it, as I suppose he has been. I suppose the question might properly be asked as to whether the temporary arrangement has been continued. It has been continued in Mr. Huddart's case. As to the question of how much longer it will be continued, we are waiting, and have been willing to give as much time as possible, until the decision of the British Government should have been made. It is a question whether any set of capitalists could take up the scheme, or really be prepared to say what they would do, until the mind of the British Government had been made known with reference to it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does this involve to us in incidentals?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Excuse me. There are $750,000 to be paid for the Atlantic service. But coupled with that, and particularly so far as assistance by the British Government was concerned, there were other propositions looking to increased assistance to the Pacific service, and likewise to a cable service. How do we stand with respect to those two propositions? Besides supplying $750,000 a year to the fast Atlantic service, are we expected to increase the subsidy to a Pacific service? What is our subsidy to the Pacific line at present?

Mr. FOSTER. Our subsidy at present, I think, is $125,000 a year. That is statutory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But that ought to appear in our Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Am I to understand that in the $37,000,000, or whatever it is we are asked for, that $125,000 does not show?

Mr. FOSTER. I see it is not here. This is statutory as well.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But our estimates are expected to include statutories. Now if, as I understand—and I have looked over the estimates tolerably carefully—the hon, gentleman has omitted that from the total amount chargeable to consolidated fund, it is quite evident that our charges ought to be increased by $125,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not understand how, in his department, such a very obvious error should have occurred.

Mr. FOSTER. It never has been placed in the Estimates, I find.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. passes his eye over the ordinary summary, on condition of their helping on the Pacific. he will see that all the other charges authorized by the statutes are duly put in, amounting to $18.942,000. It is a grave blunder, whoever is responsible for it, and. of course, the Minister of Finance is responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. I must take the responsibility.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That an item like that authorized by statute has not appeared-

Mr. FOSTER. It has not appeared from the first.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The fact of the matter is that with that addition our estimated expenditure would be up to $37.-000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. You have to add just that amount to it, without doubt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that he can alter these estimates, but I would certainly recommend that in the future that it be put in. Is there anything eise in the same shape?

Mr. FOSTER. Not that I know of.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this $125,000 to the Pacific to be increased?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not so sure. My hon. friend will recollect that in the Act authorizing the payment, the Government was authorized to subsidize a monthly service at so much, or a fortnightly at so much.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much more?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not recollect. I think it was in the Act of four years ago. As regards the question of the hon. gentleman, our liabilities and our possibilities of aiding, the Pacific service are defined in the Act. If we have a fortnightly service, we are authorized to give a certain subsidy; if we have a monthly service, we are authorized to give a certain subsidy; and it depends upon the frequency with which the service is needed, and our ability to pay, whether we shall incur a larger amount or keep it less. There is no coincident obligation as between the Atlantic weekly fast line and the Pacific line, to make it necessary that subsidy is Canada expected to give towards we should follow a fast Atlantic service with a fortnightly service. But, of course, if trade develops, and it is found to be advantageous to do that; it might be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Speaking from recollection, I think that the British Ambassador, or the British representative, and likewise the Australian commissioners, have made it tolerably clear that any assistance they might give would involve the necessity of helping the Pacific service.

Mr. FOSTER. No. I think not. The proposal that they did make formerly was that Mr. Foster.

If he the Atlantic service should be accelerated

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. about the cable?

Mr. FOSTER. The cable has no connection at all with the steamship services, so far as the subsidies are concerned. That stands apart entirely by itself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But have we made or held out any inducements in that direction?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend probably knows what has happened, because it is detailed in the reports of the intercolonial conference; all that has happened is either detailed or outlined there. Since the intercolonial conference has held its session, in accordance with one of the resolutions of that conference-I am speaking from memory-tenders were asked for. In order to get information as to the cost, there were two methods which could be employed, one of which was to make a survey of the probable lines that would be followed across the Pacific Ocean. That survey, according to one of the resolutions of conferwas to be undertaken by Australian colonies, Canada and Great Britain bearing equal shares of the expense. Another alternative proposition was that the cost practically might be approximated by simply calling for tenders, and the amount of tender would show what responsible construction companies charge for the work. That suggestion was acted upon, and I believe, at the present time, such is the condition of engineering and scientific knowledge in that matter, together with practical methods of laying cable, that a survey is not at al! what it used to be, that a cable is laid, practically, at the same time the vessel makes what limited amount of surveying is necessary. So I think it is practically settled that the cost of the undertaking will be ascertained by the tenders put in by responsible companies, and that it will not be necessary to go to a large expenditure for making a thorough survey of the Pacific. A portion of that ocean has already been surveyed by the British Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What the cable?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing is settled at all in regard to that. The only obligation that Canada has assumed by the promise of the Government is this: That in the event of a survey to ascertain the best route for a cable being made, jointly by Great Britain, the Australian colonies, and Canada, we should pay one-third of that expense. colonies, the That expense, of course, will be small; but I feel certain now that this will not take place, and that it will not be considered necessary. Therefore, this country is not bound in any way to any money sum.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You have been informally excluded from the Sandwich; Islands.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, from having it as an independent, or rather a British point, entirely out of the control of a foreign power. Of course, the Sandwich Islands would be very glad to have the cable stop there as a commercial matter, but it is in the line of policy to have it stop at a neutral place, or rather at a place controlled by the British It is the general belief that Government. Fanning island, further along towards the Australian colonies than the Sandwich Islands, will be selected, as it is quite available, and practicable for the working of an ocean cable.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How far is it from the Sandwich islands?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know the exact number of miles, but it is quite a distance. Scientific men say it is perfectly well distributed, as between the two continents, so to speak, so as to make a practical working assured.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is it an inhabited island?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I think there are some natives on it. It belongs to Great Britain.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I notice in the summary of the amount that all that is authorized by statute for mail subsidies and steamship subventions is $73,000. The item referred to is $125,000. How does this error creep into the summary.

summary. We voted, last year, a total of $416,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This shows a decrease, when, in reality, there is a large increase.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Certainly, if $125,000 was voted by statute.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it in last year?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not know. But if $125,000 was voted by statute when only $73,000 appears in the summary, instead of a decrease this year there is an increase.

Mr. FOSTER. The same remark would apply to the sum voted by statute last year, and the sums would balance.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The amount voted last year, statutory and otherwise, was $416,000. It is given in the table as amount voted and authorized by statute. No objection was raised by the Minister. Here we have put down only $73,000 as authorized by statute, whereas the Minister admits that $125,000 was so authorized.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon, gentleman will look at the summary he will see that it is simply a summary of what appears in the Estimates, and the sum of which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and myself have been speaking, does not appear in the Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For what purpose is the $73,000?

Mr. FOSTER. For the China and Japan service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. dependent subsidy.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before leaving the question of the fast Atlantic service under consideration, I must express my opinion that the Government made a mistake in offering such a large subsidy for a fast Atlantic service, especially for such a fast service as the Minister called for. I lieve we have thereby hindered the improvement of the service we now have. We certainly have not encouraged the company to go on with the improvements they have heen making from year to year. I believe the Allan and the Dominion lines in past years were engaged in making considerable improvements in their vessels with a view to keeping pace with the demands of the trade, and since this proposition was made for a fast Atlantic service, further improvements have not been carried out. companies are in doubt to-day as to whether Canada is going to carry out the proposed fast Atlantic service or not, and thereby we have been hampering and hindering the companies that have served us so well and faithfully in the past. Mr. FOSTER. I do not know about the not think that justice is being done to existing lines, and if it is not the intention of the Government to complete, immediately, arrangements for a fast Atlantic serviceand I earnestly hope they will not do so, in view of the enormous cost involved by the subsidy—they will allow the matter to stand over, and do justice to those companies that have been endeavouring to serve the country faithfully and well for a number of The action of the Government has hindered improvements in the present lines of steamers. They are in doubt to-day whether it is wise to go on with improvements to meet the demands of the passenger traffic as well as the freight trade, and the longer the companies are kept in suspense. the worse it is from their standpoint, and also as regards the country's interests. is desirable that this question should be settled at the earliest possible moment, and I earnestly hope that it will be settled by rescinding the statute, and allowing the present lines to carry out their improvements and to continue to give that fairly good service to the country which they have rendered in past years, perhaps not such a fast service as we might like, but we are limited in population, and we have diffi-culties to contend with in establishing a steamship service similar to that running to United States ports, and it will be some years before this country can afford to pay the very heavy subventions it is proposed to give in order to rival lines to American ports.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to add a word to what my friend (Mr. McMullen) has said with regard to the policy which the Gov-ernment intends to pursue in reference to the fast Atlantic service. I have always believed that the policy of the Government in subsidizing parallel lines of railway and kindred matters has not been in the publie interest. We have in the Allan line an old-established concern, which has done efficient service for the money received, and the Government has had no reason to find fault with the manner in which that company performed its contract. A large amount of Canadian capital is invested in it, and the proposal of the Government to subsidize a fast line, at a cost of $750,000 a year, inferentially amounts to a proposal to render the property of the Allan line worthless, and thus to make a Canadian enterprise a failure. The proposition to subsidize a fast line costing us $750,000 a year, is a proposition which exceeds the means of this country, and which proposes to give facilities that really the country does not require. The Allan line, with the increased efficiency which would follow an addition to its subsidy, is ample to give this country all the steamship and postal facilities with the mother country that we need. I repeat that the proposition of the Government is calculated to destroy the property already existing in a steamship line which is essentially a Canadian enterprise.

Mr. KENNY. My hon, friend (Mr. Charlton) states that Canada cannot afford $750,-000 a year to obtain a first-class fast Atlantic service. That is not the opinion of the Parliament of Canada, because we have repeatedly voted this amount. I would remind my hon, friend that in years past the provinces of old Canada, Ontario and Quebec, paid for their trans-Atlantic service a sum of $500,000 a year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. $416,000 is the amount.

Mr. KENNY. At all events, if in days long past it was advisable to pay that large sum of money. I contend that it is wise and prudent for us, in order to divert traffic to our country, to offer such pecuniary inducements as will secure for Canada the most efficient service. This matter has been so frequently discussed that I am unwilling to delay the committee, at the closing days of the session. I must remark that in any arrangement which we shall make for an Atlantic service, it should be essentially a Canadian service; a service which throughout the whole year shall have its terminal ports within our boundary. At present the months, make their principal expenditure in a foreign country. I therefore hope that whatever service we may arrange for shall be solely a Canadian service.

and the second second substitution of the second second substitution and the second se

Mr. FOSTER. That is in the Act.

Mr. KENNY. I am very glad to hear it. I desire further to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the reduction of $32,000 made this year in these steamship subsidies, is nearly all on the West India service. The Minister of Finance has explained to us that for reasons peculiar to the Island of Cuba, it was thought advisable to discontinue the service to that island. These subsidies were given with the object of developing trade, and if trade does not follow. I quite recognize that it is not wise for us to continue them. However, whilst the trade of Cuba has fallen off, the trade of our eastern and western provinces has largely developed with the island of Hayti, and it is within my knowledge that application has been made to the Government for a subvention for a steamship service between the Dominion and that island. This is a very economical year. and the Finance Minister, in a moment of economy, has reduced these subsidies by $32,000, but I trust next year he will take this matter into his serious consideration, and will see his way clear to subsidize a steam service with Hayti.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not agree with the hon, member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) in regard to this fast Atlantic service. I did not favour it when it was first proposed, nor when it was adopted, but I am not disposed to enter into a discussion of it now, because I believe it will be an I quite agree with the abortive attempt. hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that this proposal stands in the way of the improvement of the existing steamship service, which has conferred substantial benefits upon the country. lieve that our whole experience shows that for a considerable portion of the year, steamers cannot run rapidly up the St. Lawrence. The ice sinks there and disappears from the surface, but the self-registering thermometers which are used by the steamers indicate its presence so that they are obliged to run very slowly in the earlier part of the season, on account of this danger. you subsidize a fast line of steamers between England and Canada, you have at best but one steamer per week, and for postal purposes you are obliged to send your letters via New York for six days in the week. You accomplish nothing in that direction. but you interfere with our ordinary steamers, which are running on the Atlantic. You are not only subsidizing a line of steamers built abroad for the purpose of entering into competition with those that are owned by your own people: but, by holding out this Allan and Dominion lines, in the winter subsidy, you are seriously impeding the improvement of these two lines, which may be regarded as domestic lines, and so long as the offer remains, and there is an expectation that it will be acted upon, that impediment to the improvement of the present Atlantic service will be continued. I am quite confident that with a moderate increase in the subsidy to the Allan line, you could get steamers which would run with as much rapidity as the safety of the route permits. That arrangement, I believe, would prove more advantageous to the country than what you propose.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to prolong the discussion on the matter, and I do not think it would be wise for us, after the principle has been settled by the House, to debate the Government policy over again on an item of the Estimates. want, however, to speak on one point which my hon, friend (Mr. Mills) made, fairly enough. He states that so long as the offer remains, and the scheme which that offer was supposed to promote has not been successfully obtained. it has the effect of preventing improvement in the existing lines. That is a legitimate criticism to a certain extent, and I will meet that criticism in two ways. In the first place, it does not prevent the improvement of the class of vessels which carry the great bulk of Canada's freight, that is, the better freight vessels, which also carry passengers. and which, with the modern improvements are cheaper and better freight-carrying vessels. I believe it will be found, as each year goes over, that the problem of ocean carriage will be worked out in two waysthat there will be a differentiation of vessels, and the passenger traffic will be largely conducted by simply passenger vessels, on which the amount of freight carried will be exceedingly small, while the great pro portion of the trade of the country will be carried by improved freight vessels. But I think it has been pretty well proved by experiment that you cannot very well combine the two. Therefore, I do not think the criticism of the hon, gentleman has the weight that he supposes. In the second place, I would meet the criticism thus. Our policy has been announced and has been supported by the House, that it would be of inestimable benefit to Canada to have a fast line making connection between our ports and the ports of Great Britain, and that it is worth while to sacrifice some time and some effort to bring that about, and if, in the meantime, there is to be some disadvantage, against that is to be set the great advantage that we believe the scheme will ultimately bring to us. At the same time, I believe that the criticism has weight in this respect, that the project should be pushed as quickly and as definitely as possible, and not be allowed to hang too long. I think the argument is perfectly legitimate, that has been advanced, that it has been found impossible to get the scheme defined. I hold that in one shape or another, itely taken up until the British Govern-ment have an opportunity of saying what their view is in regard to it, and how far they are disposed to carry out Lord Jersey's report. When that is done, the decks will be clear, so to speak, and it will then be possible to tell in a comparatively short time just what we can get, and how we can get it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is the further point, the inutility of the line for the postal service.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon, friend pleads that we should never have an improved service because it will not be a perfect service, and, therefore, we should not take the first step, it will be a long time before we have a line of fast steamers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. is another side of this question which the Government of Canada do not appear to me have pressed sufficiently vigorously. Whether this expenditure of $750,000 is defensible at all I doubt, for various reasons; but, waiving the question whether our position is such as to justify us in spending that amount of money to obtain a twentyknot service. I have no faith whatever in a uniform twenty-knot service being maintained; and the statements made by the hon, gentleman went very far to show that there is an extreme probability that the contract will be so drawn that while we talk of twenty knots, we shall not receive anything like it, or more than a fourteen or sixteen-knot service. teen or sixteen-knot service. If the contract is drawn in the way that the hon. gentleman and the papers laid before the House indicated that it would be drawn, we shall not get a twenty-knot service at all. But the point I wish to press—and it is a point which I impressed on the British Government a good many years ago-is that if this matter is taken hold of by us, with the view of establishing a service that would be largely Imperial in its character, with the view of developing closer communication between Great Britain and the colonies, we should expect, as a matter of right, not as a matter of favour, the British Government to keep up their end of the stick much better than they propose to do. provide a fast service if not a mor If should give us, monopoly, at all events, a large share whole postal service, I think that would be their simply duty; I do not at all approve of the way in which they have dealt in the last twenty years with applications made by the present and preceding Government on that subject. When I came into contact with the British postal authorities, I found among them a great deal of ignorance in reference to Canada, and a disposition not to get out of their old grooves no matter how clearly it could be proved that swift communication from British port to British port could be developsuch a line, they might well lend us sub-linure advantageously to the country. stantial assistance, and it is their duty to do so. I would, therefore, impress very strongly upon the Government that they might very well make a demand upon the British government that, if we ever go into this business, they should help us substantially.

Mr. FOSTER. In addition to that-and I am very glad that the hon, gentleman has brought it up-I wish to say that I believe the British government will be disposed to deal generously with us in the matter of postal service and subsidy.

Mr. KENNY. I am quite sure that the British government will not deal in that manner with the Government of Canada unless we have an efficient service; that is the first condition they will impose. hon, friend from Bothwell does not seem to have much confidence in the Canadian route or in the efficacy of a fast service. Let me say to him that of all the steamship lines engaged in the north Atlantic service during the past year, the Cunard is the only line that has retained the number of first-class Owing to the depression in passengers. commerce which has prevailed on both sides of the Atlantic, the number of people travelling across the Atlantic on pleasure or on business has been very much reduced, and all the steamship lines have felt that very seriously except the Cunard line. The greater success of the Cunard line is simply due to the fact that the two fast ships of that line, the "Lucania" and the "Campania," are so faster than the other ships on much Atlantic that they have attracted the Ī traffic. passenger contend the more traffic we can divert to the Canadian route the better, not only for steamer once Canada generally, but for the different rate of speed, steamship lines engaged in the service. There has been on the part of some Canadians as well as on the part of the American public, a certain prejudice against the Canadian route: and we all know that many Canadians go to New York when they desire to cross the Atlantic, solely for the reason that they get a better ship there. As regards the passenger trade, let me point out to the hon, member for Bothwell, what I dare say has come under his notice. that all this year the steamers sailing from the St. Lawrence have had an unusually large passenger list, which simply means that the route is becoming more popular. and that people who formerly went to New York now go by the St. Lawrence. Further. that a considerable number of Chicago people find it more convenient and agreeable to take the Canadian route, and the steamer passenger list from Montreal is larger than at any previous time in our history.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would just say to my hon. friend that I have confidence in the country, but not in every hair-brained scheme presented for the consideration of the country and put forward as though it were the only means of promoting the interests of the country. I am satisfied there is the improvement which the hon. gentleman mentioned. Even with the very slow steamers which run now on the St. Lawrence, he admits that the passenger traffic is very fair indeed. Such steamers as could run with perfect safety on the St. Lawrence, run by men thoroughly familiar with the St. I awrence route, would do very much better under a company such as the Allan or the Dominion Company than a company running one vessel a week from the port of Montreal to an English port. The Minister has said that we cught to have a fair share of the postal traffic. He surely does not expect that the English Government are going to hold back the letters of business men for six or seven days in the post office in order that they may be sent by a Canadian fast steamer. would be absurd. No Government could live forty-eight hours which would attempt it. The letters must go by the first steamer that sails, and by a fast steamer in preference to a slow one; and the amount of postal communication we would get would not be appreciably great when we have only one day in the seven, while other steamers are leaving every day. No doubt, whatever the interests of the country would be better served by an improved line running fifteen or sixteen knots an hour than by an attempt to incur a very large expenditure for a steamer once a week, run at a very high Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have no doubt that if Canada had a fast line of steamers, we would get very much more postal matter than we do to-day. I know from departmental information that most business men address their letters from the old country via the route selected by themselves, and it is the invariable practice in the English post offices to send the letters by the routes so marked. The only portion of the correspondence which comes to us is that which is not so marked; but if we had a fast line, I have no doubt we would get the bulk of the correspondence which is now expedited from the old country to Canada. To my mind, it is of great importance to Canada, within the limits of what we can afford, to pay for an improved service. As the Minister of Finance has said, one of the most interesting points in the discussion which at any previous time in our history. I took place between the Australian delewould just say to my hon. friend to try and have a little more confidence in his own country. I am quite sure that the fast Atfast line.

The Postmaster General informs us that if we had this weekly line, the result would be that a large portion of the correspondence, which is now marked via the American lines, would be marked via this line and come this way. The country needs postal, steam, and railway facilities, and facilities of all kinds, within the limit of the amount we are able to pay; and if the Government would keep within that limit, we on this side of the House would have but little to say. But when the Government propose to spend $750,000 per annum for a fast service once a week, they are exceeding the limits of what this country can afford to pay. We are vastly exceeding the limits of what this country can afford, and vastly exceeding any advantge we are likely to get in re-The sum turn for this great expenditure. of $750,000, capitalized, is a very large sum. all this is looking to an Imperial scheme-for it is an Imperial scheme. We have a stretch of railway the continent, and we propose to have a fast steamship service from England to Canada, a steamship service on the Pacific, and a Pacific Ocean cable. For what? To carry out a great Imperial scheme. It is a good scheme on paper. It would be a good enough scheme in practice, if we had abundance of money. But we are exceeding our ability We have ideas with regard to what to pay. we want to do that are commensurate with a population of 10 or 15 millions of people. We pay an Australian steamship subsidy of $125,000, which it is proposed to increase to $250,000. Now, what is the amount of trade with that country? What prospect have of infatuation and desire to spend money for on the great importance of establishing this we of developing a trade that will justify this increase of $125,000 in our expenditure? We exported to Australia last year $322,000 of goods. Of this, $201,000 was from British Columbia, and mainly lumber. You do not need a steamship line to convey lumber; it would not go by steamship line anyway. So that for the steamship line we have a trade of a little over $120,000. And we are paying a subsidy of $125,000-a subsidy in excess of the total value of the exports from Canada that can by any possibility be carried by the steamship line. We pay more to facilitate the trade than the whole trade We talk of a steamship line amounts to. to South Africa. I am surprised that the matter was not mooted before this. We have a country alongside of us that we could develop trade We do not need to vote any money for steamship subsidies or railway subsidies in order to develop that trade; that trade will take care of itself. All that that trade asks is, that the burdens upon it shall be removed, that the shackles shall be stricken But the Government disdains and scorns that trade; they will none of it. They will amuse the people with schemes for developing Australian trade, South African trade, trade with Jamaica and with British Guiana; they will vote subsidies to promote trade with various portions of the world far surate with our wants, can be made so by removed from Canada, trade with which the appropriation of a comparatively small cannot be developed to an extent at all commensurate with the cost of developing it. We have been running up our debt million by million, and we have actually to-day a net debt of very nearly $275,000,000.

> Mr. FOSTER. Where will you get to before you finish? You have been as far as South Africa, and now you have returned here to the question of the debt.

> Mr. CHARLTON. I will strike bedrock before I get through. We have a nominal net debt of $250,000,000. We have a lot of assets we cannot realize on, and we have liabilities pending that cannot be exactly capitalized. But the net debt now must be actually about $275,000,000. And yet these subsidies are proposed that will add largely to our debt, and will ruin two existing Canadian lines. It is time this whole scheme good time to discuss that matter. My hon. friend the leader of the House said that the matter had already been discussed and that this was an inopportune time to discuss it again. It is never an inopportune time to discuss a matter of this kind under a vote to have confidence in the country, as my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) says, but it is also well to have an interest in the country and a desire to give the country a chance to recover from the difficulties in which it has become involved.

Mr. FLINT. I suppose that it would not be worth while to discuss this matter with the hope of inducing the committee to either increase or diminish this amount. But this seems to be a most proper time to speak of a matter which was discussed last session. I refer to the fees charged to masters and mates for passing their examination for cer-Up to last year the fee for ordintificates. ary masters was $10, and for ordinary mates 85; for constmaster, 88, and for coast-I think it was last session that mates, $4. an amendment was brought in by the Minister of Marine by which these fees were raised. At the time, I objected to this as an undue tax upon that class of men, and pressed the Minister of Marine to leave these charges at the old rate. But the committee and the House changed the rates from $10 to $15 in the case of an ordinary master, and $5 to $10 in the case of an ordinary mate; the rates for coastmasters being raised from $$ to $16, and for coastmates from $4 to $8. I wish to repeat the protest I made against this increased tax upon this very deserving They can ill afford the class of people. charge. It is one which I think the Government does not require to make, and it is a great hardship upon a hard-working and not very highly remunerated class of our fellow-These young men who are preparing to pass the examination for masters and mates, have to remain at home a longer or shorter period in order to prepare for the examination, which is largely technical, and does not in all particulars appertain solely to their abilities as sailors. This delay at home takes them from their avocations, and thus causes them loss, and the examination itself is a cause of expense, if they do not happen to reside in the town or city where examinations are held.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are the fees more than enough to cover the cost of examination?

Mr. FLINT. It is very difficult to tell what relation the fees bear to the total expense of conducting these examinations, but it appears to me that the Government ought to take into consideration the advisability of reducing these fees to the old standard.

Mr. CHARLTON.

It is well ing upon that subject. When another opportunity arises I shall call the attention of the House more pointedly to this matter, and I shall press upon the Government that it is desirable at the earliest moment to reduce these fees to their old standard.

Lifeboat Station, Seal Island.....

Mr. BOWERS. Why is this amount reduced from $2,000?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The reduction is made more particularly, I think, because our agent utilizes the fishermen. They have a fishing service for $500, and we take advantage of that to make a reduction, at the same time maintaining the efficiency of the service.

Mr. BOWERS. Are the fishermen living on Seal Island the whole year round?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). There are some fishermen living on that island, and some who live upon the main, and who fish from the island. An arrangement has been made with these people to man the lifeboats there. They remain a longer period than the fishing season; and inasmuch as they are fishing there under privileges, they also look after the lifeboat station for a much smaller sum than has heretofore been paid. The master and crew that have been appointed, are very efficient men.

Mr. BOWERS. Do they live there the whole year?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). No; they have been living on the main, but the arrangement is now that they remain there the whole year. The greater portion of the season they fish from the island.

Mr. BOWERS. The reason I mention this is that during that part of the year when it would be most dangerous, during the months of November and December, they would probably not be living on Seal Island, and that is just the time they are required to be there.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is just the time when they are there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, What is done for this sum of money? We have had the item for several years, but without any full statement?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The memo. I have here is that Mr. B. Dawson, assistant engineer, is in charge of this service. He was appointed in 1894 at a salary of $2,000.

sistance in the survey of the current, establishing tidal stations, and tidal observations carried on, are all paid out of this vote.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where is this survey conducted?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Along the Gulf of St. Lawrence. A special survey is made from Gaspé.

Mr. BOWERS. Last year there was considerable talk in committee over the matter, and it was concluded that as soon as the Government could find opportunity and means, it was desirable that tidal observations should be made at the mouth of the Bay of Fundy. There is no part of the bay or the tidal waters where there are more wrecks than in the vicinity of Seal Island and Mud Island near the entrance to the Bay of Fundy; and I should suppose it would be incumbent on the Minister to have observations made there.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We are giving special attention to that subject now. We have a very practical gentleman there, Captain Douglas, who is now making inquiries.

Maintenance and repairs to Lights, &c... $230,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do you make this decrease of $35,000? In what way was the saving made? Was your predecessor spending too much money?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon, gentleman will understand that there are two votes generally, but only one this year for the coming year. Under the heading of maintenance, considerable repairs are sometimes required, and minor lights may be established. But under the heading of construction of new lights there is a separate vote this year. I am sorry to see the reduction of $35,000 in that service. It is going to make it very inconvenient for me to do justice to the service, but I will do the best I can. I cannot do the same amount of work that was done last year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In making up his estimates, does the hon, gentleman cite where this reduction will take place, what places shall receive less expenditure?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That would be impossible. The estimate is based upon such a service as we had last year. I am asking for a less amount this year, and therefore we have to cut down expenses to the lowest figures all along the line.

Hydrographic Surveys, including surveys on Georgian Bay, and re-survey of Anti-costi $16,004

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What progress is that survey making in Georgian Bay?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is pretty nearly completed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why does Anticosti require a re-survey?

Mr. FOSTER. There has been no survey there for a long time. Now that Georgian Bay is nearly completed, attention is to be paid to Anticosti.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to Anticosti, I do not remember any explanation having been given before. I should imagine that the island had already been pretty fairly surveyed.

Mr. FOSTER. Changes have taken place in the currents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The actual formation of the land must be pretty well known and defined.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am informed that the work is being done at the request of the Imperial Government.

Nova Scotia—Fishery Overseers and Guardians$20,000

Mr. FLINT. Has the salary for the inspector in the western counties of Nova Scotia been reduced as compared with the salary received by his predecessors.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think so. I am in favour of the principle that if an officer is appointed at a certain salary and by length of service advances to the maximum, his successor should also work up.

Mr. FLINT. That is a very good rule in the majority of cases in the Civil Service: but with respect to these officers, who are not political friends of mine, I have always been of the opinion that they have been inadequately paid. The session before last I called the attenion of the Acting Minister of Marine to this fact, and he was inclined to agree with what I said, that their duties are onerous, occupying their whole time, and calling for a high degree of capacity, and I then pressed on the attention of the Minister the advisability of considering their Although disposed to quescompensation. tion salaries wherever they appear high, I think $900 for the work which the officer performed almost under my own eyes was not enough, and this circumstance tended no doubt to the difficulties to which that officer became involved. The Minister should take into consideration at as early a date as possible the advisability of giving these officers sufficient compensation to place them above temptation, and the necessity of in any degree impairing the efficiency of the office.

Mr. BOWERS. I called the attention of the Minister last year to a new appointment made in Digby County, $500 for a fishery officer in Digby town. The Minister seemed to think he was very fortunate in obtaining the services of this gentleman as fishery overseer. He has held the office now for a year, and has no doubt drawn his salary; but I have yet to ascertain what his duties are, and what he has done. I live in his fishing district, but I have not seen him yet. It was thought strange at the time that this lawyer should get the appointment. If this amount of $500 had been given to the inspector of the county instead of the amount voted being divided between the two offices, the duties would be more efficiently discharged. The Minister should look into the matter.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will make inquiries.

Manitoba-Fishery Overseers $2,500

Mr. MARTIN. What is the reason of the reductions.

Mr. COSTIGAN. A reduction has been made all round.

Mr. MARTIN. There has been no reduction made in Ontario, none in Nova Scotia, a slight reduction in New Brunswick, a slight reduction in Prince Edward Island, and a large reduction in Manitoba. Out of the reduction of $10,000, $2,000 is made in Manitoba. There must be some reason for this action, and some explanation should be given. If the Minister does not wish to give an explanation, very well.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not wish to be discourteous to the hon, gentleman, and I am most anxious to give any information asked. I thought I would try and get along with this amount for Manitoba and have the service carried out with it, though we could easily expend a much larger sum. You cannot appoint fishery officers in that country on all the waters for anything like the amount. There is a large amount of inaccessible territory, that you cannot protect by the appointment of officers, and which, because it is inaccessible, cannot be frequented by poachers.

Mr. MARTIN. That might be an explanation why the department had not increased the amount; but if I can gather anything at all from that explanation it is that they are decreasing the area of protection. If inspection has existed over a larger portion of the territory, then what part of the territory is the Government abandoning?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The estimate is a bulk estimate for protection of all the fisheries. For instance in one salary—I am not saying it would account for this reduction because it might come out of last year—the inspector is now both inspector and overseer of the hatchery and gets the one salary.

Mr. MARTIN. That has been the case since the hatchery was established.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not more than a year since the change was made. We have adopted a system of paying guardians for the day's work they do in patrolling, and years.

Mr. Bowers.

for which they keep a diary instead of the old system of paying wardens a small salary.

British Columbia $7,900

Mr. MARTIN. There is another decrease there.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am awfully sorry about those decreases, but I cannot help it. I knew a discussion would come up about them.

Mr. MARTIN. Just as I supposed, the department does not seem to have any idea with regard to the reason of those pretended reductions. They say: We were voted $4,500 for Manitoba last year and we can easily do with $2,500 this year, and then they go on and spend $4,500 and come down with supplementary Estimates next year. Surely if the department has investigated the matter they ought to know in what particular this money can be saved.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can see quite a difference between giving an explanation on an increase, and giving an explanation on a decrease in the Estimates. You are bound to show why you make your increase, but when you make a reduction you do not spend the money at all, and it is pretty hard to explain why you do not spend it. The hon, gentleman says it is only a pretended reduction, but I am quite satisfied that what he complains is that it is a practical reduction.

Mr. MARTIN. I have made no complaint at all. I merely want the information.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We should know whether these reductions are made upon any intelligible calculation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. They are based on a mathematical calculation.

Mr. MARTIN. Then we should know what the reason of the reduction is. Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg are very large areas, and there is whitefish in every part. If the Government can afford to leave a certain area without inspection, why should not the inhabitants of other portions be in the same fortunate position? I am not criticising adversely or favourably the proposition of the Government, but I want to know what their proposition is. Is the inspection of Lake Manitoba to be abandoned altogether, or is the inspection to be so much less all round?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon, gentleman is anxious to get the information I will give him a satisfactory answer. My impression is that the hon, gentleman is looking forward to arranging these estimates in the future himself. The hon, gentleman would like to have a liberal estimate. We are cutting down the Estimates so low that when he has to deal with them he will have to increase them, which will be very difficult for him to do after the cry he has raised for years.

Mr. MARTIN. I have not criticised it adversely; I think it is all right.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is one reason which I think the hon. gentleman will accept. We did not expend the amount of money taken by the last vote, and it is a reasonable proposition to say that we shall have the same service, and will not require so large a vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGT. That is a reasonable explanation, the only reasonable explanation we have got yet.

Building and maintenance of fish-breeding establishments and lobster hatcheries... $40,000

Mr. BOWERS. Is it intended to build any lobster hatching establishment in the western part of Nova Scotia? That is just the place where it is most needed—where lobsters when grown bring from 20 cents to 30 cents a piece. Why hatch lobsters in Pictou County, where they bring only 2 cents a pound, and not in Yarmouth or Shelburne, where they bring 10 cents or 12 cents a pound? Would it not be better to encourage lobster fishing where lobsters bring a big price and where the industry is of the most benefit to the people than where it is of no value?

Resolutions reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 2nd July, 1895.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 137) to amend the Act respecting the incorporation of Boards of Trade (from the Senate).—(Mr. Foster.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That for the remainder of the session Government Orders have precedence on Wednesdays, after questions put by members, and Wednesday's order of business under Rule 19 be made the order of business for Monday.

Mr. CASEY. I think, Mr. Speaker, that private members who have introduced what is really public business have not been well treated this session, and this motion if carried will place them in a worse position than they ought to occupy. It will be remembered that, contrary to what has been the usual custom, the Budget debate was continued from day to day, and absorbed several Wednesdays in the earlier part of the session. Another Wednesday since then was devoted to the discussion of a motion of want of, confidence. Of the few Wednesdays that private members have had, almost the whole time has been taken up by one or two Bills. For instance, the discussion on the Sabbath Observance Bill was entered into at a length which did not seem to be intended for criticism, but more for the purpose of obstruction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CASEY. I think it is quite in order to say that, in discussing the business of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Casey) is wrong. It is not in order to make that statement.

Mr. CASEY. I have constantly heard the term used without retraction.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

I withdraw, according to Mr. CASEY. your ruling, Sir. as to the fitness of the word. I will say, however, that the discussion of this Sunday Bill by members on the other side of the House appeared to be undue and excessive, and more than was required for the purpose of due criticism. For many other reasons the time allotted for public business introduced by private members has been unduly shortened. I claim that even under the ordinary rules of the House, insufficient time is allowed for legislation of this kind. Much of it, such as the question of prohibition and other questions, is quite as important as legislation introduced by the Government. At the present time there are on the Order paper a large number of important measures, which, if this resolution passes, will have no chance whatever of coming before the House. The first Bill on the paper, respecting weights and measures, was intreduced by Mr. Wilson on the 22nd of April, and will not be considered if this motion is adopted. There is also a Bill by the member for East York (Mr. Maclean), to promote the safety of railway employees; another by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Bryson), to amend the Railway Act, introduced on the 29th of April, and another to provide better security for railway passengers and employees introduced by myself, all of which are of considerable importance. This legislation as far as it concerns railway employees was brought before the House in my own case, and no doubt in the case of the other members, largely at the request of the organized railway employees who are most indiscussed by the House.

I have another Bill on the Order paper since May 2nd to provide for drainage across railway lands, which was suggested by petitions from different municipalities calling attention to the serious grievances which now exist in this respect. people are unable to drain their lands, in consequence of the obstructions put in their way by railways under the jurisdiction of this Parliament, and they ask for relief. These are samples of Bills which will be prevented from getting a hearing, although they were put on the Order paper in good time, and although the promoters of them have missed no opportunity of bringing them before the House. There are a num-ber of other important Bills to which the members interested in them will probably draw attention. I think the Government could spare another Wednesday when some of these Bills could come up for a second reading with brief discussion and be afterwards discussed in committee.

Mr. SPROULE. In the main I agree with what has fallen from the hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat. Owing to the exceptional circumstances at the beginning of this session very little time was given to the consideration of Bills in the hands of private members beyond that occupied by one or two Bills, especially the first, because the second is still on the paper. does seem strange that we should have reached the closing days of the session and have been able to deal with only one Bill among the thirty-six public Bills in the hands of private members which are on the I do not understand why private members should not have a little more courtesy and more consideration shown them in their efforts to promote legislation for the general benefit of the people of the country. There have been from time to time very many important public Bills on the paper, but somehow, when the date of the consideration of public Bills is reached. owing to a late sitting the night before, or owing to the Government proposing an early adjournment, we have not been able to reach them; and now, if the Government take next Wednesday, there will probably be no more reached this session. Some of the Bills on the paper are of considerable importance to the people. I have three on the paper, one of which has been pressed for two or three years-the Bill regarding the adulteration of honey. The men engaged in that line of enterprise are very strongly in favour of this Bill. I introduced it last year, but it was put off from time to time, so that I was unable to get it to a second reading or have it discussed on its merits. This year it has been on the paper since 2nd May, and up to the present time I have not been able to reach a second reading, although the men engaged in the manufacture of honey have looked forward with of these measures whether the session is terested. It is legislation which should be a good deal of interest to the passage of the Bill. But strange to say, although they have pressed it in every way, some of them coming here to promote its passage, there has been no opportunity to have it read the second time or to have it discussed. I think some means should be adopted early in the session for giving more time for the consideration of public Bills in the hands of private members, so that they would not simply be put on the paper as a notice to members of Parliament and to the country, and then never be reached or considered.

> Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think that at this period of the session the motion of the hon, gentleman is an unreasonable one. the same time, it is very much to be regretted that this session when the Government have practically no legislation at ali, it will be impossible to place on the statutebook, or even to bring to a second reading, more than one measure in the hands of private members. I think, Sir, it is not an unfitting occasion on which to draw attention to what appears to me to be a very unsatisfactory rule of the House, that is, when the debate on a notice of motion stands adjourned, it is put that under the head of Public Bills and Orders. seems to me a most unreasonable rule in every way. For instance, the whole of the 'ast private members' day was occupied with a discussion of an adjourned motion by Mr. Flint for an address to His Excellency. A motion goes at the head of Public Bills and Orders, if the debate stands adjourned, by reason of the hour having been reached, when the proceedings for that part of the day go over, it goes to the foot of the paper, which is not of so much consequence, if the debate is on motion adjourned. I would direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to a Bill that standa in my name, if this motion is to be carried, I mean the Bill (No. 16) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. It is a Bill for the amendment of the same Act standing in the name of the Secretary of State; and as we are not very far from a general election, this Bill appears to me to be of sufficient importance for the Government to take it up and deal with it. It is not a controversial Bill. It deals with two subjects: one is the doubt that exists as to the meaning of the law permitting railway companies to carry voters; another is in regard to personation. Both are matters as to which, I think, there would be no objection, as there ought not to be, on either side of the House. I think we ought also to have from the Government, at this stage, a state-ment as to the probable length of the ses-Up to this hour we have not heard whether the Hudson Bay Railway scheme is to be proceeded with, and we have not heard whether there is to be any remedial legislation, and very much depends on both to end at an early day or not. If the session is to be prolonged, I do not see why Wednesday should be taken from us yet.

Mr. BRYSON. I desire to call the attention of the Government to a Bill which I placed on the Order paper on the 26th of April, and which I have never had an opportunity of reaching. It is a very important measure on behalf of railway employees, and will, I believe, meet with the general approval of the House. It is a very short Bill, having only one clause, and I hope the Government will see fit, if they take Wednesday, to place it on the Government orders. It is unnecessary for me to go into details to show why this Bill is necessary; I can only assure the House that it is very much wanted in the interest of labouring men on the railways of this country.

Mr. LAURIER. I thought the hon. Minister of Finance rose a moment ago to answer the question put by the hon, member for North Simcoe.

Mr. FOSTER. Which question?

Mr. LAURIER. I shall have to repeat it for the information of my hon, friend. I am sorry he is not so astute as I thought My hon, friend from North him to be. Simcoe asked if we were to have any legislation with regard to the Hudson Bay Railway, or if we were to have remedial legislation in reference to Manitoba.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the statement which was made by my hon. friend on my right, that at this stage of the session, the Government are not unreasonable in pressing for Wednesday, will be acceded to by the whole House. We are within a few cays. I hope, from the end of the session. Public business has gone on under the rules of the House, and although under the rule my hon. friend spoke of, Fublic Bills and Orders have sometimes gone below motions which were undisposed of, yet that has been in accordance with our It may be inconvenient in some respects; it may be convenient in others. My hon. friend who spoke last laid some of the fault of the Wednesdays being taken away from private members to the Budget de-I need only ask my hon friend's attention to former sessions to recall to his mind the fact, as shown by the records of "Hansard," that the Budget debates have always gone on de die in diem until finished, and seldom have they passed over a less range of time in discussion than this year. That, at any rate, has been the general rule. My hon, friend was also, I think, wrong in his statement that the Sunday Bill took up a great deal of the discussion this The discussion was very short, and it was short because the Minister of Justice transferred the two principal clauses of that Bill to his special committee on amendments to the criminal code. I may say that of adopting the method followed in former all the Bills involving amendments to the criminal code were taken to that committee, and are now in process of mastication, and probably digestion. We will see by and by, what will come from that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Claws and all?

Mr. FOSTER. The claws will probably be eliminated when the Bills come out. With reference to other Bills, they have been passed over, in some cases, because the members who had charge of them were not prepared to take them up when called, and, for that, of course, the Government cannot be held responsible. There however, some other Bills which have been spoken of by hon, gentlemen since this motion was made. The Government will look at those and see whether there are any which it will be possible for them to take up this session. With reference to some, that may be possible; with reference to others, it may not be possible to have legislation this year. Some of those, however. may embody principles of so much importance that the Government may take them up with the view of thoroughly looking into them and seeing what legislation may be advisable another session, when we come back again to Parliament. So far as the business of the House is concerned. I think it is all upon the Order paper. If anything else is to go upon the Order paper, it will be something very important, but which may come up by way of incident, and with reference to which it may be found necessary to have some legislation, incidentally. This I say in order to show the House what is about the state of business, so far as the business of the Government is concerned. I make one reservation, and that is with reference to remedial legislation. We have been blamed for coming so near the end of the session and having no legislation or announcement with reference to that. was scarcely possible that we could have The papers from the Manitola reached it. legislature and the government came into our hands only this morning. That will be taken up, and the Government will be able, I think, in a very short time, to intimate to the House what course it proposes with reference to that subject. With that single limitation, what I have stated holds good. We are through fully two-thirds of the main Estimates, and the most contentious portions of them have been voted, judging by the discussions which have arisen in former years. I have no doubt, looking at the state of the Bills, many of which will not cause lengthy discussion, that it is quite possible for the House to get through with the business on the Order paper, and be ready for adjournment, I should think, early next week-all this subject to the proviso I mentioned a minute ago.

Mr. LAURIER. Since the motion is to carry, the hon. gentleman might think well years, by transferring to Monday the business of Wednesday.

Mr. FOSTER. That is in the motions.

Mr. MARTIN. Do I understand the leader of the House to state that there is no measure affecting the Hudson Bay Railway, or the company known under that name, with reference to the Order in Council, in connection with that enterprise?

Mr. FOSTER. I made my declaration as inclusive as it possibly could be, and I think it is sufficient to satisfy my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to.

POSTMASTER AT STE. ANGELE DE MONNOIR.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON laid on the Table of the House the return ordered in connection with the discharge of Mr. Loiselle, expostmaster of Ste. Angèle de Monnoir. said: I stated on a previous occasion, that when the return which was ordered by the House was brought down, I would make a statement, and I shall now proceed to make that statement. I protest, as I have protested on former occasions, against laying upon the Table of the House any report received by the Postmaster General from his inspectors: and I do so, not because I am the one occupying the position of the Postmaster General at present, but because I feel that, within my experience of that department, it will be impossible to administer it properly, as it should be, if these reports be given to the public. reports contain information which the inspectors, were they not protected by the confidential nature of their reports, would never attempt to give to the Postmaster General, and hence, if they are to be made public, it will be impossible for him to get the information which he ought to, and does now receive for the purpose of administering the department as it should be administered. In reference to the discussion-if I may be permitted to refer to it, and I do not look upon the reference as one to a previous discussion, but as simply a statement, which I ask permission of the House to make—I would say that I do not read the statement made by the late Sir John Thompson, and which was referred to on a former occasion, as it has been interpreted by the House, although I submit to the better judgment of the House. The leader of the House, at that period, Sir John Thompson, said:

If these papers are in the department they will be brought down. If not, an order of the House cannot cause them to be produced.

The interpretation which Sir John Thompson gave to me, and which I completely concur in, is that these confidential reports do not belong to the department in the sense of being liable to an order of the House. That is why, according to my judgment, Sir John Thompson said which were in any papers the that would be brought down. department perfectly willing admit, Ι to \mathbf{am} that I have done on every occasion. have submitted to the order of House against my own judgment, as I think every member should submit to the order But I was led to submit of the House. to the order all the more readily from the fact that the episode under discussion did not occur while I was administering the department over which I now preside, but occurred under one of my colleagues who is still a member of the Government of the day, and who has no objection to producing the report which I am placing on the Table in accordance with the order of the House. I again wish to say, and I think those who have held a similar position to that I occupy will agree, that if these reports were to be placed upon the Table of the House, it would be quite useless to have inspectors to be sent from one place to another investigating the wrong-doing or alleged wrong-doings of officers of the department. This is the reason why, Mr. Speaker, I claimed the indulgence of the House the other day when I said that in bringing down that report I would ask the House to permit me to make a statement-which statement I have now made.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works when I may expect the papers relating to the Portage la Prairie post office site?

Mr. OUIMET. I sent a memorandum to my deputy with regard to this return. I have reason to believe that the papers are now ready.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask the Finance Minister if we are likely to get the return regarding superannuations before the close of the session?

Mr. FOSTER. That depends somewhat upon the time of the close of the session. I have so often said, that it seems scarcely necessary to say it again, that the preparation of the return is proceeding with all possible despatch. It is a large return, and takes time.

THE FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 69) respecting the voters' lists of 1895.

Mr. LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This Bill is only to postpone the revision of the lists and to legalize the present lists for any elections that may to be held meantime.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon, friend is new in his present office; he has had only for some weeks at best the management of the State Department; and perhaps it might strike him that he would do better to abolish the Franchise Act altogether rather than repeat the farce every year of introducing a Bill to dispense with the revision and to have the lists revised only when there is to be a general election. We are to have an election. I do not know at what time, but at no very distant time at all events. Now, in the regular course of affairs, we should have a revision of the lists. If we had the provincial system, we should have the new lists of the provinces. Suppose the elections should take place this summer, immediately after the session or this fall, those elections will be held upon the lists already one year old. A number of citizens have come to the voting age, but these will be disfranchised in the coming election. Sir John Thompson last year introduced a measure which. I am sure, would meet the approval of both sides of the House. The principal feature in it was the adoption of the provincial lists—the list prepared in every province for the holding of local elec-The only objection I have heard to the adoption of that system was that in some of the provinces, the province of Nova Scotia, for instance, certain public employees were debarred from voting. I have no objection. for my part—and I think it was a provision in the Bill of Sir John Thompson—that there should be a provision in the Bill that in every province where public officers have been deprived of the right to vote, they should be placed upon the lists for Dominion purposes and have the right to vote in Dominion elections. Under such circumstances. I would appeal to the good sense of both sides of the House. Hon, members, no matter on what side they may be, must agree that since we have these Bills every year dispensing with the revision of the lists, the clear that the present law does not work satisfactorily, for if it did work satisfactorily we should not have a Bill of this kind year after year. And if they will only give thought to the question, I think they will come to the conclusion that the measure proposed by Sir John Thompson was a wise one and should be adopted. I would commend this to my young friend now at the head of the department. He has in this an opportunity to distinguish himself and to do a good thing for the country at large.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am obliged for the kind advice given by the hon, gentleman in such a pleasant manner. Let me assure him that it will be received in the same way and given careful consideration. But, Sir. so far as this Bill is concerned, it is simply to postpone the revision of the lists for the present year. As to the allegation that these lists will be a year old when the election is held, my hon. friend seems to have taken upon himself the authority of prophecy as to the date at which the elections will be held.

Mr. LAURIER. No, no; the revision took place in June of last year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend wrong. The lists were completed on the 1st March of the present year, so that at present we are only a couple of months away from the final revision. It would be impossible to get lists any newer, except under some system of registration such as is in vogue in the United States in connection with the elections there; and there are many objections to that system, both as to the practices that are engaged in under it and as to its expense—the fact being that it makes practically two elections, as hon. gentlemen know. Further, as a result of the trial of this system in Canada in the cities of the province of Ontario under an Act passed at the instance of Sir Oliver Mowat, we have facts which justify me in saying that it is a very expensive system indeed. As to the broad question of the franchise, I do not think the House will hold me justified in entering into any lengthy discussion of it this afternoon. I can only say this: A Bill was introduced, as my hon, friend has said, by Sir John Thompson last year, which, it was thought, would remove the expense of a duplicate system—the Dominion and provincial franchise. It was thought when that Bill was introduced that it would be received by the provincial governments as an evidence that this Government were anxious to have the franchise of the Dominion and the province harmonize as far as possible, and that there was no desire on the part of this Government or this party to perpetuate the double franchise as it now exists if any fair and equitable basis for a union can be arranged for. But, instead of the provincial authorities showing any desire for a solution of the difficulty, we have not only had a perpetuation of their system-which as my hon, friend admitted, disfranchise many men who ought to be on the lists--but we have had the provincial lists made more chnoxious since the introduction of Sir John Thompson's Bill. However, I am not going to discuss the broad question, as it may be better discussed on some other Bill, this Bill being designed only to legalize the existing lists for another year. say further that my attention has been called by some of the revising barristers to some points which they have thought importance. In some of the for districts the lists some the polling divisions have more names It is not rethan the law actually allows. garded as a very serious defect, nor is it believed by the Justice Department that it would render those lists illegal, but out of abundant caution, the suggestion of several revising barristers, it has been decided to ask the House to adopt this clause, which I shall move when we go into committee:

The lists of the voters prepared under the said Act and amendments in the year 1894-95, as finally revised and certified, and as amended or connected on appeal, if there has been any such amendment or correction, shall be valid, and shall avail for the purposes of the said Act and amendments, notwithstanding that a revising officer has not complied with the provisions of section 23 of said Act, as amended, or that any prescribed form has been departed from, or that anything has not been done within the manner prescribed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the fact that we had such a Bill before us on this occasion is an evidence of the unsatisfactory character of the measure to which it relates. If the measure was a proper one, and one felt to be so by those who still defend it, there would be no necessity for Laving a suspending Bill, or Act, except once in three or four years when the Bill is allowed to go into operation. When you look at the voters' lists in any constituency. you will find that upwards of 10 per cent of that list is changed every twelve months, so that where you have 5,000 voters on a list. you have at least 500 persons at the end of twelve mouths entitled to go upon the list. and nearly the same number who ought to be taken off the list, in that particular constituency. I may say that the list in my constituency was revised in 1891, it was again revised in 1894; and during that period of time, on a list numbering about 7.000 voters, upwards of 2,000 were upon the list of 1891 that required to be struck off, and very nearly the same number of persons were entitled to go upon the list. This fact is sufficient to show the House how very large the change is in every constituency in an exceedingly short time; and unless there is a revision every year, you will always have an election held on a list which does not represent those who are legally, in the abstract, entitled to vote. Now for what reason does the hou. gentlemen propose this Bill? Simply because the present law is odious in the popular estimation. It puts the community to a great amount of trouble and a very large expense, and the Government do not wish to incur the unpopularity necessarily incident to the proper operation of a measure of that kind. I think, Sir, there is one thing that the hon. gentleman has overlooked, and that is that the Government last year agreed to a proposition, through the Prime Minister, from which on the present occasion they have resiled. The Government on that occasion committed itself to the principle of adopting the qualification which is fixed by the local legislature. Of course, such a measure does not rest solely upon local legislation. It is the authority of this Parliament that makes the list one for holding the election of members to the House of Commons. The hon. Minister has said that the local legislatures have not approached the Dominion on this subject in a conciliatory spirit. Why, Sir, there was nothing in that measure requiring them to approach the Government at all. They are undertaking in every province to prepare a list of those persons qualified to vote at a local election, and the presumption is that the parties who are qualified to vote at a local election will also be qualified to vote for a member of the House of Commons in an election held by the federal authorities. Now, the question of referring this matter wholly to the local legislatures and accepting the lists which they prepare, is purely a question of convenience. favour their lists, not because they are better qualified than we are, to say who in the abstract is entitled to vote, but because they have necessarily the municipal machinery to prepare a list, which we have not. How is the list prepared in the case of a provincial voters' list? Why, it is prepared by the municipal authorities, representing both political parties, and these authorities are capable of preparing a proper list because they are personally known by and personally know, the voters who ought to go upon that voters' list. That being so. there is a complete list prepared by the lecal and municipal authorities. When you go to England you have exactly the same rule. The revising officer revises; he does not make a list, he revises a list made by the parish authorities. And so we have in the province of Ontario a list prepared by the municipal authorities which the revising officer may properly revise. do we do here? We have no municipal machinery, we appoint no local parties for the purpose of preparing a list. We appoint one man for the whole constituency, who, under no circumstances, can be acquainted with more than a very small fraction of those whose names ought to go upon that list. He has no personal knowledge, he can have none; and so he is obliged to have recourse to evidence of another character which the local authorities could in a large degree dispense with. Well, I am not going to discuss that matter further. Now, with regard to the hon, gentleman's proposed additional clause, it seems to me it goes further than the hon. gentleman intended, and if I rightly understand it. would validate everything, no matter how irregular, that might have been done by a revising officer.

AND THE CONTROL OF TH

Mr. MONTAGUE. We can discuss that in committee.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then I will wait till it is regularly before us.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the hon. gentleman rather overstated, unintentionally, I have no doubt, the proposition that Sir John Thompson made in his Bill. I certainly understood that Bill very differently in a most important part of it. Sir John Thompson expressly declined to hand over to the provinces the right to regulate the franchise of this House. While he admitted that the basis of the franchise was to be provincial, he expressly reserved the right—and in some of the provinces it would be an immense right, as we know from the discussion that arose on the resolution introduced by the non, member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills)that we should add to those lists all such men as we saw fit, that were not allowed to vote by the provinces. The hon, gentleman shakes his head, but if he will read the Bill he will see I speak by the book. I say further that highly as I regarded Sir John Thompson's capacity, and highly as I respected his ability and his fairness, if he had proposed any law that did not reserve us those rights, I for one, would have voted against it. The whole principle of the distinction this: that the House of Commons of Canada shall and must retain to itself the right to say who shall vote at the elections of its members, and not allow this right to be acquired by the different provinces. It will be found that in Ontario there is not so much to complain about as regards the disfranchisement of certain persons as in several of the other provinces, where not only are special officials disfranchised, but also many voters who in no sense can be treated as of any government. officials Sir John Thompson distinctly gave the House to understand, and the Bill was in the same direction, that while as far as possible it was desirable to assimilate the franchises of the Dominion Parliament and the local legislatures, yet this should be done only on certain conditions and under certain safeguards. In the Bill he retained the right of the Dominion Parliament, or the Government of the day which is the mouthpiece of the Parliament, to appoint the officers who were to revise the list and to decide the qualifications of those who should go upon the list. He retained both of those safeguards, and the criticism so far as it came from this side of the House, was to the effect that the saving of expense, so far as the general question was concerned, would be very small in comparison with the whole expenditure. I am quite free to say that the only objection, and I say this advisedly, to the franchise law as it now exists, is its expense. I am not going to say that it is not expensive, but I assert this clearly, and emphatically, that however much it may cost, it will pay the people of the country well to make that outlay rather than surrender the right of the Federal Parliament to pronounce who shall and who shall not vote at the election of members for this House. I call the attention of the House to the statement made by the Secretary of State, which amounted to an invitation to the provinces to cooperate with this Farliament. I would even go further, and ask the Secretary of State te open communication, if it has not yet been opened, with the provincial authorities in order to ascertain if they would place at our service, conjointly or otherwise, the powers and assistance of the municipal authorities, and then we could evolve a plan which, while it retains this principle of which I have spoken, and which, however expensive it may be, I am prepared to defend rather than surrender that which means the very existence of the election of members to this House, might result in conjoint action by the federal and provincial authorities with a view to agree upon some joint and fair mode of preparing lists for both elections. I will now refer briefly to the law of Ontario, with which I am acquainted, and if it is inconsistent with that of the other provinces hon, members from those provinces can point out the difference, if they deem it important. In Ontario we have three schedules composing the lists for the local legislature. The first, includes those who can vote at municipal elections and local elections; the second, comprises those who can only vote at local elections, and the third, comprises those who can vote only at municipal elections. If the local governments would put at the service of this Parliament and the Government their municipal officers, we could add a fourth schedule, comprising those who can vote only at Dominion elections, and so make a complete list each year, and divide the expense. Then we could obtain in this way a complete list; we would neither have the provinces declaring who should vote at the Dominion elections, or the Dominion deciding who should vote at the local elections, and at the same time we would be saving a great expense which is now involved in preparing the electoral lists. My view is, that this is the proper way of proceeding, and I hold there was a great deal of force in the statement of the Secretary of State that the provincial authorities have in ro way shown any desire to grant any concession in this regard. I believe that in this country, the Government of which comprises Federal and local Parliaments, each legislative body should approach the other. I do not care to what political party they belong, and make recommendations with a view to joint action, so long as these are made in the interest of good government and in the direction of improving our institutions. The lists for the provincial elections are prepared by the municipal authorities. I am not going to enter into a discussion of that question, because we had an illustration during the discussion on the motion of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills), showing how unfair are the disfranchising clauses adopted by many of the lower provinces, clauses which I do not believe hon. gentlemen opposite would agree to adopt. No doubt there is a good deal to be said in favour of disfranchising officials of all governments. I am not, however, in favour of adopting such a course. I am in favour of all officials, except those connected with the administration of justice and holding similar positions, voting at both the Dominion and provincial elections; at the same time there is a great deal to be said in favour of disfranchising officials of all governments, but when such a law is applied to men who are in no sense officials, as has been done in some of the provinces, such action is most unfair. So I say that the hon, gentleman, while expressing his views, did not present the full view necessary to give the House a fair idea of the whole question, and I repeat that I am prepared not only to support the view presented by the Secretary of State, but to urge on him to hold out the olive branch to the authorities of the different provinces, and to communicate with them so as to see if we cannot, while preserving at any expense the right to say who shall vote for members of the Dominion Parliament, adopt some system whereby, in preparing the electoral lists. we may save this large expense and adopt some method that would be fair to both the provincial and the Dominion legislatures. One word with regard to the present Bill. Ι do not agree with the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). In you cannot make a opinion, mv list too sure after it has once been revised. because when we go to an election with a list and vote upon it, we all wish that the majority of the people whose names have been recorded shall decide it, so as to end the troublesome questions that are sure to arise if the Dominion lists are abandoned. It was on the 28th February that these lists became law, and it was only a short time previous to that that parties could appeal, so that unless we go beyond the end of this year, if we fix the same term again, we cannot possibly have a new list. Therefore, I have great pleasure in supporting motion.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not want the hon. member (Mr. Tisdale), nor any one else in the House, to belittle the importance of the admissions which were made last session by the late Sir John Thompson as to the mistake that has been made by the Conservatibe party for so many years, in objecting to the use of the provincial franchise. I am aware that it was not proposed that the creation of the Dominion voters' lists should not be controlled by Dominion officers; but I would like to read a few words of what Sir John Thompson himself said last session on the subject of the provincial franchise. He said:

The change is also proposed in this Bill which I indicated a few days ago, that the questions upon which so much difference has arisen in the past as to the basis of the franchise, shall be adjusted by adopting the franchises of the several While I admit that this is a new deprovinces. parture, I deny what has been so widely asserted that it is in any important or practical degree a surrender of any principle that we have contended The number of differences for in times past. which exist between the provincial franchises and the Dominion franchise as established by our own Act, are so few as not to be worth the contest and the expense which are involved in keeping them up, and the adoption of a general system which will apply both to the local and Dominion legislatures, has recommendations as regards simplicity and facilities for economy, which cannot ex-1st under a dual system such as we have been keeping up for the past few years.

Then he used an expression, which very much applies to the Bill under consideration when he says:

It is obviously one of the most desirable features in connection with any system of franchise. and to my mind an essential feature, that the systen to be adopted will be such that it can be put into operation every year. While under the system which we now propose considerable difficulty and labour may arise, fully as much perhaps as would arise in a revision under the law as it now stands-while I admit, I say, that considerable difficulties will arise, in making the new list, the first list, I do claim for the principles of this Bill, and for its detail, that they will introduce into the electoral system a degree of simplicity which will make the working of that system very easy and simple in future revisions; so that I think there can be no doubt that the revision can be expected to take place every year.

Why, Sir, that was one of the contentions that we have made from this side of the House ever since these postponements of revision, these annual postponements of that expensive operation, have been taking place in this House. Then, Sir, there follows from Sir John Thompson, a very frank acknowledgment of error which I commend to hon. gentlemen opposite. I am surprised that this Government did not resuscitate the legislation that the late Premier introduced last session and carry it through, instead of bringing down this wretched makeshift to postpone the revision of the measure lists, which we have before us to-day. John Thompson also said last session:

We have arrived, after the experience of eight or nine years, at the conclusion which I have stated, that it is not worth the effort to keep up the divergencies that exist between the two sets of franchises, the franchise as we have it now, and the franchise as it exists in the various pro-

Even if the Government have not been able this session to bring down a repetition of Sir John Thompson's Bill. I am surprised, Sir, that we have not had the slightest indication from the Ministry that it is their intention to propose such a measure in the future.

Mr. MULOCK. There is one provision in this Bill that I approve of. It is that which proposes that the revision shall not be proceeded with this year. But it does not go far enough. I thing it should go to the extent of providing that the revision of the lists under this Act should never again take may not accomplish the purpose in view. Government condemned it, and to-day we have had a feeble condemnation from the member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), who thinks that the time has arrived when all the Canadian legislatures should unite to extend the olive branch to each other and adopt some uniform system. It has taken the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) ten years to make that discovery, although for three long months in 1885 that idea was presented to him and his friends by members of the Opposition. However, the Government and their friends resisted it then, and instead of their being now animated by a desire to see the olive branch extended, they are rather afraid of seeing the birch branch applied to them at the hands of the indignant electors. That has probably brought about their conversion. What is there to recommend the Nobody will offer franchise measure? word on its behalf, and yet hon, gentlemen opposite persist in keeping it on the statutebook. The lists have been revised times under it, and five or six Acts of Parliament have had to be passed to suspend its operation. It has formally been condemned five times by Act of Parliament. The revision of the lists has cost the public treasury over one million dollars, and I presume it has caused an expenditure of at least as much more on the part of persons directly concerned in the revision. It is a pure waste of public money, except in so far as it may be an advantage to those who are employed under it provisions. Now, Sir, it is measures like this, entailing such a useless waste of public money, that have brought our expenditure to such an extent that public opinion has been awakened to the propriety of cutting it down. I propose an amendment, seconded by Mr. Choquette, which if adopted will be in the interests of the public. 1 move:

That all the words after "that" in the motion be struck out, and that it be resolved: "That it is desirable that the Government introduce a Bill previding for the repeal of the Electoral Franchise Act."

That Bill should provide for any little details such as my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), referred to. It could repeal the Franchise Act, and at the same time, if there are any little injustices here and there, they can be considered and dealt with in that Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think that amendment is out of order. There are at least three Bills on the Order paper having the object in view covered by this amendment. It occurs to me at the moment, Mr. Speaker, that under these circumstances the amendment is out of order. I merely rise to take the point of order.

There are some Bills in Mr. MULOCK. the name of private members which may or rigid or strong or sensible they are, there place. The poor Act appears to have no am not asking that any private Bill should friends now. Last year the leader of the be proceeded with, but what I say is, that it is the duty of the Government as a matter of public policy to put themselves in a certain position on this question, and if they do so then there will be a chance of the question coming before the House. It is the duty of the Government I allude to, and not to what private members may do.

> Mr. CASEY. The resolution of the hon. member (Mr. Mulock) is not one declaring that the Franchise Act should be repealed. but one declaring that it is the duty of the Government to take charge of such legislation. That cannot be taken as a motion on the same object, as is dealt with by a Bill on the Order paper.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the rule which the hon. Minister of Justice has invoked is hardly applicable to this case. Where the House has ordered a Bill to be read on a particular day, and it is put on the paper to be read on that day, you cannot take it out of the order. But that does not stand in the way of a member suggesting, to another measure, an amendment which is not in exactly the same words, though it may produce exactly the same effect.

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is not an amendment to the Bill, as amendments are ordinarily understood. It is not an amendment to any clause.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You may amend a Bill in everything except the preamble; you may substitute a new clause for every clause in the Bill; and my hon, friend has proposed a substitution of other clauses for those now before the House. That, I think. is perfectly in order.

> Mr. EDGAR. A member who has given notice of a motion cannot anticipate that motion by moving the same thing when the House is going to go into Supply. That is quite a different principle. Here is a subtantive measure before the House, and a Government measure at that, and if the motion of my hon. friend would be in order at this stage of the Bill, as I believe it is, then the mere fact that some other member has chosen to place a Bill on the Public Bills and Orders, surely cannot prevent his moving it. If that were so, it would be quite easy for any members to so utilize the rules of the House as absolutely to prevent discussion on almost every important subject during the session, by loading up the Order paper with all kinds of fictitious Bills to cover those subjects by anticipation. Therefore, I think it is impossible to hold that this motion is out of order.

> Mr. FOSTER. But my hon. friend gets whatever force is in his last point only by assuming that there will be unfair dealing; and under our rules, no matter how may be unfair dealing. I do not think it is fair to argue on the assumption that our rules would be taken advantage of for that What is the object to be attained by private members putting on the paper, notices of their Bills? It is to give notice that on a certain day they will be prepared to take up a particular proposition and discuss it in the House, for example, that the Franchise Bill shall be repealed. Now, on a motion for the second reading of a Bill for an entirely different object, my hon. friend moves what will do exactly the same thing—precipitate upon the House the whole discussion as to the repeal of the Franchise Act, and if his motion should carry, it would effect just the same object as the Bill proposed by a private member. So it seems to me that if this be in order, my hon, friend is able to take the House unawares, whereas the rule of the House is for the purpose of the House being advertised as to when a certain measure will be brought up for discussion.

Mr. McCARTHY. It seems to me the The House has ordered question is this. that the Bill introduced by the Lon. member for North Norfolk shall be read on a certain day. That Bill is for the purpose of repealing the Franchise law. As I understand the rule, neither the hon, member himself nor any other hon, member can anticipate that order of the House; and the question is: Is the motion of the hon, member for North York identical with the Bill of the hon, member for North Norforlk for the repeal of the Franchise law? It appears to me it is not. The Bill is to repeal the Franchise law; and the House has ordered that to be read a second time on a certain day. The motion made to-day declares that it is the duty of the Government to introduce a measure for that purpose. The two things are essentially different.

Mr. FOSTER. The result is the same.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is not the question.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the hon. member for North Simcoe this question: Suppose the Government were to introduce a Bill to repeal the Franchise Act, and it were now submitted for a second reading, is not the test whether that second reading would be in order or not? I suppose it would?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is not exactly the question, as I understand it. I had occasion to look into the question last year, and it seems to me that the rule is as I have stated. An order having been made, the House is to suppose that that order shall not be discussed until it is reached. Therefore, the question is: Is the motion of the hon, member for North York identical with that order? Because, by varying a word, you may alter a motion, and have it discussed.

Mr. FOSTER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the House allow me to read a few lines from May's Parliamentary Practice, which led me to take the objection I did. On page 279, under the heading of restriction on amendments, it says:

As the conduct of the persons mentioned on page 263 can only be debated upon a substantive motion, embodying therein a specific charge, reflections upon their conduct cannot be brought before the House by way of amendment. Nor, following the principle laid down regarding motions (see page 264), can an amendment be moved which revives a question already decided, which inticipates a motion or amendment of which notice has been given, or matters contained in an Order of the Day, or which is inconsistent with words in the motion which have already been agreed upon.

I agree with the hon, member for North Simcoe that the pith of the whole question is: Is this substantially the same question as that on the Order paper? If so, the amendment would be out of order. If it is not, it would be in order.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon, gentleman's reasoning were correct, a second Bill could not be presented on the same subject, whereas we have already two or three Bills on this same subject. The true plan, I think, has been laid down by Dr. Bourinot, in the second edition of his book, page 644:

In 1854 Lord Lyndhurst stated the rule as follows:—

"While the Bill is still pending, and until it is completely disposed of, there is nothing whatever to prevent another Bill for the same object being introduced." Lord Lyndhurst also quoted a memorandum from an eminent officer of the House of Commons (Sir T. E. May), to this effect: "No objection can be raised to the introduction of a Bill into the House of Commons on the ground of there being a similar Bill already before the House. Indeed, we have at present two India Bills before us—Lord Palmerston's and Lord Derby's—awaiting a second reading. It is the rejection, and not the pendency, of a Bill that exeates a difficulty as to the ulterior proceedings.

Mr. FOSTER. We ask only that proper notice should be given, and the House not taken by surprise.

Mr. MULOCK. This motion is quite relevant, and notice not necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion that was made by the hon, member for North York (Mr. Mulock) in amendment to the motion that Bill (No. 69) an Act respecing the voters' lists of 1895 be now read a second time, is as follows:—

That all the words after "that" in the said motion be erased, and the following substituted therefor:—That it is desirable that the Government should introduce a Bill providing for the repeal of the Electoral Franchise Act.

The result of this motion, if carried, would be an instruction to the Government to introduce a Bill for the repeal of the Franchise Act. It seems to me, from the authorities quoted by the hon, gentleman for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) and from other quite within the competence of the House the same subject, and have the same object. I find among the decisions Speakers of the English House of Commons, the following on the point named. Speaker Brand says:

entrolle for the second
The House determines whether it will have two Bills before it on the same subject.

Notice given of a motion to abolish the Viceregal Court, and to constitute legally an officer in lieu thereof.

Objection taken by an hon, member, that he had a Bill with the very same subject for a future

Mr. Speaker said that it was a matter entirely for the determination of the House, whether it would have before it the two Bills on the same If the House thought proper, it could so determine.

It is quite competent for the House to have before it at the same time, several Bills for effecting the same object. If one of such Bills were rejected by the House a proposal to proceed with another Bill substantially the same would be irregular. The rule as to the same question twice offered does not refer to Bills under consideration, it being open to the House to take whichever Bill it prefers, or consolidate them if it thinks necessary. As I have already said, the motion of the hon, member for North York, if carried, would be an instruction to the committee to introduce a Bill to repeal the Franchise Act; and as, according to the precedents which I have just quoted. it seems to me that any number of Bills might be submitted for that purpose. I think that this motion is in order.

Mr. CASEY. The hon, member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is very patriotic with regard to the expense, which he admits to be the inevitable consequence of the Franchise Act. He does not care how much it costs as long as this House asserts its right to control the making of the Dominion He is as patriotic as was the late Artemus Ward, who was willing to sacrifice all his wife's relations for the sake of maintaining the union. It does not cost the hon, member for South Norfolk much to have his lists revised, and, apparently, he does not care how much it costs the country. We are very willing to have that statement put forward in support of the Franchise Act by a member on the Government side: we are very willing to hear them admit that they do not care what it costs as long as the principle of the Act is sustained. But the hon, member for South Norfolk is not in accord on that point with his late leader. Sir John Thompson, as already pointed out, objected to the expense of that Act, and he objected to that expense because it prevented the revision of the lists every year. The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) read several extracts from the speech of the late Sir John Thompson on his Bill of last year. I may add one or two more, to show that he contemplated authorities which I shall read, that it is an annual revision as the outcome of his then proposal to adopt the provincial franto have several Bills before it dealing with chises as the basis of the Dominion lists. He said:

The second parameters and the second of the

While it is not only possible, but very probable, that the revision of this year (1894) will be followed by a revision next year, prior to dissolution, still-

Then he goes on to refer to the question of redistribution. He evidently contemplated a revision every year. Towards the end of the debate on the first reading of the Bill, he pointed out that while the revising power might be retained by the Dominion officers, it was the local lists which were to be used as the basis of the revision. said:

But, if any man comes forward and says: am not on the local lists, but I am entitled to be put upon it, we ought to include him, though he did not get his name inserted in the local lists. and even though he failed to be included, or failed otherwise to make his application to be put on the local lists. Hereafter, when the list is once formed, we shall have the advantage of the lists to start from, that is to say, very recent lists. We shall have the advantage of the more recent local revision, and, to my mind, these two ci. cumstances together will make the construction of the list from year to year very rapid and very simple, and, if I am correct in this assumption. we shall succeed in lessening the expense very much indeed.

It is clear that Sir John Thompson contemplated distinctly that the local lists should be taken as the basis of the Dominion lists, and should be revised by him in the sense that he would put on that list such persons as were entitled by local legislation to be upon them. His Bill also, no doubt, made the exception, which has been alluded to here to-day, that certain officials disfranchised by the provinces should be allowed to vote, but the whole drift of his measure was towards unifying the Dominion and provincial lists, and having practically only one franchise in each province for the two Houses. Now, the principle of revision is very different from the principle of construction. The present Act provides that the Dominion officials shall construct the lists. They shall take certain materials, of course, from the municipal officers, and out of that material, according to methods fixed by this House, according to qualifications settled by this House, they shall proceed to construct their own lists.

It may be supposed that uniformity of legislation would secure uniformity of practice and uniformity of qualification throughout the different provinces. It does nothing of the kind. The regulations adopted by the revising officers in different counties have been so wide apart that the basis of qualification is different, not only in different provinces, but in the adjoining counties. The interpretation of small details with regard to the method of putting in applications, and so forth, is so different by the different revising officers, that there is nothing approaching uniformity in the practice in that respect; so that we have the worst kind of diversity, not as between provinces, but as between different constituencies, and at the will of the revising officers appointed by the Government here.

and the second s

With regard to the abstract question as to who should settle the basis of representation, I am inclined to go a little further even than my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and to say that I think it is right the provinces, and not the Dominion, should fix the basis of qualification. I think that each province, having different conditions peculiar to itself, different habits, and so on, amongst the people, is better able to say which classes of its people are fit to exercise the franchise than this House could possibly be. I think the Quebec Assembly knows better what is satisfactory to Quebec than we do. I think the Assembly of Ontario knows better what is satisfactory to Ontario that we do.

And I think, as a matter of abstract right and advisability, the provincial assemblies are the ones which should fix the qualification of the electorate.

But, further, my hon. friend from South Norfolk says that the principle that we should fix the basis of the franchise is such a vital principle that he does not care if it does cost the country $300,000 a year to keep it up. How did we get along for the eighteen years between confederation and the time of passing the present Franchise Act? Where was this great principle all that time? Was the country going to the dogs for the want of it, was there anything so very bad in our legislation at that time that could be traced to a false basis for franchise? We all know that that is absurd. One principle was in force for eighteen years and the other has only been in force for ten years; and yet my hon, friend from South Norfolk says that the latter is the vital one that every patriot should subscribe to. But that is absurd and it is worse than talking absurdity to urge such a thing upon the House.

I am glad that the late leader of gentlemen opposite had a mind hon. to rise above such petty ideas of statesmanship, had a mind clear understand that the present Act was an expensive, cumbrous, ill-advised means obtaining undue privileges for Government of the day, whatever that Government might be, and a mind large enough to propose a change, a reversion to the old principle which prevailed from confederation to 1885. I am glad that one member of that party—one who seems to have been in it but not of it-had breadth of mind enough to make this proposition. I am sorry his death has removed from the party apparently the only one who had sufficient breadth of mind to take the view he did of this point. He stated most particularly when that Bill was withdrawn last year that he intended to reintroduce it this year and that he hoped it would pass—that he hoped to make it law this session. He has disappeared, and with him every desire among gentlemen opposite for the reform of the Franchise Act. If he had lived my hon, friend from South Norfolk, my hon. friend the Finance Minister, my hon, friend the Minister of Justice, and all the rest of them would have been found endorsing his proposal to adopt the provincial franchises, would have been lauding that principle to the skies as the only proper and just one. But now they have fallen back upon the petty tactics of the caucus and declare that no revision is good unless it is made by Dominion officers and on a Dominion basis.

The hon. Secretary of State, in moving the second reading of the Bill referred to the system of registration in the United States, which force in said had been tried in certain cities in Ontario and which he was able to show had been unduly expensive. If the hon. Minister was able to show that—and at all events he did not show it-he ought have done what he was able do and ought to have shown-what most of us were not aware of-that that system of registration was unduly expensive. think it was a great success, and I think it was the duty of the Government, when suspending the Franchise Act—in view of the fact that an election must come on in not more than a year's time-to provide such a system of registration as would have enabled the present list to be brought down to date for the purposes of that election. The introduction of such a Bill as this year after year is a confession that the Franchise Act is a law that cannot be enforced from year to year. The Bill leaves the lists for the general election open to the objection that they will be, as my hon. leader has said, at least a year old. Although the revision was not finished until the end of February, the list was based upon the assessment which took place more than a year ago, the same assessment on which the provincial lists, now a year old, were based. The bulk of those on the present Dominion lists were qualified over a year ago, and a large number who have become qualified since that time have been left off. If my hon, friend would supplement the Bill with a proposition pro-viding for the registration of those who have become qualified since, by some cheap and simple system of registration, he would do himself credit and would confer a great benefit upon the country. That would be a great deal better than the suggestion of the hon. member for South Norfolk that he should negotiate with the provincial governments and see what could be done to work up a joint, patch-work list. I think under the circumstances, and in view of the confession made by the introduction of this Bill that the Franchise Act has been a failure, it is my duty to vote for the amendment of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock.)

Mr. McISAAC. I desire to remove the erroneous impression that seems to prevail generally on both sides of the House, that in the province of Nova Scotia those who are disqualified from voting in the provincial elections would be debarred from voting in federal elections if the provincial lists were used. The provincial lists in Nova Scotia are made up first without regard to the Act disqualifying Dominion officials in that province. All parties who possess the real estate income or other qualification are put upon the lists. Those names remain there, and the only occasion when the disqualifying Act of the province operates, is when a provincial election is held. A., B. or C., whose name appears on the list may go up to vote, but if it turns out that he holds an office under the Dominion Government, which disqualifies him, he is debarred from voting at the election. But his name still remains upon the lists and these lists are used now in the province of Nova Scotia not only for provincial elections but for town elections and for municipal elections all over the province. These parties are not disqualified except in provincial elections. Why, Speaker, up to 1887, the very same lists were used in the province of Nova Scotia for both provincial and federal elections. The last general election for the Dominion held under this system was in 1882, and on that occasion the Dominion election and the provincial election were held on the same day. In Nova Scotia, A B or C, a Doofficial, entering minion the poll for provincial candidates. was informed that he was disqualified, but he stepped into the next booth, where exactly the same lists were used and was at perfect liberty to vote in the Dominion election. Whatever may be the merits or demerits of the Act disqualifying Dominion officials from voting in provincial elections, that Act does not apply here, for it could have no effect in federal elections. In other words, if the present provincial lists of Nova Scotia were used in Dominion elections, Dominion officials who have the necessary qualifications of property, income, &c., would be qualified to vote. So that in that respect the lists are as fair for one side as the other. The electoral lists in all cases are made up by the officials appointed by the municipality, with the only exception that the court of appeal is the sheriff of the county, and he may belong to either political party, and several of the sheriffs in Nova Scotia now belong to the Conservative party.

Mr. McCARTHY. For my part I am not inclined to adopt any resolution which will indicate that we are willing to hand over to the local legislature the fixing of the franchise for electors of this Parliament, The reason of the Franchise Act at the time we adopted it, no matter how ill it has worked since, was that this Parliament thought we ought to have control of our own franchise, that is, the franchise of electors of this body. At the same time I am quite free to admit that this Franchise Act has been a most expensive measure, and the expense is so enormous that unless some better scheme is devised, we will be forced, I think, to repeal it. Now, I heard with great pleasure the speech of my hon, friend for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), and I agree with all he said except that it appears to me we have got the authority now, without any consent at all from the municipal bodies to utilize the municipal machinery. I cannot understand why we may not pass a law by which we should direct the municipal officers-I am speaking, of course, more with reference to my own province; I do not know exactly what the machinery is in the other province-to make up a list for this Parliament at the same time they make up a list for the provincial and municipal bodies. In point of fact it seems to me that the way we do it now is needlessly expensive. I have seen a suggestion, which I adopt as meeting the case, that opposite the name in the first column should be put other columns showing where each man was entitled to vote, and for what purpose. Now, in the municipal list a man may be entitled to vote in the municipality in which he lives as a municipal voter, and even if a municipal voter, he may not be entitled to vote on certain money bills. So that there are now three lists made up with reference to the qualification of electors for local as distinguished from Dominion purposes. Now, why cannot four lists be made, or rather, why could there not be four columns opposite each man's name, and in the first column opposite his name let it be indicated whether he is entitled to vote for Dominion, municipal or local purposes, or for money bills, and so on. That being done, we pay our share of the expense, appeal being left, as in the local procedure, to the county court judge, not as a revising officer at all, but as judicial officer. That would save all the expense. You would always have a list ready. we would not have to postpone a dissolution of the House, which sometimes is inconvenient, because the list is stale; and we would not have to go through this form year after year, which really is a stultification of our own proceedings, of suspending our lists. Certainly the lists ought always ready, be and a dissolution time under our system may become necessary, and the lists ought always to be ready. and in the way I suggest, they always would be ready. I do not at all agree with the view that we have not ample power to do that now. I recollect the late Chief Justice Dorion saying that this Parliament had power to direct the officers of the local government to do anything that we required to be done.

Mr. MULOCK. We do direct in the Act now.

Mr. McCARTHY. They do not cease to be subject to this Parliament because they are employed by the local legislature. It will be in the recollection of the legal gentlemen in this House what a contest there was at one time as to whether we had power to direct provincial judges to hear election trials, and in the end it was determined that this Parliament had full power to direct provincial judges to determine trials in connection with elections of our own members. Now, holding these views, I cannot vote for the amendment of the hon, member for North York (Mr. Mulock), but I would like very much if this amendment could be amended to this effect:

That the law should be repealed, with the view of simplifying the procedure of determining who are entitled to be placed on the voters' lists, and utilizing for that purpose the municipal machinery by which in the provinces the voters' lists are made up.

If it was amended in that way, I should vote for it with great pleasure. The reason I cannot vote for it now is that I do not desire in any way to withdraw from the views I have always held, that we have a right, that we ought not to part with, to fix the franchise of the electors for this Parliament. I understood my hon, friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to hold the view that we exercised that right originally. What we did originally was to establish that the electors fixed by the local legislatures should be our electors. We have always exercised that control, and from time to time we have changed it; therefore it only comes to be a measure of procedure. Certainly the enormous cost of the Franchise Act is rapidly bringing public opinion to such a state that if we do not adopt some amendment of this kind, we will be forced, I am to fall back upon the provincial afraid, bodies without the power that we ought to have in fixing our own franchise.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon, gentleman has raised a constitutional question, a question that is far from being solved, and one which would necessitate the attention of the minds most learned in our constitutional law, that is, the power of this Government to direct municipal corporations and their officers, who are merely the creatures of the local government, to do certain things. As the municipal law and institutions come under the jurisdiction of the local legislature, municipal corporations and their officers created in virtue of and in conformity with that law, are merely creatures of the provincial governments.

Mr. MULOCK. The present Act does order them to do certain things.

Mr. McCarthy.

Mr. OUIMET. I do not think it does.

Mr. MULOCK. It orders them to deliver up voters' lists, and exhibit their assessment roll.

Mr. OUIMET. No, it only directs the revising officer to obtain from the secretarytreasurers of the municipalities the assessment rolls, and that right is exercised by the revising officer in the same way as any other individual who is willing to pay the fees fixed by law. Now, so far as I can express an opinion at the moment on such an important question, I would say that this Government has no power to direct any of these municipal or provincial officers to do certain things, or to subject them to penalties in default of their doing those things. But even if we could do it, we would have to pay these officers for any work desired from them. These municipal officers, who, as I have said, are creatures of the provincial government, have been directed by that government to do certain work, which work is covered by the pay they receive as municipal officers. But they are not paid to do our work. That settles the question of cost. The jurisdiction of the provincial legislature on these officers, but we have none, and consequently is unquestionable. We could not force these officers to do work for us against their own free will and without paying them their price, no more than we can force any individual to accept a judgeship or any other office, if the work or the salary do not suit him. In the same way, we could not direct the municipal council to oversee or revise the work of their officials. The hon, gentleman's proposition would not meet the present diffl-The principle has been laid down culty. and accepted by every one in this countryexcept, perhaps, by those hon, gentlemen who never submit to anything that has been adjudicated upon by the people of this country-a principle that has been approved by the majority of this House and afterwards on several occasions confirmed by the electors of the Dominion, viz., by the people, that this Parliament should have a franchise of its own, that it should regulate and operate it, even if it cost a good deal of money.

Mr. MULOCK. You will not find one elector in a thousand to approve of it.

Mr. OUIMET. I know very well that hon, gentlemen opposite will never admit even that this party has been maintained in power by the people, although it has been in power seventeen years, except under false pretenses. It is a very easy explanation to offer; but it is not very complimentary to the hon, gentlemen themselves, or even to the electors, to say that their votes have been won in an illegitimate way for the last seventeen years. The principle has been approved, and it must be maintained. It has been adopted of necessity to resist the attempts made by the Liberal Provincial Legislatures to destroy this Government by disfranchising their friends and supporters. That conspiracy was organized in the Quebec Interprovinical Conference of 1886. They agreed there to use every means to drive from power this Conservative Government, and in order to attain that end, they have disfranchised a number of people who from standing, knowledge and interest in the country should have the right to vote at Dominion elections. Is there anything to be said against the Dominion franchise? Is it not free to every man who has any visible interest in the welfare in this country, and who from that interest or knowledge is qualified to vote, to exercise the franchise? Is it not true that our franchise is as near manhood suffrage as it can be made? While in the provinces numbers of people are deprived of the right to vote because of their political convictions, and because they differ from the views held by the local government. Our Franchise Act, compared with the Franchise Acts of the provinces, is the most equitable, liberal and generous that can be framed, and it would be too bad, and the country would disapprove of it if we were to allow the franchise of the Dominion to be tampered with at the whim of the rulers in the local legislatures. A long argument has been made out of expressions of opinion that Sir John Thompson, our late Premier, gave vent to last year. What was in the mind of Sir John Thompson? It was this, that in order to minimize, if it were possible, the cost of the revision of the list. we should take as a basis for the Dominion lists, the provincial lists. There was no question of abolishing the revising officer. It was suggested that the revising officer should take the provincial list and build up a Dominion list by adding to it all the names of those entitled to vote at Dominion elections, not by limiting his work to the electors as qualified by the provincial law, but by adding to the list all he knew who would come within the Franchise Act of the Dominion. After that work was done, a revision became necessary. After that revision was made, the printing of the list was to be proceeded with and completed, and every one knows that the great cost connected with the lists is the printing of them. How can you utilize the local lists if you are not going to print How can you go into a revision without having a revising officer? Even if we were going to adopt, instead of the present franchise, manhood suffrage, a system of registration would still be necessary. What would be the cost of a system of registration? Do we not know that the cost of registration in the United States is much larger than even the cost of our own lists. When Sir John Thompson came work out the details of the measure he discovered that it was use-less to attempt it, that it would not decrease the cost of the lists, that it would only embarrass matters. The hon, gentlemen will not find in the speech delivered by Sir John Thompson that he ever dreamed of abandoning the Dominion franchise. When he came to the details and endeavoured to reconcile the principle of a Dominion franchise, which is the principle that has been adopted by a majority of the peo-ple, with provincial franchises, he realized that it was impossible within the time at his command to reconcile the differences existing and prepare a measure the details of which would render it fairly workable. That was the main reason why the measure was abandoned last year, and when hon. gentlemen opposite say that Sir John Thompson gave away the whole system of the franchise as we have it now, they are not correct. He did not abandon the principle upon which our party stood since 1885. It was a necessity that this Parliament should protect itself against the unfair attacks of the provincial legislatures, and the only reproach we can make as regards the present law is its cost, but if we want to preserve the principle we cannot do so at less cost than the present law entails. It may be a cost of $140,000 or $150,000 for every revision, once every two or three years.

Mr. MULOCK. $200,000.

Mr. QUIMET. That would not be too much to preserve the liberties of the people, the power given to the people to send here representatives of their own choice, and not representatives who would be the choice of the local legislatures. The present Bill is just to save the cost of another revision for the present year. It cannot prejudice any one, because the revision would not be likely to be completed before the 1st of April when the natural life of this Parliament would be very near its termination. practical purposes this new revis-For quite be ion would useless. the cost of revision is so objectionable to hon, gentlemen opposite, I do not see why they should wish to have it incurred. I do not know when the elections will come any more than any other member of this House, but I know they must come at the end of this Parliament. The Government would not be justified in incurring the expenses of a revision when such revision would serve no practical purpose for the next election.

Mr. MII.LS (Bothwell). I do not think the Minister of Public Works has quite fairly represented the views of his late colleague (Sir John Thompson). I remember very well how the Franchise Bill of last year came to originate. I spoke to the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) on the subject, and subsequently he told me that Sir John Thompson would like to discuss the Franchise Act with me. We discussed the subject together. I need not repeat what his views were on the subject, because they were disclosed in a large measure upon the They were not ex-Bill as it came down. actly disclosed, because I may say that the Law Clerk and the Deputy Minister, to some extent, misunderstood the Premier's instructions. After that Bill came down I mentioned some objections I had to it, and Sir John Thompson spoke to the Clerk of the House and said he would like further to see me with regard to the matter. John Thompson and I considered every clause of the Bill, and I know what his views were upon that measure as certainly as I know what my own are. Sir John Thompson proposed to accept in good faith the local law in regard to the elections. He proposed certain amendments to that. For instance, he proposed that the name of certain officials which were struck off in some provinces, should be restored. He objected to the principle of one man one vote, and he proposed that where a man was a property holder in more than one constituency that man should be at liberty to have his name put on the list in any constituency in which he had property. These were the two chief exceptions Sir John Thompson proposed to make to the local list as it actually stood. Now with regard to the revision, I remember exactly what his views were upon that. He said that wherever there were county judges he saw no objection to accepting the revision made by the local legislature, because it could be taken advantage of, and arrangements made that it should be also the revision for the Dominion. But in the provinces, where sheriffs and other officials were made the revising officers, he objected to that and insisted upon a judicial officer being made the officer for revision. If that measure had been submitted by the Government, I apprehend there would have been very little objection to it from this side of the House. At all events it would have been accepted as a compromise on the subject for the time being. Sir, I do not agree with the views expressed by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). If he undertook to carry out his proposition, he would find that it would be scarcely less expensive than the present system. and it would be far more inconvenient than the acceptance of the qualification as fixed by the local legislature. When we accept the qualification of the local legislatures, we do not give up our jurisdiction over those lists. That list becomes a list for the election of members for the House of Commons by an Act of this Parliament, accepting and adopting that as our law, and so it is under our control in that respect as much as if it were a list actually prepared under a statute passed by ourselves. But, Sir, I do not agree with the legal view expressed by the Minister of Public Works. In the case of Valin and Langlois, the question was raised as to the legality of the constitution of the election court, and Lord Selborne in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council said: That the election court. as created under the Dominion law is not a provincial court. It was a distinct tribunal, and the judges of it are designated by the offices which they hold. And if you can designate a judge who is a member of a provincial court, and by so designating him make him a member of a Dominion court without any formal acceptance of office on his part, surely you can do the same thing with regard to a municipal officer. You can say: that the municipal council in a certain township or village shall undertake certain duties. You could designate that persons who hold certain municipal offices shall be officers for the discharge of certain named duties by the Dominion. There is no doubt that could be done. Accepting that as an unquestioned legal proposition, you would nevertheless have a much more expensive arrangement than you have by the acceptance of the local list prepared by the municipal authorities under the provisions of the local statute. I: seems to me that if you wish to add any parties that you think are improperly disqualified by the local law, you could supplement your list by doing that.

Mr. COCHRANE. Would they not have to be reprinted?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not if you adopt the suggestion of the hon, gentleman from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale).

Mr. COCHRANE. I am asking your opinion?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not saying that his opinion would be impracticable. I think it would be practicable, and you could have these names printed as a part of the local lists if you so wished. In the province of Nova Scotia certain voters are excluded from voting in the provincial elections by the form of oath, and not because their names are not on the list. The names of those excluded are printed on the list just as they were when that list was the list for Dominion as well as for local purposes. All you need do is to prepare a proper oath to administer to the voters, and those persons could vote the same as any others.

Mr. COCHRANE. To carry out Sir John Thompson's idea that a man who had property in different constituencies should be on the Dominion list, for each place in which he had property, would you not have to reprint that list?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not necessarily.

Mr. MONTAGUE. On a supplementary list?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, you could have a supplementary list, or you could provide that you would pay a certain proportion of the expense in every province or every municipality, and you would have no difficulty. But as it is, you are constantly voting upon a list that does not represent Why, Sir, if the electorate of the country. an election had been held in my own constituency prior to the last revision of the list, there would have been on the list over 2,000 voters who were not entitled to vote at all; and men would have been brought from every part of this Dominion, and from every state of the union, to vote, some of whom had no longer any interest in this country. It does seem to me monstrous that 25 per cent of those on our lists are men not entitled, legally, to be there, and 25 per cent of those entitled to have their names on the lists are excluded. An election is held for the purpose of having an honest and fair expression of public opinion as public opinion is at the moment the election is held. It is a reflection upon this House that it continues to have a franchise law of this kind on the statute-book.

Mr. McNEILL. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Bothwell as to the very great inconvenience, and worse than inconvenience, the very great injustice, which obtains by reason of the fact that our Dominion list is not revised as often as it ought to be. I am quite sure that for that reason, as he says, many men are disfranchised who ought to have the franchise. But I wish to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that if we were to take the local list, we would find a great many disfranchised who ought to have the franchise. In my own constituency, after the last revision of the Dominion list, there were nearly a thousand voters more on that list than on the local list, although the local list ought really to have shown a larger number than the Dominion list.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How many of those are the same persons who vote over and over again, which takes place under the Dominion list, but cannot under the local?

Mr. McNEILL. There was a much greater number of voters.

Mr. LAURIER. The franchise of Ontario is more liberal than ours.

Mr. McNEILL. The franchise of Ontario is more radical-I prefer the term; and, therefore, there ought to be a greater number on the local list than on the Dominion But because the local list is not nearly as carefully prepared as the Dominion, that difference to which I have referred existed. Now, I entirely agree referred existed. with two principles which have been laid down. One is that we cannot relinquish our right to regulate our own franchise, that this Parliament should be an independent Parliament, and not a Parliament dependent on the whim of the local legislatures. That is a principle which I think should never be abandoned, and a principle it was understood at the time of confedera-which the people of this country are prepared to support. I also agree with the statement that our list costs vastly too much, and the problem we have to solve is: How best we can reduce that cost. The proposal made by my hon. friend from North Simce (Mr. McCarthy), and the suggestion thrown out by the hon. Secretary of State, seem to me in the right direction, and I think that if some approach could be made to the local governments, we might arrive at a conclusion that would be most beneficial. If we could divide the cost between the municipalities and the Dominion, we would effect a great saving, both to the Dominion and the municipalities, because it must be borne in mind that at present the municipalities bear all the expense of the local list. It is a very serious matter which I think we should not rush into without careful consideration; but my feeling at the moment is that in this suggestion we have the means of arriving at a very great improvement. I am satisfied that the people of this country will insist on this Parliament being an independent Parliament; I am satisfied, also, that they will insist on some reduction in the expenditure; and 1 think we ought to have a yearly revision of the list. And these three things could be accomplished by the means proposed.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend's arguments are all right, but his conclusions are all wrong. His conclusions do not at all follow his premises. So far as my knowledge goes, no one ever proposed that this Parliament should give up the power of regulating its own franchise. We on this side of the House have always been in favour of adopting the provincial franchises; but no one intended that, by so doing, we should give up the power of regulating our own franchise. When we propose that the law should be that the electors of the House of Commons shall be those electors who have the right to vote for members of the provincial legislatures, we keep the power of regulating our franchise; and if experience showed that the system did not work satisfactorily, we could repeal the law. So that it is not a fair argument to say that by adopting the principle we have been contending for on this side of the House during the last nine years, we would be re-linquishing the control of our own fran-I would put this question to my hon. friend: For seventeen years of this confederation there was only one class of electors voting for members of this House, and for members of the local legislatures; does my hon. friend say that during those seventeen years this Parliament had relinquished the power of regulating its own franchise? Were we not as much masters of it then as we are at the present time?

Mr. McNEILL. We had not relinquished, but we had not taken up that power; and tion that we should take it up. Up to that time we had allowed the local legislatures to usurp the power, and they very improperly used it.

Mr. LAURIER. We decided to exercise our power in that way. We first decided in one way, then we decided in another way. But we say that if we are not satisfied with the provincial franchises as they exist, if we think they are not radical enough, or that they are too radical, as my hon. friend suggests, it would be within our power to adopt another franchise. But my hon, friend must admit that between the provincial franchises and the Dominion franchise at present there is very little difference. In my own province, the difference is very slight; in the province of Ontario it is greater. I would call my hon. friend's attention to another example. In the United States, where the people are as jealous of their liberties as we are, there is only one class of electors. The constitutions expressly provides that the electors for Congress shall be the electors who have a right to vote for members of the local legislatures; and that seems to be the most consistent principle. There are not two constituencies, one to be represented in the local legislature, and one in the Dominion Parliament. It is the same people who are represented in the one legislature and in the other, and who have the same rights and the same privileges and interests; but the division of the power is not in the electors but in The legislatures the representative body. are representatives of one class of interests and the Dominion Parliament is the representative of another class, so that the local legislatures and the Dominion Parliament, who are representatives of different interests, are only, after all, representatives of the same people. I ask my hon. friend what is the body who ought to have the regulation of the franchise? Is it not the local bodies who deal with local affairs and concerns? Does my hon, friend pretend, for instance. that the franchise should be uniform in every province? Does he not, on the contrary, believe that it should be regulated largely according to the manners and customs and education of the people? He cannot pretend that the same constituency prevails in every province, and therefore he must admit that what may be an adequate franchise in his province, may not be in another. I am quite satisfied with the franchise which rules in Ontario, but so far that franchise has not been acceptable to Quebec. All these reasons suggest that the best principle is the one we have been contending for on this side of the House. As to the question of expense, there is no comparison. The Minister of Public Works said a moment ago that everybody was satisfied with the present law, and that the electorate had shown their satisfaction time and again, Why, the Government and members of this House are not satisfied, because year after Henderson, year, rather than have the law put in force, they bring in a Bill to prevent its being put in force. Can anything be more anomalous than to have a law on the statutes, and then, year after year, pass an Act to have it dispensed with? I believe, therefore, that the only principle which ought to prevail is that involved in the motion of the hon. member for York.

Amendment negatived, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MONTAGUE moved that the following clause be added:—

That the list of voters prepared under the said Act and amendment in the years 1894 and 1895, as finally revised and certified, and as amended or corrected on appeal, if there has been any such amendment or correction, shall be valid and shall avail for the purposes of the said Act and amendments, notwithstanding that the revising officer has not complied with the provisions of section 23 of the said Act, as amended, or that any prescribed form has been departed from, or that anything has not been done within the time or in the manner prescribed.

He said: I have already explained this amendment. By section 23 of the Franchise Act it is declared that where, in a polling subdivision, the number of voters registered exceeds 300, the revising barrister shall make another subdivision. There are some subdivisions where the revising barrister did not take this precaution, and it would be better to remove all doubts of the legality of such lists.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It has happened often that the revising officer has added names after the expiry of the time for adding them, and has done so on his own authority. If this clause is passed, it will prevent proceedings being taken to punish such a violation of the law. I know that in 1891, in a certain electoral district, hundreds of names, which had been struck off the list at the various preliminary revisions, and were supposed to be off the list altogether, were found all restored in the printed list, without authority. The revising officer alleged that they had been restored here in Ottawa. He said that he had left those names off and sent the list, properly revised, to the printing office, or the Secretary of State's office, and they came back with the old names restored. It was then too late for him to make a further revision, and he certified to the lists in that improper form. I do not know how many cases there may be of that sort. I do not know whether that has been done in the recent revisions or not, but I do not care to assist in putting upon the statutes a clause which would protect a revising officer who has committed a fraud of that kind.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There was no intention whatever on the part of the Government to legalize anything incorrect or illegal in the lists, with the exception of these little errors made inadvertently under section 23. These imperfections are not at all serious, but it was thought that out of abundant caution the lists containing them had better be legalized.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does it not go beyond that?

Mr. MONTAGUE. When I spoke a moment ago, I said that the Government did not regard it as a vital point at all, and if there is any objection to the new section, I am prepared to drop it.

Mr. CASEY. There can be no objection to legalizing lists where there is an undue number in particular polling districts. That was the pretension of the hon. Minister when he introduced the amendment. But this amendment goes further. It provides: "Or that anything has not been done within the time or within the manner prescribed." That will not only cover the irregularity in that one particular, but in all other particulars. If he will strike out the closing words, the clause will not be objectionable.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Very well. We will agree to that. We will cover the whole purpose if we allow the clause to pass down to the fourth line, striking out the following words:—

As amended, or that any prescribed form has been departed from, or that anything has not been done within the time or in the manner prescribed.

Mr. McCARTHY. It might be well to let that stand until after recess. It seems to me that there may be a question as to whether it is in order. This Bill is to suspend the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. It is called "An Act respecting the voters' lists of 1895."

Mr. McCARTHY. It may be that this is something that ought to have originated as an instruction to the committee. It would be well to let it stand until after recess.

Mr. FOSTER. It can be discussed when the Bill comes up for a third reading.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not know that there ought to be any objection, but the Bill ought not to go through until we have had time to consider it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This can stand in the meantime until the third reading.

Mr. CASEY. I would ask that it be printed in amended form before the third reading is moved.

Bill, as amended, reported.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE LOBSTER FISHERY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 91) to amend the law respecting the lobster fishery.—(Mr. Costigan.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. FRASER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he has had communication with the lobster packers about this Bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. Was a copy of this sent to the principal lobster packers of the lower provinces?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. FRASER. Is it not the usual course to get the opinions of those engaged in the trade in a case of this kind?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. Why was it not done on this occasion?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is the usual course, and a very wise course. That was the course followed when the Bill was introduced, establishing the system of branding. the granting of licenses, and so on. as I stated before, we have the unanimous expression of opinion from the canners, and others interested in favour of the law which is now being amended. The changes made by this Bill are very slight. The first change is as to the labels, which I explained when I introduced the Bill. Under the present law, it is obligatory to brund on each case the name of the packer, and the The change we make is place and date. to use a label declaring that the lobsters are Canadian lobsters, and were packed in the proper season. The other important change is, instead of a fixed license fee of $10, we make a proportionate fee according to the quantity packed. As to that, I had the expression of opinion from gentlemen representing large districts where packing has been done, and I had the officers who visited the factories come here and discuss these changes, and I have heard no opposition to the proposal at all.

Mr. FRASER. I think that the change with regard to the fee is a step in the right direction. As to the other change, if I understand correctly, there is to be one of these labels on every case.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Each case containing forty-eight one-pound tins.

Mr. FRASER. There is nothing labelled on the can?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. FRASER. These stamps will be prepared by the Government?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. And given to the officials? What officials will have them?

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The officials who look after these canning factories.

Mr. FRASER. The packers receive these labels for nothing, I suppose?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. Will there be any fee for the inspection?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; the license covers everything.

Mr. YEO. Is it intended that the license fee shall be reduced during the present season? This was spoken of when the Bill was up before. I hope that if the Minister must have a license fee, he will see his way clear to let the reduction take effect during the present year. With respect to the labels, I pointed out on a previous occasion, the difficulty in putting them on where the lobsters are packed. In some cases, dealers buying lobsters from a distance would like to inspect the fish and know if they are properly packed. If the label is put on there will be difficulty \mathbf{some} about I would like to ask what time this year does the close season begin in Prince Edward Island? I understand that he had extended the time by 20 days on the south side of the island, and I think the extension has been made also on the north side.

Mr. COSTIGAN. With regard to the first point, when the Bill was under discussion the same question was whether I would reduce the fee this year. I think I gave a good reason why it would be almost impossible to do that. The license has been paid for at $10, and the license has been granted long ago. There would be no difficulty in refunding to any packer any difference between the $10 that he has paid and the smaller amount he would be obliged to pay if he packs less cases than would come to $10. But I am afraid the hon. gentleman could not assure me that I would not have a great deal of trouble in getting at the difference between the $10 and whatever the license would come to above $10. So that it would be simply giving away a certain amount of revenue that the Government would be entitled to, and I would not be able to collect the surplus. Under the present Act the license has been issued. Every one who applied for the license this year, knew what the law was, and knew that he had to pay $10. He applied and got his license, and has paid his $10. Every hon. gentleman will see that it would be almost impossible to go back and deal with that now; it would create a great deal of dissatisfaction. If some men were entitled to a refund, those who would be obliged under the law, if I made it retroactive, to pay an additional fee, would complain. I think the House would not wish to make the Bill retroactive. I can only provide that when we grant these licenses again, they shall be at this rate. With regard to the labels, the Bill provides that the labels are to be put on the boxes before shipment, and even if they are not shipped and are to be stored, after the close season they must be put on all the boxes that are kept in stock. The labels will be furnished free. With regard to the other point it may be desirable that the packers, in selling to purchasers, should have the privilege of opening and inspecting the cases in order to know if they are really up to the mark. That is provided for in the Bill. We will come to that in a clause later on, that I want to change. The packers will be at liberty to open their cases, after they are stamped and to inspect them and see if there is any faulty package, and if there is, they can take it out and fill in the box to their satisfaction. All I want to provide for is that in this repacking, for the laudable purpose of seeing that the goods are shipped in good condition, if they find a lot of empty cans, resulting in leaving half a dozen or fifty empty boxes, these empty boxes shall not remain with this stamp. The stamp is really a certificate, and the moment they empty the boxes, that stamp must be removed, because the stamp is a certificate that the boxes contain Canadian fish in good condition. After the box is emptied, I do not want it to continue to bear that certificate, as afterwards it might be filled with rocks or anything else. There will be every opportunity for an examination of the packages before they are shipped. With regard to the close season, I may state that representations are being made in favour of an extension, not only from Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, but also from New Brunswick, and my own intention was to resist, as far as possible, an extension, until I became thoroughly convinced that there was really a cause for making it. Reports and telegrams I have received, and representations that have come in from members of Parliament on both sides of politics, and from respectable citizens in the provinces I have named, gentlemen who I believe are influenced by good motives in making these representations, have shown such a condition of things there, owing to stormy weather and other exceptional causes, that I have asked the Council to extend the time ten days beyond the present limit in those sections. That ten days will be in addition to the regular time fixed for the open season that is, ten days taken off the close season, or ten days added on to the open season.

Mr. FRASER. Do I understand that if a man, for example, has put up that which next year would only require him to pay $10, he would get a refund? Suppose a man has paid $10, and has only put up enough lobsters to entitle the Government next year to get $2 from him, would he make a refund this year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No refund at any time.

Mr. FRASER. I thought the difficulty as regards fishing on a portion on the south the Minister was referring to was that of side of Prince Edward Island. I should collecting the amount after they had discovered the difference.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The accesses have been granted at $10, and there will be no refund, nor do I ask anything additional. It works both ways. Some of them would be entitled to pay a great deal more.

Mr. FRASER. Coming back to these labels, how many officers would there be who can do this labelling in each county?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That depends entirely upon the number of canneries. We have to have some of our fishery officials to inspect the canneries.

Mr. FRASER. In a large county like the one I represent, where there is so great a distance between different points, there may be some difficulty, if the officers who are to make the inspection are too remote from these places. If there is only one for every two or three counties, there may be some difficulty in having the inspection made at times to suit the canners.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It does not involve inspection. I am speaking now of the point the hon, gentleman has raised with regard to the convenience or otherwise of supplying the labels that will be necessary to carry out this section of the law. Now, that officer knows the distance, he knows how many canneries there are, and will know from their reports about what they will put up. He will be supplied with sufficient labels to meet the requirements of the canneries in his district. It will be his duty to hand them to the canneries, so that they will have them in time. The officer will be have them in time. charged with so many labels; he will show that there are on hand so many, that so many boxes have been labelled and shipped and that the cans in stock have been labelled. The officer will know exactly what has been done with the labels.

Mr. FRASER. Then there will be no further inspection, except putting the labeis on?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There will be no inspection of the cases. All we want to know is that the lobsters have been caught in the legal season, and then it follows that they are good lobsters.

Mr. FRASER. How will the officer discover that?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Fishing ceases after a certain number of weeks, by law.

Mr. FRASER. Then there will be no personal inspection of the cans?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. YEO. I understood the Minister intended to give an extension of twenty days as regards fishing on a portion on the south side of Prince Edward Island. I should like to know when the close season for the round the coast, and I found that if twenty present year begins?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The close season differs on account of temperature, season, movements of ice and for other reasons. On the island the season begins later than it does generally in the province of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. In the two latter provinces it generally commences on 1st July, while on the island it does not commence until 15th July, there being some waters at a few points where a later date has been fixed. That is the season based on The extension of ten days apexperience. plies to all points. In New Brunswick the season now begins on 1st July, and then ten days must be added to that time; on the island the close season now begins on 15th July, and it will not begin until the 25th. So the hon, gentleman has to add ten days to the time allowed the fishermen at the different places, and he will then get the beginning of the close season.

Mr. BOWERS. Were the parties notified by telegram in different parts of the provinces that the time had been extended?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. If not, some parties might have taken up their traps.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot say that each individual has been notified by telegram, but every officer was wired last Saturday to inform the fishermen that the time had been extended ten days.

Mr. BOWERS. I was in the Minister's office, I think, on Friday, and I was told that the time had not been extended, and that no telegrams had been sent to officers. On my own responsibility and at my own expense, I telegraphed that the Minister had refused to extend the time. I cannot understand it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman got at the office too early. I think it was afternoon or evening before the decision was arrived at and telegrams were sent Friday.

Mr. YEO. I am not by any means finding fault with regard to the time having been extended. I was afraid from the explanation given by the hon. gentleman that the extension expected on the south shore of the island had not been granted. I understood that the hon. gentleman was going to give twenty days extension on the south side, from West Point to St. Peters, and ten days on the north side.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I was disposed to grant twenty days on a certain portion of the south side, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Fisheries. Representations were then received urging a further extension of time, in most cases three and four weeks being asked, three weeks at least all round the coast, and I found that if twenty days were granted in one locality it would be impossible to give less than that time in other cases in which perhaps as strong a case would be made out. I therefore concluded that I would recommend twenty days extension in no place so that no precedent could be established. I substituted ten days instead of twenty days.

Mr. YEO. I am sorry the Minister has rescinded his intention, because there are exceptional reasons why a longer time should be given the fishermen on that part of the coast.

Mr. COSTIGAN. They have now fifteen days longer than the fishermen in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia.

Mr. YEO. When does the close season begin?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It begins on 25th July in the island.

Mr. YEO. The catch of lobsters has been much poorer this year than in any previous year. In the early part of the season the fishermen did nothing at all, and just now the lobsters are beginning to get good and the catch is large. I wish the Minister could have seen his way clear to give the time expected, which I understand he promised to give, namely, an extension until 6th August, or the beginning of August at all events. I think the Minister has received reports from different parts of the fishing ground, and his information must be that the catch of the fish this year is That would be a very unusually poor. good reason why the hon. gentleman should reduce the fee, as he proposes to do next year.

Mr. BOWERS. I draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that there have been many petitions forwarded from Digby, Annapolis and other counties in favour of changing the lobster law so as not to allow the fishermen to catch lobsters under ten and a half inches. Last week I received several letters from different parts of the county, to which I call the Minister's attention. Here is one of the letters:

Freeport, N.S., 19th June, 1895.

Hon. E. C. Bowers, Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—Yours of 6th June to hand, and, as regards the small lobsters it is a certain fact we cannot catch the small ones and have them grow to large ones. Ten years ago, when I commenced dealing in lobsters, fishermen would only have a small portion of their catch small, not more than one-quarter; to-day we find it the reverse—not more than one-quarter of the catch large ones; very often not that many. It seems a great pity to save them under 10½ inches, as well as such a loss to the fishermen. I have never met one who did not agree with me, that unless the taking of small lobsters is prohibited, we will in a few more years have no lobsters to catch, and this valuable part of our fishery will be destroyed; in fact, the catch has fallen off in the past ten years fully one-

Mr. YEO.

I am glad to see you are interested in this important matter, and trust the Government will take steps to protect the same, and wish I was better able to express my opinion on this matter.

Yours truly,

M. G. CROCKER.

I have also received the following communications :--

Westport, N.S., 20th June, 1895

Dear Sir,-Replying to your favour of 6th, asking my opinion on the effect of taking lobsters 3 inches in length, I have to say, that I believe that the capture of lobsters of a length as low as 9 inches is inimical to the lobster industry, and i base my opinion on the fact that in six years, in this vicinity, the number of men engaged in this fishery has quadrupled, while the total catch has decreased to less than half the amount of six years ago, as evidenced by the number of crates of lobsters shipped. I have been in the business. both buying and shipping. I have ss. "Westport's" freight sheets to work from, and I know how many lobsters go from our ground to Yarmouth.

That the decrease of large lobsters (10½ inches) is due to the capture of 9-inch lobsters may be a case of 'non sequitur," but I think that the capture of 9-inch fish is largely responsible for the rapid diminution in number of 101/2-inch fish. I wish to impress upon you that this is merely my It may be that the natural increase of the lobster is not equal to the means and men employed in their capture.

If this opinion will have any effect to conserve the best interests of the fishermen, I am pleased to be able to render this assistance.

Yours truly, R. W. FORD. Digby, N.S., 15th June, 1895.

E. C. Bowers.

Dear Sir,-Your favour at hand. In reply, wa will say, in regard to the lobster fisheries, the best thing that could be done, is to to do away with all small lobsters, from 9 inches up to 101/2, and catch nothing under 10½ inches, as the lobsters are fast being exterminated, and by pre-serving the small lobsters it will protect our fisheries.

> We remain, SYDA & COUSINS.

Tiverton, N.S., 21st June, 1895.

E. C. Bowers, Esq., M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,-Yours at hand. In reply will say my opinion is, that no lobsters should be saved under 10½ inches size for United States market. That would be all the protection we would want They are not as plentiful as years ago, just because the small fish are allowed to be saved which is wrong.

Yours truly, HANTFORD OUTHOUSE.

Westport, 20th May, 1895.

E. C. Bowers

Dear Sir,-I wish you would place the lobster cuestion before the Government. I suppose there will be no change in the law this season. it makes but little difference, as I consider that there will be none to catch soon. This is the fourth season I have been fishing for lobsters. In 1892, with 100 traps, I caught 3,000 lobsters. In 1893 I got 2,200; in 1894, 1,600, and this year I will not get over 800. Why will the Government will not get over 800. not enact a law making it obligatory upon us to not catch lobsters under 101/2 inches, before the is an oily chap, and anxious to make the people fishery is entirely destroyed. All the fishermen want it.

Yours very truly, WALTER COGGINS.

Digby, 12th June, 1895.

Mr. E. C. Bowers, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,-Would call your attention to the lobster fishery. The size limit we have always been trying to press on the Government is 101/2 inches, and unless this is done very shortly, the lobster business will be completely destroyed, and will be a thing of the past. There are nearly as many caught between 9 and 10½ inches as there are above, and there is very little money in them. Hope the Government will not refuse to save this fishery.

Yours very truly,

D. & O. SPROUL.

Sandy Cove. 15th June. 1895.

E C. Bowers, Esq., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,-In regard to lobsters; others as well as myself would like a change—say, to stop catching all lobsters under 10½ inches, as the largest quantity caught and sold are under 101/2 inches. They only sell for from 1 to 2 cents each. If left to grow a few years, they would sell at from 10 to 20 cents apiece. Try and bring the subject to the Government's notice.

Yours very truly,

SAMUEL GIDNY.

The Minister will see that there is a general complaint all over the county against the taking of lobsters between nine inches and ten and a half inches. Last year I brought the matter to the attention of the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and he told me that if I would get petitions from the county he would see what he could do. I sent petition forms all over the county, and some eight or ten petitions were sent in asking that the size should be changed from nine inches to ten and a half inches. The Minister, I suppose, forgot all about the promise. At any rate, he did not do anything in the matter of changing the size. I would call the attention of the Minister to this letter:

Westport, N.S., 20th April, 1895.

Hon. C. H. Tupper.

My dear Sir,—I pray you may not think I am taking too much liberties with you, but I cannot help refrain from mentioning to you what comes On the 17th, my friend, R. W. under my notice. Ford, who is interested with me in the lobster business, received a letter from E. C. Bowers, incicsing a form of petition, which I will inclose to you—Bowers asking us to have this placed before cur lobster fishermen, and receive as many signatures as possible.

Mr. Ford supposed the reason Bowers sent to us was because we carry this business quite ex-Mr. Ford yesterday prepared a petition tensive. quite suitable and calculated to place it before the fishermen, but, to his utter astonishment. on going into the post office this noon, he saw a petiticn on the counter with quite a number of names, old man Ruggles first on the list. Farmers, cobblers, carpenters and every boy in town have been asked to sign this paper. Now, is this the intention, or is it for the fishermen? Bowers believe he has lots of influence with the Government, but I have yet to learn this fact.

Yours most respectfully (Signed) (Capt.) J. D. PAYSON.

Now, I wish to tell the Minister that the desire for this change from nine to ten and a half inches is a universal desire—one felt not simply by a portion of the fishermen or by one here and there, but felt by every person in the county. I am told that it is also desired in the counties of Annapolis. Yarmouth and Shelburne. I would also call the attention of the Minister to some reports contained in his last annual report, which show that in Quebec, in New Brunswick, in Prince Edward Island and in Nova Scotia, almost everywhere, the catch was poor. In nine cases out of ten, the average catch was less in 1894 than in 1893, and less in 1893 than 1892. So it is clear that the catch of lobsters is gradually decreasing, and I would like to ask the Minister to introduce a provision in this Bill, or to have an Order in Council passed before the 1st of January, 1896, providing that no lobsters shall be caught or sold under ten and a half inches in length in the western part of These small lobsters are Nova Scotia. caught in the winter time, and are shipped to the New York markets. A barrel of lobsters contains from 150 to 175, and I have barrels seen as many as thirty to forty shipped at once to the New York and Boston markets. There would be about 5,000 lobsters, which would sell for 1 to 1½ cents at the same season when large lobsters would bring 25 cents to 30 cents a piece in the Boston market. The Minister will see the great necessity there is of enacting a law giving the fishermen what they want. and to save the lobster fisheries from extermination. If the season is extended to the 15th of July, and the smaller lobsters are prevented from being taken, a great financial benefit will accrue to the fishermen and this fishery will be preserved. I hope the Minister will not simply pass this over, but will do something in the matter.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has, I am sure, given this subject a good deal of attention, and I have no fault to find with the position he takes. He wishes, however, to go further than I could go or than I think I could get the House to go in the line of protection to the lobster. To act upon his suggestion would be next to passing a prohibitory law.

Mr. BOWERS. I was only speaking of the western part of Nova Scotia, of the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That shows how difficult it would be to make an amendment to this If I Bill to suit one particular section. could carry a measure such as the hon. gentleman proposes for the lobster fisheries in earnestly since.

the lobster fisheries than anything else that ' could be suggested. But it would be prohibitory in many sections of the country to prohibit the taking of lobsters under ten and a half inches in length.

Mr. BOWERS. A law could be enacted for the Bay of Fundy without interfering with the parts of the Dominion that do not want it. If the people want the law for the Bay of Fundy, including the southern shore of New Brunswick and the counties of Annapolis, Digby and perhaps Yarmouth in Nova Scotia, I do not see why it should not be given to them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is a reasonable proposition, and if I had the necessary information, I would be happy to insert a clause applying the provision to the localities it suited, just as I would be willing to do with regard to the close season. If next year I have anything to do with this department. I will certainly be willing to introduce a law, based upon the best information we can gather, fixing the close season for different districts according to the differences of climate, temperature and so forth. But at present I have not the necessary information.

Mr. McISAAC. Do I understand that the extension of ten days applies to all over the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, it is uniform.

Mr. McISAAC. Is it more than ten days in any part of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. McISAAC. I have a letter here from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, dated the 29th of June, which states that the close season will commence on 11th July and 26th July in the areas specified, which commenced on 1st July and 15th July, respectively. This goes to show that the determination was to make it ten days in some parts of Prince Edward Island, and fifteen days in some other parts. If this is the case. I want to know why it is that some parts of Prince Edward Island have been given five days more than some portions of Nova Scotia, for instance, Antigonish County. There are portions of that county where the lobster packers are just as much entitled to the longest extension as those of the northern portion of Prince Edward Island, because there is very little difference between the conditions of the two districts.

Mr. PERRY. My impression, as I stated when the House was last in committee on this Bill, was that it was altogether useless, and I have come to the conclusion more Why pass a Bill of this all the provinces, it would do more to protect | kind when we find that by an Order in Council the statutes of Canada may be superseded? It is a well known fact that the Government arrogate to themselves the power not only to make new laws, but to manipulate them by Order in Council, so that we do not know what they are. understand that the Minister has stated that there were two close seasons for Prince There never Edward Island. I deny that. were two close seasons for Prince Edward Island, and if he looks at his own report, he will find that that was not the case. It is true, last year, not by Order in Council, but by inaction of the fishery officers on certain portions of the island, fishermen, who were probably friends of the Government, were allowed to fish in the close sea-Some of them were fined, and unfortunately they were four Grits who were The Tories were allowed to go scot fined. The same thing may happen this free. When the hon. Minister tells us that there are two close seasons in Prince Edward Island, he states what is not correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not say there were two close seasons in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. PERRY. The departmental letter of the 29th June says that on the northern shore of Prince Edward Island the close season is from the 16th July, and that on the south side, it is from the 26th July. That shows that the hon. Minister is under the impression that there are two close seasons upon the island. I deny that, and would like to have it explained. We saw in one of the Government papers that the Government were going to extend the time twenty days. Now we see by the letter that it is only ten days, and it operates in this way, that on one side the close season extends to the 26th July, and on the other side it only extends to the 15th July.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the hon, gentleman read the letter showing that it is extended to the 26th August?

Mr. PERRY. The letter reads: The close season will therefore commence on the 11th July and on the 26th July. This season is in the west, where the close season respectively specified in the regulations commences 1st July, and 15th July, respectively.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Read me where it is extended to 26th August.

Mr. PERRY. If I said August I made a mistake. It should be 26th July, but the discrepancy is here, 11th July and 26th July. Is it possible that there is a close season on one side of the island and a different close season on the other. Now I see the Bill provides for a fee of $10 for each license, but on and after the 1st January, 1896, it shall be $2 per 100 cases. If it be right in 1896 to change the license, why not change it now? Could not the Minister of Marine. by the power vested in him by Order in Council, alter that part of the Act and make it more lenient and acceptable to the packers for the year 1895 as well as for the year 1896? He might as well charge the farmers a license fee for packing oats or barley or flour or beef or pork or anything else. Why, you might as well provide that a Minister of the Crown should pay a fee, not of $10 but of $500, before assuming the responsibility of office. Let us have fair-play all round. I contend that that $10 has to come out of the man who brings the lobsters from the bottom of the sea to the surface of the water. He will have to pay $10 or $2 per hundred cases when the rest of the community go scot free. Why not tax the man who manufactures self-binders, wagons, mowers and everything else? Why not charge him $10, $15 or $20 in the shape of a license before he can have the right to manufacture these The lobster packing is a very articles? risky industry, in which men of capital have to risk their money and fishermen their time and hard work, and yet they are to be handicapped by the $10 license or $2 per hundred cases. I look upon the act as useless, as not worth the paper it is written on, because the Minister has the power to alter the Act just as he thinks fit. He has done it already. He has now altered the close seasons, and why should he not alter any other part of the Act? As to the close season, I made a mistake in the month, but the departmental letter said the 11th and 26th July. If this is applicable to Prince Edward Island, the Minister must be under the impression that we had two close seasons on the island.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Let the hon, gentleman read the letter and say whether it applies specially to Prince Edward Island or generally?

Mr. PERRY. The letter is like a good many more of the doings of the Government, it is ambiguous. You can take three or four meanings out of it. I always understood it as applicable to Prince Edward Island and no other place, and I drew my conclusions from that. Now, I would ask the hon. Minister to explain himself squarely so that parties interested in the fisheries may know what they are doing and not be liable to be pounced upon by hungry wolves and sharks, who may wish to make a few dollars out of these poor people.

Mr. YEO. When does the close season begin in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. COSTIGAN. On the 25th July, north, south, east and west.

Mr. YEO. I am sorry the hon. Minister has not seen his way clear to giving further extension on the south side of the island.

Bill, as amended, reported.

Mr. BOWERS. Before this Bill is passed, I would ask the hon. Minister if this section 8 in the new Bill is the same as in the old. It reads:

8. On the request of any person authorized or employed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to hatch lobsters, and under a penalty not exceeding five dollars and costs for each refusal, the manager or owner of every lobster factory or canning establishment shall, as far as possible, and with due care, take from and keep, in such manner as is from time to time prescribed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, all eggs attached to lobsters brought to such factory or cauning establishment, and deliver such eggs to a person authorized by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to receive them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Bill has been changed.

Mr. BOWERS. It is very strange that this Bill is to be put through without our having copies of it before us.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The very reason I have delayed is in order to have an opportunity to prepare these amendments and have them printed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was the new Bill distributed?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes; long ago.

Mr. BOWERS. What I want to call the hon. Minister's attention to is this 8th section. This provides that these eggs are to be kept and delivered to a person authorized to receive them. In our part of the province of Nova Scotia there is no person authorized to receive these eggs, and therefore I consider this part of the Act bad and indefensible. If this section goes into force the industry will be destroyed altogether in the western part of Nova Scotia. They catch these lobsters, and if there is no one to receive the eggs, they will take them off and destroy them and sell the female lobster.

Mr. FRASER. I was going to say that this section was passed in committee without reading. In fact none of the sections on page 2 were read, and we had no opportunity of discussing them. I want to enforce what the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Bowers) has said so far as these eggs are concerned.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the sections were not read they cannot be reported as passed.

Mr. FRASER. None of the sections on page 2 were read.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The clause read by the hon, gentleman is part of the amended Bill. It was introduced at the suggestion of the commissioner of fisheries after consultation with the packers. I consider it as much a part of the Bill and as useful as any other section.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I think-

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman must remember that we are not now in Committee of the Whole, and that he cannot speak more than once.

Mr. Bowers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then we must challenge the attention of the House that one of the most important Bills of the session, one in which the constituents of some hon, members are deeply interested, and one which has been watched very closely by these gentlemen, has passed in committee. according to the uncontradicted statement of some hon, members, without some of the sections being read, and they were called passed before they were announced by the chairman. That is a very serious state of matters. If it is an inadvertence, I presume the Minister will have the House go back into committee again. If not he will have to challenge the opinion of the House as to going back. It is monstrous if a Bill can be smuggled through the committee. members who have been waiting patiently for this Bill that they might have an opportunity of calling attention to what they consider defects find the Bill suddenly reported without several important sections being read. I trust the hon. Minister will not insist upon this. It will not facilitate the business of the House. If he does not move to refer the Bill back to committee, we must.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman says that several members of the House have been watching for this Bill. None of them more anxious about it than myself. I have delayed in order to give these alterations time to be put before those interested and afterwards printed. If the hon, gentleman states that he had not an opportunity to discuss these clauses, that he was taken by surprise-though, if so, it was quite unintentional-I have no objection to going back into committee. I do not want to take a snap verdict or to claim any undue advantage, nor do I wish to refuse any hon. member the opportunity of speaking upon any section of the Bill. I am not objecting going back into committee.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in.

On motion for third reading:

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved that the order for third reading be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to committee for further consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 7,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would ask the hon. gentlemen not to inflict such a high penalty as $400. I think the amount is utterly disproportionate to the offence of "refusing, or otherwise obstructing any such officer in the discharge of his duty." What might be considered an obstruction, might be a very slight offence, indeed.

section.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think $400 is altogether too high. I did not know there was such a clause in the old Act.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have no objection to making it $200.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was going to suggest to the hon. gentleman that $100 would be an enormous penalty for any possible offence of that kind. I can hardly conceive any offence that would justify a fine over $100.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Make it $100.

On section 8.

Mr. BOWERS. The Bill says here that the manager or owner of every lobster factory or canning establishment shall take and keep all eggs attached to lobsters brought to such factory, and deliver them up to a person authorized by the Minister to receive them. That means that in the county of Digby, or the county of Yarmouth, or Shelburne, or anywhere else, even where there is no hatchery, he shall. so far as possible, take from and keep, in such manner as is prescribed by the Minister, all eggs attached to lobsters, &c. Now, what will be the good of doing this where there are no hatcheries? If they are allowed in this manner to take eggs from the lobsters and no proper place or hatchery is provided, the eggs will die. They will then boil these female lobsters and can them. This should be changed to apply only where there are hatcheries.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman will compare this clause with section 9 of the old Act, he will find it is word for word of the old Act.

Mr. FRASER. That is not an answer to the objection. Because this section may have been in existence for fifty years, is no reason why it should be retained if it is objectionable. There is no need for it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have stated that the commissioner of fisheries has urged very strongly the re-enactment of that clause, and I take his advice.

Mr. FRASER. I think there is only one lobster hatchery in Nova Scotia, which, I understand, is at Bedford, in the county of Halifax. Now, what would be the use, for example, of a lobster factory down at Cape North, pretending to fulfil that section? It is imposing upon every man that catches lobsters, a duty, under a penalty, of keeping all the eggs in such a manner as is prescribed by the Minister. Then every man that packs lobsters in the province of Nova Scotia, must in such a manner will prescribe, keep Minister the as all the eggs and deliver them over to person authorized, who will never

Mr. COSTIGAN. I merely keep the old come, because there is no need of all The Minister will see that the eggs. this is so broad it will never be fulfilled. Is every man that puts up lobsters in Nova Scotia to keep all the eggs until a person will make a demand for them, with the authority of the Minister? In the first place, the eggs will not be required; and, in the next place, the owner of the factory will never be asked, and why impose the duty?

> Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand the object of the commissioner is to put himself in a position to obtain a plentiful supply of lobster ova. There can be no objection to that. It is, perhaps, owing to a misconception of the meaning of this section that the discussion has arisen. I understand it is not compulsory for everybody to keep the ova of lobsters, and that it is only compulsory in those cases where a request is specially made. For instance, in Prince Edward Island, where there is no hatchery, probably no request will be made, and it is only when a request is made by a person authorized to hatch lobsters, that lobster factories or canneries are required to keep the ova.

> Mr. COSTIGAN. In order that they may be utilized, instead of being destroyed.

> Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With that limitation, that it does not apply generally to all cannery establishments and lobster factories, but only to those on whom a special request is made to keep the ova, the clause does not seem to be objectionable.

That is the object. Mr. COSTIGAN.

Mr. BOWERS. I suggest the words "where hatcheries exist," be inserted.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think the suggestion proposed is necessary, because we have only one hatchery for the three provinces.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My hon. friend desires to confine the application of the section to localities where a lobster hatchery But the clause will only be made applicable to those localities, because I cannot conceive of any person employed by them to hatch lobsters in Nova Scotia requiring the canneries of Prince Edward Island to keep ova. If any application were made, public opinion would secure its re-

Amendments concurred in, and Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Canadian Pacific Railway-Construction To pay for work under award...... 84,220

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the circumstances under which this work is going forward? I suppose the item refers to the award under the Onderdonk contract.

Mr. FOSTER. The item of $2,000 is to pay the salary and expenses of the engineer supervising the work done under the award; also to pay legal expenses and land damages. The amount of the award, as the hon, gentleman will recollect, was $579,255 The amount earned and surveyed, and paid up to first April, 1895, is $495,034, leaving a balance of $84,220.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is doing the work?

Mr. FOSTER. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the superintendence of our own engineer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does this complete the whole award?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of what does it chiefly consist?

Mr. FOSTER. Of filling in, constructing culverts, putting in concrete, and so on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. is the total amount paid for costs by the Canadian Government on the award?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The whole costs of both sides amounted to about $200,000.

North-west Mounted Police..... $500,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. there is a reduction of $155,000 here. would be glad to have a somewhat detailed account from the Minister as to how these reductions are to be made, and what the general policy of the Government is to be with respect to the mounted police?

Mr. FOSTER. I will give my hon. friend as much information as I can; not being myself familiar with the routine, but having these explanations put in my hand. Taking a look back at the accounts for a number of years, the committee will find there has been a gradual reduction in the cost of maintenance, and this from several causes. In 1877-78, the cost was $862,965; in 1888-89, eleven years afterwards, the cost was $829,-701; a reduction in that period of about $33,000. In 1889-90, there was a reduction upon the previous year of $76,607; in 1890-91, a reduction on the previous year of $13,-093; in 1891-92, a reduction on the preceding year of $38,067; in 1892-93, a reduction from the preceding year of $86,453; and in 1893-94, a reduction of $4,216 on the previous year. So that in the year 1893-94 the maintenance of the force cost $611,263, being a reduction of about $251,000 in the six years. That shows a gradual reduction in the maintenance of the force brought ber of the force they are acting upon the about by several causes, amongst them: the gradual, although not very large, reduction of the force, and by very careful management, and by the reduced cost of food supplies particularly, which are obtained in the North-west now, and the price of which has been constantly decreasing as compared with the price of imported goods. The following statement will show the reduction in the number of officers and men. In 1889, the total was 1,041; in 1891, 1,018; in 1892, 933; in 1893, 920; in 1894, 962, and at present 853 which number in the course of a year will be brought down to about 700. It is intended to keep the force at that number for the present at least. The Government does not intend to reduce the force below what is necessary for the security of the people of the North-west, and in speaking of the security of the North-west. account has to be taken of the gradual opening up of settlements, which implies, of course, an extension of the police service. A small squad has to be sent for the protection of new settlers. I think that probably gives a general idea of what has been done and what it is proposed to do in the near future.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do the North-west police perform service in British Columbia or in Manitoba, outside of the North-west Territories?

Mr. FOSTER. There was a small force sent to British Columbia a few years ago when trouble broke out, but there are none there now and none in Manitoba.

Mr. MULOCK. Whilst any wise movement in the direction of saving money ought to meet with the approval of the House, and would no doubt meet with the approval of the country, yet it is quite possible to be at times unwisely economical. I am not sufficiently familiar with the needs of the North-west to say whether a reduction of the force to the present number of 853 is too great or too small, or whether the proposed reduction to 700 men will meet the requirements of the country. I would venture to suggest, however, that the Government could not do a greater injury to the prosperity of the North-west than to so reduce and weaken the force so as to create doubts in the minds of settlers as to the security of life and property there. Not only is that sense of security necessary for the retention of the present inhabitants of the North-west, but also for the encouragement of immigration into that country, and at the present time there is a very considerable degree of uneasiness, I am told, in the minds of the settlers at the reduction, and threatened further reduction in that force. I trust, therefore, that the Government know fully what they are doing, and that they are not taking a leap in the dark because of some mere abstract principle of economy. I trust that in reducing the numadvice of responsible persons in the Northwest. Has that reduction been made on the advice of responsible agents of the Government throughout the North-west?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. I think my hon. friend need not fear, and neither need the people have any fear, that there is any disposition to reduce the force below the actual necessities of the case. This force has been under the management, as deputy head, of Mr. Fred. White, who is a most competent and careful man, and it is upon his advice and direction, informed as he is by his officers in the North-west, and having an excellent idea himself of the needs and wants of the country-it is on that basis that the reductions have been taking place and are now taking place. My hon, friend (Mr. Mulock) may rest perfectly sure, that the advice which is tendered will be conservative, and that we shall not go beyond what is prudent in the reduction. My hon. friend must also remember that the police force is now far more efficient in proportion to its number than it was formerly. There are two reasons for that. One is, the greater facility for transportation afforded by main lines and branches of railways running through the country. The other reason is. that in the possession of arms the men are becoming more efficient. They are now being provided with a couple of Maxim machine guns which are very effective if they have to be used in active work, and which though they may not be used will be of very great deterrent value. Everything is being managed with a view to the security of the people of the North-west. During the last year the police have been removed entirely from Manitoba, and the main-tenance of law and order has been left to the people of that province. That, of course, leaves more men for service in the North-west Territories.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you know how many have been removed from Manitoba?

Mr. FOSTER. The number in that province has been gradually reduced from year to year, and last year the last of them, about twenty men, were removed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. weapons are the North-west mounted police armed with?

Mr. FOSTER. We have secured two hundred Lee-Metford carbines for them, and have Winchesters and two Maxim machine guns. The artillery force consists of two 7-pounder guns, four 9-pounder guns and 2 mortars. Then they have the Enfield revolver for close quarters.

MULOCK. I have received communications from persons in the North-west, more particularly in the Alberta district, the tenor of which are not in the line of the may be unduly anxious, perhaps nervous. However that may be, I want as one member of the House to take my full share of responsibility for endorsing any expenditure that is necessary for the proper preservation of life and property and the affording of every reasonable confidence in the security of the people there. The Minister and the Government, of course, knowing more particularly the requirements, will be primarily responsible, and I do not think they should seek protection unwise for any ecomony by suggesting that it is the result of demands from this side of the House. I am not of course speaking for this side of the House; I am only speaking my own views; but to that extent I again press upon the Government not to make a mistake and retard settlement, as they would do, did it turn out that this force has been so weakened as perhaps to invite trouble, with all its attendant consequences.

Mr. McMULLEN. Any person who looks over the items of cost of this force, as set out in the Auditor General's Report, must come to the conclusion that the men connected with it are paid very excessive salaries. In regard to the remarks of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), I have had communications from the North-west, in which there has not been a single word to show that there is a necessity for the existence of this large corps in that country at I believe the time has come when it should be very rapidly reduced. challenge the statement the hon. member for North York has made, I have no doubt he has such communications; but I know the people of the North-west are exceedingly anxious to have all the money possible spent among them. If the hon, member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) were here, he would laud very eloquently the expenditure of money on the North-west mounted police, and would tell us that they were an absolute necessity, so that the expenditure of money might be continued. I do not believe anything of the kind. I have received no less than seven letters from different sections of the North-west, and those who have written to me say that the corps is largely made up of English dudes who are paid large salaries for travelling around the coun-

Mr. MULOCK. From what districts have you received the letters?

Mr. McMULLEN. Regina, Fort McLeod and other districts. We have any number of officials on the reserves to see that the Indians are taken care of and kept on their reserves; then we have a great many engaged in learning agriculture; and I cannot see, unless it is for the purpose of preventing smuggling across the boundary, that there is any necessity for the enormous expenditure that is made in connection with proposed reduction. Of course, the settlers | this corps. We provide them with everything -what they eat and wear, and with medicine and medical attendance if they are sick. We have a commissioner who receives $2,600, an assistant commissioner who receives $1,600, 11 superintendents who receive $1,400 apiece, 33 officers who receive $1,000 a year each, and some 17 or 18 assistant surgeons all of whom receive very large allowances. So that if the Government were disposed to save money in connection with this corps, it could be well done. The hon. Finance Minister stated a moment ago that the expenditure on this corps last year was $611,283.21, but he does not take into consideration the salaries at Ottawa chargeable to the mounted police, amounting to $9,-742.50, or the charge for compensation for injuries, amounting to $1,953.51. amount is given by the Auditor General as $622,000, while the Minister says it is $611,-He deducted these amounts in order, if possible, to show that there is a considerable reduction made each year. The reductions have not been anything like what they should have been. The last time Sir John Macdonald was in this House, discussing this very question, he stated that it was the intention of the Government to reduce the force from 100 to 200 every year, as he found they could safely dispense with the services of these men. I believe we can well dispense with the services of a very I do not believe there is large number any necessity for the existence of the expensive and well-equipped corps we have now. In some sections, such as those referred to by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) they should have a few of those police around for the purpose of protection, but I insist that in the southwestern portion of the North-west there is not that necessity. The people there do not think there is. I have friends and relatives living there for the last twelve years, and they declare that the North-west mounted police, while an efficient, is an enormously expensive corps, and largely made up of the class of people I have stated-young Englishmen, brought out and paid large salaries, and well provided for, and some Canadians who cannot very well be mastered at home, and are sent out there for the purpose of being drilled into good behaviour. It is not right that the country should be saddled with an enormous expenditure to keep up this corps, which could, in a great measure, be dispensed with.

Mr. DALY. I am sorry there is a difference of opinion between hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you sure there is none on your side?

Mr. DALY. I do not think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No difference of opinion on any subject?

Mr. McMullen.

Mr. DALY. Possibly, but not as to the keeping up of this corps. The hon. member for North Wellington says he has communications from the south-western portions of the North-west Territories, which lead him to believe there is no necessity for the Mounted Police there. I may tell the hon. gentleman that if there is one place in the whole of the Territories where it is absolutely necessary to have the mounted police, it is in the south-western portion.

Mr. McMULLEN. Close to the border?

Mr. DALY. Yes; in treaty 7, amongst the Blackfeet, Bloods and the Piegans, the most unruly and difficult Indians we have to deal with. If the mounted police were not there, the friends of the hon. gentleman, of whom he speaks, would not stay there twenty-four hours. Instead of the force being reduced, in my opinion, it should be left where it is; but, at all events, we have the assurance of the Finance Minister that the force is not to be reduced below The hon, gentleman does not do justice to the men who make up the force, when he says they are English dudes and young Canadians sent there to get them out of I wish to say, on behalf of the the way. mounted police, privates, non-commissioned and commissioned officers, that there is no more efficient force in the whole Dominion. The men are a credit to this country, and to the officers who command them, and the services they have rendered Canada speak volumes for the force. I do not think that any person at all conversant with its work will say that it does not do its work most efficiently and economically. In fact, it is a by-word amongst the people that the force is managed with unsparing economy, and the hon, gentleman has been entirely misinformed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In what way does the hon. gentleman wish us to understand he uses the word "by-word"?

Mr. DALY. I say that the rigid economy exercised in every direction in the management of the force is a by-word among the people out there. The force is recognized by those competent to give an opinion as the most efficiently-managed force in the British possessions. Military men who have had to do with similar organizations have always said, on inspection of the mounted police, that it is one of the finest bodies of men to be found in any of our British possessions, not excepting the Australian or Cape Colony police. I would be derelict in my duty, as a representative of the North-west, did I not rise in my place to say a word on behalf of the hard-working and efficient young men and officers of this force.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to take the same line as the hon. member for West Assinibola. There is not a member from the Northwest, from the Minister down, who is not prepared to get up and demand that every single item of expenditure in the North-west should be increased rather than de-creased. It appears that there are some members, not excepting one of the Ministers, who would be quite prepared to say that money spent in digging one hole and filling up another is a proper expenditure, so long as it be spent out in that country. We are quite willing to spend money in the North-west where it is absolutely necessary, and where the country will receive some return. But we have no right to spend money uselessly, even for the purpose of keeping up the North-west mounted police. Any person who will look at the expenditure in connection with that force, as set out in the report before us, must come to the conclusion that there is a good deal of extrava-Let me read some of the items: R. J. Devlin, paid for 204 coats at $17.44, and fourteen at $13.95\%, total $3,753.09. What kind of coats were these?

Mr. DALY. Fur coats to ride across the prairies when the thermometer is thirty to thirty-five below. The hon. gentleman would be a good deal narrower than he is now if he had to ride across the prairie without one of these overcoats.

Mr. McMULLEN. I fancy that furs are to be got in the North-west very cheap, and it is strange that you should have to come to Ottawa to buy them and send them back to the North-west again.

Mr. DALY. You can go to London and buy fur coats cheaper than you can buy them out here.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is where all the surplus of the world goes. Notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. Minister, I still adhere to the statement I have made. For instance, take Regina, and look at the expensive buildings there for the police, and the very large corps that are kept there? Will any one tell me that it is necessary to have so many men kept for the preserva-tion of the peace in that part of the country? I say it is not, and the people of Regina say it is not. I know that the mayor of Regina will not say that it is necessary that the force should be kept in Regina as strong as it is. I hold that while it is necessary along the border to have the force in order to prevent smuggling, it is not necessary to have them in many other places.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice, on page 11 of the reports of the Auditor General, overruling the treasury board, that when a matter in connection, I presume, with payments due the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was before the board, he declined to pass a certain cheque on the ground that there were cross accounts still existing between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway to a very large amount. In what condition are these accounts? Why have they not been settled? And what effort has been made to secure a settlement? If you turn to page 11 of the Treasury Board, over-rulings, you will find this report:

10th March, 1894.—The Board had before them the matter of the refusal of the Auditor General to issue his certificate for cheques in favour of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for $57,-481.71 and $35,149.52, under authority of the Orders in Council of the 2nd and 8th January respectively, and on considering the report of the Auditor General and the Deputy Minister of Finance thereon, the Board order that the cheques mentioned in said report be issued. It appears that the claims which the Auditor General indicates as possible cross-claims, are matters of disputed liability and not such as could be properly insisted on as offsets, and it appears also that the Department of Railways and Canals has adopted measures to adjust the liability. As regards the interest included in the proposed payments, it appears that the question of liability for interest has been already considered, and does not stand on the same footing as a claim for interest on the fuel account referred to by the Auditor General.

Now, it is evident that the Auditor General declined to issue these cheques under the circumstances, he contending that there was cross-account. We want to know what steps have been taken to get that account settled with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. The items the hon. gentleman speaks about, I suppose, is the disputed account between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government in reference to the rolling stock, and also the account in dispute for stores taken over when the North Shore Railway was taken over. It is a question between the two corporations, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific by which of them the amount is due.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the amount in dispute?

Mr. HAGGART. I have not a note of it. The accounts are in course of settlement between the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific. The moment the question is settled between them, it will be settled with the Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. With regard to this $84,220—

Mr. HAGGART. You will remember that the award of the arbitrators was for $579,-255.20. The amount certified and paid up to the 1st April was $495,034.64, leaving a balance of $84,220.56. That is the amount asked to be voted.

Intercolonial Railway—
Increased accommodation at Halifax... $125,000
Branch from Intercolonial Railway between Windsor Junction and Bedford

 Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister will please explain these in detail. He had better go over them one by one. But, in particular, we want to know how much more is to be expended on the increased accommodation of Halifax, and what it consists of.

Mr. HAGGART. As to the total amount, speaking from memory, I think it is about a million and a half of dollars.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does this $125,000 complete the proposed increased accommodation?

Mr. HAGGART. No; the total amount to be expended is $281,385. That is the estimated cost of the remaining portion of the work.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are these items charged to capital account?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. Minister say what the capital account of the Inter-colonial stands at?

Mr. HAGGART. That is published in the report. I think it is about 54 million dollars. The only work so far commenced is the construction of the crib-work facing. The total expenditure on the extension work into Halifax from the commencement of the work in 1872 to 1st April, 1895—that is in answer to the hon. gentleman from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright)—is $1,512,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That includes this increased accommodation?

Mr. HAGGART. No; the expenditure on works undertaken will increase the total to about $1,800,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That means the old Lockman Street extension?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No; it was brought down from the Richmond depot long ago.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister does not intend to conclude the work this summer?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How much will you spend this summer?

Mr. HAGGART. I expect to spend $17,000 on a brick shed, $15,000 on grading, $30,000 on cribbing, and $3,000 on track.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where is the shed to be—on the wharf expropriated from Roach?

Mr. HAGGART. It is on Water Street, between the depot and the wharf.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. McMULIEN. What is the anticipated cost of the branch between Windsor Junction and Bedford to Dartmouth?

3684

Mr. HAGGART. The total cost will be $198,000, of which $7,770 has been expended.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the length of that one piece.

Mr. HAGGART. I think it is eleven and one-half miles.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I thought the hon. gentleman had not made up his mind to construct that branch?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was last session. They were discussing it then.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the contract been let by tender?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; it is under contract.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the contractor?

Mr. HAGGART. Part of it is let to Daniel McGregor & Sons and part to Thomas Cook.

Mr. McMULLEN. Were tenders asked for by advertisement?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, and these were the lowest tenders.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What has become of the bridge there?

Mr. HAGGART. We intend to build a branch instead of a bridge, take the branch from Dartmouth over to the main line, about 11½ miles, and do away with the bridge.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I would like to know if better accommodation is going to be given at Cape St. Ignace station.

Mr. HAGGART. The officers of the road think there is sufficient accommodation there at present.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I received a letter a few weeks ago from Mr. Pottinger stating on the contrary that they intended to give better accommodation.

Mr. HAGGART. Then I have to say to the hon. gentleman that Mr. Pottinger reports one thing to him and another thing to me. He reports to me that at present there is a station there, and a siding of sufficient length.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It is not the shortness of the siding that we complain of, but its location as it crosses the public road, and sometimes when cars are on it, they keep the people waiting for from fifteen minutes to half an hour. The siding is also a source of danger to the people who have to cross. If the department would only put it a little west of the station, it would not cost very much. Mr. Yeo, the roadmaster, admitted it was a very dangerous siding, and Mr. Pottinger wrote to me that they were going to begin work after the 1st July, or something to that effect, as soon as the Estimates were voted. Now, it seems they have changed their mind.

Mr. HAGGART. All I can tell the hon. gentleman is that Mr. Pottinger says it is not at all necessary to move the siding. If we moved the siding, I suppose we would have to move the station.

CHOQUETTE. Not at all. You could move the siding 500 feet further west without moving the station, and unless this is done, I think the Government will be called upon before long to pay more than the cost of removing the siding, as damages for an accident. The station is about an acre from the road. The cars always stop upon the road, they pass several times a day, and they wait there some times for half an hour. It is a very dangerous place. and the attention of the department has been frequently called to it during the last ten years. Mr. Yeo himself has visited the place, and admits that it is dangerous. must protest against the refusal of the department to make that change. It will not cost more than a few hundred dollars, and I do not see why the department should do what is required. If they do not do so, I am sure that some day the Government will be called upon to pay for accidents much more than it would cost to remove that siding.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman put a notice on the paper, and I sent down and made inquiries in reference to it, and Mr. Pottinger's answer to me was that there is no necessity of changing the siding.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I must protest against the action of the Government in refusing to move the siding now. I repeat that I had a letter from Mr. Pottinger not long ago saying that it would be done after the 1st July, or something to that effect. Mr. Yeo himself came there, and I met him along with the Mayor and many citizens, and pointed out to him the danger of the situation.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman makes an extraordinary statement when he says that Mr. Pottinger promisied him that he was going to remove the siding after the 1st July. After the hon, gentleman's statement in reference to the subject, I shall feel it my duty to inquire of Mr. Pottinger why he sent such a statement to the hon. gentleman, and gave me information to quite the contrary effect.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am not sure that he stated exactly the siding. But Mr. Yeo wrote to me to meet him at the place, and I went there and the Mayor and several Yeo said that citizens met him. Mr. he had made a report to the effect that the siding must be removed, although he did not fix the time. I then wrote to Mr. comparison between the estimate cost of the Pottinger, and he replied to me saying that the work would be done after the 1st July. or something like that, that he could not do anything until the Estimates were voted. Consequently I was surprised at the answer the hon, gentleman gave to my notice of motion. I will telegraph at home for Mr. Pottinger's letter, and I will lay it before the Minister.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to get the letter from the hon. gentleman, because it extraordinary that Mr. Pottinger seems should write to him that he was going to do the work, when he writes to me that there is no necessity for it.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It is something that effect. But from the wording of the letter I understood the work was decided upon, and I sent the letter to one Mr. Gamache, or to the mayor of the parish to show him that the work was going to be done.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this the last branch of the Intercolonial Railway that is going to be undertaken?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the only one under construction.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are there any further additions that we may expect in the way of branches?

Mr. HAGGART. None that I know of.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am sorry that the Minister has used all the branches and the main line together, so that they are now worked in such a way that we cannot get information in regard to the cost of working those branches. I notice we have spent $3,-800,000 in Cape Breton for building a branch line. I suppose these people were entitled to it, as well as others. But the Minister was not able to give any information that that line was paying running expenses. I suppose the construction of this branch will be still another sucker added to the number that are already constructed to draw upon the resources of the main line. I have no objection to the people of the maritime provinces seeking railway accommodation, but I think the interest of the whole Dominion should be considered in these matters, and that the people in the west who have built their own roads by municipal and provincial resources, should not be called upon to contribute largely to the construction of roads where there is not a dollar paid by either province or municipality. But I am glad to have the Minister's announcement that the construction of branches is drawing to a close. The hon, gentleman has stated that the construction of this branch would dispense with the construction of the bridge. what amount was spent on the construction of the bridge and why did it collapse?

Mr. HAGGART. Two years ago I made a branch acd of rebuilding the bridge. I found the branch line could be built as cheaply as the new bridge, and as the people preferred the branch we built it. The estimated cost of the bridge was $220,000, and for that sum a branch could be built.

Mr. MULOCK. I find the report of the Intercolonial Railway only occupies two or three pages, and the Minister has scarcely done himself or his subject justice. I am satisfied he will not find the returns of any railway, of even a much less magnitude than the Intercolonial Railway, containing so little information as is embodied in this annual statement of a road constructed at a cost of $54,000,000.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon, gentleman will wait until the total Estimates are passed, I will give him as full an account as he desires in regard to this particular road.

Mr. MULOCK. I will receive with welcome this elaborate statement promised. At tne same time I cannot allow this shortcoming to pass regarding the annual statement, for while it is not possible to improve the present statement it may be improved in the future. Take the annual report of the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway and there will be found set forth with a good deal of detail the various extensions of the railway, the works under contemplation and a description of the progress of the work and estimated cost of carrying them to completion, and altogether the shareholders are placed in possession of information with respect to the position of the enterprise. I need not add anything to a mere statement to what the report on the Intercolonial Railway contains to show that in these respects it is wholly valueless, and the same remark applies very considerably to other reports throughout this volume. Here is a road 1,142 miles in length, involving an annual expenditure of nearly $3,000,000, and this committee is asked to vote for extensions $260,000, while there is not one line in the annual statement as to this contemplated expenditure. We are told by the Minister that $125,000 is required to increase the accommodation at Halifax, this being only part of a contemplated expenditure there amounting to $260,000. I ask the Minister in all fairness whether he does not think it is due to the committee to set forth this information in his report. renders it very difficult and almost impossible for members to satisfactorily discharge their duties without this information. cannot find either in the report of the Minister or the report of the Auditor General any intelligent statement of the receipts and disbursements of the Intercolonial Railway. There is a statement of the receipts from passengers and freight. There are, however, other sources of revenues besides tolls; yet those annual statements showing other sources of revenue or the amounts received. I ask the hon. gentleman where are entered receipts from the sale of second-hand rails, and rolling stock, and supplies? Under what account will these receipts be found?

Mr. HAGGART. They go into the earnings of the road.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose there are frequently transactions of that kind, and that not a year passes without old rails and folling stock being sold?

Mr. HAGGART. These will be found in the store account. There is a regular store account kept.

Mr. MULOCK. These particulars are not found in the report.

Mr. HAGGART. The total amount in store is there set out—the total amount perchased on store account.

Mr. MULOCK. I suggest that there should be greater details given. When large quantities of rails or rolling stock are sold there should be a distinct item showing that source of revenue. At present it is quite impossible to intelligently analyse the financial operations of the road. Some millions are thrown at us, and we are told that the accounts balance and that great skill and business ability have been displayed in the management of the road. I dare say there is, and I am not wishing to detract from any credit to which the hon, gentleman is entitled in regard to the road. But I would feel more satisfied if I came to the conclusion on evidence rather than on mere faith. To-day it is impossible for any one on the evidence laid before the House and the country to form an opinion as to the successful or non-successful operation of the road. Is there anything in the accounts to show what amount has been written off for depreciation in rolling stock and plant during the past year?

Mr. HAGGART. The instructions given are that the road must be in as good order at the end of the year as it was at its commencement. The rolling stock and the material on the road and the road bed, as shown by the reports of the mechanical superintendent and of the officer in charge of the road bed, are in better order than they ever were. Any new material brought in is charged to the railway out of the store account. All old material sold goes to the credit of the road for working expenses.

their duties without this information. I cannot find either in the report of the Minister or the report of the Auditor General any intelligent statement of the receipts and disbursements of the Intercolonial Railway. There is a statement of the receipts from passengers and freight. There are, however, other sources of revenues besides tolls; yet no information is to be found in either of

Then we will know how much you have paid out on the earnings, instead of, as the result of some sort of induction to ascertain it, as now the Minister says we may. I am only pointing out in a few instances the shortcomings of the report, and by no means pretending to say what a railway report should contain. I know from the Minister's own expressions that he acknowledges these defects in the report. The Minister has promised us an elaborate report later on, and I trust that in future he will make it a part of his annual report.

The second secon

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I have already had occasion to draw the attention of the Minister to the complaint of the cattle dealers at Lévis that there is no accommodation afforded for their cattle. When the cattle come by train, and if the boat is not there to take them over to Quebec, the owners are obliged to leave the cattle on the streets. or else pay a charge of so many cents per head per day to a man named Turgeon who has a vacant lot of land there. I called the attention of the Minister to this last year, and some years ago I pointed out the place to Mr. McDonald, the local superintendent, and to Mr. Schreiber. Does the Minister intend to do anything in the matter?

Mr. HAGGART. The Deputy Minister says he has had no complaint in reference to the matter.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I drew his attention to it last year.

Mr. SCRIVER. That may have been, but he forgets it.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I myself have complained of the matter in the House.

Mr. HAGGART. Our experience in expropriating property in that section of the country has been very unfortunate. It is a very expensive matter to get accommodation there.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Mr. CHOQUETTE. That may be unfortunate, but it is not the fault of the These people are charged high rates for bringing their cattle from Rimouski to Lévis, and they are entitled to have accommodation. I again call the attention of the Government to the matter, and I hope that they will remedy the evil.

With reference to the Mr. HAGGART. statement of the member for York (Mr. Mulock) if he turns to page 67, and following pages of the report, he will find that the details of expenditure are given as fully as can be expected. Could he suggest anything more that he thinks ought to be put in that report?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The great trouble has always been in respect to the stores account. I never could make head or tail of it, but there seems to be, on the face of it, countant's report. The chief accountant in the stores account (page 71) credits the account with the issue for the year, $1,-167,000; also, with the sales of material, fuel, to other railways, $12,983, and also sales of old material, $48,535. But the general manager, in his report, only gives the one item, $48,535. I suppose that can be explained, but my object is to know what kind of an audit is made by the Auditor General, with reference to that stores account. I see that in June, 1894, he called the attention of the department to a letter of the Minister of Finance requiring him to make an audit of this stores account. and he asks that a list of all the property be prepared, and a statement of the purchases and issues for the period indicated, and that certain details be given to him. There is no reply to that letter published in the report. If the Auditor General does make an audit, is it a purely accountant's audit in the department here, or does any officer from his department make what I should call a substantial audit?

A COMMISSION OF A COMMISSION O

Mr. HAGGART. One of the officers of the department goes down to the stores, and I suppose takes stock and makes a substantial audit. I suppose the $12,000 is a charge for old rails to some particular railways which, perhaps, has been paid by a reduction from the subsidy. These old materials ought to be a credit, I think, instead of a debit. The amount of the stores at the beginning of the year is, say $1,700,000, and at the end of the year, $1,200,000. That would be found to be correct by the Auditor General. Then there is a charge against the Intercolonial Railway for $500,000. That goes in the shape of cash to the revenues of the country. The only audit required then would be that of the Auditor General to see that the sheet was correct, and that the receipts in it correspond vouchers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that they charge the stores account with the balance from the previous account, and with the purchases made during the year.

Mr. HAGGART. The stores account would not be charged to the Intercolonial Railway. They deal with it as if it were a separate body.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There are two or three things I want to call attention to. The statement of the general manager on page 65 shows the value of the stores purchased to be $980,000, and the value used to be $1,167,000, and the value of the old material sold to be $48,000. When I turn to the stores account, I find that in addition to that $48,000, there is the sale of material, fuel, &c., to other railways to the amount of $12,983, which does not appear to be referred to at all by the general manager; a material discrepancy between the Gen-eral Manager's report, and the Chief Ac-able any person reading these accounts to understand what that means. Then, in order to find out whether there is any check kept by anybody upon the stores account, I wanted to find whether there goes down a man from the Auditor General's office to check the stores on hand, and, if so, where is his report? The hon. gentleman knows enough about railway accounts to know if there is any department in which great leakage can occur and that leakage can very easily be hidden, it is the stores account. want to know whether the stores on hand are actually checked. I do not mean a paper check, but a check by a man of the stores themselves.

Mr. HAGGART. We ourselves have a check on all the stores every year. In reference to the $12,983, I suppose that will be for material charged to the different railways connected with the Intercolonial Railway. I speak for the Auditor General, but I understand that he has a couple of people down at Moncton making an audit.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does he make a report to the hon. gentleman?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is very curious, if the Auditor General makes an audit, that he does not make a report either to the hon, gentleman or to the House. I have been asking about this stores account every year, and I have never yet been able to obtain a clear understanding of it.

Mr. FRASER. Is not stock taken of the stores each year?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. Is the return of that stocktaking made to the hon. Minister?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, it goes to the office at Moncton, and the totals come here.

Mr. FRASER. Is that done by an officer of the department?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, we have an audit department at Moncton. We have a chief accountant and treasurer there, who sign the stores report, and this is checked over and revised by the Auditor General's officers who are sent down.

Mr. FRASER. That is only the figures. What I want to get at is who is the official who goes in to the store-house and finds out the quantity on hand at the beginning of the year, and who knows the quantity get during the year, and checks what has gone out, aud who finds at the end of the year that the balance is there.

Mr. HAGGART. There is an officer, who is generally changed every year. There is a thorough departmental audit every year.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister was correct in saying that there were certain items

Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

the same time, the accounts are. I think. extremely meagre. With regard to the store account, I find, as an illustration, that last year you acquired $981,000 worth of stores. What is the system adopted in purchasing that enormous quantity each year? To what extent do you buy by tender, by advertisement, and by private sale?

Mr. HAGGART. All stores are bought by tender and advertisement.

Who opens the tenders Mr. MULOCK. and awards the contracts?

Mr. HAGGART. The tenders are opened at Moncton. The tenderers all tender by quality, and if there is a dispute as to the quality, it is tested by the professors of the school of technology at McGill, to whom samples of oil, turpentine, &c., are furnished.

Who issues the authority Mr. MULOCK. to purchase?

Mr. HAGGART. The general manager. I never issue an authority.

Mr. MULOCK. Who is present when the tenders are opened?

HAGGART. The storekeeper and general manager. When the tenders are opened, he has authority to award only to the lowest. If there is any dispute as to quality, or if he prefers a party who is higher, on account of his sample being better than the others, he refers that matter to the department here and they deal with it altogether.

Mr. MULOCK. The amount purchased per annum is so large that the Minister cannot make any mistake in seeing there are proper checks in connection with the purchases. The same remark applies to the sales. I will ask how the hon, gentleman gets the best price for what he is selling?

Mr. HAGGART. The rolling stock is sold by tender.

Mr. MULOCK. I can state a case where they were not.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not aware of having authorized the sale of any article unless by tender. We send circulars out asking for tenders.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman says that in all cases the rolling stock is sold after tenders were advertised for in the press.

Mr. HAGGART. Tenders for eleven or twelve locomotives were asked for last year, but the prices were so low that I refused to accept them, and I instructed the superintendent down there, if he got higher prices to sell them, and he sold three.

Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister calls for tenders in a public way through the public which I asked for later on in the book; at press and afterwards exercised his judgment, I do not know what else he can do. What record is there of the opening of the tenders, both for purchase and sale?

Mr. HAGGART. They send an abstract of the tenders up here signed by the two of them.

Mr. MULOCK. This is a tremendous power to put in the hands of two employees.

Mr. HAGGART. Any person who has tendered will soon let us hear about it if another tender was accepted a quarter of a cent higher than his.

Mr. MULOCK. Tenders are capable of being opened at different hours and so on. What I desire to know is whether the Minister can say that his supposed rules are lived up to, and that tenders are in all cases advertised for.

Mr. HAGGART. Not always advertised. Circulars are sent out sometimes.

Mr. MULOCK. That is the weak point in the system. In what cases do you invite tenders privately and in what publicly?

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that circulars are sent out to nearly every one in the trade, and that there is an immense number of tenders received.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman mean that circulars are sent out, and that advertising is not the rule?

Mr. HAGGART. The general rule is to advertise, but in some cases circulars are sent out. Sometimes it would cost a great deal more for the advertising than for the article required. My instructions are to send circulars to every one in the trade, and we accept the lowest offer, no matter whose it is.

Mr. MULOCK. I have had experience in investigating public accounts, and where the circular system was adopted—for instance in the Militia Department-I can say, without fear of contradiction, that tenders were not invited from the trade generally but from the few favourites who were in the ring. I hope that system will not continue, under the new regime at any rate. If that old system of inviting tenders privately is enforced in connection with the Intercolonial, it cannot be stopped too soon, and I would ask the hon. gentleman, when making his statement, to say what proportion of supplies has been got during the last fiscal year as the result of competition after public advertisement and what proportion is the result of tenders invited by circulars sent out privately?

Mr. HAGGART. It would be pretty difficult to separate the two, but we will look into it to-morrow.

Mr. MULOCK. When will the hon. gentleman make his statement?

Mr. HAGGART. I was going to make it to-night. The revenue account of the Intercolonial comes in afterwards, and I will make it then, but the tenders are asked every six months, and the hon. gentlemen from the maritime provinces can state that every man engaged in the trade, who is able to furnish the article, has his tender received. They know when the tenders are to be received, and they all tender, and no fault can be found with the department under that head.

Mr. FRASER. Those who tender and are successful know the prices, but those who tender and are not successful do not. I have heard a good deal of complaint that favourites did get the tenders.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon, gentleman will apply at the department, he will get the details and the prices of all articles furnished by tenders.

Mr. FRASER. Those who tendered cannot very well do that.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, every one knows the price.

Mr. FRASER. Why, it takes a very long time to get an answer. I am merely saying what I hear, and I do not know that there is anything wrong.

Mr. FLINT. I notice that a large amount has been spent by the Intercolonial on printing and advertising. Those who criticise the expenses of the Government for printing and lithographing are not in the habit of taking into account the fact that this expenditure on the Intercolonial is in addition to the printing and advertising referred to in the first part of the Auditor General's Report. The advertising last year amounted to $9,249, and the printing and lithographing to $37,984. This amount is distributed very much in the same channels as the other sum for similar purposes. It is distributed among the Government organs in different parts of the country, and is no doubt a very strong inducement to them to stand up for the Government through all I notice that the Halifax "Mail" received $570 for advertising last year, and the Halifax "Herald," which is really the same paper, received $5,141 for lithographing. The total sum which went to the "Journal's" office from the Intercolonial alone was $6,111, a very respectable sum. The Yarmouth "Times," a little local sheet, published in the county of Yarmouth, received for lithographing on account of the Intercolonial, $1,017, a very large sum for small paper. It is a very circumstance that the Intercolonial Railway managed in Moncton has to all the way to Yarmouth to hunt up a Tory paper to run up a large bill like that in the course of a year. This has been going on for a good many years. Of course, if these journalists and others have put in tenders, they have a right to what they get. The Moncton "Times" received $297.83 for advertising, and, for printing, $14,175, a total put into their hands of $14,473—a very respectable douceur, which no doubt has its effect on the minds of the stockholders of that paper. The Quebec "Chronicle" received $2,000, and the St. John "Sun" the very respectable sum of $10,292. The total amount of these bills for printing and lithographing is $47,234. Add this to the $269,625 that is spent by the other departments for printing and it will be seen how large a sum of money is put in the way of a very very few individuals. I would like to ask the Minister how these orders are given?

delication for the Grant Control of the Control of

. Mr. HAGGART. According to the mileage. I think the Intercolonial has less printing than any other railway. The hon, gentleman asks if this is done by tender. No; the printing and advertising is regulated by an Order in Council.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that the famous A, B, C order in which a description is given of various classes of Government organs.

Mr. HAGGART. There is so much for New Brunswick, so much for Quebec, and so much for Nova Scotia.

Mr. FLINT. I see that the poor unfortunate Queen's printer out of the large sum of money spent for printing and lithographing receives only $4,507. Why, when we have an extensive Printing Bureau at Ottawa, considered to be one of the best on the continent, why cannot we do that work as well there as by giving it to little printing offices throughout the country?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How are you going to keep the St. John "Sun," the "Herald" and the "Times" if you do that?

Mr. FLINT. The advertising accounts ought to be upon a business basis. The Government in relation to advertising ought to choose its mediums for advertising just as a private individual would do in his own business, choosing the papers that have the largest circulation or having a circulation in the special locality it is desired to reach. But the Government gives this advertising to the journals all of one stripe. It is time a larger share of the printing was given to the Printing Bureau. Let the Dominion at large have the profit and take the temptation from our journalistic brethren.

Mr. HAGGART. The Queen's Printer has supervision over the prices of advertising and printing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would remind the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) that in the Printing Bureau we have no facilities for lithographic work.

Mr. McMULLEN. But you have for printing. The Minister of Railways has made a statement I should like to see him try to verify. He says that the printing and advertising on the Intercolonial is less than on other railways. Does he mean to say that it is less per mile, or does he compare the Intercolonial account with that of the Grand Trunk which has 4,000 miles of track or the Canadian Pacific Railway which has 5,000 as against 1,100 for the Intercolonial?

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman had been listening he would have heard. I put it as clearly as I could. What I said—and I venture the opinion; I do not know whether it is correct or not—that for the length of line and the business done, the Intercolonial expense for printing is as little as that of any other Canadian road.

Mr. McMULLEN. Take the printing per mile either of the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific and you will find that it is very much less than the Intercolonial. I went over the calculation last year. The hon. Minister is willing to venture the assertion, but he has not tried to verify it. If he had tried to verify he probably would not make it.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says he has verified his statement, so of course it must be correct.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon, gentleman says he is not prepared to substantiate his statement. I say I went over the calculation, and I am prepared to challenge the hon, gentleman's statement.

Mr. HAGGART. I have not gone over the calculation.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before we leave this item, if there is nothing further to be discussed on the votes we have already considered, I would like to ask as to this $20,000 for increased accommodation at Sydney. What does that include? There was a claim put in by Mr. Emery for accommodation at Sydney. Has that been settled, and if so, how?

Mr. HAGGART. It went to the Exchequer Court, but I have forgotten what the judgment was. It was some years ago, I think.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the intention with regard to this $20,000?

Mr. HAGGART. That vote has been in every year for the last three or four years as the hon. gentleman must know, because he pays attention to the details of the Estimates. It is for the purpose of furnishing accommodation between the railway station and the wharf when the agreement is consummated between the department and the town. There is a difference between us and we have not come to an arrangement.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the town own the wharf?

Mr. FLINT.

Mr. HAGGART. We purchased the wharf, as the hon, gentleman may remember, and intended to build a line to it. The town of Sydney was to furnish the right of way. They changed their mind, and wanted the station and the wharf for the terminus, at another place. We said to them: You pay us for the wharf, select the site of the station where you want it, with the terminus where you want it, with the right of way, and we will give you the road.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I would like to know of the Minister what is the result of the investigation that was held at Riviere du Loup about a large amount of goods which were stolen last year from the shed and cars?

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember rightly, we took action against the parties accused, and one of them was punished. We could not convict the others.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I think the only one arrested was the one who pleaded guilty.

Mr. HAGGART. We tried to get evidence, but we did not get evidence sufficient to convict.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I gave the officials the names of some persons as witnesses, and I am told they were never summoned to court. I would like to know why they were not brought into court?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must not expect me to know why it was that those witnesses were not brought into court.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I wished to know if an investigation was held there.

Mr. HAGGART. An investigation was made for the purpose of proving these parties guilty, but there was not sufficient evidence to convict them. We only succeeded in convicting one of them.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Was complaint made before a justice of the peace? In what way was the investigation held?

Mr. HAGGART. It was by our own officers. The inquiry was made by Mr. McDonald, our inspector down there, and Mr. Skeffington, who was the head of the detective police.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Can the Minister give me the cost of the loop line which was built from Riviere du Loup station to the wharf some years ago?

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot tell at present. I will furnish the hon. gentleman with the figures.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Is that branch used now?

Mr. HAGGART. Very seldom.

Mr. CHOQUETTTE. I would like to know how many cars have passed on that branch these last two years?

en en en en entre de la companio de la partico a della partico ogica della partico del

Mr. HAGGART. It will be very difficult to get that. Cars may pass or be shunted over the line, and no account kept of them.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I mean from the station to the wharf. I do not think there can be more than one or two.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think it is used at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. In regard to North Sydney, I understand the road is finished to that point I think it is at that point that Mr. Emery's claim is set up for terminal accommodation. The Minister said that the case was in the Exchequer Court. I would like to know what amount was awarded to that gentleman.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the amount claimed was $80,000. They eventually came down to $18,000, and I think the amount awarded was in the neighbourhood of $7,000 or $8,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know what the Minister's regulations are with regard to passes over the Intercolonial Railway. I know he grants them to members of Parliament, and I presume to senators. I want to know if there are any other passes granted, to whom they are granted, and the number of them.

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot tell. All the passes, I think, are granted under some form or Order in Council. I think the Lieutenant-Governors and some others are entitled to them. I seldom grant a pass myself, unless to a member of Parliament going from here down there; I do not believe, on the average, once a month. My intention is to give passes to every member and senator, the same as on other roads. I think members of Parliament, individually, ought to be entirely independent of the Minister, and I grant them all passes alike.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not charging the Minister with granting free passes himself. I only wanted to know the basis on which passes are granted, and the individuals to whom they are granted.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the manager of the Intercolonial Railway is governed by some rule in the granting of annual passes. They are given to managers of other railways, to Lieutenant-Governors, to members of the provincial governments down there, to the Admiral, to the General commanding the forces, to the bishops down there, and to the heads of the Methodist and Baptist conferences, and of the Presbyterian assembly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Passes are granted to those classes of people, and nobody is complaining of that; but what we want to know is what passes are granted outside of these by the general manager.

There are only trip Mr. HAGGART. passes granted by the general manager; I do not know who they are.

Is there no rule Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) for his guidance? Is it in his discretion?

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The managers must have some discretion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to know what the limit is, because there is a great deal of complaint about it, that it is absurd to an intolerable extent.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know to whom he issues them, but, as a general rule, locks on sections 1 and 2. The late chief enthey are issued to employees of the railway, and other railways, and to some of the canal with six lift-locks, five of which had newspaper men. I will get the information a lift of fourteen feet each, and the other for the hon, gentleman.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to relieve the mind of the hon, member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) of the idea that the Cape Breton branch is a sucker on the Intercolonial Railway and a burden on the treasury of the Dominion. If separate accounts be kept on the Intercolonial Railway, making the advantage of navigation to increase the Moncton a dividing line-

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why Moncton?

Mr. CAMERON. Because that portion of the Intercolonial Railway east of Moncton pays well, and the loss is altogether on that part of the road between Moncton and Quebec. The branches from St. John to Moncton, Halifax, Pictou and Cape Breton pay well, and I have no hesitation in telling my hon, friend that there is no part of the Intercolonial Railway, with the exception probably of that portion between Truro and Pictou, which pays as well as the branch in Cape Breton. I defy any one in this House or out of it, to prove anything to the contrary. If the hon, gentleman will go down to Cape Breton during the summer season. mous amount of traffic and travel on that road, he will be easily convinced that no part of the road pays as well as the Cape Breton section, and that it is a pity a large number of branches should not be built to accommodate the tourists who visit that island during the summer season, in which case that branch would pay better than now.

Soulanges Canal—Construction..... $600,000

Mr. HAGGART. I desire to make a statement with regard to the changes proposed in the construction of the Soulanges Canal. In treating of the works of construction on the Soulanges Canal before this House on former occasions, I have explained that the canal is, for construction purposes, divided into thirteen sections, Archibald Stewart being the contractor for sections 1 and 2. for sections 4, 5, 6 and 7; Charles Raynor for vessels passing through the canal. These section 8; Randolph McDonald for sections 9 and 13; Rogers & Taylor for section 10; Poupore, Fraser & Co. for section 11; and George Goodwin for section 12. With the ex ception of section No. 12, fair progress has the work, there having been made with been executed on sections 1 and 2, 35 per cent; on section 3, 62 per cent; on sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, 33 per cent; on section 8, 54 per cent; on section 9, 52 per cent; on section 10, 64 per cent; on section 11, 62 per cent; on section 12, 5½ per cent; on section 13, 41 per cent. The masonry consists chiefly of lock-work, none of which has yet been executed, though a large quantity of stone has been quarried and cut for the gineer, John Page, orginally planned this had a lift of twelve to fourteen feet. These were the maximum lifts that Mr. Page was disposed to allow. Upon looking into this matter shortly after taking charge of the department, it became apparent to me that the physical features of the ground were well adapted to a reduction of the number of locks, and that it would be eminently to height of the lifts, by reducing the number of locks, and at the same time make a saving in the cost of the operation of the Chief Engineer Trudeau who succeeded Mr. Page in office, was indisposed at first to make any alteration in Mr. Page's design, but after carefully considering my proposition, he agreed to reducing the number of lift locks to five, four of which are at the Cascades or lower entrance to the canal. As Chief Engineer Trudeau did not see his way to making the lifts greater than 17ft. 6in. for these four locks, the five lock plan was adopted, and the contract was let, but to do Superintending Engineer Monro justice, it must be said that he has always supported my view that there should be three locks only at this point, each with a lift say, for instance, in July, and see the enor- of 23ft. 4in.; and Chief Engineer Schreiber is of our opinion, but after the work was commenced. I have felt the way was not freely open for such a change, and have hesitated to make it, though believing it to be in the public interest, but finding the contractor was not disposed to be unreasonable in the matter and that he was willing to carry out the work on the three-lock plan at his contract prices of $2.80 per cubic yard for concrete backing and foundation, and $14 per cubic yard for the face stone masonry. I called in Messrs. Walter Shanley and T. C. Keefer as consulting engineers in the matter, they have gone fully into the plans and estimates prepared by Mr. Monro, and have carefully considered the cost of construction and maintenance of the work, also giving attention to the question of the cost of the operation and the increased faci-O'Leary Bros. for section 3; George Goodwin lities it will give to the quick despatch of gentleman have reported strongly favouring proaches to the lock. This would necessitate the three-lock system from every point of careful, and therefore tardy, navigation in the the three-lock system from every point of view. I will now read what they say, and leave the House to judge of the wisdom of adopting this proposed change from a fourlock system to a three-lock system, and I feel satisfied the advantages of the threelock system will be apparent to hon. gentlemen:

We have the honour to report that, in accordance with the request of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, as conveyed by your letter of the 6th instant, we have made a careful examination of Mr. Munro's estimates, specifications and plans for his four-lock system and for his three-lock system, at the lower entrance of the Soulanges Canal (section 1), with special reference (1) to the practicability of substituting three locks for four locks; (2) to the cost of construction as affected by the proposed change; (3) to the effect upon the annual cost of maintenance to be produced by such change; and (4) to the question of the time required for passing vessels through this section of the canal under the two systems.

1. The practicability of overcoming the 70 feet of lift with three locks as well as with four, is indisputable in view of the fact that greater lifts with larger locks have long been in use elsewhere; in the Liverpool docks, for instance, the lifts at certain periods of the tide approach to 30 feet. We may remark, too, that in the Nicaragua Canal, now under construction, it is designed to have a lock of more that 40 feet lift.

2. Upon the question of cost of the section wifa three lifts instead of four, we find that the threelock plan would increase the quantities of the less expensive work, excavation, while the reduction in the number of locks from four to three would diminish the quantities of the more costly items, masonry, concrete, foundations, lock gates and machinery; the ultimate difference being in favour of the three-lock system by a substantia! amount, whether No. 1 plan of lock construction or No. 2 plan of lock construction, as described in the contract specification, be adopted.

3. The annual cost of maintenance will be reduced under the three-lock system by the wages of one crew of lockmen, and by the wear and tear of gates and machinery lessened in like proportion, as three is to four.

4. The effect of the proposed change upon the time required for navigating the section is in favour of the lesser number of locks. The time lost in locking is largely in slowing down to enter and in getting under way in leaving; and in the randling of the gates and valves; all of which will be reduced one-fourth by the doing away with one lock, while the total number of minutes required for filling or emptying the three higherlift locks will be no more than for the four locks of lower lift, because of the greater head in the former and the less number of valves to be manipulated.

Locks upon canals, likes grades and curves upon railways, are necessary evils, and, therefore, should always be as few in number as the circumstances will permit. The governing consideration on section 1, Soulanges Canal, is the length of reach obtainable between locks. four locks this length is the minimum admissable for the present length of lock, and, if adhered to, would prohibit the future lengthening of the lock. The length of the full-width portion of the reach as now planned is 410 feet, which is increased a little over fifty per cent by the narrowing ap-case of two vessels, the united lengths of which might exceed 500 feet, meeting in the reach. By the throwing out of one lock, and so substituting two reaches for three, the length of the fullwidth portion will be increased to 810 feet, giving ample space for the largest vessels to meet and pass without warping.

In the four-lock system one of the reaches (owing to local conditions of the ground) is without the usual, and very necessary side-basin, or equalizing reservoir, for maintaining the full depth in the reach while it is being drawn upon for filling the lock below. The absence of such reservoir might be seriously felt in this case because of the shortness, and therefore limited water surface of the reach. The three-lock plan, with only two reaches, each with ample side reservoirs, effectually removes this objection.

We have referred incidentally to the consideration that the short reaches of the four-lock system would not admit of the future lengthening of the locks, which would only be done to provide for longer vessels, requiring of course, longer reaches than those now planned for shorter ves-The lengthening of the lock in such cases would have the effect of shortening a reach none too long for the size of vessel for which the present plan of lock is designed.

If in the future it should be desired to lengthen the locks of our canal system, as is now being done on the Erie Canal, it will afford an opportunity for the introduction elsewhere of breast-walls under the upper gates of each lock. a plan which has been wisely adopted in the Sculanges Canal. This system of construction would effectually prevent disasters, such as have not infrequently occurred on the Welland Canai, from the bursting open of the upper gates by an ascending vessel, and which could not have taken place had the gates been protected by a breastwall.

Mr. Monro's estimate for the four-lock $440,000 system is..... And for the three-lock system...... 320,060

$120,000

It may, and will, no doubt, be said, if this is such a great improvement why was it not so planned at the outset. I have already explained the cause. The late John Page was opposed to greater lifts than fourteen feet, if they could be avoided. Mr. Trudeau, his successor in office, was of a timid nature, and consequently was not disposed to very largely increase the lifts, urged though he was by my arguments in favour of fewer and larger lifts, when the physical character of the country would admit of it. Monro, who was more advanced in his views, and had kept a watch on what had been accomplished in other places in that respect supported the greater lifts, and Chief Engineer Schreiber, as I have before stated, after discussing the matter with me and Mr. Monro, gave the three-lock system his hearty support, after having had the report of Messrs. Shanley and Keefer read, the arguments they have advanced in its favour must, I am convinced, commend the change to the strong support of hon. gentlemen. The fifth lock is upon section No. 4. Up to this lock have been made, but the contractor informs me that so soon as he has the great bulk of his prism work completed he intends to vigorously prosecute it. Upon sections 8, 10 and 11 large cast pipes of 10 feet in diameter, bedded in concrete, are being inserted to pass rivers under the canal. They are far advanced towards completion, and it is believed they will do good service. The ice last winter damaged one of these culverts, which was under construction, but measures have been taken to repair it and make it a good substantial piece of work. Upon section 13, a substantial steel bridge has been built to carry the Canada Atlantic Railway over the canal. The steel superstructure rests upon strong, well built massive masonry piers and abutments. The crib entrance piers at either end of the canal are well advanced. When this whole work is completed it will be a good straight piece of navigation with fine approaches at both the upper and lower entrances. The cost, based on the contracts under way, is estimated at $4,750,000, and there has been expended up to the 31st of May 1895, $1,643,-800, leaving work to be done to the value of $3,106.800.

Cornwall Canal—Enlargement..... $350,000

Mr. HAGGART. The total estimated cost of the enlargement is $4,101,400. The expenditure up to 31st March, 1895, has been $3.560.400, leaving a balance to complete of $635,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it on the Cornwall Canal that an accident was recently reported to have occurred?

Mr. HAGGART. The steamer "Ocean" carried away three of the gates.

Rapide Plat Canal $200,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman had better give a statement of what the present position of the work is on each of those items, how much remains to be done, and any other particulars.

Mr. HAGGART. Section 1, is under contract to Poupore & Fraser, $420,000; section 2, Weddell Dredging Co., $33,000; section 3, Poupore & Fraser, $143,000; then there are pier gates, J. R. Millar, $3,200. On section 1, there is a lock to be built the foundation of which has been a troublesome one to deal with. The greater portion of the work is dredging. The amount of expenditure, 1894-95 up to the 31st of March, was $172,450. Total estimated cost of building, $1,600,000.

DENISON. When the Soulanges Canal item was before the committee I was in the Chair, and with the permission of the House I wish to be allowed to say a word in connection with the question of the depth of the locks proposed on the Soulanges this time little preparations for constructing Canal. Since I first brought this matter up in the House a few years ago, the movement in favour of deeper water on the St. Lawrence Canals has gained a great deal in public interest. If the idea now spoken of in the United States is carried out, of putting a capal twenty or twenty-one feet around the Niagara River, the only point between Port Arthur and Montreal that would not have a depth of twenty fect would be the locks on the St. Lawrence canals. It seems to me that when the Minister is making these proposed changes in the depths of the Soulanges Canal, he ought to again consider the question of preparing the lock sills for a depth of twenty feet, so that if the idea should be carried out eventually, it can be done cheaper than if it were necessary to build the lock all over again.

> Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Denison) must remember that would be necessary to have the locks the same width and breadth on the proposed canal. and to increase it, I am frightened, would be a good deal more than the cost of the new locks. However, the whole of the locks are nearly completed, except the one that Poupore & Fraser have to do with. The locks on the Lachine Canal, the Cornwall and Galops Canals are finished.

> Mr. DENISON. It seems to me that ought be done. If we are going to build canals now of the same dimensions as we built them twenty-five years ago, it appears to me that it would be a mistake. As I understand it the same width would be sufficient. and there would not be much expense in lengthening the lock to correspond with those on the upper stretches.

> Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the inspector on the Rapide Plat Canal?

> Mr. HAGGART. A man named Hickey is chief inspector.

> Mr. McMULLEN. Was he once a member of this House?

> Mr. HAGGART. No; it is a cousin of his. I think.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is his salary?

Mr. HAGGART. Three dollars a day.

Mr. HAGGART. This is to build the work at the upper entrance under contract with Messrs. Murray & Cleveland. amount expended for the year 1894-95 was $80,700. Mr. Robertson is the superintending engineer, I think, and there is no clerk of works, and no inspector.

Mr. McMULLEN. How is it you have no inspector on this canal while you have an inspector on the Rapide Plat Canal?

Mr. HAGGART. The other is more difficult work. Murray & Cleveland's work is now approaching completion, and it is very evening. We have an instance in the Erie simple work.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hickey is not an engineer.

Mr. HAGGART. No, he is chief inspector.

Trent Canal $400,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of that?

Mr. HAGGART. The total cost would be in the neighbourhood of $6,000,000, but the new design will reduce it to four and a half millions.

Mr. McMULLEN. What are the changes in the new design as compared with the old?

Mr. HAGGART. It is by adopting the natural water-stretches and using hydraulic lifts and concrete blocks.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the depth of water?

Mr. HAGGART. Five feet on the mitre sill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And it cost $6,000,-

Mr. HAGGART. No, it will cost $4,500.000 when it is finished. That may be distributed over a number of years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Judging from past experience that is a correct observation. It is, I think, sixteen years since that was made to do duty at election time.

Mr. McMULLEN. I suppose this canal will be entitled to the name of the larger Tay Canal when it is finished? I wish to enter my protest against expending money on works of this kind in place of the development of railways and the deepening of our water courses, to the Atlantic Ocean, to twenty feet. The idea of expending such a large amount of money to connect certain water-stretches with a five-foot canal and locks, is absurd, because it is a tedious and expensive way of moving freight. In my humble opinion it is an exceedingly foolish expenditure, the whole thing from start to finish; and lest the Minister might on some future occasion say, as he said with regard to the Tay Canal, that no exception was taken to it, I want to raise my protest now against this foolish and insane expenditure, to which I am bitterly opposed.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand that hon. gentlemen opposite have \mathbf{on} other OCcasions entered their protests against expenditures which to-day they endorse; and five years from to-day, when my friend who has just hon. entered protest will see the great benefit which this canal will be to the Dominion of Canada, I trust that he will then apologize for the statement he has made here this much narrower and shallower than this is to the nation to the south of us. The Trent Canal is not, by any means, a wonderful undertaking; but it will shorten the distance from the west to the east by some 250 miles, which will be of great advantage for the transporting of grain. Large vessels can easily go to the town of Midland to unload, and from that point, barges holding from 10,000 to 15,000 bushels of grain can readily go by the Trent Canal to Montreal, which will mean a saving of three or four days. I am pleased to see that the hon. gentleman has simply entered his protest without giving any reasons therefor, and I fully believe that in his heart of hearts he endorses the undertaking. I am only sorry that he could not take a trip over the part already constructed, the connecting link, and see the plan which is being carried out. It is estimated that the saving in freight rates alone to the district tributary to this canal would more than pay the interest on all expenditure every year, ten times over. To get our grain to Port Hope, we have to pay more than the people in the western states have to pay to get their grain to Liverpool. The rates from Lindsay to the city of Toronto are 11 or 12 cents, whereas, from Chicago to Buffalo they have been made at 11/4 cents for corn, and 1% cents for oats, and from Buffalo to New York at 1% cents for wheat. and 1% for corn. From Chicago to Kingston the rate is quoted at 21/4 cents for corn, and from Kingston to Montreal at 21/2 cents for wheat, and 2¼ cents for corn. We pay twice that to get our grain from Lindsay to Port Hope. It will be a great gain to the farmers of that district when the canal is constructed, and there will be many other incidental advantages from it which it is not necessary at present to discuss.

Mr. McMULLEN. I hope the predictions of the hon. member will be fulfilled, for, after the enormous cost of this work, I should desire to see some return from it. The hon. gentleman knows that the Erie Canal was constructed before railways were thought of. I question very much if the state of New York would build a mile of that canal to-day.

Mr. HUGHES. They are talking of enlarging it.

Mr. McMULLEN. They had to take some steps to prevent it becoming absolutely useless. But in the present embarrassed condition of the finances of this country, I think this is an unnecessary undertaking. I had an opportunity of viewing a part of this waterway some years ago, and I was pleased with the manner in which some of the work had been constructed; it appeared to be very substantial; that was the lock at Fenelon Falls. The intention in constructing that lock, I think, was that it should carry Hector Cameron into Parliament, but it did not. The people got the lock, but Cameron did not get the seat.

Grenville Canal $40,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a new vote apparently; what is it for?

Mr. HAGGART. It appears that when the enlargement of that canal was carried on, the work was stopped before its completion, leaving the channel very narrow and shallow, and from the falling away of the banks, it is gradually becoming narrower, until it is now only about 20 feet wide. This amount is required to be applied towards the work at the points which most urgently need attention. The amount expended up to the 31st of March, 1895, on capital account was $4,035,533.

PRISON-MADE BINDER TWINE.

Mr. McMULLEN (for Mr. Macdonald. Huron) asked, How many car loads of binder twine have been shipped from the Kingston factory (prison) to the Continental Cordage Company, Brantford, or to John Connor, Brantford, from February 15th, 1895, to June 20th? At what price was same invoiced? Is David Lambert, of Brantford, employed by the Government in connection with the prison binder twine plant, Kingston? If so, how much is he paid, and what duties does he perform? Is John Connor, of St. John, N.B., employed by the Government in same connection? What is his salary and duties?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Two car loads have been shipped. The price in

WRECK OF THE STEAMER "SAN PEDRO."

Mr. PRIOR asked, 1. Have the Government given instructions to their agents in British Columbia to remove the wreck of the steamer "San Pedro" from Brotchie's Ledge? 2. If the present owners of said wreck object to waive their claims to ownership to the same, or to remove the same, have the Government power under existing laws to compel the owners to remove the wreck, or to remove it themselves? the Government are not possessed of such powers, will they introduce legislation at once giving them the necessary authority?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Under existing powers instructions have been given in order that the wreck may be removed. If it is not removed by the owner, the Government will remove it.

THE DUTY ON PIPING.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, 1. Whether the Department of Customs has decided to exact the highest rate of duty on piping used by farmers for wells? Whether oil refiners are allowed to import pipes for use in oil wells at the lower rate 3. If so, on what principle are pipes for use by oil refiners admitted at a lower rate than those required for the use of farmers?

Mr. WALLACE. The Department of Customs has not decided to exact the highest rate of duty on piping. when imported to be used by farmers for piping wells. Duty will be collected in accordance with the provisions of tariff item No. 259, at the rate of 20 per cent ad valorem. 2. The rat duty is the same for either purpose. 2. The rate of They are not.

MAIL SERVICE IN BRITISH COL-UMBIA.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked, 1. What was the amount paid for carrying the mails from Asheroft to Cariboo, B.C., in 1887 and 1888? 2. What are the terms of the contract under which the mails are carried from Ashcroft to Cariboo, and from Ashcroft to Lillooet? 3. Is the contract for carrying the mails between Savona's Ferry and Cache Creek still in existence? If not, when did it expire, and when did the subsidy cease? 4. Who were the stockholders in the British the invoice was the regular price charged to Columbia Express Company in the years other purchasers. David Lambert is not 1888 and 1891, and was the contract for carrying the mails made between these persons and the Government? 5. When does the contract for carrying the mails between Ashcroft and Cariboo, Ashcroft and Lillooet, and Clinton and Lillooet expire? 6. Who are the persons holding the contract for carrying the mails from Revelstoke to Nakusp, New Denver and Three Forks, from Revelstoke to Nelson. from Golden to Windermere and Fort Steele? What are the terms of these different contracts, and the amount of the subsidies paid under each, and when do they expire?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 1. $24,000 for each year. 2. $24,000 per annum; the ser-Ashcroft vice to be tri-weekly between Station and Clinton, weekly between Clinton and Barkerville, weekly between Clinton and Lillooet, and during the summer months, weekly between Ashcroft Station 3. The mail service between and Lillooet. Cache Creek and Savona's Ferry terminated on the 1st of March, 1895, and the payment therefor at the same time. 4. The contract for the mail service performed by the British Columbia Express Company was made with the company, but it is not known at the department who were the stockholders of the company at any time. 5. 30th June, 1896. 6. Nakusp and Revelstoke, contractor. Capt. Troup; service as required; rate of payment, 5 cents per mile; expires at the Postmaster General's pleasure. New Denver and Three Forks: there is no such service. Both these offices are served by the Nakusp and Slocan Railway, which runs from Nakusp to Three Forks. Nelson and Revelstoke: There is no single service between these places. During the season of navigation mails are carried by steamer from Nelson to Robson, thence by the Kootenay Railway to Nelson. Golden to Windermere and Fort Steele—this is part of the route between Golden and St. Eugène Mission. The contractor is F. P. Armstrong; frequency, weekly in summer, fortnightly in winter; rate of payment, $3,000 per annum. The contract terminates 30th June, 1897.

WORKS AT GRAND ETANG, C.B.

Mr. FRASER asked, 1. Has the contractor fulfilled the terms of his contract in erecting the works at Grand Etang, C.B.? 2. Who was inspector of said works? How long was he employed, and what was he paid? 3. Do the Government propose to excavate the channel to a depth of a foot below low water, so that a dredge can be used?
4. Had the Government at the time they gave the contract for said works any guarantee that the municipal or any other authorities would build a new road or bridge? 5. If the municipal or local authorities do not divert the public road nor build a new bridge, will the Government allow the works already done to go to decay? If not, what will the Government do?

Mr. OUIMET. The contractor has fulfilled the terms of his contract in erecting the works at Grand Etang, C.B., with the exception of the excavation in the channel. Mr. Joseph Boucet who was the inspector of the work, was employed from the 5th of March. 1894, to the 3rd May, 1895, and was paid $698.75, being at the rate of $2.50 per day when actually engaged on the work. Government proposes to excavate the channel to a depth of one foot below low water so that a dredge may be used to do the remainder of the work. This cannot be done. however, until the road crossing the entrance of Grand Etang has been diverted and a new bridge built, and inasmuch as roads in Nova Scotia are vested in the provincial government, negotiations have been opened opened with the provincial government through the Secretary of State with a view of coming to an understanding in connection with the diversion of the road and the building of the new bridge.

THE WORLD'S FAIR, CHICAGO.

Mr. McMULLEN (for Mr. Campbell) asked, 1. How many persons were sent to Chicago by the Dominion Government in connection with the World's Fair? 2. The names and addresses of such persons? 3. The sums paid to each of these persons for salaries, expenses, &c.? 4. The total amount paid for all purposes in connection with said exhibition up to date? 5. Are there any claims still unpaid, and if so, to what amount?

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is no reason why that information should not be had, but it is a class of information which is usually asked for by means of a motion for a return, and I would suggest that that course be pursued.

Mr. MARTIN. A motion was passed for such a return last session, but the information has never been brought down, though I have asked for it repeatedly.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF MANI-TOBA.

Mr. MARTIN asked, Whether an appointment has been made to fill the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba? If not, how soon does the Government intend to fill the vacancy? Has any promise been made to the present incumbent that he will be reappointed? Is it intended that Hon. J. C. Patterson should take the position, and if so, when?

Mr. FOSTER. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that no appointment has been made to fill the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba. The Government proposes to fill the vacancy shortly. No promise has been made to the present incumbent that he will be reappointed. The name of the person who takes that high and responsible position will be announced when the appointment is made.

Mr. MARTIN.. The hon. Minister has omitted to answer the last part of my question.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all answered.

C. E. HICKEY, WILLIAMSBURG CANAL.

Mr. McCARTHY asked, 1. Whether Mr. Charles E. Hickey has been appointed to any position on the Williamsburg Canal? (a.) If so, was it the position of superintendent? (b.) What is his salary? 2. Is it a fact that the salary of his predecessor, in the same office, was $1,400 a year, while that of Mr. Charles E. Hickey is $1,800? 3. If his salary is $1,800 per annum, what are the reasons which induced the Government to give him (Mr. Charles E. Hickey) a higher salary than that usually paid the superintendents of the canals?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say: 1. Yes, Mr. Charles E. Hickey has been appointed to a position on the Williamsburg Canal. (a.) Yes, he was appointed superintendent. (b.) His salary is $1.800 a year. 2. Yes, the salary of Mr. Hickey's predecessor in office was $1,400.

Mr. McCARTHY asked, 1. Whether Mr. G. N. Hickey has been appointed to a position on the Rapide Plat Canal? (a.) If so, when was he appointed? (b.) What was the position he was appointed to? (c.) What was his salary? (d.) Is he still in the same employment? 2. Was Mr. G. N. Hickey appointed overseer or inspector in connection with any work on the Rapide Plat Canal? (a.) If so, in what capacity? (b.) What were his qualifications for the position? 3. Is any other person discharging the duty of inspector in connection with the work? (a.) If so, who? 4. Is J. Gillespie acting as inspector of the stone work on the new lock. Rapide Plat Canal? (a.) If so, at what salary or wages?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. member, I beg to say:—1. Yes; Mr. G. N. Hickey has been appointed to a position on the Rapide Plat Canal. (a.) He was appointed on 4th June, 1894. (b.) He was appointed to the position of overseer. (c.) $100 per month. (d.) Yes, he is still in the same employment. 2. Yes. (a.) Overseer. (b.) Considerable experience in connection with canal and other works. 3. Yes, there is another inspector in connection with the work. (a.) His name is John Gillespie. 4. Yes. (a.) At $3 per diem.

BORING THE STRAITS OF NORTHUM-BERLAND.

Mr. PERRY asked, Has the work of borings across the Straits of Northumberland been commenced for the present season? If so, how many borings have been done to date? the inquiry asked for in relation to Téle-

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. HAGGART. I have to state that the preparation for the work of boring has been made, and all is in readiness to put down first boring when weather permits.

PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. YEO (for Mr. Rider) asked, What is the total amount now required to be expended to complete public works chargeable to income now in progress in-1st. Province of Ontario; 2nd. Province of Quebec: 3rd. Province of New Brunswick; 4th. Province of Nova Scotia; 5th. Province of Prince Edward Island; 6th. Province of Manitoba; 7th. Province of British Columbia: 8th. The Territories?

Mr. OUIMET. That answer cannot be given now. I am told that it would take at least ten days to prepare this statement, and I think the hon. gentleman might give notice of motion. The work will go on, all the same, at once.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Dropped.

DR. CHENIER'S MONUMENT—CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. BRODEUR asked, Have customs duties been paid on the statues of Maisonneuve and Sir John A. Macdonald erected in the city of Montreal? If not, has the Government taken security from any per-sons for the payment of these duties? Who are the persons and what is the nature of the security? Has the committee charged with erecting a monument in honour of Dr. Chenier, or any one on behalf of the committee, requested the Controller of Customs to allow the monument of Chenier to pass the customs on the same conditions and on the like formalities as the monuments of Malsonneuve and Macdonald? If so, has permission be given to make the customs entry as above stated? If not, why has such permission not been granted?

Mr. WALLACE. Customs duties have not been paid on the statues of Maisonneuve and of Sir John A. Macdonald erected in the city of Montreal. The statues were excepted from duty by Orders in Council. The committee charged with erecting a monument in honour of Dr. Chenier have asked that the statue be admitted free, and I have likewise submitted the question to Council for decision. No Order in Council has yet come to hand. Answered by reply to third question.

TELESPHORE GENDREAU, HARBOUR MASTER OF MONTMAGNY.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant sphore Gendreau, harbour master of Montmagny; and if not, why not?

Mr. COSTIGAN. As the Government has been informed that Mr. Gendreau has instituted proceedings against Mr. Lislois for damages for falsely and maliciously making charges against him, it is proposed to allow reasonable time for such proceedings before ordering a special inquiry.

MR. LOISELLE, EX-POSTMASTER AT STE. ANGELE DE MONNOIR.

I would like to know Mr. BRODEUR. from the Postmaster General why he has not laid on the Table all the papers concerning the dismissal of Mr. Loiselle. I was glad to hear him say yesterday that he had decided at last to bring down some of the papers, but I see that he has only brought down the inspector's report. He must know perfectly well that many other documents were asked for, especially the correspondence and vouchers and judgments, and the record of the case Loiselle vs. Guillette. These papers were ordered last year and also in 1892. The Postmaster General stated some time ago, in an answer to the question put by me, that the reason these papers were not brought down was they were lost in 1892. I contradicted at the time the declaration of the hon. Minister, and in support of that contradiction I will read to the House a letter of the Postmaster General, written in 1893, in which he declares that these papers are in his own hands:

Ottawa, 21st February, 1893.

My dear Mr. Brodeur,—I have received your letter concerning the case of Loiselle, of Ste. Angèle de Monnoir. This record, which could not be found last year, has been recovered; and I have no objection, if you desire, to have the papers deposited on the Table of the House with the exception of the inspector's report.

I am sorry that the Postmaster General claims now that these papers are lost and that they have been lost since 1892, when he states in his own letter in 1893 that the papers are in his hands. It will be seen that the declaration I made in the House is perfectly correct; I am sure that the Postmaster General will see to it that all the papers in this matter are filed. I do not know why the greater part of the record should be left out of the return.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman has read a letter which, to my mind, proves nothing at all. The hon, gentleman knows perfectly well that the controversy between us was about certain papers which had been transmitted, as I stated at the time to the Department of Secretary of State, long before I was Postmaster Geueral, and which have never been recovered. I never stated that the evidence which was adduced in the case of Loiselle against Gervais was not to be found. When this matter was brought up at the time when Sir John Thompson was leader of the House, the hon. viember for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) when asking for the papers, never referred to the record of the court as I understood him. In fact, this omission on his part was referred to by Sir John Thompson, who said it would be important before the Government decided whether the report should be brought down or not to know exactly what was the evidence adduced in the case of Loiselle and Gervais, and if the hon. gentieman had the papers and it would be convenient for him, it would be better that the Government should see these papers. never understood that the hon, gentleman wanted me to produce the evidence. There has never been any controversy about that; I have never had any objection to producing that record. I understood that the hon, gentleman had that record himself. and I never understood that it would be of the slightest importance to him to have it brought down. As to the papers which have been lost, I have repeated so often the facts that I do not want to take up time further than to say again that they have been lost.

CONTROL OF THE CONTRO

Mr. BRODEUR. No; the papers are not lost.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman will be kind enough to keep quiet until I have told him exactly how I understand the case. I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman, and I think it not at all fair that he should interrupt when I am making an explanation to the House. I say the papers were lost from the department and have never been recovered. I never saw them, and I do not know what papers they are. I know that a certain part of the docket of the department was transferred to the Department of the Secretary of State of that time and has never been recovered. This controversy, as I understood it, was as to the report of the inspector, which I refused to bring down because I considered it was against the efficiency of the service to do so. And I still hold to my opinion. But, obeying the order of the House, I have brought down that report and it is now on the Table. If the hon, gentleman wants to have the evidence-

Mr. BRODEUR. I want the proceedings, the vouchers, the letters and all the other papers.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Though the hon. gentleman may want it ever so much, he cannot have that part of the report which has been lost. If he is not satisfied with those papers which can be brought down, I am afraid I cannot satisfy him.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. PERRY. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries when the papers ordered by the House relating to the returns made to the department by the wharfinger for Tignish Harbour, P.E.I., for 1894, containing the list of vessels anchored and cleared into and out of said harbour, with amount of wharfage paid by each vessel, will be brought down. It is now about a month since the order of the House was passed, and I would like to know if it is the intention of the Minister to bring them down. He must know that this is an important matter, and it will be too late to bring the papers down on the last day of the session.

parameter with the control of the co

Mr. OUIMET. I will give the hon. gentleman an answer to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works as to the paper regarding the site for the Portage la Prairie post office?

Mr. OUIMET. I thought I had communicated a letter from my deputy.

Mr. MARTIN. That promised the return to day.

Mr. OUIMET. No; it promised it after to-morrow?

Mr. MARTIN. No; to-day, and to-morrow at the latest.

Mr. OUIMET. The letter, which I have before me, is not in accordance with the hon. gentleman's recollection.

MAIL SERVICE—LAKE ETCHEMIN AND ST. ROSE OF WATFORD.

Mr. VAILLANCOURT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to inquire from the hon. the Postmaster General whether he is prepared to state to the House when the papers 1 moved for on the 3rd of June last, will be laid upon the Table of the House, and whether they will be brought down during this session?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. (Translation.) What was the nature of the papers moved for, as I did not quite catch the words of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. VAILLANCOURT. (Translation.) I moved for a copy of the contract entered into between the Postmaster General and Mr. Joseph Lamontagne, on the 1st July, 1894, for the mail service between Lake Etchemin and St. Rose of Watford; also copy of all papers, correspondence, tenders and returns of inspectors relating to the cancelling of said contract, as also copy of the new contract subsequently passed by the Government, with the tenders which preceded the same. It is now over a month since the Order of the House was issued, and I think it is about time the papers should be laid before the House.

Mr. PERRY.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. (Translation.) I may tell the hon. gentleman that all the papers moved for, with the exception of the returns of the inspectors, will soon be brought down. I gave instructions to send over the papers to the Secretary of State, and they will be laid on the Table within a few days.

Mr. BRODEUR. And my papers—will they also be brought down?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think so.

MANITOBA SCHOOLS.

Mr. McCARTHY. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to ask the hon, leader of the House whether he can give us any information as to the remedial Bill. We know now that the answer has come, and the session is advancing; and I think the House would like to know whether the Government have determined to bring in a remedial Bill—whether we are to expect one this session.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend is very insistent. Only yesterday I told him that we had just received the documents from Manitoba. This morning for the first time they have been laid before the members of the Council. We cannot do legislation up quite so fast as that.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 91) to amend the law respecting the lobster fishery.—(Mr. Costigan.)

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Mr. FOSTER moved concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 92) further to amend the Insurance Act.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the nature of the amendments made by the Senate?

Mr. FOSTER. The amendments are unimportant. They provide that a foreign company, when it asks for license to do business, need not be granted the license, even if it performs all the conditions that are necessary, if it has a name which is the same name as a company now doing business in Canada. It is to prevent confusion of names.

Mr. EDGAR. In the judgment of the department?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and amendments concurred in.

FEMALE OFFENDERS IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 128) to amend the Act respecting certain female offenders in the province of Nova Scotia.

He said: This is a Bill promoted by Senator Power, in the Senate, to make more clear and distinct the powers of the court in dealing with these female offenders. In 1891 this Farliament adopted an Act respecting the reformatory established by the legislature of Nova Scotia, and provided that the persons contemplated by that local Act should be sent to the reformatory. In chapter 51, the judge, or stipendiary magistrate, were given authority to deal with these persons so brought up, and send them to the reformatory. The Bill now before the House proposes to amend that first section, and, as it appears to me, it is simply to define clearly the powers of the judge or magistrate in reference to the term during which these persons so brought up may be sent to the reformatory.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has explained in very general terms the object or the purview of this Bill. I am not going to object to its being read the second time, but I am not thoroughly satisfied that we are acting with the best discretion in the matter. As I understand the Bill, it is amending a measure we introduced some years ago, providing that certain female offenders might be sent, in the option of the police magistrate, to a reformatory, instead of to prison, and providing that he should have the power to send them there for the time during which he was authorized to send them to prison, if they were sent Now this Bill, as I understand it. contemplates extending the power of the magistrates, and whereas an offender might be sent to prison for three months for an offence for which she was convicted, under this Bill, it would be possible for a magistrate to send her to the reformatory for one, two, three, four, or five years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No; four, if she is under twenty-one.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But the hon. gentleman will see that if she was sixteen past, she could be sent to the reformatory until she was twenty-one.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And so if she were just past sixteen she would go to the reformatory for five years, whereas the offence might be of the character of mere vagrancy, punishable by law with three or four months' imprisonment, possibly three or four weeks, if she went to prison. Now, I wish to call attention of the committee to that. It may be in the hands of a very I have no doubt those judicious man. powers may be exercised in such a way as to benefit the class who are sought to be included in the Bill, unfortunate women, and others of that kind. But I cannot help calling the attention of the committee to the fact that we are investing an extraordinary power in the magistrate, and giving him a discretion which is not given to any other magistrate I know of. The hon. gentleman, I assume, is thoroughly well satisfied with the gentleman who holds the position now. I have no reason to doubt that he would exercise his discretion fairly well; though my experience in life has led me not to place the greatest confidence in judges and magistrates, or people of that kind. I have learned that they are human. and moved and swayed by human passions, just as much as those who are not on the bench, and all the glamour which is thrown around judges who sit upon the bench, has long since disappeared in my eyes, in matters of this kind. At the same time, I will not oppose the passage of the Bill if the hon. gentleman says that he considers it is one that, in his judgment, the House ought to approve of. I merely express my own fear that we are somewhat departing from the conservative course which hitherto we have followed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. would say in addition to what I have already observed, that on general principles, I agree with the hon, gentleman, but I am acting here on the supposition, which I think is well founded, that we are proceeding largely with a local matter, where the local legislature has invoked our powers in order to enable them to carry out the object of the establishment of that reformatory, and the purposes for which it was establish-The Bill is confined to the city of Halied. The measure has the approval of the fax. local legislature. In 1891 we gave the local judiciary these large powers, and gave them a jurisdiction, believing that they had well considered the operation of the measure in the locality to which it is confined. I may also observe that in 1891 we seem to have intended practically what this amendment now seeks, that is, we left to the local magistrate a very great discretion, without limiting the term at all. We said then that a person coming within that section might be sent to the common jail for a term of two months, or for any longer This Bill is to make that provision more distinct, and I think it would be safe. under those circumstances, to act in the line that the local legislature seems to have carefully considered.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). A party in that case could not sue out a habeus corpus, though the period might be for five years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think not. I think we are going on dangerous lines if it was a general provision, but with that limitation, I felt safe in taking charge of the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is dangerous in the sphere, and so far as the sphere extends.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is limited to the city of Halifax.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second mittee.

(In the Committee.)

in cases of commitment for vagrancy. can understand that a woman, 16 or 17 years of age, might be arrested on the charge of vagrancy and sent to the reformatory for four years. I dare say the discipline would do her good, but at the same time this would be a very serious interference with the liberty of the subject.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think we have met that objection. spector of penitentiaries, and so long as any the common jail. aid is received from the city of Halifax, it is also open to the inspection of the municipal authorities.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Even that does not meet the point I raised. I suggest whether it would not be well in case a magistrate exercised his discretion and committed an offender to the reformatory for a longer term than that for which he could have sent the offender to prison, that he should make a return to Parliament, giving the name of the person, the punishment, the term of the imprisonment and the offence for which imprisoned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think the hon. gentleman's object might be secured by having the inspector mention each in his annual report. I will see that instructions are given to that end.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Would there be any difficulty in requiring that the judge shall in all cases report to the Minister of Justice; within a few days after giving sentence the fact that such sentence had been given, and Minister present a return of such sentences within ten days of the opening of Parliament?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a proposition which might be consider-

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am having in my mind a possible abuse of the power.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. think the hon. gentleman's object could be attained in the way I have suggested. I should not like to come into unnecessary collision with an institution which is largely local, while at the same time this Parliament is within its right in seeing that no injustice is committed by virtue of this Act or anything we may do. I still incline to favour the provision we have now, whereby we can get all the information we require, and that information can be presented to the House at any time.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I. I do not understand time, and House resolved itself into com- how the Minister of Justice could come into collision with the institution by having the facts reported.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has any provision must be remembered that we have very wide been made to ensure that there shall not powers now. We can appoint any officer to be any abuse of this discretion, for example visit the institution and obtain such infor-I mation as we may require, and the House can also take such course as it pleases. I should favour the exercise of our present power rather than undertake to place the institution under more immediate control.

GENERAL REVENUE FUND OF NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Bill (No. 134) to legalize payments heretofore made to the general revenue fund of the North-west Territories, of certain fines, penalties and forfeiture (Mr. Daly) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon, gentleman state the object of this Bill?

Mr. DALY. I have stated it twice already. and I presume the hon, gentleman was not in his seat at the time. In 1887 an Order in Council was passed at the instance of the North-west legislature providing that fines imposed for the infraction of the Northwest Liquor Act should be paid over to the general revenue fund of the Territories. Thereupon an Order in Council was passed, and at that time there was $4,984 in the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor, that included fines other than fines which for infractions were imposed liquor law of the North-west Territories. The Auditor General has taken exception to these moneys being paid over without proper authority, and we are now seeking legislation to confirm the action taken by the Government. The objections taken by the Auditor General were: First, that the sum included moneys collected for infractions of other laws than the license law: and, second, that the Order in Council was not retroactive.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the Dominion Government be entitled to these fines except for this legislation?

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. MULGCK. If the money is the property of the Dominion, then why give it to the Territories?

Mr. DALY. Because the moneys were collected in the Territories by the officers of the Territories, and for the infraction of laws in the Territories. They were entitled under the general law to these fines.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this a pure gift to the Territories?

Mr. DALY No; as the hon. gentleman knows, the North-west Territories Government is still in leading strings. Although we vote money here which is expended by the local government, yet the accounts are audited by the Auditor General. Under ordinary circumstances, if these moneys had been collected by the provinces, they would belong to the provinces, and, being collected in the Territories, ipso facto, they belong to the North-west Territories treasury.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does the hon. gentleman propose to continue this, or is it merely to apply to the past?

Mr. DALY. It is to be continued, of course. When I said that Canada would be entitled to these moneys, I meant Canada in right of the North-west Territories.

Mr. McCARTHY. If it is intended to legislate not merely for the past but for the future, the language of the Bill will have to be changed.

Mr. DALY. We do not require any legislation for the future, because the Order in Council provides for the payment to the North-west Territories Government of all fines, subsequent to the Order in Council of 1887.

Mr. McCARTHY. Then, instead of using the word "ratified" in the Bill, it would be better to use the word "legalized."

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

INCORPORATION OF BOARDS OF TRADE.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 137) to amend the Act respecting the incorporation of Boards of Trade (from the Senate).

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the change proposed by this Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to allow certain districts to form boards of trade, which, under the old definition, cannot do so. It is done in the interests of two applications which have been made, one from the town of Mattawa, which, under the old definition, could not, of itself, form a board of trade, and which, by adding two townships to it can do so. The object of the Bill is to extend the definition sufficiently to allow all towns in that way to form boards of trade, and so have the advantages which come from gathering themselves together for commercial purposes.

Mr. McMULLEN. It does not interfere with any existing boards of trade?

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. EDGAR. One would think that the new districts taken in were more suitable for agricultural societies than for boards of trade.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend must recollect that the districts lying around a town have sometimes very large cheese and butter interests, and it is with reference to these that boards of trade are formed.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Bill (No. 127) further to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would like to know what change this makes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. None. We have been voting the salaries in the Estimates, and they should be contained in a Bill. That is the whole object of the clause.

On section 2,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no new appointment here.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this the rule that applies to the other provinces?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes. This is simply to carry out the principle that ought to have obtained in these cases as in all others, but was omitted, that is, to include in the general laws the provision for these salaries as well as to vote them in the Estimates.

Mr. McMULLEN. How does the hon, gentleman arrange for the expenses of the judges in attending court in Manitoba? A lump sum is allowed in Ontario.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A per diem allowance for the sittings and mileage. A regular return is sent in and audited. On section 3.

Mr. McMULLEN. This matter, I think, was under discussion in the House before. This Bill proposes to increase the salary of this judge, which, I think, this House should resent.

HIBBERT CHARLES TUPPER. When the resolution was under consideration it was suggested that I should obtain information which was not then at my command, in order to give the House some idea of the amount of business conducted in the Admiralty Court of British Columbia, because, as hon, gentlemen pointed out in that debate, it did appear as if this court had very little to do, and that the salary which was fixed for this office in Nova Scotia was ample for the judge in British Columbia. At that time it appeared that only one case had been dealt with in the Admiralty Court of British Columbia in the last year. I have a return from British Columbia, however, showing that the work of that court now, and possibly for years to come, is and will be relatively greater than the work of similar courts in the eastern provinces, and hon, gentlemen will see at once what gives rise to that. Under the international arrangement between Great Britain and the United States all the cases of seizures come into the Admiralty Court. and, consequently, ever since that award was adopted, that court has been very busily engaged indeed. I will give hon, gentlemen some idea of the amount of work by referring to this return briefly. There were four cases tried in the Admiralty Court in 1891, as stated by the hon leader of the Opposition. But this is what has happened since. and what I think I will be able to show the House will continue to occur.

Mr. LAURIER. I followed the statement of Sir John Thompson.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Things have happened since then which have changed the whole complexion of the case. I have in my hands a return from the registrar of the court, showing that while only four cases were dealt with in 1891, in 1892 there were seventeen; in 1893, sixteen; and in 1894, fifteen. This year, although yet very early for bringing these cases to court, as most of them are sealing cases, there have only been five entered; but the collector at Victoria is of the opinion that there will still be a large number, because sixty-four vessels have cleared from Victoria this year, of which forty-two are engaged in the Behring Sea. right within the area of the award. the late judge was appointed, he received $600 for comparatively little work. I need not refer in this connection to the other very important statements made by representatives of British Columbia as to the growing commerce of the province, its increased shipping, as compared with the provinces to which I particularly refer. I refer to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick particularly, because there $1,000 has been fixed; and, looking back to the debate, I do not hesitate to say that if these figures had been before the Minister of Justice in 1891, he would have been bound to ask the House to appropriate $1,000 for each of these courts, because, on the basis of work done. the discrimination is absolutely unjust, in n:y opinion, to British Columbia. here a list of all the various cases, the ordinary admiralty cases, some involving very large amounts—one in 1892 for $7,000; another, $3,500; another $8,000; another, $20,000; salvage cases, and so on—all a class of cases which are intricate, and give a great deal of work. Therefore, I think the case is very strong, indeed. I shall not trouble the House with reading the return I have here of the arrival and departure of vessels and their tonnage, and so on, at British Columbia ports, as compared with Halifax, Montreal, St. John and Toronto: but I may say the comparison is very largely in favour of this court. Before sitting down I may remind the House that we have already voted $1,000 in the supplementary Estimates to Chief Justice Davie, and in the last Estimates. That will go for what it is worth. The House, having passed those votes, with the facts as they stand, should make the provision the same as in the courts to which I have referred, remembering always that there is not an increase, but a decrease, in fact, in the salary heretofore paid the chief justice of British Columbia, as compared with that which, under this readjustment of salary, will be paid.

Mr. McMullen.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the fact that the vote happened to be passed in the Committee of Supply has anything to do with the decision we may come to in this matter, when brought formally before us. It frequently happens that these votes are passed in Supply, and no questions asked, especially when it is apparent that it is a statutory increase.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I stated when the supplementary vote was moved exactly how the difference was made up.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) However, it was evident, in the discussion on the resolution, that the committee did not think that there was sufficient ground to justify the increase in the salary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the absence of the facts I have mentioned.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Very well, the only question now is whether the fact that the certain number of cases to which the hon. gentleman referred justifies the increase in the salary. It is pretty dangerous ground to take that because there has been a very slight increase, the salary must be increased Unless the increase is of so great a character as to absorb a very large portion of the judge's time, I do not think we should propose any increase in the pay. As a matter of fact, we know that these admiralty cases are constantly changing. I remember, some few years ago, we had a large number in Prince Edward Island, because they were then trying to enforce the provisions of the Washington treaty. People were breaking its provisions, and were constantly brought into court.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is a permanent treaty in this case, remember.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I dare say there have been in the Vice-Admiralty Court in British Columbia more cases than for many years, but that was anticipated. It was well understood that there must be, in process of time, a fair amount of business in a place like British Columbia. The hongentleman says there is discrimination. There is no discrimination. The chief justice of Prince Edward Island has $600 allowed him as the vice-judge in admiralty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why, in Quebec, the judge gets $2,000 a year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes, but the hon. gentleman will remember that the late Sir John Thompson said, when moving the vote in the House, that he moved it to the individual who held the office because he had received it from the Imperial Government, but that when he died or resigned, or a change was made, his successor could not hope to get that amount paid to him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But not to reduce it to $600.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He did not say the amount he would reduce it to, but gave the House distinctly to understand that the House was not in any way committing itself to a $2,000 salary; and, speaking for himself, he said he thought it was far beyond what the position would, under ordinary circumstances, justify the House in voting. But, under the peculiar circumstances, as a kind of pension, as it were, to the person holding the office at the time, because the old office was abolished, we were to continue on the salary. The chief justice of British Columbia, by the Admiralty Act of 1891, was placed in the same position, and at the same pay as the chief justice of Prince Edward Island. The hon, gentleman will admit that, from time to time, there are many cases in the Admiralty Court in Prince Edward Island; and if we were to take the position that because there have been a half a dozen, or a dozen cases at Charlottetown in any one year over another, we should increase the salary, we would be doing an injustice to the country. When the hon, gentleman cited the number of cases instituted in the court, did he wish us to understand that that number of cases had been adjudicated upon or merely instituted?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Adjudicated. I have the complete return. Some of them may have been settled out of court, but these were the actions instituted, and I think nearly all of them adjudicated upon.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Every day in the TUPPER. week, in maritime ports, actions are instituted asso, tuted, sometimes a little hastily, and withdrawn, and sometimes they are settled before going to trial.

CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Here is the list: In 1895, the Queen vs. the ship "Shelby"; that case is still pending. Maclure & Bingham vs. the ship "Velox"; action for $1.200, judgment for the plaintiff. Canadian Pacific Navigation Company vs. ship "Eva"; that was settled out of court. McCarthy against the ship "Cruiser"; that was tried in 1894. Hay-ter against Ward & Co., trial in 1894, and judgment. Mack & Beattie against schooner "Pinchard": settled out of court. Ward & Co. vs. "Norma"' settled. McGuire vs. ship "Pendeckton": tried and judgment given. Canadian Pacific Navigation Company vs. the "Lawrency"; settled between the parties. Canadian Navigation Company vs. the ship Eumenides "; after judgment Jacobson against the wrecked "Archer"—trial and judgment—1894. Canadian Pacific Navigation Company vs. "Archer"—trial and judgment—1894. Canadian Pacific Navigation Company vs. the ship "Wrestler"action of 1894-settled out of court. "Henrietta"—trial—judgment for the plain- Thorson et al, ship "Henrietta" -trial and decree-1894. Pickney against ship "Henrietta"-trial and decree-1894. Wilson vs. the ship "Eva"—settlement out of court—1894. It will be observed, Sir, that I did not state the case as strongly as it might be stated. These were not Behring Sea cases, they have nothing to do with the With the 64 ships there and the award. close manner they are watched, it is evident that the business of the court is of a difficult and intricate character.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman will pardon me for saying that he has stated the case stronger than it really is. I understood that these cases were adjudicated upon and judgment given by the judge. But now it appears that not one-half of them have been tried and adjudicated upon. I would merely wish to repeat my protest. I think it is improper ground that Parliament is proceeding upon to raise the salary

CHARLES HIBBERT There was only one case then.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)—on the basis of the salaries paid in other provinces. If you disturb that relation you will find yourself in this position:-The admiralty judge in Prince Edward Island, who receives $600 will say: My salary was fixed at the same as that of the chief justice of British Columbia, and I do as much business as the chief justice of British Columbia-could not say that.

one or two years to cite showing an increase of business-

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. is not one or two, but three or four.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Take for two or three years before in Prince Edward Island and you will find that the business was twice as much as in British Columbia. So it is always changing; but I suppose that on the average it will be about the same. To do justice, if you determine to raise any of these salaries at all you will have to raise the salaries of the others. We settled these salaries, on a very fair basis, in 1891, and that basis ought not to be disturbed.

hon, gentleman who has just resumed his? seat. I do not think that because the business appears to have increased since 1891, even to the extent represented by the Minister, that justifies an increase of the salary; while the mischief anticipated by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) is pretty certain to flow from it. Any time there is an increase of business in any particular place the Minister will be pestered with applications for increase in salary, if he yields in this case. Now, it must not be forgotten that this salary is attached to an office filled by a gentleman who fills another office as well, and from that office he derives a very good salary. What is the salary of a chief justice?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. am glad the hon, gentleman asked me that before going on with his line of argument. The predecessor of the present chief justice received $5,820 a year. Under the Act of union it was provided that British Columbia being a much smaller and less important province than it is now and having nothing like the business it has now, that after retirement or death of the chief justice of that day, the salary should be $5,000 instead of $5.820. So, when Mr. Davie was appointed chief justice, he received $5,000 a year. By recognizing the work in the admiralty of gested.

of a judge because there is for one or two which he is judge, and giving him $600 for years an abnormal business in court. That it, we can prevent him suffering the whole will soon rectify itself. We settled this reduction or disparity between the salary paid his predecessor and himself-$$20-and TUPPER. still have a saving to the country of $420, which he will receive less than his predecessor and not a large salary by any means.

Mr. McCARTHY. Of course, we are not paying the judges upon the same scale as the judges paid by the British Government. This salary of $5,820. I suppose, was that paid to the chief justice of British Columbia by the Imperial authorities. When it is considered that the judges in the courts in the province from which I come, except the chief justice, receive only $5,000 a year and the Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He enormous work they have to do in comparison with anything that is to be done Mr. DAVIES (P.E.1.) You may have these in British Columbia, it appears to me that this increase in salary is wholly unnecessary and wholly unjustifiable. The local judge in Toronto district only gets $600 per annum. It It may be said that the local judge has only to do with the admiralty jurisdiction of the lakes. But nobody can tell that that business may not increase very largely, and on that ground if this salary is to be increased, Judge Macdougall might ask for an increase also. I do trust the Government will not press this, unless there is an attempt to raise the salaries all round, which I would not object to. But I do think it would be invidious to give the chief justice of British Columbia a higher salary than is given to the chief justice of Manitoba who is paid $5,000. All their time is devoted to the public. Of Mr. McCARTHY. I take the view of the course they cannot do more than the time permits. Under these circumstances I think the chief justice of British Columbia will be well paid at $5,600.

> Mr. MULOCK. I think the hon, gentleman would do well to adopt the suggestion which is made. It is to be remembered that, even if the chief justice has some extra work to do in the maritime court, in the time he devotes to that he is relieved from other duties. His whole time is the country's, and if he fills two offices and other the duties of one of those offices increases, he is to that extent relieved from the discharge of the duties of the other. Now, is the Minister about to lay down the principle that the judiciary are to be paid on the quantum meruit basis? He cites the work of this year to sustain his resolution, and, if I caught his figures correctly, there have been only five cases entered in the maritime court of British Columbia this year, and one of these has been settled; so there are only four cases likely to require the attention of the judge. If the increase goes on at this rate you will have eight cases in the maritime court for this year. And for this he is to receive not only the $600 about which there is no question but a bonus of $400 a year for all time to come. The proposition is indefensible on any ground that can be sug

Mr. McCARTHY. This never can be decreased during the life of this man.

Mr. MULOCK. It is for all time, as I say. There are judges drawing salaries as maritime court judges having practically nothing to do. The judge in the maritime court of Toronto receives $600 a year. And how many cases does he have in a year? If we are going to pay on the principle of the number of cases, you will have to proceed to scale down as well. I do not find any suggestion by the Minister to reduce the salaries where the work has fallen off. but I only find suggestions in the direction of an increase. Now, as I have pointed our before, I hope the sense of the House will be taken on this Bill when the committee rises. This is an initial step towards encouraging invitations for an increase of salary on the part of the judges from one end of this country to the other, not merely judges of the superior courts, but of the county courts as well. It is an unjustifiable step, it involves thousands of dollars, and I am satisfied that it is not proposed in the public interest. This incumbent was appointed with full knowledge of the law. There was a provision on the statute-book that as soon as the then chief justice died or vacated his office, the salary should again be put back to $5,000, and we now have an admission by the Minister that this scheme is not for the purpose of compensating him for his services a a maritime judge, but to some extent to make up for the reduction in the salary that took place when the former chief justice died. Now, the admission made by the Minister to-day is quite intelligible. and it brings us back to where the debate left off before, when I asked the Minister if there had been any understanding with the new incumbent that he should have this increase of salary. If there is something of that nature. I can understand the Minister pressing his Bill, but I cannot understand him pressing it in the public interest: and if he persists in pressing it, I trust there will be a division taken, and that the members will have an opportunity to place themselves on record on this most dangerous and unsound principle.

Mr. MARA. The argument of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) would hold good if he could show that the Government have to pay more to the chief justice now than they did formerly, or if it could be shown that the province of British Columbia is singled out for the purpose of paying the chief justice of that province more than is paid to the corresponding judge in any other province of the Dominion. Instead of receiving a larger salary than the late chief justice got, the present chief justice will receive $420 less, and instead of the present chief British Columbia being singled out and the chief justice paid more than in any other province, we find that in Nova Scotia where the work is less, the salary is the same.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the work is less; that statement cannot be borne out. I do not mean to say that for a short time the work cannot be shown to be larger than in British Columbia, but taking an average of five years, I will undertake to say that the business in the admiralty court in Nova Scotia, is more than double or treble that of British Columbia.

Mr. MARA. Five years is not a fair average to take. The hon, gentleman must remember that British Columbia has advanced by leaps and bounds during the last three years, the shipping is very much larger, and if you take an average at all, you must take it for three years and not five, because the business there has increased, and will continue to increase. However, the point is this: is the chief justice of British Columbia receiving more than he is worth? Is he receiving more than any gentleman should receive holding that high and important position? If hon, gentlemen opposite take the stand that the hon, member for North York has taken, we will know where they are. I regret very much to see the hon, member for North Simcoe taking the position that the judges-because that is inferentially the position—are paid too large salaries.

Mr. McCARTHY. No; I would like to see them paid larger salaries.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He says they are not paid enough, but he does not want to see this judge paid enough until the others are paid more.

Mr. McCARTHY. I want them to be kept even.

Mr. MARA. In other words, if the other judges are paid too little, he will not allow one judge to be paid what he considers he should be paid. I am glad to see hon, gentlemen opposite say that they will take an opportunity to divide the House on this question, as they will let the people of British Columbia see where they stand. The only thing that I regret is that the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), judging from his remarks, will be found voting with hon, gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The position taken by the hon. gentleman is a very extraordinary one. He says that unless you pay a judge in British Columbia more than you pay a judge anywhere else for the discharge of his duties, you are acting in a way unfriendly to British Columbia, and he threatens hon. gentlemen on this side of the House with the indignation of British Columbia if they do not submit to that sort of proceeding. Now, Sir, I claim here not merely to represent the constituency that sent me here, but I am acting here as a representative of Canada, not of the province of Ontario. I suppose this Parliament represents the Dominion and not the province; and the hon, gentleman stands up here and argues that if the judge in British Columbia is not paid a larger sum in proportion to his services than any other judge in the Dominion, you are dealing unfairly with British Columbia, and you will be visited with the indignation of the people of that province. Well, Sir, I have a better opinion of the people of British Columbia than the hon, gentleman has presented of them to this House. I believe that the people of British Columbia have the same interest as people in other portions of the Dominion, in conducting the affairs of this country honestly and economically. The hon, member has referred to the salary that was paid to a former judge, an Imperial appointee, whose salary was fixed by the Imperial Government. What did we do with regard to that salary? Why, we said it was too much. We said that as a matter of good faith with the party who was appointed to the office, he was entitled to receive the salary that was attached to the office at the time of his appointment. but we said at the same time, with the concurrence of the representatives of British! Columbia, that that was too high a salary. and that when his successor came to be appointed as a Canadian appointee, the salary should be fixed with reference to the services which he performed and the importance of the office which he held. That was the principle adopted. Now, the Minister of Justice argued here to-day that because a judge received that Imperial salary, we are to be guided by it, we are to look back to a salary which this House pro-nounced too much in order to fix the salary of this chief justice with reference to the discharge of his duties as an admiralty judge. The hon, member presses that upon us wholly without regard to the amount of business done. The representation was, I think, when we discussed this matter last, that there had been one case tried in the court of admiralty in British Columbia in three years. Yet notwitnstanding that representation, the hon. member presses this increase of salary, and presses it, not on the ground of the services which the judge had to discharge, but because his predecessor had received a larger salary as an Imperial appointee. Well, Sir, I would like to know upon what ground you are going to make the salary of the chief justice of British Columbia $6,000, and to leave the salary of the chief justice of Nova Scotia, with more than double the population, at $5,000? That is the position. Do you think the chief justice of Nova Scotia, or the chief justice of New Brunswick, would be satisfied with the salaries they are receiving, if you increased the salary of the chief justice of British Columbia to $6,000?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is what the chief justice of Nova Scotia receives.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The salary of $5,000, and he receives $600 more.

Mr. DALY. $1,000 more,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am speaking now of the salary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The chief justice of Nova Scotia receives $5,000, and the chief justice of British Columbia will receive $5,000. But the chief justice of Nova Scotia receives $1,000 as judge in admiralty, and the grievance will then be the other way. Unless this Bill be adopted, there will be an invidious distinction between admiralty work on the Pacific and admiralty work on the Atlantic.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows that in the province of Nova Scotia, if you were to undertake to enforce your fishery regulations, and to protect your fisheries, you would have five times the business in the admiralty court of Nova Scotia that you have in British Columbia. What we require here is to pay a salary that will secure the services of competent men in the discharge of those duties, and we believe that salary is sufficient now. I call the hon, gentleman's attention to this fact, that none of his predecessors in office have undertaken unduly to press the question of the salaries of the judges upon the attention of this House. They have proposed to declare that the salaries in their esti-mation were not what they ought to be, and yet whenever a discussion took place in this House, and there was an evident indisposition to increase the salaries, that proposal has been withdrawn. What will the hon. gentleman do with his proposal at the present time? He presses this upon the attention of the House against the judgment of the House, and I think the hon. gentleman will find the result to be that a large proportion of the population of this ccuntry who now believe that the salaries are too high, will make a general demand for a reduction of salaries all over this Dominion. That will be the effect of the proposition of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DALY. In previous discussions that we have had upon a similar resolution, the hon. gentleman took exactly the same ground that he does now. I do not think it is at all fair to say that the member for Yale (Mr. Mara) desires that the chief justice of British Columbia should be paid a larger salary than the other chief justices. But what the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) wants, and what I want, and what I pressed on the attention of the committee was, that the chief justice of British Columbia should be paid exactly the same sum and be placed exactly on the same footing as the chief justice of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why not the chief justice of Manitoba?

Mr. DALY. Manitoba is not a maritime province, and the parallel does not apply. If the chief justice of Manitoba had to perform the duties discharged by the chief justice of British Columbia, I should press for the same increase in his case. We pay $1,000 additional to the chief justice of Nova Scotia for the performance of additional duties as a judge in admiralty, and make an invidious distinction by not paying the chief justice of British Columbia the same amount for the same work. Living is more expensive in British Columbia, and if, as the hon. member for Yale has said, it is necessary to take an average of three years in order to find the business done by the court, I undertake to say that in three years from now the business of the admiralty court of British Columbia will have increased fourfold. The whole business of the province is increasing, the maritime business particularly. There are steamship lines running to Japan and Australia, and the number of vessels will probably be increased within a few years, and the shipping business is increasing generally, and consequently the volume of business before the admiralty court will likewise increase. If the Bill is not agreed to, and the chief justice of British Columbia is not placed at the same salary as the chief justice of Nova Scotia for performing similar duties, we are making an invidious distinction in favour of Nova Scotia. The Minister of Justice has given an illustration of the increase of the work of the admiralty court in British Columbia.

Mr. MULOCK. Four cases this year.

Mr. DALY. It makes no difference if there are only two cases; the judge is there to discharge his duties whether there are only two or three cases. I would like to ask how many cases have been tried in the admiralty court of Nova Scotia this year, whether one, two or three cases. The hon. gentleman cannot say, nor can I. If there were five or ten cases the chief justice is receiving $1,000 additional salary on that account. All we say is that the chief justice of British Columbia, who is discharging the same duties as the chief justice of Nova Scotia, should have the same salary. No one is losing anything by it.

Mr. MULOCK. The country is losing $400 a year.

Mr. DALY. No. The previous chief justice of British Columbia received as chief justice $5,820 and $600 as admiralty judge, and all that is being done by this Bill is to place the calary of the chief justice of British Columbia on the same footing as that of the chief justice of Nova Scotia in this regard.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is very curious that these arguments did not strike the attention of the hon. gentleman four years ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The facts were not before us.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) After the matter has been threshed out, the then leader of the Government recorded his deliberate judgment that the amount then asked was all he could conscientiously ask for the admiralty work.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The chief justice of British Columbia was then receiving over $6,000 a year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister wants to level up and to place the judges of all the maritime provinces on the same footing. Why does he not apply that principle to the case of Prince Edward Island?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not under discussion before the committee.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has argued that because a certain sum is paid in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the same sum should be paid in British Columbia. But in Prince Edward Island the chief justice only received $4,000 as chief justice and $800 as judge of the admiralty court. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to place the salary of that chief justice and admiralty judge on a level with that of the chief justice and admiralty judge of British Columbia?

Mr. DALY. There is no proposition before the committee to equalize the salaries.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to know why there is not such a proposition. If the principle is a correct one, why should it not be applied to Prince Edward Island?

Mr. DALY. Because I was not aware of the facts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman not pledge himself to remedy the injury?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Put a notice on the paper.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When once the door is opened to remedy what is alleged to be an injustice, I consider that the whole question should be considered, and salaries of all the judges levelled up or levelled down. The hon. member for Yale challenges us to take a vote. I am prepared to consider the judges' salaries all round, and give my vote and judgment in each case as well as the hon. member, but I am not prepared to select one particular judge or a particular part of the Dominion and say that an increase should be granted there, while at the same time judges occupying similar positions and discharging similar functions in another part of the Dominion are left with reduced salaries. How could I go back and justify myself to the people of the maritime provinces if I voted to increase the salary of the chief justice of British Columbia so as to make his salary $6,000 and leave the salary of the chief justice of Prince Edward Island at $4,800? On what principle is such action justified? Is the Government for the time being to select favourites and advance their salaries? Surely we have not got so low as to adopt that as the principle upon which we shall proceed with respect to our judges. Surely if we are going to do justice, we are going to do it all round and not make invidious distinctions. If the Minister of the Interior correctly stated the desire of the Government, that the judges of the maritime provinces should all be placed on the same footing, he is committing a gross injustice against Prince Edward Island by giving the chief justice of British Columbia $1,200 a year more than the chief justice of the island. We had better pause in this matter, instead of reversing the deliberate judgment arrived at under the leadership of Sir John Thompson four years ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We are not doing it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Sir John Thompson stated that he would continue the salary of a judge of admiralty of Quebec so long as that individual lived, and after his death the salary would be reduced. He stated further, that the salary of the chief justice of British Columbia was in his judgment an adequate compensation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In order to be fair add the fact that the chief justice at that time was receiving $4,800. exclusive of his salary as admiralty judge.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And Sir John Thompson made the statement with deliberate judgment that the chief justice of British Columbia received a salary which, after his death, would not be continued. He made that deliberate statement with the facts before him, and yet Parliament is now asked to reverse that decision. When the hon. Minister of Justice sneered at his leader, he ought to remember that he is endeavouring to reverse the proposition of his former leader, which we are endeavouring to uphold.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The proposal at that time was to give $600 for the performance of the admiralty duties in British Columbia, and the hon. gentleman voted for it, and he now asks the committee to reverse the decision arrived at and advocated by his leader four years ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I fact, that he was prepared to press fo must correct that statement. The leader of increase in the absence of these facts the House in 1891, in my opinion, did no- on the same evidence he had in 1891.

Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

thing of the kind. He was dealing with the salary of the chief justice of British Columbia as judge in admiralty. He found that the salary of the chief justice was $5,820 a year and that only one admiralty case in the year had come before him; and under those circumstances he proposed that the salary should be $600. That sum with the salary which the chief justice was enjoying, was $400 more than the proposition now before the committee involves. Now, there are 15, or 16, or 17 cases a year in that court, and there is a growing shipping in the province. I am not surprised that hon. gentlemen behind me should have considered it was very extraordinary action that this attack should be made in the case of British Cclumbia. Hon. gentlemen have referred to various Bills that have been brought down here in recent They had for their object an increase of salaries all round. Hon. gentlemen who have been loud to-day against keeping the salary of the chief justice of British Columbia at a decent figure, had not a word to say against the proposition to level up salaries. These hon, gentlemen had nothing to say even when Admiralty Court salaries were increased all around in 1891. They were increased in Nova Scotia and increased in Prince Edward Island, and there was not a word of protest from the hon. gentlemen.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I beg your pardon, there was a word.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But there was no vote; and there is to be determined opposition and a vote in the case of British Columbia.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There was a protest.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was a mild protest that did not reach a division, in the case of Prince Edward Island Nova Scotia, or the other provinces. Therefore, whether the opinion be right or wrong, there was good ground that the members from British Columbia should think it remarkable that there should be this angry and heated discussion over this proposition, involving as it does a saving to the country of $400 a year. Under these circumstances, I share with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mara) his suspicion that the bench of British Columbia was not receiving that fair treatment and consideration at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite that they have been always willing to accord to the bench of provinces in the east.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman placed certain facts before the House to-day, and I call his attention to the fact, that he was prepared to press for this increase in the absence of these facts, and on the same evidence he had in 1891.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not an increase.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) At first the Minister of Justice was not in possession of the facts he now submits to the House, but he did not want these facts, and he was prepared to support this proposition without them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. 1 was prepared to prevent a decrease if I could.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Minister of Justice was prepared to place the salary where he asked us to place it to-day before he had any knowledge of the increased business in British Columbia at all. Therefore, that does not affect his mind in the slightest, I repeat, and the hon. gentleman does not deny it, that while he is increasing this judge's salary, he has not a word to say about Prince Edward Island, which stands in the same position as British Columbia in this respect.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose we will never agree as to whether this is an increase or a decrease; but it is only fair for me to add, that when I brought down the proposition my object was not to obtain an increase in the pay of this judge, but, as I stated, to prevent what I believed to be an unwarrantable decrease by virtue of the operation of a statute passed some twenty years ago.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not desire to lie under the imputation that I am not quite willing to deal as fairly with the bench in British Columbia as I am with the bench in my own province, or anywhere else. The argument of the Minister of Justice is altogether outside the question. I am willing, I have always been willing, to vote for an increase in the judicial salaries. I think, Sir, and I have thought for many years past, that in comparison with the earnings the profession, the salaries of judges are not such as to induce, perhaps, the best men of the profession to accept positions on the bench, and in that way a public evil is wrought. But, Sir, so long as the salaries remain as they are, on what pretense can the Minister of Justice justify an increase in the salary of the chief justice of British Columbia? That gentleman has been appointed only this year. He has accepted his appointment with a salary of $5,000 and $600 a year for the position as judge in admiralty. Having accepted under these circumstances, he cannot complain that the work has since grown so enormously, because there has been no time for it to The other argument used by the grow. Minister of Justice, that the late chief justice, an Imperial appointee, was getting $5 .-820 a year and the $600 in addition (which is more than the present chief justice is to get), seems to me also to be one that cannot be urged with any great force. Because, upon our statutes, there was the deliberate declaration of Parliament that the salary of the chief justice of British Columbia should be $5,000 a year, so soon as the late chief justice should cease to hold office. trust that this matter will not develop into a squabble between provinces. I resent very much the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Mara) behind me. I have no desire to do injustice to British Columbia, and I think that what my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said: That we represent here not provinces but the Dominion, ought to be remembered by that hon, gentleman. Whatever is right for one province ought to be right for another province, and when I remember that the chief justice of the province of Ontario, who has been on the bench for nearly forty years, is getting but $6,000 a year, all told, it does appear to me that if comparisons are to be madewhich always are odious-it does appear to me ridiculous that this chief justice in British Columbia, appointed only yesterday, should get a salary of $6,000 a year.

Mr. MARA. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) that whatever is right in one province is right in another. I would like to ask him (Mr. McCarthy) what reason he can give that the salary of the judge in admiralty in British Columbia should be less than the salary of the judges in admiralty in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I would ask him what reason he can advance to this House, why the combined salary of the chief justice and judge in admiralty in British Columbia, should be smaller than the salary which attaches to these offices in Nova Scotia?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What do you say about Prince Edward Island?

Mr. MarkA. The cases are not analogous. The hon, gentleman himself argued a few moments ago that on account of the shipping done in British Columbia and Nova Scotia, you might draw a comparison between the two. But even then you will find that the shipping of British Columbia far exceeds that of Nova Scotia, and you will find also that the amount of business done in the admiralty court of British Columbia is greater than is done in Nova Scotia.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the hon, gentleman got the figures by him? I ask merely as a matter of interest, because his statement surprises me, that the shipping owned in British Columbia is larger than the shipping owned in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MARA. I did not say anything about the owners. I said that the vessels entering and clearing British Columbia ports were greater than those entering and clearing in Nova Scotia ports. I wish to add that if you draw any comparison, Nova Scotia would be a fair comparison with British Columbia, and the advantage is on the side of British Columbia.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is rather singular that this judge, after having been installed in office only two or three months, should immediately press upon the Government for an increase of salary as a judge in ad-It appears that the judges in admiralty in various portions of the Domia-ion, as soon as they have eight or ten cases to try in a year, make that a ground for pressing for an increase of salary from $600 to $1,000, and they give as a reason that the Minister of Justice proposes to increase the salary of the judge in British Columbia, because he has disposed of ten or fifteen cases during the year. I do not think the hon. Minister is justified in pressing this increase on the House. My impression is that the people of this country think they are paying large enough salaries to the judges. I therefore move that the sum of $1,000 in the third clause be erased, and the sum of $600 inserted in lieu thereof.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think that amendment will have to be revised.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will withdraw it, then, and move that the clause be struck out.

Bill reported.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved second reading of Bill (No. 130) further to amend the Civil Service Act. He said: As I explained when introducing this Bill, the main provisions are contained in two clauses. As hon, gentlemen know, under the Act now in force, the inside service is divided into a number of divisions—deputy heads, chief clerks, first-class clerks, second-class clerks, third-class clerks, and employees below the third-class, known as sorters, messengers, &c. The two most important provisions in this Bill are contained in section 2 and section 7. Section 2 provides that for the future, the office of third-class clerks shall be abolished. That, of course, will not affect those at present occupying thirdclass clerkships. Section 7 gives the Government power, under certain conditions and with certain restrictions, to employ to do the work now done by third-class clerks, as is done in England, a class of occasional writers, who shall be paid the sums set forth in the subsequent provisions of the Bill. All the other provisions of the Bill are such as to make the general Civil Service Act conform to the conditions created by these two sections. I suppose the question of the constitution of the Civil Service is recognized by us all to be a very difficult one; and if the general question were to be discussed, we should find, pro-bably, as many opinions as there are gentlemen in this Chamber to discuss it. But I think there is one point which we can all agree; that is, on that when the Civil Service was constituted, the permanency which was then given to the service was for the purpose of securing for the performance of the more important duties the very best class of men who could be secured. It was to be an encouragement for men of high qualifications to apply for and accept positions in the service; and the same idea, I fancy, ran through the minds of this Parliament when it constituted a superannuation sys-There is no doubt that, as regards the higher offices in the service, the feature of permanency has worked very well indeed. There is no doubt that the great mass of the Civil Service are exceedingly well qualified, a great many of them having superior qualifications; and I am free to admit that, as a class, they do not deserve the attacks which are very often made upon them. At the same time, I think we must all admit that there is a large amount of work done by the service which is largely clerical—work which does not require any special qualifications. That work is now done chiefly by third-class clerks. The objection to the present system is this, that when a young man enters the Civil Service, he secures, in nine cases out of ten, his permanent appointment as a third-class clerk; he knows that during good conduct his position is permanent; and, therefore, he has not that incentive to lay broad foundations for a successful future which a man has who knows that his permanency in the service depends on the manner in which he qualifies himself for the future service the earlier years by of his But, take a young man who enters service as a probationary clerk. You will find him doing his best to cultivate proficiency in as thorough a manner as possible in order that he may make himself so exceedingly useful to his superiors and the state and be recommended for a higher grade and a permanent place in the service. This Bill abolishes the third class clerkships. It abolishes the permanency of the lower grades of the service, and, at the same time. does what is recommended by almost every Civil Service commission which has had the subject under consideration and by those best qualified to judge, and who have given evidence both in England and Canada; it creates a probationary term of service, during which the qualifications of that civil servant who received a temporary engagement are examined, and upon that test his future appointment, as to permanency in the service. depends. The clause providing for the employment of occasional writers gives the Government power, under certain circumstances and restrictions and upon certain occasional recommendations, to employ writers for the purpose of doing the work which is now done by third class clerks who are permanent. I may say again, this Bill does not interfere in any way with the third class clerks who are at present in the service, and I may say still further that it does Government to employ a large number of persons as temporary employees without the consent of the House, because, as hon. gentlemen will see by one of the provisions: in the Bill, these temporary writers are only to be employed out of moneys specially voted by Parliament for that purpose.

Mr. LAURIER. This Bill is very objectionable in many ways. It provides for the abolition of third class clerks. The officers now employed as third class clerks are to be maintained, but no new appointments are to be made to that class which henceforth is to be abolished. These employees are to be replaced by temporary clerks to be appointed at the will of the Minister and the Governor in Council. The Bill proposed is calculated to lower the character Civil Service. At present the clerk who is appointed to the third class has a position in the department. He is not removable at the will of the Minister, but in the case of the new officer, he is altogether dependent manent clerks, called temporary, who can on the will of the Minister. If he is not be removed just at the will of the Minister. like putty in the hands of the head of the If the temporary clerk is not sufficiently department he can be removed at will. He pliable in the hands of the Minister, he has has no status whatever. It is of the greatest importance to the Civil Service that its members should have a civil status. The hon. gentleman says that now the Civil Service have no incentive to do better. It seems to me the reverse is the case. At present they have the incentive of promotion and increase of salary. If the civil servant does his duty, he will be reported for promotion or increase of salary; if he does not give satisfaction he will remain where he is. But under this Bill, all these qualifications, which at present give to the service the character of permanency, will be removed. It will be possible for the Minister to load the service with gentlemen who are called temporary clerks but who are really intended to be permanent according to the other provisions is used in contradistinction to the word "permanent."

Section 47 of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

47. When from a temporary pressure of work or from any other cause extra assistance is required in any branch of either the first or second division, the Governor in Council may, on the report of the deputy head of the department, con-curred in by the head of the department, that such extra assistance is required, authorize the employment of such number of temporary clerks. writers, messengers, porters, packers, or sorters, as are required to carry on the work of the de-

This Bill contemplated that these temporary clerks are to be appointed only when there is a pressure of extra work, but all the subsequent provisions defeat that end. They are calculated not for temporary service.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The word "temporary" is used in contradistinction to the word "permanent."

Mr. LAURIER. Certain officers are to be not in any way widen the power of the appointed permanently and others are to be appointed temporarily during pressure of work, but all the subsequent provisions which are to be applied to these temporary clerks are not of a temporary but a permanent nature. Read section 10:

> 10. The remuneration for temporary assistance shall be as follows :-

> (a.) In the case of a temporary clerk or writer. at the rate of four hundered dollars a year, and, in addition thereto, at the rate of twenty-five dollars a year for each optional subject, not exceeding two, in which he passed prior to such employment,—the optional subjects, for the purposes of this section, being book-keeping, shorthand and type-writing; and

> There is nothing temporary when you calculate to pay a clerk at the rate of so much a year. You may call him temporary, but I call him permanent, if you calculate salary on a permanent and not on a temporary basis. The word "temporary" is there, but all the qualifications are for perno status and can be replaced. In my humble judgment this Bill is calculated to degrade the character of the Civil Service. It is very injudicious and most impolitic. The character of the service for efficiency ought to be maintained at the highest level. but this will be removed if you take away from it the permanency now enjoyed and put it in the hands of the Minister to employ more writers whom they can discharge and replace at their own sweet will. I beg to move that the Bill be not now read the second time but that it be read the second time this day six months.

> Mr. McMULLEN. I have carefully read the report of the Civil over Service commission appointed by hon. gentleopposite in 1891, and I cannot see that this Bill at all legislates in the direction recommedned by that commission. I think, if the hon. gentleman will read it, he will see that the desire of the commission was to have established a system of first, second and third class clerks. recommend also the advancement in the service be by competitive examination, and that engagements in the service be on the same basis. This Bill proposes to give the Government power as they or the deputy heads may think desirable, to increase the service by engaging any individuals they please. They can be taken in as temporary clerks, while the third-class clerks are done away with altogether. It is a singular thing that the Government should appoint a royal commission to investigate the service, and then, instead of adopting the recommendations of the commission, to propose legislation directly opposed to those recommendations. Until our Civil Service is put upon the same basis as that in England, which is removed from the influence of the Government and from politics, men being engaged simply on the ground of their ability as shown in the competitive examination, and advanced for the same reasons, we shall never have any real improvement. We are paying three and a half million dollars a year for our Civil Service, a sum far in excess of what is really necessary, the extra cost being simply the locse and unbusiness-like methods that have been followed. In the report of the commission in 1891 it was declared that in some offices there were first class clerks and third class clerks working side by side, and doing the same work, the first class clerks giving no better service to the country than was given by the man beside him who received one-This itself shows that third of his salary. the service was and still continues to be in a deplorable condition, and that the expenditure was and is far more than necessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This will reduce the cost.

Mr. McMULLEN. I question that very much.

Mr. MHLLS (Bothwell). I quite concur in the view of this measure expressed by my leader. The hon. Minister has spoken of the substitution of writers for third-class clerks. That means the substitution of temporary officers, the number of whom may be increased or diminished as the exigencies of the public service may require. And yet the hon, gentleman proposes to make this temporary employment in the service the stepping-stone to permanent position in the various branches of the Government. The hon, gentleman says that where a party is appointed to the position of third-class clerk, he becomes indifferent to his duty owing to the security of his position, and becomes a less efficient officer than if he were for every moment of his employment on trial and liable at any moment to be dismissed. Sir, I think I could trace any inefficiency in the public service to other causes than those the hon. gentleman has assigned. The public service of this country was at one time a non-political service. The party who entered it ceased to be an elector. He could no longer be of service to his party, because it was intended in his new position he should be of service to the The hon, gentleman and his friends have completely changed that condition of things. They extended the electoral franchise to those in the Dominion service. They made these parties active politicians, who were employed as agents of the Government in the discharge of political functions. Their public duties were often neglected and their promotion was made to depend, not upon their devotion to the public service, but to agents of the Ministers. This kind of proceeding has demoralized the public service. There are men in the service who ought to be in the first places in the various departments, but who are not in those places. They have not been promoted, no matter how devoted they may have been to the public service, no matter how efficient in the dis-charge of their duties. Well, Sir, what motive is there to efficiency when men are so treated? What motive has a man to make himself efficient when he knows that his political opinions of past years are not forgotten, and that it is present political sentiment and present political usefulness that will gain for him promotion. This influence, more than any other cause, has led to the degradation and inefficiency of our public service. The men in the service are divided into political and non-political officers. Those who are political are supposed to go out with the party to which they belong, while those who are non-political are permanent officers of the public service. But, Sir, how can you make a man a permanent officer in the public service if you make him an active politician? How can you make him depend upon his efficiency in the public service by the neglect of his duties is serving all the more devotedly those who are his masters? Then there is another thing that is turning the public service into a political organization, into a sort of central committee in the interests of the Administration. The method followed has had the effect of crowding the public service to repletion. Every department of the public service is overcrowded. is proven by the statistics I gave a few days ago. If the hon, gentleman would direct his attention to the reorganization of his department and to dispensing with the services of those who are no longer required, while paying fairly those who are continued in the public service, and giving them to understand that their promotion is a matter wholly independent of their private political sentiments, if he will disqualify those in the various departments of government, in the interests of the service, from exercising the electoral franchise, so that, like the judges, they may devote themselves wholly to the public service—if he will do these things, the service will be substantially improved, and we shall have an efficient and inexpensive service, instead of the expensive and cumbrous service we have. I do not think the public service can be improved by a Bill such as that the hon. gentleman has submitted; improvement must begin with the conduct of the members of the Administration themselves.

and a supplied that the supplied of the suppli in the discharge of political functions. Their public duties were often neglected and their promotion was made to depend, not upon their devotion to the public service, but to the efficiency with which they discharged the duties imposed upon them as political Mr. SPROULE. I think there is a good deal of merit in the Bill proposed by the hon. Secretary of State, if the object of this Bill is to get efficient work done and pay a fair price for it. It does not seem to me there is anything objectionable in it, because it provides for getting the work right direction as far as it does go. I do not done equally as well as it is done to-day; but in addition to that it provides for making a great saving to the country. Hon. gentlemen on the opposite benches generally complain when there is anything like over-expenditure or extravagance. Now, this Bill makes for economy, and I think they, at least, should support it. Looking cursorily over the Estimates, I find there are 320 third-class clerks in the service to-day. If these 320 reach the maximum of the salary that they could get under the present law, it means a total amount of $320,000, which would have to be paid them annually. The maximum for that class is $1,000, and each of them will aim at reaching it, and as soon as they reach it they will be entitled to that salary. Many of them will exert pressure to be put into the next higher class, so that the man who reaches the next class, will still go on by statutory increase until he gets a larger salary. And yet the work is largely the same in both classes. The work is of a routine nature, and it might be done by any good writer or copyist. good writer or copyist. Now, then, why should we not save this money if we can? If we can get the work done quite as well by men who start at $400 a year and who can go no higher than $600. why should we commence at $500 a year, increasing the salary by $50 a year until they reach $1,000? take the 320 third-class clerks If we who are employed, it would mean a saving every year of over $128,900 in the inside service, and that surely is a consideration that should weigh with this House, if it does not in any way prevent the work from being done as well as it is done now, and I believe it will be done quite as well. As the Minister says, when these men are put on, they are there under the statutory law, they are permanent, there is no stimulus for them to improve, and no ambition to do their work in a more efficient manner, as they would do it were they likely to be promoted to some higher position, provided proficiency entitled them to such promotion. There they say to themselves: In order that we may get that promotion, all we have got to do is to bring political pressure to bear upon the Minister of our department and then we will go on and get the statutory increase of $50 a year until we reach the maximum of $2,-200-which is the maximum for the highest It seems to me we can do away e class entirely. I think we have with one class entirely. too many classes; we have a third class. a second class, and a first class, and then we have chief clerkships. This provision seems to have been made for the purpose of making more positions, to which big salaries are attached. Now, if we could do away with both the third and second classes, and at the same time get the work efficiently done that is now done by the third and second-class clerks. I think it would be in the interests of the country that we should do it. It does not think it will in any way tend to diminish the efficiency of the service, and it would result in a great saving of money.

Amendment, six months hoist, negatived on division, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

· Mr. MONTAGUE. The alteration made here enables us to employ a few temporary writers at the age of 15, whereas under the old Bill sorters, packers and messengers only could be employed at 15, and others at 18.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me that if the alteration consists in lowering the age to 15, it is distinctly not an improvement but very much the reverse. There is no scarcity of suitable persons at any higher age, and this reduction to 15, which means employing children in a great many cases, will be distinctly injurious to the status of the service, and likely to produce bad work. I think this is a very fair sample of the carelessness with which the Bill has been drawn.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the opinion of the Deputy Ministers with whom I have conversed, and I have conversed with most of them, and also the opinion of the Auditor General, that you get no better messenger than young fellows 15, 16 and 17 years of age. They are quick on foot, they are obliging, and ready to do what they are bid, and they have less distractions than men who are older. For that class of work, persons of that age are especially fit. And so with packers and sorters. The object is to lower the minimum age down to 15 so that we may have the option of employing these young fellows at that age, with whom it would be a great object to earn a small amount of money, and who would make excellent clerks in their way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then let this provision of the Bill be confined to those classes, messengers, packers and sorters. As I understand the effect of this clause, it would allow the cramming of the department with temporary writers and other officials of that kind, at the age of 15. It is quite evident that option might be gravely abused.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the Minister ought to remember that the pressure is sufficiently great as it is, even with the age at 18, and with the maximum age three years lower, it would be enormously increased. Further than that, there is no adequate idea of responsibility in the case of children, and you are much more likely to have a messenger that will be dilatory, go as far as it might go, but it is in the although he is physically possessed of greater activity than one who has a stronger sense of responsibility, and with more mature years. It seems to me the disadvantages, even with regard to messengers, more than compensate any advantages that are likely to be derived of the nature the Minister mentioned. You do not employ messengers of that age in this House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may say that we do: not regard that as a vital point, but certainly Auditor the Deputy Ministers and the many General have reported that in young and girls cases men of 15 16 and 17, pay closer attention to their work than those of more mature age. However, if the committee think proper, the section can be amended so as to limit it to messengers, porters, and packers, of the full age of 15 years, and as regards other officers, the full age of 18 years. That will leave the law practically as it was so far as age is concerned.

On section 2.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The provisions mentioned in these sections—21, 22, 23—created a third-class clerkship, and provided the salary for the same. This repeals those provisions, and abolishes the third-class clerkship.

On section 6,

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is as to dispensing with exeminations of persons employed in the service since 1872.

Mr. LAURIER. What does it propose to do?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It repeals that clause.

Mr. LAURIER. Then you take power to make appointments without examinations?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, we abolish the power which we already have.

Mr. FOSTER. The section in the old Act gave power to make appointments without the qualifying examination, in certain cases. This section is an amendment, setting out that qualifying examinations cannot be dispensed with.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you dispense with it in the Estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. You cannot limit the power of Parliament.

On section 7,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the change in this section?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It limits the present power.

Mr. McMULLEN. This section appears to qualify all persons now holding temporary positions so that they may retain their positions without examination.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Temporarily. You do not want all these officers changed, I suppose.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

INTERNATIONAL RADIAL RAILWAY COMPANY-TWO CENTS PER MILE.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 96) to incorporate the International Radial Railway Company.—(Mr. Masson.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MASSON. The clauses of this Bill have all been passed, but after the various sections had been adopted, a motion was moved by the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean) to the effect:

That the rates charged on the track or tracks of the said railway, known as the International Radial Railway Company, shall not exceed two cents per mile.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). When this was in the committee the other night we agreed to hold one of the clauses over in order that the Minister of Railways might be present to hear the discussion and take part in it if he so wished. What I pointed out then, and what I wish to point out briefly to-night is, that this Bill is practically a measure to incorporate a street railway company, which desires to operate in a populous portion of the province of Not only is it a street railway Ontario. company's Bill, but it is specially brought to this Parliament because the company finds it cannot incorporate itself under the Street Railway Act of the province of Ontario. During this year the Ontario Legislature passed a general Act applying to electric street railway companies, which made provision for non-watering of stock, for a maximum passenger rate, for the protection of municipalities, and for many other matters connected with street or electric railways. In consequence of this Act, we find that those who wish to build a purely local railway now come to the Federal Parliament, and ask to have their road declared to be "a work for the general advantage of Canada." I claim that it is nothing of the kind. But if these men ask for legislation here incorporating this road, I say that it is only right that we should dictate the terms under which they may have their charter. To show you what progress has been made in the province of Ontario in the way of regulating these roads, I wish to read two or three extracts from the Bill passed by the Ontario Legislature last session. The Act was introduced by the Government and taken in charge by the Hon. Mr. Bronson. The Act is a very exhaustive one, and under the head of tolls this provision is made:

Tolls and fares to be levied by the company as nearly as possible shall be so fixed and regulated, that after paying "working expenses," the balance of annual receipts shall not exceed 8 per cent, or $8 on every $100, on the total capital stock of the company actually paid up in cash and then issued and outstanding; and if in any year the gross receipts from tolls and fares shall be such, that after deducting therefrom the "working expenses," there shall remain an amount exceeding 10 per cent of the total amount actually paid up in cash on the capital stock of the company then outstanding, then all such excess shall be placed to the credit of a special account to be called "the surplus tolls account," provided that in no case shall the fares exceed the maximum rates prescribed by subsection 7 and 8 of section 43 of this Act.

Another clause reads:

The fares to be taken by the company for each passenger shall not exceed 5 cents for any distance exceeding 3 miles, and shall not exceed 1 cent per mile for any additional distance. Children under ten years of age shall be carried for 3 miles for 3 cents, and for any additional distance at the rate of ½ cent a mile.

The next section goes on to provide that all these surplus tolls shall be applied to the reduction of the passenger and freight rates on the road. Now, for this reason, and because there is this provision in the Ontario Act and because there is this definite regulation as to the duties of these electric roads towards the people and the municipality, these men come to Ottawa and ask that under the general provisions of our Railway Act, their railway-it is only a street railway-shall be declared to be in the general interests of Canada. I contend, Sir, that if we give them this franchise we should make conditions under which they receive it, and one of these conditions ought to be that we should fix the maximum passenger rate at 2 cents per mile. Again, this road is simply a speculator's road. If they get the franchise, they are taking power now to sell that franchise to other roads that have a 3-cent a mile rate, viz., the Michigan Central and the Canadian Pacific Railway. This House ought to guard against these large railway corporations gobbling up not only ordinary railways, but as well these street railways throughout the country. This electric street railway is proposed to be built through a populous district. It will not cost $8,000 per mile or anything like it. They will get the right of way for almost nothing, practically on the public highway, and as the cost of railway construction is less than one-half what it was twenty or thirty years ago. I say that it it is high time for this House to insist upon a maximum passenger rate. What have we seen in the case of these small roads running through different parts of the province of Ontario? There is running from Hamilton now, for a distance of seventeen miles, a road called the Grimsby and Beamsville Railway, and they are carrypassengers from Hamilton to Beamsville for fifty cents the return fare, which is a little over one cent per mile.

there is the Preston and Waterloo Railway, very similar to the road we are asked to incorporate now, and this company ask power to gobble that road up. The Preston and Waterloo Street Railway carries a great many passengers and a great deal of freight, and they carry passengers at a rate of between 1 and 2 cents per mile. The Toronto and Mimico road is gradually extending in the direction of Hamilton, and they also promise to carry passengers for 2 cents a mile or less. If all these roads are paying roads, then I submit that it is the duty of this House, and it is in the interests of the country, and in the interests of the railway itself, that we should insert this maximum rate in the Bill. This road will operate in one of the most populous portions of Ontario, and I ask hon, gentlemen to try the experiment of inserting in the Bill a provision that the rate shall not be more than two cents per mile. I believe that if we insert that provision, not only would it be in the public interest, but that it will also benefit the shareholders as well. I wish to see a division on the motion to-night before the time allotted for its discussion expires.

Mr. MULOCK. Whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) has suggested the right remedy or not, at all events his mind is running in the right direction in endeavouring to establish some safeguard to prevent abuses such as he indicates. More especially is it necessary at this time that the Government should have a policy upon a queslike this, because we are at the commencement of a revolution in railroad motive power. Whilst the old system of steam railways may continue, yet there is a wellsettled opinion in the public mind now, that in rural districts a very considerable portion of freight and passenger transportation will in the near future be carried on by means of electric railways. They are destined probably to a large extent to drive off the roads the old-fashioned wagon, and perhaps the more modern carriage, so that this question cannot be taken up too soon. While the fixed maximum rate may not meet the requirements of this question, it is directing public attention in the right diection. As I listened to the hon. gentle-man's quotation from the Ontario statute, providing for a maximum dividend, and that not on a fictitious capital, but on the cash actually expended on the road, I felt that that was a fairly good gauge by which to keep in check the charges made upon the For years I have endeavoured to public. the Government the view, press upon about which there can be no question, that a railway is essentially a monopoly. You may say that any number of capitalists may combine to build a railway; but, practically, a railway is a monopoly; and, that being the case, if we do not wish to have a large amount of capital destroyed in the future in the attempt to escape from monopolies by the construction of other roads, we ought, at this early date, to adopt a policy to prevent an abuse of power such as is likely to occur. Under the old railway system, where we have great trans-continental lines, there is one way by which excessive rates may be successfully resisted at certain seasons of the year, as, for example, in Canada during summer, that is, by the competition afforded by the water But in the case of short roads, such as my hon, friend from East York has alluded to, if we allow lines to be constructed between neighbouring villages. and exploited to whatever extent the people are likely to submit to, a very serious injury may be done in the future. If this should involve an unnecessary expenditure of capital in the duplication of rival roads to serve the same district, that would be an additional injury. It will not do to say that a monopoly may be escaped from by constructing an additional line, for this involves an unnecessary expenditure of capital, which becomes a tax upon the community. So that I am in entire sympathy with the aim in view. I do not know whether the Minister has thought out the scheme and is prepared to assent to the particular preventive remedy that is suggested; but if that is not the best remedy, perhaps before this Rill is allowed to leave the committee, he would suggest a more suitable one. This is a large scheme. This company is taking powers to establish a grid-iron of electric railways all over the western part of the peninsula. It is impossible almost to see where its powers will cease -what part of the western peninsula will not be tributary to it; and it is a dangerous thing for us to grant a charter to a company which may get influence enough to enable it to occupy that whole territory untrainmelled by proper statutory restrictions. I have just that doubt in my own mind as to whether the 2-cent scheme is the right solution; and I am sure the hon, member for East York is not wedded to the 2-cent scheme.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). No, 1 cent will do.

Mr. MULOCK. Or any particular fixed rate, so long as there is some safeguard that will protect the public.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). New York has a safeguard in 2 cents a mile.

Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister will say that that meets the requirements of the situation, that might go a long way to satisfy some gentlemen.

Mr. EDGAR. While I feel a good deal like the hon. member for North York with reference to this question of 2 cents a mile, especially as applicable to a railway like this, still, I do not believe that the House has sufficiently considered what has been laid down by experience. We talk about a penny a mile railway rate in England. That was applied in the Act of 1844 to one train a day each way on a railway.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). How many a day are there now? As a matter of fact, it compelled every other train to adopt the rate.

Mr. EDGAR. I am saying what I understand the law to have been. The law instituted in 1844 was that each railway. from one end to the other, and on all its branches, should run at least one train a day on every week day at a rate not to exceed one penny a mile-for what? For third-class passengers. That is rather different from the present proposition, although I am quite free to admit that, for an electric road, such as this is to be, the proposition of the hon, gentleman might not be unreasonable. But there is a larger question involved in the hon. gentleman's proposition. He referred a few moments ago to the general Railway Act for the regulation of electric railways, passed by the legislature of Ontario last session. Now, if we are to assume jurisdiction over electric railways, as we are doing, I think we must make a general law for the Dominion which will govern all electric railways; and we might, therefore, very well allow the pro-posal of the hon, member for East York to stand over for consideration in connection with such a general law. As he says, if we apply to all electric railways such a law as the Ontario law, we shall get a less rate than 2 cents a mile. I beg to move, in amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for East York, that the following clause be added to this Bill:—

The powers hereby conferred shall be subject to the provisions of any general Act that may be hereafter passed by the Parliament of Canada relating to electric railways.

That will include this difficulty, and a great many others as well. The hon, member quoted the Ontario Act in favour of his proposition, and said that it went a great deal further. Very well, if we make this charter subject on its face to the future general legislation of this Parliament, in regard to electric railways, then this company will not be able, in future, to come here and say: This is unfair and should not apply to us. We give them and the world notice that to the extent to which they build electric railways, they will be subject to the general Act which we may pass.

Mr. MACLEAN. (York). The hon, gentleman makes no provision for a maximum passenger rate. That is really the issue I raised. He proposes that this Parliament shall make a general Act applicable to electric railways. That is all very fine, but I want the House to declare the principle of a maximum pasenger rate for these roads, and we might as well declared to now as at any time, unless the hon. Minister says that in the general Act he will provide for this ard give us an opportunity of discussing it.

Mr. MASSON. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but some of the remarks which were made the other evening, and because of which I asked the adjournment of the debate. I do not wish to go unchallenged. In the first place, it was alleged that this is a purely electric railway. It is true that we asked for authority to run it by electricity. We have put two clauses in the Act specially providing In that only to carry that out. does from this differ other railway Acts. and foreseeing that in the near future, not only this road, but many others may be run by electricity, we have taken occasion to ask for special provisions to meet that condition of things. In that only do we differ from other railways for under the Railway Act all railways may use electricity or steam. The scheme has several branches, one of which is 60 r in length, and we have not any miles perience of electric railways of that length. We, therefore, ought not to be treated purely as an electric railway. It may be that some portions of the scheme may be run by electricity; and so far as regards any portion of the scheme which may be run by electricity, it never was intended or expected that we would not be subject to electric railway rates, whether fixed by the province or the Dominion. We never did suppose that we would run an electric railway at steam railway rates. Therefore if the hon, member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar) would confine his amendment to the portion run by electricity, or any other portion that might from time to time be run by electricity, it would meet with my appro-It was urged that the 3 cent rate is a crying abuse. That is one of the points that I specially wished the other evening to have contradicted. Instead of its being an exorbitant rate, it is the cheapest in the world, with one or two exceptions. I have before me Mulhall, from which I take the following figures. In the United Kingdom, the rate of carriage of passengers for ten miles is: First-class, 21 pence; second-class, 16 pence; third-class, 10 pence. That, you will see, is more than double our first-class rates, about the same as regards the second-class, and their third-class fully equal to the average of our first. France the rates are:

	First class	20	pence.
	Second class	15	"
Tn	Third class Germany—	10	**
T 11	Germany
	First class	15	pence.
	Second class	11	66
	Third class	10	44
In	Russia—
	First class	18	pence.
	Second class	14	- 44
	Third class	8	46

In Austria, the same; in Italy, almost the same, the only difference being 13 pence for second-class. In Spain—

First class	21	pence.
Second class	16	- 44
Third class		4

being the same as Great Britain. not weary the House with going through all in detail, but I will say this, that with the exception of Norway and the State Railway of Austria, we have the cheapest railway rate in the world. But there is another feature to be considered. It is not only in the passenger but on the freight rates that we are lower. Where a high passenger rate is charged, railways can afford to carry freights cheaper; and if we were to put down the passenger rates, we would force the railway to charge more for freight. The general public, the farmers, the artisans, and the men who travel very little are more interested in the freight traffic than in the passenger traffic. I wish to call your attention, Sir, to the rates of freight, taken from the same report:

Rate per ton per mi	e.
In the United Kingdom 1	40
In France 1	10
In Germany	82
In Russia 1	20
In Austria 1	15
In Italy 1	25
In Sweden and Norway (where the passenger rates are so cheap)160 and 1	20
In Denmark 1	44
In Switzerland 1	сo
In the United States and Canada52 and	51

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Longer hauls.

Mr. MASSON. Of course, but you will see that it is not only the passenger but the freight rate which must be taken into account, and where you are dealing, as we are in Canada, with the necessity of having cheap freight rates, I think it would be a step in the wrong direction to cut down the passenger rates, as this would virtually force the railways to increase their freight rates. I do not wish to delay the House, but only desire to point out the statements which I thought required contradiction and to show that instead of the passenger rate for Canada being exorbitant, it is the lowest in the world, except in those countries where the railways are under the control of the state, and small affairs at that. To apply the rates proposed by the hon, member for East York (Mr. Maclean) to a new railway just entering upon existence, while other lines covering the same territory have the higher rate, would be to cripple it at the start. There can be no doubt but that such legislation would interfere with the floating of the scheme financially. I am quite prepared to accept, on behalf of the promoters of the Bill, the suggestion made by the hon. member for East York to apply future legislation to those portions of the road that would be run by electricity.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I will accept the amendment in this way:

The powers hereby conferred as to an electric railway shall be subject to the provisions of any general Act that may hereafter be passed by the Parliament of Canada relating to electric railways.

Mr. MULOCK. If you look at the working of the Railway Act in the past, you will search in vain for a case where the Government have exercised their power of regulating tolls, and we have had twenty years experience of the Act giving them power to reduce the tolls. The scheme proposed is that the Government will introduce a policy applicable to electric railways and make it applicable to this railway. Whilst I approve of there being a clause in this Bill bringing home to the persons who may invest in the enterprise, that the enterprise will be liable to be affected by future legislation without their consent, at the same time I would not approve of this House surrendering its control, even into the hands of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The Government have never yet exercised the powers conferred upon them of reducing tolls.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I propose that Parliament should have that power.

Mr. MULOCK. But you are only by that amendment asking Parliament to exercise these powers until other legislation is passed; and that legislation, no doubt, will take the form of leaving it in the hands of the Governor in Council.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Leave it to Parliament.

Mr. MULOCK. But the Bill that will be introduced by the Government, I anticipate, will be to confer this power, in all probability, upon the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. MASSON. They have that power now.

Mr. MULOCK. I am aware of that.

Mr. MASSON. There would be no need to introduce a Bill for that purpose.

Mr. MULOCK. But the legislation will probably take some such form as that. While I would welcome a measure of that kind if there were safeguards in it such as the hon, member for East York (Mr. Maclean) mentioned; as, for instance, that it should be illegal to exact rates for either freight or passengers that would pay more than a fixed rate of interest on the capital in the railway—that is on the money actually put into the enterprise. If you do not have some such limit by statutory enactment, the promised legislation is not worth anything at all, in my estimation. Railway companies have very much power with the Government, and I do not look for very much relief from that source. I would like the hon, gentleman to stick to the idea of a maximum rate.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I will stick to it. Mr. Masson.

Mr. COCKBURN. I do not know of a more inopportune time than the present for the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) to introduce a motion such as that he now has before the House. What are the facts? We have to-day in the United States in the hands of receivers railway properties representing $1,500,000,000—roads that have been unable to pay either interest on the bonds or dividends to stockholders. And what have we seen even here in Canada a few weeks ago? We have seen the national read, the Canadian Pacific, a road that is managed with every due regard to economy, unable to meet the interest due to its share-And we select such a moment as this to tell these people how to deal with their roads, and we propose to reduce their fares by 33 per cent. This 2 cent per mile passenger rate has been proposed again and again on the other side of the line, but no state in the union has permanently adopted any such change.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). New York has.

Mr. COCKBURN. The New York Central and Hudson River Railway has partially adopted it, but only to this extent: that on one part of the road between Buffalo and Albany and intermediate stations a rate shall be charged of not more than 2 cents per mile. But this has been adopted owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case. This road was to run parallel with the Erie Canal, which was there a favourite property owned by the state which received tolls on all traffic; and in chartering freight road it was made incumbent on road over to the state the pay equivalent for the tolls tolls, oran they were receiving for transit by the Erie Canal. Our roads are in a totally different position from those in England or those alongside Boston and other large cities in the United States. There there is an immense local traffic and it would pay a company to charge only 2 cents a mile. But in Canada we are differently situated. Rates that will afford fair remuneration to these roads will simply mean the closing up of ours. My hon, friend points to the roads in Hungary and elsewhere. But the roads he has reference to, provide such accommodation that he would not put his horse or his dog into the cars in which the people there are compelled to ride. We have a higher notion of comfort here, and we are not prepared to descend to the position the hon. member for East York would have us descend to. We are perfectly able to deal with the position, and as for this cry of the workingman I am not prepared to treat the workingmen as a pauper. I wish to have him paid a decent wage, and I wish to see him pay the same for services rendered to him as other people. I do not wish to humiliate him in the eyes of the world by treating him as a pauper, and I do not think it is necessary to make special rates for him. This would be simply an attempt on our part to give smaller wages to the workingman and then make it up to him in soupkitchen style by enabling him to ride cheaper on the public railway. What we want is safe and speedy transportation, not so much merely cheaper transportation, and I think we can leave the men at the head of our national roads to take care of this point. It little becomes us, amateurs in the business, to rush in like fools where, perhaps, angels would fear to tread. I think for the time, a sufficiently low rate has been obtained, and as soon as the roads find it to their profit and to the convenience of the public to establish a lower rate, they will do so. We must not be led to forget the fact that our roads are not in the same position We have as the roads in other countries. here a large, sparsely-populated country. To attempt to fix for Canada the same rates of fare as are charged in thickly-populated countries would simply result in most inefficient service. I trust my hon, friend will fully consider the measure he has brought before the House and will not try to thrust upon the House an amendment that wili deal only with one small road. I trust he will rise to a higher conception of the question and not try to deal with some little paltry road, not try to force special terms upon an individual road, but will bring forward a comprehensive Bill worthy of the gentleman himself. I trust he will lay before us a Bill that will deal with the whole subject in a broad and comprehensive manner. I regret to see the exceptional spirit in which he seeks to legislate-

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I brought forward a general Bill two years ago.

Mr. COCKBURN. I am aware the hon. gentleman brought it forward two years ago. My regret is that his ideas have not grown larger since that time. He is yet a young man, and I feel assured that he will grow in wisdom as in age, and that he will at a future time introduce a Bill that will be worthy of his years and his talents. I will support the amendment of my hon. friend on the other side (Mr. Edgar).

Mr. MACLEAN (York). The amendment does not deal with my proposal, and is not an amendment to it. Both of them might be adopted.

Mr. HAGGART. I think it inexpedient to embody the amendment of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) in this particular Bill. I think legislation of that kind ought to be general and ought not to be applied to any particular railway company seeking incorporation. This question is a fair one and might be considered in a general Railway Bill, or in an amendment to the general Railway Act. The remarks made by the hon. gentleman in reference to electric railways and the remarks made by the hon member for North York (Mr.

Mulock), and particularly those made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) I fully concur in. Parties coming here seeking charters for electric railways ought to have embodied in the charters—as we have not now a general Act which applies to electric railways-notice that there will be electric railway regislation which will fix the rates that they may charge and other conditions upon which they may operate. It is impossible to prepare at the present moment such an amendment as would suit. This is properly a subject which would be left to the Railway Committee, to draft a Bill which would apply to electric railways seeking legislation. The local legislature, I believe, have embodied some special clauses in the different Bills which they have allowed to pass fixing the rates. The consequence is that the companies asking for incorporation as electric railway companies, instead of going where they ought to go, that is to the different provincial legislatures, come here, because they get larger powers here than they get there. I concur with the hon, member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) that general legislation should be introduced in reference to electric railways. and that this particular company, if it uses this road as an electric railway, should be subject to the general legislation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am unable to see why they should come here for incorporation at all. It seems to me it is purely a local undertaking, and ought to have been chartered by the province. I do not even find the ordinary declaration, not overly honest in most Bills, that it is to the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. MASSON. Yes, it is there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, it does not improve it in my estimation. The hon. member for East York proposed an amendment of this sort some time ago with regard to railways that are already incorporated in the country. Now, there were several roads in England a few years ago that ran in competition with each other, and cut down the rates far below those which the promoter of this Bill has read to us this evening.

Mr. MASSON. Those were not the maximum rates, but the actual rates taken from the receipts of the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Any one who will read Mr. Galt's book in favour of Government ownership of railways, will find there a statement of several roads in the United Kingdom that cut down the rates far below any which the hon. gentleman has mentioned this evening; and the experience of those roads, as long as that competition continued, was that their revenues from passenger traffic increased in proportion as the rates were diminished; and that during the period the rates were at the lowest point, the revenues of the road were at the maximum. I suggested to the hon. gentleman, when he made this proposal some two or three years ago, that he should ask for a committee of the House to take evidence upon the subject. It seems to me that would be a proper mode of procedure in the matter, as the House would then have something clear and intelligible upon which to proceed. How far the population of this country would affect what is shown to be the experience of the United Kingdom, it would be impossible off-hand to say; and therefore I think that an inquiry into the matter would have been of great value before any proposal of this sort was brought into operation.

Amendment (Mr. Maclean) negatived on division.

Mr. CASEY. I think we should have some explanations from the promoters of the Bill as to how far it is intended to be an electric railway and how far a steam railway, as I see they have power to run either way, and our treatment of this clause would largely depend upon whether it is to be an electric railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Look in the "Hansard," and you will see all the explanations.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister suggested very properly that there should be a general electric Act, and I think it is a pity we had not such an Act this year. Electric railways are extending in all directions, and I do not see why the Government should not have been capable of compiling such an Act, as well as the Government of Ontario, who passed a law of that kind last session. think it is not a matter for the Railway Committee to deal with, but it is a matter for the Minister of Railways to formulate in the first place, with the best expert assistance he can get. The Railway Committee is for the discussion of individual Bills, and is not well qualified to make model Bills and to compile legislation on general principles. That, I think, should be done on the initiative of the Government, but left freely open to amendment in the House afterwards.

Amendment (Mr. Edgar) agreed to.

Mr. BOYLE. I wish to move an amendment. Clause 19a is simply section 89 of the Railway Act, except that the limitation is five years instead of seven; that is, it requires that the railway shall be begun within two years and completed within five years from the passage of this Bill. I move this amendment:

If the construction of each of the railways mentioned in paragraphs A, B and C of section 3 of this Act, is not commenced, and an amount equivalent to 15 per cent on the amount of capital stock is not expended thereon, within a year after the passing of this Act, or if each of said railways is not finished and put into operation in five years from the passing of this Act, then the powers granted by the Railway Act, or by this Act, shall cease and be null and void, as respects so much of the said railway as then remains incomplete.

I will explain my reasons for moving this amendment. Any one who reads section 3 of this Bill will see that although it purports to be a charter for the construction of one railway, it is really for the construction of three railways. One of these railways starts from Hamilton and goes to the town of Waterloo, another goes to a point on the Niagara River, and a third to the town of St. Mary's. Now, under the ordinary limitation clause, it is possible for the promoters of this enterprise simply to begin work on one of these branches and expend 15 per cent of their capital upon it, while they may virtually tie up the other two branches and allow them to remain unconstructed as long as they choose. I do not wish to see any part of the country tied up in this way, in consequence of all the work being done upon one branch.

Mr. MASSON. The hon, member for Monck (Mr. Boyle) is hardly fair in endeavouring to spring this amendment on the committee at this stage. The company has already been subjected to restrictions of greater stringency than have been proposed with respect to any other railway proposed by this Parliament. Instead of seven years in which to complete the undertaking, it must be finished in five years, otherwise the powers in regard to the uncompleted portion will lapse. Surely that is sufficiently onerous, especially when it is remembered that this road will cover about 150 miles. If the amendment were adopted, it would be necessary to start and build lines in half a dozen different directions. If the amendment had been proposed in the committee, I think the promoters would have consented to commence each portion within a certain time. but certainly they would have asked for more than two years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are not these three branches practically three roads covered by one charter?

Mr. MASSON. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to point out that the charter asked is of a very sweeping character. It is practically what the hon. member for Monck has stated, not a railway company asking power to build branches, but a company seeking a charter to build three or four different lines, all starting from Hamilton, and running through different districts. Each section of the country over which this company is asking powers is already supplied with railway accommodation or companies are chartered to build roads through it. It is only fair in granting a charter such as this, that the work should be completed as the amendment proposes, and that, at all events, a certain amount of work should be done within two years. The promoters may rest satisfied that if they show bona fides in going on with the scheme, at the end of two years an extension of time will be granted, if requisite: but it is unfair to the sections of country through which the road is projected, and it is bad legislation on the part of this Parliament, to grant a charer of this kind without more consideration than we are giving it. The amendment proposed by the hon, member for Monck is a very reasonable and fair one. It would be very unreasonable and improper to allow this legislation to pass without the limitation proposed, and if it is intended to go forward with the undertaking, and not hold the charter for the purpose of selling out to another company in existence, or some company that has a charter over the same ground, or for the purpose of making money out of the charter in any way, the promoters should be perfectly willing to accept the amendment. It gives the company two years to commence any of these so-called branches or lines from Hamilton. and the committee should be unanimous in its conclusion that this restriction should be imposed, because if the work is proceeded with, the company can always secure extension of time from Parliament.

Mr. TISDALE. I agree with the view presented by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), that this will be a very liberal charter, even if granted subject to the restriction which the hon. member for Monck has proposed. It is the most liberal charter that has been proposed to be granted during my experience in Parliament, because it is practically giving the company three charters in one. The only reason that appeared to justify it before committee was that the different branches were not very long, but, as the promoters insisted in seeking those three charters, each should be made to depend on work being commenced on each of the branches, the same as if a charter were granted for each, and the hon, member in charge of the Bill should accept the proposition of the hon, member for Monck.

Mr. MASSON. The amendment moved by the hon, member for Monck may seem to be a very simple one, but, under its terms, the company will be forced to commence work on each of three roads or the whole charter will lapse.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MASSON. That is the only interpretation that can be placed on the amendment proposed. Besides, it will be necessary to spend 5 per cent, or 15 per cent, on the whole, on each of the three roads, otherwise the whole charter will lapse. It may be said that this amendment is a very reasonable one. It must be remembered, however, that instead of obtaining seven years in which to build the road, the time is limited to five years, and that of itself is a kept on for the next year?

great restriction. In submitting to that restriction in the committee, I thought I was yielding a great deal to the hon. member for Monck, who was then pressing that amendment. Having obtained that amendment by consent of the promoters, the hon. gentleman now comes at this late hour and moves the present amendment, which, on behalf of the promoters, I must decline to accept, for it would cripple the whole road.

Mr. CASEY. It is very clear that we have been a little too hasty in shoving along this Bill as fast as we have done. The remarks of the chairman of the Railway Committee (Mr. Tisdale) are very much in point. Here are three charters in one, and we are doing a great deal for a road in granting three charters for the expense and trouble of obtaining one. It is fair that, having done so much, the committee should be careful that it is not chartering a company of speculators rather than a railway company. We have been too ready to give charters to everybody without any assurance that they were prepared to go on and operate these roads. We have put a weapon in their hands practically to blackmail other concerns. The amendment proposed is extremely liberal and ought to be accepted.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the committee rose.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 130) to further amend the Civil Service Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 10,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that this clause is quite inconsistent with the provisions of the Bill. Does the word "continuous" in the clause mean that when a person receives $600 a year he becomes a permanent clerk.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the expression "continuous" does not mean anything?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is continuous from $300 a year up to $600 a year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You are applying a principle that is only applicable to permanent officers, to persons who may be dismissed at an hour.

Mr. CASEY. The point my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) makes seems to me_clear. These are to be temporary clerks, but the word "continuous" is to apply to their service. If a person is to be employed for one year, would he be continuous if he were to be

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose you dismiss him at the end of the year?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He would have to commence anew.

Mr. CASEY. Then that should be better expressed in the Bill. I am inclined very much to object to the principle embodied in this clause, which has long been a defect, to my mind, in the provisions of the general Civil Service Act. I do not think that the salary of a permanent employee should be increased merely on the ground of the length of time he has been in office, and without regard to any duties he has to per-More especially do I think it improper in the case of men who are avowedly employed as temporary clerks or writers, to increase their salaries simply because they have been so many years employed. If a man is put to some more difficult or responsible work he should be entitled to higher pay, no doubt, but the provisions of he had served several years and had obtainan Act should not entitle him to higher pay merely because he remains in office for a certain length of time. The pay belonging to the different classes of duties should be graded, and these temporary clerks should receive remuneration, not according to the time they have been in, but according to the work they do. There is another objection to this proposal. This increase is not to be statutory, after all, as it is now, in the case of what I may call the covenanted Civil Service, but it is to be at the pleasure of the deputy head, endorsed by the head of the department. That practically means that the head of the department, who is the supreme master of the patronage, will be allowed to add $30 a year to the salary of those whom he favours, and to not add it to the salaries of those whom he does not favour. I object entirely to the practice of paying by length of time instead of by work, and more particularly to the practice of leaving that extra pay to the discretion of the head of the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think my hon. friend has answered his first contention in the last contention he made. In the first place, my hon, friend objected to the general principle of increasing salaries of officers because they happened to be in office a certain length of time.

Mr. LAURIER. Of temporary clerks.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No. he said he objected to the principle at all. Well, we have done away with that by this clause. Then my hon, friend proceeded to find fault be- to all matters. cause we have done away with it, and have taken power to leave it to the discretion of the head of the department upon a report of the deputy head, who has a thorough knowledge of just how thoroughly the officer deserves an increase.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. CASEY. Allow me to correct the hon. gentleman. This clause does not do away with the practice of increasing the salary on account of length of service. The hon. gentleman says I objected to increasing the salary of a man because he had been in office a long time. What I said was that I objected to this practice in any service, even when regulated by statute, but in the case of a temporary service, I thought it entirely out of place. I object entirely to its being left in the hands of the head of a department to say that a man's salary may be increased $30 a year if he suits the head of the department. It amounts to leaving much greater facilities for favouritism than exists at present, or than should exist.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If I rightly understood the Minister, the intention of the Act is that where a party is employed for a longer period than a year, he shall be entitled to the statutory increase for the next year, but that if he were out a year, though ed the increase, upon his re-employment he would have to begin at the minimum salary. It seems to me that the only ground upon which you can justify the payment of an increase at all is that a man is worth more by reason of increased efficiency resulting from experience. If he is out a year and is then obliged to begin at the minimum rate, you are treating him as one without experience.

Mr. CASEY. The hon, gentleman has not met my first objection, that the words of the clause do not express what he says is the meaning of the clause-where the employment is continuous.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have no objection to inserting the words "extending over one year continuously."

Mr. CASEY. I suppose these Orders in Council showing who got the increases will be necessarily reported to Parliament.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They can all be moved for at any time.

Mr. CASEY. I think it should be specially provided in the Bill that they shall be laid before Parliament.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is a standing order of this House that every Order in Council having the force of law should be published every year along with the statutes.

Mr. FOSTER. That is with reference to customs matters.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It has reference

On the preamble,

Mr. HAZEN. I desire to move the addition of a section to this Bill. In 1892 an amendment to the Civil Service Act was passed by this Parliament repealing a provision in a former Act and providing that any person who had been in the employ of the Government of Canada on the 1st July, 1882, and had since been continuously engaged in such employ, might be promoted to any position in the service without having to pass the preliminary or qualifying examination, and without regard of age, provided he passed such examination concerning promoprovided. think tion as might be the of the department. to the effect 1892. It contained a clause that no civil servant should be promoted, under its provisions, after the 1st July. During the session of 1894 we enacted a similar Bill, with a proviso that no promotion or appointment should made, under the provisions of that Act, after ble of passing an examination or not, may 1st July, 1895. I wish to add a similar paragraph extending the time until the 1st July, 1896. My reason for doing it is this. I have in my mind now several cases of very faithful civil servants, in the outside service, who course of events, might be entitled to promo- moved it. tion during the next year; but if this prothe promotion, to which they are fully entitled, because they have not passed the preliminary or qualifying Civil Service examination and are beyond the age specified in the Act. I therefore propose that the paragraph which is in the Act of 1892 and 1894 be added to this Bill as paragraph 13:

Any person who, on the 1st day of July, 1882, was in the service or employment of the Governnient of Canada, or any department thereof, and who has since been continuously engaged therein, may, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, be appointed to any position in the public service, without regard to age and without being required to pass the preliminary or qualifying examination provided for by the said Act, subject, however, to such regulations as are made by the Governor in Council, or by the head of a department, prescribing examinations for appointment or promotion in the Civil Service; and any such person may also, notwithstanding anything in the said Act, be temporarily continued in the public service.

2. All appointments of such persons and all payments of salaries to them, heretofore made, are hereby legalized and confirmed.

3. No appointment or promotion shall be made under the provisions of this section after the 1st day of July, 1896.

Mr. LAURIER. Will you move the same Bill next year?

Mr. HAZEN. None of us can tell what may happen next year, and I would not like instead of saying that this shall be ineffective after the 1st July, 1896, one should say after the 1st July, 1897. Then I could safely promise my hon. friend that I would not move the same Bill next year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is a proposition to exercise a dispensing power. Of course, there are always favourites or proteges of the administration or of its supporters, for whom it is necessary to make special provision. They do not belong to the vulgar herd who are obliged to go up in reguar order and submit themselves for examination. It would be grossly unfair to treat them as ordinary mortals. Qualification is provision was by the deputy head not as important in their case as it might be That Bill passed in in the case of others. A little ignorance will do them no harm; a little incompetency on their part is no disadvantage to the public service. It is only necessary that the Government should have a dispensing power in order that those persons, whether qualibe fied to do the work or not, whether capabe promoted. For such parties a clause of this sort is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As Parliament passed last year the same clause, there does not were in it prior to the 1st July, 1882, and seem to me to be any great objection to have been continuously employed in it up to the present, and who, in the ordinary all, the hon, member for Bothwell has re-

Mr. LAURIER. In 1892 Parliament passed vision be not added, they could not obtain it for a year; in 1894 Parliament passed it for another year; and in 1895 for still another year. So that from year to year, like the Franchise Act, we are called upon to exercise a dispensing power to prevent the Act being put in force.

> Mr. FOSTER. I do not believe anybody has taken advantage of it yet.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY-NORTH-WEST IMMIGRATION.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to draw the attention of the House, for a few moments, to the return which has been brought down with regard to bringing into the Northwest Territories certain Jewish pedlars. made the charge, when asking for this return, that a very considerable amount of expense had been incurred in connection with the bringing of these people to Calgary, that they had been found entirely unfit for settlement, that some of them had got into jail, and that the whole incident reflected considerable discredit on the management of the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior. I find in the return ample justification for all the charges that I have made. In the first plase, delegates were selected representing these peoto promise. It might be better, perhaps, that ple at Chicago, who, it was suggested, were prepared to emigrate to the North-west in large numbers. These delegates were taken by the Government to the Calgary district. Now, it is very remarkable that Mr. Pearce, who is the chief officer of the Department of the Interior resident in the Calgary district, drew the attention of the department, after these delegates had come, to the kind of people they appeared to be, in a letter which I find in the return, dated 21st April, 1893. After making some reference to the delegates and what they had done, Mr. Pearce said:

Permit me, however, to suggest that a very careful inquiry be made as to the people for whom these men came up as delegates. If they are adapted as settlers, we should give them every assistance and encouragement they could reasonably ask. If, on the other hand, they should prove to be what some people assert they are, namely, middlemen, such as pedlars or people who live by the output of others, the country probably would be better without them. I am not satisfied, from what I have seen of these people, that they are as desirable settlers as we should hope to obtain or strive to secure.

At the same time, I know not enough of them to assert that they are not a desirable class; therefore, I thought it my duty to suggest that considerable pains should be taken in looking through them before further steps are taken to encourage their settlement in our country.

It appears to me that that was a very clear and definite warning given by Mr. Pearce to the Department of the Interior, which should have induced them to exercise more than ordinary care to inquire into the kind and condition of these people before spending any money in endeavouring to obtain them as settlers for the North-west. However. Mr. Speaker, no attention appears to have been paid to the warning given by Mr. Pearce. On the contrary, some time after this a large number, some three or four hundred of these people were sent up to Calgary. And we should not be surprised, after what Mr. Pearce told the Government to find that this immigration should proved to be almost an entire failure. After these people came we have the report from Mr. Pearce as to how they had turned out. There is a letter dated 21st June, addressed to Mr. Burgess, Deputy Minister of the Interior. I read some extracts from it because these reports are fully in the line with what I had charged from information obtained independent of the department:

I was surprised when Mr. Schumacher informed me that they had decided to go to Macleod, for which point they have left to-day. Mr. Schumacher came at once to my office, where we discussed the matter. He thinks very little of them as settlers, in fact, does not think they will prove agriculturists at all, and he also thought that the leader of the party—I cannot for the moment recollect his name—has some scheme on, which, however, he could not make out, nor can I conceive what it is. In any case, in view of what subsequently transpired, I am of opinion that Mr. Schumacher's assumptions are correct.

Then again, in the same report, which is a very long one, we find the following:—

Mr. Schumacher, who has now been with me for several days, states most emphatically that they are all Polish Jews, and will never make succesful agriculturists, and will in a very short time leave farming and become middlemen, pedlars and traders. * " * " might add that the leader of this party, while in Macleod on his last trip, led the parties who hold the charter known as the Macleod Irrigation Company, to believe that he could easily raise the capital necessary to carry out their scheme, and he proposed to buy out their charter as soon as he returned with his party. I have not quite made up my mind as to whether this gentleman is really sane.

Then again in a letter which was marked "unofficial" and dated 26th June, and addressed to Mr. H. H. Smith, who is the commissioner of the Dominion lands in Winnipeg, he makes this statement:

All of Schumacher's party that went up to Macleod, returned on Saturday night, and a part of them have gone north this morning, and the rest will probably go north on Thursday. They stated to me that the reason they did not settle at Macleod was, that it was too windy.

On Saturday a robbery occurred at the shed by which some of the party lost three gold watches, and one man states he lost $78. The robbery was committed by one of their own party, who cleared out with a circus train which was leaving Whether the authorithat night for the west. ties will succeed in capturing him remains to be seen. At first, they tried to throw the odium on some outsiders; but, as they failed in doing so, they explained that this man joined them at Winnipeg and did not belong to their society at But it is hard to believe anything they say. Mr. Singleton, caretaker of the shed here, informed me this morning that he thought it was never their intention to take up land in the coun-It is asserted that they brought in as settlers' effects considerable dutiable articles, which they will be found trading and peddling around the country, and that they have no knowledge whatever of farming, or, in fact, any agricultural operations whatever, at least, the major portion of them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the face of these facts, Mr. Burgess, in the letter which accompanies these returns ventures to make the following statement:—

A number of the persons have taken up farms in the North-west, and are now engaged in farming; and, so far as I am aware, or the records of this department show, none of them have been committed to jail in Calgary, and none of them have been formally charged with any offence.

One of the principal things I desired to learn was the actual location of these persons to find out whether any of them became actual settlers. Mr. Burgess, as I say, makes the statement that a number of them have taken up farms in the North-west. I have looked through the papers from one end to the other and, though there is a distinct inquiry in the motion for the statement showing what did become of these people and where they were settled, there is not a single sign of any evidence showing that a single man of them did settle in the North-west. Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that an emigration department properly conducted, after spending a large sum of money in getting a particular class of people to come to the country, would be able to show from its records the names of those people and what had become of them. I should think a record of that kind would be considered absolutely indispensable in a department that spends a large sum of money in inducing people to come to this country. Mr. Burgess undertakes to say from some peculiar knowledge he may have in his own head that a number of these people did settle on farms in the Northwest. Though I have asked most explicitly for the location of these people, the files of the department in connection with the matter afford no information on the subject. I think this whole attempt to transplant a lot of pedlars, persons who are not fitted in any way for agricultural operations, from a large city like Chicago, shows the utter incapacity of the department and its officials to properly engage in the work of immigra-Word came to the Department of the Interior from the Rev. Mr. Phillipps. a former resident of this city, that there were in Chicago a large number of persons who would make fine settlers for the North-west and suggesting that inquiry be made into the facts of the matter. The department sent their inspector of agencies United States, Capt. Holmes, to investigate. He appears to have spent some four or five months, strange to say the very months during which the great exposition was going on in Chicago, in investigating this matter. Engaged in the same service, presumably. were a number of other gentlemen employed in the emigration branch located in Chicago. There was Mr. Schumacher, who has been mentioned; there was Mr. Montague, a brother of the hon. Secretary of State; there was Mr. Daly, a brother of the Minister of the Interior. gentlemens' names will be found inscribed the report of the Auditor General as drawing their ordinary salaries and an allowance, I think, of $4 and in some cases $5 per day for expenses during the months the Chicago exposition was in full blast. I am informed that, not content with having this very choice privilege of sojourning in that city at the expense of the Government, and receiving a very fair allowance for expenses, during the months of July and August, when the temperature became too hot, the interest of the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior necessitated the removal of a number of these gentlemen, if not all, to one of the watering places of the United States. Now, remembering all the facts, remembering the ignominious result of the labour of all these men during those months in Chicago, in transplanting those Jews to Calgary, some of whom got into jail, and if they did not get into jail, they ought to have been put there, and none of whom became actual settlers in the country-remembering these facts, I say, we can understand why the Government are most unwilling to give the House any information as to the number of persons in their delegation to Chicago, and their expenses. Early last session I obtained the sanction of the House to a motion calling for full particulars as to the expenditure of the Government during that exposition. About the same time, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) also obtained from the House an order somewhat similar to These two motions were carried early mine. The officials connected with last session. the Chicago Exposition, Mr. Larke, for instauce, was occupied here all last session, and I believe for some time after the session had expired, in winding up the business of the commission to Chicago. I had some correspondence with Mr. Larke with regard to this return, and I was induced to believe by that correspondence that he was busily engaged in preparing the returns. He requested me to consent to one return being brought in covering the motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk and my own, and I consented to that, but no return was ever brought down. I may say that I drew the attention of the Government to the fact several times last sesthat these returns were not being brought down, and early this session again drew the attention of the Government to the fact that these returns had not been brought down. I was promised that they would be brought down as soon as possible. but so far as I am aware, they have not yet been laid upon the Table of the House. or if they have been, it is only within a day or two. Now, I noticed to-day, that when the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) asked the Government some questions which were intended to draw from them information similar to that called for in these returns, the Secretary of States very blandly informed the member for Kent that he had better put his question in the form of a motion, knowing very well that a motion, at this stage of the session, would never be reached.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are not all the details in the Auditor General's report?

Mr. MARTIN. No, not by any means.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You will find them there.

Mr. MARTIN. The details are not there that I asked the Government for.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Every dollar that was paid is there.

Mr. MARTIN. Very much more is asked for besides that, information by which we will be able to determine how many other persons were engaged in Chicago besides Mr. Schumacher, Mr. Montague, Mr. Daly, and Captain Holmes, who were drawing salaries and large allowances for expenses during that exposition. Now, it is a matter of extreme importance to Canada at got into jail. Has he proved that this man large, and especially to Manitoba and the North-west Territories, that there should be as large an immigration as possible into that country. It is the firm conviction of the people of Manitoba and the Territories that the large sums expended for immigration each year by the Dominion Government, are positively wasted, and I feel satisfied that the facts I have been able to adduce in this matter will tend to strengthen the belief of the people in that respect. It is a great pity that when Canada appropriates $200,000 a year, as it did, in an endeavour to bring people into the country, and to settle up our North-west country, that this money should have been wasted in the manner I have pointed out.

Mr. DALY. I am sure the House must be very much edified at the statesmanlike address we have heard from the hon. gentleman, who thinks he has discovered a mare's nest. I have had the honour of presiding over the immigration branch of my department for two years and nine months. the hon, gentleman has had an opportunity of investigating the work of that department during that time, and the only charge he has been able to make against my department is the charge that he has made here to-night, reiterating the statement that he made on the floor of this House some months ago. Now, Sir, what are the facts in relation to this matter, a matter that seems to disturb the hon. gentleman's dreams, that seems to affect him in such a way that he cannot get away from the subject? Notwithstanding the statements I made some weeks ago in this House, and notwithstanding the fact that the hon. gentleman has before him all the correspondence that took place in connection with this matter, which was brought down in response to an order of the House, he must come back to the charge again. Now, Sir, the gravamen of his charge is that we expended a large sum of money in taking a large number of Jews into Calgary, and that we should not have expended the money, that we should not have taken that large number of Jews into Calgary. Now, Sir, the whole cost in connection with taking these Jews up there, did not amount to $350; and, moreover, we did not take in over thirty people altogether, only three or four of whom were Jews. And yet the hon. gentleman has the audacity to stand up here and say, with the papers before him, in view of the previous statement I made here, that we took three or four hundred Jews into that country, when he knows, as a matter of fact, that the papers disclosed that we did not take in from Chicago over thirty or forty people altogether, and that there were not over three or four Jews. Then the hon, gentleman dwells with unction on the fact, and rolls it upon his tongue, that one of these men was one of those people we took from Chicago? Has he proved he was one of those immigrants? On the contrary, the man had nothing whatever to do with the party, but attached himself to them when they got up to Winnipeg. But that does not satisfy the hon, gentleman; he thinks he can make a charge against the depart-Now, Sir, as possibly some hon. gentlemen were not here when this matter was under discussion before. I will just lay the facts again before the House. In the spring of 1893, the Rev. T. D. Phillipps, who previously lived in Ottawa, a clergy-man of the Church of England, and who, although still living in the United States. is yet interested in the welfare of Canada, wrote a letter to the department, pointing out the fact that in his ministrations he had come in contact with a number of people who were desirous of emigrating from Chicago and going into farming. I cannot do better than read Mr. Phillipps' letter, which I have here. This is dated Kenwood, Chicago, 4th May, 1893:

Dear Sir,—Some weeks ago I had occasion to write to Ottawa for information required by German residents of this city who contemplated removal to the Canadian North-west. My letter was duly forwarded to the Department of the Interior by Mr. Lowe. Shortly afterwards, Captain Holmes visited Chicago in the interests of the Government, was put by me in communication with these good people, and attended two of their As a result, four of their number, meetings. Messrs. F. Leeb, Wolf Sax, W. Berman and J. Leeb, visited the North-west, having been delegated thereto by the members of their association, going over the Canadian Pacific Railway charge of an official of your department to Calgary and Edmonton, and subsequently south to the district around Fort Macleod.

These delegates returned last week and immediately reported to their countrymen entire satisfaction with the country, and brought back assurances that their personal observation had fully borne out the statements made to them by Government agents, no less than by myself, regarding the marvellous fertility of the soil and the perfect adaptability of the region visited to the requirements of experienced agriculturists, such as these prospective immigrants had been in their native Germany. Consequently, some 400 families are arranging to leave Chicago on or about 20th May for settlement in townships 9, 10 and 11 of range 26, west fourth; 11, 12 and 13, of range 27, west fourth, and 13 of range 28, west fourth. Ultimately, he thought, at least 1,600 other families would join the settlement.

A deputation, consisting of Messrs. F. Leeb, Wolf Sax, W. Berman and A. Brau, called upon me this morning and requested me to act as their medium of communication with the department. The following is the substance of their present wishes and intention additional to what is stated above:

They would require temporary assistance while making their allotment on some 150,000 acres of land which they purposed taking up. Would it be possible, for instance, for an agent of the department to procure for them at very reasonable rates the use of tents for the summer?

Mr. MARTIN.

2. As they deem irrigation to be a necessity of the near future, what are the steps to be taken in order to obtain a charter for the construction of an irrigation canal, with license to draw a supply of water from the Willow Creek, Old Man's River and other streams abutting on the settlement?

3. If these settlers should take up, for instance, in township 9, range 26, west fourth, sections 16, 18, 20, 22, 28, 32, 34 (all now unoccupied, as shown in plans which the delegates procured from the Dominion Lands office), would it be possible for the Government to exchange for sections elsewhere, and off the line of this settlement, school section 29 (lying between 20 and 32) and other such sections as 11 B, No. 8? The object of the settlers is to secure sections as nearly contiguous as possible and on the line of the proposed irrigation channel.

As this association is very much in earnest, and it is composed of men, with scarcely an exception, heads of families who would be, I am satisfied, very creditable, even valuable accessions to the population of Canada, may I ask the favour of an immediate reply.

Yours truly,

T. D. PHILLIPPS.

That letter was written by the Rev. Mr. Phillipps after the return of the delegates. In the meantime, as the hon, gentleman stated. Mr. Pearce, an officer of the department, having seen the delegates who had gone there, took occasion to write in his report a warning to the department. Mr. Pearce wrote to the effect that we should make further inquiries in reference to those people before encouraging them to come out and settle. In response to Mr. Pearce's warning, the department did not through its officers encourage, as Mr. Phillipps by his letter of 4th of May would have liked us to do, the scheme of those people in regard to irrigation or colonization, nor as regards encouraging 300 or 400 families to go to the North-west; but by instructions given to Captain Holmes, after Mr. Pearce's letter had been received, he was cautioned particularly in regard to what Mr. Pearce had said and the necessity of making full inquiries in reference to those people. The consequence was that instead of 300 or 400 people being taken out or encouraged to go to the Northwest by the department only 20 or 30 went, as I have already stated, and every one of them that had experience in farming the country from which he came, and it appears that afterwards three or four of them turned out to be Jews. As a matter of fact, a number of them settled there, took up homesteads and are there at the present time; but because three or four happened to be Jews, and because a man attached to a party happened to get into Calgary jail, an opportunity was afforded to the Opposition press to attack the Government and the department and point out that this showed the failure of the immigration policy which they were called upon to condemn. On 20th June Mr. Holmes addressed the following letter to the department:

Chicago, 20th June. 1893.

Sir,—In further reply to your telegram of 19th instant, received this a.m., re German party, who went to Winnipeg in charge of Schumacher, I explained to them fully before starting that they could not obtain Government land in large quantitles in the Macleod district; that it would be utterly impossible for them to obtain odd-numbered and Hudson Bay sections; that the Canadian Pacific Railway would not give assistance to go to the Macleod district; that the lands, even if obtainable, were unfit for settlement by people in their circumstances, and, finally, that those settlers who located in the vicinity of Lethbridge and Macleod country some years ago, have been obliged to abandon their homestead, and had been moved by the Canadian Pacific Railway to new locations in vicinity of Wolseley and Grenfell.

I wrote Mr. Smith, also Mr. L. A. Hamilton, Canadian Pacific land commissioner, explaining the matter fully, and requesting them to have them met by parties speaking their language and who would give them full information endorsing my statement.

Schumacher went with them as much for the purpose of assisting them to get a new location as for any other purpose, as he was familiar with the facts in regard to the former settlement in vicinity of Lethbridge, and has visited the new settlement at Grenfell.

The whole trouble arises from the fact that the Macleod people thought they as a community had considerable money, and would be prepared to go into a large scheme of irrigation. quently, when the delegates were there in April last, the Macleod people entertained them nicely. set forth in glowing colours the advisability of their locating in that vicinity, and, in fact, so filled them with stories in regard to the capabilities of the Macleod region that the delegates were unable to see any virtue in any other location, and, although we all did our best to show them that, so far from being the best, it was the poorest district in the Territories for men of their circumstances to go to. They seemed to go off under the impression that it was from interested motives we were trying to get them to go to some other district, and that we wanted to reserve the Macleod country for English-speaking people, personal friends, &c.
Mr. Hamilton wired Mr. Lee on Saturday that

Mr. Hamilton wired Mr. Lee on Saturday that they would leave for their lands on 19th instant. So I took it for granted that the difficulty had been gotten over, and that they were satisfied to try some other location.

They are a peculiar lot. At times they intimate that they can obtain funds to accomplish anything they undertake. At others they can only average about $300 per family. There have been no misrepresentations made to them here, and the Government is not obliged to them in any manner.

Your obedient servant,
ALFRED T. HOLMES.

What that letter discloses is this fact, that the people had got it into their heads through the leader of the deputation that they would go into the Macleod country and enter into the irrigation scheme, and the whole trouble arose out of that circumstance. But the action taken by the officers of the department, and the Canadian Pacific Railway officers, who are equally interested in this matter with the Government agents. took the people away from the Macleod district. I find a letter written on 12th different nationalities held a meeting. They February, 1894, to Capt. Holmes by the were a fine looking body of people, who degeneral passenger agent of Canadian Pacific Railway at Chicago, which details the inception of this movement. He says:

Chicago, 12th February, 1894.

Captain A. F. Holmes,

Stock Exchange Building, Chicago.

Dear Sir.-In regard to your inquiry as to the origin of the movement by which some 20 families and a large and constantly growing business was opened up from the United States to the Canadian North-west last spring: This business originated in January, when two Germans came into my office and made inquiries regarding the Northwest, bearing letters of introduction from the Rev. Dr. T. D. Phillipps, of Hyde Park, near I gave such information as I had, and Chicago. referred them to the department at Ottawa for further particulars.

Shortly after this, the Rev. Dr. Phillipps called upon me personally and explained that there were a number of families in his vicinity who spoke to him of going to the Canadian North-west in the He had given them information and had spring. written to the department at Ottawa for printed matter, and, in his opinion, there would be 200 or 300 families to go, provided they were satisfied You will recollect that you with the country. called on me about the latter end of January, when I stated these facts to you in my office.

The next I heard of the movement was on your arrival in Chicago in March, after you had seen Dr. Phillipps and these people had made arrangements to meet a large number of them at Rechester Hall. The report made to me of that meeting was, that some 600 or 700 people were there, consisting of several nationalities and various religions. A few were Jews of German ex-This meeting appointed delegates to traction. go up and see the country. They did go, and made a favourable report, and some 20 or 25 of their number purchased through tickets from the Chicago Great Western Railway Company, in Chicago, to Calgary, taking the reduced rate over the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Arthur and paying the full fare in the United States.

For some time in advance of this matter, Mr. P. F. Daly, long before his brother, the present Minister of Agriculture was appointed, had paid considerable attention to the working up of this and similar business. It was only proper he should accompany the party, and he did so. Mr. P. F. Daly was known to me when with the Erie and Lacawana Road long ago, and was especially competent on account of his knowledge of the railway business, to act as he did.

Yours truly,

J. F. LEE.

That letter from Mr. Lee discloses the fact that the origin of the whole movement was the coming of those Germans into his office at Chicago in 1893. They came with letters of introduction from Mr. Phillipps and subsequently the delegates were sent up there. and the only expenditure the Government incurred was the expenses of the gentlemen who accompanied the delegates. These delegates paid their own expenses to the boundary, the Canadian Pacific Railway furnished them with transportation after they left the boundary, and they paid their return expenses from the boundary line to Chicago. After their arrival, six or seven hundred of clared themselves familiar with agriculture and who had farmed not only in the old countries, but in Dakota and other states. They had three or four hundred dollars to each family, and if we did not take an interest in those people who desired to immigrate and acquaint them with the resources of the North-west, then the officers of the department would have been open to the serious charge of neglecting their business. Believing that those people were what they represented themselves to be, they were taken to the North-west, and because we did our duty in that respect, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) and the Grit press of Manitoba blame the Government. If we had not taken advantage of the opportunity to take these people into that country, then, I say, we would have been blamable, but no blame can attach to us under the cir-Mr. Pearce had a better idea cumstances. of these people after they arrived there. and when we were cautioned by him about them, instead of sending four or five hundred who wanted to go, we took care to select only a few of the best famia few The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) would give the House to understand that all the agents of the department in Chicago were engaged in this matter. Well, they had nothing whatever to do with it beyond what the papers disclose, and it only occupied them for a very short time. were at the Chicago exhibition attending to their duties, and as the report shows they distributed thousands upon thousands of pamphlets. Our agents were not singular in being there, because there were agents from other provinces and states, as well as from the province of Manitoba, which had a side show on the outside of the exhibition grounds that cost the people of that pro-The hon. gentleman (Mr. vince $86,000. Mr. MARTIN. This is not the place to discuss that.

Mr. DALY. I know, but I am only mentioning it parenthetically so that the hoa. gentleman will not forget it.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not.

Mr. DALY. I do not think that either he or his party will forget it. Every one of our agents were at work upon the agricultural exhibition made by Canada. They did good and efficient work there as shown by the fact that we have added large numbers to the population of immigrants who came from the different states of the union-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They do not materialize.

Mr. DALY. They are there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You said you brought in 900,000, and there turned out to be only 150,000.

Mr. DALY. We do not want any further proof of the fact than that the census of the North-west taken a short time ago. shows an increase of population of 21,000 during the last three years.

Mr. MARTIN. Coming from Ontario.

Mr. DALY. They did not come from Ontario. The hon, gentleman will find by the returns that the homestead entries from Ontario have decreased year by year.

Mr. MULOCK. A great many of them came from different parts of Canada.

Mr. DALY. The hon, gentleman will have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. MULOCK. But you must not make mistakes.

Mr. DALY. I am not making any mistake. The records prove what I say. In spite of 1878. the general depression we have increased our pepulation in Manitoba from 152,000 to 207,000, and we have increased the population of the Territories 21,000 during the last three years, and if the hon, gentleman will add those figures together, and deduct 10,000 for national increase, he will find that we have an increased population in Manitoba and the North-west Territories of over 65,000 since 1891. I call the attention of hon, gentlemen opposite to the fact that when they were in power, they spent $286,000 on immigration in 1878. I would ask them what benefit the country ever reaped from that large expenditure. Taking into consideration the depression that has existed in this country and every other country during the last three years. I say we got good value for the money we spent, when we have increased our population in the North-west Territories 40 per cent, and 47 per cent in Manitoba. We have done more than any of the Australian colonies during that period. and in proportion to the population of Canada we have had a larger immigration than they have had into the United States during that period.

Mr. MARTIN. They nearly all came from the other provinces of Canada.

Mr. DALY. I beg your pardon. They eame from the United States and from Sweden and Germany and other European countrips.

Mr. MARTIN. Manitoba during the last three years, has been almost entirely from the other provinces of Canada, and brought up there by the efforts of the local government.

Mr. DALY. I take exception to the hon. gentleman's statement. The facts disclosed gentleman's attention to the fact that he by the delegates from Manitoba to the Minis going into the expenditure of the whole ister of Finance show the opposite. The immigration department.

hemestead entries show that the immigration from the other provinces to Manitoba has decreased from 50 to 75 per cent during the last five years. The increase of population there comes from the United States and Europe.

Mr. MARTIN. Not in Manitoba.

Mr. DALY. I cannot convince the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin). If I were to open the hon, gentleman's head and put the book in it, it would not convince him.

Mr. MARTIN. I know about it.

Mr. DALY. Yes, of course, you know all about it, but the fact is you know nothing about it, and I would rather take the records of the department than the hon, gentleman's word on it. The records disclose a state of facts creditable to the officers of the department and creditable to the expenditure on immigration as compared with the expenditure made by the Liberal Government in

Mr. McMULLEN. We find from the returns that this Government expended last year $45.-912.49 on immigration from the United States. The hon, gentleman has stated that they have increased the population of Manitoba some 21,000 during the past year. We would be disposed to give some little credence to what the hon, gentleman says if it were not for the fact that the census returns of 1891 clearly show that all the statements which were made for years previous with regard to the increase of population were not at all based upon facts. They have quite a number of immigration agents in the United States who draw more an ample allowance for all the labour perform. He has mentioned they of Mr. Holmes. He has drawn a salary for been furnished by my hon, friend to-nighttwelve months and a living allowance for 365 days. For the days he was in Chicago he drew $5 a day for living allowance, and for the days he was not in Chicago he drew $3 a day. It is very singular that he should draw a living allowance for every day in the year, while it is well known he is very much at home.

Some hon, MEMBERS, Oh, oh,

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon, gentleman challenges my statement. If the session lasts long enough, I intend to have Mr. Holmes before the Public Accounts Committee. As the Minister of the Interior has given some idea of what these American agents have done, I wish to show what they have cost us. We had Mr. Maclean at Tacoma. Washington: he was only engaged seventy-seven days, and he has drawn $806.55. J. W. Montague-I do not know who he is-was in Illinois only seventy-nine days, and he has cost us $560.60. Then, we had A. C. Munson in Chicago, Washington, Idaho and Oregon; he appears to have had a general travelling commission, and he has drawn $2,610.32; he was engaged in all eleven months. E. W. McCrae was in Minnesota four months only, and he has drawn $782.47. M. V. McInnes, Port Huron, Mich., was engaged four months, and he has drawn $1.00233. R. McKay, Alpena, Mich., was the papers in the return must come to the engaged four months, and he has drawn conclusion that the whole thing was a piece state of great folly and extravagance, and that the was absolutely wasted. $942.38. Steven Robertson, San Francisco, was engaged 223 days, and he has drawn $759. A. Schumacher, Chicago, Ill., was engaged 123 days, and he has drawn $841.85. R. F. Shaw, Scattle, Washington, is supposed to have been engaged 273 days, and he has drawn $1,806.73. Henry H. Smith-that is a name which is familiar here—has been in Nebraska, it appears, for four months, and he has drawn $979.45. C. O. Swanson is supposed to have been engaged twelve months in the New England States, and he has drawn $2,080.84. Then, we had Mr. W. A. Webster, at Aberdeen, South Dakota, who has drawn $407.80, and was engaged only some twenty-eight days. These are some of the most glaring cases of immigration agents we have in the United States. Now. I contend that there is no possible justification for keeping so many men at high salaries and at enormous expense, to try to persuade people in the United States to come and settle in Canada. I would have no objection whatever to furnishing general information at the Chicago Exposition, he will come to an understanding as to in regard to the peculiar advantages of our when we will take up supply to-morrow.

Mr. DALY. I will take good care that they see what you say. Send that speech to the Grit candidate in Alberta.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon, gentleman has not for a moment justified the effort to bring those people here. They were evidently a few pedlars who were picked up, and who played a trick on the Minister of the Interior and his staff of officials. Even his own brother and the brother of the Secretary of State were not sharp enough to detect the trap laid by those people to get themselves carried to the North-west to have a good time and to peddle a lot of trinkets around, and then to go back to the United States after they had got all the plunder they could. These are the kind of immigrants they brought from the United States at a great expense, to increase the population of this country. They were just a kind of dead-beats, as the evidence produced by my hon, friend has shown. The Minister of the Interior feels sore over that question, and realizes that he has made a mistake.

Mr. DALY. Not at all, but I realize that the time of the House has been taken up in a very nosensical manner.

the money spent was absolutely wasted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. as regards the wasting of time in the House is concerned, I would recommend the Minister of Finance to give his colleagues a little training and instruct them in particular that if they want to get the Estimates through, they had better confine themselves to the question in hand. So far as regards the value of any statistics supplied by the immigration department, I would just say this, that when the department, for a period of ten years, reports having settled, on an average, 100.000 people in the North-west per year, and when, as a net result, we have 150 of these people remaining, hon. gentlemen opposite have no right to complain if people afterwards do not regard the statements of the departments as worth the paper they are written on. With respect to the motion of which I gave notice the other evening, on the whole, I think I will give the hon. gentleman a run to-night, if

Mr. DICKEY. I wish to reduce that to $65,000.

Mr. DENISON. This item is one I have always cordially supported, with the object of having a first-class military college in Canada to educate our young men in the higher branches of military art; but unless the institution is properly managed, I think the expenditure on it is a waste of public money which would much better be saved to the country. Most hon, members know that during the last year there was some trouble in the college over the hazing of a young man named Plummer. That, of itself, showed conclusively that the commandant of the college was not the right man in the right place, or that would not Fagging, in the ordinary have gone on. sense, would not be objectionable in a school of that sort, and I, as a parent of a boy who is going through the college, would not object to it in an ordinary way, but when boys are compelled to go in for raffles or to purchase eatables-whether through the bad food given them by the man who is supplying food for the cadets or not, I do not know-it is high time to object. There is no doubt that this is done very extensively at the college, and to those parents who are in straightened circumstances, it is certainly very wrong that young cadets should be forced to spend their money in that way. It is well known that this has been going on in the past. The commandant may say he is not aware Well, he should be aware of it. He and if he is put there for that purpose: does not know anything about it, it is time that a change was made and a man put there who will take more interest in the college and attend to his duties more carefully. The present commandant is an officer who, I understand, was retired from the army about the year 1887 or 1888, on account of the age clause.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Your information is wrong.

I understood that was Mr. DENISON. so. I do not wish to make any statement which is not absolutely correct, but I understood that was the case. Anyway, he came out here, not on the active, but on the retired list. What we want is a man who is thoroughly in touch with the army at the present date, and not a gentleman who has been retired from the army. When the idea of a college was first started, it was understood-if it is not in the regulationsthat the officers should come out here for five or seven years and then be changed, so that we might always have men thoroughly up in the latest scientific knowledge of the British army, and, at the same time, men whose youth and energy would prompt them to take an active interest in the college. I might mention to the committee that it is now seven years since the present commandant was appointed. For some years past, I have heard complaints about the management of the college, and concluded that at the end of five years, or, at the end of seven years, we would have a new commandant, and things would then right themselves. But I have heard lately—I do not know whether I am correct in stating it or not—that the present commandant claims that his appointment is for life, and that in August, 1895, when his time would be up under the ordinary rule, he would still remain on in his present position for an indefinite period. That is my sole reason for bringing up this mat-ter to-night, and I bring it up entirely from a sense of duty to the college. I firmly believe that the college is a most useful institution if properly managed, but unless it is directed by a man who is in touch with the British army and who can secure the best professors, this college must deteriorate. It is certainly very painful for me, as a supporter of the Government, to have to attack one of the principal institutions under its control, but it is necessary that somebody should do it, and, as a matter of duty, I am taking the matter up to-night. If the motion I am going to introduce is carried, it will mean that we shall be without a commandant for the next year. The duty can be carried out by the senior officer for twelve months, and then I hope we will put an amount in the Estimates to place another commandant at the head of the The commandant, in his report, college. states as follows, at page 35 of the Royal Military College Report :-

Yet those who present themselves for admission to the Royal Military College are insignificantly few in number; very many fewer than is desirable, and very many fewer than can be accounted for otherwise than by a general absence of knowledge of the education and training imparted there.

I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, this is caused by the want of interest in the college and lack of proper management. I have taken up the report of the last few years to ascertain the number of cadets that have passed in during the past few years. I find that in 1876 the number of cadets who passed in was 18, and the number each year since then has been as follows:—

In other words, since 1889, the year when the present commandant came into office. I notice a very serious falling off in the numbers; and, at the present time I believe there are 54 cadets in the college. I move:

That the item $70,000 for the Royal Military College be reduced by the amount of the commandant's salary, $3,163.32.

Sir JAMES GRANT. Mr. Chairman, before this matter is decided. I should like to make a few observations on the subject of militia matters of our country. I regret that I was absent when the previous discussion took place with reference to militia, for I think that at the present it is opportune time to make a few observations not only on the militia as it stands but on our future with reference to the defence of the Empire. All are aware that there is no subject at present arousing greater discussion or deeper interest than that of the militia force of Canada. I find in a recent issue of an Ottawa paper the following despatch:—

London, 26th June.—The "Times" says that it understands that the Duke of Devonshire, besides assuming the Lord Presidency of the Council, will preside over a committee of national Imperial defence, which will combine the Admiralty and War Office, such as was recommended by the Royal Commission over which the Duke, as Marquis of Hartingdon, presided, and which is now for the first time to be formally constituted.

In the light of this important statement we can see that there is a movement being made with reference not only to the military matters of Great Britain individually, but also with reference to the relationship that should exist between the colonies and the Empire in the matter of defence. Then in the Ottawa "Citizen" of 5th June last I find the following article:—

The unity of the Empire is also discussed in an article in the "Statist," urging the colonies to state clearly their views as to sharing the expenses of the general defence. The writer points out that the Pacific Ocean, with 800,000,000 people living on its shores, will be in the future an important highway of international commerce, and that Great Britain individually is at a marked disadvantage with Russia, Japan and the United States in respect of ports, coaling stations and the like. He suggests that Great Britain should come to a permanent understanding with the United States, which power he assumes to have no aggressive designs, and that the colonies also should enter into a systematic scheme for carrying out whatever policy the Imperial authorities might desire.

When this subject of the defences of the colonies came up in England some time ago Atlantic and the Pacific, as well as the construction of a Pacific cable, the "Times" says: "The distinguished high commissioner in London impressed upon the public mind there the proper standing of Canada in reference to this matter. And his suggestions were so remarkably well received that not only in London but throughout the British Empire his statements on that very important occasion were taken notice of; and in fact he has been the main instrument in placing this movement upon the substantial basis on which it now stands, as far as Canada is concerned. Then again I find in the "Citizen" of 9th June, 1895:

A little leaslet has been sent out by the Imperial Federation Defence Committee which gives some interesting facts relating to the way in which the burden of defending the commerce of the British Empire is distributed. The commerce of the British Empire has a value of £930,-009,000. Of this the United Kingdom owns £625,-000,000; the self-governing colonies, £146,000,000. The colonial commerce consequently forms one-seventh of that whole. The naval protection of this vast property costs £20,269,000 per annum. Of this total the United Kingdom pays £20,000,000, while the self-governing colonies pay only £269,-000. In other words, the colonies possess one-seventh of the trade, but contribute only one-seventy-fifth of the cost of protecting the trade.

The population of the United Kingdom is 38,-000,000; that of the self-governing colonies, 11,-000,000. While the population of the self-governing colonies is more than one-fourth of that of the United Kingdom, while their revenue is nearly half as great, and the value of their scaborne trade almost quarter, they contribute only one-seventy-fifth part of the naval defence of the Empire. Certain small contributions are made by Natal, Hong Kong, the Straits Settlements, Ceylon and Malta; but Canada, the West Indies, Cape Colony, the West Coast of Africa and Gibraltar contribute nothing.

As the committee point out, the self-governing colonies, including Canada, are depending upon the motherland for the defence of their commerce and shirking their own share of it.

That is a very important point, "shirking our own share of it." I say Canada shirks nothing. Canada has never been afraid to defend herself; she has never been afraid to take her part, not only in the protection of Canadian interests, but in contributing admirably well her share towards the defence of the Empire, as I shall prove.

The Empire must be defended somehow. That defence costs money, and if one part of the Empire fails to do its share, unfair burdens must fall upon the remainder. Defence is not a luxury, which can be indulged in or dispensed with, as times are good or bad; it is a vital necessity to every self-respecting people.

This is not, however, the whole story. If Canada has not paid directly its share of Imperial defence, it has done something towards the unification and strengthening of the Empire. The London "Times" of 31st May acknowledges this. After alluding to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the subsidizing of steamers between Vancouver and Japan, and Vancouver and Australia, and the proposal that the Imperial Government should join the colonies in assisting the establishment of a fast mail service across the Atlantic and the Pacific, as well as the construction of a Pacific cable the "Times" says: "The colonies have taken their part in the consolidating movement, for the furtherance of which the support and encouragement of the Imperial Gov-Individual energy and ernment is now sought. state enterprise, of which the colonial tax-payer has borne all the burden, have achieved almost without direct Imperial assistance a large part of what has been already done."

Now, this last motive is an extremely important one, it is the one, above all others, that our High Commissioner pressed upon their public men, and, as a result, to-day they are cognizant of the fact that Canada has not been behind in the slightest degree in contributing her share towards the defence of the Empire. Now, when we talk of this matter of defence, we know per-fectly well that since the very commencement of this session we have all been agitated about the question of protection. That is the subject and the theme that has been discussed in this House. But that protection should not alone be confined to trade and commerce; it ought also to extend to greater stimulus could be given to the force the protection of Canadian interests so far as militia matters are concerned. Protection of trade and commerce without protection in other respects, would be of little account; and for that reason I desire at this time to bring that question before the House and the country. Now, what have we in the way of a militia force in Canada? We have a permanent force of 1,000 We have an active militia of 36,000 composed of cavalry troops, men, field artillery, battalions batteries, and Ι suppose these figures infantry. all correct, because I have taken them out of the militia blue-book, which is yearly printed, and presented to this House, and I have no doubt as to their accuracy. militia expenditure of this country at present is very little more than it was in 1870, when the Imperial troops were withdrawn from Canada. At that time, a very large and extensive grant of territory, until then owned by the British Government, handed over to this country, with the positive understanding that when these troops were withdrawn we would look after our own interests. At that time we had only four provinces; to-day we have seven provinces, and a territory as well. Since that time what has taken place? We have doubled our population, our wealth and our resources. In 1870 we had no military college, we had no cartridge factory, we had no permanent force; all these have been added since, not as any extra charge upon the country, but the expenditure necessary to keep up these various additions to the militia force of our country, has been taken out of the ordinary grant given by the Government for the militia force. Now, when we inquire into this question, if the people of Canada fancy for one moment that they are overtaxed for the support of their militia force, I would wish to impress upon their minds the contrary. We find that the Imperial Government spends no less than $4 per head for its naval and military defence; the United States expends $1 per head for its whole 65,000,000 of people; and, besides that, each state supports a militia force of its own. Canada spends-what a About 25 cents per head, exclusive of the North-west Mounted Police. Public sentiment is not in favour of cutting down our militia force. Some think it is aesirable to reduce the permanent force, as the Minister ef Finance has recommended, owing to the falling off in our revenue. Well, we might cut it down to a small extent, for, as long as we have a substitute in the way of individuals who are thoroughly up in drill, and are able to drill the militia force of this country, we have all that is absolutely necessary. The spirit of military enthusiasm thirty years ago was vastly greater than it At that time we find that the is to-day. Conservative Government went in for thorough organization. We know well that no than was given during that time by the late Sir John A. Macdonald, whose monument was uncovered the other day. I was pleased and gratified beyond measure to find an evidence of what has been done in military matters on that very occasion, for we then saw assembled several corps of troops, going through their drill with as much activity, displaying as much skill, and dexterity, in military tactics, I might British almost say, the \mathbf{as} seen in And why? Is it owing of army itself. are to the small pittance they get from the Government of their country? No, very far from it. It is their own energy, their own activity, it is owing to the efforts of their own officers to make the men of the force a credit to themselves and a credit to the country. That is what has brought it up to the state of efficiency that it now occu-In 1870 the hon, member for South pies. Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), whom I do not see present, took an active interest in militia affairs, and he wrote a brocheur as we all remember, on military matters, and on the military defence of this country. At that time he was a member of the Conservative party, but he has left us, for what reason I know not. But, rely upon it, that since 1870, when he saw fit to leave the party of progress in this country, he has been ever since very much like the dove that went out of Noah's ark, he has found no resting place for the sole of his foot. In 1885 he seemed to have revived his enthusiasm, for he then seconded a vote of thanks to General Middleton when he returned gloriously from Batoche, where our citizen soldiers had distinguished themselves. We know what the annual camps have done for the encouragement of our citizen soldiers. remember when they formerly gathered at Brantford, Drummondville, and London. when thousands of people congregated and showed their interest in military matters.

Was it for the mere purpose of self advancement that they went into these camps? No, far from it. It was to show their zeal for their country, it was to show their military ardour, it was to show a desire to pro-The North-west mounted tect our homes. police, as we know well, has done a great deal, and has also accomplished a good work. It is a force which is a credit to our country; but the day is not very far distant when some change must take place in that great North-west country with reference to military matters. We are getting a large population in there, and, no doubt, we are not far from the time when we will have a militia force there the same as we have in the other portions of the Dominion. The North-west mounted police will graduall be reduced in number, and act as a cavalry contingent in connection with the North-west militia, and in that way a great saving will be effected in the militia expenditure of this country. When the international conference was held at Ottawa all these subjects relating to military matters were discussed, and the Imperial Government is now taking into consideration this subject more than they have done at any other time? Why? A committee waited on Lord Rosebery before his resignation and placed before him the whole subject, as to what Canada was going to do, as to how much we were prepared to contribute in support of the defence of our own country and at the same time assist in the protection of the British Empire. Canada is a young country and it has heavy responsibilities. We cannot undertake too much. We are building railways, constructing canals and operating public works in every direction, and while we are willing to contribute our quota towards military matters we cannot be expected to raise a large army and tax our people for it. Very far from it. But whatever force we have, let it be thoroughly equipped and organized let it act as the nucleus of a force should such ever be required. We know perfectly well what organization has accomplished. I received a few days ago the "Herald-Mail" of Yokohama, Japan, containing a reliable statement as to the recent war. In that country we have a marvellous illustration of the development of a naval and military power, within the past few months, during which period it has gained a name, power and standing in the nations of the world such as it never be-Only 32 years have elapsed fore possessed. since Japan was opened to trade Great Britain; ten years before Commodore Perry had endeavoured to get into the country but without success. It has been opened to civilization only during that period, and yet see what its achievements have been in scientific, military and naval matters. This shows the importance of being prepared and thoroughly organized. The result of the war between China and Japan affords a remarked by organization, and on this point I will read some observations printed in the Japan "Herald-Mail," 28th May, 1895, to which I have referred, which is the leading political journal of the country and so no doubt its statements are accurate:

They are wearied with the long campaign they have been engaged in, and no doubt were shrewd enough to think that had they to do battle with European troops, it would be something a little different to the sort of military promenade which had engaged their attention in the late war, when addressing themselves to a foe that almost invariably betrayed a more active disposition to retreat than to fight, as is proved by the statistics just published of the casualties of the Japanese from first to last. Of the killed, there were only 623, and those who died from wounds were 72; total mortality at the hands of the enemy, 795; with under 3,000 wounded only.

This statement shows that Japan was thoroughly organized. She was fighting a nation with more millions than there are days in the year, and she was successful in that campaign because of her organization and training. We know perfectly well that the strength of a country does not depend on the density of its population or extent of territory, for if we look at the nations of the world, what do we ob-The dear old British only occupy a small space on the globe; yet what has England not done towards the advancement and civilization of the world. Are we not pleased, proud and satisfied to think that we belong to a country which has achieved such a name and reputation, notwithstanding the fact that the country is small in extent, but it is great in principle. great in power, strong in the enunciation of those principles which cement us together. Canada is not a military country, and we do not expect to raise here a great army. How are we placed on this continent? Here are five millions contiguous to seventy-five millions. But we are living beside a people who are happy, peaceful and prosperous and whose prosperity and happiness we are glad to recognize. In that civil war of which I had personal observation during a considerable period, I saw what they accomplished as a people; there the citizen soldiers of Canada united with the soldiers of the United States, and Canadian and American blood was spilt on the same field. For what ject? For the abolition of slavery and for the advancement of civilization, and may that peace, comfort and happiness which extends over the North American continent ever continue, and may the people of Canada remain happy and contented, as we possess equal freedom and liberty with the people on the other side of the line, whose prosperity we enjoy, who are one people with us, one people in language and in literature. and under different though we are flags, let us at the same happy, contented with our lot on this entire able illustration of what can be accomplish- continent. I wish to thank the Minister for extending to us a small share of that ber for Ottawa (Sir James Grant). Until I revenue which is under his control in order that our military corps may have a certain amount of drill which is absolutely necessary in this country, for we know perform his locker were dealt out rather the feetly well that without such drill they fairly to members on this side of the House, would not be organized. "Punch":

I do not find any fault with the Finance Minister. His intention is to make the money go as far as possible, to extend it over the various requirements of our people. We are advancing in material interests. If we are not able to carry out every important improvement, do not find fault, have a little patience, Canada is prospering, great works going on. We cannot are thing in a day. every Rome was not: built in a day; we must be content with what is being accomplished. But do not fancy there is a dark cloud over the country. very far from it. Great Britain would not take that interest in Canada which she displays if this was not the colony of all the colonies. I wish the organized militia of this country every possible prosperity. I hope that the Minister of Finance next year will give more money in order to enable the force to more perfect organization. I am glad to find the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in the House now. I am glad that he takes an interest in military matters. I know that he occasionally fires a stray shot, but we must excuse him for that. I will say no more now, Mr. Speaker, further than to wish our Canadian volunteer force success and prosperity.

Mr. FRASER. I must congratulate the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FRASER. I mean the member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison). I congratulate him for bringing up this question. It is not often that we have a debate upon the militia estimates so truly a patriotic speec'i as has fallen from the lips of the hon. mem- tawa (Sir James Grant) has shown that he heard that eloquent oration I was inclined to think that we were spending too much on little hurt. I am glad to re-echo the sentiment, that not only so far as the militia of Canada are concerned, but so far as the men, and boys, and women of Canada are concerned, they are ready to take up arms on behalf of this Canada of ours. Only a Scotchman can appreciate that. Englishmen fight alone, but if Scotchmen are not sufficiently numerous to meet the enemy, Scotchwomen are always ready to take part in the defence of their country. I must erter a caveat, however, against one expression of the hon, gentleman (Sir James Grant) in connection with the militia. I think that the members of our militia are not any worse nor any better than the militia of any British country, but I think he was wrong in attributing their excellence to the liberality of the Finance Minister. The country is to be congratulated rather than the Finance Minister, because I feel that the Finance Minister would rather not contribute so generously, for had he withheld more money, his deficit would be much less than it is. I think myself that the training of men in Canada ought to be attended to more than the drill of the variaccomplish ous militia corps. While there ought to be drill. I believe we should expend more in preparing men who would be ready at the proper time to drill others. Perhaps I am rot the best judge, but I am only laying down the general rule. I have my commission and I am ready to fight, although I am not now in active service. I do not anticipate that we shall have war in this ccuntry, but a great European war might create an occasion, when it would be necessary for us to have men who could drill, not only the militia, but others who would enter the service of their country. I rose to add my testimony to what has been so eloquently said by the member for Ottawa (Sir James Grant). I hope that we may long enjoy such outbursts of eloquence in this House. It was refreshing to me to know that in so old a breast there was still so much loyalty and so much desire to see Canada prosper. If men who are growing old like the hon. member for Ottawa (Sir James Grant) exhibit such a spirit, what an example it must be to our young men. am sure the hon. gentleman, if the emergency should occur, would forget that he is row beyond three score years and would be ready to lay down his life in the defence of his country. That is truly patriotic.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Ot-deserves to share in the motto of the voluncomes up.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. CASEY. I regret that hon, gentlemen opposite should laugh at the hon, member money is expended. My hon, friend from for Ottawa for his general readiness.

I am sure they cannot be laughing at me, because they know that military matters are one of my special-true enough, as he pointed out in one moties! I was once a very good shot ment of franknoss that the officiency of myself, and I am waiting now to hear about the cow. We can all agree with what the member for Ottawa (Sir James Grant) said in praise of the volunteers, though we may not perhaps go with him to the full extent in his qualifications of the High Commissioner, as to the manner in which he has placed the claims of Canada before Nor can we all agree other countries. with him in thanking the Finance Minister so effusively for granting money for the current year's drill. Why, Sir, are all aware that the Finance Minister did not intend to give any money for that purpose. We are all aware that it is the Dominion Rifle Association and the Artillery Association and similar bodies, who are more to be thanked than the Finance Minister, because when they happened to be gathered here during the session. they brought such pressure upon him that he had to consent to expend that money for volunteer purposes. I wish to have it noted that the money which the Finance Minister was willing to grant was for that part of the militia expenses which are partly ornamental and partly of a permanent nature, and which do not go towards teaching the militia of the country their actual duties in the field, and that the part which he was not willing to grant, until he had to do it under pressure, was the part that is actually necessary for teaching the men their duties, and the part that is most widely scattered all over the country.

He was willing, for example, to continue this expenditure on the Military College, and ask for $70,000 for that institution. which I understand the Minister now requests to be reduced to $65,000. This is one of the points in regard to which I wish to attack the militia policy of the Government. I am sorry to have attack the Military College, seeing that it was first put into operation by my own political friends; but the fact is that that college, instituted with the best object in view, and managed while my friends were in power with economy and efficiency, seems to have declined to a far lower level, and to have become less an institution for the benefit of the militia of Canada than a select private school for the sons of rich men who have sufficient influence to get them in there, and sufficient money to pay a large annual fee after they are in.

I fail to see any connection teers: "semper paratus," for he seems to be ever between the Military College as ready to make a speech on everything that at present managed and the efficiency the militia of Canada. of For reason I object to the outrageously large amount spent upon it in proportion to the work done, and the manner in which that Ottawa (Sir James Grant) talked as if there were some connection between this vote and the efficiency of the volunteers; but it is I was once a very good shot ment of frankness, that the efficiency of our volunteers is not due to the money grants of the Government.

The pittance the volunteers receive does not actually pay them for what they lose by volunteering, while at the same time we maintain at Kingston an institution on a scale almost sufficient for a first-class university, with the result of doing what? Educating to the point of graduation last year how many cadets? Fifteen. We spent $68,-000 last year on the military college, and fifteen cadets graduated. It cost an average of $4.533 apiece to the country to educate these cadets, besides what it cost their parents; and what is the benefit to the actual militia of Canada? How many of them have gone into the active militia? Since this college was instituted, I believe, not 5 per cent of its graduates have entered the service of the active militia.

Mr. MULOCK. Only 11 out of over 200 in the permanent corps.

Mr. CASEY. That shows that my estimate was pretty nearly correct. Very few have taken commissions in the militia. A number have taken commissions in the Imperial army; but it is no part of our duty to educate officers for the Imperial army or to tax Canadians for that purpose. The large majority of the graduates of the college have not only not taken service in our own militia, or even in the Imperial army, but they have gone to the United States and other countries to seek their fortunes as civil engineers, or in other civil occupations for which they were fitted by the education they received in the college.

We will take for granted, although I do not know that we have any proof of it, that the education given in this college is firstrate, and such as to fit a man for employment as civil engineer or in some other walk of life; but the fact is that we have been there educating men who have not gone into the military occupations afterwards, but who have for the most part gone to take civil positions in the United States, to help to build up that country at our expense. The whole system is utterly rotten and absurd, with the actual result of graduating only fifteen or twenty cadets every year, very few of whom remain in Canada at all.

Mr. DENISON. Eight graduated this year.

Mr. CASEY. My hon, friend says that this year there are only eight graduates. Now, Sir, it would be a highly proper thing for us to have an institution purely for military instruction, for officers of our volunteers and our permanent corps. If we had such an institution and at a reasonable cost, it would be an extremely useful and proper thing to have. But, this military college being what it is, I say it is an outrage on the Canadian tax-payer to ask him to maintain it.

Let me for a moment compare the cost of this college with the cost of some of the other services connected with the militia. I have told you that it cost $68,000 last year. year we are only asked for $55,000 for all kinds of stores, or $13,000 less than for the military college. We are asked for $55,000 for clothing and necessaries for the permanent corps and the active militia combined, again $13,000 less than for this swell college of Kingston. We ask for only $37,000 for grants in aid of the artillery and rifle associations, very little more than half as much as for the military college, and I can assure the House, if they do not know it already, that the different rifle and artillery associations do a vast deal more to keep up interest in military matters and to turn our men into the making of good soldiers than the military college has ever done.

Our cartridge factory, which supplied us with all the ammunition used during the past year, in all cost a trifle over $35,000, or $33,000 less than the military school which turned out this year eight cadets, as my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Denison) reminds us. Our whole ammunition cost us $35.000. and those eight cadets cost us over $8.000 a year each! Which is the service that is useful and proper to be maintained, and which is the service that is kept up for the purpose of sham and ostentation? I say that the military college is a perfect sham, as compared with these other services. Take a few of the other military expenditures. The pay allowance for the permanent corps of active militia for the year is only $40,000, or $28,000 less than what these cadets cost. The clothing of the militia and permanent corps only cost $33,000, and so on.

It is asserted that this institution gives us grand results in the way of education. What does the commandant claim for it? After going into an analysis of the marks, he goes on to tell us who visited the college during the year and so on. But finally he states:

There is all but an unanimous opinion amongst the parents of Royal Military College graduates, that the result of the education and training herc has been very highly satisfactory.

"An all but unanimous opinion"—perhaps the commandant refers to the scandals which took place this year in connection with that college. I do not remember the particulars, but we all have a general recollection of the ill-treatment to which some of the cadets were subjected, leading to a great deal of inquiry and implying a great deal of disgrace, to my mind, on the management of the college. It is not unnatural that the parents, if they were not the parents of the particular young men who were ill-treated there, might have a very good opinion of the educational training, considering it cost so much to the country. But the commandant admits:

Yet those who present themselves for admission to the Royal Military College are insignificantly few in number; very many fewer than is desirable, and very many fewer than can be accounted for otherwise than by a general absence of knowledge of the education and training imparted here.

Yet we find $700 or $800 in the Public Accounts charged for advertising this institution as if it were a proprietary boarding school. Then the commandant goes on to say:

It is true that the number of students who can be received here is very small, but it does not adequately meet the aims of this national college to attract merely enough competitors to ensure securing a sufficiency of candidates to occupy all available accommodation.

That is a sentence I can hardly parse. But it seems to have a general meaning that the accommodation is too small for the number of cadets that ought to be accommodated at such an institution, and it is a very remarkable sentence to come from the head of an educational institution.

The aim is to prepare men for the public service, and the selection of these should not be limited to a group of thirty or forty candidates, for the larger the number of competitors, the higher will be the average standard of ability and attainments in those selected.

The commandant himself condemns the system of admission to the college, but we find some reason to congratulate ourselves on the progress of the cadets of last year, for the commandant tells us:

The graduating class, fifteen in number, increased 412½ pounds in weight during their residence here, making the average increase 27½ pounds.

How much a pound is that at the figure down in the Estimates? About $165! The commandant also informs us that the graduating class also increased 27½ pounds on an average, and we are asked to congratulate ourselves on that. And he adds that the average increase in height has been 2¼ inches, and the average increase in chest measurement, 2½ inches. Surely we have something for our money when we can prove that we have fattened fifteen young men and made them grow to this extent. The commandant says further:

No prize is assigned to this important department of college business. I may, therefore, here mention that had a prize been available, it would have been won by a most distinguished competitor, for he added to his chest breadth, 5% inches; to his weight, 69 pounds, and to his stature, 8% inches.

Well, we can boast of having one cadet who, "by taking thought" has added so much to stature.

I do not know that I need read further from the report, it is all of the same valuable character. I did not hear all the arguments urged by my hon, friend from West Toronto in support of his motion, but this report has fully satisfied me that I ought to vote for that resolution to knock off the salary of the commandant. It will be well for this House and country to know some of the details of this last expenditure, to know what we are paying for the instruction in this college as well as fattening the cadets.

Speaking generally, the teaching staff cost $28,400, which is about $3,500 per head for the eight cadets who graduated this year. The subordinate staff includes mostly servants, a few staff sergeants, and so on, costing $8,000. The total staff of the college cost $36,000, or $4,500 per head for the hon. gentleman's eight cadets who graduated. Coming down to individual salaries, we find that the commandant receives $3,163; seven professors receive over $2,000 each; and the salaries of the others range from $1,292 up to There are, in all, fifteen professors, getting $1.300 each to educate eight cadets. at least to secure the graduation of eight cadets out of the total number there. Two professors to each cadet, almost. One might think that these cadets would absorb a vast amount of learning from having two professors apiece for each. We almost put them in the position of having private teachers supplied to them at the public expense, and I do not think that the hard-working electors will care to see their money going in this

In the expenditure for the subordinate staff, a large amount went for servants. find $320 a year for a butler. Fancy young fellows getting a military education for services in the volunteers requiring a butler? Or perhaps it was the commandant who required the butler. Then there are other servants, at $240, and so on. At all events, $8,000 is spent for servants for these young men and their teachers-about $1,000 apiece for those who graduated this year. Then I find that their clothing seems to have been bought bit by bit from one George Creeggan, whoever he is-of Kingston, I suppose. I do not know whether he is a Kingston dealer or whether he is the regular contractor for military clothing. At any rate, the payment to him is $2,629.

Their food appears to have been bought of one L. J. Williams, at the rate of 46 cents per day each. I should think that in a college of that kind messing arrangements could be made more economically than by paying a caterer in the way that is done in this institution. At all events, $7,382 went to this Williams for messing the cadets. I do not know whether he got the job by contract or by favour, but I should think that these young fellows could have been supplied at less expense.

Then I find that the stationery and printing department here received $5,861 for the benefit of these few cadets. I do not know what so small a number as were there could have done with something like $6,000 of stationery. That is, perhaps, several hundred dollars a piece.

Mr. MULOCK. It is a little over $100 per head.

Mr. CASEY. I stand corrected—it is over $100 per head for stationery and printing for cadets who are supposed to get only an ordinary military education.

I am sure. Sir, the cost of educating these young men is far greater than for educating young men in any other military college, royal or republican, in the world. There is not a military college in England where anything like such expense is incurred on behalf of the cadets, nor is there in the United I do not think that in a peaceful country like Canada, where our efforts should be to have a large number of our population ready to take up arms, able to shoot and having some rudiments of drill, we should attempt to give to a few any such education as should be obtained from the figures I have quoted. I say we ought not to attempt to give such an education as ought to be obtained for these figures. In fact, the education they get is not at all in proportion to the cost, as shown by the commandant's report.

Now, the hon, member for Ottawa has referred us to the case of Japan. And very He has told us that Japan has justly. gained her late great military success by a thorough system, and by the thorough education of her soldiery. That is perfectly true; but where the comparison exists between Japan and Canada, or what reference this has to the Royal Military College is one of those things it seems to me, that no Japan is above all fellow can find out. things a business-like country. She does not spend $7.000 or $8.000 a year in educating each of her officers. She adopts an effective business-like plan in military matters. Her soldiery are well drilled by competent instructors, and they are economically handled. If there is anything calculated to show by illustration how utterly rotten our military system is, it is the comparison of affairs here with the state of affairs in Japan.

I do not pretend that we should make ourselves a military nation as Japan has done. But we should spend our money so as to get the largest return, and not spend vast sums on ornamental excrescences, while starving the actual fighting force of the country. I speak without bias in this matter. There is not a volunteer organization in my riding, but I have sympathy with the volunteers for old times' sake. The real volunteer force has been starved, while the staff, the military college and other branches have fattened at their expense. I shall vote for the amendment of my hon. friend from West Toronto, more as expressing my general disapprobation of the management of this college than for any special objection to the commandant, as I do not pretend to have any special knowledge in the matter.

Mr. AMYOT. There is one word used by the hon, gentleman which I cannot allow to pass unnoticed. He says that the volunteer system is rotten. That is very unfair. As to the military college at Kingston, I presume that the object of the hon, mover of the amendment is to obtain an expression of opinion from this House, because it is perfeetly impossible for this Government to stop at once the system and close the college. I am sure the Government understand, as we all do, the onerous legacy left to them which created that college. But experience has proved beyond all possible doubt that this military college has become a very costly emigration school for the country. We educate young men, very intelligent young men, and after they have received their instruction, they leave us and go to some other This shows that the college is not a success, and the sooner the Government see their way to abolish it the better for the country.

Mr. MULOCK. At this late hour I will not take up much of the time of the committee. Last year I called the attention of the House to this institution which is now before us; and, inasmuch as I find that the debate of last session has produced apparently no results. I feel that it would be quite within my right to again refer to the matter. The military college was established for an express purpose. It was established as an adjunct to the militia system of Canada, a college to train young men in fortification and milltary engineering, the knowledge to be applied for the benefit of Canada. But now we find that the object of the department in carrying on the college is entirely changed. correct think I am perfectly saying that the Government is largely . We have responsible for the failure. not carried out the objects of liament in creating the college and supplying it annually with funds, by giving to graduates appointments in connection with the militia. As a result, the graduates of this college have in some instances entered the Imperial army, in others, as mentioned by the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), they have left the country, and in other cases, have entered private walks of life. Now, I would remind the Minister of Militia that it is no part of the duties, nor is it within the letter or the spirit of the Confederation Act that the Dominion Government should embark in the business of general education. That is a duty assigned to the provinces alone, and the Dominion Government, I submit, is only entitled to promote education of a special character connected with subjects that are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion Government, under the Confederation Act. But if you turn to the Military College now. you find they are advertising in the prospectus and in the press, that their labours are not now exclusively confined to military education, but that young men at that college are prepared for entrance into business life, into professional life, and all the ordinary walks of life that are open to young men. They have as a college entirely abandoned the only right they have to an existence, the imparting of a military education. I ask the Minister of Militia, and I ask any hon, gentleman in this House, if he can for one moment justify the great expense in connection with this college, compared with the small results. Even if for a moment we lose sight of the fact that the graduates do not pursue a military calling in connection with our own militia, and for the moment giving the college credit for all its educational work as if it was properly within its scope, there stands before us in plain figures this state of affairs, that we are now educating 54 men this year at a cost to the country of $70,000, or thereabouts. As I gave the figures last year, I can repeat them, they have not materially changed since. There have been only 11 graduates of this college received into the permanent force since the establishment of the college, at a cost in all these years of over $1,000,000. It amounts to this, that for the 11 graduates of this college that we appoint to positions in connection with the permanent corps, the country has been obliged to pay for the general education of each one of these men, no less a sum than $91,000. Now, in addition to the loss of this money, it has another injurious effect upon the very system we are desirous of benefiting, the militia system. We are annually granting for the maintenance of our militia a sum of money in the vicinity of a million and a half-this year very much reduced. But I will take the year 1892-93, as I find it in the Auditor General's Report, and the reason I refer to it is because I find the expenditure is classified there in a way that makes it more easy for one to discuss the details of the expenditure, and as there has not been yet any material change from these figures, the quotation I make fairly illustrates the state of affairs to-day, although we are promised a change. I find that we are promised a change. the expenditure for 1892-93 for militia, amounts in all to $1,419.000, there was expended on the military college and the permanent corps, artillery, cavalry and infantry schools, $538,000; in other words over one-third of the whole grant for the militia was eaten up by this college and these schools. How much then goes for the encouragement of men in the rural districts and in the cities, the volunteers and others connected with the force? There is a feeling throughout the country that the men are not getting fair-play, that the bulk of the grant which the people, with more or less cheerfalness, have been paying, is not doing the best good, is not reaching the men for whom it is intended. Since we had the debate in this House a few weeks ago, I have come across several military men connected with our service, and I have yet to find the first man from amongst the officers or men, who does not indorse the attitude of those gentlemen in this House who have pointed out, as was pointed out here a short. time ago, that the present system of training officers for the militia through the agency of these permanent schools, is against the best interests of the militia. Now, my hon, friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) referred to some of the expenditures connected with the college. I would call your attention to this fact. Last year I brought to the attention of the House the numerical strength of the staff of the college, and the figures I then gave were that in order to qualify 58 students. there were then on the staff 18 subordinates. or servants, and 15 superior officers, in all, a staff of 33, consisting of the commandant, professors and others, in connection with the education of 58 men. Sir, I think the House had a right, when these figures were brought before us last year, at least not to have an intensification of that unfair state of things; and yet on examination of the Auditor General's Report for the last fiscal year, I find that although the number of students; has fallen from 58 to 54, the number of the staff and others at that college has increased from 33 to 42. I find that according to the last report of the Auditor General there were, at the date of that report, 25 subordinate officers, and 17 superior officers, a total of 42 in connection with the education of 54 men. I am sure the Minister will agree; with me that the mention of these figures is quite sufficient comment. Now. I am not going to hold the Minister responsible for the expenditure, that would be unfair, as he ing educated for a soldier cannot stand the has only recently come into the department. But I will ask him, how can be justify advertising this college in 76 papers of this Dominion, at a cost of hundreds and hundreds of dollars? In conclusion, I would ask the hon, gentleman himself to compare the educational work done by this institution with that done by the largest educational institution we have in Canada, I refer to the University of Toronto. The hon. gentleman is aware that there are hundreds of students receiving their training at that institu-tion in many faculties. I will not venture to say the number for fear of making a mistake, but it is sufficient for me to say that they probably exceed one thousand by two or three hundred. And yet the cost to the country of the maintenance of that institution does not exceed the cost to the country of the maintenance of the Kingston Military College. That I think is in itself a sufficient ture going on at Kingston. When I say it dose not exceed to the country, of course, I do not wish to mislead the committee. The maintenance of the University of Toronto does not depend solely on the public revenue, but is supplemented to a considerable extent by the fees of the students. same remark applies to the Kingston military college, and even to a greater extent, because the fees at Kingston are, per capita. very much greater than those at the university at Toronto. I do not wish to be held to figures, for I have not them in my mind very accurately, but I am within the mark when I say that not $70,000 of the public money per annum is paid towards the mainteance of the university in all the work it accomplishes: yet that amount is expended in the education of fifty-four men at Kingston, very nearly all of whom leave the militia service when they graduate.

Mr. DICKEY. I think it is only fair to the committee, and to myself that I should say a few words about this matter, although the committee will understand that, personally I cannot be expected to have very much knowledge of the details. The course which the hon, member for West Toronta taken is one that is somewhat unusual. He has made a personal attack upon the commandant of the Royal Military College, and invited the committee to censure him, and declare him to be an officer not fit to govern the Royal Military College on the statements he has made before the committee, which the commandant has had no opportunity of answering. Let us see what the hon, gentleman said. In the first place. he said there was trouble with respect to hazing. I know nothing whatever about the details of the matter. I believe that it was very much exaggerated, and while not in the slightest degree desiring to lend any countenance to a laxity of discipline in the college, or endorsing any hazing, must say that, personally, if a young man who is behazing that well-bred Canadian youths will put him through he had better find out sooner rather than later that he has missed his avocation. I have been through a Canadian college, and suffered the usual amount of hazing, and I take it that in college students, as a rule, as I know them, there is a very small percentage who are vicious, or inclined to do anything cruel or brutal in regard to hazing. The students themselves unanimously repudiate anything like brutality or cruelty in connection with this matter, and though you may say they are interested witnesses, it is also due to them to say they are young Canadian gentlemen, trained in a high standard of morality and perfectly willing, so far as you can judge from their bearing, to take the responsibility for anything they may do, and they made these statements when all chance of punishment in connection with the act was over. Even condemnation of the extent of the expendi- supposing it to be true, surely the hon. gentleman would not hold the commandant liable to discharge because of one act of hazing in the college. The hon, gentleman be made in that regard. The third spoke of raffles having been held. His cause which they mentioned was to statement is the first intimation I ever had me, perhaps, the most important of all. of that, and it is a fair illustration of this way of trying a man. Here is the statement n:ade in the committee, not known to me before, and of which I have not had the slightest intimation, still, the Government is asked to act on that and strike out the salary ed to act on that and strike out the salary subjects for the matriculation examination of this officer. The commandant of the for the Royal Military College are peculiar Royal Military College is not appointed for to the college itself. Where all the other The Order in five years or seven years. Council appointing him does not limit his term in that way. There is only one point that I was able to find in the hon, gentleman's statement which was a material one. and one that required consideration at the hands of the Government, and it was the smaliness of the number of students now attending the college. There is no doubt that this is a very striking fact. struck me immediately I came to look into the affairs of the college. I do not wish to repeat private conversation, but on my recent visit to the military college at Kingston. I took pains to inquire into that matter personally, from the very best possible sources, not. I need scarcely say, from the commandant himself or any of the staff, but from what I considered the very best possible sources, and I did not find the opinion of the men with whom I talked to agree with that of the hon, member for West Toronto. There was three causes-and I will! be perfectly frank with the committeestated by those gentlemen to whom I talked, for the falling off in number. The first clause was that the advertising was not done judiciously, that the money spent on advertising might be spent more profitably. and that even more might be spent. It was stated that there is some idea in the country that the students at the Royal Military College are only taking a course of study such as the long and short courses taken by officers to qualify for the militia, and that the college is not known as an institution of learning, except where the graduates of it go out. It was pointed out very clearly that the graduates, or, at all events, a very large percentage of them, come from a few centres, from Halifax, St. John, Fredericton, Quebec. Montreal and Toronto, and Kingston itself, and that the people in the country whose sons might probably go there, really did not know the standard of education given. Another reason they gave was an increase in the fees. It is to be noted, from the figures read by the hon, member for North York, that the decrease in the attendance of the college occurred almost contemporaneously with the increase of the fees. I am not expressing any opinion as to whether the fees are too large or too small. I think any Minister who tries to make the college a success as regards numbers will take the fees into consideration almost first of all. The fees are very high

It is a very simple thing, but it seems to me that it would account in a great degree for the smallness of the attendance. It is a matter which is easily remedied and which I have given orders to have remedied. The educational institutions of the country will have a book of the Aeneid as part of the examination in classics, the Royal Military College will give a book of the Georgics, and se on with the other classical branches. The result is that a boy, in order to enter the military college must make up his mind to it two or three years before so as to take that special course in classics. The obvious remedy is to have the classics of the Royal Military College the same as the other educational institutions, such as the Toronto University, so that a young man may take his course up to the time of his matriculation, and then make up his mind to enter the military college instead of having to do so a few years before. That seems to me a matter of really very great importance in this connection I do not think any member of the House should say anything against the education given in the college, unless he has very fully informed himself upon the subject. I would refer to the report of the Major General commanding the military college and read what he says about the work done there. He says:

The value of the technical military training given at the Royal Military College has been thus proved to be of a character which, in the event of any serious emergency, would be of inestimable value to the Dominion. The practical nature of the general educational training has been so frequently enlarged upon by the commandant that it needs no more than a word of admiration from me. I would, however, draw attention to the great advantge that would accrue to the service were a larger number of graduates of the Royal Military College appointed to the permanent force of Canada.

That is a complaint that has been made here to-night.

The want of early military technical training is a deficiency which cannot easily be remedied. A knowledge of drill alone does not make a man an officer, and the scientific knowledge of his profession which is essential to an officer of the present day, cannot be attained unless his elucational acquirements are of a suitable character.

I need only appeal to the positions which our young men who have gone from the college to the Imperial service have taken wherever they went. Of all the young men who have gone into the Imperial service from the college there is not one who has failed as to ability, as to the standard of his technical training, or as to his moral character. The graduates have been invariably as successful as we would expect Canadian young men to be. It is said that it is not a military school. I can assure the committee that it is essentially a military Although there are branches of study taught there which are essential in other walks of life, yet the college itself is essentially a military one. I would mention one fact to the committee to prove that. Every man in that college has to drill, one. two. or three hours, according to his year, every day of his life. He is a soldier from the time he enters until he leaves. other day in the Royal Military College I came to the chemical laboratory, a magnificently fitted up laboratory, and I said to the commandant: Chemistry is not a military matter, why do you teach it in a place like this? He said: On the contrary, it is absolutely necessary. The science of explesives now is such that no military officer of high class would have a complete education unless he were familiar with their chemical nature. It is the same with drawing and other such branches. Every branch of education there practically bears on the military training. Now, the hon, gentleman from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), and others have spoken of doing away with this college. It has been said, because our young men go into the Imperial service, that we are paying for the training of men for that service. Well, if we did so, it would be a very small contribution indeed towards the magnificent defence that the Imperial troops furnish us! at all times. But it is far more than that. Hon, gentlemen realize that there is to-day no legal tie between this country and England, no tie that could not be snapped in a moment if Canada wished to snap it. And every man who is thoughtful, every man who is watching the signs of the times, sees that there is a web being woven between this country and England, in a way that we had never thought of. It is a line of ties without direct intention, but which are binding this country to England more and more ciosely. One of the most important of these ties is to be found in the fact that we send these young men to the Imperial service to show what kind of stuff Canadians are made of, and to present the cause of Canada in every mess-room and in every barracks that they enter. If we have 77 men in the Imperial service we know that Canada has 77 firm friends in the British army; some of them pretty high up, and perhaps they render as effectual service as politicians, although they do it in a different way. I regret every graduate of our military college who goes to the United States. I begrudge him to that country, or to any other country outside the motherland. But every graduate that goes to the Imperial service or to any other colony becomes one more tie to bind the Empire together. Although it would be better to employ him in this country, still if he leaves us, I do not regret that he joins the Imperial army. The hon. gentleman from North York (Mr. Mulock) made a good many statements about the details of expenditure. I am not able to deal with that phase of the question. The hon. gentleman is, I think, a little mistaken about the expenses of the Toronto University. Although from his official connection with that institution, I suppose I ought to accept his authority, yet I fancy that Torocto University spends a much larger sum for its graduates annually, than he supposed. It is not fair, for instance, to charge against the eight graduates of the present year, as has been done, the $70,000 for the whole college staff and expenses, and to say that they cost us $8,000 a piece. The fact is, that we could provide there for twenty-four men each year in each class. As a matter of fact, in 1880, when this class came in, which was shortly after the rise in the fee, only eleven were in the class. That cannot be attributed to the management of General Cameron, because he had then only been there. I think, two years; and two years afterwards a class of twenty-four came in. Of the eleven who came in that year eight have graduated this year. The record of these young men shows that the first three of them made higher marks than had been made before in the history of the college, with one exception, and the whole class has maintained a standard equal to to that of men from the Royal Military College, who hold commissions in the Imperial service. having graduated in years past. So that we have gained greatly in efficiency if we have lost in number, which I, of course, very much regret. I do not intend to discuss this matter further than to say that if there is any blame connected with the administration of the college. I wonder that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison) did not direct attention to the board of visitors, who should visit this college every year, and inquire into matters such as he has brought up, and who would be in a position to sit in judgment on the commandant in a much fairer way than could be done by a committee of this House in the course of a debate like this. That board has not visited the college for years past. It is my intention, however, if I continue to administer the department, to reorganize the board of visitors. I think it only fair that the graduates of the Royal Military College should be represented on the board of visitors by a man who will be in close touch with the graduates, and who could lay their views before the board. I can also assure the hon. member for West Toronto that this board of visitors, when it is re-constituted, will certainly visit the college; and if he or anybody else has any charge to make against the commandant, those charges will be investigated either by that machinery or by some other. I am not here to defend General Cameron. If he is found to be unworthy of the position he occupies, the Government will at once exercise the right they have of dispensing with his services, without any notice whatever. But I appeal to my hon. friend to put himself in General Cameron's place and to say whether he thinks it is fair to get up in the House, without evidence. necessarily without being able to prove anything, and without any opportunity being offered for defence, and ask this committee to strike out the salary of the head of an educational institution which the hon, gentleman himself admits has done fine work in this country; because, to amend the vote in the direction which the hon, gentleman proposes, would certainly be the ruin of the college for a year, until more money could be furnished. On the general question of the militia force. I think it is too late to make any statement. The only thing I would wish to say is this, that I feel that there is a good deal to be said in favour of the view advocated on the other side of the House, that the training and drill of the militia force is the whole essence of the maintenance of our militia force. It is what I consider the most important feature in the whole of our militia service; and so long as I administer the department. I shall consider the vote that is put in my hands as Minister of Militia to be held in trust for the rural and city corps of the Dominion, and that whatever is spent upon the permanent corps and upon the other branches of the service, is spent there only with the view of making the general militia of the country more efficient. I say that simply to acknowledge at once that that is the crux of the whole position. If Parliament exercises its past generosity with regard to the militia force, though I may possibly have to ask for a little more. I do not see why, with a reduction of the permanent corps and some other slight reorganization, the command of the statute should not be obeyed, and the whole militia force of Canada be drilled every year. I do not want to infringe upon the annual passage of the Mutiny Act, as they do in England, and establish a regular army here; but I would like to see the drilling of the militia of Canada accepted as an annual obligation that had to be provided for by the country, no matter what other economies had to be made. Whether that is possible or not is a matter for future consideration. I believe the larger proportion of the militia force could be drilled by making some sacrifices in the permanent corps and in other directions. I have here some answers to the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) about the list of properties about which he asked me the other night; but as he is out of the Chamber at present, I suppose it is not worth while to go into them. I also wish to say to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), that I have inquired into the case of Lieut.-Colonel Lazier, about which he spoke the other day; and it gives me great pleasure to read to him, so that it may go on "Hansard," and be made public, the statement of my predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Patterson, who, having considered the matter, came to this decision:

Memo. re case of S. S. Lazier, late of 15th Battalion.

Having carefully gone over the evidence laid before the board of inquiry in this case, I find that the charges are not sustained. Rescind general order of 2nd June, 1894, dispensing with Lieut.-('ol. Lazier's services, and substitute therefor one allowing him to retire with rank.

(Signed) J. C. PATTERSON, Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the date of that?

Mr. DICKEY. It is not dated. The General Order will show the date. I do that simply in compliance with the hon, gentleman's request, in order that it might be made public that the department had entirely exonerated Colonel Lazier of the charges that were made against him. I hope, if the hon, member for West Toronto insists on dividing the committee on this item, that the committee will refuse to accept his amendment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is altogether too late to enter into a disquisition on militia matters in general; but I want to call the attention of the committee, and especially the attention of the Minister of Militia himself, to the undoubted fact, which he can verify if he chooses, that the military college at the present time is not maintaining anything like the high standard which it maintained a few years ago. I am very sorry indeed to differ entirely from the Minister and his authorities on that subject: but I speak with knowledge, after having consulted men who are at the as well qualified very least quite to offer an opinion upon it as the Minister of Militia can possibly be. here on my responsibility, that it is a known fact-right well known to the old of the college and right well graduates known, if the hon, gentleman chooses to consult them, to many officers in Canada and in the British service to-day, that the college is not maintaining anything like the high standard which it attained a few years ago. I want the hon. Minister to understand that distinctly. I make that statement, on my responsibility, as one of those originally concerned in founding the institution, and who takes a great interest in it. I further say that there is no doubt whatever a firstclass mistake was made when an officer on the retired list was put in command of the college. I do not want to say a word against Major General Cameron in his personal capacity, but it was a most unfortunate and ill-advised act when an officer who ceased to be actively concerned in management of any military force was put in the service, who has not retired, but is looking forward to active employment, and who has a distinct personal interest in keeping himself in touch with all the latest military improvements and advance in military science. That no retired officer can by any possibility do. It is not done at this moment, and men who are in active service to-day, graduates of that college, are perfectly aware of the facts which I have stated. The college is not maintaining and will not maintain its high reputation until you obtain, as commandant an officer in active service with a future before him. That is absolutely essential if you are going to do any real good, and the longer the Government delay to recognize it, the longer they maintain any gentleman-I do not care what his qualifications may be in other respects,-in command of that college after he has ceased to be a member of the Imperial army in active service, the more surely will they contribute to the ultimate downfall of the college.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon, gentleman knows that the teaching staff of the college is young. The charge is made that it is too young, too modern. The hon, gentleman knows perfectly well that the commandant. is not, as such, one of the teaching staff, and he also must admit that the teaching staff itself is young and fully up to date It is unpleasant as regards acquirements. to mention names, but he knows the officers there are highly efficient in every class of their work. The last charge to make against the institution would be that it is not up to date in military matters. The question of Major General Cameron being a retired officer cannot affect the matter very materially. I do not see why there should be any difference here from what there is in England. The commandant of Sandhurst is a retired officer. I believe. It is General Hewitt who was very successful in the military college in Canada, and obtained his position. I believe, at Sandhurst on that account, so that I do not think that the fact that General Cameron is not up to the standard of age should affect the question at all. The hon, gentleman is the only one I have heard find fault with General Cameron's educational acquirements.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I am the first, then your information must be of a most desultory description.

Mr. DICKEY. He has always been admitted to be a thoroughly educated man in every branch of military science, according to the information I have. I have also not come in contact with any gentlemen vibo say that the standard of education in the college is falling off. I never heard that institution of that kind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

in command. If you are going to keep the statement until the hon, gentleman made it. college up to anything like the standard it. The class that went out this year has made has maintained until recently, you must have the finest record of any class that ever went an officer in command who has a live interest out, beyond all comparison. The young men, in physique and everything else, were of the best possible character, and their education is justified by the marks they have made, so that I do not see how the non. gentleman can come to the conclusion that the standard is falling off.

TO ME THE MINISTER COLUMN TO A STATE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PR

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I make the statement with full knowledge and take responsibility of it; and if the non. gentleman chooses to prosecute his inquiries, he will find that the statement I have made will be sustained by numerous other parties. It is a most disagreeable thing to find fault with any particular officer connected with the college, but I repeat most distinctly and emphatically that you cannot maintain a high standard of efficiency unless the officer in charge be himself a man at least equal in scientific attainments to the officers who are under him, and that I think, with all possible respect to his personal character, General Cameron is not and never was.

Mr. DENISON. I think the hon. Minister stated a moment ago that General Hewitt was a retired officer. I think he is mistaken in that, because I know General Hewitt was in command as late as 1893, and I believe he is still in command.

Mr. DICKEY. I may be mistaken.

Mr. DENISON. The hon. Minister spoke of my being able to make some charges. do not think it is necessary for me to make any charges. The ground I take is that the commandant has been there nearly seven years, and it is time we should have a change. If I wanted anything more than that, the statement of Mr. Plummer, a townsman of my own would be quite sufficient justification to me. Young Plummer's hazing, no doubt, will leave more or less a slur upon him all through life, and that was brought on no doubt by not having proper discipline in the college. There is an old saying that if you have a good colonel, you have a good regiment, and if you have a bad colonel, you have a bad regiment. If you have a good commandant, you will have a good college. The only way to improve the college is to have a good commandant. I want to effect that object, and I took this means, when I saw no other way of doing it. If this motion carries we will require a new commandant. Otherwise, from the statement of the Minister, we will have the present commandant continued for life. That is the real reason why I take this course. I have nothing against the college, but, on the contrary, am a firm believer in it and wish it to succeed; but from what I have seen of the commandant he has not the necessary tact and discretion to manage an

Mr. HUGHES. What is the length of his term of office.

Mr. MULOCK. At will.

Mr. HUGHES. Then it is pretty near time that we should look around for a new com-I agree with many of the remarks that fell from the Minister of Militia, but I certainly do not agree with his remarks on the subject of hazing. It is well known that the incident that has been referred to by the hon, member from West-Toronto (Mr. Denison) is one which is causing a great deal of discredit to the management of the college. In the old days, when my hon, friend passed through the university of Toronto, his hazing probably consisted in being introduced to the town pump. the cellars. march down nr. he is not posted in the manner in which hazing is conducted in some of the institutions at the present time, which would be a discredit to the undergraduates of any university even in Timbuctoo. I was very sorry to hear the hon. Minister throw out the remarks he did on the subject of hazing, because they will be taken up, not only in the Royal Military College, but in other educational establishments throughout Canada. and the result will be that the faculties of these institutions will have very great trouble in keeping the boys in line. I would suggest to the hon. Minister a few points in connection with the examinations. We have throughout the length and breadth of every province, colleges, high schools, collegiate institutes, and similar institutions. where examinations are held. The examinations of these institutions are now almost entirely uniform throughout Ontario. and they correspond very well in other provinces. Why not accept the matriculation or other examination of any of these colleges or schools, as the entrance qualification to our military college. It would certainly be one of the best advertisements this military college could get. The fees should be reduced, and if these other examinations were accepted, it would solve the questions of classics, and everything else. I do not want to enter upon a full discussion of this subject at this late hour, but I want to say that there is altogether too much stress laid upon the fact that these young men go into foreign countries. Where are the into foreign countries. Wh graduates of our universities? They are scattered throughout the world, wherever they can find fitting and congenial employment, or make more money for themselves. Go down to the railways in Brazil, or the American republics, and as I have been informed by gentlemen who have visited those countries, there is scarce ly a road on which you will not find young motion.

These young men are mak-mandant being had in the course of the year. ing their mark in the world. So far as concerns the men who have gone from this college to the British army, they have cortainly had everything favourable thrown in their way that could possibly be expected. I agree that the men who go to the British army are doing Canada a great service. In regard to placing these officers in the permanent corps, I would not endorse the idea that all the positions in the permanent corps should be given to these graduates. The young men who come from this college are not any further ahead, relatively, than those who come from our universities. They should take their places as citizens, and join our militia corps. At the present time, there is a spirit abroad among some of these graduates. I can tell the Minister of Militia, they are a little above becoming attached to our That is a spirit we do volunteer corps. not want to see increase, and it shall not be encouraged so far as I am concerned. These young men are drilled, as the hon. Minister says, but as for this fitting them to become officers or instructors in corps. it is not to be compared with the practical instruction they receive in going through one of the schools, bad as they are, in connection with the permanent corps. If a lad were obliged to go through one of our military schools before going to the Royal Military College, he would be much better fitted to become an officer in a volunteer corps.

> Mr. O'BRIEN. I wish to express in a word my concurrence with what the hon. Minister has said. The active corps throughout the country and those who take an interest in them will be glad to know that the hon. Minister has taken so correct a view with regard to the expenditure. I am glad the hen, gentleman is at the head of the department, for he seems willing to learn something from the experience of others, and to take the opinion of those best qualified to give opinions with regard to the practical working of the force. His determination that the expenditure shall be upon the essentials, and not upon the accessories, will meet with general approval. Hitherto, the opposite has been the rule, the expenditures being upon the accessories, while the really essential features have been neglected. With regard to the military college, I do not profess to have sufficient knowledge of the subject to be able to form an opinion upon matters of detail. However, I do not for a moment go the length of the resolu-If the hon, member had moved for a reduction in the salary that would have answered the purpose. But the motion has called attention to the subject, and there has been a very full debate upon it, and I think the hon. gentleman would do well to rest satisfied with this result, and withdraw the

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand that the term of engagement of the present commandant expires this year. I would like to know from the hon. Minister, in the face of the discussion that is now taking place, whether it is the intention of the Government to continue General Cameron in his present position or not. I think we should have that announcement.

Mr. DICKEY. I stated before, Mr. Chairman, that any charges against General Cameron would be investigated. The board of visitors will visit the institution during the coming year, and will investigate as to all that has been said in this debate, and will report to the Government. The Government, holding General Cameron as at their disposal at any time, would not hestate to deal with him if he was found inefficient or if his retention was found to be against the best interests of the college.

MULOCK. In regard action of the Minister of Militia in placing upon record the minute of his predecessor regarding the finding in respect to the charges against Lieutenant-Colonel Lazier, and his reinstatement, wish to make my acknowledgments. The Minister has done only what was due to Lieutenant-Colonel Lazier. But, at the same time. I thank him for his prompt action in the premises. But now, I may call the attention of the Minister and the committee to what has occurred to see whether everything in connection with that incident has What are the facts? concluded. Lieutenant-Colonel Lazier was summarily dismissed from the service on charges made by his superior officer the Deputy Adjutant General. Lieutenant-Colonel Lazier made a statement to the Government that there was malice in the charges made against him and demanded investian gation. On the floor of this House on his behalf certain members, myself among them, demanded an investigation. Up to that time no charges had been made, and Col. Lazier did not know for what he had been dismissed; and from a statement I have received from him during this session, he was not furnished with that information until the evening before the commencement of the inquiry. It appeared to me at the time a most cruel and high-handed procedure, that an officer of the Canadian militia who had spent 20 years in connection with the battalion, and large sums of money, and had devoted a great deal of time to the service, should have been treated in that cruel way, and held up to this country for a time as unworthy of wearing Her Majesty's uniform. No more cruel treatment could have been administered to a loyal officer in the force. He must have been at least for a year before the public as an officer unworthy to be in the militia force of Canada. Now, an investigation has taken place, the charges are held to be baseless, and he is reinstated with honour to his former position. Is the officer, the Deputy Adjutant-General, made these charges, which were unsustained, but which, for the time being, misled the Minister of Militia, to be allowed to continue to occupy his position, and perhaps treat others in the same way, or is there going to be an investigation into his conduct? The fact that you have found those charges to be foundationless now, I think, casts that duty upon the department, nothing less than that will do complete justice. One more word with regard to the Military College. I think the Minister of Militia will find himself compelled to reduce the cost of this college. Either that must take place or however well inclined this House may be towards it, the college will go. The radical mistake which has been made in the past in connection with the educational system of that college, has been that you are taking young men and imparting to them a portion of their education at the exepnse of the Deminion, which could be better acquired at the various educational institutions properly established for that purpose. For example, why should we have to train these young men in languages, chemistry, and in mathematics, except that portion of mathematics that has to do with the military calling, fortifications, engineering, &c., and in these branches of learning that the student can acquire in 20 places in this country? And inasmuch as this college is situated in Kingston, with a university standing in the vicinity, if you want the two classes of education to go on pari passu, you ought to be able to utilize Queen's University, and in that way save a large portion of needless expense. If the Minister will turn up the debates that took place when this college was established, he will find that the then Premier, or the Minister of Militia, thought it would only involve the appointment of two or three professors, at a total cost to the country of about $8,000 a year. It was not in contemplation that you should take young men and take complete charge of their education in matters, lay as well as technical.

Mr. DICKEY. In regard to Col. Lazier's case, I will say that I only saw the file of papers to-day, it is of tremendous size, and I have not been able to go into it at all. I observe, however, that there were two investigations given to him, one after the other, and both under the direction of General Herbert. I may say, however, that I do not think that the preferring of a charge carries with it any necessary imputation of wrong-doing on the part of the superior officer. But, of course, I am prepared to consider what ought to be done in that respect.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to correct the Minister. The investigations were directed by the order of this House, and not by General Herbert, who again and again distinctly refused an investigation into the matter until the House took it up. Now, speaking of this interference from the department, those who visit the brigade camps this year will find each commanding officer supplied with a little petty detail of what he has to do from 6 o'clock in the morning until the sun sets at night, how he has to follow this section of squad drill, and that section. These instructions are supplied from headquarters at Ottawa, and I wonder that any take! self-respecting commandant would charge of a camp after having such a thing issued to him from Ottawa. If that officer is not fit to command a camp, he should not be there, and these matters should not be issued to him by some second-class clerk down in the department at Ottawa, instructing officers commanding these camps how they are to proceed. I have several times drawn the attention of the department to it in writing, and I merely put my protest on record again, hoping that in the future this interference by headquarters' clerks here in Ottawa shall be stopped.

Mr. HUGHES. How is the money expended? Are these schools under clerical control?

Mr. DALY. All the schools in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the hon, gentleman taken any steps to put these Indian schools throughout the Dominion under national control?

Mr. DALY. No.

Mr. HUGHES. Then it is high time this was done.

New Brunswick-Salaries, &c..... $5,600

Mr. FLINT. Has any correspondence taken place with the agent at Yarmouth with regard to the South Shore Railway Company taking land in the Indian reserve of Yarmouth County, and has the Dominion Government received any compensation?

Mr. DALY. I cannot recollect any correspondence, but if land is required for railway purposes, it must be acquired in the usual way under the Railway Act.

Mr. FLINT. It is stated by parties who profess to know that the company being in a hurry to continue operations, obtained some sort of permission by telegraph, either from the Government or its agent, to go through the reserve. It is further stated that no steps in regard of expropriation proceedings have been taken, that the Government has received no compensation for the land, and also that the agent of the Government was treated by the contractors with considerable disrespect, he being ordered off the land. I should suppose if there was any dispute or difficulty there should be some correspondence, and if any has taken place, I will bring the matter again to the hon. gentleman's attention in order that he may present it to the House.

Mr. DALY. I shall be very glad to obtain the information for the hon, gentleman.

Manitoba and North-west Territories.... $700,510

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In regard to implements and tools, I observe a very large reduction, and which appears to me to be an inexpedient reduction, the vote being reduced from $9,483 to $3,667. Under what circumstances is this reduction made?

Mr. DALY. It appears that about $2,000 of the Estimates of last year was for repairs to implements. These are expected to be less during the ensuing year. The amount also covered axes and supplies, such as paint, and it is intended to reduce this expenditure so as to bring the vote within the amount asked. We are not lessening the amount of implements that are furnished to the Indians under treaty. It is only in connection with the tools and harness that we make the reduction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should imagine that that was about the last item on which it was desirable to economize.

Mr. DALY. We can effect the economy without lessening the efficiency.

Mr. McMULLEN. If I understood the suggestion of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) it was that one of those items should be reserved, and on that item we can discuss the whole question of Indian affairs.

Mr. DALY. Yes.

CUSTOMS OFFICERS-FORT ERIE, ONT.

Mr. LOWELL asked, 1. How many landing-waiters or customs officers are employed

Mr. WALLACE. In reply to the hon. gentleman I beg to say: 1. There are twelve customs officers at Fort Erie, including the collector. The name of each, salary, date of appointment, and duties. I find to be as follows:—E. W. Brookfield, collector, appointed 1st May, 1895, salary $1,400 per annum. J. T. Johnson, preventive officer, appointed 18th June, 1880, salary $600 per annum. Thos. Schofield, preventive officer, appointed 1st June, 1890, salary $600. C. W. Lewis, clerk and landing-waiter, appointed 1st December, 1875, salary $700. In School 1st December, 1875, salary $700. lary $700. J. Schryer, landing-waiter, appointed 28th February, 1874, salary $600. T. L. Newbigging, landing-waiter, appointed 27th February, 1874, salary $600. W. T. House, landing-waiter and clerk, appointed 1st June, 1877, salary $600. O. F. Wilkins, landing-waiter and clerk, appointed 1st September, 1884, salary $600. C. Young, tidewaiter, appointed 18th May, 1892, salary $500. R. White, preventive officer, appointed 27th August, 1893, salary $1.50 per day. J. Noble, preventive officer, transferred te this port on 20th February, 1895, salary $600 per annum. Also there are certain customs officers stationed temporarily at summer resorts adjacent to Fort Erie.

AMERICAN MILK CANS.

Mr. LOWELL asked, Whether the Government intend to admit free of duty American-made milk cans brought into Canada for the purpose of being filled with milk to be exported to the United States?

Mr. WALLACE. The law does not admit American-made milk cans being brought into Canada without paying duty.

PIER AT BAIE ST. PAUL.

Mr. CASEY asked, Who was the contractor for the building of the pier at Baie St. Paul, county of Charlevoix, and what was the amount of said contract? Was it let by tender, and if so, what were the names of the tenderers and amount of their tenders? Who furnished the materials for said pier? Have they been paid for, or if not, what are the arrears? What wages were paid to the workmen employed? Have they been paid, and why was their payment delayed?

Mr. OUIMET. In reply I beg to say: 1. Ludger Lemieux, $5,700. 2. Yes. Ludger Lemieux, $5,700; Geo. Lavoie, $6,680; Viau Lemieux, $5,100; Geo. Lavole, $0,080; viau Lachance, $6,950; Nap. Tremblay, $7,200; J. Paquet, T. Powers, and A. Lortie, $7,781; Heney & Smith, $7,997; E. Dussault, $8,222; Cimon & Gagnon, $8,400; Crain & Mix, $10,956; J. Bourque, $11,500. 3. The contractor has not furnished a list of the ing-waiters or customs officers are employed at Fort Eric, Ont.? 2. What are their names, and what are their respective salaries? 3. When were they appointed? 4. What is the nature of their duties?

Mr. WALLACE. In reply to the hon. delay was caused by the necessity of obtaining sworn declarations and of ascertaining that only claims for wages were being paid, as these claims are the only ones the department has a right to pay under the contract.

MAILS BETWEEN BAIE ST. PAUL AND CHICOUTIMI.

Mr. CASEY asked, Who are the contractors for carrying the mail between Baie St. Paul and Chicoutimi? What is the amount of the contract? What is the distance by land and by water? How many trips a week? Was the contract given by tender? The names and amounts of other tenderers and tenders?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 1. The conveyance of mails between St. Paul's Bay and Chicoutimi is under three contracts:—St. Paul's Bay and St. Urbain; Grande Baie and St. Urbain; and Chicoutimi and Grande Baie; the contractors being T. Tremblay, A. Fortin and P. Gagnon, respectively. 2. The amounts paid are: St. Paul's Bay and St. Urbain, $150 per annum; Grande Baie and St. Urbain, $1,137.94 per annum; Chicoutimi and Grande Baie, $348 per annum. 3. The distance is 85 miles by land; and 180 miles by the route followed by the steamers of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company. 4. Six trips per week are made over each of these routes. 5. The St. Paul's Bay and St. Urbain contract was let by tender. The Grande Baie and St. Urbain contract was a renewal of a prior contract. The Chicago and Contract The Chicago and C coutimi and Grande Baie contract was let tender. 6. The tenderers with the amount of tenders were as follows:-

DEEP WATER TERMINUS, HALIFAN.

Mr. FORBES asked, 1. What is the amount per cubic yard charged in each tender, giving names respectively, for excavation for foundation at the Deep Water Terminus, Halifax, including the tender of McManus LeBlanc and the rejected tenders? 2. What is the amount charged in each tender for cross walls and footing per cubic yard? 3. What is the amount charged in each tender per lineal foot for timber for foundation? 4. What is the amount charged in each tender per lineal yard for rubble masonry, the Government finding the stone, and what is the price for the same the contractor finding the stone?

Mr. HAGGART. 1. The prices per cubic yard for excavation made necessary to place timber under walls are as follows:-Jas. W. McDonald, Halifax, 29 cents; S. M. Brookfield, Halifax, 60 cents; Theophilus LeBlanc, Moncton, 35 cents. 2. Prices per cubic yard for stone rubble masonry in walls including excavation. Government finding stone, as follows: -Jas. W. McDonald, Halifax, $4.50; S. M. Brookfield, Halifax, $3.45; Theophilus LeBlanc, Moncton, $2.70. 3. Prices per 1.000 feet B.M. for labour, removing and laying timber and deals under walls in soft ground. timber and deals to be provided by the railway, as follows:—James W. McDonald, Halifax, $2.50; S. M. Brookfield, Halifax, $10; Moncton, $3.50. 4. Theophilus LeBlanc. Prices per cubic yard stone rubble masonry in walls including excavation, contractors providing all materials, as follows:-James W. McDonald, Halifax, $5.25; S. M. Brookfield, Halifax, $5.15; Theophilus LeBlanc, Moncton, $6.50.

SALE OF BINDER TWINE BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. FEATHERSTON asked, Is the Government selling binder twine at less than cost of manufacture, or did they intend doing so? If so, was it after that date that the Government received communication from the Patrons of Industry Cordage Establishment, Brantford, with a view to keeping prices up to the cost of production?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Government is not selling binder twine at less than the cost of manufacture, nor has it ever intended to do so.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. LAURIER. I would renew the question I put a few days ago to the leader of the House with regard to the business of the House. Is the hon, gentleman in a position to give any information as to the business and as to the measures we may expect?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not in a position to give the hon, gentleman any further information to-day. I hope I shall be in a position to do so to-morrow afternoon.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the Minister if he can give me any assurance that the returns I asked for so long ago will be brought down. About a fortnight ago the hon, gentleman told me that in ten days he thought they would be before the House. I have been around the departments and I find very few, if any of them, have these returns ready. It seems to me there is no reason why they could not have been got ready if it was the intention of the Government to bring them down at all. Large numbers of returns that nobody seems to want, and that nobody seems to inquire for, have been brought down. But this return is one that all the British Columbia members wish particularly to have this session. I think that if the Government had done what they ought to have done, the returns would have been ready. Though there are perhaps difficulties in the way of getting out these items, still I think it should not be impossible to get them out.

Mr. FOSTER. In reply to my hon, friend, I beg to say to him now as I said to him before, that it is utterly impossible to get the return out any faster than it is being got out, and that it is impossible to produce a return that will be a complete reply to the order. The division of expenditures and revenues in some cases it is utterly impossible to make. It does not depend upon the Finance Department entirely; that part of the work has been put into the hands of a gentleman who is one of our best clerks and he has worked at it assiduously and has not want the information in great detail, These returns have been asked for to be brought down. from other departments. Some say they cannot furnish them at all, some that they can give them partially and others that they will put them through as rapidly as possible. I cannot do more than I have done.

Mr. McMULLEN. As to a number of returns for which I have got orders, I am sorry they are not brought down, particularly that regarding superannation, and that respecting moneys paid to members of Parliament. I notice that there have been about 120 orders given for returns, and I think about 60 returns have come down. So it will be seen that there are about 60 returns ordered that have not been brought down at all. Unquestionably the members: who have put notices on the paper and asked in connection with the Noble Bros. will be for these returns have an object in doing so. They want to get some particular item of information before the House, and it is only reasonable that this should be done. If the business of the session is going to be rushed through so rapidly as noth sides evidently desire, there must be a netter staff provided, in order to furnish the House with the information necessary to the proper carrying on of the public business. It is folly to ask for returns from week to week and have those returns postponed and not brought down until after the session closes. In my humble opinion the Opposition have been lax in not urging their right to have returns brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. I think no charge will lie against the Opposition as to inactivity in calling for returns. If they have called for 120 returns and if 60 have been brought down, I think the facts prove two things: first, that the Opposition have shown great industry in conjuring up subjects to ask returns about; and, second, that they have shown great persistency in urging the production of returns in answer to their demands. With regard to the superannuation return, I have no variation to the answer I have given on four separate occasions. If Parliament porogues within a few days I am afraid the hon. gentleman will not see his return this session. But it will be forwarded to his residence as soon as it is ready. With reference to the other one, I will make inquiry.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have asked for very few returns this session, but one covered information I wished particularly to getan abstract of the cargoes carried by the subsidized steamers from the maritime provinces to the West Indies. I wanted that particularly, because it was my intention to discuss the matter of subsidies before the session closed. The hon, gentleman intimated privately in a conversation across the House that if the whole return could not be given an abstract would be made.

been helped a part of the time by another and I would ask if that abstract is likely

Mr. FOSTER. I thought that had been brought down. Are you sure it has not?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have not seen it and I have watched for it very closely.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I want to thank the Government for the attention given to the orders passed for papers called I have been getting a great for by me. number of orders for nine years past, but I have never had a return yet.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend's reward will be all the greater by and by.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to inquire from the Government when the papers brought down?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Any papers that will be brought down under that order, I think, will be ready in as short a time as possible. Some of the papers cannot be brought down until the trial and investigation are completed.

Mr. MULOCK. I see the Secretary of State is in the House, and I would remind him that I have had very bad luck in getting my returns. I had a return ordered two years ago, and at the commencement of this session I reminded the new Secretary of State of the fault of his predecessor, and I received most excellent promises from him. But we are now very near the close of the session, and the return has not yet been produced.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may say that in order to expedite the hon, gentleman's return, I had it placed out of its order and put at the head of the list, and the clerks are now preparing it. I expected to have had it yesterday; I am sure I will have it to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. In replying to my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), I omitted to state that I gave orders yesterday to the clerk in my office to immediately prepare what he himself had tried to get from the other departments, and I would bring it down partially.

Mr. PRIOR. I did not mean to say that the Finance Department has not done its duty, but the other departments do not seem to be in any hurry.

THE TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Mr. FOSTER moved third reading of Bill (No. 126) respecting commercial treaties affecting Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that it is necessary to renew the discussion at length, but for myself I entirely I did dissent from the view expressed by the Govagainst the third reading.

Mr. EDGAR. I suppose this is the last day upon which this House would be requested to pass any legislation about the little French treaty; and while I do not propose to challenge a vote of the House on the third reading, I would like to say one or two words about the position in which I think this whole affair leaves Canada today. Now, the House will know, and the country remembers perfectly well, this treaty was closed by the ambassador extraordinary for Canada without instructions from this Government to close it. Not only that, but it is abundantly clear that that treaty was signed on behalf of Canada by Sir Charles Tupper, not only without instructions, but absolutely against and contrary to the instructions of this Government. I only need quote the language of the Minister last year on that point, because he told us, as to the most-favoured-nation clause of that treaty, that:

It was not the intention of the Government, as will be seen by a telegram which was sent to our commissioner in January, in which it was expressly stated that we agreed to the most-favoured nation treatment, so far as the articles named in the treaty are concerned. Our commissioner there, through error, or for reasons which he explained in his correspondence, signed the treaty with the clause in it as I have read, giving the most-favoured-nation treatment to France in all articles of our tariff.

Now, this treaty which we are taking the final steps to ratify and confirm to-day, was thus signed against the express instructions Then if you look at of this Government. it for a moment on its merits, it is unquestionably one-sided. As to this mostfavoured-nation treatment, it is promised to France in respect of all articles, and it only exacts it from France in respect of the small list of articles upon which Canada has reduced the duty. But what is this legislation that is asked for to-day? The treaty a year ago was ratified by this House as a treaty, and why on earth are we asked to legislate upon it again to-day? Why, Sir, we have been asked in the most peremptory manner by the Colonial Office to do so. A Bill was introduced early in this session which was intended to meet the case that had arisen, but that Bill was not satisfactory to the Downing Street authorities, and therefore they ordered this Government to pass this piece of cast-iron legislation which we are asked to read a third time to-day. The effect of this legislation is simply this, that we admit, by a solemn legislation of this Parliament, that we can never in the future make a reciprocity treaty with any country in the world on their We can never make a reciprocity terms. treaty with the United States on their terms, because the benefit of that treaty will not plained. So much for the blue-book. Then erment. I entirely dissent from the idea that only accrue to the country which we negowe are to be bound by the favoured-nation-tiate, but will be received for nothing, for clause, and I desire so to record my protest no consideration whatever to us, by about twenty other countries, by Great Britain and by all the colonies of the Empire. too. If we make a treaty with any country under the sun, we are bound, and we admit here for the first time, that we are bound by this legislation, to give these twenty other countries, with which Great Britain had entered into most-favoured-nation treaties. exactly the same benefits which we might have from any country that we negotiate with. What would be the result if that coudition of affairs remains? We will never be able to make a reciprocity treaty with any other country in the world. Assuming that this French treaty was a good treaty in itself, we get a little, and we give something. The question is whether they balance one another. One would suppose that was the question. That was the question when this treaty was first introduced to the attention of the House two years ago, that was the question when this treaty was ratified by the House one year ago, and it was not until this very Bill was introduced that we knew that we were doing something else, that we were bound to do something else before the treaty would come into force. the explanations were given in 1893 this arrangement was not understood by the Covernment, or, if it was understood by the Government, it was kept back from the House, and that would be worse, for I am sure they would much prefer having the implication of ignorance made against them than that of want of good faith. It was either one or the other. A blue-book was brought down to inform the House, in 1893, as to what the effect would be upon our customs revenue if this treaty were negotiated. And what did that show? It showed: first, the direct effect of any reduction upon our importations from France, and next it showed the indirect effect, so-called, upon our importations from other countries. That is to say, that if we lower the duty in favour of France, of course, we could not expect to import as much and obtain as much revenue from importations from other countries, because France would send us more, and that would be an indirect effect of the treaty on the trade with other coun-But to show that it was never in tries. the mind of the Government in bringing down these returns to the House that there should be any particular country in the world that was to share in that benefit given to France, I simply point to the fact that among the countries which were in that indirect list were Spain and the United States; and Great Britain has no mostfavoured-nation treaty with them, and, therefore, it could not have any relation however to our conceding those rights we gave to France to all those other nations. It did not suggest it, and it was not so ex-

Sir, it was quite clear what was his view then. But, curiously enough, he went in a little while to the other extreme. been pointing out the benefits of a reci- ed to France would be extended to procity treaty with the United States, we the nations entitled to the benefit of were taunted by hon, gentlemen opposite the most-favoured-nation clauses and to the that it would involve a discrimination in rest of the British dominions, and he favour of the United States, and the Fi-trusted the Dominion Government would nance Minister was horrified, at least, his give satisfactory assurances on this point party were horrified at the idea of discrimbefore issuing the proclamation. Would the British Govworld. I thought it was very extraordinary if the policy which had been suggested by the Opposition of the reciprocity treaty with the United States, in which, perhaps, we might discriminate in their favour in such a matter as agricultural implements, should be adopted by the Government, and they should propose to discriminate in favour of France in such a matter as the importation of wine; so I was a little anxious to find out whether that was a discrimination in favour of France or not. So I pressed the hon. Minister of Finance on that point. What did he say? In 1893 he said: "We propose to discriminate neither against Great Britain, nor the United States, Germany, Belgium, nor is it our present intention to discriminate against any other country in the world." That had nothing whatever to do with this question, and it gave us no information as to the intention of the Government to discriminate only against countries with which there was no most-favoured-nation clause, because the hon, gentleman expressly mentioned the United States, and "any other country in the world," and that did not give us any indication that he was going to exclude the United States, as he is doing to-day, and include those other coun-So that I say there was nothing to indicate that this was the position of affairs when the House, last session, was asked to ratify that treaty in terms. What happened this session? The Government introduced a Bill early in the session. What was the effect of the Bill? It was to give the Government power, by proclamation, to issue an order allowing the most-favourednation countries and Great Britian and the colonies to send their wines into Canada on the same terms as France, not doing it, but giving permission to the Government That was a Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) what modified admission on the part of this House of our liability to those most-favoured-nation clauses. That was done, evidently, on the direction of Downing Street, be-France alone. He did not even then speak cause in an abstract of the missing papers, which I take from the newspapers, and I suppose it is correct, we find that only last November—and this treaty was ratified by us in last July—Lord Ripon wired that the assent to the French treaty would be given only on the distinct understand-When we on this side of the House had ing that the reduction of duties grantwas proposed to be done in that respect in Government introduced, and I suppose whether that treaty would discriminate in Bill first presented to us this session. Was ernment trust the Canadian Government in that matter, and leave to them the option of issuing a proclamation if they chose? Would the British Government ratify the treaty and trust to the Canadian Government to carry out their part afterwards? Not at all. A most extraordinary refusal of confidence in the Canadian Government was manifested in the letter Lord Ripon wrote on the 4th April last to the Canadian Government, in which he said:

> While there is every confidence felt in the intentions of the Dominion Government, the Government of Great Britain would not feel justified in leaving anything open, and they are reluctantly compelled, therefore, to postpone the exchange of ratifications with France until legislation has been actually passed by the Dominion Parliament extending the benefit of the extensions to all nations entitled under treaty to the most-favourednation clause and to the rest of Her Majesty's dominions.

> Lord Ripon, in conclusion, states that the French Government have expressed some irritation at the delay which has already occurred, and expresses the hope that no time will be lost in obtaining the necessary legislation.

So, the Government of Canada consider it consistent with their dignity to accept that snub, and they withdraw the other Bill and bring in this piece of cast-iron legislation saying that for all time, as far as the Parliament of Canada can do, we are bound to that interpretation of the treaty. Sir, it is an interpretation which has not been accepted by the world heretofore, which is not accepted by the United States, which has not always been accepted by Great Britain, and has not been accepted by Canada before. I am sorry to see it accepted by Canada to-day. It is a most serious matter that we should be asked to do this. This acknowledgment of our rights is a very costly price to pay for the small benefits we might derive from our treaty with France. In dollars and cents even, the price is ruinous to us. By this we lose the pretty considerable revenue which we have been deriving from the importation of sparkling wines from Great Britain. I am not concerned to ascertain how on earth they come to manufacture champagne in Great Britain or whether it is from eider, or gooseberries, or what, but they do manufacture it and we import a great deal of it. It will now come under the reduced tariff that we have with France. The Cape Colony also will, I presume, send in their cheap wines as well as France, and we will have to make a reduction in their favour. When the delegates were here from the Cape last year, they looked around to see what they could export profitably to Canada so as to make a treaty of reciprocity, and their cheap wines were what they expected to negotiate about.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Apart from ostrich feathers.

Mr. EDGAR. Yes, apart from ostrich feathers. The Cape wines will now come in under the terms of the treaty with France, and we will get no benefit from the Cape in return. I contend that this concession has been too hastily made to Great Britain, by our Government. I am afraid it is on a par with the concessions this Government have been making to England on the copyright matter. They have been very brave in their words. They have taken sound Canadian grounds about our rights to selfgovernment in this particular, but they have done nothing more. They have allowed the thing to drag on for six years and we are now no nearer a settlement than ever. The Copyright Act of 1889, passed unanimously by this Parliament, and supported since then by addresses from this Parliament, has never been ratified or sanctioned by England. Although the Canadian Government has shown a proper spirit in their words, they have not done so in their deeds. We were a party to the Berne Convention, and there was a provision of the treaty that Great Britain on giving one year's notice could denounce that treaty on behalf of Canada. Five years ago an Address was unanimously passed by this House asking the Imperial Government to do that, but they have not done so, and this Government has failed to take further action. Then what about the Belgium and German treaties? These are a couple of countries with which England has a most-favoured-nation clause, and so we are bound to give them the full benefit of our treaty with France. What they have to sell to us will come in here at reduced rates, and we get no privilege in return. Why is that? It is not because we did not know the difficulty there; it is not because this House did not, several years ago, at the instance of the Government pass an Address affects the use of grapes will affect the price asking the British Government to denounce these treaties so far as Canada is concerned. The Government by this Bill now before us puts another yoke on our neck in these commercial matters. If this is the record of the first attempt that we have made to negotiate our own commercial treaties, then I hope it will be a long time before this Government, at any rate, has an opportunity to bind Canada in such a way again.

Mr. CASEY. The hon, member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has done good service in directing attention to the peculiar nature of the legislation now before us. This Bill might have passed with but little notice, being generally accepted as a mere implementing of our previous agreement for a reciprocity treaty with France, but my hon. friend has made it perfectly clear that this Bill makes the treaty in question not a reci-procity treaty with France alone, but a reciprocity treaty with practically half the world. Not only do we have to give these privileges to the long list of countries with which England has now treaties containing a favoured-nation clause, but we will have to extend them to other countries with which Great Britain may in future conclude treaties having a similar clause.

Mr. EDGAR. It is not a reciprocity treaty with them at all.

Mr. CASEY. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Edgar) very properly corrects me. It is not a reciprocity treaty with these other countries at all. To some extent we get reciprocal treatment from France, but in the numerous other cases we give these privileges without any return. We are pledging curselves to what we do not know in the way of privileges to foreign countries, and by this arrangement we are taking away from France the advantages she expected to derive.

was sprung upon the This as a treaty that would be beneficial to the French people in France, to the French people in Canada, and to all the people of Canada. But by this Bill we extend the same privileges to other nations, and where, lask, can the special benefit to France come in? What is there in this treaty to engage the special sympathies of any class in this country? Nothing. On the contrary, there is a good deal to engage the special antipathy of several classes of our community.

This Government profess to act upon a policy of protection to Canadian interests; they profess to protect not only manufactures, but agriculture, and all other inter-It was shown last ests in the country. year to the satisfaction of the House that there is a considerable interest in Canada which would be directly affected by this treaty-the interest concerned in the growing of grapes. I will not say merely the wine-making industry, because whatever of grapes for all purposes, and to many farmers in western Canada the price of grapes is a very important consideration.

But, Sir, that is not the worst of it. I do not wish to speak as the special advocate of the wine-makers; but in removing the protection, such as it was, which was given to the wine-makers and grape-growers by existing laws, we are removing taxation from just that class of imported goods which ought, in the minds of most of us. to bear the highest taxation. We are removing taxation from luxuries; and we shall have to make up for the taxation thus removed from luxuries by an increased tax on the necessaries of life. This very session we are putting a tax of a cent a pound on raw sugar, and completing arrangements for taking a tax of 30 per cent off cham-If this Government claims to be a protectionist Government, it is acting wildly in opposition to its claim. this treaty it has succeeded in doing three things in opposition to its declared principles: it has removed protection from a Canadian interest, it has removed taxation from luxuries and it has imposed taxation on necessaries. A more inconsequent system of taxation than that I can scarcely imagine.

Government are prepared not only adopt the principle of procity with France, but to grant superior advantages to nations which do not deal with us reciprocally, why can they not turn their minds to the great question of reciprocity with our neighbours across the line? If it is a fitting thing to give special privileges to Argentine, Austro-Hungary, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Muscat, Egypt, Montenegro, and various other places too numerous to mention, why could we not properly consider the question of reciprocity with the United States of America? In the latter case, there would be great advantages to be gained; in the other case, we are simply surrendering a certain amount of revenue without obtaining anything in return. And it must not be forgotten that a surrender of revenue in one direction means an increase of taxation in another, unless, of course, the economy in the general public expenditure, which we do not seem to see a gleam of, should supervene.

I do not for a moment suppose, as a matter of fact, that the Government have deliberately adopted this principle of the favourednation treatment towards so many nations which do not give it to us. I believe the true opinion of the Government was expressed in 1893, when they refused to ask the House to ratify this treaty, and, at the time, just before the session of 1893, when they instructed their representative not to But I believe the agree to its provisions. High Commissioner went on, regardless of instructions from here, and regardless of Canadian interests, with the intention of securing a treaty at any cost, for his own glorification—a treaty which might show that he was doing something for the large sums of money he draws from this country. I believe that he insisted in his usual dictatorial manner, on doing what he thought best, to a large extent; that the result of his labours was not pleasing to the Government here; and that they refused to ask the House to ratify the treaty in consequence.

Then, during last session. of the High fluence Commissioner, erted through the Colonial Office, or exerted directly upon the Government through some member of it, or by his own predominance over the minds of the Government, forced them to eat up their former declarations in regard to the treaty, and to ask the House to adopt what they admitted was not a desirable arrangement. This year they have gone further still. Finding that what they had done last session was not sufficient to please the Colonial Office, whose ear is possessed largely by the High Commissioner, they come down with the legislation now before us. The whole history of this treaty is a history of incompetence on the part of the Government, and of the undue predominance of the High Commissioner. Instead of the High Commissioner being the servant of the Government and of the people of Canada, it would seem that the Government is an appendage of the High Commissioner. It appears that that extremely expensive gentleman first led us where we did not want to go, and where he was told by his nominal superiors not to lead us; and it appears that the Government saw no way out of it but to follow his lead and submit to his dictation. We are prepared to allow that confession of the Government's incompetence to go on the statute-book. Last year we had a vote on this question, and I voted against the principle of the treaty: I voted that we were not bound in good faith by anything done up to that time to accept it. This year perhaps, the situation in that respect is changed. We may be bound in good faith by our legislation of last year to adopt this extra proposal which is needed to carry it out. All that appears to be open to us to do at present is to point out whither the previous action of the Government has led us—to point out the position of powerlessness in which they have landed us, and to call upon the people of the counery to mark and appropriately reward their conduct.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think hon, gentlemen will find that this Bill will assume a very much larger importance before the House, and in the estimation of the country, than it was supposed to possess when the hon. Minister first proposed it to this House for consideration. My hon, friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has shown very clearly that when the Government discussed this subject before, they did not suppose, nor did they lead the House to suppose, that all the consequences which are disclosed by this Bill were likely to follow from the ratification of the com-The more the mercial treaty with France. investigates this subject the more serious will they consider it to be. This goes a long way to destroy the commercial freedom and the commercial opportunities which this country may have before it in the future. Sir, if you look at this Bill, you will find it is a Bill to extend to other countries the rights which we have by treaty conceded to France. My hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) spoke of the treaty as a reciprocity treaty. It is not a reciprocity treaty, because we are giving and we are not receiving. We extend to every country to which this favoured-nation? clause would bind us, no matter what restrictions they put upon our commerce, the same privileges and rights that by this treaty are conceded to France. Now, this is a new doctrine. It is true that the Government of Great Britain has occasionally recognized the principle that if you adopt a commercial treaty with one country, the most-favoured-nation clause will carry it ada, under that arrangement, to the goods of into operation with other countries which half of Christendom in order that they may enjoy this clause; but that is not the doctrine which has been uniformly acted upon. It is true that in maintaining the right to send certain products into Cuba when Spain had made a treaty with the United States, that principle was recognized; but when Great Britain made the treaty with am ready to enter into favourable arrange-France, known as the Cobden treaty, and ments, in commercial matters, with the Spain insisted, under the most-favourednation clause, on sending her wines into with us, and we should in our turn be pre-England on the same terms. Great Britain demurred, and maintained that the special concessions made to France did not entitle Spain to like advantages. Now, I ask what is the object of the Government? Why are they ready to sacrifice, not merely the rights, but the commercial opportunities and the freedom of legislation of this country, in return for the paltry arrangements that have been made under this treaty with France? Why, Sir, to my mind, there is but one explanation. It is in order to impose upon this country, for all future time, restrictions which did not exist before. Why, we had a treaty of reciprocity with the United States which was in operation for eleven years. Did Great Britain insist, before that treaty was carried into operation, that we should concede to other nations, with the most-favoured-nation clause, the same rights as we conceded to the United States? No such demand was made; and I contend that the Government to-day are, by this arrangement, undertaking to tie the hands of this country for all future time, in her negotiations with other countries. What will be the result of this arrangement if this Bill be adopted, and I call the attention of hon, gentlemen on the back benches, who represent rural constituencies, to the provisions of the Bill. I say if we pass now before us.

this Bill, although we should repudiate the treaty with France or denounce it to-morrow and give notice of its termination, in order that we might freely negotiate a treaty with the United States, this legislation would stand in our way. It would restrict that freedom. The Government of England would say: You have conceded to the United States the free entry of certain articles, manufactured in the United States, or otherwise, and you must concede to Germany and Belgium, and all the other countries with whom Great Britain has this most-favoured-nation clause the same rights and privileges that you concede to the neighbouring republic. Could we negotiate a treaty with the United States on these terms? Would it be possible to carry out an arrangement with the neighbouring republic, no matter how anxious they might be to negotiate with us, under such a restriction? It is preposterous to suppose that we should. They would say at once: We are ready to negotiate with Canada and make concessions if Canada will make like concessions in return; but we are not ready to throw open the market of Cancompete with ours in the limited Canadian market on the same terms. Is it not evident that would be the result? You would be putting Canada in a different position when it comes to negotiate with the United States from what it was ever in before. United Kingdom. They have dealt freely pared to deal generously, on a commercial line, with them. But that is a very different proposition from the one before us. If Great Britain, in her own interests, has made treaty commercial arrangements with Germany and Belgium and Austria, and has introduced into these treaties the most-favoured-nation clause, that is to bind us, without any concession being made to us at all, and that is what will be the effect of this arrangement, we should enter our test against it. We should say to the Government of the United Kingdom, respectfully, but with all earnestness, that a treaty of reciprocity or a commercial arrangement, which is to have a binding effect upon us. must be a treaty for our benefit and advantage, and not a treaty solely for the advantage of the United Kingdom. grounds upon which foreign goods and products are admitted into the Canadian market must have reference to the interests of Canada, and the concessions must be concessions made to those interests, and not to the interests of any other portion of the Empire. That is the way in which this matter stands at this moment; and I say that the Government could not commit a greater injury to the future prospects of this country than they propose to commit by the Bill The Government of the United Kingdom would not take a declara- other nation, in respect of which such provisions tion of our executive; they were not content with the declaration of the executive, but wanted a more solemn compact, something that the people of Canada could not subsequently repudiate or renounce as being against their interests, because they have voluntarily accepted the yoke which was offered to their necks. I am not prepared take that position; I am not willing that our people should thus throw away their opportunities. I would rather a hunred-fold that we had no trade with France than undertake to tie our hands in this way. What is there in that treaty that will make it worth our while to tie our hands and admit the goods of all Christendom, not upon any consideration of the interests of this country, but in consequence of some arrangement which the United Kingdom has made, without any reference to us at all? That is the position in which this matter stands; and I call the attention of this House and country to the very serious injury that is now attempted against the commercial interests and the future prospects of this country by the legislation now proposed.

Mr. LAURIER. As the gentlemen on the treasury benches do not seem at all disposed to reply-

Mr. FOSTER. We will answer you, but we want to have it altogether. We will answer all your arguments at once.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon, gentleman at any rate shows no haste, and I take it that indicates a disposition, so far, not to answer the arguments from this side. It will be well to point out how far the Government have fallen from the position they took on this question in the session of 1891. Surely the Minister of Finance cannot have forgotten that in 1891 a petition to Her Majesty the Queen was adopted by this House and subsequently by the Senate-praying for what? Praying to be relieved from the effects of two treaties which at present have the mostfavoured-nation clause with Great Britainthe treaty with Belgium and the treaty with the German Zollverein. That is to say, the treaty with Belgium and the treaty with the German Zollverein. The petition read as follows:-

Your memorialists desire, in the first place, to draw attention to certain stipulations in the existing treaty with Belgium and with the German Zollverein, ordinarily referred to as the "mostfavoured-nations" clauses, which are extended to other countries whose commercial treaties with Great Britain contain a "most-favoured-nation" clause, and which applies to British colonies.

Now, the prayer of the petition was this:

The Senate and the House of Commons, therefore, humbly request Your Majesty to take such steps as may be necessary to denounce and terminate the effect of the provisions referred to, as well in the treaties with the German Zollverein, are now in force.

The reason that was given to the House why Parliament should ask that Her Majesty the Queen should terminate these treaties was set forth in the following very pregnant language :-

Your memorialists consider that these provisions in treaties with foreign powers are incompatible with the rights and powers subsequently conferred by the British North America Act upon the Parliament of Canada, for the regulation of the trade and commerce of the Dominion; and that their continuance in force tends to produce complications and embarrassments in such an Empire as that under the rule of Your Majesty, wherein the self-governing colonies are recognized as possessing the right to define their respective fiscal relations to all foreign nations, mother country, and to each other.

That was the main reason that was given, a reason which has as much force to-day as it had then, and which was accepted at that time unanimously by the House. Speaking upon it my hon, friend the Finance Minister made the following remarks. After showing in what manner the provisions affected were commercially unfavourable, the hon, gentleman proceeded to say:

So that, if with any other country Canada with the consent of Great Britain, makes a reciprocity treaty or a preferential arrangement for trade, we shall be obliged by these clauses to give to the German States of the Zollverein the same deductions, differentiations or advantages we give to this third power.

Now, Sir, the hon, gentleman was quite right in asking the Imperial Parliament to free us from the operation of these treaties. But the petition of this Parliament, I am sorry to say, has not been heeded by the Imperial authorities. I do not want to enter into that part of the discussion at the present time, but it seems to me that the Government have been derelict in not striving harder to obtain the prayer of that petition. If that prayer had been pressed, there is no reason why the Imperial Parliament, in pursuance of the policy adopted some fifty years ago, of giving the colonies absolute legislative and fiscal independence not only as regards foreign nations, but as regards Great Britain herself, should not have granted it. If such a prayer had been followed with the persistence which should have been put into it, it is reasonable to presume that it would have been granted. But, instead of following it up, the Government allowed it to remain in abeyance, and in abeyance it has remained. What is the position today? In 1891 the Government anticipated that we might negotiate treaties with other nations, that we had come to the time when we had the power to offer advantages in return for advantages received. The hon. gentleman petitioned to have this prayer granted to him with respect to two treaties only; and now, instead of maintaining the and with the Kingdom of Belgium, as with any position he assumed three years ago, he is willing to concede that the treaty with France should operate not only with regard to the German Zollverein and Belgium, but with ten or tweive other nations as well. Now, Sir, when we discussed the treaty with France, we imagined that it was a treaty with France and with no other nation. We imagined that we were giving to France advantages in return for favours received from France. But instead of that, what is the position? While we get from France some advantages—scanty advantages, I must say—we are bound to extend the same privileges as we extend to France to some ten or twelve different nations from which we do not receive any adequate compensation whatever. That is to say, under the operation of this treaty if it becomes law, we shall be bound to receive free or at a certain rate of duty the goods stipulated in the French treaty, not only coming from France, but coming from ten or twelve other nations as well, while these other nations shall not be bound to receive the goods from us which enter France free of duty. We have a reciprocity treaty with France to some extent, but it involves a one-sided treaty with some ten or twelve other nations. The hon, gentleman can see that that is altogether a different position from the one we occupied last year.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes. It is a different position because no one expected last year when we ratified the French treaty that we should be bound to extend the same privileges to a dozen different nations. We thought we were extending the privileges to France for adequate compensation. But now the position is reversed from that which we occupied three or four years ago when the hon, gentleman moved that petition to the Imperial authorities. Now, the question involved is one which goes beyond the scope of this treaty—the question of Canada's commercial independence. The hon. gentleman knows, as the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) points out, that his hands are tied if he endeavours to negotiate a treaty with the United States or with any other nation, because immediately, all these other nations brought into trade relations with us through the operation of the French treaty will claim the same advantages we Under these grant to the other nation. Under these circumstances I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the case—and not in any carping spirit, but simply to induce him to renew the efforts he initiated four years ago in order to enlarge the commercial independence of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. My justification has been abundantly given by the hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat, as to some charges which were made by the gentleman who initiated this discussion this afternoon. The hon, member for West Ontario (Mr.

Edgar) said that I had deceived the House in 1891—

Mr. EDGAR. I did not use that term.

Mr. FOSTER. It practically amounted to that, but not spoken in any offensive sense—that the House was not taken into full confidence in 1891, and he sought to support this by referring to certain returns which at that time were brought down and from which he argued at that time it could not be inferred by the House that we would have to give these privileges to other countries besides France. And my hon, friend who has just taken his seat says that the position that we occupied in 1891 was different from the position we occupy to-day. He answered himself before he got through his short argument. He read from a speech delivered by myself upon the question of an Address to the Home Government to rid us of these most favoured-nation clauses. He read a portion of my remarks in which I laid down very plainly and fairly before the House that one reason why the House was asked to pass this Address was that in case we made a reciprocity treaty with any third power, we would be bound by these treaties to grant the same privileges to these treaty powers that we granted to the third power. The hon, gentleman has read from "Hansard" the statement made by me as representing the Government when I stated that doctrine fully before the House. The French treaty was discussed in this House after that statement was made. The French treaty was ratified by this House after that statement was made, when the two hon. gentlemen who have raised that objection knew that the statement was made and knew that the position of the Government was clear and certain as regards that point. Now, Sir, my hon, friend who has just taken his seat thought he had made a strong point against the Government and myself when he said that we went to a great deal of trouble in 1891 and passed an Address to the British Parliament to do away with those clauses in the most-favoured-nation treaty. and that here we are to-day asking for legislation which shall lead to the ratification of the French treaty and confirming every principle which we tried then to get the British Government to do away with in regard to those treaties. But does not the House see in a moment the difference in the position. Those treaties with with the Zollverein, were treaties which were made by Great Britain, treaties which we cannot terminate, treaties which cannot be terminated except by the will of Great Britain, and, by reason of the com-mercial conditions, by the will of Great Britain acting in accordance as mutual interests are concerned with the treaty powers. But the House sees, and my hon, friend knows, that with reference to this French treaty, we are in a position to give notice of its denouncement at any moment, and a little more pains in informing himself that in the correspondence which has been in that respect, he will find that it to be done, so that my hon, friend's ground slips away from under him in that respect. answer to that. But from the fact that classed the revenues and the importations from France under one head, and the im-; portations and the revenues from other countries under another, he leaped to the conclusion, in face of that ground stated by the Government in 1891, that this would not be extended to most-favoured nations. That is his own fault, not mine. He made an inference which was wrong, an inference which he had no right to make, after the plain ground of the Government was stated in 1891. But, Sir, my hon, friend voted for that treaty last year. It is true that in 1891 he tried to destroy it by sundry motions which he moved; it is true that he spoke against it very vigorously and very strongly; but when it came to the decisive moment, he voted for that treaty, last year, he voted tween treaties which were made years ago for that treaty in face of my own and Sir John Thompson's statements made in the course of discussion upon that treaty last year, that other nations having most-favoured-nation treaties with Great Britain, would have these privileges extended to them, and the sister colonies also would have these privileges extended to them; so that my hon. friend has come after me with a club to-day for a statement which was mainly made to the House before he voted upon the treaty; and when he voted upon that treaty in the affirmative, he lost to himself the right to reproach me, or to reproach the Government, with any argument on that behalf. But, Sir, the statement is made that this is altogether one-sided, that although we make a treaty with France, we have been included in treaties made with Great Britain with other nations by which we give the same privileges to these other nations, and that therefore we are getting nothing in return. We have been getting something in return ever since those treaties came into operation, because those treaties had as their very essence that British products and Canadian products as well should go into those markets unde the most-favoured treatment, and we have been getting the advantage of that all the time without giving any like advantage in return. My hon. friend smiles, but that is a true statement of the case. If he will look up the returns a little more assiduously, and bestow the treaty without having the whole treaty brought down, the British Government has Belgium and from Germany we have, during give us its pledge that no consideration the last five or six years, been reaping signal shall deter it from giving our notice and advantages because of the position in which terminating the treaty whenever we ask we stood with reference to them on the n.est-favoured-nation treaty basis, and that our goods could go in cheaper there than My hon, friend says that in 1891 the Heuse; to most other countries. He says that if was not taken into its confidence with re- this is signed it will put a bar to the negotiference to the extension of this privilege ations of any other treaty. Yet, Great to most-favoured nations. I refer him to Britain, and, at the present time, nearly the argument of my hon, friend who has every nation in Europe, have this most-just sat down, a statement that was made favoured-nation clause, and it does not debar when that Address was passed, as sufficient them from making treaties almost every year, I was going to say, almost every month certain returns were brought down which of the year, for almost every month we see an announcement of some new treaty that is being made by some Government with other countries where the most-favourednation clauses do come in and apply to the different powers that are making the treaty, and they are not a bar to making a treaty. Well, Sir, the simple ground is this, that the position has been well understood in reference to Great Britain, the position has been well recognized by this Parliament. We are a part of the British Empire. We have the advantages of belonging to that Empire, we have the advantages of the treaties that are made. The commercial independence which was talked of by my hon, friend as being given by Great Britain to us, has been given. But he must make a distinction beand treaties which are made to-day. The treaties which have been made since 1882 have never included Canada unless Canada was willing to be included. That is where we are given our commercial independence. But it is a different thing entirely to say that in the case of treaties made 20 or 30 years ago in which we were included, whether by our consent or not, therefore these treaties are to be ruptured, that the obligations are not to be kept whilst we are part of the Empire. He charges us with lack of diligence in not pushing to a conclusion the abandonment of these clauses by the British Government. We are not culpable in that respect. We have made our representations through both Houses of this Parliament passing an Address; we have been making them since 1882 or 1883. But there are serious difficulties in the way, and although the sympathies of prominent members of the British Government, as expressed in the House, were with the colonies in their demand in that respect, there are grave diffi-culties in getting rid of these treaties. There are treaties in which Great Britain much interested, in which her commerce is very much interested, but she did press upon both those nations at the time of her negotiations that they should let Canada out from the operation of these treaties. The position taken by those governments was this: We cannot do away with one single party to revised. Now, if Great Britain was willing to suppose that a similar course will be to have the whole treaty revised, then pursued in another case. But it is not concolonies let out; but when it became manifest that there was great benefit to the commerce of Great Britain involved in those treaties, it made them stop and consider before asking that the whole treaty in every respect should be got rid of in order to relieve Canada from all obligations with reference to that treaty. Call it selfish, if you referred to is not absolutely binding or conlike; it may be a sort of commercial selfishness; but there is an interest. Now, so long as we are a part of the British Empire I think we will have to subscribe to the doctrine that we are really bound by a British treaty, we are really bound in this respect, and we must submit to it. It has been stated that we have been snubbed by Lord Ripon because he asked us to make the legislation certain and binding. I do not look at it in that way, nor do I think it is a fair view. If there is anything the British Government is particularly careful about, it is in the scrupulous maintenance of every one of her treaty obligations. Lord Ripon's action did not imply any lack of confidence in Canada. We said: Here is the legislation which we propose, we will pass it giving us the power, and on our proclamation, it shall come into force. Lord Ripon looked at it in the light of their treaties, and said: ed with it by treaty obligations, we cannot We must keep scrupulous faith with those powers with whom we have treaties, and provisions to other countries. And has not I do not want it even to be subjected to a too much been made of that? Count, if contingency in my answer to them. I must be in a position to say to those countries with whom we have made these treaties, that it is absolutely certain and denominated in the law that you shall have the most-favoured-nation treatment? I do not consider this as a lack of confidence? I do not consider the position as implying any lack of confidence. but it simply means that Great Britain desires to observe scrupulous care in carrying out her treaty obligations with other powers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It commits this Parliament to a new doctrine.

Mr. FOSTER. It commits this Parliament so far as this treaty is concerned.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, but to the doctrine generally.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman says the case goes further than that, and affects the doctrine generally. If the hon, gentleman will take the Bill prepared before this was brought down, in which had the idea of making a Bill that would cover the case of every treaty, if we had passed that Bill with those positive enactments, it would have committed us in every case: but, instead of that, we make a positive enactment with respect to a posi-could be let out, or the other clusive. There is with respect to this treaty with France that which will make the treaty applicable to most-favoured treaty nations, but it does not hold that it will affect every treaty we may hereafter make. So far as that argument goes. the actions of the Government may be due to one cause or to another, but the principle clusive with respect to other treaties. The fact to be remembered in this treaty is this: That we have so arranged it that it is entirely in our own power, after twelve months, at any time to give notice, and so the treaty may be entirely removed as regards any obligation concerning it rests on this country. My hon, friends have gone over a good deal of the ground of the French treaty, the worth and value of it, the merits of it. We have fully discussed that question. If the hon, gentleman who, facing me, believes all he said last year, he should have voted against the French treaty, and not for it, and if hon, gentlemen opposite to-day feel the force of the words they utter, they should vote against it to-day, and not for it; but, under our peculiar position with respect to Great Britain, and as part of the Empire, and connecthave the French treaty unless we extend its provisions to other countries. And has not you like, twenty or thirty powers which have the most-favoured-nation treaties with Great Britain, you must count, on the other hand, the articles which come in from France. And how many of those articles will they send to us? It is very well to talk about Uruguay and Algeria, but they send us no trade in that respect; all the wines and other articles that come from the most-favoured-nation countries are a mere bagatelle, the great preponderance of such trade comes from France itself.

> Mr. MACLEAN (York). I should like to ask the leader of the House if he can answer the question put to him the other day in regard to admitting free alcohol for Canadian wine-producers.

Mr. FOSTER. The wine-producers stated their case in a petition asking for certain things. Being opposed in the main to the French treaty, they asked if the treaty be passed, their interests should be considered in certain particulars. answer to that question after giving it fair consideration, and my answer is recorded in "Hansard," and that answer I am prepared to repeat to-day, with this addition, that the Minister of Inland Revenue and myself are looking into this matter to see if there is any well-founded disability untive treaty, and to one treaty alone. It is an argument, I grant, that if we pursue a second place, whether we can meet them certain line of policy in one case it is fair in any reasonable way.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the House desires to be carried away into a discussion as to whether the French treaty in itself is a good one or not, or whether it is one that Parliament should ratify or not. That question has been discussed and decided, and, speaking for myself, I do not desire I might remind to reopen the discussion. the hon, gentleman that when he urged the House to adopt the treaty, he used as one very strong argument in favour of adopting it, that, after a careful calculation, made by him, there would be a gain to Canada if the treaty was adopted. The hon, gentleman placed the maximum of loss at $82.-The hon, gentleman in his speech. delivered on 13th March, 1893, declared it to be the fact that, "$82,000 would be the maximum of loss, and $30,000 would be the maximum of loss as regards French duties." The hon, gentleman, at that time, was urging the adoption of the treaty, and he made use of that fact as one of his principal arguments. He has not considered the ratio of loss that would accrue from the extension of the treaty to other nations. We do not know what will be the maximum of loss after this treaty is adopted. and this reciprocity with France is extended to other nations which have the mostfavoured-nation clause with Great Britain. But that is not the point now before the House; the question before the House is a very simple one, and, at the same time. a very serious one. It is that if Canada enters into a commercial treaty with any nation, we must, as a matter of principle, so soon as we have entered into that treaty. extend the advantages of the treaty to all nations that have treaties with Great Britain containing the most-favoured-nation clause. We, in this Bill before the House, are asked to assent to that principle. is not a matter whether the treaty is a good treaty or a bad one. The question is entirely foreign to that issue. Suppose it to be a bad one or a good one, according to the point of view, the question is: Are we prepared, in addition to ratifying this treaty, to agree to a statutory enactment declaring that as a consequence of passing the treaty. we must extend the privileges given to France to other countries having the most-favoured-nation clause with Great That was not the case in days Britain. gone by. We had a commercial treaty with the United States, the Elgin treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. An exceptional case, entirely.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That was the most important commercial treaty that Canada ever had.

Mr. FOSTER. That might be.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There was no such concession sought to be wrung from it.

Mr. FOSTER. The cases are entirely different.

Mr. Foster.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They are not. The leader of the House is asking us, not to ratify a treaty with France, but to agree to a statutory declaration that when that treaty is ratified, every privilege we concede to France shall be conceded to every nation that has commercial treaties with Great Britain containing the most-favourednation clause. If we agree to that principle to-day, I ask hon, gentlemen if we are not binding our hands as a Parliament for all future time? The hon, gentleman states that these obligations are binding on Great Britain. The hon, gentleman is well aware that Great Britain has few, if any, reciprocity treaties. She had one treaty with France with regard to wines, but when other nations claimed the same right as regards sending wines to Great Britain she repudiated it, and would not consent. we are asked to-day to do what Great Britain refused to do then, and if we should make a reciprocity treaty with the United States, which every hon, member would unite in concurring would be a good treaty. should we not be bound the day after to introduce a similar Bill to extend to every nation of Europe the advantages granted to the United States? It will be argued. you have done it in the case of France. you have acknowledged the principle as binding, and so you must do it in this case of a treaty entered into with the United So this is a serious question that States. we are considering to-day. The question is not whether we approve or disapprove of the French treaty, but it is whether the advantages of the French treaty so enormously preponderate as to compensate us for giving up our commercial freedom and extend privileges to practically all nations. when we negotiate a treaty with a certain nation. The question of the repeal of the treaty has nothing to do with the question. and it is not the issue before the House. Suppose that, during next year, or the year after the treaty should be denounced, does that affect, in any sense or way, the statutory declaration which it is proposed to make to-day? Not at all. We are declaring before the world that if we concede certain reciprocal advantages, we are bound to extend those advantages to every nation in the world with which Great Britain has most-favoured-nation clause : therefore, unless the advantages of the French treaty are so overwhelming that we are prepared to accept them and surrender our commercial freedom, we should not pass this measure. I think the question is far more serious and grave than the leader of the House would lead us to believe. The hon, gentleman did not discuss its gravity, because it was not his policy to discuss it. He wished to lead off the discussion to the merits of the treaty itself, to the fact that my hon. friend voted for the treaty after moving or supporting a number of amendments against it. What has that got to do with the question before the House? It is only trifling with the House. It is altogether foreign to the question now before us. which, in itself is a most important one, and which will affect our commercial future very, very seriously.

Mr. TURCOTTE. (Translation.) Speaker, I am glad to endorse by word of mouth and to record my vote in favour of the Bill which the Government have just brought before the House, in order to remove the last objections to the ratification of the French treaty, a consummation which has, for so long a time, devoutly been wished for. Far be it from me, Sir, to criticise the action of the Government for delays, much to be regretted, forsooth, but of which, however, it can readily be understood by every one, in a matter of such weighty moment. I venture to say that such a momentous question should be dealt with apart from all party considerations. It is a matter of too great an importance for any one to allow himself to be swayed by party interest. True, I am a party man, having pledged myself, when returned to Parliament, to support the eminent men who have, for so long a time, been at the head of affairs. I mean to fulfil that pledge, so long as the Government shall continue to deserve the confidence of the country and of the House. Still, I feel it to be my duty to deal with the matter, from the standpoint of the public interests, which have a primary claim to our consideration. It is from such a standpoint, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to express my views on the question before the House and I shall now explain why I think it desirable for the country that the French treaty should be ratified at the earliest opportunity. From the outset I realized the difficulties that stood in the way of negotiating such an important treaty. scheme was one of the planks of the Government platform in connection with our foreign trade. I need not remind the House of all the steps which have been taken by the Government and by the Prime Minister, with a view to open new outlets to our industries and to the trade of Canada, and how negotiations have been carried on in that direction with Spain, the West Indies, Australasia, Cape Colony, &c. Now, we want the French market to be thrown wide open to Canadian products, such as lumber, cheese, butter, fish, leather and shoes. feel, Mr. Speaker, that in expressing these views, I voice the sentiment of the Canadians of every origin, who have nothing so re-echo the feelings of a large number of in-much at heart than the extension of our fluential merchants of the city of Montreal, foreign trade. As a member of French descent, I, no doubt, entertain strong sympathy and admiration for "la belle France," a nation that I desire an extension of our ports of French products:

trade relations with that country, and I wish to see the ties of friendship which bind us to France still more strengthened. quite aware. Mr. Speaker, that in giving expression to those views, far from being disloyal to the great British empire of which I am proud to be a subject, I am but voicing the sentiments of our Most Gracious Sovereign, who never misses the occasion of spending the summer season, in order to recruit her strength, in "la belle France," whose cordial and respectful greeting evinces the union of both France and England, a union which our Sovereign has ever sought to cement, as she realizes that the union of France and England is calculated to promote the best interests of civilization. am happy to find that the efforts of Her Majesty have been successful, and that that friendship she professes for France has been instilled into the heart of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and of all the Royal family. Now, to come back to the treaty, as our chief imports from France are likely to be French wines, it has been urged that the treaty would interfere with our wine interests in Ontario. I may, perhaps, be allowed to give utterance before this House to the views I expressed, last session, to the hon, the Finance Minister, when I told him that being, as I think, a merchant of some experience in that line, I was satisfied that the ratification of the French treaty would not in the least injure the grape-growing industry of this country. There are, I may say, two classes of consumers in Canada: there are those, first, who, were you to offer them fine Canadian wines, at a nominal cost, would still object to buying them, on account of their being too acid; and we have those consumers, on the other hand, who would not pay even twenty-five cents a gallon for our best home-grown wines. Now, let our friends from the Ontario grapegrowing districts, be assured that the ratification of the French treaty cannot but result beneficially to their trade, by stimulating the consumption of wine in the country. There is no ground for fearing less the future of our wine interests should be placed That immense benefits are in jeopardy. likely to accrue to the country from the exportation of our products, is a matter which the press of the country has pointed out, and I need not here dwell upon it at present. Now, Mr. Speaker, when urging the Government to hasten the ratification of the treaty. I do not voice only my own opinion, but I and of the city of Quebec, who think that the trade in French wines is now being seriously interfered with, on account of the country whose alliance is eagerly sought for ratification of the treaty being withheld so by the other powers, now as in the time of long. Now, I shall not trouble the House by the Crimean war. It is owing to the fact dealing too extensively with figures, but I of France being so rich and powerful a will give a few figures of some of our im-

As will be seen from the foregoing, Canada can export nearly all the above products, and with the spirit of enterprise which characterizes our business men, undoubtedly, our trade relations with France would thereby be considerably enlarged. Therefore, I believe the House should hasten to bring to a conclusion the first treaty which Canada has ever entered into with another nation. through the exertions of Sir Charles Tupper. I say this, Mr. Speaker, that it behooves us. at a time when the attention of France is more than ever rivetted on Canada, and she shows herself favourably disposed to establish closer trade relations, it behooves us. I say, following in this the example set to us by the mother country, to make of France an ally and a friend. Let the Government bring about this result, and they will thereby have claims to the gratitude of the country and to our support.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before this Bill is read a third time, I wish to offer to this House a few remarks about the impression created in France with re-All of us remember gard to this treaty. that the treaty was signed in the month of February, 1893. Now, during the session of 1893, the ratification of the treaty brought before the House, as is shown from a question put to the Government by the hon, leader of the Opposition (Mr. Laurier), on the 9th February, 1893. It may be noticed that the leader of the Opposition, when putting the question to the Government, was careful to state that it was a welcome news for the country to learn that a treaty had been entered into between France and Canada:

Mr. LAURIER. I desire to inquire from the First Minister if he is in position to impart to the House any information with respect to the welcome news cabled to the press that a treaty of commerce has been signed between Great Britain, France and Canada.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may be able to do so to-morrow; but the letters from the High Commissioner have only just arrived, and have not been laid before the Council.

We all know that after all the papers in connection with the French treaty had been laid on the Table of the House, several questions were put by members as to whether the Government intended to move the ratification of the treaty. Notwithstanding repeated questions put by members on this side of the House, the Government were always heard to state that they did not know whether treaty or not; and, finally, they declared that they would not do so, because certain clauses needed to be more fully elucidated. In support of my statement, let me refer to the declaration then made by the now leader of the House (Mr. Foster.) To a question put by the hon, leader of the Opposition, on the 29th March, 1893, the hon, gentleman answered :

Mr. LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the hon, gentleman to make a statement he promised with regard to the French treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. I have to ask my hon, friend for further delay. A telegram has been received this morning which is now being deciphered, and I would not care to make an answer before knowing the purport of it. My hon, friend, I am sure, is anxious for all the information.

On the next day, the hon, leader of the Opposition came back to the charge and put the following question concerning the treaty:

Mr. LAURIER. I would ask the hon, gentleman if he has any more information to give us with regard to the treaty with France?

Mr. FOSTER. I have a few words to say with reference to the French treaty. The House will remember a statement I made when that treaty was laid before the House about a fortnight ago. At that time, after having explained the terms of the treaty, I said that, owing to certain points which were touched upon then, I did not propose at present to ask the House to ratify the treaty; that communications had been opened with the British Government and the High Commissioner with reference to certain clauses and other matters in connection with the treaty, and we were waiting the result of these communications. * *

And further on, he said:

Parliament will not be asked to ratify this treaty this year. I think it is also well to state that one of the chief points which the Government have to keep in view, is with respect to the favoured-nation clause.

It will, therefore, be clearly seen from the above answers made by the hon, gentleman, that, in 1893, the question whether the treaty should be ratified or not, was never brought before the House. The Government never meant to submit to the consideration of the House the ratification of the treaty. notwithstanding the position then taken by the Government, behold what transpires today in connection with that question. appears that the French Government was informed, through communications sent to France, that the non-ratification of the treaty was brought about, not because further explanations were needed, but owing to the opposition offered to the measure by the Canadian Liberals in the House. In support of my statement, I may refer the House to a high authority, the report of the French Committee on Customs. In 1894, after the treaty had been ratified, the question came up before the French Chamber of Deputies; it was referred to a committee on customs, presided over by Mr. George Berger, who rethey would ask the House to ratify the ported to the French Chamber as follows:

On the 2nd of February, Mr. Develle, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Develle, Minister of Commerce, Industries and Colonies, had brought before the Chamber of Deputies a Bill expressing approbation of the arrangement entered into at Paris, on the 6th February, 1893, to determine, in connection with the customs tariff, the trade relations between France and Canada.

This Bill having been referred to the Committee on Customs as soon as the 28th February, had been favourably reported upon, and the report was about to be laid on the table of the House, when, to the utter dismay of both French and English Governments the news spread that the Canadian Parliament had thrown out the arrangement agreed upon in Paris by the Canadian plenipotentiary, and the representatives of France and England.

The tacit reason of the refusal to adopt the arrangement may be found in the fact that through our recent Act on the mercantile navy just granted allocations for wooden ships built at our own ship-yards. Canadians, in fact, used to supply us with wooden ships for our fisheries at St. Pierre Miquelon; they might have felt aggrieved at seeing themselves threatened to lose an important outlet for their lumber, the value of which had gradually declined 30 per cent within a few years.

The protracted and lively debate which took place in the Canadian Parliament, at Ottawa, between the Ministry in favour of the arrangement, and the Opposition in no way elucidated the grievance above alluded to.

A primary cause of the failure of last year may be found in the proscription of the official teaching of the Catholic religion and of the French language in the schools of the Canadian Northwest, under a law passed by the local legislature. This question has given rise among so-called Canadian Liberals to a party of francophobes who seize upon any pretext or opportunity to advertise themselves.

In short, the Canadian Government stood their ground, and finally their measure was carried through the House, which adopted the arrangement that is now embodied in the new Bill presented to the Chamber of Deputies on the 28th July last.

Behold then, Mr. Speaker, a most extra-ordinary fact, and a state of things well worth drawing the attention of the House to. "Commission have the Here douanes" in France making, in an official report, the statement that the French treaty had not been carried through the Canadian Parliament in 1893, owing to the fact that opposition had been offered to it by a section of the Liberal party, consisting of francophobes, who gave that piece of in-formation to the French Ministry! Did it spring from our own Ministers, who, being unable to account for their backdown in 1893, had thought fit to resort to that subterfuge? I am satisfied, at all events, that the scheme originated with some of the Ministerialists in this House. Where else in the world could the French Ministers have found that information, if not in the official papers and communications sent to them by our Ministers? I venture to say, this official paper, issued from the French Government, gives us a pretty fair idea of the cogency of the reasons put forward by the Canadian delays in the matter of the treaty. But why did not the Ministers tell the French Government the truth about the non-ratification of the treaty? I would like to know how it happens that Mr. Berger should have mentioned it in his report? The Government, I presume, being unable to justify their conduct, resorted to that explanation, to which I have seen reproduced in several French papers in the province of Quebec. As I was one of those who voted in favour of the ratification of the French treaty last year, I thought it my duty to enter my protest against the insinuations contained in the report of the French Committee on Customs of the Chamber of Deputies. While, on the other hand. I do not think the odium of it should attach to the author of the report, I am of opinion that such a report would never have been issued had our Ministers correctly informed the French Government about the transactions of this House.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) I do not think the hon, member was in earnest when making such a statement as that about the Government or some member of the Government having given the preposterous information upon which was based this report of the Committee on Customs, of the French Chamber of Deputies. The hon, member said also that some French papers in the province of Quebec had spread the same report. I should like to know on what anthority the hon. member grounds his assertion, and also the names of the papers he mentioned. The hon. member seems to think that the French members of the Ministry have given information of such a nature as to vindicate the report of the Committee on Customs of the French Parliament. This allegation is as groundless as the statement made by him in connection with the French papers in the province of Quebec, and with regard to that important question. I do not know of any French paper published in Canada having attempted in that way to vindicate the course followed by the Government. Nor did the Government resort to such methods in order to justify their action in the matter. And previous to coming before Parliament and calling upon it to ratify the treaty, they have endeavoured, as in duty bound, to get a clear understanding of the obligations involved in it. During the first session which followed the signing of the treaty, the Government did not insist upon its ratification. as there were certain clauses in it whose meaning was not quite obvious; and it was thought desirable first to have the right interpretation put upon those clauses, which could not conveniently be done before the close of the session. But last year, the treaty was submitted to Parliament for ratification, and that was done at the earliest opportunity. It seems to me that if anything could have induced the French Government to believe that there were people here who did Government to palliate their unwarrantable not wish for the ratification of the treaty, it certain hon, members of the Opposition to see all doubts dispelled on the matter. the hon, member for Rouville, in drawing the attention of our French cousins across the sea to the debate in Parliament, wished to throw blame upon the Government, and especially, if he wished to induce them to believe that the only people who loved France and wanted to see closer trade relations and bonds of friendship with her, were to be found in the ranks of the Liberal party, he was greatly mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I claim the indulgence of the House for one moment. I would not have asked if somewhat persistent misrepresentations had not been made with reference to what I said on the calculations as to duty. I merely wish to set myself right. If hon, gentlemen have the curiosity to look at "Hansard," page 5695, of last year (1894), they will find that, in answer to a question of Mr. McCarthy, I stated as follows :-

Nor is it the intention of the Government to withhold from the sister colonies at present equal treatment with respect to the same kind of wine as is given to the French products.

Then Sir Richard Cartwright asked me with reference to the wines of other countries, and I said:

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the wines of countries which have most-favoured-nation treaties, the clauses of which bind us, then wine of the same quality would come in under the same conditions as French wines.

That includes foreign nations that have treaties with Great Britain. Now, as to the revenues that would be lost, Mr. McCarthy and Sir Richard Cartwright both asked with rederence to this, and on page 5697 of the "Hansard" will be found my remarks in reply:

Mr. FOSTER. I will read the figures for 1892. In 1892, according to the importations, the loss on the non-sparkling wines would be $30,499, and on champagne and other sparkling wines, On the importations of 1893 the loss would be, on the first class, non-sparkling wines, $30,234, and on champagne and other sparkling wines, $41,313; total, $71,547. Then, with regard to countries other than France, 1891 and 1892 are given in the blue-book. I will give the figures for 1893. On wines imported from other countries than France, the reduction would involve $76,568 on the non-sparkling wines, and $8,722 on the sparkling So the total less would be about $150,600. wines.

Mr. EDGAR. As the hon, gentleman has spoken. I will be allowed to say a word. That list from which he has read includes Spain and the United States and all other countries except France.

Mr. FOSTER. I gave the total loss as $150,000.

Mr. EDGAR. Yes, from all the countries needed for them but to read the speeches of States, with which there is no most-favourednation clause.

Mr. FOSTER. Then my hon, friend has no quarrel that I did not go to the maximum of the loss.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may remark that it only shows how exceeding little value the treaty is.

Mr. FOSTER. I know your side has that view of it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, on a division, and passed.

SUPPLY-VACANCIES IN THE SENATE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of hon, gentlemen to a matter which was brought before the House in reply to a question of mine some weeks ago, but which we have had no opportunity of discussing up to the present time. I have no doubt, Sir, that the facts are tolerably familiar to the recollection of the House, but nevertheless it may be well that I should recall them in case hon, gentlemen may be present who do not exactly recollect what passed on that occasion. It appears that a few months ago a letter was addressed by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the Premier of this Dominion, to an hon. gentleman in this House, which reads as follows:-

Privy Council Office, Ottawa, 2nd April, 1895.

A. McNeill, Esq., M.P.

My dear McNeill,—I have no doubt you have seen, as I have, notices in the papers that you had been or were to be offered a senatorship. know of no man in the Commons whom I would rather see elevated to the honourable and responsible position of a Senator than yourself; but the rumour must have been set affoat by persons having some ulterior object in view, as no such offer has been made, nor has it been considered. Certainly a senatorship was never asked for by you, either directly or indirectly. Moreover, such a step is precluded for the present by the fact that there are no vacancies that have not long since been promised.

Trusting that you may be successful in the contest before you.

I remain, &c., Sincerely yours, MACKENZIE BOWELL.

It looks a little as if the hon, the Premier of this country, on April 2nd, expected immediate dissolution. However, that, as the Minister of Finance would say, is an inference. Now, Sir. upon that letter having been made public, I demanded of the Gov-ernment an official declaration as to when, these various senatorships had become vain the world. It includes all the countries | cant. There were ten vacancies; one-eighth in the world, including Spain and the United | of the whole number of the Senate, which is a so-called federal body. These seats in the Senate had been vacant for five years, for four years, for three years, for two years. and I think, in all instances but one, for at least one year. Now, Sir, with respect to this letter, although I consider it a most improper one, I am bound to say that in some respects it is most guileless. I have endeavoured, as far as I could, to put myself-and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to put yourself-into the place and the mental attitude occupied by the Premier of this Dominion, so far as it is possible for one man to do that in the case of another. I think we will all admit that two things are perfectly evident from the letter which the Premier addressed to my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill). First and most curious, is the utter (if I may say so), although unconscious, contempt with which the Premier, himself a member of the Senate. regards that honourable body. It is perfectly clear that it is impossible for the present Premier of this Dominion to recognize the Senate as anything, except as a sort of donkey engine to the Conservative party. He looks upon it as his chattel, his private property, a thing that he has a right to dispose of autocratically, a thing which he is under no constitutional obligation to administer or to appoint to, for any conceivable reason except his own will and pleasure. and the will and pleasure of his colleagues, and the political advantages that may be derived by his party from these appointments. It is a matter of no consequence in the eyes of the hon. Premier, whether a vacancy in the Senate has existed for five years, for four years, for three years or for two years. If it suits the convenience of the Government, apparently for all the Premier of this Dominion cares, it might remain vacant for fifteen or fifty years. He recognizes no sort of obligation—it is perfectly evident from the tenor of this letter—on the part of the Government of this country to maintain the Senate at the number which was fixed by the constitutional Act creating this House and creating the Senate. And although it is a co-ordinate branch of this legisla-ture, and although it is nominally, at any the particular body in which the proportions between the several provinces more especially bound to be observed for the sake of protecting the provinces in their various rights; nevertheless the Premier of this Dominion does not consider it smallest consequence apparently whether a large fraction of the entire Senate remains vacant from year to year. I am bound to say, in view of what has occurred, that there may be persons found in this Dominion who would think that if it is a matter of no earthly consequence whether one-eighth of the Senate remains vacant for several years, it may be a matter of no earthly consequence whether eight-eighths of the Senate were to remain vacant for Then, Sir, underlying it all, several years. it appears very clear what is the true-I hesitate to call it Conservative idea—perhaps I should say, the true Liberal-Conservative idea of the usefulness of the Senate. Looking at the letter and reading between the lines, there is no mistake as to what purpose the Senate is intended to serve in the mind of the writer. Quite evidently. the Senate is very useful in his mind, partly for purposes of bribery and partly to be used in a stain contingencies as a weapon to thwart his political opponents. But from first to last it never seems to have occurred to him that it is the bounden duty of the Government administering the affairs of this country for the people's good. nominally at any rate, to take good care that a very important branch of the legislature, possessing in almost all respects equal legal powers with ourselves, should not be so treated as to be brought into contempt in the eyes of the public at large, and even in the eyes of the members of the House itself. Now, Sir, it is quite clear, if the theory, or at any rate the practice, which is here expounded by the Premier of Canada is to regulate the treatment which the Government will mete out to the Senate, that the Senate under such treatment has ceased to be of any value for good, although I am free to admit that it may remain a considerable power for mischief. While I am not going on the present occasion to enter into any elaborate disquisition as to the value of a second Chamber in the abstract, or as to the way a second Chamber in Canada should be composed to render valuable service to the state, I do say that the worst enemy of the Senate in Canada never injured that body so much as the Fremier, himself a member of the Senate, has injured it, by the writing and publication of this letter. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, in writing this letter and making it public -and there is no doubt from its terms that it was intended to be shown to a reasonably large circle of the hon. gentleman's friends at any rate—has justified, and more than justified, every charge that has ever been brought against that body on this side of the House or in the country at large. There is no doubt that in a constitutional point of view the Senate was essentially faulty from the commencement. I know of no legislative body in any English community which is similarly constituted. It differs wholly and entirely from the House of Lords, and it differs wholly and entirely from the American Senate. There is absolutely no provision for bringing it into harmony with the popular branch or with the well under-stood wishes of the people. But I am bound to say that I do not believe anybody ever contemplated such a mode of treating the Senate as is revealed to us in the letter to which I have just called attention. Whatever we may think of the motives which actuated the framers of the confederation compact in drawing up the rules under which the Senate is constituted, I do not think it ever entered into their minds that tors to the party funds. I will not suggest we should see the spectacle of a large porthat, more particularly as I rather fancy tion of the Senate remaining unfilled, and that they will not be found to be members remaining unfilled, although as stated by the Premier, the vacancies have long been promised. Now, Sir, certain questions naturally suggest themselves to the inquiring mind with respect to this remarkable statement. These vacancies have long been promisedto whom have they long been promised? why have they been promised for so long a time? and why have the promises not been fulfilled? It used to be said that good Americans when they died went to Paris; and it appears to me that it is part of the Conservative creed that good Conservative members of the House of Commons, after they have supported the Ministers for so long a time that the country has ceased to have any further use for them, are expected to go to the Senate; and that apparently is the reason why, according to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, these vacancies have long since been promised. Sir, I can understand that there are very good reasons why promises made to members of this House should have remained long unfulfilled; but I fail to understand why promises made to other gentlemen throughout the community, who may have served the Conservative party, have not been implemented long ago. I think we are entitled to know, and the country is entitled to know, how many representatives of the people come under the category of parties to whom these promises have long been made, and what particular services they may have rendered—I do not say to the country, but to the Government of the day -to entitle them to carry about in their pockets a promise of a seat in the Senate when the time shall come. What are their services? Why and wherefore is it that a man should have for a long time the promise of a senatorship if he behaves himself and staunchly supports the Government of the day? Sir, we can imagine some of these services. We can imagine, for instance, the case of a member of this honourable House who, if I may say so without offence, is serving the purpose of a warming-pan to keep a seat for the Minister; we can imagine the case of a gentleman who may find it inconvenient under certain circumstances, especially if he sits for a close county, to incur the expense and fatigue of a contest, except under the promise that if his services are not appreciated by the people—and there are plenty of precedents for that-he will be promoted to a seat in the other branch. Then, we know that there are applicants for places which it is difficult to obtain; and peradventure it may be that some of these promises are contingent, to be fulfilled only provided no better job than a senatorship can be found for a gentleman who has served his party long and well. I will not suggest that there can be any who have been promised senatorships on condition that they are sufficiently liberal contribu- practice; it is at variance with the constitu-of this honourable House.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that the case with yeur opponent in Oxford?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another side to this question, which I much regret, that is, the attitude of the Senate itself after these matters had been brought to its attention. It is now more than two nonths since these facts were publicly known, since they were commented on in the press, and since they were publicly stated on the floor of this House and admitted by the Government; and I have looked in vain during all that time for so much as a single ripple of discontent on the placid bosom of the Senate. I should have thought that the ordinary instincts of selfrespect and of self-preservation would have induced that honourable body to compel the Government to take some action—to explain their position, to redeem their promises and fill the vacancies; and all I can say is that if there be one thing more than another which goes to show that the Senate of Canada has unhappily become a purely partisan body, it is the fact that such an insult as this letter could have been made public and that body have taken no notice of it up to the present moment. Now, I have said that unfortunately, our constitution has no provision, or none except a very trifling and inadequate provision, for bringing the Senate into line with the popular will. The people may return an overwhelming majority of a certain party to this House; but nevertheless the Senate of Canada may remain, during the lifetime of its present members, absolutely and hopelessly a partisan club, and nothing else. That was not by any means the intention of the framers of the constitution; and it is a very grave reflection on the mode in which the patronage of the Senate has been administered, that at this present time not only does the Senate in no respect fairly represent the various parties in Canada. but that there is absolutely no provision whatever made for insuring any represen-Were the hon gentletation at all. men to remain in office two or three years longer, were the mortality among Reform Senators to be as great in the succeeding three years, as it has been in the past, there would not be such a thing as a live Reform Senator in the Dominion. Now, that is a blot, and a very bad blot, upon our constitution—one that ought to be removed. It shows clearly and distinctly with what little care, I am sorry to have to say it, with how little forethought and consideration, that branch of the legislature was constituted at the time of confederation. More than that, it is wholly and absolutely opposed to all sound principle in theory and tion of the second chamber in the mother country and in France, and, I believe, in the United States, or any of those countries where a second chamber has been assigned any really valuable function in government at all. Under such circumstances, I sayand I say it with considerable regret—that it is utterly impossible for the Senate of Canada either to command respect or to do any substantial service to the country. The Senate, in fact, in existing circumstances, is neither useful nor ornamental; it is practically nothing but an expensive encumbrance which ought to be removed, unless it can be improved and turned to a much more valuable purpose than it is at present. All I can say with respect to this matter is this, that I think that, peradventure, out of this evil some good may ultimately arrive. Sir, I think that the facts which I here disclose are in themselves sufficient to demand at the proper time the complete reconstruction or the abolition of the Senate. In its present shape, I do not hesitate to say that it is purely and absolute mischievous, and that it will continue to be a costly nuisance until such time as its whole constitution is revised. I admit that the present Premier, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, without in the least meanas a delightfully immoral letter. I do not! think that the hon, gentleman in the least understood, when he wrote this letter, what an atrocious blow he was aiming at the Senate—or more correctly speaking—how atrociously he was misrepresenting his duty as the constitutional guardian of the institutions of this country, or how dangerous an example he was setting, proving how a man's conscience—of course I speak of his political conscience—may become seared by a long course of gerrymander acts, and franchise Acts and substitution of mock charges for real ones. He sees nothing wrong in this letter. I do believe he has become morally colour-blind-an affliction which is very apt to overcome men who have been for a long time in the habit of regarding themselves as the state and not merely as the guardians and trustees appointed by the state to perform certain duties. But at any rate, whatever else he has done, Sir Mackenzie Bowell has removed all doubt from the minds of all impartial persons as to the position the Senate now occupies. No man reading his letter, no man reading the answer to my question, can fail to see exactly what the Senate has become. No impartial man can fail to see that a complete case has been made out for a radical change in the constitution of that body. Sir, I say the Premier has established that fact, and probably that will be the only political achievement which will mark his presidency of the present Government. There remains therefore but one question to be considered, and that is whether in dealing with the Senate we should end it or mend it: and I think that it is a matter to which the attention of both sides of the House had better direct itself with as little delay as possible. As it now stands, the Senate is simply a menace and a danger to good government. It will be far better that we should have no second chamber than have one which is neither more nor less than a political partisan club, and which the Government of the country do not condescend to treat with common respect. Whether we can or cannot improve it. whether it is possible for a body which has allowed itself to fall so low, to regain its position, may well be doubted. But in the present case it will be very interesting for all students of constitutional history to see on what grounds hon, gentlemen opposite will defend the action of the Premier. This letter, I say, is an insult to the Senate. I say it is a disgrace to the Government of Canada. I would like to know on what possible grounds the Government can justify holding over no less than ten appointments out of 78 or 82-I forget the exact numberholding over no less than one-eighth of the whole appointments to the Senate; and I would like to know on what moral ground the Government can defend the dangling of appointments to that body for three or ing it, may possibly be useful to the state, four or five years before the eyes of ex-As for the letter itself, it may be described pectants with the view, not to promote the efficiency of the Senate by their appointments, but, as far as they possible can,-I will not say coerce,-but induce their followers to support them, rightly or wrongly, with the comfortable conviction that if they should fail to secure the confidence of their constituents, they will be provided for life with a tolerable annuity in another place. And as it is desirable that the people of Canada should understand clearly and distinetly what the issue is between us and what the conduct of the Government has been in this amendment, I desire to move:

My dear McNeill,-I have no doubt you have seen, as I have, notices in the papers that you had been or were to be offered a senatorship. BEHRING SEA—SEIZURE OF SEALING VESSELS BY RUSSIAN CRUISERS.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to call the attention of the House for a few minutes to the circumstances under which two British ships were seized in Behring Sea by cruisers of the Russian Government in the year 1892. It is alleged by those who have placed the information in my hands, that these ships were seized on the high seas in a very high-handed manner, and were taken to a Russian port and confiscated, with their tackle, apparel, and appurtenances, the fact, and their crews landed on the Russian coast Now, Sir, I may say that this has nothing in a destitute condition, and left there to take care of themselves as best they could. The two ships, the circumstances regarding which have been specially called to my attention, and whose cases I have been asked to bring before the House are the "Carmolite" and "Willie McGowan." The facts, as detailed to me in a letter received thoroughly the correspondence on this subfrom one of the owners, are these: Previous ject, and I do not find-and I say it frankly to 1892 these ships were accustomed to that there has been any negligence on the fish for seal in the Behring Sea on the part of the Dominion Government when western coast of America. But, after the the matter was brought to their attention, modus vivendi had been agreed to between in forwarding the claims to the proper au-Great Britain and the United States they were driven to fish on the other side of the The letter which I hold in Behring Sea. my hand is dated the 15th May, 1895. declares that there is no doubt that the way that would commend itself to the conseizure of the two schooners was wholly The letter says: unjustifiable.

There is no doubt but that the seizure of the two schooners above was wholly unjustifiable, and it is a great surprise to us here that the question of compensation is still unsettled. Both of the schooners were in charge of experienced, certified masters, who understood their business thoroughly, the master of the "Carmolite" being for years in charge of one of the Government Their affidavits and that of their crews are conclusive that no law was violated, and so strong did this appear in the case of the "Willie McGowan," which was over 40 miles from land when seized, that the Russian commander, after the confiscation and sale of the schooner, acknowledged his error, and such fact was communicated to the Imperial Government, but still nothing has ever been done to compensate the owners, some of whom were almost ruined. In the case of the "Carmolite," the injustice was still more glaring. This schooner was commanded by Captain Hughes, whose reputation as a competent and reliable man is well known to This schooner was the Dominion Government. never near the land for the purpose of catching seals, and for weeks before she was seized land had not ever been seen. At the time of the seizure she was going south from 60 miles to the north of Copper Islands, at a distance far outside of 3 miles. Further, she was only in that locality at all for the purpose of rating her chronometer, and she was all the time under full sail, never lowered a boat or caught a seal. This statement is verified by the affidavits of the master and crew, and, if further proof is wanted, it will be found in the log-book, which is now in the possession of the Russians. to do with the disputes which have existed between the British Government and the American Government with reference to the seizures made by the ships of the United States. I desire to confine my remarks to the seizures made by the Russian ships. I have had the opportunity of examining very in forwarding the claims to the proper authorities in Great Britain. And I think it is right to say that the Rosebery Government took immediate steps to place the facts before the Russian Government in a ndence and approval of any gentleman who should take the trouble to read the correspondence. In fact, no fault can be found with the action of the British Government. at least up to the end of the time covered by the correspondence I have seen. main object in bringing the matter forward is to find out from the proper authority what has been done after the time covered by the correspondence, when a certain stage in the negotiations had been reached to which I will refer in a moment. I am glad to say that in the correspondence it clearly appears that the Russian Government put forward no claim to exercise jurisdiction beyond the marine limits of three miles from the shore. It is abundantly clear. from the evidence, though the modus vivendi was agreed to by the British Government and the Russian Government with reference to the seal fishery in 1893, the Russian Government do not pretend or ask that the modus vivendi should have a retroactive effect. They were satisfied that the discussion should be conducted and the determination concluded by the maritime laws generally, without reference to the new arrangements made with respect to the year 1893. Now, I do not want to weary the House by going through that correspondence. No good would come of it; if any hon, gentleman wishes to satisfy himself with regard to it he may do so. I am satisfied to state my conclusion: So far as the Dominion Government and the Imperial Government are concerned, I can find no fault with the way they pressed that claim upon the Russian Government. But, Sir, I find that in the month of June. 1893. Sir Robert Morier, the British ambassador St. Petersburgh. writes to at despatch with reference Rosebery \mathbf{a} to this matter, communicating the conclusion the Russian Government arrived at. That conclusion refers to two things: First. to the inhuman manner, as was alleged, in which the British crews had been treated although very strong allegations have been such as it was, they reported to the Rusmade by the officers of these ships, corrob-orated by the declarations of the crews of the ships with reference to the inhuman in all cases excepting two, and that in those way in which they were alleged to be treat-ed, there appear to be two sides to the ques-not indisposed to make compensation. tion, and it is contended by the Russian Government that not only were they not House for a moment to the despatch from treated with inhumanity, but they were the Russian Minister, addressed to the Brittreated with every kindness and consideration. Of course, it is impossible for me to pass any judgment upon these conflicting statements. We would naturally be disposed to place the greater confidence in the statements of such officers and men as manned our ships, for the reason that the captains, at least, are known to be men of repute, men of standing, and men of character, and prima facie, their statement, I take it, will be accepted by the Canadian people, at least until very strong evidence is brought forward to show that they have been guilty of exaggeration. But I wish to call attention of the House to the fact that in the despatch to which I have referred. Sir Robert Morier states with reference to that:

I think it right to observe that I have ascertained that Captain de Livron is a straightforward sailor and an honourable gentleman, quite incapable of the brutalities imputed to him by the captains of the "Willie McGowan" and "Ariel." It is also worth remarking, that the evidence of some of the other captains, especially that of the master of the "Vancouver Belle." stand in the strongest contrast with that of the above-named masters.

I merely mention that to show that the impression made upon the British ambassador in Washington was that there were two sides to the question, and that Captain de Livron, of the "Zabiaka," that seized our ships, was, in his opinion, at least, a straightforward and honourable gentle-Now, with respect to the other and more important branch of the case, the condemnation of these ships. There was a demand for compensation by the Imperial Government, and a long correspondence ensued, and a long delay, necessitated by the fact that the Russian Government had to send the remonstrance all the way to that part of Russia adjoining the Behring Sea, for corroboration or denial, and a long time necessarily elapsed. But of that I do not think we ought to complain. It is most unfortunate, but even the owners of the ships must see that, no matter in how strong language a demand made by them may be couched, or how strong the case may be from an ex parte standpoint, I think we have reason to acknowledge that the Russian Government have a perfect right to take every step to ascertain whether the by the Russian officers after the ship had was referred by the Russian Government to been captured; and, secondly, the grounds a commission for examination and report, upon which the ships had been seized, and that commission, as I gather from the Now, I think I have a right to observe that papers, was an exparte commission. But Now, I would call the attention of the ish ambassador, on 29th May, 1893. He incloses, in that despatch, the report of the commission, to which I have referred, and commenting upon the report of that commission, he says:

The second of the accompanying reports contains a detailed examination of the circumstances which accompanied the seizure of the schooners and their boats. In considering the legality of the captures effected by the commanders of the Russian cruisers, and by the district governor of the Commander Islands, the commission was guided by a principle the justice and equity of which cannot be disputed. It recognized as lawful seizures all vessels whose boats were seen or captured in our territorial waters. It cannot indeed be denied that the boats constitute juridically an appendage of the schooner to which they belong. Consequently, their seizure in territorial waters renders the capture of the vessels, of which they in some respects form part, perfectly If it were otherwise, a schooner could with impunity pursue seals on the coasts by sending her boats there, and thus infringe the inviolability of territorial waters, herself remaining Taking this view of the outside the said waters. matter, the commission recognized the legality of the seizure of the schooners "Marie," "Rosie Olsen, "Carmolite" and "Vancouver Belle," but was unable to do so in the case of the seizure of the schooners "Willie McGowan" and "Ariel." There can, however, be no question as to the serious nature of the indications which induced the commanders of our cruisers to institute a search on board these last-named vessels. The "Willie McGowan" took flight as soon as she had sighted the Russian cruiser, and she refused to heave to at the summons of the "Zabiaka."

Then he goes on to report certain evidence as to the number of seals found on board the ships when they were captured, indicating to him an important factor in the right of the captors to condemn the vessels, and adds:

The importance of this evidence was fully recognized by the commission. It was not considered, however, as amounting to positive proof such as would justify the seizure of these schooners, owing to the absence of an essential condition: their boats had not been sighted in actual pursuit of seal in Russian waters.

Now, I quote that to show to the House, and I am glad to be able to do it, that there has been no proposition advanced by the Russian Government of a right on their part to seize ships outside the three-mile ther the limit. All they contend for—and it is a In the contention which, I think, will be acceded statements are correct or not. In the contention which, I think, will be acceded month of December, 1892, I find the matter to by the lawyers on both sides of the House—is that a vessel, fishing illegally I must say, with every desire to deal fairly within the three-mile limit, or having its in the matter, that I cannot come to the boats fishing within the three-mile limit, same conclusion on the facts stated here as and captured in hot pursuit, is legally captured that at which the Russian commission artured, and properly condensed. tured, and properly condemned.

given to them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was given with an express stipulation that it should have no retroactive effect, and it was given for a corresponding concession made by the Russian Government to our people with reference to the number of seals they should kill per year, and so on. I need not go into the details of that. It is sufficient to say that the British Government agreed to that as a modus vivendi for that year, with the express provision that it should have no operation as against the seizures of the previous year. In concluding the statement of the facts. I wish to call the attention of: the House to the finding of the Russian commission with reference to the ships as to which I ask for information. The finding of the commission with respect to the. "Carmolite" is as follows:-

The schooner "Carmolite" was captured on the 17th (29th) August, 1892, by the cruiser "Vitiaz," commanded by Captain Zarine, and flying the flag of the officer commanding the Pacific squad-It appears from the documents examined by the commission, that this schooner was sighted by the cruiser on the other side of the isthmus, which is at the southern point of Copper Island. The "Carmolite" was then about 3 miles from a seal rookery. She sighted the cruiser, and, taking advantage of the fact that the latter, in order to reach her, was obliged to pass around a long teef situated at the south-eastern extremity of the island, she set sail and gained the open sea. But, after an hour and a half, the cruiser came up with her at a distance of 8 miles from shore, in latitude 54° 29' north, and longitude 168° 2' The ship's papers showed that the schooner had been since the 29th July in the waters of the Commander Islands. The captain declared that the 608 seals, the skins of which were found on board his vessel, had been taken near Behring This is in contradiction to and Copper islands. his declaration annexed to the British Ambassa-dor's note of the 9th (21st) December, 1892, according to which the capture of the seals had only taken place at a distance of 60 miles from the islands. The declaration of the captain of the "Carmolite," as to the distance from shore where the scizure took place, which is given as 25 miles, as well as his statement that she had not entered Russian territorial waters, are alike refuted by precise information. In order to show their inaccuracy, it is sufficient to make a calculation based upon the cruiser's rate of speed and on the extent of horizon visible at the moment when the schooner was sighted for the first time by the Both as regards the "Willie McGowan," Vitiaz.

The "Carmolite's" log-book had not been posted for two days. Two protocols of seizure were drawn up, one in Russian, the other in English. In consequence of this evidence the commission recognized that the seizure of the "Carmolite" was altogether then in conformity with the principles of international law.

rived. It does not appear to me that even Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER, taking the exparte statement received by a modus vivendi, or an arrangement made in 1893, a zone of thirty miles was justify its finding. There is no allegation that higher the waged on any of how beat. taking the ex parte statement received that either the vessel or any of her boats were captured within Russian waters. The whole matter is entirely one of suspicion, and I think the circumstances do not present even very strong ground for suspicion.

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And everything is taken against the vessel.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes. Nevertheless. I thought it fair to read over the whole of the commission's report with respect to the condemnation of that ship. I am strongly disposed to think that the case of the claim of the "Carmolite" for the seizure of that vessel is a good claim, and the report of the Russian commission does not in any sense or way invalidate it. With respect to the "Willie McGowan," I find the report is as follows :-

The schooner "Willie McGowan" was sighted by the cruiser "Zabiaka" on 6th June, 1892, 15 miles from Copper Island. The schooner was under easy sail, but as soon as she caught sight of the cruiser, she made for the open sea under full canvas. The cruiser came up with her in 54° 21' north latitude, and 167° 43' east longitude, 21 miles from the coast. It was only after the cruiser had fired two shots that the schooner was brought to. A search brought to light equipment for sealing on the coast, and 76 skins, of which 69 were those of females. No entries had been made in the log-book for twenty-four hours. On the whole, the log-book contains very meagra data in regard to the vessel's course. All the entries are vague, e.g., "jogging around sealing ground," or simply "jogging." According to one entry the schooner was in sight of Copper Island on the 1st, (13th July) and the weather was hazy; on the 3rd, (15th) she sighted the "Zabiaka." The weather was again hazy, and there was a slight fog. On that day the cruiser "Zabiaka" was close to the shore, just off the rookery, as appears from her log-book. Traces of dots and calculations made in pencil on the chart and partly rubbed out, show that the schooner took her bearing by the compass when she was one and a-half hours' drifting from the rookery. One is justified in concluding from all these data that the seals found on board the schooner had been killed in Russian territorial waters. Nevertheless the commission did not feel justified in declaring that the seizure of the schooner "Willie McGowan" was altogether regular.

That does not surprise any Englishman after reading the evidence, for there is not a scintilla of evidence against the schooner. which was acquitted by the Russian commission, and the "Carmolite," whose seizure was approved by the Russian commission, there is nothing in the world but the vaguest suspicion. The fact of the matter is this. There is no doubt whatever, from a close examination of all these papers brought down, that there has been some poaching by some vessels, whether American or British, or otherwise, I would not venture to say, these vessels being in the habit of sending boats within the Russian territorial waters and killing seals and then escaping back to the vessels lying outside. Because schooners did this, the Russian authorities felt themselves justified in seizing every schooner coming within fifty or sixty miles of the shore. Those schooners in question had a perfect right to be where they were, on the high seas, they were flying the British flag, they had British papers, and were commanded by British seamen. They were illegally seized, and so far as regards the "McGowan" and the "Ariel," whose case I am not so much concerned about, they were both acquitted and declared by the commission not to have been liable to seizure ar all. They, therefore, agreed that those vessels were illegally seized, and the Russian Minister declared to Lord Rosebery that the Russian Government were willing and prepared to make proper compensation for those illegal seizures. Up to that stage that is all the official papers show. That brings us down to June, 1893. I now desire to ascertain from the Dominion Government whether, having obtained this assurance from the Russian Government, that they acknowledged the vessels to have been illegally seized, and knowing the circum-stances to have been as cruel and harsh in connection with the men as was possible. the Government have taken prompt steps. have adopted effective measures to enforce that claim against Russia, a claim which impossible for the Government to have re-Russia acknowledges to be a good claim, mained quiescent. The activity of the re-It is intolerable that British subjects, pur-presentatives of the people on both coasts suing their calling on the high seas and has been such as to make it impossible for not infringing any international law, should the Government to be otherwise than ac-be seized by the warships of any nation, tive in using all means at their command, however powerful it may be, taken into first, to put Her Majesty's Government in port and their crews discharged, and if the possession of all the facts, and, second, to statements made by the commanders are half true, these men cannot be compensated sufficiently for the sufferings they endured. Of course, compensation can be obtained for the loss of those ships, and I understand the loss of the two ships is placed at $50,-0000; and as I have said, the men cannot be compensated for the sufferings they were called upon to endure. I have no complaint is kept before Her Majesty's Government, to make of the conduct of the Government in the initial stages, and I shall be glad to know if they followed up the acknowledgement of the Russian Government with equal vigour afterwards.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The events to which the hon, gentleman has referred relates to a period when I was in charge of the Marine Department, and the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries has suggested to me that, perhaps, I would like to speak upon the subject. And, first of all, it gives me very great pleasure to perhaps not having the experience others acknowledge as I do, not only on my be- have had—fretted under the arrangement half but on behalf of the Government of which I am a member, the very generous and very useful admissions made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) in respect to the conduct of the Canadian Government in this regard. If there are any subjects that members on both sides of the House would like to keep out of the ordinary political field, I am sure they are those questions which arise between Canada as a whole and any other country. We must have some common ground, and it is a delightful thing to find that this is a common ground; and the only point on which Her Majesty's Government in Canada can be held to account, and rigidly held to account, is as to whether they have done all that they can do in respect to the representation of those interests. they fail to do that they are greatly blameable, and if they do not press them to the utmost they would deservedly merit the condemnation of the House and the country. And in that spirit the hon, gentleman has spoken on this question. He is satisfied up to a certain date, and he properly asks what explanation the Government has to give as to the delay and as to the negotiations since 1893 particularly. I may say that whether the Government has been inclined to sleep over those questions or not, the activity of members representing British Columbia and members representing even eastern provinces—as much of the capital that was invested in those western seas was drawn from both shores, the Atlantic and the Pacific—it would have been press day in and day out, as decently and properly as could be done, consideration and action on those statements and upon those facts. I need not argue that all we in this House, in such a matter, involving the relations of Russia and Great Britain, can The Government possibly do is limited. can put the case fully, we can see that it we can see that no important or material point to the consideration of the case is omitted; and there, I think, our power ends. I regret I do not think there is any hon, member who regrets it more, that in reply to the important statement of the hon. gentleman who has spoken from the Opposition benches, I have to say that it is not within the power of the Canadian Government, under the present arrangement of affairs, to lay on the Table every document that has passed between this Government and Her Majesty's Government.

have done. I cannot say that I am satisfied every word the hon, gentleman (Mr. Davies) with that arrangement even at the present has said. I agree with his statement of the day. There may be higher reasons, and probably there are, that compel us to agree to this arrangement of affairs under which the "Ariel," the sister ship of the "Willie our Government and Her Majesty's Government are conducting relations between the colonies and the mother country. We cannot lay upon the Table papers which relate to these affairs concerning Imperial to was made years ago, yet notwithstandpolicy and which are connected with corresing all the pressure we could bring upon pondence of a confidential and secret nature. Her Majesty's Government in this matter, without the consent of that body in the whole responsibility. Those of us who are inclined to be generous in regard to the affairs of the Empire can assume a great before going out of office, to press forward deal. For instance, I have watched the discussions in the Imperial Parliament in regard to this matter, and I have noted the guarded utterance of those who are responsible for the Government of the Empire, around the Commodore Islands, in return I have observed how they have withheld important communications upon this very question; although these papers have been asked for. If I have in a way implied that the situation was not altogether as I desired, it is but fair to Her Majesty's Government to say that they have asked from the Imperial Parliament a certain amount of faith had been disputed, had not been lost sight and a certain amount of confidence, when of and were being pressed. Encouragement they withheld important despatches relatives held out to the Canadian Government ing to interference with the rights of British to believe that a satisfactory adjustment subjects, whether these despatches happen would ensue. I am not attempting to one of them the main idea was pressed. We find an excuse. It was McGowan" in the case of which the claims happened to be admitted practically by the the Canadian Government is not able now which after all has to bear the to say any more as to the position of those claims, other than this. When the late Imperial Government proposed, as they did just a measure to give them power to renew the modus vivendi under which there would be this agreement with Russia practically extending their jurisdiction for thirty miles for concessions with regard to killing and catching on the island; Her Majesty's Government in answer to the Canadian Government gave an assurance that the negotiations in regard to the adjustment of these claims which had been admitted, and the mode for inquiry into other claims which

Without any reservation, and handicapped though I am by not being able to corroborate my statement by the despatches, I say: anything that I have heard suggested in this House or elsewhere, has been forwarded to the ears of Her Majesty's Government. More than once have we endeavoured to impress upon them the serious danger that reference thereto? might possibly exist in regard to Imperial interests, if there happened to be reasonable I do not think any special cruiser was told ground in this part of the British Empire to suppose that Her Majesty's Government was in the slightest degree indifferent to these important interests, or, that they held in less regard the interference with the liberties of the Canadian subjects of Her Majesty, than they held interference with liberties of Her Majesty's jects who reside in the British Isles. Again, I say I am very glad the hon. gentleman has brought this subject up. The discussion of the question, and the manner in which he has treated it cannot fail to have its influence and effect; and I only hope that in the proper quarters it may tend, if anything we can do will tend, to promote a satisfactory and speedy adjustment of these very distressing claims.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know from the hon. Minister of Justice what was the nature of the concessions which he says were made to the Canadian sealers, or to the Canadian people generally, in exchange for the delimitation of the two zones referred to in some of these despatches.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The limitation of the catch in the Russian islands to the number of 30,000 seals a year, and the right of the British agent to visit those islands and inspect the method in which the killing was conducted. reason for that, as the hon. gentleman will understand, was the fact that, in connection with all this protection of the seal herds, a fear existed in regard to the restrictions at sea unless there were proper restrictions on land; and the results of the inspection on the Russian islands and of the first modus vivendi were such as to satisfy the British Government that far more care had been exercised by those in control of the Russian islands, and formed a remarkable contrast to the manner in which the killing had been conducted on the Pribyloff Islands. Her Majesty's Government agreed to the thirty-mile zone for protective purposes, and that they proposed to-night. All he wants, and all he very Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There properly wants to know is: whether the was another matter, also, referred to in the Government of Canada has been active and despatches of Sir Robert Morier, to which energetic, and has put Her Majesty's I would like to call the attention of the Government in possession of every fact that Minister. I observe that Sir Robert sugwould be material in regard to the pressing gested in one of his despatches, in reply to some difficulties which had been raised by the Russian Government, that it would be expedient that an English cruiser should be stationed in the neighbourhood of these seal islands, and he further suggested, as I understood, that to this cruiser, the British vessels accused of violating international rights, could be handed over; at least, that is what appeared to be the object of the suggestion. Has that been carried out, or have any steps been taken with

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No. off to any British station, though each year cruisers have been ordered to go and cruise on the Pribyloff side and on the Commander side. But the vessels on the North Pacific, under command of Her Majesty's Government, apparently have not been sufficient, and I am not surprised at that, to enable them to tell a vessel off to any particular location, though they cruise in those waters each season, and make their reports.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The statement of the hon. Minister on this subject is, of course, satisfactory so far as it goes. might have been satisfactory to the House if the hon. Minister could have seen his way to have gone further and to have informed the House as to the precise position which the Canadian Government took on this subject, and I think that could have been done without any violation of that secrecy which is recognized in international communications. Now, the hon. Minister has not informed us whether he has recognized the right of the Russian Government to go illegally upon a British or Canadian vessel on the high seas, and from the vessel itself seek to obtain information, with the view of justifying the seizure.

> Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. By the right of visitation and search.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Practically, it is asserting the right of visitation and search in time of peace that was settled many years ago. The English Government, under Lord Palmerston, as Foreign Secretary, undertook to assert the right of visitation and search under the treaties in reference to the slave trade, made with the United States. That interpretation of international law was resisted by the United States. It was subsequently made a subject of discussion in the House of Lords, and Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Brougham, and others, the most distinguished law lords of the time, took the ground that the position taken by the American Government was quite correct, that there is no justification in time of peace for a foreign country to assert the right of visitation and search. That being so, I do not see upon what ground, even though there had been conclusive evidence on board that these vessels had been engaged in fishing for seals, either the Russian commission, or any other body of officials appointed by the Government of Russia could assign that as a reason for the seizure. Then, there is the further question to which my hon. friend referred, that is, the question of hot pursuit of the boats that were engaged in fishing within the limits, while the vessel itself remained outside. Now, a vessel upon the high seas in time of peace is under the protection of the law of nations. municipal law of Russia does not extend there: and unless it be upon the principle laid down in the English Hovering Act, which has been adopted in some other countries with the view of protecting their revenue, that this pursuit and seizure would take place, I do not see, upon the authority even of that Act, that these seizures could be defended. Now, when a vessel of Sardinia, the "Cagliari," was seized outside of the marine league on the high seas, Sir Travers Twiss was consulted by the Italian Government as to whether the seizure, for the violation of revenue laws, I think, of France, could be properly made, and he regarded it not as a matter of international law, but of municipal policy, which had been adopted by a great many states, and took the position that where the subjects of a state were in the wrong, and had under-taken the violation of the laws of another country, the Government of their own country would not, necessarily, come to their rescue; and he advised the Italian Government not to make a claim against the conduct of the country by which the "Cagliari" was seized. There is no doubt the boats themselves would be liable to seizure, but whether the vessel outside the marine limit would be liable to seizure under the English principle of international law, I think, is more than doubtful. If they could be seized at all, it would be only under a regulation of municipal law, like the English Hovering Act, under which the English Government might refuse to come to the rescue of the owners of the captured ship on the ground that the vessel had been On these questions, I think a delinquent. the hon. Minister might have gone further without violating the secrecy necessary to be maintained in transactions of this kind.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. quite understood the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) in regard to the question of hot pursuit, to admit, impliedly, that while we could not quarrel with that doctrine at this date, its sanction was obtained from the tacit consent of the nations whose vessels offend by boats operating in the three-mile limit. If a vessel, standing outside of the three miles makes an effort to violate the laws of a friendly country, then discourage in every possible way their own the nation of the flag of that vessel may not promote a claim.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is the only ground.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And I took it that that was the hon. gentleman's position, and that certainly has been the position of Her Majesty's Government bewe had, in connection with the Russian case before 1892, the case of a British registered vessel; and in that case the British Government, having satisfied themselves that this vessel, though outside the three-mile limit, was violating the law by pushing her canoes into the territorial waters, took the ground that they would not press further for damages in a case of that kind where a Russian craiser came out and took the ship herself outside the three-mile limit. There is no trouble about that, but there is great divergence of opinion as regards visit and search. I have no hesitation, and I am glad the hon, gentleman has brought the matter up, in stating the ground we have taken. Neither under the award at Paris nor under any arrangement made or that could be made, ought Russian or the United States vessels or the vessels of any other foreign country be permitted to over-haul a vessel flying the British flag outside territorial waters. If those vessels offend against the laws of the country, let them be taken in the offence. Let the aggrieved country exercise this doctrine of hot pursuit, if they like, and that is going to the extreme. But we have protested as strongly as we could against any espionage or surveillance covering millions of square miles in the Pacific waters. The answer of Her Majesty's Government, both as regards the Russian case and the United States case, is simply as follows: You in Canada need not be particularly concerned; we are carrying out, as we believe it our duty to do so, in the best of faith, the award in the one case and the agreement in the other. We do not give them special rights over Canadian vessels, that is vessels registered in Canada, but we do give them this right of visit and search over vessels flying the British flag, registered in any part of the British Empire, sailing in those waters; and that is not such an indignity or such a sacrifice of rights as you think, because we get the right in return to visit and search vessels flying the flags of those countries.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In their interests, however.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Our reply has been that that does not, in any sense, meet the case, that in all probability the only British vessels which will plough those waters will be vessels registered in our ports, which are colonial vessels pure and simple, and which the other nations regard as tantamount to pirates. These nations vessels from going into the business. They denounce the business, they legislate against it, and the business has fallen into comparatively very few hands. On our side, with the award behind us, with the law of nations before us, it is a legitimate business, and this is the only way in which we can engage in that lucrative and legitimate business. This is also one of the ways in which we can push our flag and extend our prestige and influence in the Pacific waters. We have pressed, as strongly as we can, on the British Government, our opinion that the arrangement is unfair to us and that the people of the British Islands with Germany, France or any other European power, in the waters between the British Isles and the continent of Europe. Her Majesty's Government regretfully observe that they cannot go with us that far because they believe that the utmost good faith in carrying out the arrangement makes it necessary, in order to secure the observance of those regulations, that this right: -we call it an odious right, where the flag does not protect the ship, and I believe that in that we are in every sense warranted how matters were going. We were allowed by history and tradition-must be conceded. and that our national honour and dignity is concerned by having the same concession from the power floating the other flag and a party to the agreement. There we are at daggers drawn, so to speak. We have exhausted all the arguments we can think of and have protested as strongly as possible. As regards Russia, the measure was passed through the British House of Commons, the other day, rather hastily. There that forth with no uncertain sound. That were some friends of Canada present, and they mentioned some of these points. They mentioned this one in particular, but Her Majesty's Government, in promoting the Bill, did not in terms take that power, though they took the power to the Queen in Council to make such regulations as will meet that state of things. We hope yet our arguments will prevail. I have used the strongest language we could to bring that about. Now that I am on my feet, I think it is only fair to say that while Her Majesty's late Government has not been able to meet us in every direction where we have pressed our views in these intricate and delicate matters. I can testify, and I know my colleagues will bear me out in this, to the kindly manner in which the late Colonial Secretary, Lord Ripon, acted in all these matters as a friend to Canada. I do not believe, whether a Liberal or a Conservative Government obtain in England, that we will ever have a better friend than Lord Ripon. We may have a stronger friend, one who may accomplish more, but we will never have, in my opinion, any one who could desire more generous treatment to the colonies, or who pays greater regard to her material interests.

Mr. PRIOR. As the matter now under discussion is one of great moment to every person in British Columbia, concerned, as that province is, in the sealing industry, in which a large number of men are employed and a large amount of capital is invested, I may be allowed to say a few words on the subject before us. First of all, I wish to say that I am very glad indeed my hon, friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) has seen fit to bring this matter up. I am glad not only speaking for myself but also on behalf of the other members from British Columbia. that this matter has been brought up by a gentleman holding the high position that he would not tolerate one week such a system does in Her Majesty's Opposition, and who has manifested on this occasion such great fairness towards the Government and also to the members from the Pacific coast. Some people might ask perhaps: how is it a British Columbia member did not bring this matter before the House? All I can say is that we did not do it for one very good reason; and that was we did not see what good it would do, since we were in constant touch with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and on all occasions were told to know as much as he could possibly tell us and we felt that the interests of the sealers were being looked after as well as they possibly could be. With regard to the seizures themselves, as the hon, member for Queen's has said, anybody who takes the trouble to read all the correspondence in the blue-book will see that they were perfectly unjustifiable in the cases of these two schooners. The Russian commission sets makes it very difficult for the owners and the sealers themselves to understand why it is no determination has been come to with the Imperial Government and why it is compensation has not been paid. Of course, from the explanation made by the Minister of Justice, it is easy to see that these things cannot be done in a day, or a month, or perhaps a year, where two great powers are contesting over a matter of this sort. The Dominion Government, I firmly believe, has done all it could, and it is most satisfactory to hear that stated by an hon, member of the Opposition. The British Columbia members, who are supporters of this Government, might well make that statement, but it comes with much greater force from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. In regard to the treatment of the crews. I think all must agree that it was most inhospitable, and I think we may say it was cruel. There may be a difference of opinion, considering that the evidence of the two captains was not exactly the same, but one who knows anything of Russian treatment of prisoners or anybody else, can see that perhaps the treatment they meted out to these captains and crews was not what a Britisher would think was quite kind treatment. This matter of compensation being withheld is a very serious one to these men, and I am sure that the whole House must wish to see a final settlement arrived at as speedily as possible. I trust the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and also the Minister of Justice, will continue to press upon the Government, as we see they have done hitherto, the necessity of a speedy settlement, not only of these claims, but of any other claims that are still unsettled. I think it is a pity, to say the least of it, that the Imperial Government, in their wisdom, have seen fit to refuse permission to this Government to publish the evidence and the correspondence that has taken place. It is very hard, indeed, to make men who are interested in a case like this, it is very hard to make sealers believe that as much as possible is being done for them unless they can see some documentary proof of the fact. Now that there is a new Government in England. I hope the matter will not be shelved by them for what they may consider more important matters. The Minister has just stated that Lord Rosebery's Government were most fair about it and did all they possibly could, and I only trust the present Imperial Government will take the matter up, and that before another meeting of this House these sealers who have lost so much and have been put to so much inconvenience, will be recompensed for the trouble and anxiety they have suffered.

A question was Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked by my hon, friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) as to the precise terms of the agreement between the Russian and British Governments with respect to the extended zone allowed to Russia as her preserve beyond the three-mile or-With your indulgence, Mr. dinary limit. Speaker, I will read the terms of the agreement, as it will be interesting to members of the House as well as to many outside. I quote from the despatch of the Russian Minister to the British Ambassador under date May 10th:

1. During the year ending the 31st December, 1893, the English Government will prohibit their subjects from hunting seals within a zone of 10 marine miles on all the Russian coasts of Behring Sea and the North Pacific Ocean; as well as within a zone of 30 marine miles round the Komandorsky Islands and Tulenew (Robben Island).

2. English vessels engaged in hunting seals within the aforesaid zones beyond Russian territorial waters, may be seized by the Russian cruisers, to be handed over to English cruisers or to the nearest British authorities. In case of impediment or difficulty, the commander of the Russian cruiser may confine himself to seizing the papers of the aforementioned vessels, in order to deliver them to a British cruiser, or to transmit them to the nearest English authorities, on the first opportunity.

3. Her Majesty's Government engage to bring to trial before the ordinary tribunals, offering all may be seized as having been engaged in sealing within the prohibited zones beyond Russian territorial waters.

4. The Imperial Government will limit to 30,000 the number of seals which may be killed during the year 1893, on the coasts of the islands of Komandorsky and Tulenew (Robben Island).

5. An agent of the British Government may visit the aforementioned islands (Komandorsky and Tulenew) in order to obtain from the local authorities all necessary information on the working and results of agreement arrived at, but care should be taken to give previous information to these authorities of the place and time of his visit, which should not be prolonged beyond a few weeks.

6. The present arrangement has no retroactive force as regards the British vessels captured prcviously by the cruisers of the Imperial marine.

This is the entire agreement, and I quote it because I wish to draw special attention to the fact that in consideration of the British Government agreeing to the extension of the zone to thirty miles, it is specially agreed that when the Russians seize a British vessel, they shall not take her to a Russian port for the trial of the case in a Russian court, but shall hand it over to the nearest British authority for trial in a British court.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that everything in connection with Indians is to be open for discussion on this item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. I thought I would call the attention of the leader of the House again to the vote for the North-west Mounted Police. It may not be strictly in order, but it affects the Indians, and therefore may be allowed. When the hon. Minister announced the other day that he had decided to reduce the force. I pointed out that he might be making a mistake. And to-day I see in the Toronto "Globe" a long account of trouble brewing and existing in the Northwest among the Blackfeet Indians. Now, in view of that, I would just ask the Minister whether he was aware of the unsettled condition of affairs among the Indians when he decided upon a reduction. If not, perhaps he may deem it wise to necessary guarantees, the English vessels which strengthen the force instead of reducing it.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot make answer to that, not being the Minister of the department, but I have no doubt that my friend the Minister of the Interior will answer the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DALY. I presume the hon, gentleman has reference to what appears in the Toronto "Globe" of to-day. I think three or four columns are filled with a sensational account of recent occurrences on the Blackfoot reserve. I regret it very much, because the publication of what appears in the "Globe" will probably precipitate the trouble.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DALY. Yes, that it will be read to every Indian upon the reserve. I want hon. gentlemen to understand that these Indians can read. That will be sent to them and they will read it. It is exaggerated out of all due proportion. If they will allow the officers of the department to deal with the Indians, as they have been doing to the avoidance of all disturbance of every kind. no doubt any difficulties arising will be overcome. To satisfy the minds of those who think there is trouble there. I may say that the department received a telegram this morning from Mr. Forget, the assistant commissioner, who has recently been on the Blackfeet reserve, stating that there is perfect there, quietness that there trouble. disturbance and no Now. "Globe's" referring to the account the interview with the young lady. the statement of the reporter, or whoever wrote the account, it is stated that the Rev. Mr. Tims, a Church of England clergyman, has had to leave the reserve. fact is that in the month of May, a young girl was taken ill in the Indian Home. doctor was sent for, and upon arriving, said that the symptoms were those of diphtheria, and that he could not tell until a few hours later whether it was diphtheria or not. parents of the child were informed of the fact of the child's illness, and they arrived and desired to take the child away; but the doctor and the Rev. Mr. Tims, who was in charge of the school, said that they did not think, in view of the fact that diphtheria was a contagious disease, that the child should be removed. The father was paci-fied, and quite satisfied, and he left with the understanding that the child should remain for two days. The doctor remained there all that day. He arrived there at three o'clock in the morning, and remained, I think, until one o'clock on the following morning. He visited the child several times during the day, but he did not see any signs of improvement, because the child was far gone with inflammation of the lungs in addition to the fact of having diphtheria. After the doctor left, the child was attended by the nurse in charge, and every proper nourishment was given to it.

The report shows that the assistant teacher sat up until nearly one o'clock in the morning, and at three o'clock on the morning of the 2nd May, before the expiration of the two days within which the father was to call, the child died very suddenly. Immediately, Mr. Baker, the instructor, was sent for, as he speaks the Blackfoot language, and, anticipating that there might be some trouble, White Pup, one of the chiefs, was sent for, and other chiefs were brought to the boarding-house, and were there when the parents arrived. Naturally, they were very much excited. It is impossible to deal with them as you would with white people, but, so far as the chiefs and the others were concerned, they expressed their satisfaction with the treatment the child had got, and said that no person was to blame. But the foster father of the child, a man named Wood, and the father of the child, whose name I have forgotten, swore vengeance upon Mr. Tims. They were quite satisfied with what the matron had done; they were quite satisfied with all the assist-ant teacher had done, but, for some un-accountable reason, they expressed them-selves as bound to have vengeance upon Mr. Tims, and, in their ignorant superstitious way, blamed him for the death of this Those are all the facts as they are detailed in the report to the department by Inspector McGibbon. But, in consequence of the feeling that arose, not on the part of the good Indians on the reserve, but upon the part of the parents of this child, it was thought better that the school should be closed, and that Mr. Tims should take a holiday for a short time, which he has done, and he has removed from the reserve. Those are the whole facts in connection with the case. I have no doubt the young lady who has returned from there, and whose experience with the Indians, I think, covers six months, may have been very much frightened and very much exercised by what took place. But I can say that until the unfortunate death of Skinner, the ration issuer, some two months ago, in our whole experience with the Indians on that reserve, there has not been a white man killed, either by mistake, or injury, or any other way, and he, poor fellow, met his death at the hands of a man who was crazed by the death of his child, and who was actually irresponsible at the time he committed the deed. But, so far as the Indians on the reserve are concerned, they are quite orderly, and they are working on the reserve, making an irrigation ditch, quite satisfied with the treatment they have received. It is owing to the unfortunate feeling of the parents of this deceased child towards Mr. Tims, that all this trouble has arisen.

Mr. MULOCK. The article in question says that the Indians get drunk. It says they can go out, and seem to have great facility for getting whisky.

Mr. DALY. That is not so, it is entirely What did occur, I believe, exaggerated. was that an old Indian got too much; to use a common expression, he got full on some Florida water that he obtained from some Indians that had been in Calgary; but the old gentleman, thinking himself a friend of the offended father, the man whose child had died, started off to have his vengeance upon Mr. Tims. But he was hauled off by his wife, and the terrible gun he had in his hand fell to pieces when the old That is the whole lady hauled him off. story, and the report is untrue.

Mr. MULOCK. The "Globe" gives that description.

Mr. DALY. That is the unfortunate part of it. It is not only the injury the report will do amongst the Indians themselves, but I have no doubt the whole fact has been cabled home to the old country, and the result will be that it will be a long time before we can satisfy the public that things are right up there.

Mr. MULOCK. The only reason I had for bringing this matter to the attention of the Government was to ascertain the facts, and to impress upon the Government the absolute necessity of maintaining the force at whatever strength is necessary for the purpose of maintaining peace and order, and confidence in the security of life and property there.

DALY. I am fully in accord with The hon, gentleman heard my state-Mr. DALY. that. ment the other night.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not see why the Minister should attach so much importance to the sensational statement of the "Globe," and so little importance to the statement that he himself made the other evening in discussing some of these Estimates. The hon. gentleman told us of the great danger there was of an Indian rising. Why, the hon, gentleman said that if the police force were reduced, they would not be responsible for what might happen in those Territories, and that the people who were out in the sparsely settled districts, were without any fear of injury from the Indians at the present time. Now, the hon, member thinks that no injury can arise from a statement of that sort, because it is made in the interest of the department, and in the interest of the appropria-tion that he has asked for. But because a newspaper publishes an article containing the same views which the hon. gentleman officially expressed here, very great injury may happen. Now, if the hon. gentleman would see his own statements in just the same light that he sees the statements in the newspaper, he would not undertake to use exaggerated statements such as those he employed in discussing these Estimates a five or six years would be sufficient time to complete the surveys, and perhaps the Minthe Indian Estimates upon which I wish ister would state whether the surveys had to say a few words. I wish to call the attention of the House, and especially the attention of the Minister of Finance, to two statements here: The one is that the cost of the industrial schools in the North-west Territories is $227,000, and in British Columbia, nearly $48,000, or nearly $300,000 in

Mr. FOSTER. We have heard that before.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I dare say the hon. gentleman has, but he did not attach much importance to an expenditure of this Now, I wish to call attention to this fact, that before this country was committed to that large expenditure, amounting to nearly $300,000, as a permanent charge upon the public, and for the maintenance of a certain class of Indian schools, the House ought to have had a declaration on the part of the Government that they intended to adopt as the permanent policy of this country, the establishment of such schools. The Government ought to have brought down some statement with respect to the probable cost, for we have never had such a statement submitted. They have asked appropriations of a few hundred dollars for school-houses during the last days of the session, or a few thousand dollars for establishing industrial schools, and that is the only way this House has had the matter brought before it. I do not wish to call attention specially to this estimate, but rather to the practice by which immense sums have been granted and made a permanent charge on the public revenue, and I call attention to the fact that in England no such charge is ever made upon the simple appropriation contained in the estimates, but there is a full and careful statement of the whole cost of every work furnished when the appropriation is asked. It is a serious matter that a charge of this kind should be made a permanent charge on the revenue without the subject having been at any time discussed with any attention or care by the House itself. Then I wish to call the attention of the House to one other matter, and that is regarding the surveys in British Columbia. The hon. Minister has asked $1,672 for surveys, the least amount asked for 15 years, and $3,500 for the reserve commission, which is in itself far below any estimate in the same period of time. There are 26,000 or 27,000 Indians in British Columbia, and 4.000 or 5,000 of them are upon Vancouver Island. I desire to know how far the surveys are completed on the mainland, and how many thousands of the Indians, if there be any, have yet their reserves to be laid out. This work has been carried on for 16 or 18 years and the total cost of the surveys has been nearly $300,000. It was estimated at the time the system was initiated that been completed and whether this reserve with.

Mr. MACDOWALL. The hon. member for Bothwell has referred to industrial schools, which, I suppose, comprise industrial schools in the North-west, and he has also spoken of the great expense. I believe that the establishment of those schools has been the very greatest boon to the Indian population. I understand thoroughly how hon. gentlemen who have not from personal observation seen the working of those schools and estimated the probable expense imagine that these expenses are very high. but to one who has lived in the North-west for a long time, who has taken an interest ir this question and who has observed the Minister the other evening to the effect that working of these schools, the results appear it was necessary that the North-west mountto be very satisfactory. I know that in the district I represent there are schools under the control, not only of the Roman Catholic Church, but also of certain Protestant denominations, which have done most remarkably good work among the Indian population, and if that work is continued and the moneys not too much stinted, it will be the neans of civilizing the new generation of Irdians, and the best, most rapid and satisfactory means of so civilizing them. I also know that one of my difficulties in my anxiety to see those schools well carried out has been the fact that sums have been refused very often for their proper develop-A new school was established about a year ago at Duck Lake in Saskatchewan. There were about 20 pupils; that school could be filled very easily with 100. The work done is most admirable, and the cost per head is really very trifling; but it is necessary to put up a building, and it costs a little money to do that and establish the school. After that is done, the cost per capita is trifling compared with the great results to be attained. There is also a demand for an industrial school at Prince Albert to serve certain reserves there, and I am sorry to say that without effect I have broached the subject to the Minister of the Interior with a view to obtain a grant to establish such school and carry it on. Therefore, on account of what I have said the hon. gentleman will understand that while I do not sympathize with him in condemning the Government for extravagance in expenditure, while I say that I think more money might have been wisely expended, I do not intend to lay myself open to the charge of advising the Government to spend money unwisely or unwell. I believe it would be well spent and wisely spent in establishing additional schools, that a small expense per capita would maintain those schools after they have been erected, and that this would be the true and best means of bringing our Indian population under civilization and making them one with ourselves.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to say one or two commission may for the future be dispensed | words on this subject. Referring to what has been said by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), I was very glad to hear the statement from a leading member of the Opposition that he had been impressed with the necessity of keeping our North-west mounted police up to an efficient standing. The article in the "Globe" has done at least one thing, although I am sorry it appeared, if it has enlisted on the side of those who hold that it is absolutely necessary that the North-west police should be kept up to a certain standard, the hon. member for North York. With regard to what has fallen from the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I cannot agree with his criticism of the statement made by the ed police should be kept up to a certain standard, because the Indian population was scattered here and there throughout the Territories, and settlement being sparse it was important that immigrants coming in should feel they would be secure.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman went further than that.

Mr. DALY. I beg your pardon, I did not.

I take the statement as Mr. DAVIN. made by the Minister, and I cannot place it on the same plane as an article like that which appeared in the "Globe." I cannot say what the habits of the successor of Crow Foot are, but I know that Crow Foot had the newspapers read to him, and I learned with surprise, on visiting the agencies in the North-west, that the chiefs are accustomed to get newspapers read to them so that they may know what is going on. I was surprised to see such an article as that to which I have referred about this matter in the "Globe," an article four columns in length, because I must say this, that it would be hard to find any paper in Canada that for some years back has been conducted better than the "Globe"; it is a credit to Canada and to Canadian journalism, both in its management, in its fairness and in the temperate way it has been conducted ever since a gentleman whom we all know has had the management of it. This article if read in Indian camps is calculated to do harm. Let me point out what is attributed young to a that lady who comes from place. She is asked this question:

"Do you yourself think the rations sufficient for them," the reporter asked Miss Turner.

"I truly do not think they are," and she went on to say that she had seen the rations issued for three people for four days. It consisted of a quantity of flour which she thought might possibly make two loaves of bread, though she was doubtful on this point, and a chunk of beef which seemed nearly all bone.

Well, Sir, from what I have been able to learn of the way our Indian reserves are managed, that is not the way the Indians are treated. It is not desirable that the Indians should be stall-fed. It has been the policy of the department, and I think a wise policy, to try to get the Indians to implement what the Government supplies them with. As my hon, friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Macdowall) knows, the Indians have been implementing what the Government supplied, and I know that on Pie-pots reserve, and on the Crooked Lake Reserve. the Indians have become industrious. They are farming, they are selling hay and other things, and they own their own cattle, and their own binders, and they take pride in their little farms, and they are gradually developing and becoming civilized. It is undersirable that an article like this should be read to Indians, and I think that portion ef it alone that I have referred to is calculated to excite them into a discontented spirit. We know that anything that causes notoriety or publicity, such as the report of neurders, is calculated to do harm on even civilized or excitable natures, and how much more is an article such as this, calculated to do harm when read as these articles are read to the Indians on the reserve. Now, with reference to what my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said with reference to industrial schools. charged that the Government when they started out to give industrial schools to the North-west—they had already given industrial schools elsewhere—should have looked forward to the possible expense, and should have indicated to the country what the ultimate cost would be. He says that in England, when entering on a policy of this kind, a careful statement is made of what the aggregate cost is likely to be. I do not think that my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) could have remembered the speeches of Mr. Gladstone when discussing questions of this kird in the English House of Commons, because I recollect that Mr. Gladstone has pointed out, how subtly expenditures steal into the estimates. He has pointed out that a certain line of policy is entered on and originally the expense is small, but from year to year, the department first and then the country, think well to pursue that policy. and finding it successful in the end aimed at, it naturally extends its operations and the expense increases with the extension of these operations. That is exactly what has taken place in regard to these industrial schools. No one knows better than my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) that before we ever adopted the policy of having industrial schools in the North-west Territories, there were industrial schools costing many thousands a year in the United States. have always prided ourselves on being more just and more generous to our Indians than have the people of the United States, and sequence in the way of saving expenditure. But, Sir, my hon, friend will find that there are industrial schools on Indian agency after Indian agency below the line, and that these industrial schools are managed almost precisely on the same lines as our industrial schools are managed. What did the Conervative Government do when it came into power in 1878? One of the first things that Sir John Macdonald, then Minister of the Interior did, was to send to the United States to inquire what was the system pursued to educate the Indians industrially. A report was made to the right hon, gentleman and on that report he acted, and ever since that the policy of educating the Indians industrially has gone on, and with, as my hon, friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Macdowall) points out, the very happiest results. My hon, friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has, I think, visited the North-west at least once. I would that he had from Qu'Appelle Station gone north to Fort Qu'-Appelle and visited the industrial school. He would have seen there a number of children, taught not merely to read and write and cast accounts, but some taught one trade and some another; the girls taught to be useful as domestic servants. To my knowledge the very best domestic servants have gone from that school into private families in Regina and elsewhere, and have acquitted themselves in a manner to show the possibility of Indian education. and to fully justify the policy of the department in regard to these industrial schools. And the lads reared in these schools, they, tco, have shown that they were capable of being civilized and taught these trades, and that they have no need to go back to live partly on the Government in a state of pupilage, and that the system of educating them has weaned them to civilization, from the nomadic hunting habits of the older men. The amount voted for day, boarding, and industrial schools, $233,400, is not a large sum considering the work that is done. Would the hon, gentleman for one moment adopt a policy in Canada, side by side with that which has been adopted by the United States. Would he make Canada a by-word for want of foresight in feeding the Indians and caring for the Indians on the reserve, and not educating the young Indians coming up, but let them be trained in the wigwam to grow up fire-eating bucks and become a menace to the peace of the Northwest Territories. Would he do that, instead of training up the Indians under the wise management of the Government and educating them to become a portion of the civilized community in those Territories. But, Sir, the bare fact that we are caring for the Indians at all implies that we shall care for their education, and if we care for their education we must care for their industrial training too. That would follow as a natural consequence. But with the exwe believe that we have reaped a happy con- ample of the United States before us, with their successful experience for many years of having industrial schools for the Indians, it would be a piece of wanton folly on the part of the Government of Canada, if it did not adopt this policy of educating the Once this policy was Indian children. adopted by the Government, you could not have an industrial school at Fort Qu'Appelle, an industrial school at Regina, an industrial school in the west, an industrial school in the north, and industrial schools wherever they are needed, without expense. And if the number of these schools is taken into account, I think my hon, friend (Mr. Mills) must come to the conclusion that $233,400 is not a large sum. I assure him of this: That there is no way of spending money that will be so emphatically endorsed by the people of Canada as spending it for the education of the Indian, and contemporareously with the education of his intellect, giving him this industrial education to fit him for earning his living in civilized life.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I shall read a paragraph from the hon, gentleman's speech which the hon, member for West Assiniboia will see is not so trifling a matter as he has represented:

Amongst the Blackfeet and the Piegans, the most unruly and difficult Indians we have to deal with. If the mounted police were not there, the friends of the hon. gentleman, of whom he speaks, would not stay there twenty-four hours.

That is the representation made by the hon. gentleman—not simply that the people would be alarmed by a fear without cause. but by a fear for which there was very sufficient cause. The hon, gentlemen from the North-west Territories have talked rather beside the question, because, on this occasion I have not discussed the propriety of these schools, or the manner in which these very large charges were, so to speak, surreptitiously fastened on the coun-The hon. member for West Assiniboia referred to what Mr. Gladstone said, as to how stealthily the expenses of the United Kingdom had grown up, and he argued that in the same way these expenses have grown up in Canada. That is not so. The fact is precisely what I have stated. There is no new thing introduced. is no important charge made upon the public treasury of which there is not a careful estimate, and which, apart from the Estimates, is not brought before Parliament for deliberate consideration; and I venture to say that no English Parliament, whatever might be its political complexion, would, for a moment, entertain a proposition submitted in the way many of these charges are submitted to us, by a mere fragment of a vote in the Estimates, without a proper estimate at all. These hon. gentlemen seem to think that $223,000 a year for industrial schools for an entire population of 23,000 men, women and children, is not a very important charge.

Let me tell the hon, gentlemen that we have 2,000,000 people in the province of Ontario, and this vote is equal to one-half of the entire sum appropriated from the provincial treasury for the maintenance of education. Those 2,000,000 people have an appropriation of less than $500,000, while $233,000 is taken from the treasury of Canada for the education of the children of 23,000 people, a mere fragment of whom are in the schools. I do not propose to discuss that subject further. If it were an earlier period of the session. I would be disposed to discuss this whole question of industrial education amongst the Indians. I believe that a physical and industrial training of the Indian children, properly looked after, is of infinitely more consequence to people in their stage of industrial progress than the mere book learning that may be obtained in a public school.

Mr. DALY. Then what does the hon. gentleman complain of?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I will tell the hon, gentleman. My predecessors in office, every one of them. Conservative and Reform pursued the same policy; and I myself, when in office, was waited upon by gentlemen connected with various missionary societies, and I informed them that any appropriation made to them for educational purposes was a temporary appropriation, and that the Government had no intention of putting the subject of education out of its own control and jurisdiction.

Mr. DALY. And this Government has not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to know if every industrial school in the North-west Territories and British Columbia is not under some denominational jurisdiction?

Mr. DALY. Under the control of the department, and inspected by the department.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is under the control of the department so far as the appropriation is concerned, and no further.

Mr. DALY. Not at all; so far as inspection and returns are concerned.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not say that the system might not have been best, but I say it was adopted without due consideration. In my time, we felt that the control of education should be handed over as soon as possible to the local authorities, and controlled by them, as the work could be more successfully and efficiently conducted in that way than in any other, because it would be under the supervision of the people settled in the country, who had the most to gain or lose by the actual progress of the Indian population. I am not going to discuss that question; but what I complain of is that the Government have taken an irremediable leap, and taken it without adequate consideration. They have taken a position from which they cannot resile, and I am not convinced that the course they have taken is the best in the interest of the Indians themselves, or in the interest of the people of this country. I am not going to say any more in regard to these expenses. They are very large, and some of them, in my opinion, are unnecessary, especially those relating to the reserves, of which the hon. gentleman has not yet given us any information.

Mr. McNEILL. I have no doubt the hon. member for Bothwell does not desire to be unfair; but one listening to him would suppose that he had been intentionally unfair to the Minister of the Interior in two respects. He spoke as if the Minister had made an alarming statement when he said that if the mounted police were withdrawn from the North-west, the people there would become very much alarmed and speedily leave the country. I think that is not a very alarming statement. If the police and all the military force of this city were removed. I think the people would feel a little uncomfortable even here.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is that the sense man has not improved in which the hon, gentleman made the Government very much statement?

Mr. McNEILL. Is it not a fact? And is there anything alarming in the statement that if the mounted police were withdrawn from the Territories, and there was no military force there to control the roving bands of Indians who are there, and who are not thoroughly civilized, but who, I am glad to learn, are becoming rapidly civilized, the men and women who are settled there would become alarmed? I think the hon. gentleman has to go a long way to find an argument to support the article which was unhappily published in the "Globe." Now, the other point in which I think my hon, friend was unintentionally unfair. because I assume his unfairness was unintentional in both instances, was this. He spoke of the expense of education among the Indians. He said there was over $200,000 appropriated for the education of the Indians, while some half a million dollars was appropriated for educational purposes in Ontario. Surely my hon, friend knows there can be no comparison between the two cases. He knows the people of Ontario contribute themselves towards their education and that the Indians do not.

Mr. LAURIER. It is like comparing the North-west mounted police with the police in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not at all comparing the numbers of the police in the Northwest with the numbers in Ottawa, but it does not matter whether there are five or five thousand mounted police in the North-west, the argument is the same. The numbers have nothing to do with it.

The Minister says a certain number of police are necessary in the North-west, and if you unduly reduce that number you will cause panic there. A certain number are necessary for the city of Ottawa, and if you reduce that number to a great extent, you cause panic in Ottawa. I do not know what the number is, and I do not think it matters so far as the argument is concerned, nor does it matter so far as the special figures are concerned which my hon, friend has given with reference to education. No fair comparison can be drawn between the cost of educating the Indians in the North-west Territories and the appropriation by the local government in Ontario for the same purpose.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) has made the matter much clearer. He has made it clear certainly that it will cost a little more per head to educate Indians there than it does to educate white children in Ontario, where the parents contribute to the fund. But the difference between 2,000,000 people is so vastly greater than the difference between $230,000 and $2,000,000 that the hon. gentleman has not improved the position of the Government very much.

I rose more particularly to refer to the statement contained in to-day's "Globe" regarding the troubles among the Indians. It would appear that in spite of the large expenditure for mounted police, and in spite of the large appropriation for civilizing the Indians, the fact is that at present the missionaries are not allowed to move amongst the Blackfeet tribe on the reserve. We see great excitement maifested in the papers on the announcement that a missionary has been expelled from some place in the backwoods of China, or that missionaries have been warned to leave Chung Chow, or some such place, under threats of murder. That is made the subject of diplomatic representations, and of great ado, but we are told it is a very small matter when missionaries are compelled to leave a settled tribe of Indians on the reserves in the North-west.

I differ in toto from that contention. can have no sympathy with attacks levelled at newspapers for calling attention to this state of things, revealed by the missionaries themselves, fully credible persons, who are in a position to know the facts, and which is a state of things disgraceful to the management of our Indians and the department which controls them. With a force of mounted police sufficient to maintain order throughout all the reserves, and which costs us so much money, it is simply disgraceful that such a state of things should be tolerated for a moment. It appears that a state of things which the Minister of the Interior said might happen if the mounted police were reduced in numbers, has happened, although they are maintained at their full strength, and, as we are led to suppose, in their full efficiency. I believe that a newspaper, in making known these facts, in quired by the treaty. It may be maintain-making known the statements of the mised that the Government kept the Indians on sionaries who were on the spot, is only fulfilling its duty to the public.

The cry that these things should not be reported, because they will create false impressions, is absurd. If those things are facts, they are quite sufficient to deserve the closest; But the question for the House and the Inattention of the country and the House, but the Government and its supporters, my hon, friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) amongst them, seem to believe in the old principle: "Do not say anything about the Indian troubles or Indian grievances; hold your tongue about them and it will be all right with any Indians which compels us to give in the long run." We had enough of that them an ounce of food.

There was an angry dispute the whole afternoon on the subject of rations.

Mr. DALY. Where is the dispute now about rations?

Mr. CASEY. I will answer that question the plain language of the treaty. in good time when I come to it.

Mr. DALY. Be fair.

Mr. CASEY. At that time there was a dispute about rations the whole afternoon, and the Indians left in such anger that they would not accept the Governor's invitation to stop and have a steer roasted for them. There was very nearly an outbreak of hostilities on the spot at the time. But everybody pooh-poohed these things, said the Indian grievances were all rubbish, and the result was seen when the half-breed outbreak took place, the Indians sympathized: with the half-breeds.

Mr. DALY. To what extent did they sympathize with the half-breeds?

Mr. CASEY. The hon, gentleman a little while ago wanted to know where the question of rations came in. It was introduced money is not voted, but that the money into this debate by the hon, member for voted for the benefit of the Indians does Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who read the state- not get to the Indians but goes to whites, ment of Miss Turner that she did not think to those who distribute the rations. the rations served out to the Blackfeet were afraid, that that complaint is only too well sufficient, and he disputed her estimate of based. Mr. DALY. I expect you to be fair.

Mr. CASEY. I am not versed in the intricacies of these treaties. I am not inclined to take all the Minister's statements without reservation until we have looked into them. We will have to let it go for the moment.

At all events, they have undertaken to supply rations to these Indians. Whether by treaty or not, a certain allowance has been arranged for. If they are attempting to withdraw that allowance contrary to use and custom, it will only create dissatisfaction among Indians. What the country complains of in dealing with the Indians is not that sufficient

Mr. MACDOWALL. I wish to add a few words to my former remarks with regard to what the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has said concerning the schools. think that nobody can do otherwise than agree that it is necessary to have a certain amount of physical teaching as well as intellectual teaching. But the Indians who are to be taught have lived the lives of hunters on the plains. Almost their whole exercise has been physical exercise, and the object of the school must be to give the intellectual faculties the exercise that they have lacked. If the hon, gentleman were to go to one of these industrial schools he would find that the iron bedsteads, the utensils in the halls, the tables in the dining-room, &c., are all made by Indian pupils themselves. This is proof that they receive not only intellectual training but also the physical exercise which teaches them a trade. At the same time, when we consider that the whole sum expended in these schools is only $237,000, and that the total number of schools of all classes-day schools, boarding-schools and industrial schools-is about a hundred, we cannot but see that the average spent on each school is a very small sum indeed. I think the department would do wisely to increase this expenditure, to build more industrial establishments and to change the vote of $2,000,-000 for feeding the ludians and paying agents and make a considerably larger educational vote. With regard to the remarks of the hon, member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) about the necessity of maintaining the mounted police, as one of the members from the North-west, I think I have a right to express an opinion upon this question which should be regarded as carrying some weight not only by members of the Government but also by members of the Opposition. I hold it would be a vital mistake to reduce this force too much. No hon, member who does not know the North-west and the circumstances of the settlement of that country, the circumstances under order were maintained, can form any idea of what an inestimable benefit the North-west mounted police have been to Canada and how small has been the expense compared with this patriotism of the tribes to induce them to benefit. I think no once who has lived in the revert to their own heathenish practices in North-west and knows the work of the force other respects. We know that these sun feels that he cannot pay too high a tribute dances are dangerous occasions. I wish to to this body of men for the work they have ask the Minister if it is the fact that sun done. I have not only seen our own North-dances have been forbidden; if they have not been forbidden, amongst what tribe are the territories of the United States, and I they still permitted, and what is the in-tention of the Government in regard to predary line a difference can be observed. In venting these ceremonies in the future? Also four own territories life is as safe-yes, safer I would ask if any preparations have been -than it is in some of your large cities, made in this case, seeing the tribes were This is owing to the prestige that the law in a distrubed state, to have a sufficient of Canada holds, and that prestige is due number of police in the neighbourhood to to the presence of the North-west mounted police. Cross the boundary line and you do not meet a man who does not carry his revolver in his hand and his rifle at the pommel of his saddle ready to shoot on sight. Throughout the towns in Montana disorderly conduct frequently occurs, and life is not safe except for those who are able and ready to defend it. In our towns in the North-west life is safe. This is owing to the presence of the North-west mounted police. In the western states you hardly hear of a single railway running its trains across the continent whose trains have not some times been held up by desperadoes or outlaws. But our transcontinental line has never had such an experience in the whole course of its existence. This is owing to the presence of the North-west mounted police. I regret to say that, owing, I believe to the representations of hon, gentlemen opposite—certainly not owing to representations of any member for the North-west—that force is being cut down. I for one enter my protest against any further reduction, and would urge this House to lay party politics to one side and consider whether it would not be advisable to increase the mounted police force again, in order to make certain of maintaining our reputation as possessing a western country that is second to none in other respects and is in advance of any other in the possession of a self-respecting people who can maintain and enforce law and order. Therefore I deprecate any remarks against the maintenance of the Northwest mounted police force. With regard to the remarks of the hon, gentleman from West Elgin about the article in the "Globe" I would agree with him in this respect—that there is no fear at all of danger to the wellbeing of the country through the publication of any statements that are truthful in regard to the North-west or the conduct of the Indians. The only fear is, when mangled and untruthful statements are published, that they may create a sentiment which may breed discord. In regard to the rebellion, the hon, gentleman spoke with some authority. He seemed to think that it was caused by insufficient rations, and he quoted his visit to Piapot's reserve. Let him disabuse his mind of that opinion altogether. I believe that the North-west rebellion proceeded from one of the simplest causes that ever existed, that not only existed in our own country, but has existed as late as 1850 in Great Britain. We know that in 1850 the anarchists were active in Great Britain, and we know there were bread riots. And so in 1885 we had a bread riot in the Northwest, for it was nothing else. There was no ill-feeling amongst the people. Those who took arms on one side and those who took up arms on the other, are as good friends to-day as ever they were before. But a bread riot occurred, and this was brought about because these people in the north who had a large market for their supplies, and who had incurred debts to the large agricultural implement firms and others, and who were oppressed with these debts, suddenly found out that the market for their supplies was cut off by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the south of them, the line having been deflected. The Canadian Pacific Railway, when it was built, afforded access to the large mills which were immediately established in Manitoba, and the large factories in Ontario and other places, carrying the supplies which were formerly produced in the Prince Albert district, to the markets north and west of them. and carrying them at a cheap rate. It was this policy of buying in large quantities, at the cheapest rate, from large contractors, principally in Ontario and Quebec, instead of buying the produce that was raised in the country, that starved these poor people and created a bread riot. But I do not believe we shall ever have such an occurrence again.

Mr. MULOCK. Who were the people that caused the bread riots?

Mr. MACDOWALL. I have told you.

Mr. MULOCK. I want to know who are the people who lost their trade, or the markets for their products?

Mr. MACDOWALL. The farming element, and indeed every other class.

Mr. MULOCK. Were those the people that caused the rebellion?

Mr. MACDOWALL. They were not the people who caused the rebellion, you were the people who caused the rebellion. I was not a member of the House then, and, therefore, I had no legislative responsibility with respect to that rebellion. But I believe Parliament did have some responsibility for it.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon, friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) thinks that the statement of the Minister the other night, and which he read, was as calculated to excite the Indians, as the article in the "Globe." What the Minister stated was that the presence of a police force was calculated and intended to keep the Indians from rising. That statement does not lead the Indian to rise. The hon, gentleman knows that the police force in the North-west is a terror to evil-doers, especially to the Indian evil-doer. The aim of the department is to keep him quiet, whereas a four column article in the "Globe." giving great prominence to the facts there alleged, is likely to create an opposite effect on the part of a savage people. But the hon, gentleman has only to take up a newspaper any day, and he will find in Quebec-you see it in the Demers ease-he will find in Ontario, an excitable nature fancying itself aggrieved and provoked to commit a crime, either in a moment of insanity or a moment of wild excitement, and that is exactly what occurred here. Now, with reference to what my hon. friend said about the schools, the Government of Canada, in 1886 and 1887, entered vigorously on a policy of establishing industrial schools. They had in their hands, in 1879, a report on the schools in the United States, and in 1880 and 1881 they took some steps in the same direction, and the first school. I think, was established at Battleford; but the rebellion put a stop to that policy. In 1886-87, as may be seen from the records of that period, the Government of Canada entered vigorously on its policy of industrial schools. Now, I have been looking through "Hansard," and I cannot find that my hon. friend from Bothwell, although he, as an ex-Minister of the Interior, was the proper person to criticise what was being done, sounded a single note of warning. If we will look at the Supply Act of 1886-87 he will find there several items for industrial schools. For instance, in 1887, under North-west Territories, you have a sum of $5,000 to provide for two Indian industrial schools, and then you have the sum of $8,000 for the education and maintenance of 80 pupils at each, in all 160, at $50 each. To enable the department to veneer a couple of industrial schools with brick, $4,000. To aid in the maintenance of a school at Assiniboia under the care of the Rev. Hugh McKay, at the rate of $50 each for 30 pupils, $1,500. To aid in the establishment of a school building and mill in the Peace River district, the whole estimated to cost $4,500, of which $2,500 will be collected by Rev. Mr. Brick, and so on. My hon. friend from Bothwell criticises that. Now, I find that in 1886, when a discussion took place on North-west affairs, a gentleman who is known on both sides of the House to be a man of great candour, who is known to speak exactly what he thinks, to be a man of fearless independence, and who often receives applause from both sides of the House, spoke as follows, on the 7th May, 1886:-

I wish to say a word or two with regard to one item which is not included in the Estimates, that is the industrial school at Qu'Appelle for the training of Indian boys. Having had an opportunity of visiting that school at several times, I must say that if there is anything on which we can congratulate ourselves, it is the attempt being made in the North-west to educate the

It is quite evident youth of the Indian tribes. we cannot do anything with the old men or the young men who have attained the age of matur-Our only chance is to endeavour to educate the young boys and girls who are growing up in the different reserves; with them we may possibly do something. I admit that experience is not altogether favourable, for I found there, and we know, in fact, from our own experience, in the province of Ontario, that the Indian boys and girls who are trained with the greatest possible care at our various industrial schools, after they have obtained a good deal of instruction, turn out to be after all mere savages; but at the same time the only hope we have, the only prospect we have. the only inducement we have to spend money upon the Indians, is based upon the fact that upon the young, caught young in fact, we may possibly hope to obtain some influence which may be of benefit in future years. I took several opportunities of visiting that school at Qu'Appelle, and I was very much pleased with what was going on there. The expenin establishing that school has been The expenditure great. The buildings have cost a great deal of money, but I think they are worth all what they have cost, and I desire to express my sense on the very great service the fathers in charge of that institution are giving to the people of the coun-I am sure they are doing a great work. Among others there, I saw a grandson of Sitting Bull, a little boy, a bright little fellow, of just the class from which the people of this country may hope something in the future. I hope the Indian Department will endeavour to encourage and develop these institutions.

He had already said that this one entailed great expense. It was in 1886, when the policy was being entered upon.

I think the country will not begrudge any reasonable expenditure in developing them. I think they are the only hope we have of obtaining in the future anything like a grasp and a hold upon the Indian population. If we can give them some notions of our ideas of civilization, some idea of cleanliness, of good clothing, of everything that we believe makes the benefits and comforts of civilization, the country should not begrudge the expenditure; and, in regard to this particular institution—

This is one of the pioneer institutions. It is the one I know best myself, and no one can visit it without coming away an enthusiast as this member of Parliament did in regard to the industrial training of our Indians.

-I beg to express my extreme sense of what this country owes to the clergy who are in charge of that institution, and the excellent work they are doing in the management of it.

The note, if a note of warning it was, was struck on that occasion by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) whose words I have been reading. But the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) must have been wanting in foresight, because, although the ship of industrial education was about to be launched, and the necessary expenditure involved thereby to be incurred, not one word on that occasion came from him. So I do not think his points are well taken on the present occasion, when he condemns this expenditure. In regard to the hon, member for Elgin, I may say that that hon, gentleman cannot know everything. That hon, member has wide information. He can go from one quarter of the globe to the most distant point, and survey mankind from China to Peru, and talk on a great variety of subjects, and talk instructively and well; but occasionally he comes on a subject on which he is comme faite. If I may do so with perfect politeness. I will say that on the present occasion I do not think he knew the whole facts about the war, because he spoke as though a large number of Indians, the Indian population, had shown active sympathy with the rebels in the war of 1885.

And the content of th

Mr. CASEY. What about Cut Knife Creek?

Mr. DAVIN. We had two Indians show-But if the Indian populaing sympathy. tion in the North-west Territories had not proved themselves, as they did, the great body of them, loyal to their great mother the Queen, it would have cost not five millions but twenty or thirty millions to put down the rebellion. The mass of the Indians remained loyal to the Government of Canada. So the hon, gentleman in regard to that There is no conmatter was mistaken. troversy at present about rations as there was at the time of which the hon, gentleman spoke. At the time Piapot was disputing about rations there was a cry from the Indian reserves, which was echoed here in Parliament, and Mr. Blake took up the matter, and if he had got his information at first hand instead of second hand, he might have made something out of it.

Mr. LAURIER. All his statements were denied at the time.

Mr. DAVIN. If Mr. I do not know. Blake had got the statement as to rotten flour and rotten bacon, he might have made something out of them, but he did not get his information at first hand. At that time there was a cry on the reserve, a discontent in certain parts among the Indians, but to-day none of the Indians on the reserves are kicking about rations, so far as I am informed. Speaking as a man who knows something about newspapers, I say if this article, published in the "Globe" had been correspondence sent from Gleichen, Calgary, or Regina, or any part of the North-west where a man could speak with local knowledge, it would be a different matter; but this is an article made up in Toronto, as any one acquainted with the subject knows, by some member of the staff of the "Globe." The Minister of the Interior did not mean, I apprehend, to deprecate the publication of facts in regard to Indian affairs, but what he did say was, and it was only a passing remark, that it was exceedingly to be regretted that four columns should have been made out of this matter, which could have been given in the and largely made up of the class of people I have ordinary way as a piece of news, and that it looked like, and as I have said contrary to what I have seen in the "Globe" for years back, a desire to make some sensation in regard to this matter.

Mr. DALY. I have so many questions to answer, and some of them were asked so long ago, that the committee must forgive me if I do not follow them in sequence. Coming back to the "Globe," what I complain of, as the hon, gentleman has said, is not with regard to any truthful reports, because so far as the Department of Indian Affairs is concerned, the conduct of our affairs in the North-west are open to day light, and full investigation, but I take exception to an article appearing on the front page of one of the leading papers of Canada with such a heading as "Indians in paint, excitement on the Blackfoot re-Murder of Mr. Skynner." There serve. is no evidence that the Indians have put on their paint. This statement means much to white people. Of course, you can go on an Indian reserve, or even in Brandon or Regina, every day, and see Indians with paint on their cheeks; but people not acquainted with the Indians would at once imagine that this means that they have put on their war paint, and there is going to be trouble. What sense is there in referring to the murder of Mr. Skynner. That occurred on 3rd April, three months ago: an investigation was made and an inquiry held, and, in order to show to what state of civilization the Indians have reached. I may say that on the coroner's jury there were three of the Indian chiefs, and they agreed with the rest of the jury in acquitting the policeman. I think it is right to publish news respecting Indian affairs, but it should be done fairly, and by persons acquainted with the facts, because such publications as that create excitement not only in Canada but also else-No doubt this article will be seen in England, and will be dwelt upon as the matters are dwelt upon by enterprising journalistic correspondents, and we do not know what the effect may be. With respect to the criticism by the hon, member for Bothwell of the remarks made by me about the mounted police, what I said I am prepared to repeat. I was replying to the hon, member for Wellington, and if the hon, gentleman had been fair, he would have read what that hon, gentleman said, as follows:

In some sections, such as those referred to by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), they should have a few of those police around for the purpose of protection, but I insist that in the south-western portion of the North-west there is not that necessity. The people there do not think there is. I have friends and relatives living there for the last twelve years, and they declare that the North-west mounted police, while an efficient, is an enormously expensive corps, stated-young Englishmen, brought out and paid large salaries, and well provided for, and some Canadians who cannot very well be mastered at home, and are sent out there for the purpose of being drilled into good behaviour. It is not right that the country should be saddled with an enormous expenditure to keep up this corps, which could, in a great measure, be dispensed with.

Mr. DALY. I am sorry there is a difference of opinion between hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you sure there is none on your side.

Mr. DALY. I do not think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No difference of opinion on any subject?

Mr. DALY. Possibly, but not as to the keeping up of this corps. The hon, member for North Wellington says he has communications from the south-western portions of the North-west Territories, which lead him to believe there is no necessity for the mounted police there. I may tell the bon. gentleman, if there is one place in the whole of the territories where it is absolutely necessary to have the mounted police, it is in the south-western portion.

Mr. McMULLEN. Close to the border?

Mr. DALY. Yes; in treaty 7, amongst the Blackfeet and the Piegans, the most unruly and difficult Indians we have to deal with. mounted police were not there, the friends of the hon, gentleman of whom he speaks, would not stay there twenty-four hours.

I was perfectly justified in saying that, and for these reasons. I presume that in the families he speaks of there are women and children, and if these women and children did not know the fear and trembling the Indians have for the North-west mounted police, they would not consider themselves so safe, and the women would probably not remain in the country at all. If instead of the Indians being kept on reserves they were allowed to wander around the country, and probably without any wrong intention on their part they entered the house of a settler, those women and children would be frightened. Any one who has a knowledge of the subject will know this to be the case. A statement of that kind, however, is entirely different from a sensational statement contained in the heading of a newspaper article. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Casey) spoke of the sun dances, and asked what steps were taken to prevent them. The Indians are given to understand that we do not permit these dances under any circumstauces, but the dances are looked upon as a religious rite, and we have to exercise a great deal of discretion as to how far we can go in preventing them. We use moral suasion. and give the Indians perhaps a little more tea and tobacco and increase their rations so as to persuade the leading men amongst them not to take part. Notwithstanding the persuasive appeals of the agents and others, and the resort to these methods I have spoken of, some of the older men will insist upon the sun dance. Old Piapot has been a very unruly Indian, and although peaceful provided that the Government would not during the last few years, strange to say see them want. he got the idea this year that he must have a sun dance. He held one, and no harm came of it. The police were on hand and everything passed off peaceably. At the Touchwood Hills, and on other reserves they also prepared for a sun dance. On the Blackfoot reserve the sun dance was about to be held at the time the trouble spoken of occurred, and in order to pacify the Indians the schools were closed and the parents. children allowed to go to their Probably one reason why we have been unable to persuade the Indians not to hold sun dances this year, is, that some of the old chiefs who were peaceably inclined are dying off. The younger men are coming up and their desire is to be made braves the same as their forefathers, and it is hard to restrain them. If we were to dare to send the mounted police and prevent these men from taking part in the sun dance, then the trouble would commence and there might arise a great deal of ill-feeling that it would take months to overcome. We have therefore to exercise discretion in the matter. While these three sun dances have taken place this year we had no other sun dances throughout the North-west. Now, with reference to the rations. There may have been complaints some years ago about the rations, but I can assure hon, gentlemen there is no man that from the year 1883 when the first complaint now. I have myself seen the rations distributed to those very Blackfeet who were spoken of to-night. They get the very best beef grown in any part of America. It runs from a pound and a twelfth to a pound and a quarter, and from half to threequarters of a pound of flour. There are greedy Indians who will grumble, but we must give them the bone with the flesh, and no matter bow much meat or flour you give them they would continue to grumble. You can never satisfy an Indian in that retthe cost of carrying on the industrial spect. I am glad to see there are no complaints as to the quality of the rations distributed. If the hon, gentleman, for instance, were to have a pow-wow with the Indians on one of these reserves, the very first thing they would commence to do would be to complain of their rations. From the powwows I have had with the Indians, I can say that the expression of opinion amongst from one end of the North-west to the other, was that the Government had met its treaty obligations in every particular. I want to emphasize the fact that in none of the treaties, from the time we made the first treaty at Lower Stone Fort Garry, until we made the last treaty, did we undertake to supply them with rations. There is one exception in the treaty in which Governor Morris undertook to provide them with a thousand dollars worth of food for the first three years, and that we carried out.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think Governor Morris also went further than that, and also ment of 21,619 pupils divided as follows:-

Mr. DALY. In all the treaties a reservation is made that in the event of famine we would look after them, but in order to keep them on the reserves we feed them. Year by year the rationing is becoming less on account of their raising wheat, grinding their own flour and raising their own beef. Now, in relation to the statement made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) about the schools. If I understood him aright, he says that the Government before going into this class of industrial schools should have laid before the House its full policy in referthat question. Presumably ence to means that they should have stated that they were going to erect industrial schools at certain points throughout the territories where they were to be erected and what their total cost was. If that is what the hon. gentleman means, I do not see why the Government should be called upon to pursue a different course in relation to the establishment of industrial schools, than they do in relation to the erection of public buildings or the carrying on of public works.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They should do exactly that in both cases.

Mr. DALY. I wish to tell the hon, gentleindustrial school was established at Battledown to the establishment of the Brandon school in 1894, the hon. gentleman or some of his friends asked for and received full information as to the total cost of the school, the number of pupils it was to accommodate, the number of teachers, and an estimate of all the expenses that would be incurred. If the hon, gentleman turns up "Hansard" he will find that. I gave the other night the cost of buildings, schools, the per capita allowance, and I made a comparison which showed that the cost of carrying on our Indian industrial schools was less per capita than for the Ontario industrial schools at Mimico and Alexandria. If the hon, gentleman wants that information for future criticism he will find it in my statement contained in "Hansard." The hon, gentleman admits that the principle is correct, that we should instruct the Indian children in the art of farming, and knowledge of trades and so on. Let me call his attention to the following facts:-The total amount expended on our schools for the year ended 30th June, 1894, was $301,169.31. There were 295 schools in operation with 8,136 pupils enrolled, of which number 21 were industrial, 24 boarding, and 250 day. The expenditure on Indian schools in the United States as taken from the latest 1893-94, of the commissioner of report, Indian affairs, speaks for itself. There were 304 schools in operation with a total enroll-141 day, 143 boarding, 20 training. Of these 187 are under the sole control of the Government, 78 are conducted under contract, 4 are mission boarding-schools and receive no Government aid, and 25 of the day schools are white schools where a per capita grant is paid for the tuition of Indian pupils in attendance. The amount paid by the United States government for Indian schools was, $2.084.275.47 : contributed from sources, $198,797.49; total expended on Indian education, $2,283,172.96. the In United States there is expended for this purpose 7:58 times as much as is spent in Canada, while they have slightly more than two and a half times the number of pupils enrolled, which would make the cost per pupil there over three times as much as we pay. I am not going to detain the House with any further figures. I think I have answered the queries the hon, gentleman put to me.

Mr. MARA. As we are allowed to discuss the mounted police under this item, I wish to refer to an application made by the British Columbia Government a short time ago to this Government to send a small detachment of the mounted police to the Scuth Kootenay River. On that river there is a small band of nomadic Indians who cross and recross the line, and are constantly breaking into settlers' houses, thieving and committing other depredations. A few months ago they camped and built a small shack on the dyke of the Alberta reclamation works; and it was only through the influence of Mr. G. E. Keefer, the engineer, who was on the ground at the time, and by his stopping the works, that bloodshed was averted. Again, the Colville Indians frequently come up the Columbia River and give the same trouble to settlers there as the other Indians do on the Kootenay River. I am well aware that the cost of the administration of justice as well as the cost of the preservation of the peace falls on the provincial government; but it was not intended, nor is it fair, that they should be expected to keep up a force to protect the frontier from marauding Indians. The Dominion Government can, at a very slight expense during the summer months, send a squad of police by the Crow's Nest Pass. There would be no cost for transportation, as they could drive their animals through; the cost of feeding the men would be very little more than in the North-west; and their presence, even for a short time would have a beneficial effect. If the Indians saw a few redcoats, if only for a few weeks, I am sure the settlers would not any longer suffer as they have suffered in the past from their depredations.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). While this item is under discussion I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a statement which I see in this morning's maritime provinces last night, it says that the hon, member for North Victoria asked the following question:

Major Hughes asked if these schools were under the control of any religious bodies. Hon. Mr. Daly replied that they were controlled by the Roman Catholic Church.

Now, as one having some knowledge of the way in which these schools are conducted. particularly in the province of Nova Scotia, I have to differ with the hon. Minister in that statement. These schools are not under the control of the Roman Catholic Church. The Indian agent in the district has the authority, by an understanding or agreement with the trustees, who are Indians, to employ a teacher, who has a teacher's license under the school system of the province. He is paid by the Dominion Government so much a month and gets a provincial grant. He is obliged to make his returns the same as the teachers of the common schools. His school is inspected by the provincial inspectors. The books used by the pupils are the same as those used in the common schools of the province. There is no religious teaching in the schools, but the Indians and the children get their religious teachings in the places of worship built by themselves. So that the schools are conducted entirely under the regulations of this House and under the regulations of the province the same as any other school.

Mr. DALY. I am very glad the hon, gentleman has referred to this matter. I do not know whether or not I was wrongly reported in the "Citizen," but my reply to the hon. member for North Victoria was occasioned by the fact that in my key "Roman Catholic" was put opposite to the schools of the maritime provinces. It appears from information that I have since got from the department that the reason the schools were so designated was that all the Indians in the maritime provinces are Reman Catholics, and it did not mean that they were under the control of the Roman Catholic Church. On the contrary, the schools there are carried on in the same way as the Indian schools in Ontario and the other provinces. The teachers in the schools all possess provincial certificates, the programme of studies will be found in the report of the department, and in every way the schools are conducted as non-denominational schools. They are under the control of the department; and in no sense are they Roman Catholic schools. simply the children who are Roman Catholies, but the schools are non-denominational.

Mr. McMULLEN. After giving the subject of the expenditure for Indians a good deal of attention, both last year and this year, I think a very large saving could be effected, both for the training schools and for the general care of the Indians. We paper. On the item for Indians in the have in the whole of Manitoba and the North-west only 4,888 male Indians altogether, and we expended in connection with them last year $846,000; in addition to that we spent on the mounted police to keep them quiet $622,000; a total of $1,468,000, or a little over $300 per man to feed them and keep them quiet. We have altogether in Manitoba and the North-west 21,446 Indians. Last year, we paid in salaries and travelling of officials in connection with those Indians $196,000, out of a total of $613,234, excluding the salaries at which amounts to over 34 Ottawa, cents in every dollar paid for salaries and travelling alone. Any person would easily come to the conclusion that, with the facilities we have there, and considering the very limited number of Indians, this is an enormous sum to spend for salaries and travel for the purpose of feeding clothing them. On this, as on and any every other occasion when question of expenditure in the North-west esteemed friend from comes up, my Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and others, are ready to defend the expenditure and call out for an increase instead of a reduction. So long as the money is spent out there, they will support the expenditure, regardless whether it is in the interests of the country or not. The hon. Minister of the Interior says it costs on the American side something over two million dollars-

Mr. DALY. For schools alone.

Mr. McMULLEN. You did not give us the other figures.

Mr. DALY. You will find the whole thing in the speech I made the other night.

Mr. McMULLEN. There are 65,000,000 people in the United States, so that the expenditure on Indian schools cost about three cents per head of the population, but in Canada it costs over 25 cents per head of our population.

Mr. DALY. What has that to do with it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has a great deal to do with the question whether we are wise in spending so large an amount of money for the benefit of so small a portion of the population.

Mr. McMULLEN. If proper economy were practiced in connection with the interests of the Indians of the North-west, an enormous amount would be saved. What regulation have you with regard to doctors visiting the different reserves? I had a conversation with a gentleman who a short time ago was in charge of an Indian reserve, and he left owing to the ill-health of his wife. He told me that where a doctor was sent for to go some fifty miles, he had a dollar per mile.

That is what all doctors Mr. DALY. charge in the North-west.

miles to a reserve he gets $50. many would like to drive fifty miles in a day and get $50.

Mr. DALY. My deputy informs me that they only get 50 cents a mile.

Mr. McMULLEN. There must have been a reduction lately, because this man was paid a dollar a mile.

Mr. DALY. You do not know that.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, except from the man who was in charge. Now, these facts go to show that there has been enormous extravagance in connection with the management of the whole North-west mounted police, both in Manitoba and the North-west. I have on several occasions gone over the accounts very carefully, and as I showed the year before last, 46 cents out of every dollar go into the pockets of the officials, and only 54 cents reaches the Indians. have had the opinion of men who have visited the North-west with regard to training schools. Those schools are very expensive items. There are very expensive officials connected with them, men hired at large salaries. There are seven or nine training schools.

Mr. DALY. The hon, gentleman is mistaken. We give these schools a per capita allowance, they pay their own salaries, and they complain that the federal allowance is not sufficient to carry on the schools to advantage. They pay their salaries out of what we give them.

Mr. McMULLEN. Any one who has carefully investigated the whole question must see that there is great room for economy in these institutions.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to say a word with regard to the purchase of seed grains. I am informed that the policy of the department is to purchase garden seeds for the Indians in eastern Canada and send them to be distributed in British Columbia. seedsmen of British Columbia think that is eminently unfair. They think that as they have to pay taxes and live in the country, they should be allowed to provide these seeds, as they can grow as good seeds and put them up in as nice packages as the seedsmen in the east. I can see no reason, except on the ground of economy, for this practice. Our seedsmen may charge a little higher price, because wages are higher, and they cannot raise the seeds as cheaply, but I do not think the hon. Minister should take that into consideration. It is only fair that these men in that business should have a little of the Government patronage, and be allowed to provide these seeds to the Indians. And not only seeds, but, in other matters, the same old story holds true. In stationery, for instance, store-keepers think that Mr. McMULLEN. When a doctor leaves it is not right that every pen and pencil Regina on his buckboard and drives fifty and bit of India-rubber used in the department in British Columbia should be sent as it is now, from the east. They think they have a just right, being store-keepers in that country, to supply the departments themselves, if not with everything, with a good deal that is used—and I must say that I fully coincide with that opinion. I would like to hear from the Minister on this subject.

Mr. DALY. Our seeds for the Indians, like everything else, are furnished by tender, and the contract goes to the lowest tender in every case. The consequence is that we get the seeds for the Indians in British Columbia and the North-west at a much less cost than we otherwise could. The hon, gentleman admits that. That is the reason for not purchasing them by retail in British Columbia. I would like to say further in answer to the hon, member from Yale (Mr. Mara)—

Mr. MULOCK. How about the station-

Mr. DALY. The stationery comes from the Queen's Printer, for all the departments. I have nothing to do with that. In answer to the hon, member for Yale as to the mounted police being sent to British Columbia, I may say a word. The hon, gentleman referred to a case last fall, close to the border on the Kootenay River, when the British Columbia Government asked to send the mounted police. Our reply was that we would be glad to send them under the provision of the statute. I have not it here, but it provides that the mounted police can be sent out of the North-west Territories into other provinces only under certain arrangements. Some years ago, the Government sent some mounted police into British Columbia to quell a disturbance which was reported as very serious. on making inquiry, it was found that the affair was not of such a character as to justify the expense of moving the mounted police being undertaken. Had the people used a little discretion with the Indians there would have been no trouble. The cost of sending the mounted police in such a case is very serious, but they can be sent if the province requiring them will bear the cost.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that amongst others employed in connection with the reserves is Dr. Orton. Will the hon. gentleman please say what is Dr. Orton's salary, and what are his duties?

Mr. DALY. His salary is $800-

Mr. McMULLEN. And travelling expenses?

Mr. DALY. Yes. He takes the whole of the Indians east of Manitoba. He has to travel by team and dog sleigh in the winter and by canoe in the summer. I think he earns all that he gets.

Mr. PRIOR.

Mr. CORBOULD. In the valley of the lower Fraser River there are a number of reserves, and on these reserves are many Indians who make good farmers. Last spring, the Fraser River was overflowed, and the consequence was that the Indians lost all their spring crops. The provincial government undertook to supply grain to the white settlers in the valley. I would like to ask the Minister whether the item for grain and seed covered the item of seed supplied to the Indians, or whether the Indian Department intend to pay for the seed the Indians required owing to the loss?

Mr. DALY. Last year, after the disaster to which the hon. gentleman refers, the department, through its agents, furnished the Indians with the seed they required then. The Indians will be supplied with the seed they require this year, in addition to what they have already received.

Mr. MARA. I want to say a word or two with regard to the industrial school at Kamloops. The Roman Catholic priest at Kamloops entered into an arrangement with the Dominion Government to supply so many pupils. I understand that the number was fifty. But only twenty-five were supplied, and they felt rather aggrieved that provision had not been made for a larger number. The school is well managed, and the pupils have made rapid progress. The teacher, Father Carillon, as well as the sisters, deserve great credit for the advancement made by their pupils.

Mr. DALY. We have provided this year for twenty-five extra pupils at the Kamloops industrial school. The vote is included in the general vote for industrial and boarding-schools.

Mr. DAVIN. Before this is finally carried, I wish to say that if the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) had given what was paid for medical attendance at each reserve, it would have struck the committee as very little. some cases, it amounts to $500 or $600, but sometimes it is down to $50, and in some cases there is no charge for medical attend-The hon, gentleman ought to ance at all. have analysed the figures. The fact is, the hon, gentleman looks at all expenditures in the North-west through a magnifying glass, and turns alarmed away from the exaggerated figures that he sees only in his own fancy.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) never gives us any facts or figures; he always deals in platitudes. He is willing to favour any expenditure in Manitoba and the North-west. He never offers a criticism of the amounts paid, of the amounts charged, or anything else. He says that I did not go sufficiently into details in the statement I made regarding medical attendance for Indians. I have spent considerable time in looking over the accounts, and I know the statement I have given is correct. If the hongentleman is disposed to challenge my statement, I am willing to go over the accounts with him.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see the first item is the expenditure in connection with the Lieutenant-Governor's office at Regina. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman what is the entire cost of the Lieutenant-Governor's residence that has been recently completed.

Mr. DALY. The hon, gentleman has forgotten that that residence has been occupied for three years.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know that, but we do not know what it has cost yet.

Mr. DALY. You will have to ask the Minister of Public Works. You can find it all in the Auditor General's Report, I think, for last year.

Miscellaneous Printing......$25,000

Mr. PRIOR. I do not know whether this has anything to do with the printing of the voters' lists, but perhaps the committee will allow me to say a word or two in regard to that, I believe the Government, in having the voters' lists printed for the different constituencies, have stated that in British Columbia they were willing to pay the same price for printing these lists as was paid in the east. Now, I went to the trouble of finding out what was the difference wages paid to printers, and I was told that in British Columbia, where they have a printers' union, they get $21 per week for 50 hours work, whereas I am told that in the east they only get from $9 to $12 per week. It is easy to see that no paper, or no publisher. in British Columbia could possibly do that printing for the same sum of money that it is possible to get it done for in the east. Of course, they naturally think it is very unfair. They are willing that those lists should be tendered for amongst the printers ir British Columbia, but they do not think it is fair, in view of the rate of wages prevailing there, that they should be asked to compete with eastern Canada. I hope the Secretary of State will look into that matter. and that if there is more printing to be done, he will see fit to let the British Columbia printers have a chance to make something.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think there is some grievance in this relation. The printing is paid for under a certain regulation which establishes a price, and it is hardly fair to ask the publishers in British Columbia to do the printing at the same rate which is paid in the east. At the same time my hon, friend will understand that by discriminating at all, it opens up the door for what might prove to be abuses. However, I have discussed the matter with the Queen's Printer, and he is endeavouring to see what can be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to inquire of the Minister of Finance exactly how this money is distributed. Is it paid over to the officers' mess?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know whether it has come to the attention of the Minister, but there has been a considerable number of complaints made in the English newspapers as to the way in which our duties press in the case of private soldiers, and in the case, I suppose, to some extent, of private sailors. Although suppose that only applies to the troops in Halifax, and possibly in Esquimalt, I am bound to say that I should imagine that if any considerable importation took place for the troops at Halifax of articles of ordinary use, that $2,000 would not go very far. I think the number of troops there is about 2,500.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It used to be. I think it is 1,500 now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Still, that is a matter in which, I think, we could afford to deal with reasonable liberality with the soldiers on service. We don't want to make any particular portion of our revenue out of the necessities of the private soldier, who is poorly enough paid as the matter stands. This amount of $2,000, I should judge, barely compensates the officers messes for importation.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all it is used for.

To meet expenditure in connection with the Canada Temperance Act...... $1,500

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have made careful inquiries into that item, and I think $500 will amply cover all that may be necessary and I would ask that the item be reduced to $500.

To provide for the payment of Mr. Fabre's salary, and contingencies of his office... $3,500

Mr. McMULLEN. I positively object to that, and I move that it be struck out.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us how many immigrants he sent to Canada last year?

Maintenance, construction, of roads, bridges, and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Spring's reservation, near Banff Station, N.W.T..... $6,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the revenue from this land?

Mr. DALY. The revenue for the year 1893-94 was $2,500, and for the year up to 31st March, 1895, $1,903.97.

Mr. McMULLEN. We must have spent over $150,000 on that park.

Mr. DALY. I do not think so. Whatever money has been spent there, has been well spent.

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the hon. gentleman say what are the terms upon which sites are rented, or sold?

Mr. DALY. They are leased, and it de-The pends upon the location of the lots. best lots near the river were leasing for $30 per annum. I think these were about 33 by 120 feet.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is in charge?

Mr. FOSTER. G. A. Stuart is the superintendent.

Academy of Arts...... $2,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I visited the building the other day, and I judged that the Government had not purchased any painting last year. This is a vote in which I most cordially concur. I think it is desirable to expend a reasonable amount every year in purchasing a work or works of art, and I hope the Minister will see that the national gallery of art is extended from time to time. I hope also that a proper room will be obtained for the display of the paintings. should invest a reasonable sum in acquiring works of art painted by Canadian artists or others, especially by Canadian artists, just as we purchase books for the library.

Mr. McMULLEN. For what purpose is this amount required?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is an annual vote to replace plant worn out, or to introduce new or improved plant. It may be used, or it may not be used.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman I hope will take care to see that there are no campaign discounts. We have already had strange experience in connection with the Printing Bureau.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The instruction to the Queen's Printer is to run the Bureau simply as a business enterprise.

Mr. McMullen.

To provide for survey of bed of Straits of Northumberland

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He is the survey completed, and when is the tunnel to be constructed?

> Mr. FOSTER. I do not like to give a possible promise in regard to the second part of the question. The surveys have proceeded quite a distance; they are at work on them now.

> Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then we may expect an election shortly.

> Mr. FOSTER. No, they are not in that connection. The sum was voted last year and a contract was given out. Hon, gentlemen will, however, remember that I have explained the matter already.

> Towards the expenses of determining the boundary line between Canada and the United States of America between the southernmost point of Prince of Wales Island and the 141st meridian of west longitude, and in Passamaquoddy Bay.. $18,000

> Mr. DALY. The survey has been going on since 1893 for the purpose of determining the boundary between Alaska and Canada from Prince of Wales Island northward. We have parties out this year and we expect to complete the survey, and obtain data to lay before the commissioners when they meet to fix the boundary. The total expenditure to date is $135,000. This vote will complete the survey.

Mr. PRIOR. Has the hon. Minister obtained any information in regard to the contention with respect to the Portland Canal. This question is of great moment to British Columbia. If the American contention is upheld, the Americans will obtain a very fine harbour and terminus, and these will be lost to British Columbia and to Canada. The contention, I believe, is that Portland Canal, which is mentioned in the treaty, is the Portland Canal called by that name now, whereas the contention of a large number of British Columbians, at all events, is that when that treaty was made there was no such place known as Portland Canal. I should like the Minister to look into this matter thoroughly. There is a gentleman now in Ottawa who has made a study of it, and he considers he could bring proof to bear out the contention of the British Columbians. I should like to ask the Minister whether the matter has been thoroughly looked into, and whether he knows if there is anything in the contention or not.

The matter has been looked Mr. DALY. into and the department has all the information necessary, but I am not at liberty to disclose what that information is, because any information we have is for the purpose of presenting it before the arbitrators when they are called on to settle the matter.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman's deputy seems strongly in favour of the American contention.

PRAYERS.

COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. TISDALE. There is a matter I wish to bring to the attention of the House in connection with the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph I am satisfied, as chairman, from the progress that has been made in the last three sittings of the committee, that it will be impossible for us to get through with the business now standing before the committee unless we have leave to sit during the session of this House. I beg therefore to move:

That leave be granted to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines to sit during the time the House is in ses-

Mr. EDGAR. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if that motion is in order? I do not think that, according to the standing erders of the House, that or any committee can sit during the sessions of the House, and we can hardly change the standing orders in this way.

Mr. TISDALE. The House can give leave to the committee to sit.

Mr. EDGAR. I take objection that the orders of the House cannot be amended without notice of motion. I, for one, positively object.

Mr. TISDALE. This is in line of the motion that was passed the other day, but the case now is stronger than that was. I see no way, under the rules of the House by which progress can be made unless the committee that are charged with certain orders by the House have permission, without notice, to sit during the sessions of the The chairman makes the state-House.

-that that is necessary in order to enable legislation to be gone on with.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The committee have not asked for this.

Mr. TISDALE. But I, as chairman, take the responsibility for making the statement that the legislation entrusted to us cannot be put through unless this permission is given, and if notice must be given, it would not be reached this session. Now, for the same reason that the motion was passed the other day to enable one of the committees to reduce its quorum, I hold that it is necessary to grant this permission to the Committee on Railways. Otherwise the orders entrusted to us cannot be dealt with.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is a very extraordinary proposition that the chairman of a committee, without the sanction of the committee and without any request from the committee, can bring a motion of this sort before the House. As a matter of necessity, the chairman might come here to make a request. But when he comes here with a motion of this sort, he should come as the organ of the committee and not as the member for South Norfolk. This seems to me a monstrous proposition. What is the reason the hon, gentleman gives for making it? He says the business before the committee cannot be disposed of otherwise. Why, Sir, look at the Order paper of this House. Is there no business before this House that will not be disposed of, are there not many Bills before the House that will not be dealt with? And yet does any hon, gentleman disregard the rules of the House and make propositions such as the hon, gentleman has submitted in order to prevent a certain amount of business perishing with the session. Every session there are questions that come before the committees that are not finally disposed of by those committees. The proposition of the hon. gentleman, it seems to me, goes to show that he wholly misapprehends his position as chairman of the committee.

CHARLES HIBBERT The hon, gentleman must be wrong in his argument. If the hon. gentleman's conteution is right, an important committee of this House might, by obstruction, be prevented from doing any business at all, even passing a motion in favour of such permission as this being granted; and it would not be in the power of the House to deal with the matter. Surely this House has control of these committees so as to prevent their work being made abortive for the whole session. I do not think the hon. gentleman would go that far, though his argument logically carried out would lead him in that direction. seems an extraordinary thing that it should not be the right of the chairman of the committee or any other member of this House to bring his case here on the floor of ment-I, as chairman, make the statement Parliament and show that the business of the session will not be carried out as the House desires unless a certain committee has instructions other than those we first gave to it. In this case we know how many Bills are before the committee and we know that they have been before the committee for an exceedingly long time. And, as the end of the session is approaching, it seems to me too clear to need demonstration that the House can give instructions to the committee at any time to sit from day to day, or on any particular day, or during the sittings of the House. That was the course pursued in connection with the Public Accounts Committee—

Mr. MULOCK. By unanimous consent.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Consent was not asked. It is true there was no opposition, as the reasons commended themselves to the House. It would be an extraordinary proposition to lay down that this House cannot send instructions of any kind to any select committee appointed by the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then it would be a more extraordinary proposition to lay down that the standing orders of this House are to be disregarded, absolutely without notice. The only reason for which we make standing orders is to prevent surprises, and see that reasonable formalities are observed in the conduct of public business; and now the Minister of Justice, who ought to be in this House the special guardian of the rules of this House, proposes that our standing orders may be set aside, without one word of notice, without one word of consideration, at the whim of any particular member who happens to have a Bill that he thinks requires particular attention. There is an immense number of Bills quite as important as these little local Bills. four-fifths of which might stand over with great advantage to the community, for not one week, or one month, but for several years, I fancy. There are a number of important Bills that we have no chance of touching. The Government do not propose to suspend the rules of the House and let them have a chance, but in favour of this Bill they propose to suspend all the rules of this House, because, by accepting this motion, you practically decree that our standing orders are of no consequence whatever. that every standing order of this House may be abrogated without notice, a proposition that seems to me to be a monstrous one.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a question of order, and I submit that this motion is not in order. I maintain that the chairman of the committee has no right to move as the representative of the committee without the authority of the committee, and in consequence of a report of the committee. In this case the chairman not only was not authorized by the committee should have lead session. For these reason the motion should not on the present occasion.

even refused to tell the committee what he proposed to do in the House, refused to tell what he proposed to move, though he indicated that he intended to propose something that would gag the committee in some way. In the second place, the Minister of Justice has gone beyond all rules in professing to know that obstruction existed in that committee-if I may use the word as a quotation from the hon. Minister. The chairman of the committee did not commit himself to that statement; he knew very well that it would be irregular for him to state that obstruction existed in the committee, without the authority of the committee to that effect. But the Minister of Justice breaks the rules by saying that obstruction existed there, and in giving that as a reason for adopting this motion. In reference to the precedent sought to be drawn from the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee in 1891, it will be remembered by yourself, as by us, that the committee on that occasion, by report, requested power to sit at unusual times and continuously, and authority was given to them by unanimous consent of this House, without objection from anybody. That certainly is no precedent for an unauthorized proposition of the chairman of the committee to ask the House to give powers to that committee which the committee itself has not asked for, and which are objected to strongly on the part of a large section of the committee and of this House. I ask your ruling on the point of order, before discussing the merits of the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. With regard to the motion which has been proposed by the hon. member for South Norfolk, I would say that I do not regard it as exactly in the same light in which I regarded the motion which was made the other day to reduce the quorum of the same committee. Then it was urged that the committee could not meet for want of a quorum, but in the present case the chairman has moved, without any report being made by the committee, that the committee have leave to sit during the sessions of this House. Now, it is quite competent for the House, in a case of urgency, it seems to me, to grant to that committee power to sit during the sittings of the House, but I think before coming to that conclusion, we ought to have some definite statement from the committee itself, such as a report, that it is necessary, to enable the committee to get through with their work, that they should be allowed to sit during the sittings of the House. I do not, however, agree with those hon. members who say that this motion could not be put without notice, if a report had been made by the committee that it was necessary for the prosecution of its business that the committee should have leave to sit during the session. For these reasons, I consider that the motion should not be put to the House Mr. EDGAR. That will be the adoption of the report.

Mr. TISDALE. If I may be allowed a word of explanation of my motion, it is simply to advise the House of the needs of the committee, and to relieve myself, so far as possible, from any responsibility as chairman. The reason why I took the responsibility, and I quite acknowledge it was a grave responsibility, was that in view of what has occurred in the committee, without any reflections upon the members of the committee, I thought it was impossible to get any report.

Mr. CASEY. Order.

Mr. TISDALE. I am merely speaking, I am not reflecting upon anybody.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to say, however, to my hon, friend, that the House would all the more readily absolve him from any responsibility if the House were led to believe that he had no responsibility at all. With regard to the point of order which has been discussed, there is another point which will come up later upon the report of the committee.

DELAYED RETURN.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Secretary of State what explanation he offers to-day for not bringing down the returns. The old ones are all worn out.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon, friend the Minister of the Interior tells me, what I had forgotten, that I left it on the Table in the Council. I will bring it over Monday morning.

BOARD OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. WALLACE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 140) further to amend chapter 32 of the Revised Statutes and the Acts in amendment thereof. He said: The object of the Bill is to provide for the Board of Customs to hold legal sittings without an assistant commissioner being pre-The original Act provides that there shall be an assistant commissioner present We have no at each sitting of the board. therefore, assistant commissioner; this amendment is necessary. Then, provision is made for three members of the board to constitute a quorum. It also enlarges the class of men who can be appointed members of the Board of Customs. As the board is now constituted, only those officials mentioned in section 4 of the present Act, and the Dominion appraisers of customs, and assistant Dominion appraisers of customs can be appointed to the board, and it is proposed to take power to appoint any competent man from the service.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it the intention to abolish the office of assistant commissioner?

Mr. WALLACE. We have no assistant commissioner. Parliament has not provided a salary for such an officer.

Mr. LAURIER. But the office still exists by statute.

Mr. WALLACE. We have no assistant commissioner.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand the object of the Bill is to create a board, instead of having an assistant commissioner. I want to know if it is the intention of the hon. gentleman to fill that office or not, or to abolish it?

Mr. WALLACE. There is no salary provided this year for such an officer.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose no one will fulfil the duties unless he receives a salary. But there will be other years. Does the hon, gentleman propose now, or later, to create a board of experts, as petitioned for by the Board of Trade of Montreal and other cities?

Mr. WALLACE. No. This Bill provides for enlarging the sphere within which those appointed to the Board of Customs will be eligible. It will be an advisory board.

Mr. CASEY. Will all those eligible under the Act be already in the Customs Department?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.
